Legislative Assembly of Alberta

3 p.m.

Tuesday, February 7, 2012

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

[The Clerk read the Royal Proclamation dated 7, 2012, summoning the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to convene on this date]

The Clerk: Please be seated.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Order! Mr. Speaker.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Speaker, accompanied by the officers of the Assembly, entered the Chamber and took the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome. Please join with me in the opening day prayer.

Almighty God, author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask Your blessings on all here present. We ask Your guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments for the benefit of all Albertans. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, I would now like to invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. Please join in in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members and Guests:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Well, good for all of us. Without any doubt in my mind that was the most stirring rendition of our national anthem I've ever heard sung.

Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

The Speaker: The Premier is on her way to escort the Lieutenant Governor back to the Assembly. As we await, the Royal Canadian Artillery Band will now play a brief musical interlude, the details of which are in the program that you have. The RCA Band, Canada's oldest regular army band, was formed in Quebec City in 1879. It was subsequently stationed in Montreal and Halifax. It has seen service in both world wars and in Korea, and it has travelled across Canada and beyond our borders. Reconstituted in the city of Edmonton in 1997, the band is today under the direction of Captain Eric Gagnon, CD, who is in the Speaker's gallery. Maestro.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise, please.

Mr. Speaker, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[A fanfare of trumpets sounded]

Speech from the Throne

His Honour: Pray be seated.

My fellow Albertans, hon. members, and distinguished guests, welcome to the Fifth Session of the 27th Alberta Legislature. It is my honour to deliver the Speech from the Throne and my privilege to serve the people of this province as Lieutenant Governor.

While these are trying times, other nations' difficulties do serve to remind us of how fortunate we are to live in the grand province of Alberta. We are blessed with a free and fair political system built on enduring constitutional foundations, and in 2012 this arrangement will receive the attention it deserves as we celebrate the Diamond Jubilee of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II. Sixty years ago yesterday His Majesty King George VI passed away, and Her Majesty ascended the throne. For six decades she has dedicated herself to serving as the anchor of the Commonwealth and the monarch of our great nation. I know that many Albertans are as eager as I am to congratulate Her Majesty on her distinguished record.

We are blessed to reside in a province with unlimited opportunity. Alberta has abundant resources, world-class industries, and an indomitable spirit of enterprise and innovation. We have the ability, desire, knowledge, and freedom to attain our full potential.

In my lifetime alone Alberta has come a long way. I arrived in this province in the early '50s as a young soldier in the Canadian army. Forced into hospital by a leg injury, I found myself surrounded by convalescent First World War veterans. They were receiving the very best care, and while it kept them alive, that was all it could do. These individuals and their families faced a very limited future. Today we have innovative institutions like the Glenrose rehabilitation hospital and the University of Alberta's Faculty of Rehabilitation Medicine using previously unimaginable techniques like robotics and neural engineering to restore function and help heal the hidden trauma of disabilities and restore mental health. Now such individuals have a future without limits.

This is the future your government wants for all Albertans. The key to Alberta's success is its people and the vision they have for what this province can become. Our lives today are immeasurably better because Albertans in the past were inspired to look beyond the limits of their times to a vision of unmet needs and a greater future and then act upon it.

A little more than 40 years ago Alberta set out on the road to the modern age under the leadership of people with such foresight. Four decades ago our province was just beginning to find its place in an uncertain, fast changing world. New and untested opportunities glimmered on the horizon, and Alberta's government in 1971 resolved to make the most of them, promising to build a society that is not inferior to that in any province or state in North America. It succeeded magnificently.

That government set forth with a clear vision for Alberta and fulfilled it but not by playing it safe. Recognizing the need for imaginative new programs, it made bold decisions that built up the province we take for granted today. It nurtured Alberta's energy sector, identifying the oil sands' potential and implementing the policies necessary for its long-term success. To save for future generations, it created the heritage fund. Alberta would never have become a global leader without such foresight. This was a government that boldly used an uncertain environment to its advantage, looking beyond the demands of the present to build lasting success and modernize Alberta.

Now, two generations on, Alberta faces fresh challenges. Long-established ways are being called into question, and comfortable assumptions are being examined anew while Albertans themselves are growing older. Your government will not miss the opportunity to reshape Alberta in response.

Alberta's families and businesses have a government that will help them adapt and build a province that present and future generations will be proud of. The actions we take today will help us reach our potential as individual Albertans and as a province. Our time is now, and your government will lead.

Your government will secure this province's economic future at home with smart spending and abroad by improving our competitiveness in global markets. Your government will listen to Albertans, engaging them on the issues that matter to bring about the change they want and need. Together with Albertans your government will make Alberta the best jurisdiction anywhere, based on a thriving economy and a quality of life that is the envy of the world.

Your government will start with the root of success, sound finances. Our main trading partners are struggling with debt and low growth, yet Alberta is in a stronger position. We are heading toward balanced budgets, reliable revenue streams, and strong economic growth.

However, Alberta's current fiscal framework relies too heavily on volatile energy revenue as a source of income. It's time for foundational change. It won't be easy, but it is the right way to better manage the annual unpredictability in the budgeting process. It begins now. Budget 2012 will bring predictable funding on a three-year cycle to education, advanced education, and municipalities. Your government will work with its partners in these areas to allow for greater stability, improved long-term planning, and delivery of outcomes.

Your government will also introduce a new budgetary review process that includes a results-based approach, one that will allow for a thorough examination of how public spending is achieving outcomes for Albertans. Your government will examine its entire fiscal framework to ensure it spends Albertans' tax dollars appropriately while saving intelligently for your future and for generations to come. This will include reviews of the Alberta heritage savings trust and sustainability funds, capital and infrastructure projects, gaming revenue, our operating budget, and income taxes along with reviews of existing programs.

Once in every three-year cycle each part of the government, including agencies, boards, and commissions, will come under the spotlight. Your government will scrutinize all costs and challenge the automatic growth of spending, assigning funds only where they are needed. There must be a disciplined relationship between public expenditures and benefits for Albertans, resulting in no unjustified increases to departmental budgets.

With a new and robust plan linking expenditures to actual outcomes, your government will treat Albertans' money with the same care and respect they do, spending wisely on the services Albertans count on for an outstanding quality of life. Education is one way to protect that standard of living. The nature of work and progress is changing, and as technology advances, the demand for highly skilled, educated workers will increase.

Alberta must be able to succeed and thrive in the global knowledge economy, and that means giving every Albertan the opportunity to benefit from a cutting-edge education from kindergarten to postsecondary so everyone can reach their full potential.

Your government will strengthen Alberta's postsecondary sector, recognizing it as a key driver of a robust knowledge-inspired economy. By enhancing our trade and technology institutes and colleges, this government will help Alberta nurture the most highly skilled and trained workforce anywhere. Through the building and educating tomorrow's workforce strategy your government will increase the supply of highly skilled, educated, and innovative people and high-performance work environments that make maximum use of innovation and technology.

Your government will attract the world's top talent to Alberta to contribute to a research agenda that will position this province on the international stage as a leader in helping to solve many of the world's challenges in energy, water, food, health, and improving our quality of life.

Your government will identify strategies to recruit more students from Métis and First Nations communities so they can continue to contribute to Alberta's success and solidify the bonds that sustain their heritage and keep their communities together.

Albertans' quality of life is driven in large part through finding innovative approaches to deliver publicly funded health care. Your government is committed to improving access to primary care for all Albertans. In 2012, building on the success of primary care networks, your government will embark on a plan to expand community-based care through the introduction of family care clinics staffed by multidisciplinary teams of health care professionals. Patients in need of medical attention will be able to get it quickly and easily at publicly funded clinics close to home. Your government will begin with the implementation of three pilot projects this spring.

Expanding access also means enhancing the way allied professionals such as pharmacists, nurses, and nurse practitioners interact with patients, allowing front-line staff to handle more duties and easing pressure on the health care system. Your government will enable health care providers to better meet Albertans' needs through a team-based approach.

Your government has fulfilled its commitment to empower the Alberta Health Quality Council to run an independent inquiry into various aspects of the health care system to make sure it delivers timely, unprejudiced, and equitable outcomes in which Albertans can have confidence.

The strength of the publicly funded health care system of today rests on the foresight and commitment of our local communities. This requires a strong relationship with government that offers communities a meaningful role in long-term planning and co-ordination of services at the local level. Recognizing this fundamental principle, your government will give local health advisory councils a more active voice and greater input in decisions that impact their communities.

A successful Alberta is one in which every Albertan is empowered to be part of the economic, social, and cultural life of the province. Your government is bringing these values to the services it provides to all Albertans.

Your government will provide seniors with the supports, services, and care they need to remain healthy, happy, and productive. This includes measures to help them stay in the peaceful security of their own homes, surrounded by the warmth of family, for as long as possible.

Your government's commitment to protecting property rights embraces all Albertans. To strengthen those rights, it created a task force that met with Albertans and listened to learn what property rights mean to them. Your government will use Albertans' contributions to make common-sense decisions on this issue.

Your government believes that a vibrant arts and culture scene is vital to the fabric of Alberta's communities, and it will continue to work with partners to keep the sector flourishing. Your government looks forward to engaging constructively with community leaders from diverse cultural and creative organizations to find the best methods of encouraging growth.

Healthy businesses are a crucial part of a strong economy. Your government will work hard to create and maintain the conditions for their success before getting out of the way.

Your government is committed to the development of northern Alberta as a prosperous and attractive place to live, work, and play. It will initiate a comprehensive northern Alberta development strategy to help the region continue to grow and develop in a sustainable manner with an outstanding quality of life. Your government will work creatively with municipalities and industry to address infrastructure challenges. The north is the source of much of our prosperity, so success there is critical for a successful Alberta overall.

A terrific quality of life requires the province to work closely with all municipalities. Your government will continue to build on its long tradition of effective partnership with municipal governments as part of the review of the municipal sustainability initiative. The review will focus on having a streamlined program with increased flexibility, giving municipalities an even greater ability to meet local needs. Your government will work towards establishing three-year funding cycles so municipalities can count on stable, predictable funds.

Municipalities support strong communities, and strong communities are safe communities. Your government will continue its support for antigang initiatives while reaching out to at-risk youth to deny organized crime new recruits.

Your government will proudly tell Alberta's story and promote Albertans' vision and actions on the world stage. Your government will better integrate our global strategies as we continue to bolster Alberta's reputation abroad, showcasing our diversity in everything from tourism to arts and culture, education, and trade and investment opportunities, and Albertans can be sure this government will fulfill its role responsibly and honestly.

It will co-operate closely and openly with Ottawa, building on its strong relationship with the federal government. A strong Alberta is one that can put aside jurisdictional differences and stand as a proud, committed, and constructive member of Confederation. The federal government and the province share much in common, including the desire to give farmers more choice through the dismantling of the Wheat Board and a commitment to bringing down crime through new, more stringent federal legislation. Albertans expect government to work together on their behalf, and your government will not let you down. But in doing this, it will not shy away from standing up for this province. Your government will never hesitate to reiterate Albertans' perspectives at federal, provincial, and territorial levels.

A Canadian energy strategy will play a major role in this effort. Energy is critical to our prosperity, but Alberta must diversify its customer base to achieve the greatest returns. Your government will actively design initiatives to access global markets and assist Canadians and our trading partners in understanding Alberta's energy goals. The infrastructure necessary to get our resources to new markets must cross other jurisdictions, so any expansion will involve various partners at the provincial, national, and international levels. The more we work together to co-ordinate our efforts, the greater our success and the more prosperity for everyone involved.

The people of this province share a deep love and respect for its environment and natural resources, and your government will develop them responsibly in the interests of all Albertans. Your government will continue to partner with Ottawa to defend Alberta's energy sector and develop an improved oil sands environmental monitoring program that is among the best in the world. Both governments are now standing together behind a plan that is credible, science based, and fully transparent. Your government's action on establishing and reaching key environmental outcomes and sharing its performance with Albertans and the world will leave no doubt of its commitment to these goals.

Albertans know their livelihoods and communities are tied to the land and water we all cherish. They want their children to inherit a province as clean, healthy, and productive as the one they inherited. The twin needs of keeping Alberta beautiful and its economy healthy are not starkly opposed. By investing in emerging technologies, this government will do both.

But our natural resources extend beyond oil and gas. Agriculture is the largest renewable industry in our province, and your government wants it to stay that way. Alberta's rural communities are a critical piece of Alberta's success story. Settlers and farmers founded this province, and their values run deep. Through policy development, advocacy, and programs and services that reinforce market access and economic competitiveness your government will preserve and expand the legacy they left us, ensuring our farmers are the best in the world. Our prosperity is intimately tied to the strength of rural Alberta, and government will never forget it.

Over 40 years ago a bold government saw the need for sweeping change and rose to the occasion, ushering in a new era of prosperity and progress for Alberta. Now the time has come to bring that spirit and vision into the 21st century. The world is changing faster than ever, and we must stay at the forefront.

Alberta can be proud of rich natural resources, North America's most competitive business environment, and a vibrant technology and innovation sector that helps push human achievement to unparalleled heights. All these advantages rely on the passion and drive of Albertans, who make them possible, and it is Albertans who will always remain the central focus of this government.

It will help all Albertans reach their full potential, setting the stage for future generations to enjoy even greater success. It will revitalize publicly funded health care services to increase access and suit an aging population with diverse needs. It will find new and effective ways to reach out to vulnerable Albertans and make them a part of the province's success story. It will revamp Alberta's education system so all graduates can hit the ground running and contribute more effectively than ever. It will budget for the long term and be rigorous in managing our fiscal framework so all Albertans can count on the services they need for many years to come.

History has shown us that short-term focus can result in long-term problems. Your government will address the root causes of problems rather than just respond to symptoms. Albertans expect better and demand excellence. And so above all, your government will not waver. It will not be deterred from change. Your government will not let you down.

Thank you, ladies and gentlemen. May God bless you all.

God bless Alberta.

God bless Canada.

God save the Queen. [Standing ovation]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

The Speaker: Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of God Save The Queen. Please remain standing at the conclusion.

Hon. Members and Guests:

God save our gracious Queen, long live our noble Queen,
God save The Queen!
Send her victorious,
happy and glorious,
long to reign over us;
God save The Queen!

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Their Honours, their party, and the Premier left the Chamber as a fanfare of trumpets sounded]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

[The Mace was uncovered]

The Speaker: Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, as His Honour has so eloquently advised us, yesterday marked the Diamond Jubilee of Queen Elizabeth II's reign. She became Queen of the United Kingdom and Head of the Commonwealth on February 6, 1952, and was the first monarch to be styled as such. Commonwealth countries whose head of state was the Queen passed legislation through their respective parliaments to acknowledge the monarch of the United Kingdom as their own. In 1953 in this country the Royal Style and Titles Act formally conferred upon her the title of Queen of Canada, making her the first of Canada's sovereigns to have this title.

The Diamond Jubilee central weekend is scheduled for June 2 through 5 to coincide with the anniversary of her coronation, which took place in Westminster Abbey on June 2, 1953.

Queen Victoria was the only other monarch to celebrate a Diamond Jubilee in over 1,200 years of British history. She reigned for 63 years and seven months, with her Diamond Jubilee occurring in 1897. Queen Elizabeth II, hopefully, will reign until September 10, 2015, to reign longer than her great-great-grandmother Queen Victoria, who reigned from 1837 to 1901.

Queen Elizabeth II is the 32nd great-granddaughter of King Alfred the Great, who was the first effective king of England from 871 to 899. She became Queen at the young age of 25. The Queen celebrated her Silver Jubilee in 1977 and her Golden Jubilee in 2002.

Her reign of 60 years has seen 12 Prime Ministers of the United Kingdom, beginning with Winston Churchill. As Canada's head of state there have been 11 individuals who served as Prime Minister, and the province of Alberta has had seven Premiers since 1952.

Queen Elizabeth has visited the Alberta Legislature four times. Her first visit took place in October of 1951 as Her Royal Highness Princess Elizabeth made the trip in place of her father, King George VI, who was in poor health at the time. Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II returned in July of 1959 as part of a 45-day cross-country Canadian tour. The fountain in the rotunda of the Legislature Building is a permanent reminder of that visit. The Queen returned to the Legislature Building in August of 1978 while in Edmonton to celebrate the 11th Commonwealth Games. On May 24, 2005, Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II toured the Legislature Grounds and became the first reigning monarch to address Albertans from the throne in the Legislative Assembly as Alberta celebrated its centennial.

Please let us all join together to extend our best wishes to Her Majesty on this remarkable occasion and invite all Albertans to celebrate this historic event throughout the coming year.

[The Premier returned to the Chamber]

Tablings

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have the honour to table a copy of the speech graciously given by His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 1

Results-based Budgeting Act

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 1, the Results-based Budgeting Act.

This bill, if passed, will establish a new approach to government budgeting, one that emphasizes results for Albertans and fiscal discipline for government. It will require that all government programs and services, including agencies, boards, and commissions, be reviewed on a regular three-year cycle to ensure that they are delivering the outcomes that Albertans want.

Once the review process is completed for a given program, the budget for that program will be rebuilt from the ground up. We will scrutinize every dollar spent to ensure that it is being used in the most effective way possible. This will be a transparent process, with the findings and recommendations of program reviews made public. This is about challenging automatic growth in government spending while making sure that we're providing all of the right services at the right time and in the right way to meet Albertans' needs.

Results-based budgeting means treating Albertans' tax dollars with the same care and respect that they do their own. It's a way of imposing new discipline on our budgeting process and on our performance.

Bill 1 shows Albertans that this government is responsive and accountable, ensuring that they have the quality of services that they pay for and deserve.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a first time]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. Life and health are precious. When they are lost, all of us are impacted. Let us remember those who are no longer among us with the most positive of thoughts, and let us reach out with compassion, understanding, and prayer to those who suffer. May blessings be upon them, and may they find eternal salvation in an eternity of peace. Amen.

Please be seated.

Hon. members, on our first day when we return, we take the time after prayers so that we may pay tribute to a former colleague who has passed away, and in respect would you all stand, please.

Mr. Brian C. Downey
November 5, 1950, to January 12, 2012

The Speaker: Mr. Brian C. Downey, former Member of the Legislative Assembly, passed away on January 12, 2012, at the age of 61 years. Mr. Downey was first elected in the election held May 8, 1986, and was re-elected on March 20, 1989. He served until April 8, 1989. During his years of service he represented the constituency of Stettler for the Progressive Conservative Party. During his term of office Brian Downey served on the select standing committees on Private Bills, Public Accounts, Public Affairs, and as chair of the Special Committee to Prepare and Report Lists of Members to Compose the Select Standing Committees. With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of his family, who are with us today in the Speaker's gallery, who shared the burdens of public office. Our prayers are with them.

In a moment of silent prayer I'd ask each of you to remember the hon. member, Brian C. Downey, as you have known him. Rest eternal grant unto him, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon him. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's an honour for me to rise today to introduce to you guests who are seated in the Speaker's gallery. These guests are family members of our former colleague Brian Downey. I'd ask them to rise, please, as I mention their names: Mrs. Trudy Downey, widow of Mr. Brian Downey, former MLA for the constituency of Stettler. His parents, Cliff and Frances Downey, are here with members of their family as well, including Brian's daughter, Allison Downey-Damato, with Marc Downey-Damato; Brian's son, Dustin Downey, and Jovina Downey; and grandchildren Matteo Downey-Damato, Kestrel Damato, Duke Downey, and Jasmine Downey. Please offer them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House here some very special visitors from Velma E. Baker school in my constituency. They are accompanied by their teacher, Ms Peacock, and by parent helpers Mrs. Erickson, Mrs. Krysa, Mrs. Schmidt, Mr. Ruda, and Mr. Ollerhead. Velma Baker has the distinction of being absolutely one of the finest schools in all of Alberta, and these students are a testament to that outstanding education system we have. I would ask all of these members from the school and the parent helpers and teachers to please rise and receive the warm applause of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood?
The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a unique group of University of Alberta students. They are the stars of a program called Heifer in Your Tank. This program was started by Dr. Frank Robinson, professor, who wanted the animal science class to develop something more original than a term paper. The result is project-based learning. The students perform live skits based on the rural chautauquas of the past to educate the public on the science related to the production of animals and their by-products that we use every day. I saw the students in November at Farmfair and was truly impressed with these young people and their program. They truly are the future of agriculture.

With that, I would like to introduce Dr. Frank Robinson, Martin Zuidhof, Dana Penrice, Dustin Banks, Erica Posteraro, Lucas Nickel, Airell Deslauriers, Chelsea Geiger, and Jami Frederick. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly. Thank you for coming.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the second chance that you have afforded me. I would like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Brian Topp. Brian is one of the candidates for the federal NDP leadership, and this evening he is participating in a debate with other candidates organized by the New Democratic Youth of Alberta and the Edmonton-Strathcona federal NDP. Brian Topp is a former Montreal business owner, Credit Union director, and a board member of ROI venture capital fund. He has also served as staff to former NDP leader Ed Broadbent and former Saskatchewan Premier Roy Romanow. I appreciate all of the candidates for the visits that they have paid to Alberta. I now ask Brian to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: We'll just move on to Edmonton-Decore, please.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour and a privilege for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly 13 guests seated in the members' gallery here in recognition of the 100th anniversary of the Catholic Women's League, Edmonton diocese. I would ask them to please rise as I say their names: Gladys Brown, Edmonton diocesan Catholic Women's League president for the archdiocese of Edmonton; Gwen Elliott, Catholic Women's League president-elect for the archdiocese of Edmonton; June Fuller, past president of the Edmonton diocesan Catholic Women's League; Mable Solomon, past president of the Edmonton diocesan Catholic Women's League; Ardis Beaudry, honorary life member of the Catholic Women's League, diocesan provincial and national president of Canada. Life members of the CWL and chairpersons of the upcoming national convention of the Catholic Women's League, scheduled to be held in Edmonton in August, include Connie McBride and Mary-Lou Veeken.

Mr. Speaker, remarkable information collected regarding the preservation and distribution of a hundred years of commemoration of the Catholic Women's League, Edmonton diocese, its faith and service, also includes Rose-Marie McCarthy, Mary-Anne Warren, and Natalie Carley. Also, we have Cecile Shaul, a member of Catholic Women's League, St. Charles; Vera Huber, a member of Catholic Women's League, St. Charles; and Mary Hunt, council officer for the Catholic Women's League, Edmonton diocese.

I would ask all those here today to give them the traditional warm welcome. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday evening a very successful Queen's Diamond Jubilee dinner was held with over 315 guests in attendance. Twenty-four hon. members participated in that event, including yourself, Mr. Speaker. The Deputy Premier, the Official Opposition House Leader, and I were joined by representatives from the judiciary, the military, the business community, and the public at large. The dinner committee presented a cheque for over $10,000 to Valour Place, a privately funded, assisted living residence for the bereaved families of fallen members of the Canadian Forces, wounded and injured soldiers, members of the RCMP and their families who are undergoing rehabilitation in Edmonton, a well-recognized regional centre of excellence for rehab medicine in Canada.

In the Speaker's gallery is Captain Robert Clarke, chairman of the Diamond Jubilee dinner. I would thank Captain Clarke for his leadership and for the work of his committee and invite him to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you the love of my life and my better half, Sharon MacLean, seated in the Speaker's gallery. I'd like to ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I have one other introduction. It's a young fellow who at the age of 13 volunteered on Grant Mitchell's campaign. He also ran federally in Red Deer and finished very close in the mayor's race in Edmonton recently. He is now my constituency assistant, Andrew Lineker. I'd like Andrew to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce three people to you and through you to this honourable Assembly. The first is Mr. Peter Rilstone. Peter has been a teacher for the Calgary board of education for the last 40 years. He is now retired. He's helping me out door-knocking in Calgary-Buffalo and has been a tremendous amount of support both to me personally and to my family over the course of the last 30 years.

I'd also like to introduce to you my mother, Judy Hehr. Having two children who are lawyers who are sometimes argumentative, she still provides us with advice, love, and nurturing on an unconditional basis. I love you very much, Mum.

The last introduction is my father, and I will share with you that my father and I, growing up, would watch Stampede Wrestling. Even as I got older, we'd watch WWF, and maybe that's why I've chosen this profession, Mr. Speaker. Bret Hart would say before his wrestling matches that he was the best there was, the best there is, the best there ever will be, and that saying can apply to my father.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly three guests from the New Democratic Youth of Alberta, part of the growing wave of young people joining our party. Sean Weatherall and Jenna Hienemann are two students who recently started a new NDP club at MacEwan University. Bradley LaFortune is joining them. He studies at U of A and is helping organize tonight's federal NDP leadership debate. I'd now like to ask all three of my guests to stand as I call their names and receive the traditional warm welcome of the assembly: Bradley LaFortune, Sean Weatherall, and Jenna Hienemann. Welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you for that third opportunity that you've afforded me, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce a group of very bright young students from Delton elementary school. They are accompanied by their teachers Mrs. Dao Haddad and Miss Michelle Auger, who is their educational assistant. Delton elementary school is participating in the School at the Legislature program this week, and I'm looking forward to speaking with them tomorrow. Thank you very much. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly someone that's going to be very important in my life for the next couple of months, and that's my campaign manager, Kirsten Sztain. Kirsten has a master's degree in political science and worked in my office for a couple of years, at which time she then left to work on a civic campaign in Calgary in which she brought her candidate to within 3 per cent of defeating an incumbent city councillor, so I do know I'm in very good hands. I'd ask Kirsten to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, a couple of anniversaries to acknowledge. Yesterday, February 7, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, reached another milestone in his life and today the hon. Member for Calgary-North West. Happy birthday to you, sir, as well.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Catholic Women's League, Edmonton Diocese Centennial

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour and privilege to rise today in recognition of the Catholic Women's League, Edmonton diocese, for 100 years of faith and service. While the league was formally incorporated in Montreal in 1920, Edmonton is the birthplace of the Catholic Women's League in Canada. The Catholic Women's League is now a national organization with a proud and extensive history and which is comprised of many councils throughout Canada, including the Edmonton diocese.

History notes that during the 1900s while travelling throughout the United Kingdom, Edmontonian Katherine Hughes became acquainted with their recently organized Catholic women's leagues. Upon her return the league concept went forward with Bishop Émile Legal, Oblate of Mary Immaculate, OMI, of Edmonton.

In 1912 the women who founded the Catholic Women's League began with a mission to protect and support immigrant women and girls seeking work in Edmonton and to promote spiritual and temporal good works. Mr. Speaker, the prayer of St. Francis of Assisi states: for it is in giving of ourselves that we receive. Truly this simple statement personifies the Catholic Women's League, Edmonton diocese.

Throughout the hundred years the outreach activities of the Catholic Women's League, Edmonton diocese, included in the early days establishing a hostel for girls, visiting hospitals, and providing employment services. Today their focus includes charitable involvement with Catholic Social Services and an initiative called Back Porch, which provides resources and information on unplanned pregnancies. Indeed, these are the living examples of the Alberta spirit.

Mr. Speaker, more than 10,000 Catholic women belong to the Catholic Women's League in Alberta and the Northwest Territories. I would like to extend my heartfelt appreciation and admiration to all the women of the past, present, and future of the Catholic Women's League, Edmonton diocese, for adding immeasurably to the creation of healthy, caring communities within our great city, province, country, and throughout the world. The longevity of the Catholic Women's League, Edmonton diocese, is truly a testament to a membership that inspires faith, hope, and humanitarian contributions within our communities. *My sincere congratulations and best wishes, and God bless the continued great success of the Catholic Women's League, Edmonton diocese.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation of Questions and Members' Statements

The Speaker: Before we proceed, hon. members, as chair I would like to make a brief statement about the rotation of oral questions and members' statements. As has been the situation often during the life of this Legislature, there was a further realignment to the caucus memberships over the period of adjournment, with the result being that there is one independent member since the Assembly last met.

The current situation with one independent member and one member of the Alberta caucus is identical to the situation that existed when the Assembly convened on February 22, 2011, nearly one year ago. The rotation of oral questions was distributed with my letter to you dated January 27, 2012, concerning the Fifth Session of the 27th Legislature. Attachments 3 and 4 to the Speaker's procedural letter outline the Oral Question Period rotation and the projected sitting days calendar, which includes the rotation for Members' Statements. These schedules again mirror the rotations for both items of business that were in place one year ago.

Accordingly, the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster is entitled to a question once every four days. As was the previous independent member, he will be entitled to the sixth question on day 3. Today is day 1 on the sitting calendar, so the independent member will be able to ask a question next Monday, February 13, 2012. He'll be entitled to present a member's statement once every two weeks. His first opportunity will be next Wednesday, February 15.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Budget

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to congratulate the Premier for recognizing in the Speech from the Throne the value of what Alberta Liberals have been saying for many years: the Alberta government has both a revenue problem and a spending problem. Will the Premier take the next bold step and implement a fair tax formula so that we don't have to sell off pieces of the family farm to pay the bills?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am certainly looking forward to the Minister of Finance presenting the budget tomorrow. The throne speech was a hallmark in terms of saying that we as Albertans, all Albertans, need to be talking about what our fiscal framework is. We believe it's very important to make sure that Albertans are getting valuable services for the money that's spent, and we're looking forward to continuing that debate after tomorrow.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, personal and corporate income taxes don't even cover what this government spends on health care, so will the Premier be honest and tell us how the government plans to raise enough revenue to pay the rest of the bills?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said, I'm looking forward to the Minister of Finance's speech and the presentation of the budget tomorrow. You know, we have the tremendous privilege in this province of being the governing party that has been able to balance those issues very effectively, and we'll continue to do so.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, if there was any balancing happening, we wouldn't be firing nurses and teachers.

Given that the Speech from the Throne suggests the Premier will yet again review problems without solving them, when will the Premier have the courage to do something about it instead of just talking about it?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, every day since the 1st of October this government has stood up in this House. We have solved problems. We have identified problems. We have acted where we've needed to with respect to budgeting. We've acted where we've needed to with respect to legislation. We've acted where we've needed to with respect to making decisions in government that favourably impact Albertans, and we'll continue to do that.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electricity Prices

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Speech from the Throne included no plan to address one of this government's most obvious policy failures, electricity deregulation, which has led to higher power bills across the board. Why hasn't this Premier done anything to give consumers relief from skyrocketing power bills?

*The text in italics exceeded the time limit and was not read in the House.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, what the Speech from the Throne did yesterday was refer to the fact that we have tremendous opportunities for economic development, that we have very important natural resources that have to be managed for the benefit of Albertans. As we move through doing what government needs to do with respect to legislation and policy development, we will do what this caucus and cabinet cares about. That is ensuring that Alberta is competitive. It's ensuring that Alberta consumers are paying rates that are competitive and fair and ensuring that industry is going to be able to afford to keep operating.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you what they will ensure. They will ensure that on the coldest day in the winter a shortage of electricity shot it up to over 90 cents a kilowatt hour. Ninety cents. Will the Premier admit that the assurance of lower prices from deregulation is yet another one of this government's broken promises to the people?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, we are well aware of the fact that electricity prices have been higher in December and January. It's due to the unfortunate outage of three different power plants. I'm happy to report that one of them is back online now and that the regulated rate option for next month is predicted to be lower than it is this month.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, given that the recent TransAlta example proves there is enormous profit to be made by breaking price gouging laws, will the Premier make sure that the fines for law-breaking are actually higher than the profits from cheating?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the incident with TransAlta prior to Christmas shows that the system does work. The irregularities were spotted at the very hours that they happened. They were reprimanded.

I'm happy to report to the House and to Albertans that the price for electricity in this province for the last five years has averaged 8 cents a kilowatt hour. It's totally competitive.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

PC Caucus Meeting in Jasper

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In November the Premier said:

I believe it's important for political parties to pay for partisan activity that their leader undertakes . . . I think it's critical that if there are expenses related to pure political activity that they not be paid for by either the government of Alberta or the [people] of Alberta, and we're completely above board about that.

Will the Premier please explain how the PC caucus and many unelected Tory candidates going to a retreat immediately prior to an election can be considered anything other than a taxpayer-subsidized political activity?

Ms Redford: Everyone who sits in this House who ran for the Progressive Conservative Party is sitting as a member of the government caucus. There are many people in the opposition, who are members of other caucuses, who also receive caucus budgets, Mr. Speaker. We know that we follow the rules with respect to how we spend that money, and I presume that all hon. members on the other side do exactly the same thing. We had a very successful caucus. There is certainly no doubt that everyone in Alberta knew that we were having a caucus, and we got some good results.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, it must have been nice to load up the luxury bus to go for a nice little retreat.

Given the Premier's insistence that the government will be more accountable and transparent than it has been in the past, will the Premier make all the receipts associated with the Jasper junket/retreat publicly available?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, there is a system in place in this House that ensures that all spending is accounted for, that rules are followed, and of course we will follow those rules.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, rest assured that this team will stretch those rules as far as they can.

Given that also in November the Premier said that she believes it's critical to be transparent about this kind of spending, what proof will the Premier give Albertans that shows her caucus didn't bend the rules by using taxpayer money for electioneering?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the LAO, as I understand it, is the office that ensures that caucuses spend their money appropriately. We have a whip that I trust to do that. We have an LAO that I presume has systems in place that audit that. We are incredibly confident that there was absolutely nothing untoward, and there's no reason to suggest otherwise.

Provincial Tax Policy

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta income tax advantage of a 10 per cent flat tax is something that most Albertans are proud of. It's a tax that doesn't punish success, treats everyone equally, and makes our province attractive for highly skilled workers. In yesterday's throne speech it was noted that this government plans on reviewing income taxes, which likely means raising them. To the Premier. As you know, should Albertans choose a Wildrose government in the coming weeks, we will not raise income taxes. Will you clearly commit to Albertans that should a PC government be re-elected, you will not increase income taxes?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the throne speech yesterday set out a very important discussion that we need to have as Albertans. We need to talk about how we spend, and we have to talk about revenue. We have to talk about the heritage fund, and we're going to do all of that. I'll tell you that I'm looking forward to, as I said before, the budget tomorrow. The other thing is that I'm looking forward to this House passing this budget so that when we go to the polls, Albertans know exactly what this government stands for.

Mr. Anderson: I'm really trying to help you out here, Premier. Given your refusal to commit to not raising income taxes should you be re-elected, will you at the very least commit to Albertans that you will under absolutely no circumstances increase income taxes or implement any other kind of tax increase without disclosing your plans to do so before Albertans go to the polls on election day?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, there is a budget coming to this House tomorrow that is going to set a very clear fiscal plan for the future of this province. I think that's what Albertans want, that's what they expect, and that's what they're going to see. There will be no doubt with respect to that.

Mr. Anderson: Well, that was as clear as mud.

Premier, given that your Finance minister has openly mused about a provincial sales tax and bringing back a health tax and now you are floating the idea of an increased income tax, will you prove wrong all those who are out there saying that you are the most liberal tax-and-spend Premier in the history of this province and make it clear to Albertans that under no circumstances will you increase their taxes or that if you do increase their taxes, you will at least tell us which taxes you plan to increase and by how much before – that being the key word – Albertans go to the polls? How much are you going to raise taxes, Premier? How much?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, in the budget to be brought to this House tomorrow, that will be passed before we go to the polls, it will be very clear to Albertans what this government stands for.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On the weekend my wife and I looked at our electricity bill. My wife dug out the power bill from a year ago, and we compared them. We compared the bills, and she was shocked to see that, in fact, our power bill is double what it was a year ago. I want to ask the Premier: why is she prepared to let ordinary Alberta families remain at the tender mercies of the big power companies, who are reaping huge profits, and force people to pay double what they were paying a year ago for their power bill?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I've already indicated to the House that the system we have has provided competitive electricity rates with all nonhydro jurisdictions. For the last five years it has averaged 8 cents a kilowatt hour. Albertans should know that if they don't like the regulated rate option, almost all customers have the option of a contract which will lock them in at a rate. Right now those contracts are running 8 to 9 cents per kilowatt hour. You can get them for three to five years.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, my neighbours and the people in my constituency and, in fact, all over Alberta are calling and e-mailing me about their power rates. Whatever the minister has said, the power rates are just way too high. I want to ask the Premier: why is she not going to take action to protect ordinary Alberta families from these outrageous power bills?

Ms Redford: What we know is that, as the Minister of Energy has said, with a deregulated market we are able to provide some of the lowest cost electricity in the country, Mr. Speaker. Over the long term that's very important. Sometimes with respect to markets we do see increases; we also see decreases. When we comparatively look over time, what we see is Alberta consumers having very competitive prices with respect to electricity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Just last week I was visiting some of my seniors in my constituency, and they raised the question of the power bills that they have to pay on fixed incomes. Power rates go up and down like crazy, and they're wondering, you know, what the government is going to do to protect them from these rising prices, that they just can't afford to pay. Why doesn't the Premier have an answer for them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the privilege of serving in a department called Human Services. I was asked to do so by the Premier because this Premier focuses very much on vulnerable Albertans and how we support them. If there are any vulnerable Albertans who are in distress because they cannot afford to meet their bills, Alberta Works and Alberta Supports will be there to help them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Poverty Reduction

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On Monday the groups Vibrant Communities Calgary and Action to End Poverty in Alberta released The Costs of Poverty, an externally reviewed study that shows that keeping people in poverty costs Alberta between $7.1 billion and $9.5 billion a year. If poverty were a government ministry, only health would consume more of the provincial budget. Will the Premier commit today to do the right thing and the fiscally responsible thing and invest in a poverty reduction strategy?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The report on Monday was very interesting. I think it gathered a lot of information that many of us who've been active on these issues have known for many years. We know that it's the right thing to do not only because it has an economic interest for us but also because we want to make sure we're supporting vulnerable Albertans. That's why we created the Ministry of Human Services, so that we had the ability under a very strong minister to bring services together to develop policy and to create a social policy framework.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. Since the approach to poverty that she inherited, a system of benefits and services for the poor which it sounds as though she wants to continue, actually keeps people poor rather than giving them a hand up, will she follow the recommendation of the former Standing Committee on the Economy and ask people who've had the experience of living poor what they need to get themselves out of the poverty trap?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we're on precisely that trail with our social policy framework discussions. Over the past two months I've been meeting with people who deal with social agencies across the province as well as people engaged in business. We're also going to be talking with people who are actually in poverty and people who are the recipients of social agencies as we move forward to develop a social policy framework which deals with both how you help people in need and how you prevent the situation where people get to need. [interjection]

The Speaker: The hon. member, please. We'll get to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre in question 17.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. I keep hearing about this social policy framework, and I'm hoping that all you're doing is hanging a different name on a poverty reduction strategy because maybe you think it'll sell better that way. Given that Calgary reported its first homeless population decrease in 20 years this week, will the Premier acknowledge that the 10-year plan to end homelessness is working and, since housing is part, as is electricity deregulation, of the poverty picture, make the same commitment to poverty reduction that her government has admirably made to ending homelessness?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, the 10-year action plan to end homelessness is working across this province, and it is a model. It's a model of how social agencies can work with government and community to create the opportunity for individual Albertans to be successful, and it's working. Unfortunately, it's probably the poverty reduction strategy that should be renamed because it is broader than just poverty reduction. It's about how people balance that income gap and those other things which affect social cohesion and how government and community work together to help people stay out of poverty as well as to get the tools they need to support themselves and their families and to be contributing citizens.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. We're almost three years into the transition of ambulance service from the municipalities to the province, yet I in Strathcona and the Member for Sherwood Park, I know, and many of my colleagues here continue to hear about problems with response times, consolidation, and dispatch. Can the minister please tell us when these problems will be solved and Albertans will see a more seamless ambulance service?

Mr. Horne: Thank you to the hon. member for the question. I think it's important to note that we have seen improvement over the last three years in Alberta. In the case of Edmonton, for example, I had the opportunity to go on a ride-along with EMS staff here a couple of weeks ago, and I was pleased to see some of the advances that have been made in dispatch, the opportunities for EMS staff to hand off patients to other crews to reduce their waiting time and allow them to get back on the road. That said, there are many challenges, Mr. Speaker. I think the first improvement in the discussion about this issue will be with better data.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental to the same minister. We've heard about lots of challenges, especially here in the capital region. Can the minister tell us what he personally has done to ensure that the people of Edmonton continue to receive a higher quality ambulance service as this transition continues?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, a number of things have been done already. In the case of Edmonton we know that additional stations are needed, and plans are in place to open an additional five stations over the next few years. In addition to that, we need to ensure that we have adequate numbers of staff on the road.

All the while I think it's important that we recognize that the volume of visits in our emergency departments is increasing. In the last six months alone the volume of ED visits in Edmonton is up as much as 20 per cent. So while we continue to make improvements in resources that are allocated to EMS workers, we also have to continue our work to reduce waiting times in the emergency department.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Quest: No supplemental.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

PC Party Benefit Plan Trust

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. In Alberta donations to political parties are eligible for a tax credit of up to 75 per cent, a benefit that costs the Treasury as much as $5 million each year. My first question is to the Premier. Do donations to the PC Party fund the Premier's salary top-up, also known as the benefit plan trust? Those donations are eligible for at least a partial tax credit.

The Speaker: Well, we're on the edge here, but if you wish to proceed, proceed.

Okay. Second question, please.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier: why is it necessary to top up your $215,000 annual salary with a benefit plan trust that is subsidized by the taxpayers of this province? Is your power bill that high?

Ms Redford: I vividly recall this discussion from last session, and I very clearly said at that time that this trust that this hon. member is referring to is not a trust that I have any knowledge of. It is not possible for me to answer questions about it. It is not something that touches my life in any way. I have no answer to the question because it is not connected to me as either Premier of the province or Leader of the PC Party, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: given that the former Premier, the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, had a benefit plan trust set up for him from the PC Party, are you telling this House and taxpayers across the province that you are not to receive a benefit plan trust as the former Premier did?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I will say, as I said two minutes ago and as I said all of last fall, that I do not receive a salary top-up. I do not receive anything remotely related to anything that the hon. member is referring to. Whatever may have come before with respect to those arrangements has nothing to do with me.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Impaired Driving

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transportation regarding the impaired driving legislation. Certainly there is support for it in my constituency, and they have certainly gotten the message about drinking and driving. No one wants to get hit or killed by a drunk driver. At the same time I'm getting lots of questions about how it will work, when it's coming forward, how it will be implemented, and whether it's okay to have a drink with dinner. Can the minister offer some clarification to these questions?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, try one.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, this legislation is about making our roads safer for all Albertans. Let me clarify that this does not change the limits and what it means to be impaired. This also does not prevent an individual from having a drink or going out after work with friends or with family. The only thing that's been changed . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the minister can continue that.

Also, which part of the legislation is going to go first? You're obviously targeting criminal offenders and repeat offenders the most. So which part of the legislation will be implemented first?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I've always tried to make it clear that this legislation will be implemented in phases. What we hope will happen and what we're working towards is to ensure that the .08 and above is dealt with or implemented probably at the beginning of summer. Also, the .05 would be implemented at the end of summer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why will the penalties for the .05 to .08 take longer to implement?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we need to ensure with what we're doing that we do it right, that we get the tracking system in place. More critically important, we need to ensure that there is a public education portion, and presently we are working with the hospitality and restaurant industry. At the end of the day this is to ensure that our highways are safer, and we are working with industry and with people in Alberta to make sure that this does happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Accommodation and Health Care for Seniors

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certain phrases from the Speech from the Throne yesterday were very disconcerting for many Albertans, including myself, concerned about the future of health care in Alberta. The Premier has already indicated that she intends to encourage further privatization of long-term care and lift the cap on accommodation fees, which makes long-term care unaffordable for many Albertans. To the Premier: why would you choose higher costs for seniors' care?

Ms Redford: The hon. member's suggestion that this is the new order of the day is simply not the case. What we have is the opportunity right now to create institutions that will be more than places for people to be housed. We are going to create homes for people who are going to be able to have a quality of life through the entire time that they choose to be in some form of continuing care and assisted living. There will be a number of options available for seniors – and that's important – but no one will be left behind, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Swann: If they can afford – if they can afford – the new levels of care.

Is the Premier aware that study after study has shown that the introduction of private, for-profit health care leads to not only increased costs but reduced quality of care?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the suggestion in the hon. member's question that health care would be privatized in any way is absolutely false. We have a system in Alberta where we have accommodation and we have health care that are combined and delivered in one facility. We will do very creative work that will matter to Albertans with respect to accommodation. No Alberta senior ever has to be worried that their health care will be impacted.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier assiduously avoids saying that this will be publicly funded and publicly delivered. By so doing, it's clear the agenda is private alternatives.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this hon. member's conclusion is not connected to his supposition. The fact that we are going to have an accommodation system that will allow Alberta seniors choice while still taking care of all seniors is what Alberta seniors have said that they want. We in this government have guaranteed that publicly funded health care will be available for all Albertans, including seniors.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Athabasca Oil Sands Area Transportation Coordinating Committee

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year the government signed an agreement with the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo committing to a number of initiatives intended to improve planning and co-ordination in the Fort McMurray oil sands region. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure, responsible for the oil sands secretariat. What tangible progress has been made in implementing this agreement? [interjection]

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great question. The MOU is a very important agreement with both the government of Alberta and the Fort McMurray community, and we all know the pressures that they're dealing with up there. To better co-ordinate and do forward planning, there were two main commitments in this MOU. One was to establish the transportation co-ordinating committee; the other was to establish an urban development subregion. Both of these would empower the community and industry to do better forward planning, and we've made some good progress on those.

Mrs. Leskiw: My second question is to the same minister. Who is on this new committee, and what is its mandate?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the transportation co-ordinating committee, which was announced in January by both the Minister of Transportation and myself and reports to both the Minister of Transportation and myself, includes representatives from the Oil Sands Developers Group, the municipality, the Alberta Economic Development Authority, the Fort McMurray Airport Authority, the Northern Alberta Development Council. Really, it's a formal mechanism for these groups to come forward and do forward planning, help with high-level priorities and potentially alternative funding ideas on the transportation needs of the region.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you. My second supplemental question is to the Minister of Transportation. How does the work of this committee tie in with the work done by Alberta Transportation?

2:20

Mr. Danyluk: Well, what happens, Mr. Speaker, is – I find it very interesting that the member opposite that represents the area talks about it being run by bureaucrats. In fact, the situation is exactly the opposite. I look forward to the advice that is coming from the committee that involves industry, that involves municipalities, that involves people of Fort McMurray to help decide what the transportation priorities should be. It is critical that we work with the community and not charge ahead with a plan that has no focus or direction.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer.

PC Caucus Meeting and Cabinet Tour

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are about how this government defines results-based budgeting when it comes to Bill 1. Albertans have a few ideas about what getting results for their tax dollar means. It means prioritizing spending on front-line services, supporting our health professionals who hold our health system together, and, most importantly, balancing the books. It definitely doesn't include spending $70,000 on a government getaway to the Jasper Park Lodge. Can the Treasury Board president then explain to Albertans how their two-day government getaway at the slopes is a priority for Albertans?

Mr. Horner: Well, as the Premier said, each of the caucuses in this Legislature is allotted an amount of money to be used for their caucus meetings, their caucus retreats, their expenses as a caucus. In fact, some of the caucuses even pay members that are outside of their particular sphere of influence, in some cases some leaders and whatnot. These caucus funds are all monitored by the Legislative Assembly. Under your auspices, Mr. Speaker, we have a set of rules that we must all follow, and this government caucus did follow those rules.

Mrs. Forsyth: Sir, you didn't answer the question. We're talking about priorities for Albertans.

Given that this government spent over a hundred thousand dollars of hard-earned tax dollars of Alberta families on a pre-election cabinet tour as the budget was already at the printing presses, can the Treasury Board president let Albertans know if that's what they call getting results for Albertans?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I recall being on several cabinet tours. In fact, the only reason I missed the last cabinet tour was that I stepped down from cabinet to run for the leadership of our party. I can tell you that the tour last February was very well received by Albertans because they want us to be out there with them, not stuck in here all the time. They want us to be in their community, to be talking to them directly every year. We will continue to do that.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Treasury Board President, that's your job as an MLA.

How can you, Mr. Treasury Board President, even rationalize spending over $170,000 in the last month, and how can you even consider that a priority for Albertans?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans have told us that their priority is for us to listen to them. That means getting into their communities and talking to them, and that's exactly what we did. We will continue to do that. The next election is four years away.

We're not going to stop talking to them. The next election is four months away. We're not going to stop talking to them. We're going to continue.

Aboriginal Education

Mr. Hehr: Over half the inmates in our prisons are aboriginal. Yesterday's throne speech said that this government will try to create educational opportunities for our First Nations communities, but the federal government, which funds First Nations education 30 per cent below the rest of society, has decided to build prisons instead of schools and handed us the bill. To the minister of aboriginal relations. It has become clear that this government will not stand up for Alberta when the feds are passing along costs for their insanity. Accordingly, I'll ask the minister to get a backbone and refuse to pay the bill for more prisons and demand that these millions be put into keeping people out of jail . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister, please.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, this is a very inaccurate and unfair portrayal of what the federal government has done and is doing. As a matter of fact, I have to report to the Legislature that some three months ago I met with Minister Duncan, the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada. We have decided to approach aboriginal education in Alberta together as partners, whether it's on- or off-reserve, to share our expertise both in delivering education and in federal government aboriginal relations, and to look at children as children irrespective of whether they live on- or off-reserve.

Mr. Hehr: I appreciate the minister's enthusiasm for answering that question, but it was meant for the minister in charge of aboriginal relations when I asked him whether we're going to pay for this insane prison program the federal government is running, or are we going to pay to put some schools on native reserves?

Mr. Dallas: Well, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member raising the issue of education. It allows us an opportunity to talk about the initiatives that are under way with the MOU, the discussions that we're having with aboriginal leaders, aboriginal communities, the federal government, and certainly our ministries to advance very important issues around aboriginal education, critical issues to the people of Alberta.

Mr. Hehr: So a follow-up question to the same minister: are we simply going to pay the bill, then, for these prisons? Are we not going to say anything to the federal government about this?

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, the issue of paying bills is not relevant to the initiatives that we have in that we're working very closely with aboriginal peoples from around the province on to advance educational issues, recognizing this is an important pathway to achieving economic and social success for aboriginal communities throughout Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Homelessness in Calgary

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some research has identified Calgary as the centre of homelessness in Alberta due to the attractive job market but lack of affordable housing. A recent report on the state of homelessness in Calgary which says that the number of people living on the streets in Calgary is down 11.4 per cent is certainly very, very good news. To the Minister of Human Services: how do you plan to ensure that this number continues to decrease and keep the momentum in this positive direction?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the preliminary count results that came out this week in Calgary are very, very encouraging. By the straight numbers that's 411 fewer people on the street than the previous count, and we know that that's about 4,500 people across this province who now have places to live and the opportunity to live in dignity, access to the programs that they need to be successful. We're going to continue that good work with the community agencies and the municipalities across this province. The action on homelessness is working.

Ms Woo-Paw: Can the minister comment on the accuracy of this number in response to the recent criticism that this year's count took place on a frigid January evening rather than in May?

Mr. Hancock: Well, no, Mr. Speaker, I can't comment on the methodology that was used, but I can say this. On that frigid day that the count was done, approximately 98 per cent of the homeless were in some form of shelter. That was good news, that the people who were homeless were being appropriately taken care of so that they weren't out in that bitter weather. I do know that the Homeless Foundation is also planning to do a summer count.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's speech from the throne paid lip service to finding "new and effective ways to reach out to vulnerable Albertans." Meanwhile, a promise the Premier made during the Progressive Conservative leadership race last summer remains unfulfilled. To the Minister of Seniors. The Premier promised to increase assured income for the severely handicapped benefits by $400 a month and to double the amount recipients can earn before the government claws back their payments. AISH recipients want to know: when will the Premier's promise becoming a reality?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you for that question. Mr. Speaker, the most vulnerable Albertans do receive great services today, and I expect in the near future we'll hear lots of news about receiving even better service.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Again to the Seniors minister: given the high cost of living in this province, will this government consider indexing AISH payments to the cost of accommodation and food?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is right. There are vulnerable Albertans in many situations that are very, very difficult. Today's $1,188 top-up is not enough, and we have to do something. I've heard very, very clearly from the Premier and from my caucus to get to work on this issue. Wait till tomorrow, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Given that AISH benefits were last increased in April of 2009, why has this government kept Alberta's most vulnerable waiting so long?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, 45,000 AISH recipients, all different types of needs: disabilities, mental issues, sometimes both. We have great services to help those individuals, and those services will be enhanced. Listen to the budget very, very carefully, and let's have a discussion next week about this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Advocacy for Seniors

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The number of seniors in our province is growing every day, and in the next 10 years it's projected that that number will increase by 55 per cent to over 650,000 seniors. Their needs and expectations are changing just as rapidly, and they will need help with concerns and problems they will face as they age. My question is to the hon. Minister of Seniors. When are you going to put a seniors' advocate in place?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you for that question. This is one of the issues that became very clear and near to me. As past chair of the Seniors Advisory Council I heard these concerns, and I heard these concerns reinforced by the Premier. I can tell you that together with my ministry staff this is one of the goals that I will be working on. In one year from now I commit: we'll have a seniors' advocate.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I am so pleased to hear this answer and the good news about the future.

Can the minister tell me what he and his ministry are doing right now to help seniors with their immediate concerns?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you for that question again. Mr. Speaker, it's not news to any of us that seniors' issues and the seniors' population are rapidly growing in this province. I know that with my own parents going through issues at the end of their lives, it took a lot of support from families and communities and from, you know, groups like the Seniors Advisory Council, our Alberta Supports line. We get a thousand seniors a day calling our Supports line, sir. Just imagine: a thousand calls a day. It makes logical sense that the Seniors ministry work with other ministers to establish a seniors' advocate.

Environmental Protection

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's throne speech said, "The people of this province share a deep love and respect for its environment and natural resources," but clearly this government does not. Not once does the term or even the idea of environmental protection get mentioned. What we do see is the environment being dug up, clear-cut, and sold off. To the Minister of Environment and Water: how can this government claim that it will protect the environment when every single reference in the document, in the throne speech, talks specifically about how to develop it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I would politely disagree with the hon. member. I think the actions speak louder than words with regard to the actions our Premier has taken and that we have taken with regard to environmental protection. I speak to last Friday's announcement, where I stood hand by hand and side by side with Minister Kent with regard to environmental management and how we're going to make sure that we increase the monitoring with regard to the oil sands. That's just one example of the many things that we're doing to ensure that we have a balance in this province with strong . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you. But I am talking about action. I'm not talking about press releases. I'm not talking about reviews. I'm not talking about possible plans. I'm not talking about vague budgeting. I'm talking about environmental protection. When are we actually going to see it, not a bunch of plans and weird budgets and vague comments?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would say that we had quite a bit of very positive response to that announcement because it is action driven. It is about taking action on the ground right away to make sure that there will be doubling of monitoring stations in the oil sands area, for one example. The feedback we got from scientists, from industry, from academics was that this was a great announcement, this timely announcement, and let's get on with it. That's exactly what we're doing. We're showing action in environmental protection.

Ms Blakeman: Well, then, back to the same minister: why does this government, this minister persist in the fantasy that anything they do is world leading or world class or even action based when they were dragged kicking and screaming, their little feet pounding on the ground, all the way to the monitoring table by the federal government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll just allude to a conversation with Dr. Schindler with regard to the way we are moving forward so that we would have action here. The first step we did when we announced it was to make sure that we wouldn't lose this spring season. We know how important the monitoring on this spring season is. We had a great conversation with Dr. Schindler and others, and they agree with that. Let's move on with the monitoring this spring. Then let's move on to the next steps of external bodies to govern this. We are taking action today, and we took action on Friday.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Wills and Succession Legislation

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's very important for Albertans to have a well-prepared estate plan, including a will, to make sure their wishes are carried out after their death. To the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. I understand new legislation has been proclaimed that changes the rules for certain estate plans. Could the minister please explain what impact this new legislation has on wills and estates in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question. He will recall that this important legislation was actually passed over a year ago, in the fall of 2010, but it was just proclaimed February 1. This legislation modernizes wills and estate law that had not previously been updated going back as far as the 1920s. There are changes. I can't possibly go through all of the changes that would impact Albertans, but there are some changes. Some may affect some Albertans; others may not. My best advice to all Albertans is to talk to their advisers and make a will.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of my constituents have concerns that their current estate plans will be affected by a rule that would allow a surviving spouse who takes their matrimonial property from his or her spouse's estate to also inherit from the estate. Could the minister please explain the intentions of this rule?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, there were many consultations that happened both before the legislation was passed in the fall of 2010 and since. One of the reasons for giving a year before implementing the legislation was so that people in the industry, if I can call it that, could speak to their clients, speak amongst each other, and identify any issues. There was an issue, but there is a very important principle that has been developed in the consultation, which was that the spouse of a deceased should be no worse off when their spouse dies than if they were divorced. We are having another look at that issue.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you for that explanation.

Given that this inheritance issue can affect the estate plans of some Albertans, could the minister tell us what he is doing to resolve this issue?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I was aware and am aware of the concerns that had been expressed, particularly with respect to the transition. When we proclaimed the legislation as of February 1, we specifically did not proclaim the part that dealt with the amendment to the Matrimonial Property Act. I have asked my department to engage in further discussions with experts in the area, people who are the front-line practitioners, so that we can reach an agreement as to how best to implement the new legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Skilled Labour Shortage

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During my meetings with many business owners in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie excellent feedback was received regarding what we're doing well and what we need to work on. One of the major concerns that was expressed to me had to do with the labour shortage that Alberta will be facing in the near future. My questions are to the Minister of Human Services. Given that Alberta's population is continuing to age at an increasing rate, what is the government doing to help attract and retain quality, skilled workers to our province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a concern. I mean, we have the benefit, as we look around the world and see what's happening in many other places and the unemployment circumstances there, that we have an economy that's growing. Indeed, it's a great problem to have. We do need more people. We need more people because we have 19,000 people every year retiring as the baby boomers get older. I wasn't anticipating that you would be one of those, Mr. Speaker. I anticipate that you will go on to long, more enjoyable practices for the good of Albertans.

But we need people, so we need to engage aboriginal people, mature workers, women in nontraditional occupations, persons with disabilities, youth, and we need programs . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Attracting these workers to our province is one thing, but a number of my constituents have expressed concerns that a number of these workers are coming to our province and then leaving soon after. What additional programs are in place to make sure they reside in Alberta and become permanent residents here?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are two aspects to that. One is that we do need to work with social agencies in our communities to help immigrant workers particularly, people coming from other parts of the world who perhaps need help with English as a second language, so that they can have the language of work but also so that they can settle into the community, have access to the schools, and be comfortable in the community. We need to work with them on those issues. We also, of course, have temporary foreign workers, and we need to make sure that those temporary foreign workers also fit well into the world of work and the communities in which they live.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: No more questions.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question-and-answer period for today. Nineteen members were recognized; 106 questions and responses were given. We're moving along quite well, so we'll take a 30-second break before we continue the Routine.

Provincial Fiscal Policy

Mr. Hehr: What has been lost in the conversation regarding the Alberta Liberal platform is that we will probably balance the budget. Let's think about this for a second, not think about left or right but simply what is best for today and for tomorrow.

Unless you're totally going to dismiss the role of government, there are expenditures that need to take place: roads, schools, universities, police, ambulance, hospitals, long-term care facilities, and the hiring of people to work in these endeavours. Money to pay for these services comes from income tax, fossil fuel, and gambling revenues. Currently these essential services cost some $40 billion a year: $12 billion from taxes, $2 billion from gambling, $10 billion or so from fossil fuels, and the rest are user fees and federal transfers and for the last four years by using the sustainability fund, which is now all but used. Take away resource revenues, gambling, and now the sustainability fund; it is clear we have a structural deficit.

Since 1985 the Alberta government has spent over $200 billion in fossil fuel revenues. Despite this largesse at different times Alberta has faced cycles of cuts to services and spending of epic proportions. See Ralph Bucks. Furthermore, we have not saved a dime in our heritage trust fund, a fund that was set up to recognize that using all of our fossil fuel revenues to pay today's bills would be like a landowner selling off pieces of the family farm to go on vacation.

In our plan we show a way to provide essential services and a way of saving for the future, all this without increasing the taxes of 90 per cent of Albertans. This is a responsible position. Even if you believe in a tax advantage, there's no need for a tax holiday. We will still be the lowest taxed jurisdiction in Canada. If we carry on with business as usual, our citizens will be shortchanged, and future generations will be put at a disadvantage. Accordingly, I'm hopeful that tomorrow's budget will address a more fair and reasonable taxation policy in order that Albertans can have a real conversation about what our future should look like before the election, not after.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Black History Month

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today in celebration of Black History Month 2012. Every year since Canada's Parliament passed an act in 1995 to recognize these celebrations, Canadians from coast to coast to coast have taken pause to reflect on the many contributions of black Canadians from the dawn of our history to modern times. I've been asked many times: why the need to celebrate black history? My response: black history is really just Canadian history with a little colour.

Mr. Speaker, we have much to celebrate from those who settled on our east coast, whether they were Maroons from my homeland of Jamaica in the 1600s or came via the Underground Railroad, fleeing slavery in the southern U.S. A large group came to Alberta at the turn of the 20th century and formed famous settlements such as Amber Valley, Campsie, in your constituency, Mr. Speaker, Wildwood, and Breton, west of my home in Leduc.

Mr. Speaker, the descendants of these pioneers were not only great farmers and ranchers and ball players. They became great political leaders like Lincoln Alexander, the former Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, and Willie O'Ree, the first black player in the NHL, long before Grant Fuhr and Georges Laraque. We have been blessed with great artists like Oscar Peterson; medical greats like renowned cancer specialist Dr. Tony Fields of Alberta Health Services; humanitarians like Dr. Fil Fraser, a chair of the Alberta Human Rights Commission and also a well-known author and broadcaster; and the list goes on and on.

As the first serving member of our community to sit in this esteemed Assembly, Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pride along with the Member for Calgary-North West, the second such member, to encourage all Albertans to join us and use the many events planned over the next month to learn more about the many contributions made by black Canadians. I'd like to congratulate all the volunteers who put these celebrations together.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Cabinet Tour

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A couple of weeks ago the Alberta government went on a cabinet tour at taxpayers' expense supposedly to listen to Albertans, yet it was heavily criticized by Albertans, by the media, and even by the former Treasury Board president, now the independent Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, as a charade. It's so refreshing to hear Albertans who call a spade a shovel.

That being said, I witnessed 18 cabinet ministers come to my hometown of Fort McMurray, the oil sands capital of the world, in case they hadn't heard. In fact, they didn't travel highway 63. All 18 cabinet ministers flew in, unlike the families. We travel the highway. They should try travelling it sometime.

I thank all the organizers of the Golden Years Society, who set up a meeting with ministers to talk about a long-term care centre that was promised four years ago but has not yet broken ground.

The Minister of Health and Wellness, the Minister of Seniors, and the Minister of Infrastructure, the Member for Athabasca-Redwater, were all there. Interestingly, they heard from Mr. Dave McNeilly. He ended the meeting as an 80-year-old resident who is very well respected. He built our community for over 40 years, and he's a former school principal. Interestingly, he told the ministers that he was one of the first six citizens who formed the Conservative Party back in 1968 with Peter Lougheed. But he remarked 40 years later that this government and these ministers are acting just like that government then. They were no longer listening. The question he asked was: why are you no longer listening? It can be quite simple. Listen to us, the grassroots Albertans, and you will be rewarded. He believes that because you're not listening, you will be punished in the next provincial election.

Sheldon Kennedy

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, today I'd like to recognize an outstanding Albertan and a constituent of Highwood, Mr. Sheldon Kennedy. Sheldon's NHL career spanned eight years, including two seasons with the Calgary Flames. It was during his time in Calgary that Sheldon made the courageous decision to charge his major junior hockey league coach with sexual assault for the abuse he suffered over a five-year period while a teenager under his care.

Mr. Kennedy's story has resonated throughout the world, bringing much-needed attention to the problem of sexual abuse of young athletes. Being a victim himself, Sheldon has done a tremendous job of raising awareness for the past 15 years. Through his cross-Canada in-line skating fundraiser, autobiography, and through Respect Group Inc., the company he cofounded, Sheldon has become a spokesman for many abuse survivors.

He has continued tirelessly with his efforts and recently presented his ideas to both the Canadian government in Ottawa and a U.S. subcommittee in Washington, DC. Sheldon has urged governments and sports groups to make training mandatory for anyone working with children and hopes that actions taken in Canada towards this can be a model for other countries to follow.

It takes a lot of courage to speak so openly about this subject and his experience, and it's humbling to witness someone take such a profound experience and transform it into the positive and empowering message Sheldon continues to share with all of us.

I would like to thank and commend Sheldon for the difference he has made and for shining the light on a very dark and serious subject. Today he remains a dedicated volunteer for community fundraisers in support of all youth sports, charities, schools, hospitals, wherever he is needed. Sheldon Kennedy, Highwood and indeed all of Alberta are proud to call you ours.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Helmets to Hardhats Program

Mr. Elniski: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to applaud Alberta's new partnership with the national helmets to hardhats program. This nonprofit program connects Canadian Forces members with quality career training and employment opportunities in the construction industry. Alberta, Edmonton in particular, is home to many veterans and military personnel making the transition from active duty to civilian life.

Approximately 5,200 men and women on active service, disabled, or in the reserves leave the military each year in Canada. These soldiers are well trained and well prepared for a rewarding career in construction after their military service. Mr. Speaker, taking advantage of these skills will not only show support for the veterans in this province but provide a co-ordinated approach to ensuring that opportunities exist in the private sector.

Alberta has long been a leader in recognizing military certificates of achievement as the equivalent of trade certificates in 10 trades related to the construction, transportation, and hospitality sectors. Helmets to hardhats opportunities are not limited to on-site construction jobs or apprenticeships. Openings in administration, engineering, human resources, and other skills are part of the program.

Mr. Speaker, I believe we have a responsibility to serve our soldiers as they have served our country. Programs such as helmets to hardhats help us live up to this responsibility.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition signed by many individuals from the constituency of Strathmore-Brooks. The petition reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to: urge the Government of Alberta to commit to having Highway #1 continue to pass through the Town of Strathmore, following its present route, and to abandon all plans to have Highway #1 by-pass the Town of Strathmore.

Thank you very much.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, do you have one for the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition?

Ms Blakeman: I do, and I have several for myself.

The Speaker: Go ahead.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition a document that he and the rest of us consider truly bold and visionary and which would improve the lives of Albertans, the 2012 Alberta Liberal platform. I will table that for your entertainment and education.

Further, I have several tablings from constituents. The first is from Barry Cattapan, who is asking the question again: will the Premier stick to her promise and raise the AISH money, and when would that be happening? That's from Barry.

The second tabling is from a constituent, Anna Koop. She is a computer science graduate and is very concerned over the cuts to the University of Alberta and the effect that has on the quality of education.

My third tabling is not from a constituent; it is from a frequent correspondent. She is writing about why Spray Lakes Sawmills has been given permission to clear-cut in the Castle when that is supposed to be a protected area and goes on to talk about the effect on the bears, which are black and grizzly bears.

My next tabling is a wonderful document called Poverty Costs: An Economic Case for a Preventative Poverty Reduction Strategy in Alberta. This document was launched either last week or Monday – I'm sorry; I can't remember – and was put together by both the Vibrant Communities Calgary, which is the city of Calgary, and Action to End Poverty in Alberta, which is a provincial organization. My thanks to Joe Ceci and the rest of the advisory council, writers, and researchers for this document. Very useful and valuable for us.

My final tabling, Mr. Speaker, is another document that has come from a great deal of community consultation, and this was produced and released in the city of Edmonton last week. It is the report of the Community Sustainability Task Force dated February 2012. The members of this task force included Michael Phair, Teresa Spinelli, Councillor Batty, Barbara Fung, Nancy MacDonald, Tegan Martin-Drysdale, Simon O'Byrne, Jana O'Connor, Trustee Cindy Olsen, Trustee Catherine Ripley, Christopher Smith, Rosalind Smith, Michael Splinter, Brian Staples, David Veitch, and Peter Wong. It's a very wide group of people in the city, the school boards, and the community, and I thank them very much for their work. It's how to rebuild the centre of Edmonton.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of tablings. The first comes from a lady by the name of Marilyn Marks, who has been an advocate for grandparents' rights and grandchildren's rights. Marilyn has created a website, which is www.albertagrandparents.ca, and has an e-mail address, albertagrandparents@shaw.ca. In working with Marilyn over the years, I've brought forward the motion on a unified family court and tried to better the lives of both grandparents and their grandchildren.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, consists of e-mails and four letters from the following individuals who are seeking the preservation of the Castle wilderness, many of whom have personally visited the Castle and all of whom believe that clear-cutting will damage the ecology, watershed, wildlife, and natural species and must be prohibited at all costs. These particular messages come from Jim Pissot, Hilah and Norman Simmons, Eileen Kosior, Bev Mazurick, Adam Storms, Marion Wright, Judy Huntley, Jeff Grossman, Brad Jones, Brian Horejsi, Derek Thompson, Madeline Wilson, Richard Burke, Ross McLean, John Groeneveld, Dorothy Dickson, Pam York, Daphne Smith, and Nicole Baker. They're the first of a series that I'll be tabling.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, do you have one on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood?

Ms Notley: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition signed by at this point 1,200 Albertans. The petition reads: "We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to take immediate action to regulate electricity prices, recognizing that electricity is an essential service."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In anticipation of Government Motions later in the afternoon but for the benefit of members I wanted to table a calendar relative to the anticipated budget main estimates schedule, which identifies where the various committees would meet and which committees are dealing with which budgets.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sorry; I made a mistake. I omitted the participation of the province of Alberta in the Elevate report of the Community Sustainability Task Force. My apologies to the Minister of Human Services, who participated in funding this project.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 7(7) says, "At 3 p.m. the items in the ordinary daily routine will be deemed to be concluded and the Speaker shall notify the Assembly." We have only one item left in here which may or may not be pertinent to the cause. If somebody would request to waive that, we would then be able to go to the next section, Tablings to the Clerk.

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Lukaszuk, Minister of Education, a memorandum dated December 22, 2011, from the hon. Mr. Lukaszuk, Minister of Education, to the hon. Mr. Kowalski, Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, providing information on how each school jurisdiction used its portion of the additional $107 million in funding and a letter dated December 20, 2011, from the hon. Mr. Lukaszuk, Minister of Education, to Mr. Anderson, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, responding to a question raised during Oral Question Period on December 6, 2011, regarding the selection of appropriate instructional resources in Alberta schools.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

- Mr. Hancock moved:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly resolve into Committee of the Whole, when called, to consider certain bills on the Order Paper.

The Speaker: This motion is not debatable.

[Government Motion 2 carried]

3. Mr. Hancock moved:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly resolve into Committee of Supply, when called, to consider supply to be granted to Her Majesty.

The Speaker: Once again this motion is not debatable.

[Government Motion 3 carried]

Consideration of Main Estimates

6. Mr. Hancock moved:
Be it resolved that the following procedures apply for the consideration of the 2012-2013 main estimates.
- (1) When they are laid before the Assembly, the main estimates stand referred to Committee of Supply and the policy field committees as outlined in the attached schedule.
 - (2) Standing Order 59.01(4) shall apply to consideration of the main estimates in policy field committees and in Committee of Supply except that after the time allocated to the third party in suborder (4)(c),
 - (a) for the next 20 minutes the members of the fourth party and the minister or the member of Executive Council acting on the minister's behalf may speak, and
 - (b) for the next 20 minutes the members of any other party represented in the Assembly or any independent members and the minister or the member of Executive Council acting on the minister's behalf may speak.
 - (3) Standing Order 59.01(5) and (6) shall apply with any necessary modifications to the consideration of main estimates in Committee of Supply.
 - (4) Each department's estimates shall receive a minimum of three hours' consideration except for the estimates of Executive Council, which shall receive a minimum of two hours' consideration.
 - (5) When a department's estimates are considered by Committee of Supply, the committee's consideration shall continue until it is complete notwithstanding standing orders 3(1) and 4.
 - (6) A policy field committee shall commence its consideration of a department's estimates at 6:30 p.m. or, if the Assembly has adjourned later than 6 p.m., one half-hour after the Assembly adjourns for the day.
 - (7) After the Committee of Supply has concluded its consideration of a department's estimates, the committee rises and reports progress without question put. All votes on a department's estimates in Committee of Supply stand deferred until the date scheduled for the vote on the main estimates.
 - (8) The Committee of Supply shall vote on the main estimates on the evening of March 13, 2012, commencing at 7:30 p.m.
 - (9) Standing orders 59.01(1), (2), and (3), 59.03(3) and (4), and 60(1) shall not apply to the consideration of the 2012-2013 main estimates.

March 12, evening: Agriculture and Rural Development, Energy PFC; Transportation, Finance PFC.

March 13, afternoon: Human Services, Committee of Supply.

March 13, evening: main estimates votes, Committee of Supply.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I would move Government Motion 6, which deals with the consideration of the main estimates, in the manner in which it is printed in the Order Paper.

The Speaker: This motion is debatable. The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do have considerable difficulties with where we have arrived for our budget debates at this point in time. Having served for I think this is now my 16th budget, I've been through a number of permutations of how these are considered. I think people in here are pretty well aware that I obey the rules. I actually embrace the rules. I think they're a way of us getting business done in this House, and for the most part – well, actually always – I obey them. If I don't like them, you're going hear me talk about it, and here we are. I'm going to talk about it.

At this point I seriously considered not participating in the budget debates this year because I have found that the process has reached a point where it's just not useful in the amount of information that we are able to pull out of the ministers, the amount of time that we have to actually have a back-and-forth debate. It's not a meaningful process anymore, and that grieves me. I want this process to work. I want my constituents to be able to read the Hansard and understand what went on. But right from the way the budget documents are presented nowadays – honestly, there is one line for Alberta Health Services for a $17 billion expenditure. One line. No breakdown, no listing of services, no listing of programs, no division anywhere down from that. How are any of us supposed to try and debate that?

That's not only me, but it's members of your own caucus. I agree absolutely with the Minister of Finance that it is akin to something that comes out of the back end of a horse. I absolutely agree. He's putting that very well on my behalf. Thank you for that.

I hear in the throne speech that the Premier would like to revisit the entire way we do this, and I hope that is true. I hope that we do get a revamped way of doing this that is more useful to members of the opposition, members of the media, and members of all parties that are in this House, because I have to say that where we're at now is so close to useless that I am really quite frustrated with it.

What we have before us now are a number of sort of restatements of the way we work through the budget debates in the policy field committees and the agreements about how much time different parties get to talk about it. I, in fact, negotiated some of this, but it really is a negotiation of diminishing returns, at the point where the Official Opposition has one hour – and half of that is allocated back to the minister – to try and debate a budget. No matter how large or how small or how controversial or how many people are affected by a budget, you get one hour, and you're getting approximately half of that. When you have ministers who are literally trained to not give you any kind of meaningful answer, it really just does become a silly game. I think that's a terrible thing to be saying about a budget process in a province as wealthy as Alberta with as much possibility and opportunity as Alberta.

Government Motion 6, as I said, lays out how much time everybody gets to speak. Please, you know, people that are following along at home, pick this up and read it. Go online and look at what this actually says. Really, members of the other opposition parties get 20 minutes to talk about any given ministry. Twenty minutes. Oh, yeah, there's a bit of time at the end, and anybody can go for it, but that's when all of the backbenchers like to go for it, too. So we're all on a long list, trying to get in a few questions and, even more importantly, some concrete, meaningful answers. Not to be blown off, not to be trivialized, not to have my intelligence demeaned but to actually get some answers would be nice.

You know what? Some ministers are actually really quite good at it, and there is a really good exchange. Some are not, and there's no way to call them to account. There's no way to make them come back and give you something after the fact. For most of the budgets that we have to vote on at the end of this process we will not have received the answers to our questions that were promised to us at the time. So if I was waiting to hear why a given minister made a certain choice and that depends on whether or not I support that ministry's budget and I don't even get the answer until four weeks after I've had to vote on this, how is that a meaningful exchange? How is that a good debate, good transparency, good accountability of what the government is putting in front of us? It's just not.

You know, we've got different changes in times for things now. We start these at 6:30, after we have finished doing legislative debate until 6. If you're trying to prepare for any of this, you'd better well do it fast. Of course, the government has an advantage on us there, and that's just our tough luck. They've got three shifts they can run during this time; we've got one. So we're likely to be on schedule in the afternoon, on duty, and then also have to pound our way over to the Annex and leap into our seat and start debating a different ministry.

Will I support what is now going on? You know, I have acknowledged that I have been part of the debate on this, but I have to stand up and say that I just cannot support this anymore. This is not meaningful. This has been perverted beyond the sense of a meaningful budget debate, and it does not allow in many cases now for even – we used to have budget debates, and people would come and sit in the galleries and listen. I had dozens of seniors come for a Seniors' debate once. Well, these debates: there are only a couple of them that take place in the afternoon, in daylight, in sunlight, in this Assembly, where it is possible for people to come and listen.

Now, if they want to come at night, they can go to the Annex and try and get their way through security there and try and find the right room and squish themselves into a seat at the back. There's no additional opportunity for them to get any kind of electronic assistance if they need to be able to read something or closed captioning or anything like that. It's just unpleasant. As a result, now we don't have anybody that comes to listen to those debates.

I just have to put this on the record. This process is not working, and I can't support it. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on this motion.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I would like to reinforce what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has just said. I haven't been here quite as long as she has, but I think in six or seven budgets it's become more and more disappointing, first of all, in the information that we're given. It's line items. As stewards of the taxpayers and how that money is being spent, there's just no information there on what the breakdown is and how this is being spent.

I find it quite amusing that the government is going to go through its own personal assessed-based budgeting. It's just comical to me to hear them say that. You know, what have they been doing for the last 40 years?

The process that's set up, the amount of time that is allocated to the different members: it's just almost meaningless to take the time to prepare, to ask questions. When you're not the Official Opposition, you even have less time. Then the ministers, again, take up half of that time just pontificating in an almost laughable state on why you're even questioning anything that they have in their budget.

The process is not one that puts the interests of Albertans first. I would've thought that with this Premier and her idea of new budgeting to get better value for tax dollars – I don't think there are better eyes than to be more open with the books and to show the expanded items and how they're broken down and where they're being spent and the contracts that are out there. We could actually go through the contracts that are out there. None of those things, Mr. Speaker, are available to us as opposition members.

Again, the biggest problem is that the time to debate these different ministerial budgets is very, very short. The Premier today got up and said that, you know, she's going to debate this budget and pass it, then go forward, when, in fact, there are enough holes in this budget that you could drive semi trucks with cash through there and not know where they're spending it or how it's actually being spent.

Some Hon. Members: You haven't even seen it yet.

Mr. Hinman: If past budgets are any indication of future budgets, we don't need to see it. We listen to the Finance minister saying that we haven't seen it yet. I wonder whether he's seen it.

It's even more comical that they went out in February on a tour to say, "Oh, what do Albertans want in our budget?" when it was already printed. I mean, they're talking about going through the budget and no unjustified increases. How can you know whether something is justified or not when all you have is a one-line item saying, you know: procurement for health equipment, $1.2 billion? It's just ridiculous, Mr. Speaker.

So I, too, have to stand and reinforce what has been said by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre and say that it's very disappointing, the amount of time that is allocated to discussing the budget, but even more disappointing is what little information we actually have.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am pleased to rise and outline concerns that have been similarly raised by the two previous speakers. I'm sure I've said previously in debate about the experience that I enjoyed being fairly closely involved in the legislative process in other jurisdictions. I recall working very closely with ministers in the province of B.C., who were compelled to subject themselves and their ministries to estimates debate until such time as the opposition was finished asking questions. I know. It's a shocking idea.

In comparison, when I came here and discovered that we would be discussing $15 billion in three hours, I was really quite shocked. And I will say that having only been here since 2008, I never was part of this discussion. I've never actually thought it was particularly a functional process, and I continue to believe that.

This particular schedule, however, is even more offensive than what we've had to deal with over the course of my tenure here. When I first got elected, we would have one ministry a day, which in our caucus of two would allow us one day to prepare when you weren't also debating legislation and one day, then, to participate. Then about two years into it or a year into it we decided that we were going to have two ministries a day, which, obviously, for our small caucus meant that we were engaging in estimates debate and a thorough though very frantic review of the budget documents and background documents and annual reports and previous debates and media information and consulting with stakeholders and all that stuff every day because there were two of us. Now we have three ministries on a day.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, regardless of whether we're talking about the NDP caucus, which currently only has two members, the Wildrose caucus that has four, or the Liberal caucus with their eight, the fact of the matter is that this structure is a bullying structure. It is a structure that bullies the opposition into a process that is meant to look ever so slightly like it resembles a proper budgeting debate, an opportunity for members of the public to speak to their representatives and engage in significantly important decisions for the province of Alberta and the people of this province. But it's not that anymore, not with this particular structure. The change to three ministries a day makes, quite honestly, a farce out of the process, and under no circumstances could we ever vote for this schedule.

Now, in addition, I've also raised with the House leader, as he knows, that notwithstanding attempts in the past to ensure that members of the opposition who have critic areas in more than one ministry do not have their critic areas double-booked, obviously, when you're trying to fit three ministries a day into the schedule, it is not possible to avoid double-booking. In my case for at least two ministries that I am responsible for as a critic, the debate occurs at the same time, Mr. Speaker. The Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development and the Ministry of Seniors occur at the same time, and I'm the critic for both areas.

These are not minor ministries. These are ministries that have significant implications for the people of this province. The Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development is responsible for the land-use framework. While this government has done really nothing but meet and issue press releases on that particular area for a long time, the fact of the matter is that were they ever to do something on it, it would have profound implications for people throughout this province. The Ministry of Seniors is one of the areas that represents the biggest single failure of this government over the course of the last four years. It represents a daily reminder of a broken election promise from 2008. The money that is spent through this ministry is very important to a critically involved and engaged group of Albertans. As the NDP critic for both of those ministries, I really am, of course, quite insulted by the fact that we are unable to adjust it so that I'm not double-booked.

We hear a lot about, "Oh, well, this minister has an engagement in his riding, so we can't have him that day, so it's going to have to be a different day" and whatever the case may be. But at the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, the reality is that when you are scheduling three ministries on the same day, there are invariably going to be conflicts like that. That's why we shouldn't be scheduling three ministries on the same day.

That's why that whole process, as I said at the outset, is a clear example of bullying tactics on the part of a government that has become so enraptured with the size of its own majority that it has lost touch with the importance of the work that is done in this Legislature and the amount of work that is done by members of the opposition in this Legislature on behalf of all Albertans, whether we represent them as elected representatives or not. Our parliamentary democracy is not a representative democracy. It relies upon a robust opposition role on a daily basis regardless of what constituency you're from and what group of people you represent. This process negates that role and shows a profound disrespect, frankly, for this forum within which that role is supposed to be played out.

I cannot support this schedule, and I think that if this schedule is any evidence of the new administration's belief in transparency and democracy and citizen participation, then it is clear evidence that things have not only not changed, but they are in fact deteriorating for the worse. So it's a very unfortunate day that we have to address this motion. I'm sure the government will use its majority to pass it, but I think that it's a sad day for Albertans who are concerned about participating in a meaningful way in these kinds of important decisions.

Thank you.

3:20

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available, which affords five minutes for questions and comments. Would anyone like to participate under that segment?

Are there additional speakers on this motion?

Shall I call on the hon. Government House Leader to close debate? Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I won't be long, but I do want to indicate that, far from bullying, this process is quite consistent with what is in the standing orders, which allows for debate of estimates to be referred to the policy field committees, not more than two to meet at the same time. That is what's happening.

What this really does is bring 75 per cent of the public spending back into Committee of Supply in the House, to be done in the afternoon in the full light of day. It was mentioned by one of the members of the opposition in speaking that this is somehow not being done in the light of day. Seventy-five per cent of the estimates in five departments in Committee of Supply in the afternoon: that makes it available to everyone who wants to come and be in the galleries or whatever. The committee rooms that we have are available for the public to come. Nothing is hidden there. It is a perfectly valid and appropriate process to have 75 per cent of the estimates in the House, and then some of the other estimate departments, which are smaller in nature, go into the policy field committees as provided for in the standing orders.

This motion doesn't really change that much. It just allows for the same process to be used in Committee of Supply as is used in the policy field committees, sets the date for the vote, and sets the schedule. That's quite an appropriate process notwithstanding the protestations of the members opposite.

What the members opposite are really saying is that they don't have enough members to cover all the topics that come before the House at any given time, and that's probably true. You know, it is difficult. All members in the House have to pick the topics that they want to debate on because no parliamentary democracy, no Legislature in the world operates on the basis that every one of its members speaks to every one of the topics on the table at a time. Can you imagine the federal House of Commons, with I think it's – what? – 304 members now, having every member speak on every topic?

The Speaker: That debate is now concluded.

[Government Motion 6 carried]

Evening Sitings

8. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(1) the Assembly shall meet in the evening on the following dates:

- (a) on February 13, 2012, for consideration of the 2011-12 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2, to be followed by consideration of government business;
- (b) on March 13, 2012, following the vote on the 2012-13 main estimates and the report from Committee of Supply, for consideration of government business; and
- (c) commencing March 14, 2012, every Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday for the remainder of the 2012 spring sitting unless on motion by the Government House Leader made before 6 p.m., which may be made orally and without notice, the Assembly is adjourned to the following sitting day.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 4(1) this motion is not debatable, so I'll call the question.

[Government Motion 8 carried]

Committee Membership Changes

9. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the following changes to

- (a) the Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety be approved: that Mr. Rodney replace Mr. Ouellette;
- (b) the Standing Committee on Energy be approved: that Mr. Ouellette replace Mr. Rodney.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this motion is debatable if someone would like to participate.

Okay. I will call the question.

[Government Motion 9 carried]

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Fawcett moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Colonel (Retired) Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm truly honoured to rise today to move acceptance of the Speech from the Throne given by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. It is a privilege to do this on behalf of my constituents in Calgary-North Hill, which I have had the honour of serving, my neighbours, for the last four years.

I would like to begin by thanking the Lieutenant Governor for both his wonderful words and his commitment to this great province. I would also like to thank him for formally beginning this Fifth Session of the 27th Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, His Honour's distinguished career as both a member of the Canadian armed forces and as a military adviser and as a volunteer with humanitarian causes should be looked upon with the utmost respect by all members of this Legislature and of all Albertans. I also commend his dedication to continue serving the people of Alberta.

The Lieutenant Governor stated that he arrived in this province in the early '50s as a young soldier and that he has observed firsthand how far we have come as a province. His experience and insights are a testament to a long tradition of hard work and perseverance seen in Alberta, characteristics that have helped this province become a world leader in industry, research, and the production of natural resources.

I would like to extend thanks and gratitude also to our hon. Premier. The past year has been an incredibly demanding year for her, and she has served in the office of Premier with integrity, fierce dedication, and unwavering loyalty to the people of Alberta. Under her guidance Alberta continues to be a place with strong leadership, innovative solutions, and unlimited opportunity.

Alberta not only continues to weather the lingering economic downturn better than any jurisdiction in Canada and North America, but it also remains a prosperous place to do business. I ask any member of this Legislature or any Albertan: where else would you rather be than right here right now in Alberta? This is our province, and this is our time to shine, our time to secure the quality of life and prosperity of today for future generations, to which every human being on this planet aspires.

While opportunities for this great province are plentiful, this government recognizes that building a land of opportunity for all comes with many challenges. As His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor stated in the throne speech yesterday, "Albertans expect better and demand excellence." The hon. Premier has continued to listen and respond to what is most important to Albertans, focusing on the core building blocks of a great society, things such as education, health care, and maintaining a strong economy.

This government recognizes that generations of Albertans have worked hard to create the many advantages that we enjoy today, and today we are obliged to do the same for future generations of Albertans, Mr. Speaker. However, this government also recognizes that we face many difficulties in a modern society that requires innovative solutions, because exponential change is the only constant that we have today. Decisions that we make toward the continued prosperity of this province require a resilient and dedicated vision, a vision with a clear purpose which has a healthy, educated, and prosperous populace at its core. Together this government will ensure that our choices will be deliberate and will help improve our quality of life and secure our future prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, you as well as many in this Legislature would know that I was ecstatic to hear the Lieutenant Governor state this government's commitment to establishing a long-term fiscal framework for our province. This is something that I've long been advocating since being elected to represent the people of Calgary-North Hill. This starts with the Premier's groundbreaking commitment to results-based budgeting as introduced by her as the first bill of this legislative session. Efficiency and responsibility are themes that I often hear at the doors in my constituency, and I am sure they are echoed right across this province. This bill will challenge the automatic growth of spending by assigning funds where they are needed. It will require a zero-based budgeting process to ensure good value for taxpayers' dollars. Every three years each government department and program will come under close scrutiny as to the need, outcome achievement, and efficiency of its existence.

Mr. Speaker, myself and a number of my hon. colleagues in this Legislature have long advocated for such a robust and institutional review of government programs and spending. As a result of the leadership from this Premier we are now going to make significant progress and achievement in this area. As someone who has significant professional experience in program evaluations and as the parliamentary assistant for Treasury Board and Enterprise I look forward to the potential impact of this on future generations of Albertans because it will allow us to allocate money in a disciplined and intelligent manner while continuing to move the quality of life enjoyed by all Albertans forward.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to touch base on the other aspects of establishing a long-term fiscal framework for this province that were highlighted by His Honour yesterday. He indicated that this government will review the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, the sustainability fund, capital spending and infrastructure projects, gaming revenue, and income taxes. I fully support this type of dialogue and contemplation. As the hon. Lieutenant Governor said yesterday, "Long-established ways are being called into question, and comfortable assumptions are being examined anew."

The future prosperity and quality of life of this province will depend on this type of thinking. It will ensure that Alberta will remain in its position of having the strongest fiscal position and the most competitive tax structure in all of North America. As a result, Alberta will continue to be a beacon for investment and for those seeking opportunity, fortifying our already robust economy for future generations. A strong economy leads to an improved quality of life and a greater investment in health care and education, which in turn foster further progress and prosperity. Albertans understand that this is the foundation of our success and so does this government, Mr. Speaker.

Education is another pillar to the foundation of our success. As the Lieutenant Governor mentioned, "The nature of work and progress is changing, and as technology advances, the demand for highly skilled, educated workers will increase." Mr. Speaker, my constituency of Calgary-North Hill is home to many young professionals and their families that recognize the importance of a quality education.

Calgary has become one of the major epicentres of technology and business across North America, and it is imperative that Albertans are equipped with the necessary tools and skills to thrive in the global knowledge economy. This means exposing all of our youth from a young age to positive learning environments that incite curiosity and that they have a thirst for knowledge. Our K to 12 education system is widely recognized as one of the best in the world. I support this Premier in raising the bar in this area.

Ironically, Mr. Speaker, raising the bar in public education was a slogan that I used in my campaign for election to the public school board about seven years ago, in my first foray into elected public service. I believed then and I'm even more convinced today that education is the great equalizer of opportunity in our society. We must not waver from trying to improve and build upon success in this area. The future prosperity and progress of this province depends on it. The quality of life of future Albertans depends on it. I am thankful that the hon. Premier shares the same passion and vision in this area as I do.

As an active member of the community through coaching baseball and football, I also appreciate the importance of encouraging youth to be active at a young age. The physical and mental benefits from such activities are so important to the well-being and quality of life of all individuals. However, as people continue to live longer, access to primary care becomes more and more essential. I'm excited, Mr. Speaker, about the way our government is moving forward on health care. By allowing front-line staff to handle more duties and responsibilities of health care professionals such as nurse practitioners, this government has taken steps to improve efficiency in the health care system.

Moreover, the expansion of community-based care through the introduction of family care clinics staffed by multidisciplinary teams further demonstrates the commitment of this province towards providing the most efficient and accessible health care system possible. Albertans expect a health care system that responds to the needs of their community and that maximizes the use of resources available, and these values are understood by our Premier.

This understanding is also true when it comes to Alberta's energy strategy. The role that the energy industry plays is vital to our collective prosperity and the livelihoods of many families in my constituency and in our province. If done right, the advantages of our natural resources can secure an unparalleled quality of life and secure prosperity for multiple generations of Albertans.

I have no doubt that this government and our Premier will stand up for the interests of our province when it comes to natural resource development, and that starts with recognizing the need for Alberta to diversify its customer base and not to be too reliant on the United States for our energy exports. I agree with the Lieutenant Governor that we must access global markets with respect to our energy resources in order to achieve our greatest returns on those resources. I also agree with him that all Albertans share a deep love and respect for the environment. Our government must not forget that Albertans understand that in this province what is economic is environmental and what is environmental is economic.

Moving forward with an environmental monitoring plan that is credible, transparent, and science based in concert with the federal government is a step in the right direction to ensure that Alberta continues to have the social licence with Albertans and with the rest of the world to develop our resources. This is all part of a nation-building exercise that is being led by our Premier, Mr. Speaker, a process where all Canadians will see and realize the tremendous economic benefits of our vast natural resources, which are demanded right across the world. With allies and like-minded governments in B.C. and Saskatchewan and Ottawa and with the west leading the country in economic and population growth, our Premier recognizes the opportunity that is on our horizon, and she is ready to lead and to seize the opportunities that come along with this for all Albertans.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would again like to thank His Honour the Lieutenant Governor for his inspiring words and his dedicated public service. I also again would like to thank the hon. Premier for her leadership and vision. As I go door to door talking to my constituents in Calgary-North Hill, I sense an optimism that is so strong, so prideful. Albertans have confidence in their government, they have confidence in their fellow Albertans, but most importantly they have confidence in themselves. This reflects the leadership style and grace that this Premier has shown in her short but successful time in office to date. I believe that under her guidance and with the dedication and spirit of the people of Alberta we are about to embark on what will be a truly special and remarkable time in the history of this province.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's been an honour to be able to comment on His Honour's Speech from the Throne yesterday.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In this my second term as MLA for Calgary-Lougheed it is with great respect and appreciation that I rise today to second the motion to accept the speech from the throne. Yesterday's speech was extremely significant. It marks a sea change for Alberta, a bright, new era under the guidance of our new Premier, who I am personally convinced will prove over time to be a great leader and visionary, one who will leave a lasting impact on Alberta as she reshapes it with all of us for the 21st century.

As such, I feel incredibly fortunate to have been invited to second this remarkable Speech from the Throne and speak about the vision that our leader and this government have for our great province. The throne speech presents a clear outline of what our government will do to ensure that Albertans can reach their full potential. As parents of two young boys my wife and I chose to live in this extraordinary province for this very reason, and it's also just one of the reasons why we choose to stay.

As our Premier has often stated, "Alberta is opportunity," but we have not reached this state of affairs by accident. Our leaders and our governments have not been afraid to be bold and make bold decisions using a plan based on the expectations of Albertans. We've done this in the past, and with this leader and this government we will stay true to that tradition and make our future brighter than it's ever been. Alberta's entrepreneurs received confirmation of this yesterday when it was announced that businesses have a government that will help them adapt and build a province that present and future generations will be proud of.

We all know that Alberta is the most economically free jurisdiction in North America, and this government will keep us in first place. But we cannot continue without strong fiscal discipline, so it was good to hear our Lieutenant Governor announce our government's stance on smart spending, improved competitiveness, and predictable three-year funding cycles for education, advanced education, and municipalities. Mr. Speaker, having spoken with stakeholders for many years now, I know that this is exactly what they have been asking for. I also know that they're very interested in our new budgetary review process, which includes a results-based approach, one that will allow for a thorough examination of how public spending is achieving outcomes for Albertans on a rotating three-year cycle.

Having had the honour of working on Treasury Board, I know that our government treats Albertans' money with the same care and respect that they do, spending wisely on services Albertans count on for an outstanding quality of life. That's exactly what we were reminded of yesterday. But that means little unless we continue to give every Albertan the opportunity to benefit from cutting-edge education, from kindergarten through to postsecondary, so that everyone can achieve their full potential. And, Mr. Speaker, we will. It was very encouraging to hear that in yesterday's speech.

However, Mr. Speaker, the speech also went much further. It portrayed our province as what it is, a leader in helping to solve many of the world's challenges in energy, water, food, health, and improving our quality of life. Proof of that came just days ago when we announced an ongoing partnership between our government and the government of Canada in enhancing the monitoring of water, air, land, and biodiversity in the oil sands.

The speech also focused on an issue that is always at the forefront of Albertans' minds, and that of course is health care. During our recent cabinet tour I was encouraged to hear that Albertans are excited about the success of our primary care networks. Yesterday's throne speech promised to build on this with the plan – and I repeat the word "plan" – to expand community-based care through the introduction of family care clinics staffed by multidisciplinary teams of health care professionals. Patients in need of medical attention will be able to get it quickly and easily at publicly funded clinics close to home. As parliamentary assistant for Health and Wellness I am looking forward to joining our minister, our Premier, and our colleagues in making family care clinics a reality.

There was even more concrete evidence of this with the announcement that our government will begin the implementation of three pilot projects this spring. Now, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that Albertans are extremely pleased about this, and I'm not referring only to doctors, nurses, and support staff with whom I've spoken but also to patients of all ages all around the province.

Speaking of which, I know that our seniors were delighted to hear that our government will provide them with the supports and services and care that they need to remain healthy and happy and productive. This includes measures to help them stay in the peaceful security of their own homes, surrounded by the warmth of family for as long as possible.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it's no surprise that many people are also very concerned about issues like property rights. Albertans want the freedom to run their own lives, and they want to take charge of their own destinies, so I trust that they were pleased with yesterday's promise to strengthen their property rights using what we learned in public consultations. Our government will use Albertans' contributions to make common-sense decisions on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, I have also learned that Albertans across the province are applauding the assurances that our government will co-operate closely and openly with Ottawa, building on our strong relationship with the federal government, that they will proudly tell our Albertan story, and that they will promote Albertans' visions and actions on the world stage.

There is no question that Albertans have been extremely successful in the past, but if we're to continue to prosper, our government knows that we cannot take any of this for granted, and that is why I was so pleased to hear our Lieutenant Governor refer to the many innovative ways that our government is investing in tomorrow, including strengthening our postsecondary sector and developing new strategies to attract talent from across the country and around the world.

But, as you know, Mr. Speaker, it all starts at home, so I was very heartened to hear that this government will continue to strengthen its ties with Métis and First Nations communities. As my constituents in Calgary-Lougheed have attested to many times when I've visited them at their doors, they know that our lives are often inextricably linked together, and I expect that our hon. colleagues from around Alberta have had similar realizations in their communities. I am eager to continue efforts to find common ground with our neighbours in Calgary-Lougheed as well as with other Métis and First Nations communities across Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, our initiatives will certainly help to ensure that Alberta will continue to thrive in the future, but they have also been developed to help create an important balance between a vibrant economy, strong communities, and a healthy environment for generations to come. In his speech yesterday the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor shared with Albertans the vision that this government has for our future, and that vision spoke to the family man in me, it spoke to the educator and entrepreneur in me, and it spoke to a lifelong interest that I've had in healthy living. For these reasons and many more I'm looking forward to playing a part in realizing our vision, and I'm gratified that Albertans are feeling the same way as well.

Now, as I conclude, Mr. Speaker, I'll share just a short personal story relating the Speech from the Throne to my high school social studies teacher, who taught me that government, when done well, is one of the greatest agents of positive social change available to human beings and that when we've gained enough experience and expertise, we owe it to ourselves and our fellow citizens to give back. I believe that he'd be pleased to know that I am convinced it is an incredible honour and opportunity and obligation to be a member of this honourable Assembly with you and all of our colleagues. With humility, I dare say that my teacher would be very proud of yesterday's Speech from the Throne, which outlined our province's promising future, including the understanding that our Premier and our government are focusing our resources in areas that will help all Albertans to achieve their full potential.

As our Lieutenant Governor stated,

Alberta can be proud of rich natural resources, North America's most competitive business environment, and a vibrant technology and innovation sector that helps push human achievement to unparalleled heights . . . It is Albertans who will always remain the central focus of this government.

It will help all Albertans reach their full potential, setting the stage for future generations to enjoy even greater success.

With that, I thank you and all of our colleagues, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank His Honour the Lieutenant Governor for his service to our province and our nation. As the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition it's an honour for me to respond to the Speech from the Throne for this Fifth Session of the 27th Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, as I give my response to yesterday's Speech from the Throne, I'm going to be very honest. Much of what I'm going to say today will not be welcomed by those members of this House who serve in the current government, but I feel it is of vital importance to speak the truth about the problems we face in Alberta and how the current government has failed to deal with them, so in advance I say: sorry if the truth I speak today is going to bruise their egos.

Now, I want to start my response to the Speech from the Throne by recognizing the positive aspect of it. I say "aspect" in the singular very deliberately. After sitting through yesterday's very dull and unimaginative speech and after reading it very carefully, I could find only one good thing to say about it, and here it is. Finally, this government admits that there is a revenue problem. You know what they say: even a stopped clock tells the correct time twice a day. So the current government was bound to get at least one thing right.

This aspect of the speech was good, and I congratulate the Premier on admitting there is a revenue problem. Now I encourage her to take the truly Liberal strategy of progressive taxes to fix it. I encourage the Premier to follow the lead of the Official Opposition and to introduce the fair tax system we unveiled on Monday, which sees no increases to the rates paid by 90 per cent of Albertans but would raise income taxes on larger corporations and those with taxable incomes of more than $100,000 a year. This is just one of many bold and visionary measures we announced on Monday which have our province buzzing.

The Premier hints at tax change, and I hope she will follow our lead by increasing the rate on larger corporations from 10 to 12 per cent and by leaving small- and medium-sized businesses alone. I also hope that she will follow our lead and only increase tax rates on the top 10 per cent of Albertans because, heaven knows, the 90 per cent, who don't earn six-figure taxable incomes, are being squeezed enough already by this current government.

There is one area where our current government squeezes everyone equally. Seniors, those living on AISH, small-, medium-, and large-sized businesses, families: all Albertans are feeling the squeeze when it comes to power bills. The throne speech didn't mention electricity deregulation once, and it's easy to see why. It's been an abject failure. It is time for smart changes to the system which will cut Albertans' power bills and protect us from profiteering power generators and transmitters. This government should follow our lead and increase the powers and resources of the Market Surveillance Administrator so we can have open, efficient, and competitive marketplaces. Follow our lead and create new rules allowing utilities to save on generation and pass those savings on to Albertans. Follow our lead and get rid of those laughable fines which actually make it profitable for power companies to distort the market. It's time to bring in penalties that match the magnitude of the offence. Follow our lead on this.

Another of the many ways Albertans are being squeezed is through school fees. School fees are nothing but a tax on families, pure and simple. It is one of the most regressive taxes imaginable. Now, I can understand taxing cigarettes. I'm a doctor, after all, so I see the value in that. But taxing education? Why tax education as though it's a pack of smokes? It just doesn't make sense. We believe education should be properly funded instead and that school fees should be eliminated. It seems a lot of Albertans agree with us, and I encourage the current government to follow our lead.

This government should also stop squeezing postsecondary students. Follow our lead and create endowments out of our growing resource revenue so that by 2025 postsecondary tuition will be free. As a first step follow our lead by capping and lowering tuition for undergraduate students by $250 immediately.

Mr. Speaker, it's not just our people who are being squeezed by the government. Our cities, towns, neighbourhoods need a new deal. We call on the government to follow our lead by delivering new funding through the establishment of a municipal heritage fund, which would begin providing and creating stable, sustainable funding for local governments and creating long-term infrastructure solutions.

Follow our lead and draft city charters for Edmonton and Calgary so that they will have the powers they need to tackle their own unique challenges. Follow our lead and directly fund neighbourhood associations across the province with 25 per cent of the municipal heritage fund's earnings, which will enable citizens to turn their neighbourhood's priorities into reality. This government would be well advised to follow our lead and reinstate community lottery boards. This would put an end to politicians using this money to throw perks around. Follow our lead and get politicians out of the process so that spending priorities reflect the needs of communities.

Perhaps most disturbing of all is the fact that our seniors are being squeezed by government. Right now in Alberta, the wealthiest province in Canada, many seniors are having to ask themselves: can I afford to have a bath today? They have to ask this question because of this government's shameful record of underfunding home care. Our seniors, who only get one paragraph in the Speech from the Throne, built this province, but the current government won't provide the funding needed to keep senior families together and to keep these families in their homes. This government should follow our lead and double the funding of home care so that this stops happening.

This government should follow our lead and increase the supply of nonprofit community-based lodges and nonprofit long-term care beds, too. Follow our lead by increasing the quality of long-term care, requiring on-site registered nurses, and by enacting guarantees of service to ensure a proper level of care. For heaven's sake, please follow our lead and embrace the principle that senior couples should not be split up because of health or financial needs.

Mr. Speaker, our health care system is also being squeezed by the current government. It is interesting that in five paragraphs on health care it talks twice about publicly funded health care but not once about publicly delivered health care. Is privatization being considered? This current government would do better to follow our lead instead and fix our public health care system.

I just discussed the neglect of our seniors, and it is this neglect that is impacting the health care system overall. We need more long-term care beds so that seniors are not languishing in hospital beds, which in turn leads to cancellation of surgeries and congested emergency rooms. This leads to our paramedics spending too much of their time waiting with patients for a bed to come open and not enough time getting back out on the road to answer the next 911 call for help. Follow our lead and fix this problem. Follow our lead and guarantee surgery and emergency department wait times. Follow our lead and get every Albertan a family doctor and a wellness team.

Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier, yesterday's throne speech was a very dull, unimaginative speech. With all the problems facing our province, Albertans have the right to expect a throne speech with vision and thoughtful proposals. Instead, all the current government could manage to offer was a tedious, hour-long drone of clichés, platitudes, and stale slogans. The reason for this is really quite simple. This current government is old, tired, and out of ideas. It is also very many years removed from the time it was a force for solutions. It is now simply the source of our problems. This is subliminally acknowledged near the end of the throne speech through lines like, "It will revitalize publicly funded health care services to increase access and suit an aging population with diverse needs." Who brought our health care system to such a state of disarray and dysfunction that it needs to be revitalized in the first place? This current government.

Another line. "It will revamp Alberta's education system so all graduates can hit the ground running and contribute more effectively than ever." Who brought our education system to such a sorry state that we have the highest high school dropout rate in the country? This current government.

Here's another revealing line. "History has shown us that short-term focus can result in long-term problems." Indeed. The past 20 years under this government prove this to be absolutely true. Once again, even a stopped clock tells the correct time twice a day. The line that is followed by this is: "Your government will address the root causes of problems rather than just respond to symptoms. Albertans expect better and demand excellence."

Now the current government has returned to getting things wrong. This government is the root cause of the problems in Alberta. Albertans do indeed expect better and demand excellence, and this is why the members opposite ought to be very, very, very worried. The current government is squeezing families through school fees. They are squeezing those who don't earn six-figure taxable incomes. They are squeezing our cities, towns, neighbourhoods. They are squeezing our health care system. Worst of all, they are squeezing our seniors. Our seniors. From womb to tomb this government is the root cause of the problem.

Mr. Speaker, the current government no longer is a force for good in this province. No longer. And through the evasive jargon of the throne speech one truth manages to shine through: it's time for this government to go.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone who wishes to question or comment on the speech just given. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. I would like to ask the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition when exactly it was that the government lost its way.

Dr. Sherman: This government lost its way yesterday, the day before, the day before that. It lost its way in the '90s. This government has lost the moral authority to govern this province.

The Acting Speaker: Anyone else under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing no one else, I would ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore to please proceed with his comments on the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am grateful for the opportunity to rise today and offer a few of my thoughts on the government's Speech from the Throne. First, I'd like to congratulate the Lieutenant Governor on his delivery of the speech yesterday. I would also like to join my colleagues in this House in expressing my gratitude and sense of celebration, after 60 years of service, to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II.

I had a grandmother, who has now gone on, that was a great supporter of the monarchy. She loved Queen Elizabeth, and we often talked about her. We had the privilege when I was very young to have Lieutenant Governor Grant MacEwan to a private dinner. That was quite a thrill when I was young. He talked about such books as John Ware's Cow Country and other exciting things. I appreciate the Lieutenant Governors that we've had in the past and the current one and the service that they do here for Alberta.

I was hoping that under the new Premier this government would articulate a vision and resonate with Albertans. Instead, we got a speech that lacked vision entirely and did little to address the rising concerns of Albertans in this province. The first piece of legislation in this session does nothing to guarantee that this government will address the bloated size of government and end their record of out-of-control spending.

In the past months, where this government has spent $70,000 on lavish getaways to Jasper park and pre-election cabinet tours, it's obvious that this government doesn't have a record of and doesn't understand or realize the importance of prioritizing the hard-earned tax dollars from Albertans. Under this government's new fiscal framework for results-based budgeting – and I think that that's comical. I think that the result of their budgeting has been deficit after deficit, and all that is going to show is more results of poor planning, poor prioritizing. The fact exists: no guarantee of eliminating any government waste.

The government says that it's planning to secure our economic future with smart spending. Well, what has it done in the past? Is it saying that this cabinet and all of them that are here – there's nobody new in this House from four years ago. We've had one member resign, that is no longer here, and they seemed to be able to kick him as he left as if he was the only one who spoke. I do realize that they have trained tongues and only speak for him other than the brief opportunity during a leadership race where all of a sudden new ideas or sharp tongues come out criticizing the government on where it has been. How can they possibly as a group start to talk about smart spending, Mr. Speaker, when they are the ones that have been spending for the last four years? It's just totally hypocritical.

To go on, this government has no credible record to boast anything about spending other than how well they can spend other people's money. There is $2 billion that will be spent, and much has been spent, on unproven carbon capture technology that will do nothing to improve the environment in our province or our economic situation.

In 2008 Alberta was plunged into a recession, and what was the first thing that this cabinet, this group of people, brought? It was that they thought they should get a 34 per cent pay raise. These are the individuals, Mr. Speaker. That was not smart spending, yet they continue on and want to be the advocates and say these things when everybody sees that they're hypocritical.

Does smart spending include the million-dollar severance packages for retiring MLAs? I'm curious to know. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East asked for pay reviews some time ago. Now, they're finally doing it at this point, but again I'm just very concerned about what the outcome is going to be on that and how it's going to be manipulated. It's disappointing.

It's clear that this government is looking to run on its record of smart spending. Albertans have a lot to worry about. This Premier and the members of her cabinet are addicted to their old spending habits, and they have no commitments to put an end to their spending ways. We are now preparing to enter the fifth year of deficit budgets as we have seen the size of government grow and the quality of our government services decline. Is this what the Premier is calling sound finances? That's another cliché that she used in the throne speech: sound finances. There's nothing sound about it.

We have watched other countries around the globe go into decline because of this thinking. It's simply mind boggling for this government to suggest otherwise. I will pull that out, I guess, from the speech because it was one of the things I found somewhat concerning that they brought up. It talked about: "While these are trying times, other nations' difficulties do serve to remind us of how fortunate we are to live in . . . Alberta." Why are they trying times for other nations? It's because of the massive deficits that their governments ran year after year after year, not able to pay it back in trying times. Yet this government, I am quite confident, tomorrow will run into its fifth year of deficit spending.

Perhaps the biggest concern and where the Wildrose differs the most from the others in this House is that we would totally argue – the Leader of the Official Opposition pointed out that the only point he thought was good was this one – that the government has recognized that they have a revenue problem. We believe there is nothing further from the truth. What we have is record revenue, and we're not able to balance the budget with record revenue.

In the last five years we've received $40 billion plus of resource revenue. That averages over $8 billion a year, yet they declare that this is too volatile a revenue. The biggest reason it's so volatile is because of the credit crunch that the world hit and the fact that these guys went after them to raise their royalties. So these individuals and companies and entrepreneurs, which they declare they want to attract, left the province for better investment areas. Not a good record.

It's incredible that this government is saying that after a year where they took in record resource revenues, Albertans are not giving enough to the government. They are now suggesting it's time to take more out of the paycheques of Albertans. They are now suggesting that Alberta families are not paying their fair share. It sounds like the results of their budgeting is not working well, especially not for Albertans.

I was also interested to hear that the Premier is planning to increase savings for our heritage fund. We, of course, welcome the move after years of government sucking our funds dry, but I don't think that's what is really the intent of the throne speech, where she talks about that they're going to have a complete review of all of these areas. "This will include reviews of the Alberta heritage savings trust and sustainability funds, capital and infrastructure projects, gaming revenue, our operating budget, and income taxes along with reviews of existing programs." It's interesting that they pontificate that they're going to have results-based budgeting. What has been the result of your past budgeting? It has been a disaster for Albertans.

This government cannot save. Even with record revenues they've failed to save. The last three years all of our funds have been diminishing. To say that they're going to increase savings is comical. How, when they increase spending and they're running a deficit? You can't save when you're running a deficit.

The only strategy this Premier seems to be interested in is contemplating to punish Albertans with higher taxes, declaring loudly that they are providing great services and that they know how to spend Albertans' money better than Albertans do. Everything this government is doing is looking more and more like higher taxes are down the way. The question is: is she going to run record deficits for the next Premier to have to deal with because they refuse to balance the budget? This is the question that many Albertans are concerned with.

Once again, in the throne speech in other areas they talk about property rights. It is insulting to Albertans for this government to suggest that they have been listening to and standing up for landowners with their task force. Unfortunately, this government has claimed that it has been listening for over the past three years, and nothing meaningful has been changed. What was the point in sending out another task force of cabinet members, those who have spoken against Keith Wilson and landowners all across this province, and saying that there is nothing to be concerned about in bills 19, 24, 36, or 50? If, in fact, they were listening, they would repeal these bills. This is just one more concern for Albertans that with this throne speech she is saying: "Trust us. We're going to listen. But then we'll just reimplement them after an election." Everything has been put on hold for whether it's two months or three months, and then all of a sudden it's going to kick back in and we'll reinstate or say that, yeah, everything is fine, nothing needs to be changed, which is what Albertans have been hearing from the Premier and previous Premier on property rights.

What's the point of continuing to say that they're going to listen to Albertans if the government really isn't going to do anything about it? They had the opportunity last fall. They have the opportunity this spring to do something about it, and that's repeal those bills. These laws have asked landowners to have their land devalued without being fairly compensated and have made it nearly impossible for many to make investments in their land with any confidence. It continues to be a black mark on our province with its impact on business, communities, and democratic rights as free citizens.

The current legislation that is on the table still centralizes power in the hands of cabinet and takes the decision-making process on things like new transmission lines out of the hands of experts, where it really should be. Even worse, it commits all Albertans to higher transmission costs on their power bills. They've failed to act. They've only continued to delay. Albertans need to be reassured before the next election that it won't be full speed ahead on these new transmission lines, and the only way to assure them is to repeal this legislation and return that decision-making to the AUC, the Alberta Utilities Commission.

This government announced that they want to give the health authority council a more active voice. This government doesn't understand that it's not just about giving people a voice, especially when you're deaf. We have seen what happens with health professionals who try to have their voice heard. Dr. Magliocco was bullied out of this province. Again, we have this hypocrisy, declaring they want to attract individuals from around the world. "Your government will attract the world's top talent to Alberta to contribute to a research agenda that will position this province on the international stage."

They haven't attracted top talent, Mr. Speaker; they've driven it out of the province. They speak out and say, "Allow us to practise," and they say, "No, you do it our way, or it's the highway to Florida or to Harvard or some other area" because they're not listening to them. They've chased out our health professionals, and they've chased out many oil and gas entrepreneurs by going after them and wanting to increase their taxes. It's very concerning.

I also find it interesting that this government – again, they love to reiterate and reiterate, over and over again, that they're going to do something when they've done nothing. I found it surprising also to see the government boast about creating a new northern Alberta development strategy.

This Premier seems fixated on strategize and strategy. Yes, well, what have you been doing for the last four years? Why didn't you strategize a little bit? You were all in cabinet. You all had the papers in front of you. You could discuss it, and you failed to strategize it. Mr. Speaker, is that because their tongues and their brains were disconnected until there was a new leadership, and we have a short time period for six months when their tongues are connected to their thinking equipment, and they're allowed to speak out? Then, again, it severed, and now all of a sudden it's one voice, one thought, one way, or the highway. This isn't in the interests of Albertans.

It's interesting, though, this northern development that they talk about. There's already lots of time being spent with that. We have the Radke report. We have Responsible Actions. We have the oil sands secretariat. This government has failed to act on any of these, Mr. Speaker. So it is clear that this government has no plans to do business in any new way.

The Speech from the Throne showed a government that has no plans to put an end to their out-of-control spending that this government is accustomed to, and we are continuing to fall into a black hole. Worse yet, they are now asking Albertans to pay for their irresponsible spending with the spectre of raising taxes. This government, Mr. Speaker, is addicted to OPM, other peoples' money. They don't know how to handle their own, and now they want to spend Albertans'.

It is my hope that this government will come clear with its tax-and-spend agenda and let all Albertans know what they plan on doing, whether it's balancing the budget or going forward. They say that they're not going to have any cuts, that they're going to have result-based budgeting. What that means, Mr. Speaker, is that when they've looked, they have failed to find anything to cut, and now they're going to go forward and they're going to make other people, other Albertans, pay for their poor budgeting and inability to prioritize correctly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is now available should anyone wish to question or comment on the previous speakers. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, I listened with interest to the member and would be very appreciative of some of his comments about where, in fact, his party would find those economies that would not rely on the instability of a resource revenue and where he would plan to cut the services that we have currently.

Mr. Hinman: That's excellent. Again, we have in the last three years been putting it out. We've asked them to cut the $2 billion for carbon tax. We've told them . . .

Mr. Liepert: It's not $2 billion.

Mr. Hinman: Oh – what? – is $500 million now going to other areas? That's what they've put away and they've put in there.

Their GreenTRIP, again, isn't focused: $2 billion that isn't focused on real, result-based priorities. It's more on buying votes in different regions. They spent $300 million to refurbish the MLA buildings. They gave $300 million – what would I say? – to industry to bring ethanol production when we could have natural gas or propane-powered vehicles that are even cleaner. They have many corporate subsidies that are going out there that we don't need. Perhaps the one area that they forget the most is the bloated, top-heavy management that this province has developed over the years and, again, the plump, superplump money that they pay to their consultants that they bring in and then fire. There are many areas where they could and they should.

I firmly believe that their future expenditures will be an extension of their past expenditures. They're top heavy. They don't focus the money on front-line workers like our teachers, our health care professions. They focus it on management and other areas that are not at this time a priority. They continue to look at opulent buildings. They overbuild buildings. They don't have the staff to even fill them, whether it's the south hospital. They've failed to do a good job on ring roads and acquiring and processing there. Again, the other one is that their accelerated capital spending on infrastructure isn't sustainable.

What we're going to do is that we're going to hit another fall-off to where we're going to devastate industry, because they're not going to continue spending that $6 billion or $7 billion and will have to come back to a more sustainable $4 billion or $5 billion. We're going to have a major contraction in that industry, which is going to cause a ripple effect that's not good.

There are many areas where they should have, they've failed to, and going forward they're going to continue to fail to. It's interesting. In their result-based financing they say that they're going to start scrutinizing every department. Well, what have they done for the last four years? Again, what their result-based financing has shown is that there are no cuts to be made. The Premier says that there is nothing to cut, there is no waste, yet somehow going forward they're going to manage it.

It's very, very concerning to Albertans that they are spending money foolishly. They're not even prioritizing their infrastructure projects. It's more a political slush fund, where they build different, whether it's a – I won't even get into how they manipulate, but it's very disappointing the way they manipulate the money for infrastructure.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, under 29(2)(a) to continue.

Dr. Swann: Well, the hon. member mentioned corporate subsidies. I'm wondering if he could identify some specific areas where he feels the corporate subsidies are inappropriate, specifically oil companies.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Well, it's interesting. The one that we were quite alarmed with was the $300 million loan for Precision. They said that that was good because we're getting a good rate of return there. Again, that wasn't the government; it was AIMCo. The biggest one is the subsidies, massive, for carbon sequestration – it's an unproven science – that they're giving to some of the world's biggest companies. They're pushing that ahead. Again, the ethanol one is one where they put out $300 million. The Alberta investment company, again, is putting money – I can't remember how much went to the company in Vancouver. I've forgotten that one off the top of my head.

There are a number of them, and I'd be happy to share with the member a lot of the corporate subsidies that they continue to push out and say, "Oh, isn't this a wonderful idea. We should be doing the carbon capture," or other various areas, the ethanol that continues.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Anyone else under 29(2)(a)?

If not, we'll proceed with Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by either Red Deer-North or Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and respond to the Lieutenant Governor's speech, which I had read with interest. The Speech from the Throne is supposed to be a road map for the government. It's supposed to be an expression of the government's direction, its plans. It's a look forward into what the government would like to do, and anyone who read that speech or heard it being read would be left wondering where we're going. There are many reviews that are planned. There are many strategies that are going to be made. There are many generalities in this speech about things that I think most everybody would agree on. More support for postsecondary education, strengthening the health system, and protecting the environment are all things we can all agree on. What you would expect from a throne speech, Mr. Speaker, is, in fact, something with some more specifics, more meat on the bones, if you will, and we did not see that in this speech.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a wonderful place to live. It's a wonderful place to do business, to raise a family, and it deserves a plan and a government that's worthy of the people who live here. It's a province whose foundation of its economy is energy, yet there's scarce here that would indicate where we're going to go in terms of the energy industries in our province. The oil sands are a critical part of our economy and our economic future, not just for this province but for the country as well, but there's no clear outline of what's involved in the Premier's national energy strategy.

I think a national energy strategy is in principle a good thing, particularly if it's led by Alberta and not by Ottawa. A strategy has certain things, Mr. Speaker. It has plans, rationalizations for the plans. It has objectives. A national energy strategy should talk about how we're going to enjoy energy self-sufficiency in the country, how we're going to diversify our energy industry, how we're going to build renewable energy, how we're going to use natural gas, how we're going to make sure that we have affordable energy that has a minimum impact on the environment, all of those things you would expect in a strategy. But like the Prime Minister – and I don't really have much else in common with him – I am confused about what this Premier means by a national energy strategy. That's because at this stage it seems little more than a ploy to convince other provinces, specifically British Columbia, to support pipelines. That's not a national energy strategy; that is a camouflage for a specific economic objective.

I think the Speech from the Throne, had it been written by an NDP government, would have talked about the role of natural gas, would have talked about electricity, would have talked about self-sufficiency for the country as a whole, would have talked about future development of jobs, and would have talked about protecting the environment. It would have included all of those things, but this PC government doesn't seem to think that those things are important.

Mr. Speaker, the oil sands are not only critical to our country's economy, but they are becoming increasingly an international target, and there are real risks to our ability to continue to develop them. Most of those risks are things that the NDP has been warning the government about for years: that it is time to take international concern about the environment, including the tailings ponds and downstream water pollution and emissions, seriously. The government has so far refused to do that. The government prefers to spend a few million dollars on advertising campaigns in the United States, trying to paper over the very real environmental problems that we have failed to address. So I think that that's the first place to start.

Now, we have been pressing, environmental groups have been pressing, and scientists have been pressing for meaningful water quality monitoring. Finally the government has admitted that for years it lied to Albertans about the state of water quality monitoring in the oil sands, and they've put in place something that might actually do the job. But let's not forget the history. This government denied this for years and years and years, and it took pressure from citizens, it took pressure from the NDP, from the labour movement, from environmental organizations to force them to finally admit the truth.

Mr. Speaker, bitumen is a key resource. Unlike the previous Premier, who promised four or five years ago to eliminate or reduce the export of unprocessed bitumen to the United States as well as all of the jobs and investment that went down the pipeline with it, the government has never done so and is now openly supporting two pipeline projects that would export unprocessed bitumen and create jobs in Texas and in China.

Mr. Speaker, let's not forget there were a number of major upgrading plants approved for the heartland area that were going ahead, billion-dollar projects that would have created jobs and drawn investment to our province, that have been shelved or even cancelled because it's cheaper for the oil companies to pipe bitumen down the Keystone pipeline and renovate existing old refineries on the Gulf coast. We have lost that investment, we have lost those jobs, we've lost that value-added because this government has refused to act to protect the jobs of us and our children and our grandchildren. This government doesn't care about jobs from the energy industry. They care about profits for the energy industry.

Mr. Speaker, also, I want to address the question of electricity because this is a serious problem. It's been broken since 1995, and now the chickens are coming home to roost for this government. There is incredible instability in the price of electricity in this province. It's affecting businesses, it's affecting farms, it's affecting the public sector, and it's affecting homeowners. Power prices now are the highest they have ever been. They are double – at least, my own bill is double what it was just 12 months ago, and the government has no plan. Deregulation is the problem. Deregulation broke the system, and unless we regulate prices in the electricity market, no amount of market reform as proposed by some other parties is going to fix the problem.

Mr. Speaker, this government has a problem with its finances, and we are now in a third consecutive deficit. We'll see tomorrow whether it's going to be four or not. But the question is: where did this deficit come from when we are the richest province in the country? We have access to revenue sources that no one else has, yet we're in a deficit.

Well, I remember when Stockwell Day, the Progressive Conservative Treasurer, introduced the flat tax. Now, that primarily benefited people with the highest incomes in this province, people over $200,000 a year. They had the biggest savings on their taxes. It cost the province billions of dollars. Then when Steve West was the Progressive Conservative finance minister of this province, he announced that they were going to cut the corporate tax – and this is on profitable corporations – from 16 per cent down to 8 per cent. They have sequentially reduced rates. It's now around 10 per cent. It's about a 60 per cent cut in corporate taxes. That cost the treasury billions and billions of dollars. And, of course, they backed away on royalties with the very modest changes that were brought in under the previous Premier.

They have created a massive loss of revenue, all directed at the wealthiest in our province, all directed at the most profitable corporations. That's who they benefited. That's who they gave the massive handouts to. Now we don't have enough money for our seniors' housing. We don't have enough money for education. We don't have enough money for our health care system, and front-line staff are bearing the brunt.

Now the government is going to look for other places to privatize. The Premier has promised in her campaign to become leader of the Progressive Conservative Party that in the first six months they would look in every area of government with a view to finding things that could be privatized. Now we have introduced Bill 1, which is zero-based budgeting, and zero-based budgeting is, in fact, a key implementation method for privatization and contracting out.

With respect to health the government is still going down the wrong path when it comes to long-term care. It is still looking for private-public partnerships, which involve subsidizations of the private sector and do not protect our seniors from being gouged and being squeezed in order to receive the care they need. I recently spoke with a large number of front-line health care workers in private nursing homes, and the conditions have not improved. The staff shortages are severe, and the patients, the seniors who live there, are given completely inadequate care. Mr. Speaker, what's going on in our seniors' homes in this province is a disgrace.

This government's approach of private delivery will not solve the problem. Of course, the lack of long-term care means that people are put by their doctors into acute-care beds, and then they're not available when they're needed by emergency room patients, so everything backs up out of the emergency room into the waiting room. Mr. Speaker, Albertans have had enough of health care delivered in waiting rooms. They want to have first-rate health facilities. They want them publicly delivered, not just publicly funded. This government plays games with words, and what they mean is using public, taxpayers' money to subsidize their private-industry friends.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to education, having met with a number of school boards, it's very clear that unstable funding is a serious problem. Even though the government negotiated a long-term deal with teachers a few years ago, it did not provide sufficient funds for the school boards to pay for that. Particularly, there were no additional funds for the other people who work in education who are not teachers and expect the same kinds of increases.

Mr. Speaker, the government's commitment to accessibility is belied by the high tuition fees at our universities, high fees at colleges and technical institutions, and by allowing postsecondary institutions to charge noninstructional fees, which are just a fraud to get around the tuition fee cap. Of course, the instructional fees that are charged in our primary and secondary schools are very, very damaging to the accessibility that should be for everyone in our educational system.

Mr. Speaker, the government talks in the throne speech about working closely and openly with the federal government. While this government would like to pretend to be progressive when it's speaking to progressively minded voters, it is, in fact, deeply wedded to a very, very conservative federal government. I have asked the Premier in question periods previously about the government's position relative to Kyoto. The withdrawal of Canada from Kyoto, supported by the government of Alberta, is a disgrace. The crime bill will put thousands and thousands of Albertans in jail unnecessarily and produce massive costs – massive costs – to the provincial government. Both Ontario and Quebec have refused to pay those costs.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was quite interested in the comments of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood with regard to the recent spike in the cost of electricity, which I understand was caused by some unscheduled shutdowns.

I guess I would like to ask the hon. member if he tracks his electricity costs on an annual basis. For instance, I recently looked at my annual electricity costs for the last 12 years. I noticed that in 2002 and 2003 they were quite high, but they've continually gone down, and they're slowly rising. Until this past year they were still several hundred dollars less than they were back in 2002 and 2003.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the problems with the system is extremely unstable electricity prices, but as for the member's suggestion that they are slowly rising when they've set a brand new record for the highest prices in Alberta history, that is not rising slowly.

Mr. Speaker, I want to also address a question of whether or not this provincial government is going to support the decision of the federal government with respect to pensions and taking away the social security.

In terms of the environment this government has made cut after cut after cut to enforcement. In terms of culture they have made cut after cut. It's clear, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that this government has not got a record of supporting either the environment or supporting arts. It's not planning the economy for the future of the province. It's not building a future economy. It's not protecting our social services, particularly health care and education. I don't believe that the House should be supporting a Speech from the Throne that is not only vague but which simply is a precursor to the repetition of the same mistakes, errors, and bad judgment that have dogged this government's decision-making for the past 10 or 15 years.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Allred: Mr. Speaker, just a follow-up. Yes, perhaps the price of electricity has reached a record high in the last month due to the spikes that I've mentioned, but similarly strawberries occasionally reach record highs. Gasoline goes up and down. Everything is volatile in price situations, so I really don't see the relevance of the comment that for one month it was that high.

The Speaker: The hon. member, if you wish.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, strawberries, while very nice, are not an essential service; electricity is. I believe we need an electricity system where we have regular, clear prices, where you don't have to go and sign up on some contract that's going to get you into trouble down the road, where you don't have to learn how to hedge. You just pay a minimum bill that covers the cost of the generation and a guaranteed rate of return. You turn on the lights, you have reliable energy, and you don't have monthly surprises on your power bill.

What we've got in this province is an electricity system that is completely broken, and the hon. member has not addressed the question of manipulation of power prices by power companies. TransAlta was recently caught selling electricity into the B.C. market while there was a shortage in Alberta, causing a spike in prices, and they profited as well as all of the other power companies profited. They were caught, but the other power companies made a lot of extra money, millions of dollars. They didn't have to pay that back. It comes out of the pockets of consumers.

As for these temporary outages, who knows if those things were unavoidable? What I do know is that many of the coal-fired power plants are now reaching the end of their lives, and there is no new generation that is being brought on in order to accommodate. That will create chronic structural shortages in electricity. If you think prices are high now, just wait until that happens.

The Speaker: Additional questions or participants?

Then I'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I anticipated your call. Yesterday's Speech from the Throne was the most drearily disappointing of my seven years and counting in the Alberta Legislature as the twice-elected representative for Calgary-Varsity. Presumably, it was penned to reflect the priorities of the most recently selected leader of the Progressive Conservative governing party of Alberta, whose currently untested personal popularity outstrips that of her long-governing party. Rather than looking ahead, the speech looked nostalgically back through the rear-view mirror at the long-since-departed glory days of a brand new government under the energetic, innovative leadership of Peter Lougheed.

A failed attempt was made to equate those early, popularly supported, just-out-of-the-chute halcyon days of Tory governance of this province to our current provincial situation, 41 long years later. While our newly selected Premier shares some of the qualities that made Peter electorally attractive to Albertans, including, "relatively speaking," youthfulness, a postsecondary education, and a personal drive, Peter Lougheed literally and figuratively quarterbacked a team that was new to the field and was anxious to prove after 38 years of Social Credit rule that they had the energy and desire to reflect what was in the best interests of Albertans.

Despite the best intentions and the majority of yet-to-be-fulfilled campaign promises that initially attracted a sufficient number of Albertans to allow our recently selected Premier to narrowly defeat the Tory establishment old boys' choice, the porridge or gruel that is attempting to reinvent itself has sat on the shelf for 41 years. No amount of sugar or added spices is going to make the lumps go down more easily. Despite the best attempts of the royal writers of the Public Affairs Bureau to raise our yet to be battle-tested, forged-in-election-fires Premier to the level of saint or ancient mythological hero status, she remains a mere mortal with Herculean baggage to carry. Atlas, by comparison, had it easy.

While some of the older boys and girls, myself included, will soon be taking our final political bows, a significant number of the government players remain the same. The stage and the backdrops that Peter Lougheed once built, like our schools and hospitals, are suffering from age and neglect. A sense of entitlement has replaced the desire to serve in the public's best interest. That the me's are crying out more loudly than the we's can be seen in the obscene raises the former Premier and the current Premier as the then Minister of Justice awarded themselves.

Although token lip service was paid in the throne speech to the educational needs of our First Nations and Métis children, half of which fail to complete high school in three years, if ever, no clear plans were offered to suggest how improvements in educational engagement would occur. Nonrenewable resource rich but governance poor Alberta has among the highest high school dropout rates in Canada. Therefore, it comes as no surprise that Alberta has the lowest postsecondary participation rate in our country. Although the 2003 Learning Commission recommended funding full-day optional kindergarten and half-day optional junior kindergarten, this throne speech nine years later failed to commit this government to either early intervention or education. This government continues to place greater emphasis on nonrenewable resources than it does on education or innovation. Regardless of the problem or question education is the answer.

Our most important resources are people. This government's record of supporting and protecting Alberta's most vulnerable, including children, the disabled, and seniors, is shameful. In the past 10 years 60 children have been killed while in government care, with hundreds more injured. The majority of these children were First Nations. While finally permitting the Alberta children's advocate to report directly to the Assembly is a small but welcome first step, it in itself won't keep children safe.

Alberta has the highest rate of domestic abuse in Canada. Twice as many women are turned away from shelters than provided even temporary housing.

The province's record in protecting seniors and the disabled, like that of children in its care, is far from exemplary. In 2004 Jennie Nelson, a senior in long-term care, was scalded to death. In 2005 Auditor General Fred Dunn wrote a scathing report on the conditions in long-term care centres throughout Alberta. Eight years later a significant number of Dunn's recommendations have not been implemented. In 2006 the judge-led fatality inquiry into Jennie Nelson's scalding death recommended that, at a bare minimum, antiscalding devices should be installed in all care facilities.

Had the government acted on the recommendations, 35-year-old David Holmes would still be alive today. David, who had previously been burned within this facility, was forced to wait for over two and a half hours before emergency services was contacted. One thousand care facilities are still waiting for antiscalding devices to be finally installed.

No mention was made in the throne speech of either providing the training or a decent wage for front-line caregivers and contracted agencies where high staff turnover compromises care of our most vulnerable. In the throne speech no mention was made that would contradict the Premier's campaign commitment to lift the cap on long-term care residence fees, which effectively turns vulnerable seniors into commodities, sold to the lowest private, for-profit building bidder.

Also absent from the throne speech was the commitment that our current selected Premier, then a leadership candidate, made to hold a public inquiry into health care. Without this inquiry medical service providers will not be protected by whistle-blower legislation and will therefore be prevented from effectively advocating both for themselves or their patients.

The throne speech was more notable for what it didn't contain than what it did. No reference was made to a fixed election date, which contradicts another of the Premier's "fingers firmly crossed" election promises. While winks and nods have been exchanged about the possibility of raising monthly AISH payments by $400 and clawbacks of $400 for those able to work, no commitment has yet been made.

As part of the nostalgia flashback the importance of agriculture was reaffirmed. Reference was made to Stephen Harper's recent dissolution of the Canadian Wheat Board as though this was something the majority of western farmers in general and Alberta farmers in particular supported, which is not the case. Heavy-handed governance which disregards individual rights is becoming a common theme of both our federal and provincial governments. Although the practice of agriculture was celebrated in the throne speech, the same cannot be said for recognizing the importance of paid farm workers in Alberta, who continue to be denied workers' compensation or protection through Occupational Health and Safety.

The emphasis placed in this throne speech was on resource extraction rather than on sustainability. Simply adding on water as part of the environment ministry's title is meaningless without conservation action, which has been notably absent in Alberta until, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre noted, the province was dragged kicking and screaming by the federal government to at least meet its minimal standards.

Finally the peer-reviewed, science-based studies of Dr. David Schindler have been accepted. Whether his recommendations are implemented in an effective and timely manner was not confirmed within the throne speech. Water and well-being, whether of plants, animals, or human beings, go hand in hand. However, water continues to play second fiddle to extraction, whether renewable or nonrenewable.

The province has yet to chart the location and capacity of our aquifers. Sustainable Resource Development, which is an oxymoron in Alberta, permits clear-cutting, euphemistically referred to as block-cutting, in our primary eastern slopes watershed. Fence posts and stumps trump water, species, and noninvasive recreational opportunities. Special place designation in the Castle means nothing as the government has permitted Spray Lakes to cumulatively clear-cut one-half of the forested areas of the Castle-Crown, which was once actually protected by the federal government as part of Waterton national park.

SRD has used a variety of excuses to attempt to justify the unjustifiable. Previously the excuse for nonsustainable clear-cutting was to prevent the spread of pine beetles. Now that the beetle threat has been reduced in both the Castle and Bragg Creek, the new excuse is fire suppression. Rather than selective logging or controlled burns, which have proven effective, clear-cut logging causes many more problems than it solves, including erosion, habitat loss, summer and fall season dry tinder, droughts, and spring flooding.

The Alberta Conservative Party has by its actions or lack thereof lost the right to attach the term "progressive" to its title. If Albertans take the opportunity to compare the throne speech to the recently released Liberal policy documents, they will be able to judge which party or parties are truly progressive.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Additional speakers?

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 1 Results-based Budgeting Act

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier and President of the Treasury Board and Enterprise on behalf of the hon. Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to rise and move second reading of Bill 1, the Results-based Budgeting Act, and to have the opportunity to spend a few minutes to talk about the bill.

It will also be my pleasure as President of the Treasury Board, Mr. Speaker, to help lead the review of programs and services and results-based budgeting that are prescribed by this legislation, hopefully, once it's passed. This legislation is about Albertans identifying the outcomes they want their government to achieve in priority areas that they have identified. It's about ensuring that we are delivering the right services in the right way and at the right time to deliver the outcomes that Albertans are asking us to deliver, and it's about achieving a new level of fiscal discipline where funds will be allocated only where they are shown to improve the lives of Albertans. As our Premier has said, it is about delivering services better and smarter.

Over the last several months we've been speaking with Albertans. The Finance minister and I convened a series of round-table discussions, an online survey which received thousands of responses, and we received written submissions on the budget. The Minister of Education led consultations on the Education Act. In fact, the Premier and I and a few other of my colleagues listened to Albertans from one corner of this province to the other over the summer during our leadership race.

Albertans have clearly told us that they want the government to deliver results in a number of priority areas: health care, education, growing our economy, providing supports for seniors and vulnerable Albertans, and investing in our communities. Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what Bill 1 proposes to do. Through consultation and review this government intends to align its programs and services to the outcomes that Albertans expect their government to pursue.

Hon. members during question period alluded in their comments to: well, why haven't they been doing this over the last four years? This will be a framework where Albertans will be able to tell their government, "This is the priority that we have," and either we're delivering it appropriately or we're not, and this is what we need to do. Through this bill that framework will be there to ensure that Albertans have that opportunity. Once the desired outcomes are established, the Treasury Board will provide for a review process that will ensure that the programs and services being delivered by the government of Alberta are actually contributing to the outcomes that Albertans have asked us to deliver.

In the private sector, thanks to market forces, in order for a company to survive, it has to be able to adapt and continually adjust its offerings to ensure that it's offering a product that its customers value. If a company's product is not aligned with the expectations of its clients, that business will quickly find itself struggling to remain afloat. Therefore, like any private business would, it's important to ensure that the programs and services offered by the government of Alberta are relevant to today's Albertans.

Too often in the past we've allowed programs and services to continue to exist in one manner for the simple reason that they've always existed. This has led to some government programs and services remaining static despite significant evolutions in the clientele that they serve. If through the course of a review we find a program that is no longer effective in achieving the desired outcome, resources from that program or service should be reallocated to another program or service that will contribute to the achievement of the desired outcomes.

Mr. Speaker, I know that critics of this legislation have suggested that this is an effort that's all about outsourcing programs, cutting social programs, and eliminating government jobs. As usual, the truth of the matter is the exact opposite. In reviewing this legislation, I see great synergy between program and service reviews and the Premier's mandate to me to lead a public service renewal.

Albertans are blessed to be served by a passionate and dedicated group of public servants. Mr. Speaker, in talking to members of our public service both last summer and during our cabinet tours, one thing has become crystal clear, and that is that public servants want to be contributing to programs that are effective in achieving outcomes and improving the quality of life for all Albertans. Public servants in Alberta are proud, and so they should be, of the job that they do every day in assisting vulnerable Albertans, keeping our highways safe, educating our children, or assisting a small business that's just starting to grow. Mr. Speaker, through program review we will enable the public service to better connect to the needs of Albertans. Our front-line staff will be an invaluable resource as we go through this process.

We will also be bringing in outside experts to ensure that as reviews are being done, they are being done correctly. This will not be just a case of navel-gazing but a robust review that is challenged and validated by Albertans and third-party experts. In my opinion, this is one of the most valuable and unique aspects of this legislation. Too often previous attempts at program review became fragmented and limited in scope and, therefore, limited in result. Only a comprehensive approach can lead to transformational change.

Given the sheer magnitude of the programs and services this government delivers, this is not going to be an easy undertaking. To do it right, we will need to take the time to do it carefully, thoughtfully, and thoroughly. Careful consideration needs to be given to the timing of each review, and consideration needs to be given to ensuring that after each review the necessary and appropriate changes are made and implemented to align the program or service to the desired outcome. Approximately one-third of the government programs will be reviewed each year for the next three years. Once a program review is completed, we'll build a budget for that program from the ground up, investing funds as businesses do, only on those programs that deliver the results we want.

Some might ask: is that the best way to demonstrate fiscal restraint? To those I say: yes. It's important that the government treat taxpayer dollars with the same respect and consideration that Albertans do. Albertans apply a great deal of due diligence in determining how to spend their hard-earned money, and it's incumbent upon the government of Alberta to exercise a similar level of consideration.

Through this legislation, Mr. Speaker, we are committed to ensuring that every dollar we invest on behalf of Albertans is invested in programming and services that are contributing to the expectations that Albertans have. This legislation will clearly link our budget and policy decisions to the outcomes that we want to achieve, the outcomes that Albertans have identified.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. This may come as a surprise, but I really hope results-based budgeting works because the results of the budgets that we previously have received have not worked. There has been a push and a pull, the lean years versus the so-called fat years. As previously mentioned by another responder to the throne speech, Premiers have used the funds as their own personal cache, c-a-c-h-e as well as c-a-s-h, Ralph bucks being an example.

This government has previously failed in creating the types of efficiencies it's proposing to create now. For example, there was an organization referred to with the acronym RAGE, restructuring and government efficiency. You may not remember that ministry as, thankfully, it was very short lived. RAGE and results restructuring: there's a scary familiarity to those terms.

This government on a regular basis, at least for the seven years and counting, as I mentioned, that I've been involved, has frequently resorted to sup supply to bail itself out, and sup supply has frequently been in the $1 billion to $2 billion range. That's obviously not been results-based budgeting, where you have this line of credit that you can dip into or you can go to the taxpayer bailed-out branch of the bank – what's our credit union here in Alberta? – the ATB, to bail it out or to provide loans. Now, I don't believe in feast and famine, and therefore I am hopeful that a more results-based approach is going to prove the charm.

We had a very strong Auditor General in the form of Fred Dunn. In his accounting Fred had pointed out a number of the shortcomings in various ministries and departments, and through his recommendations, had they been adopted, we could have literally saved billions of dollars. For example, Fred pointed out the inappropriate nature of tracking our resource revenues, our royalties. He pointed out that because there is a single individual at the switch doing the accounting, there was the potential of a billion dollars of resource revenue being left on the table. He also had concerns about the fact that industry supplied all the information from which the royalty rates were then assessed. That certainly wasn't a results-based practice.

When the government talks about either zero-based budgeting or results-based budgeting, I can't help but think of the analogy of someone who's suddenly found religion. Possibly it's someone who was addicted to smoking, and now they lecture all the friends they used to hang out with in front of the hospital or the bar about the evil weed. The proof, of course, Mr. Speaker, will be in the pudding. I won't be around to taste that pudding, in terms of being around in the Legislature, but my family, my grandchildren, that I'm looking forward to spending time with in the very near future, will be affected by this new budgeting approach.

The hon. Minister of Education is chewing and chuckling. But he also, I think, is concerned because he has family members, and I'm sure he wishes them well. He's in charge of a ministry currently that has a significant number, hundreds of thousands, of students whose futures depend on stable funding, which, hopefully, this resource-based budgeting, Bill 1, will provide.

Mr. Speaker, having been a member of the opposition for the past seven years tends to put a person into the doubting Thomas category of disciples. Yet this is one area where I would wish the government success, just as I would have liked to have seen the successful completion and implementation of the land-use framework. The budget is the key underlying factor that determines the well-being of individuals. We need to have a strong economy, but we need to have one that is sustainable. For far too long this government has been reliant on globally set, nonrenewable commodity prices. Possibly with this results-based budgeting they will be able to recognize the importance of having stable sources of funding.

Now, we've talked in our Liberal campaign policy of the need for a return to at least some form of progressive tax structure. We've pointed out that we believe that people who earn over $100,000 should have their tax rate upped to 12 per cent. We've pointed out that people who earn between $100,000 and $250,000 should have their tax rate upped by approximately 5 per cent, and we'd like to see the equivalent of a 7 per cent increase in those earning over $250,000. Taxes, while they are considered by most individuals to be painful, are the only way of guaranteeing that programs, education, health care, social assistance can be sustainably funded.

Alberta has for far too long taken for granted our resource riches. We have benefited in the good years from the price of a barrel of oil. We've benefited previously from our gas prices though right now, with the speed to get everything out of the ground, fracked or otherwise, we've pushed down the value of the gas market. There seems to be this hell-bent desire to get every piece of bitumen out of the oil sands and shipped out of this country for refining as fast as possible.

What's the result? If the Keystone goes forward, if the Gateway goes forward, we'll be then, not in the case of China but in the case of the States, bringing back the refined product, as has been the case down in Chicago. We give them our raw product, and they refine it and sell it back to us at a considerably higher price. Hopefully, with this results-based Bill 1 proposal we'll start looking at actually doing what the hon. Deputy Premier suggested. He suggested that we should not be exporting beef on the hoof, but we should be exporting beef in the box. Likewise, we should be exporting finished products rather than raw products.

Currently, Mr. Speaker, I have concerns about Canada's relationship with the EU and the various trading agreements that are being formed. I am concerned that water may find itself as a commodity on an international market. I'm afraid that we may not have the protection, the sovereignty over our own resources. I don't see, because of the thinness of Bill 1, how those results of losing a significant portion of our sovereignty or our economy can be prevented in results-based budgeting.

Mr. Speaker, I am planning to tread this stage, at least the Alberta stage, for some time longer, and I want to enjoy with my grandchildren the fruits of our combined labours. If the government, as I say, has finally found results-based religion and it allows us to sustainably move from one year's budget to the next and the next without continually being bailed out either by the sustainability fund or drawing the heritage fund down to zero, then it's going to be a great success.

Mr. Speaker, as is the case with your retirement, I wish this government well.

The Speaker: Anybody else? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to get up and speak to Bill 1, the Results-based Budgeting Act. I was looking over this act. It doesn't take that particularly long to read. It's two pages long. Essentially, the long and short of it is that we will review government programs and see whether they're doing the job that they were supposed to do. Although the Deputy Premier stole my punchline, it does beg the comment that if we weren't doing that already, that's been a bit of a problem. Okay?

The way I look at this act, results-based budgeting: sure, it seems like something that should have been happening all along. Whether it actually does anything or not, well, I'm not so sure. I know the devil in the detail will be results-based budgeting. I'm sure you go through it and say: well, how many people are on AISH? Do people need to be on AISH? Well, obviously, the answer is yes. How much of this – do you start building budgets from scratch again and reviewing them? Well, I'm not so sure about that. It seems to be one of those exercises in trying to look like you're doing something without actually doing something. I'll get back to my first point. If it wasn't actually being done in the first place, it begs the question: why the heck wasn't it being done in the first place?

You have sort of, at least with me, a circle as to where in fact this is going and what in fact it's doing. But, I guess, on a positive note, if it does provide some clarity to what I can say have been the ups and downs in our budgeting process, the ups and downs in the nature of our spending habits in good times and bad times, and the unpredictability of funding in our public services, well, then that is a good thing. If that allows us to get on a basis where we recognize the purposes of predictable and sustainable funding as well as predictable and sustainable revenue sources, I believe that this act will possibly have some good measure.

If we look at this act coupled with some of the rhetoric that came out of the throne speech and looking back at the history of this great province, we are living in an economy that has times of very high revenue and times of very low revenue. This may in fact make it more challenging for governments to react. They're submitted to public pressure from time to time. When the coffers are full, spend more; when the coffers are down, well, spend less. In terms of actually running a society for the long run, doing things in this manner may in fact be in inverse relationship to each other. They should actually be done at the opposite ends. When the economy is down, that's when you need a little more funding. When the economy is up, that's probably when you need a little less. That's what Keynesian economics is, what you have to do to provide your citizens with decent services at all times throughout the existence of that society.

Like I mentioned earlier in my member's statement, unless you're going to totally dismiss the role of government, there is a place for hospitals, a place for schools, a place for teachers, a place for nurses, a place for police officers and those essential services that need to be provided in a society that maintains some sort of decency, maintains some sort of structure, and maintains some sort of organization. These services, in good times and bad, will cost money. Whether they're costs or simply investments in a civil society, well, those can be debated, but I think, in the main, they're costs of a civil society, of a reasonable approach to organizing and structuring the way Alberta moves ahead and goes forward.

On that note, I hope that, coupled with the Results-based Budgeting Act, we are looking at a results-based budgeting approach that allows for both predictable and sustainable funding as well as saving for the future. If you look at how we have run our oil and gas resources, since 1985 we have spent approximately 200-plus billion dollars in petroleum resources on what I would call average public services. If you look at it, our health care system is performing at around the seventh best of all the provinces. We have the fewest university spaces per capita, we have some of the fewest police officers on the streets, we have a low graduating rate from high school, and the list goes on and on. A strong argument can be made that our public services have not benefited from this great wealth we have brought into the provincial coffers.

If you look at things that have contributed to that, well, no doubt the introduction of the flat tax has obviously robbed the public purse of some benefit. I think estimates are that it could have raised $2 billion to $3 billion more since 2000. In the main, that could have gone into the heritage trust fund and supported other options. I hope we're looking seriously at getting rid of the flat tax system. In any system that believes in equality of opportunity, there have to be contributions from the taxpayer. Even economists like Adam Smith, who are generally looked at as so-called right-wing economists that recognize the market, also recognize the fact that those who have done better in a society owe a greater share to the public purse.

That is shared by virtually all economists and, in fact, leads to a sense of equality of opportunity. Whether you're a rich person or a poor person, you're going to get an opportunity to build your life and compete. Simply put, those things that need to be funded are public education and public health care to ensure that equality of opportunity exists. To ensure that that exists, there has to be predictable and sustainable funding, and to get predictable and sustainable funding, you need some measure of contribution from your society. So it's all rolled up into one.

If this Results-based Budgeting Act looks at both the revenue side as well as the expenditure side, I am hopeful that this, too, may bring a new morning to Alberta, to use a phrase from Ronald Reagan, who probably would have been very happy with results-based budgeting. I always liked that election slogan. Let's hope that results-based budgeting will provide some of these things.

Hopefully, in the budget tomorrow we will hear of the Premier's plan on how to raise revenue, and I will applaud her tomorrow if that happens as I believe that now is the time to have the discussion. I think Albertans are open to seeing what that would look like. In my view, it would probably do this government no harm, and it would probably do the people of Alberta in the long run a lot of good.

Those are my comments, Mr. Speaker. I know you will have many tributes here over the course of the next little while, but I, too, would like to say that I've enjoyed being under your tutelage in this House and under your guise. It has been fun, and I thank you for your service to this great province. I'll probably say that again from time to time, so don't let it go to your head. There we go.

The Speaker: You're very kind, but you cannot escape the responsibility of Standing Order 29(2)(a), which is now all available to all members.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View under 29(2)(a).

Dr. Swann: Yes. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was inspired by my colleague's comments. I guess one of the areas that I see most vulnerable in results-based budgeting is one he alluded to, certainly, the people with chronic disability, who at the present time are required to do an inordinate amount of reassessment, re-evaluation, form-filling, sometimes delays in it being approved. That's one aspect of what results-based management can cause, undue suffering and uncertainty and in some cases delays in their very benefits.

The other area that seems to me to be very vulnerable is: how do we measure prevention? How do we measure the fact that as a result of what we've been doing, people did not end up in emergency departments, did not end up in criminal activity, did not end up as addicts, did not end up draining other aspects of services because they were getting results but that those results happened to be unmeasurable by our current form of measuring? Does this mean that there's a real danger to some of those areas where we fundamentally know that over a decade perhaps we are going to see declines in the need for human services – for counselling, for addiction services – but they will not be measured in this particular format within one year of actually changing something or leaving it the same?

Two uncertainties there that I hope the hon. member can comment on.

The Speaker: If you wish, hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, just speaking from personal experience as a person with a disability, when I had my disability, I was 21. I had graduated from high school, was going to university, was playing hockey, but I know darn well that during that first year to two after I'd become disabled, the form-filling, the organization, the trying to get on to various government services programs would have been difficult for me if not darn near impossible going through the trauma that I'd just been through. I recognize that there are many people in our society who are overwhelmed by that process. Okay? You see it quite a bit in my office in Calgary-

Buffalo, where you have some of our marginalized citizens who are having difficulty getting through the minefield of social services or Alberta Works or the like. You see that quite a bit. You see people whom you're not quite sure how this happened to and whether something could be done.

I think you see that in AISH, too. One of my concerns with AISH, if we're going to increase the benefits, is: is this government just not going to then recognize the people who are supposed to actually be able to get on the program? I'm hoping that that doesn't happen.

But you're correct. In any budgeting process governments can limit who gets on a program, who receives the benefit, and the like. I'm not so sure whether results-based budgeting will add to that or not, so I don't know if I can comment fully on it.

The second part of your question was on . . .

Dr. Swann: Prevention.

Mr. Hehr: Prevention. Well, in any government you look at, I think you'll see some of the language changing out there. You saw that in the report by Vibrant Communities Calgary yesterday. They're trying to lead governments into looking at some of that harm reduction capacity and that social justice capacity and what actually costs the system and/or, I believe, in the nonprofit world the amount of sort of vibrancy you're creating with a program, not necessarily as a cost.

I think that mindset has almost come about in the last five or six years out of some of those communities. I actually was hopeful that I saw some of that language come out in the throne speech. I'm hoping there is along that side of the House some identity that costs are actually sometimes investments and the like. I'm optimistic that this bill may actually do that. I think it's more window dressing than anything. I think government departments should have been doing this all along, but if it creates a little bit of focus, well, that can't be a bad thing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it's a pleasure to speak relative to this Bill 1. When I first read the bill, I must admit I read it in astonishment. The first question that, in fact, people in my community were asking me was: "Well, what have they been doing for the last couple of years? Haven't they been doing this?" I find it very interesting because I think it's a very good question that Albertans have been asking. What have you been doing? I pause for a moment, and I ask everyone to reflect on: what has this government been doing if they haven't been doing zero-based budgeting, result-based budgeting?

It is my understanding, in fact, that that is what is supposed to have been going on as a, quote, unquote, Conservative government. [interjections] I'm glad to see the front bench has finally woken up.

That being the case, I find it really quite amazing that Bill 1 is something that they basically are admitting they have never done before. That is what is amazing to me: to be considered a Conservative government, but it's like it's something new. I heard the Treasury Board president just the other day talking about the Speech from the Throne as if this is just something totally new, that this is like a new idea, that it's like a newborn child, that we've got to protect it and give it a chance. In reality, Albertans are looking in astonishment: well, what has this government been doing?

Most governments in Canada, in fact, are doing this right now. Here this government is – I'm glad to see the Government House Leader is listening intently, unlike the Minister of Education. Perhaps he could learn to be a good listener rather than yapping. Okay?

I would like to say that most governments in Canada, including our federal government, already do this. The question is that the Alberta Conservative government is now making it sound like it's a new idea.

5:30

Now, for someone who has taught for nine, 10 years in a postsecondary institution, I have found this really quite remarkable that finally this government, it appears, is getting with the 21st century even though governments and organizations and families have been doing this for years. The question I have to ask is simply this. Have ministers not been following what has been going on in this direction? I have from the Treasury Board president the fact that he's indicated that we've been doing reviews and program reviews, so this is a contradiction in terms. It's a contradiction in terms because I sat on Treasury Board, and in actual fact during that time . . . [interjection] I'm glad to see the Minister of Education is finally paying attention. That's good as a student to pay attention because he can learn something here.

This, quite simply, is about the fact . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo has the floor, and I'm quite enjoying this debate this afternoon, so I wish all would speak through me so that I could be right up to date.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To reiterate, under zero-based budgeting, something that governments have been employing for years – by the way, I want to share through the chair to the government that municipalities have been doing results-based budgeting. They've been doing zero-based budgeting for years, and finally the President of the Treasury Board, is making it sound, with the Premier, like this is something new. This is nothing new. This is what Alberta families have been practising. They have been living within their means. They don't spend more than they take in. For the government to make it sound in the Speech from the Throne that this is under Bill 1, the Results-based Budgeting Act, of the Premier, let me share with you the fact that many members in here I know have of course practised in both secondary and in an educational field in postsecondary, that this is something that has been taught years ago.

One really has to ask the question: were ministers of the Crown not following what was, in fact, something that was in place for years? I am trying to understand. To the Minister of Finance: I am trying to understand why they have not been following what is proposed by the Premier to be the new Bill 1, because if that is the case, then I think every minister perhaps should give back their salary for failure to do their job pertaining to results based on how much you take in and how much you take out. For the life of me, Bill 1 strikes me as more of almost: is this Halloween? Because it can't be true that you actually are suggesting that this is a new idea. It is not a new idea.

When I ran for mayor of Fort McMurray in 1992, we were talking about results-based decision-making and budgeting. Fast-forward now 20 years later, and here the government, a conservative government, is now for the first time making it look like no minister ever knew about it. I have to really begin to ask the question. Since I sat on Treasury Board, I heard it in the past. It was my assumption that ministers who sat on Treasury Board were actually doing their job. Now it's very clear that they were not doing their job because that was the clear direction of the then minister of Treasury Board at the time.

Mr. Speaker, I am actually dumbfounded by what appears to be something new and is something that has been discussed in Treasury Board over the years. Clearly, it's an indication that ministers were not following it. In other words, they were just feeding lip service to the President of Treasury Board. Now the new President of Treasury Board appears to be making it sound like it's a new idea, so everything that he must have said in Treasury Board clearly – and the Minister of Human Services, I have to say, was a member of Treasury Board when I sat on Treasury Board. I have to ask him. I remember you talking at the time about results based. I remember you talking about balancing budgets and zero-based budgeting, and for the life of me I am surprised how something like this could get through a government process such as Bill 1. It makes no sense, s-e-n-s-e and c-e-n-t-s. I'll say that slowly again for you if you would like. It makes no sense. It does not make any sense to Albertans. Bill 1, the Results-based Budgeting Act, in my view, is something that is a facade.

It has to be to the Minister of Finance an admission of the fact that ministers were not doing their job in following what the direction was over the last couple of years. I think a question that each minister has to ask as they look at themselves in the mirror would be: why haven't they been honouring their position and serving Albertans better by doing the job they were supposed to have done?

This bill rates right up there with the bill when they wanted to form a committee to study Asia Pacific. I love the Asia Pacific. I know the countries. We've visited the countries, my wife and I, in many instances. But let me tell you that you don't have to form a committee to be able to understand Asia Pacific. I could send over a globe, or I could send over an inflatable balloon that you blow up as a globe, and you could find out where Asia Pacific is.

Maybe what I need to do now is send over generally accepted accounting principles when it comes to zero-based budgeting, when it comes to results-based budgeting. This is a message to the government. Your Bill 1, Results-based Budgeting Act, put forward by the Premier – let me let you in on a little secret – is what Albertans have been doing for the many, many years. Finally, in the 21st century you're looking like it's Groundhog Day 2 and you didn't know what happened on Groundhog Day 1.

Well, I would only ask you to really think about this. Should this bill continue on, it really is laughable. I mean, I know the Premier has only been a minister of the Crown for three years. Perhaps she did not sit on Treasury Board before, and she doesn't understand budgeting. I don't know. But to allow this to go on? Wasn't any minister able to tell the Premier that this makes no sense, it's going to make us look bad, it's going to make the government look bad, it's going to make it look like we haven't been doing our jobs as ministers for the last three years? I know the Minister of Finance sat in that position, and he was on Treasury Board and sat in cabinet for the last three years. So the question would have to be: what was going on when all of this was happening?

Now, I know the Minister of Finance really didn't want to be the Minister of Finance pertaining to Bill 1. I know he would have preferred to stay as the Minister of Energy because it's a good springboard after politics. But the reality of it is, I understand, that the purported fiscal hawk on that side, the then Minister of Finance, essentially said: I don't want to leave. And guess what? The member from Bragg Creek finally basically said . . .

Mr. Anderson: Rocky View.

Mr. Boutilier: Foothills-Rocky View. Yeah. He actually said that. When the Premier called him pertaining to the bill, he said: "I don't want to be the Minister of Finance anymore. I want to be the Minister of Energy so that after I get my job, I can have a good springboard." The Minister of Finance knows and I know that in actual fact the Member for Foothills-Rocky View didn't want to be the Minister of Finance, so they gave it to the former Minister of Energy, who didn't want to be the Minister of Finance. Ultimately, it's like a calamity show over there, as if zero-based budgeting is just starting today. Perhaps the Minister of Human Services is not aware of the fact that the Minister of Finance did not want to be the Minister of Finance. I see the Treasury Board president is here.

Mr. Speaker, on Bill 1, Results-based Budgeting Act, I have to ask the President of the Treasury Board: what has he been doing, sleeping in cabinet for the last three years, when, in fact, direction was given by the previous Treasury Board president that you're supposed to be doing a program review? This is embarrassing. This is an admission that the government has been failing in the Treasury Board because ministers were not doing their job. As the former minister of advanced education why weren't you doing your job? You know why? Because you weren't listening to Albertans.

I'm glad to see that the Treasury Board president is here today and that he's paying attention to me. You can learn a lot. Why? Because I am speaking on behalf of Albertans. And as a person who teaches at the University of Alberta, you can really learn a lot. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, you still have the floor.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you. Regardless of being interrupted by the Treasury Board president, the Minister of Education, I'm pleased to say that I'm glad to see that the actual Treasury Board president is listening. The question I'll be asking will be: why have you been slipping? Are you going to return your 30 per cent salary increase? Because you haven't been doing your job as you sat on Treasury Board. You obviously haven't been doing your job, and this is an admission. You didn't even have the courage to tell the Premier under Bill 1 that all of us as ministers are supposed to have been doing this for the last three years. Really, I guess, we're learning what ministers have been doing or, in fact, have not been doing.

I see the Minister of Finance. His lip is up, so that means that I'm really getting to him right about now. I'm glad to see that he's listening to what I am saying, because Bill 1 really is a waste of a bill. It's something that every organization, Alberta families have been exercising for years. Finally, now, it's an admission that ministers of the Crown over the last couple of years have not been following the direction of the former Treasury Board president. Clearly, this really is an insult to Albertans.

Bill 1, in my judgment, as I look at the actual completion of a review of programs or services: my goodness, what have you been doing for the last three years? The Minister of Human Service has indicated: oh well, Mr. President of Treasury Board, I'm reviewing my programs all the time. It appears that he hasn't been. The Minister of Finance, who was Minister of Education, who was minister of health – that was absolutely a wrecking ball – said he was reviewing. Mr. Speaker, clearly, he hasn't been reviewing because it looks like this is just a new idea.

Then, by the way, there are the reports. "The President of Treasury Board and Enterprise shall, no later than October 1 of each year . . .” My question is: what have these members of Treasury Board been doing over the last two years? I can only say that they haven’t been doing their job, and clearly they should just give back the 30 per cent increase that they gave to themselves. They were interested in doing that, but when it came to actually looking at the results and actually doing what Alberta families are doing, they didn’t do it.

Bill 1 is an admission that you haven’t been doing your job, ladies and gentlemen on the front bench, over the last two years. And that, in fact, is actually disappointing because even a basic level of competence would be able to do that, because we as Albertans believe that budgeting is important.

The Speaker: Hon. member, the time has lapsed.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Chase: Oui, M. le Président. Pensez-vous que le projet de loi 1 est seulement une diversion, une politique, une proposition du jour au lieu d’une vraie méthode qui pourrait réussir?

Mr. Boutilier: C’est une bonne question. On parle l’anglais pour le bénéfice de l’Assemblée.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear to the members on this side that in terms of la question posée, the question that you posed, it is one that is – I know they do not have a written translation, but would you like a translation of the question that was asked? Well, the member of Treasury Board would not like to have the translation. I don’t know if he’s insulting the people in St. Paul who are French people or Plamondon. I’m not so sure.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I can only say this: this government has not been able to grasp a very basic principle, the principle of budgeting like all other families in Alberta, like other businesses in Alberta. It’s like it’s a revelation to them. That’s why this is an admission that this government has lost its way.

The Speaker: Others on 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d just like to ask the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo: do you have any thoughts on why we would need to pass an act such as Bill 1, the flagship legislation of this Premier, that essentially says that we need to make sure we’re getting results from the budget? I always thought legislation had a purpose, that you were trying to do something that required the seal of approval, the authority of Legislature. I mean, obviously, we have a Finance minister, we have a cabinet, we have a Treasury Board. Clearly, we have ministries and ministers of those ministries, and they can go through their budgets and make sure that they’re getting value for money. They always say that they’re doing that.

At every debate on the budget that I’ve ever been to, they’ve said that they’ve been doing this exact thing that they’re now legislating. It appears to me that this is just showmanship and nothing more than that, so I’m wondering why we would pass a bill to legislate what they can do right now.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, that’s exactly, Mr. Speaker, what Albertans and Alberta families are asking. I think the deeper, inside baseball question is that you have a Minister of Finance who doesn’t want to be the Minister of Finance; he preferred to be the Minister of Energy. But when the Premier called him – and by the way I have this from a good, authoritative source – he said: I don’t want to be the Minister of Finance; I want to stay in Energy. But the problem was that the member who was the Minister of Energy, in actual fact – guess what? He wanted to be the Minister of Energy so he could have a springboard after politics.

So you have a Minister of Finance who doesn’t want to be the Minister of Finance. On his advice to the Premier, he probably said: I can’t think of anything because Finance is not my bag, so I might as well go ahead and come up with something that, really, every minister was supposed to have done in the past.

The Speaker: Any additional questions? Are there additional speakers on this bill?

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere to participate in the debate on second reading.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s my pleasure to stand in second reading of Bill 1, the Results-based Budgeting Act. I’m still waiting for that magic day when Bill 1 will actually mean something in this Legislature, when they’ll actually bring something forward with substance, when there will be some kind of light that will go on and they’ll actually bring a piece of legislation to start it off that will really move this province in the right direction on various issues, whether it be the way we handle our health care system or the way to improve our democracy. There are so many things in the democratic process that could be improved that would make for a great Bill 1, whether it’s mandatory free votes by making sure that votes of nonconfidence are not attached to every vote of the Legislature so that we could have free votes in this Legislature without the government failing.

Perhaps we could pass a bill – and maybe the Minister of Education could take note of this; he seems pretty talkative right now – that would make sure that we have a transparent list, posted publicly, of the communities that need schools in the order and the priority that they’re going to be given schools. That would allow the public to have faith that how schools are funded is not based on politics but rather on some objective funding formula based on student population and the like.

There are a hundred examples of things that would really make a great Bill 1, that would be substantive and would improve democracy, education, health care, and many different things. Yet here we are again, like Groundhog Day, talking about a Bill 1 that essentially is just a press release. That’s about the worth of it because it does absolutely nothing to better the lives of Albertans.

Results-based budgeting is something that I would hope – I would hope – every ministry would be doing right now and would have been doing for the last 40 years. It’s shocking to me. I mean, you just read through the act:

The Treasury Board shall provide for a comprehensive review of the programs and services provided by the Government and its agencies.

Well, I know for a fact that while I was over there, there was an attempt to do that by the former Treasury Board president. So, okay, they obviously don’t need authority to do that.

(2) The review must be conducted in the manner and in accordance with a schedule as directed by the Treasury Board and must include an assessment as to whether the programs and services provided by the Government and its agencies meet their intended objectives and whether they are being delivered in an efficient and effective manner.

Well, again, the Treasury Board, I’m assuming, was already doing that. We have three-year business plans that we go through in Public Accounts and so forth. I thought the government was already doing that, and then we would assess whether they actually were meeting their objectives in Public Accounts and in estimates and in other things that we go through.

(3) For the purpose of conducting a review under this Act, in addition to members of the public service, external experts may be engaged as the Treasury Board considers necessary.

Well, clearly, right now the Treasury Board is able to bring in anybody they want. There's a long history of very lucrative contracts and bringing in experts that this government has done in order to do things like this, with mixed results.

And then it says,

(4) Albertans will have the opportunity to participate in the review.

As the current Treasury Board president always said, "I guess that's what the cabinet tour was for," you know, to go around and talk to Albertans.

I'm looking at this whole first section, the main part of this bill, and I'm noticing that there's nothing in here that they can't do right now or that they shouldn't have already been doing over the last four years.

We go on to results-based budgeting, the next paragraph, section 2, and it says:

2 On completion of a review of a program or service, a results-based budget process must be used as an approach for the next budget planning cycle for that program or service.

What on earth were they doing before this if they weren't already doing this?

On completion of a review of a program or service, a results-based budget process must be used.

I'm at a loss as to what they were doing if they weren't already doing this. We need legislation to legislate that they do the jobs that I would assume they were doing but apparently they weren't? I mean, you can see why people would get a little bit cynical about the usefulness of this bill and of the hours in the Legislature to pass a press release.

The reason we're speaking to this even though we find it so worthless, in case you are wondering at home, is because we're tired of silly legislation like this being brought forward and getting all this time and attention when it doesn't do anything. Meanwhile, we don't have fixed election dates. We don't have voter recall. We don't have free votes. We don't have a transparent infrastructure list so that everybody knows in what order they're getting their infrastructure and their schools and their hospitals and so forth. We don't have any of that. Next Legislature, regardless of who's in the government or what it looks like, let's make sure that Bill 1 is actually something that we can show to Albertans and be proud of and actually achieve an objective that needs legislative consent to occur. This certainly is not one of them.

I would ask, as well: why would the Premier back away from what it was before? When she announced a couple weeks ago that she was going in this direction, she told one of the newspapers that there would be zero-based budgeting. Well, zero-based budgeting is not the same as results-based budgeting, clearly. The Premier has said that it's not the same thing. She's backed away from it. It's not zero-based budgeting. Zero-based budgeting is very different from whatever results-based budgeting is. I'm assuming that every Legislature on the planet does results-based budgeting. I would hope so. I think they do. It's a good bet that every single one would say: we do results-based budgeting.

Mr. Boutilier: Every province in Canada.

Mr. Anderson: Well, certainly every province in Canada but also every Legislature in the world in the new Westminster system.

Mr. Chase: Except Greece.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. That's right.

The point is that if they're already doing that, why do we need this law? Again, if Bill 1 was zero-based budgeting, I would say that in that case, well, perhaps then it's worth a Bill 1. I don't think you need legislation to do zero-based budgeting. I think it's just something you can do, that you can just announce and do as a cabinet. You don't need legislation to give you authority to do it.

Zero-based budgeting, of course, means that for every single ministry every single year or maybe every two years or three years, whatever you decide to do, their budget starts out at zero. It means you have to justify as a minister and as a ministry every single expense that is made, you know, from what hospitals you're building or upkeeping and all that sort of thing to the wages that you're paying out to your bureaucrats or to front-line workers, et cetera. You have to justify all of that every year to make sure these are actually programs and expenses that mean something.

Of course, most of those expenses, I would hope, are meaningful and would continue on. For example, paying nurses or teachers would be important to keeping going with, obviously. But there are always some programs in government that are not useful, that are unneeded, duplicative, redundant, silly, don't achieve the results that people are looking for, are overfinanced, underfinanced, et cetera, et cetera. When you have zero-based budgeting, those are the programs that you seek to eliminate. If you can't justify them in that year, then they can't be justified and you have to get rid of them.

The way it goes on in government is that when you have a lot of outdated programs – and useless, redundant programs continue on long after they're needed, long after they've been effective. Some are proven completely ineffective, and we could list a long list of ineffective programs that have occurred although we don't have time for that because I only have about a minute left.

The point is that you say to the bureaucracy: "Look. You go look at every single program you have because you're not getting money for any program unless you can justify it." That's zero-based budgeting. It's a good fiscal conservative principle, and it's one that we would support this government in doing if they were willing to do it. It looked like they were going to do that, which is straight right out of the Wildrose policy book and has been there for the last two years. It would be something that, obviously, we would support. Instead, they changed it from zero-based budgeting to results-based budgeting. I mean, you could drive a tractor through what that means. Who knows what that even means?

The point, Mr. Speaker, is that it's important, when we come in here to this Legislature and debate bills, that they're bills that actually do something, that they're needed, that we need legislative consent, legislative authority, and that's why we're here passing it, that it's not something that essentially is a glorified press release for this new Premier of Alberta, who is becoming legendary for the fact that she says a lot that doesn't mean a whole lot. It's very silly. Whether it's fixed election dates or whatever, she says one thing; she does another. She said she wanted zero-based budgeting. Now we've got results-based budgeting. You know, if I was the former Treasury Board president or any former minister, I would be offended by the fact that they were questioning that I wasn't already doing results-based budgeting.

Just give me one thing that's different now, that we need legislative authority to do, and maybe I can support this bill. Until I get that from the members opposite, you know, it's going to be very difficult for me to support this bill going forward.

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member, but the House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we renew our energies with thanks so that we may continue our work with the people in the constituencies we represent. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly a group of students from Forest Lawn high school. Fifty students are accompanied by teachers Tina Merali and Ron Lee and teacher helper Shirley Buchanan. Forest Lawn is a banner school in Calgary, rich in diversity and accomplishments, with students eager to learn and succeed in the land of Alberta. They are hosted by myself and the hon. members for Calgary-East, Calgary-Montrose, and Calgary-Mackay.

Many Governor General's award recipients, doctors, and other professionals can proudly name Forest Lawn as their high school. In fact, the son and the daughter of the hon. Member for Calgary-East proudly graduated from Forest Lawn high school and are now a lawyer and a banker.

I would ask all the students to rise and receive the traditional welcome from the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a very long list for introductions today, so brevity would be very much appreciated.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two very special guests from Camrose, Camrose city manager Damian Herle and former mayor of Camrose Norm Mayer. Damian actually was a policeman first and served for 26 years in Camrose prior to 2003. He then became active in the city administration and is now city manager. He's lived in Camrose for over 33 years with his wife, Glenda, and their two children.

Norm Mayer is a very close friend. He served three terms as an alderman in Camrose in the '70s and '80s and then became mayor and was mayor for 15 years. The really significant thing about Norm – and he's a person that works harder than anybody I know – is that he didn't miss a meeting in something like 22 years of service on city council. With his impressive work in public service he's also been very involved in the community. He is also married and a proud husband, father, and grandfather.

Both of these gentlemen have made significant contributions to the community, and I'd like them to be recognized. I hope they're here. If they are, would they please rise.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me tremendous pleasure today to introduce six very special people, my wife of 40 years, Linda – I'm not quite sure how she's managed, but she has – my daughter, Kylee, and her friend Taylor Marshall; my son, Cody; my sister Judy and her husband, Lynn Toth. They're here not only for the budget address, but none have ever been to question period, and I have warned them it could be a life-altering experience. I will ask them to stand and be recognized by the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour for me to introduce to you two constituents of mine. Donna Karlzen is a friend, a constituent, a supporter, and also the mother of my scheduling assistant, Amanda. She's an active volunteer in the constituency, and she's patiently waiting for a son-in-law and grandchildren. I think all of us are looking forward to Amanda having a boyfriend someday before she starts that, though.

With her is Eric Karlzen, and he's been a resident of Whitecourt-St. Anne for 76 years. He sets a wonderful example for seniors in Alberta. This man is the go-to guy in Evansburg. He is always involved in work that needs to be done. He's a great volunteer, a great Albertan.

I introduce them to all of you, and I'd ask them to please stand and be recognized by this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two very valuable members of my constituency. Not only are they valuable members of my constituency; they are dedicated and committed to the communities in which they serve. They are entrepreneurs and supporters of their communities not only as businessmen but also as reeve of the county of Smoky Lake, Mr. Dareld Cholak, and as councillor, Mr. Ron Bobocel. If I could ask the Assembly to please recognize their efforts.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this House my wife and companion of 28 years. It was a few years before that, but that's another story. I could imagine that it would maybe be possible to do this job without the support of a spouse, but I can't imagine why one would want to. Debbie, please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me today to introduce to you and through you five individuals that are here to join us for the budget. First of all, Michelle Tetreault and Darwin Durmie. Darwin, of course, has served as president of the Public Works Association for North America this past year and is an amazing contributing member, as is Michelle, to volunteer efforts throughout Alberta and in the local community. Darwin is originally from Drumheller, so his roots go right back to my constituency.

Also with us today are Joe Gendre and James Nibourg, councillors from the county of Stettler who have come today to join us for the budget. They've also brought with them James' son Isaac to get a taste of democracy at this level in Alberta and to enjoy this process.

I'd ask them all to please rise and be recognized by all of my colleagues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a constituent, Mr. Bryan Walton. Bryan is also the chief executive officer of Alberta Cattle Feeders' Association. He is with his son-in-law Phil Bourgeois today. Phil resides in Okotoks. I'd like you to please join me in giving my guests the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature a constituent of mine, Tammy Maloney. She's a strong advocate for social entrepreneurship in Alberta. After obtaining her master's degree, an MBA with a focus in entrepreneurship, overseas in Europe, she returned to Calgary to start her own social entrepreneur agency called SEACHange, which is focused on providing meaningful employment opportunities that serve as a bridge to the mainstream economy for people currently dependent on social services to meet their needs.

Also with her is Izabela Galazka, who is here today after surviving her teens on the streets and in the youth homeless system in Calgary. Izabela has reached stability in her life thanks to the hard work and relentless determination from organizations such as the Alex Youth Health Centre and social programs such as AISH. Her hope is that her employment at SEACHange will help her transition away from AISH to a life of financial independence and self-reliance.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask both of these individuals to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly she who survived growing up with me, my wonderful sister Sharon van Doesburg and her husband, Rob. They're accompanied by their daughter Gemma and their son Sam, former Edmontonians now living in Castlegar, B.C., and visiting here today. They're seated in the public gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly four municipal leaders from my constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake. It is such a pleasure to have these constituents here today for the delivery of Budget 2012. They are not only fabulous people but great Albertans, and I am blessed to be working with them. Please rise as I say your name: His Worship Larry Lofstrand, mayor of the village of Glendon; His Worship Craig Copeland, mayor of the city of Cold Lake; Lorna Storoschuk, deputy mayor of the town of Bonnyville; Mike Krywiak, councillor for the municipal district of Bonnyville and also a former teaching colleague of mine. Please give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's really an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly and all Albertans some very good friends. Dennis and Linda Hueppelsheuser live just west of Blackfalds. My wife, Pauline, is with them as well. I've known Dennis and Linda since 1971, when I worked for Dennis in the fields. He had about 3,000 acres of farming. I worked with him in the fields, and Pauline worked for Linda in the house, doing domestic work. That's when I got to know Pauline quite well. I knew that she was a good cook and could do wonderful things, so after some time I married her. Dennis and Linda have been very active members of their community. They've been active members of the Flying Farmers. I think Linda was a president of Flying Farmers for some time. Dennis actually worked in this building 50 years ago for the ministry of agriculture, so he's been around this place a few times, but that was in 1961 and 1962. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Legislature two great Albertans, Eric Musekamp and Darlene Dunlop, founders of the Farmworkers Union of Alberta, an organization dedicated to fulfilling the premise that farm workers are persons within the great dominion of Canada. In the tradition of the Famous Five, who achieved equality for women, they continue to give their lifeblood to provide for the equal treatment of farm workers as every other person in the dominion of Canada, even Alberta. Would they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly our guest, Mandy Melynck. Mandy grew up in the small farming community of Waskatenau and today makes a living as a small farmer selling beef, pork, and poultry. She served for three years as the youth VP of the National Farmers Union and is a founding member of the Coalition for a Nuclear Free Alberta as well as Our Water Is Not for Sale. We are proud to have her as our candidate in the constituency of Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater. I would now like to ask Mandy to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guest, Lorna Watkins-Zimmer. Lorna owns and operates a small business in downtown Red Deer and served on city council for 15 years. She was born in the U.K. and immigrated to Canada at an early age and graduated from the U of C with a bachelor of education. We're extremely proud and excited to have her as our candidate in Red Deer-South. I hope that she's here. I would ask that she now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour and privilege for me to introduce four people to you today. They are seated in your gallery. First of all, my very able and capable constituency assistant, Emma Ronan. Emma, if you'd stand. Emma is sporting a new engagement ring. Congratulations, Emma. You'll have to look at it. It's a pretty fancy ring.

I'd also like to introduce some good friends of ours, David and Cheryl Andrews. If they'd stand. They are strong supporters of mine in my constituency. Cheryl is retired from a very successful teaching career. Dave, in addition to being a very successful farmer and rancher in the area, is past chairman of the Alberta Beef Producers and of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association and president in the past and currently the chairman of the Canadian Cattlemen Market Development Council.

Joining them today is my friend and partner in life, my spouse, my wife, Wanda. I also could not imagine doing this job without her support. We will anticipate celebrating 29 years of marriage next Sunday.

I'd ask you to all join me in giving them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four members of the Ainsworth family. If they could please stand – Emily is already up – mother, Alison; son, Nathan; a daughter, Emily; and Emily's super service dog, Levi, who is much better behaved than I am. Please welcome them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions this afternoon. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two key members of the Edmonton-Calder community. I'll introduce each of them, and then I'll ask them to rise in unison. The first is Ms Rochelle Marshall. Rochelle is a well-known and very competent political insider who has worked with me on many campaigns and who has an uncanny ability to interpret and examine cold data. Accompanying her today is Mr. Kevin Taron, the CFO of the Edmonton-Calder constituency association but a man whose real claim to fame is his ability and his passion for door-knocking. They're seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask them now to rise to receive the traditional greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Water.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege for me to rise today and introduce three special guests that are here today, the first from Drayton Valley, the chair of St. Thomas Aquinas school division and past president of ACSTA, my good friend Sandra Bannard. From the town of Devon we have two outstanding municipal leaders joining us here today, Mayor Anita Fisher and Councillor Dan Woodcock. Let's please give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electricity Prices

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier claimed deregulated electricity prices ensure "that industry is going to be able to afford to keep operating." Well, when prices spiked last month to over 90 cents a kilowatt hour, companies like AltaSteel and Whitecourt's Alberta Newsprint Company shut down production because they said, quote, it is completely uneconomical, unquote, to continue operating. To the Premier: why does this government insist on continuing this ideological crusade despite such overwhelming evidence against electricity deregulation?

Ms Redford: We have certainly had the privilege of visiting some of those business enterprises that the hon. member is speaking about. It was very informative for me to be able to spend time with them. You know, any business needs to make decisions with respect to input costs. One of the things that they showed me was that there are times when there is variation in electrical prices, and because of that, they'll sometimes slow down operations, and there are certain points in time when they will decide for a short period of time to stop production. But, Mr. Speaker, this was explained to me completely as part of what they even now consider to be normal operations. It is certainly not the ideal, but it is something that goes on on a regular basis.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that these are the same input costs that are passed down to the consumer and the same input costs that lead to job losses, I asked if the Premier would give Albertans a break in the skyrocketing power bills. The Premier said, "We will do what this caucus and cabinet cares about." Wow. Would the Premier care to tell us if this government has any plan to bring down utility rates and give hard-working Albertans a break?

The Speaker: The hon. the minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not exactly sure where the Leader of the Opposition is going with this. Perhaps he'd like to go to Hydro-Québec or Hydro Ontario, which, for the information of caucus, have run up $62 billion and $36 billion, respectively, in debt. Consumers there are paying not just for electricity but for the debt of past governments. Here in Alberta you pay for electricity once. We pay once, and that's it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That question was to the Premier. I didn't realize the Minister of Energy was the Premier.

Given that the Minister of Energy said that TransAlta's $370,000 fine for manipulating prices shows that "the system does work," can the Premier please explain who this system is working for: Albertans, who got gouged an extra $5.5 million on their power bills, or the big company, who got a slap on the wrist?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to answer the same question for two days in a row. Just as these irregularities occurred, they were detected in real time. It shows the system is working. A decision went to the appropriate committee, and TransAlta was fined for that transaction.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Accommodation and Health Care for Seniors

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's try this again. Yesterday the Premier flatly denied any privatization of seniors' care yet in the same breath talked about new options and, quote, creative work with respect to accommodations, unquote. This government is subsidizing private corporations, who then turn around and gouge our seniors for basic services like a walk, a bath, or even a trip to the washroom. Can the Premier tell us why this government is subsidizing private corporations instead of funding the public delivery of quality care for seniors? Come on, Premier.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this government provides public health care to seniors that allows seniors to live in dignity. We are also going to ensure that all Alberta seniors have appropriate accommodation that allows them to live with dignity and respect and that they have choice. I expect that over the next two months we are going to hear many allegations of circumstances with respect to accommodation arrangements that simply aren't the case, and every single time that it happens, we will correct the facts.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, given that on my trip around Alberta, from Medicine Hat to Bonnyville, there are senior couples who are being forced to get separated, I don't know if that's the dignity the Premier refers to.

The Premier in her maiden speech said, "Allowing private industry to meet seniors' needs will create more jobs in many different sectors and steady growth for our economy." How can the Premier deny that all this government is doing is turning our seniors into ATMs for their private-sector buddies?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the comments that I made in that speech I stand by. We are not a government that believes that the only way to provide accommodation services to seniors is for us as the government to build the facility and staff it completely. We believe that Albertans want choice. We have been told that Alberta seniors want choice, and we are going to give them that choice.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that under the Premier's scheme high-income seniors get better health care than low-income seniors or middle-income seniors, how can the Premier say that this arrangement is anything but a two-tiered health care system for a select few?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I fundamentally disagree with the hon. member's first assertion. We have a public health care system in this province. Every Albertan is entitled to and receives the same health care services, whether they are a senior or not and no matter what their income. I will tell you that this government is committed to that and will ensure that that continues to be the case.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Castle-Crown Wilderness Area

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This government's version of protection for a designated special place like the Castle-Crown is to allow commercial logging to create fence posts. Its version of protecting threatened species like the grizzly and black bear is to allow logging equipment to crush these hibernating bears and their newborn cubs and destroy their habitat. Bottom line: this government is allowing a situation where a designated special place and the lives and habitats of bears are being destroyed. To the Premier: why does the Castle-Crown have to provide the trees for fence posts? Why this particular area, which is a special place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To begin with, the exaggeration in the preamble of that was nothing short of outrageous. The fact of the matter is that there is no logging in any park in Alberta. There will not be any logging in parks. The area that the member refers to is not in fact a park; it's a very carefully managed area. That's the mission of my department, that we balance sound environmentally responsible development with the needs of wildlife, watershed, all the environmental considerations.

Ms Blakeman: Back to the Premier: why did the government sign a contract agreeing to provide maps of wildlife den locations when it was clear that with only one staff person for the whole of the south Rockies it was impossible to fulfill this commitment? Why would you do that?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the government has wildlife experts. The company engages wildlife experts. The fact of the matter is that often in cases these dens or important wildlife features aren't known until somebody is actually walking around the site. I don't see anything wrong with our biologists working with company executives or field personnel to try and do the best job possible to identify these sites. We have fully taken into consideration the needs of bears and other wildlife species in this.

Ms Blakeman: I'm sorry he doesn't know his own agreements. To the minister: why does SRD stipulate special considerations for winter bear dens through numerous sections of – I'll say it slowly – Spray Lake Sawmills and C05, operating ground rules, signed in January of 2011, and call for the protection of bear dens when the department and minister know they don't have the staff, the data, or the money?

Mr. Oberle: Whoa. Mr. Speaker, apparently she didn't hear the last answer. Let me tell you something. Every single inch of our province is important wildlife habitat for something, and we consider it when we develop our landscape in a sustainable, responsible manner.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Provincial Fiscal Framework

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the 1993 federal election PC leader Kim Campbell uttered the now infamous words: an election is not a time to discuss serious issues. Yesterday the Finance minister had a Kim Campbell moment of his own when he told reporters that being honest with Albertans on what taxes the Premier will raise is "not something you're going to do in the space of a few weeks prior to [a provincial] election." To the Premier: do you agree with your Finance minister that Albertans should be kept in the dark as to which taxes you plan to raise if you are re-elected?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think it's important, first of all, that we correct what this hon. member said in his preamble. What I said was that we do not have the time prior to an election to engage in a thorough conversation with Albertans about what a fiscal framework should look like. I'm sorry that he has a hearing problem, but those are the facts.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, again, the Premier must be afraid to answer the question to her. Why are you afraid to tell Albertans what you plan to do about taxes? Do you plan to raise them or not?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I think that today is such an important day for Alberta. First of all, I'm glad that the minister had an opportunity to correct the hon. member with respect to his comments. The reason for that is that Albertans know that a two-, three-week, two-month period is not enough time to fully address a fiscal framework. That is why we alluded to the fact that this discussion must begin in the throne speech on Tuesday. And it will continue. It will continue for some time because it matters to Albertans. Today at 3:15 we are going to see a fiscal plan that Albertans will be proud of, and at that time Albertans will know who they can trust.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Premier for answering. I'm not talking about the budget; I'm talking about after the election. My question to the Premier is this. Will you be honest with Albertans and be truthful and open and transparent that you will not raise their taxes?

Ms Redford: I am honest with Albertans every day, Mr. Speaker. This budget today will set a plan for Alberta that will make it very clear to Albertans where we are going in one year, two years, and three years. Today at 3:15 Albertans will have confidence in what their future will be.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Health Services for North Edmonton

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The north side of Edmonton is very short of physicians and other health care professionals. It has many needs that other parts of the province don't necessarily have. I want to ask the health minister why the East Edmonton health centre has still not been funded – it's only $9 million – and why this government is ignoring the health care needs of the people who live on the north side of Edmonton.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government is certainly not ignoring the needs of any Albertan in any part of the province. With respect to the East Edmonton health centre, as the hon. member knows, planning and implementation have been under way for some time to fully open the centre. There are a very large number of people with no attachment to primary health care that live in that area. I am satisfied that these plans are moving very quickly.

I think if the hon. member chooses to stay tuned at 3:15 this afternoon, he may hear some other news that encourages him with respect to advancements in this area.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have certainly been working very hard with the citizens of my constituency to force this government to open that, and if that is meant to be a hint that it's going to be in the budget, then I'm going to take a lot of credit for the fact that I forced this government to open it.

At the same time, we still have real, serious problems with the emergency room at the Royal Alex. It's not meeting its goals. The people on the north side of Edmonton are not having their health care needs met by this government. When are you going to make sure that . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjection] The hon. minister, please.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, far be it from me to suggest that any hon. member of this House should take hints prematurely. What I was talking about was access to primary health care, and I know this hon. member is aware of the challenges in that regard. If he has paid attention to the work we have done through primary care networks and now family care clinics, he will see that we are talking about much more than the bricks and mortar in anyone's constituency; we are talking about the ability of those teams to reach out and work with communities to improve health in the long term.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that I don't understand what the minister is talking about, whether it's primary care or whether it's opening the Northeast health centre, I want to ask him to make sure that the necessary services – that is, access to physicians, to dentists, and to other health care professionals – and action to bring down wait times at the Royal Alex ER are in fact going to be done by this government because so far people have suffered for years because of your inaction.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I'll certainly agree with the hon. member on his first point in terms of knowing what we're talking about. Once again, what we are talking about here is access to primary health care. I certainly don't hesitate to give the hon. member credit for raising concerns about access in that part of the city. We have a number of initiatives under way to reduce waiting times in emergency departments. The first step is to make sure people have a place to go to, and they have a place to go to now in the form of the East Edmonton health centre.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Farm Worker Exemptions from Labour Legislation

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In her leadership bid the Premier indicated South African President Nelson Mandela as a mentor. In the same Herald article she said, "the family farm clause is being used as a loophole" and promised to close it if she was elected Premier. Yet in her letter of January 23 this year she said, I quote: in cases where the employer does not have WCB, the farm worker and family can sue the employer for compensation for work-related injuries. End quote. To the Premier: as a lawyer and QC why doesn't the Premier acknowledge that it is grossly unfair to expect a vulnerable, injured farm worker to sue their employer?

Ms Redford: Apparently, we were all ready to answer the question, Mr. Speaker.

You know, what we know is that right now in Alberta the law with respect to these issues is quite unclear. There is no doubt that there are circumstances where there has to be support for a family farm. There are also circumstances where we have to ensure that workers are protected. I think that the circumstances in many of these situations are not clear, and there does need to be work done with respect to this. This government has begun to do that work, and we will conclude that work in good time.

Dr. Swann: This government has been avoiding this issue, denying this issue for 20 years. Committee after committee has said that this isn't worth changing.

Given that widow Lorna Chandler from Black Diamond has been fighting in the national court for some compensation for five years for the death of her husband in a farm-related accident, why will you not do the right thing and ensure that farm workers are covered by WCB?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, my ministry is responsible for the WCB and for occupational health and safety standards, and we've been looking very closely at issues with respect to occupational health and safety, not just in industry and business in residential areas around the province but also on farms. The minister of agriculture approximately a year ago had a committee established to take a look in depth at the issues with respect to farms. It is complicated with respect to farms because they're family-owned operations. Families in the past have not asked for workers' compensation protection, but one of the things I do know from what I've looked at so far is that accident rates on farms are lower than actually . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please. [interjection] The hon. member, please.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, it's time for this government to stop looking and start acting. Unbelievable: favouring multinational agribusiness over basic rights of farm workers.

Mandela is a world champion human rights lawyer. How can this Premier, a QC and human rights advocate herself, allow discriminatory practices to continue that violate the Canadian Constitution and the Alberta bill of human rights?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is making conclusions that are actually not appropriate because some of these matters are before the court.

Also, what I will tell you is that, as the minister has said, these issues are starting to be considered. We are seeing action on this. This is not a government that's avoiding these issues, but I will tell you there are an awful lot of people that own farms in this province who are not multinational corporations, and they need to be protected as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents in Little Bow have recently received their power bills for January 2012 indicating a 30 per cent plus increase over the previous month of December. Compared to the same period last year, the increases are hard to understand when one considers the relatively mild winter that we've just had. To the Minister of Finance: when individual consumption is down, why has the kilowatt cost of power gone from 6.864 cents in December '10 to 13.178 cents per kilowatt . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjection] The hon. minister, please.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, as I explained yesterday, there were three large generating plants that were out during the month of December. I would point out to Albertans that in the month of December they could have paid 8 cents a kilowatt hour if they'd been on a fixed-rate contract. Albertans have the choice. You can have the regulated rate option, which goes up and down month by month, or you can fix in. In the month of December the fixed-rate contracts were in the 8- to 9-cent range.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. A supplementary question. Why haven't these companies at least done their scheduled maintenance during the low-cost downtime, primarily in summer, rather than having these problems in the winter months?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I want to reassure the MLA from Little Bow and Albertans that the Alberta Electric System Operator does require that maintenance be regularly scheduled in the off-seasons, which are spring and fall. But things happen. Unplanned breakdowns and unexpected outages happen. That's what happened in November, December.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Then my final question. Why can't some of the Balancing Pool monies be used to prebuy some of the blocks of energy and reapply it to the residential and small-business community rather than a minor, minor rebate that comes through, that appears to be just the interest on that money?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the money in the Balancing Pool is not guaranteed. It sits there to cover other expenses as they occur. These include expenses like site reclamation costs and power purchase agreements. It would not be sound fiscal management to use the Balancing Pool for purposes other than what it's set up for.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Poverty Reduction

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. For some reason this government strongly resists embracing and implementing a poverty reduction plan. The line from the minister is that the department has more and better programs than anywhere else. Oh, no. This government does not, not with the level of poverty that we have in a province with $100-a-barrel oil. To the Minister of Human Services: when did the government get so flush that they could afford to ignore the annual expenditure of $7 billion to $9 billion that could be implemented by adopting an integrated poverty reduction strategy?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has clearly misinterpreted what I've been saying on this. We're not at all suggesting that we should ignore the expense to our society and the impact on individuals that results from poverty. Quite the contrary. Our Premier has indicated that people are our most important resource. This government cares about people. I have been mandated to deal with the social policy framework, which will deal precisely with that issue. The poverty reduction strategy is one part of that. The homelessness strategy, which has proved so effective, is a pretty good model, and we are progressing on that as we speak.

Ms Blakeman: Actually, the municipalities are progressing on that. You guys aren't doing very much at all.

Why does the government persist in saying that their services are great? Go read your own press. Is the minister satisfied with 73,000 children living in poverty? What's best or first class about that?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, in this province we need to care about each and every one of our children. We need to plan for the success of each and every child in this province. If we want to break the poverty cycle, we have to focus on how we can make sure that every child can come to school ready to learn, that an education system helps every child achieve their potential. That's the goal of this government. That's why we're doing a comprehensive social policy framework, and that's why we'll be reviewing each and every one of the programs we have to make sure that it's achieving those results.

Ms Blakeman: Sorry. No school hunger program. Nothing.

Given that Albertans living in poverty are falling further behind the low-income cut-off than other provinces, can the minister tell us: what is this government's resistance to improving their circumstances? Clearly, those best programs are not doing it. Why can't we have an integrated poverty reduction strategy?

Mr. Hancock: The hon. member is clearly not paying attention. We're working on that integrated strategy with respect to a social policy framework that works to the success of every Albertan. If there are programs that we have now that are not working, I invite that hon. member to step forward as we review those programs to make sure that we have the programs and we use the money that we have in this province to achieve the results that Albertans want, and that's success for every child.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Urgent Care Services

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention approximately 40 per cent of visits to hospital emergency rooms are non-urgent or semi-urgent problems more appropriate for urgent care. An urgent care centre in a central Alberta rural community could help alleviate some of the wait times in the emergency room at the Red Deer regional hospital. Can the minister tell us what the difference is between services provided in an emergency room and services provided at an urgent care centre?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the difference is the following. Urgent care centres provide same-day or evening treatment for non life-threatening health issues such as broken bones and cuts and infections. Emergency rooms are intended to provide services to address life-threatening issues.

The hon. member is right. In many cases urgent care centres can save emergency department resources when they are available in the community.

Mrs. Jablonski: Also to the Minister of Health and Wellness: given that we know emergency services cannot be available in every community and Alberta's rural communities are looking for options to have their health concerns addressed on a timely basis, what other options do they have?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly a number of rural communities are asking for urgent care centres to be added to the range of health care services available in their community. They can play an important role, as I said earlier, but I think first of all we need to look at the primary health care resources that are actually available in the community because, as we've said many times in this House, it is that availability of the primary health care provider – be it a doctor, a nurse practitioner, or another member of the team, that team-based attachment – that is able to offer Albertans access to the services they need most often.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the MLA for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake has met with constituents that have concerns about their need for urgent care services in their community, how is the minister addressing these concerns?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for that constituency has in fact communicated with me about the needs expressed by his constituents. He and I will be meeting in the next couple of weeks with the mayor and members of council from that community. I hope to discuss with them their interest in an urgent care centre, but I also want to take the opportunity to look at what other health care services are available in that community and whether some of those services might meet the needs that are identified.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Childhood Hunger

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. We all know this government has 70,000 taxpayer dollars for a caucus retreat to a luxury hotel in Jasper, and we also all know that it constantly refuses to fund programs to feed the thousands of little children who sit in school hungry every day in Alberta through no fault of their own. That $70,000 could have funded a much-needed meal program at a school where Alberta's children are at a high risk of hunger. To the Minister of Education: why does this government tolerate thousands of hungry schoolchildren in Alberta?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the numbers that the member is quoting at the outset of his question are preposterous, and he will soon find out that the numbers are not reflected in truth. There are no poor children; there are poor families from which these children come. Our Minister of Human Services, as you know, has a very wide program of services that is available to children and families in need. As a matter of fact, I do speak with teachers very often, and I do realize that from time to time children do come to school . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, I think it's preposterous for this minister to say that there are no poor children or no hungry children in Alberta. That's just ridiculous. Why won't this government establish a zero-tolerance policy for childhood hunger in Alberta?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, you have just seen a prime example of what that member will do with the truth. I never said that there are no children that are not hungry or children that are not poor. I'm saying that these children come from poor families, and the Ministry of Human Services has a whole network of programs designed to support families that are in need. As a matter of fact, the minister just a few minutes ago indicated that we do have a poverty reduction strategy that leads Albertans towards education, towards employment, and there is assistance that is provided to Albertans who need . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Dr. Taft: Well, then, let's test this minister's knowledge, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister name the program in his department or anywhere in his government that provides dedicated funding to address hunger issues for schoolchildren who are at high risk of hunger? What's the name of that program, and how much does it give?

Mr. Lukaszuk: As a member of the opposition he should know that. Through the 59 offices throughout the province known as Alberta Works – supports for independence, hon. member, is the name of the program that offers a wide range of financial and other counselling benefits to assist not only the child but also the family of that child, and that system is very well integrated with Education.

Ms Blakeman: Wow. How about hypnotism? That might help.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Centre will not even let me answer that question. I know the answer; they choose not to hear it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Social Assistance Programs

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Recently released census information from Statistics Canada clearly shows that Alberta experienced a very dramatic population increase of 10.8 per cent over the last five years, virtually unprecedented. Clearly, this shows that our province continues to be a real magnet, the most popular place in all of Canada in which to live, work, and raise a family. My questions are for the Minister of Human Services: given that several of these new Albertans are likely to present some form of social assistance need, what are you doing right now to ensure those needs are being adequately met so that we're not left behind in the dark and neither are they?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, a very important question. It is exciting that people right across this continent, right around the world realize that Alberta is the best place to live, work, and raise their families, and we need them. We're going to be short 114,000 skilled people in our workforce over the next 10 years because we have 19,000 people a year retiring now that the baby boomers are reaching that age. So it's an important opportunity for us, but one of the things we have to recognize is that those people need to know how to access the services that every Albertan has access to through the programs the Minister of Education was just mentioning.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. I'd like to ask the same minister: what measurement or what trackings or what metrics do you have in place to ensure that these programs, these services are being administered properly and that the outcomes sought for are being in fact met so that we're not left in the dark again trying to choose?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really appreciate the fact that the hon. member mentioned outcomes. Since coming into this ministry, one of the consistent messages that – I've spoken with the 23 per cent of the Alberta civil service that works in this department and helps vulnerable Albertans on a daily basis. What I've said to them is: there are two parameters, the Bible and the Criminal Code. It has to be ethical and moral, and it has to be legal. Within that, rules are for when brains run out. Let's help people get success, and that's what they're trying to do each and every day.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, since we're seeing such increased numbers of people coming into our social assistance programs, aboriginal families being among them obviously, I'd like to know whether or not this minister is stepping up to the plate to ensure that adequate dollars are there to fund those increased needs and those new programs.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will have to wait, as every other member of the House has to wait, until 3:15 to see the budget and make his own judgment about adequate dollars. There are always pressures for resources. But what I can assure the hon. member is that aboriginal people in this province, whether First Nation, Métis, or Inuit, are citizens of this province and deserve the same respect as every other citizen in this province, and we need to work hard to make sure that they have the same socioeconomic status as every other Albertan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Castle special place designation was supposed to be, quote, a milestone in the preservation of Alberta's natural heritage for future generations. This description comes from this government itself 14 years ago. Fourteen years later Alberta Conservatives are trampling over the interests of thousands of Albertans in order to clear-cut this milestone of natural heritage. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: why is your government so committed to choosing the interests of industry over those of community, tourism, wildlife, and the environment?

Mr. Oberle: Well, that's an error, Mr. Speaker. My government is interested in balancing the needs of industry with those of the environment and wildlife, and we will do that in a responsible, sustainable way on all of Alberta's landscapes. There was a public land-use decision made with public input into a management plan, harvesting plan, and ongoing public input opportunities. We're always listening.

Ms Notley: Well, given that the North American Commission for Environmental Cooperation identifies the Castle as one of the most biologically significant and threatened areas on the continent and given that clear-cut logging will seriously threaten the future population of grizzly bears as well, why won't the minister stop the attack on this area and end this shameful spectre of government arresting its own citizens for the crime of protecting internationally recognized environmental treasures?

Mr. Oberle: I'll reiterate an earlier point that I made, Mr. Speaker, and that is that every square inch of this province is an environmental treasure. We provide balanced economic development, and we'll continue to do that. This industry sustains Alberta jobs, Alberta families, Alberta communities. It's done in a responsible way, with wildlife considerations taken well into hand.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that citizens participating in the South Saskatchewan regional land-use plan identified the Castle as critical to water supply and the success of tourism in the region and given that numerous polls show that the vast majority of Albertans living in neighbouring towns and cities support the need to save the Castle, why is this minister and his government so committed to ignoring the legitimate public opinion and preference of Albertans on this important issue?

Mr. Oberle: Well, that's fantastic, Mr. Speaker, that the member raises the South Saskatchewan plan because that's under development right now. If indeed there is significant input and pressure to establish protected areas in the Castle or anywhere else within that basin and . . . [interjection]

The member doesn't want to hear the answer, apparently.

If that is a recommendation of the plan, I'll be the first one there waving the flag. That's a decision made by all Albertans, and I'm willing to support it, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: No. I think, hon. minister, the member that you were responding to was listening. It was another member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Protection of Vulnerable Albertans

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 23, 2011, 35-year-old David Holmes, a resident of a Calgary group home, suffered severe burns to 20 per cent of his body while being bathed. Two and a half hours passed before he was taken to hospital, where he underwent plastic surgery numerous times before passing away five weeks later. To the Minister of Seniors. According to the investigation report David Holmes suffered similar injuries three or four years before, at which time bathing protocols were supposed to be developed but were not. Why has it taken yet another tragedy for this government to implement the same kind of changes recommended six years ago with the scalding fatality inquiry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. From all of us in this Assembly I want to acknowledge the family that went through this tragic incident. It was a difficult time in their lives and a difficult time in the lives of PDD Alberta. I have personally talked to the family. I have personally been very involved in this incident, talked with the PDD chairs in Calgary, and we have put in place procedures that will protect vulnerable Albertans in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, we're all sorry in a death such as this, especially when it's preventable.

What is the minister doing to remedy what is, after all, the root cause of such tragedies: high staff turnover due to poor training and low wages?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the procedures in place across the province with PDD regions are very intense.

There's intense training. We're dealing with vulnerable Albertans, and we're dealing with caregivers that care for their clients. They're dedicated, loving, caring people. To suggest that it's money or anything else that has caused this tragic incident is wrong. This was tragic. It was human error.

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, we need to care for the care workers. That was what the question was all about.

When will this government commit to closing the gap between contracted out agency pay and government workers?

Mr. VanderBurg: At 3:15 today, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Hydraulic Fracturing Practices

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers recently issued hydraulic fracturing operating practices for industry. My question is to the Minister of Energy. What do these practices mean for Albertans?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, we welcome these recommendations on hydraulic fracturing because we know they acknowledge what we on the government side know, that Alberta's scarcest resource is not oil. It's not gas. It's water. We will ensure that our water is protected by ensuring that we do have the best hydraulic fracturing practices available today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Energy: what is being done to deal with the expected growth in the number of hydraulic fracturing operations to ensure the safety of Albertans and our environment?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to report to the House that over the past 50 years there have been over 165,000 wells that have been fracked in Alberta, and there is not one proven incident of contamination of surface aquifers. We continue to work with the ERCB, the industry, the agricultural community, and environmental groups to ensure that we do have best practices when it comes to hydraulic fracturing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. A recent poll shows Canadians have concerns about hydraulic fracturing, with some groups calling for a moratorium on the practice. Some provinces, like Quebec, have even halted the process. Does the government have any plans to do the same here in Alberta?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, absolutely not. As I've just indicated, we have an outstanding environmental record when it comes to hydraulic fracturing, and there's no need for a moratorium. What we do need and what we have is a regulatory regime that keeps up with new technologies and best practices, and we're committed to keeping that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Provincial Budget

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government wants to raise taxes. Yesterday the Finance minister made it perfectly clear that Albertans do not need to know what taxes they'll be paying until after the next election. With record revenues nearing $40 billion, yet another year of billion-dollar deficits is expected to be announced later today. It's clear that the political zombie of Don Getty's deficit spending is back in the Premier's office. To the Finance minister: does he seriously intend to pass this budget and not tell Albertans who is going to pay for all the wasteful spending until after the next election?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, we definitely intend to pass the budget. That's about all I agree with in that particular question. We did consult with Albertans extensively, and it was Albertans who had tremendous input into crafting this budget. I just ask the member to be just a little more patient. In about another hour he'll find out whether or not his bogeyman theory of tax increases is coming to fruition.

Mr. Hinman: This is déjà vu of the superboard, not knowing the changes that are coming that are foundational.

Given that much of the free world, in this government's own words, is going through trying times because of a legacy of borrowing and deficit spending, can the Finance minister please explain to Albertans how billion-dollar deficits during record revenues is smart spending?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to address the first part of the question, which was around the Alberta Health Services Board. I was doing a little googling yesterday, and I was on the website of the Airdrie Echo. Hopefully, I'll get a chance to print off the article, and I'll table it in the House. It was an article by the member of the Legislature for Airdrie-Chestermere, who was glowingly talking about what a good decision that was, so maybe he might want to have a chat with his partner over there.

Mr. Hinman: There are many members whose eyes are being opened and they're shifting, and there will be more Albertans that will be shifting in the next election.

To the Finance minister: seeing how you don't know what smart spending is and given that your current results-based budgeting is clearly not sustainable and jeopardizes the future prosperity of our province, does the Premier truly expect Albertans to trust her and her government with the strategy of spend now and guess who is paying later?

Mr. Liepert: I think I heard the member refer to shifty. If that's what he was referring to, then I think that we know who's shifty in this particular Assembly, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Online Exploitation of Children

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Children everywhere deserve to live in a safe, secure environment, free of fear and certainly free of sexual exploitation. Unfortunately, Internet service providers, known as ISPs, currently retain Internet records for only a very short time, making it very difficult for law enforcement agencies to access those records as they fight to keep children safe from online sexual exploitation. My questions are to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. What is Alberta's position when it comes to the preservation time of these records?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This member does ask a very good question. Although it is a matter of federal jurisdiction, we would like to see in this province a 90-day retention policy. It often takes a long time to get a warrant against one of these child predators, and I thank the member for that question.

Ms Woo-Paw: As we all know, the Internet crosses geographic boundaries, with online child predators in another province or country causing harm to children and families here in Alberta. Is anything being done in that regard?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I just want to advise this member and this House and the people watching today that the Minister of Justice and Attorney General and I a couple of weeks ago attended a federal, provincial, and territorial Justice ministers' meeting in Charlottetown. I had the opportunity to meet with Vic Toews, who is the federal solicitor general, and I'm pleased to advise that he does agree with our proposal, as did every one of the Justice ministers and solicitors general across the entire country.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you. To the same minister: what about privacy issues surrounding this data retention?

Mr. Denis: The member again raises an important issue about privacy. Mr. Speaker, when we're dealing with privacy, we always need a privacy impact assessment, but I will leave that up to the federal minister to go and deal with these particular details. I want to make it clear that we are not seeking any additional powers of search and seizure. We think that the current power of getting a warrant through a judge is appropriate, but often police have difficulty obtaining this information just because of the current shorter retention period.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Twinning of Highway 63

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The throne speech points to energy as critical to our prosperity, but highway 63, the road to the land of prosperity, is an unsafe and scary two-lane road on which travelling Albertans are dying in accidents. In fact, this highway is often referred to as Slaughter Alley, the Highway of Death, or Suicide 63, not just in Alberta but across the country. To the Minister of Transportation. Where there's a will, there's a way, Minister. Will this minister provide the resources and the leadership necessary to get this deadly highway twinned before 2015 and not just as fast as possible?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, this government has been committed to highway 63 and the twinning of highway 63. We continue to put money into the budget to ensure that that completion takes place as quickly as possible. If the hon. member opposite stays for the budget, he will see exactly what's going to happen.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again: given that highway 63 carries literally the heaviest and the largest loads ever transported by highway, will this minister help workers and their families by improving road safety and focusing on actually twinning it, not just building overpasses in Fort McMurray?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we look at the highways, for sure, in Alberta, and we want to make sure that we're working towards the needs of all Albertans. This is about ensuring that we're doing the right work in the right places. We need to build the Stoney Trail. We need to build the Anthony Henday. We need to build highway 63. We also need to build the bridges and the twinning in Fort McMurray. It is about balance.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm talking about twinning this highway by 2015.

To the minister again: given that all of the PC leadership hopefuls said yes to fast-tracking the twinning of highway 63 only six short months ago and given that the Alberta Liberals say yes to fast-tracking the twinning, will the minister finally say yes to saving lives by fast-tracking this vital road to Alberta's prosperity?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not exactly sure where the hon. member is coming from because it very much sounds like he's saying yes to every highway that's necessary in Alberta without any conscience to budget. We have made a commitment to the Wood Buffalo area and to the oil sands development that highway 63 is a priority for this government, and it will remain a priority.

The Speaker: That concludes the question period, then, for today. Seventeen members were recognized today, with 102 questions and responses.

We are going to continue the Routine with introductions. We still have a very long list to deal with, so patience, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Mr. Blackett: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to stand and introduce my guests to you and through you to this House: Mr. Glen Furtado and Kelly Yuzdepski. Both are representatives of CIMA, which is a multinational engineering consulting firm. Kelly is the vice-president of transportation here in Alberta, and Glen is the regional manager for transportation in southern Alberta and B.C. Glen is also a friend, a constituent, a neighbour, and also the president of the Tuscany Community Association. Like many thousands of volunteers across our great province he makes sure that we build stronger, safer communities by giving his time selflessly. I'd like to have them both rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you two of my constituents, who I hope are still seated in the members' gallery. Jacqueline Biollo is a mother, she's an active community volunteer, she's a two-term councillor for the town of Beaumont, and she's vice-president of towns for the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association. She's also completing her MBA at this time.

Also in the members' gallery is Mr. Ken Kobly. Mr. Kobly is a former councillor and a four-term mayor for the town of Beaumont. He's currently the executive director of the Alberta Chambers of Commerce.

Mr. Speaker, I'd ask my guests to rise and receive the warm traditional greeting of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have an introduction to make. I'd like to introduce to you and to the House Mr. Graham Fletcher and Ralph Henderson. I don't know whether they have arrived or not. They are here for the budget. I'd like them to rise and receive the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a lifelong resident of Medicine Hat. Mr. Darren Hirsch is joining us today. He is a good, strong supporter of his community. As a matter of fact, he's here in his capacity of coach of a ringette team that's competing in the Alberta Winter Games. His career is long and varied. He started out as a social worker working for a social service agency in Medicine Hat. Currently he is working as an account manager with Toronto Dominion Canada Trust. He's also served for a term on Medicine Hat city council. Recently he added one more job to his resumé, from my perspective a very important one and I'm sure for members of the House. He's the newly nominated PC candidate for Medicine Hat in the next provincial election. I wish him all the very best.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a pleasure to introduce to you and through you on behalf of myself and also the hon. Member for Red Deer-North guests that are with us today. In the gallery we have Lawrence Lee, who is the chairman of the Red Deer public school board; Donna Purcell, who is the president of the Alberta Civil Trial Lawyers Association; Tim Creedon, who is the executive director of the Red Deer Chamber of Commerce; and a close personal friend of mine, Allen Evaniew from Brownlee Law. I'd ask my guests to rise and receive the recognition and welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's pretty rare that I get a constituent to come visit me, so it's a happy day for me today. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent of mine from Calgary-Foothills who has come here today to watch the proceedings in the House. Ms Robyn Moser is a realtor in Calgary and recently obtained the status of one of the top 1 per cent of realtors in all of Canada. She also reached an impressive pinnacle of obtaining over 1,000 friends on the social media Facebook, so that's pretty impressive, I think. She and her husband, Clint, are good friends of mine, and I ask that Robyn please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members today two guests who will be no stranger to many members of this Assembly, Bob and Roberta Giffin. Many members will know Mr. Giffin is the former chief of staff to Premier Lougheed. Bob and Roberta are important volunteers and advisers to me in my role as MLA for Edmonton-Rutherford. I'd like to ask them both to rise and receive the warm welcome of my colleagues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a constituent of mine from Highwood, Scott Tannas. Tannas, of course, is a well-known name in this Assembly, certainly the MLA for Highwood for many years. He was Deputy Speaker and kept your chair warm for a while, I'm sure, Mr. Speaker. Scott was and is a very successful entrepreneur in Highwood and Alberta and, indeed, western Canada. Scott and his wife were born and raised in High River – at least, I assume his wife was, but Scott was for sure – where he continues to reside with Taryn and their four children. But most importantly maybe, Scott Tannas is a candidate for the Senate whom I certainly support and encourage anyone in this House today to support. Scott, I'd like you to rise and get the usual warm welcome from this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure and an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House two very close friends of mine who are here to witness what I believe is the future direction for our province. The first is a gentleman by the name of Brad Ferguson, who is the president of Strategy Summit as well as having been very involved with our rural development fund as well as involved with the YPO, the Young Presidents' Organization, and a long list of other volunteer initiatives that he and his family have been involved with for a long, long time. He is also an avid hockey player every Friday morning, which is something I wish I still could do. He's also a very proud dad of a great family.

As well, accompanying him is another close friend of mine, a constituent, Colonel Kevin Weidlich, who has served several tours overseas, including Bosnia and Afghanistan. He has also done a lot of international trade. I've worked with him there. I had the pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to serve with Colonel Weidlich when he was a lowly second lieutenant in the Loyal Edmonton Regiment.

I am extremely pleased that they are both here and that they are in the gallery today to witness what I believe is history for Alberta. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and through you Patty Dittrick from my constituency, who is here with us today. Patty is the president of the Public School Boards' Association, and we would have to look far and wide to find anybody more dedicated or passionate in the pursuit of looking after the children of this province. Please, Patty, would you rise and receive the greetings of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you three friends and constituents I see up in the members' gallery. Rick Cherniwchan is a good friend who lives out in the Smoky Lake-Waskatenau area and is a councillor with the county of Smoky Lake, and Bob and Mabel Dick are from Athabasca. Bob is a former secretary-treasurer of the school board, and Mabel is an advocate in the community for health care and is really involved in the auxiliary at the hospital there. They're also good friends and advisers. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to introduce a constituent of mine who's here from Edmonton-Mill Creek, Mr. Major Bhullar. He's well known in our community as a very wonderful and generous human being who participates in so many community fundraisers, and for that I'd like to say thank you and welcome him here and have all of you join me in saying thank you to him as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the great privilege of introducing to you and through you to members of this Assembly a very good friend of mine and a very important member of our community, the president of Red Deer College, Joel Ward. Joel is a dynamic leader in our community with a grand vision for our college, and he's a dedicated member as well because he is working very hard to compete with me in a dance competition in honour of the Hospice gala in Red Deer. I would ask Joel to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Education, did you catch my eye?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Obviously I caught your eye. How could I not, Mr. Speaker? [interjections] You ask a question; you get an answer. This is education.

The Speaker: Do proceed with your introduction.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, to you and through you it is indeed an honour and a pleasure to introduce two gentlemen who are quite an inspiration to our immigrant community not only in Edmonton but throughout Alberta. One is Mr. Alex Davidoff. Mr. Davidoff through his project is going to enhance the skyline of Edmonton by providing what I would suggest to you are class 1 residential condos in downtown. He is here with us today in the members' gallery. With him is a dear friend and another gentleman of immigrant origin who has become very successful in the business community. If you ever are interested in East Indian food, that is the restaurant to go to. His name is Mr. Raj Saunders. I would ask both of these gentlemen to rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Okay. I'm going to try that again. Hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, you caught my eye. [interjections]

Ms Tarchuk: Oh, Mr. Speaker, I'm speechless. Thank you very much. I'm really pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature one of Banff-Cochrane's great community leaders, Mr. Ron Casey. He's sitting up in the members' gallery. Ron is currently the mayor of Canmore. He has provided years of good service to our residents. He also happens to be the recently nominated PC candidate for Banff-Cochrane, so congratulations, Ron. Please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: Have I missed anyone?

Mr. Marz: Well, Mr. Speaker, speaking of catching someone's eye, my first wife just caught my eye in the members' gallery. She has been my first wife for 46 years, and if my luck holds out, she'll be my last. I would ask my wife, Jan, to rise and receive the warm welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Alex Youth Health Bus

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's known that high-risk youth often neglect their medical needs. Troubled young people often don't have support around them to seek medical services. They may feel like there is no one to trust, or they may not even be aware of the health issue.

At Forest Lawn high school in my constituency of Calgary-Fort our Premier has recently helped launch a medical clinic on wheels dedicated to addressing the needs of youth at risk. The Alex youth health bus works as a mobile, two-room medical clinic staffed by a physician, a nurse, and a community social worker servicing eight Calgary high schools. This is unique and the first of its kind in Canada.

This is the second Alex bus. The first Alex health bus focused on giving medical care and services to the homeless in 2002. The Alex partnership with the Calgary board of education will bring medical attention and education to hundreds of youth who may have otherwise been left behind.

I applaud this initiative from the Alex, an organization which has served Calgary with effective solutions to address the health and social needs of the community for almost 40 years. I'm pleased with the government funding to these good causes, where our tax dollars are effectively used.

I also want to thank our Premier, the Deputy Premier, the Minister of Education, and the Minister of Service Alberta for being at the event in my constituency.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

GPS Tracking Devices for Disabled Children

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. GPS required. It isn't just 10-year-old Emily who requires a GPS tracking support device due to her autism and a host of other not easily observable developmental disabilities. The Alberta government, when it comes to acting in the best interests of Alberta's children, has lost its way. This government badly needs such a tracking device to find both its own heart and its head. Emily's mother, Alison, has been refused government support on numerous previous occasions, including funding for a service dog, which has provided immeasurable help to children with developmental disabilities and their families attempting to cope with tremendous disruptions in their lives.

Setting aside the heart or ethical argument, Alison has repeatedly, to denying, closed government ears, put forward the logical-head argument. Numerous professionals, including medical doctors, psychologists, educational authorities, and law enforcement officials, have noted in unanimous agreement how important the GPS device is to ensuring Emily's well-being. However, this penny-wise, pound-foolish government would rather pay out thousands of dollars denying the obvious need for keeping track of Emily through a lengthy and unnecessarily complicated and ridiculously expensive hearing process than fund this absolutely necessary life-saving tracking device.

Central to the successful resolution of this matter is how this government views Alberta's children. Are Emily and the thousands of other developmentally delayed Alberta children worthy of investment, or will the Alberta government continue to write them off as liabilities, damaged goods not worthy of expenditure? Since originally writing this appeal to both the Premier and the Minister of Human Services two weeks ago, I have not received a reply. The hearing into the necessity of a tracking device to protect Emily did not take place as the costs for the expert witnesses to testify on Emily's behalf would have had to be borne at the family's expense.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Cabinet Tour Visit to Edmonton-Calder

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is interesting, particularly to me, that the most common first name in this Assembly is Doug. There are three of us. Recently our Premier and our cabinet members, including my two namesake colleagues, came together in Edmonton-Calder to listen to the concerns of the folks at the Rosedale seniors' residence. Over 300 seniors, families, and community leaders gathered to talk to our Premier about her values, beliefs, and visions for what Alberta can and should be. Critics, those who know the price of everything and the value of nothing, were brazen to suggest that my constituents did not deserve the attention they received on the cabinet tour. From the luncheon to the question-and-answer session people were engaged and approved of the direction of this province under the stewardship of our Premier and her cabinet.

Our seniors, my seniors, who reside in any of the 10 complexes in Edmonton-Calder, expect to see their representatives. They expect to know the real intentions of the government and see proof of what we are doing. The sky is clearly not falling in Edmonton-Calder, Mr. Speaker. We're opening a 200-bed DAL facility later this month as well as 58 units of subsidized apartments. Construction is also under way for a new life-lease complex, and a new medical clinic in Kensington is advertising for 2,000 patients. That particular facility, in case you're wondering, is in fact on the north side.

This progressive, tangible benefit is a real-life example of this government listening and responding to the needs of Albertans. I would like to express my deep appreciation to our Premier, cabinet ministers, and MLA colleagues who came once again to my constituency. They shared their wisdom, friendship, and, most importantly, their time with the residents of the Rosedale seniors' residence. No one asked, "Why are you not listening?" because very clearly, Mr. Speaker, we are.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 7(7) reads: "At 3 p.m. the items in the ordinary daily Routine will be deemed to be concluded and the Speaker shall notify the Assembly."

The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this point I would ask the unanimous consent of the House to continue the Routine today, particularly in light of the fact that the private members' bills that would be debated on Monday have yet to be introduced, and we would need to continue the Routine to allow that to happen. I hope that we will have the support of the House for unanimous consent to continue the Routine.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there's a request to waive Standing Order 7(7). The request is that we waive it, continue the Routine.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: Okay. We're now going to have a recess till 3:15 so that we can prepare the Assembly for the Budget Address by the Minister of Finance.

[The Assembly adjourned from 3 p.m. to 3:15 p.m.]

Orders of the Day

Transmittal of Estimates

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier and President of Treasury Board and Enterprise.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have received certain messages from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Lieutenant Governor transmits supplementary supply estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2012, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the offices of the Legislative Assembly for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2013, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the government for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2013, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

The hon. Deputy Premier and President of Treasury Board and Enterprise.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When a second, or subsequent, set of estimates is to be tabled for a fiscal year, section 8 of the Government Accountability Act requires an update to the fiscal plan. I now wish to table the 2011-12 third-quarter fiscal update, which serves as the amended fiscal plan, and the 2011-12 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2. As I speak to you now, this fiscal update is being made public as required by section 9 of the Government Accountability Act. These supplementary estimates will provide additional spending authority to eight departments of the government and one office of the Legislative Assembly. When passed, the estimates will authorize increases of approximately $97.6 million in voted expense and $3.1 million in expense and capital investment. These estimates will also authorize transfers of $30 million of previously approved capital investment to expense.

Government Motions

4. Mr. Horner moved:
Be it resolved that the message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2011-12 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a debatable motion. Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Government Motion 4 carried]

5. Mr. Horner moved:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(2) the number of days that Committee of Supply will be called to consider the 2011-12 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund shall be one day.

The Speaker: This is not a debatable motion, hon. members, so I'll call the question.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier and President of Treasury Board and Enterprise.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Government Motion 6, agreed to by the Assembly on February 8, 2012, I wish to table the 2012-13 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates as well as the 2012-13 government estimates.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I am tabling the government business plan, titled the Government Strategic Plan, as required by section 7 of the Government Accountability Act and the ministry business plans as required by section 13 of the same act.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I now wish to table the government's Budget 2012 fiscal plan, which contains the consolidated fiscal plan as required under section 4 of the Government Accountability Act and the consolidated capital plan as required under section 7.1 of the same act.

Budget Address

7. Mr. Liepert moved:
Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure and tremendous pride that I rise in the Assembly today to deliver the 2012 Alberta budget. It is somewhat bittersweet, though, because this will be the first and only budget that I'll have the privilege of presenting in the House because like you I've chosen to not stand as a candidate in the next provincial election. So I would like to take this opportunity to thank all of my constituents of Calgary-West for their support over the past seven and a half years, including a couple who are seated in the members' gallery. It has been a great honour to represent these fine, hard-working Albertans, an honour for which I am sincerely grateful.

I also want to extend my best wishes to all of my colleagues on both sides of the House. Whether they are choosing to seek re-election or to follow another path, I wish them all the greatest of success.

In addition to being a personal milestone for me, this is also the last budget, Mr. Speaker, that will be delivered in a session over which you will preside. Let me say what a privilege it's been to serve with you. I'm sure I speak for all fellow members when I say that the Assembly will not be the same without you. [Standing ovation]

Mr. Speaker, I'd also be remiss if I didn't take this moment to recognize two special guests who are in your gallery. There are two former provincial treasurers in this Assembly, the hon. Lou Hyndman and the hon. Jim Dinning. If I could ask both of them if they would stand and be recognized by the House.

This is also the first budget, Mr. Speaker, that will be delivered under the leadership of our new Premier. I'm sure that most Albertans share my view that an awful lot has changed in the past hundred days or so since our Premier was sworn in. As Finance minister I can tell you that one thing that is definitely changing is our approach to government and how we manage Albertans' tax dollars.

One need look no further than the uncertainty that is affecting so many European countries to see that the modern global economy is not well served by old assumptions and old ways of doing things. Even the United States, long regarded as the world's greatest free-market success story, once again is nearing its debt ceiling, which is now more than $16.4 trillion. That's a number so large that it's difficult to even relate to.

Here in Canada the economic recovery is under way, but it's taking longer than the federal government had anticipated. My federal counterpart is now projecting a balanced budget in 2015-16. While the federal government's balancing act of fiscal prudence should be applauded, the fact of the matter is that under this timetable more than another $100 billion will be added to the federal debt before the books are balanced. Ontario, Canada's most populous province, is now projecting a balanced budget in 2017-18. Between now and then another $51 billion will be added to its debt burden.

Now, by comparison, Albertans can take great pride and comfort in our fiscal situation. We, of course, have no debt that is not covered by cash reserves. The losses that our province suffered during the recession have all been regained. Between 2008 and 2009 Alberta lost some 28,000 jobs, but by June of last year all of those jobs had been recovered plus additional new ones created. In fact, in the month of June last year the Alberta economy created more jobs than were created in the entire United States of America.

While unemployment is a major concern in other parts of the world, Alberta leads the nation in the creation of new jobs. Employment growth in Alberta was 3.8 per cent last year, by far the highest rate in the country. In fact, Alberta accounted for about half of all of the new jobs that were created in Canada in 2011. And while employers in other jurisdictions are contemplating layoffs or downsizing, businesses in Alberta are beginning to worry about the availability of skilled workers and potential labour shortages.

Another area that we've seen a positive turnaround in is the energy sector. I'll give you an example. Land lease sales grew by $1.2 billion in 2009-10 to a forecasted record level of $3.3 billion this year, and the budget projects that over $2 billion will be gained in land sales in 2012-13. This points to the tremendous confidence that exists in Alberta's economy.

I must say, however, that our provincial budgeting is not without its challenges. In 2008-09 natural gas revenues were $5.8 billion. In the upcoming fiscal year it's estimated that natural gas revenues will be $1.2 billion, or about one-fifth of what they were just four years ago.

Another example is the strong value of the Canadian dollar. In 2012-13 for every 1-cent increase in the exchange rate over the course of 12 months the province will receive $247 million less in revenue, and our forecast for the upcoming fiscal year is that the dollar will remain almost at par. So for us as Albertans the lesson is clear, but it's also an opportunity. We must put aside the old ways and equip our province to reach its full potential so we can succeed in the new global economy. We must protect the advantages that Albertans have worked so hard to achieve such as strong public services, low taxes, and no operating debt. We must identify what our priorities are and act boldly and decisively to make the most of our opportunities, and we must invest in our greatest resource, our people.

So it was Albertans themselves that we turned to when we began crafting this budget. Last November the President of Treasury Board and I travelled across the province, meeting with a broad cross-section of Albertans to get their input as to what were the most important things to them. Albertans also participated in this process through an online survey, polling, written submissions, and town hall meetings. What we heard from Albertans across the province was remarkably consistent and could be categorized into three priority areas: investing in families and communities, securing Alberta's economic future, and advancing world-leading resource stewardship.

Members of the Assembly will notice that instead of being organized by department, Budget 2012 is organized along these priorities. We focused on things that we need to do and not which department is doing them. Presenting our budget this way is sharing openly with Albertans what we propose to do and standing accountable for the outcomes that we achieve.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's economy is forecast to grow by a healthy 3.8 per cent this year, and that's up from 3.5 per cent in 2011. Considering the impact the global economic slowdown is having in other jurisdictions, Albertans are very fortunate indeed to be experiencing such growth. Revenues for the upcoming budget year are forecast at $40.3 billion, an increase of $1.8 billion, or about 4.6 per cent, from 2011-12. It is the first time in history that our projected revenues are to exceed $40 billion.

Now, the good news is that revenues are forecast to keep growing by an average of 10.4 per cent over the following two years, reaching $49 billion in 2014-15. Increasing revenues are mainly due to higher income tax revenue because of the strength of our economy and higher resource revenues. I need to point out for members of the Assembly, Mr. Speaker, that these higher tax revenues are the result of Albertans and Alberta corporations doing better and thus having higher taxable incomes, and not because of any tax rate increases by the province. In fact, Budget 2012 introduces no new taxes or tax rate increases.

Mr. Speaker, I also need to note that in the year 2014-15 Alberta will receive an additional billion dollars as a result of equitable health transfers from the federal government. This is an inequity that our province has been attempting to resolve for some time, and we're pleased that the federal government has moved to a health transfer model that is fair to all provinces.

Our government will impose strict fiscal discipline to ensure that its revenues and expenditures are managed responsibly beginning with Bill 1, which was introduced on Tuesday by our Premier, to mandate results-based budgeting and reviews of all government programs and services. Through this budget we will lay the groundwork for three-year funding cycles for municipalities, school boards, and postsecondary institutions. Stable and predictable funding for these priority areas will allow our partners to plan better for the future, provide better service to Albertans, and offer greater accountability to taxpayers. We'll also challenge government to find ways to achieve the outcomes that Albertans want within existing budgets. We'll scrutinize all costs and challenge automatic growth of spending, assigning funds only where they are needed.

We're forecasting a return to a balanced budget in 2013-14, as our Premier committed, with a projected surplus of nearly $1 billion. Equally important, Mr. Speaker, by 2014-15 we are forecasting a surplus of $5.2 billion. The return of surplus budgets will bring with it the opportunity to replenish our savings account, the sustainability fund. If we meet our projected surplus in 2014-15, the fund will increase to $4.8 billion by the end of that fiscal year.

Budget 2012 will see total government spending rise by a modest 3.3 per cent over last year. The increase is due almost entirely to increased spending in Albertans' priority areas of health, education, and social supports for those who need them. This increase is less than population growth plus inflation. We can afford to spend this much, Mr. Speaker, but we will also be disciplined enough to spend no more.

More than 60 per cent of the operating budget has been allocated to families and communities. This is an increase of approximately 5 per cent from last year's budget. Specifically, base funding to Alberta Health Services will increase by 6 per cent as part of our five-year funding commitment to deliver equitable health services across the province. The Department of Human Services will receive $2.5 billion.

When you dig into these numbers, you see some very real and positive outcomes for Albertans. One is a $400 increase immediately in maximum monthly payment benefits for AISH clients. Our Premier made a promise to increase the income provided to severely handicapped Albertans, and Budget 2012 honours that commitment. Budget 2012, Mr. Speaker, also honours another commitment. We will be doubling the employment income exemptions for AISH clients, allowing them to keep more of their benefits while earning income.

Budget 2012 also increases income support benefits by an average of 5 per cent. This will help about 34,000 households in which Albertans are either training or looking for work or are unable to work. At the end of the day these funding increases will make a real difference in the lives of some of our most vulnerable citizens.

Government is also investing in health care to provide better access to the health system for all Albertans, no matter where they live. Budget 2012 allocates $100 million in each of the next three years to help open a new front door to the health system in the form of family care clinics and other measures that support primary care, additions, and mental health programs. This is another promise made by our Premier and another promise kept.

We also have construction continuing this year on the central Alberta cancer centre in Red Deer, with completion expected in the spring of 2013. It will mean that people who used to have to travel to Calgary or Edmonton for radiation treatment will soon be able to get the care they need closer to home, without the added inconvenience and expense at a time when they are already dealing with tremendous challenges.

Likewise, the opening of the new south Calgary health campus this year will make an incredible difference in the lives of Albertans living in our largest city. This will not only impact those living in the south part of our fastest growing city but everyone in the region, as the facility brings new capacity to the health system and takes some of the pressure off of the existing hospitals. Now, we're calling this facility a campus because it will integrate clinical care with education and research. It will also promote wellness and good health and help patients get well in their homes by connecting them with other community services.

While building new and expanded infrastructure is key to enhancing our health care system, so too is operating it. Altogether, Alberta Health Services will receive an additional $267 million to support new staff and other costs related to running the new facilities, mainly the south Calgary hospital and the Edmonton clinic south.

This budget, Mr. Speaker, will continue to support programs to help the homeless. This is an area where we've seen tremendous progress. In the first two years of the Housing First program more than 4,800 homeless Albertans have been placed in safe and permanent homes. We expect another 1,800 Albertans to reclaim lives of dignity and independence during the upcoming year.

Budget 2012 continues to support municipalities through the flagship municipal sustainability initiative, more commonly known as MSI, with $2.8 billion allocated to this program over the next three years. Since this program began in 2007, more than 6,000 capital and operating projects have been accepted in communities all across Alberta.

For our province to continue investing in people, we must diversify our economy and grow our economic pie. This vital work begins in the education system. Budget 2012 increases operating funding for education by 3.4 per cent, to $6.2 billion. Fourteen new schools will be completed in 2012, and just think of the impact this will have on children and families in some of our fastest growing communities. For some this will be the first time that children have the opportunity to attend a neighbourhood school that is actually in their neighbourhood, Mr. Speaker.

School boards in rapidly growing communities can be assured that their growth is recognized, and boards in remote areas will see that their higher transportation costs are acknowledged. Increases in supports for inclusive education mean that children with extra educational needs will be better supported. Budget 2012, Mr. Speaker, continues last fall's $107 million funding addition to the education system. This budget also provides an additional 5.1 per cent for student transportation services, as the fuel price contingency program is funded for the full year.

I want to move on to postsecondary education because Budget 2012 invests heavily in postsecondary education. This is an area where the government has made significant investments in past years. Three major projects are expected to be completed in 2012-13: the University of Alberta's agricultural facilities in Kinsella and St. Albert, SAIT's trades and technology complex, and the phase 2 expansion of Bow Valley College. These facilities, Mr. Speaker, will train thousands of students and provide space for state-of-the-art research to occur.

Now, we're seeing the benefits from previous investments in postsecondary institutions. In the five years between 2005 and 2010 total registered apprentices in Alberta grew by 36 per cent, to more than 63,000. In fact, even though Alberta has only 11 per cent of the country's workforce, we train and hire more than 20 per cent of the country's apprentices.

Our province is a leader both in creating jobs and in training skilled workers to fill them. Budget 2012 will increase operating funding to Alberta's postsecondary institutions by 2 per cent, but it will also increase support for scientific research through an expanded tax credit and boost funding for prion and water research by $9 million to help find answers to some of the world's most pressing problems.

Securing Alberta's economic future also means investing in infrastructure that enables growth and enhances our quality of life. Over the next three years this government will invest $16.5 billion in capital infrastructure. Now, while this is a modest decrease of about 7 per cent from the last fiscal year, Alberta still spends some 38 per cent more per capita on crucial infrastructure than any other province, Mr. Speaker, with the exception this year of Newfoundland and Labrador.

For the next three years we'll see the start of construction of the new Royal Alberta Museum. We'll see continued progress on the Edmonton and Calgary ring roads. We'll work on a number of hospitals, regional health centres, and health facilities from Grande Prairie to High Prairie, from Sherwood Park to Medicine Hat, from Bow Island to Edson, and many points in between.

Now, these are all things we're doing within our own province, but in the new global economy Alberta must look far beyond its borders. We must increase our presence and our access to markets in some of the world's fastest growing economies, particularly in Asia. The urgency of this work and the risk involved when relying on a single market was underscored last month when the Keystone XL pipeline project was delayed yet again.

Budget 2012 provides support to make Alberta a preferred global supplier of not only energy but agriculture, forest products, and services. This budget invests about a billion dollars in Agriculture and Rural Development, reflecting our government's continued commitment to building and maintaining our largest renewable industry. These dollars will also ensure that we remain competitive both domestically and globally. This investment includes $133 million for industry development, food safety, and research. Budget 2012 also supports initiatives to make Alberta a global supplier of forest products and promotes projects that turn forest waste into renewable energy.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is becoming an increasingly visible player on the world stage and will take on an even greater role as we gain better market access for our products. We will build our nation's role as a global energy leader through the development of a Canadian energy strategy. We do this knowing that taking these steps will put our energy production practices and environmental stewardship under even greater scrutiny, but we're not afraid of such scrutiny. We welcome it along with the opportunity to advance the world-leading resource stewardship that was developed and is practised right here in Alberta.

But saying that, we also recognize that we must continually improve our environmental performance and monitoring in a way that is credible, comprehensive, and transparent. Budget 2012 will increase funding for environmental monitoring related to oil sands development in the oil sands region. It also allocates $540 million in GreenTRIP funding to advance Alberta's leadership in reducing greenhouse gas emissions associated with transportation. This funding also helps make public transit more accessible and better connects Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, our government was able to make these investments because of the actions we took over the years to put Alberta on a sound financial footing. Our province worked hard to pay off its accumulated debt and build up the sustainability fund to use in difficult times. So when the recession struck and other jurisdictions were borrowing money to finance economic stimulus programs, Alberta was able to maintain its programs without cutbacks, without raising taxes, and without piling on new debt for operations. While other provinces were going deeper and deeper into debt, Alberta was embarking on one of the largest infrastructure programs in our province's history. Not only did this initiative ensure that 160,000 Albertans were able to keep working and supporting their families, but we also now have the most efficient systems of roads and highways, the most modern schools for our children, the most advanced health facilities, and the best libraries and cultural facilities for all our citizens. This is a lasting legacy for future generations of Albertans.

I'd just like to take a moment, Mr. Speaker, and say that when it comes to modern infrastructure, Albertans can thank our former Premier, the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, for his leadership. I know all Albertans recognize and appreciate what has taken place in this province over the past half decade.

Mr. Speaker, the approach our province took was the right one for the times. But as the saying goes, the times are a-changin'. Now we need to consider whether our approach needs to change also and whether the fiscal framework we have now is the right one for the future.

During her leadership campaign our Premier raised some important questions, questions we also heard from Albertans in our budget consultations and during the recent cabinet tour, questions like: are we using the best revenue mix to fund the programs that we need? Are we making the wisest spending decisions? Should we be saving more or saving differently? These are questions we need to consider as a province, recognizing that Alberta has unique challenges when it comes to budgeting.

Our province is blessed with abundant natural resources, and in good times those resources translate into abundant revenues. There have been years when Alberta surpluses have been greater than the entire operating budget of some Canadian provinces, but there have also been other years where resource revenues are lower, and we have difficult decisions to make. Now Albertans are telling us that some things, like health and education, are too important to ride the rollercoaster of volatile resource revenues. They're asking if we can do better, and I say today: we can.

We need to take a look at our fiscal framework. We need to take a look at where and how we collect revenues, where and how we spend, and where and how we save. These are the foundations of our fiscal framework. As His Honour said when he delivered the Speech from the Throne two days ago, we need to change this foundation to put our province on a solid footing for the future. So over the next year our government will open the discussion with Albertans on how best to do this. Over the coming years we'll lead a shift towards a new fiscal framework that will serve Albertans better.

Now, the first challenge will be building a more predictable, sustainable revenue base to support ongoing programs. For too long we've used our resource revenues to pay for our day-to-day expenses. These revenues rise and fall with global economic fluctuations, fluctuations that we cannot predict and we sure can't control. It's not wise to rely on such a volatile revenue base to pay for essential services that we need and use every day, nor is it fair to our children and grandchildren to spend our whole inheritance of natural resource revenues, because it also belongs to them.

I believe Albertans understand that we can't continue to rely on energy revenues in the same way in the future that we have in the past. They know that we must progressively become less reliant on these revenues to fund ongoing programs, and they also know that as Albertans we enjoy the lowest overall tax regime among all the provinces with a personal tax rate of 10 per cent and the highest personal exemptions in the country. What this does is keep more money in Albertans' pockets.

When you compare Alberta to other provinces, Albertans pay at least $11 billion less annually in personal and corporate tax, and that will continue to be the case. Alberta will maintain the lowest overall corporate and small-business tax burden in Canada, and Budget 2012 makes no changes to Alberta's tax structure or rates. We will continue to have, Mr. Speaker, the lowest fuel tax, no payroll tax, no capital tax, and, yes, no sales tax.

As we move away from volatile resource revenues to fund ongoing programs and move toward a more sustainable revenue base, we know that a discussion on taxes must lie in Alberta's future. This discussion will involve all Albertans and all sectors of the Alberta economy, and it will be based on the premise that while the tax system may change, one thing that must not change is Alberta's tax advantage. Alberta's low tax regime is one of the things that sets our province apart, and it gives us a competitive edge that must be preserved.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, putting a budget together is about more than dollars and cents. It's about ensuring that government is supporting the outcomes that Albertans want to achieve for themselves and their families. It's about investing in people and in the things that are important to Albertans such as health, education, jobs, services for seniors and the vulnerable, infrastructure, and our children's future. It's about protecting the advantages Albertans have worked so hard to build, not only first-rate services and modern infrastructure but also a clean balance sheet and low taxes. It's about keeping the commitments our Premier and our government have made. Budget 2012 does all of those things.

It invests in Alberta's priorities, our people, while returning to a balanced budget next year without raising taxes. This budget also signals important work that we must do to move Alberta towards a new fiscal framework, one that will increase stability and predictability in government revenues and bring spending under more scrutiny and greater discipline than ever before.

With Alberta's economy heating up and the province poised to return to surpluses, this is the time to ensure that government is providing the right services in the most efficient way possible while putting our long-term revenues and savings strategies on sounder footing. This is the budget which is the start of what we want to accomplish in the coming three years and what we will strive to achieve over the next 10 years. The steps that we take today will bring us closer to our goals.

Mr. Speaker, I said at the outset of my remarks that presenting this budget was a milestone for me, and indeed it is. I believe it's also a milestone for our province as we take those first steps to building a new fiscal foundation, one that protects our hard-won advantages while arming Alberta for success in the new global economy and helping us reach our full potential.

Our government worked very hard to build this budget based on what we've heard from Albertans. I believe it's the right budget for Alberta today. It is a responsible budget. Presenting it to this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, has been an honour and a privilege, and I look forward to debating it in the coming days.

Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the Minister of Finance for presenting the budget. We shall miss him. The Official Opposition and other opposition parties are very much looking forward to the debate. On behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition I would beg leave to adjourn the debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to congratulate the hon. Minister of Finance on a wonderful budget, and I would move that the Assembly do now adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on February 13.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:55 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, February 13, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. At the beginning of this week we ask for renewed strength in the awareness of our duty and privilege as members of the Legislature. We ask for the protection of this Assembly and also the province we are elected to serve. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we will now deal with the singing of our national anthem. I'm going to call on Mr. Paul Lorieau, who is in the Speaker's gallery, to lead us, and I would ask that all participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Water.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you a group of outstanding, hard-working, and dedicated staff members from our Department of Environment and Water. Today we have over 20 public service employees from Alberta Environment and Water offices across our province. I'm sure that my colleagues feel the same when I thank you all for joining us and for the outstanding work you do each and every day for Albertans. They're in the members' gallery. I would ask them to please rise and receive the acknowledgement of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a huge honour for me to introduce to you and through you to all members today a large group of people from the Terrace Ridge school in Lacombe. There are 47 visitors, 37 bright young students in grade 6 and a number of teachers and parent helpers that have come along with them. The teachers are Mrs. Pat Jenkins, Mrs. Billie Lafleche, Mr. Brent Buchanan, and Mrs. Letha Maddox, and the parent helpers are Mr. Randy Hofer, Mr. Geoffrey Thomson, Mr. Brent Bailey, Mrs. Lisa Mydonick, Mrs. Sandy Toepfer, and Mrs. Maureen Cruickshank. These bright young students have been in the Legislature this morning and this afternoon and have toured around. I hope that they've enjoyed their visit, of course. I want to thank the large number of parents and helpers for taking this time to show interest in their students' education and also in our democracy at work here. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. I believe they're in the public gallery.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great deal of pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you a young man that's very special to me. He's my oldest grandson, Ethan Marz, from the Terrace Ridge school in Lacombe. He's been chosen today to represent his class in the mock parliament as the Premier. My advice to him today: I don't know what policies he's going to be introducing later on, but hopefully they're good, sound, Conservative policies. If he would rise in the public gallery and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to rise on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of students and their teacher and accompanying parent from St. Stanislaus school in the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. They are attending the School at the Legislature this week, and they're seated in the members' gallery. Accompanying the 18 students is their teacher Jennifer Steedsman and parent volunteer Angela Armstrong. I'd ask that the students, teacher, and parent from St. Stanislaus school please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you several political science students from King's University College in Edmonton. They are led by their professor Dr. Michael DeMoor and are part of a bright, enthusiastic class of aspiring politicians. The students visiting today are Josh Culling, Simon Meijers, Terri McCausland, Elvis Moturi, and Lenn Wheatley. These students are here to tour the Legislature Building and observe the members in the House as they learn more about our political traditions and processes in our province. The guests are seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very successful and talented young Albertan, Amanda Hughes from Calmar. Amanda was chosen from 123 of the province's top 4-H members to receive the Alberta 4-H program's most prestigious award, the Premier's award. Amanda is currently in her 12th year as a member of the Calmar Heart of the Country 4-H Club and has held executive positions such as president, secretary, treasurer, and club reporter. She is currently a third-year education student at the University of Alberta and is still very active in her 4-H career, earning top honours at the provincial 4-H Horse Classic in 2010, and has attended international events as a representative of Alberta 4-H. Her exceptional talents have earned her this great honour. During this year she will represent youth and 4-H at various events around the province. Amanda is visiting us today and meeting with the Premier and her local MLA, the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mr. Speaker, Amanda is seated in the members' gallery with her parents, Michael and Tracy, and her sisters, Holly and Lauren. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today in the House to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Mr. Clif Chapman, who is seated in your gallery. I met Clif in Lougheed at Oktoberfest. He's one of the most remarkable Albertans I've encountered in my life. He worked as a roughneck in the oil and gas fields in Viking and Sundre and all over western Alberta. He was employed as a locomotive fireman, shovelling coal on steam locomotives in Hanna in the early 1950s. He continued to work on the railway and worked at virtually every terminal west of Hanna all the way to Vancouver before finally, after being qualified as a locomotive engineer, he changed to a career with the Edmonton Police Service in 1960. He had 29 years of service as a sworn member of the Edmonton Police Service, then retired and rejoined as a civilian member. He has over 50 years of dedicated service with the Edmonton Police Service, which is a record I think we would be hard-pressed to find duplicated in pretty much any police service in this country.

He also is no stranger to this House as he worked as a security member in the Legislative Assembly for nine years during the 1990s. Lastly, the only thing he really wanted me to point out was that he is married to the best Peruvian cook in the world. Mr. Speaker, I'd ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am extremely honoured to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a number of members of the Alberta Funeral Service Association. They are seated today in the public gallery, and they have come to hear the response from the government to a series of questions that I'm going to put forward on their behalf. Joining us today are Mitch Thomson, the president of the Alberta Funeral Service Association; Sheila Van Alstyne, the vice-president of AFSA; Gary Lynn, a funeral director and board member from Edmonton; Gerry Connelly, a funeral business owner and member of AFSA from Edmonton; Jerry Smolyk, a funeral business owner and member of AFSA from Edmonton; and Deanna Schroeder, the executive administrator of the Alberta Funeral Service Association. Please join me in welcoming these wonderful members who contribute so much to our province. Thank you for coming.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members Len Skowronski, leader of the Alberta Social Credit Party. Len and the Sacred picketers outside are here today because they are very concerned about the billions of dollars Albertans are losing in added value from our oil sands by exporting bitumen instead of synthetic crude oil. They hope to encourage the government to legislate a policy that would require all bitumen produced from our oil sands to be upgraded to synthetic crude oil in Alberta. Please stand, Len, and receive the greetings of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guests from the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees and their Committee on Political Action. AUPE is Alberta's largest union and represents nearly 80,000 hard-working Albertans. The Alberta NDP is proud to stand with AUPE members in protecting and improving public services that benefit all Albertans. I would now like to ask my guests to rise as I call their names and to remain standing and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: Glen Scott, Kendra Ness, Christina Sefton, Bill Piggott, Gerald Forbes, Rod Auramenko, Henry Wakoluk, Heather Stocking, and Andrew Hanon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly eight guests here in recognition of the silver jubilee of Glengarry elementary school's Arabic bilingual program. I've visited with the administration, teachers, staff, and students at this school on numerous occasions, and the learning environment is filled with tremendous commitment and strong, unwavering support for student success.

My guests from the school are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise as I mention their names: Randy Billey, principal of Glengarry elementary school; Hassan Seifeddine, assistant principal, Glengarry elementary school; Taher Shayeb, teacher for grades 5 and 6; Houda Trabelsi, school council chair; Mazina Chamseddine, school council member; and two grade 6 students from the school who will be the next generation of leaders, for sure. They include Rana Habbab and Ibrahim Keshta. I also have with us this afternoon Yazan Haymour, president of the Canadian Arab Friendship Association.

Mr. Speaker, these representatives joining us today demonstrate the foundational support and collaboration that is central to the successful longevity of Glengarry school's Arabic bilingual program. I would now ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of the Legislative Assembly a gentleman who is a resident of northeast Edmonton, Wayne Sorenson. Wayne worked for the transportation and utilities department for 29 and a half years with the provincial government. During that time he was employed as a structural draftsman, chief draftsman, and also an occupational health and safety officer. His duties included drafting the design of bridges, overpasses, and highways as well as contract preparation for the tendering process. As an occupational health and safety officer he was involved in the development and delivery of training programs and conducted accident investigations, safety audits, and safety inspections, which contributed to the overall accident reduction for the department.

I will be tabling a document on behalf of Mr. Sorenson later on in the Routine. He is very concerned about the Alberta public service pension plans. He's now in the public gallery. I would ask him – he has already risen – to please receive the warm, traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce Mr. Brian Heidecker, who's joining us today. Brian has a distinguished career as a rancher with Drylander Ranch. More recently he has served as the chairman of the board of governors at the University of Alberta. He's had numerous other public service commitments, and most recently he's been the chairman of the critical transmission infrastructure review committee, that will be delivering its report later this afternoon. Will everyone please welcome Brian.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Glengarry Elementary School Arabic Bilingual Program Silver Jubilee

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege to rise today in recognition of the silver jubilee of Glengarry elementary school's Arabic bilingual program in Edmonton public schools. Over 25 years ago Glengarry elementary school responded to the needs of their students and community and implemented an innovative Arabic bilingual program. In doing so, Glengarry school became the first to offer Arabic bilingual programming in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, Glengarry school embraces and emulates the Edmonton public school's mission statement by providing students with alternative paths to achieve academic and personal success. The Glengarry school Arabic bilingual program opened with an enrolment of 32 kindergarten and grade 1 students. Today it has grown into a partial immersion program serving 587 Glengarry kindergarten to grade 6 students.

Students receive 35 per cent of their programming in Arabic, including Arabic language arts, health, physical education, art, and music. The remaining 65 per cent of instruction is in English and covers the following subjects: English language arts, mathematics, social studies, science, and computer studies.

Mr. Speaker, no previous knowledge of Arabic is required for children entering the Arabic bilingual program in kindergarten or grade 1. This provides a unique opportunity for children from diverse backgrounds to learn Arabic.

Glengarry school's Arabic bilingual program is strongly supported by a community of children, educators, parents, community, businesses, and organizations. Through the long-standing efforts of a supportive school council, a dynamic relationship with the Canadian Arab Friendship Association, and the continued and expanding support of Edmonton public schools Glengarry school strives for best practices in its interactive approach to teaching and student learning.

Without question, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to commend and congratulate Glengarry elementary school and school community for all their partners and their longevity of success. They have a vision and have established the Arabic bilingual program, and I wish them continued success.

Assalamu Alaikum. Peace be with you.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's fudge-it budget inflates future revenues and blatantly ignores threats to Alberta's economy: the European debt crisis, continuing global economic uncertainty, the rising Canadian dollar, the slowdown in countries like India and China. Given that the Premier warned about these threats last fall and repeated them in the government's recent fiscal plan, will the Premier tell us why the government is now inflating estimates of real growth in Alberta's GDP, personal income, and corporate profits instead of using the average of private forecasts?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this is an exciting time for Alberta. You know what? It's not just the government of Alberta that thinks that. It's the Toronto-Dominion Bank. It's the Royal Bank of Canada. It's people that look at these issues every day and decide what the future of our country and the future of our province will be. They are as optimistic about the future of Alberta as we are, and it's unfortunate the opposition doesn't feel the same way.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, we're all optimistic about Alberta for the future. Absolutely. We're just responsible about it. Given that the elephant in the room is a structural deficit that this Premier is afraid to talk about before an election, why not say yes to closing the spending gap with a fair tax that allows us to balance the budget and start saving some of our resource revenue for our kids?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I will always say yes to exactly what we have now, but I will say no to the hon. member's proposals for tax increases. I will say that today, and I will say it tomorrow.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a Premier and a party that has been saying no to the people and continues to say no.

Given that the natural resource revenues are volatile at the best of times and especially volatile in times of international economic instability, can the Premier tell Albertans if it's fundamentally right to blow 100 per cent of our resource heritage fund and stability fund revenue just to pay for the daily bills? Is it right, Premier?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, what's been wonderful in the past 40 years in this province is that we've had a government that's understood the ups and downs of economic change. We actually have a sustainability fund that's in place to deal with exactly the circumstances that we're facing right now. I'm pretty excited, as are Albertans, that we've been able to forecast that this is the last year we'll need to deal with that. We'll still have a balance in the sustainability fund, and that's good fiscal management on behalf of Albertans.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electricity Prices

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What's wonderful is that hard-working Albertans work hard each and every day despite what this government does to them. On Thursday the Minister of Energy's far-from-truthful defence of electricity deregulation cited debt held by publicly owned power companies such as Hydro-Québec. The fact is that Hydro-Québec has assets $27 billion greater than its debt, and it pays the Quebec government nearly $2 billion in dividends. That's some debt. How does the Premier plan to discipline the minister for his highly creative response in this House?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I think anybody who can do simple math can take the population of Quebec, divide $32 billion by their population, and figure out how much their beautiful electricity prices are helping them. I'll give you one other example. In Ontario today the government is paying 80 cents a kilowatt hour and selling it for 7 cents. Who makes up the difference? Oh, I think that would be the consumer.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, there's no doubt why we have a deficit with oil at a hundred bucks a barrel. This government can't do math.

Given that the facts simply do not support this government's headlong dive into electricity deregulation, does the Premier have an honest answer – an honest answer – as to why this government ignores the fact that deregulation has cost Albertans billions and gives them the highest utility rates in the nation?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, this is into the second week now of these folks on the other side trying to make short-term political hay at the expense of Alberta consumers. I'm here to tell you today that you can pick up the phone, call 11 different providers, and if you're on the regulated rate option, decrease your costs by 42 per cent. Today. Pick up the phone and do it. We have set options out there to help consumers. They're out here just trying to stir up trouble.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Talk about short-term political hay. That's exactly what they're trying to do before an election.

Given that there is no correlation between the low cost of generating electricity in Alberta and the sky-high prices that deregulation has forced upon us, will the Premier just admit that the pricing system for electricity is stacked heavily in favour of producers at the expense of the vulnerable, our seniors, hard-working families, and businesses? Come on, Premier.

Dr. Morton: I will say this very, very slowly for the benefit of the Leader of the Opposition. There are 11 different providers, all of them having a contract at 8 to 9 cents which can be cancelled in a 30- to 45-day period if you don't like it. You pick up the phone today, and you reduce your rates by 42 per cent.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Provincially Contracted Funeral Services

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The funeral directors' association of Alberta has notified the government of their intention to end their contract for funeral services until dignity and respect can be restored for indigent persons, AISH recipients, and children who die in government care. My question is to the Minister of Human Services. How does the minister respond to grieving family members whose child has died while in government care and must be buried in an adult casket because the government will not pay for a child-sized casket? How is that for putting children first?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, if that situation happens, people can certainly let me know. I'm not aware of that happening, and I would want every Albertan who's in that circumstance to be treated with dignity. We are in discussions with the Funeral Service Association with respect to a new contract. We received a notice on January 30 that the existing contract would be terminated. There are normal negotiating processes that are going on. I've instructed the people in my department who are dealing with it that Albertans deserve dignity both in life and in death.

Ms Blakeman: I've clearly hit a nerve, seeing as the government has known about this for years and has done nothing in reacting to them.

To the same minister: why does the government force Jews, Sikhs, Hindus, and others to be embalmed, which is against the tenets of their faith, unless a family member with legal authority can be found fast enough to sign documentation for a cremation? Why would you do this in this diverse Alberta?

Mr. Hancock: Why indeed, Mr. Speaker? Indeed, we shouldn't be doing that. We should be able to offer people the opportunity to bury their loved ones in the manner, style, and custom in which they practise. That would be my and this government's vision going forward.

Ms Blakeman: This is the same government that has refused to speak to these people for years.

Back to the same minister: why does the government squeeze out the last, final humiliation by refusing a small honorarium for religious leaders to say a few words over the grave?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, what we're seeing here is the hon. member trying to negotiate a contract on the floor of the Legislature. We're not going to be negotiating the contract on the floor of the Legislature. What we are going to be doing is talking with funeral service providers through their association and directly to try and negotiate a new contract which helps families in their time of loss deal with their bereavement in dignity. We will be doing that, and I will ensure we'll be doing that.

Provincial Tax Policy

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, a National Post editorial said it best about this Premier's new budget. It read: Alberta introduces its first NDP budget. That's unfair to the NDP. This is the fifth straight budget deficit despite near-record resource revenues. It relies on record revenue increases just to balance the budget, and it mentions a review of taxation levels after the next election so that we can pay for all of this new spending. Premier, yes or no? Will you commit that you will not raise taxes should you be re-elected unless you first tell Albertans what those increases will be before they go to the polls?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this is now, I think, day five or six of the fearmongering with respect to taxes. I'm proud of the budget that we presented on Thursday. I'm looking forward to debating it in the House. What I've said all along and what my colleagues have said all along is that this is a budget that represents the values, the hopes, and the aspirations of Albertans. As we move ahead, I am fully confident that once we pass this budget, knowing full well that there is a projected surplus, it will be very clear to Albertans what our fiscal plan is for the next two years.

Mr. Anderson: You know what? Albertans are pretty tired of your fulsome discussions, which include closed-door budget consultations and endless meetings with lobbyists and special interest groups. Quit cowering in the corner and answer the question, Premier. Tell us how much you're going to raise taxes to cover your addiction to spending. If you're not going to do it, say it here and now: in the next four years you're not going to raise taxes no matter what. Say it right now. Put it on the record.

Ms Redford: There have been a lot of things that I've been accused of in my life, but I'll tell you that one of them is never going to be cowering to that party. Mr. Speaker, this is a budget that I know has the confidence of Albertans. It's reflecting what Albertans want for the future. I know what Albertans expect in terms of what government needs to present. We've presented it, Albertans will decide, and I'm looking forward to that discussion.

Mr. Anderson: Still no answer, Mr. Speaker. It's incredible. I've got to give it to the Liberals and NDP: at least they're honest about the fact they're going to raise taxes. But perhaps you know that being honest will lose you the election.

Last question. The Wildrose is willing to sign a no new tax pledge to Albertans that says that we will not support any new tax increases during the next term. Will you also sign this pledge, Premier, or will you waffle and will you avoid and will you deflect talking about your postelection plans to raise taxes on Albertans? Just say you're not going to raise taxes. It's so easy. Just say it.

Ms Redford: The fact about this budget is that it sets out a fiscal framework with a surplus. I don't know about how they do math, Mr. Speaker, but I don't see why, when you have a surplus, anyone would be contemplating new taxes. I would say that it's quite interesting to look at some of the things that this hon. member is suggesting we do in the next year, which is slow down the construction of the south Calgary hospital, not build 14 new schools, and not build the Fort Saskatchewan community hospital.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Recently Hydro-Québec released its annual report comparing electricity rates in North American cities. Based on prices in March 2011, it appears that the highest electricity rates for residential customers in Canada and amongst the highest rates in North America, comparable only to New York City, are in Edmonton and Calgary. I would like to ask the Premier: why are Albertans being asked to pay the highest electricity prices in the entire country and, in fact, higher than most American cities as well?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure it would shock the leader of the fourth party to learn that people in Quebec calculate average electricity prices in a way that suits the Quebec government. There are two other studies out there, one from outside of Canada, from London, and another one from Manitoba, that show that Alberta is very much in the middle of the pack when you look at electricity prices for nonhydro jurisdictions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the dissembling of this Energy minister continues unabated. Quebec counts everything, including all the middlemen charges, transmission charges, and so on that the Alberta government has imposed. Given that power rates were only 7 cents a kilowatt hour at that time and they're now 15 – the power rates have increased even far, far beyond what they were 10 months ago – what is the Energy minister or the Premier going to do about it?

Dr. Morton: I'm happy to repeat because, obviously, they're having some hearing problems over there. The MLAs on this side of the House have gone out and spoken to their constituents and pointed out that all you have to do is pick up the phone, call one of 11 different providers that have fixed contracts, and you can reduce your electricity costs starting tomorrow by 42 per cent.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. This minister is going to give Albertans the runaround. We've set up a phone number so that people can fax their power bills. Given that we've already received power bills from a number of people who faxed them to 780.415.0701 or e-mailed them to NDP@assembly.ab.ca and we're expecting many more, what does this minister have to say to the angry customers who are paying way too much for their power rates?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I didn't exactly hear the question, but that sounded more like a campaign speech. For Albertans who are listening I would say that there is a good place to go for information, and that's the Utilities Consumer Advocate website. It lists all of the different companies and all of the different programs where you can reduce your electricity price by 42 per cent by picking up the phone tomorrow.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Provincial Budget

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think you would find some irony in the fact that I'm asking a question on the same day as the question on funeral directors.

Mr. Speaker, the government has come up with a new idea; Lord, aren't we all good for new ideas? They've got a new way to do a budget. They're going to be very careful, and they're going to spend money very carefully, wisely, and ensure that Albertans receive value for the money. I think the question that Albertans want to ask the President of the Treasury Board is: what were you doing for the last eight years in government if it wasn't spending Alberta's money wisely?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's obvious that the hon. member has taken some lessons from the hon. members from last week's questions in terms of suggesting that we have not been doing value reviews. In fact, as part of Treasury Board, previously under the hon. member's tutelage, the value reviews that we have been undergoing over the last several years have created over a billion dollars' worth of efficiencies and savings within the government. If the hon. members would actually read the budgets, they would see that.

Mr. Snelgrove: As a matter of fact, the president is exactly correct. Over the last three years it's closer to a billion point five. So my question is: is this business as usual, or have you established some new, magical way to cut money out of the civil service, after you've given them a 7 per cent operational increase, that's going to be more efficient?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not as short sighted as that. It's essentially taking the value reviews that we've been doing over the past several years – and I stand corrected by the previous President of the Treasury Board: over a billion and a half dollars' worth of value reviews. But what we weren't doing was actually talking to Albertans about what it is they wanted us to deliver and whether or not we're doing that in an efficient way and then pulling it entirely back and building it from the ground up. I happen to know that the hon. member would have liked to have done that in his tenure.

Mr. Snelgrove: I do apologize, Mr. Speaker; I wasn't able to hear most of the answer. The simple fact is that we think we determined what priority changes there have been in the government, and it's directly related to membership sales. I want to know how they're going to sustain 7 per cent operational spending increases in the current economic environment.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, what has happened in this province in the past six months is that we have a new cabinet and a new government that is going to manage government differently. While there may have been savings in the past years of $1.5 billion, we are committed to changing the budgeting process to go to a results-based system that truly reflects the value of services that Alberta is delivering. That is what Albertans have told us they want to have. We are going to signal that change, and we are going to deliver on that change.

Education Funding

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of this school year this province has 450 fewer teaching positions despite increases to our population. Seemingly in denial, this government produced a budget or, more aptly, a fudge-it budget based on pie-in-the-sky numbers and unrealistic targets; case in point, the proposed numbers the Alberta teachers are supposed to agree on in salaries. To the Minister of Education: was this minister checked into the Fantasyland Hotel when he budgeted that teachers will accept a 1 per cent salary increase?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, this member is presuming the outcome of a tripartite negotiation that is ongoing and will be going on, I imagine, for a while to come. The fact of the matter is that the Education budget has been increased from $6.8 billion to $7.1 billion over the next three years. The Education budget has been increasing an average of 7 per cent per year for the last 10 years. Teachers and the school boards and this government will be negotiating a salary that is reflective of the work that happens in the classroom.

Mr. Hehr: So given that the government has only budgeted a 1 per cent instructional grant for the upcoming school year, again not meeting the 2.5 per cent increase in inflation being projected, my question for the minister is: does he agree that the only thing predictable and sustainable about his budget is cuts to our education program?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I would say that the only thing that's predictable is this member's fearmongering.

As a matter of fact, teachers and students and parents have been asking for a predictable and sustainable budget. They have received one. For the first time in the history of this province teachers and parents know what their budget will be for the next three years. There was an opportunity to negotiate a contract before this budget was drafted; unfortunately, parties did not come to an agreement. The budget had to be tabled, and there are very reasonable numbers based on predictions and trends from throughout . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Hehr: By ignoring the facts, basic economics, and inflation rates, will this minister admit that this budget will produce a shortfall of teachers, a shortfall of student support, and workplace instability?

Mr. Lukaszuk: I will not say that, but what I will tell you is that this government will continue to be committed to one of the top three education systems in the world, as we are known for. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we will make sure that students in every classroom receive that world-class education. I can tell you further that we will not be negotiating contracts with teachers on the floor of this Legislature because we know that we have partners in education and school boards and teachers and parents and this government that will negotiate a contract. [interjections]

The Speaker: Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday there still is a need for civility.

Student Aid Program

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the cost of postsecondary education and training in Alberta is causing students to incur huge debt loads that may deter a lot of them from pursuing further education. Meanwhile, students that are long past the age of majority have been denied financial assistance because of their parents' income. All of my questions are for the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. When will the minister bring relief to those students who are hindered by their finances from achieving their educational goals?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the member for asking that question and also the Member for Calgary-Mackay for actually bringing it up last year in the House. We have been looking at student finances as an issue and an impediment to some students. In fact, the Premier asked us to review this and promised to review this. I'm happy to tell you that today we announced significant changes around student finances that will make access to student loans easier. This is a promise made, a promise kept.

Dr. Brown: What is the minister doing to ensure that potential students who may not be able to rely on their parents or family for assistance have recourse to the student aid program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate that. The old student loan system was extremely difficult to navigate. It was complex, so we've simplified it. We are now having a flat rate of $1,500 assumed earnings by a student so that they don't have to try to calculate their part-time earnings, their parents' incomes are not taken into consideration when they apply for student loans, and their RRSP savings are not considered when we're considering student loans. So all students in Alberta should have access to student loans if they're needed.

Dr. Brown: Well, I thank the minister for that. It's very good news. Instead of searching for essential workers from abroad to work in Alberta, what's the minister doing to train and retrain our essential workers who may live and work here in Alberta and want to continue doing so?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my mandate letter from the Premier she's asked me to work very closely with rural, remote, and aboriginal students to try to increase the numbers of students that are attending postsecondary. So we're going to work very closely with all of those groups. We're going to utilize smoother financial application rules to try to entice more students to get involved in postsecondary, and we're going to work closely with Education to streamline that process as students move from high school into the postsecondary system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Physician Services Agreement

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Physicians in the province have been without a contract since March 31, 2011. In her January letter to members of the Medical Association President Dr. Linda Slocombe explained the importance of the eight-year master agreement in establishing a relationship between Alberta Health, Alberta Health Services, and the physicians as one step "to rebuild trust." To the minister: why did last week's budget leave no room for a renegotiated contract?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Budget 2012 includes provision for physician services and development. It does not include provision for a new agreement for the specific reason that we have not yet reached an agreement.

Dr. Swann: Or is it punishment for not signing a contract yet, Mr. Speaker?

With no commitment to secure funding for primary care networks, only new family care clinics, whatever those are, what is it supposed to mean for the much-needed development of primary care networks? Is this supposed to rebuild trust?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, fortunately, I am in regular communication with Dr. Slocombe, the president of the Alberta Medical Association, and I can tell you that what neither she nor I would want to happen is to have a negotiation of this agreement on the floor of this House. What we are doing is discussing ways that we can build on the success of primary care networks and many other initiatives that flow out of the previous eight-year agreement. The discussions are productive, they're ongoing, and I'm very optimistic that we'll have an agreement.

Dr. Swann: Well, it's very disappointing, Mr. Speaker, for those on the front lines of primary care networks that this government has made no commitment to primary care network increases.

The new internal hotline for doctors to report intimidation or abuse shows that this government is desperately trying to improve patient care a baby step at a time. Why does the government continue to treat front-line health workers with so little respect?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. The physician hotline that was reported on today in the media is, I think, a very clear demonstration of the commitment of not only this government but Alberta Health Services to supporting physicians and indeed to supporting all health professionals in advocating on behalf of their patients. To suggest that we would entertain a discussion about the detailed negotiations with the AMA on the floor of this House simply speaks to, if I may say, the naïveté of the questioner.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Expanded Role for Pharmacists

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today the Minister of Health and Wellness made three announcements that will change the way that pharmacy is done in Alberta. Starting July 1 this year, Alberta pharmacists will be reimbursed for renewing prescriptions, government will pay less for generic drugs, and a grant will be offered to pharmacies in small communities to help them adjust to lower generic prices. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. I thought pharmacists could already renew prescriptions in Alberta. What's different about this plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, one of the differences is that pharmacists will now be paid in order to renew prescriptions. As the hon. member may know, previously pharmacists relied solely on dispensing fees. This new initiative recognizes the role of the pharmacist as a full partner in the delivery of primary health care. It compensates pharmacists for the exercise of their professional expertise and their clinical judgment in serving patients with prescription renewals.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Also to the Minister of Health and Wellness: given that pharmacists in my constituency have expressed concerns that reducing generic drug prices will adversely affect their businesses, why is government meddling in the way Alberta pharmacies operate?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the government isn't meddling in the business practices of pharmacists. In fact, I'm pleased to report to the House that since 2009 this government has provided over $75 million in transition support for pharmacists as we developed a new professional compensation model for pharmacists across Alberta.

Today's announcement will open up to a thousand new locations across the province for Albertans to have their prescriptions renewed. I think most pharmacists view this as very good news, Mr. Speaker. We're continuing to work with them on the implementation.

Mrs. Jablonski: Again to the same minister: if lower generic drug prices are nothing to worry about, why set up a safety net for rural pharmacies in the form of the remote pharmacy access grant?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as many hon. members will know from their constituencies, many of our rural and remote pharmacies who are operating independently rely very heavily on the traditional income stream through the sale of generic drugs in their particular business. This transition support, which falls, as I said, on the heels of over $75 million in support over the last three years, will assist pharmacists in the transition to the new compensation model, which focuses on the professional fee for professional health care delivered to Alberta patients.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was extremely saddened to hear about the tragic bus crash involving over 30 people travelling from Edmonton to Fort McMurray last Friday. The crash that occurred on highway 28, which like highway 63 is not twinned, made me think even more about why this government is cutting funding for highways at a time when our population and economy are growing. A large increase in oil and gas mining means more trucks on the road. To the Minister of Transportation: can the minister tell this House why his department is slashing spending on highways by 38 per cent by 2015 when the province is growing and needs more and better highways, not fewer highways?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government has supported transportation and highways with unprecedented investment, in fact a small 38 per cent higher than the average spending of provinces throughout Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to say to you that we are spending money in the right places. In fact, the hon. member needs to know, if he read the budget and looked at it carefully, that we are spending 150-plus million dollars on highway 63.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We don't build better highways by cutting spending.

To the minister again: given that last Thursday I asked the minister for leadership in fast-tracking the twinning of highway 63 and he refused by saying that it sounded like I would say yes to, quote, any necessary highway in Alberta, unquote, can the minister tell this House why this government will not say yes to funding highways even though they are, by their own admission, necessary?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure how much more clear I can make it: $150 million being spent on highway 63. Our commitment has been there to support highway 63, and we are continuing to be committed to highway 63. We have just completed the Athabasca bridge, which is the biggest bridge in Alberta. We have just committed to an interchange that has been completed. We are committed to the twinning that we have done.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm talking about twinning highway 63 – we are not talking about underpasses, overpasses, and bridges – and we want to get it done by 2015.

Again to the minister. Let's cut to the chase for the passengers on that bus. Exactly when will the Ministry of Transportation finish twinning highway 63? Give us the exact date.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, from Grassland to Wandering River $450 million is going to be spent and is continuing to be spent to twin that highway. We have committed to twinning highway 63, and we will continue to commit to twinning that highway. We have finished twinning the highway from Fort McMurray to highway 881, and this is what the municipality of Wood Buffalo is asking for.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Aboriginal Education

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In December 2010 the Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples released the report Reforming First Nations Education: From Crisis to Hope, and it says that reserve schools operate in isolation without the necessary support and called for a complete overhaul of Canada's First Nations education system. In January the federal government, British Columbia, and First Nations reached an historic education deal to provide First Nations students with access to quality education. One of the key issues is addressing the 20 per cent funding gap. My questions are to the Minister of Education. With the current funding challenges that face students on-reserve . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, this member highlights a very important subject matter, and the Senate committee is perfectly right. The condition of education for our aboriginal community, particularly on-reserve, is frankly deplorable, and it needs to be addressed. Whatever we have done for the last 150 years has simply not worked. So the province of Alberta is willing to take leadership, and we have already indicated to our colleagues in the federal government that we are willing to lend our expertise in providing world-class education. As a matter of fact, we're willing to come to the table with money to help offset the differential between the federal level of funding and the provincial level of funding.

Ms Woo-Paw: When the federal aboriginal affairs minister signed the agreement in B.C., he said that other reform partnerships are likely. Would the minister inform the House whether such a partnership exists for Alberta, and if yes, what is the status of the partnership?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the province of British Columbia needs to be congratulated for acknowledging the problem and being willing to do something about it. I understand it took some 15 years to bring this agreement about, and it's still not being executed. We know we have the expertise in providing education. We have the means to do so. The federal government has the ability to leverage their relationship with aboriginal communities who are willing to step in and assist the federal government in making sure that all children – they're Alberta children; they're Canadian children – receive the top-notch education that they deserve.

Ms Woo-Paw: What is your ministry's response to the Senate's report, which calls for a First Nations education act to establish legal power for educational authorities that would be accountable to parents and communities?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I respect that recommendation from the point of view that aboriginal communities should have a high degree of determination relative to the curriculum and the means by which the education system is run, just like we do in all communities by way of school boards. But one thing I would like to point out is that we don't need duplication. We have the expertise to deliver world-class education. There is the will on behalf of this government and school boards to contribute. We're willing to offer that instead of actually focusing our time on replicating a system that already exists.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Accommodation and Health Care for Seniors

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are directed to the Minister of Seniors. Over 1,800 seniors continue to be stuck in hospitals waiting for long-term care. Under the current continuing care model seniors are paying up to $4,000 a month just to be in accommodations and extra if they want medications given to them. Will the Seniors minister then make it crystal clear to Albertans who will be paying for services under the newly proposed continuing care model? Will it be the government, or will it be seniors?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you for that question. The Premier and your government have made it very clear that vulnerable Albertans will be taken care of and will continue to be taken care of. I can tell you that the health services in our continuing care models will be completely paid for by the province of Alberta.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that for seniors to get more than one shower a week at these continuing care homes they have to pay an extra $20 and for a bath they have to pay $50, the seniors would like to challenge the minister to see if he could survive on just one shower a week and would like to know if the minister thinks it's fair for seniors to be nickelled and dimed to pay for more than one shower a week.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is getting pretty personal, and I wouldn't be satisfied with one shower a week. The citizens and the Albertans that I have visited – and I've visited thousands of them over the last number of months in our seniors' homes – are very proud of the services they receive. We have invested millions of dollars, $600 million over the last 12 years, to create 10,000 spaces. We're proud of it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. Given that just last Wednesday the Premier said in the Assembly, "We in this government have guaranteed that publicly funded health care will be available for all Albertans, including seniors," could the minister then clarify to seniors in this province whether they will be the ones who will be paying for the services, or will it be the government? If they are paying for the services, where do they send their bills to get reimbursed?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I will not argue with the Premier. She's absolutely correct, and I stated it earlier. Health services in our seniors' facilities will be paid for by the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Support for Tourism

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tourism in Alberta is a $6 billion a year industry. For every dollar invested in tourism, there is an estimated $10 return. Last spring this government boasted of its efforts to promote our tourism industry despite economic hardships. This Premier's budget, which fails to promote Alberta as a tourism destination, directly impacts not only our economy; it also undermines our global status. To the minister of tourism: how can this minister justify the $5 billion in cuts to tourism and the escalatingly negative impact it will have on Alberta as a tourism destination?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have no idea what the hon. member is talking about: $5 billion in cuts to tourism. In fact, the promotion of tourism in this province is done through Travel Alberta, and that's done through a fee that's collected through the hotel industry. There's a sustainability fund with that organization. In the case of reduced revenues they will top it up with the sustainability fund. We're aggressively promoting Alberta all over the world.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If there was confusion, it was on my part: $5 million. I may have said billion by mistake.

To the same minister: does the minister understand the terrible impacts these cuts will have on jobs here in Alberta? It is a cut.

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, there are no cuts to the Tourism, Parks and Recreation budget. It has actually been increased somewhat.

We are aggressively going out to bring more tourists to this province. We are working very hard on the international markets as 7 per cent of our tourists are international tourists, but they're 25 per cent of our revenues. Mr. Speaker, I'm hoping to increase by close to 20 per cent the amount of tourism dollars that are spent in this province over the next three years.

Mr. Chase: Tourism requires investment. It's not happening.

To the same minister: given that a majority of Albertans want greater protection for our parks, why is this government again acting against Alberta's will and cutting more than a million dollars in funding to parks support?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, we are expanding our parks system. We're adding new group camping areas. We have 480 provincial parks in this province, more parks than any other province in the country. There is a park within a maximum of an hour's drive of all Albertans. We're very proud of them, and we continue to invest in them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Teachers' Salary Negotiations

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Education. The minister has said that he is working to secure a long-term labour deal with teachers. As a former teacher I know the important role that teachers play in this province and the recognition they do deserve. Seeing as the minister wanted a labour deal for the budget and the budget was last week and there is no deal, will the school boards be surprised with the new collective agreement?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, a school board could not possibly be surprised because they are at the negotiating table. I hope that they will negotiate in good faith, just like the ATA and the government of Alberta will, to the benefit of the students. We have some of the best outcomes in the world in our classrooms. Our teachers are handsomely compensated, better than anywhere else in Canada, and so they should be because the product, obviously, warrants that. We are still way off from expiry of this particular agreement, so I know that they will all be negotiating in good faith and will find the solution that. . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mrs. Leskiw: My final question is to the same minister. If you already proposed a salary settlement without negotiation, what is the point of the negotiating committee continuing to meet?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, there was plenty of opportunity to negotiate an agreement before this budget. I was very clear that I would have preferred to know what the agreement was before this budget was put together, but I don't think the ministers of health and seniors and others would want to wait for me with their budgets until teachers negotiate an agreement with school boards and the government. The budget has to go on, life has to go on, and they will have to negotiate within the parameters of this budget.

The Speaker: The hon. member? Fine?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Every year Alberta postsecondary institutions fall farther behind financially. Instead of seizing the moment and building a great future, this government seems to be choking it off. With budget squeezes the past three years and effective cuts to operating grants in the next three years, Alberta's postsecondary institutions will yet again fail to keep up with growing enrolment, aging infrastructure, and inflation. To the minister of advanced education: will the minister admit that this government's policies are forcing program cuts upon Alberta's universities for years to come?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to stand up and talk about this budget and the impact that it's going to have on our postsecondaries. This is a very good-news story, and my presidents, my board chairs, and even my students have come forward and said: this is exactly what we needed. This is about helping to provide stability, long-term funding, and they tell me that this is enough to make sure that they are sustainable into the future and that they can continue to provide the quality of programming that our students want and need.

Dr. Taft: To the same minister: given the constant needs for upgrading, maintaining, and expanding our universities, colleges, and technical institutes, how can this government justify the $192 million in cuts to postsecondary infrastructure funding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past six years we've invested $3 billion in infrastructure on our postsecondaries and $770 million in repair and maintenance budgets. We're the envy of any province in this country, and our postsecondaries are truly well maintained.

Mr. Speaker, we did have a bump over the past two or three years in maintenance budgets to help with the KIP program, that the feds had put in, to match that. This year we've gone back to the types of infrastructure budgets that we've had in the past, and it will help us to maintain . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Dr. Taft: Again to the same minister: given that in the leadership race the Premier promised greater funding for research and development, why was $4 million cut in research capacity programs in this budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, this is another promise made and a promise kept by our Premier. Within my budget we have increases to all four of the Alberta Innovates corporations. On top of that, we have 9 million new dollars invested in prion research and water research, for which we are the envy of Canada and North America.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good-news budget for research. We are going to continue to move forward with the research agenda that we need to make sure Alberta businesses and Alberta people have what they need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Logging in the Bragg Creek Area

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents enjoy using the trails in the forest reserve west of Bragg Creek. They all know about the tragedy of the Slave Lake fire, so they do understand that logging needs to take place in the area to protect Bragg Creek village. Now, their concerns relate to the details of the extent of the logging. If my constituents were unable to attend a consultation in Bragg Creek on January 26, would the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development tell us how they can provide feedback to optimize their future trail experience while still protecting Bragg Creek from forest fires?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's regrettable, I guess, that some people were unable to attend the public consultation meeting. This is a multiple-use area, and occasionally there are conflicts in land use. If anybody has a use or a value that they see in that landscape and they would like the company to harvest in a different manner or consider that value on the landscape, if they couldn't attend the public meeting, they could contact the company directly, or they could attend one of our offices to express their concern.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: now, if there are trails in the area that need to be rebuilt because of the logging, who will take on this responsibility?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's precisely why the ministry makes sure that the company does public consultations, to identify conflicts like that and to deal with them up front. It's always better if we can deal with them up front, mitigate the impacts of one user on another user, and then we don't have to get into questions like that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. I also have constituents who wish to change the whole approach to logging on the eastern slopes. What opportunities are available for them to influence those decisions?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd have to have a clearer definition of what you mean by the whole approach to logging. If people are interested in different logging methods and different management practices on the eastern slopes, then there are a myriad of opportunities for them to be involved in the management planning process or the operations planning process, to visit with the company when they do their open houses, to express their concerns or desires to forest management personnel, to SRD personnel. There's a lot of opportunity to do that. If they're in fact concerned that we should not be logging on the eastern slopes, that's a different conversation, and they should attend the South Saskatchewan regional planning process to express that desire.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Revenue from Problem Gambling

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government anticipates revenue from Alberta gaming, or the Alberta gaming and liquor control board, of roughly $1.3 billion this year. Now, in 2011 gross profit from VLTs was $492 million. To the President of the Treasury Board: what percentage of this VLT revenue comes from the pockets and purses of problem gamblers?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd have to take that question under advisement for the minister responsible. However, I'm quite confident that those numbers are available and that the minister is working on a number of projects and programs to help those individuals who may have an issue with a gambling-related habit.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm surprised the hon. minister is not up to speed on this given that he's the one that counts the cash.

Given that in 2011 gross profits to the government from slot machines were over $800 million, what percentage of this slot machine revenue comes from the pockets and purses of people in this province with problem gambling habits?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm equally surprised that the hon. member is not aware of the division of the different departments. The Minister of Finance has the AGLC under that purview. Again, I will take the question under advisement and ensure that the hon. member gets an adequate response.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the minister's response. However, I'm not satisfied with it, so I'm going to go to the Minister of Justice. Why is it necessary to exempt the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission from the Lobbyists Act, which is clearly under your observation? I can say that.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, we have just finished a consultation regarding the Lobbyists Act, and I don't recall there being any comment about that at all as a concern.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question-and-answer period for today. Eighteen members were recognized, with 106 questions and responses.

Statement by the Speaker

Questions about the Budget

The Speaker: A fair number of the questions today had to do with the budget, and of course, as all members know, the budget process begins later today, as I recall, and will continue probably to the third week of March. Now, some very specific questions occurred in the question period today. Members should be aware that estimates will be provided, that time frames will be provided, two or three hours for each of these estimates. I can understand the need for generalized questions with respect to the budget, but if this is going to degenerate into a specific question-and-answer response, then why have the time allocated for a review of the budget at a later date?

As an example, I noticed the schedule that's coming up. I can see that the estimates for the Minister of Justice and Attorney General are tomorrow evening, so all members might want to attend. Ample hours will be provided for that.

On February 21 the Minister of Finance will be here in the Assembly for probably three hours. I'm sure there'll be ample time for specific questions with respect to that at that time.

Questions were raised as well with the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. He will be available in this Assembly on the evening of March 5 to basically deal with the specifics of those particular budgets. And I can go on.

Yes, absolutely, questions on the budget I'll accept as totally appropriate in the question period, but if they're going to be online questions and addressed to ministers whose departments have not come up yet, I think there's a better opportunity for us to take a look at that at a later time. So just a little bit of advice with respect to that.

We're now going to return to Member's Statements. I still have six members who wish to give a member's statement. It's now 18 minutes to 3.

The Speaker: We will continue and hear first from the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Integration of Community Services with Health Care

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to talk about delivering and improving mental health services, but it doesn't deliver. A substantial number of individuals and families are reporting a lack of responsiveness, unsafe wait times for help, and inappropriate placement of family members and friends with mental illness, especially coming from the Edmonton region. The Health Facilities Review Committee in Calgary reported as much in December of last year, commenting on the Peter Lougheed's long-standing shortage of beds for psychiatric crisis, with no surge capacity when a crisis happens. This increases risk for patients as well as staff and families, including preventable deaths.

It's time for action. Shortage of community and in-patient services predictably results in emergency room overcrowding and mental health patients in hallways on the ward, sometimes unsafely placed with other types of medical problems throughout the hospital. Wait times most recently reported in Calgary include active treatment wait of six months, a six-month wait for psychiatric assessment, and so on. Young adults and those with chronic conditions or sudden worsening of their illness are increasingly being pushed out of institutional care prematurely and placing themselves at risk as well as risking others. This means harm to themselves, to family and community, and inappropriate incarceration in jails at times, where roughly a third of inmates are known to have mental illness.

Community services must be integrated better with the institution to ensure a safe transition from one to the other and more successful maintenance of in-patients in the community. As the report Poverty Costs last week indicated, we will pay and our fellow citizens will pay one way or the other by failing to provide sufficient community resources for people with addictions, homelessness, and mental illness. Our hotline has received calls from family members being injured and suffering major mental distress in attempting to get attention from a system that is supposed to relieve them.

Albertans and their long-suffering families continue to seek basic care. Albertans deserve better, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Primco Dene Rewarding Partnerships Award

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today to speak about an incredible company in my constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake, Primco Dene. Based in Cold Lake and owned by the Cold Lake First Nations, Primco Dene is a model for First Nations business development in Alberta. On February 10 Primco Dene was presented with a rewarding partnerships award by the hon. Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations. The aboriginal rewarding partnerships award, which is presented annually at the Alberta Chamber of Resources awards banquet, recognizes companies and aboriginal partners that demonstrate excellence in innovation, best practices, sustainability, and capacity building.

Mr. Speaker, this government is very proud of its efforts to enhance aboriginal participation in Alberta's diverse economy. One of the ways we do this is by promoting and facilitating economic partnerships among aboriginal businesses, industry, and government. Companies like Primco Dene exemplify how strong business partnerships can yield long-term benefits for aboriginal communities and industry alike. This government is proud to support the Alberta Chamber of Resources in recognizing aboriginal-owned companies like Primco Dene, and we look forward to continuing this valuable partnership in years to come.

I would like to congratulate Primco Dene on this tremendous accomplishment and thank them for the amazing work that they do in my constituency.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Brain Health Symposium 2012

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through the Seniors' ministry the office of the public guardian is offering the first annual Brain Health Symposium next week both in Calgary and in Edmonton. In Calgary this symposium is already fully subscribed, which is a good-news story, but in Edmonton we still have placements.

Mr. Speaker, we've learned that people who have a brain injury often have mental health and other health-associated difficulties. The most thrilling thing we're learning through Dr. Norman Doidge's book, The Brain That Changes Itself, is that the neuroplasticity of the brain allows us to have a brain that can change in function as we age. It lends new hope that people who have a brain injury might yet recover.

There are others that are local people that are going to be part of this symposium: Suzette Brémault-Phillips, Dr. Catherine Phillips, and Dr. Peter Wass. Many of you will know him from FASD fame. He's done much in terms of research of brain-injured people. They will be speaking as part of it. It's affiliated with the Alzheimer Society and Alberta Health Services. We expect guests from the Northwest Territories and other places.

Mr. Speaker, the most exciting thing, I think, that will materially happen with this symposium is that people for the first time will get together and talk about what can be done with brain injuries. We've backed away from that as a society at times, but it's time and it's very topical to look after those that have brain injuries. The office of the public guardian, who usually does that job, is now championing the advocacy and education for people that need it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Queen Elizabeth II Diamond Jubilee

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year is the Diamond Jubilee of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, which marks her 60 years as monarch and head of state of the United Kingdom and Canada and several other Commonwealth nations. Upon her coronation at the age of 27 our young Queen promised to follow the example of her parents in dedicating her life, whether it be short or long, to serve the people of her realms, including Canada. We are indeed thankful that her life and her service have been long and fruitful. She has made some 30 visits to our country, strengthening the bonds of loyalty and affection which Canadians feel for her.

At her coronation Her Majesty stated:

Parliamentary institutions, with their free speech and respect for the rights of minorities, and the inspiration of a broad tolerance in thought and expression – all this we conceive to be a precious part of our way of life and outlook.

As a constitutional monarchy Canada's system of governance has evolved peacefully, without violence or revolution, to become a shining example of a free and democratic state to the rest of the world. Indeed, our parliamentary government and Constitution, inherited from the United Kingdom, with the Queen as head of state have served us well as a nation bound together by respect for human rights, including the right to freely choose those who govern us and make our laws. As Albertans we are proud of this form of government here in our provincial Legislature with the Queen as head of state as embodied in her representative, our Lieutenant Governor. On her Diamond Jubilee I know I speak for all hon. members when I say that we are thankful for Her Majesty's 60 years of service to Canada and Canadians. God save our noble and gracious Queen.

2012 Alberta Winter Games

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend we welcomed more than 2,800 young Albertans, their parents, and supporters in my constituency of Stony Plain and Parkland county and in our neighbouring community of Spruce Grove. We were thrilled to host 20 great events during the 2012 Alberta Winter Games. The results are in, and Calgary won the Alberta Cup with the most overall points. The Sunny South won the Minister's Cup for the most improved performance, and the Parkland zone, stretching from Rocky Mountain House to Coronation, won the spirit of sport award.

The young athletes who participated in these games are the future of sport in our province. With continued perseverance many of them will move on to become national competitors or even to the next Olympics. They are an inspiration. They inspire us to do our best, to put the team first, to respect our competition, and to have fun. These young people also inspire Albertans of all ages to get more active. As a government we are proud to support these games through the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to thank the volunteers and organizers for their hard work and dedication to amateur sports and competition. They created a memorable experience for anyone and everyone involved. With the approach of summer we now look forward to the start of the 2012 Alberta Summer Games in Lethbridge this July.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Central Alberta Ronald McDonald House

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, when a child is very ill, the only thing they want is to be near their mom and dad. It has been said that the greatest gift that you can give a sick child is their family. After three years of hard work and fundraising, Red Deer and central Alberta were recently invited to an open house to come and see the newest Ronald McDonald House in Canada.

Thanks to the efforts of a group of very dedicated people in Red Deer and central Alberta $12 million was raised to build Alberta's third Ronald McDonald House, the 13th in Canada. This is a remarkable community accomplishment that involved large corporations, small businesses, many organizations, and many individuals. Donations ranged from the million dollars given by Mary Bea Quinn, donated on behalf of her late husband, Bernard, to the $18,000 raised through hot dog sales by Jenaya Moore and Caitlyn Richardson, two young students of Poplar Ridge school.

The members of the dedicated Capital Campaign committee include four generations of the Radford family – Lyn and Reg Radford, Marg Imeson, Erin and Chris Buckland, Jamie and Geordin Flett, Ashley and David Brant, and Andrew Radford – as well as Kathy Bontje, Mike Chorlton, Dale Devereaux, Marty Vellner, Tracy Graf, Melanie Warren, Cathy Fowler, Greg Shannon, Tera Lee Flaman, Andy Cuthbertson, Tom and Margaret Towers, and Connie Sutter.

The families of the very sick children who will be very grateful for their home away from home may not ever get the chance to meet the members of this dedicated committee or those who worked so hard to give them this gift of love, but every time a child's face lights up because they see their family or because they enter the Magic Room at Ronald McDonald House, it will be because so many people worked so hard to make sure they could receive the gift of their families.

The central Alberta Ronald McDonald House is a magnificent gift of love. I can't think of a better gift or a better legacy for those who made this home possible. Thank you to all the volunteers, donors, and sponsors who gave the greatest gift possible to the sick children of central Alberta and their families.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to present a petition signed by over 3,700 Albertans predominantly from around the Little Bow, Highwood, and Livingstone-Macleod constituencies urging the government "to Not Approve" – and I repeat to not approve – "any application from BFI Canada/Prairie Sky Resource Centre to Alberta Environment or the Municipal District of Foothills No. 31 for the proposed Prairie Sky Resource Centre." Clearly, all Albertans do not want to see prime agricultural land used for garbage waste landfills.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Alberta Bill of Rights (Property Rights Protection) Amendment Act, 2012

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 201, the Alberta Bill of Rights (Property Rights Protection) Amendment Act, 2012.

Property rights are essential to guarantee every citizen the right to liberty and the pursuit of happiness without the interference of government. It is paramount whenever we talk about good government that preserving and protecting property rights is one of the cornerstones of a prosperous society and a fully functioning democracy. Bill 201, Alberta Bill of Rights (Property Rights Protection) Amendment Act, 2012, seeks to preserve the original spirit in which the Bill of Rights was written and to guarantee landowners the right to a timely and fair compensation through the courts.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Tobacco Reduction (Protection of Children in Vehicles) Amendment Act, 2012

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 203, the Tobacco Reduction (Protection of Children in Vehicles) Amendment Act, 2012.

Mr. Speaker, it is our moral duty as a society to protect our vulnerable and our weak, especially our children. This act would amend the Tobacco Reduction Act by prohibiting smoking in cars when children are present. As an ER physician I can tell you that over the last 19, 20 years that I've been practising, many times I've seen young children six months, 12 months, 18 months old suffocating, and their parents smoke. They drive them to the hospital with severe asthma attacks, and they've been smoking on the way to the hospital.

The health risks of second-hand smoke for young children: there's extensive evidence that it damages their lung lining and it hurts their immunity. With respect to role modelling – I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if you want to save on health care, let's make sure we have healthy children and make sure that they don't start smoking. When parents are smoking in front of their children, especially in cars, our children are smoking from day 1, at birth, and that's got to stop.

This measure would make smoking in cars with anyone under the age of 18 punishable by a maximum fine of $1,000. It's an important preventative health step, the wisdom of which certain municipalities in this province and certain provinces in this country have already implemented.

I feel it's time Albertans take leadership in this issue to protect our children and the most vulnerable in our society.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Okay. Can we go pretty quickly now? I don't want to run up against the 3 o'clock thing.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise pursuant to section 15(2) of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act with the appropriate number of copies of the interim financial report for the fund for the nine months ended December 31, 2011. Copies have already been distributed to the members.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have more, but I'll just give you one today, and that is the letter from the Alberta Funeral Service Association president, Mitch Thompson. The letter he directed to me outlines the problems that the association has with the current contract for provision of services under children's services, Seniors, AISH, and Human Services. So that's a copy of the letter to me.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of several electricity bills Albertans have sent to the NDP opposition showing significantly increased and growing electricity costs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling e-mails and three letters from the following individuals who are concerned about the proposed logging in the West Bragg Creek area, all of whom believe clear-cutting will damage an essential watershed and recreation area that thousands of Calgarians use to promote health and fitness and be detrimental to wildlife and natural species: Jerrel Wilkens, Masten Brolsma, Diane Schon, Jason Curtis, John Wong, Lorraine Lau, Corine and Stefan Frick, Elena Rhodes, Ferdl and Heather Taxbock, Donna Fallon, Lynn Whittingham, Maurice Gaucher, David Neame, Theo and Carol van Besouw, Marie-Andrée Ménard, Jennifer Wright, and Ryan Chambers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 7(7) says that "at 3 p.m. the items in the ordinary daily routine will be deemed to be concluded and the Speaker shall notify the Assembly."

Mr. Chase: May I please ask you to ask all members to extend the time period to complete the business at hand?

The Speaker: I can certainly do that, and it will require unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Okay. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition under Tabling Returns and Reports.

3:00

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all the hon. members. I have four tablings. One is from Campaign for a Smoke-Free Alberta, Protecting Youth from Exposure to Tobacco Smoke in Vehicles, and I have five copies.

The second tabling is a graph of youth smoking rates among Albertans aged 12 to 19 that shows that our smoking rates had initially decreased from 12 per cent to 11 per cent and are up to 14 per cent.

I have two other tablings pertaining to our utility bills. One is an excellent article written by Catherine Griwkowsky from the Edmonton Sun. It's labelled Power Bills . . . Canada's Energy Powerhouse Has Highest Electricity [Bills] in the Country.

Finally, I also have five copies of an annual report from 2010 from Hydro-Québec showing how Quebec has gotten no power or utility bills and has returned billions to the government of Quebec so they can provide essential services to the people.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there additional tablings?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter dated November 30, 2011, from Wayne Sorenson, board member, Alberta Society for Pension Reform. This letter is addressed to the hon. Premier of Alberta. Certainly, this letter gives significant detail on the problems with the public service pension as indicated from a deal that goes back quite some time.

My second tabling is a response that Mr. Wayne Sorenson received not from the hon. Premier but from the Minister of Finance. This is dated February 1, 2012. I would encourage all hon. members of the Assembly to read both letters and familiarize themselves with this issue if they have not already done so.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horne, Minister of Health and Wellness, responses to written questions 3, 4, and 5, asked for by Dr. Swann on April 11, 2011; responses to written questions 16, 17, and 18, asked for by Dr. Swann on May 9, 2011.

On behalf of the hon. Mrs. McQueen, Minister of Environment and Water, pursuant to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act the Ministry of Environment and Water environmental protection security fund annual report, April 1, 2010, to March 31, 2011.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Lukaszuk, Minister of Education, report dated January 27, 2012, entitled Alberta Education, Our Children, Our Future: Getting it Right, Final Report on Public Engagement, prepared by KPMG.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on a purported point of order, please.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Anderson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm looking at Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). The Premier imputed false and unavowed motives to another member, among other things, when she said, referring to the Wildrose alternative budget, that we would cut the money in the budget for the building of new schools, 14 new schools as she referred to it, in the budget. If we look at the budget, what is said specifically is that the Wildrose caucus would invest [$4.1] billion in new infrastructure (a per capita amount significantly higher than BC, Ontario, and Saskatchewan). These capital dollars would be focused primarily on the building of high priority road projects such as the Calgary and Edmonton ring roads, twinning Highway 63, long-term care facilities for seniors, and urgently needed schools in our province and so forth. And it goes on and on and on.

Further on in our alternative budget it specifically notes that we would spend a portion of the increase of $854 million in operational spending that we propose on hiring roughly 1,425 new teachers, teaching assistants, and support staff for students with special needs, for a total of $114 million. Not only do we have in our budget that we would build those schools, every school that has been announced, but we would indeed have the money to staff those schools. Obviously, we did ask to cut the $2 billion carbon capture and storage and other wasteful spending, but clearly the Premier was incorrect in that statement, and I ask her to be more informed next time.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, obviously, 23(h), (i), and (j) doesn't apply because that refers to a member, and the party is not a member. The defence that the hon. member has put up, indicating that he was referring to a party document, is clearly an entirely different thing.

However, that being said, it is a very simplistic document that he refers to, trying to balance a budget by cutting spending that is not being made. For example, the $2 billion carbon capture and storage is not budgeted in one year but budgeted over a number of years, as the hon. member ought to know. It's the same with many of the other capital projects that are budgeted over a series of years, some of which could be I suppose delayed over a longer period of time if they wanted to, which they're advocating. That would not be a cost saving but would be an additional cost to Albertans to do it in that way, but they've ignored that in their simplistic analysis of the budget.

It's interesting because the hon. member, you know, last year and this year is talking about balancing the budget by failing to complete the essential infrastructure that Albertans need as we move forward but has no compulsion at all about then calling, as I recall last year at least, ministers responsible and asking when the infrastructure in his constituency will be completed on a timely basis.

Mr. Speaker, there's no point of order. It's simply the hon. member trying to play politics with the numbers and not appreciating the fact when people point that out.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I think the most pertinent information that's really required here has to do with the book House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, page 634, which basically points out that points of order should not be used to continue debate on an issue.

Again, it's the continuation, basically, of the little suggestion that I made earlier that we're going to be into debate on the budget now for probably five weeks, and if the question period becomes part of that debate other than policy questions and if there are specific questions, then we're going to probably have these points of order every day. There's really not much need for that when you can have the points of order in the committee if you wish. You'll have three hours to play with it. But if the purpose of question period is to basically keep the government accountable and to basically seek information, then there should be questions of that particular nature.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We find ourselves in the unusual situation where we do not have private members' bills on the table available for discussion at the moment, so I would ask for the consent of the House to proceed immediately to private members' motions, which would normally be considered at 5 o'clock.

Mr. Anderson: A point of clarification on the motion. Is there any way that under 77 of the standing orders I can request unanimous consent to proceed directly to private members' bills, starting with Bill 201?

The Speaker: Certainly, if I had caught your eye first, that probably would have happened, but the Government House Leader seemed to rise first, basically with respect to that motion. The request that we have here is because of what happened the other day, with the two bills not being introduced. I suspect that the request the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere would want to make is for the House to give unanimous consent to allow second reading on private member's Bill 201. We have another motion that says that Motions Other than Government Motions, scheduled for 5 o'clock this afternoon, be advanced to 3 o'clock, which is now the time, and we deal with this now, not knowing what the outcome will be.

This is a kind of conundrum. This has not happened in a long time with respect to this matter. I do believe, though, that having caught my eye first, I must basically go with what it appeared to be, recognizing fully what request would come from the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. Now, in the event that the request being made by the Government House Leader is defeated, then we could go to the second one.

Hon. Government House Leader, if I understand, your request is that we move now to Motions Other than Government Motions. In other words, I would recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to proceed with her motion. We would go for one hour, and I take it that that means we would then adjourn until 7:30 tonight. I'm not leading anybody here. I'm just trying to make sure we have this.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: I'll recognize the request coming from the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has requested that, in fact, the Assembly go to second reading of private member's Bill 201. This requires unanimous consent. Hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, proceed with your request, please.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I rise under rule 77 of the standing orders, asking that the House give unanimous consent to proceed to private members' business, starting with Bill 201.

[The Assembly adjourned from 3:12 p.m. to 5 p.m.]

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre

Income Tax Rate

501. Ms Blakeman moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation that will replace the flat-rate income tax in favour of a progressive income tax whereby tax rates increase according to income.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise to a trumpet fanfare from somebody's computer coming on and speak to the motion that I have proposed. This is a motion other than a government motion. For those of you following along, that's done by any member of the House except for cabinet. We put these in a long time ago.

What I really wanted to do with this motion was start a conversation in this House. I've been interested in this issue for quite some time, and I think I was actually even raising it back when I was still on the Public Accounts Committee to those many years ago. I really think that this conversation has three parts to it. One is the current mix of revenue, how and where the government gets money and sort of what that ratio is. The second part is our nonrenewable resource revenue which we are blessed to have in this province, the questions about how we use it, whether we spend it now, spend it today, or we spend it in the future, save it for something in the future. Finally, I think the third piece of this puzzle is the taxation rate itself.

I note that last year the then Provincial Treasurer was very frank in admitting that we had $11 billion of tax room that we could have been collecting from people before we matched the B.C. rate. Eleven billion dollars is a lot of income tax room. A lot. When we look at the deficits that the government is currently carrying – and I'm not going to be bothered with whether this is a technical deficit or a real deficit or an imaginary deficit – clearly, the amount that was brought in compared to the amount that was budgeted, there's a difference. I think that we really need to consider that.

We certainly have people that are asking for additional services. Frankly, nobody wants to pay more money if they don't have to, but when you really get into the conversation with Albertans as I do on a regular basis with my constituents, they're quite open about saying that, yeah, they'd rather have the service, thank you very much.

The most recent one I had was that for a $60 increase in people's property tax, the city could be running one of those little snowplows down every single residential street, so you would never have to shovel the front of your street again. People were ecstatic. They wanted to know where they could pay that 60 bucks to get the snow cleared from the front of their house. People were clearly willing to pay additional taxes to get services that they viewed as valuable. Now you get into the discussion of: what do people think is valuable? There are a lot of those different discussions, particularly right now in my constituency where we have a long discussion about whether the arena is valuable and whether there should be tax money, provincial money, civic money, going into that. That's another whole discussion that I'm just not going to get into in my 10 minutes.

What I am seeing more and more of is the experts saying that this province really needs to think about this. When I look at different groups like the Shaping Alberta's Future, which was a government-requested report, that comes forward saying that, "You guys have got to look at this stuff," and we've got the likes of Jack Mintz and Peter Lougheed saying this and then we've got the Parkland Institute saying it and in North America we have very wealthy people like Warren Buffett saying it, I go, "Well, this might be time for something." So that whole discussion of where government gets revenue from: how much do they charge individual taxpayers versus corporations versus how much we take out of nonrenewable resource revenue?

Currently, just if anybody needs a little refresher, the budget that was brought forward in 2011 was expecting $7.5 billion in personal income tax, $3.4 billion in corporate, and the education property tax was expected to bring in $1.6 billion. So we've got a subtotal there of $12.5 billion. You add in the sin taxes – gambling, tobacco, alcohol – and you've got another $2 billion. Licences and fees for various things from hunting licences to campground fees and that sort of thing: $4.4 billion. Interest – thank you, AIMCo – at $1.9 billion. Now you're up to $20.8 billion. Where's the rest of the money? Well, the rest of the money, $8 billion of it, came from royalties that came out of the ground yesterday, and the federal government contributed $5.2 billion by way of transfer payments for various agreements that they have with the provincial government.

I had a chart here, but I'm sure you've all seen the numbers. Twenty-three per cent of the revenue that this province spends comes from nonrenewable resource revenue. I think that's an issue that we need to look at because I don't think it's sustainable. I think that mixed in with all of this is a conversation about intergenerational debt, or spending our children's inheritance is another way of talking about that.

So this is all part of a larger mix, but in order to get that conversation going, I thought I'd be a little provocative and put it out there, specifically talking about an increase in the flat rate of income tax that we pay. I personally would like to push this far enough that we went back to a completely progressive form of taxation, but I recognize at this point that you can't do that overnight any more than we hope the federal government will not, you know, impose their changes to the old age security overnight. There has to be a phase-in period.

Indeed, the Alberta Liberal Party has brought forward as part of its platform a proposal in which the tax rate for those with a taxable income over $100,000 would be an increased rate of 13 per cent, those with more than $150,000 of taxable income would go to 15 per cent, and those over $200,000 of taxable income would go to 17 per cent – so that's towards a progressive taxation system – but everybody else would still be at that 10 per cent flat tax. As we ran the numbers on that, we went: you know what? That still means that 90 per cent of the people in the province would be paying a 10 per cent rate, and just those high-income earners would be paying higher.

I'm going to try to bring this whole ball of wax back together for you. We've got a situation where increasingly people are telling us that we should not be spending our nonrenewable resource revenue as part of our daily operating money. One of those examples was a farmer who sells off, acre by acre, the family farm to buy groceries and to go to Blockbuster and for various other parts of their lives. You're right. That's not what you would do as a prudent person. We are expected to be the prudent people in Alberta in this House. So I encourage you to think of those possibilities that we could be discussing and moving forward on if we contemplated a progressive income tax.

I think we should go further there and look at what we're doing with our corporate taxes as well, which would allow us to not have to have 23 per cent of our budget being paid for by nonrenewable resource revenue. I think that revenue should be saved. It's not ours. It's everybody's, including future generations.

I think that's the Norway question. Clearly, we don't compare very well when we look at what Norway has done. They just took every single penny, and they put it into their fund, and then they passed a law that they could not dip into that and use the money for any investments inside of Norway. They can invest in things outside of Norway. Thus, you can expect them investing in Alberta – I think they already do – but not in their own country. So they couldn't manipulate what was going on in their own country. That fund, as we know, is just so far beyond ours, it's embarrassing to compare it at this point, while the heritage trust savings fund has diminished.

So to give ourselves time, let's look at taxes in the whole mix of things. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity and any other members who want to attract my attention.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on Motion 501. I thank the Member for Edmonton-Centre for bringing this up. I just want to preface my comments that I'm not really feeling well today, so I'll have to spare the rest of you from my usual rapid-fire speech.

The member started a conversation; we're going to continue this conversation. The purpose of this motion she talked about is to replace the current single rate of income tax in favour of what she calls progressive income tax, which would see taxes rise along with income. This is an important debate.

One thing I do want to correct, Mr. Speaker, is that the current taxation structure is, in fact, a progressive system. It is with one rate as she points out – that is correct – but at the same time the manner in which this rate is applied is in a progressive manner because of the rather generous exemptions at the lower end.

I'll give you an example. Based on last year's exemptions someone who earns just under $19,000 ends up paying 1.1 per cent, someone who earns $47,000 pays 6.4 per cent, and someone who earns $117,000 pays 8.5 per cent. Thank you to the Canadian Taxpayers Federation for those figures.

Of the nearly 2.7 million Albertans who file income taxes I was astonished, Mr. Speaker, that only 63 per cent actually pay any provincial income tax at all. That means 37 per cent of tax filers pay zero per cent income tax. That's right. One in 3 individuals don't have to pay income tax on their earnings. The system protects the families and individuals with lower incomes and provides citizens of this province with a simple tax system and also doesn't provide a disincentive for those who decide to put more time into their work.

Interestingly enough, if you look at the dollar take as well, Mr. Speaker, the bottom 50 per cent of income earners in this province only pay 3 per cent of the total take of the single rate of tax, the middle 40 per cent pay 40 per cent, and the top 10 per cent pay 57 per cent of the total take on this tax. I would respectfully submit to all members of this Assembly that those who earn more already pay more.

This has also created a very business-friendly environment. I would submit that Albertans benefit from one of the most competitive taxation systems in North America. This is something we can be proud of. This is due to low personal income, corporate, and fuel taxes coupled with no capital payroll and sales taxes. In fact, if our province had a system comparable to the next lowest province, as the member pointed out, Albertans and Alberta businesses would pay at least $11 billion – that's billion with a "b", Mr. Speaker – more in taxes each year. I think that this room is a good thing. It's not a reason that we should be able to tax more. It provides this province with a clear and distinct competitive advantage.

Our ability to keep taxes low for all Albertans while maintaining first-class services and programs has been one of our biggest competitive edges. It is a primary reason, Mr. Speaker, why so many people have chosen to flock to Alberta in search of better economic prospects, and I have to say that I'm one of those individuals. In fact, the population of Alberta grew by 10 per cent over the past five to six years. That's almost half a million people that have moved here since then. Obviously, something is going right when it comes to our economic policies.

This government respects the trust Albertans have that their government will spend their hard-earned money wisely and prudently. We also must ask ourselves: what's the primary engine of our economy? Is it the government, or is it the private sector? I respectfully submit that it is the latter. We are firmly committed to examining our entire fiscal framework with the goal of guaranteeing that tax dollars are spent in the most efficient way possible, providing the most amount of benefit to every Albertan.

This motion concerns implementing a different progressive tax system, and it's prudent that we all understand what that system entails. Most economists define a progressive tax system as one where the lower incomes pay a smaller share and those who earn more end up paying more. I've indicated that that is what this one already offers.

The income tax rate previously was tied to the portion of taxes collected by the federal government. Prior to 1999 it was set at 44 per cent of federal tax collection from an individual. Although the rate itself happened to be a single rate for all, due to the fact that the federal government has a progressive tax system with many different rates, we were tied to the feds, and we had very little control over this. So the fact that we actually delinked our taxation system was a positive move back then. I know other provinces, including Saskatchewan, have also done that.

In 1999 the provincial government announced that it would be moving to the single rate of tax. I think the economic success story that is Alberta speaks to the benefits of this policy. I would submit that changing the current system might affect the number of individuals who choose to migrate from other jurisdictions to Alberta, making it difficult for businesses to attract and retain employees.

Mr. Speaker, if you don't believe me, look no further than to Enterprise Saskatchewan, who in 2009 proposed going to a similar single rate of tax because of – what? – competition from Alberta. In other words, this could possibly impact the Alberta advantage.

One must also keep in mind that the tax system that this motion proposes would affect those earners that already provide the most tax revenue for the province. Additionally, the vast majority of Albertans are supportive of keeping taxes as low as possible without affecting services.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this government does not support additionally taxing middle-class families. We are providing excellent services with our current revenue. It is difficult to know what the opposition, I have to say with respect, is getting at. One minute they talk about how we're spending too much money, and now they talk about how they want to increase taxes. I would ask the question, Mr. Speaker, but first of all, I want to assume a fact that's not in evidence. Let's presume that this would result in a higher aggregate take of taxes. I'm not willing to give him that point because any second-year economics student who has taken Laffer economics knows that if you raise the tax too much, you drive out capital, you drive out investment, you drive out people, and you end up having a lower take. We don't know where exactly that point is, but let's just say that that's where it is.

Where would they spend this extra money? Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition has talked about raising taxes as much as 70 per cent. It is only the opposition in this House that is talking about raising taxes. What would they want to do? Would they want to give more free tuition to everyone? I think it's far better to target our resources to those who are in need like the minister of advanced education has announced today as opposed to going and affecting everyone and basically taxing everyone out of this province.

I do not believe that this is the right decision for our province to take. I think, in fact, that instead of questioning this, we should be thanking our former Treasurer, Stockwell Day, for his incredible success on this file. I will be voting against this motion, and I encourage all others to do the same.

I also want to mention to all members of this Assembly that if anybody here feels that we are undertaxed, if they do, the government accepts donations. Every government accepts donations. They can donate some of their own money in and of themselves. They can go and lead by example.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the last thing I wanted to mention was that the Member for Edmonton-Centre talked about Norway, and that is a topic worth discussion because that is an oil-producing state as well. One thing to remember about Norway is that it's a country; it's not a province. We send billions of our tax dollars to other provinces, which we're happy to do, but we have to recognize that Alberta is a province, not a nation. The second thing. I didn't have the time to look up Norway's tax rates, but I do know that Norway has a significantly higher value-added tax and a significantly higher income tax. Is that the type of society that we want to live in? I'd rather focus upon equality of opportunity than outcome.

People keep coming here. This system works, Mr. Speaker. I think that we should be very proud of the taxation structure that we have.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You and hon. members of this House might question what reception you would get when you ring the doorbell and say: "Hi, my name is . . . Vote for me, and I'll raise your taxes." You might think that the welcome mat would be drawn very quickly into the residence, or there might be a trap door that dropped you down into a dungeonlike circumstance.

What we are suggesting with Motion 501 on the Liberal Party tax policy is being transparent and being accountable, living on today's wages and bounty as opposed to a buy now, pay later scheme. Now, this proposal affects approximately 10 per cent of Albertans, and they're the 10 per cent of Albertans who are fortunate enough to on an individual basis be earning more than $100,000 a year. We're all in that particular category of being in the 100,000-plus dollars circumstance as Members of this Legislative Assembly. Whether John Major decides to reduce that amount or raise it remains to be seen, Mr. Speaker, but you and I will not be participants in that discussion.

What we have proposed is a raising of the flat-tax rate for those earning over $100,000 by 3 per cent. For those who earn in the category of $150,000 to $200,000, we're talking about a raise, an increase in tax of 5 per cent. For those earning over $200,000, who are doing very well in Alberta, we've proposed to increase their rate by 7 per cent. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre noted, even with these proposed increases to approximately 10 per cent of the better-off members of Alberta society, our taxes would be considerably lower than any other provincial jurisdiction.

Now, the hon. Solicitor General talked about the motivation that brings people to Alberta. For that motivation to be sustainable and for us to be able to keep the people that move here, we have to get past the gold rush mentality. We have to get off the roller coaster of nonrenewable energy prices set by a world market or set rather exclusively by our southern partner. We are affected by a lower price for our product based on a glut of that product down in Chicago and down in Texas, where the proposal is to ship more of our raw bitumen rather than our refined product.

If we want to be able to control our own destinies not only now but into the future, in that future when we have drawn out every single sellable drop of oil and when we have decided that the speed at which we're extracting gas needs to be slowed down because we have such a surplus of it that the value of that product is tremendously diminished from what it was eight years ago, only at that point possibly, if the government continues in the direction it's headed, will we come to realize that we've blown the best opportunity that anyplace in the world had by not saving.

Now, what is part of Motion 501 is the notion that we should be setting aside a significantly larger portion of our nonrenewable resource revenue for the future. The hon. Solicitor General suggested that you can't compare the province of Alberta to the country of Norway, and he also indicated how much higher the taxes were in Norway. What he didn't mention – I don't think it was by neglect; he just simply didn't mention it – is the higher standard of living in Norway and that higher standard of living projected into years and years of guaranteed support for not only the grandchildren of today but successive grandchildren of the future.

We are basically individuals that are at the smorgasbord table stuffing down our meals as though there were no end in sight. This is a kind of nonconservative approach of getting those resources out of the ground as quickly as you can. Don't worry about refining them. Don't worry about value-added. Just sell them off as quickly as you can, and while you're selling them off, don't worry about the methodology you've chosen to get those resources to other areas. Simply, whether it's federal government or provincial government, ramrod your desires regardless of what the effects are. Take those resources out. Don't worry about the possibility of expanded tailings ponds. Don't worry about the fact that your resources will have greater value in the future when there is scarcity. Full speed ahead and, you know, as the expression goes, damn the torpedoes.

This living for the moment is very much like the fable of the ant and the grasshopper. Our Conservative government is fiddling. It has got no preparation for the winter. It has got no preparation for the time when science and technology comes up with alternatives to fuel-based energy. It's going to be a very dark time in Alberta. That time in terms of when we run out of not only conventional oil but synthetic alternatives is not as far off as some of the people in this parliament see. It's possible that the Solicitor General may still be alive to see those dark days when we have absolutely exploited every last bit of natural resource and there is no backup.

Contrast Peter Lougheed with every successive Premier of Alberta that we've seen since. His advice was taken at the time. He was innovative. He developed the notion of the investment worthiness of our oil sands. Peter Lougheed has been saying: "What have you done to my heritage trust fund? I put forward a good idea. I put forward a savings account. Why do you keep drawing from it?"

Another idea that was less, I guess, mercurial or less debatable that the Liberals put forward that this government actually accepted was the idea of a stability fund or a sustainability fund. We go back two years ago, and we had $17 billion in that sustainability fund. Check your balance now, Conservative members. We're somewhere around $3 billion. What happens if that rosy projection that we received in the name of a budget speech on Thursday doesn't come true? What if the prices of our nonrenewable resources are affected by a global market? What if European circumstances draw down the debt to such an extent that there is a further collapse of our economic market? The U.S. is very slowly coming out of a very deep depression, but it's got a long way to go.

Something else that has a long way to go: it may seem like only 1,700 kilometres to the coast, to Kitimat, but the reality is that no matter how fast Stephen Harper tries to speed up the proposed Gateway discussions, there is a great deal of opposition. Unless we call out the troops and run roughshod, we've got a problem.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and then the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has certainly raised an interesting proposition in that motion, one option that might be considered were the government to find it necessary to raise money to provide for its essential services. However, in the present situation that's certainly not the case. It's not even within the foreseeable future since we do have a sustainability fund and we've saved for the eventuality of low resource revenues and we're even projecting very significant surpluses in the very near future. The hon. member is implying that the current tax structure is not working for Albertans and that this so-called progressive tax rate would be a better way to go and a better way of taxing Albertans.

The hon. member's proposition, however, I think has some holes in it. Like my honourable friend the Solicitor General has said, there's a large amount of proportionality already built into our system, and that is because of the fact that we have these things called personal exemptions. Before you ever get taxed, you're allowed to deduct a certain amount of your income, and that recognizes the fact that people have certain living requirements, that they need a certain amount of income to live by.

Alberta is really already on a blended proportional tax regime in that respect because of the fact that we have a 10 per cent tax only on that taxable portion of income. In 1999, when the Treasurer at that time announced the provincial government was going to be converting to a flat-tax rate of 11 per cent, we were already tied to a de facto progressive rate before that time because we tied it to the percentage of the federal tax structure. In 2001 our flat tax was reduced even further to 10 per cent, which it now stands at.

It brings up the idea and the concept and the issue of: what's a fair share for people of different earning levels to pay? I would suggest that if you look at the performance of our economy here in Alberta, according to the latest statistical data we have grown by nearly 100,000 people in a single year. From 2010 up to December of 2011 almost 100,000 people have come into Alberta. They came here seeking better opportunities, and they're also benefiting from the Alberta advantage. They voted with their feet, and they voted for our economic system. They voted for our tax system, which has now the lowest overall taxes in the country.

We have average weekly earnings that are growing at a rate of almost 5 per cent every year. In other places they are remaining stagnant. We have the highest wages in the country, which are around 20 per cent above the national average. Mr. Speaker, because a flat tax rate is a percentage of taxable income, the proportion of income tax paid on that taxable income is the same for each and every Albertan even if they have more than the personal exemption. As the hon. Solicitor General stated and as I started off with, the practical result is a degree of progressiveness already infused into the system.

Mr. Speaker, almost 2.7 million Albertans file a personal income tax return. Of those, 1.9 million pay federal income tax while only about 1.7 million, or about 63 per cent, pay provincial income tax. That means about 37 per cent of Albertans don't pay a single dime of provincial income tax, and I would submit that, in fact, the personal exemption, which is presently indexed and which goes up every year, is a far more important factor to those individuals in Alberta who are in the low-income category. It's a far more important factor to them than it is converting to some sort of a progressive tax system, and I believe that's an illustration of the fact that the flat tax is serving us very, very well. We have already provided for those Albertans which are in the low-income categories. We have something that is already very progressive.

One other final comment, Mr. Speaker, I would add. If you look at the way taxes are paid in Alberta, of those who do pay – as I said, approximately 63 per cent are paying income tax – the top 10 per cent of earners are contributing about 57 per cent of the income revenue generated in the province, so they're already paying more. They pay more for every dollar that they earn.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I think that the flat tax as it is now structured, with a basic personal exemption, is at the very core of Albertans' values. We're pioneers. We're entrepreneurs. We're self-starters. We value entrepreneurship, we value hard work, and we want people to be rewarded for that hard work. I believe that the tax structure that we have presently in place, with the 10 per cent flat tax, is fair, equitable, and consistent with what this government proposes. It's conservative values at its core.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, then the hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to be able to rise to speak in favour of this motion. I am a proud member of what I believe was really the only caucus at the time this government embarked upon this unfortunate path a decade ago towards the introduction of a flat tax, the NDP, to completely reject any form of flattening of our tax structure. I was looking back through history, and at the time we were, in fact, the only caucus to do that because we believe that progressive taxation is the way you ensure fair contribution to the political and the collective benefit of our province and our community.

As anyone, to use the words of the Solicitor General, who's taken a most basic economics course will tell you, a flat tax is, in fact, a regressive tax. It's a regressive tax because what you do is that you're looking at disposable income, and by looking at disposable income, you see that with the introduction of a flat tax low-income and medium-income Albertans pay more.

What happened when the flat tax was introduced here in Alberta in January of 2001? Well, basically, it is true that a fairly generous exemption was put in place, so low-low-income Albertans did not pay tax, and that was fine, but middle-income Albertans received no benefit from the introduction of the flat tax. No benefit. They continued to have to pay exactly what they'd been paying before, and that was the case for people earning up to $60,000 a year, which in 2000 encapsulated the majority of middle-income Albertans at the time. Those who earned between $60,000 and $100,000 a year – and this again was in the year 2000 – saw a 1.14 per cent drop in their taxes. Those who earned over $100,000 a year saw a 2.76 per cent drop in their taxes. Clearly, the more you made, the more this government delivered for you. The wealthier you were, the more this government did for you.

Well, let's just ask ourselves. Maybe that was a fair comment. Maybe we need to give more to the rich because they're just going to be so much wiser with their money than the government would be. So let's give more to the rich, and everything will work out better for everyone even though the vast majority of middle-income earners paid the same or more than they did before.

Well, what did that bring about for us? It brought about for us this ongoing roller coaster of provincial financial management that attaches us to the revenue stream that comes from the oil and gas industry, which is very unpredictable. It involves a tremendous amount of political gamesmanship on the part of the members of this government, and over the long haul it also involves some incredibly irresponsible planning and policy decisions.

What kinds of things does that middle-income family, that family that in the year 2000 was earning between $30,000 and $60,000 a year, gain from it? Well, they gained increased school fees. They gained the delisting of a number of health care services. They gained huge cuts to our environmental regime and, thus, to the overall value of our collective environmental enjoyment. They saw cuts to special-needs funding for special-needs kids. They saw a gargantuan, unprecedented increase in university tuition. They saw a growing and unaddressed crisis with respect to how we care for our seniors. We have in long-term care a shortage of probably about 1,500 to 2,000 beds, and when we look at seniors' care overall, we're probably looking at about a 30,000-bed shortage. That's what we saw. We see a growing infrastructure deficit. We see schools which are falling apart around us, with the government trying to close community schools as a result of that.

Perhaps even more importantly than all of this, Mr. Speaker, we see an absence of savings. We see the failure to plan for when we have to make that economic transition in this province. The fact that we have, you know, whatever it is right now, a few billion in the sustainability fund and $12 billion, $13 billion, $14 billion, $15 billion in the heritage trust fund: that is shameful when you compare the amount of resource generation in this province to what happens in other jurisdictions. It is absolutely shameful. We are without question the richest jurisdiction in the world, yet we have nothing, almost nothing to show for it.

We cannot plan. We cannot say to our kids or our grandkids: we're leaving you with the best. Almost definitely we are going to be saying to our kids and our grandkids, "We're leaving you with a leaky roof and a bunch of poisoned ponds and poor air quality," and "Oh, by the way, we're coming to live in your basement because we have no long-term care spots." That's what we're doing for our kids and for our grandkids, and we're doing that so we can have a flat tax and ensure that the rich get more money than they would otherwise.

Economists know that when you're looking at disposable income, when you get to the very wealthy, there is a law of diminishing returns. When you get past a certain level, the very wealthy don't invest in their community. They don't invest in their local economy. They buy shares in international corporations. They buy things outside of their local economy. The fact of the matter is that the wealthier people get, the less likely that money stays in their local economy. Yet that's what this government has decided they want to do. It's not wise. It's not a long-term solution.

The other thing, of course, that the NDP is very keen on is ensuring that we actually look at the corporate tax structure in this province. Ironically in some ways, the Member for Edmonton-

Riverview has compiled a very intelligent argument around why we need to reconsider the structure of our corporate tax regime in this province. I say ironic because, unfortunately, his caucus voted to reduce that corporate tax on three separate occasions over the course of this decade. It's good that at this point there seems to be an understanding that over the long haul this is not the way we can run our province.

We need to ensure that we collect enough revenue to be able to invest fairly in the kinds of things that matter to regular Albertans and their families. We cannot be constantly saying to them: "Oh, well, you know, the goose that laid the golden egg" – I think that is one person's phrase – "is not laying this week. You guys need to stuff those other 20 kids into that classroom because we've decided not to hire any more teachers." You know, you'd think I'm exaggerating, but we've seen that kind of chaos in the education system over just the last two years with the now-you-see-it, now-you-don't political funding regime that this government has adopted with respect to our education system.

I've seen my kids' class sizes go from 18 to 31, back down to 18. I've seen teachers come and teachers go because from year to year these guys can't get it together to tell school boards how much money they're going to give them. If they do tell them, they tell them way too late, and they've created more chaos. That kind of funding might be acceptable for an economy that is in crisis, for a regime that is in crisis, that is brand new, that has no idea how to run the government, but for a group of people that have been here for 40 years, who are sitting on the most resources of any jurisdiction in the world, it's shameful. It's shameful.

What we need to do is develop a structure, a tax regime, that will ensure that everybody pays their fair share.

The other thing that the NDP would do, in addition to considering the concept of progressive taxation, would be to ensure that we actually review the issue of the royalty regime. This government got really nervous and scared when the oil industry found themselves a new political party that threatened these guys, and they backed down on what most experts will agree was the right direction, but Albertans are still waiting for them to act on what most experts agree is the right direction.

If we do that and if we have a realistic tax structure, one that ensures that regular Albertans still pay a reasonable amount but that those who are the most wealthy start paying their fair share, then I think we can move forward in a way that is responsible and ultimately visionary, which is what Albertans deserve, because we have enough here that we should be able to be visionary. It's time, I believe, that we start acting in that way.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms DeLong: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I did want to rise, mainly to talk about taxes. The only reason we are talking about taxes today is because the opposition wants to raise taxes, which is so very strange, so very, very strange.

You know, there were some very, very intelligent moves made by the Conservative Party many, many years ago, and these moves are now resulting in the future growth of our income. The first one was that the government of the day decided that for this useless stuff up north called oil sands, this totally useless stuff up there that was leaking into the river, we would try to figure out how to make this profitable, and that's what we did. We went out and we invested in research and got the oil companies involved, and we actually came up with ways of turning this useless goo that was polluting the environment into something that could fuel people's cars and send planes all around the world and could power our industry and could bring income into the government of Alberta that could be used by all the people of Alberta. Well, this has been paying off, and it has been giving jobs to people, and we've been able to bring jobs to people from all over Canada into Alberta because of this move that was made way back then.

Then the next thing that they did was that they decided: "Okay. We want this thing to get going. We want people to be able to get going on these big, expensive projects." So we said: "Okay. Well, we'll only charge a 1 per cent royalty until it gets paid off. Then we're going to ramp that royalty right up." That's what we did. What's happening is that all of these investments are now starting to produce energy and produce money for us. Not only that, but a lot of these projects are now starting to get paid off. As soon as they start getting paid off, our royalties skyrocket.

These were decisions that were made long ago, and that is why we are projecting a surplus in the near future. It's not because of our estimates of what the price of oil is. I mean, the estimates that we're coming up with for the price of oil are extremely conservative. What is ramping up our income is that projects are actually starting to produce oil, and they are starting to pay out, so our income goes way, way up. Why would anybody want to start increasing taxes? Why? It just makes no sense to us. If you really understand how this industry is set up, you would understand that there is absolutely no reason to be able to talk about increasing taxes. I just wanted to make that point.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege for me to rise today in this Assembly to speak to Motion 501, brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. The motion urges the government to do away with our flat-rate income tax and to introduce a progressive income tax that would increase with one's income.

As we all know, Albertans enjoyed our flat-rate tax and hence a low-tax system for roughly a decade now. Over 10 years ago our province took a bold step forward in favour of a lower tax rate for all Albertans. This government believes in offering a competitive and stimulating economic environment, and our own income tax policy is directly related to that principle.

Mr. Speaker, I talk to many people in my constituency on a daily basis, and I just want to say that I have not talked to one single solitary person in four years that has asked us to change our tax rate. The government is fiscally responsible and will continue to provide a sophisticated level of services and programs for Albertans at our current rate of taxation and, I dare say, a level of services and programs that are the envy of anyone in not only Canada but in North America and most of the English-speaking world. Albertans expect and receive first-class services and programs. The truth of the matter is that they do not wish to pay more income tax, nor do they need to.

The economic success of Alberta has been firmly rooted in prudent policies that benefit all Albertans. As I said before, in 2012 employment growth is set to increase by another 3.8 per cent. Alberta's single tax rate system helps the province to attract and retain highly skilled individuals that are necessary to grow the province's economy and thus provide a higher standard of living.

Mr. Speaker, I am an immigrant and one of those people who came to Alberta 11 short years ago. I am one of the 30,000 to 100,000 people that we need to attract to our province in the next few years for the shortage of workers that we have to continue to grow this economy, that is second to none in North America. We need to have the ability to be able to attract people.

I was one of those people who had a choice. I moved from Ontario. I moved to Quebec. Then I moved to Seattle. Moving from Quebec to Seattle, I saw my income tax rate drop by half. I took home 50 per cent more money after two weeks in Seattle than I did in Quebec, living in Montreal. When I decided to look for a place to locate and to raise my family, I chose Alberta. It was not just some willy-nilly idea. I did my research.

My father, who was a former senior auditor with Revenue Canada, said: "Do your homework. Look at the numbers. They never lie." I looked at the different jurisdictions and compared the statistics. When I moved to Seattle, it was rated number 2 in North America back in 1995. Calgary was rated, I think, number 8, and Edmonton was rated number 15, the best places to live in North America bar none.

There were reasons. The price of gas was less, what you paid for groceries, your property taxes, what you pay for housing, all those other things. But the other thing that jumped out at me was the tax rate. Because Alberta was moving to a flat tax, it meant that it was going to be the lowest taxed jurisdiction in Canada. That meant that people wanted to go there because, Mr. Speaker, no matter what the opposition believes, we do not enjoy paying more taxes. Albertans do not enjoy paying taxes more than anybody else in Canada does.

In moving to Alberta, like many others I have a chance to put more money in our pockets, to reinvest it in our community, to give more money to charities, to spend more money to help with our education system, to put our kids through school, to give our kids and their families the opportunities that others would only hope for. But we do that because we have that ability because of the foresight of the governments that led before us. They were able to look at a system that was competitive, one that was attractive, and one that was the envy of everybody else, not only in Canada but in North America.

I hear the hon. members from across the way. One is saying that it was a gold-rush mentality, a glut of product in a world-wide situation. Well, the fact of the matter is that in terms of resources, when you're speaking about gas, we are in a global economy. As the hon. Solicitor General had mentioned, we are a province in a country in a global economy, and we have to realize that. We are not the ones who determine what the price of gas is, and they don't determine the price in Texas, but we are part of that. To those who say that it's better to be in Norway, I'd beg to differ. I'd beg you to find somewhere else that's better to live in the world today than Alberta.

It's not an unfortunate path we've gone down; it's one that has been thoughtful. There are 37 per cent of Albertans who don't have to pay tax, as was mentioned before, and those are the lowest socioeconomic strata. That's what a caring and just society does. We're also in a society where we're able to have one of the best educational systems in the English-speaking world. We have one of the best health care systems in Canada.

When I looked at paying a tax rate of 18 per cent in Washington state versus paying a 10 per cent flat tax here plus a federal tax, one of the things that I forgot about the difference between living here and there was that you had publicly funded health care, and you had an education system that was second to none. You couple that with everything else that we have here – the ability to keep a job, to be able to get a job, to be able to go to work, be able to support your family in the fashion that we'd all like to do – and I believe we have to continue on the course that has so rightly been directed for the last 40 years and the last 10 years.

I do not support this motion.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 8(3) provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close the debate. I'd now invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close debate on Motion 501.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I was hoping to be engaged by the members opposite, but I'm afraid they rather met my low expectations, and I'm sorry about that.

A number of you made the same mistake and started talking immediately about how the current flat tax has a number of exemptions on the bottom end that would take care of working low-income, low-income, or truly poverty-stricken people, and that's not what I was talking about. I think the point is that in any tax structure the society is going to look for ways to look after those that have very few resources. I take that as a given, and I would expect to see that in any tax structure that was in place. So I don't find it a very compelling argument against having, for example, those with over $100,000 of taxable income pay a 3 per cent higher rate. The two things do not go together, and I don't find it a compelling reason.

I think there's a larger issue here. If you all want to step back to the 10,000-foot level and look at the fact that that nonrenewable energy is being spent as part of our operating budget every single day in this province, it is already problematic for us. We can't save it. We are using those resources, and they will begin to diminish in our lifetime. We, the people responsible for this, are not taking any steps to try and save that money for the future.

How do we replace the money out of the budget? You're going to have to look at increasing taxes. How difficult is that? Well, my point would be that you look at a fair tax structure, which is going to be taxing those that are making significantly more money, and they pay more taxes.

For all the arguments about people flocking here and migrating here because of our low tax structure, you know what? They come here for jobs. When you are living somewhere else and you don't have a job and you know that you could come to this province and get a job, you come here for a job. I appreciate the research that the Member for Calgary-North West did in choosing a place based solely on an income tax rate. Okay. That's what was important to him, but everybody else, I think, really comes here for the jobs, not for the tax rate.

The idea that somehow Alberta was built by lone, gun-slinging mavericks is completely wrong. We were built and able to achieve the success that we did in this province through a co-operative movement, through large families, through neighbours helping neighbours, through communities that built together, came together, and pooled resources so that everyone was able to take advantage of that.

That, indeed, is the same reason why we pool taxes, so that we can offer services to those that need them. Not everybody necessarily needs it. They don't need it every day. Maybe they never need it in their life. Nonetheless, the government is expected to provide those services, even things like disaster relief. I'm sure there were some very wealthy people in Medicine Hat that got flooded, and they would expect to be able to come to the government and get some relief as a result of what they had suffered.

I will continue to advocate for a fair tax system. I will continue to advocate that we move the money from the nonrenewable resource revenue into a savings plan. I think that is prudent, and I also think it's responsible for the generations that come after me.

You know what? I don't have kids. I don't have to worry about them. I worry about your kids and your children's children and even beyond that because I feel there is a collective responsibility to the health and the long-term success of everything in this province, and sticking to a regressive tax system in which the middle-income people pay a significantly higher portion of their resources does not seem like a fair structure to me.

I'd hoped for some more interesting ideas to come out of the discussion today, but what I mostly heard was a reiteration of government rhetoric, so that was a bit disappointing. Nonetheless, I'm glad I was able to get it out there for discussion. I still would like to see a larger discussion take place amongst all Albertans along the lines of a citizens' assembly, in which you bring together representatives and let them talk about it.

Thank you very much.

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, the chair wishes to call the Committee of Supply to order.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Supplementary Supply Estimates 2011-12, No. 2 General Revenue Fund

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much. I'm rising on behalf of the hon. Deputy Premier and President of the Treasury Board. Mr. Chairman, I would like to move the 2011-2012 supplementary supply estimates, No.2, for the general revenue fund. The estimates will provide additional spending authority to one office of the Legislature and eight government departments.

When passed, Mr. Chair, the estimates will authorize an increase of $3.1 million – that's million with an "m" – in voted expense and capital investment to the Legislative Assembly and increases of $97.6 million in voted expense. The estimates will also authorize, when passed, a transfer of approximately $30 million from capital investment to expense within the Department of Municipal Affairs.

These estimates are consistent with the third-quarter fiscal updates, which updated the 2011-2012 fiscal plan for all government entities. The estimates will authorize increases for the following: the office of the Chief Electoral Officer and the departments of Human Services; Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations; Justice; Municipal Affairs; Seniors; SGPS; Tourism, Parks and Recreation; and Transportation. Finally, Mr. Chair, the estimates will authorize a transfer from the capital investment expense within the Department of Municipal Affairs.

The ministers that are responsible for these departments will be pleased to answer any questions from members of the House from either side. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, Deputy Government House Leader.

Before we proceed, I just want to direct the procedure here. We have a speaking time of 10 minutes each or the minister and the other member combined for 20 minutes, with a minimum of three hours of debate.

With that, the chair shall now recognize the Minister of Transportation.

Transportation

Mr. Danyluk: Okay. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Transportation requests a supplementary estimate of $29.4 million in the expense vote. This is the net of two numbers. The first amount is $80 million, which reflects additional funding provided in the 2011-12 budget for GreenTRIP initiatives, programs to meet eligible project commitments.

Mr. Chair, secondly is $50.6 million available internally from lower than budgeted spending and other federal-provincial programs within the Transportation 2011-12 budget. This primarily reflects cost savings realized from completed projects in the infrastructure stimulus program and also the building Canada communities component top-up as a result of these federal programs being completed in October 2011.

Mr. Chairman, the $80 million offset by the $50.6 million results in a net supplementary estimate of $29.4 million. I ask all members to support this request for the $29.4 million estimate.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Would you like to do 20 minutes together or 10 each?

Dr. Taft: I think that the two of us are co-operative and efficient enough that it won't take anywhere close to 20 minutes, but perhaps we can just treat it as one exchange, like an intelligent conversation between two adults, two charming, well-meaning public servants.

The Chair: Twenty minutes. Go ahead.

Dr. Taft: All right. I'm just really looking for a little bit more detail, mostly, from the minister. I'd like to get on the record that I'm a big supporter of the GreenTRIP program. If I understand this correctly – this is really what I'm looking for some clarification on from the minister – because of $50 million or so savings elsewhere in the department and then a supplementary amount of $29 million there will be another $80 million going into GreenTRIP for this current year. Can the minister just elaborate a bit on where that money is going? The LRT runs through my constituency, and I think this is the way of the future, and I'd like a little more detail. Anything that this money sets up for the future would also be great for the minister to get on the record.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Chairman, I mean, I'm very enthused by the hon. member's support for the program because I think it is a very good program, and it is an opportunity to support municipalities such as Edmonton and Calgary.

This is funding that has been applied for. There was an allocated budget for GreenTRIP. This was an opportunity to ensure that municipalities were able to access this funding as soon as possible. You are absolutely right. It's $80 million that came from $50.6 million that was offset by the particular programs and an additional $29.4 million added to that, which I'm asking for today, to give to municipalities. That is for programs that were approved, programs that have been accepted, and programs that had been expended if that helps.

The Chair: Hon. member, continue.

Dr. Taft: Thanks. Let me come at it a little bit differently. By having the $80 million available now, what are we able to do now that we wouldn't have been able to do otherwise? For example, the LRT expansion in Edmonton to NAIT or some of the lines in Calgary that are getting built: does this connect specifically to any of those? What would not have happened if this $80 million hadn't been provided? I'm looking for details, Mr. Minister, just because I think it's a good-news story.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Chairman, I want to say to you that those programs were applied for, and those programs would have been received when we looked at the '12-13 budgets – right? – as we have. What this did do is provide an opportunity for additional funding this year. It really gave municipalities an opportunity to get some funding for projects that they had already applied for, projects that they had already built. We were able to give them the funding.

I guess what I'm trying to say is that we have a certain budget, which we will debate later – and I'm sure you'll ask some questions on that – and that budget will be distributed to the municipalities for projects that they have applied for. We're trying to disburse as much as we possibly can. We understand the importance of GreenTRIP to municipalities. This was an opportunity to be able to use some of that funding and use it towards GreenTRIP and support the municipalities as quickly as possible.

Dr. Taft: Okay. That does it for me. Thank you.

Mr. Hehr: This might just be part of my information here. You may just be helping me out on that. It's my understanding that this was a $2 billion fund set up by the government and that you have divvied up a certain amount of funds. I guess I'd like to know how much you have divvied up and how much would be left in the GreenTRIP program in total and, if you care to share, whether more information is coming out in the future on GreenTRIP. I, too, think it's a valuable program that needs to develop to get cars off the road, to look good in the world community, and all that stuff.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. This is what I consider a carbon reduction program, which is great. Not only is it a carbon reduction program; it assists individuals to be more mobile. The GreenTRIP program, as mentioned, is a $2 billion program. The essence of that program is $800 million for Calgary, $800 million for Edmonton, $400 million for rural Alberta. What we have looked at in our budgets is seeing, of course, what we can try to deliver, which we have, delivering the programs that municipalities are working on and, I want to say to you, those predominantly being Edmonton and Calgary. Edmonton is maybe further ahead in the application process, and I mean in the delivery of it. When those applications were done, this was an opportunity to ensure that we could deliver more funding to them in a more expedient way. That's what we're trying to do. That's the whole purpose of it.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I agree. You should try and get these projects up and going as fast as you can. I just wonder if you know, out of the whole $2 billion that has now been allocated and spent, how much is remaining?

Mr. Danyluk: $1.2 billion.

Mr. Danyluk: No, no. I don't want to say that $1.2 billion has been expended but has been spoken for, that we're trying to deliver at this time.

If I could say, hon. member, that we see more interest for the $400 million as municipalities from rural Alberta are looking at different ways that they could utilize that program basically in the same way that large urban centres do. It's a little bit more difficult in rural areas because, of course, of the amount of population that's out there. It does create the opportunity for municipalities to work together to look at what they can do to try to achieve, you know, the same goals.

The Chair: There's no other hon. member wishing to speak on Transportation?

Next we go to the Minister of Justice.

Justice

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to take this opportunity to discuss the supplementary supply estimates required for the 2009 Judicial Compensation Commission. The commission was mandated to make recommendations for changes in compensation for Alberta's Provincial Court judges and masters in chambers covering the period April 1, 2009, to March 31, 2013. Before I go into the details of the recommendations, I would like to briefly review the background of the commission.

The Supreme Court of Canada has imposed a constitutional obligation on all governments to set compensation for judges through an independent, objective, and effective compensation commission process. The compensation commission advises governments about the appropriate level of compensation for judges and other judicial officers. This is to ensure that public confidence in the independence of the judiciary is not undermined.

The commission's report was presented to me on September 12, 2011. The total projected additional cost to the government of the commission's recommendations apart from a full pension recommendation, which was rejected, is $43.7 million over four years. This amount is broken down as follows, and these are round figures: $20 million for salary increases, $22 million for pension cost increases due to proposed salary and pension indexing increases, $400,000 for professional allowance increases, $200,000 for administrative stipend increases, and $800,000 for per diem rate increases. The total request for this fiscal year is $35.7 million less an existing provision in the budget of $7.6 million. The significant costs for 2011-12 are due to the JCC approval being retroactive to April 1, 2009. The additional cost for the next fiscal year is $8 million. The supplementary supply estimate I am requesting today is for $28.1 million.

This concludes my presentation on the supplementary estimates required to implement the recommendations of the 2009 Judicial Compensation Commission that have been accepted by government. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, just back and forth?

Mr. Hehr: Oh, yeah. Thank you very much for that question.

I was just seeking some information about – and there was some reference to it in the newspapers – what the details of that compensation package were and, I guess, what we agreed to from 2009 to now and what we have agreed to going forward with the contract with our judicial partners.

Mr. Olson: I'll provide some summary of what this means for individual judges. I believe that's what the hon. member is perhaps asking. From April 1, 2009, to March 31, 2010 – let me go back a step and say that currently a Provincial Court judge makes $220,000. For April 1, 2009, to March 31, 2010, that would increase from $220,000 to $250,000. For April 1, 2010, to March 31, 2011, it would be $255,000. For April 1, 2011, to March 31, 2012, and for April 1, 2012, to March 31, 2013, it would increase by the percentage amount of the year-over-year increase, if any, in the Alberta consumer price index for the preceding calendar year. There are also stipends for administrative judges, so salary differentials are increased by $5,000, from $15,000 to $20,000, and there is a step up each year. I can give you all of the details if you'd like.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I'd like to follow up with the Alberta consumer price index. I know we signed the last teachers' contract to the Alberta weekly wage index. How does the Alberta consumer price index work? Is that relative to the rate of inflation? What comprises that statistic, and why was it chosen?

Mr. Olson: I'm going to give the hon. member my best effort to answer that question. Pension indexing and so on has never been one of my strong points.

I do know that there were some submissions made as to how those calculations should be done. Our position was that the Alberta consumer price index is what should be used, and that was more favourable for us, the payer. It was a more favourable measure than the other recommendations that were given.

Mr. Hehr: Are there any estimates currently of what the Alberta consumer price index is supposed to be over the upcoming years?

Mr. Olson: Well, the whole purpose of using a measure like the consumer price index is because we don't know what it's going to be; therefore, you have to have something to tie it to. I think it's reasonable to use something like the Alberta consumer price index because, obviously, that's something that's relevant to Alberta and, I would think, would be a fair measure.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just a quick question, hon. minister. Obviously, one of the points that our party, our caucus has made over and over again is the need to keep wages under control and the need to have that start at the top by example because it gives the Alberta government a better bargaining position when we deal with all negotiations in the public service. So I was a little concerned to see the judges' salary tied to the average weekly wage index. Certainly, over the last several years it seemed like an index that greatly outpaces inflation, the cost of living. I would just like to ask again if you could explain why you didn't tie it to inflation and why you went with the average weekly wage index when I think that's probably something that the government seems to be trying to get away from when it comes to negotiations with other unions, with other public-sector employees.

Mr. Olson: I'm sorry I don't have the report with me, which, by the way, is available online. The report does talk about the various submissions that were made. My recollection of my discussion with my department when we discussed the index in question is that this was a more favourable measure than the other position that was being taken.

I'm sorry I don't have any more detail than that for the hon. member, but I'd be happy to do some more checking on that and get back to him.

Mr. Anderson: To be clear, in other words, the report that came back with the recommendations didn't give – an inflationary cost adjustment wasn't one of the options that you had to work with, and you had to work with one of the options given. Is that kind of how it worked?

Mr. Olson: Maybe I could just talk a little bit about the commission, how it's constituted and the rules within which we have to work. This is not a traditional type of negotiation. The whole point of there being a commission is that we can't negotiate with the judges. So we appointed a representative, the judges appointed a representative, and then a third representative was appointed. We made submissions, the judiciary made submissions, and there were a few independent submissions. The report that came back was unanimous. Even our own representative was supporting the recommendation that was made.

The report comes to me, and then I have 120 days to respond. The Supreme Court has set out criteria that we have to follow in terms of a response, and it never can get to the point of a negotiation: "Well, if you would agree to this, then we would consider that." It's basically accept or reject. If you reject, you have to set out the reasons why you would be rejecting. There was one part of the proposal that we did reject in terms of full indexing, but on everything else we didn't feel as though we would be able to win the day if we had to take the next step, which would be an application for judicial review if it went to that. So we essentially followed the recommendation.

Of course, I can say that we, too, would have preferred to have paid less, but the thing that makes it even more substantial is the fact that it's retroactive. I think that probably it had been in 2005 that the Provincial Court judges and masters had had an increase, so now this comes three years into the next cycle. That's the reason for the big ask here today.

Mr. Hehr: I guess I have two questions. I understand the need for public servants to be reasonably paid commensurate with what their counterparts are making across the country. I'm just wondering and for a little more clarification: is the consumer price index the same as the Alberta weekly wage index? Is that what we base this on?

Mr. Olson: No.

Mr. Hehr: No, they're not. Okay.

Did you base the judges' salary on the Alberta weekly wage index or on the consumer price index? I guess that's my first question.

Mr. Olson: I'm just going to look back at my notes. Just bear with me for a second while I find my notes. The Alberta consumer price index.

Maybe I could just offer a few more pieces of information, which the hon. member may be interested in. As of April 1, 2009, Alberta judges ranked seventh in terms of pay. If you include the federal judges, it would be eighth. With this increase they would for a short time be ranked first, and that would be for 2009-10 and '10-11. By the time you get to 2011-12, they would be ranked second behind Ontario judges.

In terms of pension the pension adjustments in this proposal would bring them in line with most other judges in the country. They had been lower ranked in terms of pension.

Mr. Hehr: I guess a follow-up question. You indicated that your salary reviews of masters in chambers and other judges fell behind. Is there a plan in place to do a more regularly patterned negotiation? Is this scheduled by law, or is there some process put in place so that we're not having to go back in time to settle things and have more predictable and sustainable amounts coming out of the treasury going forward?

Mr. Olson: I'd like to thank the hon. member for that question because it's the same question I asked when I became involved in this process. My understanding is that this seems to have been the practice. It's a four-year cycle. A commission is struck, and the resolution comes some time in the cycle. There's nothing I can do until I receive the report of the commission. The commission was struck and went to work. Once they report to us, that triggers a response that comes from government.

I think that's a reasonable question, and it's one that I'm thinking about already. This would cover us until April 1, 2013, so we have a little bit of time to figure it out before the next one comes.

Mr. Hehr: Well, just a suggestion. You know, obviously, you've got some very highly qualified people on this, and possibly you could give some parameters and some outlines of when you'd want the report back. That might behoove them to do their job a little more quickly. I understand that they're on their timelines, but the government needs to know what their costs are going to be, and so do the people. I just offer that as a suggestion. You probably get many suggestions. I know that.

Mr. Anderson: If I could, by way of suggestion I would just say, too, that one of the reasons, I think, that you have – it would make sense that this commission would say that we should adjust it to the average weekly wage index because, for example, that's what everyone in this House technically is supposed to be indexed to. I think it's really important for the government on that side, when the new report comes up from Justice Major and so forth, to take that into consideration because if we could tie the salaries in this House to the rate of inflation, I think that in the next report, when they do this with the judges and other like individuals, they'll probably tie it to that same amount. You could see a committee member saying, "Well, if the MLAs are getting indexed to the average weekly wage index, then surely the judges should, too." So if we could maybe start with an example for ourselves going forward, tie it to the inflation rate, I think it would be good savings for the taxpayer.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Yes. I just had a couple of quick questions, and I apologize if you've already gone over them because I was a little bit late coming in. Is there currently a connection, some kind of link between a deputy minister's salary, between our public servants' salaries and the judges' either one way or the other?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chair, it's my understanding that this commission looks at what other judges as well as senior civil servants make across the country, but I think one of the principles in terms of judicial compensation is that the judiciary is different and unique. As far as I know, there is no mandate to tie it in any way to that. Although the commission may well have considered those types of things, in fact, I think the principle is that there is a uniqueness to the judiciary and its independence that does set them apart, and they need to be considered separately.

Ms Notley: I'm just wondering. Please forgive me if this sounds a little bit like I'm sticking a pencil in your eye; I don't mean it to. With the submissions that were made on the part of the government to the commission, was there any consideration of the argument with respect to, for instance, the Alberta earnings index, that, of course, this government had fundamentally rejected for people receiving minimum wage in this province and that we'd clearly decided they were not entitled to have, that kind of indexing formula attached to the minimum wage, and that perhaps when dealing with something that's very much on the other end of the scale, that the same kind of consideration ought to have been put in place? Has the government considered the clear contradiction in those two positions it has taken? Just scanning very quickly online here over this submission that went from the government to the commission, I don't see any mention of that in there.

Mr. Olson: Well, the government representatives made numerous recommendations. In terms of the indexing it was my understanding that, again, there were several options and that the option we have here is one that was more favourable to government than some of the other options that were being considered. I'm sorry. I don't have access to the report right in front of me here, but I'd be happy to have a further discussion with the member about that.

The Chair: Any hon. member? Edmonton-Gold Bar on this subject?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. On this subject, Mr. Chairman. I've been listening with interest to the exchange between the hon. members on this side of the House and the Minister of Justice. When we look at the $28 million request that we're debating this evening and we look at the provincial judges' and masters in chambers' pension plan, the expenses for the pension plan for the year ended March 31, 2011, were $10.1 million and for the year previous to that $9.3 million. With this new salary rate, or with this latest adjustment, how will this affect the pension plan if at all?

Mr. Olson: In my earlier comments I provided a breakdown which said that the total cost over four years is $43.7 million for what the implications of this report are and the acceptance of this report. The amount is broken down as $20 million for salary increases, $22 million for pension cost increases due to salary and pension indexing increases, and then assorted other costs for things like professional allowances, administrative stipends, and so on. The global amount over four years is $22 million. The cost for moving on from this year forward is $8 million, the additional cost.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. That leads to my next question on the liability that has been created as a result of this adjustment. Now, for the provincial judges and masters in chambers in 2010 there was a liability in the pension plan of $11 million. I believe it was reduced – it's just a global amount in a schedule in the financial statements – to what is now a $2 million liability. Will this liability be going down or up in the next couple of years as a result of these adjustments?

Mr. Olson: I'm not sure I understood the question. Again, I can say that it's $8 million for the next year, which includes salary and pension. Obviously, a portion of that is a pension liability.

Mr. MacDonald: But you don't know as we're debating this what portion of that $8 million will be used for this pension liability of $2 million or if there will be an additional liability created as a result of this adjustment?

Mr. Olson: I'm just trying to do the math quickly, and I probably won't do a very good job of it. These will be very, very general numbers. There are approximately 150 judges, but they're not all full-time line judges. There are some part-time judges in there and supernumerary judges and so on. If you multiply that by the $30,000 raise per year, basically, from $220,000 to $250,000, whatever that number is subtracted from $8 million would be roughly the pension contribution.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. member on this subject?
The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Municipal Affairs

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise today requesting support for an additional $18,300,000 for the Alberta Emergency Management Agency disaster recovery at the Slave Lake wildfire, to be offset by $523,000 in savings from ministry support services, for a total of $17,777,000 requested.

I'd also like approval for a transfer of capital investment. The details of that are that Municipal Affairs was approved to spend $30 million in the budget for housing accommodations, interim housing for the Slave Lake wildfire, when, in fact, it was the Alberta Social Housing Corporation that eventually expended the $30 million to purchase the properties. So it's simply a transfer of a preapproved amount from Municipal Affairs over to Slave Lake.

I'd ask for members to support this request.

The Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Any hon. member wishing to join the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's indeed a pleasure to engage the minister in some discussions on this. I think the government has been widely commended for its response to the Slave Lake disaster, and I think even beyond that, the people of Slave Lake deserve enormous credit for the courage and determination they've shown.

The resources that are going into rebuilding the houses and buildings in Slave Lake: I have a question for the minister on this. You know, I can't pull it off the top of my head, Mr. Chairman, but there are a number of examples over the last century . . .

An Hon. Member: Here are some.

Dr. Taft: Yeah. That's not what I'm looking for. You can raise that.

There are a number of examples in the last century of cities destroyed by fire or earthquake or other disaster rebuilding to a higher standard. [interjections] You know, a couple of people have mentioned Chicago right now – and that's true – and long before that, London was like that, but I was thinking on a much smaller scale. I think there's a town in Norway that was destroyed by a disaster or fire earlier in the 20th century that rebuilt, and there's one in New Zealand. These are smaller centres like Slave Lake.

What I'm setting up here, Mr. Chairman, is this. As terrible as this disaster was, it is also an opportunity to begin with a clean slate, shall we say, in terms of rebuilding a town and its buildings to a higher standard. In particular, I'm interested in energy efficient building because I think there's a lot of, as I say, low-hanging fruit in Alberta just to be plucked, as it were, by investing in better buildings. That's a long set-up. Sorry, Mr. Minister, but really my question is this. Of the $18,300,000 that's here or other funding that your department has put into building houses and other buildings in Slave Lake, has there been any special emphasis put on pushing the limits on things like energy efficiency or, for that matter, fire protection in these buildings, or are they just being built generally to the standard levels?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I really appreciate the question, and I want to say thank you to the member for complimenting the citizens of Slave Lake for their efforts in rebuilding. It really was a demonstration of how powerful the human spirit can be when a third of the community burned down so tragically. Thankfully, there was no loss of life, but there was such a loss of personal possessions and memories. To see the people of Slave Lake and the Tri-Council come together and do the job that they did – I mean, I'm going to take this opportunity to also thank the previous ministers of housing and municipal affairs because I didn't do all of that great work in that circumstance. They did. There's been nothing but incredible co-operation in helping to rebuild that community.

In the budget $289 million was approved collectively for Slave Lake and the rebuilding enterprise. This isn't asking for more money; this is asking for an advance. This money goes specifically for development of the sites where the interim housing was put. The interim housing, that the Alberta Social Housing Corporation and Municipal Affairs in partnership, thankfully, with Infrastructure, that helped do a lot of the groundwork on the leveling of the land and such, simply goes to put up the trailers, which are good quality housing, but they're still interim housing and temporary housing.

The insurance companies that operate for the houses that burned down are the ones that are responsible for the rebuilding of new, permanent properties for the individuals. I'm not sure that the Tri-Council or the people in the community who would ultimately have responsibility for that are pushing new energy efficiency, but I can tell you that we have seen a couple of examples of people who have taken the opportunity to design a different house. Some of them are incorporating new environmental technologies. Some of them have taken the opportunity to downscale their housing a bit, which also improves the energy efficiency when they're not building grand mansions.

So there have been unique changes. But those changes are being driven, I confess, by the individuals who are rebuilding their properties in negotiations with the insurance companies that are covering the cost for the loss of those properties.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on this subject.

Mr. Hehr: Well, just following up on that, has the ministry maybe looked at this as an opportunity to point out some suggestions as to how to do best practices on redesigning a home in that area? Maybe you've done some proactive measures to look at fire safety or things of that nature.

The Chair: Minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you. I know that the Tri-Council and community members have been discussing issues around fire prevention and safety measures in the home. They've also been discussing it in the context of the community at large because nobody wants to see this happen again. So they've been discussing mitigation of another potential disaster.

It's really the Tri-Council – the First Nations settlement, the county, and the town – that have worked together to help with not just discussions about how to rebuild the homes and what new technologies they could use; they've talked in the context of rebuilding the entire community. I don't want this to come across negatively, but when a third of the community burned to the ground, some members of the community have really taken it upon themselves to look at it as an opportunity to build the community from the ground up, undoing any mistakes that may have developed from ad hoc development. They're really capitalizing on some of those opportunities when it comes to recreational services, the partnerships they have between the municipality and the library and the county, so that they can find economies of scale. We've discussed it, but I'd be reticent for the province to try and push those three councils to come up with a solution that's good for us. We really want them to come up with a solution that's good for their community going forward.

We have, actually, a couple of people who permanently have been working up there with the Tri-Council to work on how the funds are going to be allocated and what sort of new initiatives could be driven. But the ideas: we're really encouraging the municipalities to generate them.

The Chair: Any other hon. members?

Hon. Minister of Seniors, it's your turn.

Seniors

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you. There are two very important programs in our ministry, AISH and PDD, and I don't think I have to explain that to the members opposite. Of our $2.1 billion program Seniors is requesting an additional $11.3 million for these two vital programs. The amount will be offset by a $1 million reduction in the capital funding under our affordable supportive living initiative. As you can see, on page 32 there is a clear explanation for the costs: $5.9 million for the caseload growth for financial assistance for AISH, $1.6 million for costs related to higher caseload growth and higher health benefits administration for health assistance, and $3.8 million for higher costs for the persons with developmental disabilities program. It pretty well explains itself.

Thank you.

Mr. Hehr: This might just be more of a comment than a question, but I'll see if the minister would like to respond. It just seems to me that the process we go about in giving AISH raises – I think we did one back in 2008, which was of about $200. We've now gone through one where we've given a $400 raise. I commend the minister for doing it, and I commend the Premier for following through on her promise in that regard. But it seems to me a little bit of a system whereby we're always having to go back to the drawing board and assess: what are the people who are in this difficult circumstance entitled to?

It seems to me from a political standpoint as well as, actually, feasibility for these people's lives that if you tied it to an inflation rate – let's just assume that you have a reasonably fair sum of money to have AISH recipients receive. If you compare it across the country, arguments are that it is a fairly fair rate. Of course, you know, you could do more. Of course you could do less. But it is what it is. If you tied it, then, to an inflationary thing, then it just takes the whole equation and takes the political out of it, takes out the necessity of people coming into my office four years from now and saying: "Look, the rate of inflation here has been 5 per cent a year. I'm making 20 per cent less." Then it would sort of keep them in a standard that would be reasonable, seemingly fair given this arbitrary number we've come across, and save the minister and the Premier the political angst of always having to go through with it and me always having people in my office saying: my AISH didn't go up this year.

Mr. VanderBurg: Fair comments, and I wondered why we haven't done it ourselves.

I will tell you that since 2005, if we would have taken your example of 5 per cent a year, it would have been a 35 per cent increase. Instead, we have an 87 per cent increase, the most generous program all across the country.

The predictability issue that you raise is fair, and it's something that I'm going to have some discussion on with my colleagues and with our staff to see if, indeed, there is a better way. But I have to tell you that with an 87 per cent increase since 2005, using your scenario, they'd be behind the eight ball.

Mr. Hehr: I understand that. We're basing it on whether the first amount was actually fair and reasonable. I'm not saying that that was. I'm saying that this number we're at now is much more fair and reasonable than it was in 2007. I'll grant you that. But on a going-forward basis, it seems that we've arrived at – arguments can be made both ways – a fairly reasonable place, in my view, where we can go. It would take the politics out of it as well as some of the personal angst out of it. Those are my only comments.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms. Notley: Thank you. I too, of course, am pleased to see the increase in payment to people receiving AISH. I will say that I can't go out into my community without people coming up to me, or previously coming up to me, and saying over and over and over again: "Do you think they're going to really do it? Do you think it will really happen?" I know that it meant a lot to those people because, of course, they were and still are, frankly, living below the poverty line. At the time it was that much more, you know, 87 per cent more, below the poverty line than they are now.

Just in terms of the comment that the last speaker was making around indexing and having regular increases built into the formula, not in any way to negate a review in the future about whether the base amount is adequate, perhaps you could bring the experience of the judges to the attention of your cabinet colleagues because, of course, we just spoke about how they were very successful at getting a very generous indexation formula applied to their raise. Perhaps we might want to try considering doing the same for recipients of AISH as well as those who are forced to live on the minimum wage. That aside, just a hint for future cabinet discussions.

I note that your increase is not large, but certainly a portion of it arises from a decrease in expenditure in the affordable supportive living initiative program. Now, obviously, we'll talk more about that when we get into full estimates because there's a much bigger decrease in this year's budget, but I'm wondering if you could explain what the source was of the in-year savings thus far to ASLI.

Mr. VanderBurg: First of all, that your constituents came in front of you and said: will they really do it? So did my constituents, and so did hundreds of callers from the time that this issue was raised until last week. Stay tuned. On March 27 the cheques will go out. That's the next question: when will we get this? You know, remind them that if they were getting the maximum benefit of $1,188 this month, they will get $1,588 next month, March 27. It's in the works.

I can tell you that, personally, I would have preferred to have spent that million dollars and built some more housing units, but as the program and the bidding process, where people bid into the ASLI program – we had the successful bidders of large projects; you know, 60 units, 80 units, 120 units. It was just the money left over based on the successful amount that we had. I think we had $67 million or something.

You're right. This upcoming budget: there's $25 million in it, and I'll defend that portion at a later time. It was just the leftover amount that we had out of that grant. Our choice was to either offset some other increases or find an innovative way to spend a million dollars. My choice was to do this.

Ms Notley: Okay. Well, that's a reasonable explanation.

The increase that you're seeking: I guess a significant portion of it basically amounts to a recalculation of the number of people who are eligible for AISH and the associated health benefits. I note that the same kind of dynamic has occurred most years, that in fact we end up having more eligible applicants than are budgeted for. I'm wondering if you can comment on the formula that's used to predict the number of eligible applicants and whether that can be improved so that we actually approve the correct amount of money when we're first going through the budget rather than having to come back because we've underestimated. I realize it's not a huge number that's been underestimated, but I do see that there appears to be a bit of a pattern year over year. I'm wondering what discussions there have been in that regard.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, there's no doubt that the caseload increase follows the population increase, and as our population in the province will increase, the caseload will. You can see that the curve that matches our population growth will match the case growth. It's the scenario that we've used from the history of the past years.

Once again, you know, $559 million was the current estimate for AISH, and we spent $565 million. Pretty close. It's not half a point. You know, it's pretty small. But the choice that I have is to spend the money, try to help these individuals out, or ignore them until the next budget year, until you approve my budget. To me that's not a choice.

I would rather come here, defend that the caseload was higher than we had predicted, beg you for some more money, and ask for forgiveness because ignoring those people and telling them to wait another six months or until we had the opportunity to be here this evening and get approval is not an option for me. So I'll spend the money; I'll take the heat. It's very small. I would say that seeing the process that our staff use – they're professional. They've used the best estimates they can.

Again, I will say that anything I can do to make sure that the person on the street, the Albertan that needs the help – I'll take the criticism for spending a few extra dollars.

Ms Notley: I was certainly not suggesting that you should be approving all those who were eligible because, obviously, the eligibility criteria should have absolutely no connection at all to what you budgeted. It should simply be who needs it because that's how the program is administered. I was simply inquiring as to whether there were plans afoot to try and tighten up a little bit the estimation, not necessarily suggesting that it's way off or anything but just to tighten it up a bit – that was all – always to ensure that everybody who is eligible receives the funding to which they're entitled.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. I, too, would like to note and commend the government and the Premier for their increase in AISH allowances or benefits. Certainly, it was the right thing to do, and it's long overdue.

It's interesting to note that that's a little over a 30 per cent increase, I think, yet we have persons with developmental disabilities getting by with a 5 per cent increase, and we're looking at $3.8 million for higher costs per case with persons with developmental disabilities in that program in this supplementary supply request.

Something that has been sort of overlooked in all of this is SFI, or social assistance benefits. The average per file or per caseload increase in this budget, Mr. Chairman, I think was around 5 and a half per cent. Certainly, if we're going to finally do the right thing with the AISH program, I think it's about time that we treat the persons with developmental disabilities program and SFI in the same manner.

Now, that being said, the million dollars that was made available through this supplementary amount is in affordable housing initiatives, I understand. I, too, would prefer to have seen that used for housing initiatives. Hopefully, next year the minister can at some point inform the House that that initiative is fully funded and working well.

However, specifically with AISH, is this going to be an example of giving with one hand? I think the minister said that in March, March 26 or 27, there will be a $1,588 benefit payable to a client of the program. Am I right and are citizens right in assuming that over 80 per cent, 83 per cent to be precise, of AISH clients cannot supplement their income through a part-time or a modest work program? Can the hon. minister confirm that for me, please?

Also, confirm that now that we're going to increase the payment, we're not going to start taking away benefits through the Blue Cross program for AISH clients. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this is not the example of giving with one hand and then taking away medical or drug benefits with the other hand. If I could have that assurance and the answer to: am I right in assuming that over 80 per cent of AISH clients cannot, will not, never will be able to supplement their income, but there is between 15 and 17 per cent that are or can expect one of their household to help out in that way?

Mr. VanderBurg: First of all, I want to correct a couple of things that you've said. PDD clients are on AISH, and they will get a raise as well. That's two different issues that you're talking about. Those that get $1,188 – that's the maximum cash benefit – will go up to $1,588.

I think you're right on your figures. It's about 17 per cent of those on AISH that are earning over and above their amount, and that exemption limit for a single person on AISH is $400 today. Next budget year it will be $800, so it's doubled. We'll be able to track that to see the employment opportunities that those AISH clients have to earn more.

Again, I'd like to correct you on the assumption that, you know, 80 per cent plus will never work. I think that with the right tools and with the right opportunity they may have some opportunities to work. There are some great service providers and some great agencies in your riding that offer some assistance and some employment training and partner with great local city businesses that allow them to learn some skills and earn some money. So I think that there is more opportunity. We've just got to bring that out.

Again, we're talking supplementary estimates, but looking ahead, there is no intention to decrease any medical benefit because there is a raise in pay. It's simply a raise in pay.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. To clarify to the hon. minister, I think last year the budget for PDD was $604 million or $608 million, somewhere around there, and when you compare the increase to that budget, I'm certain in this year it's 5 per cent. It has nothing to do with whether these individuals are or are not on AISH.

Now, how many of the AISH clients, what percentage or what number, will get the full benefit of $1,588?

Mr. VanderBurg: I don't have that figure with me tonight, but when we do the budget and talk about that, I'll have it. You're guaranteed that I'll have it because my staff is listening tonight, and they'll make sure that I'm armed with that.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wish to speak?

Mr. Hehr: To just add to the question from my hon. colleague for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I think we often do better for our AISH clients – and take that as a relative comment – than what we have traditionally done on SFI here in Alberta. I believe a report came out a couple of years ago comparing Alberta to the rest of Canada, and we scored highly on our AISH score, but we didn't do that well in supporting people who were out of work or single mothers or people who were on that program. That report highlighted that in other jurisdictions the people are (a) living in more dignity and (b) able to hopefully incorporate themselves back into some sort of measures. Although sometimes for political reasons it's easy for us – we take care of our assured income for the severely handicapped people better than any other province while we ignore the other people because it's an easier political sell. So I'd just ask the minister to consider that.

My actual question in this regard. Oftentimes people come into my office, and they're having a difficult time with organizing their AISH submission. Now, I should know this, but is there a detailed accounting on your website on how to present your AISH claim in that regard, and is there any way to sort of, I guess, ease the administrative burden on the people who are in your department, who then have to say to an individual, "Look, you may very well qualify, but this is nowhere near complete"? I'm sure that takes up a large portion of their time. They have to go back and appeal, and when their appeal isn't right, they have to go back and reapply, then, some other time later. Is there a streamline, for instance, some information out there? Maybe there is. I'm just asking a question.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, two parts to that. One of the issues that the Minister of Human Services and I are working on is to make sure that the programs we offer Albertans have some reason behind them. Remember, the AISH clients for the most part are not expected to work. Then there's a different class under support that are expected to work. They're in a transition period or a period of time where maybe they've had an injury or a hip replacement, and they need some supports for a small period of time. Usually those that are on AISH, they don't opt in and opt out. They have 46 per cent physical disabilities and 32 per cent mental disabilities, many of them both. You're not opting in and opting out. You know, you're looking for support, and the agencies that provide those 45,000-plus Albertans offer great supports. Like you said, when measured against other provinces: nothing even close in other provinces.

The other point that you raised on the AISH application. I can send you one over. It's pretty easy to follow. There's some steps on the website of how to prepare before you apply, you know, the doctor's certificate and your last financial records. But for the most part an AISH worker is needed to carry them through the application. It's not onerous. It's pretty clear. I've filled it out myself. I went through the process to make sure that I understood, that there wasn't a whole bunch of information. Information between departments can be shared. It's not onerous. It's a very transparent process.

There are appeals, and that's just the nature of the beast. When you have applications, not everybody gets what they want, and there's an appeal process. I know in my community I've heard about the process from people who have been there, and they found that they've been treated very well and very respectfully.

If you like, I can send you a copy of the application.

Mr. Hehr: Now I'll go find it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just wanted to put on the record on behalf of the Wildrose caucus our agreement and our support for the government raising the AISH payment $400 a month. We think that it's certainly a compassionate change that needed to be done. We agree very much with it.

This is a classic example where – I mean, obviously, roughly $200 million, a little over $200 million, is a lot of money, but in the grand scheme of things, when you look at the Health budget, when you look at the Education budget and so forth, it actually is a doable piece of money, and it goes a long, long way. It's very direct. It doesn't go through a big bureaucracy. The folks that receive it and their families can decide how to use it best for their needs. We very much think that this was a very good change. It is something that we've included in our alternative budget and is something that we will certainly vote for and support going forward.

We also like the idea – and it's my understanding, if you could just clarify it for me, Minister – that on a go-forward this will be indexed to the rate of cost of living index. Is that correct? No, it won't. We would suggest that it should be. We think that having it go up every year by the rate of inflation just makes sense. Again, that's a fair amount, and it makes up for, you know, the cost pressures that are going on today. I wonder: are there any plans that you have going forward to index that to inflation? Is that something that in the future, should you be the minister in several months, you're going to be asking your government to continue doing?

Mr. VanderBurg: First of all, thank you for the support, and I look forward to you standing beside me and approving the budget when this whole process is done. That will really confirm that you're all forward and supporting the budget, and I will need that. I'll need that from each and every colleague here, and you're all colleagues. It's all important to Albertans that this raise gets passed and that our budget gets passed.

Like you, I would say that every colleague here has come to me on all sides of the House and asked me to address the same issue that you've addressed, a long-term stable process that Albertans on AISH can count on. I make that commitment to you. I make that commitment to all of my colleagues that 12 months from now this won't be an issue.

Mr. Anderson: Excellent. Just for clarification purposes, we will be supporting that portion of the budget, but I can guarantee you that we will not be supporting the overall budget for different reasons, but not because of that reason. Your AISH payments increase was bang on. So just as a point of clarification.

The Chair: Does any other member wish to speak on supplementary supply for Seniors?

The hon. minister.

Human Services

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Under the supplementary estimates today we're asking for Human Services the amount of $6.989 million. Now, to put that into context, really what we're needing is $10 million to supplement the child care choices plan increase in child care spaces. We had a program over the last few years to increase to approximately 20,000 new child care spaces, and the program was overwhelmingly successful. We have 22,500 in the child care subsidy caseload for this year, which is 1,900 more than the budget that was in place of 20,600.

So that's essentially it. We need $10 million to pay for the child care subsidies due to the increased child care load. We were able to surplus this year approximately $3 million from some other programs. For example, the $0.6 million increase for the Immigrate to Alberta web portal, $0.7 million for the Appeals Commission, $3 million for reductions in programs funded under the labour market agreement, things that we'll have to deal with in due course but for the purpose of supplementary estimates are able to be net off against the $10 million that we need.

That is essentially the request, together with $700,000 for the Appeals Commission for the Workers' Compensation Board to reduce the processing time for claims and $608,000 for the Immigrate to Alberta web portal. Those two are essentially flow-through expenditures, as I understand it.

So the need that we're requesting is the $6.989 million to pay for the child care subsidies for our wildly successful child care program.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Indeed. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm just looking for a little clarity from the minister. The $10 million, as it's written in the statements we have been provided, is to address increased subsidy caseloads within child care subsidy and supports. Does that mean the number of cases has increased, or is more being spent per case?

Mr. Hancock: Two answers, Mr. Chairman. The caseload has increased. I think, as I indicated earlier, it's about 1,900 over what was budgeted. But we also have, as I understand, a program in place to encourage the improvement of credentials and the funding that goes with that. So the money would be on both sides, the increase of the caseload and payment for improving credentials.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Yes. That was helpful. I appreciate that.

Just to pursue that, would some of this, then, go to increased salaries for the workers? As their credentials go up, does this give them an incentive to stay in that sector?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, that's essentially what the credentials program is, a wage supplement for those who improve their credentials. It's an incentive for people at the lower income levels to improve their credentials and move their income level up.

The Chair: Any others?

Ms Notley: Well, I just wanted to follow along on those questions as a start. I'm wondering if you could advise us specifically. You mentioned there were 1,900 more families accessing the subsidy. Obviously, the amount of subsidy varies by family, depending on their income. What was the total number of families receiving the subsidy right now? Did you say that?

Mr. Hancock: Twenty-two thousand five hundred.

Ms Notley: Okay. That's what I thought. Can you advise, then, how many more staff are receiving the additional payment as a result of additional training and where it is those staff reside? Is there a geographic pattern there at all?

Mr. Hancock: I don't have those specifics at hand at the moment, but I certainly don't mind getting them if they're available and providing them to the hon. member. I don't know if I have a geographic breakdown, but I would assume that we would be able to. Certainly, we should be able to delineate that, so I can get the hon. member those numbers, but I don't have them right at the moment.

Ms Notley: The other reason I was looking for the number of staff is because it depends on what level of education they're getting and what the overall amount is that they're receiving. It helps us to determine if it's the same people carrying on further or if we've got new people that are getting certified and additional certification going on. That's the information that we're looking for as well as a breakdown between the amount of the $10 million that's dedicated to the new subsidies versus the portion of the $10 million that's dedicated to additional staffing costs.

Mr. Hancock: Certainly, Mr. Chairman, I can get that information. I would suspect that with respect to the education side you would find that it was both. As I understand it, we're at an exceedingly high level – and there are voluntary standards in place – of compliance with those standards. I think there's about 5 per cent of people that we're still moving to those standards, so I would suspect that that is part of it. But also part of it would be people improving from where they are to where they could be. I can get you some more definitive information with respect to that.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you. The final piece that I'd be looking for on that same thing is whether you can advise what the breakdown is between nonprofit and for-profit in terms of where those staff reside.

Mr. Hancock: If it's readily available without spending all of the money to find it, I would be more than happy to provide it.

Ms Notley: I appreciate that we'll talk about this more in the overall discussion of your budget, but given that we do have a profound shortage of child care still in this province, the whole issue of how it's delivered and the best way to increase the number of spaces as well as the accessibility to those spaces does factor in very much to that conversation, so it's relevant.

You'd mentioned, I think – or perhaps it was in my notes – that part of the place where you'd found that $10 million, the reason you're coming to us for roughly $7 million, is because there was a $4.3 million saving from employment. I didn't quite get the details about where those savings came from. I'm wondering if you could provide those.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, $3 million is the reduction in expenditures for programs funded under the labour market agreement due to a decrease in the number of learners participating in LMA-eligible programs. Federal funding allocated through the LMA that has lapsed may be carried forward into the following year. The request can be made as part of the ministry's 2012-13 first-quarter fiscal update submission.

The long and the short of it is that we have some funding in the labour market agreement program which we are not expending this year because of not sufficient people applying in that particular category. We will have to account for those monies. We can carry them forward. In other words, they're federal monies, so we have to expend monies in that area, but we can carry those forward into the next year. In the meantime the accounting rules provide that we have to offset that or that we can offset that against the supplementary request, so that's what was done.

The $1.2 million reduction is related to the targeted initiative for older workers. Due to delays in project approvals by the federal government we are not going to be able to utilize that money in this fiscal year. Again, we'll carry it over to the next fiscal year, but in the meantime the money in the budget, the voted money, can be applied against the child care need.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I'm sorry. I should know this, but can you explain very briefly the labour market agreement? Who are the recipients of the funds in that and under what scenario? These aren't temporary workers, are they? I'm sorry, but I can't recall what that program refers to.

Mr. Hancock: Again I'm going to have to beg the indulgence of the member for me to get the specifics about which particular categories qualify under that particular agreement. We have a number of areas in which we help fund learners or people who want to upgrade their credentials, et cetera. Some of them qualify for federal funding, and those ones would fall under that labour market agreement. Rather than speculate as to which are which off the top of my head, I'll get you that definition.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Yeah. I'm wondering if these are the additional immigrants that come to Alberta after having been counted in a different province. I'm not sure. Anyway, if you could provide us with that information sooner than later.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the subject?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. To the Minister of Human Services. The $700,000 request for the Appeals Commission for Alberta's workers' compensation: is that as a result of an increase in the number of files or the number of appeals that they're hearing, is there an increased workload there, or are there some sorts of salary adjustments being made where this amount as requested is necessary?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My understanding is that there are a number of vacant chair positions with the Appeals Commission. As a result there is becoming a need to conduct additional hearings to achieve a reduction in the timelines, so those need to be funded. Now, as I understand it, that's basically a flow through. That's an assessment against the Workers' Compensation Board. There is a revenue item on the other side, but we have to account for the expenditure in our budget, so we need the supplementary supply of that $700,000 to account for filling those vacant positions so that they can get on with reducing the waiting time with respect to appeals.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. I have one more question, regarding waiting times. I find it very unusual that in the past, and I haven't plugged in my computer to see if it has been changed, certainly the Appeals Commission – and the hon. minister is the man in charge – has been very reluctant to produce an annual report, as is requested. In my view, they are obligated to do that. I was disappointed in the past to not be able to find that annual report. Maybe things have changed, and maybe they're there now. I would certainly hope that a small portion of this money could be used to make sure that annual reports are produced in a timely fashion and are also accessible to those who are interested in reading them.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. Minister, do you wish to comment?

Mr. Hancock: All of these comments will be passed on to the relevant areas, and if there's a requirement for an annual report that hasn't been fulfilled, I'll certainly look into that. You know, the hon. member might understand that there are corners of my ministry that I'm still learning a little bit about. I haven't honestly looked to see what the annual report status for the Appeals Commission of the Workers' Compensation Board is, but I will.

Ms Notley: In the spirit of helpfulness – I was just online – it appears the most recent annual report was 2003.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wish to speak on Human Services?

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize our Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Solicitor General and Public Security

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I just want to tell the members opposite that I'm really not feeling well this evening, so if I'm not on my game, I will come back and give you some written responses.

I'm here to request an additional $1.74 million for SGPS for the 2011-2012 fiscal year. That is .26 per cent of the total budget. Like all of the departments, SGPS has had to find money this year to accommodate the AUPE settlement. Since my ministry is highly human power intensive, we faced a $5.4 million shortfall. The good news is that after a detailed review of programs and operations we were able to find some short-term savings for two-thirds of this amount. The funding was then allocated to staff compensation to address the AUPE settlement and cost pressures. We are still, Mr. Chair, short $1.74 million. We need this money to ensure that we're compliant with the global settlement that the overall government agreed to with AUPE. I seek approval, then, of this House for $1.74 million.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. I can certainly sympathize with the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, and I hope he's feeling better soon.

I have a question before we make this allocation. Certainly, last year most departments transferred money back into the general revenue fund. There was an amount last year of over $600 million transferred back into the general revenue fund. How much, if any, was from the Solicitor General and Public Security department?

Mr. Denis: I'll undertake to advise you at a subsequent juncture.

Mr. MacDonald: Thanks.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Yeah. I see that you're looking for an additional $1.7 million but that, in fact, you're really looking for about $3.5 million and that roughly $1.76 million is being paid for by your ministry through in-year savings. I want to ask you a little bit about those in-year savings. In particular, I want to ask about sheriff services, where it seems that your ministry has saved about a quarter of a million dollars. Yet we had quite a flare-up of concern – I'm not sure when it was, earlier in the year, anyway – about the level of security from sheriffs in the Queen's Bench courtrooms. I believe it was in Edmonton that the issue was raised. Given that at the time, I believe, there was talk about hiring more sheriffs – and I'm assuming they come out of your budget; maybe they come out of the Justice minister's budget – and given that there was talk of the need to hire a significantly greater number of sheriffs, I am wondering how it is that you have in-year savings in this area in your budget at this point.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, and I thank the member for that question as a fellow member of the Law Society. There are, in fact, four levels of security in the courtroom as it is. Security has been increased substantially over the last five years, at least in my last year of practice of law, anyway.

Typically, you have your perimeter security. Then what happens is that as you come in, there is airport-style security in most courtrooms, which didn't exist several years ago as well. Then, on top of that, there are also sheriffs that roam the courtroom. In addition, individual judges have a panic button, which many of us do have. I know the Speaker has pointed out to me his panic button in the past. Then, even on top of that, in a matter where there is a significant risk to security for whatever reason, the particular judge or justice can in that case actually go and request additional security as well.

You know, I don't totally agree with respect to the member of the judiciary who raised that particular concern, but I can tell you that it is a priority for us and so much that in this year's budget there are 30 additional sheriffs. Given the state of my health this evening, though, I will undertake to get you some further information on that as you have requested, Member.

The Chair: Any other member wishing to speak?

Mr. Hehr: Just one quick question. I note that the main of this expense is going to correctional services that will be run in correctional centres. Could the minister enlighten me if this expense is for additional security guards or overtime pay given some of the numbers that are currently in our prison systems and the amount of overtime that's happening? Where is this money actually going?

Mr. Denis: Overtime is inevitable in any department, but it's not desired, obviously, because it is time and a half. I do believe that the 30 additional sheriffs as allotted in this year's budget are going to address that. That's a continual concern, I think, that all government departments have. I think it's also a continual concern for private employers. The reason there is time and a half is to discourage people from working the hours that every member in this Chamber does and, rather, to hire additional sheriffs where needed, and that's what we've done, Member.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Okay. Well, just going back on the same issue, I understand why you're coming to us looking for more money, but I'm wondering – notwithstanding your health maybe someone else can give you some advice. I'm not sure. I'm looking for what the explanation is for the $1.5 million savings in contract policing and policing oversight. I'm also looking at the half-million-dollar savings in commercial vehicle enforcement, and I'm wondering if we can get a bit of an explanation for how that came about.

Mr. Denis: To this member: good questions again. Policing oversight deals with the whole mandate of the department, so that's an efficiency we've found, actually, in the department.

With respect to contract policing I'll get you some information about that as well.

The Chair: Any others?

Seeing none, the chair shall now move on. The hon. Government House Leader on the office of the Chief Electoral Officer.

Office of the Chief Electoral Officer

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Chair, it would be the tradition and practice of the House that we do not challenge the estimates of the legislative officers because they're not here to defend their estimates.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Chair, if I may.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the electoral officer supplements.

Dr. Taft: Yes. I understand the tradition of the House as the minister just expressed it, but I just want it to be on the record that I regret as a member of the Assembly not having a proper opportunity to debate the estimates of this particular office of the Legislature or any of the others. So perhaps for future practice we can make some changes.

Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I'm not about to offend the practices of the House. The Standing Committee on Legislative Offices reviews the budgets, debates the budgets, brings them forward, and the chairman refers to that at the beginning. They shouldn't have been called, and we're not going to offend the practice of the House by defending them.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs on behalf of the minister.

Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will run through this, and I'll endeavour to answer any questions that you may have for the minister. I can answer just about everything, I think, except where he gets his hair cut, and I won't tell you where I get my hair cut.

Mr. MacDonald: The same place as the Human Services minister.

Mr. Griffiths: No, it wasn't the same place. It was faster.

Mr. Chairman, IAR is requesting an additional supplementary estimate of $2 million for its 2011-2012 budget. It has $500,000 that has been made available from lower than budgeted expenses, and the request for $2 million collectively means $2.5 million flowing through the department to the First Nations development fund. The $2 million is actually a flow through from higher than expected casino revenues on-reserve.

So it's simply a flow through of the $2 million plus the $500,000 in lower than budgeted expenses flowing through to the First Nations development fund. I ask for members to support this.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The $2 million that is being added to the First Nations development fund and its additional revenue: could the minister please tell the House how that additional revenue was generated? Was it from slot machines? VLTs? Which First Nations casinos had that revenue generation occur?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm sorry. I don't have that detailed information. I simply know that for the structure for the lotteries the way it works now in the casinos is distinct on-reserve, and approximately 30 per cent of the funds that come from First Nations casinos flow through to the First Nations development fund. The exact breakdown of whether it was from slots or terminals: I don't have that information. But I know the minister would be happy to provide that if he has that breakdown.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you.

The Chair: On the supplementary supply for Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations does any other hon. member wish to speak?

The hon. minister.

Tourism, Parks and Recreation

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm requesting supplementary estimates of $1.32 million to cover the expenses in Tourism, Parks and Recreation that were not anticipated in the 2011-12 budget estimates. The request is simply to address the funding pressure from the collective bargaining agreement that was reached with AUPE. The increased compensation and other benefits for employees cannot be funded internally without impacting services provided by the ministry, and without this funding the ministry would have had to reduce current staffing levels and services directly affecting Albertans to cover their funding shortfall.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Now, the hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation . . . [interjection] Not perks. No, I didn't say perks. Someone here said perks, but it wasn't me, Mr. Minister.

You said that this money is needed, I believe, to facilitate a collective agreement with AUPE. I have to take exception to that unless you can provide additional information. The supplementary estimate here for the minister's office is for $18,000; the deputy minister's office, $30,000; strategic corporate services, $163,000; and communications, $9,000. Now, certainly, that is well over $200,000.

The employees in the minister's office, if I am to understand correctly from you the reasons you are requesting this money, certainly wouldn't belong to AUPE. They wouldn't be in any collective agreement. They would be considered management. How can you tell us that all of this request, if I heard you correctly, is as a result of this collective agreement with AUPE, when this group, if they are to get this money for employee compensation adjustments, is considered management?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chair. That is indeed correct. The AUPE collective agreement benefits that were awarded were awarded also to the non-unionized staff that are not in the management position. So the numbers that you talk about are not management. Those are for the support staffing that is non-unionized. It's a small part of that overall $1.32 million.

Mr. MacDonald: A small part of that comes to $220,000, which is, oh, we could say, 8 per cent, 8 and a half per cent, maybe a little better than that. Of the people who are not part of the collective bargaining process, how many individuals are sharing in the $220,000 employee adjustment compensation?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd be pleased to get you that information and find out how many of the 800-plus employees are non-unionized.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you.

The Chair: Is there any other hon. member wishing to speak on Tourism, Parks and Recreation? We are still under three hours.

Vote on Supplementary Supply Estimates 2011-12, No. 2 General Revenue Fund

The Chair: The chair shall now call the question after considering the 2011-12 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2012.

Agreed to:

Office of the Chief Electoral Officer
Expense and Capital Investment	$3,100,000

Expense	$17,777,000
Seniors
Expense	$10,300,000
Solicitor General and Public Security
Expense	$1,740,000
Tourism, Parks and Recreation
Expense	$1,320,000
Transportation
Expense	$29,418,000
Amount to be transferred
Municipal Affairs
Capital Investment	$30,000,000

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the Committee of Supply rise and report the supplementary estimates, No. 2.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Rogers: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again. The following resolutions relating to the 2011-12 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2012, have been approved.

Office of the Chief Electoral Officer: expense and capital investment, $3,100,000.

Human Services: expense, $6,989,000.

Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations: expense, $2,000,000.

Justice: expense, $28,093,000.

Municipal Affairs: expense, $17,777,000.

Seniors: expense, $10,300,000.

Solicitor General and Public Security: expense, $1,740,000.

Tourism, Parks and Recreation: expense, $1,320,000.

Transportation: expense, $29,418,000.

The Committee of Supply has also approved the following amount to be transferred.

Municipal Affairs: from capital investment to expense, $30,000,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the report from the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Fawcett moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Colonel (Retired) Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 8: Mr. Hancock]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It was with interest that I sat last Tuesday and heard His Honour deliver the throne speech. It was interesting to sit here a few minutes before the proceedings started. I got to witness the parade, the citizens from throughout the province who came to hear the throne speech. Certainly, it was enjoyable. It was interesting, as I said earlier.

I was outside after, and of course there was a gentleman who came up. I had no idea who he was. He came up to me in the rotunda, and he asked me some questions about the throne speech and the proceedings that occurred in here and the people that were seated on the floor of the Assembly. I was surprised at his take on all of this. He asked me if those that were seated closest to the Premier's chair gave the most amount of money to the Progressive Conservative Party in political donations. Now, I had to stop and think about that. I didn't have an answer for him, but I gave him this advice: ask some of the Progressive Conservative MLAs if that's how all this works. I don't know. I got busy in conversation, and I didn't hear from him again. Hopefully, I will, and hopefully he got the right answer to his question. Certainly, that was his notion or his idea of how things were arranged.

Now, the throne speech also had, Mr. Speaker, six reviews. I was disappointed or at least I did not see a commitment to review the property rights legislation. Now, maybe it was there, but I didn't see it.

I was also disappointed to see that this government is not making any effort whatsoever to unplug electricity deregulation. Now, I have been listening to question period since last Tuesday, and it seems to be an issue on everyone's mind but government members'. The current Minister of Energy, the former Minister of Finance, would get very, very nervous whenever he had to present a budget, and I can understand why the hon. member would be nervous, being a fiscal conservative and carrying on with the tradition in this term by this government of significant deficits from one budget to the next.

With electricity deregulation I heard the other day about Quebec, what Quebec does or does not do and how ridiculous it is to suggest that Quebec Hydro's comparisons of our electricity prices to other jurisdictions not only in Canada but in America are wrong. Well, we know, Mr. Speaker, that that's not true. Electricity deregulation: 12 years into this madcap ideological experiment we know what's going on. Prices are going up. We've gone from some of the lowest costs for electricity in North America to some of the highest costs with price spikes.

We know that on January 17 – and we've been fortunate that we've only had one week of really cold weather this winter. During that week we had two energy emergency alerts, one that lasted about an hour and a half and one that lasted about an hour, as I can remember. But the result of these energy emergency alerts was significant on the price. In fact, the price of electricity was over 93 cents a kilowatt hour. This was at peak time, peak demand in the day, between 5 and 6 o'clock. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I think we set a new record, and it was well over 10,400 megawatts.

Mr. Speaker, there could be some ways for the government to deal with this. That certainly was not evident in the throne speech, and I'm very disappointed in this government. It's such a sensitive issue for this government that the Premier is reluctant to answer. She tries to hand it off, and it's a lame performance from the Minister of Energy to try to defend this policy. I know that down in his ideological heart he knows it's the wrong thing, but he has to defend this government as we get closer and closer to an election, and it's getting harder and harder to do.

The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne must be very, very perplexed. He must be very nervous about electricity deregulation after the newsprint plant in Whitecourt – I would assume it's the largest employer in the town – had to cut back production because they couldn't afford the electricity bills. The hon. member is shaking his head that that's wrong. Well, the Edmonton Journal must have been wrong when they reported it. He would have had all kinds of opportunities to correct the Edmonton Journal if they were wrong, but I haven't seen any correction to that story.

In my own constituency a lot of people who are employed at AltaSteel are residents of Edmonton-Gold Bar. In fact, I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning would be a former employee of AltaSteel. He must be as concerned as I am about what the cost of electricity does to AltaSteel whenever it spikes in price. They had to close down production and hope and wait for the prices to moderate, which, fortunately, they did. These are the economic consequences of a bad public policy.

Close to 80 per cent of the load, the capacity, in this province is for industrial or commercial purposes. I think it's 83 per cent, and 17 per cent is for residential use. Now, residential users get their bill on a monthly basis. If they're listening, they know that the Minister of Energy is offside on this issue to say that this a roaring success. In fact, it hasn't been. If it was successful, we would have more than 7 per cent generating capacity in reserve for the cold nights such as January 17. We don't have enough reserve capacity. Prices go up. Who wins, the generators or the consumers? The generators. Of course, they do.

Now, I was watching the news this evening, and certainly a former – he possibly still could be – member of the PC Party, a fundraiser for the PC Party, people would say a member of the glitterati of the PC Party, the chairman of this panel that went around the province looking at the transmission system and what we could or shouldn't do, was on the news tonight. I listened with interest. We need those two new transmission projects. We need them now. It doesn't matter which one we build first, but we need them both now. And that's going to add to the electricity consumers' power bills for the next 30 years. Well, that's a real handy way to pass all the costs on to consumers.

There was no mention in the throne speech; there was no apology by this government for overruling the regulatory process eight years ago to pass all these costs on to consumers, where the regulatory authority thought they should be shared 50-50, with generators paying 50 per cent of the transmission upgrades or expansions and the consumers paying that. There was no mention of that.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, we heard that there's a commitment to getting to a balanced budget. Lots of people on our side of the house, including the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, worked hard to come up with a plan, that was presented the day before the throne speech, to come up with a balanced budget. Taxpayers can't understand how the Progressive Conservatives are having such difficulty with our revenue stream of balancing the budget. This will be the fifth year in a row with a deficit.

I don't know how to explain it, but just in the last half hour we had this suggestion that it's a tradition of this House that when the Chief Electoral Officer is asking for money, we just provide it. I sit on the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, and I was present when this supplementary funding for the office of the Chief Electoral Officer was requested. We had a robust debate on this. I didn't vote for that $3.1 million request, and I had good, solid, valid reasons not to. To just watch the government members quietly put their hands up and vote for this $3.1 million request is a reminder to me and it's certainly a reminder to taxpayers of how easy it is for this outfit and how comfortable it is for this government to run these big deficits year after year after year. To suggest that, you know, we ought to respect the offices of the Legislative Assembly – no one is saying that we shouldn't, but at other times, whenever it has been convenient to attack these legislative offices, well, the government has been really good at that.

We only have to look at some of the recommendations the former Chief Electoral Officer made. The government disagreed with all those recommendations, and they made their point known publicly in and outside this House. Then some of the reports that were released by the office of the Auditor General in the last number of years, whether they were on mental health, whether they were on our royalty system or any other issue, on our health care system – and there were enough of them on the health care system and Alberta Health Services and the conduct of Alberta

Health Services with public money. Government members had no problem commenting on those.

I will make that point. I appreciate the opportunity to get a chance to speak this evening. It certainly was an interesting throne speech. I wish the Lieutenant Governor and his family all the best. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you for the comments. I just wanted to let you know that you're right. The power issue is a big issue for the northern communities with forest-based plants. Did you also know that those plants have PPAs? They have purchased large bulks, millions of dollars worth of power, and when they have the opportunity to lower their consumption, they sell into the grid at that higher rate. They make that business decision. At times maybe they decide to ramp up production after midnight, or during the peak hours they may slow it down. It goes back and forth both ways.

What I did in my home: my wife and I looked at the opportunity to protect ourselves. We looked through the UCA's list years ago, and I locked in for five years at 7 cents with an EasyMax contract. My mom was alive then. She was a pretty smart businessperson, and she said: I kind of like the ability to lock in my rate and have the assurity that on a fixed income I can protect myself. She did that, too, you know, so I'd like to ask the member if at his household he bought a power contract and locked into the rate.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, that's very, very interesting. It's a good question, and it's a valid question. If anyone in my household wants to gamble, we'll go to a casino. We do not want to gamble on our utility costs. Neither do a lot of people who live in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. If you look at one of the latest seniors' magazines that was published, the seniors in this province – they may be different than the ones in Whitecourt – do not want to gamble on their electricity bills or their natural gas bills.

Speaking of natural gas bills, of course midway through this experiment on electricity deregulation the cost of natural gas as a fuel source for many of the peaking plants was blamed for the high cost of electricity. Now we see that natural gas costs are low. In fact, historically they're the lowest they have been since deregulation started, and the cost of electricity is still through the roof. So this is not working.

Certainly, when you look at industrial facilities such as the newsprint plant in Whitecourt or AltaSteel in Edmonton or you look at VersaCold, which is an example of a company that freezes large volumes of food, electricity is getting very, very expensive for them regardless of the contract, and many of the managers tell us that they do not want to be fixed to the AESO website to see if they can work or not. Their electricity costs are a problem.

Some of them are considering moving out of this province because of the cost of electricity. For some of those companies 40 per cent of their all-in costs are their power. They cannot afford to stay in places like Calgary to conduct their businesses. They're better off going to Manitoba. Saskatchewan is a very, very good example. It's a smaller province, certainly, but it has basically the same amount if you look at the percentage of coal-fired, natural gas fired, and other forms of electricity generation, and they don't have the price spikes that we do.

To the hon. member. Certainly, it may have been beneficial for his household to get EasyMax for 7 cents per kilowatt, or 7.2 cents it was, over a five-year period. Other people have felt when we talked to them about that contract that they didn't want to have these bundled services. They didn't want to have natural gas. They didn't want to have electricity. Some people are even suggesting that we have phone and Internet and everything else included in this bundle of services.

What people want is the lowest possible cost for electricity, and they know that electricity is an essential service. It's not a commodity. It's not a commodity like wheat or gold or potatoes, where you can grow it and you can store it until the price goes up.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on the throne speech.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand and respond to the throne speech. I'd also like to thank the Lieutenant Governor for giving the speech and wish his family the best in their new position. I know that it's a lot of work and sacrifice, and I would say on behalf of the people from Airdrie-Chestermere a thank you to him. Also, as it is this government's duty to prepare that throne speech and give us something to talk about, I thank them for taking the time to do that.

There are some good things in the throne speech. There are some not so good things in the throne speech. Obviously, as we alluded to earlier, we think that some changes to the way that we treat persons with developmental disabilities, giving increased AISH payments for AISH recipients and so forth, is a very good thing and something to be commended. In a province like ours with the money that we do have, it's long overdue.

There is a strong emphasis on education in the throne speech. That was certainly welcome, and you saw that reflected in the budget, of course, with the emphasis on new school infrastructure, which I think is very key. There are issues around how those infrastructure dollars are handed out that is problematic, but indeed I'm glad to see the emphasis on education.

I would have liked to see a little bit more emphasis on funding for students with special needs in education because I feel that, frankly, for every dollar that we spend on students with special needs in their youth, in their developing years, we will save $10 down the road. Of course, the value to the students themselves cannot be valued. It's priceless. We have a very good preschool program with regard to students with developmental disabilities, but once you get into the grade level, after you get past kindergarten, it's actually pretty underfunded in a lot of ways.

Mr. Anderson: Hugely underfunded, in fact. That's right. So there are some issues there. If we could try to match the zealotry with which we treat kids with special needs prekindergarten, if we could do that postkindergarten, I think we would have some incredible results.

There are many things, you know, to highlight in this speech. I want to talk more broadly about some of the things that I felt could be improved. I know that the folks in Airdrie-Chestermere, who I represent, are very concerned about these things. They're concerned about the financial direction of this province. We have to understand that, you know, it's very easy for us. We sit in here for a couple of hours earlier, and we approve a supplementary supply bill for hundreds of millions of dollars in new funding. That's part of the government business.

We have to realize that what we do in this House with regard to money is not just affecting us and those today, but it also affects our children for years to come. If you look at what is happening in Europe and in the United States and around the world, you see the result of governments who have, frankly, sacrificed the rights of liberty of their posterity, of their kids and their grandkids. They've sacrificed that financial freedom and, therefore, their financial liberty because they were too consumed with buying votes in the here and now from their various constituencies. It's a terrible lesson.

Look at the news today. I mean, just google what's going on in Greece with the riots there and the backlash against some of the austerity measures that the Greek government has brought in, which frankly aren't that harsh, certainly not by Canadian standards. Nonetheless, it shows what happens when governments get out of control and they build up this level of entitlement that is so great and becomes such a fabric of their society that when things go wrong, when it comes down to it and they can't pay for all of these entitlements and so forth, the people revolt.

You see what's happening in Greece with the firebombings and the riots and some deaths and so forth. This has been going on and will continue to go on for some time. Our thoughts and prayers are with the Greek people. We hope that they'll be able to work through this problem in a peaceful manner and come out on the other side a stronger country for it. Closer to home you see that in the United States they're not too far behind Greece in that regard. Of course, if they were to collapse to the extent of Greece, we'd all be in a great deal of trouble.

We can't be so blind and so set in our ways or so comfortable because we happen to be sitting on a huge treasure trove of oil and gas that right now, particularly the oil obviously, is worth quite a bit of money. We can't be sitting here and comfortably thinking: oh, well, let's just go along, promise what we need to be popular in the here and now without thinking of the long-term effect of those decisions. That's what I think about. Obviously, it's something that I feel very passionate about.

As we go forward in this House, I'm obviously not too hopeful with regard to what I've seen in this recent budget with regard to this principle. But I would hope that people at some point in the future in this House would be resolute and say, "You know what? We absolutely are no longer going to tolerate running deficits in this province; we're just not going to do it" and that we find a way to make sure that that doesn't happen.

Hopefully, that way doesn't include: let's just raise taxes. If we were spending the average per capita in Canada or if we were spending below the average per capita in Canada and if we were still running deficits, maybe we could start having a discussion about: well, maybe our revenues aren't where they should be. But we're not. We're spending more than any province in the country per capita, certainly a great deal more than any of the larger provinces in the country – Ontario, Quebec, Saskatchewan, B.C., and Manitoba – so that should be a warning. We're not in a position where we need to be spending these huge amounts of money that we're spending and still running a deficit. It is irresponsible, and it's wrong. It's immoral, frankly, because we're using our children's money today for the here and now instead of thinking about the fact that we don't have to pay the bill, that it's them that has to pay the bill. To use the Greek example, guess who gets to pay the bill there? That's why they're mad. It's the rising generation who's just new in the workforce or in the workforce right now. They're the ones that have to pay the bill for all of the freeloading and entitlement that occurred by, well, specifically their parents' generation. That isn't fair, and it's not right.

So when we look at budgets and deficits, it's not just about the numbers; it is an issue of morality and what we leave to our children with regard to a debt. If we don't do our job here, we will quickly go to the path of what we see in Europe, specifically in Greece, and of course in the United States we see the beginnings of some very troublesome things happening there. That is important, to look at that in that context. I hope that this government as it goes forward will take it upon themselves to remember that principle, that this is about our kids.

If you look at our sustainability fund, it is almost gone. It will almost be gone in the next couple of years. If the price of oil were to go down to even $75 a barrel, which historically is a very high level, we would be approaching $5 billion, $6 billion in deficit this year alone. I mean, we were just at $75 a couple of months ago, for crying out loud. That's how volatile it is. So to bet the farm on $100 oil this year and $106 next year is just incredibly irresponsible, and I hope the government would reconsider that going forward.

Those are the budgetary issues. There are others, too. Obviously, we need to save more, but that's not something too much on the table right now because we can't seem to balance our budget. So we're doing a disservice to our children in that regard, too. But let's at the very least get our books balanced.

Now, of course, it is more about numbers. One of my other huge passions and the reason why I originally ran for the PCs, the Progressive Conservatives, and why I ran to be an MLA and why I'm here with the Wildrose now is a love of education. I am very passionate about the education system and about the education that our children receive. I think it's just so important.

I did have the opportunity to live in a couple of places in the world for a time. I had an opportunity to live for a time in Central America. I had an opportunity to live for a couple of years in Taiwan. I worked on one job where I had the opportunity to see a lot of the Caribbean nations and islands there. Of course, I lived for a while and went to college in the United States, which is where I met my lovely wife, so I got to know the folks in Missouri pretty well, where she's from. Obviously, Canada is where I grew up and where I've lived all but the time I've been away.

I've noticed one thing. There's one common theme. You can tie the progress of society, the success of society almost perfectly to the education that is provided to our children. Those countries that do not have the resources or choose not to spend sufficient resources on their children's education, many of them are bound in poverty. Many of their economies are stumbling. They have huge problems in the Americans' case, specifically in Missouri's case, where my wife is from, where some of the public schools are complete failures. You see violence and all kinds of problems, illiteracy, all kinds of issues that stem from a lack of proper education. So that's something that I feel very passionate about.

I would hope and what I'd like to see from this government going forward is a commitment to depoliticize education, to completely depoliticize it. I think the way we can do that, first off, is that when we've determined that we're going to be funding new schools – the budget this year I think is $300 million or $400 million in new schools. When we make the determination we're going to spend $300 million, $400 million, $500 million, whatever it is, on new schools in a year, what I would suggest and what I know parents would like to see in various communities is a list posted online of the most-needed schools from number one to number 100. They would like to see that list.

They would like to see the criteria that were used to arrive at that list. Perhaps student population levels are a part of that criteria, projected student growth, age of the facility, whatever it is, just some independent formula that our Education minister with the Premier and others could come up with and then apply across the province and come up with your list of one to 100.

Then when there's new money for new schools – say it's $400 million – the first X amount of schools or $400 million dollars' worth of schools, those top 14 or 15 or 16, whatever it is, are built. They're first in line. They get done. They move out of the queue, everyone gets bumped up, and the list is adjusted. It would be adjusted year to year, obviously, because populations and census data and everything change.

I really think that taking politics out of which boards and which schools we build is essential, and I'd like to see that.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. To the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere: could you give us examples, please, of where you would feel that politics were involved in the allocation of funds to construct schools?

Mr. Anderson: Well, there have been several examples. One of the big examples was in 2008. I know this because I've had discussions when I was with the government about what happened when those schools were announced in 2008.

I understand that you don't want to pit community against community. I get that, but it's not about that. That's a political consideration. It should always be about the kids. It should always be about their education and what they need, not what's politically correct to do.

At that time there were school boards, clearly, in the province of Alberta that went down in student population quite significantly, and there were school boards that were going through the roof with regard to student population. Obviously, Airdrie was one of those latter ones, Fort McMurray. Beaumont was another one, Chestermere was another one, and there were others. There were several in Calgary, specifically in the new areas in Calgary, and some areas in Edmonton as well.

What happened was that the government said: "We're going to stick 10 schools in Calgary. We're going to put them in Edmonton. We're going to stick X amount and spread them out in rural Alberta." It was clearly political. It's not that those schools won't be put to good use – they probably will – but the problem is that clearly there were needs that weren't met and should have been met. There are schools – for example, clearly in Rocky View, clearly in Beaumont, clearly in Fort McMurray – that should have been higher up on the priority list than some of the places that actually got them.

Maybe the government disagrees with that, and if they do, then let's do this right next time. Let's start this year. What an opportunity for the new Education minister to really, I think, change the way this has been done for a while. Post that list on the website so everyone can see it. Everyone knows where their community is in the queue, and they know the reasons for that. I don't think you'll see community rise up and complain against community. You might get some of that, but the average Albertan is a very reasonable, educated person. If you post it online and you post the reasons for why the priority is what it is, there'll be a few naysayers, but the vast majority of folks will say, "You know what? That's reasonable. Maybe that community needs a school more than my community because they've got, you know, twice the student population growth that we've had in the past couple of years" or whatever the reasons are. But I think that we sell our kids short when we politicize how schools are handed out in that way. It's not fair, and I hope that the government will change that.

Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, 29(2)(a)? No.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on the throne speech.

Mr. Hehr: Yeah. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and speak to the throne speech. I'd like to thank the hon. gentleman, Donald Ethell, who gave the speech and who has represented his province with great dignity, honour since his time in the position. I, too, listened with great interest to the throne speech, and some of the things that weren't there were obviously disappointing to me, like trying to deal with our electricity issues in this province, which a great many people are finding are not working for them. I would have liked to have seen a greater commitment to at least some supports for a discussion around mental health. I would have liked to have seen a broader discussion about how we're going to continue to evolve in the health care services.

What I was really actually excited to hear about in the throne speech, the first time we seem to have recognized this in this province, was that there seems to be an admission by this government that they're going to look at revenue streams. I was highly encouraged by that response.

If we look at things as they are here in Canada and Alberta, we have a difficult time balancing our budgets with $100 dollar oil. There's a reason for that. One of them is that things are more expensive here in Alberta. It costs more to run services given the nature of our economy. It costs a little more to pay our public servants because of the nature of our economy. We're competing against an oil and gas sector that pays its people pretty well, so you can see why this happens.

You can also see the other side of it. I believe it was also mentioned in the throne speech that compared to the next lowest tax jurisdiction in Canada, which is British Columbia, we bring in $11 billion less in tax revenue, $11 billion less. Even if you believe in a tax advantage, there's no reason for a tax holiday. In my view, it is really unfair to future generations, given the largesse of our oil resources, what we have done over the last 25 years.

If there's one thing we've proven in the last 25 years, it's that we can spend every last dime of fossil fuel resources that has come into the government treasury: $200 billion to $250 billion has come into this government's treasury since 1987, a largesse of epic proportions if you look at other jurisdictions around Canada and other jurisdictions around the world. We have been unable to save one iota of that money and add it to our heritage trust fund.

In my view that is just wrong. I don't think we're entitled here in this House or outside in this province to take this one-time gift from the heavens and spend it all in one generation. Simply put, I think it would be wrong both morally and ethically. We have an obligation to do better here in Alberta and, in my view, save something for future generations from this one-time resource. Hopefully, at the end of the day, when it's all said and done, when all the oil and gas has been exploited, when all the oil sands have been dug out, when all the natural gas has been sold, we have something here in Alberta that is going to sustain us in the long run because right now things are reasonably okay. The Alberta advantage is, simply put, oil and gas, our luck of landing on one of the largest reservoirs known to mankind. Again, I'll go back to my point, that just because we have this money, I don't believe it's morally correct that we should spend all this in one generation. That's why I was highly enthusiastic about this government at least opening up the revenue streams here in Alberta.

If you look at it, we don't have a sales tax. We don't have a progressive income tax. We don't have a lot of those things that other jurisdictions put into place to ensure that the things their society uses, things like public education, public health care, senior citizens' homes, are paid for by the public that uses them. I think that's a much more reasonable position to take. Why aren't we paying more as we go?

I think it's actually a conservative argument. Why wouldn't you ask the citizens who are currently using the services to pay for those services? Okay? It's our children who are using the public education system. It's us who are using the health care system. It's our seniors who need long-term care facilities. Why isn't it us that pays for those services that we are using? Really, it's a conservative argument, okay? Then we would be able to save some of these fossil fuel resources when we're able to.

Now, we are coming out of a time of economic turmoil, and it has been difficult to balance our budgets. That said, by all accounts we're headed for another boom. But does heading for another boom take away the argument for increasing our revenue streams? I think not. I think we have to go there if we're ever going to get ahead and save something for the future. It's not only the right thing to do today because it allows for governments, your government, to have predictable, sustainable funding.

How can you have predictable and sustainable funding in an oil and gas economy? It is very, very difficult. That's why we've seen since the '80s a shutting off of the public purse when times are bad, a ramping up of government expenditures when they're good, and a ramping down again when times are bad. Really, this is cyclical or countercyclical to when governments should actually be kicking in something to government coffers. We've been unable to do this because (a) it's a political risk always to run deficits, but it's also difficult to counteract these cycles and balances. If we had some contribution by the taxpayer to regular revenue streams, it would be very easy for us to be running balanced budgets here if not surpluses.

In fact, with even the modest tinkering to the tax system that we've done on our side of the House, the Alberta Liberal plan in this upcoming election – even these modest increases to revenue streams would allow us to run a budget surplus this year. Going forward, that would allow us to save more in the future, in my view a much more conservative principle, paying for what you use now and saving for the future.

I think we've got it wrong here when we think it's not conservative to pay as you go. Somehow I think that's got some twisted logic to it that doesn't make sense. Then again, you know, if you think through it clearly, I hope you'll join me in that thinking or at least have the debate with yourself as to what is actually more conservative: paying as you go or spending every last dime of fossil fuel resources to inordinately keep tax revenue as low as possible.

It's a great election strategy, never having to ask your citizens for any contributions to the public purse. Sure, that's easy. But for real leadership, for real betterment of predictable and sustainable funding as well as saving something for future generations, it's the right thing to do. I was encouraged that we at least had that discussion in the budget speech.

Now, it could be my wish upon a wish that we would discuss this before the election, but I won't hold my breath on that as I'm sure the government may not want to be the most honest in this fashion, although they've outlined their plans pretty clearly in the throne speech that at some point in time they are going to raise the revenue stream. That I'm happy about. What I'm not happy about is that it doesn't appear that we're going to have this discussion right now.

I believe that the average Albertan looks, really, at our revenue stream, does the math, looks at the lack of savings we've had, and asks themselves whether it's the morally correct position. I think the only answer can be that it's not morally correct, that we have to pay as we go, and that we have to try and save something for the future.

There is always the argument here that we have, you know, a hundred years of oils sands left, or maybe two or three hundred years, so there's lots of time to save. But who knows? Who would have known 12 years ago when natural gas prices were at $12 to $14 that they would be down to $2 now? Who could have predicted that? I bet no one in the government departments at that time did. Okay?

How do we know now that the world, which is increasingly looking at carbon, increasingly looking at other ways of harnessing wind, solar, and the like, isn't going to come through? All of the reports I read right now say that the technology isn't available to do that, but who knows? When human ingenuity really puts its mind to it, great things can happen in a 45-year span. We could be out of business in 45 years, and I don't think that's too crazy of me to assert in this room. A 45-year window for the world's scientists and the best and the brightest to work on these projects could mean that we're out of business.

So in my view we need a look at our revenue streams, an increase in those revenue streams but not to spend today. We have to have disciplined spending programs where people are getting the services they need, but we need an aggressive savings plan. Without that, we're simply going to do what we've always done, done it the easy way and spent fossil fuel resources on paying today's bills. It would be like a family farm selling off pieces of the land to pay today's bills. Eventually that farmer runs out of land to sell to pay today's bills, and there's a day of reckoning for that.

So, hey. Hopefully, we'll get serious about this. Hopefully, we'll get on this path, and hopefully we'll be able save something so our future generations can look back and say that we didn't squander it all.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none. The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Campbell: I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 1

Results-based Budgeting Act

[Debate adjourned February 8: Mr. Anderson speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, you still have two minutes left.

Mr. Anderson: All right. I'll just summarize my argument from last time, and that is that Bill 1 is a waste of this House's time. This is not something that we needed to legislate. Results-based budgeting, as was spoken of earlier today by the former Treasury Board president and Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, is something that we expect the government is already doing. I hope they would be already doing it. If this was zero-based budgeting, then maybe there would be something there that we might want to talk about legislating. Although even that, I'm assuming, could be ordered by the Premier and the cabinet.

This is not anything but a public relations exercise, and it actually sends the wrong message. It says that we haven't really been doing this for the last however many years. Clearly, we would hope that that was not the case. So we would prefer that we not waste time further and that we vote this bill down. We think it's a waste of the House's time.

Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on Bill 1.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this bill, Bill 1, the Results-based Budgeting Act. Certainly, when I first heard about this in the lead-up to the start of session – I heard about it in the media – I thought: now, isn't this another example of a public relations exercise by this government, pretending they care, pretending they listen as we get closer and closer to the election. When you look at this bill and you look at the government spin around it, you've got to wonder what they've been doing for the last number of years. There's one taxpayer who would say, "Well, maybe after five years of provincial deficits we need this Results-based Budgeting Act," and the other taxpayer in the coffee shop would say: "What have they been doing? Why is this necessary? What's been going on?"

Well, I would like to point out that if you look at past copies of the annual report of the government of Alberta, you will see where there has been, even in these deficit years, considerable cash transferred from the previous year into the general revenue fund. Now, if we go back to 2007-08, my research indicates there was $682 million, 2008-09 there was $928 million, in 2009-10 there was $2.2 billion, and then last year there was $619 million, and by last year I mean the year ended March 31, 2011. So there would be a total of $4.4 billion in these deficit years transferred back in unexpended amounts from various departments to the general revenue fund. So there's something going on there. There are considerable amounts of money that are going unexpended, and they are being returned.

There are any number of reasons why this would be occurring, but of course news like that is kept behind closed doors and the curtains are drawn, hon. minister. So the taxpayers have no explanation as to how this happens. For instance, we did our government Supplementary Supply Estimates (No. 2), and there are countless minutes from Treasury Board meetings that are referenced here, but none of those Treasury Board minutes are made public. At least I can't find them, not in the Leg. Library. They may be somewhere else, but I can't find them. If they were, then the Results-based Budgeting Act wouldn't be needed, wouldn't be necessary. I'm not convinced that it is.

This bill, as we understand it, essentially directs the government to do a program review, a program review of all departments. It's interesting that the term "results-based budgeting process" in this bill is undefined. Now, the Treasury Board is going to have a role to play in this, and I'm pleased with that. Many people don't realize, Mr. Speaker, the important role the Treasury Board plays and the President of the Treasury Board plays whenever we get spending requests from that big spender the current Minister of Finance, that right-wing fiscal hawk. It turns out that the feathers are not very long; he can't fly very far. I don't know whether they're pinfeathers or they're long ones that make a bird soar.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I think the Premier was so concerned about the spending habits of the current Minister of Finance that it was the Premier and the Premier's office that put the directive in that if there's to be any money spent, we're going to change the rules, and the Minister of Finance is going to have to go cap in hand to the President of the Treasury Board before any money is spent. With the history of this minister I can understand why the Premier would be concerned enough to make that directive in the Government Organization Act that came out last October. That was done. That would eliminate the need for this bill.

The Treasury Board is to provide a comprehensive review of the programs and services provided to the government and its agencies, and this is going on now. You can see from the cash transfers that there are program reviews. There were efficiencies in the last number of years noted in the consolidated financial statements. Some years there was $200 million; other years there was $220 million in deemed savings. Certainly, I would be interested to hear what the former Finance minister and Treasury Board president, the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, would have to say regarding this bill. I don't see why we need this. We certainly need to have openness and transparency in the processes that we currently have. No one is explaining how much money they plan to save using this bill, what programs will be cut.

Certainly, when you look at what's going on, I will point out the corporate internal audit service. Now, this is a very secretive audit service, extremely secretive, because they never seem to produce anything. No one knows what they do, but we do know that their budget goes up and up and up. This year it's estimated to be $4.1 million. I would challenge any hon. member of this Assembly to produce a report that the corporate internal audit service has done and what was in that report.

We were having a discussion in the researcher's office today on this bill before tonight's debate, and this was brought up. Well, maybe this office is going to work with the Results-based Budgeting Act as proposed. Maybe they're going to do all this work in the Treasury Board. Maybe they're going to advise the deputy ministers. Maybe they're going to advise the minister of what should or should not occur. But then I pointed out to the researcher that, well, you'd better check out who is running this internal audit service. It's the deputy ministers. There are other people on there from the corporate sector, and there are a couple of accountants by profession, but mostly it's deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers. The leadership role on this is rotated. They decide what's to be looked at and what's not to be looked at. I think that if we were to look at this bill and consider its merits to reduce sort of that conflict of interest, maybe this bill has some good points.

We had quite a discussion this afternoon on this, and the only conclusion that we could really come to accurately was the fact that we cannot find any examples of the past work of this board. We can see the budget inch up every year. We have a new President of the Treasury Board, and who knows? Maybe before the election all the audits that they have done and the results of those audits are going to be made public.

No one, whether they're from the Wildrose, from the New Democrats, or the Alberta Liberals, will be able to say that this is a very secretive government, that operates behind closed doors with the curtains drawn. Maybe candidates on the stump won't be able to say that. Maybe the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo will have to acknowledge finally that, you know, this is a government that's open and is transparent. But I think he's pretty confident that he's not going to have to say that, and I'm pretty confident that he won't as well because if you look at jurisdictions across not only Canada but North America, after 42 years the door is closed. The curtains are drawn. This government does not want the taxpayers to know what they're up to, what deliberations they have come to, what conclusions they have drawn to spend this year now over $40 billion of taxpayers' money.

Now, will the Results-based Budgeting Act satisfy taxpayers? I don't think so. It certainly is going to be part of the government's spin. I haven't looked up what the Public Affairs Bureau is going to get this year in the budget, but whenever you add up all the amounts in each department that will total the public relations budget, I would have to say that it would be significant.

There are some items that I have noted in these consolidated financial statements that I hope I have an opportunity to bring up in question period at a later date. I don't think they belong in the discussion here this evening on Bill 1.

Certainly, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would be very suspicious of the government and their motives in promoting this bill. It's not about good public policy. It's about promoting their own interests through this public relations exercise to get them through this election cycle. It's to simply say that, yes, they are going to have another look at how they spend money. Someone within the department, as I pointed out, is already doing that. You just have to look at the balance sheet to see the cash transferred from previous years. There are, fortunately, unexpended amounts that are coming back into the general revenue fund.

I really don't think we need this. I do think we need to have some openness and transparency with these internal audit services that are going on. This bill doesn't make any adjustments or any suggestions to that.

Again, it's about public relations, not good public policy, and I don't think it should be supported, and I don't think it should proceed through the House. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, on the bill the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise to speak to Bill 1, which, like the throne speech – I'm going to have to disagree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I didn't actually find the throne speech very interesting at all. I know you said that many times, and I give a nod to you that you found the throne speech interesting. This bill is like the throne speech in that it purports to say a lot, but it really says very little.

Probably one of the most concerning elements of what it does in terms of saying so little is that it really does not even define very well or very effectively what it's talking about. I mean, we're all used to governments engaging in an increased level of public relations based governance and electioneering-based governance the closer you get to an election, but typically you would expect the communications professionals, who essentially write that piece of legislation and who lead that governance, to do so with more skill than was injected into this particular piece of pre-election governance.

Frankly, Albertans don't care that this was Bill 1, but more to the point they have no idea what Bill 1 is even supposed to do. It's interesting because I'm not entirely sure that the Premier is completely aware of what Bill 1 is supposed to do. You really have a disconnect between her communications folks and their pollsters and Albertans and the Premier and everybody who should be part of the introduction of this bill.

The reason I think the Premier doesn't really understand what she's talking about – excuse me; I have also been unwell the last couple of weeks, like the Solicitor General – is because when the Premier first announced that this would be her signatory legislation, that this would be what would define her and her new government to Albertans, once, you know, most reporters who were there woke up from the press conference, they went back over their cassettes to figure out what she'd actually said at that point.

Of course, she went back and forth talking about results-based budgeting, which, of course, we see in the act itself, and zero-based budgeting. If you sort of do a bit of research on the use of that terminology, the fact of the matter is that in some cases it's been used interchangeably, in some cases it's been used to distinguish two separate things, and in neither case in the Premier's conversation about this bill has she ever clarified what it is. She's moved back and forth from using zero-based budgeting to talking about results-based budgeting, and I kind of wonder if halfway through the process somebody pointed out to her that zero-based budgeting actually meant something a little bit different than what she originally thought it meant when she, after meeting with her communications folks, came up with what her idea would be for Bill 1.

In any event, I'm not exactly sure how these matters are deliberated. All I know is that there really seemed to be a disconnect between the Premier's office communications people and the election planning committee of the Conservative Party and those who were involved in coming up with this piece of legislation because it really leaves Albertans disinterested and also confused.

But let's just say for the moment that she really is talking about the type of results-based budgeting that's often equated with zero-based budgeting. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, that type of practice has not really received a tremendously positive discussion or characterization by people who are in the business of reviewing the merits of this particular strategy. Generally speaking, zero-based budgeting is perceived as being something that is impractical for the superlarge organizations to engage in. It ends up becoming one of those things that generates far more work than it ever saves, and it also creates tremendous uncertainty within departments and also between government and those stakeholders with whom it has a governance or a funding relationship. So it doesn't work in that setting either.

Basically, any kinds of programs that involve outside partnerships and trust- and relationship-building, I guess, with those other partners are typically affected quite negatively by zero-based budgeting. Now, notwithstanding that, of course, you know, there's no question. The Premier, if she's talking about zero-based budgeting – and we don't know if she is or if she isn't because she keeps changing her mind, and the comms people sort of write first and research later. You know, if you're talking about zero-based budgeting, of course, it tends to not only be more expensive and time consuming, but interestingly she's lined herself up with a number of prominent Republicans in the southern states in the United States.

An Hon. Member: Oh, come on.

Ms Notley: She has. I'm sure that the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere would find that very, very heart-inspiring and maybe might even reconsider his allegiance because, you know, we're going back to the roots there in terms of those brilliant political and financial managers, the Republicans in the U.S.

Nonetheless, that's where it's being discussed right now, by Republicans throughout the U.S. Frankly, for those of us in Canada who tend to look at a lot of the ideas that come out of the U.S. with some surprise, shall we say, and concern, I don't know that this is a tremendous endorsement for the Premier's plan.

Generally speaking, though, what is more concerning to us with this bill, in the unlikely event that there is actually any substance to this, which, again, is hard to say because getting the Premier to really be clear on what she's doing is like trying to nail Jell-O to a wall, and this is no different – but should this be along the lines of zero-based budgeting, given the fact that if you combine it with her previous statements about her plans to review the degree to which we can start privatizing and contracting out government services just because privatizing and contracting out is always the better way to go, well, then, I think Albertans should be concerned.

It's a very ideologically driven approach, and it's certainly not designed to actually identify what Albertans need. Rather, it's focused on this notion, the starting point shall we say, that if you privatize and contract out and give it to volunteers to do, well, then, we can assume it's going to be done better. And while volunteers may do some of these jobs with as much passion, the fact of the matter is that in many cases they're just simply not equipped to do it as well. That's what we've seen in so many of the support sectors in this province over the course of the last couple of decades.

That is, obviously, a huge concern for us. If there's any substance to this bill, it's probably something that the Premier will rely upon in the future when she comes to the conclusion that she can't carry on the way she is right now. I think that everybody in this House who's not on the government side can agree that the budget brought down by this Premier is not a realistic budget. It's not a sustainable budget. It's not a budget that we can anticipate outlining a clear path for Albertans to vote on for the next two or three years because it's not realistic.

If you take the obvious hyperbole, shall we say, inherent in this budget and you combine it with this pin Jell-O to the wall bill, that may or may not mean something – and certainly it doesn't appeal to most Albertans or seem particularly relevant to them – there is the possibility for there to be some pretty bad news for Albertans down the road in that the government may well use this and the Premier's previously identified plan to review how much more she can contract out to find a way to cut services that Albertans rely upon. So that's a problem.

Instead of having a bill that is focused on looking at our spending in this zero-based way, which most experts agree is not sound public policy, I'd be really interested in having that kind of approach applied to our revenue generation in the oil and gas sector. Now, you might say: "Well, you know what? We actually did that four or five years ago. We had a blue-ribbon panel. We had an Auditor General that told us that we were selling Albertans short constantly, day in and day out." Then after the Auditor General said that, we appointed a blue-ribbon panel, and they agreed and said: "Yeah, we're kind of selling Albertans short day in and day out. We're not collecting enough royalty revenues." So what did we do? Well, we talked about fixing that problem until after the election, when we got scared of the new political environment, and we decided to not only back off fixing the problem but to make things worse.

We probably could use a bit of a results-based assessment of the benefits that Albertans currently receive from our oil, our resource that belongs to the people of this province. That's probably a good place where this could be used because we know the evidence is out there that we're not doing a very good job on that. It's pure politics – pure politics – nothing less, that has pushed us off doing the right thing in this area. So that might be something substantive.

What this bill is, I'm afraid, is at best nothing and at worst a harbinger of future program cuts and contracting-out plans to come. Because the Premier herself is so unwilling to even use the terminology consistently, I suspect that at this point what we're really probably dealing with is nothing, but it also means that we really have no idea what we can expect down the road.

In terms of leaving Albertans with an impression of what the Premier brings to the province with her new leadership through this bill, I think it's really a profound failure. I think members in this House have talked about it being a bit of a waste of our time to have to debate it, but of course the government decided to make it Bill 1, so we feel we need to.

It really would be helpful if somebody from the government side would clarify and maybe point to some clear definitions of what they are referring to when they use the term "results-based budgeting" since it has been used in so many different contexts in so many different ways. Since this is Bill 1, I think it would be quite reasonable for them to clarify to members of this Legislature what exactly it is they're talking about because, of course, anyone in the industry would tell you that it could mean one of any 10 things. I mean, I appreciate that there's only about, you know, 50 words in this bill, and you would think you'd want people to understand what they say. So I would recommend that that might be something that this government ought to be considering.

In the meantime we will watch to see what's coming forward. I've been quite surprised, actually. I came back to session a week and a half ago, or however long ago it was, expecting to see bold actions, some real leadership, some real statements that were going to reach out to Albertans and say: "We are not the same government that we've been for the last 40 years. We really are new now because that's what we are. We're bold and we're new and we're moderate and we're young and we're progressive and look at us."

I expected a little bit of definition, something to define where this government was going, and I have been really quite surprised at the beige reproduction of tired, old phrases that I've heard over and over and over again in this House over the course of the last four years. I expected more. Almost from the perspective of being an observer of Alberta politics, I expected we'd see more, and I truly am surprised at how meaningless so much of what this government has brought into this session so far is.

The budget is meaningless. Bill 1 is meaningless. The throne speech was not bold; it was simply old. It was regurgitated phrases from previous throne speeches. There was nothing unique in it, and this bill continues in that theme. I don't know if what we're doing is that we're just kind of limping our way towards the election in the hope that, you know, we'll be able to use the momentum of the 40-year position in this Legislature to get through the election and then start making real decisions for which you will not be accountable for another four years. This will be part of that.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, is there any other hon. member who wishes to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege this evening to be able to get up and speak to what I wish was actually a bill of some importance. It's somewhat amazing to me as we see this 41-year-old, tired, and worn-out government that doesn't have any new and innovative ideas come up with a bill like this called Bill 1, the Results-based Budgeting Act. Everyone that I talked to about this can't believe it and says: well, if they're going to start doing results-based budgeting, what have they been doing for the previous four budgets when they ran deficits?

I was just looking in my office tonight, Mr. Chair, where I had the Sun, and there was the Premier sitting on a pot of red ink. It was the red Stelmach budget, the fourth deficit.

An Hon. Member: Hey, hey.

Mr. Hinman: I thought that he was no longer in the House. Did he not resign? I apologize. Sorry. Someone had told me that he had resigned. [interjections] Well, you guys have so many things happening over there, and it would be the honourable thing to actually do.

Anyway, what we have here is a government that has a major problem with balancing its budget, so they think they need to put up some smoke and mirrors as if Albertans are going to buy this. They're going to say that they're going to start doing results-based budgeting. It's an insult to Albertans because the result of this government's budgeting has been five deficit budgets in a row.

I find it interesting to listen to them talk about the great investments that they're going to make and how wonderful the opportunity that they have going forward, yet the only thing that we see going forward is an escalation of spending that's going to result in us cycling back to the period of 1992, when this government ran into a $23 billion debt and we had to take some major steps. Probably what's most concerning, Mr. Chair, about this is the fact that the world is different today than it was in '92. Today we see around the world many, many governments that are on the brink of bankruptcy and failure because of this exact type of thinking, that deficit budgets are okay, that it's okay to spend. I mean, they had this idea: we've got to spend during the tough times, but we have to spend even more during the good times. When do we ever balance it?

It's interesting that, when I saw the Premier's brochure that was dropped off at my home in Calgary, it said: one of the things that we want to do is to save more for future Albertans. Well, how does this budget, how does this Bill 1, Results-based Budgeting Act, save anything for Albertans? It doesn't even save us from the embarrassment of having all of the record revenue and having to say that we can't balance our budget yet, but it's okay. Two years from now we're going to have $6 billion worth of surplus. How many times do we see individuals, companies, and CEOs say, when they're in financial distress, "Two years down the road the pot of gold is there; we just need to make it two years," when they don't have the discipline to balance their budget at that time.

Again, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona said that the Premier seems to be confused about what is results-based budgeting or zero-based budgeting. I guess I'd like to talk just a little bit about zero-based budgeting. There are some advantages. I'm a believer in zero-based budgeting, but the disadvantage many say is that it's very time consuming, and you have to go through every year the reasons why you're doing something. Again, showing the results. Why do we need to spend a billion dollars in agriculture again? So you go through the line items, and you say: well, do we need to cover off on this insurance policy, or do we need to put more money into this research? You actually go through this process of asking: should this be continued the next year?

I think that zero-based budgeting is something that should always be in the back of one's mind even if you're not actually doing it, to go through and ask the questions: "Is this the right thing to be spending our money on? Does this fit our criteria? Is this to be prioritized?" Let's face it. There are so many things in the world today. There is always the opportunity to spend more money. But the questions are: how are we going to spend the money that we do have, and are we going to prioritize it right? Zero-based budgeting gives one that opportunity, yet the question is: what has this government been doing? If it isn't zero-based budgeting, it's just incremental budgeting. So all that you really need to do is justify why you need to increase the budget. Perhaps you might say: well, IT has said that we need to upgrade our programming, and that's expensive; therefore, we need to increase our IT, you know, by 25 per cent. We look at the incremental increases with the thought that, well, we wouldn't have spent any money poorly last year, so we'll just look at anything where we need to have the increases. Zero-based budgeting takes us back to that question and having to justify each and every expenditure on an item basis. I believe that Albertans expect that from their government. They want every dollar spent wisely. They want to have a priority list.

I think it's another area where this government insults Albertans. My colleague was talking earlier about schools and whether or not that list should be made public. I'm always amazed when the government members over there say: "Oh, no. That would just be politics. People would be upset and fighting if they actually knew, you know, which schools were at the top of the priority list." Heavens. They act like Albertans don't understand. If a school in Beaumont is at 140 per cent capacity versus one that's at 70 per cent, do we need more there? I still remember that day when they saw children in Beaumont carrying their desks across the road to get to the other classes.

This government has failed on how they're prioritizing their budgeting. They can't even do an incremental one. The government and the Premier have decided that we don't want to go with zero-based budgeting, that what we want is results-based budgeting. That's very generic. It's even more embarrassing, in my opinion, as an Albertan to say that our budget is results based.

When you read through this very short bill – and I must say that brevity is always a bonus – it doesn't say a lot on what those results are going to be. The result of our budgeting is going to ensure that we don't have over a 10 per cent deficit. We're not going to expand. I mean, it doesn't even explain what results the government is looking for other than to say that next year – next year – we're going to go through everything. Well, if there was anything to go through since last October when they took over – they went through the budget. Yet they come forward and say: we can't make any cuts.

This Premier has said many times that there will be zero cuts. We don't need to cut, yet we need to expand. We need to increase our spending, and we need to increase government. Just operational alone: a 6.9 per cent increase in operations. This is an area in the alternative budget that we put out that said: no, we'll cap it at 2.5 per cent. I believe that that was a $1.6 billion savings by just reducing the operating.

Those are the types of things that results-based budgeting should reflect. We need to be able to see: what are going to be the results of cutting back in this area? What are the results of reducing the management and moving $800 million from management to front-line workers? What are the results, you know, if we go through an attrition program for the next four years and remove those top-end managers? What are the results if we actually build 3,000 beds for our seniors so that they can get out of the hospitals and into long-term care as opposed to keeping them in the hospitals and clogging up 50 per cent of our acute-care beds?

The government never talks about those things. They pontificate about it. They don't show the results. And if they had the results, one would surely think that they would be astute enough to realize, you know, that if we refocus our money, if we refocus these dollars on front-line teachers, on seniors' caregivers, on police officers and doctors and nurses and in equipment for diagnosing medical conditions, what would be the results? If we were to increase the amount of operating time for doctors so that they could get in and do the cataracts, do the hips, do the knees, what would be the results?

I just truly think that this government didn't even stumble upon it when they put results-based budgeting in their Bill 1 to think, you know: could our results be any better? Could we balance the budget this year? It's been clear that the result of their thinking is that, no, there's nothing to do any better. This is as good as it can be. This is what we want to do, go to Albertans and say: "You know, a $3.1 billion cash deficit for the fifth year in a row, totalling close to $16 billion, is the result of this government's thinking on how to balance the books." It's very disappointing, and it's very concerning. One has to ask: where are we going to be six months from now?

We need to do better, Mr. Speaker. This government needs to do better. If they don't, the results are going to be that we're going to have to make drastic cuts in areas that we don't want to. Those core services in our health care, in our education, in our policing, and the necessary infrastructure are going to be compromised in a few short years because this government insists on using a sustainability fund for unsustainable spending. It's not in the best interests of Albertans. It seems like their only interest is to say, "Well, if we spend enough money, people will vote for us, so we need a budget that gives to all so that no one can criticize it." But the fiscal conservative Albertans are criticizing this. They say that this isn't acceptable. They still remember the drastic cuts that were needed to be taken in order to get out of debt. For this Premier and cabinet to say that we're not in debt: well, they're running a deficit. The money that they spend is short $3.1 billion, I believe, of the revenue that they're taking in. That's the result of this budget which this government just brought down last week. It's not in our best interest.

We have an opportunity here to make some changes in the next 20 days or so and say: "You know what? Let's make some cuts. Let's look at those areas that aren't cost-effective." Why are we subsidizing industries? Why are we putting $2 billion into carbon capture and sequestration? What are the results of that? A shortage of hospital beds, a shortage of nurses, a shortage of teachers, a shortage of teaching assistants, a shortage of operations: hips, knees, cataracts. The results are that we are not addressing those things with a much higher priority whereas we're focusing on – I don't know – the cotton candy, the fluff, the sugary things, hoping that if it's sweet enough, they'll be able to get a majority government and come booming back and then say: "Let's talk about taxes. We have a problem here. The results of our overspending now have us in a position where taxes need to go up. Why didn't we think of that?"

I'm amazed that they want to bring in this Bill 1, Results-based Budgeting Act, yet they have so much referral to after this next election we'll need to have a discussion because the revenue is too volatile, coming from our resources, to be able to be dependent on it, so we'll need to talk about how we're going to shore up the revenue. They seem to say that more stable funding – we have record revenue, and they're not able to . . . [interjection] What's that?

They have record revenue, yet they have an even higher record of spending. They want to say that, you know, this is best for Alberta, that they're investing in the future, investing in people. I would say it's just the opposite. What they're doing is they're going to be taxing future generations. They're going to put them in a situation where they will not be able to recover from this.

The world, when you look out there, is in a very precarious situation right now. It'll be interesting here in the next few days to see what happens in Greece, whether they sign on to an austerity program and agree that they can't keep spending that much or whether they break away from the euro and have their own currency again. Then we'll see the repercussions of that, the devaluation that will go forward in order to monetize their debt out.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Any other hon. member wishing to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on the bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the hour and given that Valentine's Day is fast approaching, I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the House adjourned at 10:56 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Welcome.

Let us pray. Grant us daily awareness of the precious gift of life which has been given to us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and our country. Amen.

To all of you: happy, happy Valentine's.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of myself and my colleague the Member for Lethbridge-West it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly three persons who are in your gallery. Dr. Tracy Edwards is president of the Lethbridge College. Under her leadership the college has made tremendous strides into the future. One example is the training of the wind turbine technicians who work all over the world. The college is now very comprehensive and goes well beyond the old name of Lethbridge community college. Mr. Randy Jespersen is the very dedicated chair of our board of governors, and another hard-working friend of Lethbridge College who really needs no introduction to this House is Mr. David Coutts. Please rise and receive the greetings of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today, being an MLA from Calgary, to tell you that we have some very special visitors in the gallery that I'd like to introduce through you to everyone in his House, and that's 104 students from the Calgary Science School in my constituency. That's an awful lot of students, so some are here now, and some will be here later. They're here with their teachers, Candice Shaw, Jason Publack, Rick Fawcett, and Carolyn Armstrong; and also a number of parent helpers, Stuart McPhail, Kim Siemens, Adelina Banks, Bernadine Martin, Paul Langille, Pat Lipovski, Lorelee Higgins, Denise Ronsky, and a good friend of mine, Mr. Scott Blasken. I'd like everyone here to give them a rousing introduction and welcome. Thank you so much for being here.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you as well today visitors to our Legislature, some special visitors from Victory Christian school located in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. They're a group of 13 grade 9 students accompanied by their teacher, Jonathan Tomalty. I met with them earlier, and we had a question-and-answer session. I can assure you that they're a bright young group of students. They're learning a lot about the parliamentary system. They will be joining us in the public gallery, and I'd ask the members to give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you a group of hard-working staff from Infrastructure's properties division. These staff do a terrific job each and every day helping to manage government buildings all over the province. I see that they're up in the public gallery behind us: Alana Krakowski, Stephanie Hassard, Stacey Mah, Kelly Lemke, Max Amodio, Wayne Widuk, Sherry Shagidevich, Jacques Requier, Norene Tchir, and Fred Nyanzi. I'd ask these folks to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must beg your indulgence. I have a large list of guests today in the Legislature, and they are here to witness our tabling of Bill 2, the new Alberta Education Act. These are all Alberta's partners in education. If I may start with Jacquie Hansen, president of the Alberta School Boards Association, also accompanied by Cheryl Smith, vice-president, and David Anderson, executive director, who are here representing all of the school boards in the province of Alberta.

The Alberta Teachers' Association is represented by Carol Henderson, the president. I am so glad to know that Ms Henderson is here with us. Welcome. She is accompanied by Dennis Theobald, associate executive secretary of the Alberta Teachers' Association, representing all of the teachers doing the fine work in our province. From our Alberta School Councils' Association, representing all of the parents in the province of Alberta, is Marilyn Sheptycki, president, accompanied by Michele Mulder, executive director. Welcome.

The Public School Boards' Association of Alberta, representing, obviously, all of the public schools, is represented by Patty Dittrock, president, and Mary Lynne Campbell, executive director. The Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association is represented today by Mr. Tony Sykora, president, and also Stefan Michniewski, executive director. The Association of Alberta Public Charter Schools is represented today by Mr. Jim Rigby, co vice-president, and Lee Lucente, past co vice-president. Welcome. The Fédération des conseils scolaires francophones de l'Alberta is represented by Gérard Lavigne. Welcome as well.

The College of Alberta School Superintendents, representing all of the administrators in our province, is represented by Roger Nippard, president, and Barry Litun, past president. Also with us today, Mr. Speaker, is the Association of Independent Schools and Colleges in Alberta represented by David Eifert, vice-president, and Duane Plantinga, executive director. Also with us are education staff representing all of the support staff such as teaching assistants and others in our schools, represented by Wilma Ellenburgh, president of CEP local 52-A Edmonton Catholic Support Staff Association, and Danny Burrell, school support staff employee liaison officer. Welcome as well.

Mr. Speaker, representing our students is the minister's advisory council, comprised of Ariana Cahn, Gabrielle Fournell, Emily Marriot, Kelly Thompson, Joshua Au-Yeung, Fatima Hawa, Brittany Lissinna, Bethany Froese, Breanne Fulawka, Julie Carter, and representing Alberta Education staff, Kelley Beitel.

I would be remiss, Mr. Speaker, if I didn't introduce one more partner in education, very important to me personally— and he just happens to be in the gallery today as well — my grade 8 social studies teacher, Mr. Chuck Grelli, who must think that this is rather surreal if he remembers me from school days. I'd like him to rise as well.

Welcome to you all.

The Speaker: Nobody beyond grade 8, Minister? [laughter]
The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a close personal friend of mine, Mr. Kevin Pizzey. Kevin has taught school in Sylvan Lake for 23 years and is currently the president of Chinook's ATA local 17, comprised of approximately 700 teachers. Over the years Kevin and I have worked on a number of projects together to further the interest of public education in Alberta. We would mention Motion 503. Kevin has also been an active member of the PC Party for over 10 years and is well known by many in this Assembly. I would like him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to introduce Barb Noble, who is very active in her community and is the manager of the Edmonton office of the Heart and Stroke Foundation. Last year alone the Heart and Stroke Foundation invested close to $60 million in research, which funded almost 1,500 researchers across Canada. Since 1956 the total is more than $1.2 billion. I will share more on the foundation in my member's statement today, but in the meantime I invite all of our colleagues to join us in welcoming Barb to the Legislature today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you Dr. Ansar Qureshi. Dr. Qureshi has been working in Alberta as an environmental microbiologist for the past 25 years, with a focus on public health. Dr. Qureshi has an impressive resumé, including serving as a past director of the Capital region health board, past president of the Pakistan-Canada Association as well as serving on a number of community and public boards. Dr. Qureshi has also recently taken on the role of president of the soon to be formed Edmonton-South West PC association. He is very proud of having two boys and one girl. At this time I'd ask my guest to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

For my second introduction, Mr. Speaker, also in attendance is Naida Meghji, the child development manager at the Joan Ivany Allen Gray Child Development Centre. She has over 16 years of experience in child care and is continually striving for excellence in child development. If her name sounds familiar, it may be because of her family's connection to Platinum Investments, a major player in the EIA's expansion Marriott hotel. Her work with children and being a mom to two sons keeps her very, very busy. At this time I'd ask my guest to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a very special afternoon for the constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you Mr. Sohail Quadri, the newly nominated and official PC Party candidate in the next provincial election for my constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods. The Edmonton-Mill Woods PC Association has spoken, and through the unanimous vote held last January 31 we now have an official PC Party candidate for this great part of southeast Edmonton. I would now ask Mr. Quadri, who is seated in the public gallery, to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction is also a member of the Edmonton-Mill Woods PC Association. I would ask Mr. Farooq Jutt, who is seated in the public gallery, to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you Peter Menzies and Marc Patrone. Peter is currently the CRTC representative for Alberta and is someone who I've known for a very long time. Previously he has been an editor and publisher for the Calgary Herald and even before that was a member of the Legislative Assembly press gallery. Marc is currently the national commissioner for the CRTC, following his career as an experienced broadcast journalist who worked nationally with CTV and internationally with CNN and ESPN. With all of the things these men have been through, I consider it quite the honour that they would actually spend the afternoon in here watching us. I'd like them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly our guest Casey McCarthy. Casey is an AISH activist, heavily involved with the Self Advocacy Federation, the Special Olympics, and countless other organizations. Until recently she was also a constituent of mine. I would now ask Casey to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly our guests from various organizations fighting to preserve the natural heritage of the Castle wilderness area. Chelsea Flook, Gabriel Cárdenas, Nicholas Mickelsen, and Sarah Elmeligi have all come here today from different parts of the province to help stop the government's attack on one of the most biologically significant and threatened natural areas in North America. The Alberta NDP would continue to stand with these organizations like CPAWS and the Sierra Club Canada to help preserve and protect our province's natural heritage for future generations.

I would now like to ask my guests to rise as I call their names: Chelsea Flook, who is with the Sierra Club Canada; Gabriel Cárdenas, who is with the concerned citizens and is a community organizer; Nicholas Mickelsen, who is with the New Democratic Youth association; and Sarah Elmeligi, who is with the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society. I'd like the whole Legislature to join me in welcoming them.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Heart Month

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today we celebrate Valentine's Day, and this month we commemorate Heart Month. Throughout February organizations such as the Heart and Stroke Foundation of Alberta, NWT & Nunavut will be raising awareness of the risks of heart disease and informing Albertans that heart disease is preventable and manageable.

It's estimated that 70,000 Canadians have heart attacks every year. High blood pressure, high blood cholesterol, being overweight, excessive alcohol, physical inactivity, smoking, and stress are all risks that Albertans can address to reduce their chances of developing heart disease in the first place.

Today even our children are at greater risk of developing heart disease. Youth obesity rates are increasing while activity levels are decreasing. In Alberta approximately 22 per cent of children and youth are overweight or obese. Children as young as six are being diagnosed with high blood pressure as well as type 2 diabetes.

These two risks can be significantly reduced with a healthy diet and, of course, a more active lifestyle. The government of Alberta supports the Heart and Stroke Foundation of Alberta, NWT & Nunavut in encouraging Albertans to stay healthy and to make wise nutritional choices while increasing activity levels.

Mr. Speaker, I invite all members of our Assembly to join me in congratulating the Heart and Stroke Foundation of Alberta, NWT & Nunavut for raising awareness of heart disease not only during Heart Month but throughout the year as well as for the contributions they've made over time towards achieving their goal of eliminating disability and deaths from heart disease.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Health Care Services in Alberta

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I want to speak about health care. I spend most of my time talking to the health care workers in the trenches. They talk to me because the government won't listen and they don't trust them. I find it extremely ironic that this government, the Premier and her top ministers specifically, go on and on and on about having discussions and conversations with Albertans, and they won't talk to the health professionals who know a lot more about the number one issue to Albertans, health.

This government doesn't respect the hard work of doctors. The doctors have not had a contract for over a year now. The government keeps breaking off negotiations and playing hardball like cutting funding for primary care networks, a documented success story that helps reduce admissions to hospitals. Does this make sense with the family doctor shortage? Doctors have been intimidated and bullied by this government for years. The health minister has the audacity in question period to call it a workplace issue. The Premier when running indicated that she would call a full public judicial inquiry. Alas, another broken promise.

What is the government doing now? Well, they've found money to hire more vice-presidents at Alberta Health Services. In the last year the number has gone up, from 72 to 89, over 20 per cent. They've also opened a hotline for doctors. I wonder if these new vice-presidents will man that hotline.

Mr. Speaker, it's time for the government to have a real conversation with real people in the trenches and not their closed-door meetings. It's time to end the intimidation. It's time to give the support that they need to the real people that matter, the health care professionals and Albertans.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electricity Prices

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, happy Valentine's Day. It's great to see Madam Premier wearing Liberal red colours.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans' power bills are like a box of chocolates. They never know what they're going to get. Yesterday the Minister of Energy told Albertans who want lower prices to pick up the phone and call 11 different providers, and if you're on the regulated rate option, decrease your cost by 42 per cent. Instead of forcing Albertans to make dozens of calls for help after they've been gouged, why doesn't the Premier just make the fixed-term contracts the default option?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, we're quite proud of the fact that we give residential consumers this choice. It's not very complicated. Albertans every day make a choice when they go to borrow money for a mortgage. Do they want a fixed rate, do they want a variable rate, or do they want some combination? It's exactly the same situation with respect to electricity, and Albertans appreciate that choice.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That wasn't a tasty chocolate, Mr. Minister.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that Albertans continue to get gouged by high power bills, and this government won't do anything about it. Given that sky-high electricity prices do the most harm to the vulnerable in our society – those on fixed incomes, seniors, and hard-working families – does the Premier have the heart to tell these Albertans why there is nothing in the PC government's budget to provide any sort of relief from these sky-high bills?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, what we know is that in this province Albertans do have a choice with respect to whether or not they enter into fixed-term contracts. There's certainly not any reason for them to call 11 different providers. They can simply go to a website and get the information, make the decision, call, and sign a contract if they wish. The Minister of Energy is absolutely right. By doing that, they will be able to reduce their cost of electricity 42 per cent.

Now, we know that in a deregulated market sometimes the prices are high; sometimes they're low. We've had the good fortune over the past five years of having significantly lower prices, and that's very important. But with respect to whether or not vulnerable Albertans might need support, that's available. We didn't have to add it to the budget because it's already there.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in other jurisdictions such as British Columbia and Quebec government involvement ensures electricity prices are far less than those set by private power companies right here, will the Premier please show some compassion to Albertans and fix the price gouging happening under this government's flawed policy of electricity deregulation? Yes or no, Madam Premier.

Ms Redford: These are dangerous words from the hon. member, government involvement. Government involvement, Mr. Speaker, leads to the public debt being increased with respect to the cost of electricity so that future generations need to take on that debt, and we're not going to do that.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Critical Transmission Review Committee Report

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, let's talk about government involvement. Not surprisingly, a committee led by a former PC Party vice-president just came back with a report supporting this government's request to build more expensive transmission lines without an independent needs-based assessment by the AUC. The Premier talks a lot about listening to Albertans and consulting with them before any action is taken, yet it seems these new transmission lines are going full steam ahead. Is the Premier all talk, or will she stop this project in its tracks and send it to the AUC for an honest, transparent, needs-based assessment?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this is a very interesting report, which, of course, everyone will know the government received yesterday. We've made a commitment to respond to it in a very immediate time, and we will. There are some very specific recommendations in there with respect to cost sharing, with respect to competitive bid processing.

I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, that this was a panel made up of people who were consumer advocates, who understand the system, who consulted with over 50 people and, in fact, made recommendations that everyone will be fully aware were not my ideas last year. So I'm quite confident that as we move ahead and we look to economic development in this province, this is something that we're going to be able to work with.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, given that this committee agrees with opposition parties that Bill 50 should be brought back right here to the Legislature to remove this cabinet's ability to designate any future projects as critical, will the Premier commit to stopping this project right now until the government can introduce legislation allowing for a public consultation and independent experts to make the call and not cabinet? Independent, Premier.

Ms Redford: What's wonderful about this report is that it does give us a wide range of options. As we've said, Mr. Speaker, as our Minister of Energy has said, we will provide a comprehensive and fulsome response. We will not do what the hon. member is suggesting we do, which is cherry-pick. This is an important piece of integrated policy planning. We will respond. It will be a good response, and it'll be good for Alberta.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, there's a lot of cherry-picking going on here, winners and losers, and I hear Albertans are the losers in this Premier's hands.

Given that the report admits that the construction of these power lines will once again cause Albertans' power bills to go up and make these young people pay forever, is the Premier going to do anything to stop the continual gouging of Albertan families, or is she just going to leave them at the mercy of these huge private corporations?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, there are many people in this House that are fond of saying that this is question period and not answer period, but what I will say is that I would have appreciated it if the hon. member had listened to my first answer in this series of questions, where I talked about the fact that there were some really good recommendations in this and that we will be responding forthwith.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Castle-Crown Wilderness Area

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Castle-Crown area is a critical wildlife zone, the home of 223 species that are rare or at risk of extinction. Environmental groups have stated at length that this area is crucial to the maintenance of specific fish and wildlife populations. A recent survey has found that three-quarters of the residents are opposed to the logging in the area and wish Castle-Crown to be named a wildland park. My questions are to the Premier. Given that the Castle-Crown area is such a gem for watershed, wildlife, and recreation, how can you authorize logging in this area, an area that Albertans clearly want to preserve?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this is an issue, of course, that has been part of public discussion for the last couple of weeks and couple of months, and the minister has responded with respect to the policy that we have in place with respect to a forest management agreement. The most important piece of this is that what we're talking about is an area where there is abundant habitat. We do have wildlife that's thriving. I think that speaks to the fact that we have a forest management agreement in place that's allowing for economic development and environmental sustainability at the same time.

Mr. Chase: Again to the Premier: given that there are no proven pine beetle or fire threats in this area and that logging roads will facilitate even more illegal off-roading accessibility, how can this government justify this unjustifiable cumulative onslaught of the Castle-Crown?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I could scarcely do better than to echo the words of the Premier. The landscape that we see today, the beautiful landscape that's appreciated by Albertans far and wide, is a result of over a hundred years of harvesting. The habitat types that exist on that landscape today are the result of over a hundred years of harvesting and 50 years of full commercial logging. I think that speaks to the success of a management plan and the responsible operations of the companies.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The majority of countries, states, and provinces have abandoned the type of logging that has prevailed over the last hundred years.

Again to the Premier, in case we have a pop-up Whac-A-Mole: given that the Castle-Crown special area provides one-third of the water for southernmost Alberta as well as being a diverse habitat for plants and wildlife, when will you declare the Castle-Crown a wildland park? Will it be watershed or wood chips? Which side are you on?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, amongst the many, many values that we consider in forest management planning is watershed protection.

Ms Blakeman: It's a special place.

Mr. Oberle: I might point out to the hon. member, if the Member for Edmonton-Centre would allow me, Mr. Speaker, that we've done monitoring, not just planning but monitoring on those watersheds, and they're amongst Alberta's healthiest watersheds. Again, it's the result of 50 years of full commercial harvesting, 100 years of multiple forest use on that landscape. [interjections]

The Speaker: Okay. Okay. Okay. We've got every education leader in the province here today plus a number of children, and if this is the example we want to show to them, please, I will ignore the hon. member when the sixth question comes because she's already had more than her share to say this afternoon.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The decision-making process for the north-south power lines has been wrong from the very beginning and has asked landowners, businesses, and residents to pay the bills for big corporate profits. In 2004 Justice Tilleman stopped the building of these lines on the grounds of apprehension of bias, and this was upheld in the Court of Appeal by Justice Conrad. The government then pushed these lines forward by passing Bill 50 and declaring these lines critical. Now even their own review committee says that Bill 50 is wrong and that the process should go through the AUC. Will the Premier do what is right for Albertans and industry by restoring decision-making to the AUC and repeal Bill 50?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the preliminary comments with respect to this question by the hon. member, quite frankly, are ancient history. Whether or not there may have been developments almost seven or eight years ago with respect to this are not relevant to the circumstances today. What I will say is that the report that we received yesterday did speak to the importance of economic development in this province, that part of that is ensuring that we have a connected grid. As I've said, we think there are some very interesting recommendations in this report, and as my Minister of Energy has said, we will be responding in a fulsome way, in a comprehensive way to this report in very due time.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, it's not ancient history.

Given the fact that AESO was offside on this and so was the cabinet, we need to review it again. Given that the government's own report admits that the review process is wrong by taking authority away from the AUC and not using a competitive procurement process for building the north-south lines, will the Premier please protect Albertans and our industries from overinflated power prices by repealing Bill 50 and stopping the overbuild?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, our friends on the other side here have been complaining for years now that, one, there was not enough consultation and, two, that we didn't take enough time. Well, we have done the consultation. We've done two months of consultation, and now we're taking the time to consider the recommendations that the committee has made. They can't have it both ways. Do they want us to take the time or hurry up? We're going to take the time and consider these recommendations.

Mr. Hinman: We've been consistent the whole time.

Given that the vast majority of the groups, especially those representing consumers and industry and those that were at the hearing of the north-south lines, were against it and given that the only cost-benefit analysis by the U of C showed that this is a multibillion-dollar boondoggle and given that the only presenters that actually supported these lines were those who would profit from them, will the Premier quit hiding behind this sham report and tell Albertans why she is putting her interest and that of the power brokers ahead of Albertans?

Ms Redford: I have no particular interest in these power lines beyond the fact that I'm the Premier of a province that I believe will be the economic engine for the future of this country. What I saw yesterday, Mr. Speaker, in that that report was a framework that talked about how we can continue that success. We've had some very interesting discussions in the past two or three months about the importance of building infrastructure in this province, outside of this province, whether it's the Keystone pipeline or the Gateway pipeline. Infrastructure matters for economic development, and that's what Albertans are going to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Alberta families are paying the highest electricity bills in Canada, but when this Tory government is challenged about it, they have no answers for Albertans. Instead, they respond with half-truths, misleading statistics, and red herrings. Mr. Speaker, Albertans want real answers for the highest power bills in history. Do you have one for them, Premier?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'll be happy to table later today a report by London Economics International that shows power prices in context, comparing Alberta-delivered electricity prices with other Canadian provinces on a level playing field, March 2011. We'll be happy to provide that. This talk about Quebec prices – 96 per cent of the electricity in Quebec is generated by old hydro. They generate it cheap, and they sell it expensively down to the States. It's not an apples-to-apples comparison.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the Premier why she doesn't answer questions when they are put to her in this House. Why are you hiding behind your ministers?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I'm sitting here with a front bench of excellent cabinet ministers that know their issues, care about Albertans, consult with Albertans. There are certainly times when I answer questions. Every single time that a question is put to me, I ensure that the answer that is provided to this House is the most fulsome and detailed answer possible, and this is a cabinet that will ensure that happens. I believe that when we go forward in the future of this province, leadership is not about one person; it's about a team. I'm very proud of this team, and this team will continue to work together.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, at least we got an answer from the Premier even though it wasn't the question.

Given that electricity is an essential service for families, farms, and businesses, can the Premier explain why this government clings to a broken power market that is manipulated by big power companies, creating wild price swings and the highest power rates in Canada?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, these allegations are completely unfounded. The fact is that we in this province made a decision many years ago that a deregulated market was good for Alberta consumers, for household consumers and for industrial consumers. What we will say is that while we move forward, if we look over what has happened in the past five years, as the Minister of Energy has said, we don't actually find the hon. member across being too upset when power prices are low, only when they're high.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Environmental Monitoring

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government has an action and a credibility problem when it comes to environmental protection and our international reputation. All it does is try to sell a message rather than working to ensure that it has the scientific foundation and the action on the ground to back it up. To the Minister of Environment and Water: why is this government moving forward on monitoring without an independent commission in place? That is the only way to ensure scientific credibility. Why?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are moving forward with monitoring, and we made that announcement with Minister Kent a couple of weeks ago. We're doing this in phases. We're moving forward with the monitoring, as I've said before, so we wouldn't lose the spring monitoring season. We've announced $11 million in our budget. We have agreement from the industry that they will over the next three years provide $50 million with regard to that. The next step, as I've said before, is that now we're working on this external body with regard to independent monitoring.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. Without science that spring monitoring isn't going to be credible.

To the same minister: what is the reason to move forward without signed financial commitments in place? Without them we're leaving Albertans to carry the risk for all of the liabilities of this project.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to say that, quite frankly, we have the support for what we're doing from people like Dr. Schindler who have also expressed their support with regard to the way we are moving forward and the quick manner that we are doing it. We have the support of the science community, academic community, industry, and our caucus colleagues here. We are moving with a science-based monitoring program that will be independent.

Ms Blakeman: Minister, I asked you about financial commitments. I don't think Dr. Schindler is going to pay for that.

To the same minister. The government appears to have grasped the concept of independent, science-based monitoring for the use of surface water. So how long do we have to wait for this same realization about groundwater monitoring, especially in association with fracking?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like, perhaps, for the member to be listening as well. I did talk about not that Dr. Schindler would be paying for this but that along with our budget dollars, $11 million, industry has committed over the next three years $150 million to monitoring. We are already starting our groundwater mapping. We've done from Edmonton to Calgary. Quite frankly, we are going to continue working on the environmental issues that are important to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Municipal Sustainability Initiative Funding

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a former mayor and president of the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association I know the funding challenges faced by communities all across this province and the tremendous value of a program like the municipal sustainability initiative. This did not exist during my time as mayor. Recently the coverage following the budget announcement alleges that the MSI funding is based on how a municipality votes; namely, who their MLA is. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: are MSI funds awarded based on any such political discretion?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, it's incredibly unfortunate that such an accusation has been made. MSI was formed in consultation with the AUMA, AAMD and C, municipalities all across this province, an extensive consultation from one end to the other. The formula is very explicit. It's 48 per cent based on population, 48 per cent on the education property tax, and 4 per cent on roads. The municipalities can even go online and look at the value within about a week of exactly how much money they're going to get. There's no political playing with this game. Any suggestion otherwise is irresponsible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister. Mr. Minister, to my recollection the AUMA and, by extension, municipalities in Alberta have always had an excellent working relationship with this government. Will the comments by the AUMA president harm this relationship?

2:10

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I've worked for 10 years as an MLA to build better communities. I've travelled all over this province, going to 328 of the 422 communities. Municipalities are an incredibly important partner in building stronger communities and a better province. The comments of one individual will not affect this province's relationship with municipalities in building a better Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: with the pending review of the Municipal Government Act are you and this government contemplating expanding any powers for municipalities to meet the growing diverse challenges faced by all these communities?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I've announced already that we're going to do an extensive rewrite of the Municipal Government Act in three different parts. We're going to do that in consultation with municipalities because we understand that municipalities have unique and new challenges from one end of this province to the other, and we have to make sure that municipalities have the tools, the resources, the responsibility, and the revenue to make the appropriate decisions to serve their citizens, just like we in this Assembly serve the people of this province.

Education Funding

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Education is big on making claims that the education system is being improved under his watch. That said, the facts speak for themselves. I see no accomplishment in telling school boards they're not getting adequate funding for the next three years. Why are there 450 fewer teachers in our classrooms this year compared to last? Does the minister honestly believe this is good for our children's future?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I am not only laying claim that I'm trying to improve an already excellent education system, not only because of myself or my predecessors here on the floor of the Legislature but, frankly, all of these education stakeholders that we have in the galleries. I have to tell you that we haven't yet debated the estimates on Education, but for the first time in the history of this province our educators, our partners, have the predictability of funding for the next three years. The budget for Alberta Education will be growing from $6.8 billion to $7.1 billion. However, local priorities on how many teachers need to be hired to deliver this high-quality education will be made by school boards.

Mr. Hehr: That answer and a buck 50 gets me a cup of coffee at Tim Hortons, Mr. Speaker.

I asked why there are 450 fewer teachers in the classroom today. Why and how has that happened under this minister's watch?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, if $7.1 billion buys him a cup of coffee, he's a very thirsty young man.

Decisions are being made by school boards. I have to tell you that last fall the Premier and this cabinet committed an additional $107 million. That hired 680-some teachers, I believe, and that $107 million now is replicated in the three subsequent budgets. Decisions will be made at the local school board level on how many teachers are required to deliver the program.

Mr. Hehr: I guess it's the school boards' fault.

My last question is in regard to the minister's ability to budget. Given that the minister expects teachers will sign an agreement for a 1 per cent salary increase, along with unicorns and magical fairies how can the minister believe this is a legitimate number to budget on?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, there are no faults because we're not in the business of pointing fingers. I stress the word "partnership," and I find all the players in the system are partners in education. If they want to play the blame game, they're more than welcome to do it.

The fact is that we also will not be negotiating collective bargaining agreements on the floor of this Legislature. We have partners who will be negotiating, and I'm sure they will strike a deal that will be right for the children of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ambulance Services in St. Albert

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions, through you, will be to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Many municipalities, including the city of St. Albert, have a history of providing excellent paramedic services integrated with local fire departments. In 2009 Alberta Health Services took over these services with the promise that we would have improved service. Why is it that that service has declined to a critical stage, with excessive wait times being the norm?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would disagree with the hon. member that service levels have declined in St. Albert. In fact, the median response times for St. Albert lights-and-sirens calls have remained steady at around seven minutes since the transition. Response time for the 90th percentile has actually improved in St. Albert, from around 15 minutes at the time of the transition to around 13 minutes today.

Mr. Allred: Mr. Speaker, given that the city of St. Albert formerly had five ambulances and wait times of less than nine minutes and now has only two ambulances available a little more than half time and, of major concern, 8 per cent of the time St. Albert has no ambulances and wait times averaging 14 and a half minutes and sometimes up to one hour, what is the minister doing to respond to this unacceptable degradation of service?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, it has been very clear to me since the end of last year that we have a problem with data availability around EMS response times in Alberta, and that is why in January I asked Alberta Health Services to make all EMS response times in Alberta public on their website. That process will begin at the end of the month.

In response to the hon. member's question about ambulance availability, there is provision for up to five ambulances to be available in St. Albert at any particular point in time. There are currently two permanently stationed there and a third at the Sturgeon hospital. When that third ambulance is not on the road, Mr. Speaker, the paramedic assigned to that unit is working in the emergency department.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly agree that we do have a data problem.

Mr. Speaker, given that we had a very clear plan on how to eliminate the ambulance queue at the entrances to hospital emergency rooms, why do we continue to see ambulances and their attendants lined up, waiting to release their patients and get back on the road to answer other emergency calls?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we do continue to see these delays, and one of the reasons we do is that over the last year emergency department visits in Alberta have gone up by an average of 17 per cent. That's a very significant increase.

I can tell the hon. member that I've had the opportunity to discuss the St. Albert issue with the mayor of St. Albert. We will continue to work together on this. There are some further developments I'll be able to announce shortly with respect to communication between EMS workers and AHS management.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Farm Worker Exemptions from Labour Legislation

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For decades in Alberta an average of six children per year died on farms and ranches, yet this hon. Human Services minister responded to my concerns in a letter dated January 2012: the restrictions the legislation places on the employment of children, including those relating to minimum wage and minimum age, do not apply on a farm or ranch environment. To the minister: is this an acceptable situation in Alberta in the 21st century?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, in Alberta the vast majority of our farms are still family farms. It's traditional for families to work on the farms. The labour rules that apply in other workplaces across the province do not apply in that same manner on a family farm, but we also can work with families on farms. The loss of any child is horrendous, and the injuries of any person on a farm are horrendous, and we need to work on improving the understanding of safety and those sorts of issues on farms while we retain the right of families to work their farms.

Dr. Swann: That's a tiresome response, Mr. Speaker, for many, many in the farm-working industry. What do you mean to say when you say: we're putting children first? Six deaths a year.

Mr. Hancock: I put children first every day of my life, and I have every time [inaudible]. The future of this province depends on making sure that every child has the opportunity to maximize their potential. That means protecting children when they need protection, even on farms. But we don't go into people's houses; we don't go onto people's farms and tell them how to raise their children. We do protect children when they're in danger, and we do that through education, through family support, and through many other mechanisms. Every child is important.

Dr. Swann: I'm talking about industrial farms also and paid children. The Barley report suggested not only education; we have to have legislation on these farms. This is a judge. You are a lawyer. When are you going to act and get legislation to protect our children on farms?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we constantly look at what we can do better, and the minister of agriculture tasked a committee to bring forward a report on that. That report has come forward. We're looking at that now to see if there are other things that we can do, including possibly the question of whether changes in policy or legislation could be necessary. But let's be perfectly clear. Legislation doesn't make people safe. People understanding that they have to operate in safe conditions and they have to care about their workers: that's what makes people safe, and that's the kind of atmosphere we want on our farms across the province.

2:20 Medevac Services at Namao Air Base

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, media reports last week indicated that the President of Treasury Board and Enterprise was in discussion with the Edmonton Garrison to transfer medevac services to their airstrip from the Edmonton City Centre Airport. My question is for the President of Treasury Board and Enterprise. Is it true that medevac services will be moved to the Garrison?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My colleague is partially correct. We are in preliminary discussions with the land force western commander at the Garrison about the possibilities around reactivating what was at one time the fourth-longest airstrip in the Commonwealth. There may be some opportunities there, but no decisions have been made at this time.

Mr. Drysdale: The safety of patients and transport times to local hospitals have been a concern of my constituents since it was announced that the city of Edmonton would be closing the downtown airport. Will transport time from the Garrison be a consideration in this decision?

Mr. Horner: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. Because of the Health Quality Council report we need to find an alternate landing strip, so indeed we are looking at a number of different locations that will provide that. We view the Garrison as a possibility where we may be able to move not only medevac services but also the government of Alberta transportation services and perhaps some other private partners out to that strip. All of the parameters the Health Quality Council talked about, all of the parameters around distance to the airport, distance to hospitals, and patients coming in from the north are going to be considered.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, my final question to the same minister: is this the only option being considered, and when will a decision be made about where medevac services will be situated when the municipal airport closes?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we are actually looking at a couple of other possibilities for a secondary landing strip. Regardless of whether we go to the Edmonton International with the medevac services, we will still need to find an alternative landing area for bad weather or low altitude cloud levels. There are a few places in the area that we can look at; Namao is one of them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Minimum Housing and Health Standards

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This PC government behind closed doors is drafting new rules to weaken the safety of rental housing in a shameful effort to reward the Premier's political donors. Enforcement of the current standards is so poor that at least eight people have died in fires in recent years, and now this government wants to erode the rules so enforcement becomes impossible. My question to the minister of health is: why won't he agree that even $20,000 in donations to the Premier is not worth legalizing fire traps for low-income Alberta families and, instead, commit to no changes to this document about standards in rental housing?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health and Wellness if it's appropriate.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This question is not only insulting; it's frankly very uninformed. I have been presented by my department with no draft changes to regulations under the Public Health Act that address window size and dimensions. I can think of fewer MLAs, perhaps with the exception of one in this House, that have appreciated in recent months the significant damage and stress and anxiety that fire causes in one's constituency, having just endured two in my area. My constituents are dealing with this issue; they're talking to me about it every day. We're dealing with it. We're strengthening the standards, not weakening them.

Ms. Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, then I ask the minister again: will you commit today that there will be no changes to the Minimum Housing and Health Standards document dated 1999? Are there no changes to it?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, until such time as I decide to entertain consideration of any options for changes to that regulation, the answer is no.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, given that the current requirements for windows and doorways to provide a clear, objective measure of what's safe to use for a bedroom that may hold children, grandparents, and people with disabilities, given that they're going to be thrown out or there's discussion of throwing those out in favour of the unenforceable term "reasonable," will the minister explain how his government or people in his government could have considered such changes for any reason except for being immoral? Your own staff have confirmed that these decisions are under consideration.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, once again and for the final time, I have no idea what information this hon. member has or thinks that she has or the source. I can tell you that the government is committed to maximizing safety for all residents, particularly those in rental suites, with respect to fire, and we'll continue to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

School Infrastructure Funding

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm heartbroken to report that thousands of children go to school in Alberta in conditions close to those of Third World countries. Leaky roofs, bad plumbing, and substandard heating are the reality of too many students across the province, yet this government again failed to address the pressing infrastructure and maintenance needs that schools boards face on a daily basis. To the Minister of Infrastructure: is this your blueprint for our world-class education system, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the maintenance and the ongoing maintenance of schools are the responsibility of school divisions, and we flow about a hundred million dollars a year through to those school divisions. I'd stack our infrastructure in this province up against any jurisdiction in North America.

These things are a balance, and we struggle or wrestle with those just like a normal family does and any business does that decides priorities on where to put their money. I think this is a great example of how on one side we get told to spend more and on one side we're told to spend less. We're trying to find ways to spend smarter, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We want our children safe in the schools. To the minister again: given the fact that Grimshaw school is clearly a health and safety hazard for all staff and students, how can you justify your department's denial of funds for school maintenance for the last 10 years? Fifty per cent of schools are 50 years old.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we're very well aware of the issue at Grimshaw school, and I feel for those parents and those students. I know the local MLA has been quite an advocate.

Obviously, the Department of Education has to stack up their priorities right across the entire province. Once again, there's only so much money to go around, but Alberta is investing about a billion dollars in 88 school projects right now, which dwarfs any other province in the country. We'll continue to look forward and try and deal with issues like this as soon as we possibly can.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nothing gets done fast enough.

To the minister again: given that school boards across the province have raised concerns over the increased use of P3 partnerships to build their facilities and the rising costs associated with these projects, will the minister commit to the public construction of our public schools?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the P3 projects are a real good-news story in Alberta. Of course, we can't use them in every situation. They're not right in every situation, but one thing they do for Albertans is provide certainty. They provide certainty for us that there is going to be a budgeted amount for maintenance and that that school 30 years down the road is going to be in great condition as opposed to just rolling maintenance funding through to school boards and they have to weigh different priorities amongst themselves.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Sale of Crown Land in Fort McMurray

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Media stories in Fort McMurray indicated that government is getting ready to release more Crown land in Fort McMurray for development. Can the Minister of Infrastructure tell us more about these plans and whether the land will meet the needs of the community?

The Speaker: First of all, verification: media reports are inappropriate.

Proceed.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it's true that we are working on some more strategic land releases in Fort McMurray. Some of these were highlighted on pages 39, 40, 41 of the budget, where Fort McMurray was specifically mentioned, for the folks that actually read the budget. The people of Fort McMurray deserve to see a clear plan for which pieces of land are going to be released in which order so that we can send some clear signals to the market and we can help stabilize land prices in that very important part of the province.

Mrs. Leskiw: My second question is to the same minister. The second parcel of land in the Southlands area in Fort McMurray was supposed to have been put on the market early last year. Why the delay on this piece of land?

Mr. Johnson: That is a good question, Mr. Speaker. There were two pieces of land south of Fort McMurray that were anticipated to go on the market in the last year, both in an area called Southlands. One went on the market; folks down there were expecting the second piece to come on by the end of this last year, 2011. But it was always intended that the second parcel would not come on until the deal on the first parcel was closed, wrapped up. That took a little bit longer than we thought, with conditions being removed. That's done now. The second parcel will come on the market very soon.

Mrs. Leskiw: More land being available for development is fine, but too much land on the market may drive down property prices. Have you factored in people's investment before releasing all this land?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it's a common concern. There's certainly an overdemand for land in the Fort McMurray area because of the incredible growth up there although some folks are concerned that if we release too much Crown land, it might depress prices. We've been working with the municipality and developers, the UDI, and other stakeholders to make sure that the plans we have going forward are measured and that we're going to be able to stabilize land prices without having an adverse effect on people that have invested in property up there.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today is Valentine's Day. I hope everyone gives wishes to their loved one and a nice present.

The PC government just got a nice present from the power lines review committee, headed by one of the government's old boys. Apparently, he is now drinking Starbucks coffee as Alberta power bills continue to go from $80 to $160 an average home. This gives new meaning to double-double. My question to the Minister of Energy: does this concern you?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, we're used to members on that side impugning the integrity of members on this side, but I'm a little tired of hearing attacks on members of the public who step up and serve the public interest. Does anyone really think that someone who's a former chairman of the University of Alberta, somebody who is a professor emeritus of electricity at the University of Saskatchewan and a member of the Royal Society of Canada or the current head of the business school over at the University of Alberta – are they subject to undue influence from us? No. They owe us nothing. They are independent. They were set up to give us advice, and that's what they've done.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, given the minister's non answer and given that the minister is not concerned about Albertans' double-double power bills, why would any Albertan in a Tim Hortons coffee line trust what you're saying if you were to say, "Oh, it's only going to be a Timbit, your future power bill"? Why would we trust you?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, let the record show that Ted Morton goes to Tim Hortons, okay? I'm not a Starbucks guy. Let it also show, as I've already said, I'll be tabling a report today from London Economics that shows that Alberta's prices, when fairly compared, are completely competitive with nonhydro jurisdictions across Canada.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, given, Mr. Speaker, that the minister admits to drinking coffee at Tim Hortons like average Albertans, like all of us, I have to ask him: is someone putting something in your coffee by those answers?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Ten-point Plan for Education

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In January of this year the Education minister introduced an education 10-point plan based on the consultation held in the fall of 2011. I received feedback from parents in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie, and there is some confusion as to whether or not this impacts the continued transformation agenda of the future. My question is to the Minister of Education. Can the minister assure this House of his continued commitment to the transformation agenda in light of his new 10-point plan initiative?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, definitely. Not only the transformation agenda but also all the work, the great work, that was done by the current minister of human resources on Inspiring Education will carry on and must carry on for us to maintain our standards in education. In the 10-point plan are simple initiatives that can be addressed right now with the current School Act. You shall see, hon. member, in a few minutes how the new Education Act contains many of these initiatives, and we are fully committed to carry on with those great initiatives.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the same minister. With the 10-point plan the minister emphasizes the importance of parents' role in their children's education. Hasn't this always been the case? Haven't parents always been involved in different ways? How is it different?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, yes, parents have. What this new legislation will do – and I'll be speaking to it generically now – is that it'll reassert the parents', the student's, the community's, and the educator's role in the child's learning. This is a communal initiative. It takes more than a teacher in a classroom to educate a child. It will also empower the parents to be active partners in education and make sure that they have access to the information that they require to make decisions in partnership with educators.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister. In his 10-point plan the minister talks about building parks as part of building schools. Can the minister assure my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie on the brand new school in Summerside? Is it included as part of his 10-point plan?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I will have to look at that particular school, but I'll tell you that in Edmonton Dunluce elementary school just celebrated their 25th anniversary, and parents just raised enough money 25 years later to build the kids a playground. I firmly believe that if we want to keep our kids active and meet some of the initiatives that the minister of health has on wellness and if we require in our curriculum our kids to be continuously active, building a playground with an elementary school simply makes sense.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Revenue from Problem Gambling

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Of the $492 million in gross profits from VLTs last year, 77 per cent came from the pockets and purses of people with, unfortunately, gambling problems. My first question is to the Deputy Premier. Why is this greedy Progressive Conservative government knowingly robbing problem gamblers instead of trying to help them get over their addictions to the VLT machines?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I take exception to the preamble in the sense that the AGLC works to ensure that the gaming industry is well managed. It provides responsible gaming information and resources. There are a number of responsible gaming initiatives that have been developed by the AGLC, and in some areas they are recognized as a leader in the research and the development of those programs: responsible gaming information centres, player awareness terminals, the voluntary self-exclusion program, mandatory training programs, including Reel Facts, Deal Us In, and A Good Call.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, again I'm going to ask the Deputy Premier this. Of the $800 million in gross profits from slot machines last year, 72 per cent came from problem gamblers. Why is this greedy Progressive Conservative government knowingly robbing problem gamblers with slot machine addictions instead of trying to help them?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the data that he's claiming to have, 72 per cent. I don't think he has it either, and it's unfortunate that he would bring that kind of thing into the House. This is a serious issue that we take very seriously. We are making investments into problem gambling. We're making investments into addictions counselling. We're making investments into the mental health of all Albertans.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Deputy Premier: why is this greedy Progressive Conservative government hiding the actual percentage of profits they take from these gamblers with the VLT and slot machine addictions with an Enron-style accounting process? Why are you doing that?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I could, I suppose, call a point of order on that one. I could, I suppose, call it a number of things. It's an inaccurate, unarticulated, very poor question which does not deserve an answer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Education Property Tax

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today's headlines in the local newspaper in Red Deer stated: tax hike getting higher; provincial government approving largest education property tax increase in 20 years. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why is this government doing this?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. I saw the headline, too, and I was somewhat taken aback by it. I asked my department to look it up. It's hardly a huge increase. The city of Red Deer itself is going to see an increase of $4 per month in their property tax, a total of $60 a year. I don't know where they get their numbers from. The total amount collected for education from Red Deer is $38 million, which goes to help in the spending of $160 million on educating the children of Red Deer.

Mrs. Jablonski: Again to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given that the budget documents said that no taxes were going up, why have I heard that education property taxes are going up?

Speaker's Ruling Questions about Media Reports

The Speaker: Hon. member, the problem with this is that we've ruled this out before on many occasions. A verification of media reports, newspaper articles, is not the purview of this Assembly. If you're asking the minister to explain why a paper would say a certain thing, I don't know how that fits into the question period.

If the minister has something to add for further clarification, proceed.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've in fact had a couple of calls to my office asking a very similar question, and I've explained to everyone that in this province right now in this budget the education portion of property taxes, income taxes, our business and corporate taxes have all been frozen. The reason why the amount of taxes collected has gone up is because we have a prosperous province, where more businesses, more people want to come and work and more houses are being built. That's what has increased the tax roll and the resources available to this government to provide services to Albertans.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Education: does every penny of these education property tax revenues go into the classroom?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the dollars that are received from assessment, which is growing – the value of a house is growing, so the tax is growing, not the percentage that you pay – are about one-third of the cost of education. The rest is contributed by Albertans. I consider that, frankly, an investment. You don't spend money on education; you invest money in education. This is the future generation of our province, which will be generating wealth for all of us.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 18 members were recognized today, with 107 questions and responses.

In 30 seconds from now we will continue with Members' Statements.

2012 Western Engineering Competition

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to recognize the competitors, volunteers, organizers, and sponsors of the 2012 provincial Western Engineering Competition, hosted by the University of Calgary. For 26 years the competition has inspired and challenged the minds of engineering students in western Canada, encouraging them to test their problem-solving skills in a competitive atmosphere. This year was no exception.

The five-day event allowed students to share engineering knowledge, challenge their skill set, and gain exposure to leaders in their chosen fields. Students competed in six challenges designed to showcase their talent outside the classroom. This year's competition focused on water, a resource Alberta is committed to managing and safeguarding now and in the future.

We all share responsibility for ensuring a healthy, secure, and sustainable water supply for our communities, environment, and economy. Our quality of life depends on it. That's an important lesson for all of us, especially Alberta's next generation of engineers, and it would appear that they have taken this lesson to heart.

I would like to congratulate students from both the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary who placed first in the impromptu debate and engineering communication categories, respectively.

Mr. Speaker, this event was a wonderful showcase of the importance of engineering to Alberta's economy. May the lessons that these young engineers took away from the competition inspire them to continue on a path of successful research and innovation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Our Children, Our Future Education Consultation

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and speak about the Our Children, Our Future: Getting It Right consultations. Over eight weeks between November 2011 and January this year thousands of Albertans had the opportunity to share their thoughts and ideas on the future of education through community meetings, online, by e-mail, by phone, and through social media. The feedback was remarkable.

Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity at the Bonnyville community meeting to see first-hand how Albertans speak passionately about education and want the best possible opportunities for our students. We heard about the importance of making schools safe and welcoming. We heard about making learning relevant for all students. We heard about keeping students engaged in their learning, and we heard about setting students up for success in life.

Maybe most importantly, we heard from students themselves who spoke eloquently about their challenges with schools and their hopes for the future. In fact, I'd like to share a few quotes from letters students from Dr. Brosseau school in my constituency wrote as part of the consultations. A grade 5 student: "School makes me feel mad because I don't want to get up in the morning to take my bus at 7 a.m. But it makes me feel happy because I like to learn and I want to get good grades and go to college and get a job that I want."

"If I could be minister for one day I would make sure that every student would participate in gym class. Gym gives students a chance to stay fit and I think it's very important for kids to stay healthy." A grade 6 student.

Mr. Speaker, I am confident that the bold ideas collected through the Our Children, Our Future consultations have provided meaningful direction for government and will support new education legislation for the province. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Community Sustainability Task Force Report

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week a report was tabled in this Assembly authored by the city of Edmonton Community Sustainability Task Force. The report, titled Elevate, looks into the plight of older inner-city neighbourhoods. As you and many members of this Assembly know, this is an issue I continue to highlight on behalf of my communities that I represent in Calgary-North Hill.

Today I want to share some words provided to my office from a constituent who eloquently describes the challenges faced by these communities and the residents. The subject of her e-mail is Helping Our City To Grow Upward Rather than Outward. She writes:

After [the Premier] was elected, I heard her speak very eloquently, on the CBC Radio afternoon phone in show, to a father living in Edmonton's inner city, where a school had closed. His child now had to be bused . . . to the suburbs.

[The Premier] spoke about the importance of building vibrant inner cities that are welcoming to new families and the importance of helping our cities to grow up rather than out, for the sake of our environment. [The Premier] further commented that schools should be used for other community functions, in order to build strong community and generate revenue for the schools, in order to avoid closures.

My daughter and I live in Capital Hill (near Confederation Park) and often walk to school . . . I constantly talk to my daughter about the merits of living in the inner city, for us and for the environment. I also emphasize that we need to be a part of the social movement to end the urban sprawl, which poses so many difficulties for our city and our province's already stretched resources.

Sadly, if [my daughter's school] closes . . . [she] will have to be bused or driven to school. It seems like a move in the wrong direction for Calgary and for Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, today I urge the hon. Premier, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, and the Minister of Education to work with our two large municipalities, four metro school boards, and other relevant government and community stakeholders to implement an urban inner-city revitalization strategy which implements the recommendations of the Elevate report. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Castle-Crown Wilderness Area

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dirty rascals. For hundreds of years children at play attempting to outposition one another have chanted: I'm the king of the castle, and you're the dirty rascal. Unfortunately, in Alberta when it comes to protecting our Castle-Crown region, we have neither a benevolent king or a queen championing the cause but, rather, a short-sighted army of dirty rascals. The foot soldiers in this mercenary army of clear-cutting devastation contracted to the Spray Lake Sawmills, based out of Cochrane, are operating within the morally and economically deficient regulations of the ministry of sustainable resources.

With the battle cry of Stumps Trump this horde of legalized locusts has been granted permission to level one-half of the forested region of the Castle-Crown, an area recognized as one of 81 special places by the government of Alberta in 1998. The term "special," whether applied to a geographic location or to the needs of vulnerable Albertans, affords little or no protection by this government. The economic value of exported wood chips pales in comparison to the costs associated with damaged watershed, destroyed habitat, facilitated illegal off-road trail access, species endangerment to name just a few of the environmental concerns raised by the 80 per cent of southern Albertans opposed to the government's endorsed devastation.

To add further insult to injury, Alberta taxpayers will cover the cost of paving the road to the Castle ski resort. Travelers will be afforded a smoother ride as they view the clear-cuts along the resort road. As Spray Lake has been granted similar first in time, first in right government permission to log along scenic route highway 40 in K Country and around Bragg Creek, the province's environmental motto appears to be Bald Is Beautiful.

Albertans will soon have the opportunity to make a decisive cut of their own by registering their concerns at the ballot box.

Introduction of BillsBill 2
Education Act*The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill, Bill 2, the Education Act.

Education and the preparation of Alberta children for the future and the future of this province is a priority for this government. I am proud that the gallery is filled today with a number of educational partners, who I was pleased to introduce earlier.

The duties and demands placed on our education system today extend far beyond those of the late 1980s, when the School Act was introduced. We understand that education is the foundation of a democratic and civil society. We understand that education inspires students to discover and pursue their aspirations and interests and cultivates a love of learning and the desire to be a lifelong learner. Our understanding of these concepts has grown and has been enhanced by the extensive conversations Albertans have had with government over the past few years about the future of education.

Albertans take great pride in our education system, and they want to ensure that it continues to be world class. Our first responsibility is to make sure that all decisions are student centred and all decisions relate to learning and education. Albertans also said that education must help students make successful transitions to adulthood and create lifelong learners who contribute to healthy, inclusive communities and thriving economies.

What we heard in our most recent consultation confirmed that the direction we took from Inspiring Education was the right one but also led us to place stronger emphasis on two elements in education: one, that students are entitled to welcoming, caring, respectful, and safe learning environments; and, two, that education is a shared responsibility among boards, classroom staff, parents, students, and the community. As a result, we have made a good piece of legislation even better. For example, to foster the important partnership between boards, parents, and the community . . .

Speaker's Ruling
First Reading of Bills

The Speaker: I'm sorry. By tradition first reading is a moving of a bill, tabling it in the Assembly. In the past we've had a discussion with respect to explanation on first reading of bills. I indicated at the time we did it that private members' bills would offer an opportunity for individuals to speak up to probably no more than four minutes on a private member's bill, but I also indicated that if it was a government bill, not a private member's bill, they should look at a maximum of two minutes. There are some reasons for this. The minister will have ample opportunity to move this bill in second reading and will be able to speak up to 20 minutes. So I would ask the minister to kindly move the bill.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It will take more than tradition to contain my excitement for education, but I will keep it short and tell you that I am very proud to table Bill 2, and I move that the bill be read the first time.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a first time]

Bill 3Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2012*The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier and President of the Treasury Board and Enterprise.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 3, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2012. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and ReportsThe Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a report by London Economics International, which shows that when fairly compared, Alberta's electricity prices are competitive across Canada.

Mr. Denis: I'm tabling five copies of an article which I referred to yesterday entitled The Myth of Alberta's "Non-progressive" Income Tax. It's by Scott Hennig of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, dated January 20, 2011, and it talks about the many benefits of the single rate of tax that all Albertans enjoy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings today that, given the shortness of time yesterday, I did not do. The first tabling is from Frank Fraser. I'm sure the Minister of Energy would be very interested in his document. He details at length his experiences with Direct Energy, trying to deal with overseas call centres and trying to get his electricity cut off after Direct Energy, on contract, gave them two accounts and then put the money in the wrong one. So that's on that particular issue.

My next tabling is from Chantele Theroux, who is writing about downtown owners and the difficulty with additional assessments being made when building codes or shoddy workmanship is not caught. They ended up with very expensive assessments. She's looking at possibly losing her condominium because they are now looking at owner assessments of over $34,000 for a fairly modest condominium. So, clearly, there's an issue here that needs to be addressed as soon as possible.

My final tabling is from Ann-Lise Norman, and she's bringing to the attention of the Assembly the concern around the Castle region in Alberta that's been raised a number of times already today. I attach a copy of her letter to the editor on that subject.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to table the requisite number of copies of the e-mail from a constituent, Rayn Boyko, that I just referred to in my member's statement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling e-mails and five letters from the following individuals who are seeking the preservation of the Castle wilderness: Gustave Yaki, Pat Lucas, Stuart McDowall, Sandra Bullock, Elaine Voth, Cheryl Bradley, Jim Cameron, Marion S. Wright, Richard Collier, Gordon Petersen, Carol Getzlaf, Margaret Main, Carolyn Fisher, David McIntyre, Carolyn Aspeslet, Dr. Samuel Lawn, Reynold Reimer, Timothy Grier, John Holmes, and Lorne Fitch. Lorne is a retired fish and wildlife biologist and an adjunct professor with the University of Calgary.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm presenting a letter with the requisite number of copies from Robert and Linda Mattice of Entwistle, Alberta. In their letter they indicate the significance of their power bill increases, the lack of choice in their area as they're only able to choose from one provider, the fact that they are only allowed to pick one option, which is charging them essentially higher than almost anywhere else in Alberta. Their letter details this in great detail, and they have some corresponding documents. Should anyone want to question the veracity of their claim, it's all there for everyone to see.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of postcards we've received from hundreds of Edmontonians calling on the government to provide full funding to open the family medicine and urgent care sections of the East Edmonton health centre.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling today from Sue Thomas of Calgary, a worker in the disabilities field, who wants to register both some appreciation and real concern about the lack of financial support for those working in the disability field. I quote: "We are grossly under-funded." The bonus given this year is much less than what it appears, and it makes it extremely difficult for us to feel valued and to live our lives.

Thank you.

3:00

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Lukaszuk, Minister of Education, a publication undated entitled The Network, conference edition, prepared by the Alberta initiative for school improvement.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

7. Mr. Liepert moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate February 9: Ms Blakeman]

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for this opportunity to respond to last week's budget speech. Oil is at a hundred dollars a barrel, Albertans are being denied basic services that they truly deserve, and we still have a deficit. Have you ever asked yourselves that question: why do we have a deficit? It's difficult to know where to begin addressing this document.

I'll start with a simple fact. This budget is a fudge-it budget. I say this is a fudge-it budget because it fudges revenue numbers in order to hide the fact that this current government has completely lost its way. This fudge-it budget uses pie-in-the-sky estimates of revenues the province can expect to take in over future years in an attempt to trick Albertans into voting for a government that is sorely lacking, a government which is old, tired, and out of ideas, so devoid of ideas, in fact, that the only proposals they can make are imperfect imitations of policies proposed by the party that I lead, sort of like a wolf in sheep's clothing or a Conservative in Liberal clothing.

Dr. Swann: Imitation is a form of flattery.

Dr. Sherman: Imitation is a form of flattery, Mr. Speaker, but you know what? Albertans deserve the real thing.

Worst of all, this is a government which lacks the courage to be honest about its record and which lacks the courage to be honest with Albertans about the elephant in the room, and that is our structural deficit, a direct result of inadequate revenues and this current government's fear of doing what is needed to fix the problem.

Mr. Speaker, did you know that health care alone costs $15 billion? Total personal and corporate income taxes only bring in about $12 billion. They alone do not pay for our health care bill.

Not so long ago this government's ministers fanned out across the province on what all but the most naive knew to be a pre-election tour financed by the Alberta taxpayers. "Oh, no," the government protested. "It's no such thing; it's a listening tour." A listening tour. This government talks a lot about listening, actually, but who are they listening to? They say they're listening to Albertans, but I wonder which ones. Which Albertans told them to continue blowing through all our resource revenue just to pay today's bills? Even then they're not covering the bills. I haven't met these Albertans.

Who told this government that Albertans don't see a need for tax fairness so we can start saving our finite resource revenue? Since my party made our fair tax proposal, I've met and heard from a great many Albertans who enthusiastically say yes. It's hard to believe that this current government didn't meet any of them. If they did, they certainly didn't listen to what they had to say.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the current ministers met any Albertans who are absolutely sick and tired of paying the highest electricity bills in the country, and we are an energy province. I've certainly met a lot of them. If the ministers crossed paths with any of these good people – and it is impossible to imagine they didn't given the vast numbers of them – why didn't they listen and make a commitment in this fudge-it budget to do something about these outrageous bills? They talk about choice. It's a choice of high bills or higher bills. It's about competition. Albertans are competing to get the energy that they own.

Why didn't this government listen to our most vulnerable – to our seniors, to the hard-working Alberta families, and to businesses, who drive the economy – and take measures to undo the damage of electricity deregulation? An abject policy failure which costs us billions, and this government just carries on the path to a bad decision and a wrong decision. The Albertans I met would have applauded if this current government had done so. I'm left to conclude that either these government ministers were too busy meeting supporters on their tour, their campaign supporters, or else they didn't listen to any real Albertans they did meet.

Mr. Speaker, if our intrepid government ministers, while jet-setting across the province in luxury aircraft and luxury buses and staying in luxury resorts, met any real Albertans who were dismayed at the fact that we spend the most on education yet have the highest dropout rate in the nation, judging by the modest 3.4 per cent increase in total program spending in this fudge-it budget, I doubt it. We have amongst the highest class sizes, not enough support for our teachers, and crumbling infrastructure for our schools, with leaky roofs and foundations that need repairing.

This modest 3.4 per cent increase, after all, is woefully inadequate to keep up with inflation and population growth. We've got a baby boom. We've got a ton of young children coming down the pipeline in this province who are going to help build this province, and this government is not investing in them. Once again, this government is asking our schools to get by with less, leaving it to the school boards yet not funding them properly. Hardly inspiring.

I also wonder if these ministers took time away from their rallies to talk to real Alberta parents who are sick and tired of being gouged by school fees. Considering that school fees are still in place, they clearly did not listen to any of these parents, parents who are reacting enthusiastically to our commitment to get rid of school fees, the most regressive tax I know of, a tax on learning, a tax on families, and a tax on our children.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the government ministers took the time to meet with postsecondary students as they travelled through strategic ridings in the province during the listening tour. If they did, they would have heard cash-strapped students saying that they need a break. They need a break because Alberta's sky-high tuition levels are burdensome in the extreme.

We've listened to these students. I was in Lethbridge, and that's exactly what these students told me. We need a break. That's why we would not just cap tuition but immediately reduce it by $250 per student and then proceed to eliminate tuition entirely by 2025 whether you went to a trade school, a college, or a university in rural Alberta or in urban Alberta. Mr. Speaker, this is a very big issue in rural Alberta. When you have to leave home, you not only pay the high cost of living but pay the highest tuition fees. Our children in rural Alberta are not being afforded the opportunity to get the education that they truly deserve, the education that we as a society owe to them.

We would fix this. We would fix this by cutting this government's wasteful spending, by bringing in a fair tax, and by investing some of our resource revenues every year in a postsecondary education fund. The response we have received to this proposal from postsecondary students has been very strong and very positive. Why didn't this current government listen to these students and do likewise?

Mr. Speaker, they did do a half-baked measure recently. They did. The reason I call it half-baked is that they allowed students the opportunity to get more student loans. That just allows them to get into more debt. The way to prevent student debt is to actually cut tuition. That's how you get our children to go get a skill and an education. Instead, this government cut the budget for the Ministry of Advanced Education and Technology by more than $150 million. Our universities have roofs that need fixing. They need more teachers and professors in the classrooms and more support. How can we go to a knowledge-based economy when we don't invest in the knowledge and education of our children?

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the government ministers met any of the Albertans who use our health care system, the men, women, and children who cannot find a family doctor or who have endured unconscionable delays in the emergency rooms and surgery wait times. Worse yet is when they sit at home after that urgent 911 call waiting for that ambulance to arrive. Many times it doesn't arrive in time.

Did they meet any of the hard-working doctors and nurses and front-line staff who struggle heroically to deliver care despite the extraordinary lack of efficiency and accountability plaguing our system? If they did, they would have heard that we spend more than any other province, yet we have amongst the longest waits and the worst performance outcomes in the country. There's no doubt that once they get into the hands of provincial health care workers, Albertans get world-class health care. No doubt about that. Mr. Speaker, I can say that because I've worked with a fantastic team of front-line health professionals.

If this government had listened, they would have heard that we have a great many seniors languishing in hospital beds because there are not enough not-for-profit long-term care beds or not-for-profit, community-based lodge beds. They would have heard that the direct result of this, actually, is congestion in emergency rooms because the hospital beds are full. They would have heard that our ambulances are idling outside our ERs because paramedics can't leave until their patients are admitted to an emergency bed. They would have heard all these things if they had taken the time to meet Albertans who use our health care system. This health care system problem is because of an abject failure in funding our seniors with world-class home care, lodge care, and long-term care.

However, it seems that once again this government did not listen because all that their budget offers is $375 million over the next three years, quoting from the government's press release, "to support strategic health investments, including family care clinics, additional addictions and mental health services, home care, and enhanced rehabilitation programs." They obviously didn't listen to the doctors, the nurses, and the front-line staff because they think the solution is to simply throw money at the problem by increasing AHS's base operating fund by 6 per cent. That doesn't fix the health system, Mr. Speaker. Making the right decision fixes the health system.

Albertans, however, can tell you that what we really need is a smarter and more efficient health care system, which is what we propose. This is what Albertans are asking for, and while the government isn't listening, we are. Health care is the number one expenditure in the nation. It accounts for 40 to 50 per cent of expenditures, and Albertans and Canadians are waiting in lineups longer than ever. Our health care system in this country and in this province is not in the top three amongst the OECD countries.

While this government moves on the path to Americanization and for-profit privatization and for-profit, private tendering of contracts yet untendered contracts to their private buddies, we propose a doubling of home care funding and providing nonprofit, community-based lodge care and nonprofit, community-based long-term care beds for our seniors so they may get the dignity that they require. This, in turn, will free up space in our hospitals so Albertans can get timely access to world-class care, that has taken way too long to get.

If this government had been listening, they would know that what is needed is not a handful of pilot projects dreamt up by an uninformed Premier. We don't need pilot projects, Mr. Speaker. It's time for action and solutions. It's time to fix the system. The province is looking for leadership. They are not looking for another committee and another study. If this government had truly been listening, they would have also known that what is needed is improved performance and a concept which is alien to them, accountability. Accountability. Nowhere else in the country or in the world do administrators get fired, get a million or a couple of million dollars or maybe $22,000 a month for life while Albertans suffer metres from care.

If you look today on Alberta Health Services' website, the top health care performance measure: they set it at a paltry 60 per cent level. They can't even achieve their own level, Mr. Speaker. They can't achieve their own paltry, low, stretch targets.

The number one spending issue: there's nothing in this fudge-it budget to improve the system, to improve performance, or to introduce accountability. This government doesn't listen, they don't understand, and they don't care. All they want to do is win an election. That's it. Well, we're listening, Mr. Speaker. This is why we will fix this mess created by this government, and we will guarantee emergency and surgery wait times within two years, get every Albertan a family doctor, return decision-making to the front lines, and bring in local accountability amongst other much-needed measures. This government isn't listening, but we are.

Mr. Speaker, this is a fudge-it budget that inflates future revenues, and it pulls the oldest trick in the government's playbook, big pre-election spending promises. We've all seen this movie before. My dear citizens of Alberta, do not be fooled. They pulled the wool over your eyes in the last election. Do not be fooled. We know what comes next if this government wins re-election. They're going to go, "Whoops, the international economy is bad," and they're going to be bringing in big postelection spending cuts. "Whoops. It wasn't our fault; it was the international economy's fault." There are other governments across the world that don't go: whoops; it's the international economy's fault. They've put hundreds of billions in the bank, and they're living off the interest, and they say yes to their people.

Mr. Speaker, this current government follows this formula because it cannot win the battle of ideas. It cannot. This government was once a force for solutions. It is now the cause of our problems in this great province. It was a force for solutions but is no longer. It's no longer what's best for this province. It's tired. It's old. It's out of ideas. They say that they listen, but what they do – this played-out government is reduced to cheap trickeries and completely lacks the courage to be honest to Albertans.

They say that they listen, but this is not borne out by the fact that they completely ignore Albertans who ask for fair taxation. Ninety per cent of Albertans, hard-working Albertans, wouldn't pay a red cent extra. In fact, if they've got kids in school or university, they'd get money back in their hands.

They ignore the demands for an end to the disastrous deregulation of the electricity market, they ignore parents who are sick to death of being gouged by school fees, and they ignore postsecondary students who want a break from the highest tuition fees in the country. They ignore Albertans who are asking, who've been pleading for years for a family doctor and for shorter emergency and surgery wait times. This government says that it listens, but they're only in it for themselves and for their buddies; hence, the pork-barrel politics and untendered contracts.

Mr. Speaker, we will provide a positive alternative for Albertans when election day rolls around because we will listen for a change. We will listen for a change. We will also do something that this government is too scared to do. We're going to be honest. We've tabled our plan, our vision for Alberta. We will be honest with Albertans about the biggest problem facing our province's finances, a structural deficit caused by wasteful spending and inefficient revenues. We will clean up this government's mess and put an end to fudge-it budgets and bring in a fair tax so we can actually start saving some of our resource revenues to invest in people by ending school fees and eventually eliminating tuition and fixing our health care system and caring for our seniors and our vulnerable.

Investing in People is something this current government uses as a slogan, but for us it's a guiding principle, Mr. Speaker. It's a guiding principle, and it starts with listening, caring, taking action, and saying yes.

Mr. Speaker, the fundamental difference between us and them is that they believe in saying no to the people. They believe in saying no, and they believe in trickle-down economics and think that money in the hands of a few people drives the economy. We believe that money needs to be in the hands of the working families, and that drives the economy.

Mr. Speaker, we say yes. We say yes to taking action to cut wasteful spending, stop pork-barrel politics, and bring in smart, lean, efficient government. We say yes to investing to make the lives of Albertan families better. We say yes to fair taxation. We say yes to balancing the books. We say yes to saving for the future for our children. We say yes to Albertans. We say no to this budget but yes to Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, it's been an honour. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, proceed.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to hear the leader's comments on what he feels to be the major barrier to getting over the structural deficit in this province and what he would do to ensure that we move away as quickly as possible from a continued, year-after-year deficit position in this province that is so vulnerable to other markets and resource prices.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, our biggest problem with the structural deficit is that the government is addicted. They're addicted not only to raising money off those with addiction problems, but they're addicted to raising revenues off nonrenewable resource revenues. They're addicted to buying elections, to just suddenly throwing money out there before the election and taking it all back the day after the election and hoping that Albertans will forget. They're addicted to not being honest with Albertans. They're addicted to not having the courage – the courage – to say what's right.

Mr. Speaker, if anything the courage they need is to say: listen; it's about fairness. It's okay to make a buck. It's okay for large corporations to make a buck. Today we have international nation states: China, France, the Arab world, the U.S. It's okay for them to invest here, and it's okay for them to make a buck in Alberta. But you know what? A little bit more of the fair share of that money should stay here to care for our seniors and educate our children, and that's why we need to increase our taxes for large corporations from 10 to 12 per cent. It's fair. It's reasonable.

We need to bring in a fair personal tax. That's how you fix a structural deficit, a fair personal tax. Mr. Speaker, 90.4 per cent of Albertans earn less than $100,000 a year of taxable income. We suggest leaving them alone. If you earn above a hundred thousand bucks a year of taxable income for one person in a family – let's bring in a fair, progressive tax. Let's put the word "progressive" back in Alberta. That's what this is about. That's how you fix it, honesty and fairness.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: There's still time available under 29(2)(a).

There being no further questioners, I am prepared to recognize the next speaker. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand and respond to this government's budget. I appreciate the comments of the Leader of the Official Opposition. You know, I obviously disagree with him on some of his solutions, but I also agree with him on some of the problems that he's diagnosed and some of the things that we could do without.

It really is something. I wish the folks at home could see the laughter on the other side when an hon. member of this House stands up and gives a speech and, you know, tries to represent Albertans and talks about courage and is essentially ridiculed across the way. It should be quite beneath some of the folks on that side in that regard.

In response to this budget, Mr. Speaker, Albertans expect their government to live within its means. They also expect their government to ensure that their tax dollars are spent carefully on key priorities such as health, education, infrastructure, seniors, policing, and other core social services. This PC Budget 2012 does neither. It is a reckless, electioneering, campaign document with unrealistic revenue projections and irresponsible spending promises. Given the tepid and fragile world economic recovery Budget 2012 is nothing short of a blueprint for eliminating the province's last remaining savings and raising taxes for Albertans.

What do we mean when we say: these projections, these pie in the sky projections, this Alice in Wonderland budget that we refer to over here? Well, let's take a look at some of these projections and see just how wonderfully realistic they are. In this budget there is an overall 22.5 per cent increase in revenues over the next two years – 22.5 per cent over a two-year period. How very conservative an estimate that is. There's a 40 per cent increase in resource revenues over the next two years. We've talked with folks at some of the major pipeline companies in Alberta, household names in the industry anyway, and in response to that number, a 40 per cent increase in two years, the word they used was "hallucinogenic."

It is an absolute joke to say that we are going to have an increase of 40 per cent over two years in our resource royalties. It's just not conservative. You can call it what you want, but it certainly is not realistic in any way, shape, or form. Anybody over there who knows anything about accounting or business or business projections knows that you do not project on the high end for revenues. That's a mistake, and everybody knows it. You always make sure you do a conservative estimate. You don't have to lowball it so much that it's unrealistic either, but you take a conservative estimate. Forty per cent over two years is egregiously unrealistic.

An increase of 6.5 per cent in property values and property tax revenues to the budget is unrealistic. We're in the middle of a housing collapse. We're still trying to get out of that. I know what the home values are in Airdrie, for example, and what's happened. I know from talking with many of the real estate agents that unless Calgary and area is unlike all the rest of this province, they're not going to go up 6.5 per cent. The value of our homes isn't going up 6.5 per cent this year. It's unrealistic.

A 9 per cent increase in income tax revenues this year, 9 per cent in one year: well, I sure hope income taxes do go up. That means more jobs. That means more people working and so forth. But 9 per cent? Absurd.

An 11 per cent corporate tax revenue increase this year: it's like we don't even know what's going on in the world right now. We look at the fragile recovery, the lack of recovery, and we're talking about an 11 per cent corporate tax revenue increase?

Projecting the average oil price at $105 next year and at $108 the year after that. You know what, Mr. Speaker? That one may come true. It's unlikely, but I would say that it's the lesser of the pie-in-the-sky projections that I see in this budget. But note that at $105 next year the other side, the PCs, still will not balance the budget. They'll balance the accounting deficit budget, but they'll still be drawing down from the sustainability fund. At $105 a barrel: what an embarrassment. I mean, what are we going to tell our kids? We can't balance the budget at $105 a barrel. Is that some kind of bad joke? It should be.

Projecting the natural gas price at $3.50 this year – it's roughly at $2.10 right now; it's very low, so it's already way below that right now – then $4.20 the year after that and $5 the year after that: every projection that we've seen does not have that type of increase in the price of natural gas.

3:30

Mrs. Forsyth: What about the money they lose when the dollar is at par?

Mr. Anderson: And there's the Canadian dollar and several other things.

Needless to say, the projections in this budget are pie in the sky, they're unrealistic, they're certainly not conservative, and they're irresponsible. If we're relying on these things to balance the budget and pay for a 7 per cent increase in spending, it opens our budget up, essentially, to just completely implode if the price of oil were to, say, fall to $75, which historically is a pretty high level.

You can't run a business like this. You shouldn't run a government like this. The folks over there, many of whom I know, are smart individuals. A lot of them have run businesses. A couple of them have accounting backgrounds and so forth. They know this. They absolutely know this, yet they say nothing.

There is another way. The Wildrose caucus has put together a balanced budget alternative. Now, we will say right up front that in order to give an apples-to-apples comparison of spending, we are using the government's projections this year. Again, those projections are unrealistic, but we've built into our alternative budget a $1.6 billion cushion in order to account for what we think are pie-in-the-sky projections.

What would the Wildrose balanced budget alternative do? It would result in a $1.6 billion budget surplus and a $60 million cash surplus for 2012-13. Specifically, it would invest $4.1 billion in new infrastructure. Four point one billion dollars on infrastructure is an amount per capita significantly higher than B.C., Ontario, and Saskatchewan. It is still the highest of all the provinces except – essentially, it's the same as Quebec. But that's where it's at. This is really not an unrealistic or an unreasonable amount. It's tied for the highest in Canada.

These capital dollars, this $4.1 billion, would be focused primarily on the building of high-priority capital projects, which we would post online in the order of priority to make sure everybody knows why they're in the priority that they are. It would be publicly posted. Everybody would see it. Such high priority projects would include finishing up the Calgary and Edmonton ring roads, the twinning of highway 63 to Fort McMurray, long-term care facilities for seniors – very important – and urgently needed schools while delaying capital projects for which the government right now has no money to fully staff.

So all of the capital projects out there right now will be continued on. They will just be spread out an extra year to give us some time to actually hire the staff that we need to fully staff them. All of the folks waiting for their health facilities in other areas or for the roads to be twinned in other areas – those will all be built under this Wildrose alternative budget. Some of the lower priority ones of those projects will just have to wait an extra year. This would save Albertans $1.6 billion compared with the proposed Budget 2012 by the government.

We would increase operational spending by $854 million. This is a 2.5 per cent increase over Budget 2011. In comparison, the PC Budget 2012 increases spending by over $2.3 billion, or 7 per cent. By increasing the operational budget by just 2.5 per cent as opposed to 7 per cent, this will save Albertans $1.5 billion compared with Budget 2012.

We would ensure that the majority of the nearly $1 billion in new operational funding would be sent directly to the front lines. This will be done by freezing all public-sector wages for one year, just one year – everyone's wages, if you're working for the government, frozen for one year – and also by implementing a hiring freeze on all non front-line staff. Front-line staff, obviously, are nurses, doctors, teachers, et cetera. Unless you're on the front lines, we will not be hiring additional folks. We would direct all of this new 850-odd million dollars towards the following – and we can do this because of the hiring freeze. That's what happens when you control wages; you can hire more people. It's a fantastic concept that the government needs to look into.

First, we would hire 1,425 new teachers, teaching assistants, and support staff for students with special needs, particularly that last category, students with special needs. They desperately need more teaching assistants, more help in the K to 12 system. That will cost $114 million. The Education minister informs me that might be a little bit too low; it would be closer to $145 million. Nonetheless, our projection would be $114 million because many of those wouldn't be teachers. They would be teaching assistants and support staff.

One thousand new senior care support workers for home care, long-term care, and assisted living. This would cost $50 million. Again, we have seniors clogging up our hospitals. They don't want to be there. They want to be in long-term care facilities, where they can get better care and the care they need. That would free up acute-care beds across the province. That's $50 million.

We would increase AISH payments by $400 a month, as the government does in their budget, at a cost of $270 million. We would increase funding for mental health by $50 million. One thousand new nurses, technicians, and other health support staff: $80 million. Improved access to emergency rooms and family doctors: $100 million. We would increase funding by nearly $80 million for additional publicly funded health procedures such as a thousand knee surgeries, a thousand additional hip surgeries, 8,000 cataract surgeries, and 50,000 MRIs, CT scans, and other diagnostic tests. Again, amazing what you can do when you freeze salaries even just for one year to get things back into balance. You have all those extra dollars to go straight to the front lines. No bureaucracy. No red tape. Helping Albertans right at the front.

We would hire 300 new police officers, corrections officers, and sheriffs, including five dedicated checkstop teams at $53 million. We would budget to plan better for emergencies and natural disasters at $100 million.

We would eliminate wasteful PC spending like the $2 billion carbon capture and storage program and dismantle the Alberta Health superboard bureaucracy, putting all those folks to the front lines, or these vice-presidents can go find a job in the private sector. We would implement zero-based budgeting. We would, through attrition and buyouts, increase the worker-to-manager ratio in the public service from 4 to 1 to 10 to 1. That would obviously take more than just one year. We would cut all management bonuses for at least one year, and we'd roll back cabinet salaries by 30 per cent and cut MLA severance packages by over 67 per cent.

I know I only have roughly two minutes remaining, so I would like to close by saying this. In this province we don't have to say that if we balance our budget and do what we need to balance the budget, that means cutting front-line services. That is an argument of the far, far, far – I don't even know if it's a left-wing argument. It's just a wrong argument. We can do both. We can balance the budget, and we can get more money directly to the front lines helping Albertans. That's what the Wildrose alternative budget does. Further, what it also does is that it balances the budget without raising taxes.

Again I would ask the government before this session is over to please join with the Wildrose and pledge – I would say that surely we can agree that the majority of Albertans are going to be supporting one of our two parties in the next election. If that is indeed the case, will they stand with the majority of conservative Albertans across this province and commit that under no circumstances will there be any tax increases on the people of Alberta for the next four years, that none of the folks elected in that party over there and this party over here at the next election, that under no circumstances will we agree to raise taxes on Albertans. I think we can do it. I think that's what Albertans want. They want us to live within our means. We owe it to our children and the future of Alberta to do just that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Section 29(2)(a) is available should anybody wish to question the previous speaker or make comment on his comments.

Seeing none, is there anyone else who wishes to speak to the main motion? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for this opportunity to address the Assembly on behalf of the Alberta Party and to bring greetings on behalf of our leader, Glenn Taylor.

We've all had a few days to think about the new provincial budget, and first I want to engage in a little deconstruction of the budgeting process as practised by the PC government. Provincial budgets are made up of two parts. There's the actual budget for the next 12 months, and then the way this government does it, there are projections for the 24 months to follow. Usually the actual budget has at least a nodding acquaintance with the truth. Governments outline how much revenue they can reasonably expect to collect this year, how much they plan to spend and on what they plan to spend it, how much of a surplus or deficit will be left once expenses are subtracted from revenue, and then they have a plan that they will follow, more or less, most of the time, provided nothing happens that makes the roof cave in.

It's the budget projections for next year and the year after that which can get pretty wackily fantastic and where governments can pretty much just make stuff up if they want because, after all, they're just projections. Our best guess is the consensus estimate of the experts we consult, et cetera, et cetera. By the time the year after next actually gets here and that thing that none of the experts foresaw has gone sideways to throw the projections out of whack, well, then government can throw up its hands and say: who knew?

Let's just accept that those projections for fiscal 2014-15 – that provincial revenues will be $10 billion higher than they are today without so much as a penny in tax increases, that the streets will be paved in gold, and it won't matter if there's a water shortage because we'll all be swimming in milk and honey – are just stuff the government made up this time. Let's just set that part of the budget aside for a minute and focus on the part that I call the actual budget.

I think the government has got the actual budget for the next 12 months largely right. Here's what I mean. The spending commitments made for the next 12 months on a $400 monthly increase in payments to AISH recipients, on raises for vastly underpaid PDD contracted agency workers, on access to primary health care, on education, on seniors reflect much of what the Alberta Party has heard from Albertans in our Big Listens, and they reflect much of what Albertans have been telling me for the last 10 years, both as an MLA and when I was in media, that they want from their government. Mr. Speaker, they've been trying to tell the government the same thing, of course.

Now, there are things the government missed. Alberta is a world energy leader, and the Alberta Party believes that the government needs to be more clearly committed to doing the things necessary to ensure that we can remain so. Mr. Speaker, that's about opening up new markets and getting pipelines built, yes. But it's also about a stable regulatory and royalty environment that provides stability and certainty and confidence to industry and to government in the public interest to insist and deliver on best practices, environmental stewardship, and continuous improvement in both.

One of the most productive ways to achieve the economic diversification that all parties in this House seem to agree Alberta needs is to foster a culture of entrepreneurship. To support such a culture, the Alberta Party is committed to providing a zero per cent small-business tax rate for all new business start-ups for their first three years.

There is new money committed in this budget to the establishment of three family care clinics as pilot projects. Indeed, we see that there is quite a bit of new money committed to health care. What is not so obvious is a clear commitment to ensuring that everyone is able to easily access a primary care network or a clear commitment to preventive care. Keeping the person healthy is cheaper than treating the person who is sick. We need to shift the culture of our health care system and our health care thinking from the reactive practice of medicine more to the proactive prevention of disease and injury.

We think this government is still struggling to accept that the kids have grown up and want to go out on their own. Our local governments – cities, towns, counties, and municipal districts – make many of the decisions and provide much of the infrastructure and many of the services that have the most direct daily impact on our lives. Yet for all the talk of all the funding this government will provide to local governments, it still amounts to dad giving the kids an allowance and lending them the keys to the car. Yes, it's a bigger allowance than they'd get if Mr. Manitoba down the street was their dad and, yes, from time to time they even get to drive the Lexus, but it's still an allowance, and the kids are adults. If the kids invite dad over for breakfast, dad ought to do the proper thing and go, not boycott breakfast because the kids criticized his budget.

Local governments deserve to be formally recognized as an equal order of government, and education can benefit from the same kind of emphasis on local control. The Alberta Party is committed to decentralizing decision-making with regard to the construction, operation, and disposition of school facilities. Neither Calgary nor Camrose needs help from Edmonton in understanding what their kids need.

For years the PCs have shown that they don't have the ability to listen effectively or the courage to implement what Albertans say they want. This has been reflected in their water for life strategy, the Inspiring Education report, the report of the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy, and pretty much anything to do with the land-use framework.

Economically actual provincial budgets concern themselves with the next 12 months. Politically this actual budget has to get the PCs through the next 12 weeks or less, which leads us back to the second part of this budget, that contains the projections of another full-on boom within two years while all around us economies are ending up in the ditch. Now, Mr. Speaker, I suppose you could debate those rosy projections and the question of whether the government that came up with them was smoking something and, if so, whether they imported it from B.C. or grew it here at home and, although they don't mention it in this budget, have a secret plan to legalize or decriminalize and tax – oh, wait a minute. I forgot. That's a federal responsibility. But the projections in this budget don't matter. Why? Because as soon as this budget is passed, the government is going to call an election.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Party believes that the budgeting process itself must change. Not only does this mean zero-based budgeting to ensure that a thorough review of provincial spending is conducted, an idea that we're pretty glad to see this government bring forward, actually, but a complete overhaul of the way budgets are built and planned. First and foremost, budget cycles should extend beyond election cycles. An election cycle is typically four years. When a government manages its finances over a one-, two-, or three-year phase, it ends up making too many decisions in its own self-interest rather than in the public interest.

I don't care who's in power: PCs, Liberals, Wildrose, New Democrats, us. Even if the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster changes his mind about not running again and forms the Saskatchewan party of Alberta – I think their chances of success are, you might say, borderline, but what do I know? When the budget cycle is shorter than the election cycle, any government will make decisions designed to enhance its own re-election chances, a lot like this budget, Mr. Speaker. A five-year budget cycle puts Albertans first.

The construction of the budget should be an open, collaborative, consultative process extending over several months, giving citizens a real chance to contribute and to understand the final result. The people need to be included in setting priorities and planning the budget on an ongoing basis so that the budget reflects their needs and their values. Where and when it doesn't, because it won't always, they may not like the result, but at least they'll understand how we got there. You can't do that authentically in a two-week cabinet tour of Alberta, weeks before the budget is released.

We believe that even though this government has got a lot right in the actual budget for the next 12 months, its motivation for doing so was not long term but short term, winning an election within the next 12 weeks. Here, however, is what does matter about the part of the budget which will follow the election. Throughout his budget speech the Minister of Finance repeatedly returned to another theme that I've been hearing from Albertans for the last decade or more and which is now loud enough that the government has concluded it finally has to at least pay lip service to it. We have got to start saving our nonrenewable resource revenues and stop wasting our inheritance. In that speech there was much talk about the need to start saving, about the need to generate more sustainable, predictable revenue streams, and about the need to have an authentic province-wide conversation with Albertans about what that should look like. This means that after the election, they're going to want to talk to you about possibly putting your taxes up.

I agree. We need to talk. The Alberta Party caucus was the first to propose this conversation a year ago. We have said repeatedly that to get this government's finances on a sound footing so that the next generation will be better off than we are, not worse off, we all need to discuss what programs and services we expect from our government, how to save for the long term and how much to save, and if there's a shortfall between what we're paying in taxes today and what it costs to deliver the programs and the services that we demand, what we're prepared to do to make up the difference.

It's not going to be an easy discussion, but Albertans are smart, tough, inventive, and focused on solutions. Albertans are the people who are ending homelessness. We know this province has almost unlimited potential, and we know we've come through a decade or more of being led by politicians who set the bar far lower than what we the people are capable of achieving.

Through you to the people of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the Premier will try to convince you that she needs a mandate from you to take you through that conversation, but she doesn't. By law she has almost another year to go before she has to call that election. If she's truly serious about holding a province-wide big listen, she has up to 11 months to have that conversation with you now. Then she can go to the polls and seek your approval to set Alberta on a new and more stable course, a course you've helped design. That would be doing politics differently, Mr. Speaker. That would be putting Albertans first.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. Standing Order 29(2)(a) is again available should anybody wish to question the previous speaker or make a comment.

Seeing no one, then I would ask if there are any other speakers to Government Motion 7. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege and a pleasure to stand and respond to . . .

Mr. Hancock: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Point of Order Speaking Order in Budget Debate

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, under the normal rules of the House under 13(2) I'd be interested in your ruling with respect to recognizing this speaker. This is the budget motion, which is typically a framing motion so that the Minister of Finance can deliver the budget, and then the leaders of the opposition parties respond to the budget. That's the custom and practice of the House that we follow every year, and we don't normally have intervening speakers. We normally allow for the Leader of the Official Opposition to proceed and then the representative of the second, third, and fourth parties to respond to the budget motion. This is the framing motion for that. If it's going to be a budget debate motion open to the whole House to participate, that would be a different process, which we could engage in, but it would be a change in the normal procedures and practice of the House.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Is the hon. member from the Wildrose Party wishing to rebut?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, if I may, you know, it's very interesting to hear the Government House Leader talk about process. I saw the process he believed in yesterday. On from Thursday I didn't have time to get to Introduction of Bills in regard to a private member's bill, and then we wanted to get some unanimous consent so we could revert to the Orders of the Day, which was private member's bill debate, which I consider something that's very, very important for members of this government, and then go on to motions at 5 o'clock. This same Government House Leader turned it down.

You know, he's starting to talk about process, and I just find that if it's good for the goose, it's not necessarily good for the gander. If it's good for the government, it doesn't necessarily mean it's going to be good for anybody else. I look forward to hearing your ruling.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, if we're going to talk about process, let's talk about what's fair for everybody. Yesterday was an unbelievable example of how this government does not believe in democracy. We continually see that on a daily basis. We're seeing it again today, what's happening with the AUMA because they're arguing and the government has decided: we're not going to go to breakfast because they were critical of us on the budget.

I'll look forward to your ruling. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: We've heard from the party. Thank you.

Hon. members, there is no hard, fast, steadfast rule that says that only certain people can speak to this particular government motion. However, the hon. Government House Leader is correct. There has been a tradition that has been respected in the past, and I was looking forward to that, which is why I sent a note to Parliamentary Counsel about 10, 15 minutes ago asking for clarification just in case this question should come up.

Now, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie was generous to leave a few minutes on the table, and another member rose to speak at my request for anyone who wants to rise, so I recognized him. We will hear the rest of his speech.

However, to the government members, as you well know, you have the option to adjourn debate at any time, and if you wish to speak on the process thereafter with other members opposite, I would invite you to do so.

For the moment the chair has recognized the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, and we'll look forward to hearing his comments.

Debate Continued

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, for your gracious inclusion. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Government Motion 7, the response to the budget. Indeed, there is much to be grateful for in our wealth and our prosperity in this province. I would say that this budget represents a generous, perhaps overly generous, response to this challenge that we face to ensure that Albertans have the best services in the country, that we protect the vulnerable in our society, that we develop our resources in a responsible way, and that we ensure that our children are not compromised in the future by our spending today relative to the needs of tomorrow.

This Premier has indicated very clearly in this budget that there are many issues that are actually hold the line and that she is doing more of the same that this government has been doing over the last decade at least. The government is banking on high resource revenue despite one of the most unstable times in the world. There's a danger again that we are creating the conditions for continued instability in those most crucial of human services like education, health care, postsecondary education, seniors' care, the supports for people with disabilities. There's no clear stability in our budget because it's continuing to be at least one-third dependent on an unstable resource revenue.

We're now living, then, at the expense of our children's future, and I think it's time for us as a government on all sides to say yes to some more aspects of sustainable financial planning, sustainable environments, sustainable energy development, and sustainable human services based on a revenue stream that is stable. We need to say yes to better planning for both capital and maintenance budgets in this very heavily infrastructure-intense province. We need to say yes to restoring trust in our relationships both within the human services programs that we provide and with Albertans, and we need to say yes to a more open and transparent communication around what is real and what is not real in the way we are working with people and the environment.

There is no single answer to restoring trust in a government that has been at it 41 years and created all kinds of debt, personal debts and relational debts, and obligations, but a good start would be to have an honest conversation with staff, with Albertans about areas that are not working in our systems, that are not efficient, that are not effective. Measuring outcomes is surely one of those, and this government is talking about results-based budgeting, which is an excellent start. It cannot end there. I mean, results are very difficult to measure. In many subtle ways the human dimension is paramount. If we have no trust, if we have no significant ability for people in an organization to actually have their voices heard, if there is a sense that people will be intimidated or punished in some way for criticizing or suggesting change, then we will not have the kind of processes that will provide the results that this government continues to talk about.

There needs to be not only transparency but accountability. There need to be clear, measurable goals in which people can not only be seen to be performing but also be held accountable for shortages on those goals and action needs to be taken commensurate with the failure, whether that's a remedy for the inadequate performance, or it may mean moving that person out of the bureaucracy instead of promoting them or having them leave with a huge severance package. There's a tremendous cynicism that comes with a government that doesn't really do the tough work of serious management that's based on targets, evaluation, and then commensurate action when standards are not met.

I would emphasize that because results-based management doesn't take into account the fact that we have been underperforming for decades. We now have a workforce that is profoundly demoralized primarily because the bosses are not doing their jobs. They are not holding senior people accountable. They are not ensuring that there is a transparency and a subsequent accountability for those who are not meeting targets, and there is a loss of faith in the whole system.

A lazy and incompetent government, then, results in failure to analyze carefully the really long-term as well as short-term risks and benefits. It fails to budget adequately for seniors' care, as we've seen, and for public health care in a sustainable way, for action on poverty, for example, which costs us today. If we believe this thoughtful report of last week, it costs us today $7 billion to $9 billion every year, not to mention the suffering and loss of mental health and physical health that some of these folks experience as a result of not being given the resources, the supports, and in some cases the education and the job opportunities that would result.

We have a double loss, then, when we fail to actually budget for a stable, educated, healthy population – I'm really talking about prevention, Mr. Speaker – a budget that doesn't actually have the capacity to measure the impact of prevention, of fewer people addicted, fewer people in the criminal justice system, fewer people seeking medical care, fewer people on supports for independence or Alberta Works programs. This government doesn't measure that, so it's difficult for them to appreciate that those kinds of results can result in tremendous cost savings and in a tremendous increase in productivity for this province.

People simply, as I've heard it across this province, want to know and have confidence that their elected representatives are responsibly investing their hard-earned tax dollars in evidence-based policies. Use evidence. What we see here is policy-based evidence being created. Once an ideological party decides where they want to go, what they want to do, then they pull in some researcher who will comply with their conclusions and in some way support unsustainable kinds of policies: an unsustainable energy future; an unsustainable environmental monitoring and enforcement system that is grossly underfunded and has lost the respect of the world; an underfunded community development system in this province that doesn't recognize the tremendous opportunities for strengthening community associations and building upon their capacity to maximize and multiply their efforts through citizens who are engaged, optimistic, committed to a brighter future for their community, for their children, and for their seniors throughout their lifespan.

Those are a few thoughts about a budget that seems to be more of the same and doesn't really address the stable foundation. I think Albertans and economists, frankly, from across the country and across the world have said that we should be doing better. We should be drawing on the resources of our population, providing a stable revenue stream that can ensure that the kind of basic, first-world expectations are being met in caring for people, for education, for health care, moving towards a more diverse energy mix and a more robust postsecondary and innovation approach that would actually move us towards a knowledge economy, towards more sustainable energy and environmental practices, and actually leave our children a strong legacy of both good policy and a financial foundation that's based on real payment for our lifestyles for today instead of borrowing, without consent really, from our future and selling off our topsoil, as so many have described it so well.

A related area that the budget alludes to – and I must give some credit – is ESL and new Canadians and the commitment to stronger investment in new Canadians. We have to do better, and we have to credential many of these people in a more timely way so that they can be both productive and healthier in themselves and in their families, working in the professions for which they've trained. I will give credit to a recognition of the need for more serious supports and targeted supports for new Canadians, who came here. We need them desperately to man our various developments and services and products that we are creating for ourselves and the world.

My final comment, I guess, Mr. Speaker, would relate back to my initial comments that Albertans are hungry for a government they can trust, for a government that looks long term rather than short term, that thinks public interest as well as private interest, that thinks about a stable revenue source, that provides for the very foundations of a healthy, civil society in which people can participate, can give their opinions with confidence and feel that they are being heard, and can help to create the kind of prosperity, health, and sustainability that all of us deserve.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available should anybody wish to question.

If not, the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unless the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster wishes to address it.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you. It's an interesting position that I find myself in, Mr. Speaker, obviously, having been a member of government, now sitting over here and listening carefully to the opposition. While the budget is written in black and white, it is very clear that people see different things in the same budget, and they can interpret how they so please. That's an incredibly important part of the democratic process.

We are so very fortunate to be in Alberta. I for one have never ever been ashamed of the fact that Alberta is geographically located in an oil-rich zone, that we have some of the most productive forests and farmlands in the world. That's why people came here. That's why they are continuing to come here. Quite honestly, there is no one that I know that has the magic wand that can automatically open up this incredibly diverse puzzle that Alberta is with its 3 and a half million people and fit another 60,000 or 70,000 people in every year without significant changes.

While I can certainly accept that change can sometimes be difficult, it's probably what drives us. We know we have to continue to keep ahead of our competitors. I think that probably Albertans accept that we will be held to a higher standard, not because we're different but because we have the financial resources to do so, and that's all right, too. Challenging people to use their resources wisely is not only okay; I think it makes them better. I do want to say briefly, Mr. Speaker, that I find it unfortunate that we resort to somehow using the bureaucracy as a whipping boy for our financial problems.

One thing I learned in my years up here is that the people that work for the Alberta government – for us, for you and me, and for all the taxpayers of Alberta – generally work extremely hard. I have seen people in the civil service that are working 16, 17 hours a day and occasionally, when they're in a budgeting cycle, even more. Their weekends become ours, not theirs. Their children become the latchkey kids, like many of ours have become, yet they're just doing exactly what we ask them to do. For many of them, I can't imagine the pressures you have when you are a senior administrator in children's services or in health care when something goes wrong, but I can tell you that they are as emotionally attached to the people of Alberta as we believe we are. I don't think it helps when we use the civil service as the solution to the problem. They are what we will use, Mr. Speaker, to work our way through the problems.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that there isn't another place in the world that wouldn't die to have our problems. We have problems of excess, baby. One only has to watch the news right now and see Greece, a country with some history, that is just kind of a magical place. The people of Greece are burning down their own buildings and destroying what was the cornerstone of democracy because someone else has had to tell them: "You got it wrong. You were too long on the spending, too short on the resources." No one was looking out for future generations and the pickle they've got themselves in and the way that people can come to believe that it was their right to be subsidized by the hard-working people of Germany, France, and other countries.

We're nowhere near there, Mr. Speaker, and I know we won't be there. I think it's important that when government budgets, they remember that we tax people's money. That's what we do. That's what we spend. We ought to remember that we don't tax the morals. I don't think the budget should become a debate on the different moral stands that we take with regard to endeavours that the government may have.

I certainly do expect that everyone in here will do everything they can as we go through the deliberations to make sure that the budget is fully debated. The people of Alberta, who probably are less interested in this than we would even imagine, would like to get on with work and continue to go home to their children, be able to pay for their house, car, the odd vacation, and bring their relatives and family members to enjoy what we take for granted here, probably the luckiest place in the world.

In many ways I feel I've been one of the luckiest people in the world to have the opportunity to live here with my family, and I look forward to the debate as we go forward. I want to thank you for letting me interrupt and for giving me the chance to speak, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available should anybody wish to comment or question.

Seeing none, the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Zwozdesky in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the Committee of the Whole is ready to commence its proceedings.

Bill 1 Results-based Budgeting Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any speakers at the committee stage? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A pleasure to rise on Bill 1, what on the face of it looks like a very responsible and sensible and important approach to budgeting. It's been raised many times in the House that some of us would have assumed that this was part of any responsible management system for both a company and a government that's trying to deal with its responsibilities to either shareholders in one case or citizens in this case.

It's touted as a results-based budgeting process or zero-based budgeting, going back to zero each year and assessing what programs and what salaries and what benefits are accruing from our budgeting process to date. It suggests that it would be a comprehensive review, and there may well be external consultants employed to review this. I think that's helpful, especially given the tendency for all of us to see the rosy side of our own work. However, it does mean more costs, and one has to consider that in terms of the overall efficiency of the budget.

Albertans, too, need to be part of seeing the details of how we are spending our money, and of course they seldom do because it's been such a complex and, I think, inordinately obscure process. Even the opposition can't get clear answers on a budgeting process that has large line items without significant breakdown. The ministers deftly avoid answering very specific questions about specific line items, whether it be new policy implementation or bonuses for staff without clear criteria for how these bonuses can be given out. So forgive us for being a little bit cynical about what this might mean in terms of change for this government.

Certainly, results are important. There's no question that we have to be measuring our activities based on what kind of changes occur. Hopefully, we're looking at changes in Albertans' abilities, in Albertans' opportunities, in Albertans' environment, in Albertans' outcomes from interaction in the health system, in Albertans' expectation of life, in Albertans' productivity and not based solely on activities and defined as outcomes or results within a particular department. One has to ask the question: results of what and compared to what? Are we simply comparing to last year, or are we actually going to compare those results to other jurisdictions and the best standards in the world? If we're not, we're spinning our wheels and fooling ourselves.

Surely, as I've mentioned earlier in this House, we cannot ignore the process that's happening within departments in getting those results. If we are demoralizing people, if we are not following fair process, if we are intimidating people in the process of doing our work in this government service, if we are ignoring and disrespecting people in the workforce, this may not show up in results, especially results compared to last year. I'm thinking specifically of recent surveys done in the emergency medical services system that show a hugely demoralized emergency medical service declining year over year. I've seen the same in Human Services, at least in the children and youth services reports, that show a declining morale in Alberta Human Services based on survey results.

How can one even begin to talk about results if the morale in a department is continuously going down? What does that say about the process of carrying out the work of a particular department? We have to get serious about, again, following good management principles. If we're serious about getting better results and comparing them to the world's best results, the standard of the day, then we also have to look at the processes that are going on within the departments.

Let me take health care, for example. Are we going to measure the number of people treated, or are we going to measure the quality of how those people were treated? How do we combine the measurements of access when we're waiting up to 40 weeks, 50 weeks for a hip or a knee replacement and a gentleman in one case waiting seven years for a kidney transplant at the age of 40 and seeing his life pass before him? How are we measuring the cost benefits and opportunities that that money could have been spent in a particular way to achieve perhaps slightly different but better results? We have to have a very sophisticated measuring system that actually measures what it is we want to see change.

We also have to understand for the well-being of the staff, the people in the departments that are carrying out these tremendous services for Albertans, that they are feeling valued, are recognized for their need for ongoing education, are being acknowledged in terms of their performance for improving and challenging systems that are not working for all Albertans.

It's hard to argue with a results-based approach to budgeting. There's no question that that needs to be part of the mix in any responsible management of public resources and provision of human services or monitoring of an environment. The big question is: can we trust a government that has for so long neglected many of these dimensions of success and hasn't set clear goals, hasn't got clear indicators of success in place? I can speak very confidently in relation to the health care system, where measuring numbers and turnover is simply not acceptable when we see the cost per service as the highest in the country for health services in Alberta and, again, see the morale of people and their confidence in the leadership progressively going down over the last decade.

A big part of the reason I'm in politics today is that I've heard from so many in the public and in the professions that express their frustration at the lack of basic monitoring and accountability in the systems that are supposed to be serving Albertans. And by that I mean not just firing people who aren't doing their job – and it may come to that – but providing the adequate retraining and redirection and remedy to those who are not managing their people well, not managing the setting of goals and the monitoring of the goals of that process well and, therefore, not being held accountable for the sacred trust we've been given by Albertans to manage their resources and, in fact, their very well-being in the short term and the long term.

If I may, I'll just close with a remark about the longer term management. If we focus so closely on results from this year over next year, we will miss the longer term commitment that has to be there for a more sustainable environment, a more sustainable health care system and workforce, people that believe in where we're going and put a hundred per cent of their energy and their commitment into making the systems work better.

I would not want to leave this discussion without ensuring that we are very clear that short-term results-based decision-making is part of what got us into this problem. We're not seeing the long-term energy needs of this province. We're not looking at the longer term results in terms of an environment that is being daily compromised. We're not seeing the long-term impact of a poverty reduction program that is not addressing in any serious way the huge cost of our failure to deal with single moms, educational and learning disabilities in children, behavioural problem in kids, mental health problems, addictions. By not dealing with those issues, which would be a short-term increased cost, we are actually failing in the long-term well-being of the province and comprising the kind of results-based budgeting that I think this Premier probably wants in her heart of hearts.

That said, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to propose an amendment to Bill 1 that has to do with accountability, that actually establishes within one year of coming into force a special committee of the Legislative Assembly to comprehensively review how this results-based budgeting process actually works. It involves extra cost. Will it involve extra benefit?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. If you could just present the page with copies that can be distributed. We will for the record refer to this as amendment A1. Hon. member, if you would just give us a moment to have it distributed. We'll take the original here. Thank you. Then we'll invite you to proceed with your discussion of this amendment.

I'm assuming everyone has a copy now. Yes? We'll let the member proceed, then.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The foundation of Liberal thinking around all kinds of production of goods and services is around evidence. Whenever we make a decision, it's very clear that if we don't measure the impact of what we've done, we have not done a job. Everything we do has risks and benefits. If we don't understand at the end of the day what the results of a change in direction are, then we simply will not make decisions that have a lasting and changing value.

This amendment on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is results-based budgeting amendment 1, we could call it. It reads:

3.1(1) Within one year of the coming into force... a special committee established by the Legislative Assembly shall commence a comprehensive review of the results-based budget process.

(2) The committee's review shall include recommendations for the establishment of an independent officer of the Legislature whose duties would include reviewing budgetary processes of the government.

Finally,

(3) The committee shall submit its report to the Legislative Assembly within one year after beginning the review.

Again, it speaks to state-of-the-art management principles. If we're going to change something that is ostensibly going to produce greater effectiveness or efficiency, surely we should measure the impact of that. Are we actually spending more money, and are we getting results from that as a result of this new approach? One would hope so. Again, there is no guarantee that anything we do is going to improve effectiveness and efficiency unless we measure it and hold ourselves accountable to both one another and the public.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

To the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I find this an interesting one. I wasn't able to look it up on the Internet quite as fast as I wanted to – I thought the hon. member would talk a little bit more – but the federal government, I believe, has an independent auditor by the name of Page, if my memory is correct.

Anyway, I think this is an interesting amendment to Bill 1. I certainly am not in favour of Bill 1 with its current concept. I commend the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for his astuteness in looking at auditing and ensuring that we're using our dollars wisely. I guess this is very brief and isn't expanding much, but some of my questions would be because in opposition – and each of us over here understands this – the line items that we get are painfully inadequate to look over and to make any decision or to make any comments, really, on how the money is being spent. I think that in this there needs to be a more comprehensive expansion on, you know, what books we're actually going to be able to see, that this independent government individual would have better access but, more importantly, that the committee would have better access to have an in-depth study of the budget and be part of the actual process of the results-based budgeting.

I'm not sure. Like I say, these things always get thrown out quickly. I wish I would have had a little bit more time to prepare and read this and do a little bit of research.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 1, the Results-based Budgeting Act, is painfully inadequate, and there need to be some amendments in order to expand that and to have some parameters on what they're trying to achieve. The short fact of the matter is that the government's budget is the result of their studying of it. Now they're trying to put it in this budget with this bill, saying that we're going to have a results-based budget. Well, what have they been doing, then, before now?

With this amendment, which I would be in favour of, I think that we have some parameters here now to see how we are going to actually go through a process, a comprehensive review to see the results of how our tax dollars are being spent. That's really our responsibility here as elected members, to ensure that tax dollars are spent wisely. I would argue that the differences in this House, really, should come down to the debate on the priorities. Should we be spending more money in, you know, Education? Should we be spending less money in Transportation?

I think that we would all agree – perhaps I have a few colleagues here that won't agree with this – that we need to balance our budget yearly. I mean, there are times, you know, like in 2008 when we had a major crash. Those are years where perhaps government needs to carry on. It might have that one-year dip, but to go on for five years with deficit budgeting is just wrong. It's not sustainable. It shouldn't be going forward. Somehow there needs to be a process where elected members can come together on a committee, go over these things, and agree – we might disagree – and vote on where we want to spend the money; like I say, more in health care, more in education, less in justice. The criteria needs to be that we need to balance the budget, much like municipal government. They sit down around the table, and they'll go for hours and hours and days on end on the process of the results of what they've put down.

Bill 1 is inadequate. In just saying, "Oh, it's going to be results based," well, that's exactly what this budget is. This one here, A1 – I didn't write that down when you said that, Mr. Chair; it's A1 – is asking:

3.1(1) Within one year of the coming into force of this Act, a special committee established by the Legislative Assembly shall commence a comprehensive review of the results-based budget process.

(2) The committee's review shall include recommendations for the establishment of an independent officer of the Legislature whose duties would include reviewing the budgetary processes of the government.

(3) The committee shall submit its report to the Legislative Assembly within one year after beginning the review.

I think this is a step in the right direction. I feel, though, that it's not a complete step. Like I say, he's got my thinking process going here now. We really need to have some more amendments that would actually enable this committee to be part of the results-based budget process along with an officer of the Legislature.

Anyway, it's innovative. That's what we need, some new thinking, because this government certainly is lacking it, and this Bill 1 certainly shows that lack of innovation. By simply creating a bill, they think that they can create the illusion that now they've got great results from their painfully poor budget, which they've brought forward and that will be debated here over the next month.

I'd just like to speak in favour of this. It's an interesting concept, and it would be interesting to see if the government has any comments on this.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, please, on the amendment.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I, too, would like to speak, actually, in support of this amendment made by my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar. The bill as written so far is much more of a public relations exercise than anything. The government is attempting to use this as a cloak to say that we're going to be fiscally responsible from now on by reviewing budgets and reviewing programs and reviewing the like. It's been said here before – and I'll say it again just for the sake of the record – that if the government hadn't been doing this already, it begs the question: what the heck have they been doing?

The act as written provides no guarantees, no assurances, no outcomes, no priorities, or, in a sense, any direction as to where this results-based budgeting process will lead. Also, it again is happening behind closed doors. How do we know whether the results of this process are actually being accomplished? As I said at the beginning, it's an exercise in messaging, and whether it's successful or not, I'm not so sure.

But, hey, I guess the long and the short of this amendment is that it's trying to make this current act have some use and effect, some particular teeth to it, that it may actually make things better here in Alberta by applying a special committee made up of the Legislative Assembly and that actually does a review of this process. This bill also includes recommendations for the establishment of an independent officer of the Legislature whose duties would include reviewing the budgetary process of this government and submitting a report to this honourable House for us to review and look at and distill as to whether we're getting value for money or production from our resource revenues, from our tax revenues and the like in providing services to the citizens of Alberta. You know, it behooves us, if we're going to have a bill, that it actually does something. That's why I would be in support of it.

Obviously, budgeting processes are very important things unless you're going to totally discount the role of government. You need police services, fire services, ambulance services, the provision of medical services, a publicly funded education system, and the like. These are not easy priorities to manage, nor are they always easy to budget for. In particular, given our particularly volatile revenue streams at this current time, our reliance on oil and gas revenue, that is, in my view, short term and short sighted, we should be contributing more from the public purse to pay today's bills.

I find much wiser a pay-as-you-go philosophy of having people actually pay for the services they use, of people actually paying taxes for the health care, for the public education, and for, basically, the public good that we enjoy. I think we should ask more of our citizens to pay today for those things they're using instead of borrowing other people's money or future generations' money, which is the oil and gas reserves, unless we think it's a principled decision to spend all this wealth in one generation, which we've shown over the course of the last 25 years an ability to do.

We've spent $200 billion to $250 billion in petroleum revenues without saving a dime. I think anyone would say that in the long run this is not sustainable or whether it's morally or ethically correct to have actually done that. I would say that a far more conservative principle, a far more results-based budgeting principle, is to say: "No. We as a society are going to pay for what we use and save for the long run and use some of those revenue streams to build a heritage trust fund, like Mr. Lougheed envisioned, to go forward and allow us to have something left when the oil and gas is gone." I think that to argue otherwise is simply not common sense, nor is it logical, nor is it morally or ethically correct to the future generations.

If they apply some of these principles, what I've just described, to an actual budgeting process, to actually strike a committee to make this bill better, what I'd like to see is us looking at our revenue streams, looking at our results, and actually developing a fair taxation policy that represents not only what we need today but what we're going to need tomorrow, when the oil eventually runs out or the world moves on from oil, which will most likely be the case far before the oil runs out.

I thank you for your time, for allowing me to speak to this amendment, one that I think will bring some focus to the bill and maybe some results forward for the Alberta people. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak against the amendment. It's ironic that in a House where we've just had speeches relating to the budget, most of which talked about how the budget should be balanced and that we shouldn't spend more money, we see the deputy leader of a party that's constantly chastising the government for spending too much speaking in favour of setting up yet another committee and another process that will yet cost more money when, in fact, we have a process in place already to do exactly this.

According to Bill 1 under section 3(1), "The President of Treasury Board . . . shall, no later than October 1 of each year, beginning in 2012, table in the Legislative Assembly a report that sets out the progress of the review."

We also have in our standing orders policy field committees. When anything is brought before the House that relates to the area that the policy field committee is responsible for, it falls within the jurisdiction of that policy field committee, so very easy for the policy field committee to determine that they would like to review that report and make comment on that report. Reports that are tabled in the House can be referred to the committee. So there's a process in place for the House to do this not once, as proposed by the amendment, but on an ongoing basis, and I would hope that the policy field committee responsible would indeed undertake that.

Now, the House could decide, if it wished, to make the change and refer it to the Public Accounts Committee, you know, if we wanted to add to the role of the Public Accounts Committee, but without doing anything, it does fall within the purview of the policy field committee to which the Ministry of Finance and the Treasury Board are reportable and, indeed, where estimates would go if they weren't otherwise directed to the House. This is already covered very well, not just on a one-time basis but on an ongoing basis, and therefore the amendment is not only a costly addition but unnecessary.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Hinman: Well, I appreciate the Government House Leader getting up and giving those erroneous statements. Nowhere did I say that the government should spend more money. I talked about priorities. This government obviously is oblivious to the idea that when you budget, you actually prioritize your money.

He talked about the policy field committees. We don't have access to any of the information. It's very limited, Mr. Chair. It's ridiculous. It's almost pompous for the Government House Leader to get up and make such comments like there's an ability for the opposition to get any review of any of the budgetary items other than what's in the actual budget, which anybody in the province has access to. We never see any contracts. We don't see the RFPs that go out. None of those things take place.

Again, the whole agenda of the policy field committees is run by the government. I mean, all of those areas are run by the government. They're protective. They're secretive. They're closed in. We can't ask for different documents and say, you know: let's see the requests for proposals on these billion-dollar power lines that this government purports that we need. You know, after 12 years of saying that it's critical, that the sky is falling, nothing has happened, yet there are no reports coming forward, Mr. Chairman. It's just ridiculous, from the statements that he made, to say, "Oh, the Wildrose deputy leader is in favour of running a deficit budget now" because we're looking at having someone accountable.

I mean, Kevin Page, the Parliamentary Budget Officer that the federal government put in place in 2008, is the first one. It's interesting how critical he is of the government on how the government is spending their money or when they're unrealistic in their projections. I think that was the intent of this amendment. As I did say, if I would have known this was coming forward, I would have brought in another amendment for it, but it takes time, and we're not going to have that time. The debate will move on before an amendment would pass parliamentary approval.

I merely commented on the fact that we need a better system and not the government standing up and patting itself on the back for having a committee that they're going to present to this parliament and say: "Oh, look how great we've done in our budgeting, the results. Here's our report." This government receives report after report. I mean, they just had their critical transmission committee come and say how great and wonderful the government was to act on this critical need, Mr. Chair.

I have to stand up and correct the hon. Government House Leader in his comments that we want to increase the largesse of government, that we want to spend more money. This amendment is anything but that. The whole purpose of why they have Bill 1 and why this amendment to Bill 1 was brought forward is that we want to actually have some results-based financing. We don't have that. If this government thinks or even purports for a minute that they have it, then the results of their finance is that there are no cuts that can be made, that there's no largesse in the government anywhere, that there's no bloating of management in any of the departments, that every dollar has been covered.

They've had since October 1 to go through this budget. The Premier and her cabinet have all come forward and said that there are no cuts that can be made. That's ridiculous. There are many cuts that can be made. Sometimes in order to balance a budget, you actually have to pick and choose. "Can we go on two holidays as a family?" "No, only one." "So where are we going to go?" "Well, we don't have enough money. We're staying in Alberta, but we wanted to go to Disneyland or to Alison's Wonderland for a wonderful vacation." They don't have the money.

Mrs. Forsyth: To Jasper.

Mr. Hinman: Yes, a vacation to Jasper and to bring our future colleagues along.

Mr. Chair, it's offensive to Albertans that this government for the fifth year during record revenue has come up with this idea of results-based budgeting. I mean, it's comical when we look back at the last three years and realize what Bill 1 has been. Last year it was: "You know what? We kind of messed up, and what we need is an advisory council to the government." The Government House Leader just talked about not creating more bureaucracy and more counsel. Well, that's exactly what it was. Then we had a candidate for the leadership of his party get appointed to that nice position. The year before that, this government destroyed the oil and gas industry here. Did they ever apologize for that? No. They blamed it on world happenings beyond their control, which was in August '08, but they still implemented their faulty program on January 1, 2009.

Then for their budget in 2010 they said: oh, we need to pass this new, very important bill that's the Alberta Competitiveness Act. Why? Because all of the bills that they had passed had destroyed – we weren't competitive here in the province. We were losing industry. We were losing revenue. So they came up with these wonderful bills to try and put smoke and mirrors around their shortcomings, their fallibility in budgeting.

They think that because they write down a few little words on here, results-based budgeting, that Albertans are going to buy that. The result of proper budgeting, Mr. Chairman, would be a balanced budget. We've had five years to do it. It's doable. But each year that we don't, we dig ourselves deeper into a hole that will be tougher and will hurt more if we don't make the proper cuts now.

Something else needs to be done. Bill 1 isn't adequate in its current situation. This is a step in the right direction. Like I say, because of the process, we weren't privy to this amendment coming forward. I would have had another amendment to add some in-depth – I guess what I want to say is that all House members that would have access could actually go to the Finance minister and say: "You know, I want to see the requests for proposals on cataracts. I want to see these. Where are these decisions?" They'd actually have a committee of the Legislature that would have access to look at the results of the budget and where we're spending the money.

We have no access to that. We can't make any real comments on how or where they're spending the money because it's a line item budget. We need new computers. They're going to spend $2.6 million. Where? How? Why? That's the extent of their debate. It's ridiculous. It's inadequate. It's incomprehensible that they would think that Bill 1 in its current condition is going to result in good budgeting going forward.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other speakers? Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair, I would also like to speak in favour of the amendment brought forward by my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar. The intention of Bill 1 is that it essentially tasks the government to do a program review of all departments using a results-based budgeting process, leaving the term "results-based budgeting process" undefined, and then to report to the Legislature. So the amendment to Bill 1 is:

Within one year of the coming into force of this Act, a special committee established by the Legislative Assembly shall commence a comprehensive review of the results-based budget process.

Then it goes on further.

The committee's review shall include recommendations for the establishment of an independent officer of the Legislature whose duties would include reviewing the budgetary processes of the government.

So the independent officer will be reviewing the budget process on an ongoing basis.

The committee shall submit its report to the Legislative Assembly within one year after beginning the review.

This amendment is going to put teeth into Bill 1. We can have ongoing reviews of all the budget processes, and then we will know where we have gone wrong, where we have overspent, where we need to spend more, and where we need to cut back.

This amendment will force the government to have the budget processes and outcomes reviewed by an independent officer of the Legislature, similar to the federal Parliamentary Budget Officer. This will not only keep our spending in check; it will also produce better results if you pass this amendment, the rationale being the real improvements in efficiency, objectivity, and the possibilities obtained by the objective review of government programs by an independent officer of the Legislature as well as having a better budgeting process in place.

For those reasons, this amendment will give us an independent officer of the Legislature, and for those reasons I will favour this amendment, Mr. Chair, because it will bring in transparency, efficiency, and objectivity. The process will be very, very transparent.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. Are there any other persons wishing to speak to amendment A1 as presented moments ago?

Are you ready for the question, then?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We're back to the main speakers list now on the bill, and I will recognize Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Chair, thank you very much. I'm not sure how I feel about standing up and speaking about this bill, actually. I've thought about it over the weekend and as I drove home on Thursday night and when I drove up again on Sunday. You know, I try to rationalize where I've been, where I am today, and where I'm going. When I thought about Bill 1 that way, I thought about my time as a member, when I was with the government, and I think it was six and a half years as a cabinet minister and about the process that we went through budgeting and line-by-line items when the times were tough.

I remember doing exactly what the government is proposing, actually, way back when I was the Solicitor General. We had some rough roads, and the Premier at the time, Premier Klein, had sent out to all of the ministers at that particular time: pick your priorities. What's the most important thing in your department? I guess wants versus needs. That was in maybe 2001 or 2002. I can't exactly remember.

I've said in this Legislature before that if we had half the money the government has or even a quarter of the money the government has or a third of the money they have and the staff that they have to be able to do research, you know, I'm not sure where we'd be. With a limited budget a lot of the research is done by some very capable staff that we have in our small little caucus, but we end up spending hours upon hours doing our own research. As my colleague from Calgary-Glenmore has alluded, if we would have had just a little bit of time to do a little bit of research, it's amazing the debates that we could carry on in this Legislature.

You know, I look at this bill, and we've got a whole bunch of whereases.

Whereas the Government of Alberta is committed to ensuring that its programs and services are the right programs and services delivered in the right way to achieve the results that Albertans expect, in the most efficient and effective manner.

Mr. Chair, what on God's green Earth have they been doing for the last 40 years they've been in government? You know, you would think that as a cabinet minister and an MLA you'd be asking yourself: are we delivering the right way to achieve what's best for Albertans? It is beyond – absolutely beyond – my comprehension that the government would even have the nerve, honestly, to table a bill, to admit to Albertans that they've been screwing up for the last 40 years and that they really didn't know what they were doing prior. It's no wonder, as my colleague says, that we've got five years of deficits.

You know, let's make it real simple. I have to tell you that I was door-knocking this weekend on Saturday, and I talked to the constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek about the Results-based Budgeting Act. I don't know if you know what it's like when you're talking to somebody and you're talking over their head or they're just not comprehending or understanding what you're doing. They looked at me as if to say: lady, I have no idea what you're talking about, so why don't you keep it simple? So you go back to the simplicity of saying that it's like sitting around the kitchen table and deciding about your budget when your husband has had to take a drop in salary because it's either that or he loses his job. So you're making decisions on what is truly a want versus a need: do we still continue to have steaks three times a week, or do we all of a sudden realize that we have to go on to hamburger? It's such a simplistic idea of how we budget.

Then we go on to:

Whereas a comprehensive review of the Government's programs and services will ensure that those programs and services are continuing to achieve the best results and to support Albertans, communities and businesses in reaching their full potential.

Well, we have or had – I'm not even sure if we do any more – a three-year budget cycle, a process that would allow us after the first year of the budget to go back. You know, if you had an agency that was doing some work contracted from the government: are you doing the right thing, and are you getting results? Again, it's one of those things that you just shake your head and say: Albertans truly, truly are not going to buy into this. It's like my colleague said, where we had – oh, let's see – in 2011 the Asia Advisory Council Act. I'm not even sure, to be honest with you, if that bill has been proclaimed. Has it? Does anybody know?

An Hon. Member: No mention if it wasn't.

Mrs. Forsyth: Okay. So we're not sure if that bill is even proclaimed.

Then we go to 2010, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. It's another one of those. You have to be kidding me. I mean, normal Albertans, everyday Albertans – and that's the Tim Hortons Albertans – get it. They don't need a bill like the Alberta Competitiveness Act. They don't need a bill like the Asia Advisory Council Act. They just want us to do what they've elected us to do: represent their interests. I have to tell you that I door-knock every summer. I door-knocked last summer and door-knocked the summer before, and I don't remember any one of the good people of Calgary-Fish Creek saying: you know, Heather, we need an Asia Advisory Council Act.

I write an article every month for my web page, and it's called What's on Your Mind. I decided that I was just going to take a little step back in history and was going to read what I've been writing for the last year. The article is called What's on Your Mind because it's what the constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek have told us for the last month. We track every phone call that comes into the office. We track every e-mail and fax that comes into the office and anybody that walks into the office. If I'm at the grocery store getting my groceries and somebody stops me and they want to talk about something about the government, every single one of those is tracked. When we get towards the end of the month, my staff does a graph and a printout and tells me exactly what the graph indicates as the number one priority for the constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek.

I have to apologize to them because we've been busy getting ready for session, so I haven't written What's on Your Mind for the constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek for the month of January. But I can tell you that it's the same thing that's been on their mind for the last nine months: health care, seniors, and then the third one will switch from education to infrastructure. I can tell you that in the month of December for the first time the .05-.08, whatever that piece of legislation was called, bumped everything off the map and took number one priority.

The government's role, quite frankly, and that of every single person in this Legislature as an elected representative is to listen to what they're hearing from their constituents and then go back and discuss it at the caucus table. The caucus then allows the cabinet to say: well, you know, out of 80 – I don't know how many MLAs they have because they keep losing them, but I think there are 62 now. I'm not sure, exactly. The representation of those 62 MLAs should be telling the government the direction of what they're hearing from the people who put them there and who elected them because that's their position.

We go on and we talk about:

Whereas the recommendations from such a review . . .

And I'm not sure what review they refer to. I guess it's the review of the government's program and services.

. . . can form a basis for future budget and policy decisions to achieve the best results for Albertans.

All nice. All wonderful. It makes you feel warm, and it makes you feel like the government is doing something, but then again you question what's happening, what they've been doing before.

Then we go on:

Whereas engaging Albertans is vital to determine what results they want and to validate the results achieved.

An unbelievable comment when you think about the fact that they just seemed to wake up on the date of February 2012, maybe one month or two months before an election, and they're talking about engaging Albertans and how vital it is. It's just arrogance, cockiness at its finest.

Then we go on:

Whereas an innovative, collaborative and engaged Alberta Public Service, working with purpose and pride, is committed to achieving results for Albertans and making a difference in their lives.

I'm not exactly sure what that even means, to be honest with you. If it's going back to maybe the comment that the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster made earlier about the hard work that the public service does in this province, there's no question. I've been blessed, serving in two ministries, as the Solicitor General and as the minister of children's services. I said this last year when I was speaking in regard to the unbelievable job that the civil service did for me when I was the minister – and it's like the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster said – that they go absolutely way beyond the call of duty. It's amazing how they all pulled together when we were working on budgets or, for that matter, when we had a crisis in the department. Everybody worked together.

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

We then go on to the review of the programs and services and exactly the role of the Treasury Board.

The Treasury Board shall provide for a comprehensive review of the programs and services provided by the Government and its agencies.

Again, you know, you have to wonder what Treasury Board was doing before. Up until a few months ago we had the President of the Treasury Board, and then we had another minister of something to do with Treasury Board. Since then we've just got the President of Treasury Board. What exactly has the President of the Treasury Board been doing for the last four years if he hasn't been doing a comprehensive review?

Mr. Chairman, I had the opportunity to sit on Treasury Board when I was a government member. It was a very, very good learning experience. I hadn't been elected that long, and it was at that time a very prestigious position to be sitting as a member of Treasury Board. The Treasury Board staff, as we're going through this budget process, provide you with a very comprehensive review because of the fact that you have ministers coming to the table. They're wanting to have more money. They're arguing the fact of why their particular ministry should not take a decrease, should not stay the same, and most of the time should have an increase in spending. All of a sudden it seems like we're reinventing the wheel, or maybe this is one of those bills where we want everybody to think: under this new Premier we're changing how we do business.

I don't have a problem with that. The problem with the business that they're changing is something that they should have been doing for the last 40 years in regard to establishing budgets, determining priorities, and finding out what the right programs are, what the right services are, how you achieve the best results in what the government says is efficient and effective.

You know, I continue to think about this as I meet and engage with people out and about, and I really, really have trouble trying to rationalize and explain: well, I guess, the government hasn't been doing what they said they were doing, and now they've decided that maybe they should be doing this because it could be what Albertans want. We probably haven't been listening in the past, so now we'll tell them what they want to hear instead of asking what is really important to them.

We go on. They talk about the review process.

The review must be conducted in the manner and in accordance with a schedule as directed by the Treasury Board and must include an assessment as to whether the programs and services provided by the Government and its agencies meet their intended objectives and whether they are being delivered in an efficient and effective manner.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I really hate to sound repetitive, and I don't want to say, "I told you so", but honest to goodness, what the heck have they been doing for the last 40 years? I mean, it is where you have to shake your head over and over again and think, "I cannot believe that I'm standing up on the 14th of February debating the number one bill of the Legislature in the spring session, called the Results-based Budgeting Act" and try and comprehend what the government has been doing previously. I guess that from this they haven't been doing a very good job. Now, in the year 2012, they're going to change the whole budget process. They're going to start engaging Albertans, and more importantly they are going to start listening to Albertans, and that's very frightening.

We go down.

For the purpose of conducting a review under this Act, in addition to members of the public service, external experts may be engaged as the Treasury Board considers necessary.

What external experts? When you have the hard-working people that work in many of the departments, what I call the front-line workers or the workers that are in the trenches, they know what needs to be done in their particular departments. They know what the priorities are for their departments. They know that if we're talking about Human Services, the number one priority for that particular department is protecting children. It's real simple. What they need to do is make sure that the children in this province are protected and especially that the vulnerable children that are apprehended under children's services are taken care of, that they've got some love, that they've got some access to things if they come into issues. It's not rocket science.

Then they go on to say, "Albertans will have the opportunity to participate in the review." What review, and who determines that review? Is it Treasury Board? Is it the members of the public service? Is it the external experts? I mean, Mr. Chair, we have some unbelievable people that work and are engaged within the different departments of the different ministries that do an unbelievable job, and let's give them some credit. As someone who has sat in two ministries, who relied on the people that worked within those ministries to tell me as a new minister, really, what the priorities were for their ministry, who knows it better than them?

You go out. In both ministries when I was a minister, I travelled the province and talked to the corrections officers that were out there and talked to the police. Even when I visited the correctional facilities, I talked to the people that were incarcerated, the offenders, to see what was on their mind. The children's services minister covered every regional authority in the province from as far north that you could go to as far south, reached out to the aboriginal communities, did visits in Wabasca, went to Eden Valley, you know, went to Hobbema, went to Siksika, talked to the people there. That's what's all important about engaging Albertans.

For the government, quite frankly, to bring up a Bill 1 and put in all of these whereases, what they're going to do, is completely unacceptable. They are now saying to Albertans: we've never done this before, so will you just give us one more chance in our 41st year as this is what we should be doing? You know, instead of the government telling the people what they're going to do, maybe it's time that the people tell the government what they expect them to do.

As we go through the process of debating this particular motion, I'm looking forward to hearing the government stand up and rationalize why they're going to support this bill. With that, I'll sit down.

The Chair: Any others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, then.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I listened with some interest to my colleague on this side of the House and have listened to other people talk on this bill. We, interestingly, just had an amendment brought up from this side of the House to Bill 1 of this session, the act that's before us, that I think would have actually given this legislation some teeth and some purpose.

Starting on that, if we look at this bill, it purports to do great things, well, not really great things, but it essentially says: results-based budgeting. Clearly, this is a title meant, in my view, to produce some results in our budgets, actually have them produce results that are both economically viable as well as produce the services that a modern-day society actually utilizes, whether these programs are needed, wanted, or the like. That's what to me, actually, results-based budgeting would be.

If you go through the act, I don't see anything tangible that would lead to actually results-based budgeting happening. It's simply a platitude, more of a wish, more of a hope, more of a desire, more of a "we want this to happen" or "we're not going to make this happen." It provides no actual teeth to how this is going to happen. In fact, I've said it before, but why not? Redundancy is my strong suit. If they haven't been doing results-based budgeting before, one might ask what the heck they've been doing, and I think that's a fair comment when you really look at this bill. It purports to do a lot without doing anything.

To, I guess, the government's credit they have received quite a bit of play on this in the news media. People have sort of bought into this debate hook, line, and sinker, and it shores up their image as being fiscal hawks when we full well know it's really not much of a claim. If it helps them in that regard, I guess that's good for them. Whether this bill is actually good for the Alberta people, that is another thing. I remain to be convinced. I'm hopeful that possibly some of the language in here may get to the ministers as well as their teams, and hopefully they will results-based budget from now on, which I guess means we're going to review the programs and see whether they're working for Albertans, again something I hoped they were already doing but apparently not.

I guess that, going forward, what I'd like to see out of our budgeting practices is more of an eye to balancing revenues with expenses and trying to look at a global picture of what we can do to provide essential services from governments, things like police, fire, ambulance, public health care, public education, and some of those things that, in my view, modern societies work better with, things that essentially make the trains run on time, so to speak, essentially allow societies to function at their highest productivity with the most people engaged and the most people supported in a reasonable fashion. For instance, many of these programs in society, I feel, are overarching. I think government has to take some direction in the organization of a society, and if done correctly, the government can provide efficiencies to what they were doing.

Essentially, sometime the rubber has to hit the road in terms of our spending, in terms of what we bring in on the revenue side from the taxpayer and what we currently rely on in fossil fuel resources. I've said this earlier, but in my view the last 25 years have shown that we can spend $200 billion to $250 billion in fossil fuel resources and not save a dime, okay? In my view, this is morally and ethically wrong. In my view, I don't believe it should be our raison d'être to spend every last dime of fossil fuel resources that come into the government coffers on providing services. I essentially think that if people want these services, they should have to pay for some of them themselves, okay? If they don't want these services, I guess that's going to be the time when the rubber hits the road, where we say: all right; we're going to cut these services.

That would be more moral and ethical than us simply spending all this money on keeping an artificially low tax base. That's essentially what we've done over the last 25 years, and in my view it may have been a road to electoral success, but it hasn't shown much leadership.

I'll say it here. You know, although our societies are structured differently, when books are written on how to run an oil and gas economy and what to do with the revenue streams, I think that when they compare what Norway has done to what we've done, there's no choice who did it better. They have $600 billion in their kitty that they can now call upon when times are tough. We have $15 billion, that essentially we saved before 1987.

I think that if this process, although I'm not sure it does anything, can lead to us getting sort of that commitment to saving, thus getting a commitment to paying as we go, a commitment to developing a fair taxation policy that recognizes that it's not in our best interests to spend every last dime of fossil fuel resources that comes into the government coffers on today's bills, then maybe this bill will have served its purpose. Until such time as I'm proven wrong, I think this has been a public relations exercise. To give the government its due, it's probably been a relatively successful public relations exercise, so I guess I'd give them some credit for that. Other than that, it's not of much consequence, not of much actual tangible relevance to seeing things done in a better, more manageable way. Although it's given us an opportunity to talk and lay some direction on the line, in my view it's maybe not the best use of a Bill 1.

Nevertheless, I thank you for the opportunity to discuss this once again. I look forward to hearing the rest of my colleagues debate this. I don't know if I've heard anyone from the government side discuss this bill and hear from them how this is going to change the world or change how things are done. Maybe that would be a nice opportunity. We're all here. I think you guys all have to be here till 6 o'clock, so feel free to chime in, and we'll go from there.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you. I appreciate the opportunity to stand up and speak a little bit more about Bill 1, the Results-based Budgeting Act. I have to say that as the debate goes forward and a few more thoughts come to my mind, it really is disappointing. I can't help but think of Shakespeare: protest too much for an innocent man. I think that this government protests too much to be fiscal conservatives. Again, they went through the cycle of going into multibillion-dollar debt in the late '80s, early '90s. We struggled and came out of that up until 2005.

We then had a great boom for two or three years and were able to put a lot of money into the sustainability fund. I might say that the reason why they were able to do that is because there wasn't the capacity or the projects online that they could spend the money on fast enough. Thank heavens for that because if they could have found a dollar store to spend another dollar, I think they would have spent it. They bought up and did everything they could possibly get dibs on.

It's interesting that they bring this bill forward as Bill 1, and as I'd mentioned earlier in talking on the amendment, the last three Bill 1s have been somewhat comical almost, where they protest that they're something that they're not. They think that in order to tell Albertans, you know, that they're fiscal conservatives, they'll bring forward Bill 1 and make the big announcement.

It's interesting, though, how in the budget they projected such fantastic revenue over the next three years going forward, yet when you look back, they've had an incredible streak of revenue since, you know, 2003. Like I say, we've grasped our debt, been able to pay it off, put money in our sustainability fund, and then we've spent that money.

It was interesting also because action really does speak louder than words. Earlier today in question period the Government House Leader, Edmonton-Whitemud, was asked a question about protecting children on the farm, and he got up and said something. I wish that we could get Hansard quicker. He answered something along the line that bills and legislation aren't going to make our children safe, that it's what we've taught and how they're being protected.

Again, I want to say that the Government House leader is absolutely right. This bill and this legislation are not going to turn this government into a fiscally conservative government that balances the budget, so it doesn't matter whether this bill or the budget passes. It is not going to change the behaviour of this government, which is spend and spend more. I think they've forecasted very, very eloquently that they in the future want to tax and tax more, so they're going to take on that old saying, a tax-and-spend government, and they gleefully do that.

It's interesting that this government seems to have this concept at this point that Albertans are like spoiled children, that they can't have an idea of the bigger grasp of things and that if we don't spend this money, they won't vote for us. We have this desperate grab in this bill, Bill 1, stating: "You know, we're going to go through everything and review it, so vote for us. You can count on us."

You know, it's interesting that many times I've heard about why democracies fail. Some people refer to it as the cycle of democracy. There's an individual that is somewhat credited – but, again, the debate always goes on – Alexander Fraser Tytler, who in 1770 wrote about the cycles of democracy. I want to read that, like I say, realizing that this isn't the real quote. It's evolved over the years. It's kind of eloquent, though. It's very, I think, relevant to the situation of democracies around the world right now.

A democracy cannot exist as a permanent form of government.

It can only exist until the voters discover that they can vote themselves largesse from the public treasury. From that moment on, the majority always votes for the candidates promising the most benefits from the public treasury with the result that a democracy always collapses over lousy fiscal policy, always followed by a dictatorship. The average world's great civilizations before they decline has been 200 years. These nations have progressed in this sequence: From bondage to spiritual faith; from faith to great courage; from courage to liberty . . .

And then we hit the top of the cycle.

. . . from liberty to abundance; from abundance to selfishness; from selfishness to complacency; from complacency to apathy; from apathy to dependency; from dependency back again to bondage.

It's an interesting quote. Like I say, to go back to the real question of why democracies fail, it's because the governments fail to balance their budgets. The governments fail to take on that responsibility of looking at the taxpayers' money and realizing how critical it is that they spend it appropriately and in the right areas.

Again, the crisis that we're going through around the world is this abundance of credit. We've sucked up this credit. The household debt is incredible in Canada and the U.S., in France, Italy, Portugal, Spain, Ireland. In all of these areas the bankers have been putting this out and allowing for easy credit and, basically, enslaving us to the point of: how are we going to pay it back? What's going to be the end result of this major deficit and debt that we're running into?

I remember – and this kind of dates me – that Grease was a popular movie when I was going to high school. We were having Grease days. An individual brought a greased pig into the high school. Everybody was trying to catch it to get rid of it. I think a pig is hard enough to capture just in its normal state, but when one is greased, you can't hang on to it. I look at this government and the struggle that they have. They've greased so many wheels and so many axles and so many whiny lobbyists that the harder they try to balance their budget or to hang on to their money, the slipperier it is. It flies out of their hands, and they're not able to do what they know they need to do.

But what's most distressing today, Mr. Chair, that's come out is the continuing bullying and intimidation by this government. It's reprehensible, and it's unacceptable. I didn't understand when the member was asking the question to the Minister of Municipal Affairs what the relevance of his question was. Then I find out that the minister had sent a letter to Linda Sloan, the president of the AUMA, and said: "You know what? We don't accept public criticism. You're wrong to do that." I'm paraphrasing. I could read the letter. I was quite blown away when I saw it. "And because of that, we're not going to come to your breakfast meeting on Thursday morning."

This, Mr. Chairman, is exactly the bullying and the tactics and the behaviour that I've been referring to from this government since November 2004. It's wrong. It's absolutely wrong, and it's unacceptable. Yet, as with any bully, they're so entrenched in it that they don't understand they're doing anything wrong. They just think: “Well, this is the normal way of governing. Nobody should have the right to criticize.”

You know, I remember when I was out in Montreal for the first assembly of the Conservative Party of Canada. We were debating and deciding our policy and where we were going to go. Faron Ellis from Lethbridge College was there with our constituency at that time, our area. There were some people making some criticisms. You know, people say: “Oh, you shouldn’t criticize. You should offer better ideas.”

5:30

What is a critique? You know, as a coach you want to critique that athlete or that pianist or whatever and say: look, you need to change this, you need to do that. The important thing that Faron said to me that day was that criticism makes good organizations and good people better. And I thought about that a little bit. You know, that’s true. When my wife tells me that I’m not doing something – and I’m thinking of Valentine’s Day. Thank you very much for your support, honey, for the work that we do in here and not being able to be together this evening because I’m in Edmonton and you’re down south.

Mr. Chair, criticism, if taken in the right light, is a great help. I like people to tell me when I’ve done something wrong rather than to allow me to go on and keep repeating it. That’s not a good situation.

What’s also interesting that he added to that was that criticism also speeds up the demise of faulty organizations. So if you’re allowed to publicly speak about those things and then people see those criticisms publicly, it collapses poor organizations. And it doesn’t matter what area it is. Whether it’s government, whether it’s a charitable organization, whether it’s a nonprofit, criticism is important.

Yet this government wants to smother it and say it’s not allowable. Whether you’re a librarian and you criticize them, the response always is: you know, you need to toe the party line here, toe the government line because if you don’t, your funding is questionable. This is something that they do throughout the province in all areas, whether it’s education in telling the teacher to pull in the line. When they brought in the centralized superboard, they told all the health workers: if you speak out publicly, there are going to be consequences. We see Dr. Magliocco when he was sent the letter: this will jeopardize your career if you speak out and criticize publicly.

This government fails to understand the importance of public criticism. Fortunately, they can’t completely silence the opposition in this House, and we do have a few moments where we get to speak. Again, I found it comical that the Government House Leader got up and said, “Well, the normal process that we go through,” and then he went on to talk about that. The normal process for opposition and private members’ bills is that they’re allowed to have unanimous consent to take a leave of absence to table those. This government in its arrogance last Thursday wouldn’t allow it, yet Monday, when another unanimous consent needed to come forward, they were willing then.

They don’t have any respect for democracy, and they certainly have no respect for taxpayers’ money. They think they can buy votes. We listen to the Premier. She’s so excited. She’s proud: it’s going to do so well; the economy is just going to flourish; we can do that without the rest of the world, not even taking a moment to look at how fragile the world economy is right now. We’ve pushed it right to the edge in many, many areas. Even China and India, those great economic engines, at this time aren’t functioning, firing on all cylinders. [interjection] Oh, a government member says: yes, they are. They are not. And that’s the problem of this government. Even when the engine is sputtering and failing to run, they just look at it like: hmm, well, we’re just taking a break.

It’s comical, Mr. Chairman. The problem is overspending of governments, and we’re not going to learn from that? This government is going to make this proposal, Bill 1, the Results-based Budgeting Act, like it’s going to do something.

If we go through the preamble, I want to skip down to: “Whereas engaging Albertans is vital to determine what results they want and to validate the results achieved.” I do not believe that Albertans want to run continuous deficit budgets. And what’s the Alison in wonderland, pie-in-the-sky answer? We’re going to have massive, massive surpluses within two years. Yet when you look, where is that going to come from? Personal and corporate and resource revenue. It’s unfathomable that we can be there. There is always a chance – never say never – but that doesn’t mean spend like there’s no tomorrow or it’s coming in. Don’t count your chickens before they’re hatched. Don’t count your revenue before it’s in the bank. But this government is failing to do that, Mr. Chair.

Bill 1 is just a poor, poor excuse for a protest of a fiscally irresponsible government to say that we are going to focus on results-based budgeting going forward. Well, what have they been doing for the last four months when they prepared this budget? No results-based. What have they been doing for the last four years for the four previous deficit budgets? Were those results-based? What were they basing their decisions on? Certainly not results based, and they won’t go forward on that. What they’re basing their decisions on is that we are going to have another rainbow, and a pot of gold is going to be there. We’ll go and we’ll snap it up next year, and there will be five pots of gold the year after that. “All is well. Trust us. We’re spending your money well. No problems. Let’s just keep spending. Let’s just keep doing it.”

Results-based budgeting. Again, a switch there. What they really wanted to start off saying was zero-based budgeting, but then they thought: oh, no; that’s too much work. Zero-based budgeting means that we have to justify everything. Results-based means that we just need to say that the results are good. Zero-based budgeting would ask: “Do we go on a $100,000 cabinet tour to actually ask about a budget that’s already written? Do we take a $70,000 holiday to Jasper?” That isn’t results-based or zero-based budgeting.

This is a government that has no concept of having to try and hold money, grasp and hang onto that money. The worst of their results-based financing was the offence shortly after March of ’08. This government, including this Premier, gave themselves a 35 per cent pay hike, and then they want to turn around and tell all of our wonderful public servants and front-line workers: you guys don’t need it, but we do. That’s the worst and most offensive form of leadership that you can have, for the leader to say: “We deserve our feather-tick bed, but you will sleep on stones. That’s just the way it is.”

Their leadership has failed Albertans. They continue to live an opulent lifestyle, saying, “You know, we need all of these things,” but they want to turn around and say, “You guys need to stay at 3 per cent or 5 per cent; we can do 35 per cent.” Leadership is to freeze their wages first and then to turn around and talk to Albertans, teachers and nurses and doctors, and say that maybe they should even cut their wages. Well, they did, 35 per cent ahead, 10 per cent back, or some magical formula. You know, 15 steps forward, we’ll take one back, and they think: oh, isn’t that wonderful leadership. It’s not good enough, Mr. Chair. The results of their actions have been every other public worker saying: if you get that, well, then we should get more. It’s wrong.

What you need to do is have the results from action. Action speaks louder than words. It's time this government reined in their spending, prioritized their spending, and realized that it isn't sustainable. They have sucked the sustainability fund from $17 billion down to $4 billion. After next year I would project that it will be gone. Then how do we sustain the spending? Total misuse of the sustainability fund. One year: we can see that. We had some revenue shortfall, fine. Four years and five years in a row to take out massive amounts, up to $6 billion in a year: there's something wrong with the budgeting process of this government and these members.

They're spendaholics. They're addicted. They're addicted to spending. They're addicted to power. The only thing they can do – and, again, I think of a family intervention when it comes to addictions. You've got to surround them and pull them down. This government and their addictions, they need a time out. I suspect that shortly Albertans are going to give many of them a time out when they go to the people of Alberta and say: "Trust us. We know how to spend your money better than you do. Trust us. We have a revenue problem. It's not a spending problem. We'll discuss that after we're re-elected and there's nothing that you can do about this."

This is the situation we're in. This is what Bill 1 is supposed to be about. It's about deception of the people of Alberta, saying that next year we're all of a sudden going to put a magnifying glass and find ways of making cuts when they've had that magnifying glass all along. For the last five years they've had it.

Mr. Chair, it is wrong. I'm against this Bill 1. It's the most ridiculous bill this government has brought forward. Last year Bill 1 was the Asia Advisory Council Act. That was ridiculous. The one before that was quite ridiculous. It said: "Oh, since we're not competitive here in Alberta because of what this government did, we'll pass a competitiveness act. That will tell the world that we're competitive again and open for business." They had to change the royalties. They had to change their structure in order to bring business back into the province. They need to change it again.

If we want the Alberta advantage, if we want businesses to come here, they need to be fiscally responsible. That doesn't mean building $16 billion in power lines and then saying: now that we've pushed this through and we've achieved what we want, we can turn it back to the experts who said we didn't need it to look after the next 30 or 40 years. This is the equivalent of buying a 1982 Caravan and putting it in the garage for 30 years.

The Chair: The time has terminated.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'd move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on Bill 1. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the report, does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Fawcett moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Colonel (Retired) Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 13: Mr. Campbell]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and privilege to rise today before the Assembly and reply to the Speech from the Throne delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta. Before I begin mentioning my thoughts about the Speech from the Throne, I would like to recognize and give thanks to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor for his dedicated and personal passion for our great province.

Mr. Speaker, I am especially pleased to rise on behalf of my constituents of Edmonton-Decore, whom I've had the honour and privilege to serve for four years. I'm very supportive of the directions in the Speech from the Throne, and I believe it offers a principled general framework for directions that we need to pursue on behalf of this province in the years to come in the interests of all Albertans. Throne speeches are by their nature quite general, but to me that presents each MLA with a real opportunity to suggest what some of the needed specifics might be from the perspective of elected representatives in this Assembly. In other words, what do we need to do in order to turn these solid general directions into effective actions that will help us in our efforts to put in place the kind of legislation and programs desired by the people we represent?

Mr. Speaker, like many members of this Assembly, I've been spending a great deal of time lately on the doorsteps of my constituents, and I can say with considerable confidence what it is that the residents of Edmonton-Decore want me to be pursuing on their behalf. The first thing to note is what they don't want. The residents of Edmonton-Decore don't want us to try to solve all of their problems for them or to provide programs and services that they can easily provide for themselves, nor do they want us to put unnecessary rules in place that would stand in the way of building opportunities that contribute to our economy and society as a whole.

Rather, when they send a representative to this Assembly, they would like their MLA to do something that is much less paternalistic and much more helpful. That is in essence to provide the necessary policies and programs to support the development of healthy and well-educated families and strong and safe communities.

Mr. Speaker, the people that I represent have education and health care at the top of their priorities. They believe and I believe that these two areas are absolutely central to the well-being of individuals, families, and communities and that this Legislature has a crucial role in creating the conditions so that all of our families are healthy and well educated.

In addition, they believe and I believe that strong and safe communities are also vital to our individual and collective well-being and that they don't just happen. Their development, Mr. Speaker, is fostered by wise decisions by the people of this Assembly as well as representatives at the local level.

So what is it that we need to do in terms of more specific measures to make progress on this overall goal of supporting the development of healthy and well-educated families and safe and strong communities? One of the most helpful places to start is by recognizing that if we want strong schools, where the talent and potential of all of our children are fully developed, we must acknowledge that many of the reasons some children are not successful at learning have little to do with education and, instead, have much to do with noneducational factors such as hunger, poverty, and the lack of development in those crucial early years.

Mr. Speaker, in terms of needed action in this particular area it is essential to note that we're not trying to replace the work of families but, rather, to better support them so that children can succeed as learners. Further, that is going to require the provision of wraparound services for children at the school site, which will allow children's crucial and noneducational needs to be met so that teachers and support staff can concentrate on meeting their educational needs.

We need to work from the principle that strong schools and strong communities are intimately connected. If you want one, you have to work on the other as well. Mr. Speaker, that involves both newer and older communities and the role of school boards in both because our children live in both settings. I support the efforts to revitalize older communities because we need strong schools in strong communities. I'm very delighted to see recent efforts by our communities, school boards, and city council to work together in this regard in Edmonton. I believe this Legislature needs to support those efforts in effective ways.

Also, I believe that it is essential to better support families with young children in those crucial early years so that every child comes to school ready to learn. There are important collaborations going on between educators in Finland and Alberta in this regard, supported by this government, and we can learn much from Finland about how to support families in early learning through better diagnostic efforts and targeted supports to deal with problems that are identified in the early years. Mr. Speaker, if we can effectively support early learning in these ways, the payoffs down the line will be enormous for individuals, families, and our whole society.

Another thing that we need to work on if we are serious about healthy and well-educated families in strong and safe communities is the area of poverty reduction in our province. A comprehensive approach to poverty reduction, which is being pursued in six other provinces, not only strengthens our families and communities but has the potential to reduce crime and other social problems and, in the long run, to save money that is inevitably spent to deal with the consequences that play out in our communities across the province. Mr. Speaker, I promoted last year in this Assembly the idea of a comprehensive, preventative poverty reduction strategy for our province, and I am pleased that our Premier has indicated that she sees merit in this approach as well.

If we are serious about better supporting our families and communities, Mr. Speaker, we also need to look more closely at the situation of our seniors, particularly those with health that has declined. I'm very supportive of our government's aging-in-place initiatives, and I encourage all of us to look more closely at the vital issue of long-term care. All of our seniors are entitled to a situation of dignity and respect, but there are simply not enough long-term care placements available and, as a result, too many of these vulnerable people are in acute-care beds within our hospitals. This situation is not working for those individuals or for our health care system in general. We can do a better job in this particular area, and in working together with allied professionals, helpful solutions can be created and implemented.

Mr. Speaker, when we talk further of health and of well-educated families, there is another opportunity in front of us that stems from the link between health and learning. In recent years the Canadian Council on Learning has completed an excellent body of work making clear the important gains that can come from improvements in health literacy, real gains that can result in enormous savings in health care expenditures. For years I've been a strong advocate for the development of a comprehensive approach to health and learning in schools and school systems, and I encourage us to strengthen our directions in this vital area in the coming year. The Canadian Council on Learning this past year strongly advocated for the voluntary and co-operative effort of the provinces to work together to provide a pan-Canadian structure to improve learning outcomes in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I've been most impressed by our new Premier's willingness to take a leadership role in important questions beyond Alberta's borders. This wonderful province of ours is poised to take on a much larger role in such issues, and I believe our Premier should be the one to take on the task of leading the way in promoting these improvements in learning in the manner that the Canadian Council on Learning has urged. There is no province better placed to do so and no one more qualified than our Premier to launch this initiative.

This throne speech has set the right directions. I believe that if we pursue these types of initiatives on behalf of our constituents, we will need help to support stronger families and communities and will in the process build a foundation for a stronger, more competitive province in an increasingly competitive and globalized world. We will do so by focusing on our mandate and strengthening our foundation to support families and communities in wise ways.

Mr. Speaker, I have often said that the future of our province is unwritten, and I'm very proud to say that the people in our province together with this government are going to build the next Alberta by working through the challenges and confidently creating and capitalizing on an abundance of opportunities. It is truly an honour and privilege to join with Albertans to create the next chapters of our great province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Seeing none, does any other hon. member want to join in on the speech? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour and pleasure to rise today to respond to the Speech from the Throne by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. I would like to thank His Honour for his service to the province and to our nation.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne should be a blueprint, and it should be like a road map into the future, the future this government is taking us to. After listening to the speech and reading it, I'm appalled that there's nothing really new in the Speech from the Throne. Sure, there's support for health care, postsecondary education, and the environment – that's a good step in the right direction – but we should be doing more. Whatever it takes to keep our environment clean, we have to have clean water, clean air. We should be doing more to protect our environment. If we don't protect our environment, it will cost us dearly in the future. I know what it has done to my home province in India. The water people drink is contaminated. People are dying from cancer, and people are suffering from hepatitis. We should be more vigilant about our environment so that we can have clean air and clean water.

Mr. Speaker, we are blessed to be living in a country and a province that's probably the richest jurisdiction on this planet Earth. We are literally blessed to have natural resources such as coal and gas. We have strong agriculture. We have forestry. With a population of only 3 and a half million, I think, if you put the per capita numbers together, we'd still be the richest people on this Earth.

That brings me to mining the oil sands, Mr. Speaker, the second-largest reserve of oil on this Earth. The oil sands are not just becoming the bread and butter of this province; they have become the provider, the bread and butter, of the whole nation. I'm talking about the export of unpressed, unprocessed bitumen. Premier Stelmach compared this to the sale of the topsoil of the Earth, topsoil to be sold. He promised to process more bitumen in Alberta to keep all the good-paying jobs in the province and not to ship all the jobs with the unprocessed bitumen to the States or other jurisdictions.

Now we are talking about two pipelines, the Keystone XL and the pipeline going to the west coast. When we start sending unprocessed bitumen, Mr. Speaker, to China or India or Southeast Asia, then we will be shipping those good-paying jobs with that, too. Sure, we need those pipelines. Sure, we need to ship our oil and other products to the markets, but we should be processing more bitumen here and shipping the finished product. We will not only get a better price for our product, but we will keep all the pipeline jobs right here in Alberta.

There are a number of major upgrading plants which were approved. They were going to go up in the heartland area and were going to bring billions of dollars of investment, new investment, into the province. We should be looking at reviving all those major projects. Let us work to have all those jobs in Alberta. It will bring in more revenue in personal income taxes and carbon taxes as well, Mr. Speaker, and it will help to balance our budget. Since we go through the cycles of prosperity, boom and bust in our economy, this will also help us to ride out recessions in better ways than now.

Mr. Speaker, we could have gotten away from the cycles of boom and bust had this government been saving enough from the nonrenewable resource revenues. Premier Lougheed had the foresight to set up the heritage trust fund in 1976, as we know. Had we been serious enough to build up the heritage trust fund, we could have had probably a hundred billion dollars by now in the trust fund. The income from that trust fund could have insulated some of the shock of revenue falls during the recession. Our heritage trust fund savings are almost the same as they were in 1986. Norway and Alaska set up their trust funds a lot later than us and, for example, Norway has over $500 billion in their trust fund, and it's growing.

Mr. Speaker, we should be looking at saving more. We could save for future generations so they could enjoy the same if not better living standards than we enjoy today. They are the owners of the natural resources as well, our future generations.

Now, coming back to health care, Mr. Speaker, you know, I think we're in trouble on the health care front. Long lineups. We have been doing everything. We've been spending more per capita, but we still have issues with health care. We have long lineups in emergency departments, and we have long waiting lists for knee replacements. A constituent of mine called yesterday, and he's on kidney dialysis and has been waiting seven years. I mean, we're failing Albertans on health care. This government has been trying to fix health care.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I have to interrupt you. It's 6 o'clock. You can continue next time. You have probably about 7 minutes left.

I want to remind hon. members that the policy field committees will reconvene at 6:30 p.m. in committee rooms A and B for consideration of the main estimates of the Department of Justice and Attorney General and the Department of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations.

According to Standing Order 4(2) the Assembly stands adjourned until tomorrow at 1:30 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We confidently ask for strength and encouragement in our service to others. We ask for wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the privilege of introducing two great Albertans to the House, Brigadier-General Andre and Mrs. Kaetlyn Corbould, two great Canadians that have contributed significantly to our province.

Since joining Edmonton's Military Family Resource Centre as a board member and later chair in 2003 and, subsequently, her membership in the Edmonton Salutes Committee, Mrs. Corbould's efforts on behalf of the capital region's military families have been outstanding. Working within the volunteer organizations, she has continually sought to develop ties to partner organizations within the province and to improve services to military families who have faced numerous challenges resulting from the heavy tempo of operations associated with Canada's international and domestic operations. I would like to inform the House that in recognition of her outstanding efforts, she was awarded the Chief of the Defence Staff's medallion of distinguished service, a rare honour that is given only to the most deserving for their contributions.

Her husband, Brigadier-General Andre Corbould, has an equally distinguished resumé of accomplishments. Whether commanding Edmonton's 1 Canadian Mechanized Brigade Group, which provided security for the 2010 Winter Olympics, commanding troops in support of the Winnipeg floods, or directly supporting the dive effort following the Swissair tragedy on Canada's east coast, Brigadier-General Corbould has worked tirelessly in his efforts to make Canada a better and more secure country. Internationally his distinguished service has brought him to the Balkans, East Timor, and Afghanistan, from where he recently returned after a one-year tour of duty as Deputy Commanding General of the United States Army 10th Mountain Division. As the deputy commander of a 25,000-soldier division conducting operations throughout southern Afghanistan, he brought international recognition to Canada for his contribution to the international effort in that country.

They are seated in your gallery this afternoon, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that they rise and that we give them the traditional warm welcome and thank you from Alberta. [Standing ovation]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure and an honour to introduce to you and through you to this Legislative Assembly a group of very enthusiastic students from Dunluce elementary school. They have been participating in a mock Legislature, and they passed a bill to make school uniforms mandatory. Half of them are happy with this, and half of them are not, so it's not much different than what happens in the real legislative sittings. They are accompanied today by Mr. Sam Kostiuk and also Madame Cynthia Pharis, who are their teachers. I would like them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you a group of your constituents from Neerlandia public Christian school, with 19 students and five adults here this afternoon: their teacher, Jim Bosma, and parent helpers Sharla Bakker, Helena Hamoen, Christien Hospers, and Gail Verheul. I believe they are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville I would like to introduce to you and through you students from the Win Ferguson elementary school, the school that shines. These students have made the trip to Edmonton from Fort Saskatchewan, Alberta. I want to acknowledge the teachers and parents who made this trip happen: teachers Carla McTurk and Sheila Storey; and parents Jason Fournier, Lori Klebak, Jenny Croteau, Debbie Harrison, and Sandra Harrison. They're seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure today for me to rise and introduce somebody that's been a friend for about 10 or 12 years now and in some ways a mentor, someone that's built a great reputation fighting for that powerful airport tunnel in northeast Calgary, Alderman Jim Stevenson.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you on behalf of the Minister of Human Services two guests from his constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud, Ken and Joan Digweed. This is Mr. and Mrs. Digweed's very first visit to the Legislature, and I'm very pleased to welcome them on behalf of my colleague. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask both to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two introductions. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my constituents William Rohats and his parents, JoAnne and Bob, as well as William's caregiver, Aibin George, who I first met at the International Day of Persons with Disabilities back in December. William is a very intelligent young man with a wonderful sense of humour, qualities that help him manage his Tourette's syndrome and cerebral palsy. He's always optimistic, always looking for solutions. He's also very interested in politics and feels that caregivers of people with disabilities deserve better pay. William and his family have asked me to pass on their sincere gratitude to the Premier for the raise in AISH benefits, and I'm happy to do the same. Thank you, Premier. Hon. members, please join me in offering William and Aibin as well as William's parents the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, for my second introduction I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the newest member of the Alberta Liberal caucus staff, Amy McBain. Amy was born and raised in Edmonton and lives doors away from the hon. member from the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. She's a graduate of the broadcast journalism program right here in Edmonton at NAIT. She will be working with our communications staff as our new media liaison person, and we are glad to have her join our team. Amy is seated in the public gallery. I'd ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour and privilege today to introduce five people who are here to raise awareness about the failed mental health system in Alberta for them and their families. Cheryl Brown and Ryan Dean were victims of violence from a schizophrenic family member identified repeatedly as a threat without proper action being taken over a number of years. Mike Butler is an Edmonton citizen whose wife was murdered five years ago due to the failure of our mental health system both in managing and in referring his brother for proper treatment. Phill and Julia Murphy, whose daughter, a minor, struggles with addictions and mental illness, continue to be neglected by Health and Human Services. I'll ask them to stand and be recognized by the Legislature.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly the management team of one of my favourite organizations, the Oliver primary care network. I'll introduce each individual to you, and then I'll have them stand and receive the traditional greeting when we're all done. First, of course, is Colleen Enns, the executive director; Lee Hall; Kendall Olson; Charlotte Metcalf; Romel Jarrar; Jamil Ramji; Barb Moysey; Sharon Macklin; Lorie Radmanovich; and Jacquie Frend. I'll be doing a member's statement on them shortly. If they would all now please rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

Thank you.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you Ed Shaske from Smoky Lake, one of my constituents. Ed was a former chief economist for the province of Alberta during some of the Lougheed era, and he's now a columnist with the Smoky Lake Signal. He's a pillar of that community, involved in many groups and in many functions around the town. It's a privilege to have him here today. I'd ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the House a friend and councillor from the town of Peace River, Mr. North Darling. He was elected as a councillor, and now he's the deputy mayor. Of course, he's down for the AUMA board meeting. Mr. Darling is actually new to politics, but I'm pretty confident that his background in the private sector as a carpenter and working in the oil and gas industry and, probably most importantly, as an improvisational comedian has prepared him well for politics. I'd ask North to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: There's one I'd like to acknowledge and introduce today, and that's the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne and Minister of Seniors, who is celebrating the anniversary of his arrival in the world today.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Leduc No. 1 Oil Discovery

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to celebrate a discovery that made history, Leduc No. 1. On February 13 65 years ago in a field some three miles south of where the town of Devon is located today, Vern Hunter, or Dry Hole as he had become known, and his crew brought in the well that heralded the prosperity we have enjoyed in this province.

Mr. Speaker, Imperial Oil had drilled some 133 dry wells and was on the verge of giving up its search in the area. Leduc No. 1 was the catalyst that saw tremendous growth in central Alberta and, indeed, all of Alberta. Our province now boasts the third-largest proven oil reserves in the world. The growth of the city of Leduc can be directly attributed to this discovery, and the town of Devon was planned, designed, and built by Imperial Oil to house the workforce needed to develop the neighbouring field.

This discovery spawned a very successful production and service sector with tremendous expertise that continues to drive the economy of our great province. The Nisku industrial park, located within 15 kilometres of the site, employs some 20,000 people and is second only in scale to another such energy business centre in the state of Texas, Mr. Speaker. The site has been developed and preserved to educate today's and future generations about the significance of this discovery.

I commend all the volunteers and the neighbouring communities of Leduc county, the city of Leduc, and the town of Devon for their tireless efforts in preserving the site and for planning the anniversary celebrations to take place the weekend of August 18 and 19 of this year. I invite all my colleagues and all Albertans to visit this national treasure and join us for the celebration.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Municipal Funding

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, on Monday Wildrose leader Danielle Smith released our 10-10 municipal funding plan. Under the plan 10 per cent of tax revenues and 10 per cent of budget surpluses will flow through directly to municipalities with no strings attached: no complicated grant applications, no crossing your fingers and hoping for approvals, no waiting on pins and needles for badly needed dollars, just steady and predictable funding.

The point is to take politics out of municipal funding. Linda Sloan, president of the AUMA, made that point last week when she responded to the provincial budget. She said what opposition parties and municipal politicians across Alberta have been saying for years, that municipal dollars are handed down based on politics, not always on need. Sloan has since incurred the full wrath of this petty and vindictive government.

The Municipal Affairs minister staged a government-wide AUMA boycott, and the Premier's chief of staff publicly called her a malicious liar, this on the same day the government tabled antibullying legislation.

Danielle Smith talks about a new deal for municipalities, and this whole shameful episode shows exactly why we need one. Municipalities have had enough of this government's economic bullying and of having their funding depend on their level of support for the PC Party. It's time for a provincial government that respects municipalities as a legitimate order of government and empowers them to meet the needs and priorities they set for themselves.

Mr. Speaker, municipal politicians are just like each and every one of us in this Assembly. They serve to make their communities the best they can be. They don't need nor do they deserve a provincial government that looms large over their heads threatening to drop the hammer if they don't quite fall in line. Public criticism makes good organizations stronger and bad organizations fail sooner. After this ordeal I'm confident that the provincial government will prove to be the latter.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Oliver Primary Care Network

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my last member's statement I made reference to a new clinic that is currently short not of doctors but of patients. The organization behind this, who I introduced earlier, is the Oliver primary care network. This PCN serves well over a hundred thousand Edmontonians and had 171,000 patient interactions last year. This is certainly a statistically valid sampling, and it shows some remarkable results. Of the 171,000 interactions 87 per cent of those people saw a doctor as soon as necessary and, even more impressive, 94 per cent of them saw their own doctor.

Equally interesting, Mr. Speaker, is the ability of patients to feel confident in their ability to manage their own conditions. Persons receiving care in many areas, including mental health, dietitians, chronic disease management, INR, and kinesiology, show that well over 70 per cent of them believe that they had learned enough from PCN staff to manage their own condition. Overall, in each of the five programs self-rating of good, very good, and excellent account for 75 to 95 per cent of patient responses.

My favourite metric, Mr. Speaker, and the one I think best describes this PCN's goal is the reduction in medication error when transitioning from hospital to home. A PCN pharmacist is available to ensure that the patients take the right medication at the right time. This arrangement proves that the PCN model is the right way to deliver services, and I'm going to give them a slogan: We Know Who You Are, and We Know What You Need. While it's not It's All in Calder, it certainly tells people why it's all in Calder.

Many people who reside in my constituency are older and typically not in as good of health as the average population, making my constituency a prime place for the delivery of this health care model.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank Colleen and her associates today for the exceptional level of service they bring to my constituency and elsewhere.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

National Flag of Canada Day

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to rise to speak in celebration of National Flag of Canada Day. While Canadians first celebrated this occasion in 1996, it commemorates an important event that occurred on February 15, 1965. At noon on that day our Canadian flag was raised over Parliament Hill for the first time.

During the inauguration ceremony the hon. Maurice Bourget, Speaker of the Senate at that time, spoke about its significance. He said, "The flag is the symbol of the nation's unity, for it, beyond any doubt, represents all the citizens of Canada without distinction of race, language, belief or opinion."

Back in 1965 the red maple leaf embodied our nation's hopes and dreams for the future. After almost 50 years of representing Canada, I believe that the flag has taken on new meanings. Mr. Speaker, people around the world now recognize the Canadian flag as a symbol of democracy, of prosperity, and of freedom. For Canadians our flag has become a source of great pride. We are proud to live in a country where our rights and freedoms are protected. We are also proud to raise our children in a place where they have access to excellent public education, health care, and many other services that few in the world are so privileged to receive.

Mr. Speaker, I feel very fortunate to live in this great country and to be represented by the Canadian flag. I would ask every fellow citizen to take a moment today, National Flag of Canada Day, to reflect on what our red and white maple leaf flag means to you.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Relationship with the AUMA

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the throne speech it's written: "A terrific quality of life requires the province to work closely with all municipalities." It was very disturbing, therefore, to read the Minister of Municipal Affairs' letter to the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association president, Linda Sloan. In the letter he berated her for criticizing the budget and announced that government caucus will boycott the AUMA breakfast tomorrow morning as punishment. This is a democratic province. To the Premier: who made the reckless and irresponsible decision that the entire government caucus will boycott the AUMA breakfast?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we have a great deal of respect for the work that the AUMA does, and some of the comments that have been made in the last week have been terribly unfortunate. One of the things that's been very important this week is to determine, of the comments that were made, whether they were made on a personal basis or on behalf of the organization. My understanding is that the minister has been working very closely with the organization to resolve those issues, and we'll ensure that we continue to work very closely with local municipalities because that is what will build the province.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our municipal leaders: that's where the rubber hits the road. They are the representatives of the same voters who vote for us. Given that just three years ago the chief of staff was forced out of the Wildrose Party after he crudely mocked the former Premier's Ukrainian accent and then just yesterday he defamed the president of the AUMA – quote, let's be clear: Linda Sloan didn't just criticize the budget; she lied maliciously, unquote – will the Premier show leadership and take personal responsibility and apologize to Albertans on behalf of the government and immediately fire her chief of staff?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I was made aware of these comments about an hour ago. I have said publicly that I do not condone the comments, and I have already directed my chief of staff to apologize directly for them.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government has gone out of its way to avoid giving answers on this issue, I would like to ask the Premier a very direct question. Due to the disrespect shown by the minister, will the Premier ask the Minister of Municipal Affairs to apologize immediately to Albertans or demand his resignation?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the job of the Minister of Municipal Affairs is to ensure that we are delivering services to Alberta's municipalities by working in partnership with municipal governments. Everything that I've seen the minister do in the last week has ensured that we have a relationship with AUMA that will allow that to continue. I firmly stand behind the minister's comments and will do no such thing.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Everything I've seen recently was what we would normally call schoolyard bullying.

Electricity Prices

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Premier why this government doesn't just make the fixed term contract the default option instead of telling Albertans to make a dozen phone calls to find a rate that won't break their bank account. She chose not to rise and answer yesterday. Perhaps today will be different. To the Premier: why doesn't the government show some practical leadership and make the fixed-term contract the default option to help working families?

Ms Redford: I don't know what the hon. member is talking about. I distinctly remember him asking this question yesterday, and I distinctly remember rising and answering it, and not for the first time, Mr. Speaker. What we know is that while there are a number of companies that provide options, the customers only have to make one call, and that's to the Utilities Consumer Advocate, to get the information that they need. If they do choose to sign a contract, we know that it will reduce their costs by 42 per cent today.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, if the Premier was actually listening and if she actually cared, she would know exactly what I'm talking about.

Given that yesterday my question for the government to get involved in fixing the price gouging happening under this failed policy of deregulation was dismissed by the Premier as dangerous words, I'd like to ask the Premier: who would these words be dangerous to? Albertans, who finally get some much-needed relief from sky-high electricity bills, or their government's corporate buddies?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, dangerous words were government involvement. Dangerous words were presuming that the solution to this is for government to fix the problem. What we know is that in other jurisdictions where this has happened, what that has meant is that they have taken on debt with respect to the cost of electricity, and we're not going to do that in this province.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, what's dangerous is that this is the same government that caused the problem. You caused the problem.

Given that this government has gone out of its way to avoid giving direct answers and gone out of its way to hurt hard-working families, will this government do anything at all – anything – to give Albertans relief on sky-high energy bills, Premier? Can you answer that question?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'd like the Leader of the Opposition to listen carefully. Since deregulation the private sector at private risk has added 6,600 new megawatts of power to the Alberta electricity grid, entirely at the risk of private investors. There is no public debt in this province, unlike Ontario and Quebec, with $20 billion, $30 billion, $60 billion that the consumers have to pay twice for.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mental Health Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Mental illness services continue to fail Albertans and their families, both in hospitals and in the communities. Alberta has 50 per cent of the national average in psychiatric beds, and this government is in denial. Hard-working mental health staff themselves are distressed as they see too many Band-Aids, resulting in revolving doors for our most desperate citizens and their families, with violence – preventable violence – the result. To the Premier: with wait times for psychiatric and outpatient assessment in Calgary alone at four to six months and overcrowding of our emergency rooms and psychiatric beds, when will this government stop denying and make mental health a priority?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this government believes that mental health is a priority. As Minister of Justice I've stood in this House for three years and said that we needed to deal with mental health. And we need to deal with it comprehensively. We need to deal with it in the community, we have to deal with it through institutions, and we have to deal with it within families. As you may well know, in this budget introduced in this House last Thursday, this government and our minister of health have suggested a significant increase with respect to funding on mental health, and I'll look forward to that debate during that period.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, standing up and speaking about mental health does not improve front-line services.

Primary care networks are the first line in prevention, early intervention, and maintenance care for people with mental illness. Why this year, then, is there no strengthening of primary care networks?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we have introduced this year alone projects that will introduce family care clinics in locations across this province for the exact reason of ensuring that there is a comprehensive approach to family health care, to primary care, and to mental health. I will tell you that Albertans know that, and I will not in this House be lectured to by this hon. member as to what he thinks might be best in his mind with respect to mental health.

Dr. Swann: So we're going to try some pilot projects instead of strengthening the system that you've established. Those primary care networks are the fundamental way of getting people out of emergency departments. Three people in this gallery experienced violence, including death of a family member, due to failure of this mental health system. When will we see timely and effective care for people with mental illness in this province?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, one thing that I know that has happened when we deal with safe communities agendas, with primary health care, and with mental health is that there are sometimes some really sad tragedies. I will tell you that it is the commitment of this government to ensure that we avoid those at all costs, but I will also tell you that this government will not make political hay out of those tragedies.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By sending a combative and intimidating letter to the AUMA, this government sent a chilling message to municipal officials across this province: if you're not with us, then you're against us. Not only is this completely inappropriate behaviour; it is wrong, and it's unethical. But the Premier's chief of staff decided to take it a step further by calling the president of the AUMA a malicious liar. Can the Premier then tell Albertans if she stands behind her chief of staff's petty comments and whether or not she believes the AUMA are malicious liars? And, please, Premier, don't tell Albertans that you just heard about it an hour ago.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to see that the hon. member listened to part of the answer. I was very clear. I said that an hour ago I publicly said that I did not condone this language and that I've directed my chief of staff to apologize.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Premier. Given that the primary role of the chief of staff is to help implement the Premier's agenda for the government, can this Premier tell us if she agrees with most Albertans that her chief of staff was completely out of line?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, asked and answered.

Mrs. Forsyth: Given that this government, Mr. Speaker, has gotten quite the reputation for its intimidation tactics and bullying of not only our elected officials but of health professionals as well, can you, Premier, then tell Albertans when this bullying is going to stop?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I'm not quite sure what she's speaking to in particular. What we know is that this minister has asked the Health Quality Council to undergo some very significant work with respect to what's going on in the health care system, and I'm looking forward to the results of that report.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Emergency Health Services

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This government has consistently failed to provide timely access to emergency care for Albertans. Once again the latest report from the AHS has shown that patients are spending hours and hours in waiting rooms because of this government's incompetence. Albertans are suffering while the government does nothing. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier admit that her government is unable to run the health care system and apologize to Albertans?

Ms Redford: What we know is that there are a number of factors that go into making a health care system effective, and there is no doubt that two of those are metrics and statistics. You will know, Mr. Speaker, that I'm committed to ensuring that we have positive outcomes in the health care system. One of the things that we're going to have to take a look at is not only where we are with respect to those commitments but also what the statistics have been going in. I understand from my minister of health that, unfortunately, we've seen a 17 per cent increase in the use of emergency rooms. That is unfortunate. It speaks to something else, which is that we need to make sure that support is being given where it needs to be given. I know the minister of health is working in a very transparent way with emergency doctors to resolve the issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this government tries over and over to fix it. They set targets, and then they don't meet them, and then they set new targets. Given that the East Edmonton health centre was planned to include an urgent care centre that would have diverted 30,000 cases from the Royal Alex ER every year and given that the government has refused to fund the centre, what answers can this Premier give to those Edmontonians who are unnecessarily waiting for hours and hours in the Royal Alexandra emergency room?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, to pick up where the hon. Premier just left off, in addition to the increase of 17 per cent in emergency department visits the government has also been working very hard with physicians over the last year to open up additional primary care networks, the three new family care clinics that the Premier referred to and well over a thousand continuing care spaces each year, moving us toward our goal of 5,300 over five years, and on a number of other initiatives that give Albertans an alternative to emergency departments when it's appropriate.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this government has consistently failed to keep its promises to reduce waiting times in emergency rooms, and Albertans are tired of waiting for hours or even days in hallways. Why will this minister and this Premier continue to give hollow promises to Albertans instead of admitting that they're incapable of fixing the system?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member conveniently ignores the work of literally hundreds of physicians and nurses and other health professionals over the last year to make significant improvements to our system. While it is true that in the case of these particular indicators we may not meet the targets that were proposed for the end of March, we have made very significant progress in other areas. The most important indicator to this government is providing the right care by the right provider at the right time to each and every Albertan. Primary health care is what's going get us there.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, you asked me some time ago, at the inauguration reception for the Premier, why I was planning on getting out of politics. I can't think of a better example of why I want out than the government's unanimous hissy fit yesterday with the AUMA. To the Premier. I don't care who started it; I don't care who said what. You are our Premier, and the people you serve expect you to be bigger than this. What are you going to do to make this right?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we're going to do exactly what we said we would do, which is have a partnership with municipalities that is constructive for all Albertans. One of the ways that we can do that is to ensure that we have clear communication between the AUMA and the government. There is no reason to presume that simply because comments were made, we should accept the fact that they were made. If we believe that there were comments made that were not something that we agree with, I think it's entirely within the rights of this minister to correct that information and to clarify the communication between the two organizations. I think they're making very good progress on that.

Mr. Taylor: Again to the Premier. I'm just curious here. Since local governments are pretty much at the whim of this government, which doles out their allowances, how is yesterday's behaviour supposed to give them any confidence that the minister won't just pull all their MSI funding the next time he feels insulted by something one of them said?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I need to make something very clear. I have always accepted criticism, new ideas, and discussion. That's part of democracy. But when we get to a point where slanderous comments are made, I don't think we should tolerate it simply because we're politicians. It demeans everyone in the political process to allow slanderous comments to be made. Now, in speaking to Ms Sloan, she made it very clear that those slanderous comments were not made by her. I take her at her word, and we'll be at the breakfast tomorrow.

Mr. Taylor: Again to the Premier: while I believe municipalities should be an equal order of government, given this government's insistence on retaining the paternal model, will the Premier at least promise to be the adult in the relationship from here on in and to ensure that her minister behaves like one, too?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I've been working on building better communities in this province for 10 years. I made it very clear with the AAMD and C and the AUMA when I met with them many times over the last four months that I want to work towards a new funding arrangement with MSI and to an enhanced MGA that's empowering to municipalities so they can provide the right services. None of that has changed. We're going to continue to work as partners to build better communities because that's our number one job.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Primary Care Networks

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I indicated in my member's statement that a new clinic has opened in my constituency that is in need of about 2,000 patients.

An Hon. Member: What constituency?

Mr. Elniski: Edmonton-Calder, hon. member.

This clinic, as part of the Oliver primary care network, is solving access issues in my neighbourhood. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given ongoing discussions about improving access to primary care services, how is it possible for a PCN to have a need for patients?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the answer is very simple. The people of Alberta have a need for PCNs. The hon. member is quite correct in indicating that this new capacity in his constituency is going to add greatly to the services available in that community. The PCNs determine by a process of a business plan what programs and services they are going to offer in each of their respective member clinics. This particular PCN has a budget of approximately $3.5 million per year. They serve over 110,000 patients. I have every confidence that your constituents' needs will be well met.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also to the Minister of Health and Wellness: are primary care networks helping to improve access for other Albertans in the province?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as has been pointed out by members on all sides of the House, primary care networks have done a great deal to improve access to the care that Albertans depend on every day. There are currently over 40 PCNs operating across the province. They involve approximately 2,400 family physicians and serve more than 2.8 million Albertans. Services such as mental health, rehabilitation, addictions, and other related services are available to Albertans through their local PCNs. We're working to support them, and that's part of the discussions with the AMA at this point in time.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. Are primary care networks giving Albertans better access to family doctors?

2:10

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, that's an excellent question. The answer to the question is yes, not only because of the great involvement of family physicians in our primary care networks but specifically because of the involvement of other health professionals that work alongside our physicians each and every day. The involvement of dietitians, nurse practitioners, physiotherapists, pharmacists, and others leaves physicians freer to see a greater number of patients, particularly those with more complex needs, who need to see a doctor more frequently.

Thank you.

School Fees

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, picture this. It is the first day of school; a young immigrant family brings their six-year-old to school. Can you imagine their excitement as well as their fear and anxiety?

Adding to all of this, on the first day the principal notifies them that they will need to pay hundreds of dollars for the child to attend the school. To the Minister of Education: will you provide the necessary funding so that schools don't have to rely on school fees for busing and basic instruction?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The current funding model, which is per child funding with additional funding envelopes for special needs, is adequate, I would argue, in many cases more than adequate, to deliver the Alberta curriculum. Now, when parents choose to deliver children to schools of choice which are outside of their catchment area or where school boards and locally elected trustees choose to deliver additional enrichment programming, there may be fees attached to that. But basic Alberta education, which is not so basic, I might add, is fully covered by the funding that is provided to schools.

Mr. Hehr: The minister should talk to principals and teachers, who would disagree with that assertion. By not fully funding our education system, schools have to rely on fees to provide basic busing and instructional materials for kids. It's just a tax by another name. Will this minister eliminate this unfair tax?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, if this member chooses to refer to it as tax, then he may, but that would mean that this is a tax levied by local school boards and locally elected trustees, not the government of Alberta.

However, it has come to my attention that there is a great deal of disparity in school fees being charged by a variety of school boards. I have full intention to look at the structure of school fees that school boards are charging and see what it is and what should and should not be allowable.

Mr. Hehr: I'd ask the minister: instead of propping up private schools, why not just commit these dollars to public education to eliminate school fees?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, for the first time in the history of this province this government has committed to a three-year funding model, elevating it from $6.8 billion to $7.1 billion over the next three years. We're spending $23 million per day on education. Funding levels are not the issue. But we do have to take a look at what fees are being charged to make sure that basic Alberta education, which is world renowned, is delivered free of charge to our students because there's no need for additional fees for that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Social Housing for Seniors

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first two questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Seniors in Alberta who live in government-owned housing deserve a quality place to call home. With many social housing units more than 30 years old what are you doing to update them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member is absolutely right. We have through the Alberta Social Housing Corporation ownership of about 26,000 housing units, which incorporate 14,000 seniors' self-contained units and almost 4,000 lodge spaces, and there are another 6,000 lodge spaces owned by municipalities. We have a plan going forward for the next five years to utilize the $260 million in the Alberta Social Housing Corporation to rejuvenate those housing units because we know how critical that housing is going to be to Alberta seniors going forward.

Mrs. Leskiw: That's good news, and it was a pleasure to be part of the announcement earlier today in Bonnyville, especially considering that among other upgrades there will be an additional 52 units added to Villa Ouimet and Bonnylodge.

To the same minister. It's clear that partnerships are key. What's the role of housing authorities in updating government-owned housing stock?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I firmly believe and this government believes that solutions are usually found at the community level. It's incredibly important, regardless of us having a general provincial strategy to rejuvenate those properties, to make sure we work hand in hand with the municipalities, the municipal housing associations, to make sure that we build housing that's appropriate for the needs of those seniors in those communities. I can't emphasize enough how important those partnerships are and that co-operation is. The initiative has to come from the local level.

Mrs. Leskiw: My last question is to the Minister of Seniors. Thank you, Minister, for travelling up this morning for the announcement. What does an announcement like this mean to seniors that live in lodges across the province?

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you for that question, and thank you for the congratulations on my birthday, Mr. Speaker, but a more important birthday was this morning in Bonnyville. A lady named Anna turned 103. She lives in the Bonny Lodge. This is about Anna and all of the people that live in that area to have quality services for years to come. The Bonny Lodge was built in 1960 and served that community very well. This new lodge will serve that community for decades and decades, and I'm so proud to have been part of that opening this morning.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Revenue from VLTs and Slot Machines

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Yesterday the Deputy Premier suggested that my statistics on problem gambling were inaccurate. Unfortunately, they are not. Today I have more questions for this government regarding VLT and slot machine revenue. To the Deputy Premier: what per cent of the money inserted into a VLT or slot machine is retained as profit by this government?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, off the top of my head I'm not recalling the exact split. I know there is a formula there on the VLTs as a percentage split, and I'm sure the hon. member has that.

I also wanted to comment that yesterday the hon. member brought up the number of 72 per cent from one study out of a number of studies that have been done. It's interesting to note that he should have also brought up the fact that Alberta is a recognized leader in the research on problem gambling and, in fact, invests more than most jurisdictions in North America.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister: why does the government advertise – and they advertise right here, sir – that the average take for VLTs is 8 per cent when in reality this government is raking in close to a 30 per cent profit on an annual basis from VLTs?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, the government of Alberta is recognized as a leader in the charitable gaming model. There are a number of jurisdictions around the world that have come to Alberta to look at our model and, in fact, are looking at copying the model because it goes back to communities. The dollars are invested where the dollars are created, and I think that's a very admirable way for us to do the charitable gaming model.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: who secretly ordered the accounting changes to hide the true amounts collected in government profits from VLTs and slot machines? Was it this government, was it the AGLC, or was it the office of the Auditor General? Who did that?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I'm not familiar with any secretive changes, and I'm certain that the hon. member, who I believe has had a great deal to do with the Public Accounts Committee in this Assembly – and I would caution him to be careful about suggesting that the Auditor General is making secretive changes to accounting practices. I think that's crossing a bit of a line there.

The Speaker: I agree. There is extreme caution with respect to statements like that.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Education Legislation

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall the Minister of Education decided to delay Bill 18, stating that even after significant discussions by the previous minister, more consultation was required. I'd like to know what value this eight-week exercise added to the drafting of the new education legislation. My question is to the Minister of Education. Perhaps Albertans had reached consultation fatigue on the education legislation. Did anyone new actually participate in this eight-week session?

The Speaker: My understanding is that in a matter of minutes from now there will be the moving of second reading of the Education Act, so I think we may be able to avoid questioning on that until we get into the actual second reading.

Mr. Lukaszuk: It is an intriguing question, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: It is an intriguing question. That's not the point.

Does your next question have to do with the Education Act, which will go to second reading shortly?

Mrs. Jablonski: Yes, it does, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, let's just wait until then, okay?

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Provincial Tax Policy

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Both the budget and throne speeches clearly state that this government, if re-elected, intends to review taxation after the election. This is unacceptable. Elections are about telling voters where party leaders and candidates stand on different issues, and then letting people decide which direction they wish to go. The Wildrose leader and MLAs will be signing a pledge that promises Albertans the only way taxes are going under a Wildrose government is down. To the President of the Treasury Board: will you sign this pledge on behalf of your government and your constituents? Sign the pledge.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the last thing that I will ever do, living in the province of Alberta, is join or sign a pledge by the Wildrose Alliance Party of the province of Alberta.

The hon. member does not read very well, I guess, because in our documents it does not say that we're going to review taxation. We're going to review the fiscal framework of this province, which includes, among other things, Mr. Speaker, all parts of our spending. It includes the programs that we're dealing with. It includes the pieces of savings that we're going to be moving forward with in what we're doing to build a province that will have 10 million people.

Mr. Anderson: Let's try this again. To the Municipal Affairs minister – and I hope I can still have breakfast with you after I ask you this question – given our province already takes in more revenue and spends more than any other province, including our tax-and-spend Liberal friends in Ontario and Quebec, and given the current budget predicts Alberta will be swimming in cash within two years and given you are a self-professed fiscal conservative from the rural heartland of Alberta, surely you are willing to sign the pledge to not increase taxes, aren't you? Sign the pledge.

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, we need to make the appropriate decisions on what's best for Albertans. I remember at AAMD and C you could have heard a pin drop in the room when that party's leader pledged to drop infrastructure spending to $4 billion. Everyone started to discuss where their schools, their hospitals, their roads, their water and infrastructure were going to come from. I'd like to see him sign that pledge and promise Albertans he'll do less.

Mr. Anderson: A key step in any addiction recovery program, including spending addiction, shopping addiction, is to take a pledge. One last time to the minister that oversees the oil and gas that this government says is going to have us popping champagne and cranking up the government cheque-writing machine for the next several years. Given that in a former life this Energy minister was a steadfast proponent of limited government and recoiled at the very thought of tax increases, surely you or anyone over there, Minister, will sign the pledge not to increase or create new taxes. Give Alberta taxpayers a lifeline, sir. I'm begging you. Please sign the pledge.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'll be very happy to sign a pledge that ensures that the schools that are needed in Airdrie and Chestermere will be built, built by this government and not by that government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

School Infrastructure Funding

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For years if not decades this government has outright neglected to ensure schools remain in safe, workable, and, most importantly, teachable condition. This has repeatedly been brought to the government's attention, most recently by the Holy Cross school division. To the Minister of Infrastructure: given that this problem has built up over the last 20 years by this government's mismanagement, is this government just playing the role of the ostrich, burying its head in the sand and choosing to ignore this problem?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, perhaps a word of explanation or sharing of information is required because I heard that member asking questions yesterday. The member should be aware of the fact that schools are built by Alberta Education, but the moment the building is actually built and ready for occupancy by students, we hand over the keys to a school board, and then this school board operates and maintains the building and makes sure that the building is in a workable state. So any issues relevant to the condition of a building as it is being maintained by the school board are to be addressed with the trustees of that local jurisdiction.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again. School boards across Alberta have estimated deferred maintenance bills on Alberta's crumbling schools to be $2.3 billion. When are these schools going to be in a teachable condition, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, as you know, we have allocated dollars not only for maintaining current buildings but also for building additional buildings. The facts are simple. We are facing an unprecedented growth of population in enrolment in kindergarten and grade 1. The province attracted last year 128,000 new Albertans, mostly young Albertans that are having young families over here. The answer is: we definitely need to focus on building more schools to accommodate this growth, and we will be working with school boards relevant to maintaining their current schools in a shape that is respectable and adequate for the children in our province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the new Minister of Infrastructure blamed the school boards for, in his own words, the maintenance problems. Is the minister seriously sticking to his story?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, what I said yesterday is that this government flows about a hundred million dollars a year to school boards specifically for maintenance of the schools. Those school divisions have maintenance plans that they implement, and they have the ability to decide priorities within their school boards. That's what I said, and we stick by that. Obviously, we'd love to flow more money to those school boards if possible, but it's a balancing act, and we're trying to do the best we can for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

South Calgary Health Campus

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently in census data, as we heard earlier, there have been a lot of people moving to the province, a lot of them young. Calgary is a very, very young city. In that same article they talked about the aging baby boomers, and the answer was to have babies. Well, the south of Calgary has answered that call. They're having babies. We have a baby boom happening. My questions are to the minister of health. We're looking at that new hospital. We want to have our babies there. When can we expect to be able to deliver the babies of south Calgary at the new hospital?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can say with confidence that there will be many, many babies born at the south Calgary campus when it opens later this year. The hospital is opening in phases. Because of its size the first phase will open this summer, and that will see the family outpatient clinics open to patients. That will be followed by the opening of the emergency department in the fall.

Mrs. Ady: That's good news, Mr. Speaker. But they're also asking me – the concern is: are there enough doctors, are there enough nurses to open a brand new hospital? Can you assure us that Alberta Health Services has that plan under hand and that they'll be there?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Since my appointment as minister I have asked a number of questions about staffing plans for the south Calgary campus. I can tell the House that when the first phase opens this summer, there will be approximately 780 staff, including physicians and nurses. By late 2013, when all services are fully operational, Alberta Health Services will have approximately 2,400 full-time staff, including 180 physicians, at the south health campus.

Mrs. Ady: My last supplemental would go to the Minister of Infrastructure. During the recession we had a hard time keeping projects on cost. Was this project able to come in on budget on time, and when are you going to give the keys to the minister of health?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I can tell you is that the budget changed on this project over the years, and at its peak it was about $1.4 billion. I'm happy to report that we expect the project to come in slightly under the $1.3 billion mark. The occupancy permits will be issued in March, and workers will start in the building as early as April. It's a great news story for Alberta for generations to come.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Castle-Crown Wilderness Area

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our current Premier has achieved the highest level of postsecondary education since Alberta's first Conservative Premier, Peter Lougheed. However, in response to my Castle concerns questions yesterday, the Premier stated: "What we're talking about is an area where there is abundant habitat. We do have wildlife that's thriving." My questions are to the Premier or her sustainable resource representative. Is the government aware that in its natural state, without any human footprint, the Castle is part of a very narrow strip of forest that separates mountains from grasslands?

Mr. Oberle: We certainly are aware, Mr. Speaker. The whole point of forest management planning is understanding a particular forest in itself and in its context. I'm not sure what the member is driving at, but the Castle management plan was considered with great care, and we're well aware what natural forests do. I would point out that natural forests are burned regularly in our province in the northern forests, and that's a part of renewal. Would he advocate that we allow forest fires to burn uninterrupted across the eastern slopes?

Mr. Chase: Obviously not, but forest fires are more productive than clear-cutting.

Is the government aware that not only is wildlife not thriving in the Castle, but there are most notably over 200 species at risk, including the grizzly and the cutthroat trout?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, forest management plans in this province are prepared with great care. They consider wildlife habitat needs, watershed needs, the full gamut of values in our forests, and I'm quite confident in this particular management plan.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Does the government honestly believe that clear- or block-cutting will not affect the ecological health of this region and its watershed? If so, please table the peer-reviewed scientific studies which substantiate your failed forest management plan.

2:30

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, then I have to jump back to the fact that we have been logging in the Castle at some level for a hundred years and full commercial logging for 50 years. The landscape that we see in the Castle today is a result of that logging. The habitat types that we see today, that are draped on that beautiful landscape, are a result of that logging. Not only has it sustained jobs and communities and families in Alberta; it has sustained wildlife habitat, too.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Grimshaw Holy Family School

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As was indicated here in the House, Holy Family school in Grimshaw is on the verge of collapse. An independent report said that all systems are beyond their useful life. This means that electrical, plumbing, heating, mechanical, and insulation systems are beyond repair and must be replaced. To the Minister of Education: what steps are being taken by your department to address Holy Family school's critical infrastructure needs and to keep its students safe?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I have personally toured that school, and I have to tell you that I was very much disappointed with the state of the physical shape that that particular school is in. I'll be the first one to tell you that I am not surprised that parents of these children are not happy with the condition of the school. However, I have to tell you that parts of the school were built in 1962, parts in '64, in '67, and in '89, and even the part of the school that was built in 1989 is falling apart.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the independent report also said that repairing Holy Family school and bringing it up to code is nearly the same cost as building a new school for 12 and a half million dollars. To the Minister of Education. Infrastructure and mechanical systems are failing, and ongoing maintenance is a drag on limited resources. When will the families, students, and staff know whether Holy Family school is part of Alberta Education's new capital plan?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, there are two issues to address. Number one, obviously kids need a better school to go to, and we are working on a plan to make sure that that happens.

I have some additional questions. How is it possible that parts of a school that were just built in 1989 are crumbling and the school is ready for a bulldozer? Most of those kids, actually, after school are going to homes that are older than parts of that school and that, I'm sure, are in a good state of repair. So I will also be looking at the level of maintenance and whether the school is being maintained properly so that we don't see taxpayers' dollars being spent in a manner that 20 years after construction, the school is crumbling.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the school division has spent nearly $800,000 on maintenance and operating costs for Holy Family school over the past 10 years and given that the division would rather use a portion of its operating surplus to build a new school rather than pour money into crumbling infrastructure, will the minister partner with the school division to build a new school in Grimshaw that will serve students for many years?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would be more than willing to partner. While the heating and the cooling in the school are not working, while the electrical and plumbing systems are failing, I will be looking at partnering by way of utilizing the $7 million that that school board has in its savings account, using some of those dollars towards, perhaps, building a new school. Again, the question still is: how is it possible that a school is in this condition and kids are wearing winter coats during class time and the school board has $7 million in an operating account?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, it was already clear from the way the Premier avoids responding to most questions on electricity deregulation that she doesn't know the file, and her attempt at a response in question period yesterday confirmed her ignorance. I expect she's being fed this ignorance by the Minister of Energy. So to that minister: will he admit the truth, which is that regulating the price of electricity does not require the provincial government to take on any debt whatsoever?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the facts speak for themselves. You look at the other provinces that have Crown corporations where the Crown takes the responsibility for generating. The costs that I indicated earlier, $11 billion, the costs here since 1996, that are not borne by the taxpayer, are private investors. We look at Ontario and Quebec with debt around their hydro at $36 billion and $62 billion, respectively. The facts speak for themselves.

Dr. Taft: Well, again to the same minister: given that the regulated system, which Albertans enjoyed until this government shattered it, could compete with and often beat any other electrical system in North America without any investment or debt at all by the provincial government, will this minister admit that his defence of electricity deregulation is half baked and misleading?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member seems to be living in the '80s and '90s. I'd remind him that in this decade Alberta is growing rather quickly, and the world is changing. I refer you to the study that I tabled yesterday, London Economics International. It shows that in nonhydro jurisdictions Alberta for the last decade compares completely favourably with other nonhydro jurisdictions.

Dr. Taft: Well, again to the same minister: given that the only advice this minister had for Albertans facing exorbitant power bills was to tell them to phone 11 different companies and compare rates, when in every other province people automatically get lower rates without any hassles, any trips to websites, why does this minister insist on sacrificing the money of ordinary Alberta families instead of just returning to regulated rates?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the members opposite always seem to think the solution is more government involvement; we don't think so. The facts speak for themselves. I'm happy to repeat what I said yesterday. You can pick up the phone today. Albertans have a choice. Other provinces don't have a choice. You can reduce your electricity rates by the end of this month by 40 per cent by going to a fixed-rate contract.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Trades Opportunities for Armed Forces Veterans

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology announced support for helmets to hardhats, a program designed to assist Canadian Forces members in making the transition from active duty to full-time employment in the construction industry. My son is retired from the military, and even though he's not employed in the construction industry, I see that this program appears to have considerable merit. My first question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Based on the relatively low take-up of a similar program in the United States, will this program have an impact on the predicted labour shortage that our province is forecasting?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know every member of this Legislature and this government have great respect and admiration for the members of our armed forces. You know, this program that we're talking about, whether it helps one veteran or 10,000 veterans, is just the right thing to do.

Mr. Allred: Mr. Speaker, my second question is also to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Your department is only recognizing military credentials in 10 trades. With over 60 trades and designated occupations, why hasn't the province opened up more opportunities to armed forces personnel?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the member for that message. In fact, we're the leader in Canada, recognizing more trades than any others, but we continue to work with our armed forces and the federal government to look for other trades that we can bring in and continue to make part of our red seal program here in Alberta. So we will continue to work with our armed forces partners to find ways to bring more of our veterans into our trades in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. The government of Alberta has committed funding to the program's development and a website, but are those measures enough to bring more soldiers into the trades? In particular, what communication strategy is proposed to attract retiring members of the military?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have created the website to make access easy for our veterans, but we also do a number of other things – attending trade shows, going directly into bases and working with the members there – to try to ensure that they know that there is an easy and a smooth transition as veterans into our trades in this province of Alberta. So we'll continue to look at ways to streamline our processes.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Provincial Budget Projections

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The 2012 budget estimates for nonrenewable resource revenues are fairly optimistic. There are a few areas that have particularly caught my attention, and I'd like some clarification. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Can he please explain to me the policies that his department has for forecasting the price of oil and gas today and into the future?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, our forecasts are optimistic; we're happy to report that to Albertans. We do those forecasts based on our predicted supply and demand, the balance between supply and demand, and then we compare those numbers with private-sector analysts, banks and other private-sector analysts. I'm very pleased to tell the House that both the price for oil and our projected price for gas for the next two years are actually slightly under the average of private-sector forecasts. So it's a very responsible prediction for future revenues.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. It's noted in the budget that the greatest increase in royalty revenues over the next few years is going to be in bitumen royalties, where we'll see a jump from about $4 billion last year to almost $10 billion in '14-15. Can he explain how his department specifically came up with these numbers?

Dr. Morton: Again, Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to report those numbers to Albertans. Partly, this very significant increase in royalties from bitumen is due to increased production and also increased prices. The real key is that in the next three years we'll see 13 new oil sands projects move from prepayment to postpayment royalties, at which point the royalties double and even triple depending upon the projects. That explains the dramatic increase.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is to the same minister, and it's in the area of bonuses and sales of Crown leases. They've averaged about $1 billion a year over the last few years, yet I notice that the number is going to increase to about $2 billion. Can the minister explain how he came up with those numbers?

Dr. Morton: Again, Mr. Speaker, it's based on analysis of commodity prices and industry cash flow that we come up with those numbers. I would point out that while $2 billion is higher than the average over the last decade, it's actually a billion dollars lower than how we've come in in the 2011-12 budget year. Again, it's a very responsible and relatively conservative forecast of revenues from that source.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question-and-response period for today. Nineteen members were recognized; 100 questions and responses were accommodated.

In 30 seconds from now we will proceed with Members' Statements, but in the interim can we revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my member's statement earlier I talked about Leduc No. 1 and its importance to this province. In the public gallery are two constituents who are instrumental in this great Energy Discovery Centre that we have south of Devon. I'd like to ask Ron Pollock and Lynn Brown to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: In a few seconds from now we will continue with Members' Statements.

Safer Internet Day

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each February we recognize international Safer Internet Day. You may be surprised to hear that Canadians spend more time online than any other country, more than 43 hours each month, which is almost twice the world average of 23 hours.

The Internet is an exciting and educational tool that can enhance learning and be an important part of our social lives, and I think many of us here can also vouch that it is an important part of our work life. E-mail, instant messages, blogs, chat rooms, online gaming, and other web tools are also becoming a large part of our children's lives. With all of this online access in Canada, children and youth can be at risk of being targeted by predators or becoming victims of cyberbullying. With our support and guidance young people can be empowered to discover the online world safely.

Mr. Speaker, parents and caregivers need to know where to turn for information and resources on this issue. The Alberta government has a number of resources to assist in engaging parents, children, and youth which can be found on the Human Services website. Albertans can use these interactive tools to help them talk about Internet safety with their children and families.

This year's Safer Internet Day theme is Connecting Generations and Educating Each Other, and I encourage all Albertans to keep the lines of communication open.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, would you like to participate?

Tribute to My Family

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As my time comes to a close here, I do have some people I'd like to recognize and thank, particularly my parents, Bob and Margaret Snelgrove, who get immense enjoyment – and I don't know why – watching question period every day. Not that it isn't exciting. Anyway, they'll have to find something else soon. They've been incredibly supportive. They say that I got my stubbornness from my dad and my fairness from my mom, and I'm not sure that they'll settle this argument. Mom and Dad, thank you so much for putting up with me.

Primarily, I need to thank my family. My four young children now are grown young men. When I go home, I see what an incredible job my wife, Bev, did with them. They give us tremendous pride every day. I watched them all play hockey on the same team on Sunday. So, Fred, don't cut health care. I'm going to try one game this year with them, but I may need your services after.

Mostly, Mr. Speaker, I have to thank my wife, Bev. The decade apart has been difficult, but in many ways it's made us grow together. She's an incredible girl, and where Old Father Time is dragging at me, she has maintained her beauty from the day we were married 34 years ago. As we start the next adventure in our life together, I certainly look forward to it. She's been my toughest critic. She's been my strongest supporter, a determined motivator with everything except that stupid exercise machine she wants me to get on, but with that, I'm sure I'll have time to do it. I want to thank her for making me the luckiest man in Alberta, and I look forward to the next life together.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a recent academic paper submitted to the Society for Academic Emergency Medicine. The authors include several notable Alberta physicians, Alberta Health Services, and the University of Calgary. These reports highlight operational policy changes made in Alberta emergency departments and hospitals which led to statistically significant decreases in lengths of stay and other aspects of emergency department care. These decreases occurred despite a very significant increase in the number of visits made to emergency departments over the same period. These policies helped lead us to significant reductions in the time required for EMS staff to off-load patients in our emergency departments.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to table the requisite number of copies of the Alberta Economic Development Authority's annual activity report for 2011 on behalf of the Deputy Premier.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of eight electricity bills Albertans have sent to the NDP opposition showing significantly high electricity costs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings today on behalf of the leader. There's a tabling of four different documents relating to media coverage of the tiff between the Municipal Affairs minister and the AUMA president. I have appropriate copies of those.

I also have eight copies of letters from individuals across the province who have been directly affected by the lack of mental health services in the province, with significant suffering for themselves and their families, including one from Cheryl Brown, who is in the audience today, relating to her son; Sally Hayward from Lethbridge, who was threatened and injured by her son because of inadequate treatment; Kimberly Porlier; and a number of other people across the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling e-mails and 11 letters from the following individuals who are concerned about the proposed logging in the west Bragg Creek area, all of whom believe clear-cutting will damage essential watershed and recreation areas that thousands of Calgarians use to promote health and fitness and be detrimental to wildlife and natural species. They are Adam Storms, Sherri Rinkel Mackay, Heather Garipey, Susan O'Shea, Greg Potter, Laryssa Warne, Gaynor Hoyne, Annette Le Faive, Hugh Magill, Eric Tromposch, Troy Delfs, David Easton, Derek Abdalla, Liz Tassy, Margaret Main, Ralph Carter, Carolyn Fisher, Dr. Stephen McNeil, John Holmes, and Christine Rogowski.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings today, and they all relate to the questions we have been asking in the last couple of days. The first tabling is a pamphlet that you can get at any casino or establishment that has VLTs. This certainly indicates that the house's edge, the government's edge, is 8 per cent in gambling activities.

The second tabling I have is a response dated December 21, 2011, to myself as chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. This is a follow-up response from AGLC from their appearance before the committee on November 30, 2011. Certainly, it is interesting to note in this document that they state that cash-in, cash-out totals for VLTs were not maintained after 1998-99.

The third tabling I have is a letter that I wrote on January 18, 2012, to the chief executive officer of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission asking a number of questions and pointing out that the response provided to all members of the committee and myself from the AGLC was not true and that there were cash-in, cash-out totals for VLTs after 1998-99.

The next tabling I have is a letter dated January 25, 2012, to myself, the chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, from the office of the chief executive officer of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission. This letter provides the cash-in, cash-out totals for VLTs and also the cash-in, cash-out totals for slot machines for various years. I appreciated the correction that the AGLC has provided to the committee. There's more work to do on that, but we'll get to it.

Now, the next letter that I have to table is dated February 2, 2012. It's from myself to the chief executive officer of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, and it's asking for information around the Auditor General's role in the accounting changes that were made in 1999-2000 at AGLC.

My last tabling is a letter that I received – and I appreciate receiving this – from the chief executive officer of the AGLC. This letter is dated February 13, 2012. It, too, is a very interesting read, and I would encourage all hon. members, including the Deputy Premier if he has time, to read all of this information before we get back to question period tomorrow.

Thank you.

The Speaker: On urgency, though, events in 1999 are not urgent in this Assembly.

Statement by the Speaker

Calendar of Special Events

The Speaker: Hon. members, there have been occasions in the last number of days when members have given statements with respect to weeks, events, and the like. There is a moment now available for me to just alert all members that February does have some significance to a lot of other groups in our society. As an example, February is Black History Month. We've already heard of that in an eloquent statement by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon. February is also Hearth Month, Junior Achievement Month, Psychology Month.

A number of various weeks are commemorated, as are days. February 1 to 7 was World Interfaith Harmony Week. February 2 was World Wetlands Day. February 4 was World Cancer Day. February 5 to 11 has been designated Burn Awareness Week, International Development Week, National Eating Disorders Awareness Week, National Therapeutic Recreation Week, and White Cane Week. February 6 to 12 was World Orphan Week. February 7 is known as Magha Puja, also known as Fourfold Assembly or Sangha Day for Buddhists. February 7 is Safer Internet Day. February 8 was Winter Walk Day. February 12 was Sexual and Reproductive Health Day.

February 13 to 19 is Random Acts of Kindness Week. That's this week. We all know that yesterday was Valentine's Day. Today is International Childhood Cancer Day, as it is National Flag of Canada Day. I would just like to point out that the only Assembly in this country, of the 15 of them, that actually has the flags of the nation and its provinces and the territories is this Assembly. No other Assembly in Canada does it.

February 19 to 25 is Brotherhood/Sisterhood Week, as it is Scout-Guide Week. February 20 is Family Day. February 20 is Heritage Day. February 20 is Maha Shivaratri, a Hindu festival dedicated to Shiva. February 20 is World Day of Social Justice. February 21 is International Mother Language Day, as it is Shrove Tuesday, or Mardi Gras's kickoff. February 22 is Ash Wednesday, as it is World Thinking Day. February 23 is National Aviation Day. February 26 to March 3 is Freedom to Read Week. February 27 is International Corporate Philanthropy Day, and February 29 is Rare Disease Day.

I think that's a wrap.

Orders of the Day
Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 3

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2012

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier and President of Treasury Board and Enterprise.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and move second reading of Bill 3, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2012.

The supplementary amounts provided by this bill reflect the fiscal picture outlined in the third-quarter fiscal update, released on February 9. These amounts are necessary for the government to conduct business and fulfill its commitments during the current fiscal year. The additional amounts are mainly related to grant commitments for the GreenTRIP, provincial judges, Slave Lake wildfire assistance, and funding for the assured income for the severely handicapped program and the persons with developmental disabilities program.

I certainly urge all of my colleagues in this House to support the bill, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A pleasure to rise and speak to the supplementary supply bill, Bill 3. As always, concerns on behalf of Albertans that this government consistently understates budgets for the year, comes to the Legislature after the fact, and fails to anticipate a large number of issues – in this case one good-news story relating to PDD – and the tremendous backlog in supporting persons with developmental disabilities and those on AISH.

Why this couldn't be anticipated and dealt with in a timely way, why this particular group cannot be indexed as MLA salaries are indexed every year, with inflation and cost-of-living increases, is beyond us, and suddenly it becomes a supplementary supply addition that we vote on, well aware that this government continues to do just whatever it chooses without respect to proper budgeting processes and respect for the public purse. It doesn't seem to change. In my full seven years in the Legislature every budget has supplementary supply attached to it. One can understand forest fires and floods. Those cannot be fully anticipated although year to year there should be some predictability that we're going to spend something on those.

Again, on behalf of Albertans I think there are serious questions about the government's ability to budget, its willingness to hold the line, its willingness to use the public purse as it would choose as its own domestic budget and not make the necessary conscientious effort to research, to develop the full range of budgeting tools and look at the planning for the future with a more comprehensive lens and to try to in fact achieve a budgeting process that now our new Bill 1 is attempting to put a new face on, the zero-based budgeting process or what some are calling the results-based budgeting process. One can only hope, Mr. Speaker, that this will move us towards more responsible spending in a government that calls itself conservative but acts anything but conservative.

Still nothing for the savings plan – what is it? – 25 years since a great Conservative leader called Peter Lougheed initiated the savings plan. One wonders if there would even be a savings plan in this province if he hadn't initiated that plan because nothing has been done with it since he left.

On behalf of the people of Alberta there are serious questions about this government's commitment to not only live within its means but to plan appropriately and budget for what Albertans care most critically about. Only recently have we seen a consistent budget for health care, a five-year plan that will provide some stability and some predictability to our health care system. There's still no clarity around seniors' care and how we're going to ensure that we protect and provide affordable, quality care for our seniors in these coming few years with the demands only increasing.

Recently we've also seen some movement towards a commitment to public education, but it's not at all clear that this will meet the needs when taking into consideration the maintenance budgets that are so often talked about in the House. Surely the government at this stage can manage to plan for both public education and postsecondary education in a way that includes capital costs and operating costs and maintenance. That shouldn't be beyond the reasonable expectations of Albertans who share their hard-earned dollars with this government.

The environment, too, is something that one would wish was being dealt with in a more consistent, stable, and predictable fashion because what we have seen is progressive erosion of that most important service that is designed to protect our economic future, ensure the reputation of our oil industry, and reduce the health risks associated with pollution and injury to our air, our water, our land, even our food products as a result, Mr. Speaker.

Supplementary budgets repeatedly coming forward without a sense of a long-term vision, without a sense of comprehensive research and being based on the best available evidence as opposed to simply building on what was done last year don't wash with Albertans.

We've heard recently about the failure of this government, also, to address a long-term commitment to poverty reduction, and it begs the question: when will we see consistent support for those with mental illness – I've talked about disability – those with addictions, and the homeless that are costing this government hugely in health services, criminal justice activities, and all kinds of care that is required as result of more emergency needs because we're not prepared to budget and plan for the long-term well-being of our most vulnerable populations?

We've talked in that context about establishing a fair tax system in this province. When will we see the rich paying their share, corporations paying their share, and all of us allowed to plan in a much more sustainable and responsible way so that supplementary budgets are not routine but are actually the exception? We on this side have talked increasingly about reviewing the tax system, ensuring that those over $100,000 a year are paying more and that we eliminate this novelty in Canada called the flat-tax system and move to a more fair and progressive tax system for people who are earning up to a million dollars and paying at the present time the same percentage that the $50,000 a year people are paying. Let's get serious about stable funding, predictable budgeting, comprehensive analysis, and responsibly managing the public purse that has been entrusted to us.

We know that there are going to be a large number of new Canadians coming into this province and coming into this country. Surely we can anticipate some of the costs associated with that and ensure that our budgets reflect a commitment to their cultural adjustment, their linguistic changes, their professional training, their ability to communicate. If we don't do that, we will be coming again next year for supplementary supply for new Canadians and new Albertans, who surely deserve better.

On behalf of Albertans I think the opposition is strongly again suggesting that the government take very seriously their new Bill 1, which is going to be an attempt to review things in a comprehensive way before spending just the cost-of-living or inflation increases for many of these budgets. Look again at downsizing government, amalgamating departments that don't need to be separate. Look again at the carbon capture and storage fund for ways that it could reduce this demand on supplementary supply every year. Think about a fair tax system that would provide a much more stable base of funding and much more predictability, not this coming to the Legislature with cap in hand, assuming that everything that was spent in this past year without approval and no ability to reject it because of the consistent majority that the government enjoys.

Let's do better, and let's take seriously this effort of the Premier to start a more predictable, comprehensive review of budgets and stay within them. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: We're still open. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. On Bill 3, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, this is an opportunity to get a few matters on the record concerning the government's budgeting and finances. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View did a very good job of raising some specific concerns. One of the issues I want to bring to the table, Mr. Speaker, is how this bill fits into the larger budgeting process and the larger accounting system of the provincial government.

I think we should start from the premise, when we're considering a budget bill in Alberta, that Alberta is, by any reasonable measure, probably the richest place on Earth. We already start with an abundance of blessings: the land, the water, living in a democratic society, in a peaceful setting. But what sets Alberta apart from the rest of the world are two things. One is our relatively small population. We think of Edmonton and Calgary as big cities, Mr. Speaker. Take all of Alberta together and it's about the same as greater Seattle. It's not much more than metro Montreal in terms of population. So, that's one thing. On the other side, we are outright the owners of the largest hydrocarbon reserves – well, vying with Venezuela as the largest in the western hemisphere and second- or third-largest on the planet. What happens, Mr. Speaker, when you do the math there, you realize that per person we are the richest jurisdiction on the planet.

Now, you might argue that that's a bit simplifying things, but the fact is – and I think we have to remember this, every one of us as MLAs – that the people of Alberta, through this Assembly, outright own that resource. There was a very long struggle from 1905, when neither Alberta nor Saskatchewan was granted the rights that other provinces had, the rights of ownership for their natural resources, through a series of court cases, difficult elections, and so on, right through until 1930 when finally the federal government conceded ownership of natural resources to this Assembly. I look around this room. It must have been an astonishing day to be in this room when the Premier at the time, Premier Brownlee, stood up and announced, having negotiated the deal in Ottawa with then Prime Minister Mackenzie King, that the people of Alberta owned the resource. Little did they know at the time the incredible value of that resource.

Today we know the value of that resource. It's something like, counting the oil sands, 173 billion barrels of oil equivalent in proven reserves, using current technologies, that are owned by the people of this province. If you do the math on that, well, the numbers very quickly become absolutely staggering. Imperial Oil tabulates on their books the value of their reserves, and they give them a value of about 10 bucks a barrel, Mr. Speaker. If we were to cut that in half, given that this is oil in the ground and so on and all that effort needs to be put into recovering it and extracting it, if we were to say $5 a barrel for those 173 billion barrels, that's like $800 billion in assets that this government owns on behalf of its people.

I would like to see something like that recognized when we're having budget debates of all types, whether it's supplementary supply, interim supply, or the full budget. This really is the richest place on Earth, Mr. Speaker, and there's no excuse in my mind for there not being something in this Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act that actually allocated savings into – I would like to see it – the heritage fund. Wouldn't it be exciting if this bill came forward at the end of the year like this and said: we're not just covering expenses for forest fires and other expenses like that; we're actually chipping in a little bit extra at the end of the year into our savings account. Then I could really get excited about a piece of legislation like this.

My view – and it's widely held by lots of people of many different political stripes – is that the heritage fund needs to be at least in the $200 billion range if we are to have a sustainable economy in Alberta, and by that I mean where we can sustain lower than average taxes and we can sustain good-quality public services.

So this Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, Mr. Speaker, while it covers some important spending, is missing, in my view, an absolutely crucial line. That's a line that would actually say: okay, we're going to put some more money into savings. If we could get to that point – and I hope under this government we do get to that point. Maybe it will be after the next election, I don't know. I hope we don't get there by cutting because, despite all the rhetoric here about overblown provincial spending, over the last several years Alberta's spending on public services: you know, some years it's high; some years it's low. It's about what you'd expect. It's the savings that we're really falling short on.

I would also like to see one other thing in the government's plans and in their budgeting and in their accounting, and that would be to follow the lead of private-sector energy companies and fully list the reserves as assets on the balance sheet so that we not only counted the money that was, you know, held in various government accounts and other assets that are there, but we actually reflected what we own as a government, and that includes the incredible energy reserves here. Then we would be able to look at that and get a proper picture of just how wealthy this province is. I think it would help frame better, more informed discussion about how we're going to take this province and keep it on track in the years and decades ahead, Mr. Speaker.

I wanted to get those comments on the record as part of the context for this Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act. In terms of the act itself I think it's safe to say that our caucus is generally understanding. None of us like to see adjustments at the end of the year. It's good practice to stick as closely as possible to the budgeted figures. But in all honesty and in all fairness to this government, the margin of error represented by these numbers is pretty small. The budget targets have generally been closely met, and I should congratulate the government and the public servants, who worked so hard to follow those plans on that account.

There are other points that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View has made in relation to other considerations for Albertans who face genuine hardships, but those are already on the record, so I won't repeat those. I just wanted to provide my sense of the context that would make this a better piece of legislation.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Anyone under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate on second reading of Bill 3.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 2 Education Act

The Speaker: Now the hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad that I caught your eye again. I shall proceed with my comments. Thank you very much. I'm honoured to rise today and move second reading of Bill 2, the Education Act.

Mr. Speaker, this is an excellent time in Alberta and in Alberta's education system. The hon. Premier has made education along with health care, as you know, central priorities for this government. Alberta already has a strong education system, and we plan to make it even stronger. That is why we're bringing forward legislation that will ensure Albertans have access to education opportunities that are meaningful to learners, that support Albertans' goals as a democratic society and confirm our belief that education is a partnership between students, parents, teachers, support staff, school boards, and postsecondary systems, and that provide opportunities for success that will build a strong future for our children and our province.

This legislative framework, Mr. Speaker, is a very important step on our path. It will support our partners in education as they use their knowledge and expertise to provide high-quality education programs and services that are meaningful and creative and that deliver to the needs of students, society, and taxpayers. The changes are necessary to ensure that our education system meets the needs of students in coming decades.

As you know, the government has undertaken significant consultation to help define our desires and results for education in Alberta and to create an education system that inspires children and youth to achieve their maximum potential, a system that meets Albertans' needs and Albertans' expectations for developing engaged thinkers who think critically and creatively; ethical citizens who demonstrate respect, teamwork, and democratic ideals; and adults who live and work with an entrepreneurial spirit in facing challenges with resiliency, adaptability, risk taking, and bold decision-making. Bill 2, Mr. Speaker, provides the framework for a system that will do just that.

Over the past few months I've received a huge volume of input from students, parents, teachers, and the general public. That community contribution took the well-considered draft legislation introduced last year to a new level. We heard that we are indeed moving in a direction that reflects the desires and wishes of Albertans. We heard that we could strengthen two underlying and very connected principles of the act: the first, that all students are entitled to welcoming, caring, respectful, and safe learning environments; and the second, that education is a shared responsibility with clearly defined roles for its partners.

The first has been addressed by including in the act, Mr. Speaker, what is fundamental to the nature of Alberta and to the education system: that we will respect the diverse heritage and abilities of our society and that we will promote understanding and respect for others. Using the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act as important guides, the Education Act prescribes that all school programs must reflect the province's diversity and – it cannot be said too often – promote understanding and respect of others.

The Education Act is very clear that bullying is not acceptable and will be dealt with. We have granted school boards greater flexibility to address bullying in all of its forms, and we have directed them to use those new tools. We have confirmed that whether inappropriate behaviour occurs in or outside of the school, before or after school, or whether it happens on the Internet, it will not be tolerated, and it will be dealt with. We have defined bullying and linked our province to national activities by legislating our own provincial bullying awareness and prevention week.

Government, parents, classroom professionals, and school boards all want our students to keep their focus on the classroom results that matter most for their future. That is a key reason why this act stresses that addressing bullying requires boards to act in support of both students who are bullied and bullies themselves. Victims need help to regain a sense of security and self-confidence at school, and bullies need help to not only stop but to manage their negative and hostile reactions to peers and to develop more positive behaviours. This will help bring respect, compassion, and empathy more fully into school culture and will help our students to free their minds from worry so that they can focus on learning what they need to learn.

As I mentioned earlier, Albertans have called for the act to highlight that education is a shared responsibility. The kind of full-service support to students that Albertans want cannot happen without our partners in education: parents, teachers, support staff, trustees, boards, and students themselves. Ensuring that all students achieve their potential requires the collaboration, engagement, and empowerment of all partners in education. We have set out the responsibilities of students, parents, boards, and trustees not to create legislatively enforceable requirements but, rather, to clearly identify the expectations of parents and students to be active participants in education. Student responsibilities include actively participating in their learning, the learning of those around them, and the pursuit of educational success. Students are also expected to contribute to a welcoming, caring, respectful environment.

The new act puts the Minister's Student Advisory Council into law. It provides a way for students to share directly with the minister what they hear from other young people about their school experience. This will help to inform government about what is important to Alberta students. Ensuring that the student's voice has a significant role in the education system is important, Mr. Speaker, and I am really proud to formally make this council a part of our education system. The membership of the council will continue to change as our members complete their high school education, but their advisory work will continue to be an important way of honouring the student voice and of shaping the education system to meet the ever-evolving needs of our students.

The Education Act recognizes and reinforces the crucial role parents play in their children's education and supports greater co-operation and communication between parents and school personnel. The act makes it crystal clear that parents have the responsibility to make informed decisions respecting the education of their children and to play an active role in their children's educational success. Access to information, Mr. Speaker, is stepped up under the 10-point plan, and this act includes new audit requirements that require boards to broaden the composition of the audit committee. With all elements of the community working together as partners in education with the common goal of providing welcoming, caring, respectful, and safe learning environments, we will all benefit from our students' knowledge, skills, attitudes, and values when they mature.

In supporting diversity, Mr. Speaker, the act gives boards and schools greater flexibility to support inclusive education and children who require additional learning supports and programming through the delivery of specialized supports and services to students that have identified needs. Learning environments that respect diversity nurture a sense of belonging and a positive sense of self, helping to create and maintain a welcoming learning environment.

We need to do more to support high school completion, Mr. Speaker. While Alberta's high school completion rate has been steadily improving over the past five years, it is still nowhere where we want it to be. The Education Act will raise the age to which a student is required to attend school from the age of 16 to the age of 17. I would like to credit the hon. Member for Little Bow for originally raising this issue and the previous Legislature for recognizing the good that this will achieve. We want students to finish high school, and we are increasing their ability to do so.

This act will also raise the age to which students are eligible for high school funding from the age of 19 at the beginning of the school year to the age of 21. Many students who drop out of high school return after one or two years, and we want to ensure that finances are not a barrier to high school completion for these particular students. What does not change is that school boards will continue to make decisions relevant to how to meet the needs of older students.

Another change in the Education Act which will have a positive impact on high school completion is that we have changed how a student's residence will be determined. Residency will now be determined by where the student lives rather than where the student's parents live. This reflects our increasingly mobile society, helping students and families to make the choices that are best for them and to support a more student-centred system.

Because of our strong commitment to closing the educational achievement gap between aboriginal and nonaboriginal students, we will continue working very closely with aboriginal peoples from around the province and, as I mentioned when announcing the 10-point plan, with federal government. We all recognize that high school completion is an important pathway to achieving economic and social success for aboriginal communities throughout Alberta. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, this is the case for all communities.

Another way the Education Act will play an important part in the province's future is by elevating collaboration among school boards, postsecondary institutions, and the community to make the transition between secondary and postsecondary education a smooth one. It benefits everyone when students continue their education within Alberta and become lifelong learners in search of further educational or career opportunities. Alberta Education already awards high school credits to students who are registered in and successfully complete off-campus programs such as work experience, a registered apprenticeship program, and the green certificate program. Greater collaboration between K to 12 and the postsecondary system will enable Alberta students to take advantage of new opportunities and ensure their place in the economy of tomorrow. This act expresses and advances a sustainable vision for our future because knowledge is a resource that can never be depleted.

Today's students are often described as the Net generation because an ever-larger portion of their learning, in fact their lives, is spent online. That is why this act is not just about bricks and mortar schools; it's about building the connections and networks that are needed to improve the quality of education for Alberta children and youth. The integration of education and technology is allowing students to use the latest technology and techniques, the same kind of tools they may be using in the workforce. The alternatives for individualized, flexible learning are improving every day, and they are firing students up through engagement opportunities and choices.

The Education Act respects that education occurs in an increasingly diverse range of learning environments. It recognizes the importance of choice and confirms our ongoing support for public schools, separate schools, private schools, francophone schools, charter schools, and home education. Our government will continue to support and encourage parents to exercise choice as to how education is delivered to their children. As in the School Act we continue to define school as the principle of a structured learning environment with expected educational outcomes. The Education Act, therefore, maintains programming approaches, including alternative programs offered by school boards, charter schools, private schools, and home education.

The dimension of separate schools as part of our publicly funded education system is an important element of our system, so we have proposed several changes that are designed to modernize the process for establishing separate schools. This process allows for greater community engagement while not altering the constitutionally entrenched minority denominational rights. In addition, Mr. Speaker, separate school electors will now have a choice as to which jurisdiction, public or separate, they may vote or run for election as a trustee. This allows members of a minority faith whose interest lies with public schools to have representation on the public board or be on the public board themselves.

We have made some changes in the Education Act that relate to governance, which we believe will improve community engagement, create new opportunities for boards to be responsive and creative, and increase collaboration and co-operation between boards and other educational partners. One of these changes, Mr. Speaker, is to provide authority to appoint First Nation trustees when there is an educational service agreement between the First Nations and a school board. This will bring a new perspective to the board and address the principles of inclusive, equitable access and expanded governance team.

A change from School Act to Education Act is that new legislation will grant school boards natural person powers. Under the School Act boards are limited to doing only the things that are specifically authorized or required. Providing natural person powers gives boards greater opportunity to be responsive and creative in dealing with educational needs within their jurisdiction. Taken as a whole, the act holds boards responsible for reflecting a student-centred focus and the principles of inclusiveness, diversity, and excellence.

Passage of this act, Mr. Speaker, will enable Alberta to build on our incredible foundation of excellence. It is all part of our plan to give young Albertans access to a full range of educational opportunities, opportunities to realize their dreams. Once the act is passed, regulatory and policy reviews will take place to ensure that all of the regulations align with it. This will be an opportunity for parents, teachers, trustees and board, and community to influence and provide input to regulations and policies. This new legislation will not be proclaimed in force until the regulation and policy review is complete.

This act of the Legislature supports change, but it is the people who live education each day who will implement it across the province, and a wide system it is: nearly 600,000 K to 12 students across the province, 298 school authorities, 2,134 schools, and more than $34 million invested in students every school day. From stakeholders to students, from policy-makers to parents, Albertans have told us what they want an educated Alberta of the future to be like. They have helped us develop legislation to make that desire come true. We know that the legislation which recognizes choice, creates partnerships, establishes accountability, and provides opportunities for success is the foundation on which we will be building a strong future for our children and for our province.

Supporting this bill going forward makes good sense, Mr. Speaker, and good governance. I imagine looking back in the years ahead and knowing this was the legislation that put our students first and our province on an exciting, engaging, and values-driven new learning path.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all members of this Assembly to support this bill as we continue to debate it. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure and a privilege to stand and speak to Bill 2, which looks like a very progressive piece of legislation on the surface of it. I mean, the devil is always in the details. When we hear about issues related to bullying prevention, stronger partnerships between parents, trustees, and boards, stronger partnerships at post-secondary institutions, these are all good directions to take. I commend the minister for taking hold firmly and advancing some of these issues because, surely, we cannot continue having the highest dropout rate in Canada in our secondary schools, especially challenging with the needs of our First Nations and Métis and Inuit populations. It's nice to see a stronger focus, better representation, and higher commitment to inclusive learning environments for them.

Just to highlight for the record, this bill's purpose is to focus on inclusive educational environments and concentrate on decision-making powers with local school boards. Some of the issues that it brings up within the body of the document, I'll outline seven new commitments the government is making.

First of all, companies may apply for the establishment of a charter school. That's something new, and I'll be interested to hear more debate on that: what kind of companies and who benefits, what kind of extra charges might be associated, whether these are going to be exclusive or inclusive schools, and how much the public purse would be supporting these. Second, it allows parents more access to information on their child's education, a positive thing to be sure. Third, it puts in place an expanded audit committee involving third parties, making sure that school decisions reflect the goals of students and their communities. Fourth, relating to bullying and a student advisory council, it clearly shows some forward direction in dealing with this scourge that has to be addressed more directly than it has been. Fifth, students will be challenged to be more responsible for creating welcoming environments and respect for diversity. Sixth, the parents, boards, and trustees will be truly recognized as partners in the educational development. Finally, boards will work with postsecondary institutions to create more partnerships and codes of conduct.

I would like to acknowledge specifically the commitment to raising the age of compulsory education from 16 to 17. Increasing the age of access to high school from 19 to 21 so that young adults are fully funded to upgrade when they haven't made it through the system in the average time, that's a positive one.

I'm not sure about the meaning of school boards having natural person powers. We'll be interested in hearing more about that discussion: what it means in terms of decisions made by boards relative to, say, school fees, what it means in terms of new directions in the school, what it might mean in terms of lawsuits against school boards.

At the same time that we're giving school boards more power, it also appears that we're giving the minister much more power. How is that going to be addressed and balanced? Obviously, there are concerns always at the shared balance of power between the minister and the elected boards, so there will be lots of discussion, I'm sure, around that.

Updating the processes for establishing separate school districts is a welcome decision, as there are contentions there and we do need more clarity and guidelines.

Providing criteria for the establishment and operation of charter schools: I'm puzzled by that one, Mr. Speaker. I would have thought that the criteria for the establishment and operation of charter schools was well established, and I'll be very interested in following the debate and the importance of that issue.

Redefining the definition of resident and independent student.

These are all good initiatives. It appears to be less prescriptive than the School Act previously, but, as I say, there are concerns around the new powers that it appears to be giving to the minister and his administration.

It says nothing about some of the issues the Alberta Liberals have been raising: eliminating school fees, eliminating private school funding, providing a breakfast and lunch program for children who are struggling to meet their basic needs as well as the learning needs of the community.

We also are on the record, Mr. Speaker, as supporting full-day kindergarten and preschool as important contributions to preparing children adequately for formal school and for success. We'll watch that with great interest as well.

All in all, there are some positive recommendations here, and I have no doubt that many of these will be fully supported. I look forward to hearing more discussion and debate about some of these issues and learning more about the meaning of some of these.

I will close my discussions and welcome further.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the bill.

Dr. Taft: Yes, on the bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm starting to lose my voice. I'm sure everybody is sad to hear that.

This is a very extensive bill. I think it's about 200 pages long, so there's a lot of substance here. As the minister and others have pointed out, it's well over 20 years since we had a complete overhaul of this kind of legislation. I guess given the extent and importance and cost to the education system, it's not a surprise that it's a big piece of legislation, but what it does is it places a lot of demands on us to find the time and the resources to go through the legislation and to have a meaningful debate here. So I hope the government gives us ample time to do that. I do look forward to comments from all sides of the House. I'm sure many of the government members will want to jump in after they do their homework and participate in the debate, at least I would hope they do that.

I want to start, Mr. Speaker, with the preamble because the preamble provides the context for the legislation, and I think some effort was put into the preamble over the last couple of years to make it as strong and compelling and perhaps even poetic as it could be. You know, regardless of whether it succeeded on those merits, I think it's worth commenting on some of the issues in the preamble. The second point in the preamble is: "Whereas education is the foundation of a democratic and civil society." I think we will have to read this entire legislation in that context.

I've slowly over the years come to the conclusion that the single most important thing that we do as a society is to educate our citizens. I have spent most of my career working around the health care system, and there was a time when I thought that providing public health care was the most important thing that a government can do. There's no question it's very important because without our health we don't have very much. But at this point in my life as I look at Canadian society, I actually have come to the point of believing that more important than health care is education. Perhaps the only thing that rivals that would be the work of the justice system because if we don't have rule of law, we don't have a functioning society.

I'm very pleased that the legislation emphasizes education as the foundation of a democratic and civil society. I was concerned over the last couple of years, as I'd heard that this legislation was in development, that it might come forward and say that education is the foundation of our economy and try to gear the whole education system not to educating citizens and building a society but to serving economic interests. I think that would have been a very alarming development because, after all, even the economy is here to serve society, not the other way around. I think evidence and history would show that if we educate citizens to be the foundation of a democratic and civil society, our strong economy will come along with that. I'm of the belief that democracy and civil society support a flourishing economy, not the other way around. If there was one that comes first, to me it would be civil society. So I'm quite pleased at that framing in the legislation.

The preamble continues in that vein. I find all of that hopeful here. When we're in committee, Mr. Speaker, we'll have an opportunity to go through this clause by clause, so I won't bother with that right now. But I do want to make note that the preamble is good, it's important, and I would commend it to all members of this Assembly as a little bit of reading and indeed to anybody in Alberta with an interest in the education system.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View commented on a handful of items, and a couple of those I just want to also repeat and emphasize. One of those is an issue that I've brought over and over to the floor of this Assembly for many years, and that's the issue of school hunger. It's a difficult issue to convince people about because there's a kind of disbelief. I say that because I was in the same position. Years ago when I first began being told about hungry kids in school, I thought: "Oh, come on; this is Alberta. It can't be that way. Maybe some kid slept in and didn't get breakfast, but there can't possibly be widespread hunger in our schools."

I've come to be taught the sorry lesson, Mr. Speaker, that in fact there are thousands of kids in Alberta who go to school hungry every day because they don't come from functioning households, functioning at least in the way we would think, where the parents make sure there's food in the fridge and the kids are up and fed and so on before they go to school; maybe they're given a lunch on their way to school. Unfortunately, thousands of kids go to school without that kind of support, and it is a fundamental failure of our society and, I argue, of this government that that's tolerated. I don't think that issue is addressed in the legislation. I might be wrong. But I would love to see, for example, something in the preamble about ensuring that children or students who attend school have adequate nutrition.

I'm not arguing for a lunch for every kid in every school in Alberta. We don't need to do that, and we probably shouldn't do that although there are jurisdictions that do in the world. I am arguing for targeted programs for at-risk populations. To me, that's every bit as important an investment, in fact a precursor investment to our investment in education because if we don't make that investment, then all the money we spend on teachers and schools and books and computers is for naught. That's something I'll be looking for in the legislation. From my first review of it I don't think it's addressed.

I am also wanting to examine this act for what it says about the needs of our First Nations, Métis, Inuit, aboriginal populations, and indeed immigrant populations, but I'll separate those. In Alberta there's a very large aboriginal population, and it's growing far faster than the average of the rest of the population. A very, very significant portion of our aboriginal population are children. We owe a duty to those children and we owe a duty to our society to make sure that they are given every equal advantage that other Albertans get in education.

I'm quite sure the minister is aware and sympathetic to the concerns that the resources and financing given to schools on reserves don't match what's given elsewhere. Reserves, we all understand, are not the jurisdiction of this government, but sadly when people living on reserves are not well educated and they drift off the reserves, they do end up as a responsibility of this government. So we have an interest as a government and we have a deeper interest as human beings to do a better job in educating our aboriginal people for everybody's benefit.

I know from my first glance at the preamble that that spirit is probably in the legislation, but I don't know whether the word about that is in the legislation, and I will be looking for that. It may not be in there directly. Maybe it's in there indirectly in sections under funding and resources or something like that. That'll be a real concern of mine.

I also want to get on the record an issue that was raised in question period today and I think was raised a few minutes ago by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, which is around school fees. This is an active debate and will probably remain an active debate in the Legislature. There is a clear trend in our education system for fees to grow to not only ever-larger amounts but to cover ever-broader responsibilities. There was a time when fees were essentially there for things that were purely extras: a field trip to the zoo or the uniforms for the school track team when they went to the grade 6 track meet, things like that.

I remember as a kid that there were bake sales at schools. In fact, I got in trouble once because my mother baked brownies for the bake sale at the school when I was in elementary, and she gave me the plate of brownies to deliver, along with a couple of my friends, from home to school. Boy, those looked like good brownies. The next day my mother – darn it, anyway – phoned up and asked the head of the home and school association how the bake sale went: "Did the brownies get a good price?" The head of the home and school said: "Sorry, Mrs. Taft. What brownies were those?" Now we were caught; we'd eaten the brownies. Anyway, that was the kind of level that school fees used to be at.

Now, I think all of us have schools in our constituencies where the fees go way beyond that. There are fees for things that would generally be considered fundamentals like library books, special fundraising programs, including casinos, for schools to pay for computers, and on and on it goes. I think we have to have a more serious debate about how we solve that problem and make sure that fees are not an obstacle to children attending school or that the lack of fees doesn't mean that a school ends up providing a worse education because it can't afford the extras that are, in fact, essentials. So school fees come up a lot.

I'm also noting, as I first look through this, that this legislation is consistent with legislation in general; it empowers the minister more and more. More and more details are just taken out of legislation and put into regulations. That means they're taken out from the purview of this Assembly and put into the purview of the minister and of the cabinet. That raises a lot of concerns. It certainly provides more flexibility, but it does raise questions around accountability, influence, and even the whims of the day that may be affecting politics at any given time.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will wait and see what else is said in second reading, and I look forward to more extensive debate when we get into committee. I don't know if the government is a hundred per cent committed to this getting passed into law this spring. The minister is saying yes, so I guess we'll have lots of time with it. I know it was introduced in an earlier version last year and very wisely, I think, left to sit on the Order Paper so that there could be widespread review and consultation. I wish the government did that more often. I do now see from the actions of the minister that this time it's determined that this will get through the Legislature. That's great. Let's have an animated debate.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments and questions.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise on second reading of Bill 2, the Education Act. I want to congratulate the minister and his predecessors for the very large amount of work that obviously went into this, a large amount of consultation. There are many good things in this act, and we'll get into some of the things that I think could be tweaked in a couple of sections to make it an even better act when we get to Committee of the Whole.

Today I wanted to give kind of an overview of what I would like to see in our education system, and of course there's no better time to discuss it than now since this act covers so much of what we're trying to achieve in the education system in Alberta. Of course, I will have some good things to say. I will also have some criticisms of where we've come from on a few things and some suggestions of actual solutions. So I hope that the Assembly and the minister will give at least some time to listen to this and, hopefully, implement some of the suggestions.

Ensuring that Alberta's children have access to a world-class education is one of the most important roles the provincial government can play in building our province. In partnership with the important core values taught by parents, education provides a launching point for a healthy and contributing citizen. To deny a child a proper education is to greatly increase the risk of losing that child to ignorance, poverty, and even crime.

The provincial government currently spends more per capita than any other province on education. Although many of those dollars are sent into programs and to the front lines where they are needed, the problem is that hundreds of millions of dollars are wasted and often misallocated by what has become a massive, centralized bureaucracy at the Legislature and a lot of political decision-making. As we have seen with the new Alberta superboard, placing control of program and service delivery in the hands of a large, centralized bureaucracy is a recipe for disaster. Even more disturbing has been the current PC government's record of selecting new school sites based on politics rather than actual need. It is far more transparent, efficient, and effective to decentralize decision-making into the hands of parents, local schools, and elected school boards. They best understand the needs of their students and would never think to play politics with our children's welfare.

An important feature of Alberta's education system is that it provides parents with a greater range of educational choices than other jurisdictions in North America. This is one of the strongest points of our education system. Although strong public schools are critical to our education system, Catholic schools, public charter schools, private schools, specifically nonprofit private schools, and home-schooling provide educational opportunities and teaching methods that are sometimes unavailable in our public system. In fact, our public schools have responded to competition from Catholic, public, charter, as well as private and home-schooling by rolling out a diverse range of excellent core and optional courses that are benefiting students across Alberta. Continuing to foster a culture of educational choice, innovation, and competition will pay dividends for our teachers, our parents, and of course for children for decades and decades to come.

As most teachers and parents well know, the traditional classroom model of a teacher lecturing students of the same age has become increasingly outdated. This type of system often results in gifted students having their potential restricted by peers who may not learn as quickly while students who have not grasped key concepts are moved on to higher grades and more complicated subject matter regardless of whether or not they are ready. This can result, of course, in frustration, the domination of a teacher's time by a few struggling students, and perpetual poor grades for some students, and frustration and poor grades can lead to behavioural problems.

Furthermore, all students respond to different teaching methods in different ways. The standard classroom lecture model may work well for some students, but for others it results in a constant battle to comprehend and to learn. Fortunately, emerging technologies and teaching methods make it possible to centre teaching on the learning needs of each individual student. Taking advantage of these educational advances will ensure that our children are able to learn at the right pace and in the right way for them rather than participating in the traditional one-size-fits-all approach.

Moving on to the area of special-needs students, something very near and dear to my heart, there are thousands of Alberta parents – and any of us who go door-knocking have met dozens and dozens, even hundreds of them – that have children with special learning needs. It is absolutely critical that we ensure that these students and their parents are provided with the funding necessary to address these challenges as early as possible in a child's development. Failure to do so can have catastrophic consequences for the child and the child's family and will result in massive, massive costs to taxpayers down the road.

Unfortunately, although our preschool programs for special-needs children are actually quite good, one of the best in the country if not in North America, our programs and our funding for special-needs students in the grades 1 through 12 education system are chronically underfunded, frankly, and we need to do a better job. Often special-needs funding in the K to 12 system is difficult to access, with parents and teachers having very limited say in how it is best utilized. In most cases parents will want to work with their child's school to include their student in a regular classroom setting. When proper support is provided, inclusive education is very beneficial to both special-needs students as well as their classmates. Some parents may choose, however, a different option, and this choice should be respected as well. Each special-needs student is unique, very unique, and should in partnership with parents be considered and supported accordingly.

We in the Wildrose feel that Alberta's students and parents deserve improvement in their education system. They deserve better. So the following are several points that a Wildrose government, if elected or if in opposition, would push for in order to strengthen our K to 12 education system by implementing the following reforms. First, we would empower individual public, Catholic, and public charter schools by implementing a funding model that sends per-student operational and maintenance funding directly to the school each student attends while accounting for the fixed costs of schools in smaller rural communities. Individual schools would then be able to determine how to allocate those resources most appropriately, be that to hire more teachers, for new equipment, et cetera.

Second, we would transfer decision-making authority concerning the building of new schools away from the provincial government and place it squarely in the hands of locally elected school boards. This would be done by implementing a publicly disclosed and objective funding formula that grants capital funds directly to local school boards based on student enrolment, school utilization rates, student growth projections, and other relevant factors. We'd get them the capital funding that those boards need; they would decide where the schools are most needed.

Third, we would establish multiple pilot projects across the province where open enrolment and tuition-free public, Catholic, and public charter schools are committed to opt into what we call a competency-based learning and assessment education model. Students in these schools would have the opportunity to learn at a pace and in a way that is tailored to their individual needs and would not move on to more advanced material until they had demonstrated strong understanding of a previously taught subject matter. Students who learn at an accelerated pace under this system would also be able to obtain college- and university-level course credits while still in high school. Students that start falling behind in this new system would be immediately identified and would receive the support they needed to catch up to where they should be at their age level.

We need to end the days where we push kids almost like cattle through a stall just to get them to the next level so that we don't have to deal with them anymore in the grade that they're in. But we don't want to go to a system where if a child isn't excelling or passing a certain unit – they're not doing well in a certain area but are doing well in all the other areas – we fail them and send them right back to the beginning of their grade. Both are equally unacceptable. We've got to find a better way to use technology, to give our kids the learning opportunities they deserve.

Fourth, we would grant public, Catholic, and public charter schools more flexibility to offer a specialized curriculum track in the trades, arts, music, physical education, and in business. Also, we would protect a parent's right to choose what school their child attends – be it public, Catholic, public Charter, private, or home-schooling – and continue the current Alberta Education practice of permitting a fixed percentage of regular per-pupil funding to directly follow a student to the nonprofit private school of their parents' choice if desired.

Next, we would mandate the public reporting of each school's graduation rate and overall subject-by-subject assessment results so that parents have the information they need to make informed decisions regarding their child's education.

Next, we would work with teachers and other educational professionals to replace the outdated and inadequate provincial achievement tests with a new standardized assessment model that evaluates a student's actual improvement and comprehension of subject matter and more effectively identifies where further learning is required. It is also important to ensure that teachers are provided with the professional development training necessary to implement such a model. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the PATs are very flawed, indeed.

However, they do serve a purpose. They do allow us to have some sort of standardized assessment of our students that is open to teachers, and we would not be in favour of just simply cutting the PATs in favour of not having them and not having any way to assess our students. I hope that the minister will not go down that road.

However, the PATs are flawed, so we need to look at a way that we can transition to a new assessment model using that competency-based learning method that was talked about earlier as one possible way to do it, where students aren't moved on in a unit until they've shown that they understand the material. This will give our parents and our teachers the ability to know exactly where their child is, where every child is at any one given time. They'll know exactly if they need to get more resources, instead of waiting two or three years later before they realize: "Oh, no. This child can't read. This child can't read at a fifth grade level, and he's in grade 7. This is a problem." We need to make sure that our learning assessment model gives parents what they need, gives teachers what they need, and gives students what they need with regard to knowing exactly where their kids are in the curriculum at any one given time.

Also, we would ensure that students are properly assessed and any special learning needs identified as early as possible in a child's development. We would mandate that adequate funding follow each special-needs student to the institution of that child's parents' choice to be used in a way that the parent and the school's learning support team feels will best meet the individual needs of the child. Right now special-needs funding is sent to the school boards, and they decide what to do with it. This model doesn't work. Every parent with a child with special needs that I talked to says the same thing: it doesn't work. The funding for special needs has to follow the individual child so that when a parent goes into a school and sits down with the learning support team and their child is assessed and is found to need X amount of support, that money goes straight to that child and not to the school board, which sometimes will hand out that money based on, well, different funding pressures and things that they're dealing with.

Finally, we would respect the choice of parents who wish to give their special-needs students the opportunity to attend the same classrooms as typical students wherever possible and ensure that adequate supervision and support is provided to each such student so that the classroom can remain a healthy learning environment for all.

Mr. Speaker, these are but a few of the ideas that we've been hearing as a Wildrose caucus as we go out and talk to folks. It has honestly been one of the most interesting and exciting areas that I have been involved with over the last two years, in particular, as Education critic. As someone who has four kids – two are in the public system; two are too young as of yet but will be there soon –

I feel very passionate about this. I want to make sure that they and their friends and all Alberta's kids have an education system that is second to none, is best in the world. We have a good education system now. We can do better.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

4:10

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege to discuss today in this honourable House the Education Act as put on the floor yesterday and to give my initial comments on the act and maybe offer some ideas of my own and some concerns that I may have.

Although I am the Education critic and it might appear from question period that I'm oftentimes cranky and the like, I will fully admit that I believe students are learning in our classrooms better than they ever have before. I'm of the assertion that our public school teachers and the kids who take part in that system are learning great things and are going to do things better than we have in this generation, and they're going to find solutions to problems that we may have created amongst ourselves the last hundred years or so.

With that introduction, I also was reminded, doing some reading the other night, that the hallmark of any egalitarian society that recognizes equality of opportunity will be publicly funded education. Without a public education system where kids, whether they're born of a rich family or a poor family, whether able-bodied, whether disabled, whether they are the next Einstein or the next Madame Curie – we need a system that ensures that equality of opportunity exists. I think the glowing statement in regard to equality of opportunity has been and always will be a strong publicly funded education system to ensure equality of opportunity.

I'm always, too, wise to listen to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. When he goes before you, you are always captured by his eloquence and his reasoned approach to almost every bill he speaks on in this House. I know it will be a great loss when he retires as I have come to appreciate his comments and his commitment to not only this House but to things like public education very much over the years. He highlighted the preamble of this bill and noted that there is much effort put into crafting some of these sentiments and statements that, hopefully, will move the chains forward for the vast majority of Alberta students. As goes education, so goes Alberta. I'm hopeful that some of his words are recognized.

I, too, want to compliment some of the preamble. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview was perfectly correct in what he said about the second line in the preamble. "Whereas education is the foundation of a democratic and civil society." He's perfectly right. School is where we learn to care, share, play, and even fight together and realize that at the end of the day we're all human beings and we all have many of the same issues at heart. What we learn at school and how we learn to get along in this fashion is how we will carry forth when we are older, when we are taking part in society in a fuller measure.

I like some of the language. "Whereas the role of education is to develop engaged thinkers who think critically and creatively, and ethical citizens who demonstrate respect, teamwork and democratic ideals." If we move forward, another one, it says that "the Government of Alberta recognizes the importance of an inclusive education system that provides each student with the relevant learning opportunities and supports necessary to enable students to achieve success."

An inclusive education to me essentially represents the public school system. Whether you're born of a rich family or a poor family, you are going to be allowed to develop your skills in the most forthright and robust manner possible. That's, to me, what establishes an inclusive education system. That is the hallmark.

I know my hon. friend from Edmonton-Riverview hasn't spent as much time on the act or the preamble as I. There is one cautionary note in there and one tragic flaw that I see in the preamble, and it is significantly different from the previous Education Act, where it says in the second last preamble: "Whereas the Government of Alberta is committed to providing choice to students in education programs and methods of learning." I'll describe a little bit of my concern over that use of wording and its change from the last act.

As many of you can see from my questions in question period, many in the last session and probably more forthcoming, I've asked the minister about private schools and the funding that Alberta gives to private schools, which is the highest in the nation. We are one of only five provinces who engage in this type of funding, and we fund private schools higher than any other jurisdiction. That's a fact. In fact, the rest of the provinces do not engage in this practice and, in my view, are probably stronger for it in the long run.

We look at this language of providing choice, and when I asked the minister this in question period, choice is commensurate with private-school funding, okay? That's what it means. That's what the minister by his answers in question period associates choice with. To me, that is an unneeded choice of words to put into a preamble in your Education Act. If you look at the old act, which came in in 1988, the act said that the government of Alberta remains committed to one publicly funded education system. It has evolved from there, where they have splintered off and funded private schools at, I believe, a 50 per cent funding level in the '70s to a 60 per cent level just after the 2004 campaign to a 70 per cent level after the 2008 campaign.

What we're seeing, in my view, that private-school funding has done is that it has served to divide communities rather than unite them. It separates children rather than uniting them, and that to me is something that governments should not be involved in. If people want to send their children to private school, sure. It's their right to do so, but that doesn't mean we have to fund or subsidize their choice in schools.

If you look around the province, in the main private schools charge larger tuition, in fact some schools very large tuitions, $17,000 admission fees. Private schools take their choice of children. Many, if not most, do not accept children with disabilities, do not accept people with learning challenges, are able to pick and choose their students as they wish. One that I saw even makes students take an IQ test to see whether they are able to participate in that school. Further, we see that many private schools have become religious schools, where different people of different faiths can set up their school and receive government funding. Hey, I'm all for them being able to set up their school. We just don't have to fund it. Okay? They're religious schools. This separates society; it doesn't embrace it. [interjection]

The hon. minister will get a chance to get up and express his views on the Education Act, and I look forward to him commenting. Right now I'm giving my views. I understand they're not his views. I'm often refreshed by the fact that we don't all think alike in this room because oftentimes when we all think alike, we don't think very much. I'll look forward to the minister's comments and his support of private schooling and his support of the voucher system and how we should be going on a more American model of schooling because that's been a real success. We'll point to that model, and the hon. minister can stand up and point to that model and quote to the hallmarks of how this has worked well for that society. I look forward to the hon. Minister of Energy's comments in defence of that system and how it's led that society forward.

Those are the principal things that I believe the government should . . . [interjection] The government, by only funding private schools to 70 per cent, makes the argument for me. If the hon. minister was correct, why isn't his government actually funding private schools to 100 per cent of the level? The Wildrose is advocating for that position.

The government, by its sort of middle ground, is self-admitting that they're not sure if this is right for society or right for all of their caucus. Unless I'm wrong in interpreting it in that fashion, that's what it says to me, okay? If this government truly believed what the hon. Minister of Energy was saying there, they would fully fund it 100 per cent. Why doesn't the government do that if they truly believe that? I think they realize that private schools and the continued expansion thereof lead to a breakdown in what our communities say. I look forward to the hon. minister giving his comments on that and why his government doesn't fund them to the 100 per cent level if he actually believes that this is the best way to go.

Nevertheless, I'll leave that topic for now and talk about some of the positive things I do see in the act because there are some positive things. We can look at the act in total. It is by most accounts a prescriptive document that allows a lot of flexibility for our school boards and the continued interpretation of the act going forward. That said, a lot of the devil is going to be in the detail. This act doesn't deal with funding models. It does not deal with how many kids are going to be in the classroom.

I'll note for the record that in 2003 the Learning Commission report came out with recommendations on class sizes that we have not yet come close to recognizing. Those goals and aspirations are not prescribed in this act.

I also know it is silent on school fees, okay? It's continuing, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview pointed out, to become a point of contention for many students, as I said in question period earlier, a tax by another means and an unfair tax for that matter, in my view. It doesn't deal with providing lunch programs in certain areas that may need them. Those are some of the things that need to be clarified, and then there will be ongoing issues that we debate in this Legislature.

I was, like I said earlier, encouraged by some of the things involved in this act. One of those was raising the age of attendance to 17. Although it's very difficult . . . [Mr. Hehr's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any hon. member? The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Being someone who's been to public school, Catholic school, and private school, I would like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Fawcett moved that a humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Colonel (Retired) Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Debate adjourned February 14: Mr. Kang speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to the Speech from the Throne every year. We as Albertans get a sense of where the government will be going and where they are coming from. This province is a wonderful place to live, work, and raise a family. The wonderful people I serve in Calgary-Fish Creek let me know when they are unhappy about something, and if they have a problem, I try to help them.

Mr. Speaker, I door-knock every year, usually from May to September. I listen to what they, my constituents, tell me at the door, and I take their conversations to heart. Every month I post an article on my website called What's on Your Mind. It's not what's on my mind but what my constituents from Calgary-Fish Creek tell me. I have a good sense of what the people in my community feel on the issues.

I, like my constituents, am concerned with what I heard in the throne speech. I listened closely, and I read the speech again just to be sure. I was shocked – absolutely shocked – to hear the governing party take credit for the Alberta we live in today. I'm going to quote: "A little more than 40 years ago Alberta set out on the road to the modern age under the leadership of people with such foresight." [interjection] Mr. Speaker, you know you get under the government when you start having them yell at you when you're in the middle of the throne speech, doing a speech that represents what your constituents are telling you. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has the floor.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I was offended in a few ways; for one, by the attitude of the government and of all the parties that have spent too much time in power. It's that the world did not seem to exist before they took power. Quite frankly, that's arrogant. To pretend that this fine province and its fine people are a product manufactured by the governing party is an insult. After the throne speech you probably came away thinking that the PC Party invented the wheel and that they are the best thing since sliced bread.

Alberta has a proud history, and the reason for that is quite simple. It's the people of Alberta. The reason we have a successful economy is because of all the entrepreneurs out there building businesses and creating jobs. The only thing holding our health care system together is the hard work of our health professionals. They are the front-line workers like the doctors, the nurses, the LPNs, and all the other wonderful staff that are holding on for the sake of all Albertans. Alberta is great despite the governing party, not because of it.

Here's another quote that made my jaw drop. "Recognizing the need for imaginative new programs, it made bold decisions that built up the province we take for granted today." Now, if I'm reading that the way my constituents in Calgary-Fish Creek are, we're not grateful enough to the PC Party for the world we live in today. Quite frankly, I feel grateful to serve the people of Calgary-

Fish Creek and Alberta, not the other way around. Albertans built this province. They built the schools, they built the businesses, and they built the homes that we live in today.

I became an MLA because I believed in the Alberta advantage. I believed in a government that listened and was responsive to the needs of Albertans. What I liked about the Alberta advantage was that the government knew when to get out of the way and trust Albertans to lead it. Now the government is asking Albertans to get out of the way; the government has everything taken care of. I know my constituents don't feel the same way. They're nervous about a group of people who talk about discussions and conversations but do what they want anyway.

A saying has always stuck with me for as long as I've been in government. We have two ears and one mouth so that we can listen twice as much as we speak. I certainly hope this government takes that quote to heart, so I ask: why does this government continue to assume they know what's best for Albertans?

I know that Albertans have and always had a pioneering spirit. To this day Alberta is a land that attracts people from all over the world. They come here for the opportunity and the freedom to make a better life for themselves and their families. That is their dream, and that is mine, too, and quite frankly we've succeeded. This is the best place in the world to live and raise a family and do business. We as Albertans create Alberta in our image. We decide; that's democracy. But I wonder if the Premier feels the same way. Here is another quote. "Your government will not miss the opportunity to reshape Alberta." Excuse me? Reshape? There is nothing wrong with Albertans. Quite the opposite, in fact. Albertans are the reason this province is great. What Albertans want is the opportunity, quite frankly, to reshape the government.

There is a reason why I'm no longer in the governing party. It was my choice and a difficult one at that. I've been privileged and I've been humbled by the opportunity to serve the residents of Calgary-Fish Creek. Quite frankly, they're my bosses. They're the people I always listen to. They told me what had been troubling them for some time: the government had stopped listening. It had all the answers no matter what the questions were.

Here's another quote that struck me. "Alberta's families and businesses have a government that will help them adapt and build a province that present and future generations will be proud of." Albertans know full well how to make the province succeed and how to create a province to be proud of. They don't know what results-based budgeting is. I wonder if many in government know either. What Albertans do know and what Albertans understand is that their budget is made at the kitchen table, where they decide the wants and the needs. I don't think the governing party is up to that simple challenge.

I am proud of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, at this very moment. I always have been and always will be. I don't think twice about saying it. I must assume, however, that this government under the Premier is not proud of Alberta. She must think that there is something wrong with its foundation. Is she ashamed? I have no idea why. Alberta is amazing. This province has been great to me, and there are millions out there that feel the same way. Why? Because they built it. They get their hands dirty, they put in their time, and they put in their effort. They made Alberta what it is today.

Nothing worthwhile is easy. We've earned the Alberta we have today through hard work and smart work, not because of the Premier's office. That's why I'm concerned when I read that "it's time for foundational change." The Premier thinks that with a change in the leader and some substitutes on the cabinet bench we've started the foundational change. Quite frankly, that's completely wrong. The foundations of Alberta are not in the Premier's office or in the cabinet. They are in the people of Alberta. Alberta's foundation lies in the grassroots. There is nothing wrong with the people of Alberta. They elect the government; the government does not elect the people.

All I've seen in the last year from the governing party is lip service and, quite frankly, cosmetic change. Albertans are not fooled. They know what's going on in their schools, their hospitals, and their communities. If they'd been listening, they'd know that by now.

I'm hopeful, Mr. Speaker. I know Albertans will persevere and they'll succeed. Nothing will hold them back; nothing ever has. This government has a clear choice, listen or get out of the way.

The Deputy Speaker: Any others on 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate on the throne speech.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair shall now call the committee to order.

Bill 1 Results-based Budgeting Act

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to speak at Committee of the Whole on Bill 1, the Results-based Budgeting Act, of the government. I've spoken on this once before. The principle is good. There's no question that we need to evaluate how we're spending money, how we're deploying resources, how we're planning for the future based on results. I don't think anybody can challenge that need, and I'm pleased to see the government explicitly committing themselves to it.

As I mentioned yesterday in second reading, when we get to the implementation of this bill it becomes a problem. Are we going to be comparing results from last year? Are we going to be comparing results to the best in the world? Are we going to be looking at what prevention would result in, which is an absence of data in some cases. If alcoholism is not happening, if addictions are not increasing, if injuries are not happening, if people are being counselled and avoiding the use of emergency departments unnecessarily: we have to be clear about what the indicators of success are and what these results might be.

This government has not shown leadership on establishing some consistent baseline indicators of performance, whether it be in our health system or whether it be in our royalty system. Part of the challenge that we face as opposition is how one would begin to measure results from the budgets that are being spent, particularly when we don't see line items that indicate specifically where money is going. We see large expenditures. We see no clear indication of where one could expect results from a certain expenditure. So it's going to have to be a lot more transparent and a lot more accountable if we are to buy into this notion that the Premier and this government are serious about results-based management, starting from the ground up and looking at real results.

In addition, I guess, I want to ensure that we don't simply ignore the process. If all we're measuring is results, it's possible to create all kinds of statistics that show improvement. But if we're not looking at a demoralized population, intimidated staff, increasing sick leave, if we're not looking at departures from the departments, then we're not really looking at the whole result and not assessing the degree to which departments are actually inspiring their workers, engaging in constructive change within a department, and making appropriate promotions and demotions and firings in some instances.

A lot hinges on what this government chooses to define as results and whether they start to ignore the process of functioning of a particular department. I want to put on the record that when the rubber hits the road, the principle of results-based management is excellent. In practice it is very difficult to do in a way that is transparent, that is actually measuring the right things, and that is holding themselves accountable to not only better than last year in that department but the best in the world.

I would just put those caveats on the table and say that I personally support this principle, results-based budgeting. But I hope the government will take under advisement the concerns about defining those results and about not ignoring the processes going on in departments that would move us toward a sustainable, healthy work culture for the staff and the various officials in departments and that would actually result in substantial improvement not only in the department but in the population. Ultimately the results have to be measured in reduced wait times, improved health in the population, improved prosperity for average Albertans, improved care of people with disabilities and learning problems and addictions. If we don't see those kinds of results, Mr. Chairman, what are we measuring, and what are we basing results-based budgeting upon?

We'll be watching very carefully in the first year as I assume this will be enacted. We'll be watching very carefully. In fact, we recommended as an amendment yesterday through Edmonton-Gold Bar that we establish a committee of the House to actually hold us accountable for what is happening in results-based management and what kind of quality results we get and what kind of transparency we get from this government around what they're measuring, what they determine a success, and what they do about the unsuccessful aspects of a budget review.

Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll take my seat and open the floor to others.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak in Committee of the Whole?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[The clauses of Bill 1 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Yes.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'd move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 1.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the report from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, does this Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 3

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2012

[Adjourned debate February 15: Mr. Denis]

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a second time]

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Fawcett moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Colonel (Retired) Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 15: Mr. Denis]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View on the speech by the Lieutenant Governor.

Dr. Swann: Yes. Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my first chance to get up and respond to the throne speech, and I'm very pleased to do so. The Premier raised a number of issues. The Lieutenant Governor raised a number of issues in the throne speech that relate to the future of Alberta, the needs of our population in relation to health care, education, the environment, energy, a lot of motherhood statements that, really, many of us were left feeling rather pale about and lacking in serious direction except for her primary bill, that we've just passed.

I guess I'd like to say that the Alberta Liberals have a vision for Alberta. This caucus has put together an exciting and visionary platform for Alberta that I think Albertans will embrace. It has to do with a serious review and commitment to health care, beginning in prevention and ending in end-of-life issues that address not shortfalls of funding – we don't need more money. We need better management of the wonderful human potential we have in this province and the tremendous opportunity that's being squandered by not addressing poverty, not addressing seriously the challenges faced by persons with disabilities, children with learning problems that need to be identified earlier, emotional and behavioural problems that need to be seen by mental health services, early signs of breakdown in families, and addictions that can be prevented by a proactive system that is actually based in communities. Primary care networks are a good initiative that this government has taken over the last seven years and now appears to be abandoning.

In the absence of a bigger vision from the throne speech, we are offering to the Premier and to this government and to Albertans a more visionary approach to getting back to basics, you might call it, Mr. Speaker, supporting people where they are, assisting them in their fundamental needs for food, shelter, clothing, and mental health supports, early intervention programs for kids and families that are at risk and in some cases in distress, and an ongoing set of community services which have been dramatically cut by this government over the last 20 years in spite of the wealth. We have compromised so many good support programs in this province and placed at risk and at huge expense, as the Poverty Costs report indicated last week, tremendous opportunities here for prevention, for early intervention, for more cost-effective services in this province.

That's just one aspect of what we would want to bring to the table as a throne speech that would inspire Albertans and reinspire the Human Services people, the child and family services people, mental health people, addictions people that we get it. We understand the primary needs of people and that the primary responsibility of government is to ensure that everybody in this place has access to healthy environments, healthy food, opportunities for advancing themselves educationally, occupationally, and vocationally, that we will do everything possible to create a level playing field for success and for reaching human potential in this province. So that was the big deficit for me in listening to the throne speech this year, the lack of any serious commitment to the people of this province and to prevention.

The other area where I thought we missed an opportunity and continue to miss an opportunity is talking about innovation in this province and talking about a knowledge economy but not investing in the innovation and postsecondary education system. It has to be much more accessible to people than it is today. It has to be much more accessible to those on low income and to those who struggle educationally but who have remarkable skills in many different technical areas and innovations that simply need the support of a system that wants citizens to be productive citizens, taxpaying citizens, and to fully reach their potential. Our postsecondary system is not being funded adequately, and we're losing tremendous opportunities economically, socially, and I think even in the environment because of people who are being excluded due to financial or other barriers. We simply don't have the capacity in our postsecondary system today.

The other area which brought me into politics is a stronger agenda for the environment. The environment was given nominal attention in the throne speech, but it is the primary resource. Everything else is a subsidiary of the environment. Our lives, our economy, our social well-being, our health: all of these depend on a healthy, sustainable environment.

Without a serious commitment to climate change and the tremendous impacts not only across the world where there are the most severe impacts but on our people with water shortages, depletion of food production, more difficulty with desertification, loss of forest cover, and impacts on water quality and quantity as well as new infectious diseases and extreme weather events, we are again not showing leadership to the world by dragging our feet, by ignoring the international community's call for thinking about our young people, our future, the long-term well-being of the planet.

Instead of being the laggards, be leaders in climate change. Set absolute targets, not relative intensity targets. Set a price on carbon so that everybody is clear and fair about how we deal with these pollutants, carbon and other greenhouse gases. Set timelines and hold ourselves to it. Use the money that we get to invest in energy efficiency and new technologies that the rest of the world, including China, is going to lead the planet on.

We are going to be buying from China solar panels, wind energy, new technologies that will transform the energy future of the world, and instead of being leaders, we are dragging our feet and are focusing on a single resource because of short-term thinking and a lack of commitment to the environment, to the long-term well-being of our people and our planet.

Who but Alberta should be setting the stage for leadership on climate change? We have technology. We have science here that is beyond many countries' dreams. We have intelligent people. We have resources. We have opportunities that other countries do not have. We have a carbon-intensive economy. Let's show the world what a carbon-intensive economy can do to lead the way in reducing carbon.

Instead, we see, as I say, really regressive and apologetic decisions that protect, so called, an industry but actually have destroyed the reputation of our industry because we haven't taken leadership, because we haven't set standards and enforced standards that the world can respect. Again, as far as vision, this throne speech didn't give us that.

We have heard from economists across the globe that Alberta is not meeting its expectations, shall I say, regarding stable, dependable funding. We continue to live on a roller coaster, and this government has said that's good enough. We'll take what we get from our resources, we'll continue to depend for a third of our budget on oil wealth and land sales and not have a stable base upon which Albertans can depend for their basic needs being met: housing, nutrition, health care, education. That is an area where I think, again, this government is not prepared to be courageous and show leadership and establish a fair tax regime where all Albertans can be confident that they and their children and their children's children will have a solid base for well-being, prosperity, and meeting their potential.

I was pleased to hear the throne speech address new Canadians and the workforce that is going to be coming here and the commitment to supporting new Canadians. That is a very good and a very important commitment because what I'm hearing at the front lines is that many of these people are falling through the cracks, particularly professionals. Engineers, teachers, nurses, physicians who are driving taxis for many, many years and becoming depressed, engaging with the health care system trying to seek help for their problems, when they have such potential, such skills, if we can work with them more consistently, more appropriately and prepare them for entering our workforces, especially at a time when we're short of some of these professions.

It's distressing to see wasted human potential. It's distressing to see people suffering from lack of a service where some of these professionals could be providing it, especially in culturally appropriate ways. A large number in the Indian community are lacking culturally appropriate services, for example, or the Chinese community because they can't get appropriate, culturally responsive services. We have these people among us. Let's work with them. Let's invest in them. I was pleased to see some acknowledgement of that in the throne speech, so I will indicate support for that.

All in all, Mr. Speaker, it was a lacklustre throne speech that hasn't inspired many in this House and, I dare say, in the province. I hope that those who are working as officials in our Human Services and other parts of government, officials, front-line workers, take heart from some of the vision and challenges that the opposition throws towards the government because it's clear that this government has run out of ideas. They're tired.

They have done things in a certain way for so many decades that it's pretty hard for them to think outside the box, frankly, and a new face on the government doesn't actually do the trick. There are too many vested interests, too many debts to pay, too many benefits to be reaped by maintaining both the relationships and the decisions, the policy decisions, that continue to be made in this House for what I would call self-interest, political interest and not the interests of Albertans, certainly not the long-term best interests of our children.

With that, I'll take my seat, Mr. Speaker, and offer the floor to others.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the throne speech.

Dr. Taft: On the throne speech, yes. It's a privilege for me to deliver what will be my last response to a throne speech. I think this is the 12th one I've heard, Mr. Speaker. While I appreciated the best efforts of the Lieutenant Governor to give it life, I also, like the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, found it to be pretty lacklustre. I've heard surprisingly little about it since it was delivered, which I think would confirm what most people have said. So I will, as promised, keep my comments fairly brief, but I do want to go through it point by point.

I did like the approach taken by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View when he alluded to some of the things that we as the Alberta Liberal caucus would like to see in a throne speech. I'm going to take a little bit different approach.

I do want to start on page 1, and I'll quote as I go along from the speech. At that point the Lieutenant Governor said, "In my lifetime alone, Alberta has come a long way." It certainly has, and I think it's worth all of us remembering that in one lifetime Alberta has gone from being the poorest province in Canada to in 1936 becoming the only province in Canadian history to default on its debt. That's how poor Alberta was one lifetime ago.

Today, as I was saying a little earlier in the Assembly, we are the wealthiest jurisdiction probably in the world. That's wonderful for all of us who have been able to ride that great wave of prosperity and wealth and advancement, but I think there are two or three lessons in that that we all need to keep in mind. One is just how much that really depends on one industry, one resource, the oil and gas industry, which the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon talked about today. He mentioned – I must say this – the discovery of Leduc No. 1 by "Dry Hole" Hunter. "Dry Hole" Hunter's son, who's now a retired or nearly retired schoolteacher, lives in my constituency, and "Dry Hole" Hunter's grandson is hoping to go to the Olympics in London this coming summer, competing for Canada in kayaking. So just a little aside there.

One of the lessons about this incredible wave of prosperity for Alberta is that it's all come on the back of one resource. The other is the sheer speed of it. Those of us here need to remember that just as over one lifetime we went from the bottom to the top, in one lifetime we can go from the top to the bottom, and if we're not careful, I'm concerned that we will, Mr. Speaker. If we don't do things like build up the heritage fund and secure our long-term and build up a more diverse economy, the day will come – and it can be shockingly fast – when we are on a prolonged ride back to the bottom.

Mr. Speaker, on page 3 there's a glimmer of hope. It's pretty vague, but it's there if I look carefully. It's the third-last paragraph. It's the part of the speech that talks about reviewing the fiscal situation of Alberta, and I will quote here again. It says:

Your government will examine its entire fiscal framework to ensure it spends Albertans' tax dollars appropriately . . .

Then I want to emphasize this:

. . . while saving intelligently for your future and for generations to come.

This will include reviews of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust and Sustainability Funds.

I will end the quote there. I will be as thrilled as any Albertan will be if this government actually delivers on this and gets in place a framework that systematically and with real discipline begins building up the heritage savings trust fund and does it without gutting other public services.

There will be a lively debate, I'm sure, in the upcoming campaign between, for example, the Wildrose Alliance, which would, I think – I don't want to put words in their mouths – like to cut taxes and cut services and perhaps channel those savings . . .

Mr. Anderson: Don't put words in my mouth.

Dr. Taft: Am I putting words in his mouth? Okay. I won't bother. I won't be unfair. I'll stop there.

Certainly, our position is that there's ample wealth in Alberta to fund top-quality services while at the same time building up our savings.

That was perhaps the closest this throne speech came to inspiring me. Then at times I found the throne speech has fallen into a situation where words are cheaper than actions. On page 4 the throne speech talks about "enhancing our trade and technology institutes and colleges." Sadly, Mr. Speaker, when I look at the budget for advanced education, it's not even keeping up to inflation. This government is talking about enhancing post-secondary education, but its actions do not deliver on that.

Later on that page the throne speech addresses an important idea of recruiting more students from Métis and First Nations communities. I cannot emphasize how important that is for the future of this province. I've spoken on the floor of the Assembly and in the hallways of the building here to the Minister of Education about this, and I think he gets it. I think we all get it, but we need to deliver on those words.

Finally, in the last paragraph on page 4 there's a little bit of a mystery. The mystery is the reference to "the introduction of family care clinics." The mystery is: what the heck is a family care clinic? How does it compare to the primary care networks? Are we setting up a whole parallel system to the primary care networks? What's the difference between a family care clinic and the primary care network?

Dr. Swann: Do we need more experiments?

Dr. Taft: Yeah. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View is saying: do we need more experiments? Why don't we just bolster the primary care networks? Maybe they're a great idea, but I'm waiting for the details. I don't know that we need to get into a whole further system. Unless it's perhaps about some for-profit corporation coming into Alberta and setting up a whole bunch of these. I don't know.

Then there were a couple of lines in the speech that I thought were actually pretty bitter. They weren't meant that way, but I think they would have been felt that way by a lot of Albertans. On page 5: "A successful Alberta is one in which every Albertan is empowered to be part of the economic, social and cultural life of the province." Well, I agree with the sentiment, but this government consistently fails, and it fails in full and deliberate consciousness of its failure, whether it has to do with, as I will repeat over and over, the fact that every day thousands of kids six, seven, eight, nine years old sit in the classrooms of this province hungry through no fault of their own and this province refuses to do anything about it or whether it's so many other people who can't possibly go through their lives feeling empowered as part of the economic, social, and cultural life of this province because of the policies of this government. I'm sure it wasn't intended as irony, but it certainly came across as irony to me and perhaps worse, Mr. Speaker. But I don't want to get unparliamentary.

On page 7 – and that's the second-last page of the speech, so I'm coming towards the end of my comments – at the top of the page it talks about "the infrastructure necessary to get our resources to new markets." It doesn't specifically refer to the Northern Gateway pipeline, but that's probably implied here. I would just like to register my thought that we need to look at other ways, other routes, alternatives to the Northern Gateway, whether it's to different ports, whether it's through different means. I hope this government hasn't committed to one company's vision of how we build infrastructure to get our resources to new markets.

The next paragraph, I thought, was rather revealing about this government's real attitude to the environment. The only discussion about the environment in here is not about protecting the environment; it was about developing the environment. I would like to have seen something here about genuine environmental protection. Even more ironic was the claim on page 7 that "governments are now standing together behind a plan that is credible, science-based and fully transparent." I underlined in my copy the words "science-based," Mr. Speaker. The science of climate change is overwhelming.

Actually, there was a powerful column in today's newspaper written by a man who was a candidate for us in Calgary in the last election, and his name is Mike Robinson. He was the head of the Glenbow Museum, an accomplished recipient of the Order of Canada, a brilliant man. He's moved to the west coast of B.C. His column was about the different attitude in B.C. and Alberta to the issue of climate change. I won't go into the details there, but I want to drive home the point that if this government really is interested in science-based environmental policy, it would acknowledge the findings of the UN panel on climate change and the broad consensus of scientists from around the world and start to take more serious action on climate change. I think this government's policies are science based only when the science suits the convenience of the government, and that's a dangerous situation.

Mr. Speaker, I've consumed enough time. I got several points on the record. You know, I wish the government well in advancing a constructive, evidence-based, science-based future for Alberta, but I don't have my hopes very high for them.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any others?

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 1

Results-based Budgeting Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm actually rising to move third reading.

I think that everybody in this Chamber in their own way, maybe having regard to their own particular opinion, will actually agree with a lot of my comments today. Even if you don't, I do think that it's important to have a discussion about Bill 1.

Mr. Anderson: A wholesome discussion.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. I do appreciate that as well.

As this member will also remember, back in 2009 the gentleman who's now the Minister of Municipal Affairs approached several people. He thought: you know, we support this party, but we want to see a bit of a different direction. Of course, many members, including the Member for Calgary-North Hill, soon to be Calgary-Klein, also joined us in this effort. We wanted to talk at the time about more program reviews, Mr. Speaker, realizing that we just can't keep on building bureaucracy after bureaucracy. I could go back to many quotes from Reagan or Thatcher that still matter today, but one thing that we wanted to do is keep spending growth to population growth plus inflation or less, basically ensuring that the government does not grow larger, at least on a sustained basis, than the private economy does in and of itself. Of course, it is my philosophy that the primary economic driver of this province, I'd say of any successful economy is the private sector and not the government in and of itself. The current budget, Mr. Speaker, does this.

I don't suggest for a moment that the Premier got the idea for Bill 1, that we're talking about today, from myself, from the Member for Calgary-North Hill, from the Minister of Municipal Affairs – I don't suggest that for a moment – but I can support it because it is very consistent with what we had talked about a couple of years ago. This bill reflects the fact that Albertans have expressed their concern that government be accountable and transparent in its budgeting process. It's not about hack and slash, slash and burn, whatever you'd want to call it. It's about being more effective. It's about being more efficient. Albertans want to be confident that the many important services and programs delivered by this government are not only effective but are also sustainable.

Mr. Speaker, when I was the minister of housing for just under two years, I applied this approach and was able to reduce our spending by 39 per cent without affecting service levels by engaging in private-sector partnerships. Some people in this Chamber may have thought, you know, that we shouldn't be doing this just for particularly ideological reasons, but it has worked for the taxpayer and for those in need of housing, particularly the homeless. I wanted to thank the Canadian Taxpayers Federation for speaking favourably about this approach, as they did in their magazine last year.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 1 will direct that each line item in a budget is re-evaluated on its financial merits. It will start with assessing whether a program is achieving its intended objectives and go on to determine whether they are being delivered in the most efficient and effective manner, and this will happen in every department over a three-year cycle.

Mr. Speaker, we can and must be better financial managers if we want to ensure that the Alberta we have today continues to be the best place to live and work for people of all ages and backgrounds. Bill 1 gives us the tools to achieve that goal. It will allow us to prudently align resources with expected results, and it underscores the need for stronger performance indicators to measure whether and to what extent these goals have in fact been achieved. Bill 1 will bring clarity and consistency to the government's current budgeting process so that we can confidently assure Albertans that their government is committed to being financially responsible with their valuable tax dollars.

I can tell you from my own personal experience that this is what I hear at my doors, this is what I hear at doors in other ridings, and this is what I hear constantly when I'm out speaking as a minister of this government. By focusing on objectives and results, output and performance, Bill 1 reflects this government's strong commitment to sound financial management and ensures that the government policies and programs are the right ones at the right time, today and for future generations.

Lots of talk from the opposition is about tax increases, and even though there are no tax increases whatsoever in this budget, we must remember that all governments in this province are granted by the people and not the other way around. The reality is that if any government allows itself to get out of control, what usually follows? Tax increases. Mr. Speaker, once again, there are no tax increases in this budget.

The other way to go through an initiative like this is to review each department's spending every three years. Mr. Speaker, I'd be very proud to have the Department of Solicitor General and Public Security be first to go through this process. I would consider it a privilege if that was assigned to me.

In closing, I would like to once again reiterate my support for this bill. This strikes the right balance between fiscal prudence, economic sustainability, and ongoing social responsibility. I think that all of us can congratulate the Premier in her first bill as Premier for putting this as the number one priority, financial and fiscal accountability.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to join in? The chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise today and speak in favour of Bill 1, the Results-based Budgeting Act. It's an honour to speak to this, the first bill of the Fifth Session of the 27th Alberta Legislature. As a proponent of strong fiscal planning I am pleased to see that our budgeting process is evolving in this direction. It is not always easy to demonstrate fiscal restraint, but this is a necessary step that will help to ensure Alberta maintains a healthy and prosperous economy.

Mr. Speaker, there are a few elements of this bill that I would like to comment on today. I'd first like to commend the hon. Premier, the Deputy Premier, and the rest of our government for their commitment to an improved budgeting process. I believe that implementing a results-based budgeting framework is the right choice for Alberta. We live in a dynamic world, and it is imperative that our government build flexibility into our system to deal with the changes we face. By establishing a three-year review cycle for all government spending, we will continue to ensure that Albertans' tax dollars are being used efficiently and effectively.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to applaud our government for devising a budgeting strategy that holds the opinions of Albertans at its core. I know that under our new leadership we will continue to move in the right direction, in the direction Albertans want our province to go.

I'm also pleased to see that all agencies, boards, and commissions will be reviewed under the three-year process set out in Bill 1. In particular, I'm very happy to know that the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission will see regular reviews. Since 1987 Albertans have benefited from the revenue of Alberta's gaming industry through the Alberta lottery fund, but it appears to me that some of these revenues come from Albertans who cannot afford to gamble away their hard-earned dollars, so I'm hopeful that Bill 1 will lead to frequent reviews of Alberta's gaming revenues and practices, which could help us to discover improved ways of maintaining the important funding coming from Alberta's gaming industry while mitigating the social costs associated with gambling addiction.

Mr. Speaker, as the first province to pay off our accumulated debt and to establish such savings tools as the heritage savings trust fund and the sustainability fund, Alberta has become known for our economic leadership. Bill 1 will further establish Alberta as a leader by bringing new fiscal discipline to government as we rapidly approach a return to surplus budgets. Our tremendous economic performance in conjunction with this improved budgeting process will open up a number of opportunities in our province. For example, it's my sincere hope that through stronger fiscal planning we will be able to once again increase our rate of savings in the heritage fund.

Mr. Speaker, 30 years ago this fund was designed to be an endowment for future generations to help diversify our economy, to improve Albertans' quality of life, and lastly, as a rainy-day fund. I believe it is important that we review these objectives to determine if they are still relevant today. As such, I've been pleased to hear the hon. Premier speak more and more about the heritage fund lately, and I eagerly await the affirmation of a renewed long-term vision for the fund that will serve Albertans into the distant future. Bill 1 will not only create opportunities to renew and revitalize Alberta's savings, but by putting our budgeting process on a three-year cycle, it will also set the stage for our government to provide the much-anticipated stable long-term funding for essential services such as health care and education.

Furthermore, by improving our fiscal position, Bill 1 will enable Alberta to continue diversifying our economy, which will allow us to reduce over time our reliance on nonrenewable resources. The improved efficiency we will achieve through this bill will permit increasing investment in valuable industries such as renewable fuels, carbon capture and storage, and health and bioindustry innovations. Overall, it is clear that Bill 1 holds great potential, and if we harness the benefits of this new budgeting process effectively, Bill 1 will create a great deal of opportunity in the province of Alberta.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill 1 is a step in the right direction for our province. I know that the savings we will accrue by using a results-based budgeting process will go a long way in further improving Alberta's position. Our province is already in an enviable social and economic position in Canada and, in fact, in North America and internationally. By passing Bill 1, we will be painting an even brighter future for our province.

For all of those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I will be voting in favour of this legislation, and I encourage everyone in this Assembly to do the same. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to join in?

Seeing none, the chair shall call the question.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Let us keep ever mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work let us find strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my honour and pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two representatives of the Federal Republic of Germany, the ambassador to Canada, His Excellency Dr. Georg Witschel, and Mr. Michael Bernd Reuscher, honorary consul of Germany for northern Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, Germany continues to be an important export market for Alberta, and we share a strong and productive partnership in education and culture. In fact, 2012 marks the 10th anniversary of the Alberta-Germany office in Munich and our province's twinning agreement with the German state of Saxony.

Ambassador Witschel is in Edmonton for the bestowal ceremony of the Cross of the Order of Merit to Mr. Reuscher. I had the pleasure of sitting down with the ambassador yesterday to discuss the ongoing activities between our province and Germany. Ambassador Witschel and Mr. Reuscher are seated in the Speaker's gallery. I see that they're standing. I'd ask them to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Water.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to make an introduction on behalf of my good friend and colleague the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks. The member is, unfortunately, unable to be here this afternoon. However, he is pleased that His Worship Mayor Steve Graczyk and Chief Administrative Officer Dwight Stanford from the town of Strathmore are able to join us here today. The gentlemen have risen, so let's give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a privilege for me today to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a wonderful guest and colleague in the service of Albertans, Catherine Ripley, Edmonton public school trustee for ward H, which serves my constituents of Edmonton-Whitemud. She works tirelessly for the children in her ward and for education policy. I've had the great pleasure of participating with her in a southwest Edmonton community meeting that she organized last fall on the Education Act with her fellow trustee, Michael Janz. It was a great opportunity to come out and be engaged with community members and parents on issues of education. I would ask her to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome and thank you from this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a special guest, a colleague, and a good friend of mine, the mayor of the city of Wetaskiwin, Mr. Bill Elliot, who is in your gallery. Before being elected to his first term as mayor in 2010, Mayor Elliot served as an alderman for the city of Wetaskiwin for 21 years. Along with his long history of public service he also dedicated a large part of his life to Alberta's education system. He was a teacher and principal for 32 years before retiring in 2004. His contributions to the city of Wetaskiwin should be applauded, and that's why I would ask the mayor to rise so that he can receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly 25 very dedicated teachers who are visiting Edmonton today on a teachers' convention. This is the North East Teachers' Convention that they are attending, and they're here from a variety of school boards from the northeastern part of our province. The school boards are Northland, Fort Vermilion, Lakeland Catholic, greater St. Paul, Aspen View, and Northern Lights. I would ask these teachers to rise and receive our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly eight guests here in recognition of the February 10, 2012, grand opening of Extendicare Eaux Claires, a 180-bed long-term care facility in my constituency of Edmonton-Decore. These individuals represent the management and staff of Extendicare Eaux Claires, who provide dedicated support and care to all their residents. I'd ask them to please rise as I mention their names. They include Margaret Burnes, director of care; Renée Ferweda, community manager; Eduardo Sedoripa, community manager; Amanda Barba, in-service co-ordinator; Jennifer Bourret, rehabilitation supervisor; Tracy Larson, general services supervisor; Marilyn Wood, recruiter; Colleen Lycar, regional director. I would now ask these hard-working Extendicare representatives to please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a constituent and staff member of mine, Ms Arlene Charles. Arlene has an extensive background in land administration, having worked with Enbridge, TransCanada PipeLines, Shell, and Indian and northern affairs. She also has strong ties to the community through her volunteer work with the Institute for the Advancement of Aboriginal Women. Most recently she joined the Edmonton-Calder team as a constituency assistant, where she has truly excelled and is becoming a casework guru. If I may make a slight example, we got a phone call in our office about a young couple who found themselves without a home at about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and I think it was about 9 o'clock last night before Arlene got the matter resolved to everyone's satisfaction. I'd ask Arlene to now rise and receive the traditional and well-deserved greeting of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a number of workers from the Royal Alexandra hospital and other health care facilities in our city who are here to observe, potentially, the debate and some questions around the walkout that's taking place now across the province and the very insulting offer that has been made to them. They are Al Pelletier, Sherry Holtet, Jana Kulusic, Dewaigh Todd, Dina Moreira, Luis Cardenas, Dan Milo, Sami Mansi, Deana Adams, and Fernanda Rebelo. I would ask them to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three Congolese Albertans who are concerned about an illicit Canadian mining operation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Their second letter, which I will later table, begins: "We, the members of the Congolese Diaspora in Alberta accuse the Canadian mining businesses for illicit operation in Congo."

The Speaker: This is introductions, hon. member. This is introductions. Please introduce.

Mr. Chase: Yes. The members that I was attempting to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly . . .

The Speaker: Well, I'm sorry. Proceed, please, with introductions.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Would Samy Mukadi, Albert Mbuyi, and Rene Tahibula please stand and receive the recognition of the Assembly.

Merci, M. le Président.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Extendicare Eaux Claires Long-term Care Complex

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was my honour and privilege to join my colleagues the Minister of Seniors and the Minister of Health and Wellness to help celebrate the grand opening on February 10, 2012, of the Extendicare Eaux Claires, a world-class long-term care complex in my constituency of Edmonton-Decore. The newly constructed three-storey complex provides an additional 180 beds to Edmonton's long-term care system.

Extendicare Eaux Claires is designed with distinct areas consisting of 30 rooms within a neighbourhood, a homelike arrangement that assists in building a great sense of community for all the residents. Mr. Speaker, each resident has their own personalized large living space complete with a private bathroom. The homelike atmosphere is in large part due to the tireless, dedicated management and staff, who provide resident-focused care and support. The first residents were admitted into the new home in early November of last year.

Also, residents have access to the on-site services, which include registered dietitians; occupational, physical, and recreation therapists; rehab aides; maintenance staff; and social workers.

I was privileged to meet many of the residents and their families during the opening of the Extendicare Eaux Claires home, and time after time they emphasized personal satisfaction and pleasure with the new complex, with the high standards, great services, and the level of dedicated care by all the staff members.

Mr. Speaker, our government's commitment to long-term care in partnership with the Canadian-owned and -operated Extendicare provides quality, patient-focused continuing care options for Albertans.

Congratulations and best wishes to Extendicare Eaux Claires.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Labour Negotiations with Hospital Support Staff

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Over the past several hours hundreds of people employed by Alberta Health Services in communities around the province have been taking job action. These workers are in some of the lowest-paid jobs with the most unpleasant and onerous duties in the health system yet jobs that are critical to ensuring that people in hospitals are receiving excellent care.

The people taking action today work in meal preparation, as porters, cleaners, therapy assistants, and pharmacy assistants. These workers are paid on average less than half the Alberta average earnings, in the range of $500 a week. It is very tough to make ends meet on that sort of salary. This month the average electricity bill they will face in their homes will be nearly $200.

Many of the people taking this action are women for whom these jobs are vital, who have children dependent on them. Food, housing, and other basic needs entirely eat up such small salaries, with nothing left over. These people are at the heart of the health services delivered yet have been treated like third-class citizens.

These workers were insulted over the last few weeks. Alberta Health Services ignored a mediator's recommendation, that the workers had already rejected, and made an offer to them that was even lower, a few cents an hour for most. This is bargaining in bad faith, seeking to bully workers who make far less than what is needed for their families.

Contrast the treatment of these support workers with the ever-multiplying managers inside government for whom the average compensation is over $140,000 a year; or Alberta judges, who just received $30,000 more per year retroactive to 2009; or cabinet ministers, who a couple of years ago voted themselves a $42,000-a-year increase and a $54,000 increase for the Premier.

There is no reason for these caring people to be pushed to this action except that the unfair labour laws in the province mean they cannot get a fair settlement and that they are pushed to a point of desperation. The government that had a commitment to human rights and fairness would immediately commit to real bargaining with these workers and move . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Seniors' Housing in Bonnyville

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over my past four years as MLA for Bonnyville-Cold Lake my number one priority for our community has been to increase accessibility to seniors' housing, particularly in the town of Bonnyville.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday was the first step in making this a reality for seniors in need in my community. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs announced $10 million in funding towards the redevelopment of both the Villa Ouimet apartment complex and the Bonny Lodge. This funding supports phase 1 of a two-phase project which renews both the seniors' self-contained apartments and lodge spaces. This phase includes plans to remove three four-unit complexes, to build 30 new units, and a 22-unit link to the main lodge as well as modernization of the kitchen and dining area. When completed, the project will provide 128 units.

This project will be carried out in partnership with the Lakeland Lodge and Housing Foundation, which manages the Villa Ouimet seniors' apartments and Bonnylodge on behalf of the government. I would like to express my sincere appreciation to the foundation and, in particular, the chair of the board and Bonnyville town councillor, Ray Prevost.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday was an incredible day for my community, and it was a milestone for Bonnyville seniors. I am so proud to be part of a government that takes action to continue to support and improve the quality of life for seniors across this great province. Yesterday was one step in many for this government.

Thank you.

Homelessness Initiatives

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, we are blessed to live in this province. Our economy has made a strong recovery, and there are many opportunities for Albertans. People are coming here for a new life where they can build their own success stories in Alberta.

But there is a group of people right here in our province who are building their own success stories every day, people whose success might not be readily recognized. They are the homeless people, and they are coming back into our communities and building better, healthier, more productive lives. Their common denominator is Alberta's plan to end homelessness by 2019. Today if you met some of these people whose lives have been transformed, it would be hard to believe that they once were homeless people.

Let me briefly tell you a story of a formally homeless man who lives in Edmonton. Severe drug addiction drove him to the street, where he lived for about a year. He lost his wife and child. His situation was dire. Eventually he entered a detox facility, and he received help through a housing first program. People in the program helped him to find a place to live and gave him the supports that he needed to stabilize his life. With their help and support his life really started to turn around. He is a very different person today, Mr. Speaker. He lives with his wife and child and a second child. He's also a student at the local university, studying psychology. His dream is to become a drug and alcohol counsellor to help people whose lives may take the same path his did. He is succeeding. He is giving back to his community.

His and many other lives have been touched and transformed by the compassionate values instilled in Alberta's 10-year plan to end homelessness by 2019. Since the inception of the plan more than 4,800 people like the man I just spoke about have been given the chance and the support to reclaim lives of dignity and independence.

When homeless people succeed, we all succeed, Mr. Speaker. It costs almost three times more to leave a person living on the street than to give a chronically homeless person a place to live. Ending homelessness just makes sense morally, fiscally, and socially.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Edmonton Clinic Health Academy

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While other jurisdictions plan for the future, Alberta is already there. Last month I had the honour of participating in the official opening of the Edmonton Clinic Health Academy on the University of Alberta campus. I'm not exaggerating when I say that this clinic will change how we deliver outpatient care and improve health sciences education and research in the province.

Our Premier has spoken clearly about how Alberta needs to be more patient centred, and the Edmonton Clinic Health Academy will help us do that. It will create and support interdisciplinary research and team-based education that will enable the innovative health care Albertans and Canadians want and deserve. For example, engineers will work with people from rehabilitation medicine and computer science to develop new technologies to help people with prosthetic limbs. Dietitians, occupational therapists, dentists, and pediatricians will practise team care in simulated doctors' offices, a far cry from the days when different disciplines learned and trained in separate silos.

At the Edmonton Clinic Health Academy people are working and learning together and developing solutions that work with the broader community to bring innovations to the people who need them the most. I look forward to the new discoveries and solutions to come.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Labour Negotiations with Hospital Support Staff

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning support staff at hospitals all around the province had been pushed to the breaking point and started a wildcat strike to protest the unfair and disrespectful contract offer by AHS. As a working emergency room doc I know how essential front-line staff are to providing world-class care to Albertans, and all they're asking for in return is respect and fairness. Will the Premier put care back into health care and order the health minister to go back to the negotiating table with a contract worthy of their service and dedication?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we are disappointed to see that type of job action that impacts patient care and patient safety. I am understanding that an application around the dispute has been put forward to the quasi-judicial board that handles such matters, and I think it best to be left in their hands.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I'm disappointed that the action or, rather, inaction of this government has led to this crisis. Given that the members opposite voted themselves a 34 per cent pay increase and given that the Premier had no problem throwing money around for her leadership campaign, cabinet tours in Jasper and caucus retreats, why is it so hard for this government to find the money to give a measly 3 per cent pay raise to the hard-working men and women, the heart and soul of the health care system, to clean up the blood and vomit and excrement off the floors of the hospital?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. the Deputy Premier just said, Alberta Health Services has an application before the Labour Relations Board, which is being heard at this hour for a cease-and-desist order on the matter that was raised by the hon. Leader of the Opposition. With respect to the workers in question I can tell you in an unqualified way that this government has nothing but respect and value and admiration for the work that those workers perform every day throughout our health care system.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, let's talk about respect. These hard-working men and women clean up the blood, vomit, and excrement off the floors of our hospitals. Given that senior executives are blaming the same front-line staff for the surgery cancellations and the crisis that's been caused and now they're being issued a back-to-work order, will the Premier stop campaigning and put an end to warlord politics and issue a back-to-work order for her health minister to pay these good people what they're worth?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, as has been stated several times already, the process of labour negotiations is under way outside of this Chamber. We don't negotiate contracts for employees inside this Chamber. We respect their right to do that, and we'll continue to do so.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Emergency Health Services

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that they've already failed in labour negotiations – they've had a year to solve this problem – Albertans are literally dying to get into care. Doctors, nurses, paramedics, and now front-line support staff are speaking up and telling this government that their health care system is broken. Instead of listening and fixing the problem, the Premier and health care minister are covering their eyes and closing their ears and hoping that this will just go away. When will the Premier give her head a shake and stop the PR spin and tell her minister to get serious about reducing the suffering and help Albertans waiting for care?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, this is about a labour negotiation. This is about two parties that are in the process of doing their negotiations over contracts. There are legal processes involved in how this works. Frankly, we respect that process a great deal, and we want it to continue.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, this is about lack of leadership. Given that in an e-mail in 2006 in the midst of an ER crisis the current health minister says, quote, patients who are seen in ER and admitted to hospital are unable to be moved to acute-care ward beds because those beds are full, and this delays access to treatment and serious bottlenecks develop, end of quote, yet today he says that it's the 17 per cent increase in patients that's the problem, will the minister stand up and please tell us whether he was wrong in 2006, wrong today, or just plain wrong all the time?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, ignoring the negativity, cynicism, and personal attacks that all too frequently come from the other side of the House, what I can tell you is that we had a very productive second meeting yesterday with emergency department physicians from across the province, Alberta Health Services, and the Alberta Medical Association. I want to tell you that the first job of any member of this House should be to stand up and thank those people for what they have achieved in Alberta's emergency departments in the last year.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, as front-line staff I am thanking them for doing what they do each and every day, and this government isn't doing it.

Given that the series of e-mails shows that the current health minister had prior knowledge and did not react to the ER crisis, which is now under review by the Health Quality Council, until after it hit the news and given that it's happening all over again with front-line staff picketing the streets, will the minister take responsibility, stop trying to be a government PR hack, and actually do something to fix the system? Minister, you've been a part of this problem.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, it certainly sounds to me like we have yet another conspiracy being alleged in this House. I'm not actually going to dignify it with another response.

In fact, in his earlier question, Mr. Speaker, if I heard him correctly – and I'll stand corrected if the Blues prove me wrong – he made a further statement that people were dying waiting for care, again with no offer of proof. What I will tell you is that this government has reduced the number of patients waiting in acute-care beds for continuing care. We've made significant improvements in the four-hour benchmark.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition question.

Emergency Room Wait Times

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a certain minister is a specialist in mental health and, contrary to what that same health minister says, ER wait times are the most important measure of a health care system's performance and that despite the billions thrown at our system, Alberta has the lowest performance measures in this country and this government is failing miserably to meet even their pathetically low measures, will the Minister of Health and Wellness stop warehousing seniors in hospital beds by providing nonprofit home care and long-term care so we can actually use our health care system for those who are sick?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, a physician, of all people, should be able to acknowledge the complexity in a health care system of achieving meaningful gain on a single benchmark. As we've talked about many, many times, the root causes of emergency department wait times in, I might say, the fastest growing province in Canada are the need for additional primary care, a recognition of additional continuing care spaces as a need, which we have acted on – and we are going to achieve 5,300 spaces over five years – and significant resources added to mental health, of which I'd offer the most recent budget as an example of our commitment.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the root causes of our broken health care system sit across the way there, this government and this minister.

Given that the top performance measures are being met in the U.K., where patients are being placed in beds within four hours of arriving in the ER 95 per cent of the time, why with this province's great wealth can't this government provide outcomes even a fraction of those as good as the U.K.? Minister, a fraction.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. leader needs to decide whether he wants to talk about e-mail chains from 2006 or whether he wants a substantive, serious discussion about health policy in this Chamber. If it's the latter, we're willing to come forward. If it's the former, over to you.

Thank you.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, health care workers don't care about policy. They care about action. They care about solutions. They want the system fixed. Given that billions of dollars are spent in our health care system with increasingly poor results, it seems obvious that this government wants the public health care system to fail, and this minister has been consulting with them for 10 years to helping it fail because he wants to Americanize it. This is the man who presented the document to privatize health care. Is this government simply planning to wash its hands of a problem it doesn't understand and cannot solve by privately contracting it out?

The Speaker: The hon. minister if you wish.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, apparently we're back onto the conspiracy theory train again, but I will be very proud to tell you that we are having tremendous success. If we look at Calgary and Edmonton, for example, alternate level of care patients, patients waiting in acute care for continuing care went down from 317 in September in Calgary to 160 as of January 24. The trend was similar in Edmonton, with a drop from 202 to 152. We are well on our way to making our five-year goal of 5,300 additional spaces.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Provincial Tax Policy

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Like all MLAs I drove home after the Speech from the Throne and the budget last week and, in fact, went for my usual double-double at Tim Hortons in my constituency, and I overheard two elderly gentlemen going back and forth about taxes. They were confused with the PC government's plan. One of them said to me: "Guy, you've got to help us out. What is the PC government going to do about our taxes? Are they going to pick our pockets?" My question is to the Premier. Can you please clear up this confusion? Are you going to pick our pockets after the election?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. Every minister in this Chamber signed the three-year business plan. They signed the pledge for this year's budget. Our goal – and I hope the hon. members will help us do it – is to pass the budget in this House before an election happens. If we do that, that's the budget for the rest of the year. They've told us they're going to raise taxes before. They tell us they're going to raise taxes now. The people that they shouldn't trust are over there.

2:00

Mr. Boutilier: I think the member has hurt my feelings.

Given that the Premier can't answer the question, I'll ask it again. Will you take a 30 per cent reduction in the pay increase that you gave yourselves, every one of your members in the front row of cabinet? Will you join the rest of us in Alberta?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what 30 per cent pay increase the hon. member might be referring to. If he's referring to the one that happened I think four or five years ago, the hon. member was there. I will say and remind the hon. member that there is a judicial review of the MLA compensation that yourself, Mr. Speaker, and the Members' Services Committee, which is the all-party committee of this Legislature, have undertaken, and we look forward to the results of that review.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier. Albertans are getting tired of your waffling on answers when it comes to their taxes. No one can seem to get a straight answer out of you, but I'm going to try anyway one more time. In a simple yes or no answer: are you going to raise taxes after the election? Yes or no. Keep it simple for the folks at Tim Hortons.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I'm confused, obviously, by this hon. member's lack of understanding of what the budget is. In the budget, that is tabled in this House, that we are going to be debating as we move through this – and I hope they enter into the debate because they may learn something. What they may learn is that in this budget for the year 2012-13 there are no new taxes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Support workers who do the back-breaking, menial jobs in our hospitals have been treated with contempt by this government for too long. They earn half the average weekly wage in Alberta, yet the government offered them a 2 per cent raise over a three-year contract. That's about 32 cents an hour. My question is to the Premier. Will she intervene with Alberta Health Services to ensure that the janitors, the cleaners, the porters, and the food service workers receive a fair offer which allows them and their families to live with dignity?

Mr. Horner: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that what they're doing is menial. I believe that what they're doing is of tremendous value to the patients and to the system that we have in the publicly funded health care system. We are, out of respect for the negotiating process, going to allow that process to unfold as it should because they have that right, too.

Mr. Mason: These workers have struggled far too long, Mr. Speaker, within the current framework, where their basic rights to withdraw their services are disallowed by this government, and they can't get a fair deal. To ask the workers to go back to a system that's clearly broken and serves the employer and not the employees is most unfair and shows a lack of respect for these workers. Will the Deputy Premier please stand in the House and offer them some fairness in this whole deal?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, because they are in the category of essential workers, there is an arbitration process as well. I'm going to reiterate – and that hon. member should really respect the negotiating process and the process that two parties will go through to establish a contract – that you don't negotiate them on the floor of this House.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the UN has already ruled that the labour laws in Alberta are not fair to workers and given that support workers in Alberta's hospitals have only been offered a 32 cents an hour raise and provincial judges just received a $35,000 raise, cabinet recently voted itself a $42,000 raise, and the Premier got a $54,000 raise, how can the Premier look these workers in the eye and tell them that they've been treated fairly?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should be clear with Albertans. Cabinet did not just vote themselves a raise nor did anyone in this Assembly just vote themselves a raise. Members' Services deals with those issues. And from 2008 . . .

Mr. Hinman: Talk about smoke and mirrors.

Mr. Horner: The hon. member says smoke and mirrors. The smoke and mirrors, Mr. Speaker, is when the hon. member says something that happened five years ago and tries to insinuate to Albertans that it's today. And he sits on the committee. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has the floor.

Revenues from VLTs and Slot Machines

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. This government is taking a larger percentage of cash played by Albertans in VLTs and slot machines as revenue than it claims. It is creating the illusion that the odds of winning are far better than they truly are. It is unacceptable that this government intentionally deceives Albertans as to what the risks of VLTs and slot machines are. To the Minister of Finance – and welcome back, sir – what per cent of the money inserted in either a VLT or slot machine is retained as profit by the government?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that we have to address some of the wording that this particular member is using when he's talking about this issue. I just heard him use the word "deceive." I heard him this morning in the media using words like "cook the books" and "a shady form of mathematics." I think, frankly, that is despicable, and I think he owes this Assembly an apology.

However, I will say this in answer to his question. The audited books of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission show that 92 per cent of every dollar that goes into a machine is paid back . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. It's this government that owes gambling addicts an apology.

Again to the same minister: why did the government start to hide on an annual basis the cash-in, cash-out statistics for VLTs and slot machines, the percentage of profit that you're taking from gamblers? Why did you hide that from them?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, again another allegation that is totally incorrect. No one is hiding anything here. The books of the AGLC are open to the Auditor General. About 12 years ago the Auditor General made some recommendations about accounting practices. The AGLC is now following those recommendations. There's nothing hidden. There's no shady form of mathematics. There is no cooking the books as this member alleges. I repeat: if he cannot prove that, he owes this Assembly an apology.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the AGLC hid that information not only from the Public Accounts Committee, but they hid it from the citizens as well. Again to the Minister of Finance: will the government publicly report on an annual basis the cash-in, cash-out amounts for VLT and slot machine revenue so that Albertans know what the real percentage of profit is that the treasury gets from this form of gambling?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I stand to be corrected, but I believe that's exactly what we do today. The particular member chairs the Public Accounts Committee. The AGLC was before the Public Accounts Committee and has answered all of the questions. I saw a letter that the chairman of the board had written to this particular member answering all of the questions that he posed. There's nothing hidden here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Education Services for Teen Parents

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Human Services. Braemar school in Edmonton has had success over many years supporting pregnant teens, but often they struggle in accessing the financial resources to help them to be successful. Mr. Minister, are we letting down this segment of society? Are you aware that this problem exists?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, I was delighted yesterday to be able to attend Braemar school and the Terra foundation with the Premier and the Minister of Education. We had an opportunity to talk with some of the young moms there about the issues that they face, about their financial struggles, their issues with respect to housing, issues with respect to child care, and, most importantly, their aspirations for themselves and their children. It was a very good morning. We were there because we are actually celebrating ways in which we can work together with the school and the foundation to make it easier for those young women to succeed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the same minister. Learning of the struggles these young women face, is the newly created Ministry of Human Services doing anything specifically to make sure these teens can access the necessary resources and turn their dreams into reality?

2:10

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is something that I'm actually very excited about because as an individual and as an MLA for quite a number of years I've been approached by the Terra foundation about what we could do to make it easier for these young women to succeed. We had a number of ministries that were engaged: Education, children and youth services, employment and immigration to name three. With the creation of the Ministry of Human Services we were able to bring that all together so that now we can actually fund Terra and allow Terra to fund these teens for their success.

We've simplified the process for the teens. We've taken a lot of the angst out of the process for them, and they're going to now have a very good chance of being successful.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Education. In Alberta our high school completion rate continues to be one of the lowest in the country. Does the minister really believe that this kind of programming is going to make a significant difference?

Mr. Lukaszuk: It will make a significant difference in the lives of those young ladies who are benefiting from this program, and that is very important. I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, much like the Minister of Human Services has indicated, that I have nothing but admiration for these young women. Despite the circumstances that they have found themselves in in their lives, they are committed to education. Most importantly, they are committed to the future of their children. We as a government and as a society owe it to them to support them in any way we can so that we ensure that they complete their high school education.

The Speaker: The Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the Hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Emergency medical services workers are now openly talking about people dying before getting care due to delays in the ability to respond to emergencies. They're talking about not only this risk to others but now the growing risk to their own lives and the public's as they try harder and go faster to compensate for a failed system. When will the minister recognize the root cause of this problem and get the Health Quality Council involved to sort out the complexities he's not able to?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've had the opportunity to talk to many emergency services workers as well, and while I will acknowledge some of the very serious issues that they shared with me with respect to their feelings about resources and time to enable them to do the job they would like to do for their patients, I have yet to hear one emergency services worker suggest to me that someone has died while waiting for care. I'd be very interested in any further information or documentation on that score because I would take it very seriously.

What I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, is that . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware that despite some new hires, six EMS workers resigned from Edmonton in the past month. No net gain here, Mr. Minister. Edmonton is no longer a desirable place for EMS to work. What are you doing about it?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct that there are particular issues in Edmonton, issues that are cause for concern to both EMS workers and management. I'm pleased to tell this House that as a result of some recent discussions with Alberta Health Services, the management for EMS in this province will be returned to the zone level by May of this year, and that will enable EMS workers, front-line workers, to work directly with management staff in their home communities with respect to addressing these issues.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, when will the minister admit that the bungled takeover of EMS by this province has failed Albertans and call for an independent review with the Health Quality Council?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, this government will never admit that acknowledging that EMS workers are front-line health workers and are part of the formal health care system – we will never acknowledge that that was a mistake. That was a correct decision. It's the right policy, and it's the right position to move us forward.

With respect to Edmonton – and I had no difficulty in admitting this in the past in the House – there are questions with respect to the adequacy of units, staffing, and stations. We are well on our way to addressing those issues now. We will continue to work with EMS and AHS to make sure that they are dealt with.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Review of Medical Examiner Cases

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Justice has launched an internal review into the files handled by a former employee of the medical examiner's office in Calgary. My questions are all to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. This is the second time in a year that there has been an incident like this stemming from the medical examiner's office. Can the minister offer Albertans an explanation as to why this is happening again?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Firstly, I want to say that we have confidence in the work of the office of the medical examiner, but it's important for the integrity of the office and the justice system and for public confidence in the justice system that we conduct this review. That's why we are asking that all criminal files of the particular pathologist in question be reviewed. We're committed to a full, transparent process, but we're going to respect the personal, legal privacy rights of the people involved.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Is the pathologist in question still working for the medical examiner's office?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the person in question has not been working for Alberta Justice or the medical examiner since September of 2011, but I want to stress, I want to emphasize that the reason for this person leaving has nothing to do with the investigation that we are currently undertaking. This person, as all of our pathologists, was board certified, a highly trained person with credentials to practise in Alberta.

Mr. Johnston: My second supplemental to the same minister: how can Albertans be certain that this won't happen again?

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said, we have great confidence in our medical examiner's office. They are highly qualified, highly skilled, they're in great demand around North America, and Alberta is very proud of the staff that we have. We do take the reliability of the system seriously because it's so essential to the operation of our justice system. I should say that there was a previous review, that the hon. member referred to, and after that review we implemented some changes which now call for peer review of anything before it goes to the police.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Caregivers for Persons with Developmental Disabilities

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Being developmentally disabled or being a caregiver for a developmentally disabled Albertan should not be a life-threatening experience. A year ago Valerie Wolski, a mental health worker, was strangled to death. Last November David Holmes succumbed to scalding injuries. Rather than addressing the obvious shortcomings, the persons with developmental disabilities central region has appealed the occupational health and safety findings regarding Valerie's death. To the Seniors minister: how can you justify this appeal?

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, first, make sure that everybody knows that this was a tragic loss to the community, that it was a tragic loss to the family, and my thoughts go out to both. A staff member on duty caring for one of the vulnerable Albertans should never have been in this situation. It's not acceptable, and we must do everything we can to make sure an occurrence like this doesn't occur again. PDD Central did appeal on an administrative item on the order.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's a problem within the government itself across ministries, occupational health and safety and Seniors, PDD.

Again to the Seniors minister: given that last fall you didn't answer my letter requesting information on PDD Appeal Panel appointees' and PDD board members' qualifications and training, will you now commit to providing those answers to this Assembly?*

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I've been open and transparent about everything I do. I take pride in answering my calls and my letters. I can assure the member that if that did occur, it would be corrected.

I can also tell you, Mr. Speaker, that occupational health and safety did make some interim recommendations to PDD central. They were all enacted. Action was taken. Not only that, but they shared those orders very quickly with all the PDD regions across the province, and action was taken.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The action taken obviously didn't work because there is an appeal by PDD in front of occupational health and safety. They don't believe the evidence. How much longer and at what cost in lives and families' economic well-being will your ministry continue to hide behind privacy laws which protect the government at the expense of Alberta's most vulnerable?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, it's absolutely ridiculous. This member knows my track record. I've been open. I've been transparent. I've called families. I've called PDD central. I've worked with caregivers. He knows that that's absolutely false.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Provincial Spending

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the former TD Bank chief economist, Don Drummond, released a lengthy and scathing report that was commissioned by the government of Ontario. This report basically warns the Ontario government that the province will become another Greece if it doesn't get spending under control. I would like to ask the minister if he has had a chance to read the report and determine if there are any recommendations that Alberta should consider and implement.

2:20

Mr. Liepert: No, Mr. Speaker, I have not. It was just released yesterday, and my recollection is that it's some 500 pages and 300 recommendations, something along that line. I think, though, that what has to be acknowledged in this Assembly is that, thank goodness, from Alberta's standpoint we don't find ourselves in the position that Ontario finds itself in. I would dare say that a lot of that needs to be attributed to the fact that we've had a 40-year Progressive Conservative government in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's also my understanding that you were in Toronto yesterday, and I'm wondering if you had a chance to discuss the report and its recommendations with the investment community.

The Speaker: Well, it better apply to Alberta here. We're not worried about what goes on in Ontario in this Assembly.

Minister, have you got something about the Alberta perspective?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that the reality of it is that we feel very strongly that Alberta is a strong contributor to Canada, and other parts of the country are benefiting as a result of a strong Alberta. However, we're still part of Canada. Debt, wherever it is in Canada, is not good for Alberta. I think one of the things that there was a strong view on in the financial community was the fact that Alberta has introduced and, I guess, as of last night passed Bill 1, which is going to do a lot of what the report is recommending Ontario follow.

Mr. Vandermeer: My second supplemental to the same minister: would it be the minister's intention, then, to recommend to the Premier that the government of Alberta undergo a similar thorough review of our spending?

Mr. Liepert: As I said in the last answer, Mr. Speaker, I think we're actually ahead of that because we just passed a bill last night, Bill 1, which is going to over the next three years ensure that all departments over a three-year rolling period will have a thorough review of value for money. While this is a report that needs to be acted on at some point in time, we're actually acting right now by passing this legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On not one but two occasions this government's draconian public-sector labour laws have been judged by the United Nations to be in breach of convention 84, freedom of association. To the minister of labour: when will this government reverse its unfair attack on some of Alberta's hardest working and lowest paid workers and restore to them the fundamental human rights enjoyed by all citizens in democracies world-wide?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we have some excellent labour laws in this province, evidenced by the fact that we have one of the lowest rates of work interruption and work stoppage in the country. We have in place appropriate processes to allow people to do collective bargaining and also, in cases where there are essential services involved, to resolve those disputes through mediation and arbitration processes. There are ways to resolve issues in this province, and for the most part they work very well for all parties, and that's evidenced by the fact that the economy in this province is still very strong and working well.

Ms Notley: Well, it's certainly not evidenced today.

Given that this government's commitment to ignore internationally recognized rights to freely associate has systematically bullied vulnerable employees into desperate action and given that our draconian labour laws provide no incentive to employers like Alberta Health Services to bargain in good faith, why won't the minister admit that it's his third-world, backwater labour laws that have created today's crisis in our hospitals?

Mr. Hancock: What an absolutely preposterous statement about the situation in Alberta. One could not describe any worse – I'm speechless. The hon. member is absolutely preposterous in what she's saying. In Alberta we have people who go to work every day, that resolve their issues with their employers every day, and there are processes to do collective bargaining and to resolve disputes in an appropriate way, including mediation and arbitration, and those work. We have a disputes resolution process. We have a labour board which is . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, what the minister calls appropriate the UN calls illegal. Given that this was reflected in the obnoxious spectre of this Legislature confirming a $35,000 raise on Monday for judges and then today turning a blind eye to AHS denying a 60-cent-an-hour raise to these good people up there, why won't the minister admit that this government is so out of touch with fairness that they need fair labour laws so that maybe Alberta's workers can remind them?

Mr. Hancock: The hon. member just continues to display ignorance. We have a process for resolving issues. One of those processes is a judicial inquiry commission, which is mandated by the courts to resolve issues with respect to judges because they do not have the right to negotiate or bargain, so there's an inquiry process which resolves their issues. The government cannot dispute that without putting them in a position to say why we disagree with that inquiry. There are other processes for other workers, and they work very well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, please, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Safety Standards for Farm Workers

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the Alberta Federation of Labour is making it clear that transportation laws need to be tightened for farm workers after the tragedy in Ontario with a van full of farm workers who suffered horrible deaths. To the Minister of Transportation. Like twinning the highway from Edmonton to Fort McMurray is a practical, common-sense idea that will save lives, so will applying occupational health and safety standards to all Albertans, as the Premier promised. Will this minister make riding in the boxes of pickup trucks illegal for all Albertans?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'm glad that the hon. member opposite recognized all the good work that's being done on highway 63.

If I can defer the first part of the question to the hon. Minister of Human Services.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was talking about the farm workers in the backs of pickup trucks.

To the same minister again: if it is illegal for members of this House to ride in the box of a pickup truck because it is unsafe, why isn't it illegal for a farm worker to do the same? Is a farm worker's health and safety less important than a politician's, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd be very glad to research the exact details of the hon. member's questions, but as I recall, it is not legal for individuals, whether they be farm workers, whether they be youth, whether they be individuals of any description, to ride in the back of a pickup truck on our highways. I think that is the law right now, and I think it's in place.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are talking about making it illegal for all Albertans anywhere.

To the same minister again: given that this government's own throne speech calls for Alberta's farmers to be the best in the world, can the minister tell this House once and for all why the best farm workers in the world don't get the best safety standards in the world?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will not agree with this hon. member. The farm workers and the agriculture industry in this province, in this country are the best in the world. I would reiterate the comments that I made previously about the laws that pertain to our highways. What is done on private land, on agricultural land, is regulated by Human Services.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We heard from the Minister of Health and Wellness yesterday that Alberta Health Services will not be meeting its four- and eight-hour emergency department wait time targets. Now, this news raises curiosity for Albertans as well as a number of questions. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why won't the wait time targets be met by next month's deadline?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of reasons for that. Most notably, as was referred to earlier, we have had a 17 per cent increase in emergency department visits across the province since November 2010. We expect that demand to continue as Alberta's economy continues to boom and more and more people move to the province. That said, there have been tremendous efficiencies gained within the hospitals over the last year due to the very hard work of physicians and other professionals.

Mr. Webber: To the same minister: what efforts are being made, then, to reduce the wait times?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, there are several. In terms of the overall health care system we're continuing our work to expand primary care networks and family care clinics, making sure that people have a place to go in or near their home community to access primary health care and do not need to go to the emergency department. Our work continues to expand continuing care capacity. We are on track to open another thousand continuing care spaces this year. In addition, we've allocated $25 million in the budget for enhanced home care, and we are hoping that this will prevent the need for people to be admitted unnecessarily to hospital.

Mr. Webber: Okay. To the same minister: what is being done to address the bed-blocker issue, which does have a direct downstream impact on the people waiting in emergency departments?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, while I personally try not to use the term “bed blockers,” it does refer to those individuals who are awaiting placement in a long-term care facility in an acute-care bed in our system. As I mentioned in response to an earlier question this afternoon, we have seen those numbers of patients decrease significantly over the last year. I think opening additional continuing care capacity is part of the answer to this. I also think and I’ve been told by Alberta Health Services that a number of these patients waiting in hospital could conceivably go home with enhanced home care support, and that’s what we’re working on now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Municipal Funding

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning the Wildrose caucus and other MLAs enjoyed a wonderful breakfast with AUMA members, and it was refreshing to hear the honest and open discussion about the problematic grants for municipalities in our province. We listened to the AUMA president, Linda Sloan, hit the ball out of the park as she once again reiterated their position that millions of dollars of government grants are going out according to how people vote provincially. As a result, she received an enthusiastic standing ovation from her colleagues. Does the Minister of Municipal Affairs, who did show up, now agree with the Premier’s chief of staff? Is she a liar?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, it’s another absurd accusation. In fact, this afternoon we’re going to be releasing the numbers by municipality for MSI funding. I’ve been very clear. It’s a strict guideline that was created in conjunction with AUMA and AAMD and C, and I have the latest numbers that show that the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo and Airdrie-Chestermere had the largest increases to MSI this year based on the formula.

Mr. Hinman: That’s the problem, Mr. Speaker. They’re talking about the 23 other government grants, and they focus on the one that they’re handcuffed on.

Given that former mayor Glenn Taylor, who was speaking at this morning’s breakfast, spoke about the numerous conversations that he’d had with many in the room about the bullying and the intimidation tactics of this government and how provincial grants are used for partisan purposes, does the minister, then, think that he, too, is a liar?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, what’s impressive is that they’re talking about partisan politics and their quotes are coming from partisan people about this government. My experience today at the AUMA breakfast as I wandered around was complete support for the MSI program that we have, for the formulas that we use, and the support and partnership we have with municipalities from one end of this province to the other.

Mr. Hinman: Really, Mr. Speaker. Partisanship? To my understanding, the minister is good friends with Darren Aldous, the past president of AUMA. Given that Darren also has stated that many decisions have been made for political reasons, with some MLAs aiming for infrastructure announcements in their ridings, does the Minister of Municipal Affairs think that Darren along with all the other mayors and councillors who are critical of this government’s funding are all pathological liars?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I just spoke with Mr. Aldous this morning – we are good friends – and he never said any such thing to me, so I’m not going to comment on what this member may report because for all I know, he’s misquoting that very good individual, who has represented his communities and the AUMA very well in his membership.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Funding for Diabetes Self-management Supplies

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every day in Alberta more than 50 people are diagnosed with diabetes. It was good to hear today that the province has added coverage for some crucial diabetic supplies and medication to help Albertans manage this chronic condition. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Coverage was announced for diabetic test strips, essential for monitoring the management of diabetes. Can the minister tell us why it has taken so long to provide coverage for these critical supplies?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this morning’s news that Alberta will cover a whole range of diabetic supplies, including test strips for Albertans, is indeed welcome. I can’t think of an MLA on any side of this House who hasn’t heard from constituents about this concern over the last several years. This announcement will see $13.3 million invested in supplying not only diabetic test strips but lancets, syringes, and other supplies for insulin-treated diabetics across the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also to the Minister of Health and Wellness. This coverage will be welcome news to many Albertans who pay between $30 and $60 per week just to monitor their diabetes. Can the minister tell us who is eligible for this coverage and who isn’t?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Eligibility is available to all Albertans who are members of either the seniors’ drug plan, the nongroup plan, or our palliative care Alberta Blue Cross benefit plan. Anyone in Alberta is in a position to take advantage of that. Coverage is limited to $600 a year per individual. We currently have approximately 206,000 diabetics in Alberta; 90 to 95 per cent of those people are type 2 diabetics, and a number of them will be insulin treated along with type 1 diabetics. So a very large number of people will be eligible.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last question to the same minister. Today’s announcement only addresses the management of diabetes, which is good. Can the minister tell us what we’re doing to prevent people from getting this disease in the first place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m proud to say that

Alberta is leading the country in our efforts to prevent diabetes and other conditions that lead to diabetes such as obesity. Obesity itself accounts for 90 per cent of type 2 diabetes cases. Our chief medical officer of health, Dr. Corriveau, has been a champion in promoting action on the obesity front on the national stage. As the co-chair of the Public Health Network he is leading federal, provincial, and territorial efforts to promote healthy weights and curb childhood obesity.

Mr. Speaker, this is something about which we should all be concerned. I don't think we can remind ourselves enough that this generation of children in Canada is expected to have a shorter life expectancy than the generation that . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

School Board Funding

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Cuts, job losses, deficits, overcrowded classes: these are the hard realities school boards have to face every year thanks to this government's mismanaged budgets and unreliable funding. Sustainable funding for our children's future is what should have been done right from the start. To the Minister of Education: will the minister stand up for equality of opportunity and promise to review the funding formula that penalizes our rural school boards?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak for what should have been done right from the start because that would have been Liberal Premier Rutherford that would have perhaps done it right from the start, but I can speak to this budget. This is the first budget in the history of the province that provides three-year sustainable funding to school boards and allows school boards to make very flexible decisions within their jurisdictions to reflect their individual pressures.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Premier Rutherford, Premier Manning, and Premier Lougheed had it all over these most recent examples.

To the same minister: given that distance and commuting are major challenges for rural families, will the minister commit to freezing transportation fees for rural schools, saving parents hundreds of dollars?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, as you probably know very well, the Education budget is on the floor of the Legislature. That member will have ample opportunity to debate every line item of my budget in the next few days, and I will be able to explain all those lines in detail. At the end of the day I would remind this member that over the next three years our budget will be increasing from $6.8 billion to $7.1 billion, which is phenomenal.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Again to the same minister: given that schools in Alberta are still short 450 teaching positions and that rural communities face hardships on a daily basis, will this government increase funding for rural school boards?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I will repeat what I just said. Over the next three years the budget will increase from $6.8 billion to $7.1 billion. We are spending approximately $35 million per day on school boards right now, and the member will have ample opportunity to ask individual questions during the budget.

The Speaker: The Department of Education estimates will be featured in this Assembly on Tuesday, March 6, starting at approximately 3 p.m. The building is open to all citizens in the province of Alberta.

Now we have an additional statement to be made by a member of Executive Council. Hon. Minister of Seniors, do you wish to provide some additional information?

Mr. VanderBurg: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to further clarify a question that I had from the Member for Calgary-Varsity, here's my letter of December 12 in response to his letter of November 22.*

I am writing in follow-up to your November 22, 2011, inquiry to the Persons with Developmental Disabilities . . . Appeal Secretariat office regarding when and how appointments are made to the PDD Appeal Panel. I am pleased to provide the following information.

I think the accusation that the member made was clearly inappropriate. Sir, I would ask that you ask for his apology.

The Speaker: Well, first of all, under our rules once I recognize a member of Executive Council, it means that the person who raised the question may ask an additional question, so we'll see where we go with this.

Go ahead.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not only did the hon. minister not provide information on PDD Appeal Panel appointees and PDD board members' qualifications and training, as I asked. My question would be, obviously, to the Seniors minister, but he can pass it on to the Minister of Human Services. Why can't your two ministries get your acts together to protect not only disabled individuals but disabled individuals' caregivers? Why does it have to be an appeal process?

The Speaker: I clearly saw a difference of view here, so I'm going to ask that this matter be studied with the Blues over the weekend, and if there's a point of privilege that the hon. minister would like to raise, he can raise it on Tuesday. Okay?

We will proceed with the Routine in 30 seconds from now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary Mountain View.

Loss of Trust in the Government

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today another group of health care givers has said: enough. Doctors, nurses, EMS workers have been saying it. Caregivers in PDD have been saying it. Even astute businesspeople in this province have been condemning the mismanagement in this province. Now the people who keep our hospitals running safely and smoothly under daily crises couldn't take it anymore. Maintenance and cleaning staff, lab technicians, and porters took an unprecedented step to a wildcat strike.

What pushes them to this extremity? It is the loss of trust and government corruption. This government refuses to do its job. Citizens in all walks of life speak of being disregarded, dismissed, and bullied, and increasingly people are saying: enough is enough. It's troubling when one's contribution is devalued or one is silenced. It's intolerable when this disrespect interferes with the ability of conscientious workers to care for their fellow human beings, when workers return home aware that they are unable to meet the standard expected in their work, when daily they place at risk people that they are supposed to be caring for, when maintenance doesn't have the resources to properly fix a damaged floor or pipe, when cleaning staff are pushed beyond their physical limits and forced to leave conditions they would not accept in their homes.

This government has broken its trust not once but many times to those charged with caring and protecting our most vulnerable citizens. The evidence of incompetence and corruption is now undeniable, and the fat cats in power must be held accountable. Albertans at all levels are seeing this gross mismanagement of people and resources and the cover-ups and the lack of accountability. This must stop before our spirits are broken and more lives are lost. This government is no longer a source of solution. It is the source of our problems. When trust is gone, collapse is not far off. It's time for this government to go.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Random Acts of Kindness Week

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. February 13 to 19 is Random Acts of Kindness Week, and this so fits in with what I started with my kids a long time ago and have used as a mantra ever since, that if we all play kindly in the sandbox, we all win.

A random act of kindness can be volunteering in communities, supporting charities, or lending a helping hand to neighbours and friends. A simple smile and eye contact is surprisingly powerful. Albertans are renowned for their big hearts, community spirit, and the tremendous care they show for one another and the world around them.

With this special week in mind, I'm pleased to share an important call to action on behalf of Alberta's Prevention of Bullying Youth Committee, a group of 15 dedicated young people from all across the province who help promote awareness of bullying and work closely with us to create safe and caring schools and communities. The youth committee is encouraging Albertans to go to www.b-free.ca and share their random acts of kindness stories with the world. They're asking us to sit with someone at lunch who is usually left out or send a supportive text message to a friend who's been bullied or put down.

The smallest act of kindness or encouragement can make the biggest difference in anyone's life. Their call to action is about coming together to create a caring, respectful society and leaving bullying behind, one act of kindness at a time. Go to the committee's b-free website, submit your act of kindness story, and help inspire even more compassion and respect for others. Together we can make a bully-free Alberta.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to give you oral notice of my intent to make a motion under Standing Order 30. Do I read the motion into the record now?

The Speaker: No. You're just advising notice. I'll call on you later.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I actually have two tablings now. First, I'd like to table the partisan quote from the friend of the Minister of Municipal Affairs, Darren Aldous, which says that "without certain and predictable funding, cities are not able to do simple long-term planning. Many decisions have been made for 'political reasons,' he said, with some MLAs aiming for infrastructure announcements in their riding." This is from the Herald on the 16th of June, 2011.

My second tabling is on behalf of an Albertan, Anne Landry. I would like to table the required five copies of documents recording her journey to try and get her own file information. Anne Landry feels that she has been treated unfairly by the Alberta Information and Privacy Commissioner and has filed court proceedings in Alberta Court of Queen's Bench. I have the required five copies of the certified record of proceedings that she has filed. Ms Landry is hoping that by tabling these documents, it will help shed light on the ordeal that she has had to undergo just to try to get information on her very own file.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of electricity bills that 14 Albertans have sent to the NDP opposition, showing significantly increased and higher electricity costs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the requisite amount of copies of two letters from constituents. The first is from Vic Neufeld, who makes $35,000 a year and whose wife is a person with a developmental disability, who is not receiving AISH at this time but otherwise would be able to. The reason she can't is because her husband is making $35,000. It's just something she wanted the Legislature to be aware of.

The second is regarding an individual, Mr. Paul Thebeau, from my constituency as well, who was denied over and over a requisition to get an MRI test that he wanted his wife to get at a private clinic and was willing to pay for but could not get the requisition for some reason, even though there was capacity. It seems like a very brutal hole in the system, and it didn't make a lot of sense to him.

I'm tabling both of those.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier I introduced to you and through you Samy Mukadi, Albert Mbuyi, and Rene Tahibula, who are members of the Alberta Congolese community, and they have asked me to table this document which begins:

We, the members of the Congolese Diaspora in Alberta accuse the Canadian mining businesses for illicit operation in Congo. This is the second letter that we write on the post election crisis that continues to prevail in the Democratic Republic of Congo today. As in the first letter, of December 15 2011, we condemn and accuse . . .

I am tabling the list of accusations, Mr. Speaker.
Thank you.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Dr. Taft: Yes. We would love to hear on this side of the Assembly what the government has planned for next week.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the Order Paper is pretty clear, but to fulfill the Routine of order on Tuesday, February 21, in the afternoon it will be day 6 of consideration of His Honour's Speech from the Throne, but after we will be in Committee of Supply with respect to the estimates of the Ministry of Finance and as per the Order Paper should time permit.

On Wednesday, February 22, in the afternoon it will be day 7 of consideration of His Honour's Speech from the Throne, but the Committee of Supply will sit from 3 till 6 p.m. or such time as it needs to consider the estimates of Executive Council and as per the Order Paper thereafter.

On Thursday, February 23, in the afternoon it will be day 8 of consideration of His Honour's Speech from the Throne, and we will deal with second reading of Bill 2, Education Act; Bill 4, St. Albert and Sturgeon Valley School Districts Establishment Act; Bill 5, Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act; and third reading of Bill 3, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2012.

Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have an application under Standing Order 30. I would refer all members to their standing orders so that they can understand what we're talking about here now. This is a request to basically abandon the normal Routine that's found in the standing orders. This deals with a matter of urgent importance. The urgent importance is not the issue at stake; it is the process and the procedures. So I want these comments – I will recognize a number of speakers if they choose to participate – to be a very, very fine discussion on why the Routine should be abandoned, not the issue itself.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Work Stoppages by Hospital Support Staff

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I rise to propose the following motion.

Be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, a work stoppage today by general support service workers at at least two Edmonton hospitals, work action threatening patient welfare and undermining public confidence in this government's ability to manage Alberta's public health care system.

The Speaker: Hon. member, can you just bear with me for a second, please? You read the motion into the record, and this should be circulated to all members. But we have one other issue because if we agree to what your request is, we can't get to the other issue. So I've got to deal with the Government House Leader on his point of order.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have not been raising points of order much during this session so far, but there was a situation today when the Leader of the Official Opposition offended the proceedings of the House under 23(h) of the standing orders, making an allegation against another member, and 23(i), imputing false or unavowed motives to another member.

In question period at that particular time the member was addressing the hon. minister of health and accused the hon. minister of health of, among a number of things, personally trying to undermine the health system and drive us to a – I don't have the benefit of the Blues – privatized American health system.

This issue has been raised a number of times in the House. It's been made clear by the Premier, by the minister of health, by anybody who's asked what the government's direction is with respect to a publicly funded health system. It's also been very clear that the minister of health is not on that agenda, and the Leader of the Official Opposition knows it full well.

It's inflammatory rhetoric. It is unconscionable for him to knowingly misstate in such a blatant manner in order to make his point when he knows full well that what he's saying is not true, and I would ask that the hon. member be asked to withdraw those statements.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, you're speaking now?

Dr. Taft: I am. I have the heavy burden today, Mr. Speaker, of filling in the shoes of our House leader – so I'm going to do my best here – and part of that responsibility is to speak to this issue.

I will cut immediately to the chase because I know you appreciate that. I refer to a document here, Mr. Speaker, which I'm pretty certain has been tabled in this Assembly before. If it hasn't, I can table it again. These are PowerPoint slides and a document that's dated July 12, 2010. It includes the name of the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, and it's a legislation briefing to, I believe, the caucus of the day. It specifically refers to a policy shift, and I'm quoting now here, Mr. Speaker: consider private insurance options for limited health services; regulations could enable and regulate scope and operation of private insurance.

It's pretty clear from this that, in fact, this is a briefing given to the government caucus about 18 months ago with the name of the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on it that was advocating a shift to private health insurance, and that's part of the debate here.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think there are any grounds whatsoever for a point of order.

The Speaker: Well, hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, I'll give you an opportunity to say something, if you want to, seeing as you seem to be the focus of this.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, my job here is not to continue to deny accusations presented by members opposite. I have spoken to this matter in the House before. I have made it clear that I am not the author of the document that was tabled in this House. I question the basis upon which any member of this House would attempt to connect me to the document either as an author or as someone who would personally attest to any statement or belief or other piece of information that may be communicated by the document.

I am on record, Mr. Speaker, as someone who defends, supports, and works to improve the value of our publicly funded health care system. I think my record both prior to becoming an elected Member of the Legislative Assembly and prior to my appointment as Minister of Health and Wellness bears this out. I could point to any number of public records and media reports that may provide support to this.

What I would say, Mr. Speaker, is that the continued tabling of and reference to this document, other e-mails, and other purported pieces of evidence to attempt to assign a belief system or an attitude or any other motive is in fact an insult both to me as a Member of the Legislative Assembly and, I would humbly suggest, to the proceedings of this House.

I renew my objection to this. I have no way of controlling, other than through appeals to Mr. Speaker, the conduct of other members, and I would consider it appropriate in the circumstances that the hon. leader be asked to withdraw the remark. Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: Hon. members, one of the really important rules that we follow is found in Beauchesne 494, where it reads that acceptance of the word of a member about matters concerning themselves should be accepted. We've heard this today. I hope that will become the norm.

Secondly, there's a bigger problem, though, than all of this. We don't have these issues, you know, if everybody followed the rules they signed their name to. The members signed a document that said: no preambles on second or third questions. If everybody would remember that they signed that – I've been hearing this week about people wanting to sign documents or something. I repeat that. The members have signed that. No preambles. Willingly and enthusiastically everybody agreed to it.

So I read the second question.

Mr. Speaker, health care workers don't care about policy. They care about action. They care about solutions. They want the system fixed. Given that billions of dollars are spent in our health care system with increasingly poor results, it seems obvious that this government wants the health care system to fail, and this minister has been consulting with them for 10 years to helping it fail because he wants to Americanize it. This is the man who presented the document to privatize health care.

The way the Hansard people have identified this, they've come up with about six different sentences. Finally, you get to the question.

Is this government simply planning to wash its hands of a problem it doesn't understand and cannot solve by privately contracting it out?

You know, if we had no preambles, we wouldn't have most of these. And you all signed your name to it. This is what I find so astounding. After having to read through the rules, this is a daily violation on preambles.

I'm going home this weekend, and I'm going to read my memo to everybody, and I'm going to look at the document that has all the House leaders signing this, no preambles, and all their caucuses being enthusiastic about it, no preambles. When I come back on Tuesday, we'll see if anybody can remember other than me, who will stand up and interject.

Okay. We've clarified all of this. We've heard the statement of the member. We know what Beauchesne 494 is all about. We'll come back on Tuesday, and we'll try to be nice to one another.

Work Stoppages by Hospital Support Staff (continued)

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, you read the motion into the record.

Dr. Taft: Yes.

The Speaker: I will give you a number of minutes to explain the reason for your urgency petition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand the issue here is urgency; it's not the substance of it. I will be working under probably the usual references for this sort of debate, Marleau and Montpetit 584 and 585; Beauchesne, the several paragraphs from 387 to 398.

Marleau and Montpetit says that the issue needs to be specific and urgent and important, and that just requires an ever-so-brief review of the facts on the ground to demonstrate the urgency and the specificity of it. What we have, Mr. Speaker, are some hundreds of support workers at acute-care hospitals who have walked off the job today due to a breakdown in labour negotiations. There has been a cancellation of a significant number of surgeries as a result.

Because of widespread support for the cause our understanding is that the walkout appears to have spread from Edmonton's two largest hospitals, the Royal Alex and the University, to facilities across many areas of the province, including Leduc, Cold Lake, Smoky Lake, Boyle, the Northeast health centre. So this appears to be, I think, a very urgent issue. It's hard to think of something that would be more urgent than people's health care, you know, people's surgery and so on.

It's very specific. We're talking about a well-defined, specific, addressable issue. I think on those grounds the situation meets the requirements of Marleau and Montpetit 584.

This is, Mr. Speaker, a nonpartisan issue. This is not an issue that's being driven by any political party particularly; it's being driven by the hearts and the passions and the concerns of the people involved regardless of their politics.

As to the urgency of it, Mr. Speaker, and just for the benefit of those in the gallery, this is about how the issue could be addressed through means other than the Assembly. I don't believe there are those. There's no government bill on the Order Paper specific to this. There's no private member's bill specific to this issue. In fact, I don't think there's anything on the Order Paper that addresses this. There are no government motions.

Really, we are on the brink of a long weekend. We do know, Mr. Speaker, that on long weekends things like accident rates and emergency demands surge. This issue, for all we know, could be engulfing the entire province by the time this Assembly meets again on Tuesday afternoon. I think what happened today at the Royal Alex and the University is like a spark set to kindling. This kindling is right across the province, and we may find that by the time the long weekend is over, Alberta's health care system is in widespread upheaval because of this. And between now and Tuesday afternoon, when we reconvene, there isn't another chance for us as legislators to address the issue.

It is so pressing – and I'm referring here specifically to Beauchesne's 389. It is "so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention." The public has an enormous interest in the functioning of our health care system. Any one of us over the next few days could need that service or, indeed, will probably know people who need that service, so it is a pressing public interest.

I think that the public interest demands that discussion take place immediately because, Mr. Speaker, there is simply no other forum in which it could occur. We have no other means as legislators to address the issue. That is the combination of factors, I believe, that makes this absolutely suited and appropriate for an emergency debate of this Assembly.

I've kept my comments brief, Mr. Speaker, because I think the point is so strong that it speaks for itself. Thank you.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It would behoove me to speak to this in two particular ways. The first is that the motion itself, in my view, should be ruled out of order by yourself. In Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, sixth edition, page 114, 391 says that "subjects excluded by those rules cannot be brought forward . . . such as a matter under adjudication by a court of law." It is, I think, very much public knowledge and, certainly, something you can take advisement of that it is not legal to strike in certain areas and particularly with respect to hospitals.

I would not purport to put my own viewpoint as to what the nature of this job action that was referred to is, but I can tell you that it's before the Labour Relations Board, which is an adjudicatory body. It is a body that is tasked with hearing these particular claims. It's independent, and it is charged with ruling on these particular claims as to whether or not this is a legal strike. It is doing that this afternoon, so it is inappropriate for this House to engage in a discussion about this particular incident at this particular time because it is a labour matter which is before the Labour Relations Board.

Further, Mr. Speaker, I would indicate that while the issue of the health and safety of people in our hospitals is clearly an important matter for the public, a debate this afternoon in this House is not an appropriate way to involve ourselves in what is essentially a labour dispute. In fact, perusal of the legislation will make it very clear that if, in fact, this is an illegal job action, which is the matter before the Labour Relations Board, there would be sanction or ruling by the Labour Relations Board.

Also, there are appropriate mechanisms for resolving the dispute. It's not a such a matter that there's no way for the dispute to be resolved. There are mediation and arbitration processes available to the parties. If parties felt aggrieved by any of the processes, they could avail themselves of those dispute resolution mechanisms. So for this House to resolve itself this afternoon to discuss this matter, which is essentially at the root a job action, while it's before the Labour Relations Board and while there is at law methodology for resolving the dispute is quite inappropriate.

That does not at all deal with the issue of whether or not this is an urgent and important matter for the public. Obviously, the care of the public is an important matter to this government and to all Albertans. That is why there is the legislation in place precisely to deal with these sorts of matters.

It's not an appropriate matter for the House this afternoon while it's under this sort of discussion and while it's before the Labour Relations Board.

3:10

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. And I caution again that the issue here is urgency and the changing of the Routine, not the issue. I'll remind that to the Government House Leader as well. Not the issue. It's the urgency of the debate in this Chamber.

Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, my comments start on that point, that what we are talking about today is urgency. As has already been identified, we are discussing a work stoppage that debate might conclude has been incited by the conduct of Alberta Health Services in their bargaining efforts.

The Speaker: And here we go.

Ms Notley: I'm just stating the facts.

The Speaker: Again, I have to focus.

Ms Notley: I'm about to move on.

The Speaker: Please do.

Ms Notley: Okay.

The Speaker: Because it's going to be 4:30 and you'll still be talking to one another about it.

Ms Notley: In terms of urgency the matters are in fact unfolding as we speak. As we speak, Mr. Speaker. It's a matter that I think has extended beyond the two locations noted in the motion by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview to other locations as well. Hence, it grows exponentially as matters of minutes and hours go by, and that speaks to urgency.

As well, at this point there are actually no mechanisms in place to control it outside this Assembly, I would submit, because, in fact, notwithstanding the points made by the House leader, the very fact that we're in this position is a function of the other strategies and other mechanisms having failed. The labour relations regime has failed. The laws have resulted in people taking action because they for whatever reason do not see them as applying to their situation. So the other mechanisms are not effectively working right now; hence, the government has lost control of the situation.

The point has already been made that there's no other place on the legislative agenda for us to discuss this.

The Speaker: That's the only subject matter that I want to hear about.

Ms Notley: That and urgency.

As I've said, there's no other place between now and Tuesday where we could even begin to talk about it and, quite frankly, I don't think we could on Tuesday either.

As I've just noted, the matters are unfolding so quickly that it would be short sighted to think that urgency and emergency would not occur repeatedly over the course of the next four days. Those emergencies would relate to patient care, patient safety, worker safety, the safety of our employees who work within the health care system, and, as I've said already, the overall public confidence in our health care system.

I would also on the issue of urgency, Mr. Speaker, refer you to some elements of precedent in that in this House urgency has been found to be in place when we were talking about the availability of vaccinations. I believe it was about two years ago that we had an emergency debate on that issue. I believe it was a little over a year ago that the overall issue of confidence in the public health care system was also deemed to warrant debate on the basis of urgency as a result of various and sundry allegations about engagement by political figures in the health care system. Regardless, because it dealt with health care and because it reflected and impacted on the public confidence, this Legislature determined that it was, in fact, urgent and warranted a vote.

As I've said before, there are alternative actions to resolving it, and those actions are things that are within the scope of this Assembly and this government as directed by this Assembly, so the mechanisms for resolving it are appropriately discussed in this setting. As I've said, it's not a matter that is being fully and appropriately adjudicated in a court of law. One element of it is, but certainly the overall urgent matters will not be dealt with at the Labour Relations Board today or anytime soon. So based on the clear examples given by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview of the specific threats to the health and safety of Albertans over the course of the next five days, it seems very clear on the face of it that these matters warrant a finding of urgency on your part.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I think we've had enough. We keep hearing these arguments about whether or not this is urgent. You never get to the question of if the Speaker actually declares that it is urgent. If you want to deal with a procedural argument for another hour and 20 minutes, I'm okay with that, too, but I think that we should have some prudence here in terms of what we're talking about.

I want all members to look at Standing Order 30, please, in their Standing Orders so that everybody is up to date on it and understands exactly what we're talking about. Standing Order 30(2) provides that a "Member may briefly state the arguments in favour of the request for leave and the Speaker may allow such debate as he . . . considers relevant to the question of urgency," and it is the role of the chair to rule on whether or not the request for leave is in order.

Hon. members, the chair is prepared to rule on whether the request for leave for this motion to proceed is in order under Standing Order 30(2). The Member for Edmonton-Riverview has met the requirement of providing at least two hours' notice to the Speaker's office by providing the required notice at 11:07 this morning. The motion reads as follows:

Be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, a work stoppage today by general support service workers at at least two Edmonton hospitals, work action threatening patient welfare and undermining public confidence in this government's ability to manage Alberta's public health care system.

It has been noted that the relevant parliamentary authorities on the subject are pages 689 to 696 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, and Beauchesne's, paragraphs 387 to 390.

On the issue of urgency of debate the matter raised by the hon. member arose only this morning, so the member's request is timely. In addition, the chair notes that there will be no other opportunity for this matter to be considered in the Assembly as there are no items on the Order Paper under which such a debate could occur. And although the chair is not bound by precedent, the chair notes that there have been several recent emergency debate requests involving the health care system that have been found by the chair, in this case the same person, to be in order, including those on March 14, 2011; November 18, 2010; and October 25, 2010. In addition, the chair granted the request for leave in a matter involving a strike of health care workers on May 24, 2000. Accordingly, the chair finds that the request for leave is in order.

Now, the rules governing the procedure once the chair finds the request for leave to be in order are as follows. Standing Order 30(3) requires the question to be put to a vote of this Assembly. If there are objections to the question, then the chair will ask those members who support the motion to rise in their places. If 15 or more members rise, the debate will proceed, and each member who wishes to speak will have 10 minutes to do so until all who wish to speak have done so or until the normal hour of adjournment. If at least five members rise but less than 15, the question whether the member has leave to move adjournment of the ordinary business is put immediately and, if necessary, is determined by division. If fewer than five members rise, the motion will not proceed.

The question is: shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed? All those in favour, say aye.

Some Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: Those opposed, say no.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Speaker: Okay. I've heard both of them. Let's see how many will rise. Well, we certainly have that number between five and 14, so I will now put another question, a simple question, a majority decision. Shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed?

[The voice vote indicated that the motion lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:19 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 2 Education Act

[Adjourned debate February 15: Mr. Denis]

The Speaker: Are there additional speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

The Speaker: On the Education Act.

Mr. MacDonald: You bet.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. Certainly, we're getting another copy or another version of the Education Act. We had one which was distributed throughout our communities in the summer, and this version has come before the House now. There was a lot of work and there was a lot of effort put into the original act, or the original change to the act, I should say, by the former Minister of Education. There was considerable public expense and a lot of public relations exercised regarding that former document. Now we have before us this afternoon the latest version.

[Mr. Zwozdesky in the chair]

It's interesting, Mr. Speaker, to go through this. We're talking about access to education, opportunities for learning, charter schools, private schools, responsibilities and dispute resolution – it's interesting to note that Bullying Awareness and Prevention Week is mentioned in this act; I don't think that applies to this government in their relationship with the AUMA, but that's another matter – student discipline, the student advisory board, complex education needs tribunal, the attendance board, board powers and elections. There was some concern in the past about section 51 here, the natural person powers. I understand that boards have been consulted widely and extensively and are now satisfied. At least, I hope they are; I haven't heard from them that they are not.

We can go on here about board procedures, investigations, elections and trustees, conflict of interest and disqualification, structure of school authorities, finance and property, the Alberta school foundation fund, the taxing authority, payment into the fund, default. There is another very important section on special school tax levy, collection of taxes, borrowing, and then we get to part 7, education professions and occupations.

I was reading last week, Mr. Speaker, about the problems in America. The Minister of Finance would be cognizant of those problems after his recent travels to New York and to Boston and to various other places. Certainly, I was surprised to learn in a policy paper what America has to do to solve some of its problems. One of the suggestions made was that they had to increase the education of their public school teachers. Public school teachers in some American states had difficulty providing sound or adequate science and math instruction to the public school students. I thought: "Wow, we certainly don't have that problem in Alberta. We have excellent, qualified teachers."

The author of this report went on at length to explain how the Americans could actually improve the next generation of American workers and at the same time American taxpayers by improving the education system. There are lessons in this for all of us, certainly, but I must say, after having three members of our family graduate from Edmonton public schools, that the teachers are well qualified and do an excellent job of helping our students out.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is extensive, but there are certain things that I think we should emphasize in the course of debate. Certainly bullying prevention: there are lessons for all of us on that. We must encourage partnerships between the parents, the trustees, and the boards. I think education professionals are included in that partnership. There have to be partnerships with postsecondary education institutions. We should focus the public education system on student success. That's certainly, I think, laudable from all sides of this House.

Now, there are some things in this bill that I haven't seen, and I spent some time reading it. We can go back to the Learning Commission. That was quite a document. For a while it was a guiding principle or guiding force for this government. This government worked very hard at implementing many of the recommendations from the Learning Commission, but it has recently failed particularly with working on the very, very important issue of class sizes and education funding.

I don't want to pull out the fiscal plan from this year's budget and remind this House of the additional money that is put aside to meet the requirements of small class sizes. Hopefully, it will be used for that. We'll have to watch, and we'll have to see, but hopefully, Mr. Speaker, it will be used for that. We need to ensure that we remember the recommendations from the Learning Commission, particularly around class sizes and class size initiatives.

We need to ensure that there is stable, predictable funding for public education. We have to remember that public education is an investment. I heard members of this House say that as recently as this week. They are absolutely right. This is an investment in the future. It's not an expense. If we are to diversify our economy in the future, we're going to have to have a skilled, well-educated workforce that can compete in many, many different economic sectors. A public education system is the best way to lay that solid foundation.

I know there are those that think: well, let's let the private sector deal with this. But the public education system allows all families, regardless of family income, to get a good, solid, sound start. That's why public education is so needed and so necessary.

Over the years we have been told that particularly in central areas of the city, Mr. Speaker, we don't need all of the public schools, that we don't need them any longer, that we don't have a student population that merits keeping these schools open. Public schools are not factories. Public schools are not places that should be judged on the size of the student body. Public schools are part of a community. There are some small schools that work for families and for students.

I was surprised last spring, Mr. Speaker, to come to the Legislative Assembly, to the steps on a Sunday morning, and see a group of concerned parents from different rural regions of this province come down to let their opinions be known about what they thought of pending school closures in their districts. One group was from around Barrhead, and the other group was from around Loughheed. I had an interesting talk with them. I went over to the Annex, and I got them each a copy of the Education annual report. They were astonished at the information in there. They surprised me because as taxpayers they didn't realize that their government would provide this information to them.

It was a nice, sunny Sunday morning, and we had quite a discussion around the financial statements of their respective public school boards. They told me the importance of their local community school, their public school. That's in rural areas. Certainly, in central areas of Edmonton this has been an issue that's been going on for quite some time. We have closed dozens of fine public schools. The argument has been made that we don't have the students.

Well, Mr. Speaker, this province is a young province. We have 36 years as the average age of the population for the cities of Edmonton and Calgary. This is according to Statistics Canada. Saskatoon would be the youngest metropolitan area by average population in Canada, followed by Edmonton and then Calgary. Last year there were over 50,000 live births in this province according to the information from Alberta Health Services.

Mr. Speaker, we have a lot of students who are going to need a lot of classes and a lot of teachers at the front of those classes in the next few years across this province, particularly in Edmonton and particularly in Calgary. Whenever we look at this act, I hope we can have quite a discussion on it. But section 62, closure of schools: we have to have a good examination and debate on what is proposed here and how that will affect our communities and our constituencies for years to come.

Again, Mr. Speaker, a public school is part of the community. It's an investment in that community. When you look at some of the education property taxes that are paid in neighborhoods, some neighborhoods are paying well in excess of a million dollars annually in their portion of the education property taxes on their houses, and they have no public school. They have come to our constituency office and pointed this out to me, and I agree with these taxpayers. Many of these taxpayers have children of public school age, and they do not think they have been treated fairly in this process. So when we discuss and we debate particularly section 62, let's make sure that we get it right.

Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of things that we can do to ensure that public education is not eroded and we go down the slope toward the American style of education system.

In conclusion, in another report I was reading, there was a school district in Florida where over 30 per cent of the students had no permanent home. The financial crisis had turned this particular neighbourhood upside down, and many students were in temporary shelters or living in campers or tents. The school system was the only stable thing in their lives.

We take a lot for granted in this province, but let's not take our public school system for granted. Let's make sure that this act is what we need not only now or next year but many years into the future. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much.

Hon. members, five additional minutes are available under 29(2)(a) for any questions or comments pertaining to the previous speaker. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. Yes, please. You can ask a question.

Mr. Boutilier: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member. Obviously, I look forward to speaking about this issue as well. It really is interesting. I know the hon. member is certainly well studied when it comes to the importance of education. Actually, as a former teacher myself I have to ask him: as we go forward, are there any other suggestions that you think could be added to this bill to improve it even more in helping young Alberta learners when it comes to the importance of education and the foundation that we build our society on?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. That's a very, very interesting question. Certainly, I would think that we have to have a stable funding formula for all public schools. I think that as we go forward we have to respect the historical traditions of this province and recognize the constitutional right for the separate school system. We cannot forget that. Specifically for Fort McMurray, we've got to make sure in fast-growing cities and communities, particularly in the north, that they're not ignored by this government.

I was astonished, hon. member, to hear from some residents of Fort McMurray that I know that they actually had to limit the number of family members that they invited to the high school graduation. Not all the brothers and sisters could go, the grandparents, the aunts and uncles. You had to be very selective with the invitations because it was a small facility. The graduating class was large. They even tried at one point, I was told, to go to a community hall. That wasn't big enough. That's an example of having, Mr. Speaker, the resources, the facilities where they are needed.

It puzzles me, particularly after I see the royalty projections that are going to come from bitumen production around the Fort McMurray area and there's going to be this potential billion dollar surplus – in fact, I think in two years it's projected to be $5 billion – that in a fast-growing city like Fort McMurray we don't have adequate education facilities for the students. If we want to permanently attract workers to cities such as Fort McMurray, we're going to have to make sure that there are public schools available for the younger family members of those workers.

Those are some of the concerns, hon. member, that I would like to see debated further with this Education Act, Bill 2. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Anyone else under 29(2)(a)?

If not, I have Calgary-Mackay, followed by Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise today to speak to Bill 2, the Education Act, which was formally introduced in this House by the hon. Minister of Education. Before I begin, I would like to thank the Minister of Education and his predecessor, now the Minister of Human Services, for all their hard work on this proposed legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I'm truly impressed by these hon. members' dedication to a principled, learner-centred, and inclusive education system for all Alberta students. This is an absolutely fundamental piece of legislation before us. This legislation will govern all things within our K to 12 education system. Our government conducted extensive consultations with Albertans over the past three years driven by the government's desire and commitment to get it right with this bill, and I'm confident that this bill is getting it right.

The new legislation reflects the essence of the public interest in a strong education system and ensures that the rights, needs, and expectations of individuals and groups are in balance with the rights, needs, and expectations of society as a whole. The legislation recognizes that education is a shared responsibility of all partners in education, which occurs in an increasingly diverse range of learning environments and focuses on the concept of each student reaching their own potential.

There are a number of points, however, that I would like to touch on more closely with regard to how I see Bill 2 making a difference to students in Alberta in the pursuit of their aspirations and interests as well as in the nurturing of a passion for learning and a desire to be lifelong learners.

The first is my support for measures designed to improve the ever-critical issue of high school completion and making the transition from high school to postsecondary institutions as smoothly as possible by requiring school boards to collaborate with postsecondary institutions, high schools, and the community. To enable smooth transitions from high school to postsecondary, more students will be better supported in being exposed to and connected to postsecondary learning opportunities before graduation, and greater collaboration between high school and postsecondary may enable students to maximize their overall learning process.

One of these specific measures is raising the age of access to 21 years old, which broadens individual education opportunities by allowing more time and flexibility for completion of personal learning programs designed to meet personal needs.

Another policy shift found in Bill 2 is increasing the compulsory school attendance age from 16 to 17. These all signal that Albertans value high school completion and education in general. While we are making progress in increasing high school completion rates, I do believe more can be done. Mr. Speaker, in our fast-changing society it's no secret that those who complete high school have a much better chance of success in the workforce than those who do not, and today the value of a postsecondary education has never been greater.

The changes present in Bill 2 recognize the value of a high school education in preparing students for postsecondary education and informal education and are also strong signs that this bill fully supports high school completion and areas of postsecondary education.

Mr. Speaker, another key component of Bill 2 is the expansion of student responsibilities as part of the essential component of a positive learning environment and students' and boards' roles in developing that environment. Ultimately a welcoming, caring, respectful, and safe learning environment must be available to all students in all schools. Students, parents, teachers, and communities continue to stress the importance of this. Many of us within this House and beyond are deeply disturbed and saddened when we hear senseless and tragic circumstances of students being bullied. In the most extreme circumstances, yet becoming increasingly more frequent, some students have taken their lives as a result of bullying. This simply must stop. We must respond to the issue of bullying. In this bill we are.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation will provide direction to school boards to address both bullying and discrimination and identify them as important topics in addition to clearly establishing what is acceptable and unacceptable behaviour. These provisions will increase the safety and security of students across the province and confirm the importance of a learning environment in nurturing a sense of belonging and a positive sense of self that all children and youth are entitled to.

The physical, social, and psychological harms of bullying are profound. It can cause alienation, mistrust, depression, anxiety, and lead to low self-esteem. No student should ever have to endure these effects, which are quite often caused by bullying. Ensuring that schools are welcoming, caring, respectful, and safe learning environments is absolutely crucial, and I applaud the measures taken by Bill 2 to address such a serious issue.

Mr. Speaker, for the reasons I've listed, I fully support Bill 2, the Education Act. We have an opportunity before us to build on Alberta's incredible foundation of excellence established by the dedicated teachers, school support staff, and trustees of our existing world-class education system. I have no doubt that the proposed Education Act will provide a provincial framework and expectations for educational excellence in Alberta.

Again I would like to thank the hon. Minister of Education for bringing this legislation forward. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I move to adjourn debate, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Zwozdesky in the chair]

Bill 3 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2012

The Deputy Chair: Are there any speakers to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Bill 3. We've talked about the supply requests here earlier, but again we can say that all this money is needed and is necessary. You know, we can go through the fact that every year there seems to be a supplementary supply bill. Some years there are two. Most years there's one. When you go through this, you see, of course, the Legislative Assembly requesting $3.1 million for the Senate election. We had quite a chat about that and quite a discussion in the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices. I know it's against the conventions of this House and whatnot to talk about that, but I was surprised at how quickly the government members, without much discussion – and I'm sure the Minister of Finance would have been very disappointed, if he had an opportunity, because it was quickly passed.

Mr. Liepert: It should have been.

Mr. MacDonald: And he says that it should have been.

Well, I would take exception to that because whenever you compare the money that was allocated in the past, in 2004, for a similar election, it was a lot less. It's cavalier attitudes like that that have resulted in five successive budget deficits, some of them bigger than others, but for a government that maintains itself or promotes itself as fiscally conservative, that's quite a record. That's a track record. When you look at that track record, you look at some of those deficits, and you look at what's been proposed now with this new way of doing business, maybe we would not need to have any more supply budgets. If we look at what's on the Order Paper – Bill 1, Bill 2, and now Bill 3 – maybe we would not need any more supplementary supply estimates if we had Bill 1 and a rigorous discipline over on that side of the House.

Now, hon. members across the way have talked about Slave Lake and the disastrous fire. Certainly, no one would argue that you do not need to have money set aside, whether it's for pine beetles or for drought or for fire. These are things that need to be done, but do we need to fund them through this process, or should we have a separate, dedicated fund that can be drawn down as needed? Which would be better for the taxpayers?

Now, when we look at health care and health care budgets, they just seem to grow and grow and grow. When we look at Bill 3, we see the allocations for Seniors; we see the allocations for Justice; Municipal Affairs; Tourism, Parks and Recreation; Transportation; Human Services. We look at what was spent in health care, and we see that there was a surplus, a modest surplus. Others would say that it was about time. Others would say: well, much of the $28 million for Justice is going to salary increases and pension contributions for judges in this province. We heard that earlier in question period today. That was one of the groups mentioned when the hospital support workers were not satisfied with 2 per cent and felt they should perhaps get 3 per cent, a modest request I would say, a very modest request, but for some reason or other it was deemed to be inappropriate or excessive.

When you look at the bill here, Bill 3, we are very generous with our esteemed judges. When we look at what's going on in Tourism, Parks and Recreation and we look at what's requested in Transportation, whenever you look at the big scheme of things, with a $40 billion budget these are modest requests. But are they needed?

Now, getting back to this government's notion that they're going to have with Bill 1 a new way of doing business, a new way of doing budgets, it's sort of a shame that the current Finance minister wouldn't be part of the Treasury Board discussions because I certainly would like to be a fly on the wall there, he and the current Minister of Energy discussing what is needed and what is not needed in provincial expenditures. [interjection] It's interesting. The whip seems to think that everything is under control over there, so we'll have to accept his comment.

When you look at what is potentially to be saved in the fiscal plan for this year, Mr. Chairman, it is a lot less than what is proposed and promoted with Bill 1. There were examples there – I could be wrong; please correct me if I am – of between 5 and 8 per cent where there would be efficiencies created. I did some rough calculations on this, and what is being proposed in in-house savings in the current budget is not even close to 1 per cent. So I'm going to do some more digging around and get some details on that.

I'm not certain that this current government will ever be able to manage this province's finances. I'm just not certain. With oil at a hundred dollars a barrel a lot of problems can be solved, but if oil was to go down in price, if the spread between west Texas intermediate and Brent North Sea crude was to get wider, then we could have some issues and some problems here.

Natural gas in America is another thing that we must follow with interest, and the production of shale gas. It's only six or seven years ago when 70 per cent of nonrenewable resource revenue was coming from natural gas, and that has gone down significantly. It's not in single digits, but it's close. It's close. We have to be very, very careful. We have to realize the volatility of these price swings for natural gas, conventional crude oil, and bitumen and synthetic crude.

Now, one of the things that was suggested to me – and perhaps the Minister of Finance has already been thinking about this – is separating, and it should be separated, the amount that we collect in drilling rights for oil and gas leases and for licences in the north to mine bitumen. Perhaps we should set that aside. It fluctuates, recently $700 million to $900 million. It has spiked up, and it's anticipated that at the end of March it will be well over $3.4 billion this year, so it's a sizable amount of money. There are those that suggest that it should be invested, that it should be saved, and I certainly would agree with them.

This budget is just like Bill 3, Mr. Chairman. It's all about spending money. It has nothing to do about saving money for future generations. It's all about spending; it's not about saving. What this government, this Progressive Conservative Party does best is spend money. Does it spend it wisely? I would have to say no.

In fact, in the time that I have left – I'm really glad they're not on here: Horse Racing Alberta.

Dr. Taft: Yeah, $26 million.

4:10

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, $26 million. My math: over 10 years they have received over $392 million in grants. These are grants. In the public accounts you can look at them. They're grants. They are classified as grants in the public accounts, so I'm going to accept them as grants.

As far as gaming revenue, the horse-racing industry is producing, I think, 2 per cent of total revenue. It used to be over 20 per cent. I don't think anybody subsidized buggy whips when they were in production. It was the market. The people decided whether they wanted them or not. The same thing applies with horse racing, you know, those blue and orange silks that are on these horses. I think the public is telling you something. They're not interested. They've moved on to other forms of entertainment, yet we persist. I would use this as an example of a government that loves to spend but has a hard job saving.

What could we use that $392 million for? I can think of a lot of things that we could use that money for. We could use it for a school lunch program, not only for five or six schools in central Edmonton but schools across the province. How far on an annual basis would $26 million go with a school lunch program? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has probably got that right at the top of his head or on the tip of his tongue.

Dr. Taft: It would eliminate school hunger.

Mr. MacDonald: It would eliminate school hunger. I'm confident that the hon. member is right.

For $392 million how many long-term care beds could have been constructed over the last decade or at least created spaces where doctors, if needed, could transfer patients from the hospital to a long-term care facility, a public facility? That would be another example.

Four hundred million dollars would come in really handy for libraries. Four hundred million dollars would come in really well in Fort McMurray. Fort McMurray is the economic engine for the entire province and for a lot of places in the rest of Canada, but it lacks basic infrastructure needs. I'm told that there are still rush hour problems in Fort McMurray in the morning and in the evening that would rival both Chicago and New York. [interjection] This hon. member knows his community very, very well. In fact, that $392 million: a wee bit of that would have satisfied the need for a long-term care facility in Fort McMurray.

The Deputy Chair: Through the chair.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. And we're talking about elections. Mr. Chairman, it'll be interesting to see what happens in Calgary-West. I understand – and this is completely off the topic; I know that – there is going to be a hat with three names in it, and the Premier is going to draw one name out of the hat, and that person is going to carry the blue and orange colours.

Mr. Liepert: We'll see. We'll see.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, just to remind you that relevance is a long revered tradition in this House. Relevance.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. You're absolutely right, and I stand corrected. Those hon. gentlemen across the way have been distracting me. I apologize.

Now, Mr. Hughes. If Mr. Hughes was the name of a horse and this horse was subsidized by an initiative from Horse Racing Alberta and the owner was an elite, glitterati Conservative . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hate to interrupt; however, pursuant to Standing Order 64(4) I am compelled to now put the following question forward: does the committee approve Bill 3, that being the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2012?

[Motion carried]

The Deputy Chair: The committee is now compelled to immediately rise and report.

[Mr. Zwobdesky in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 3.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? Concurrence has been given.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 2

Education Act

[Adjourned debate February 16: Ms Woo-Paw]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour to speak to Bill 2, the Education Act, because truly it is the foundation of our province when it comes to the importance of educating our young people. I also say that as an educator, someone who has taught in the high school system as well as in the university system, but probably even more importantly speaking today to this bill as a father of a young son who is just four and will be going to kindergarten next year.

The importance of this bill. I want to say that in reading the bill, there are many things in the bill that I actually like in terms of not only thinking for the future – that is important, and it's something that I have not often seen from this government, certainly in other ministries like Finance and places like that, certainly in Health. But I do say that I commend the authors of this bill because I think it is important, and I say that first as a father of a youngster who will be going to kindergarten next year.

Now, I also would like to touch base on the importance of a Wildrose position on important initiatives because I believe that, as you know, Mr. Speaker, there's apparently going to be a provincial election within the next couple of weeks or the next month or so. I want to talk about our next generation. In terms of our next generation, as most teachers and parents well know, the traditional classroom model of teachers lecturing students of the same age is dated. This system often results in gifted students who have potential restricted by peers who may not learn as quickly while at the same time it has to be an inclusive system.

I do believe that, fortunately, emerging technologies in teaching methods – I certainly applaud the teachers within all of our schools across Alberta and specifically, of course, our teachers in Fort McMurray for the excellent work that they do in educating our youth. I'm very proud to say as the MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, the oil sands capital of the world, and also as its former mayor and city councillor that it's so important that all of us and our communities contribute.

Now, I find this interesting, though, that in a city of over 110,000 the former minister of health thought that someone that's 103 years old could wait till she's 108 years old, five more years, when he cancelled the long-term care facility. That was really unfortunate. In fact, I will say that I'm sad to report to this House that I was asked by the family to be a pallbearer at her funeral as she just had passed away recently, having, of course, lived a very good life of over 103 years, but she died in a hospital in an acute-care bed.

Of course, the things that I was fighting for with the then minister of health two years ago from the gibberish he was providing me was truly to say: let's honour our seniors; let's honour the people that built this province. I am saddened that I was not able to at that point provide this senior with the long-term care that many other Albertans do enjoy. Of course, there are many communities that still do not have a long-term care facility, and I'm saddened by the fact that our city of over a hundred thousand . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I wonder if I could just remind you and other members that we're actually debating Bill 2, the Education Act. If you could please relate your speech to that. Just as a reminder.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. I'm so glad because I will now bridge it back to the future of our youth and the importance of the wisdom we learn from our seniors because that is life-long learning, learning with our seniors. Of course, I actually think our seniors in long-term care can even be enhanced teachers of building on that. To anyone in here who's laughing because of the fact that Fort McMurray doesn't have a long-term care centre, I can tell you that's an enhancement to the education of our youth, which is so important.

I would like to turn for a moment, though, Mr. Speaker, to something that is equally important, and that's children in our system who require special-needs support. The Wildrose on the Education Act believes that thousands of Alberta parents have children with special learning needs, and we believe as the Wildrose that it's absolutely critical that we ensure that these students and their parents are provided with the necessary funding to address these challenges as early as possible in a child's development. Failure to do so can really have catastrophic consequences for the child and the child's family and perhaps could result in even more massive costs to the Alberta taxpayer down the road.

That's why a Wildrose government takes the approach of not only being down the road, as I indicated earlier, on some of the things in this Education Act, but we want to be around the corner in terms of visioning for the future. Being around the corner, I know, is something that the Minister of Finance will never understand, but I will say that I am very pleased by the fact that so many people in here share my view of being not only down the road when it comes to education but also around the corner. That is futuristic. That is visionary. That's clearly something that we in the Wildrose believe is so important.

Often special-needs funding is difficult to assess, I think, with parents and teachers having a very limited say in how it's best utilized. In fact, in most cases parents will want to work with their child's school to include their student in a regular classroom when proper support is provided. Inclusive education: that's a term that I think perhaps members of this Assembly are not aware of. Not everyone; some are. But inclusive education is so important. It means that youngsters who have special needs are not put out in a portable at the end of the school, like 20 years ago. That is very important.

I will say that some parents may choose a different option, and this choice should be respected as well. Parents should be respected in the choices they make for their children. Each special-needs student is unique and should in partnership with parents and with our schools be considered and supported accordingly.

I want to be able to say here today that, you know, as we go forward, I believe that it's so important that we have new, emerging technologies. Something that in my community I'm very proud of, in fact, not only from an educational perspective but from the impact it rolls over on industry, is the technology of 30 years that has been grown in Fort McMurray in oil sands development, something that the Minister of Finance will benefit from in the future by the bitumen royalty, that will help continue to fund our education systems.

It's important, though, with that bitumen helping education that you continue to pay the goose that is laying the golden eggs. I do believe that from the goose in this situation, as indicated in the budget, came of course the golden eggs of the bitumen and what is coming out of my community of Fort McMurray. I can say that the examples I've used from an education perspective as well as the wisdom of seniors, who have built this province in teaching not only your children but, actually, teaching other middle-aged and older people, is the wisdom that we want to continue to respect and something that the Wildrose will always respect.

Mr. Speaker, I believe and I know that those who are teachers in this Assembly, the Speaker himself, are very familiar with the importance of education as a building block of our society. That is so important. It's unfortunate that some members, not all – in fact, most of the members on the front bench I see are nodding in agreement. There's usually just one who is not, who's got his back turned to me. What a surprise in that. He clearly does not understand the value of education, but he's keen as the Minister of Finance to take the bitumen that will be the dollars that are necessary to be able to fund future educational projects. That in itself is something that is so important.

Certainly, I will say that there are some people I will miss, and there are others that I will never miss. I will not go into any other detail on that, Mr. Speaker, because we're talking about education, and education is something that is so important. Clearly, I can say that the more we grow our brain from the wisdom of seniors, the wisdom of our teachers, and the wisdom of our neighbours, it is so important as well.

Mr. Speaker, I think there are some things in this act that they are getting right, and the Wildrose has always said: we want to get it right, not the second time or the third time but the first time. I'm very proud of a Wildrose government, that would strengthen our K to 12 education system by implementing a variety of reforms that will enhance our Education Act, empowering individual public schools and Catholic schools and charter schools by implementing funding models that send per-student operational and maintenance funding directly to the school each student attends. Individual schools will then be able to determine how they allocate those resources most appropriately; for instance, having more teachers and new equipment to help our students and dealing with special needs so that there is the adequate support to go with students so they are included in our education system.

I also would like to say that the Wildrose on the education front wants to establish multiple pilot projects across the province where open enrolment in tuition-free public, Catholic, and public charter schools are permitted to opt into a competency-based learning and assessment education model. This is something that, clearly, is not just down the road; it's around the corner. We believe in that, and you'll be hearing more about that. We also believe that we want to reform and grant public, Catholic, and public charter schools more flexibility to offer specialized curriculum tracks in the trades, arts, music, physical education, and business.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that protecting a parent's right to choose what school their child attends is so important in public and Catholic as well as public charter, private, or home-schooling. We want to continue to ensure that the current Alberta education practice of permitting a fixed percentage of regular per-pupil funding to directly follow a student continues. It is so important. Again, that is a choice that should be determined by the parent as to where they believe it will help the students of Alberta. That is important.

Most importantly, to conclude, Mr. Speaker, as a teacher and someone who has taught with my wife at a college and at a university, we want to continue to work with our teachers. Truly, a teacher is one who is well qualified with the educational professionals to continue to replace the dated and inadequate provincial achievement tests with a new standardized assessment model. We the Wildrose believe that this is, again, being futuristic.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for listening this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much, hon. member.

Hon. members of the House, I want to wish all of you a very happy Family Day weekend.

Noting Standing Order 4(2), I now declare the House adjourned until Tuesday afternoon at 1:30.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m. to Tuesday, February 21, at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 27th Legislature - 5th Session (2012)

Activity to February 16, 2012

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills with lower numbers are Government Bills. Bills numbered Pr1, etc., are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If it comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned a chapter number until the conclusion of the fall sittings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, February 21, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As we gather to begin a new week in our Assembly, we are reminded of the blessings which have been bestowed upon Alberta, and we give thanks for this bounty. May we conduct ourselves in our deliberations in ways that honour our province and all of its people. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we'll now participate in the singing our national anthem. We'll be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau, and I would invite all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a group of 37 students from Patricia Heights elementary school and their teacher, Keri Clifford, teacher assistant Margie Schneider, and René Allen. They are sitting in the public gallery. I would like to ask them to rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House 34 brilliant young students from Norwood elementary school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Ms Judith Brouwer, as well as Jeanna Baty, Bernadette McMechan, and Ms Julie Walsh. I would ask them now to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mr. Zwodesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very humbled to introduce to you and through you some family members of Mr. Vern Davis, who passed away on February 1, 2012. As many here will know, Vern Davis was an Alberta hockey icon, which included being awarded the Guinness world record for the world's largest hockey tournament on ice, a legacy that I will expand on shortly. I will ask each family member who is seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, to rise as I call their names and to remain standing so that we can applaud them all as one: son Darrell and his wife, Karen Davis, son Brian Davis, and Vern's ever-loving wife and companion of more than 62 years, Maria Davis. Please join me in welcoming this outstanding family.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. The first one I'll do is a group called the Harmony Dialogue Group, who are certainly no strangers to us and have been here before. We have with us today Mr. Ibrahim Cin, Mr. Taner Tunalı, Mr. Alim Koc, Saki Cansev, and Muhammed Cetin. I would ask them all now to rise and receive the traditional greeting of the Assembly.

My second introduction today is a group of 24 students and three adults from one of my favourite schools in Edmonton-Calder, l'École St. Angela. With us today is teacher Mrs. Carmel Perry and parents Mrs. Sofia Russo and Mrs. Videlyn Castro. I'd ask them also to rise now and receive the traditional greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly five members of the Alberta Cattle Feeders' Association. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise as I call their names: Brent Chaffee, chairman; Doug Price, past chair; Martin Zuidhof, director; John Lawton, director; and Bryan Walton, CEO. They're visiting here today to meet with members of rural caucus, and I would ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a young man who is a friend of mine, Mr. Robert Sallows, who has come up here from Calgary. We met earlier today with the Minister of Health and Wellness regarding setting up an organ donor registry. Mr. Sallows was a recipient of a double lung transplant back in 2005, and he has been thriving ever since. He's a recent graduate at the University of Calgary in the commerce program. He is well known also in the political arena, and many of my colleagues will recognize him as a long-time member of the Progressive Conservative youth association. I'd ask that Robert Sallows please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a friend from Lethbridge. Phyllis Pylypow has been an acquaintance since the days I served on city council, not quite ancient history. Phyllis served as the administrative assistant for 19 years for the Green Acres Foundation, a foundation that is for seniors' housing which also provides care and personal service. She was also the administrative assistant in the central office of the provincial association for senior citizens' homes in Alberta. She served on many city committees and also regional boards such as southern Alberta water management and the sugar beet industry during their troubles in the '90s. She is now retired, and her wish is granted to visit this esteemed Assembly. I would ask Phyllis to stand and be recognized.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly three special guests from the Highwood constituency. Today I have two of my grandchildren visiting the Legislature, Quinn and Chloe Groeneveld. Quinn George, by the way, is a grade 6 student in Blackie school and plays hockey for the Blackie Tigers. Chloe also attends Blackie school and has spent most of her life at the rink either cheering on both of her brothers or participating in the CanSkate program. She is the ultimate rink rat. Today they are accompanied by Gramma Judy, who told me I was not to call her the love of my life or my best supporter or anything silly like that because after 47 years of marriage most people would assume that. I'm very proud that both Quinn and Chloe urged their grandma to bring them to the Legislature for a tour and question period before hitting the fun spots of Edmonton. I would ask my family to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

1:40

The Speaker: Are there others?

Then join with me in wishing two hon. members a happy birthday: the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. Happy birthday to both of you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Vern Davis

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned a few minutes ago, Mr. Vern Davis was an outstanding hockey icon in our community. It was 50 years ago that Vern and Eric Reilly collaborated to create a new hockey tournament for kids in Edmonton, one that would allow young players in Edmonton to play teams from all over the city, including travelling to all four corners of Edmonton, something that was unheard of in the 1960s. Vern became a volunteer member of the tournament committee, a position that he served valiantly for 49 consecutive years.

This phenomenon, which we now know as Quikcard Edmonton Minor Hockey Week, is a week-long tournament that features over 700 games with more than 500 teams participating and over 6,000 young hockey players, boys and girls. Vern's and Eric's vision was that everyone would come out and support and volunteer for the kids, and they did. They also made special rules that ensured that every child played at least two shifts per period. The growth and popularity of this tournament is now legendary, and in 2003 Vern Davis was given the Guinness Book of World Records' award for helping organize the largest ice hockey tournament in the world right here in Edmonton.

Vern was also the sports director for the Westmount Community League and the bantam hockey director and secretary for the Northwest Community Athletic Association. He also helped form the Little Richard hockey league, the Edmonton Minor Hockey Association awards banquet, and the junior C hockey league. In 2008 Mr. Vern Davis was inducted into the Edmonton Sports Hall of Fame.

Mr. Speaker, I knew Vern Davis as a hockey associate and mentor. I credit him for helping to inspire my own involvement in hockey, and that includes my role as a hockey referee for many years. In fact, I recall refereeing seven games three weeks ago for Quikcard Edmonton Minor Hockey Week right here in town.

On behalf of all the members here and on behalf of hundreds of thousands of young hockey players, officials, coaches, other referees, and all the hockey moms and dads, many of whom you see right here before you, we say thank you, Maria, to you, to your husband, and to your family for the outstanding contributions that Vern Davis made on and off the ice.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Tribute to Staff

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is one of those jobs that would be impossible to do without the support and assistance of a lot of unsung heroes behind the scenes, and I want to take this opportunity to publicly thank the people who have been so invaluable in helping me do my job since I first got elected in 2004.

First, thank you to all the volunteers and members of our constituency association. I guess I should say in this case "associations" as there have been three of them over the course of my political journey. While not every member and volunteer has followed me on that darn fool idealistic crusade, a surprising number have. I want to thank you all for your understanding and your support as I did what I felt and you agreed I must do in order to properly serve my constituents.

Thank you to the folks in my constituency office: my executive assistant, Michelle Bodnar; caseworkers extraordinaire Ruth Huber and Gwyneth Midgley; legislative assistant Jacquie Lycka and researcher Evan Galbraith in the Alberta Party caucus office for being my diggers, my doers, my frequent miracle workers, my eyes, my ears, my brains more often than I'd like to admit, and my counsel.

To those who have moved on almost always to better paying jobs, Amanda Kriaski, Terry Rahbek-Nielson, Evan Woolley, and Andrew MacGregor as well as summer interns Janet Hails, Ana Cleveston, Bil Hetherington, Jeff Homer and John Jay Atwood: it was a pleasure and an honour to have each of you along for parts of the journey.

Thank you as well to Glenn Hughes and Nik Atwal here in Edmonton for your help in years past. And thank you to the entire staff of the Legislative Assembly Office. To my two incredible campaign managers, Donn Lovett in 2004 and Barry Davidson in 2008, I have been very fortunate to have you both on my team.

To our kids, Scott and Jennifer, thanks for always being interested in what dad's been up to even as you've begun to make your way in and your mark on this world.

To Martha, who knocked me off my feet for the first time 29 years ago next month and who continues to amaze me, I don't think I will ever understand why you went along with this, but thank you for believing in me. I could never have done this without you. I would never have done this without your blessing, and I'm looking forward to being home.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

International Mother Language Day

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [Remarks in Mandarin] I just said in my mother language, Chinese Mandarin, that I rise today to acknowledge an important occasion, International Mother Language Day. This event was proclaimed by UNESCO in 1999 to commemorate the deaths of students in Bangladesh in 1952 who were protesting to have Bengali accepted as an official language.

Today International Mother Language Day is celebrated as a day to promote the preservation and protection of all languages used by peoples of the world. Although this occasion originated in a country far from here, it has significance in every part of the world, including Alberta.

Language is an important part of any culture. It enables us to describe, discuss, and understand the world around us and to connect to our heritage and to others. While it may seem that languages can divide us, what this day seeks to demonstrate is that we can be united by our diversity and by our appreciation for the beauty and value that each language has to offer.

Mr. Speaker, preserving one's mother language is of the utmost importance, and through programs such as the aboriginal language program our government is working to ensure that this happens.

It is also valuable to learn other languages. In doing so, you open up new opportunities to enjoy literature, art, and music and to connect and share experiences with people from different cultures.

As Alberta continues to expand its relationships beyond our borders, our respect for and knowledge of a number of world languages will help us to build strong international connections.

On this day, International Mother Language Day, I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I feel very fortunate to live in a province that respects and values the diverse languages of its people.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Health Quality Council Review

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow the Health Quality Council will deliver its much-anticipated report into the bullying and intimidation of health care professionals in Alberta, who, I've often said, are the glue that holds our broken health care system together. I take this issue very seriously as I have spoken with several doctors too afraid to go public about the despicable bullying tactics of this government and its health superboard.

A few brave souls like Dr. Tony Magliocco, formerly of the Tom Baker cancer centre in Calgary and now practising in Florida, who have been driven out of this province have come forward with their own personal stories of being threatened and bullied by this government.

I am optimistic that tomorrow's report from the Health Quality Council will shed even more light on this issue and further expose this government's shameful treatment of our health care workers. What I am less optimistic about, Mr. Speaker, is whether this defend-the-status-quo government will do anything about it.

This government has a dreadful track record of actually implementing the Health Quality Council recommendations over the years. For example, last year the Health Quality Council put forward 18 recommendations to improve critical medevac services in Alberta. After quote, unquote, accepting the majority of them, here we are nearly a full year later with none of them acted upon. Not only is this inaction a slap in the face to the Health Quality Council and the work they do to improve health care in our province; it continues to put Alberta families at risk. By refusing to act on these recommendations, our health care system is falling even further into disarray and dysfunction.

Mr. Speaker, tomorrow Albertans will hopefully find out the full extent of this government's bullying and intimidation of health care workers. They deserve to find out, but they also deserve action to fix the problems identified and concrete steps to make sure they don't happen again. While I'm sure the Health Quality Council will come through for Albertans, I'm not counting on this government to do the same.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Services Labour Negotiations

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope you had a wonderful Family Day weekend.

Last week our front-line health care workers reached a breaking point and staged a wildcat strike after a year of being ignored in their request for a measly 3 per cent pay raise, which pales in comparison to the golden parachutes for dismissed AHS executives, who have run our health care system into the ground. Could the Premier please explain how this government has the money for payouts, cabinet tours, and caucus retreats but not the modest 42 cents an hour for some of the hardest working Albertans in our health care system?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Redford: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the incident last Thursday was certainly unfortunate. As a government what we are most concerned about is ensuring patient safety. What we know is that at the end of last week there was a resolution to that with respect to binding arbitration, which, as I understand it, at no point in time in the year previous had the negotiating table asked for. I understand that will now proceed, and we'll look forward to the outcome.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why is the Premier forcing one set of health care workers into binding arbitration while the government continues to stonewall other health care workers like the membership of HSAA and the Alberta Medical Association? Should we expect union-busting after the election?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we have a number of labour organizations in this province that represent different employees in health care and other places. As a government we are continually negotiating with all of those public-sector bargaining units in entirely good faith. Each of those negotiations are at a different point in time. There is certainly no intention to do anything other than bargain in good faith, and we are doing that.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why is it that the Premier talks about publicly funded health care but refuses to sign contracts with the hard-working men and women who publicly deliver health care? Is the government planning on privately delivering health care after the election?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, as I said in my second answer, we are in the middle of a number of discussions with a number of public-sector bargaining units. This government is fully committed to publicly funded health care.

The other thing, though, that we have to do as a government is ensure that we are providing the best services possible to Albertans in a responsible way, representing the interests of taxpayers, and we will always do that.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health System Reform

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The keys to health care are publicly delivering health care and publicly funding health care. The Health Quality Council of Alberta is set to release its report on this government's failure to address ER wait times, cancer care outcomes, and physician intimidation. The preliminary report that came out last summer was so scathing that instead of acting, the Premier made a deliberate decision to delay calling the public inquiry she had promised in order to protect her party's prospects in the upcoming election. Why has the Premier not kept her word by continuing to stonewall and delay a call for a truly independent public judicial inquiry?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that last fall in this very Legislature we passed legislation that will ensure that there will be an independent inquiry. We have very clearly put on the record that we are looking forward to the report tomorrow so that we can set the terms of reference for that inquiry and get on with what we have fully committed to and which we intend to honour before the election.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of yet another dire warning by Dr. Paul Parks does the Premier actually believe that a couple of pilot projects and a whopping 30 long-term care beds in Strathmore and throwing a few million dollars at home care is going to fix our entire province's health care system?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is making assumptions as to how we believe health care should be funded and supported. My understanding: we tabled a budget two weeks ago that had, as I recall, a 7 per cent increase in funding to health care. This characterization that there are one or two things that will fix health care is certainly not the case. We've never claimed that it would be, and that's not going to be the solution. Albertans know that, and that's why in estimates in this House on the 6th of March there will be three hours where we can have this discussion with the minister of health and the hon. member to determine that we know where to go with this.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, this hon. member just asked legitimate questions on how to actually fix health care. Why won't the Premier own up to this government's abysmal record and admit that the minister and the cabinet have no clue how to fix our health care system and just ask for help from the very front-line experts that the government refuses to pay?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we have a system to administer health care in this province that is a partnership between health care professionals, health care administrators, and people that are involved in the public service in government. That is the partnership that will fix health care.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electricity Prices

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier recently said that she doesn't like to be lectured, but even the Premier must be taken to school from time to time. The constant dodging of our questions about electricity deregulation shows that the Premier, clearly, has a lot to learn. The Premier has even started repeating the mantra of the Energy minister that regulated electricity prices in Alberta will somehow lead to massive public debt. Does the Premier realize that Alberta's regulated electricity system operated very well for decades without any public debt?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you that when I look at the financial record of this government for the last 15 to 20 years, one of the things we can be most proud of is the fact that Premier Klein ensured that we didn't have public debt. Part of the decision that we made at that time was to move to a system that would ensure that we wouldn't continue to incur public debt with respect to electricity. As we move forward, that's one of the things that we can be the most proud of for future citizens of this province.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, when I look at the government's record, the last I saw, it was $100 oil, and we've got a social deficit and a financial deficit. Will the Premier admit that this government's decision to change the regulated rate option formula from a steadier one-year rolling average to a volatile monthly formula has resulted in hard-working Albertans being misinformed about their options, being gouged on their power bills? Come on, Premier.

Ms Redford: We have had a fair amount, a significant amount, Mr. Speaker, of public information, certainly, in more than the last month with respect to how people can make decisions with respect to their power prices. Now, there is no doubt that this is a difficult time, when consumers who aren't on contracts are paying higher power bills, and that's unfortunate. This is something that MLAs in this House, on our side of the House, have heard, and we are certainly concerned about this. We will be addressing this. As I said last week, part of what we need to do is to ensure that we're addressing this in a comprehensive way that allows consumers to have choice and to ensure that power prices can be reduced.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What the people of Alberta need are good decisions from this government. Why won't this Premier show leadership and stop trying to bamboozle Albertans into believing that corporate greed is good for them and actually protect ordinary Albertans, parents of these children in the halls right here today, from being gouged on their power bills?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, last week received a report with respect to the importance of having an electricity grid that's going to allow our economy to develop. We very clearly said last week that we will be responding to that in a comprehensive manner forthwith, and we will.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Landowner Private Property Rights

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For two years angry landowners have packed town halls and high school gyms across Alberta to voice their outrage over bills 19, 24, 36, and 50, laws that trample on their property rights and revoke their entitlement to full compensation and the courts. Most recently it was this government's own Property Rights Task Force that heard from the landowners. At one particular hearing attendees chanted: repeal these bills. Today we learned that the government's response to these landowners is to improve engagement. That's insulting. To the Premier. Your task force was a sham. Why won't you do the right thing and repeal these bills?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, there's been some very good public discussion right across this province with respect to what has to happen in relation to land-use planning in this province. Certainly, very important to this government is to ensure that people's property rights are protected. We've said all along that we have to be very clear with respect to consultation, with respect to compensation, and with respect to access to the courts, and we will ensure that happens.

Mr. Hinman: It's not true, Mr. Speaker.

Again to the Premier: given that the January 16th edition of the Rocky View Weekly reported "the call to repeal the four land bills was 'the overarching piece of advice'" that the Property Rights Task Force heard, how can you possibly claim to be listening to Albertans? Why do you refuse to listen to Albertans and to repeal these damaging and destructive bills?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of reports with respect to discussions that have taken place across this province. I'm not minimizing the fact that there are Albertans who do believe that it's appropriate to repeal the legislation. But one of the things that we will have seen already from the report that was released today is that there are also Albertans who understand the importance of integrated land-use planning, of balancing the interests of all Albertans, and we will ensure that that happens.

Mr. Hinman: This adds a whole new meaning to in one ear and out the other. I can't believe it.

Again to the Premier: given that you're clearly going to keep ignoring landowners, who overwhelming want you to repeal these bills, will you at least apologize to landowners for wasting their time and to taxpayers for wasting their money on this utter sham of a task force? It's insulting to them.

2:00

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, it's fascinating to me that when we look at the public discussion around this issue, when we even look at some of the legislation that's being brought forward by other parties to perhaps try to correct the situation, what this hon. member is proposing in his private member's bill isn't even what he's advocating today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. [interjections] The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has the floor.

General Hospital Long-term Care Centre

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning a senior named Bev Munro told a story of neglect and maltreatment, of living in an endless construction area with leaky roofs and dangerous elevators. She told a story of a government that talks about helping seniors but ignores them instead. To the Premier: why have you left Bev Munro and thousands like her in such deplorable and appalling conditions?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, with respect to specific cases I think it's very important that we understand that as government moves ahead, we will do everything that we can to ensure that vulnerable Albertans are protected. In this House we have to know that while there are people who sometimes end up in unfortunate circumstances, we have to ensure that we can determine why that is the case. I am not going to presume that we can generalize with respect to the comments the hon. member has made. I'm certainly very concerned about the fact that anyone might be living in difficult circumstances, because in this province it's not necessary. I'm sure that in the supplementary the hon. minister will be able to provide more information.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Let's get specific, then. Given that Bev Munro and the other residents of the General hospital long-term care centre were supposed to have been moved to the Villa Caritas facility but could not be because the government pulled the rug out from them at the last minute, will the Premier explain why this government has denied Bev Munro and her fellow residents a safe and comfortable home?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While I'm not familiar with the specific case that the hon. member has raised, if he would care to forward the particulars to me, I'd be very pleased to investigate it and get back to him.

What I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, is that no government has a bigger capital infrastructure program for health than the province of Alberta. We have a commitment of $5 billion. Much of this money is going to build continuing care facilities. We are well on track to meet our target of 5,300 spaces over five years. I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the residents that use geriatric mental health care at Villa Caritas need that service, too.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government's wilful ignorance of this situation is disgusting. The serious problems at the General long-term care facility were first made public over a year ago, and at that time residents and the public were told the problems would be fixed in a couple of days. The seniors have been waiting ever since. Why does this government allow our seniors to live in such deplorable conditions? It's a shame.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the facility in question is actually a facility operated by Covenant Health under contract with Alberta Health Services. I have no difficulty in conceding that it is one of the older long-term care facilities in Alberta. In addition to building new spaces, we have invested heavily in refurbishing old spaces. We will continue to open spaces, and we will continue to ensure that those seniors who are waiting in old facilities or acute-care facilities have the first opportunity to move to those new spaces.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Government-owned Infrastructure

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Alberta government continues to build much-needed infrastructure across Alberta, I've been approached by contractors who suggest that many of the specs, or guidelines, that we use in designing these building are far above what the industry standard would be. In fact, they're saying that the specs may be being developed by companies who have an interest as they work on a percentage. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. Can he assure us that this is not the case and what steps he may be taking to ensure that we're really getting what we need and not what someone else would want?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. What I can tell you is that, of course, when we do projects like long-term care facilities, the functional plans are done through Alberta Health Services and the health care providers. My ministry delivers the building of those facilities. Through our technical services branch we ensure that those buildings and the specifications fully comply with today's building codes and the building codes for health facilities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We also seem to be in a bit of a hurry to demolish some of the old buildings we have as a government when, in fact, they may not be appropriate to be used as they were, but they may have an appropriate use other than that. What policy can the minister update us on with regard to demolishing current government buildings?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, another good idea. I think that any time we have the opportunity to leverage existing infrastructure, we need to be looking at that. My department works with Alberta Health Services with respect to long-term care facilities, in particular, but with Education for education facilities and Justice for courthouses, et cetera. Any chance we have to make sure that we're utilizing existing infrastructure and finding other uses for it, we want to make sure we're doing that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then I would like to invite the minister to meet with a group of very concerned citizens in Lloydminster who would like to certainly get their opinion to him on the future of the existing Dr. Cooke. Would he commit that he would meet with them before it is demolished?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'd be happy to do that. You know, since I became Minister of Infrastructure, I've travelled across the province and visited many facilities, and I'm getting a handle on what we're building and how everything is progressing. I'm happy to arrange for my department to meet with the folks out there, the stakeholders, or to make the trip myself.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Review of Medical Examiner Cases

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Medical pathology in Alberta appears to be suffering from general problems both in Alberta Justice and in Alberta Health. Several reviews and investigations in Calgary and one in Edmonton concerning both medical-legal autopsies and cancer diagnoses have been raised. Last week it was announced that pathologist Dr. Evan Matshes' homicide autopsies are being reviewed for quote, making unreasonable conclusions, end quote, in very serious medical-legal cases. To the minister: why are not all of his case files, including the autopsies he conducted at Calgary Lab Services since leaving the medical office, being investigated?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to address that question. Of course, the work of the Chief Medical Examiner's office is very important. It's integral to the administration of justice in Alberta. Whenever a question arises, we take it seriously and we investigate. That's all that's happening here. No conclusions have been reached.

We're very deliberate and determined that we're going to maintain the integrity of this system, and that's why the investigation is ongoing.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, he didn't answer the question. I'll try it again with the health minister. The quotation from the consultants is that this man made unreasonable conclusions. End quote. Why is Calgary Lab Services, a wholly owned subsidiary of Alberta Health Services, hiring somebody Alberta Justice is reviewing?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the hon. member will understand that I'm not at privilege to discuss the specifics of an individual pathologist's case on the floor of the House. I'm sure he would not want me to do that.

What I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, is that I have inquired, and I have been assured that the physician in question is not involved in any activities that would jeopardize the quality or safety of the services he's providing.

Dr. Swann: Well, that's interesting, Mr. Speaker, because when pathologists do their job, they're making diagnoses. Is that what you're saying? He's not making any more diagnoses?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, same answer. I'm not going to stand on the floor of the House and discuss the particulars of the professional practice of one pathologist. Quality and patient safety are not at issue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Property Rights Public Consultation

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the government released its report Engagement with Albertans with the comments and feedback received by the Property Rights Task Force through online submissions, e-mails, and province-wide open houses. My question is to the Minister of Environment and Water. What were the biggest concerns related to property rights that were brought up by Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I first want to start by thanking all the Albertans who were part of the consultation process. It was wonderful to be able to go to their communities and hear directly from them the main issues that were of concern to them. There were four main areas that were of concern. Albertans wanted to make sure that we develop legislation that relates to property rights, that there was good consultation. They wanted to make sure that there's access to the courts for them if that's so needed. They wanted to make sure that if we need to use their land for the greater good, they're fully compensated. The other thing that they told us is that they wanted to have someone that was there for them and that would advocate for them.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Now that the government has received feedback from Albertans, what are the next steps for the government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The next step is that we will be putting legislation here in the House that will deal with a property rights advocate and will deal with the issues that have been raised by Albertans with regard to compensation, access to the courts, and how we consult with Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the same minister. What exactly will the property rights advocate do?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The advocate is there to do exactly what Albertans asked us to do. They asked us to be able to have someone there to advocate with them and for them, to talk to them when we talk about legislation, that would be there to help them on education but also if there were issues with regard to compensation or land issues that they would have someone that they felt they could go to to help them through the process. That is exactly what this legislation will do.

Funding for Private Schools

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, with the recent education consultations and initiatives as well as the controversies regarding some new school board policies the minister has reiterated numerous times his desire to improve openness and transparency at school board operations. To the Minister of Education: since private schools receive public funds, will the minister require private schools to follow the same rules that he institutes for our public school boards?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, most definitely. If the member cares to read the bill that's in front of this Legislature right now, the Education Act, it clearly speaks, actually, to the minister's overview of the business of private schools.

Mr. Hehr: It needs to be more clear on that, then. You're directing the school boards to put their stuff online in an open and transparent fashion. Will that be the same for private schools in this province?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, private schools are duly accountable. They're accountable for the Alberta Education dollars that they receive and how they expend them during their programming and any and all other monies that they may be raising. They are also registered as not-for-profit or for-profit agencies, so they are accountable in that way and transparent on both ends.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you. That was a little bit of a strange answer, so I'll ask the question again. The minister is directing boards like the Calgary school board to put their stuff online in an open and transparent way so that parents can take a look at what the board is actually spending their dollars on. Is he going to require private schools to be open and transparent in the same fashion by posting their information online?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, private school boards receive 70 per cent of the funding of public school boards. They will be equally accountable for that 70 per cent of dollars that they receive from taxpayers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Impact of Oil Sands Development

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recent article published in a prestigious scientific journal concludes that the impact of burning all of the economically viable proven reserves of Alberta's oil sands, all 170 billion barrels, would be negligible. Some critics might find this to be a hard pill to swallow. A question to the Minister of Environment and Water. Can she tell us how much of our total global emissions the oil sands currently emit?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First and foremost, the study is certainly welcome news because it is an independent and objective study by a world-leading climate scientist. As we know in this House and as we've said before – and I thank the hon. member for the question – one-tenth of 1 per cent of global emissions come from the oils sands. Although we know that still is a very small amount, we also know that we need to continue to do what we're doing, to continue on the path that Alberta is on with regard to the reductions in emissions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister. This author also concluded that notwithstanding the scientific findings, the report should not be considered a get-out-of-jail-free card as it relates to future development. To the same minister: does she take this to be a get-out-of-jail-free card in respect to oil sands development?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely not. We know that we are committed to making sure that we develop our oil sands in an environmentally responsible manner. We will continue to do that. We know that we will be a global energy leader, but we'll be a global environmental leader. We're committed to reaching our reductions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is for the Minister of Energy. How much coal and unconventional gas does Alberta have, and what's being done to ensure these resources are being developed responsibly?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to report that we have literally hundreds and hundreds of years of supply of both coal and unconventional gas. That's good news. It means energy security for Alberta, energy security for Canada, and energy security for all of North America. The other piece of that is the news that we are developing those resources in a very responsible and sustainable way. When it comes to coal, our coal plants are critical, supercritical. Now carbon capture and storage: we're setting a North American standard in that respect.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Problem Gambling

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Three years ago the projected number of problem gamblers here in Alberta was over 72,000. Over 19,000 wanted help for their gambling problems, but unfortunately less than 2,000 received treatment for their gambling problems. My first question is to the Minister of Finance. What happened to the other 17,000 problem gamblers who wanted help in Alberta?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think it should be pointed out that in about 45 minutes we'll have three hours to kind of have that discussion back and forth with the hon. member. I'm not going to answer the question that he asked because I cannot confirm that the preamble had any substance to it because this particular member happens to find a study somewhere that may or may not be relevant. We'll have that discussion in about 45 minutes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the minister's information this study, which you should read and all hon. members as well, was funded through Alberta Gaming Research, and you cannot weasel away. Why is this government failing to help the over 17,000 problem gamblers who are looking for treatment, but none is provided? Why are you failing them?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think we have to ensure that we clear the record here. I don't know of any particular instance where if someone has an addiction to gambling and seeks help, somehow we'd turn that individual away. We have some hundreds of millions of dollars in addictions funding in the ministry of health, and if the minister would like to supplement, I'd be happy to have that.

Mr. MacDonald: That, Mr. Speaker, is simply not true. Does this government consider a budget of $6 million adequate to meet the needs of 19,000 problem gamblers when . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member. [interjection] Hon. member, the camera is on me; it's not on you. Any questions dealing with the budget – and we did venture into dollars – will be dealt with at 3 o'clock this afternoon, which has been well advertised for a long period of time.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Organ and Tissue Donations

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, in the past five years 214 people have died waiting for organ transplants here in Alberta. This is the third-highest number amongst provinces. Organ and tissue donations are down, yet the need has never been higher. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why does this province not have an organ and tissue donor registry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for the question. It is true that across Canada organ and tissue donations have been in decline for the last few years. Here in Alberta we have raised this issue on several occasions. There have been reports produced, and the Alberta government until now has been working very closely with Canadian Blood Services to support them in the development of a national organ donor and tissue donor registry. CBS has provided the province with some very specific recommendations around the establishment of intent-to-donate registries, and we're in the midst of reviewing their recommendations.

Mr. Webber: Okay. Well, also to the same minister: while the national registry is being negotiated, what is being done here in Alberta to support organ and tissue donation in transplant surgery?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we budgeted $3 million in 2012-13, $8.2 million in 2013-14, and $9.6 million in 2014-15 to contribute to the national registry once the Canadian Blood Services' recommendations have been reviewed and adopted. What I will say is that I am concerned that Alberta also is doing everything we can within the province to get an online donor registry established. I'm committed to working with the hon. member to raise further awareness about this and to take some immediate steps to position Alberta to be able to take advantage of the national registry once it's operational.

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, hon. minister. That's great news.

My final question to you is: what can Albertans do, what can we do to make sure that our wishes or Albertans' wishes to be donors are fulfilled?

Mr. Horne: Well, currently, Mr. Speaker, when a family or an individual is in a situation and they wish to make clear their intent to donate, they may sign the back of their Alberta health care insurance registration card. That said, I think we do need to do more in order to promote both the need for organ and tissue donation and to further the work to develop an electronic registry for this province that will better equip us to take advantage of those who are willing to make the sacrifice in a time of need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Blood Alcohol Driving Sanctions

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a coaster that is being handed out to hundreds of restaurants and pubs around Alberta in protest of this Premier's poorly thought out .05 drinking legislation, which registers and seizes the vehicles of law-abiding Albertans but does nothing to punish those who are legally impaired. On one side it says: no to .05, repeal Bill 26, and drink responsibly.

The Speaker: The use of props in the Assembly is not appropriate.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. On one side it says to repeal Bill 26. On the back it says: say no to the PCs, no to the Premier, and vote responsibly. To the Solicitor General: why are you delaying enforcement of this law until after the election? Is it because the vast majority of Albertans don't want it?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I'll let the Minister of Transportation comment on that, but it really saddens me that this member trivializes the lives of 300 Albertans who have died since 1998 as a result of drivers between .05 and .08. Shame on him.

Mr. Anderson: A point of order on that disgusting answer.

To the minister. Given that the federal gun registry, which also attacked law-abiding Albertans, cost taxpayers billions to create and maintain and given that under your new drinking law you will have to likewise register thousands of law-abiding Albertans in a similar database, accessible by all of the different law enforcement agencies of this province, tell us, Minister: how much do you estimate your new .05 registry is going to cost taxpayers?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, this member talks about the gun registry. I want to talk about it as well because this government has a long history of opposing the gun registry, unlike their leader. I quote from September 24, 2010: "Smith Wants Provincial Registry." Shame on you.

An Hon. Member: You're a disgrace.

Mr. Anderson: You really are a disgrace, Member.

Mr. Denis: Point of order.

Mr. Anderson: Final question. Given that your government has not done any homework on this bill before passing it and given that the majority of Albertans don't want it and given that the .05 registry, like the gun registry, will do nothing to save lives but will instead punish law-abiding Albertans, will you adopt the Wildrose policy on this issue, repeal Bill 26, scrap the .05 registry, and use those savings to increase checkpoints and prosecutions of those that are actually killing people on the street? Will you actually do something to save lives instead of sitting in that chair and doing jack squat?

Mr. Denis: Point of order.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, it's absolutely unbelievable that the hon. member opposite has sat through the discussions of three readings and one Committee of the Whole and still does not know that .08 is still .08, .05 is still .05. There is no difference. It is irresponsible of an hon. member to stand up and say to Albertans and, really, what I would consider confuse the position of what this bill is.

The Speaker: We have three points of order arising out of that last exchange.

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Canada-European Union Trade Negotiations

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Countless times this government has allowed water markets to grow in Alberta. After failing to protect our most precious resource at home, this government is also failing to protect it on the world stage, leaving our water vulnerable to foreign investment. To the minister of intergovernmental affairs: given that the scarcity of water is a concern for all Albertans, especially in the south, how can the minister justify that the sale of water is part of the ongoing negotiations with the European Union?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure the hon. member opposite that there's no discussion with respect to the sale of water, certainly with respect to any agreement in Europe. I know the Minister of Environment and Water is going to have a conversation with Albertans about water, but we're certainly not involved in negotiations over water.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be tabling some documents to that effect later on.

To the same minister again: given that CETA will have significant impact on all Albertans for years to come, why did this government not get Albertans' input in regard to the impacts of this agreement?

Mr. Dallas: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've outlined earlier in this Assembly, we've been engaged in negotiations with the federal government right from the beginning of these discussions. We've had nine rounds of those discussions. They've been very productive. We've made no commitments to this point in terms of what Alberta would sign off on or not sign off on, and I'm very encouraged by the negotiations to date.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again: will this government step up the Premier's promise of more transparency in the government and make the Canada-EU trade agreement negotiations it has taken part in public?

Mr. Dallas: Well, let's be clear, Mr. Speaker. This is a negotiation between the European Union and the federal government. Obviously, we're delighted that we've been involved and asked to be at that table, as have all the provinces across Canada been involved in those negotiations. As I said, we've been very pleased with how those have progressed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Education of Mennonite Children from Mexico

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Southern Alberta has seen a very significant growth of students from out of country. The Mexican Mennonite student population in zone 6 school districts has bloomed to over 10,000 students, many of whom don't attend school on a regular basis. My question is to the Minister of Education. How long is it going to be before a regulation gets put in place that will prevent the congregation of dozens or hundreds of school-aged children in a home-schooling program where they are supervised by unqualified teenagers or in some cases by young mothers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me be perfectly clear. Every child in the province of Alberta not only deserves but has the right to quality education, and that does not exclude any group. As a matter of fact, the situation that has been brought to my attention not only by this hon. member, although I know he has been a strong advocate, but by others is being reviewed by my department as we're speaking. We are looking at strengthening policies and regulations to make sure that every child in every corner of this province, no matter who they are, receives the same internationally renowned high quality of education.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplementary to the same minister: in order to supervise these students, does the department regulation require that the supervisor be at least functionally literate?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, there are visits from the department from time to time as per the regulations, but as I said earlier, I find that the policies and the regulations that govern these types of institutions or schooling set-ups need revising, and I am currently looking into it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister undertake to work with his federal colleagues to ensure that funding for programs such as ESL begin to follow these students into our system, the same as non-Canadians receive?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, many of these students fall into a very peculiar group because they are technically Canadian citizens even though most of them have not either resided or been born in Canada. They came here from Mexico. At the end of the day those are intergovernmental issues that we can resolve with the federal government, I'm sure, but in the meantime my number one priority is to make sure that these children receive adequate education.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Alberta Works Program On-site Support

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. For many years Alberta Works has supplied an income support worker who worked directly out of various inner-city agencies but currently out of the Herb Jamieson, but that worker is to be moved any day now. The loss of this localized outreach worker will severely affect people needing medical SFI, and as we know, without intervention the costs really mount up. To the Minister of Human Services: why would this minister move a worker whose accessibility is key to assisting people who have issues due to poverty and homelessness, including chronic illness and addiction?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, as this hon. member knows, ministers don't actually engage in day-to-day management at that level, so this minister would not be moving that particular individual. However, this issue was brought to this minister's attention, and this minister is very interested in the same questions that the hon. member is asking so has asked management why this change would be proposed, if it's being proposed, and what the outcomes are that we are trying to achieve for those people and how we are going to do a better job of achieving those outcomes for those people.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I'll suggest another couple of questions for you. How does removal of an on-site worker relate to an integrated poverty reduction strategy, which, as the minister explained to me a week ago, you definitely had in your department?

Mr. Hancock: A very good question, Mr. Speaker, and one that I, in fact, have asked about this particular situation. It was brought to my attention last week that it was purported that there was a movement of this worker. I asked exactly the same question: should we not be putting people right in the front line, right in the place where you can help people, and if there's a change being made, what's the rationale for the change, and how are we going to provide a better service?

Ms Blakeman: I'd be interested in the answer.

My last question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Now, how does this action fit in with the government's mental health strategy, which was from September of 2011? In the media release I read this morning to refresh my memory, it talked about how being community oriented and being accessible for mental health services was particularly important and was one of the five major directions of the strategy. How would moving this worker fit in with that mental health strategy?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, my answer is going to be the same as the Minister of Human Services' first answer to this question. Management makes the decisions about the deployment of workers in these programs and in these facilities. If I can get some more information from management at my end about the implications for mental health, I'd be happy to answer. In the meantime we remain committed to expanding community mental health services through primary health care, through community general hospitals, and through many other programs in the community offered in conjunction with others.

High Prairie Hospital Construction

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, people in High Prairie were so pleased and so excited to see that their new hospital was moving ahead, and then Budget 2012 happened. Funding available for our project was much less than what we were originally promised. My constituents are naturally worried, confused, and in fact some are angry and want answers. To the Minister of Infrastructure: please tell me why Budget 2012 for the new High Prairie hospital has changed from $90 million to $73 million.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, this project is vitally important to the community and to this government, so I want to assure the member that the total cost of this project has not gone down from $90 million to $73 million. As a matter of fact, it's still at $90 million. It's just that not all the funds are expected to flow within the three-year budget cycle that we forecast in the budget that we just tabled.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you. I'm sure my constituents are listening ardently.

To the same minister: when will we finally begin construction of this much-needed facility, this hospital? When?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, construction has already started on the services for this building. The land was cleared; services were put in. They've stopped for the winter, and they'll start back up in the spring. I think the thing to make sure is that we're building the right facility. I know more functional planning work is being done with Alberta Health Services. Once that is finally signed off, we'll have a much better idea of what programs are going to be in this facility, and the facility will be built. But rest assured that it is a $90 million facility as it sits today, and there are some funds expected to be spent in the fourth year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you. Then to the minister of health: given that we've been planning forever, surely to God we can move forward with completing the work needed, including the addition of the renal clinic, the cancer clinic, and the CT scan. My constituents want to know whether or not that functional plan will continue to include these facilities.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. Minister of Infrastructure said, this project is going ahead at the same level of total provincial support. As he also said, we're in the final stages of completing the service plan for this facility, that will detail the specifics of programs and services that will be there. The CT scanner, the chemotherapy, and the renal dialysis are part of the plan for the future, and we'll continue to work with the local community and the hon. member to finish up this work as quickly as possible.

Thank you.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's PCs consistently and deliberately spread misinformation about electricity deregulation. For example, they say that residents in Quebec, B.C., Manitoba, and New Brunswick pay higher taxes to subsidize electricity when the truth is actually quite the opposite. The Crown-owned power companies in these provinces actually pay dividends to governments, that help push taxes down. To the Minister of Energy: why does he persist in misleading Albertans about the truth concerning electricity deregulation?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I tabled in the House last week the study by London Economics International that showed that, in fact, other provinces do have hidden costs precisely because they have debt. The numbers again – I don't know how many times I have to say this to the hon. member – $32 billion in Quebec, $64 billion in Ontario. If that's not enough, there was another report, tabled just last week by Don Drummond, one of the most respected economists in Canada, that pleaded with the Ontario government to quit hiding the true cost of electricity from consumers.

Dr. Taft: Well, given that this minister likes to hide the truth, Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: I may get a comment a little while later about this intemperate language. This is not becoming of certain members in this Assembly.

Dr. Swann: Even if it's true?

The Speaker: Oh, get off it. Sit down. Sit down.

Dr. Taft: I didn't say anything.

The Speaker: That was you?

Dr. Swann: That was me.

The Speaker: Well, you should have been quiet because you were not recognized.

You've got to question with – let's try and find some civility, okay?

Dr. Taft: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's compare apples to apples, and let's look at the Alberta situation. Again to the Minister of Energy: is this minister aware that Alberta's regulated electricity system functioned very successfully for eight decades without requiring any provincial debt because it was a system of private and municipally owned corporations?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, again, I'm a little surprised that the hon. member wants to turn the clock back – what? – 20 or 30 years, to when the province had half the number of people here, not nearly the industrial consumption. This is the 21st century. The 21st century, particularly in this province, with the exciting future we face in terms of economic development, needs an electricity system that can respond to those challenges. That's what we're putting in place.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta's regulated electricity system functioned very successfully for eight decades without requiring public debt, will the minister admit that this government could return to a regulated system, where the interests of ordinary people are protected, without incurring any debt?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, that's the back-to-the-future question that I just answered, so I don't see any point in repeating the answer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Charter Schools

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Charter schools have a proud record in Alberta of providing innovative education choices to parents. The government has said over and over again that it supports charter schools and that they are here to stay. My questions are for the Minister of Education. If this commitment to charter schools is real and the government does want to support educational choice for parents, will the minister commit to providing more permanence to charter schools?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I think that, undeniably, parents have voted with their feet. Charter schools in by far a majority of cases have proven themselves to be a viable option to which many parents choose to send their children, and that, frankly, is one of the pillars that makes Alberta education so strong, this child-focused, constructive, pedagogical competition among a variety of service providers of this high quality of education that we have. I can tell this hon. member to stay tuned because, indeed, this government wants to preserve what is constructive.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that charter schools say that their temporary status restricts their ability to finance and limits them to leasing arrangements that aren't always ideal, what is the minister doing to address the barriers charters face when it comes to getting decent learning spaces?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, when initially instituted, some form of time caps had to be put in place in order for these institutions to prove themselves and to find out whether parents indeed make them schools of choice for their children. Time has passed. In most cases charter schools have proven themselves to be great contributors to the whole mosaic of service providers in education. I know that infrastructure issues need to be resolved. That's why again I would tell this member to stay tuned because we will be looking at that as well.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Almadina charter school academy in my constituency is an excellent school, serving students from 39 different countries whose first language is not English. However, their enrolment cap of 600 means they cannot properly serve our growing community. Will the minister consider raising this cap so that more families can benefit from the unique opportunity that this school offers?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, that is one of the aspects of operations of charter schools that I have been asked to look into not only by the operators of charter schools but by parents who choose to send their children to these public charter schools. That is something that will be unrolled in the near future.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question-and-response period for today. Nineteen members were recognized, with 113 questions and responses.

In a few seconds from now we will continue with the Routine, which is Members' Statements.

Members' Statements (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Alberta Works Program

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are nearly 60 Alberta Works centres throughout our province. Every day thousands of Albertans walk through their doors and access the services of Alberta Works. The goals of Alberta Works are to help unemployed people find and keep jobs, help employers meet their needs for skilled workers, and help Albertans with low incomes cover their basic costs of living.

Alberta Works achieves these goals through its four programs: first of all, employment and training services, income support, health benefits, and child support services. These services are provided through our Alberta Works centres. These centres help Albertans reach their full potential. They help us develop our workforce and help businesses find the employees they need for continued success. Mr. Speaker, Alberta Works centres are strategically located, situated throughout the province, to make a difference in the communities in which they're located.

Alberta Works is not just for job seekers, nor is it just for employers. It benefits our communities. When we help Albertans reach their full potential, get access to work and the assistance to stay employed, all of these things are benefits that we all appreciate. When Albertans walk through the doors of an Alberta Works centre, the staff are there to help them get back on their feet and regain their independence.

Sometimes, Mr. Speaker, we all need a little help. It may be making those important employment connections or finding the right program or service in the time of need. Either way, it's good to know that there is help there for those people who need it. Alberta Works is a service to Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Eid Milad un-Nabi Celebration

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 12 I attended the Eid Milad un-Nabi celebration at the Jack Singer Concert Hall. Muslims around the globe celebrate this day as the birthday of Muhammad, the last prophet of Islam. It was delightful to hear hon. MPs Ralph Goodale and Jim Karygiannis, who talked about the beauty of our diverse and tolerant Canadian society. It was also a pleasure to listen to Brigadier-General Paul Wynnyk, who was proud to say that men and women of all faiths, including Muslims, stand shoulder to shoulder in the Canadian Forces to hold our flag high.

Muslim scholars such as Professor Syed Soharwardy and Dr. Munir El-Kassem stressed Muhammad's message of peace and harmony. They were eager to convey that Islam stands completely against violence and that those calling themselves Muslims and encouraging hatred have completely deviated from the message of Muhammad. Dr. Kassem especially quoted Muhammad's last words before he passed away. His last message was: be not harsh with your women, and treat them with love and care.

It was also brought to the audience's attention that Muhammad built the first modern society where Muslims, Jews, and Christians lived in harmony, with complete freedom to live by one's religion, in Medina over 14 centuries ago. Syed Soharwardy said that Prophet Jesus and Prophet Moses are respected no less in Islam than in Judaism or Christianity and, above all, that we are all sons of the same father, Adam. It also comes down to humanity, which is the essence of Islam.

I'm proud that my party, the Alberta Liberal Party, is in sync with these great ideologies of religious freedom, respect for others, and multiculturalism. Multiculturalism and diversity are the basis of our beautiful society, and the ALP is committed more than ever to nurture and promote them. We as Canadians are known as a society that respects, accepts, celebrates, and embraces people from every culture. This is what my party and I stand for. It all comes down to humanity, Mr. Speaker. Long live humanity.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to give oral notice of a motion for leave to introduce a bill being Bill 6, the Property Rights Advocate Act.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Denis: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I referred to an article during question period today from the Red Deer Advocate – it's entitled Smith Wants Provincial Registry – in which the Wildrose leader talks about her advocacy for a provincial gun registry. I table five copies.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of annexes I and II of the comprehensive economic trade agreement that show that water is being negotiated as part of the agreement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings today. First of all, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of documents from January 2011 describing the problems at the Edmonton General continuing care centre, where tarps and plastic buckets are used to contain leaks in the roof; a complaint from a resident of the Edmonton General to the Alberta Health Facilities Review Committee showing that the problems identified publicly a year ago still exist; photos taken of the situation at the Edmonton General; and the government's online advertisement about caring for Alberta seniors.

Mr. Speaker, I also have some electricity bills to table. I have a bill from Mary Anne Predy for $613.13, and she said to us: "We are already using much less electricity than last year yet our bills continue to increase. Deregulation has not worked for the advantage of Albertans.”

I also have one from Mabel Cymbaluk who sent us a bill for $230 with Direct Energy. She says, “For many seniors, it’s getting difficult to stay in your own home in ‘small town Alberta.’” I’ll table that.

Mr. Speaker, also a letter and a bill from Heather Arseneault, who says, “I would love to know how the Government thinks people can afford to pay their electricity bills!” Her EPCOR electricity charge for January 2012 was $471.04. I’ll table that.

I have also a power bill from Royleen Kumar for $136.34. She says, “Even companies like Enmax and Direct Energy . . . seem to be gouging the average consumer . . . It really does seem like the rich are getting richer and the poor are getting poorer.”

Finally, Mr. Speaker, Peter Milot sent us his Enmax bill for December 2010 for $102.90 and his Enmax bill for December 2011 for $194.46 with the remark “No X-mas lights next year.”

We have also a bill from John Thorson of Calgary for $344.93, and Earl Riste of Iddesleigh, Alberta, sent his EPCOR bill for $632.92.

I have copies of all of those, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling five letters from the president of the Alberta Medical Association in response to some of the comments of the Premier regarding negotiations. It says: “We have asked the Court of Queen’s Bench of Alberta to appoint an arbitrator” to come to an agreement. “Alberta Health and Wellness and Alberta Health Services have opposed this. In our view . . . the Canada Health Act and other considerations support our request.

And another 10 copies of individuals who themselves or their families have been inadequately, inappropriately, and dangerously treated for their mental illness, and it resulted in complications.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I’d like to table five copies of the document, or document/prop as you pointed out, that I had referred to in my question about the .05 registry of the PCs.

2:50

The Speaker: Are there others? Hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, you have a tabling?

Mr. Taylor: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today: five copies of a letter from Lynn Whittingham of Calgary and also five copies of a letter from Marie-Andrée Ménard from Calgary, both calling for a halt before it gets under way to the plans by Spray Lake Sawmills to log 700 hectares of trees in the west Bragg Creek area of Kananaskis; also, five copies of a letter from Barbara Boettcher of Calgary to the Premier, asking for clear-cutting not to proceed in the Castle wilderness special place.

Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: All right. Hon. members, we have three points of order, and I’m going to deal with these three points of order very, very quickly. I, in fact, stood in this Assembly last Thursday, if all hon. members will recall, and last Thursday I asked hon. members to think and rethink and look at the letters that have been sent and the guides that have been provided in the past about parliamentary and unparliamentary language and about temperate and intemperate responses and how one responds.

Over the weekend we spent a little time, Parliamentary Counsel assisting me, in finding some words that I was going to use today at 1:50, but when I stood in the Assembly at 1:50, I looked out and I saw a fairly relaxed group of people. I said: my, I may not have to say what I have to say because I think that there’s going to be a good tone in the Assembly today. So here’s what I didn’t say at 1:50 but what I’m going to say now at 2:52.

Hon. members, the chair would like to comment on an unfortunate trend in the use of language in this Assembly this sitting. In the chair’s view the language spoken has become increasingly intemperate. For instance, in recent sitting days members have used words accusing other members of not being honest, of being untrustworthy, shifty, misleading, corrupt, and the list goes on. And we could add the words that were used today as well.

The chair is well aware that there is a certain event to be held before May 31 which may be causing members to use more intemperate language. The chair is well aware that this is a place of strong emotions. That is as it should be as members should be passionate about what they believe. However, the institution of Parliament has existed for centuries, and members have been subject to the rules to ensure that civility is maintained. This is not a new institution that just started three weeks ago. Centuries have gone into the development of a place that should require civility.

Erskine May, 24th edition, at page 444 states the standard.

Good temper and moderation are the characteristics of parliamentary language. Parliamentary language is never more desirable than when a Member is canvassing the opinions and conduct of his opponents in debate.

Another authoritative statement is found in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, 2nd edition, at page 618.

The proceedings of the House are based on a long-standing tradition of respect for the integrity of all Members. Thus, the use of offensive, provocative or threatening language in the House is strictly forbidden. Personal attacks, insults and obscenities are not in order. A direct charge or accusation against a Member may be made only by way of substantive motion for which notice is required.

Finally, as members you realize that it is your role to ensure that this institution retains the respect of the people that we all serve. If we don’t respect one another, nobody out of this room is going to respect anyone in this room. Intemperate remarks and unparliamentary language do nothing to maintain that respect. All of us must take seriously the role of ensuring that the Assembly operates with civility, order, and decorum. I wonder if I’m asking too much if I also suggest an addition to civility, order, and decorum. I suggest that it’s always timely for politeness and respect.

Okay. We’ve got three points of order today. I’m not dealing with any of them. They’re all being upheld as a point of order.

We’re moving on to Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Zwodzesky in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I’d like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Main Estimates 2012-13

Finance

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance, please.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Taking into account the Speaker's good words, we'll try and do this with all of the civility and good conduct that is becoming in this Assembly.

How many minutes do I have?

The Deputy Chair: Ten minutes.

Mr. Liepert: Okay. Then we'll talk faster.

It's my pleasure this afternoon to spend the next three hours with members of the Assembly talking about the estimates of the Department of Finance. Before we get into the estimates, I want to pay some thank yous. Now, there was a large amount of work that went into the preparation of this particular budget, Mr. Chairman. We had what I've referred to on several occasions as a hurry-up offence. We had the leadership, and by the time the leadership had concluded, we were well into what would be our traditional budget preparation time. So with a lot of good work by both the folks in my department and the Department of Treasury Board, we had a budget that was presented some 12 days ago that I would say has been widely accepted in this province and will lead us to what I think will be a tremendous future for Alberta.

I want to acknowledge and introduce the staff that are with me here today. To my right is the Deputy Minister of Finance, Tim Wiles. To his right is the assistant deputy minister for strategic and business services and senior financial officer within the department, Darwin Bozek. To my left is Gerry McLennan, the chief executive officer of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission. Like myself, Gerry is soon going to be moving on to bigger and better things. This will be the final set of estimates, I guess, for Gerry as head of the AGLC. There is currently a search under way for Mr. McLennan's replacement, and if I could just put it on the record, I think all Albertans would like to thank Gerry for some – what? – 28 years of service with the AGLC.

We also have a number of other officials who are seated in the gallery. I'll name them, and maybe I could at the end ask them to stand and be recognized by members. We've got Gill Hermanns, Bruce Boychuk, Robyn Cochrane, Ian Ayton, Dennis Stang, Richard Isaak, Frank Potter, Shakeeb Siddiqui, Craig Johnson, John Ryan, and Wendy Joyner. If I could ask them all to stand and be recognized, I would appreciate that.

I guess before I get into the specifics of the Department of Finance, because, really, Mr. Chairman, our department is one of people and keeping everybody else in government honest when it comes to finances I think is the best way to put it, I want to talk a little bit about the broader finance and this particular budget that, as I mentioned, we introduced some 12 days ago. It's a budget that invests highly in Albertans' priorities. The President of the Treasury Board and I travelled this province extensively last fall, and what we heard time and time again was that priority spending had to be on health, education, and human services, and 80 per cent of this operating budget goes to those three areas. Yes, we will show a small deficit in this coming fiscal year, but we are positioning ourselves to have surpluses of close to a billion dollars the following year and over $5 billion the following year.

Now, I know there have been some questions asked about those so-called rosy projections. In fact, I think our group of friends over here have called them Alice-in-Wonderland projections.

They said that $108 oil was too optimistic. Well, this afternoon the last time I checked, Mr. Chairman, oil was trading at $105 a barrel. I would suggest that if that's too optimistic, then I'll gladly accept that criticism.

What we have done in this particular budget, as we always do when it comes to projecting our revenue forecasts, is take an average of what the international forecasters, the private-sector analysts, are saying. Then we take that number, we sit down with producers, we listen to what their views are on production levels, we multiply the two, and that's how we come up with those numbers.

One of the other things that this particular group of individuals over here was predicting prior to the budget was that there were going to be tax increases in this budget. Well, guess what? There were no tax increases, so the predictability of our friends is not very good. In fact, it's zero right now. If we're going to be talking about taxes in this budget, that there were none, then why are we talking about taxes in the next year? The next year is basically what our budget is about.

I want to get back to spending a few minutes on our particular business plan. Goal 1 of the business plan is about providing economic, tax, and fiscal advice that supports strong and sustainable government finances. That's a big job, Mr. Chairman. It's going to be a big job in 2012 because we have committed that in 2012 we're going to do an overall review of our fiscal policy, our fiscal framework, and our savings strategy. Reaching this goal will involve an important discussion with Albertans about where we are now and where we want to be in the future.

During that consultation we're also going to be talking to Albertans about the heritage savings trust fund and what role it plays because I think one of the things that we hear from Albertans is that we've lost the attachment to that heritage fund.

Other goals in our business plan include ensuring that revenue programs are administered fairly, efficiently, and effectively; that we provide policy and regulatory oversight for the financial, insurance, and pension sectors; and that we also show leadership in sound investment, treasury, and risk management.

The last point that I mentioned includes providing our investment manager, which is AIMCo, with strategies for achieving optimal performance in that $65 billion in investments – pension, heritage fund, and sustainability fund – that AIMCo invests on behalf of the government of Alberta. You know, despite uncertain global market conditions AIMCo continues to get investment returns at a prudent level of risk.

We also, as I mentioned, are responsible for the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission. Besides the revenue that's generated through the commission, there are a number of social responsibility programs that are undertaken, including the voluntary self-exclusion program, online training for gaming venue staff, and mandatory Smart training for liquor industry workers.

The final goal of our business plan deals with accessible financial services for Albertans, and that really comes down to our Alberta Treasury Branches, or what's now known as ATB. We're operating in close to 250 communities across the province, serving over 680,000 Albertans. It's a valuable part of Alberta's network of financial institutions. We need to keep ATB strong not only for their clients but for Albertans as taxpayers.

I've gone over our business plan. This is a budget, Mr. Chairman, that has a little bit of revenue. We're forecasting an increase of about $1.3 billion from Budget 2011, and that's largely due to corporate and personal income taxes as our economy continues to strengthen.

On the expense side department expenses have decreased by, I guess, $32 million over Budget 2011, and this is primarily in an area of debt-servicing costs. We also have in our budget to enhance the scientific research and experimental tax credit and some increases in program expenses, primarily around the area of technology.

I guess what I'd like to say in conclusion is that I believe I've demonstrated our commitment to achieving the goals in our business plan, and I've explained some of the reasoning behind our estimates. I'm also confident that I've demonstrated how our government through Budget 2012 and by supporting the success of Albertans is helping to keep Alberta strong now and into the future. I look forward, Mr. Chairman, to the next two hours and 50 minutes of dialogue with not only government members but our friends across the way.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Just before we get into the debate, I just want to remind all members here that Standing Order 59.01(4) and Government Motion 6, that was passed on February 8, 2012, do apply. We've heard the opening comments of nearly 10 minutes from the minister. Now for the next one hour only members from the opposition party may engage with the minister, speaking not more than 10 minutes per person at a time. Following that, 20 minutes will be given to the third party and, following that, another 20 minutes to the fourth party and so on as per the standing order and Government Motion 6.

With that having been said, I would recognize the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I listened with interest to the hon. minister's opening remarks. Certainly, there have been changes made to Alberta Finance since the last budget, and it seems to be the same old same old in this House.

I think it would be better, Mr. Chairman, if we clarified this right off the start. Would the hon. minister prefer just a Q and A for the first hour?

Mr. Liepert: Whatever works for you.

Mr. MacDonald: Whatever. Okay. Let's try that. It's not what works for me, hon. member; it's what works for the taxpayers. This process, as you know, doesn't work for the taxpayers. It works for the public relations department of the government, no one else.

Now, gaming research. We're going to look at element 6.1, gaming research, which, Mr. Chairman, is an amount of $1.6 million. We look at the lottery estimates, and we realize that mostly through VLTs and slot machine revenue you're going to anticipate $1.3 billion plus in revenue from that. One of the research projects where the $1.6 million is used, of course, is at the Alberta Gaming Research Institute, this project last year, Gambling in Alberta: History, Current Status, and Socioeconomic Impacts. It was there in question period today, where I was interrupted.

I would like to ask again: whether you're looking at AADAC, which is roughly $6 million for addictions, or at the fact that we have only $1.6 million going into Alberta Gaming Research to look at the problems and the issues surrounding VLTs and slot machines and their use throughout the province, does the minister consider – and you can pick either budget or both, and I would remind you that three years ago of the $6 million that was used in AADAC, half of that went to treatment of people with issues or problems – these budgets adequate to meet the needs of the 19,000 problem gamblers who have been identified? You've got to remember that a small number of gamblers are putting a large amount of money into those machines on an annual basis which is going to generate revenue of up to $1.3 billion plus this year.

Thank you.

Mr. Liepert: Well, I think there are a couple of things that need to be addressed. I know the member had asked the question in my absence a little earlier in the month. Again, I'm not sure where he got the statistics from. My recollection is that the assertion was made by the member that 75 per cent of the dollars that come in through VLTs come from, in his words, problem gamblers. Now, I'm not sure where those numbers come from. It's difficult to identify who's a problem gambler and who isn't a problem gambler, Mr. Chairman.

The other thing that I think needs to be pointed out is that the member talked about the 1 and a half million dollars going into research. I think he's confused or is trying to leave the impression that that million and a half dollars is what is being used for addictions treatment. That's not what's happening. Much of the addictions treatment, Mr. Chairman, is in my colleague the minister of health's area.

It's difficult to assess in the addictions area. There are a whole bunch of factors that go into addictions, and that's one of the reasons why we moved AADAC into the health system. Quite frankly, sometimes in addiction there might be multiple issues at stake. So it's really hard to pinpoint exactly which dollar is going specifically just to gambling addictions. There may be other addictions involved. I know that in the department of health there is a significant amount of money that's allocated to – and I don't want to leave the wrong impression here – the area of mental health and addictions.

I know that the member would like us to be very specific relative to every dollar that's channelled and then sort of divide by the number of so-called problem gamblers and come up with a number. It's simply not that easy, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. For the minister's information – and I'm going to ask that he does his homework. I don't want to sound like the Speaker, but I'm going to ask him, and not over a long weekend, to do his homework and report back to the House tomorrow.

Certainly, this report, and it's a very good one, the final report to the Alberta Gaming Research Institute from last year, got its data from the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, Alberta Health Services, the office of the Chief Medical Examiner – we know what that's about – the Medicine Hat Police Service, and Lethbridge Regional Police Service among others. This information was provided. There is a breakdown of Alberta's expenditures on problem gaming, or gambling. I think gambling is a much better term, unfortunately. I'm sure the ministry has this. We do know that this ministry sets the standard for all other departments, including Health and Wellness. It specifically indicates that of the $6 million that's set aside, $3 million is used for the treatment of problem gambling.

There is a lot of information available through Alberta Health Services on the issue of problem gambling. It is reported that there are up to 55 suicides a year in this province as a result of problem gambling. If that is true, that is one a week. This is a serious problem that we have here.

Now, I'm going to ask the hon. minister – he was doubting my facts, but these are from a publication that was funded by the government. It deals specifically with who uses VLTs and who does not. I'm going to read it into the record so the minister can understand and respond, Mr. Chairman. This is from a report, again, funded last year by the Alberta Gaming Research Institute. "The proportion of game-specific expenditure accounted for by problem gamblers is as follows: 86% for Internet gambling, 77% for VLTs, 72% for slot machines."

This is information that is publicly reported, and this indicates that we have a serious problem. We have big spenders. In fact, Mr. Chairman, we have 5.8 per cent of gamblers accounting for 75 per cent of total reported gambling expenditures in 2008 and 2009, and I'm requesting now from the minister: in this year are you going to increase the funding that is needed to help problem gamblers, or are you just going to pretend the problem doesn't exist?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, it would be very interesting to hear from this member what he describes as a problem gambler because maybe everyone who spends – I don't know; pick a number – a hundred bucks on a VLT is a problem gambler in his mind. I don't know.

All I can say is that we do constant research. We have a budget. It's before the House. We also have additional funds that go through Alberta Health and Wellness for addictions treatment and counselling. Those are the estimates we're going to be dealing with. If the question is, "Am I going to change my dollars in this budget estimate," the answer is no.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Of the 19,436 problem gamblers who wanted help for their gambling issues, we had a budget that allowed fewer than 2,000 of them to get help. You are telling this House and the taxpayers that you're going to forget about it, you're going to ignore the problem, and we're not going to try to help these folks out.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chair, I challenge that member to show me where I said that. That isn't what I said. I would challenge the member to tell me where he's getting those numbers from that say that we're leaving those people out. I don't believe that to be the case. I want him to show me the data that says that the numbers he's stating are not being treated if they're asking for the treatment.

There's also a difference here. You could be a problem gambler and not seek counselling. We can't treat someone who doesn't want to be treated.

But if this member has hard facts and data that show that whatever the number he says were turned away from counselling and treatment, I want him to put it on the table.

Mr. MacDonald: For the record on pages 176 and 177 – and I'm asking you to do your homework and do it tonight. Don't be watching any television. You just do your homework, hon. minister. On page 176, table 46 of the gambling history report, problem gamblers projected in the Alberta adult population in 2008-09, over 72,000; wanted help for gambling problems, 26 per cent of them, or 19,436; sought help for their gambling problems, 8,330. The ones that were helped: unfortunately, in that year it was 1,893.

We can do better than this. I'm sorry; the facts are here. You have lots of staff. You have a communications team. You have a research team. You introduced staff up in the government gallery there. Put them to work to get the information for you. You should fix this problem and fix it right now.

Now, again I'm going to ask you – and I've given you the information; I've told you where it is – are you going to fix the problem?

Mr. Liepert: I am amazed that this party is focusing on this one particular issue in this entire budget. Mr. Chairman, I have said that I want him to show me specific cases of someone that didn't receive help when they sought it. I'm not going to go to any particular research document. Those are general comments that may have been made in a research document. If he has a specific case of someone who is not getting help that wants help, then he owes it to this Assembly to bring it to our attention. You can't just make these wild comments out there and then try and lay it on staff in the department. If there's something specific, bring it forward and we'll look at it.

The Deputy Chair: Before we proceed, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, would you mind just telling me if the document you're referring to has already been tabled in this Assembly? Is it available to everyone?

Mr. MacDonald: It's in the public library. It's a big document. It's in the Legislature Library and it's in the public library and it's on the Internet. Every member, hon. Mr. Chairman, who has their computer on can google it, and it'll come right up.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. Just to conclude, because the chair is searching for the tie-in between what document you're referring to and the actual estimates that are before us at the moment, perhaps you could just loop the two together, and we'll continue on.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I'm not going to waste my hour of time verifying where I've done my research. This document is available. I was clear from the start.

The minister is ignoring his duty, which is to fix the problem that we have here. Unfortunately . . .

Mr. Liepert: Give us the instance. Give us the instance.

The Deputy Chair: Through the chair, please.

Hon. member, all the chair is asking for is the correlation between what is on the floor of the Assembly right at this moment – and that is the estimates, the main estimates for the department – and the report that you're alluding to. If you could just tie the two together, we could proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: For the minister's information there would be one specific case. I would refer the hon. member to a case that was cited in Public Accounts on November 30, and I will just leave it at that. Again, as part of your research, sir, you can check that out. It was brought before the Public Accounts Committee.

Now, I'm going to continue with this document. There are many, many questions there, and they centre now on lottery funding and the lottery estimates. We do have, you know, the details of the lottery fund estimates, and I have questions. How exactly are the lottery fund estimates allocated? I see a chart here on pages 116 and 117 of the government estimates. Who decides where that money goes? Is it Treasury Board or is it the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Liepert: It's Treasury Board, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. MacDonald: So if Treasury Board decides this, does the Minister of Finance ever think about where the money goes geographically across the province, and is the distribution of that revenue fair?

Mr. Liepert: I haven't heard that it isn't, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. So the minister hasn't heard that it isn't. Well, again I'm referring to Gambling in Alberta: History, Current Status, and Socioeconomic Impacts from 2011. I'm looking at table 28 on page 128, and this shows Alberta lottery funds received 1998 through 2010 as a function of census division. There's a long list of census divisions, 1 through 19, and then there's a column on Alberta lottery funds per person and total Alberta lottery funds received. My question would be: if you haven't done the analysis to see that this distribution is fair, why, for instance, would Alberta lottery funds in Camrose-Lloydminster average per person $1,179 over that period of time, and in Fort McMurray the Alberta lottery funds per person is $385? There is a significant difference in these amounts, with Camrose-Lloydminster being three times higher than Fort McMurray. Why is there such an uneven distribution geographically on lottery funds distribution?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, I'm not exactly certain what the member is referring to, but I'm assuming he's referring to the community facility enhancement program, those two programs that actually fall under the Minister of Culture and Community Services.

Mr. MacDonald: No, no. You can't get away that easily. This lottery fund estimate is in your ministry, sir. I want to know if you have taken a look to see if this lottery fund money is evenly distributed on a per capita basis across this province. I could put it to you another way. Given that there is a lot more money coming out of Fort McMurray on average per VLT than, say, there would be out of Camrose, why do the citizens of Fort McMurray get so much less in lottery funds received than, say, the good people of Camrose-Lloydminster, St. Paul, Hanna, Athabasca, or Slave Lake? These are the five census divisions where the Alberta lottery funds per person exceed $1,000.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, I'm not exactly certain which particular document the member is looking at, but when we — our lottery estimates as part of the Department of Finance are allocated to the various departments of government. Those dollars are then allocated to programs within the various departments. I have no idea why particular dollars might be less in one part of the province than another. I think that if this particular member is really interested in talking about the estimates of the department, he might want to stay on a broader scale instead of drilling down into some particular report that he's found and trying to somehow say that a particular part of the province isn't getting as much funds as the other part of the province.

I'm not exactly sure what he's referring to in this particular effort.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, these certainly are your lottery fund estimates, and these are the funds that have been distributed. Now, not only is Fort McMurray, in my view, getting shortchanged on a per capita basis over a long period of time, so is Edson, Red Deer, Rocky Mountain House, Grande Cache, Lethbridge, and Medicine Hat. There doesn't seem to be any reason for this. My question to you is: when you determine what amounts are distributed, how is that done? Is it on a political basis? Is it on a needs basis? What exactly is the formula used to distribute this funding?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, we work with all the departments in government to assess what their particular needs are and how they relate back to lottery funding and the general broad principles of how lottery dollars are allocated. Some might go to Health. Some might go to Education and various departments. When they go to those particular departments, it's not up to the Department of Finance to track those dollars, which geographic area they end up in.

For him to stand here and try to make the allegation that there's political interference in this, I think that's just going a little bit too far.

Mr. MacDonald: I think the minister is very sensitive, hon. chair.

Now, in the last 10 years the lottery fund has provided $391 million to horse racing, and this year we are seeing a slight increase.

Dr. Swann: He wasn't listening. You'll have to repeat that.

Mr. MacDonald: That's okay, hon. member. I don't think it would matter.

The horse-racing and breeding renewal program is, well, almost a 10 per cent increase, $26 million this year. That will bring the total up to close to $400 million in a period of time when we could have used the money for a much wiser purpose. The proportion of gambling revenue derived from horse racing has declined significantly since the 1980s, when it was as high as 21 per cent, and now only constitutes about 2 per cent of revenue. Why if horse racing constitutes about 2 per cent of gambling revenue are you continuing to subsidize horse racing? It doesn't make sense.

3:30

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Chairman, there is an agreement in place with Horse Racing Alberta. This particular government honours agreements — not so sure that particular member would honour an agreement if it were in place — and we have an agreement in place. The reason that agreement was signed in the first place by this government a number of years ago was because the economic benefit to this province was estimated at some $300 million annually and employing some 8,000 Albertans. If this particular member wants to go out there and talk to those 8,000 Albertans and tell them, "We're going to fire you if you elect us as government," let him go ahead and do that. I'd like to see his response when he goes to Grande Prairie, as an example, and makes that case or goes to Lethbridge. I challenge him to go do that. That's exactly what would happen.

Mr. MacDonald: That's already been done.

Speaking of honouring agreements, I would have to remind the hon. minister at this time that this is a government who saw an agreement between the EUB to share the bill for transmission upgrades or expansions, 50 per cent with consumers and 50 per cent with generators. That agreement wasn't honoured. No, that agreement certainly wasn't honoured; it was overturned. [interjections] It was overturned in a ballroom in Banff, of all places. That's one example. The agreements that have been made lately on the transmission lines, the Premier's office not knowing what the Minister of Energy's office wasn't doing — hon. member, your government and your party have a long history of not honouring agreements. Wow. What a statement.

Mr. Liepert: In a couple of months we'll see.

Mr. MacDonald: Yeah, we will. We certainly will. And I have no idea where you will be.

Now, hon. minister, some people say the fifth and other people say the fourth consecutive year of deficits in Alberta since 2008. The deficit projected for this year — and the minister mentioned it – was $886 million, and this is from a government that sells themselves as prudent managers.

Mr. Liepert: You betcha.

Mr. MacDonald: Yeah, you bet. Yeah.

The track record, hon. minister, is not there. In 2010, only two years ago, the government was projecting the year we are in now, 2012-13, to have the first surplus since the recession. I don't see the Minister of Finance in a black suit. In fact, I don't think I've ever seen the hon. gentleman in a black suit. He's got one, but it's in the closet, for sure, and the dry cleaning bill on that suit would never be high because he can't use it.

For 2012-13 we were projected to have the first surplus, and it was targeted to be $505 million. This obviously didn't happen, which is just one example of the many unrealistic messages that are emitted from this government through their public relations department. The government of Alberta news release states that the savings set aside in the stability fund will be used to off-set this $886 million deficit, and we do know where the sustainability fund came from. Now, this government was projecting a return to surplus in the 2010 budget by this year, yet that has not happened. Why? How can taxpayers expect credibility on budgeting when the deficit position, your track record, is so poor?

Mr. Liepert: I'll take a few minutes on that one, Mr. Chairman, because this particular member is making some outlandish comments here. I look, as an example, at the Liberal government of Ontario. Let's talk about Liberal versus Conservative when it comes to who has a better track record.

I think that it's important to state on the record that since last fall, after the leadership, we have a new Premier, and we started to do things differently. In this particular case, when it came to budget preparation, we went out and consulted with Albertans. Albertans told us in no small number that we needed to ensure that spending on health and education was a priority, and that's what we've done in this particular budget. They also told us that the Premier's commitments around human services were important to them, so those dollars are also in the budget. Mr. Chairman, we could have balanced the budget this year by slashing social spending. I know that he'd be the first member to stand up in this House – and if not him, it'd be the one next to him – talking about how we're spending less on human services, how we're spending less on education, how we're spending less on health.

We are in a fortunate position. This member talks about mismanagement. What actually happened over the past seven or eight years was that we had excellent management in this province that created the sustainability fund so that when we need to progressively move back to a balanced budget, we've got the sustainability fund to draw on. What was it there for, hon. member, if it wasn't to ensure that services could continue to be provided to Albertans? That's exactly what we're doing with this budget.

We are projecting in an orderly way to get back to a surplus position in '13-14. If you take a look at the revenue streams that are coming from the oil sands in '14-15 and the years beyond, Alberta is going to be in a very strong financial position, far better than any other province in Canada, far better than any Liberal-managed government in Canada. I think, Mr. Chairman, that this particular member is really stretching it when he's trying to suggest that somehow this province hasn't had good fiscal management over the past number of years. It's put us in the strong financial position we're in today. No sales tax, no payroll tax, the lowest fuel tax: I could go on here for my full 10 minutes if I wanted to, hon. member, but I'll give you the chance to respond.

Mr. MacDonald: Wow. Now, talking about fiscal management, let's have a look at the deficits that were racked up here: 2007-08, $682 million; 2008-09, $928 million. No; these are the cash transfers. I'm sorry about that. Here are the deficits. I'm going to just mention one: 2007-08. We could also go back into 2008-09.

We're talking about prudent fiscal management. This is a government that fired the regional health authorities, created the superministry – the minister would know something about that – set aside $80 million for transition costs from the nine health regions to the one superboard. In those transition costs were severance payments, pension top-ups, and whatnot for senior management, including one, a $22,000-a-month pension – a month – for Jack Davis, who was the chairman of the Calgary regional health authority. This is really sound fiscal management, hon. members. A $22,000-a-month pension was just one item, but it illustrates the poor financial management that this group has allowed to happen.

Then we fast-forward. We're talking about good management, yet health care workers in hospitals throughout the province had to have a wildcat job action to get this government's attention. You don't treat them the same way you treat your hand-picked government managers. Hon. minister, that's an example of how this government manages its money, and it's also an example of how you waste money. Please. Your track record is not what you think it is. It may be in your mind, but it's not a very stellar track record.

To the minister: how much longer do Albertans have to wait before the government actually puts forward a comprehensive fiscal strategy that includes a long-term vision for savings, controlled spending, and a reduction in reliance on nonrenewable resource revenue to fund core programs? Your budget right now, for this year – and I recognize there's an election coming up – is all about spending, nothing about savings.

Mr. Liepert: Well, finally we got a question that relates to the department out of all of that, Mr. Chairman. We've been pretty clear with what the plan is despite that some of the opposition can't quite figure it out. We have said that we're going to engage with Albertans over the next year in a conversation about the right fiscal framework. Of course, there are some who try to portray that as tax increases. We'll see. Their record isn't all that good. Their projection record right now is standing at zero because they were wrong on the taxes in the budget. But we're going to have that conversation.

Of course, the Liberal opposition wouldn't know what that's all about, Mr. Chairman, because they don't consult with Albertans. They just kind of ramble on whatever study they might happen to dig out of the library or whatever is in the newspaper on a daily basis. In the year forward this government is going to consult with Albertans to look at what the right fiscal framework for the province is. That's going to include a savings strategy. That's going to include what the right tax structure is and how we ensure that we don't ride that roller coaster of nonrenewable resource revenue to the point where we have in the past.

Now, the member also asked about cost savings. Well, I hope he was sitting in this Legislature and participating in the debate on Bill 1 because it was clearly laid out. That's how we're going to ensure that Albertans are getting good value for every dollar that we spend. It's all in front of them, Mr. Chairman.

Chair's RulingRelevance*Addressing Questions through the Chair

The Deputy Chair: I just want to take a moment to remind ourselves again that we're debating the estimates of the Ministry of Finance – just that one ministry, not all of government, hon. members – as found on page 109 of the estimates through to about page 144. That having been said, we're going to pay even more careful attention here to the substance of the debate.

Could I also ask that the debate occur through the chair. It's been my observation after many years in this Chamber that when members start to spark across the aisles, that's when points of order start to fly. So I would ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to please pick up on that tone and carry on.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. My next question would be to the hon. minister regarding the fiscal plan. He gave the speech. If he can't defend his budget, that's not my problem. If he doesn't understand it, that's not my problem. You're talking about Bill 1. What are your anticipated savings on an annual basis that will occur as a result of streamlining the government efficiencies that are in your fiscal plan? What is the number?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, we have made it very clear – and if this member would have participated in the debate, he probably would have known – that what we're talking about is zero-based budgeting, results-based budgeting, that starts at zero. Now, how could you possibly stick a number out there to shoot at? What we need to ensure is that every dollar that is spent by this government is spent the most efficiently on behalf of taxpayers. The higher the amount of savings, the better off Albertans are going to be. That's the only answer I can give at this stage.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Well, I think the anticipated savings would be around $360 million, and that's considerably less than the public relations spin put on Bill 1 prior to the start of the spring session. Again, the hon. minister has a lot of homework to do there, and I'd encourage him, as soon as the budget debate this evening is over, to get started at it.

Now, according to the government of Alberta strategic plan Alberta Finance will expend $1.1 billion to achieve the government's goal of securing Alberta's economic future. How exactly will this $1.1 billion be spent? How will the expenditure of the money improve Alberta's economic future? What direction has the Premier given the Finance minister? I know the Premier – the Finance minister, Mr. Chairman, is quite sensitive about this – has really put the Finance minister on a short rein. He can't sign an expenditure unless he gets the okay of the Treasury Board president, and that's a change in government rules. So I can understand why the Minister of Finance is sensitive. But I would like to know what direction the Premier's office has given the Finance minister regarding this expenditure.

Mr. Liepert: Well, the short answer, Mr. Chairman, is none. You know, I think we need to go back and clarify just to make sure that this hon. member is not under a misapprehension, believing that in the budget process prior to the adoption of Bill 1 in-year savings in the budget were some $360 million. That is a standard process that we have gone through in the past number of years. We would hope that under the Bill 1 process we're going to far exceed the $360 million, but those were the numbers that were put in the budget without the idea of Bill 1 and what that might uncover. There are a number of things that factor into that, everything from dollars that are lapsed from one year to another – those are called in-year savings. I don't think he should be tying the $360 million of in-year savings into the good work that's going to come out of Bill 1.

Relative to his final question, the numbers he's looking at, that's our department in terms of our work that's going to be required as part of this process. That's the funding that comes to our department.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. Now, in 2009 the Fiscal Responsibility Act was amended to allow for deficits. The limit of $5.3 billion for how much nonrenewable resource revenue can be spent before it has to be transferred to the sustainability fund was eliminated as well as the clause legislating that $2.5 billion must be retained in the sustainability fund for natural disasters and other emergencies which could happen. The only limit now on the deficits in drawing from the sustainability fund is that the fund can't be drawn below what is in the account, meaning that the government can spend every penny – every penny – in the sustainability fund and can spend every penny of nonrenewable resource revenue without any of it having to be put into the sustainability fund.

Since these amendments, Mr. Chairman, the government has used the sustainability fund to offset deficits or other cash requirements when the general revenue stream was insufficient. The current reported balance of the sustainability fund is $3.7 billion, but the investment income earned on this fund was only $165 million this year compared to $495 million earned last year because of the withdrawals to offset the deficit and cash requirements. The investment income projected decreases even further over the next few years. To the minister: what is the government's plan if the money in the sustainability fund runs out? What happens to all the spending that is reliant on the sustainability fund if the economy doesn't recover and if your projections for the price of oil are like your projections were seven years ago for the price of natural gas, off base and totally wrong?

Mr. Liepert: That's a pretty easy question to answer, Mr. Chairman, because on about three occasions the three questions in there started with "if," which is a presumption of: well, hypothetically, what if? We can't answer those kinds of questions because those would be the worst-case scenario. What we've done is that we've taken what is a realistic projection going forward. I outlined in my opening remarks – I'll be happy to take another 10 minutes if the member would like me to take the time to tell him – how we came up with the projections that are there.

I'll repeat. If you look, hon. member, at what we're projecting for the price of oil three years out, $108, and check the price of oil today – it's $105 – if you want to call it unrealistic for a $3 increase in the price of oil over the next three years, well, go ahead, but those are realistic projections. I'm not going to get into debating about: well, what if? Those are projections based on, standing here today, the best information we have, and on that best information we won't reach the scenario that he's trying to paint, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. After that non answer I'm confident taxpayers will be very relieved whenever they look at the history of this province, the history of this Legislative Assembly, and those who came before you and sat in the Finance minister's chair. I don't have the details or the history, but I'm confident taxpayers will be very relieved that you, hon. member, are one of the shortest serving Finance ministers.

Now, Budget 2010, page 14 of the fiscal plan, stated that the sustainability fund "will be replenished beginning in 2012-13, as the first plank in Alberta's savings policy." Mr. Chairman, you will recall that earlier I said that this is a budget that's entirely about spending. It's about spending money to try to get re-elected. It has no pause or thought for a good savings plan.

Now, again, I'll point out that this is just another commitment from a government that has failed to meet its previous commitments regarding fiscal policy. Another example of the lack of credibility in this budget is the fact that just two years ago it was stated that the sustainability fund would be replenished in 2012-13 as part of a savings policy. What happened to this claim, why was it not maintained, and how can we believe that this claim now is any different?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I think we've spent a fair bit of time on that, Mr. Chairman. We've talked about what's going to happen over the course of the next year relative to savings as it's tied into the fiscal framework. I can't elaborate any more on that because we're going to listen to Albertans. We have as part of our three-year business plan, contrary to what the member has just stated, made a commitment that the sustainability fund will start to be replenished in year 3. We can't do any better than that right now because we need to reach a certain level of surplus before we can start to put money back into the sustainability fund. We've made that commitment for year 3, but in the interim we're going to go through this process over the next year, and we're going to go through the process of Bill 1 over the next three years. My only answer to the hon. member is to stay tuned.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. There is currently a push to diversify Alberta's exports into Asian markets as seen through the proposed Northern Gateway to Kitimat – or now it might proceed to Prince Rupert – and the Department of Energy's development of a clean energy to Asia strategy. This is, again, in the fiscal plan on page 69. There is a report and a caution about the slowing down of economic growth in both India and China in the second half of 2011 – this is the previous fiscal plan – "and a further cooling would hurt world growth prospects." Further, on page 88 of the fiscal plan it highlights the risks of possible asset price bubbles in China and the undervaluation of the Chinese currency, which could disrupt the Chinese banking system and disrupt global trade. How are these risks being incorporated now into Alberta's fiscal strategy? What steps are being taken to avoid exposure to the possibility of the bursting of the asset price bubble and the problems of the undervaluation of the Chinese currency? Are there other markets outside of Asia that the government is looking at at this time as well?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, this is really your area to rule on, but we are talking about the estimates for the Department of Finance. The questions that the member has raised are a number of questions relative to the strategic plan of the Department of Energy. I'm happy to spend some time talking about Northern Gateway and the opportunities that we have in Asia. It doesn't quite fall within the Department of Finance's estimates, but we can have that discussion. Clearly, we have seen that we can't rely on one customer. The hon. member knows that. He would be the first to admit that. This is a vital effort that Alberta is leading to get new markets developed, and it's part of our fiscal plan.

I think that within what we're presenting to the House today, this year's budget and the three-year fiscal plan, obviously any access to Asian markets doesn't factor into that. We also know that in our province our oil production, primarily because of the increase in production from the oil sands, is going to reach some 4 million to 5 million barrels by 2020, and we know that we need to have that additional market access, but that doesn't factor into the three-year business plan and the department estimates that are before the House today.

Chair's Ruling Relevance

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. Yes, the chair is acutely aware of some meanderings that occasionally occur when we're debating in this Assembly. The chair is quite prepared to let a little bit of it occur if it can be tied back into the main estimates that are, actually, technically on the floor of the Legislature right now, and that would be the Ministry and the Department of Finance.

Proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm not being disrespectful, but I would remind the chair and all hon. members of this Assembly of the fiscal plan presented by the Minister of Finance just recently, and I was locked up. On page 69 of this document there are three bullets titled Clouds of Uncertainty Loom. We're talking about the European debt crisis, we're talking about economic growth slowing in China and India, and an economy heavily reliant on trade and commodities. These questions certainly are relevant to this ministry, and I expect answers on behalf of taxpayers.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I appreciate the point you're trying to make, and there is nothing wrong with you referencing what you're referencing as long as you can tie it into the estimates, the actual estimates. That's what we're debating, one department at a time. You'll have other, ample opportunities to debate estimates for Health, for Education, for Environment, and so on, but today we're dealing with the department, the Ministry of Finance, and their estimates specifically.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. The minister is responsible, whether they like it or not, for these questions. Now, if they cannot or will not answer, I'm certain some taxpayers are listening, and they can draw their own conclusions, Mr. Chairman.

Debate Continued

Mr. MacDonald: In the time that I have left, the heritage fund is a very important fund that has been neglected, that has been, in my view, abused by this government for a number of years. The estimated value of the heritage fund for the 2012-13 year is $14.9 billion according to page 126 of the ministry estimates. This is an increase of over $306 million from the previous year's forecast. The fund was valued at $17 billion in 2008, the fund was valued at $12.4 billion in 2004, and if we go back to 1988, the fund had a value of $12.5 billion. Now, in 2008-09 the fund saw a loss, of course, of $2.5 billion in investment income, and that wasn't the minister's fault. We had a financial crisis; we recognize that. The crisis that the gentleman was involved in at that time was with Alberta Health, not Finance. How can the minister justify to Albertans why the heritage fund is only worth $2.4 billion more, nominally, than it was 24 years ago? This government has failed with the savings plan.

The Deputy Chair: Well, I do note that the Alberta heritage savings trust fund is actually referenced in your estimates on page 113.

Mr. Liepert: He actually did it. You're right.

The Deputy Chair: Proceed, please.

Mr. Liepert: Yeah. But I am going to challenge him. He used two words that I think are inappropriate, "abused" and "neglected." That's just foolishness, Mr. Chairman. There's a very simple answer to what the hon. member's question was. Why is it only worth whatever the number is? Because there's no additional money going in other than inflation-proofing in several years, and the interest from the fund primarily is coming into general revenue to pay for a number of the services that Albertans are asking for. You don't have to have a degree in economics to figure out the answer to the question.

What we have said is that the heritage fund, not just how big it is but how the heritage fund relates to Albertans, is part of that fiscal review that we're going to do, actually, this year. I have to keep coming back to the fact that we've committed to this, that we're going to hold to that commitment, and I can't prejudge what Albertans are going to tell us, the direction of the heritage fund. It's all part of that fiscal framework review.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. members. We have about seven minutes left in this session.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Again to the minister. I know there is a large contingent in the government caucus of Norwegian ancestry. I believe there are nine. One of them has got his thumbs up behind you, hon. minister. I know that a former Minister of Finance went to Norway at one point to look at what they're doing. I would sincerely hope that you could listen to that Norwegian caucus in there and perhaps try to develop some of the saving strategies that the fine people of Norway have. It's surprising, but we know there is well in excess of $540 billion in their savings plan from their nonrenewable resource revenue. Not only does Norway produce conventional crude oil from its offshore platforms but also a considerable amount of natural gas into the European markets.

Again, why is the minister letting the heritage fund lay stagnant with no annual contributions, however small they may have to be? Why are you just letting this stagnate?

Mr. Liepert: I think we have to get a couple of things on the record, Mr. Chairman. The analogy with Norway is always thrown out by members like this gentleman, but we have to remember two things. Number one, Norway is a country; Alberta is not a country. We as Albertans pay a significant amount into equalization in this country, which is a big chunk of money. If we were a country, it would be going into something like the heritage fund. But, no, we're Canadians. We pay towards the equalization benefit of all Canadians.

Number two, I'd ask the hon. member to take a look at – he's always throwing these barbs across the way about research. I'd ask him to google, as he said earlier. Get on your computer when it's not your turn to ask questions and google what the tax rates are in Norway, hon. member, and see whether or not their tax rates compare to Alberta. I know the answer; he doesn't. So I'd ask him to look at what the tax rates are in Norway.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. I would suggest to the hon. minister that perhaps he should do the same with royalty rates since we have the same investor-owned energy companies willing to invest in Norway with the rules that they have. The same companies. In fact, the state-owned oil company in Norway, Statoil, is actively engaged in Fort McMurray.

Mr. Liepert: What's your point?

Mr. MacDonald: The point is that you should check out just exactly what the rules are in both Alberta as a province – you are right – and Norway as a country. You just can't dismiss that so easily because, certainly, citizens of this province question all the time why the Norwegians have been able to set aside so much in such a short period of time and why we in Alberta have set aside so little over a much longer period of time.

Now, there are many, many important issues, including AIMCo. We've got to get to AIMCo in the ministry here. I'm not going to save it for question period. I'm going to ask the minister: was he invited – yes or no – to the AIMCo Christmas party that was held at the Sutton Place Hotel in early December 2011?

The Deputy Chair: Well, hon. member, I think this is the fourth time now that I'm asking for relevancy in the most polite way I can.

Mr. Liepert: Well, I'd be happy to answer.

The Deputy Chair: Well, if you wish, hon. minister, but please make it brief. I don't know how you're going to tie it into your estimates. Let's try and stay focused here. We've got two and a half minutes left in this section.

Mr. MacDonald: We certainly are focused, Mr. Chairman. I take it that the answer was no? It was quite a party. I was provided the details of that party, and wow. The point in all of this is that they didn't have a very good year. They were like the Edmonton Oilers. They didn't make the cut. But there was quite an elaborate Christmas party, and I'm glad for your political career that you weren't there.

Now, what does AIMCo do and why does AIMCo continue to fail to meet the target rate of return for the heritage fund? What value is AIMCo bringing to Alberta's investments if it continues to fail on this front among others?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, you have about a minute and 45 seconds left.

Mr. Liepert: I stand to be corrected, but I think the member is wrong. I don't think that we've been failing.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, maybe we'll get to that one in question period down the road because that hasn't been a stellar, stellar performance whatsoever.

Now, pensions. Line 5.3 on page 110 of the ministry estimates reports a decrease in expenses for public-sector pensions of $53,000, or 4 per cent. Why? In comparison, line 5.1 on the same page shows a $485,000, or a 43 per cent, increase for the expense of the deputy minister's office. Why are these differences happening?

Mr. Liepert: I will provide the answer shortly, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Hon. member, we have about 50 seconds left in this section should you wish to use it.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. Again to the minister: why is there almost no mention of pensions in the budget documents except for a brief reference in one of the priority initiatives? What has been done to ensure Albertans have access to pensions either publicly or privately? That's under your charge.

Mr. Liepert: Well, I'm not sure I understand the question. Everyone who works for the government of Alberta has access to the government pension plan. We administer four pension plans. There's the local authorities pension plan, which is the municipalities and a number of other entities. We have the special forces pension plan. We have the management pension plan. Every employee within those organizations has access to a pension plan, so I'm not sure what the question is about.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. members. That concludes the first hour of debate.

We're now proceeding to the next section of the debate, again pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(4) and Government Motion 6, passed earlier this year. For the next 20 minutes the members of the third party who wish to speak with the minister may engage in an exchange, a combined 20 minutes. Do we have somebody from the third party? Yes, please, hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: If we could go back and forth, that would be great.

The Deputy Chair: Yes, you may.

Mr. Anderson: I want to thank the hon. member of the opposition there with his last estimates for the Department of Finance. He's been very dutiful, I know, as chair of the Committee on Public Accounts. He's been very thorough in that job, and we thank him for it.

[Mr. Lund in the chair]

I also want to thank the hon. minister. He truly is a treasure trove of love, hope, and happiness. As he retires, the people of Alberta and this province want him to know of their great love and admiration for him. Although he is sometimes prickly and sharp, we all know that those sharp nails and that little bit of a prickly disposition are really just his passion for the province and for its people, for democracy, truth, and fairness. It just comes across a little harsh, but really it's only because he cares so much about these people.

We will miss you, Minister, and we thank you for all the work that you do in the Legislature.

Mr. Liepert: We'll miss you, too.

Mr. Anderson: I feel so much love coming from that side that I'm brought to tears sometimes.

If we could talk a little bit on taxes to start. I know that the word "fearmongering" is going to be used – I don't know whether projections are going to be used and all that sort of thing – but hopefully we can get a couple of answers here.

Minister, you have been somewhat confusing to some folks, certainly to me and to many Albertans that I talk to and that we talk to. Several times you've said, for example on CBC Radio, where you were quoted, that you think we should be talking about all kinds of taxation and what's fair for the province when referring to your fiscal framework idea, that you're looking into after the election. You said on November 16 on the Rutherford show, quote: all I'm saying is that at some point in time and probably sooner than later Albertans have to have a conversation about our tax structure.

Then, of course, in several columns recently he's been very clear. I think he's been very truthful in saying that. For example, in two Sun articles his friend Rick Bell, who I know thinks highly of him, said that he was talking with the minister face to face, and taxes were on the table. Okay? So that's why Albertans are a little confused right now. I'm glad and happy – and I agree with him – that there are no tax increases in the pre-election budget. I think we should all give the minister a hand for that if we can. No? No hand? Okay. Yeah, I didn't think so. It's not that big of a deal because it's a pre-election budget.

Now, what we would like to know is if there are plans after the election to talk about whether or not we need to have tax increases. The reason I ask is because, obviously, there are some very healthy projections. He's very excited that oil is at $105 a barrel today. That's great. It was at $140 a barrel in 2008, and a couple of weeks later it was at $35 dollars a barrel. You know, that was just four years ago.

We have a financial crisis on our hands right now in the world, the world financial crisis. The price of oil could go down tomorrow to, God forbid, $80 a barrel, which would blow a hole through our entire budget. I guess all I'm asking is that if that scenario happens and, say, oil goes down to $80 – let's just say $85 and be really wild with our projections – in order to make up the difference that will occur there, is there a scenario where your government talks about the need to raise revenues through increased taxation? Is there a scenario out there when that happens, or is that not the case?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I hate to repeat myself, Mr. Chairman, but this particular member asked the same question that this member asked, and both times prefaced the question by saying: if, if, if. Well, we don't draw a budget based on if. We draw a budget based on what the international forecasters say is going to be the price of oil. Then we sit down with industry, and we go over their three- to five-year projections. At the end of the calendar year you multiply the two together. You also extrapolate out some adjustments for corporate and personal income taxes as a result of those higher prices. That's how you come up with the numbers.

If this particular member doesn't believe – obviously, he doesn't – the projections that are in the budget, then what he's doing is challenging all the international forecasters, he's challenging industry, and he's challenging those professionals who work in our department who then project what the tax revenues will be. This isn't something that, you know, the President of the Treasury Board and myself made up over a beer one night. This is how we come up with these particular numbers.

I think I also want to address the issue around taxes, and this member will probably actually agree with me on this particular case. When we talk about a fiscal framework and the tax structure – you can't talk about a fiscal framework without talking about the tax structure – it could just as easily go down in some areas to generate a bigger economic pie. This member will remember when we adjusted the royalties a few years back because the member sitting behind him was trumpeting: oh, if you raise royalties, we'll get an extra billion dollars into the treasury. Well, we didn't get an extra billion dollars into the treasury. We adjusted the royalty rates, and guess what? We got 3 and a half billion in land sales. This is a discussion we have to have about the fiscal framework. It has nothing to do with raising taxes. That's the discussion we're going to have with Albertans, and we're going to listen to Albertans. Albertans will tell us what that fiscal framework will look like.

The Acting Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. All right. Well, then, let's back up. We don't want to talk in ifs. All right? If this minister is so confident in the projections, which include a 24 per cent increase in overall revenues in a two-year period, including an over 40 per cent increase in resource revenues, if those are the projections you're going with – and I would dispute when you say that all economists and all industry experts say that. I've seen multiple, multiple reports that say otherwise. In fact, one of the main folks from one of the major pipeline companies in Alberta called us and said that the projections they were using on the resource revenues were hallucinogenic, in his language.

But let's say that we use those things. If you're so confident of these projections, Mr. Minister, why will your government not just make the promise, in this Assembly or somewhere else, that you're not going to raise taxes of any kind? Just make the promise. You call it. You draft it. Don't sign our pledge; make your own pledge. Make a pledge to Albertans that says: we are not going to raise taxes of any kind or create new taxes of any kind because we are so confident that the numbers we have forecasted here are true. Can you make that promise to Albertans?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, we've made that pledge. It's called budget 2012-13. Every minister has signed the estimates in this particular budget document. I don't know what further we could do. In addition to that, we have said that we're going to listen to Albertans, that we're going to engage Albertans in the discussion over the next year, and if this particular party doesn't want to – well, actually, it's not a party. It's a collection of four individuals. If they want to not listen to Albertans, well, that's a risk they're going to take. If that's the way they want to go, then fine. What we're going to do – we've made our pledge. It's called budget 2012-13. There are no tax increases in it. Then we're going to talk to Albertans about what the future looks like. I'll take that to the polls any day, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Anderson: Well, that's the point right there – you hit it right on the head – that we're going to the polls right away. What Albertans are asking: they want to know from this government what they're voting on. By the time we go to the polls, Budget 2012 will be voted on and will be law. We'll go forward with Budget 2012. They want to know what's happening going further, and I don't see how it's an unreasonable request for the people of Alberta to know what this government's plans are for bringing in future revenues.

It's pretty simple. Elections are about putting your vision on the table. They've had years, 40 years, to come up with a long-term fiscal framework, yet they need another year? I mean, how many task forces and road shows do we need? How many closed-door budget consultations or open-door budget consultations do we need before this Premier and this party decide what the long-term fiscal framework is for this province?

I don't understand. Again, we're going to the polls. Why won't you tell Albertans what your plans are? What are you going to do? Let them vote on it. What if they don't like the plan that you come up with should you be re-elected in the next election? What if they don't like it then? Well, you've taken away their opportunity to pass judgment. If you're so confident on your plans, put them in front of Albertans, and if you're not going to raise their taxes, just say it. Just say: "Absolutely, Alberta. Under no circumstances are we going to raise taxes on you." It's very simple to do. We would hold you to it, obviously, but I hope you'll decide to do that.

I'll give you one last try. Will you commit to this House that your party is not going to raise taxes after the election, in that four-year term, at any time for any reason, or are there scenarios where you're planning to raise taxes?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I can only repeat what I said earlier, that this particular member especially and those individuals have been out trying to conjure up an image in this province prior to the delivery of the budget that somehow this budget was going to have a tax increase in it. We can show you the quotes if the member has a short memory. Well, he was proven wrong. We said that we're going to bring in a budget based on what Albertans told us. We delivered that. We aren't running out to have an election based on the delivery of this budget so that when we get re-elected, we can change it again.

We're sitting in this House right now passing this budget, and this will be the budget for the next year. We will then engage in a conversation with Albertans about our fiscal framework. I don't know how much more clear you can be, Mr. Chairman. If this particular member wants to campaign on that, I say: go at it. We're laying our budget in front of Albertans, we're passing it, and then we're going to probably have an election.

Mr. Anderson: All right. Well, I guess you did answer the question, that clearly tax hikes are not off the table. I'm glad I came today so that we know that. Tax hikes are not off the table.

You were castigating the member of the opposition there, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, on how Liberal governments spend in Ontario, yet our spending in Alberta under your government is $2,000 more per person than the McGuinty Liberals in Ontario. I wish I could say that that was the worst of it, but actually your spending is the highest in the country per person by far. You spend more than the NDP government in Manitoba, you spend more than the Liberals in Quebec, you spend more than the Liberals in Ontario and the Liberals in B.C., and you spend more, obviously, than the Saskatchewan Party in Saskatchewan, who have actually balanced their budget with no oil sands to do it with. I'm looking across the country, and I'm seeing all these Liberal governments spending like drunken sailors, yet the PC government here is spending more than any of those groups.

This goes back to what the minister said when he was away in Ontario recently. He was quoted in the Globe and Mail as saying, "Clearly we're spending too much." Now, I don't know. Was that out of context, or are you finally admitting that you are spending too much? If you are spending too much, in what areas are you spending too much? Where do you think that we can turn the taps down just a smidge so that we don't bankrupt ourselves?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, this particular member trotted out all the statistics at the beginning of his remarks, but what he didn't mention was that we are the fastest growing province in the entire country. In fact, we're growing so much that we need schools. You know, I remember several occasions when that member stood in that chair and asked the Minister of Education when he's getting new schools in his fast growing community. We have a whole bunch of communities like his. He doesn't seem to recognize it – it's only about his community when we listen to him over in the corner there – but we're one of the fastest growing provinces in the country, so our costs are obviously going to go up. We have the highest paid in the country, Mr. Chairman, whether they're nurses, teachers, bankers, or welders, so we, obviously, face higher costs.

Can we spend less? I think we can, and that's exactly what Bill 1 is going to do. As we go through over the next three years, we're going to see, in my view, a number of situations where we can do a lot better than we've done, and that's the process that we've committed to undertake.

Mr. Anderson: Yes, indeed, we are the fastest growing province in the country. That's why I used per capita, because per capita, for those at home wondering what that means, means per person. Necessarily, we take all the people that moved here, including all those new people that he's talking about, and we divide it by the total amount spent, and that gives you your per person amount. Again, the question I have is: why does the province of Alberta spend 20 per cent more per person – per person – taking into account all the growth, than the next-closest Liberal tax-and-spend government, being Ontario and Quebec? It doesn't add up. Why would you increase program spending by 7 per cent year over year when population plus inflation was almost half that amount?

There's a disconnect here. I know they love to think they're conservatives over there, yet everything they do and say is the opposite of that. Maybe "conservative" has lost its meaning. Maybe that's not what it means anymore, and I just missed the memo. Maybe it means: spend as much as you possibly can to buy as many votes as you possibly can as fast as you can before an election. Maybe that's what it means to be conservative in their minds over there.

I would like to know how a government that's spending the most money of any province in the country per person can honestly come into this House, plop down a 7 per cent year-over-year program spending increase, say that that is fiscally responsible to do, and then rely on $108 oil and 40 per cent increases over two years in resource revenues and a 24 per cent increase over two years in overall revenues to balance their budget. How is it even rational, Minister, to come in here with a budget that says that?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Chairman, the member is incorrect. Our overall spending in this budget is 3.3 per cent higher than it was last year. That's 3.3 per cent, and that includes our capital plan, where we are going to try to build some schools for the particular member in his constituency.

You can't have it one way one year and say, "Well, you're spending more because it's all in capital" and the next year, when you manage to spread your capital out – they're the ones who have stood up in this House and said, "If we were the government" – and again that "if" word at the front of their question – "we'd cut back on capital spending." Well, that's exactly what we did in this particular budget. We didn't cut back; we stretched it out a little bit. As a result, Mr. Chairman, we have a 3.3 per cent increase over last year. That is less than growth plus inflation.

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, I would remind you that you have about one and a half minutes left.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Well, then, really quickly, I was referring, of course, to program spending, which I said. It went up by about 7 per cent.

I'm glad that they stretched the capital budget a tad. That's good. It shows how much you can still get done with it if you're just willing to prioritize. [interjection] That's right. Maybe they can put the $70,000 that they spent in Jasper towards something useful.

I would end off with a quick question here. The heritage fund is now worth less today, when adjusted for inflation, than it was in 1976, when Premier Lougheed established it. The sustainability fund, which was at a high of $17 billion during 2008, is now according to this rosy-projection budget going to be roughly 3 and a half billion dollars at the end of this year. It seems to me that we have completely blown through another boom. In fact, we've blown through two booms now, and we have almost nothing to show for it for future generations. Now, in fact, we're talking about a possible tax increase.

I would just hope for whoever succeeds this minister, should the government be elected, for whatever Finance minister succeeds this minister, that he or she starts thinking about the future of our children and starts thinking about them more than themselves and their political fortunes.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

For the next 20 minutes we'll have a member of the fourth party, the NDP. Go ahead. Are you going to do the back and forth?

Mr. Mason: I think we can go back and forth with the minister.

The Acting Chair: Okay. Proceed.

Mr. Mason: If we can have an actual conversation rather than a sparring match, I would appreciate that. We will respectfully disagree and urge people to vote for us instead of you, but other than that, we can all be friends.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to start by asking the minister what his projections are for wages. I'd like to know how much of the provincial budget is composed of wages, and I would include in that not just direct provincial employees but employees of Alberta Health Services, for example, of school boards, and so on, those employees where the provincial government is going to be left to pick up the tab, basically. That's the relevance to the budget. We have to negotiate an agreement with doctors and teachers and so on as well as health professionals as well as those members that are directly employed by the government. If the minister can just answer that to start, it would be great.

Mr. Liepert: I'm assuming, Mr. Chairman, we're talking only about public-sector or quasi-public-sector wages, that we're not talking about private-sector wages. Okay.

Well, I think there are a number of answers to that question. We have a budget in front of us. Whether it's Education, we're going to live within that budget. Whether it's health care, we're going to live within that budget. You know, there are always things that we have to adjust for. As an example, we just entered into binding arbitration with the health care workers late last week. Binding arbitration says that it's binding on both sides, so we're going to have to make those adjustments. I can't predict what those will be, but we know that we've got a contract with the UNA for the nurses; we know that we're into contract negotiations with the ATA for the teachers; we know that we're in discussions with the Alberta Medical Association relative to their contract. Beyond that everything is pretty much public knowledge as to where we're at. I think that there's a recognition in Alberta at the public-sector level that we are amongst the highest paid in most professions in the country and probably pretty fortunate for that.

I don't know that I can add any more than that, but I want to add two things if I could, Mr. Chairman, to earlier answers, and that was to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. He asked some questions around pensions.

Mr. Mason: What about my time?

Mr. Liepert: I'll use yours on somebody else.

That's an internal transfer of staff, member for Gold-Bar.

I want to answer the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. He talks about: what are we leaving as the legacy for our children? We're leaving them with the most modern infrastructure in hospitals, in schools, in highways. That's what we're leaving for our children.

[Mr. Zwofdesky in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Go ahead, hon. member. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: All right. Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I want to come back to this question because I think that if the minister would give us some actual estimates, he would admit that his budget has included nothing for a settlement with doctors and about 1 per cent for teachers. I know that Alberta Health Services was expecting the health workers to take 2 per cent over a three-year contract. There was a lump-sum payment in there, and there was a COLA clause in the third year, but basically the only increase was 2 per cent. We didn't hear the actual percentage of the budget that is made up of salaries, but I would venture it's around 80 per cent. It usually is in most public-sector budgets, most organizational budgets for the public sector.

I'm wondering why the minister expects us to accept the cost projections for the government that they put forward in this budget when they have such unrealistic assumptions. I don't think the doctors are going to take no increase. You've already said that the binding arbitration with AUPE members that has been entered into by Alberta Health Services is binding, so they're going to get a settlement there. You're going to have to pay the bill; that's going to be more than 2 per cent over three years, I'm quite sure. And the teachers sure aren't going to take 1 per cent. That has not been the history. So I would challenge the minister to demonstrate that his cost projections in this budget are reasonable and accurate.

Mr. Liepert: I would challenge the member on a couple of fronts. Number one, our increase to Alberta Health Services, Mr. Chairman, is 6 per cent. There's certainly some leeway in there relative to salaries. Number two, the overall increase to Alberta Health and Wellness, I believe, in my recollection, is 7.9 per cent. There's some flexibility in there.

I'm not so sure that the member is correct when he says that teachers aren't going to take 1 per cent. I don't know that. That's a discussion that's under way, but we have just come off a very generous contract, as it turned out, with Alberta teachers, and I think they'll admit that. They've been well treated in the last five years. I know there are some discussions under way there. The Minister of Education's budget I think is in the range of – I can't recall off the top – 3 or 4 per cent, so there's some flexibility there.

What I do know is that we committed in our budget to meeting the 4 per cent increase that we gave to Alberta Union of Provincial Employees for the government of Alberta because I think this will be the first time in three years that they'll receive an increase in pay.

So I think we've been very realistic in our budget projections. We're not going to throw budget numbers out there that allow for large increases because I think, realistically, Albertans recognize we're in a very good position right now in Alberta. In fact, the number one comment that I heard after delivery of the budget was not "What's in it for me?" but "We are lucky to be living in Alberta."

Mr. Mason: Well, we are, but that's not an answer to the question.

Let me move on a little bit to nonrenewable resource royalties. Nonrenewable resource revenue is estimated at $11 billion for 2012, a decrease of $79 million. Bitumen royalties are estimated to increase by $1.3 billion in 2012, but Crown land lease sales are expected to decrease by a similar amount. Revenue from nonrenewable resources "is forecast to increase an average of 19% over the next two years, reaching $16 billion by 2014-15, the highest on record, due mainly to increasing bitumen royalties" according to the fiscal plan at page 52.

A study that was done by the Parkland Institute shows that since 1997 the oil sands have generated $205.5 billion, of which the government collected $19.1 billion in royalties and land sales. So it generated over $200 billion, and our share was less than $20 billion. The government's share of oil sands revenue over a longer period of time has averaged 8.1 per cent. My question is: does the government have a target for the share of the nonrenewable resource revenue that it aims to collect, particularly from the oil sands but also in general, and is the royalty program meeting those targets currently?

Mr. Liepert: I'd like to answer it this way. We have a fiscal framework in place relative to our royalty structure. I can take some time and explain what it is, but I think the member knows what it is. There are two or three factors that come into play. Number one is reaching payout. I think the member knows what that means. We have ensured that in order to encourage an investment – and we can philosophically disagree in this Assembly relative to how much we should tax and gouge industry. I know that's what that particular member would like to do, but we don't philosophically on this side of the House believe in that approach, Mr. Chairman. What we do believe in is creating an investment climate so that money will come to Alberta. It's been coming in droves. I think the last number I saw was $70 billion in 2010.

We create the environment where the investment comes. We have a royalty structure that does not penalize industry until they reach their capital payout, and then a higher royalty system kicks in. One of the things that is leading to those higher revenue projections in year 3 is that a number of these projects are reaching payout earlier than had been anticipated primarily because of the price of oil.

So it's not so much a target; it's that we have a regime in place. It would be hard even for that member to argue that it's not working.

Mr. Mason: It's working for the companies just fine, Mr. Chairman.

I did want to ask about the postpayout stage. One of the reasons that the government has given for the projected increase in bitumen royalties is that a number of oil sands projects will be reaching that postpayout stage. The prepayout royalties are 1 to 9 per cent of gross revenue, and the postpayout is the greater of 1 to 9 per cent of gross revenue or 25 per cent to 40 per cent of next revenue. That's from the fiscal plan as well. The question is: since the postpayout royalty rate will be an increasingly important part of government revenues, does the government have targets for the share of revenue it expects to collect from postpayout projects? Are we meeting those targets, and if not, will the government adjust royalty rates?

Mr. Liepert: Well, there's an easy answer to that last question. The answer is no. We have a system in place that the member says is working just fine for companies. You're darn right it is, and we don't apologize for that. That's why companies invest. That's why this province is doing so well. It's also working very well for Albertans.

You know, we could follow the philosophical belief of this particular member and have absolutely no investment in this province. We believe that what's happening in Alberta today – Alberta is seen as a beacon in the world, and this member would go in there and beat it up and chase everybody away. Then where would we be?

Mr. Denis: Socialism.

Mr. Liepert: That's right. Socialism. But that's not what we strive for, Mr. Chairman. What we strive for is to create an investment climate where companies will come here and invest, and the returns are obvious.

I know that the member is on our estimates, but in some of these instances there's a fine line between the energy projections that come to us. There is some difficulty in being specific for some of his answers because I know it's in the Finance projections, but we effectively take our projections from the Department of Energy.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we have about seven minutes left.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. It's beyond me how the projections from Energy, which are quite specific, in specific questions engender an anti-socialist rant from the minister when it was a clear question.

Since the postpayout royalty rate will be an increasingly important part of government revenues, does the government have targets for the share of revenue it expects to collect from postpayout projects, and are we expected to meet those? I'm repeating the question. It's actually a fairly capitalistic-style question, so maybe the minister could just give us a straight-up answer.

Thank you.

Mr. Liepert: Well, I did give a straight-up answer. In a capitalistic way we set a royalty structure. The investor takes a look at that royalty structure and says: "Yes. That's a regime I can invest in." The projections are based on our royalty projections. I don't know how I can be any more specific, other than it's built into our royalty structure.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. What I'm really trying to get at here is: is the government's budget estimating costs accurately, and is it projecting revenues as accurately as possible? So far I'm not given comfort by the real lack of specificity in the minister's answers.

Now, this one will really get him going, Mr. Chairman. This one's going to get him going because I'm going to ask about corporate taxes. There are two provinces, according to the fiscal plan – well, let me go back a little bit because the fiscal plan talks about the government's aim to reduce reliance on nonrenewable resource revenue to fund programs. We agree with that. I think it's about 30 per cent of program spending that is now funded from nonrenewable resource spending, and that's, I think, considered by many, including the Premier's own economic council report a few months ago, as too high and not really sustainable.

I think the minister is getting at that when he talks about the review of the fiscal framework. So there are two approaches. There's the scenario preferred by the Wildrose, which is to cut program spending with no change to the taxes at all, assuming that the tax structure is perfectly fair as it now stands. That's their position. On the other hand, we would want to look at whether or not the tax structure as it now exists is fair before determining whether or not we have a spending problem or a revenue problem. One of the things that we could look at, I guess, is the general rate on corporate income tax.

Now, I was there as a brand new MLA at an Edmonton Chamber of Commerce luncheon when Steve West was the Finance minister and he announced plans to reduce the corporate tax from what was then 16 per cent down to – I think he set a target of about 8 per cent. We're now at 10, and there are only a couple of provinces that match that rate. Most provinces range from 12 to 16 per cent.

Given that the absence of a sales tax already gives Alberta a significant tax advantage, is it reasonable – well, I won't ask if you think it's reasonable. Has the government given any thought whatsoever to reviewing the general tax on corporate income tax so that we would remain competitive with other provinces? We believe Alberta should be competitive, Mr. Minister. We don't want to run the economy into the ground. But on the other hand, we also want to make sure that the tax structure is fair and the government has the revenue it needs in order to support program spending without getting into the kind of cuts that would be inevitable in the Wildrose scenario. If you have an answer, that would be great.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, about two minutes on the clock.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, I have a great answer, and that is: neither one of those scenarios is reasonable, and that's why they are sitting over there. The member does a great job as the MLA for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, by the way, but that's why there are just two of them over there, and that's why there were just four before and two before that. He talked about when he was first elected and his opposition to the flat tax. You know, all I can say is that we have a tax regime in this province which has served us well. We are, as I said earlier, the beacon when you look worldwide as to regimes that are doing well in this economy.

That being said, we have committed – and I'll repeat it I think for probably the eighth time here this afternoon – that we are going to do a review. We are going to consult with Albertans. We are not going to take some philosophical view that that member has or a philosophical view that somebody else has. We're going to talk to Albertans, and we're going to work with Albertans to develop the right fiscal framework for this province. That may include changes here or changes there. I don't know. That's the discussion we're going to have with Albertans. That's the best answer I can give that member right now.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Hon. member, 30 seconds.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. The minister may be surprised at how many of them and of us are sitting over here or over there after the next election.

I do want to thank him for that evasive answer, which confirms in my mind the conclusion that the government has no intent to bring about a fair tax system and will instead cut programs after the next election. I think that's what's most likely to come down the road.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. members. We will proceed to the next section.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, you have 20 minutes in conjunction with the minister.

Mr. Taylor: Sure, and the minister and I will go back and forth as has been going on all afternoon.

Minister, what's on the table with this review that is coming after the election? When you have this province-wide, genuine conversation with Albertans about the fiscal framework, what are you going to talk about? Give me the full range of what's up for discussion.

Mr. Liepert: I don't know how I can be any more specific, Mr. Chairman. We have said that we need to do a review of our fiscal framework. We've been very clear that taxes are included in that. We've been very clear that we want to include our savings plans, the heritage fund, the sustainability fund. Is that the right way to save? Should we be saving more, saving less? Those are the kinds of discussions that we will have. There will be parameters developed and set up for this discussion with Albertans. I know the member won't be here, nor will I, but we'll be watching from the outside and maybe participating.

Mr. Taylor: We may well be. We will be watching from the outside, and we'll be watching with interest because I think there's a need – and it sounds as though you're moving in that direction – to put some pretty clear questions to Albertans that boil down to this. Now, there may be a whole bunch of subquestions in this, but it's basically: what do you expect from your government in the way of programs and services? How much of our nonrenewable resource revenues do you want to save for the future and in what fashion? How much are you willing to pay in taxes or other fees to cover the costs of what you expect from the government? If those numbers don't add up, if they don't come out equal on each side of the ledger, then what are you as the people of Alberta prepared to do about that to make up the difference?

I know this is a stretch because the minister is not going to be here when this conversation takes place. Can the minister commit on behalf of this government, if it gets re-elected, to making sure that all those areas of the conversation are in fact covered?

Mr. Liepert: As this member said, I can't commit to that. The way he framed it, I would say, is probably going to be very close to the questions that will be asked. The reason it is is because those were the same questions and discussions that the President of Treasury Board and I had with Albertans when we went out on this budget consultation. We have to recognize that this was a consultation about budget 2012-13. What we want to do is have a much broader conversation about the next decade or three or four decades. I would think that the member is very much on stream with what that framework should look like for the discussion.

Mr. Taylor: Absolutely. As the minister is well aware, we've been talking about what's going to happen for the next year or the next three years for far too many years now, and we've seen a lot of potential slip through our fingers as we've done that, as we've spent nonrenewable resource revenues. You only get that dollar once. When that barrel of oil or that gigajoule of gas is burned, you don't ever get it again. Once it's spent, it's gone.

We have not had a long-term generational plan going in this province. To throw the minister's own words back at him about Alberta being the beacon in the world, the planetary lighthouse . . .

Mr. Liepert: Name me somewhere better.

Mr. Taylor: We could have done better, and we need to do better going forward.

I mean, the budget says this right on page 66 of the fiscal plan.

Alberta is not immune to global risks, which remain elevated due to uncertainty around the Eurozone debt crisis. An escalation in the crisis could result in the global economy slowing further, and may strain the global financial system. Moreover, a slowdown in the emerging markets would undermine demand for commodities, putting downward pressure on oil prices.

Far be it for me to pour cold water on the fires of the beacon, Minister, but that's only in the short term.

In the long term we have – and the minister used to be the Energy minister; the minister has, I know, some awareness of this – some more fundamental issues that we're grappling with: the, I believe, unfair reputation that our bitumen has been allowed to get around the world. The fact that we are grossly outnumbered: if you put us together with all the other producing jurisdictions of the world, we're grossly outnumbered by consuming jurisdictions, which is great when we've got the product to sell and they need it, but at $105 a barrel the consuming jurisdictions around the world and even in other parts of this country are starting to look really, really hard at alternatives to what we have to sell them. Not only are they doing that on price point, but they're doing that because of the awareness that climate change is a very, very real challenge and a very real threat going forward and that we have to lower our carbon footprint, the we being all of us around the world.

Again this is going to sound very doomful, but I don't know how else to put it. We run the very real risk of running out of customers for our oil and our gas and our bitumen and our coal and anything else that we have to sell in its raw form long before we run out of any of those resources. So it would seem to me that it's incumbent upon us to have a very adult conversation province-wide about how we are going to save and safeguard the money we make off those resources while we still have it coming in. Comment?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I'm not sure there was a question there, but I wouldn't mind commenting on the comments. A couple of things. I think I would disagree with the member relative to running out of customers before we run out of oil. Who knows when we're going to run out of customers, and it looks like we're going to have oil for hundreds of years. You know, I think the numbers that I've seen globally are that the development of renewables is only keeping up with growth, and the demand for oil continues to grow.

It's funny, Mr. Chairman. I'm glad I had the opportunity to serve as Energy minister because you can't go anywhere and get in a conversation as Finance minister without talking, basically, energy. That's just the way Alberta is. So I actually believe, hon. member, that I don't share the same view that you do relative to renewables.

Now, I think another area we need to have this discussion with Albertans is that we don't know where the price of oil is going, but there are those who will draw up the doomsday scenario of $70 oil. My goodness, 10 years ago we would have thought that was a pretty good price. It could just as easily go to a hundred and fifty bucks a barrel as it could to $70. In the event that does occur, we have to have some savings strategies in place, but I think we also have to have a strategy where we need to show the rest of Canada that the country does well when Alberta and the west do well. How that could take form I don't know. That's a conversation, again, that I think will be good to have with Albertans.

The other comment I would make is that I really believe strongly – and I don't think the member and I would disagree on this – that we have to bring the heritage fund back so that Albertans feel like they have some attachment to the heritage fund. We all know in Calgary the development of Fish Creek park, the Kananaskis, Capital City park: all of those things people relate to the heritage fund. We've had two generations now almost pass in Alberta where we've had a lot of new people come into Alberta, and all the heritage fund has been, really, is just an investment fund out there. In my view, bring it back so that Albertans who have an attachment to that heritage fund can see that the savings that are accumulating to some degree are going into improving the quality of life in Alberta as well.

Those would be the comments I would make in response.

Mr. Taylor: I'll agree with the minister up to a point as long as he's not suggesting that we take the money that's in the heritage trust fund right now and spend it all on projects and programs and parks and feel-good initiatives that Albertans feel they could have a sense of ownership in without first developing a plan for how we're going to replace the money in the heritage fund that we're going to spend on any of those things and, quite frankly, how to grow the heritage fund to a much, much bigger level than it is now.

There are a thousand and one ways to skin a cat, right? Perhaps we're not going to put it all into the heritage fund. Perhaps we're going to develop a basket of different endowment funds that we want to invest in. I'm certainly open to that discussion.

One of the things that is really, really key here, it seems to me – and I'm very open to the idea that while we have this discussion about the future of the heritage savings trust fund, part of that discussion deals with what we are going to do with it that's in the public interest and has public value and something that the public can get a real sense of ownership of. We also need to commit to a savings and investment strategy and commit to it in a way that, frankly, locks future governments into doing at least as much of that saving.

I'm probably setting off some alarm bells there because the minister is probably thinking: "Well, hold on. Until such time as we get some magic amount of money into the heritage savings trust fund where we can use the income, then, from the heritage savings trust fund to replace the nonrenewable resource revenues that we spend on the province's day-to-day operations today, we've got to be mindful of the fact that we live in a boom-and-bust resource-based economy and times are not always so good that you can afford to be throwing huge chunks of money into the heritage fund."

We need a plan here. As oversimplified as this may sound, I think it's not a bad idea that we view this as a very large extension of a family budget.

Families need to meet the monthly expenses, including deregulated electricity bills. They need to set aside a little bit of money that they're just going to have fun with and go blow on a VLT or a bottle of Scotch or a movie or a hockey game or something like that. They need to also have a plan to pay down whatever debt they have, and they need a plan to save for the future: for junior's education, for mom and dad's retirement, that sort of thing. So it's not an either/or situation; it's both/and all the time. Again, a comment?

5:00

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, just before you comment, I need to extend a courtesy to the independent, the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, just in case he wishes to address the budget estimates at the moment. We have about eight minutes left.

If not, then we'll continue on with the members that are engaged at the moment. Okay.

Mr. Liepert: Well, we could certainly carry on this debate for some time. I think one of the things that we have to remember is that we are a province in the country of Canada. We have seen in the past what happens when certain central Canadian-based federal political parties decide that they can use Alberta's wealth to generate votes in other parts of the country. I think those are all the kinds of discussions we have to have about how much you save, how much you invest. You know, we've done a very good job in the last half-dozen years in rebuilding our capital infrastructure.

I want to just make one point clear. When the member started his last set of comments, he inferred that somehow I was suggesting that we spend the heritage fund. That was not what I said, and I don't want to leave that impression. What I said was that I believe we need to look at going back to the original concept of the heritage fund, and that's different than what I heard the member say. That's the discussion we need to have with Albertans.

Mr. Taylor: That was exactly the clarification I was looking for. I wanted to make sure that I understood precisely what the minister meant when he said that, and now I feel that I do. Thank you very much for that.

The question, though – and I'll try not to dwell on this too long – is of Alberta's relationship vis-à-vis the rest of the country and vis-à-vis certain central Canadian political parties or movements who, you know, have evil designs on our heritage and our wealth and all the rest of that. The minister also commented just a couple of minutes ago that it's necessary to tell our story to the rest of Canada and get the rest of Canada to realize that when we do well, they do well. I want to caution the minister not to try and argue that one both ways. I mean, if when we do well, the rest of the nation does well, sir, then when we do well at saving and investing our money and putting it into infrastructure programs or research programs or whatever it is that benefits Albertans, there's a spillover effect to all of Canada. That's the story that we need to be telling, not just: this is our money, and you can't have any of it.

Maybe there's a real public relations job to be done there, but I would argue that in addition to just marketing and communication of the message, there's also some real doing that has to accompany the talking. In fact, maybe the doing is more important than the talking. Maybe leading by example is more important than just saying: aren't we a wonderful bunch of cowboys out here in the west; you know, we have all your best interests at heart. Let's show that.

In this budget I'd like to see more commitment to such things as greening our energy, whether that's in terms of research into renewables or whether that's in terms of the research that we do, that we don't always talk about to the fullest extent that we should, that we should probably be doing more of as well to make sure that we get bitumen to the point that it is the cleanest oil in the world. It means things like looking very seriously – and I know these are conversations I should maybe more appropriately be having when we debate the estimates of the Energy department than the Finance department, but there's a crossover there. There's a crossover. We maybe need to be having some very serious conversations about getting off coal and onto natural gas or something else.

The thing that drives me – it's not just that I want to go out and hug a big old tree. Okay? I do like hugging trees as long as the bark is not too rough and the sap isn't coming out and making you too sticky. There's nothing wrong with hugging a tree, but I like there to be a practical purpose to this as well. It comes down to this. When I see the work that other consuming jurisdictions are doing to try and figure out how to build those batteries that will store wind power and solar power, when I see them trying to figure out how to build a transportation fleet that will run on some alternative to fossil fuels, when I see them trying to put distributed electricity generation to the fullest work, when I see them talking about these things and see the opportunity for innovation and research and development and so on and so forth, and I see that it's happening in other jurisdictions and not here, I wonder whether we're just too smug that the money is coming in.

The way we're doing it is that we punch a hole in the ground, we scoop a bunch of dirt out, we run it through the upgrader, we get the oil apart from the sands, we refine it, maybe, or maybe we just put it into the pipeline as crude, we sell it, and we make the money. Life is good. Ain't it sweet? The future is so bright that I need to wear shades. Someday we're going to wake up and discover that the rest of the world has passed us by.

These are the sorts of things that I don't see. Should this government get re-elected, I would urge this government to put on the table in the big conversation with Albertans later this year or next year these things that I don't see in this budget. I don't see a commitment to covering all of our bases.

Mr. Liepert: I need to get in before the bell goes here. Oh, my God. How wrong that member has to be. Two billion dollars for carbon capture and storage, $2 billion for GreenTRIP, an announcement by our Minister of Environment and Water relative to monitoring the oil sands, bioenergy credits was on the front page of the Journal two days ago: I mean, I could go on and on and on. I don't know what world this member has been living in when he makes these comments. No jurisdiction on a per capita basis has committed what we have committed in this government to ensuring that we have not only talked but that we walk the walk when it comes to renewable, when it comes to clean energy, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Hon. member, there are about 45 seconds left.

Mr. Taylor: Then I will finish simply by saying that – and I will get in the last word – perhaps we can continue this conversation postelection over a beer, sir. I look forward to seeing the fruits of your labour. I haven't seen them yet.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

No one else at this point? Then we can conclude this section.

I have a government member listed to speak next. I don't see that member in the Chamber, so I'd be happy to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much.

Mr. Liepert: I'll try and do a little better this time.

Mr. MacDonald: I hope you can do a little better. You've had a little bit of time, and you've got three experts there to provide you with notes.

Now, we have been listening with interest to other members and their questions and to the hon. minister's responses. There have been good questions on revenue. I also have some additional questions at this time, Mr. Chairman. Page 8 of the fiscal plan states:

The funding and investments in Budget 2012 are directed at growing the economy to support a sustainable future. Going forward we will examine, in consultation with Albertans, our revenue sources and how the revenue is used so that Alberta can reduce its dependence on volatile revenues associated with energy.

We will develop a fiscal framework that contributes to building a predictable, sustainable revenue base.

My question at this time goes like this. How many reviews are really necessary? This statement in one form or another has been in every budget document since the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville took over in the Premier's office. This is a delaying tactic. Nothing ever changes. How is this statement or this review any different than previous claims that have been made by this government?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I will give this member the same answer I gave the Member for Calgary-Currie. He and I will be on the outside looking in, and I say: stay tuned. We have a new Premier who has committed to this, Mr. Chairman. You can drag up all of the old reviews that you might want to drag up but, in my view, there has never been anything anywhere near as comprehensive as what is being proposed in the next year.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I'm not saying getaway cars shouldn't have rear-view mirrors, but the one you're in obviously doesn't.

Now, further to this, on page 15:

By 2014-15, it is projected that about two-thirds of current non-renewable resource revenues will be needed to fund current expenditures. The remaining one-third, or more than $5 billion, will be either saved or invested for the province's future needs.

Since this problem is explicitly stated throughout the budget, why are real commitments to action not being made now?

Mr. Liepert: Unlike some members across the way we want to have the discussion with Albertans. We listen to Albertans, and we will act based on what we hear from Albertans. For us to prejudge what Albertans want us to do I think would be inappropriate. I will repeat it. I think this is now – I don't know – nine, 10, 11 times that I've said that.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, total revenue is estimated to be $40.3 billion this year, which is a 4.6 per cent, or $1.8 billion, increase from the previous year. Page 52 of the fiscal plan states an average 10 per cent growth for the next two years.

The five-year trend in percentage of total revenue from nonrenewable resource revenue is this, Mr. Chairman. In 2008-09 nonrenewable resource revenue was $11.9 billion, which was 30 per cent of total government revenue. In 2009-10 nonrenewable resource revenue was $6 billion, which was 18.6 per cent of total government revenue. In 2010-11 nonrenewable resource revenue was $8.4 billion, which was 24 per cent of total government revenue. In 2011-12 the forecast for nonrenewable resource revenue was $11.3 billion, which was 29 per cent of total government revenue. The 2012-13 estimate for nonrenewable resource revenue is $11.1 billion, which is, again, 28 per cent of total government revenue.

These are the stark examples, Mr. Chairman, of the danger of relying so heavily on resource revenue for core program spending. What is also interesting to note is that the only year in which reliance on nonrenewable resource revenue fell below 20 per cent was the year following the recession. My question is: has the ministry developed a target percentage for reliance on natural resource revenue? If so, can you explain how this target was developed, and if not, why not?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Chairman, I have to repeat that that is exactly what we are going to be undertaking in the next year, and I would encourage the member as a private citizen to be involved.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, earlier we heard questions about corporate income tax. Before I get to that, in the economic outlook on page 72 there are a lot of interesting charts which are contrary to the optimism that's displayed by the hon. minister in the government's projections. There is a chart which is titled With So Much Uncertainty, Businesses Are Hoarding Cash – and you can't blame them for doing that – Cash Reserves of Non-financial Corporations. It is a Canada and U.S. comparison chart. If we were to go back to 2007, we can see that there has been quite an interest among Canadian corporations to stash some cash for some troubling economic times or some rough financial waters. This is for Canada. Could the minister or his officials give us a breakdown? Does the same apply for corporations that are doing business in this province? Are they setting aside a modest amount of cash in case there is further economic uncertainty?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I'm not sure that I can answer that question. What I would suggest is that we'll take that away and respond to the member in writing.

Mr. MacDonald: I can appreciate that.

Now, page 52 of the fiscal plan shows that corporate income tax revenue for 2012-13 is estimated to be $4.4 billion, which is $461 million, or 11 per cent, more than was collected last year. The government is projecting that corporate income tax revenue will increase to $5.6 billion by 2014-15. Is this increase in corporate income tax from more businesses investing in Alberta or from current businesses becoming more profitable?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, it would be kind of a combination of all of those. As I said earlier, you have to remember that we've got a changing situation in the oil sands, where a number of companies are reaching payout. That probably would impact their corporate tax position. We also know the growth in this province, so you're going to have some new corporations that are going to be paying corporate tax. I think the right answer is that it's a combination of both of what the hon. member had alluded to.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Now, also, on page 52 of the fiscal plan it is reported that personal income tax revenue for 2012-13 will be about $9.3 billion. This is a 9 per cent increase, or an increase of $793 million, from the previous year. Where does the majority of personal income tax growth come from? Is it higher wages? Is it more people involved in the workforce? Is this growth in income seen equitably across the income tax brackets, or is this growth from higher wage earners?

Mr. Liepert: Again, Mr. Chairman, it's a combination of all of those things. I mean, our population is growing. Workers are coming into this province and paying income tax. Corporations are doing better. Thereby, employees are doing better and paying more income tax, those that are here. I think there's a number. I need to find one particular number, and I'll respond to the member with that information here in a couple of minutes.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. Now, another significant source of revenue has been bonuses in the sale of Crown leases. Pages 55 and 56 of the fiscal plan forecast $3.3 billion in revenue from this source. This is a lot higher than was budgeted. Last year's revenue included a historic sale date on June 1, that brought in $842 million in revenue in a single sale. Revenue from bonuses and sales of Crown leases is expected to fall to $2 billion in 2012-13. Why was the budgeting for last year's sales totals from bonuses in the sale of Crown leases so inaccurate, what led to this drastic increase, and how does the government know that this year's revenue forecast will be any more accurate than the previous year's?

Mr. Liepert: Well, that's actually a very good question, Mr. Chairman, because we don't. Who could have predicted an $840-million land sale? You couldn't have, and I couldn't have. You know, this is one of those situations where industry believes that the investment is worth it in the long term and makes those decisions. That's why it's called a land auction. We have to at the beginning of the year take our best judgment in consultation with industry as to what we think and what they think is going to happen over the next 12 months and make our projections accordingly.

If you look historically over our land sales, they move somewhere in the range from a low of under a billion dollars to the $2 billion range. Then we've had two or three really good years. I'm told that the reason for these two or three good years is primarily around the new technology which is allowing horizontal drilling, allowing going back into existing fields. Shale gas has had a lot to do with that. Again, we use the Department of Energy's projections – and I'm going from some memory here – and we see a levelling off in those land sales to a point where the projections this year of about $2 billion is closer to where we think, realistically, they will be.

I want to refer the hon. member to page 99 of the budget document. There's a chart in the upper right-hand corner which shows where personal income tax revenue comes from. Basically, the top 10 per cent of income earners pay 54 per cent of the income tax, and the bottom 50 per cent pay 3 per cent of the total income tax.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Now, sticking to the discussion on Crown leases and bonuses, has there been any consideration given to taking this total amount that's generated on an annual basis and dedicating it to savings; for instance, putting it immediately into the heritage savings trust fund?

Mr. Liepert: I would encourage this member as a private citizen to make that submission next year to the committee.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, since there's been this spike in land sales – and the minister alluded to the fact that horizontal drilling is one of the driving conditions or forces in this rather robust sale – since we've had the change in the royalty format and we see the spike in our land sales and we see some of the incentives that have come off in northeastern British Columbia, for instance, on natural gas drilling, has there been a study done to see how our royalty regimes and the various holidays we now have in place, when you compare them to other jurisdictions, are reflective of the increased activity at the bimonthly land sales?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Chairman, we really are into the Department of Energy information here. I would only respond by saying that we don't need to study. Just watch what's going on out there. I mean, with the investment that's taking place, industry is speaking with their feet, so we don't need to go hire a bunch of people to do a bunch of studies. It's all there.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the estimates of the Department of Finance.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, and that's precisely where we are, Mr. Chairman. In fact, we're on page 110 of the ministry estimates, line 2. Why was there an increase in fiscal planning and economic analysis in the amount of $248,000, or 4 per cent? Is this part of the initiative to review revenue streams?

Mr. Liepert: You know, the member referred to this earlier relative to the pensions. There are situations that develop where you might be transferring staff to do various projects. I think that if we're going to get into the tens of thousands of dollars in expenditures, I don't have that answer at my fingertips, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Now, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere asked some very good questions about the spending habits of this government. Certainly, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity over the years has asked a lot of very good questions also about the spending habits of this government. On page 21 of the fiscal plan operational spending is increasing by 6.9 per cent, or $2.4 billion, this year.

Another example of the failure of this government to maintain its budgetary commitments comes from the fiscal plan for Budget 2010, page 11, which projected government spending to rise to $39.7 billion by 2012-13. In reality, spending for 2012-13 is projected to be $41.1 billion. That there's a provincial election looming is just a coincidence. Now, this means that since 2008-09, when expenses were $36.7 billion, this government, this group of fiscal conservatives, has increased expenditures by $4.4 billion, or 12 per cent, in four years. Perhaps instead of going to Jasper on some kind of taxpayer-funded retreat, you might have gone to the cinema in the Eaton Centre and watched the Margaret Thatcher movie. Perhaps that would have been a better use of your time, and we would have saved a lot of money. [interjection] This is a Liberal from Saskatchewan talking here. Wow. Mr. Chairman, they're distracting me again.

The Deputy Chair: It would be wonderful if this debate occurred through the chair, as is the custom and tradition here.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. In comparison, revenues in 2008-09 were $35.8 billion and are forecast to be $40 billion in 2012-13. This is a $4.5 billion, or 13 per cent, increase in revenue. Again to the minister: how will the minister sustain these spending increases if nonrenewable resource revenue doesn't increase as projected? What's the backup plan? How can these spending increases be maintained over the long term? Or after the provincial election will we see more unannounced changes like we did with Alberta Health Services immediately following the 2008 provincial election? We know what kind of a disaster that's turned out to be.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, there's one minute left in this section.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, I'm not going to fall for the trap. The member referred to fiscal conservatives. I consider myself a Progressive Conservative, and we will run as Progressive Conservatives in the next election. If we have significant growth needs that we need to address, we will address them. I will challenge that member every time he stands up in his spot in question period asking questions about why we're not spending money on this and why we're not spending money on that and why we're not spending money on that. I will remind him of this conversation today because you can't talk out of both sides of your mouth.

You know, these folks over here are very good at sucking and blowing at the same time, Mr. Chairman, because you have that member over there talking about fiscal conservatism, and then he wants schools in Airdrie. We've got this particular member, who now sees himself as a fiscal liberal.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

We are now at that unique stage where any member who wishes to may engage with the minister on the estimates for the Department of Finance. Anyone, typically, from the government side would go next.

If not, then we'll recognize the member who has not yet had a chance, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Anderson: It goes to the Wildrose first. That's the rule.

The Deputy Chair: Was there a list that I didn't see?

Mr. Chase: I'm quite willing to have the hon. member . . .

The Deputy Chair: I'm sorry. The Member for Airdrie-Chestermere is correct. He is next on the list. My apologies. You'll be after that, Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Anderson: I almost lost my opportunity to talk with this minister one last time. I mean, this could be it. I'm sure we'll, you know, grab a coffee one day, Minister. I'm sure you'll want that. Very clearly, it's something you'd want to do. If that doesn't happen, I want to make sure that we at least have one last opportunity to talk with this pillar of fiscal conservatism, the hon. minister and Member for Calgary-West.

Very interesting that this minister talks about progressivism. He may not know this because I think he might think in his mind that progressivism means progress, but in the political realm that's not what progressivism means. Progressivism means big government solutions, big spending solutions, to try to interfere in the lives of people, to try to be all things to all people and interfere in various ways. That's what progressivism is.

5:30

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, if you could just get on with the estimates part of the debate so that we don't get relevance calls.

Mr. Anderson: Absolutely.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: The fiscal policies of Barack Obama, for example, are progressive. He's a self-prescribed progressive. So it's very interesting to see how progressive this person wants to be who is in our Finance minister chair.

You know, he is always asking us: where could we find savings? So I'm going to ask the minister whether he honestly thinks that given the report – let's just take the environment report that your government was touting today, showing that the CO₂ from our oil sands projects in northern Alberta would not in any way, shape, or form contribute to any kind of substantial global warming even if you took it all out of the ground and burned it all, that it still would be just a fraction.

If that's the report, then surely the $2 billion we're spending to pump CO₂ into the ground off a fraction of those projects – a fraction of them – you would think that this member would think that that might not be a very good use of taxpayers' money, especially when we are in deficit up to our eyeballs, almost $17 billion by the end of this year in deficits over the last five years. Not only do we have that much deficit to deal with, but just think of the schools and all of the things he's talking about; you know, the schools, the roads, and all these important things that Albertans want.

Yet $2 billion for carbon capture and storage: why, Minister? Why do we need to spend $2 billion on something when the report that you're trumpeting right now says that CO₂ from the oil sands is simply not a problem, that CO₂ from Alberta sources of energy are simply not the problem? Why $2 billion? Why should the taxpayers of Alberta have to pay for your little public relations stunt?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think appropriately that question should go when the Department of Energy is before the House. I would encourage the member to ask those questions when that particular set of estimates comes up. But I'll take the opportunity to talk a fair bit about carbon capture and storage. Since he raised it, we may as well have the discussion.

The Deputy Chair: Please tie it to your estimates.

Mr. Liepert: I'll try, but he raised the question. I'm answering his question, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: I'm prepared to allow a little latitude on this, but I will remind the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere of what I reminded the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar about.

Mr. Liepert: If you want, I'll justify why we've committed over a period of time to this particular program. It's part of the various estimates that are before the House. As you well recall, we had that discussion in this Assembly.

We have now commenced three separate projects around carbon capture and storage. If you travel anywhere around the world, they look at Alberta as the leader on this particular process, as a beacon when it comes to carbon capture and storage. That is only one part of what we're doing to ensure that we can stand up on the world stage anywhere and talk about what we're doing to clean up the environment.

You know, the member can refer to this particular study that comes out today, or there will be another one tomorrow, or there was probably one yesterday that said something different, but we have a plan. It's laid out clearly. We're going to stick to that plan when it comes to ensuring that we can prove on the world stage that we are doing everything possible to ensure that we walk the talk, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Well, I guess we won't talk about places where we can save money in the Finance minister's budget because that's apparently not in the purview of this questioning today. Enough said.

On page 8 of your fiscal plan it talks about your deficit. Where's the deficit number here? It's roughly $800 million. There it is, $886 million. That is your stated deficit. Then underneath, line 14, it says that "capital investment (not included in expense)" is $2.2 billion. Then, of course, it goes on to show that the sustainability fund has fallen over $3 billion. If you add the capital investment not included in it as an expense and your deficit number, it comes out to over $3 billion.

This is a constant issue that we've been trying to point out to folks, and we're happy to see that finally the folks in the media picked up on what we call the true cash deficit: how much more money is flowing out of Alberta's coffers than is coming in in receipts? I just want to have the minister confirm for me that the true cash deficit, meaning the money that we're taking out versus the money we're taking in, is actually a deficit of well over $3 billion and is not $800 million. That's the actual cash deficit, not your accounting deficit, your cash deficit. Why isn't that number more clearly stated, the actual amount of money that's going out more than we're taking in?

Mr. Liepert: Well, again, the member is quite incorrect. What we have stated in our capital plan – we have two different segments of capital. One is government capital. If we were to build a road, for instance, that theoretically the government owns going forward, we amortize that out over I think it's 20 years. Those dollars are below the surplus deficit line, and the amortization is above the line. That's common practice when it comes to corporate accounting. This member may not be aware of that because I don't think he has ever sat in any kind of a corporate operation in his lifetime, Mr. Chairman. What we do account for, though, as dollars straight out the door are those that go out to municipalities, municipal sustainability money. If money goes out to Alberta Health Services, those are dollars that the government no longer holds, so those are above the surplus deficit line.

For this member to sort of somehow indicate that they're not properly stated is incorrect, and that will be justified through the Auditor General, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Anderson: Well, I found that last comment a little bit rich coming from someone who has either worked in government or as a GR spokesperson his entire career. I actually have run a couple of businesses, successful ones, including one we're just starting up. I'd be glad to show him what a budget sheet actually looks like in the real world, where you have to make sure that the money that's going out is equal or greater than the amount coming in because if you don't, you go bankrupt. That's what bankruptcy is. Most people don't have a little surplus or a little nest egg saved away to deal with that type of eventuality. Maybe after he's actually been in a business for some point of time, he'll actually understand what that means rather than being on the government payroll his entire career.

With regard to his little figure on how they're accounting for the $2.2 billion in infrastructure that's not included as an expense, I guess I would ask this question, then. By your logic, then, Minister, if we spent $20 billion next year – let's just throw a number out there – on infrastructure, brand new infrastructure of bridges and roads and hospitals and new everything, $20 billion of new infrastructure, wouldn't it be that we could do that and the budget deficit wouldn't go up 1 cent? In fact, I think we could actually spend a hundred billion dollars on infrastructure, and under your accounting the budget deficit would still be $886 million because you wouldn't be counting that as an expense. So why don't you do that? Why don't we get rid of this infrastructure deficit right away? We can blow through a hundred billion dollars in infrastructure spending and not add a nickel to our deficit number. That's the logic if we followed your logic on that.

The reason is pretty simple why that's absurd. It's because you actually do have to pay for this. When you're talking about provincial infrastructure, you can't sell a bridge. You can't sell a road. You can't sell a hospital. You can't do it. So those are not your typical assets. When you're a company, you buy an asset, you buy a piece of land, and it goes on your balance sheet. Great. You can sell that asset if you get into trouble, if you needed to sell it. Government can't do that. We don't have that ability. There's a small fraction of the assets where government has that ability.

I guess I would say, then, that if you know that you can't, unless you're intending to sell these bridges down the road, why on earth would you not tell the people of Alberta the true cash deficit, meaning the true amount of cost, more dollars being spent than are being taken in in a year, and just admit that the budget deficit this year on a cash-cash basis is over $3 billion? If it isn't, why is over $3 billion coming out of the sustainability fund this year if your deficit is only $886 million? Can you explain that?

Mr. Liepert: This member is really quite incredible. He challenges international forecast prices for oil. International forecasters: he says that they're wrong. He challenges industry on their production numbers. He says that they're wrong. He challenges the Auditor General on our accounting procedures. He says that they're wrong. Man, this guy is brilliant. He is brilliant. All of these other people in the world are wrong. He's the only guy who knows, Mr. Chairman. I'm amazed. I'll sit down.

The Deputy Chair: Is there anyone who wishes to rise?

Mr. Anderson: It only took the member four years to figure that out. That's so good of you, hon. member, that you figured out that I can actually add. Maybe one day you'll be able to add, too.

The number on here says $2.2 billion plus an $886 million deficit. That equals an over $3.1 billion cash deficit. Why is it so hard for you to admit that you're spending over $3 billion more than you're taking in? If not, let's just simplify the question since you like simple questions. If it's not $3 billion, why is the sustainability fund going down from $7.4 billion to $3.7 billion? Where is that money going? If the deficit is only $886 million, why is the sustainability fund going down by 3 and a half billion dollars? Can you explain that?

Mr. Liepert: Nobody is hiding anything. It's all there. It's in the consolidated financials if he would read it, but it's not the deficit/surplus line. Why doesn't he go have a conversation with the Auditor General, then?

Mr. Anderson: It would warm my heart. It would be such a good gift from this minister if he would just say to the people of Alberta that there is over $3 billion in cash deficit that we have this year as a province. Why won't he just say it? How is it so hard to admit? The sustainability fund is going down by 3 and a half billion dollars. That's where the cash is coming from. Why can't you say it, Minister? The $3.1 billion: is that not the cash deficit?

Mr. Liepert: Because, Mr. Chairman, that's not what we talk about. I will leave it up to the member to go have the debate with the Auditor General on our accounting model. It's been confirmed by the Auditor General every year. The books are there to look at.

He can communicate how he wants. We'll communicate the right way, and then we'll see what happens.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: All right. With regard to long-term savings can you share with us, Minister, given that the heritage fund when adjusted for inflation is now worth less than it was in 1976, why that is the case? Why has the policy of this government constantly been to drain money out of the – every cent of interest that is made in the heritage fund every year you take out and you spend it. Why for the last however many years has that been your policy, and will you ever change it?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I'll repeat again: that's the discussion that we should all have over the course of the next year relative to our fiscal framework. What do we spend on program delivery? What do we spend on capital? I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this province now has the most modern infrastructure, the most modern hospitals, schools, the best roads and highways of any jurisdiction in North America. That is a heritage for our future. If we want to change that fiscal framework, the opportunity will be there over the course of the next year.

Mr. Anderson: If the infrastructure is so good, Minister, then why are you spending 50 per cent more than the next closest jurisdiction on infrastructure? I mean, you can't have it both ways. Either you have an infrastructure deficit, or you don't have an infrastructure deficit. Everything you say is a contradiction. You can't say, "Oh, well, we've got this wonderful infrastructure to leave to our kids," and then in the next breath spend 50 per cent more than the next closest province on infrastructure, including tax-and-spend jurisdictions, Liberal jurisdictions like B.C., Ontario, and Quebec. You can't have it both ways. Either you're just wasting money because you've already made – you just said that we have a world-class infrastructure second to none in Canada, yet you're spending way more because you say that we have the biggest infrastructure deficit in all of Canada, or you don't.

Now, I happen to think that our infrastructure is good. I agree with you. It is second to none. There are places where we need more schools, and there are places where we need more seniors' care facilities and so forth, but by and large we have very good infrastructure here. That is why we have proposed in our plan, since we have this wonderful infrastructure, that we don't need to spend 50 per cent more than B.C., Ontario, and Quebec. We can actually spend just slightly more than B.C., Ontario, and Quebec average and actually maintain and build the new infrastructure we need while making sure that we have enough money left over at the end of the day to save some dollars.

So which one is it? Do we have an infrastructure deficit and need to spend 50 per cent more than the next closest province or not? Why did you feel the need to spend that money?

Chair's Ruling Relevance

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, I'm sorry. I have to interrupt again. You know, we're creeping into an area of discussion about the main budget motion, listening carefully to those previous comments from Airdrie-Chestermere. That might be appropriate at another time, but what we're trying to debate today is specifically the Ministry of Finance and the estimates as printed from page 110 forward in the main estimates book. That's, really, technically what we're here to discuss.

Out of tradition the chair has allowed some discussion on the three-year fiscal plans because that has been a long-standing unwritten tradition of the House. However, when we get into the specifics of ministries such as has been alluded to by various members, including the previous speaker, then I just want to take a moment and remind you that if we want to change the rules, we can certainly at some point look at doing that. But today the rules are the way they are, hon. member.

Now, Mr. Minister, there's about a minute and a half left. If you wish, I'll allow this one, but that will be the end of the discussion in terms of stuff that pertains to other specific ministries, not specifically the estimates of yours.

Mr. Liepert: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think that the way I would respond to this particular tirade is that we went out and talked to Albertans before we started to prepare this budget. As I said earlier, there were several things that Albertans said were their highest priorities. They were health, education, and ensuring that those who are vulnerable in society are looked after. Clearly, they also commended what we had done on infrastructure but gave us direction that there's still more to do.

Now, what we have done is that we have slightly throttled back on the infrastructure budget and spread it out in some cases over an extra year on some of the health projects, as an example, while the minister of health is undertaking a review to ensure that the project as proposed is going to meet the needs of that community.

I don't think we cut back on the schools in the member's constituency, but if he wants us to do that, we could do that. If he wants to go to the doors in Airdrie-Chestermere in the next election and say, "Our party is suggesting that we do not build any more new schools," I encourage him to go ahead and do that.

This government is committed to ensuring that we have the most modern infrastructure probably in North America. There's still work to be done, and we're going to continue to do it, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

5:50

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I just want to begin by correcting some of the statements that the hon. Finance minister made. When he was Minister of Education, he should have been aware during his tenure that the average age of schools is 40-plus years. So when we talk about our admirable school infrastructure, that's a false discussion.

In terms of acute-care bed infrastructure we have approximately 800 seniors questionably benefiting from a thousand-plus dollars a day in those beds.

Maybe I'll state my premise, and if I'm wrong in my premise — is the Finance ministry not responsible for doling out all the dollars to the other ministries?

Chair's Ruling Relevance

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, they certainly work with the Treasury department. I'll have someone from government comment if they wish, but please don't misunderstand here. We do have a big-picture, main-budget motion, which you will have an opportunity to discuss, debate, question, and so on. But today, as with previous days, we're going department by department. There is a department and a ministry specifically called Finance, as enunciated on page 110 and going forward in this big, thick book, and that's what we're technically supposed to be debating here. I have allowed some discussion on fiscal plans, as I indicated earlier, because out of heritage and tradition and respect for this House that has been allowed in the past. I didn't mind a little bit of that. But when you're getting into specific ministries, there are other ministry estimates coming, there's question period, and there are other sources for you to tap.

Proceed.

Mr. Chase: Okay. I appreciate that clarification, and I'll try and use a .22 approach as opposed to a shotgun approach.

There is a very definite difference in this particular budget, which allows voters to delineate where the various parties stand. The Wildrose has asked this government to commit that there will be no tax increases over the next four years because they say that if we have a Wildrose government, they commit to no tax increases.

Now, this minister has accused the members on this side of the House of sucking and blowing, but to use the language of the street, the Pollyanna budget that this minister has tabled sucks because it projects such a favourable image going forward that everything is going to be solved because of the global market set prices for nonrenewable resources. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asked a very important question, and that is: what if this plan doesn't take place? What is the fallback position? Now, the hon. Minister of Finance didn't provide an answer for that. [interjections] I'm not sure if he's hearing my question. I realize it's at the end of the three hours and people are getting restless. I appreciate that.

An Hon. Member: Is there a question?

Mr. Chase: Yeah. The question is the difference in the rosy picture. The Liberals are not painting a rosy picture. We're saying that for 90 per cent of Albertans we'll stay with the current flat-tax rate. But we're saying that in order to have sustainable funding going into the future, we have to have a tax increase of 2 per cent for those earning over $100,000. We have to have a tax increase of 5 per cent for those earning between $150,000 and $250,000, and for those over $250,000 the Liberals are saying that for a sustainable economy we would raise theirs by 7 per cent.

Now we have the Wildrose saying: no increases. We have the Conservative government saying: well, we're not going to talk about any increases in taxes prior to the election. Then we have a very definite Liberal platform. So, for the electorate that gives a very clear choice of A, B, or C.

Back to the question from Edmonton-Gold Bar that the hon. member did not answer, and that is: Mr. Minister, if these rosy global projections of nonrenewable resource revenue do not pan out, how are you going to finance this province going forward over the next year or years?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, I know that there was a comment earlier about speculation, and you have about two and a half minutes to speculate back if you wish, but I wish you would tie it back to your estimates so that the chair stays in order.

Mr. Liepert: You know, I know that this particular member is wanting us to get into the what-if, just like the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. What-if? Well, what if the sky falls? We don't budget based on:

what if the sky falls? We budget based on the best information. That information comes from – I'll repeat it again because the member wasn't here when I laid out how we come up with these numbers. First of all – and it's in the book – there are international forecasters for the price of oil. We take the average price. It's in the book right there. They're projecting upwards of $108 a barrel for oil. Today it's $105.

An Hon. Member: A hundred and six.

Mr. Liepert: It closed at $106, I'm told. You can call that rosy. You can call it pie-in-the-sky projections. I call it realistic, Mr. Chairman. We go based on international forecasters.

You know, the Member for Calgary-Varsity, when he retires, and the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, when he retires, and the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, when he gets defeated in the next election, should all go out there and form an international forecasting company, and maybe they could compete with all of the people who actually get paid to know what they're talking about, Mr. Chairman.

To go on a little further, Member, then at year-end we sit down with industry, and we find out what their projected production levels are. You multiply one by the other, and you kind of come up with a number which is in the book. Then our professionals, who are sitting in the gallery, I'm sure, shaking their heads listening to this kind of interrogation – what they do on a daily basis has nothing to do with anything we've heard here today. Absolutely nothing. So those folks then take what we have in the book and project corporate and personal income taxes out of that. That's how we come up with our budget. Those are the best numbers we have here today. They are not pie in the sky. We don't pick them out of the air. As I said earlier, the President of the Treasury Board and myself don't go have a beer and say: well, what number are we going to plug in this year? No, we don't. You may think we do, but we don't.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I successfully wore out the clock.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister; however, pursuant to Government Motion 6, that was agreed to on February 8, 2012, the Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress.

[Mr. Zwozdesky in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration resolutions for the Department of Finance relating to the 2012-2013 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2013, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Does the Assembly concur in the progress report and in the request?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: That, then, is concurred with. Thank you. So ordered.

Well, hon. members, it's been a very invigorating afternoon of discussion and debate. I would invite the hon. Government House Leader now to do the honourable thing.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understood when you got up that you were seeing the clock at 6 o'clock and just assumed that you would be adjourning.

The Acting Speaker: Well, it looked close.

Mr. Hancock: I would now move that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:59 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, February 22, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask for guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't often have visitors sitting in your gallery, but today I am particularly pleased to introduce to you and through you a man familiar to many of us, the former Edmonton-Calder MLA and current Member of Parliament for the Edmonton-St. Albert riding, Mr. Brent Rathgeber. Brent and I have known each other for a long time. He was instrumental in my decision to run in 2008, and he holds, in my mind, one of the greatest bits of folk wisdom I have ever heard. As tough as it is to make a law, it is even tougher to unmake one. But the gun registry as we know it is history. Thank you, Brent, I would ask you to rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a distinct pleasure of mine to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly the Hon. June Draude, Saskatchewan's Minister of Social Services. Minister Draude was a founding member of the Saskatchewan Party in 1997 and has served as a minister since 2007. Like me, she grew up on the farm and continues to have strong roots and ties to rural communities. The minister is taking some time here in Alberta to learn more about our 10-year plan to end homelessness and the housing first model, but we managed to discuss much more than that. I look forward to many years of working with the minister as we build great partnerships. She met with Susan McGee of Homeward Trust this morning and toured some housing projects here in Edmonton.

Today I had the pleasure of joining Minister Draude for lunch along with the president of the Saskatchewan Housing Corporation, Mr. Don Allen, and her assistant, Mr. Theo Bryson. All of us agreed that the future of Alberta and Saskatchewan and particularly the New West Partnership working together are incredible. I'd ask all three of them to please rise – they're seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker – to receive the traditional warm welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today.

An Hon. Member: It's all in Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you. It is indeed, hon. member.

I'd like to introduce to you, first of all, Mr. Speaker, three of the founding members of the Bust a Move breast cancer fundraiser group, and I'll be talking more about this group in a moment in a member's statement. First is my eldest sister and undoubtedly my strongest supporter, my sister Susan Norum; her daughter, my niece, Melissa Norum; and the president of Airco air charters, Mrs. Mary Anne Stanway. Now, my wife, Barb, who is actually the one who founded this, couldn't be here because, thanks to a robust Alberta economy, she's out, actually, closing a house deal. I would like them all now to please rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is a school group near and dear to my heart as well as to my home in Kensington, the class from Kensington elementary school in the Edmonton-Calder constituency. We have with us today 27 students and teacher Miss Jaelene McEwen and student teacher – I think I've got that right, Stephanie – Miss Stephanie Gruber. If you could all rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly. What a great-looking group.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two classes from Riverview visiting today, so it's a double-the-pleasure kind of day for me. The first is a class from St. Martin Catholic school, which is a wonderful, wonderful school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Ms Harasymiw, who invites me out year after year to speak to the grade 6s about government and always makes sure that her students are incredibly well prepared. She's one of the really wonderful teachers in Alberta's school system. I'd ask St. Martin to rise and receive the warm welcome of all MLAs.

The second class is another great school from my constituency. It's a school that has produced a number of MLAs over the years, Mr. Speaker, including the Member for Edmonton-Centre, the former Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, and me. You know, anything can happen. This school is called McKernan elementary school. There is a large group here, actually, 47. There are teachers Miss Sackey, Ms Kinjo, and Miss Lassouani – sorry about the pronunciation – and the parents are Ms Bergman and Mr. Ley. I would venture to guess that there might be a future MLA among this class as well. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two fine groups today to introduce to you and through you. I am pleased to introduce to you very special guests who are in attendance today to witness the tabling of Bill 4, the St. Albert and Sturgeon Valley School Districts Establishment Act. These groups worked collaboratively to respond to an issue in their school jurisdiction, and I am proud to introduce legislation later on today, as you already know. We have Sturgeon school division chair Terry Jewell, vice-chair Tracy Nowak, and superintendent Michèle Dick as well from the greater St. Albert Catholic regional division, chair Lauri-Ann Turnbull, trustee Dave Caron, and superintendent David Keohane. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Also, Mr. Speaker, a very enthusiastic team of students that I met earlier today: they are known as the robotics team from l'école Maurice-Lavallée school here in Edmonton. I met with them earlier. They are travelling to St. Louis, Missouri, in April to compete in the FIRST Tech Challenge World Championship, building robots. This group is one of two teams representing Canada in that particular competition. This is an international competition where students design and build robots that must perform tasks for points. They are either self-controlled or they are controlled by students who are operating them. Simply phenomenal.

Today from that school we have 11 grade 10 students, and they are Yves Dempsey, Emanuelle Dubbeldam, Sean Fisher, Cameron French, James Hryniw, Alain Letourneau, Nathan Liebrecht, Yannick Plamondon, René Yvan Lucas, Marcel Schneider, Nicholas Westbury, and they are accompanied by adult members Michel Gariépy, teacher; Vlad Pasek, principal; and Philippe Manseau, adult mentor. I would ask them all to rise, and I thank you for representing Alberta and Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two very special ladies from my constituency of Lac La Biche-St. Paul. They are Mrs. Eveline Luce and Mrs. Kathy Kutryk. Eveline and Kathy both provide exceptional support to me and the people of Lac La Biche-St. Paul. Eveline is my constituency assistant, and Kathy provides support to her when needed. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I received word today that some good Albertans are here in the Assembly, and I'd like to introduce them to you and through you to all members of the Assembly. They are Arlin Biffert, who is a real advocate for change in the relationship between aboriginal communities, the province, and the federal government, and with him today, I hope in one of the galleries, are Tammy L. Rain-Dellaire and Darlene Rain. They are both advocates for change for treatment of aboriginal children in child welfare. If they're joining us in either of the public galleries, I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome. There they are. Thank you very much.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you Mr. Satnam Singh Khalon, visiting us from the beautiful province of Punjab, visiting us for the first time. Joining him today are three very good friends and supporters: Gurbhalinder Singh Sandhu, editor for Des Pardes Times, as well as Satwinder Singh Khalon and Jaswinder Singh Dhillon, both local businessmen. I ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? Then please join with me in congratulating the hon. Minister of Transportation, who is today celebrating his arrival into the world many years ago.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Bust a Move Breast Health Awareness Campaign

Mr. Elniski: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It feels like I got a hat trick today.

As I indicated in my introduction, I'm here today to talk about the Alberta Cancer Foundation's latest fundraising event and breast health awareness campaign called Bust a Move. A thousand women from across the city are going to spend March 24 at the AgriCom doing six hours of cardio exercise to raise funds for breast cancer research and breast health awareness. While in the past we have mildly poked fun at the things we do for prostate cancer fundraising, every person here knows someone who has been stricken or otherwise affected by some form of the disease.

This is the inaugural year for Bust a Move's event, and some interesting people have signed on. Richard Simmons of Sweatin' to the Oldies fame will be there to offer his encouragement to the participants during the last half-hour of their six-hour exercise marathon. Yes, Mr. Speaker, six hours of cardio is being performed by teams with such creative names as the TaTas, the Breast Friends, and – I could not make this up, I swear – Handfuls of Happiness.

Getting involved is easy. Register, donate money, and take the pledge.

- I will dance, sing, and laugh my way to better health.
- I will celebrate the choices I make to stay healthy . . .
- I will not let the fear of silliness or sweat stand in the way of healthier breasts for all of womankind.

Then after agreeing to all of this, they do six hours of exercise, including something called zumba.

Mr. Speaker, it's serious business. One in eight women will be affected by breast cancer, and this inaugural year of Bust a Move needs to be a success. Thank you very much to my wife, Barb, my niece Melissa, Rita, Mary Anne, Sue, and Merie for entering the team Breast Friends. So far they're the third-highest grossing team, having raised $2,080, on the way to $5,000. It's a lofty target, but if you're going to have a goal, you may as well aim high.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Patient Advocacy by Health Professionals

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Welcome to Alberta, a First World province with Third World politics. My next remarks are all direct quotes from the just-released Health Quality Council report on physician intimidation.

More than half of physicians who responded . . . feel their ability to advocate had been limited in the past year . . . Twenty per cent of physicians who advocated experienced "active harmful obstruction."

Four hundred and seventy-eight respondents made comments such as:

- Advised to "not continue speaking"; "labelled negative, misinformed, or speaking out of turn."
- Several were threatened with loss of privileges, having their mental competency questioned, and being "fired" for advocating.
- "Intimidation is real but subtle"; "It's extremely difficult to advocate due to undertones of intimidation and being told to stop being so outspoken."
- "No matter what anyone says, a culture of fear, intimidation, apathy, elitism, inequality, and manipulation exists and has existed for some time."
- "Obvious systemic harassment and intimidation that [affects negatively] on patient safety."

It goes on.

Many interviewees identified, through their own personal experiences or experiences of others, disturbing situations where leaders . . . had attempted to 'muzzle' or intimidate physicians to prevent or cut short their advocacy. In some cases, this was attributed to leaders being 'directed' from external sources, such as politicians [in] the government, to stop the advocacy . . .

These experiences caused significant stress for some of the individuals involved and, in some instances, were life-altering, resulting in career changes or a move out of the province. These situations were seen to have sent a clear message that "if you speak up, this is what can happen to you."

Premier, call the public inquiry on physician intimidation and get to the bottom of this outrage. Your government's treatment of our health professionals borders on criminal.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Fallen Four Memorial

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. March 3 marks seven years since four brave young RCMP officers full of promise and hope were shot and killed near Mayerthorpe in the Whitecourt-St. Anne constituency. It was a terrible tragedy that took the lives of constables Peter Schiemann, Leo Johnston, Anthony Gordon, and Brock Myrol.

The volunteer, nonprofit Fallen Four Memorial Society in Mayerthorpe was established and determined that these communities will neither be defined nor defeated by the killings and with determination built a six-acre Fallen Four Memorial Park, which is a fitting tribute to these fallen heroes. Every year they organize a memorial candlelight ceremony around four lifelike bronze statues of Anthony, Leo, Peter, and Brock and a centre obelisk to honour all uniformed police officers, peace officers, soldiers, sheriffs, and first responders who have died in the line of duty across Canada.

On behalf of my neighbours in the Whitecourt-St. Anne constituency I ask that you join them either in thought or in person at the Fallen Four Memorial Park in Mayerthorpe at 7 p.m. on March 3, 2012. Mr. Speaker, joining this proud community to light a candle gives everyone a moment to reflect and remember with dignity those who serve and protect.

To the families of Peter, Brock, Anthony, and Leo, and to all of those who have lost a loved one who wears a uniform, I assure you that the brave are never forgotten.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [applause]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Problem Gambling

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government owns or leases over 13,000 slot machines and up to 6,000 VLTs. It is estimated that they will generate for the province $1.3 billion next year.

A report from last year indicates that a small percentage of people currently account for the bulk of reported Alberta gaming expenditure. In fact, 75 per cent of reported gaming expenditure comes from roughly 6 per cent of the population. Yesterday the Minister of Finance rejected the research, which states that the proportion of game-specific expenditure accounted for by problem gamblers is 77 per cent for VLTs and 72 per cent for slot machines.

What happens when problem gamblers seek help in our province? Over 72,000 problem gamblers were recently identified; 19,000 wanted help; 8,000 sought help; less than 1,900 received treatment for their gaming problems or addictions from AADAC. Very little money is spent for treatment of problem gambling.

Alberta's per capita expenditures on problem gambling lag far behind those of other provinces.

This government is very pleased to collect all of the profits from VLTs and slot machines but pretends that problem gambling is not a big issue. We can do better. We certainly must try. First, this government must recognize that we have problems and that they have to be corrected. We must dedicate more of the gambling revenue collected to help those with a gambling habit that is out of control.

We also need to change this government's shady accounting system, which inflates the revenue figures for VLTs and slot machines. The government is taking a larger percentage of cash played by Albertans in VLTs and slot machines as revenue than it claims.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Quality Council Review Report

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With today's report the Health Quality Council has walked right up to the Premier and pinned a gold star on her lapel and completely sidestepped the most serious claims that doctors made about patient safety. What else but a whitewash can we expect from a PC-appointed group just weeks before the Premier calls an election?

1:50

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the report, that we just received today, I think from what I've seen so far is a very good review of the state of health care at the moment in the province. It's quite interesting to me that depending on what an hon. member's perspective may be, it may be considered to be praising the health care system or perhaps criticizing it.

The point is that having just received this report, as we have said, we are looking forward to reviewing it fully, and the minister of health will respond in due time, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the report doesn't change the facts I know of, that we know doctors are willing to tell under the right circumstances, will the Premier ignore the whitewash and call a proper inquiry that compels doctors to testify and protects them at the same time?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, my recollection of my review of the report so far is that, in fact, one of the things that the Health Quality Council did with respect to doctors that wanted to come forward was to offer them blanket immunity with respect to information that they might provide. My understanding as I go through this is that the Health Quality Council has made some recommendations with respect to whether or not some issues need to be pursued and have in many cases said that they don't.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the report confirms that many, many aspects of the health care system are very sick – and the government has known about this for years – when will the Premier commit to doing the single most important thing so that she can fix it, and that's double home-care spending to get seniors out of acute-care beds? Premier, when will you fix the system?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we have a budget before the House right now that's going to do exactly that. We've been talking about doing that, we'll continue to do that, and we will continue to improve the health care system.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Comments at Airdrie Council Meeting

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A news release issued by Airdrie Alderman Allan Hunter, a former lifetime PC supporter, outlines his futile quest for an apology from the Finance minister for his rude and offensive behaviour during this government's infamous pre-election cabinet listening tour. During this so-called listening tour Mr. Hunter expressed his concerns about the government's land-use bills, but instead of listening, the Finance minister started yelling profanities at Mr. Hunter. To the Premier. For the second time in two weeks Albertans are talking about the PC government bullying municipal officials. When will this stop?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, there were very good discussions in January with respect to a number of elected officials and issues across the province. I do understand that there was a conversation that took place. There were a number of people who witnessed that conversation. A frank exchange of views is just fine. It's important discussion. It's important to ensure that we're airing views, and we have nothing else to say on the matter.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, it's hard to believe there could have been a good discussion when a minister is yelling profanities and another one is boycotting meetings.

Given that there is nothing the Premier can say about this event that a decent Albertan would believe and trust, why won't the Premier own up to it and say that she and her government are sorry for their government's insufferable arrogance and mistreatment of elected officials in Alberta?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, allegations as to whether comments were or weren't made that are entirely unfounded: we're not going to respond any further to that.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, leadership is about taking personal responsibility. Given that the Premier personally shrugged responsibility and lacked leadership in her apology to AUMA last week, will the Premier find the courage this week to order her Minister of Finance to say to Alderman Hunter that he's sorry so that Alderman Hunter can retire gracefully from public service?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has responded as he chooses to respond, and I completely respect his position.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electricity Prices

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday this Premier blamed consumers, hard-working Albertans, for not locking themselves into complicated long-term electrical contracts knowing full well that the regulated rate option was never intended to be a stable option for the lowest prices. Why would this government make the default option the one that forces Albertans to pay higher prices? Why, Premier?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, at this point in time we know that the prices people are paying for electricity are slightly higher, but we also know that in the past two years those prices have been significantly lower than the national average. What we will say is that it's important for us to ensure that we are protecting consumers from the ups and downs of these variations, and as part of what I said yesterday, the work that we will do in response to some of the policy documents that are currently in the public domain is to have a comprehensive approach. I've directed the Minister of Energy to take a look at these issues, and we will respond in due time.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Premier has checked her electricity bills lately in saying slightly higher.

Given that the PC government keeps repeating that Albertans have options, something consumers in other provinces don't have, options to pay a heck of a lot more, what good is it to have all of these options if they don't include the option of actually paying an affordable price for electricity so that we can heat our homes?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to relay to you a call I had from a senior when I was in my office last Friday. She wanted to know if I had the fixed-rate contract. I said that I did, and she thanked me very much. She said it was a little confusing, but if I had one, it gave her the confidence to go out and do it.

I'd like to ask this MLA and all the people over there: when will you stop trying to scare your constituents and start helping them get the 8-cent rate?

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question was to the Premier, not to the wannabe Premier.

Given that the fact is that this PC government made the system so complicated that Albertans need an economist, a lawyer, and a fortune teller to figure it out, why does the Premier refuse to simplify the system for our seniors, for our working families, for these children's parents, a system that reeks of flim-flammy, jiggery-pokery, and corporate profiteering? Why, Premier?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, once again I'm happy to inform the members and inform all Albertans that there are 11 different companies with programs out there. I am on a program. I'm happy to repeat it: 8 cents a kilowatt hour guaranteed for the next five years, and I can get out of that contract with one month's notice.

Why don't you start helping people instead of trying to scare them for short-term advantage?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Alleged Intimidation of Physicians

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Everyday Albertans, our families and seniors, have watched their health care system deteriorate for the past several years at the hands of this government. Today's scathing Health Quality Council report confirms what we've known for years: physicians have been muzzled and intimidated against advocating for their patients. More than half of the doctors surveyed said that advocacy is limited, and 1 in 5 reported active, harmful obstruction of patient advocacy. Will the Premier, then, finally do the right thing and fulfill her promise and call an independent . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier. [interjection] The hon. the Premier, please.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, what we have been saying in this House and the legislation that we passed in the fall will do exactly that.

Mrs. Forsyth: You're a lawyer. You know better than that.

Given that today's report from the Health Quality Council confirms that there have been several instances of doctor intimidation and given that we know there are many more physicians out there who won't give their testimony unless they are given the full protection of a judge and given that you yourself, Premier, said in June that only an inquiry with subpoena powers can give us the real answers, when will you admit that your inquiry legislation is nothing but bad medicine and finally call a judicial . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as we've said, the government has just received the report. We are going to take the time over the next few days to review the recommendations in detail, and those recommendations will greatly inform the development of terms of reference for the inquiry that has been promised by the Premier.

I might also say to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, that this report makes several recommendations about things that can also be done outside of an inquiry process to improve the relationship and advocacy opportunities for physicians and other health providers. We're committed to that. We'll continue to work with the AMA to make sure that happens.

Mrs. Forsyth: That's a cop-out, Minister. The health professionals in this province do not trust you.

Given that Albertans have a right to know the full nature of this government's record on health care and given that this Premier has known since June that with the allegations of a culture of intimidation there is a reason for a full judicial inquiry, why, Mrs. Premier, have you sat on your hands for the past four and a half months with broken promise after broken promise while Albertans have been waiting for an answer? Call the full judicial inquiry today.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how many times we have to repeat the same answer in this House over and over. The government is committed to calling the inquiry. We will take the opportunity to review the recommendations in the report to inform the terms of reference.

If the opposition wants to dismiss the contents of the report, 10 months of work and 21 recommendations, and think that they have the answers, they're welcome to express those to Albertans. This process is not about individual members of this House, the government, or the opposition. This is about Albertans and their experience in our health care system and how we will work to improve that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A year after being elected, this government broke the Conservative election promise to build more long-term care beds and then threw our health care system into chaos with dramatic reorganization. Now, given the clear connection between these actions and today's documented crisis in our emergency rooms and around physician intimidation will the Premier take a modicum of responsibility and ask for the resignation of the Member for Calgary-West?

Ms Redford: No.

Ms Notley: Hardly a surprise, given their record so far.

Given that the Health Quality Council report documented that half of the physicians felt constrained in their ability to advocate for patients and a third felt that they had been subjected to retribution that was related to political interference, will the Premier call a public inquiry that specifically examines political interference in and around intimidation of the operation of our health care system?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, some of the recommendations in this report are quite interesting. In fact, one of the recommendations in this report is that, let me see – the Health Quality Council is further recommending that the time and money that would be needed for a public inquiry into intimidation and advocacy should instead be devoted to other things. However, this government passed legislation in the fall that fully committed to a judge-led inquiry once the report was released. We said we would consider the report, establish terms of reference, call the inquiry, and we will.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I hate to break it to you, but no one trusts this government on any of these issues anymore.

Now, given that the report outlines that the ER crisis is a result of the long-term-care bed failure and given that the report identifies reorganization with no rationale as a huge problem, an explanation for all of the problems, will the Premier at the very least in her next press conference look Albertans in the eye through the camera and apologize to them for the outrageous record of this government in health care over the last three years?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we are committed to expanding long-term-care beds in this province, and we will. The other thing that we have said is that there will be no further reorganizations of the health care system. We have a health care system that needs to provide public health care to Albertans. We have a minister in charge of this department who works with Alberta Health Services to do just that, and we'll continue to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Health Services Labour Negotiations

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Not until 800 of them took to the picket lines last week did Alberta Health Services finally agree to go to binding arbitration to settle its contract dispute with this province's hard-working hospital support staff. Meanwhile AHS's contract with Alberta's licensed practical nurses and nursing aides is up at the end of the month. To the minister of health, who's not having a good day: will the LPNs and nursing aides also have to walk off the job to get this government to bargain in good faith?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, I am having a very good day, thank you very much.

What I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the hon. member's question is that, yes, there are a number of labour organizations in the province at the moment that are in negotiations with government or with arms of government such as Alberta Health Services. We will continue to negotiate fairly and openly. We all want to see these issues resolved through the process of negotiation, but we will not dictate to the people doing the negotiation nor will we debate on the floor of this House the terms of those agreements.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'd very interested in hearing how the minister is having such a good day when we have labour negotiations in such disarray.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the labour negotiations process includes opportunities for negotiation, obviously. It also includes provisions for when negotiations fail. The particular dispute to which the hon. member refers is now in a process called mediation/arbitration. It's being led by a highly respected mediator in Alberta. The terms of the process were defined by the parties involved in the agreement, and I think Albertans and all members of this House should have every confidence that that process will conclude fairly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, back to the same minister. I'd be interested in knowing how it is in good faith or good management to oppose the request for an arbitrator to settle the lengthy contract dispute with the province's physicians.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea about the issue the hon. member is referring to. We are in active negotiations with the Alberta Medical Association at present. I'm not going to disclose the details of those discussions. I will tell you that they are productive, that they are positive, that the current president of the AMA is a family physician and is uniquely positioned to understand one of this government's top priorities in health care, access to family physicians and other primary health care providers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

European Union Fuel Quality Directive

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow members of the European Union are scheduled to vote on the proposed fuel quality directive that discriminates against Alberta oil. Many of my constituents are very much reliant on the energy sector. To the Premier: can I honestly tell my constituents and can we tell all Albertans that we've done everything possible to see that our oil is not unfairly labelled?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the first thing we're going to do and have been doing in Europe for the past year through many visits by ministers of energy and our minister of international relations as well as our office in London and working with the federal government is to make sure that people know the truth about oil sands product.

We believe that the FQD does unfairly discriminate against our product as a source. We've made that case. We don't know what the result of the vote will be tomorrow, Mr. Speaker. We've advocated; we will continue to advocate regardless of the outcome.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations: we've got two international offices in Europe, yet it doesn't seem like we can get our message across. Are these offices really effective?

Mr. Dallas: Yes, they are, Mr. Speaker. Our Alberta United Kingdom office, led by Jeff Sundquist, has been spearheading our efforts to provide the European Union with facts – facts – about Alberta's responsible development.

We've been meeting with Members of Parliament, government officials, industry, and influencers right across Europe. Albertans can feel very confident that we are doing everything that we can in this matter, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister. The federal government has indicated it may challenge the FQD to the World Trade Organization if it is passed tomorrow. What is Alberta's position on this?

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, we work closely with the federal government on matters relating to the oil sands, and certainly this is no exception. I can't speculate on which way the decision will go; however, I can say that we will take the appropriate action necessary to protect the interests of Albertans and all Canadians. Our oil sands hold economic significance not only for our province but right across this country, and we'll take all of the steps necessary to defend them on the international stage.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Diagnostic Billing Code for Sexual Orientation

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. In December of 2010 the minister of health agreed with my constituent and I that doctors' diagnostic billing codes listing sexual orientation under mental illness was unacceptable, but those billing codes are in use in exactly the same place and say the same things today. All that happened was that the reference to them was removed from public websites and information. My question to the Minister of Health and Wellness: tell me why those exact same diagnostic billing codes are still in use in this province today, listing sexual orientation counselling under mental illness.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. While I won't have a lot to offer in terms of a detailed answer – and I would be happy to look into it and get back to her – what I can tell the hon. member is that government does not on its own set billing codes. There are a variety of factors that come into play, including the role of our physicians, including research that informs these decisions. However, I do want the hon. member to know that I have a significant degree of sympathy for the concern that she has raised, and I will look into it.

Ms Blakeman: That's what the last minister said, but we'll give this one a chance.

Even given the laborious process, I'm sure, to work this out with the Alberta Medical Association and other physicians that use the billing codes, shouldn't the government show leadership and do the right thing: change those building codes?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said, I would like the opportunity to look into this in a bit more detail and get back to the hon. member. There are a number of ways that new billing codes or amended billing codes can be initiated in the system. It is not a decision that the government makes on its own. Physicians have an opportunity to influence new and modified billing codes, as do other entities. I'd be pleased to look into this process and get back to the hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Well, back to the same minister. What I am seeking here is a commitment to action. Perhaps the minister could comment on whether removing the diagnostic billing codes from public view solved the issue of the government and physicians coding sexual orientation as a mental illness. I don't think it did. It was just hidden. The minister's response?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't have any knowledge of how or when the billing codes appear in the public domain and when they don't. What I will tell the hon. member is that I would agree with her that simply changing where the billing codes are publicly available does not address the issue that she has raised. I'd be pleased to look into it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Oil Sands Transportation Coordinating Committee

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Oil sands are very important not only to Wood Buffalo but to my constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake. A day does not go by without somebody bringing transportation issues about highway 63 or highway 55. My first question is to the Minister of Transportation. I understand the oil sands transportation advisory committee met for the first time yesterday in Fort McMurray. Can you help explain to this House how we can ensure that this committee provides real solutions that support oil sands growth?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The coordinating committee includes representatives from municipalities, from the industry, and from the province. The discussions that took place yesterday reflected the needs of Albertans in the area. By having these players at the table, priorities that they recommend will reflect the transportation needs of those Albertans in that area.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the same minister. Was anything actually accomplished at this first meeting? Are we actually going to see some changes in our highways up in the north?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the discussions of the first meeting were very productive. They set priorities and reviewed the CRISP report. Also, if I can say, what I understand is that there was unanimous focus that the east corridor would be preferable as far as the transportation corridor or, let's say, a relief route, a multipurpose corridor. They also discussed ways to fund these projects. It's definitely off to a good start.

Funding for Private Schools

Mr. Hehr: Yesterday we learned that although the minister will make public school boards disclose financial information online for public scrutiny, he will not impose the same principles of openness and transparency on private schools that receive taxpayer dollars. To the Minister of Education: where will the information regarding private schools be available for the public to see online? Will this be in the same format required for our public school boards?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, either this member did not listen to my answer yesterday or he is purposefully changing my answer for the purposes of this forum. I have been very clear that I will have the same expectations for private school boards as I have for public school boards relevant to the portion of dollars that is appropriated to private schools from the public purse, being from the government of Alberta.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's call a spade a spade here. All the money that goes to these private schools is put into a pot, and then they provide their services from that. I think the public has a right to know what services are being provided in these private schools, and that should be available online.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, this member wants a very simple answer to a very simple question, but the answer, unfortunately, is more complex. Private schools are funded up to 70 per cent by the government of Alberta, and the remainder of the funding is money raised by parents and by those who support the school. They have to be accountable for the 70 per cent that they receive from the government of Alberta, but the 30 per cent that they raise within their own means by way of tuition or donations is something that they have to be accountable for to the donors or whoever supplies them with that 30 per cent.

Mr. Hehr: The hon. minister knows full well that the 70 per cent of the money that he receives from taxpayers goes into a big pot of money, and they provide services from that pot. We want to see what that 70 per cent is augmenting for the services that are provided at the school. I think the public has a right to know what is going on in our private schools. Will that be online?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the reason we pride ourselves in this province on having one of the best education systems in the world is because of the choice. This member and, frankly, the Liberal opposition have been harping for months already to close down or get rid of private schools. This government will not do that because they provide a viable option to parents, and obviously parents choose to exercise it because they're sending their kids to public schools, which makes our private schools and public schools and charter schools and home-schooling that much more viable.

Home-schooling

Ms DeLong: A number of my constituents currently choose to home-school their children and provide them with the upbringing that they support as a family. Along this same vein the Minister of Education just a few moments ago even suggested that one of the greatest strengths of Alberta's education system is choice of a variety of educational programs. My questions are to the Minister of Education. Can the minister assure me and these parents that this government continues to support the choice of home-schooling within our education system?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the simple answer would be yes. This government is committed to choice, and that is why in this province we have Catholic education and nondenominational education, private education, home-schooling, charter schooling, and the list goes on and on. Whenever bona fide home-schooling takes place, we are very supportive of that because it has proven itself, again, to be a viable choice for parents who choose to take that option. This government has historically been supportive of it, and there is no reason to believe that anything in that realm will change.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: since you're such a strong proponent of choice, how are you ensuring that all home educators in this province will continue to be able to determine what their children learn?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, home-schoolers are no different from any other parent in the system. Parents under the current legislation, being the School Act, and the proposed legislation on the floor of the Legislature will always have the choice of opting out of certain aspects of programs or education that they feel are not appropriate for their own child.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The home-schooling parents that contacted me are highly invested and proud of the exceptional educational standards that their children are attaining. But what about others where home-schooling is maybe just a default decision? What minimum accountability provisions are included for educational programs in this province?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, by and large home-schooling has worked quite fine for children, and that is because we have committed parents not only in the home-schooling community but, frankly, in the entire Alberta education community. That is another pillar that makes our education so strong. We will be looking at situations where, perhaps, this home-schooling clause is utilized for purposes other than home-schooling, which perhaps results in the education being inadequate, but that does not pertain to traditional home-schooling families that choose to educate their children at home.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Long-term and Continuing Care Beds

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Health Quality Council report identifies that at the heart of this government's failure to address ER wait times is its inability to create adequate numbers of long-term care and continuing care spaces in the community, spaces that people need to be able to be moved out from the hospital into the community. Given that will the Minister of Seniors explain to Albertans why, after three years of being asked, his ministry is unable to report on the number of continuing care spaces created by category of care level offered?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you for that question. Mr. Speaker, last night in estimates I attempted, attempted poorly, to explain the situation. There has not been a decrease in long-term care facilities or beds in this province. There's been a slight increase, probably not enough, but there's been a slight increase. I explained last night that I will definitely have a full report back to the chairman for everybody to review, class by class, number by number, and that will be given next week.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that an SL 1 unit presumes that a senior lives independently, requires no care of any kind, and lives in a unit that requires no wheelchair and an SL 4 unit presumes the senior has complex medical needs that may require built-in mechanical lifts, tube-feeding capacity, and 24-hour care, will the minister admit that his ministry's and his government's inability to report on the number of units by type throughout the province, given what we've just had described by the Health Quality Council, is nothing short of negligent?

Mr. VanderBurg: Again, Mr. Speaker, as I explained to this member last night, one of the issues that I found frustrating in the past four months is the designation that we have for our different types of seniors' facilities. To me it would be simple to have a classification 1, 2, 3, light, medium, heavy. These classifications that we've got have to be straightened out, and it's a commitment that I've made to all of you that we will over the next 12 months have a review of those classifications.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that you can't ask somebody to move out of an acute-care bed until you can describe the type of bed you're asking them to move into and given that over half a billion dollars of taxpayers' money has been spent in the last four years on these so-called continuing care spaces, why does the minister of health, perhaps, not believe that Albertans have a right to know exactly what kind of continuing care units their tax dollars have been building over the last four years?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what Albertans have a right to is to know that the government will continue to fund affordable living spaces for them that provide a level of health care that will meet their needs. I wholeheartedly agree that we need a range of spaces available that provide very light care to very heavy care, including palliative care, I might say, for people who are in need of that type of service. But what we will not do is return to the continuing care model of the 1970s, where we typed people by beds instead of by their health care needs.

Bullying in Private Schools

Mr. Hehr: This government is taking a hard line against bullying in public schools, a move that I applaud, but they are intentionally excluding children who attend private schools from protection against bullying. Time after time this government bends the rules so that private institutions can have their own way. To the Minister of Education: can the minister agree that the same set of rules respecting bullying policies should apply to both public school boards and publicly funded private schools?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I think I just said in one of my recent answers that this member will find any angle he possibly can to shut down private schools in Alberta. I would strongly encourage this man to just stand up and say, "Please get rid of private schools in Alberta" because this is where it's heading.

To answer your question, I expect any and all learning institutions in Alberta to provide a nurturing, welcoming, and respectful environment.

Mr. Hehr: Please, Mr. Education Minister, stop publicly funding private schools.

Nevertheless, if this government is so committed to protecting kids in Alberta, why won't private schools be required to provide the same protection against bullying as is required in our public schools?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Sikh community in Alberta, for example, is very supportive of private schools, so I'm wondering if he is speaking on behalf of his entire Liberal caucus. Having said that, I will tell you that my answer is clear and simple. I expect any and all learning institutions in the province of Alberta, be they private or public, to provide a nurturing, welcoming, and respectful environment not only for students but also for staff.

Mr. Hehr: I will ask the minister if he finds it good practice to have one standard for one school jurisdiction and another standard for other publicly funded school systems.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how many times and how differently I can say that. I expect the same standard of respect and a welcoming and nurturing environment to occur in all learning institutions. Whether children are attending a private school or a public school, there is no difference. As a matter of fact, we will have legislation that will be speaking to bullying, and I'm glad that the member is supporting it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Supply of Skilled Tradespeople

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's economic growth is in danger of being stunted by a drastic shortage of skilled workers. One forecast suggests that our province will be short 40,000 tradespeople in the construction sector alone by the end of this decade. The numbers vary from forecast to forecast, but the real question is: what is Alberta doing to try and reverse this trend? My questions are all to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. What is your department doing to open up training spaces to try and make up the difference?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we've heard, this is a significant issue across the province. This government is committed to training and educating our future workforce. To that end we've improved the apprenticeship ratios across the province and we've maintained seats through some very difficult financial times in the apprenticeships. Our partnership with our employers is important. It's hard to apprentice if you don't have a job, so we're asking our employers to please step up and hire an apprentice so that they can begin that very necessary training.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, my second question is to the same minister. Alberta has over 60 trades in occupation, yet only four are available online. Why aren't all trades available via e-learning?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is something fairly new. We have four of our most sought-after trades online, and we're working as we speak to look for opportunities to allow training online. The reason for this is so that tradesmen can stay at home during their education process or stay in their places of employment to provide support to their employers, to ultimately get that training online and not have to leave home and leave their families. So we're going to move and continue to move more of our training online as it's appropriate.

Mr. Johnston: My final question to the same minister. Foreign workers represent another potential solution to the labour shortage, but are Alberta's credentialing and validation requirements strong enough to make sure that our province gets the workers that we need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you. We're very fortunate that each and every year people move to Alberta, 80,000 or 90,000 last year from across Canada and around the world. Mr. Speaker, they don't just bring their families; they bring their skills and their trades, so we must work closely with them.

We currently have 22 practical exams in 15 trades. We're working on practical assessments to ensure that our tradesmen are capable of doing the job. We don't just want them to be able to do their job on paper; they have to be able to do it on the job site.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dr. Cowell from the Health Quality Council said today that Albertans should not – and I repeat: should not – be satisfied with its findings. Albertans want to know what the heck is going on within their health care system. Will this minister call a public inquiry within the next week, well before we go to a provincial election?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what specific comment the hon. member is attempting to attribute to Dr. Cowell. What I can say is what the Premier of this province has said repeatedly and I have also echoed in this House. This government is committed to a fully independent inquiry. We will take the necessary time to review this report and its detailed recommendations, that will inform the terms of reference for the inquiry, and we'll have more to say about this in the coming days.

Mr. Boutilier: Given, Mr. Speaker, the Health Quality Council's indictment of this government and this minister's watch not only as the minister of health but also as the junior minister of health will he call a public inquiry within the next seven days?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I'm aware of no personal indictment directed either at me or at any other member of this House, so I'd be very interested to know where the hon. member gets substantiation for that statement.

What I will say, Mr. Speaker, and we will continue to say is that our commitment to a fully independent inquiry continues. What we will not do is play politics with this, and we will not schedule inquiries in order to suit the political timetables of other caucuses in this House.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, given that this is nothing but politics and given that the government appointed the very superboard that is under your watch with Alberta Health Services, will you now call a public inquiry within seven days so that Albertans can get to the bottom of what is going on within their hospitals? Or are you trying to hide something before an election?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is welcome to his fixation on political cycles and his own political timing. If the hon. member has somehow been able to read through, analyze, and reach a determination and concrete opinion on a 420-page report in a little more than a couple of hours, then I'm certainly amazed at his abilities.

We are committed to the process of the inquiry. We will make an informed decision about appropriate terms of reference, and we will bring them forward to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

2:30 Online Camping Reservation System

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's parks and recreation areas are world renowned for their beauty, their serenity, and their exquisite amenities. They're truly marvellous, and that's largely thanks to the very dedicated parks personnel who care for them and for our visitors on a regular basis. Now, many of my own constituents are very excited by the prospect of the upcoming camping season, which is just around the corner, but they've experienced some difficulties with the online booking process. My questions are to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. Mr. Minister, can you please explain to my constituents why so many of them were left on hold for over half an hour and then abruptly cut off, it seems, when they were trying to do some early registrations over the past couple of weeks?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. First of all, it is appropriate that I apologize. We have actually been caught by surprise this year at the success of our online booking. To give you an indication of what has happened, last year we took bookings for over 300,000 sites through the season. Yesterday alone we opened up bookings for the May long weekend, and we booked 2,500 spots in one day, half of our available spots, which is 5,000. So I apologize.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, that'll be refreshing news to my constituents, who were just looking for answers. Thank you.

Now, my second question is to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Since many campers actually start planning their summer holidays and their work schedules and so on in January and February, I wonder if you could open up the registration process so that they could start booking far earlier than just 90 days ahead of the traditional time that they want booked.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I would love to be able to do that, but that wouldn't meet the needs of all Albertans. Not all Albertans know exactly when their holidays can take place. If we went all the way through the season and opened up those bookings, those Albertans that can at the last minute get away with their families wouldn't have the options. That's why we've chosen this system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Okay. Thank you. Given that several camping areas are contracted out to capable private operators, could you look into whether or not you can institute a policy that would somehow allow these private operators to be around and more available during January and February? Apparently, some of my constituents have tried to book some of these contracted-out sites, but there was no answer and no response. I'm not faulting anyone. I'm just wondering if you could look at your policy to fix it.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We can take a look and see if there are other options, but the private operators, in fact, don't start until May 1. It's just not a viable business option for them to be in there at other times. We can take a look as we develop our booking system further. There may be some opportunities for us to be of assistance.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Bear Management near Work Camps

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It turns out that this government is the single biggest killer of bears in Alberta. What else could we expect since it is the government that allows increased human-bear interaction by approving camps and oil development in bear habitat. Bottom line: this government could be insisting on rules on where to allow dump and how to discourage bear entry, but it doesn't. My questions are to the Minister of SRD. What is the reason the government is not taking the proactive steps to ensure the best possible protection for the bears at these sites, from location to proper fencing around dumps, to litter pickup, and food storage?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to share, actually, the concern of the hon. member. I'm very troubled by the report that I saw in the paper today. As a result, I have already this morning ordered a review of where our rules and regulations around camps stand with best practices in kitchen and camp management and refuse management on-site and how our department stands with monitoring and inspections of those same rules.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I can help the minister with that. Following the Conklin bear kill in 2009, where the fence was in such bad shape that it was easier for the bears to just walk through the fence than go around to the open part of it, an internal e-mail recommended that an SRD committee be set up to minimize bears killed at landfills. What happened to this committee and its risk mitigation for bears?

Mr. Oberle: Well, indeed, Mr. Speaker, we have been doing exactly that work, and we have had some success. Unfortunately, last year because of a combination of environmental factors, weather and berry crop, we had an unbelievable number of bears coming into populated areas. [interjections] They apparently don't want to hear the answer, but just in the northeast of Alberta 530 human-bear interactions. When the fish and wildlife officers attend, they have to act in the interests of human safety. I'm more interested in the protection then, and I'm going to do what I can to resolve this.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Back to the same minister. I think that the government would agree that much has changed in northern Alberta since 1993. Yes? Yet this department continues to use an old management plan for black bears written in exactly that year. Now, why is that? You're still using a 20-year-old management plan. Why?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I'm reviewing what our department is doing, and I will move to act.

I will say, though, that I'd be deeply, deeply disappointed if we have to establish rules and regulations to get companies to do what I think they should be doing in the interests of the safety of their own workers. I'm very disappointed. At the same time, I will say that many of the companies have been extremely co-operative, working with industrial BearSmart and other training programs, and we are making progress out there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Labour Mobility Barriers

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the agreement on internal trade Manitoba recently challenged Ontario for failing to license certified general accountants from outside of Ontario who served Ontario-based clients. They put roadblocks up against hard-working Albertans and other Canadians. To the Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations: how is your ministry going to ensure that Alberta's goal of free-flowing labour mobility continues for Alberta workers?

Mr. Dallas: Thanks to the hon. member for the question. Mr. Speaker, we were very involved in supporting Manitoba's challenge. Along with B.C. and Saskatchewan we acted as an intervenor and presented a very strong case before the dispute panel on behalf of Alberta's CGAs. This is an example of why I requested additional funding in Budget 2012, to address these kinds of specific issues. We'll continue to break down barriers to labour mobility and trade in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Human Services: why is Alberta in favour of any agreement that could make it easier for our professionals such as accountants to leave this province and go to Ontario?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, labour mobility goes two ways. We support the idea that there should be free trade within the country. We want people to be able to come to Alberta and supply us with services, but we also want Albertans to go elsewhere. It was very important for us. This time it was accountants going to Ontario, but next week it could be workers coming to Alberta. Labour mobility barriers need to be reduced, and Alberta will continue to advocate for this to make it easier for workers to go where the jobs are.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question, again to the Minister of Human Services. I continue to hear concerns about a possible labour shortage. Why are we not doing more to recruit workers from across Canada?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can say that these days Alberta is gaining much more than it's losing when it comes to labour mobility. By the end of the third quarter last year almost 24,000 people had moved to Alberta from other parts of Canada. We welcome these people. We need them to help continue to grow our labour force, and quite frankly we're very positive about the fact that Canadians from coast to coast recognize the great opportunities that are here in Alberta. Supporting labour mobility is a two-way street, and I'm confident that Canadians seeking good opportunities will find that all roads lead back to Alberta. In short, we're going to be short 114,000 workers over the next 10 years.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question-and-response period today. Eighteen members were recognized today. There were 106 questions and responses.

We'll continue the Routine in a few seconds from now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Scotties Tournament of Hearts

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, Canada has long distinguished itself as the number one curling nation in the world. Nowhere else is the competition as keen and the path to the top so difficult as it is here in Canada. That's why I'm so excited to welcome the 2012 Scotties Tournament of Hearts to Red Deer.

Curling is one of the major sports in this country, with over 1 million Canadians taking part every year. It's also popular among television viewers, with a reach of more than 3 million for the Scotties championship final.

Major events like the Scotties tournament bring thousands of visitors to our province and help continue to build Alberta's reputation as a world-class tourism and sport destination. Red Deer is the sports capital of Alberta, home to the Alberta Sports Hall of Fame. This is the fifth time that the Canadian women's curling championship has been held there. The 2004 championship in Red Deer had a total attendance of 112,866, and that's second only to Regina in 1998.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to recognize the many volunteers who worked tirelessly to make this event a success, including chairperson Sherri Ryckman; vice chairs Tracy Bush, Lyle Treiber, and Bob More; director of ticket sales, Andy Metzger; director of security, Ivan Simon; Doug Marchment, director of transportation and team services; and all the 520 other volunteers whose hard work and commitment make this event a success.

I would also like to congratulate all the teams for their tremendous achievements, and I wish them all the best of luck. I was pleased to meet all of the teams on Friday night, and I was really pleased to have dinner with Team Canada, represented by curlers from Saskatchewan.

The 2012 Scotties Tournament of Hearts is continuing in Red Deer at the Westerner Park until Sunday, and I encourage everyone to come and enjoy some exciting curling. Mr. Speaker, as the curlers would say, hurry hard.

Thank you.

The Speaker: And no update today on the Dancing with the Stars program?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Harley Hotchkiss

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday on behalf of our Minister of Health of Wellness and with our Minister of Advanced Education and Technology I had the great pleasure of attending a wonderful tribute to the late Harley Hotchkiss during which our government joined the University of Calgary in launching the Campus Alberta neuroscience international scholars program. Our $5 million investment will help to build Alberta's strengths in neuroscience research and address critical needs of Albertans, leading to improvements in their quality of life and in our health care system.

Mr. Hotchkiss made important contributions to our province and our nation, particularly in his contributions to health research right here in Alberta. As the founding donor of the world-renowned Hotchkiss Brain Institute Harley greatly increased attention to neurological and mental health care issues. He knew that addictions and chronic diseases affect thousands of Albertans and, because of that, our government partnered with him in the international scholars program, which will strengthen neuroscience research and one day lead to new treatments.

The new scholars program will support Alberta universities by helping them to attract the world's best neuroscientists to our province so they can exchange ideas and knowledge with Alberta students and researchers. With this new government support the universities of Calgary, Alberta, and Lethbridge will also jointly host an annual neuroscience symposium to showcase research breakthroughs.

This investment will not only improve our research capability. It will also serve as a lasting, fitting legacy honouring Harley Hotchkiss, a visionary leader with a generous spirit who made outstanding contributions to health research in Alberta. I believe Harley would like me to end this member's statement with: go, Flames, go.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Bill 4

St. Albert and Sturgeon Valley School Districts Establishment Act

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I request leave to introduce Bill 4, the St. Albert and Sturgeon Valley School Districts Establishment Act.

This legislation ensures that the residents of St. Albert and the Sturgeon Valley have access to the same education opportunities that are offered elsewhere in the province. Let me be clear. There is no question about the quality of education currently being offered in these communities. What we are ensuring is choice and voice for parents, the choice of a public education or a separate, Roman Catholic education and voice in choosing or running for the position of a school board trustee.

Mr. Speaker, Greater St. Albert Catholic schools, St. Albert Protestant schools, and the Sturgeon school division worked hard to identify ways to find the right balance between recognizing community history, supporting choice, honoring students' and parental rights, and collaborating across communities to meet students' needs. The proposed solution reflects much of their work, and I am proud to present it to the House.

With that, I move first reading of Bill 4.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Water.

Bill 6

Property Rights Advocate Act

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 6, the Property Rights Advocate Act.

Bill 6 will establish the property rights advocate office as part of the Ministry of Justice and Attorney General. The proposed legislation supports the government's position that landowners must have recourse to an independent tribunal, the courts, or both for the purpose of determining full and fair compensation for access to their land.

The office will share independent and impartial information about property rights and help people determine the appropriate resolution mechanism, including the courts. This office will be required to table an annual report on the office's business each year in the Legislature to help instill landowner confidence that the government is transparent and accountable for its record on respecting property rights.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move first reading of Bill 6, the Property Rights Advocate Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance, who's asked me to table five copies of RBC's budget 2012, key indicators. To quote from the document, it talks about the budget having "conservative assumptions for key economic indicators," indicates that they're "confident that the fiscal plan will allow the Alberta government to return to budget balance on schedule."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Blakeman: No. Just myself.

The Speaker: Go ahead. Proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the document that I referenced today in my question to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development in which an internal memo recognizes that the minister of the environment was writing to the Minister of SRD regarding the establishment of a committee to minimize black bears killed at landfills.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling a further 20 e-mails and letters out of the hundreds I've received from the following individuals who are seeking the preservation of the Castle wilderness, many of whom have personally visited the Castle and all of whom believe clear-cutting will damage the ecology, watershed, wildlife, and natural species and must be prohibited at all costs: Barbara Collier, Susan Sargent, Marcus Peterson, Hans Buhrmann, Diane Beckett, Jessica Hein, Deanna Renyk, Kristin Cavoukian, James Ramsay, Richard Mertl, Margot Boyd, Marcel Roberge, Doug Alton, Ann Truysens, Adam Grickites, Andrea Hawkes, Shelagh Emmott, Twyla Douaire, Ian Whyte, and Mary Furlong.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Jens and Ulla Hansen of Bonnyville, who wrote to us, "Thank you for standing up for the Grass Root people of Alberta," and enclosed a copy of their utilities bill from January, $227 more than it was the previous year.

I also have a letter from Eric Latter of Hill Spring, and he writes about how his bill this year is a 58 per cent increase over last year's bill. He wrote to tell us how difficult it is to make ends meet as a low-income senior.

I have a letter from Brian Stalder of Lloydminster, who sent us a note saying that he switched to Direct Energy in December 2011 and that the bill still climbed. He enclosed his bill of $303.

I have a letter from the Descheneaux family of Spruce Grove, who told us that as a low-income family they cannot afford the utility costs. They said that their bill in January 2012 was $924.44.

Finally, I have a note from Valerie Thomsen from High River, who sent us a note saying that her bill for January was $193.10, and she says that last year at the same period it was $88. "Outrageous!"

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday under tablings the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere tabled five bar coasters which had a symbol on them which could only be encouraging people to drink. I would like to table today five responsible bar coasters which say: "Pregnancy and Alcohol? Not Worth the Chance." I'll send a copy of the responsible bar coaster to the hon. member, but I think it's important to table these to highlight the fact that drinking while pregnant, drinking while driving, all of these are a danger to society.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, you popped up here about 30 seconds ago on a point of order. Please proceed.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. I would cite Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). Mr. Speaker, the member clearly stated that the coasters that we tabled yesterday were inciting people to drink. I don't even know what to say to that other than to say that that's obviously unbecoming language. It's obviously giving false motives to another member.

I mean, coasters are something you put a beverage on. Now, clearly, they are to protest the .05 legislation, which is an attack on people's civil rights, with a whole bunch of other things wrong with it. It will divert resources and probably cause more people to die of drinking and driving because of the resources that we diverted to it, but that's a political protest. Certainly, to somehow say that handing out these coasters, which is a protest of a very poorly drafted bill, is somehow asking people to go out and drink and drive is repugnant language for this House, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would enjoy the opportunity to respond to that. A bar coaster, a very simple device used to protect the table from a glass of, presumably, alcohol, and in this case one that's labelled with a line across .05, can only suggest to somebody that it's okay to continue past .05, that it's okay to drink. Coasters are used where people are drinking, so one would assume, then, that it's encouraging people to drink and then perhaps to drive. I think it's a very reasonable assumption that that bar coaster is an irresponsible methodology to protest a bill.

Mr. Speaker, what I tabled today is a far more responsible thing, and I'm more than happy to provide that hon. member and every member of the House with these bar coasters, which allude to the fact that drinking while pregnant causes physical problems, brain damage, dependency for life, and other things. If the hon. member wants to deal with issues about drinking, I would suggest he deal with them responsibly, and this is a very responsible way to do it.

The Speaker: Well, we've reminded the Assembly in the past that points of order should not be used to extend debate and that they should not be used for amplification of position. I think we've got a clarification here as a result of this recent exchange, and we're now going to move on.

Orders of the Day Committee of Supply

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair would like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Main Estimates 2012-13

Executive Council

The Chair: Before I recognize our hon. Premier, I would like to remind the Assembly of a few points here about the speaking order. The Premier will have 10 minutes for opening. That will be followed by an hour with the opposition and the Premier. Then the 20 minutes after that are reserved for the third party, the Wildrose Alliance, and the Premier. The next 20 minutes are for the fourth party, the NDP, and the Premier. For the next 20 minutes after that members of any other party represented in the Assembly or any independent member may speak with the Premier, and thereafter any member may speak.

I'm also reminding hon. members that from Standing Order 59.01(4) and reinforced by Government Motion 6, agreed to on February 8, we have a minimum of two hours. At that time the chair will call the two hours.

Hon. Premier, you have the floor for 10 minutes.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman and hon. members. I'm pleased to appear before this committee to discuss the 2012-2013 Executive Council budget estimates and the 2012-2015 business plan. I'd like to begin by introducing the staff who are with me on the floor. They are Peter Watson, Deputy Minister of Executive Council; Dwight Dibben, deputy clerk of Executive Council; and Elaine Dougan, executive director of corporate services.

This is the first time that I've been before this committee as President of Executive Council, and I want to begin by saying what a pleasure it has been to work with such a group of talented and dedicated people these past four and a half months. They've worked very hard in the time since I was sworn in as Premier to implement what I am the first to admit is a very ambitious agenda, and we're just getting started.

Two weeks ago our government laid out a plan for moving forward with the Speech from the Throne and Budget 2012. This is a plan that is based on all the optimism we feel and that Albertans feel for where our province is going and what the future holds for us. We know there are challenges ahead, and we are prepared to meet them boldly and to provide the leadership that Albertans expect from their government.

The Speech from the Throne and Budget 2012 will be the foundation for engaging with Albertans to determine what their priorities are and what outcomes they want to see from us. Instead of telling Albertans what government is doing, we will ask them what they want from government. We will listen, and we will deliver. The outcomes that Albertans identify will drive everything that we do and every decision that we make. Part of this work includes a commitment to results-based budgeting to ensure that all our program decisions and dollar allocations are being properly scrutinized, and that's why I welcome the opportunity to come today before this committee.

I want to assure all members of the committee that Executive Council will take its turn under the microscope, just like every other department will, to rebuild our budget from the ground up and make sure that we're getting the best results. In Executive Council and across government we will deliver the outcomes that Albertans want in the most effective, responsible, and sustainable way possible.

I begin with an overview of the Budget 2012 allocation for Executive Council. Overall, it is $31.5 million, an increase of $1.4 million, which is 4.7 per cent, from the last fiscal year. This increase is due almost entirely to staffing costs, including funding for the 4 per cent salary adjustment and benefit increases that apply to all government staff. There is also a one-time allocation of $100,000 for Alberta events and programs to mark the Diamond Jubilee of the reign of Queen Elizabeth II. I will also note that the Regulatory Review Secretariat was transferred from Finance to Executive Council along with a budget of $952,000 and six FTEs, or full-time equivalents, Mr. Chair.

I turn now to a review of Executive Council's program areas and priorities as outlined in the business plan. Executive Council includes my offices in the Legislature and in McDougall Centre in Calgary, the deputy minister's office, the cabinet co-ordination office, policy co-ordination office, the Regulatory Review Secretariat, the protocol office, the Public Affairs Bureau, and administrative support for the office of the Lieutenant Governor and the Alberta Order of Excellence Council, Mr. Chairman.

Our 2012-15 business plan lays out the following priority initiatives for Executive Council: ensuring that government policy and planning are co-ordinated and effective, co-ordinating government strategic planning, continuing to implement a strategic communications plan, and co-ordinating with ministries and organizations to promote Alberta's energy, immigration, employment, investment, and tourism potential to the world.

Mr. Chairman, I want to take a moment to put the work of Executive Council in the context of the new way that this government is doing things. I spoke earlier of my expectation that government will move to a more outcome-based orientation. To accomplish this, I expect government to function as a single team, not as individual bureaucracies within departmental silos. We need to work together, and I will be looking to Executive Council to facilitate the shift that needs to happen within government. This will involve building clarity on the right things and providing advice and strategic direction to ensure that everyone is aligned around the same goals. This will involve getting to good outcomes by following good process.

We will engage Albertans in an ongoing dialogue that asks them what they want from government and deliver on those outcomes. I expect our staff to support strong regulatory review, policy development, decision-making, and strategic planning processes. I expect them to ask critical questions about emerging directions and policies.

As government it is important to have a dialogue among Albertans and stakeholders and to gather and represent divergent perspectives to decision-makers. I expect thorough research and analysis to inform the decision-making process, and I want to see capacity-building within ministries and within our partners to deliver on the government's commitments.

One of those commitments is ensuring that our regulatory system is doing its job effectively and efficiently. I noted earlier that the Regulatory Review Secretariat was moved from Finance to Executive Council, and this is an area where I expect to see leadership and results. Linking the secretariat to the policy co-ordination office will help ensure that our regulatory systems are focused on the policy objectives that we're trying to achieve as a government.

We're building from a strong base, which is looking at how we can ease the regulatory burden on small business. We've already mandated regular reviews of regulations to ensure their continued effectiveness and relevancy. We need to ensure that our regulatory systems are doing their jobs in the best way possible. We do this by recognizing that the regulatory system has a role to play in developing positive economic, environmental, and social outcomes for Albertans. But there are also costs to be borne, both by government and by industry. For our province to enjoy robust and sustainable growth, we need to keep the two in balance, and our government will.

Executive Council will also be charged with establishing clear measures of performance and clarity on issues, outcomes, and deliverables under the mandates that I've set for each member of the cabinet team. Part of my commitment to Albertans is that we will measure our performance as government and report on it regularly to Albertans. By doing things in better, smarter ways, we will deliver better services to Albertans.

I'll stop there, Mr. Chairman, and am now prepared to take questions from the committee members. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, Premier.

The next hour will be for the opposition and the Premier. The chair would like to make sure that we have 20 minute chunks so that the hon. member will have dialogue with the Premier, or do you prefer your 10 minutes and the Premier 10 minutes?

Dr. Sherman: We'll go back and forth.

The Chair: Twenty minutes back and forth. Okay. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I welcome the Premier to her first Executive Council estimates. I'm also proud to say that this is my first time as Leader of the Opposition.

Albertans do want leadership from their government. They want good policy, they want their government to manage their hard-earned tax dollars wisely, and they want to hear the truth from their leaders. In spite of what the Speech from the Throne may say, we know that this is an election year, and everything must be taken with a grain of salt, especially the budget. The main role of Executive Council is to be the head and to provide direction, strategic direction, to the rest of the government body, but this government department has just become a talking head. Here's why: Mr. Chairman, the Speech from the Throne was the most uninspiring Speech from the Throne in the last few decades. It didn't really tell us who we are as a people, where we're going, where we need to go, and how we're going to get there. It had no vision.

On the budget, Mr. Chairman, this government continues down its path of addiction to nonrenewable energy resources. We have major addiction problems in this province, and the biggest is this government's addiction to nonrenewable resources to fund our basic, core programs. We have a deficit after five successive years of deficits. Oil is at a hundred dollars a barrel, every Albertan is working and paying tax, we have so much industrial investment here, and we have a deficit. This is as good as it gets. We should have surpluses in the bank, money going into a savings account for children for tomorrow.

We have a fiscal deficit, but we also have a social deficit. I do want to talk about outcomes. Here are the outcomes. We have the lowest high school graduation rate in the nation. We have the lowest postsecondary participation rate in the nation. We have amongst the highest fees in the nation.

We have the biggest spending health care system with amongst the worst performance in the nation. Once you get into care, it's world-class care, but getting in is the big problem. In fact, the Health Quality Council report today said that there's a culture of fear and intimidation for physicians. The hospital and acute-care system has been in crisis year after year after year despite the multiple reports, the number one spending issue in the country. The Health Quality Council report also says that the AHS experiment hasn't worked. Physicians don't know who to turn to when there are problems and solutions.

Our seniors are getting nickelled and dimed. They built this wonderful province and this wonderful nation. They worked through tough times, through wars, through lean times. They paid their taxes, and they paid their dues, yet they're being separated under involuntary separation. They're having to get divorced because they can't afford this private care.

These are the outcomes. To suggest that we're going to focus on outcomes, does that suggest that we actually didn't do it before, that we didn't measure our performance? This is the performance of a government that once was a source of good. It was a source of solutions, Mr. Chairman. It is a government that is now a source of our problems.

With respect to the estimates of Executive Council there's very little detail included in the estimates, the breakdown of funds allocated to this ministry. For example, line 1.1 on page 104 of the estimates states that the Premier's office has an annual budget of just shy of $11 million, but no breakdown is provided. My question to the Premier: will you provide a detailed description of how these funds are allocated? Tell us how many airplane flights you've been on for campaigning, whether that's included in here, and tell us how you're enjoying the fleet of four executive vehicles.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The numbers that are included on page 104 are, particularly, detailed in the way that we have conventionally reported. I can certainly provide the hon. member with more detail, and if he'd like me to do that now, then I will.

3:10

First of all, Mr. Chairman, we have the office of the Premier and Executive Council, which, as I said before, includes the Premier's offices in Edmonton and Calgary, including correspondence and communications. It includes the deputy minister's office; the cabinet co-ordination office, which provides organizational and administrative support to cabinet and to key committees; the policy co-ordination office, which supports decision-makers in ministries by facilitating a collaborative approach for strategic planning and policy development across government; the Regulatory Review Secretariat, which leads government's regulatory reform agenda and provides oversight for the ongoing review of provincial regulation, which, as I said before, was transferred from the Department of Finance; the protocol office, which provides co-ordination for visiting foreign delegations and government ceremonial events and management of Government House operations and funding for the Alberta Order of Excellence.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, the Regulatory Review Secretariat, which was just transferred from the Department of Finance to Executive Council, represents a budget of $952,000 and six full-time equivalent positions. There was an administrative transfer of $556,000 and three full-time equivalent positions, existing resources from Treasury Board and Enterprise for three positions in the policy co-ordination office that were previously funded through the corporate human resources executive mobility program; as I said before, an increase for a 4 per cent salary adjustment, which was standard across the board in government this year, standard wage increments and changes to benefits; and a $100,000 one-time funding for Alberta's Diamond Jubilee celebrations in 2012, for a total of $10.9 million, which is an increase of 6.5 per cent, keeping in mind that that increase is partly connected to existing resources that were transferred from the Department of Finance for work that was previously being done in another ministry.

There is the office of the Lieutenant Governor, Mr. Chairman, which represents an expense of $514,000 projected in the estimates, which provides administrative planning and communications support to the Lieutenant Governor. Of course, the Lieutenant Governor's salary is paid by the federal government, and the work that is done for the Lieutenant Governor with respect to much of his ceremonial protocol is also covered by the federal government.

We have a department of corporate services, which represents a budget of $2.4 million, which sees an increase of 6.7 per cent, Mr. Chairman, which includes the office of the managing director of the Public Affairs Bureau. It manages the human resource, finance, and administrative needs of Executive Council; it manages IT support and development for Executive Council; and it's responsible for business plan and budget preparation, performance measurement co-ordination, annual report developments, records management, and FOIP administration. It includes the central budget for administrative costs; for example, Service Alberta support services, training for all Public Affairs Bureau staff, general office equipment, and supplies. Again, that increase of 6.7 per cent included a 4 per cent increase with respect to the standard wage increments.

We also account in this budget for corporate communications to a value of $12.6 million, a 4.6 per cent increase, which supplies professionals to ministries to support two-way communications with Albertans by planning and implementing communications initiatives that deliver important information on government programs, services, and policies.

Mr. Chairman, I don't think that we can overestimate the importance of that work right now. We know that the issues we're facing as Albertans are all about building for the future, being optimistic, knowing that we need to build our economy, and a very big part of that is continuing to export our resources.

Now, we know from the discussions that we've had in this House and across the province in the past three to four months, since I've been Premier, that the work that has to happen with respect to the Keystone pipeline and the Gateway pipeline is critical for Alberta's economic development. We also know, Mr. Chairman, that one of the things that we need to be talking to people about in those jurisdictions is the importance of oil sands not only for our own economic development but in terms of strong economic partnerships with the United States and opening up our markets to Asia.

When I think about that, Mr. Chairman, and I think about some of the trips that I've been taking, to Washington in particular and to Ottawa, to talk about the work that we're doing in Alberta, the message that we're delivering is critically important in terms of what our product is, how we're extracting that resource, what our record is with respect to greenhouse gas emissions, and to make sure that people know that in Alberta we're very proud of not only our economic development but our environmental stewardship. It was very clear to me, when I was in Washington, that being able to deliver that message makes a difference to decision-makers.

Now, there is no doubt, Mr. Chair, that due to the circumstances we're seeing around some political developments in the United States right now, there has been somewhat of a delay with respect to the decision around Keystone. But it's just as important for us to be able to discuss with decision-makers who will ultimately be involved in making those decisions exactly what our record is. They are very open to that, and our message is very clear. We believe that Keystone matters because we need to ensure that we have a strong economic partnership with our closest neighbours and some of our most longstanding trading partners, and for the United States it matters.

One of the things that our corporate communications department does is actually speak to the issues surrounding energy security, environmental sustainability, and long-term economic development. So when I think about the work that we're investing through our Public Affairs Bureau in the messages that are telling the good story about Alberta products, that's a very important connection for us to make, and it's a commitment that this government is very committed to do.

Today in question period, Mr. Chair, there was a question with respect to the vote tomorrow at the European Union around the fuel quality directive. Again, we have offices and we have ministers who are spending time, working with our Public Affairs Bureau, to tell that good story in terms of the importance of not discriminating against our resources in the fuel quality directive decision. That means that we do spend money on communications, we do spend money on our international offices, and we ensure that we're investing the time to tell that story.

That department also plans and co-ordinates our government-wide internal communications to employees. It provides advertising consultation, which I spoke about before. It manages the government of Alberta website, which, again, tells that story, and co-ordinates our crossgovernment standards for all ministry websites. And it provides technical support for major government news conferences. Again, Mr. Chair, we know that we see a 4 per cent increase as a result of staffing changes.

The other area that the hon. member asked about was a breakdown with respect to those numbers. Part of the work that we do through those numbers is involved in promoting Alberta. That estimate is a $5 million estimate, and there's no funding change for 2012-13. Again, Mr. Chair, that promotes the province of Alberta as the best place to live, to work, to invest, and to play within the country and around the world. It focuses on the portfolios of work and investment to attract the labour, which we know is so important, and the capital that will allow the province to continue to thrive so that we know that we can rely on the projections that we see in this year's budget.

In conjunction with other ministries, as I talked about, we initiate and co-ordinate energy advocacy and communications efforts across Canada, across the United States, and globally, and we support outreach via the web and, through other communications strategies, everything that we need to do to be telling the good story about Alberta. When I think about the work that we're doing with respect to something like the Gateway pipeline, it's very important, Mr. Chair, for us to know that that story with respect to what's good for economic development in Alberta will also be very important in terms of the Canadian discussion with respect to a Canadian energy strategy. The oil sands are not only a resource that's available to benefit us as Albertans, but it has tremendous economic benefits across the country, and it's important for us.

One of the things that I've done since I became Premier is to talk with Canadians, with other Premiers, with people in Ottawa, Quebec City, and in Toronto, about the emotional connection to what these resources can mean for Canadians across this country. We know that in Alberta we are very much the economic engine of the country, but we don't want to just say that; we want to demonstrate the fact that we want to work in partnership with industry across this country. We want to ensure that we're working in partnership with respect to the extraction of resources. If there's research that's being done here, Mr. Chair, that we can share with other jurisdictions, we want to be able to do that.

We're seeing some very good examples around how we can co-operate with other jurisdictions. There's some work that we're beginning right now that will take place between the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, and the University of Cape Breton with respect to coal gasification. We know that because of the resources that Nova Scotia has and their opportunity and their desire to be able to develop their economy, we've done research that can be helpful to them. Now, some of that research will be part of proprietary interest that industry has. So as we build those partnerships around what a Canadian energy strategy can mean, it will also include partnering with industry so that people right across this country can see that the resources that we have here that have allowed us to invest in research will continue to allow us to build strong Canadian partnerships and to build a strong Canadian energy economy.

As we move ahead with those discussions, what we're seeing from Premiers right across the country is a true understanding and acceptance that it's important to work in partnership. You know, it's interesting. We have a very interesting relationship with the province of Quebec, a province which, of course, just like Alberta, very particularly guards their provincial jurisdiction. When we talk about a Canadian energy strategy, one of the qualifications always with respect to a Canadian energy strategy is to ensure that our primary objective is to ensure that we are protecting our provincial jurisdiction. It's quite interesting, as we go across the country, to see that that's of primary importance to all provinces. As a result of that, we have to ensure that the partnerships that will take place will be between provinces with support from the federal government and not be part only of leadership coming from the federal government.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Speaking of a talking head, I actually hoped to engage the Premier in a discussion, not a diatribe.

Mr. Chairman, how much time do I have?

The Chair: Just before you go on, I asked earlier if you wanted to combine the 20 minutes together, dialoguing, talking, or have 10 minutes each. You said 20, so you're going to get 20 minutes to have a dialogue.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Chairman, we'll go at it. I didn't know the Premier was so long winded. I enjoy her enthusiasm for Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, a couple of questions I have. I'd better lump a couple of them into my few minutes because we're going to get another 20-minute diatribe. The Premier made a decision to add the Regulatory Review Secretariat to the purview of Executive Council immediately after being elected leader. There are a number of questions. What was the government doing with respect to regulatory review for the last four years, or 40 years for that matter? Is that to suggest that they weren't doing any regulatory reviews? The question has to be asked: what was the rationale for this move? Was it an effort for the Premier to have full control of the process? Was it just politicking? Is she saying that the government and the cabinet – most of the cabinet members she was a colleague of. Who was in charge of this? What were they doing for the last four years?

Let's talk about the other half of the budget of Executive Council. It goes to the propaganda bureau, or should I say the Public Affairs Bureau. Fifty per cent more than the office of the Premier, which is responsible for all activities relating to policy. If we add promoting Alberta, that budget line, which is also a communications function – I believe the way to promote Alberta is that the proof should be in the pudding, Mr. Chairman. The proof should be in the pudding. That's how you promote Alberta. Have others brag about us after they see the diversity of this province.

The Chair: You're in the second 20 minutes now. Do you still want to have dialogue?

Dr. Sherman: Thank you.

Mr. Chairman, the government spends double on spin than it does on policy development and co-ordination. The PAB is spin machinery to suit, before the election, the political aspirations of a political party. How much of that is related to investments just before an election to make Albertans perceive that you're doing the right thing when, clearly, we've stated the outcome of this government: the worst performing health care system in the country, five successive deficits with oil at $100 a barrel, seniors getting nickelled and dined? How much of this political spin does this PAB do?

Can the Premier explain why, out of all the roles the Executive Council might take, it has chosen to make PR it's most significant role? The most significant role is decision-making, leadership, and vision, not PR and spin. Albertans are sick and tired of being lied to.

Mr. Rodney: Language.

Dr. Sherman: I withdraw that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you to the hon. member.

The PAB introduced its social media program in the 2009-10 business plan. We now have the government of Alberta on YouTube, Flickr, Facebook, Twitter, and the blog, where entries are often signalled by PAB staff. Do Albertans need to be told how the health care system is fantastic, or do they need to just experience it and realize it? Mr. Chairman, I believe they need to experience it and realize it. Once they do get into the health care system, it's actually world class, but the experience of trying to get into the system is devastating on families. People are suffering, as was tabled in the Health Quality Council report. My question is: how much money will be spent trying to spin that report, which tells us we're still in crisis?

Can the Premier discuss the government's risk avoidance or risk mitigation strategies when using third-party social media sites, the methods used to ensure compliance with social media policy and to address noncompliance and any plans to deal with the consequences of changes in policy by the third-party sites such as sale of data? How does the PAB staff report on social media to program staff in ministries? Is the government actually using any of the feedback received, or is it purely a public relations, PR, spin exercise?

I have a question. It's interesting. I was looking at a report on the computer the other day, and actually in the last few weeks every time you look at the newspapers and every time you click on it, the Premier appears on the advertisement, amazingly. The question is: is this a PC Party advertisement, or is it the Public Affairs Bureau, government tax dollars? The timing is amazing, Mr. Chairman. You should check this out. There's no acknowledgement of who paid for this. Is it the PAB, or is it the PC Party? Why is the Premier ashamed of admitting it if it's party dollars? If it's not party dollars, if it's taxpayer dollars, why is the Premier wasting taxpayer dollars on advertising? How much money are they wasting for pure partisan, political purposes heading into an election?

I ask these questions. What portion of the PAB budget is allocated for advertising, be it on radio, television, billboards, and these ads? What is your expenditure in relation to the election cycle? Is the spending heavily weighted just before the election?

Mr. Chairman, this is about honesty, transparency, and trust. This Premier was supposed to be about real change. She promised change. This is worse than the old. I want the other Premier back. Many Albertans want the other Premier back. This was supposed to be a good change. This isn't the change people voted for. It's more of the same.

I've asked many questions. I look forward to the Premier's answers.

Thank you.

3:30

The Chair: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As I said in my opening comments, we have right now an Executive Council, a Regulatory Review Secretariat, which, as I mentioned, was transferred from the Department of Finance. I'm surprised that the hon. member would ask the question with respect to what that was since he has been in this House for as long as I have, and even before I had this job, I was very aware of what that role was. That was a role of an office within the Department of Finance that was charged with ensuring that on a regular basis regulations within government were reviewed to ensure that we weren't standing in the way of good public policy.

The reason that I thought it was important – and it is change, Mr. Chairman – to bring the Regulatory Review Secretariat to our office, to the office of the Premier, was to ensure, as I said in my opening comments, that we were actually co-ordinating the work. What we know is that the way the government has worked in the past – and change is very important and very good, and we're making a lot of it, and I said in my opening comments that it was important to do that, to begin to co-ordinate approaches to these issues. What I decided was that the work that was happening in Finance was becoming too isolated with respect to the work of people who were charged directly to the Department of Finance.

Since 1999 our regulatory reform agenda was overseen by that secretariat, and the addition to our policy co-ordination office, as I said, reinforces the importance of effective and efficient regulatory systems that are co-ordinated across the government of Alberta. The system works with all ministries now to support the development of quality regulations by directing regulatory reform initiatives, of course eliminating superfluous regulations and ensuring that any regulations that are in place are actually necessary, Mr. Chair.

We have, with respect to social policy, very strong internal policies on web-based security which are led by Service Alberta, and we actually have a social media policy, Mr. Chair, which really ensures that it can apply broadly to the use of social media when we're providing information and government announcements, programs, and policies. The feedback that we get from Albertans on our communications efforts matters. It's not about advertising; it's about communicating and dialoguing with Albertans.

There's no doubt that there's going to be a provincial election. We actually passed legislation to ensure that that's going to happen. But we're here today in this Legislature discussing a budget because the world does not stop simply because there is going to be a provincial election. The business of government must continue, and the business of government continues on an ongoing basis. So today we're discussing budget, and I've referred to the throne speech. We communicate with Albertans with respect to those issues because those are issues that matter to Albertans.

We know that it's important to have policies with respect to social media, and our policies outline how social media will be used when communicating with Albertans. We ensure that staff are not doing anything else except representing the views of the government of Alberta to Albertans, and that is very important in terms of engagement.

Very often in this House, Mr. Chair, we'll hear from parties on the other side that it's important to consult, that it's important to engage. We even, surprisingly, will hear the accusation that we are not listening to Albertans. We listen to Albertans, and one of the ways that we do that is that we communicate information to them because we want to ensure that the dialogue we're having with Albertans is an informed dialogue about the future.

It's been pretty exciting in the past five months and for the year before that, when I was running for leadership of my party, to know how excited Albertans were about wanting to communicate, to see change, to see integrated long-term planning, and to ensure that we were connecting decisions that government was making directly to their lives. It's very important to us as a government that we're ensuring that people feel that government is accessible. We have a front bench of ministers that spend their days communicating through their communications officers and directly with Albertans.

I'm going to go back, Mr. Chair, to something that I said earlier, which is that our future economic opportunities will come from being able to communicate around the world the good stories about what's going on in Alberta. Frankly, standing up and saying that the proof of the pudding is in the tasting is not a compelling message that sends any signal to the rest of the world as to how wonderful Alberta is, what a unique jurisdiction it is, how much we care about our communities and our environment, and why they should be attracted to come here to work, to invest, and to even come as tourists.

When I think about the work that we will continue to do in terms of developing a communications plan and talking about our successes, I'm actually very proud every day of the work that the Public Affairs Bureau does. What I've heard and what I think many of my colleagues have heard in the past year is that Albertans are tired of the negativity. They're tired of the cynicism. They're tired of the pessimism. They're proud Albertans, and they want a government that's proud of Alberta.

That's what we're doing, Mr. Chair. We are travelling the country. We are in the United States. We have international offices that are talking about our successes. They're talking about our accomplishments. We know, not because we're members of government but because we live in this great province, that this truly is the best jurisdiction to live in in the world. Albertans want us to talk about that, and they want us to deliver those messages in a way that will improve our economic benefits.

I know that when I first became Premier and was first sworn in, one of the first things that many members of this House suggested that I do was exactly what I did, travel to Washington and talk about Alberta's story. In fact, Mr. Chair, there was criticism from some members of this House that I didn't go soon enough. So it seems a little inconsistent to me that today those same people would stand up and suggest that that isn't important work to be done.

I know from the response that we were able to see in Washington, Toronto, and Ottawa and from some of the success we've had in working with our federal government partners that it's worth while to do it. Albertans know that we can't live in isolation. They know that we need to be partners in Canada, we need to be partners around the world, and we have to understand that we're international citizens.

Many people who are living in this province have come from other places, Mr. Chair. They've come here to retain their links with their home countries but to ensure that they're part of our great economic success. That's important because we actually need them to be here to do the work. There's no doubt, if we look at some of the issues that have come up in the last three or four months, that we have to ensure that we're attracting people with skills in order to do the work that needs to be done.

We're a province right now of 3.7 million people, and that's wonderful. We're going to be 5 million, 6 million people in the not too very distant future. It's interesting to look at some of the projections because some of the projections that we see could have us at 10 million people by 2050. My sense is that we're probably going to be there, and we're going to be there sooner than we think. That is a tremendous blessing for us, to know that we are fundamentally changing the character of our province, our economy, the way we work, the way we live, and what we do every day. When that starts to happen, being able to talk about our story and to talk about our success is going to be very important, Mr. Chair.

So the work that we're able to do through Executive Council to advance that agenda is terribly important, and Albertans know that.

As we move ahead and we take a look at some of the issues that are involved, we know that we're going to have to continue to be strong environmental stewards, and we're going to have to reach out to people that have concerns with respect to economic development and what development looks like in the oil sands.

When I think about that work and the ongoing work of government and the way that we tell our story to Albertans and the way we tell our story to Canadians and to people around the world, we're going to have to continue to support on an ongoing basis the work of the Public Affairs Bureau. We haven't seen increases in spending in that shop. We haven't seen increases beyond the 4 per cent salary increase. So to suggest that there's fluctuation in election years and nonelection years simply isn't the case, Mr. Chair. We consistently do the work. We consistently tell the story. We have strong policies in place that allow for social media to be used.

I have to say that I'm a little surprised by the hon. member suggesting that it's not important to be on social media, to suggest that it's odd for the government of Alberta to be on Facebook, to be on YouTube. What we believe is that people around the world and people in Alberta that are making decisions about policy and deciding what they want for the future of this province are accessing communication in a way that's entirely different from the way that we've done it before. We're operating in a sphere that's changing by leaps and bounds every month. The fact that we're able to respond and to tell that story in some cases to much younger audiences, where we know that sometimes there's a preoccupation with issues, particularly around environmental sustainability, is critical to the way that we deliver that communications message.

When I think about the innovative thinking, the work that we're doing to support our offices around the world, the consulting work that must be done if we're concerned about issues like the fuel quality directive that's going on right now in Europe, we have to ensure that we have smart people who are communicating and developing a story that connects to people. When I think about what we will do and what we will continue to do, it's to use the resources that we have in the Premier's office to develop that policy and to ensure that every opportunity to tell our story and to build our economy will be taken advantage of, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The Premier is right. Albertans are tired. They are tired of the same old same old. In fact, in order for Alberta to go to the next level, to go to heights never seen before – and I believe we are a great place to live. That's why we're all here. But I believe Alberta is capable of so much more, so much more than we're actually getting right now.

We need to attract engineers, hard workers with dreams and ideas, teachers, doctors, nurses, health care workers, but when people get here – a report just came out today, a report commissioned by the health minister's Health Quality Council, that reports to him, saying that there's a culture of fear and intimidation of doctors in this province, and this culture is pervasive. Twenty-five per cent of the physicians were brave enough to report these issues; 75 per cent were scared. Yes, we are the bright hope for the world, but people should not fear their government. When people fear their government, there is tyranny. When the government fears the people, we have liberty. That's the Alberta that I want to see, where their government fears its people. Yes, Premier, a government that truly fears its people.

This Premier: we thought there was change. How did the change start off? It started with your Minister of Finance swearing at somebody, an elected representative. It started off – I'm not sure if this came . . .

An Hon. Member: How about the estimates?

Dr. Sherman: This pertains to the estimates of the PAB because there's spin required, spin from the PAB required to manage the message from the Premier's office on this issue.

The question is: is it the Minister of Municipal Affairs who unilaterally boycotted a meeting, or did that directive come straight from the Premier's office? Social media was used by the Premier's chief of staff to intimidate another elected member, to slander and libel her.

The Chair: Hon member, we are now on the third 20 minutes, so the last 20 minutes for you, sir.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Chair.

One of the Executive Council's main roles is to provide policy planning to all government ministries, not the least of which is the Ministry of Health and Wellness. On page 32 of the Executive Council 2012-15 business plan under Priority Initiatives it says:

- 1.1 Provide advice and analysis to support policy development that aligns with government priorities and ensures that decision-makers have the best possible information with which to make decisions.
- 1.2 Coordinate the government's strategic planning process, support the development of the Government of Alberta Strategic Plan and report on the progress of government priorities.
- 1.3 An enhanced focus and engagement by the public service on integrated public policy analysis and innovative and efficient service delivery. Ensure quality interaction between the public service, government and society as a whole.
- 1.4 Work collaboratively with ministries to improve the quality of Alberta's regulatory systems and oversee the ongoing review of regulations so that policy outcomes can be achieved effectively and efficiently.

Mr. Chair, this is interesting with regard to the way that health policy has developed over the last several years. There continue to be questions raised about who is actually developing health policy. Is it Alberta Health Services, is it Alberta Health and Wellness, or is it the Premier's office? What measures have been taken through Executive Council to improve and increase the policy development capacity of Alberta Health and Wellness now that they have been charged with the responsibility of province-wide decisions as well as for Alberta Health Services?

What influence does Executive Council have with health policy decisions? Is Executive Council briefed on all policy decisions before they're made, announced, or implemented, or does Executive Council make those decisions?

On page 32 of the Executive Council 2012-15 business plan strategy 1.1 is to "provide advice and analysis to support policy development" and ensure "that decision-makers have the best possible information with which to make decisions." What extra support has Executive Council provided to the Ministry of Health and Wellness to cope with the monumental task they have of reining in Alberta Health Services, an organization with $9.6 billion in spending, an organization about which the Health Quality Council report today, commissioned by this government, says that the AHS experiment has been a failure, that it does not provide Albertans the necessary care and that lives have been endangered, that physicians have been intimidated, that the ERs are still in crisis. The government's own report.

Page 32 of the Executive Council 2012-15 business plan has a performance measure that is a percentage for "satisfaction of Policy Coordination Office clients with products and services." The last actual number for this measure is 93 per cent while the target for the next three years is 85 per cent. Can the Premier explain how this measure is actually taken and which clients this measure refers to, or is it the arm's-length government agencies, boards, or commissions? Or does this measure refer to government ministries? If this is referring to government ministries, is this measure not misleading? Surely, government ministries will not show dissatisfaction with the Premier's office.

Mr. Chair, there are many questions that need to be answered: policy and delivery and the outcomes and the outputs of our government and our government system. The number one expenditure of any government in this nation is health care. This report today was so damning – so damning – of the government's performance on health care.

I'd also like to put into the record a graph from the Institute for Public Economics from the University of Alberta, the historical expenditure of the big two, Alberta Health and Education, absolute expenditures.

3:50

The Chair: Hon. member, the chair should remind you that we have the Health estimates coming up on March 7.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Chair, I'll bring it back to decision-making and health care policy decision-making.

There's a lot of money being spent here in the Premier's office on policy. Premier, you gave a speech, a vision for this province. You tabled a budget. You set the direction for this province. You set policy, and then we were talking about outcomes. Mr. Chair, this has all to do with estimates. There's 30-some million dollars here being spent. Here is the outcome.

I have a question about policy set by the Premier's office. Alberta's Health Legislation: this is a policy document that was presented by the current minister of health to government caucus. It was presented. It pertains to privatization of health care, and the government spin machinery has to make this story go away.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Chairman, point of order. We've got to have some relevance here, Beauchesne's 459. I don't think that has anything to do with the estimates of Executive Council.

The Chair: Hon member, I remind you that we have March 7 for the health care estimates, so stay on the estimates of the Executive Council if you will.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Chair, it is about the estimates because of the policy direction.

Debate Continued

Dr. Sherman: The question is on who's in charge and on the lack of performance of a government. Resources in Executive Council, in the Public Affairs Bureau, need to be used to sell a story that Albertans aren't buying.

Albertans deserve the truth. This is an amazing province. The people who comprise this province are amazing people, and they deserve nothing but the best from their leadership. They deserve honesty, the truth, world-class health care, world-class access to health care, world-class access to education, and they don't deserve the Public Affairs Bureau selling them a bill of goods that isn't true.

Premier, please, just tell the truth.

Ms Redford: Well, I have to say, Mr. Chair, that I'm a little confused because I was standing in this House an hour and a half ago, and the hon. member told me that the Health Quality Council report was actually a whitewash and a gift to the government because it didn't criticize the government. An hour and a half later the hon. member tells me that this is an absolute indictment of the health care system. I guess one of the things I'd ask is: where is the spin actually coming from?

The role of Executive Council – maybe we'll make up a little brochure for next year – is to actually do what our priority initiatives are, and that's to co-ordinate decision-making in government to ensure that the right information is brought to the table so that the government, that's elected by Albertans, is able to set a direction for the future that responds to the needs of Albertans. When I look at those initiatives, Mr. Chair, I know that we do all of those things.

I won't go on any more about the Regulatory Review Secretariat. I'm very proud of the work that they're doing. What I will say is that within Executive Council we co-ordinate the work of ministers, we co-ordinate the work of cabinet, and through the policy co-ordination office we support and co-ordinate the roles of ministers and deputy ministers to ensure that the right people are at the table to make decisions that are going to matter for Albertans. We need to align the work that departments are doing, and we need to ensure that all of the agendas are actually integrated in a way that allows for long-term policy planning.

Mr. Chair, that is one of the things that Albertans told us they wanted to see, and we're happy to be able to change the structure of what we're doing to ensure that that alignment is happening. We have the ability through the Department of Human Services, which is a new department in government, to bring together a number of departments that needed to be better aligned. In that department we were able to bring together mental health initiatives, employment training, children and youth services, and to deal with people who are very vulnerable in our community.

Mr. Chair, you'll know that before this, I was Minister of Justice, and through the safe communities agenda we were able to do the same thing. What that allows us to do is to not only be reactive. It allows us to anticipate what's coming and to ensure that we're building and planning for the future, whether we're talking about health care or education or whether we're talking about economic development. So when I think about the work that's done through the Executive Council office, it's fundamental to long-term policy planning for government.

We do have, as these initiatives say, an enhanced focus on engagement. We're engaging with our own members in the public service, with members of the public at large, with stakeholders, with parents, with patients to ensure that information is coming to the table when we make decisions so that they will be made in the best interests of Albertans. Whether we're talking, as I said, Mr. Chair, about health care or whether we're talking about education, we're integrating the input of that information.

Now, I know that there will be another opportunity in the next two hours to talk a little bit more about performance measures, and I'm happy to do that. We have very particular performance measures for the Public Affairs Bureau, for the policy co-ordination office. What we know is that if we take a look at the customer satisfaction surveys and the client satisfaction surveys from people that are interacting with these departments and with our office, they're seeing significant progress. Ninety-three per cent: we're very proud of that; 85 per cent is a very lofty goal. I believe that we'll exceed that.

But, you know, what we're prepared to say, Mr. Chair, is that sometimes things don't always work out exactly as we want them to, and I'll tell you that that's honesty. It's honest and it's truthful to say that we make decisions that we believe are in the best interests of Albertans after co-ordinating the information and bringing the perspective into place and ensuring that the programs are integrated in a way that's actually going to make sense.

You know, Mr. Chair, one of the things that we did do in this budget as it was tabled was really listen to what Albertans were telling us about community and about vulnerable Albertans. One of the things that was very important, that we've had tremendous feedback on, was the decision to actually increase AISH payments for vulnerable Albertans. That was a great example of an integrated approach to policy that's allowing us to make decisions that reflect the way that Albertans feel about their community.

As we go ahead and take a look at the performance measures for the policy co-ordination office, we can say that we conducted a survey, the survey where we saw a 93 per cent result, between February and March of last year, and it was a web-based survey, so people were not being spoken to directly. They were entirely entitled to express their opinion as they felt it was most appropriate to do, and that's the result that we got.

We're going to continue to aspire to do better because we can always do better, and that's what Albertans are asking for right now from government, excellence. We will continue to achieve excellence if we understand the importance of integrating the work that we're doing in our offices.

The Chair: Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, you have about six minutes.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Chair, am I done at 4 o'clock?

The Chair: No. You have six minutes.

Dr. Sherman: Six minutes.

Mr. Chair, I can appreciate the challenges the Premier has. Upon her shoulders is tremendous responsibility, a responsibility that I as the Leader of the Opposition must question. She is charged with leading this province. She has been elected by her party to lead Alberta on a path that's best for Albertans. The question is if many of the decisions and the resources in the Premier's Executive Council are being used efficiently and responsibly, leading this province on that path that Albertans truly deserve.

Mr. Chair, we have a difference of opinion, and that's a wonderful thing about a democratic province and a democratic country. We can express our differences. We can question government on legitimate policy issues, on legitimate expenditures of taxpayer dollars. I believe in the people of this great province. That's why I ran, to serve. I believe in the seniors who built this province and the people who are currently building this province. That's why I stand up and fight for them, to be honest and truthful to them, especially when I was on that side of the bench.

Albertans have known for a long time that they deserve better. Sixty per cent didn't vote last election. They didn't vote. Despite the resources of the governing party they didn't want to get out and vote, while our young men and women are fighting for others to have the right to vote, so I believe they've lost trust, and that trust must begin in the Premier's office and Executive Council.

I thank the Premier for doing her best to answer the questions that were posed. I thank her for taking the position of Premier. It's a very honourable position to have. I just ask her to use Albertans' taxpayer dollars wisely. I ask her to address the two deficits that we face, the fiscal deficit and the social deficit, which some may question as a moral deficit in leadership.

I ask the Premier and the government to provide world-class health care to Albertans where and when they need it. I ask the Premier to offer every child the opportunity for a world-class education. I ask the Premier to lower tuition fees. I ask Executive Council to make these priorities, to lower tuition fees for postsecondary students so that our young people can be the best that they can possibly be, so that our industry may be afforded the labour workforce it requires to meet its needs so that we can take Alberta to a new level. I ask the Premier to lower tuitions and completely delink parental income from postsecondary students.

I ask the Premier and Executive Council to have a strategic policy direction not to nickel and dime our seniors, to have a strategic policy direction to get our seniors out of health care facilities and keep them in their own homes, where couples can stay together with dignity and honour until their last day. I ask the Premier and her Executive Council to spend these resources that they have, millions of dollars in their office, to balance the books, to talk about fair taxation and fairness. I ask the Premier to put our money away for the future in endowment funds for arts and culture and for amateur sport for our children, for municipalities.

I ask the Executive Council to cut the Public Affairs Bureau in half so that we don't need to advertise. I ask the Premier and Executive Council to use their resources, that they're given by the people, in their office to have policy and direction and vision to save for the future.

Mr. Chair, I think that enough has been said. I thank the Premier and I thank the Executive Council for doing their best. It's an honour for me to have an opportunity to question them.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I find the hon. member's comments quite interesting. There's no doubt that those are the issues exactly that Albertans are concerned about, and they're well reflected in our budget and our throne speech.

The Chair: We have finished the first hour. The next 20 minutes will be reserved for the Wildrose and the Premier. We have an arrangement here. Ten minutes each or a combined 20 minutes?

Mr. Anderson: We're going to try to combine it for 20 minutes. Is that okay?

The Chair: A combined 20 minutes back and forth.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to welcome with me today Bill Bewick and James Johnson. They're two outstanding researchers that we have working in our office. They're, obviously, very clean-shaven and well-kept individuals. Sometimes they don't shower or shave for weeks we work them so hard.

I would hope that as we go back and forth here, Premier, I'll keep my questions short and that you would keep your answers short. I think that respect is two-way and that communication is two-way. I'm willing to ask the questions in a respectful manner, and I hope that you won't try to run out the clock because you're afraid to answer them, and I'm assuming you won't be afraid to answer them. [interjection] I hope she won't be afraid to answer them. That's why I'm saying this, so that we get the short answers.

First I want to talk about the fiscal leadership of your department. Obviously, it's going up $1.5 million. Part of that's due to salaries. There's also the issue, of course, that you participated, while you were a cabinet minister at the time, in increasing your own salary by 30 per cent as your first act as a cabinet. There was, obviously, the Jasper junket that we've heard about to the Jasper Park Lodge for the caucus, the prebudget tour conducted for about $100,000 after the budget was essentially agreed to and printed. In other words, it wasn't. It was a public relations campaigning situation. And, of course, there was a 7 per cent increase in program spending and so forth.

Then there are others. You went forward with the $2 billion carbon capture and storage. There's the $300 million for MLA offices. We could go on and on and on, but let's just stick to your department and stuff that you have direct control over now.

Why have you not spent more time in these first few months of your premiership setting a tone? Now, let's not count Bill 1 because Bill 1, I'm assuming, your government is doing anyway. Who doesn't believe in results-based budgeting? Why wouldn't you come in and roll your own salary back 30 per cent, and why wouldn't you freeze your department's spending? Why would you go on the Jasper junket, and why would you go on the nonbudget tour for $100,000? Why would you do these things? How is that setting a tone for fiscal austerity, Premier?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Chair, I think it's fascinating that we're talking about budgets that aren't part of my budget, but I guess I'll just clarify that first of all. The work that is done by any caucus in this Legislature is funded through the office of the Leg. Assembly, the LAO. The LAO provides a budget to all caucuses, and that budget is used, as I understand it, for caucus business. I'm very pleased to have had a report from our whip that through the process that we will go through this fiscal year, we will in fact be returning $1.5 million to the LAO out of our caucus budget. I think that's a pretty good signal with respect to fiscal restraint.

I think it's also quite interesting to think about whether or not the budgets that are being expended by caucuses are being expended for political purposes, and it's a very important question, Mr. Chair. I know that from our perspective as a caucus we follow the rules, and I would hope that all caucuses would do the same thing. I also know, with respect to accounting for our funds, that not only do we follow the rules that are set out with respect to the LAO and reporting on expenditures but in many cases and in that particular instance have provided far more detail, that's been provided and filed with the LAO, to ensure that there's not even a slight hint of anything inappropriate having happened or any money having been spent with respect to our caucus budget as Progressive Conservatives.

I certainly would welcome other caucuses, including this hon. member's caucus, doing exactly the same thing, to go above and beyond with respect to reporting on caucus budget expenditures to ensure that it's not being used for political purposes and probably also, because I'm sure this is something this hon. member cares about, thinking about returning some of that budget, Mr. Chair.

In terms of fiscal definitions, in terms of how we will define our fiscal process, we are going to continue to ensure that we're being accountable.

Mr. Chair, I'm not going to not talk about Bill 1. Bill 1 was a piece of legislation that was passed in this House that committed this government to reviewing a third of government program spending every year, and we're proud of that. We're doing it by legislation because we think that that's the commitment that Albertans want this government to make, and we're prepared to make the commitment.

It's awfully easy to be casual and say: oh, well, we'd do it. Well, we put our name on the line, Mr. Chair. We said that we would do it. We are committed to doing it. We will be involved in both zero-based budgeting and results-based budgeting because we want to ensure that the programs and the services that we are delivering to Albertans are the services that Albertans want to have, that they're being delivered in a way that is having the impact that Albertans want them to have on their life, and that they're being delivered in a cost-effective manner.

We're going to do that through all government departments over a three-year period and then renew the cycle. The reason that's important is because we can't go on budgeting the way that we have in the past, and I'm proud of the fact that this government has signalled that change. It's a key change, Mr. Chair. It's a key change not only because it signals to Albertans that we're committed to that change, but it also says to our public servants: "Let's think differently about the work that we're doing within the public service. Let's think about the programs we're delivering, how we're delivering them, whether or not they'll have the impact, and therefore ensure that we're delivering services that make sense for Albertans."

What I heard from Albertans in the last year – well, now more than a year; February 15 is when I resigned as Justice minister – was that they want to make sure that government is working smart and that it's working effectively and that it's investing in their families' future. When I think about the budget that we tabled two weeks ago, what we reflected in that budget was what Alberta families care about. They care about the future of their children. They care about education. They want to make sure that their children are going to have the quality of life that they hope all children in this province will have.

That's why, when we take a look at the approach that we need to take with respect to the Speech from the Throne and with respect to the budget and with respect to results-based budgeting, we will not fall into ideological doctrine that simply says that there's a bottom line that must be met because, Mr. Chair, the political discussion that has been part of public dialogue in the last two to three weeks has all been about ensuring that we can have fiscal discipline.

I'll tell you that fiscal discipline also includes investing in Albertans. If you take an ideological approach to it, Mr. Chair, you cut schools, and you cut hospitals. Then when you become a province of 6 million people, you don't have the infrastructure in place to allow for communities to thrive. We're not going to do that. We're going to make sure that we're putting the long-term planning in place that Albertans have asked us to put in place. These are not simplistic conversations. They're complicated conversations, and they're conversations that Albertans want us to have.

Mr. Anderson: For those keeping time at home, that was a six-minute answer to a three-minute question. I just would hope that she would try to keep the answers a little shorter than that as we go forward because I've got a whole 11 minutes left for this huge budget.

I guess I would question what this Premier – she talks a lot about that she doesn't like ideology. Okay. Fair enough. I guess what some people would call ideology, others would call principles. I know that as a father of four children, who I have a very active relationship with and worry about and save for every month in their little RESPs and so forth and do my best, put my $50 a month into each of them – hopefully, it'll be more one day. One thing that I worry about as a father is a bunch of spendthrift liberals in the government spending my children's future and mortgaging my children's future to pay for their vote-buying schemes, including these estimates right here.

I get really tired of that, and I get tired of the excuse that I keep hearing from that side that if we show any kind of fiscal responsibility, that is somehow ideological, and we're shutting down hospitals and shutting down schools. That's something that I expect to hear from Barack Obama. It's something I'd hear from Jack Layton when he was still alive. It would be something I'd hear from current New Democrats in this House, from Michael Ignatieff, and from Stéphane Dion, but I sure as heck never thought I'd hear it from a Conservative Premier of Alberta. It's wrong.

What I want to hear from this Premier and what I'd like an answer on is: how in the heck are you going to do right by our kids, by my kids and my neighbours' kids, and all the folks in Airdrie and all the folks around Alberta who are concerned that you're spending them into oblivion, that you're piling up debt, that you're piling on deficits, and that you're giving us no way out? Please stop the fearmongering about cutting schools and cutting hospitals. You know full well that we spend 20 per cent more per person than the next closest province. Twenty per cent more.

An Hon. Member: We have 20 per cent more people who . . .

Mr. Anderson: No. It's per capita, hon. member. It's per capita. Per capita we spend 20 per cent more than the next closest province.

Why on earth can we not balance the budget at a hundred dollars a barrel for oil? Why do you keep mortgaging our children's future in your little fulsome discussions and your commitments to Albertans in your budget? Balance the budget. It's not ideological. It's principled. It's common sense. We've been doing it for over a decade here until the last four years. Will you commit to balancing the budget, Premier?

The Chair: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Here's some fearmongering for you. "We're building debt." No, we're not. We have no debt. We have no debt, and we have no debt under a Progressive Conservative government. Our commitment is to the budget that we tabled two weeks ago, and in that budget we have very sensibly set out a set of priorities that matter to Albertans.

I'll give you some principles, Mr. Chair. We're going to support vulnerable Albertans, and we're going to educate all kids, not just the hon. member's kids. I don't stand in this Legislature and talk about the best interests of my child. I stand in this Legislature, as do my government colleagues, and talk about the best interests of all children. The best interest of all children so that every child in this province can excel to the best of their ability is to make sure that we're investing in public health care and that we're building schools and that we're educating kids.

I know from the work that we do on this side of the House in speaking to our constituents and to people in communities that they want to ensure that everyone in our communities is taken care of. I think that's something that all Albertans can be proud of, and it's certainly something that I'm prepared to go to an election on. That's why we're going to pass this budget before we go to the polls.

I will say that it is simplistic to stand up and say, "Balance the budget." Tell me what you're not going to spend on. The hon. member knows that there are new schools going into his communities, three new schools, I think, going into Airdrie.

4:20

An Hon. Member: Four.

Ms Redford: Great. Four. It's fantastic. That's how we invest in kids, and that's how we build community.

I'll tell you that when you have to make those choices – I don't know if the hon. member would make a decision to only build schools in his constituency, but when you're on the government side, you don't have that luxury, Mr. Chair. You don't get to arbitrarily decide. You have to make principled decisions and balance the interests of everyone in this province.

I do think it's interesting that when the hon. member stood up to ask a supplementary question, his first comment was that to a three-minute question he got a six-minute answer. I guess, Mr. Chair, he didn't listen to the answer because part of what I said was that Albertans understand that these are complicated issues and that simplistic answers aren't going to work. In fact, whenever we've had those simplistic answers, that is when we've gotten into trouble. That's when we haven't had the facilities and the infrastructure that we needed to have in place for a growing population.

As a province of 3.7 million people we're going to have a lot of complicated issues. We're going to have big cities, with people that need supports. We're going to have people who want their children to get new sorts of education and new kinds of jobs that we can't even imagine yet. You know, the job of government is to think long term and to know that when we're investing and we're spending money on infrastructure and on social programs, that is what's going to allow the Alberta economy to continue to thrive.

What we've heard from Albertans is that they have confidence in the future of this province. They know that if we make smart decisions that are strategic and we actually understand the implication of bringing them together and having a long-term plan, that is when we'll be able to excel. When we take a look at how people in Alberta need to be supported and encouraged, we are going to, as we've seen in this budget that's tabled in this House, that we're talking about today, continue to invest in those programs that matter to kids and families. The hon. member refers to the fact that he's able to put away $50 a month in an RESP for his children. That's great. There are a lot of families in this province that can't do that. I want to make sure and our government wants to make sure that all kids in this province are able to have the same opportunities.

So we're going to ensure as we move ahead that we continue to make decisions that are based on principles. We're not going to pick winners and losers. We're going to ensure that all children in this province can be excellent.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. How much time do I have left?

The Chair: You have a minute and 51 seconds.

Mr. Anderson: A minute and 51 seconds. Awesome. That's fantastic. I'm glad I have a minute and 51 seconds left to hear more of your complicated answers.

You know, I obviously, like everyone in this Legislature, I would hope, care very deeply about the future of our kids. My kids, actually, go to public school, so I care very deeply about that. I would like to make sure that we continue to build those schools for all Alberta children, but I would say that we've got to make sure that when we build these schools, we're doing them where there is the highest need and that there's no political interference.

I would ask the Premier – and I don't know. I mean, there's only a minute left. People in Alberta are hoping – were hoping; I think they're past the hope of it now – that you would bring in a new era of transparency in government. You had an opportunity to call a full public inquiry and show from your office that leadership of transparency from the top. You had the opportunity to call that public inquiry in October. You had another in December when you passed that wonderful piece of legislation that really gave you the power to do what you could do right now. We're almost at the end of February, and you still haven't called it.

People are asking. They want to know what has happened in health care, why these physicians have been intimidated, why they're scared, why our system is on the brink of collapse with regard to health care. They haven't gotten the answer. Please, Premier, call the public inquiry. Call it tomorrow, and let's get started on this process.

The Chair: The 20 minutes for the Wildrose Party has ended.

Any other members wishing to speak? You have 10 minutes each. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: I'd love to chat some more.

The Chair: We haven't terminated two hours yet, so hon. member, you have the floor for 10 minutes. Do you still want to share 20 with the Premier?

Mr. Anderson: Nah. Can we do five, five, five, and five? Would that work?

The Chair: We have 10 minutes each to the maximum, and if you sit down, the Premier can answer.

Mr. Anderson: Can we do it five and five just to make sure that we actually get some time? Is that okay? No? Ten and 10?

The Chair: Ten and 10 or 20 combined.

Mr. Anderson: All right, all right. We'll do combined, then. She can talk for another 15 minutes while I talk for five.

Let's talk again about transparency. One of the things that is really bothering a lot of people in Alberta – and we just did a poll on this, actually. We polled roughly 42,000 Albertans on the question of Bill 24.

The Chair: Hon. member, excuse me. I have a note for an introduction of guests in the Speaker's gallery, so may we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you. Thank you, hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Legislature a group of people from the north-central Alberta child and family services board that are here to meet with the MLAs and ministers. This is zone 7. I'd like to introduce them, and I'd ask them to stand as I call their name: co-chair Audrey Franklin from Ardmere, one of my constituents; co-chair Brian Broughton, Edson; Florence Gladue, Slave Lake; Wendy Huggan, Slave Lake; Caren Mueller, Vimy; Pat Palechuk, Smoky Lake; Claudette Sheremata, Athabasca; Trevor Thain, Whitecourt; Penny Vasseur from Bonnyville; and Elden Block, acting CEO. If you would please stand, we'll give you the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Executive Council (continued)

The Chair: Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Anderson: Thanks. Welcome, to our guests.

I guess now that we have a little bit more time, with regard to leadership at the top and transparency and all those great things I really do want to know what goes on from your perspective in the Executive Council with regard to how you set policy. We're spending a lot of money on it; that's for sure. Your budget went up in that regard for the Executive Council.

With regard to physician intimidation you've managed to run out the clock almost to the election period here, Premier. You made the promise during the PC leadership – was it June? – I think it was in June that if elected Premier, you would call a public inquiry into physician intimidation, et cetera. You were elected in October, the beginning of October. You said: no; we've got to wait to pass legislation, different legislation. So you waited, and we got into December, and you passed some piece of legislation that empowered the Health Quality Council to do the public inquiry.

Now we're at the end of February. Still no public inquiry. One has to be a little suspicious that, potentially, we're not going to have a public inquiry before the next election. I don't know if this is the policy coming out of the Executive Council office, if you feel that it's just too damaging to have such an inquiry, but I would ask: is it your plan to call the public inquiry immediately so that we have public hearings starting in the next couple of weeks, or are you going to delay and delay and delay until after the election before Albertans get any answers or hear any testimony in this public inquiry? Albertans would like a public inquiry, at least starting one, before they go to the polls, not after. Would that not be the transparent thing to do, Madam Premier?

The Chair: May I just interject here a bit before I recognize our Premier? We are talking about the estimates of the Executive Council, so please focus on that.

Now, Premier, if you wish to answer.

Ms Redford: Sure. Thanks, Mr. Chair. I find it quite amazing sometimes to stand in this House and to think about the experience that I have in this House and what I say in this House versus how very often this is reported back, somehow thinking that if it's created as revisionist history, it won't be on the record what this government stands for.

So the first thing I'll say is that we have been committed to an independent judicial inquiry with respect to health care from the first day that I was elected leader of this party and was sworn in as Premier. In fact, I was committed to it well before that. Mr. Chair, what we have said we needed to do is exactly what we've done. We needed to introduce legislation that would actually allow for an independent judicial inquiry. We passed that legislation in the fall.

The next thing that I said – and I said it during the debate with respect to the legislation – was that we then wanted to ensure that we had the report from the Health Quality Council on the work that they were doing because there were a number of allegations made with respect to the health care system, and it was important to ensure that that work was done and that we saw the results from that work before we started to launch into another process.

Today we have now received the Health Quality Council report, and as the minister of health has said in this House and as we said during the debate with respect to the legislation, we will review that report, and we will then use that legislation to call an independent judicial inquiry. Again, I was standing in this House two hours ago and was asked exactly this question and answered the question very specifically. There is no doubt that this will proceed and, in fact, receiving the report today will now allow us to review the report and to proceed with respect to the inquiry.

Now, I've heard people try to lecture on what that means with respect to timing. Here's the word: independent. We have made a commitment to proceed. At the point that we proceed, there will be an independent inquiry that will be established under the legislation that was debated and passed in this House. That's something that Albertans can have complete confidence in. It is fully transparent. We have been fully transparent with our approach, and we'll continue to be, Mr. Chair. This is work that matters to Albertans, and to even insinuate that we as a government would change direction with respect to this I don't think is appropriate language for this House, and I also don't think it's appropriate language outside of the House.

We are committed to what we said we would do. We said that we would put this plan in place, and events are unfolding as they should. As we've said, we would ensure that we would follow.

Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: According to your Executive Council business plan, goal 1, government policy and planning are co-ordinated and effective. So let's talk about how that's happening with regard to your policy to have a health care inquiry. You have just said that you want an independent public inquiry. Great. Now, it's a little hard for us for you to stand there and say that it's fully independent since you're determining the terms of reference. Your own minister said that earlier: determining the terms of reference for the public inquiry. You are determining the timing of the public inquiry. Basically, you could tell them to examine anything. You could say: well, we're going to do an inquiry into the ER crisis, but we're going to leave out the intimidation scandal, and we're going to leave out some of these other things that have been alleged, the queue-jumping, for example. So that's not all that independent.

That will take leadership. You will have to show leadership at some point on this issue. It's on the side of your bus, I think: real-life leadership. So why don't you show some real-life leadership right now and commit not only to having a public inquiry on the intimidation scandal and the queue-jumping and the ER crisis but to call it now and to have it started within the next couple of weeks?

I mean, it didn't take long to turn around what happened with regard to the pay and perks committee. That got turned around quick by the Speaker. Surely the Premier of Alberta can make this happen in the next couple of weeks and get it started so that Albertans have some ability to know what has gone on in their health care system before the next election, because if you do not do it, if you do not call this inquiry before the next election, you are going to be painted not just by this caucus but by Albertans and, certainly, by other caucuses as being someone that says one thing and does another. You promised a public inquiry. You said it would be started before the election. Will you do that, Premier? Will you call the public inquiry into physician intimidation within the next couple of weeks so that before we go to the election . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I reminded you earlier that this time is for the estimates of the Executive Council.

Again, if the Premier wishes to speak, please reply.

Ms Redford: Sure. Thanks, Mr. Chair. You know, as I said when I got up to answer the question the last time, I'm absolutely amazed by the characterization and the revisionist history. We've been very clear with respect to what we will do. We actually passed legislation to ensure that this is done. So to suggest for some reason, for any reason, that we would go back on our word is entirely inappropriate.

You know, Mr. Chair, one of the things that's great about democracy and great about elections is that people get to decide whom they trust. In the past four and a half months every single commitment that we have made as a government we have honoured.

What I would say, Mr. Chair, is that what we hear in the public debate is an awful lot of fearmongering and suggesting that things are different than they actually are and innuendo that somehow conduct isn't appropriate. Yet at the end of the day every single time the accusations come up short.

As we think about the next three months and we think about the really important discussions that Albertans are going to want to have with respect to the future of this province, we as government have every confidence that we can have conversations with our constituents and be proud of what we've committed to that's been positive, that's been constructive, that's been forward thinking, and that's been honest. That's going to be a really important time for Albertans because what Albertans want and what Albertans have said they expect is an honest conversation about the future of this province based on a government that is setting a direction and keeping its commitments.

I think that on this side of the House, Mr. Chair, we are all proud of the fact that through the throne speech, through the budget, through legislation that was passed last fall, and through Bill 1 as well as the Education Act in this session we have honoured our commitments. We haven't done it in isolation. We've done it based on consultations with Albertans, reflecting on the values and the issues that Albertans care about.

I believe that when these suggestions are made that things are other than they actually are, Albertans will have a decision to make with respect to what the dialogue should be, who is acting appropriately, who is consistent, and who they can trust, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. They sure will have that opportunity very soon.

So the non answer seems to be that there's not going to be a health inquiry before the next election. She won't answer it, so I'll move on.

Again referring to goal 1 of your Executive Council plan: government policy and planning are co-ordinated and effective. That's goal 1 of the Executive Council. We have said over and over again in this House and outside this House that under no circumstances will we as a Wildrose caucus ever support in the next four years a tax increase.

Now, is it this Executive Council's policy that should your targets not reach the projections that you're projecting – let's say they fall short a tad. Let's say it's $85 a barrel or something like that, and you fall short a couple billion dollars or $3 billion or $4 billion or $5 billion. Jack Mintz just today, for example, said that your projections are a fantasy. That's Jack Mintz today in the National Post. If that is true, if Jack Mintz, the well-respected economist, is correct and your projections are a fantasy and you come in below, will you increase Albertans' taxes to pay the difference, or will you not?

Will your Executive Council or will you as leader of the Executive Council unapologetically and without any of this waffling that we keep hearing say that your government, if re-elected, will not raise taxes or create new taxes? Will they, or will they not? Will you take the pledge to not raise Albertans' taxes? [interjections] That seems to get them riled up on the other side, doesn't it? Will you commit to not raising taxes for the next four years regardless of what happens? Yes or no. Is that the policy of Executive Council, or are you too scared to answer it, like your caucus seems to be?

The Chair: Hon. Premier, if you wish.

Ms Redford: Absolutely, Mr. Chair. I'm looking at the projections, and what we see is oil at – what is it? – $106 a barrel. Then I look at oil price benchmarking and the work that has been done by the Department of Finance on an ongoing basis that actually has numbers higher from Credit Suisse, Deutsche Bank, CIBC, Toronto-Dominion Bank, and RBC.

I'll tell you that the work that we do in government, Mr. Chair, is not based on speculation and innuendo. This hon. member knows better than that. This hon. member needs to understand that building a budget is a little more serious than theorizing about what he thinks may or may not be appropriate in the next two or three years.

Mr. Chair, we tabled a budget in this House that has reasonable economic forecasts, and quite frankly I think Albertans and, certainly, we as a government have an awful lot of confidence in turning to international financial institutions that have professionals and teams of people that are working on this on a daily basis, much more than the suggestion from this hon. member that he knows best. Frankly, I'm not going to rely on that hon. member's advice or projections when we're building a budget that's as important as the budget for the province of Alberta.

What we see in our projections is a significant surplus in the following years. In the two out-years there is no doubt that we are going to continue to be able to thrive and to succeed. Mr. Chair, the reason we're going to be able to do that is because Albertans understand that if we make the right decisions now, that are informed and smart and based on evidence, we will have put this province into a fiscal situation where discussions about raising taxes, which are not included anywhere in our fiscal plan, don't have to be part of the discussion.

Mr. Chair, we do know that the other thing that Albertans have said is that we need to be able to have a conversation about what our fiscal framework will be, and part of that must include how we define what revenues will be. I've said that simply because there is a reference in the throne speech to taxation should not mean to anyone that there's any anticipation of increasing taxes. As I've said, it's just as likely in that conversation that we could decide to eliminate small-business taxes. There is no doubt that if you want to have an intelligent conversation that's not ideological about the future of this province, you have to bring everything into the mix.

Today we hear of one expert who has commented with respect to budget projections. You know, I'll tell you, Mr. Chair, that that same expert three months ago was actually advocating for tax increases himself. So exactly which of that expert's comments does the hon. member want to rely on? Does he want to have an intelligent conversation where we think about integrated public policy planning, or does he want to do what he's doing now, which is simply pull the quotes, speculate, fearmonger, and not act responsibly with respect to the future fiscal forecast for this province?

The Chair: Hon. member, you have 21 seconds.

Mr. Anderson: Twenty-one seconds.

Well, I certainly hope that the projections are right, and I certainly hope that we have huge surpluses for a long time. If we have surpluses, that's fantastic. It's amazing to me that this Premier still will not commit to not raising taxes. That says it all.

The Chair: On my list, the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It's been kind of a little bit of an interesting afternoon so far. We've heard a lot of negative stuff going on in here today. That seems to amaze me because I honestly believe – and I guess everybody has been saying their opinions today, so I'll say mine – that we actually live in the very best province to work, to raise our families, to play. What more can we ask for? Really, when you read 90 per cent of the newspapers around, we are the envy of the world because of the good governing this province has had for the last 40 years. Today we have a Premier that's working very, very hard to do all the things that I just said. She wants to make health care the best, and our whole government wants to work on that. She wants to make education the best, and our whole government is working on that. Yet the other side just keeps talking negatively about those things.

4:50

Mr. Anderson: Relevance.

Mr. Ouellette: It was my turn, Mr. Chair.

I have to say that promoting our province as an energy leader, as an important global trading partner, and as a must-see tourist destination are all key initiatives of this government. I know that Executive Council's mission is to ensure effective strategic planning and policy co-ordination across government and to increase awareness of Alberta as an innovative global leader. On that note, Alberta's oil sands continue to attract international attention, and much of it is initiated by groups that are focusing on the negative. So I'd like to ask the Premier: what has the government been doing to increase understanding and awareness about the oil sands?

Ms Redford: Well, thank you for that question, hon. member. You know, the oil sands will be critical to our future. It's interesting today to see that so much of the discussion in terms of our long-term projections does rely on our nonrenewable resource revenue. What we know is that our customers are in the United States, they're in Asia, and that while we're not exporting an awful lot of resources to Europe, the public profile with respect to our resources is important in Europe. So the work that we need to do as a government, as ministers, for me as Premier, for all of us as MLAs is to work with our international offices and communicate effectively with respect to the real story around our environmental record and the fact that we as Albertans are true environmental stewards.

We need to talk not only about what our successes have been and the fact that we're one of the only jurisdictions in North America that has a tax on carbon, a price on carbon, that we're investing in a technology fund that's allowing for new technological innovation that will reduce greenhouse gas emissions with respect to the oil sands, that we've invested in carbon capture and storage, and that we're ensuring that we're doing upgrading with innovative technologies that also have an environmental impact, but we've done some very good work just in the past month with our Minister of Environment and Water and an announcement that I made jointly with Minister Oliver last week around joint monitoring and continuing to invest in research and innovation around tailings ponds and, again, around new technologies for extraction of the resources.

What we know from all of this is that when we tell that story through our emissaries around the world, through our international offices, through the work that's being done in Washington with our representative, Dave Bronconnier, and also with our representative in London, Jeff Sundquist, we're getting effective resonance. The hon. member is absolutely right. The reason we need to be able to talk about these issues and to really robustly communicate them is because we do get such criticism from environmental groups.

You know, when I was in Washington, there was a reporter that asked me a question. It was right after the President had decided to delay the Keystone pipeline the first time. This reporter said: we were talking to this environmental group, and this environmental group said that they were really pleased with the Keystone decision because they knew that we in North America could now be off oil in two years. Well, it's a ridiculous proposition. As he was saying that to me, I looked out the window, and there was a person walking along the street. I thought, "That person doesn't honestly believe that the North American economy is going to be off oil in two years," nor, Mr. Chair, would I suspect that they want to be off oil in two years.

So when we're having a conversation with respect to what our environmental record has been and how we need to communicate that, a really important part is to be able to say, "Let's know who our critics are, and let's ensure that everyone understands what their political motivation is," because that's an absurd proposition. If we have environmental groups that have that as their starting base, I don't think that most people in Canada and in the United States would presume that it's possible to have a sensible discussion with those people, Mr. Chair.

When I think about the number of applications, the number of interventions that are being made at the National Energy Board with respect to Gateway, it's important for us to talk about what the motivation is for many of these interventions. Now, there are certainly people intervening that are passionately committed to environmental sustainability, just as we are as Albertans, and we need to be able to talk about what we want for better environmental outcomes.

However, we know as a province and we know as a government that when we talk about these issues, we are completely transparent with respect to what our objectives are, that we want to ensure that we're balancing environmental sustainability and that we're encouraging economic development. Other interests aren't always held to the same scrutiny. So an important part of what we need to do through Executive Council is ensure that we're having real conversations with decision-makers and with average citizens in North America about what motivations are in place around environmental activists.

We have some fantastic organizations that care an awful lot about environmental sustainability, and very often we can find areas of mutual interest to agree on. We can work with stakeholders and industry who are working with organizations like the Pembina Institute on what sustainable energy can look like in the future. That's a really important conversation for us to have because it's not only about our existing resources; it's also about talking about what an energy economy looks like in Alberta that allows us all to feel proud of what we have.

We do need to ensure that we're greening the transmission grid. We need to make sure that renewables and sustainables are part of what we're doing with respect to an energy economy, and those are investments that Albertans are prepared to consider. Our job as government has to be to introduce the policy choices that allow Albertans to make those decisions, and part of that also impacts what we're able to do with respect to greenhouse gases.

As we move ahead, we know that we can have tremendous success in talking about our record, communicating that we'll continue to do better, developing new technologies, and talking about who we are as Albertans and why we're proud to be Albertans. At the end of the day, Mr. Chair, I believe that that is going to allow the oil sands to continue to be an important resource for our province.

Thank you.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Chair, I think that the Premier gave just some excellent answers. I'd like to add one more thing. The other side had been mentioning today also about how she enjoyed her plane rides or where she went. I would like to add that, you know, most Albertans I've talked to want to see the Premier at venues in other countries to open marketplaces – and I believe she would be the best cheerleader Alberta has – whether it be to represent our oil sands industry or our agricultural industry.

With that, she's done such a great job. I would like to move that the committee rise and report, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: We've just terminated two hours of the committee, and we have a motion to rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

5:00

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration resolutions for the Department of Executive Council relating to the 2012-13 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2013, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 3

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2012

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move Bill 3, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2012, for third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on third reading of the bill.

Mr. Hehr: Certainly. I became very aware in the course of time that appropriations seem to happen on a regular basis and are needed by the government to do ongoing business and to continue with the day-to-day existence of providing what would likely be in most cases responsible government. I believe that it was the hon. Minister of Human Services, when he was talking about appropriations and the amounts that were needed and the like, saying that: well, we needed more money because of this reason and the number of people who had applied to a certain program, and denying those individuals the ability to get access to the help they need would have been unfair. I think that is an appropriate use of government appropriations and of a bill in that matter.

I see my hon. colleague. I'm glad he's not leaving at this point in time.

Appropriations are essentially a way that the government continues to go about running its business. Like I say, I think sometimes, at least from our side, some of the numbers reflected in appropriations could have been better planned for at the beginning of the budgetary year. In our view, there appear to be some instances when the government could have foreseen these circumstances arising and a need to go back to the table and to then again renegotiate their position or come forward and ask for more money from the hon. House. In those instances it becomes concerning to us that these mechanisms weren't planned for.

I think that if we look at that and if we can dovetail sort of to this year's budgeting process and whether there is going to be a need for appropriations, we can look then, if these budget numbers don't hold, which many pundits out there are saying will not hold – I, for one, hope they will. It means Alberta's doing well and that we're headed in the right direction, and we can go forward from there. But if they don't and we continue to have people who require government services, government assistance, provision of public health care, the provision of police services under the Solicitor General's faithful watch, then we'll need to continue to do those services and go on from there.

I see more than ever the need to appropriately budget. That has to be done and, to use a term that I've increasingly become confused at, to be fiscally conservative in doing so. I will be frank. I'm not sure what that word essentially means anymore. It's not just applied to this House but anywhere, frankly. When someone says, "I'm a fiscal conservative," I generally ask them, "Well, what the heck does that mean?" Does it mean that we only use the money that we have? I guess that could be one definition. Another definition might be: do we only use the money that's predictable and sustainable? Well, that might be another definition.

Another definition, one that I've sort of come to adopt, would be: does fiscally conservative mean that we are paying for what we use right now? By right now, what we as a society use right now. Are we paying what we owe for health care as a society? Are we paying what we owe for education as a society? Are we paying what we owe for environmental protection as a society? Because we, in the main, the people living, should be the ones paying for those services, not the future generations, not the people who are coming long after us.

So if you're really looking at a fiscal conservative, it can be, in my view, two ways. One, if you were to adopt my reasoning that we should pay for what we use, you would simply run those services that the dollars we bring in can afford and not necessarily augment it totally with fossil fuel allocations. I consider the 22 to 23 per cent of fossil fuel resources, or nonrenewable resources, that currently come into the coffers as being part of that equation that shouldn't be spent as a matter of course. It shouldn't be spent to pay today's bills because, in my view, that's unsustainable in the long term. You are actually letting people off the hook for paying for what they use, and I don't think that would be a conservative principle to adopt, that we should spend every last dime of fossil fuel resources that come into the coffers.

I guess that's where I was somewhat glad when I heard the throne speech. We were going to look at all revenue streams that come down the pike to get a handle on, what I believe, paying on what we use, a theory that I think is far more conservative than simply reducing taxes to the lowest level possible and then spending all this nonrenewable resource revenue, which after it's gone, it's gone.

It would be like a farmer who has 10 children, five girls and five boys. He loves them very much, and they grow up, and they have families. But he really doesn't like to ask them to contribute;

he likes being the father that they all know and like. You know, dad handles everything. But this guy can't pay for it all, so he sells off a piece of the family farm every year to pay today's bills so he doesn't have to ask his children to pay for some of the services they use. At the end of the day, you know, 25, 30 years later, that large family farm is now nothing – okay? – because he didn't ask people to pay as they go, to contribute to what they were using on the farm. That to me is not conservative. It would have been much more conservative to ask these children to pay for some of the things that were utilized on the farm. Then the farmer wouldn't have had to sell off piece by piece the family farm. That to me is a lot more conservative.

5:10

I use that parable – I don't know if parable is correct but Aesop's fable or something to that effect – to say that what we've done in the last 25 years is essentially said that we are going to spend every last dime of the fossil fuel resources that come into the public purse. In my view the analogy is the same as the farmer selling off pieces of the family farm one at a time to pay today's bills. Some day the farm runs out. Some day the oil sands run out. To me that wouldn't be a very conservative principle to go by.

[Mr. Zwozdesky in the chair]

Those are my thoughts on appropriations. I wasn't sure what I was going to talk about, but I'm glad I got a chance to speak on appropriations in third reading. I know that maybe someone else would like to speak on appropriations and go from there; otherwise, we're going to revert to business and go from there.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any other speakers to the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2012, Bill 3? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've spoken a couple of times on different aspects of Bill 3. It is a frustrating process watching how we burn through money here in this Legislature. I mean, there's always an excuse for everything. Some of these things, you know, obviously, we need to spend money on, but I do find it amazing how this government thinks that they're fiscally responsible. I find it amazing.

I'll just give you some brief facts. This is from today, actually. It's actually from the fiscal reference tables from the Department of Finance for Canada in 2011. This is what was said. They compare two of the biggest spending provinces in the country. The biggest spending province is Alberta; second-biggest is Ontario. They do the comparison.

Did you know, Mr. Speaker, that program spending per capita, program spending per person, is $10,055 in Alberta and $8,300 in Ontario? Almost 20 per cent more here in Alberta than in Liberal tax-and-spend Ontario. Total revenues per capita in Alberta, $9,235 per person; in Ontario, $7,975 per person. Of course, Ontario is the second-biggest spender. This is Dalton McGuinty we're talking about. Growth in total spending in the last five years – five years' total spending increase – in Alberta, a 41.5 per cent spending increase. Three of those years were tough years or at least two of them anyway were kind of either in a recession or, you know, in a quasi-recession. Forty-one per cent. Now, that's tightening the old belt, eh? Excellent. In Ontario it was 34 per cent by contrast. Still awful.

The deficit per capita in Alberta is $900 per person. That's the deficit for 2010-11. In Ontario it's about $1,000 so just a very small difference there. Then the debt per capita – and I remember that the Premier earlier today was talking about how Alberta doesn't have any debt. Of course, that's incorrect. We have billions of dollars in unfunded liabilities, direct borrowing for capital projects, and all sorts of debt that's on the balance sheets. Anybody can take a look at it at any time. Clearly, Alberta does have debt, more than it had five years ago as well, when it was basically paid off and we didn't have half of the liabilities that we do now.

In Alberta we have $4,869 per man, woman, and child in debt, not deficit but debt. That's according to Statistics Canada. I guess Statistics Canada may be lying, but I hope not. [interjection] Well, that's why I'm quoting Statistics Canada, since you feel that way, hon. member.

Then in Ontario it's $16,000 in debt per capita. They do have four times more debt per person than we do here, well, actually closer to three times.

This government has absolutely not a leg to stand on when it says that it is fiscally responsible, when it starts talking about the need to balance and blah, blah, blah. All that stuff: it's baloney. Until they get their fiscal house in order and until they get their priorities straightened out and the ability to distinguish between needs versus wants and priorities versus those things that can wait, they are putting the financial future of our children and grandchildren in jeopardy. They're certainly not living up to our potential. Hopefully, we could do a little bit better than terrible. Maybe we could try to excel in how we manage our finances. You cannot possibly give one statistic that shows that we are managing our finances given the riches that we have in this province.

As Jack Mintz said today in his report about Alberta,

Alberta, Ontario are both mismanaged and profligate.

One province is bigger in population and slimmer in wealth. The other is smaller and fatter, referring to Alberta.

Ontario and Alberta may seem very different, but they do share one attribute: Their governments spend well beyond their capacity.

This month, we have seen the release of the Drummond report for Ontario and the Alberta budget. Both governments could use a crash diet.

The Drummond report is all about reality. Ontario must curtail spending.

It talks about the need for Ontario to quit spending like drunken sailors.

Then he goes on:

The Alberta budget is based on fantasy.

This is Jack Mintz.

Using optimistic forecasts for oil prices averaged well in excess of US$100 per barrel, the government expects a return to surplus by 2013-14, even though its "rainy day" fund to avoid cash deficits is plummeting a further $3.7 billion just this year.

How could each of these provincial governments so mismanage their finances over the years? In Alberta, riches have spoiled fiscal discipline. Since 2005, spending has grown massively by 41.5% despite the major global recession of 2008-09. True, Alberta's inflation and population growth puts pressure on spending, but this is not an excuse. Even after adjusting for inflation and population growth, Alberta's real per-capita spending has grown by 11%, in excess of that inflation plus population growth. That is more than the private-sector productivity growth.

Alberta's profligacy comes of public-sector wage costs escalating far above the national average. In 2000, the differences in wages per employee were little different between Alberta and the rest of Canada.

This is interesting. When Ralph was at his best, I would say, roughly in the area of 2000, he had really turned this province around. The engine of the economy was roaring. We were getting very close to paying off our debt, which would be done a few years subsequent to that. In 2000, at that time, public-sector wages in Alberta were about the same, a little higher but about the same, as in the rest of Canada.

By 2010, Alberta government employees were being paid vastly more, roughly $30,000 per employee more than the rest of Canada. Think about that. This is why we're in this situation to pass the supplementary supply act, Mr. Speaker.

5:20

He goes on to say:

Not only does the province lack a good fiscal plan, it also lacks a savings plan. The province continues to run down its financial assets, whose [net] worth is expected to be $15 billion by the end [of 2012].

It was over $20 billion not such a short time ago.

Alberta is endowed with vast oil and gas resources that have been generally sold off to support current public consumption. Its total per-capita revenues are over $9,000, but more than a quarter of that comes from non-renewable resource revenues. By selling off its assets in the ground while depleting its net financial and capital assets, the province is reducing its wealth . . .

Get this number, Mr. Speaker. Wait for it. You're going to love this number.

. . . by about $13 billion a year.

If they had just kept their spending to inflation plus population growth, invested the rest in the heritage fund, the savings fund, et cetera, we would be taking in this year, just off interest and all these other things, $13 billion a year more. Now, that would solve our deficit issue right now, wouldn't it, without having to cut any services.

Without better fiscal planning, the Alberta government has aggravated economic cycles in the past decade by jumping up spending in the good times and pulling back in bad times. This not only hurts Albertans but also other Canadians, since Alberta is a major player in investment markets.

Now, it then goes on to talk about Ontario's sad story, and it is a sad story, a very sad story, and it has a lesson in it for us. Twenty years ago Ontario was the centre – well, in Toronto they felt they were the centre of the universe, but surely they were the economic engine of the country, of all of Canada. Twenty years ago they had a very healthy automotive industry. Think about the '90s and how much money was coming in just from the automotive industry, with GM and Ford and all of those plants over there in Ontario just absolutely humming. It was the economic engine.

Now here we are, and according to this article and according to other published reports Ontario is literally on the brink of financial collapse. Their credit rating is going to be significantly downgraded if they do not get their finances in order. So when we're thinking about passing these bills, Mr. Speaker, we need to think about the fact that right now Alberta is on the path to becoming Ontario. That's what we're on the path to. Now, maybe this new Premier has a plan – I wish she would share it before the election – to get us back on the path to being exceptional again. Maybe she's got that plan somewhere up there, and she just wants to keep it a secret until whenever, after the election, and I hope that's the case.

But if she continues down the road that this government has gone down over the last five years in particular but also over the last couple of years of the Klein years, unfortunately, we are going to be in a very bad place. We will not be the economic engine of Canada anymore. We've got to get this province of ours and our budget straightened out.

It's not about being crass. The Premier always says: it's not just about the bottom line. Well, that's true. It's not just about the bottom line, but it is also about the bottom line. You cannot be a fiscally conservative, responsible government if you refuse to look at the bottom line and use social programs and social spending as an excuse to ignore the bottom line. One day guess what happens? We run out of money. Oil is at $60 a barrel all of a sudden because of new technologies and so forth, and then what do we do? How do we balance our budget then?

If we don't get ourselves straightened out, Mr. Speaker, we are going to have a lot of 'splainin' to do to our grandchildren and to our children, and that's not a conversation that I think any of us in this Chamber want to have and want to have to defend.

There's still time. We probably have another boom here coming up in the next 10 years. Oil probably won't go down too, too much. It won't go into the $30 range for at least another few years, anyway. But we know how volatile the price of oil is, so let's plan now. Let's stop throwing money around like it's paper, and let's control our spending, get our balanced budget, start putting away some of our resource revenues into our savings plan so that we can turn what is a sea of nonrenewable resources into a mountain of permanent investment capital, replenishing and growing with interest each and every year and every single year enriching the opportunities of Albertans for generations to come, Mr. Speaker.

That is what I hope this Premier will eventually come up with before the election, and if she doesn't, I know of a very solid party that would be willing to pick up the mantle and do it for her if she doesn't feel the need to do it. We are prepared to do so, and we'll be taking that message to Albertans over the next several months.

With that, I've spoken to Bill 3. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, section 29(2)(a) is available should anybody wish to question the hon. member who just spoke or make comment on the speech. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yeah. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere about a few areas that you didn't maybe go into detail on. You know, each year as we go back to supplementary, I find it very frustrating that we can't ever stay within the constraint of a budget year after year. We have 10 ministries that have come forward here. Do you have any comment on each of the individual ministries and where we're spending this money and why we need to go to supplementary supply and why they couldn't stay within the budget in those areas? I'm just wanting your knowledge on whether you have anything specific there as to why we're running these deficits.

Thank you.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Hancock: You mean given that you just gave a 15-minute speech and didn't touch on anything in the bill? Is that what you mean?

Mr. Anderson: That's just unfair. I think that this touched on a lot in the bill. Third reading is about looking forward and how we can avoid these types of bills in the future, the need for these bills, Minister.

You know, there's always an excuse for all of these things, isn't there? One of the big ones is wage increases for the judges under the Ministry of Justice. Now, we all want good judges, and we all want to make sure that they're fairly paid. But I add, again, that we don't seem to understand that when the average person looks at the increase that the judges are getting, just like they did when the politicians gave themselves a 30 per cent pay raise, when the average person sees the elites getting that kind of a pay raise, it sets a tone. I hope we can all agree that it sets a tone.

It's just like anything else. The CEO of any organization sets the tone for the organization. You look at the incredible success of Apple, and you think: why were they so successful? One of the reasons – there are many reasons – is because Steve Jobs set a tone as the CEO. It was a tone of innovation. It was a tone of: "There are no walls here. No one is going to be in a box. We're going to think outside the box. All ideas and creative solutions are going to be embraced. We're going to look at those new things, and we're going to spend money on those new things, being innovative and so forth." And because of that, he set the tone for his company. Then, of course, there are other companies that don't set such a good tone, and they fail.

It should be the same in the province. The people that lead us – our politicians, our Premier, the front bench, all of the MLAs in the Assembly, the lawyers, the judges, the doctors, everybody – should make sure that when we give ourselves these salary raises or when our salaries are adjusted, we're setting a responsible tone. I mean, it's just like the opposition leader says. It is pretty hard to look a worker in the eye who has been cleaning hospital floors, with all the awful things that get on hospital floors, and say: "You know what? We can't afford a 3 per cent increase or an inflationary increase this year. Sorry. We've got to tighten our belts."

5:30

It's hard to ask them to make that concession, so to speak, or to agree to that when the first order of business after the last election for the cabinet that was then in existence, including this Premier, who was in that cabinet, was to give themselves a 30 per cent raise. It's pretty hard to then go to the worker who's cleaning the vomit off the floor and say: "You know what? We've got to cut back. We've got to tighten our belts." There's no fiscal leadership. There's a disconnect, and people see it. So when the government goes in and negotiates with these unions for a fair deal, the union leaders take a look and say: "Well, good grief. You gave yourselves a 30 per cent raise three years ago. What do you mean you only want to give us zero per cent this year and 1 per cent next year or 2 per cent next year? What are you talking about?" And you know what? They have every right to say that.

Now, if we had been the example and had made it our first business when I was over on that side and the PC government would have made it their business to say, "You know what; we're only going to increase our salaries by the rate of inflation; we're not even going to do average weekly wage index, just inflation," and then you go to the bargaining table with the teachers and you go to the bargaining table with the workers, it's a much easier process.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on Bill 3.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to stand and, I guess, share a few of my thoughts on Bill 3 and the disappointment Albertans relate to me when I'm out talking to them in various places and visiting them in their homes that this government has failed for the last five years to be able to balance its budget despite record revenue. I was just looking this afternoon at the revenue from our resource industry – oil, gas, bitumen, land sales – and over the last seven years I don't believe it has dropped below $8.9 billion. It has been as high as $14 billion, down to $8.6 billion. It has been a landslide of revenue for this government, yet every year this government fails to be able to meet its budgetary expenses.

I can see in a few areas, perhaps in Human Services, that we've had some tragedies and need to address them, perhaps in Municipal Affairs, again, where we've had some real natural disasters. Those are areas that, you know, we can't always predict, but again in good budgeting you would set aside that $300 million for those different areas where we might need it.

To go through and look at some of them, I want to start off with the first one for the Legislative Assembly of $3.1 million. I sat on the committee when our Chief Electoral Officer came in to make his presentation requiring this extra amount of money. Mr. Speaker, this wouldn't even be in the appropriation if this government and the Premier would keep their word on having a set election date. The whole reason he came in with the cost and the expense, the Chief Electoral Officer, is because he has to be prepared because tomorrow or Monday this Premier could, if she decides to, call an election. It's his responsibility to have places ready to rent, people ready to go to work because this Premier broke her promise on setting a fixed election date.

So we have an extra $3.1 million here in supplementary supply because the Chief Electoral Officer needs to be ready in case this Premier all of a sudden wakes up from a nightmare and thinks, "I've got to go to the polls now," and off we go. Very disappointing that this Premier wouldn't keep her word, give a date. The first one here in the appropriation bill wouldn't be in here if we knew it was the 15th of June, the 30th of April, whatever it is. But here we are having to spend extra money, and the frustration of people trying to be prepared and ready. Why? Because this government fails to plan. This government fails to be transparent. This government fails to be open with the people of Alberta. This government and this Premier fail to keep a promise. Very disappointing.

Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations needs an extra, if we flip through and go to that in the book – excuse me. I've got the wrong page flagged here. But we can go through line item after line item and ask why the government has failed to be able to properly allocate its funds, or to be even more impressive, Mr. Speaker, actually come in under budget. Why is this such an impossibility for this government? Here it is. Intergovernmental relations. The supplementary amount of $2 million is requested together with $500,000 made available from lower than budgeted expenses in other programs, to provide an increase of $2.5 million to the First Nations development fund.

I'm not saying that the development fund isn't great and that we don't need to have it, but the question is: why can't we budget for these things a year in advance? Why is it that with 30 days left, this government comes in and says: "We need this money. We need $118 million for the First Nations development fund"? Well, what is it that it's actually presenting? We don't know. It would be very nice if these things actually came with line items to say what the contracts are for and what they're trying to achieve. It was another one of the promises. In her mandate letter the Premier said that they're going to be open and transparent. There's no transparency here, Mr. Speaker. There's no openness. It's line item budgets, and who knows what it's for?

We go to the next one. A supplementary amount of $28 million is requested to provide funding for salary increases and pension plan enhancement for the Alberta Provincial Court judges and the Court of Queen's Bench masters in chambers. Again, a line item, not enough information there to be able to determine whether this government failed to budget properly or whether they were just unaware.

As my colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere has pointed out so many times, the whole budgeting process, in my opinion and for many people across this province, comes from the first act that this government did, the Premier included, to go into Members' Services and give themselves a nice big hefty wage and then to turn around to the rest of Albertans and say, "Look at what a wonderful job we're doing; we are wonderful; pay us top dollar," and not be able to see the domino effect of what that leadership actually causes. Leadership in that they lead, they take significant raises, and then those behind want to follow and ask for significant raises. They've lost all credibility to be able to deal with any of our numerous public servants because of what they gave themselves. In most Albertans' eyes they weren't doing a very good job, Mr. Speaker. They're actually appalled at the jobs they were doing in many cases and very upset with the way they pushed forward and took those.

Municipal Affairs: $17 million, I believe, is requested together with $523,000 made available from lower than budgeted expenses in other programs, to provide $18 million for the government-wide response to the wildfire in the town of Slave Lake and surrounding communities. Here, Mr. Speaker, is a case of an unforeseen tragedy needing some money. We understand that, but again my question is: why don't we have that fund in place so that we don't have to go through supplementary supply?

It's disappointing as we go through case by case. Seniors supplementary estimate: $10 million. The amount of $10 million is requested together with another million made available from lower than budgeted expenses in the affordable supportive living initiative program, to provide $6 million for the costs related to higher caseload growth for financial assistance to assured income for the severely handicapped. There have been many, many speakers here that have talked about the need for putting them first. It's kind of interesting, like I say, that they got this huge wage increase themselves, yet we've waited four years before we've finally seen those on AISH and PDD receive that increase. Four years they had to wait before they got a significant increase, when this government, again, put themselves first and said they needed it. Why can't they plan and budget for these things?

Another one of the concerns that I have because of the total amount that they're asking for – it's interesting that this Premier was propelled to the front, I believe, largely because of a $107 million promise that she made with just two weeks left in the leadership campaign. She went to Albertans and said, "We'll restore the $107 million," which the Wildrose spoke against taking from the teachers because they'd signed contracts. I mean, the current Finance minister is the one who gave them such a lucrative contract five years ago, and then they didn't want to keep it. [interjection] I'm getting the House leader over there, Mr. Speaker, chattering, saying that that isn't so. It absolutely is so.

She also promised that they would take that $107 million from in-year savings. If we had $107 million of in-year savings, why are we even coming to supplementary supply?

It's interesting, too, to even go back to her Bill 1, Results-based Budgeting Act. This is the result of poor budgeting. This is the result of the sky is the limit. We have record revenue, yet we have a bigger problem; we have record spending. They're unable to control it. They refuse to control it. It's kind of interesting, you know. Even those over there that believe in Keynesian economics of spending when times are tough miss the other half of the time. We want the government to be able to keep spending when times are tough, but they spend even more when times are good. The only limit that they actually had, Mr. Speaker – and I often kind of chuckle at this. It's like giving a child a thousand dollars and saying, "You have a half-hour to spend it, but you have to spend it at a dollar store." Well, it's not too far into the spending when the child realizes that, "Well, there are so many other things that I want." They'd be happy to save and go over there, but: "No. These are the parameters that you're in. You've got a thousand dollars. Spend it in the next half-hour at a dollar store."

That's what this government does. It has revenue coming in, and it says: "We've got to spend it. It's burning a hole in our pocket. We can't put it into savings if we can spend it." We look at some of those record revenue years. Thank heaven there wasn't the capacity out there for them to spend any more and they were actually forced to walk out of that dollar store and put some into our sustainability fund. Gratefully, that is sustaining us at this point so that we don't have an actual debt. We just have cash deficits accumulating now to, I think, $15.8 billion over the last five years.

Mr. Speaker, as we look through this, it's very disappointing that this government comes year after year with its supplementary supply. Other than one or two ministries where there's been some action that's happened that was, you know, unexpected, that needed some extra funds, we have to come to this. For a Premier who says that she's going to be fiscally responsible, she certainly has not demonstrated in any areas some proper results-based budgeting. It's always next year. You know, the rainbow is just over the next hill. They don't seem to realize that that rainbow is a lot farther away than that. In their budget and in their revenue that they're projecting, it's just next year now. After five years this is the fifth "Next year the revenue is going to be here, and we're going to be back in the boom years again, so why do we need to worry about balancing the budget?"

It's interesting that we continue to repeat this day after day, year after year not being able to control our spending. It's a poor example. It's a poor example to Albertans. It's a poor example to all of our public servants that work hard to create a better Alberta. The lead is poor. The number one message that this government and this Premier have sent out to all of the working people in Alberta is that raises are in order. "We deserve them; we'll restrain yours to a very limited amount." They're unable to look at the domino effect that a 2 or 3 per cent raise has when it comes to the teachers, the nurses, the doctors, the policemen. [interjections] No raise? The Government House Leader says that he's had no raise in five years. He doesn't remember his 30 per cent raise, or maybe he was just so heavy at the trough, he couldn't consume any more if he wanted to.

It's quite interesting, Mr. Speaker, that Bill 3, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2012...

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but it's a quarter to 6, and Standing Order 64(5) requires the chair to call the question on any appropriation bill standing on the Order Paper for third reading, so I'll do my duty.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 2 Education Act

[Debate adjourned February 16: Mr. Boutilier speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on Bill 2, Education Act.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand and actually talk about Bill 2, the Education Act. I think it's something that has been long in coming. I know that when I was on that side of the House, we talked about the Education Act. I think what's happening right now is that as this bill was tabled in the Legislature, I think a week ago, this is where we're starting to get questions from people, Albertans and constituents, in regard to some of the things that they would like to see in the Education Act and what they think is important. Hopefully, during the debate we'll be able to ask the minister on that.

I know the Government House Leader was very passionate about the Education Act. I know that when I was with the government and I brought forward my bullying bill, which was defeated in the Legislature, the minister at the time, from Edmonton-Whitemud I think it was – I want to make sure I have the right minister – assured me that the bullying bill, as my private member's bill, would be incorporated within the Education Act.

It's nice to see that. I think he realized, as well as many of the people in the school system when we talk about bullying, the seriousness of the bullying. As the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and as someone who did bring the private member's bill forward in regard to bullying in school, some of that has been incorporated in the act, and that's nice to see. As we go through, I'm going to go back to my private member's bill, and I'm going to look at the section in the act in regard to bullying and find out exactly what has been incorporated and what hasn't been incorporated.

What I always find fascinating when I read a bill – Mr. Speaker, this is a huge bill; it's 186 pages. I'm not the critic – the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere is the critic on Education – so I haven't had time myself as a member of the Wildrose to go through this bill line by line to find out some of the things that... [interjection] I have the Government House Leader, once again, yelling across the floor at me, and I thought I was very kind to him when I was bringing him up with regard to his passion when he was the Education minister. I guess I find it somewhat questionable or frustrating why he'd be yelling at me because I actually was very nice and complimentary to him in regard to when he was the Education minister and fulfilling what I consider to be a pretty big promise in regard to incorporating my private member's bill on bullying into the Education Act.

When we're looking at, as I said, a 186-page piece of legislation, you always start with the preamble. I always find fascination with the preamble. The vision and principles and values of the education system are so much common sense, yet we feel the need to put this in a piece of legislation.

We have a government that has had the Education Act forever. You would think that all of the things that are in the preamble, when you talk about "whereas education inspires students to discover and pursue their aspirations and interests and cultivates a love of learning and the desire to be lifelong learners" – well, Mr. Speaker, my boys are way past the school age. They were in the public school system. That was an aspiration, quite frankly, when they were in the school system. I'm not going to age myself. I can bet that if we go back in history to when I was in school – and that's a long time ago – that was the aspiration of the teachers at that particular time that were teaching us. I remember, quite frankly, some very, very passionate teachers that were inspiring me when I was in school and deciding what I wanted to do when I grew up. I have to say just on that that I don't remember anyone, when I was in school, quite frankly, inspiring me to choose the role of a politician. But, you know, I guess that was then, and this is now.

We talk about: "The role of education is to develop engaged thinkers who think critically and creatively, and ethical citizens who demonstrate respect, teamwork and democratic ideals, and who work with an entrepreneurial spirit to face challenges." And it goes on and on. All of this is what we should have been doing and what we have been doing, so I wonder, when you see all of these whereas incorporated in regard to a piece of legislation, what exactly the government was doing previously or what they thought they were doing in the past.

I want to talk about some of the interpretations in the act. They talk about the attendance board and the attendance officer. I know that one of the priorities for us is how to keep children in school and, I guess, as it says in section 8(1), enforcing school attendance. We've had that. I know that we've talked about that in the past when we've talked about: how do we engage our children and keep them in the school system?

Now we've got the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security doing his famous hand signals in the Legislature and his famous grin. We wonder about the Solicitor General, who should be setting an example in his particular position, making faces at the opposition and hand gestures. It goes back to yesterday, when he thought he was so smart in tabling a letter in the Legislature in regard to a very small quote about what our leader said in regard to the provincial gun registry. That was the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security misleading Albertans.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Denis: A point of order, Mr. Speaker, arising out of 23(h), (i), and (j) but also Beauchesne's 489. This member has used the word "misleading," which is unparliamentary language. I would ask that she apologize to this Chamber, being the honourable woman that she is.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on the point of order, then.

Mr. Anderson: On the point of order. In response, I think the hon. member was just mentioning that, obviously, there was some misleading language in that tabling. Of course, the leader of the Wildrose had said that she wanted to make sure that criminals who had committed gun crimes were registered, and he said that that meant she was promoting the gun registry. I thought it was weird that the Solicitor General doesn't want to register criminals who have used guns in crimes. I just think that's weird.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, I think our Speaker earlier addressed us about the words that are used in the House. I think we'll just focus on the words being used here, not the content of it. Please refrain from those words. You were advised by the Speaker about using the word "misleading" and so on. It has been explained before.

Hon. member, listen. It has been explained before, so now please stay on Bill 2, the Education Act. Don't go venturing further out. Then we'll have no points of order, and everything should be great. Go ahead.

Debate Continued

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be pleased to stay on Bill 2, actually, once we get the hand gestures and the facial expressions – oh, there he goes again, the Solicitor General of the province. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has the floor. Please continue on Bill 2.

Mrs. Forsyth: I'm sure his constituents and the constituents in Calgary-Egmont and, quite frankly, Albertans would love to know that we have a minister of the Crown providing hand gestures and his goofy smile when he doesn't like what's being said.

Anyhow, having said that, I would like to continue on – and there he goes again.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, address the chair.

Mrs. Forsyth: You know, it's too bad that we did not have a camera in regard to what's happening in this Legislature because, quite frankly, Albertans would be appalled.

On the bill, talking about part 1, the access to education and the right of access to education, I don't think anybody can argue with the fact that every person – and it talks about: six years old and younger than 21 who is a resident.

There are things that we like in this bill. We also like the idea of the authority of the schools, the charter schools, and the importance of public education in this province. We like the idea of the religious and patriotic instructions that are exercised.

A lot of the things that are incorporated in the bill are part of the policies that we support under the Wildrose. We think it's important that every student has the right to an education, and that's incorporated in the bill. The government in the bill talks about the parents having the right and the responsibility to make informed decisions respecting the education of their children. Now, that's an interesting comment because then we go into some of the controversy that we've had – the particular bill escapes me – on human rights and having the right that if there is an educational class being taught, as a parent I have the right to withdraw my child from that particular class. I think that truly is something that is up to the parent. I don't think there is anything wrong with the fact that if a parent decides that their particular child – let's say that they're taking a sex education class – isn't ready for that or they feel that they would rather teach the child themselves about sex education, that really is up to a parent's choice.

I have to tell you that when my kids were in school, I felt that it was my right as a parent, and I think today it's very similar to parents having the ability to have the right to choose. We hear a lot about the fact that – and we see some of the things that are going on across the province and, particularly, in B.C., I think, where they've indicated that it's mandatory that a child stays in the classroom. I think that – and I've repeated this – it really, truly is up to a parent to make those decisions.

I understand we're running out of time, and you're going to stand up, Mr. Speaker, so I'll sit down.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, it's 6 o'clock, so the chair shall now just inform all hon. members that the policy field committees will reconvene at 6:30 p.m. in committee rooms A and B for consideration of the main estimates of the Department of Culture and Community Services and the Department of Energy.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. As we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we renew our energies with thanks so that we may continue our work with the people in the constituencies we represent. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of junior high students from Rockyview Christian school who have travelled here today from Pincher Creek. It's a great privilege for me to have students here. It's not very often that I get visitors, so I really appreciate their participation. These bright young students are accompanied by their teacher, Miss Brittany Penner, and by parent helpers Myron Koehn, Cheryl Koehn, Dawn Nikkel, Ted Nikkel, Laurel Warkentin, Kathleen Warkentin, Galen Toews, and Gwen Toews. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them all to rise. Please give them the warm reception of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Sherwood Park it's my pleasure to rise before you in this Assembly and introduce to you and through you a group of 41 grade 6 students from Woodbridge Farms elementary school in Sherwood Park. These bright young students are accompanied by their teachers, Sheryl Dermott, Anita Sisson, and Chris Sudyk, and parent volunteer Judy Andrekson. I hope the students have enjoyed their visit here today and take away many fond memories of their experience. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that the students rise and that we give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier, please.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you Colin and Eden Wetter. Eden was born in Edmonton and is currently a grade 6 student at Glenora elementary school. Her class was lucky enough to spend a week at the Legislature earlier last month. We had a visit today, and she thoroughly enjoyed it. They had a wonderful tour of the building and saw all sorts of secret compartments and rooms. I'll tell you that her teacher, Sandy Myshak, is a great supporter of this program and has let Eden come today to question period but has asked that she report back on our conduct, behaviour, and the substance of the discussion.

Her father, Colin, was also born in Edmonton. He's a lawyer with Justice Canada. He comes from a long line of Albertans, primarily from central Alberta. In fact, his grandfather, Gus Wetter, has a high school named after him in Castor, Alberta. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask both of them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Peter Watson. As you know, Peter is the deputy minister of Alberta's Executive Council, and I'll be giving a member's statement on an award he received just this week, that we should all be proud of in government. I'd ask Peter to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you. I'm happy today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some of my family that are visiting today. I would ask them to stand as I call their names: first of all, my wife, Linda; my daughter Candice; her husband, Randy; their children Danny, age 6, and Kayla, age 3. It might be of interest for you to know, Mr. Speaker, that Randy's grandfather Alvin Bullock served in this Assembly in the 1960s. I would ask that my guests please receive the warm, enthusiastic response of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's really an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to all members a group of people representing rural electrification associations from across Alberta. Today we have with us Delores Cherwoniak from Smoky Lake, representing the Lakeland REA; Baynish Bassett from Claresholm, general manager of the southern Alberta REA; Evert Vandenberg from Fort Macleod, also from the southern Alberta REA; and Carl Beniuk from Lac La Biche, with the North Parkland Power REA. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the great things about being an elected official and in the opposition as a critic is that you get to keep meeting all different kinds of people. I'm really delighted today to be able to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three people who are here from the Edmonton and Area Land Trust. Now, if I could get you to rise. We have the executive director, Pam Wight; the board chair, Marg Reine; and one of the directors, Glen Thoman. I'm going to honour these individuals later with a member's statement, but I'd really like to thank you for your work on behalf of all Albertans and particularly Edmonton and area. I would ask my colleagues to join me in welcoming them to the Alberta Legislature.

Organ and Tissue Donation

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, most of us are not aware of organ and tissue donation unless we have been personally affected. For most Albertans awareness never goes further than signing the back of our Alberta health care cards. Few of us realize that in most cases, even if we were to die and wanted our organs to be donated, many things could preclude the chance to be a donor.

Organ donations require a well-thought-out plan. Harvested organs deteriorate after a 24-hour period, so time is of the essence. Medical personnel must co-ordinate between emergency units and organ donation programs, and the plan must involve having trained personnel in emergency rooms to be able to ask sensitive questions of family. Yes, family consent can override even though a person has signed his or her Alberta health care card.

When families know in advance the wishes of a loved one, 96 per cent give consent to proceed with organ donation. In contrast, only about 45 per cent of families that are unclear about their loved one's wishes consent to the donation of organs. If family members hesitate to give timely consent, the odds of a successful transplant taking place decrease dramatically. That is why it is so important that family members are aware of the wishes of loved ones who want to donate their organs upon death. This way, should a tragedy occur, the wishes of individuals are known, and family members will take comfort in knowing that they have carried out their loved one's final wishes.

To raise the profile of organ donations and to bring families together to discuss the wishes of family members, an Alberta organ donor registry should be developed, it should be implemented, and it should be promoted in such a way that the maximum number of usable organs will be available for transplantation.

So to this, I urge all members of the Assembly and all residents of this province to set aside time to talk about organ donation with their loved ones to ensure that their wishes are understood and that they are carried out. I would ask all colleagues of mine to consider becoming an organ donor.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Edmonton and Area Land Trust

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to do a shout-out to my guests joining us in the visitors' gallery from the Edmonton and Area Land Trust. This group is a land conservation trust for our region. They steward millions of dollars of donated land in and around Edmonton to conserve natural areas and habitat. Now, that doesn't mean that people are banned from using it, just that it's to be conserved.

So for those that are watching on TV or Internet streaming, consider getting involved in your local land trust. You can volunteer for general tasks or sit on a board or donate money. Now, that's the interesting part. Although these land trusts get land donated to them and there are definitely incentives and tax recognitions for donating the land, there is very little government support for the land conservation trusts' costs in receiving the land.

Each time land is offered, the trusts must hire professionals to survey, plan, and report on the feasibility of accepting that land grant. As well, there are costs to repair or build fences, repair structures that are there, provide garbage cans, et cetera. In all, each donation costs the land trust about $25,000 to accept. Now, Albertans are very supportive of land conservation trusts and very generous, but it still doesn't cover all of the costs. The Edmonton land trust has more offers of donated land than they can accommodate within their budget.

Interestingly, the funding streams from this government seem to lack the capacity to deal with land trusts. The community initiatives program routinely turns down applications from land trusts. They get bounced between Environment and SRD as Environment is air, water, soil, and cumulative effects, and SRD does white space but not green space. So we have a funding catch-22.

I hope my short honouring of the work of the land conservation trusts from across Alberta and particularly the Edmonton and Area Land Trust will help government, elected officials, and staff to be more accommodating of these organizations.

Thank you so much for joining us today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Peter Watson

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Chamber of Resources is recognized as a leading voice for Alberta's resource industries. It is a resource-based, cross-sectoral industry association that provides leadership for responsible natural resource development in this province.

Each year the Alberta Chamber of Resources selects a person of the year who is "a leader who exemplifies the best of Canadian industry, representing the qualities that make Alberta's resource development companies some of the most prosperous, entrepreneurial and forward-thinking organizations in the world." This year the chamber has selected our friend Mr. Peter Watson as the Alberta Chamber of Resources person of the year.

Peter is no stranger to many of us in this government as he has faithfully served in the public service for over 25 years. Peter began his career with the public service in 1983, where he worked as a water rights engineer for Alberta environment. Since then, he has played a critical role in advancing Alberta's energy and environmental interests through numerous positions, including assistant deputy minister of environmental assurance, deputy minister of Alberta environment, and Deputy Minister of Alberta Energy.

Peter played a strong leadership role, in fact, where I first met him, in developing the water for life strategy, Alberta's provincial energy strategy, and Alberta's carbon capture and storage initiatives. Through all his work he has had a profound impact in advancing our province's energy and environmental stewardship.

His outstanding talent and expertise were further recognized by our hon. Premier, who on October 11, 2011, named Peter Watson as Deputy Minister of Alberta's Executive Council.

Mr. Speaker, I stand today recognizing the accomplishments and contributions made by Peter Watson to Alberta, and I congratulate him on being awarded Alberta Chamber of Resources person of the year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Dr. Marvin Fritzler

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to celebrate the achievements of Dr. Marvin Fritzler, a senior health researcher at the University of Calgary and chair of the Alberta Research and Innovation Authority.

Dr. Fritzler, a native of Vulcan, Alberta, recently received the top achievements in health research award from the Canadian Institutes of Health Research and the Canadian Medical Association Journal. A panel of Canadian and international experts honoured Dr. Fritzler with this prestigious award based on the considerable impact of his work on Canadians and others worldwide.

Dr. Fritzler is a professor in the departments of medicine and biochemistry and molecular biology and a member of the McCaig Institute for Bone and Joint Health. He has worked tirelessly to identify and test for biomarkers for autoimmune diseases such as lupus, MS, and rheumatoid arthritis. Dr. Fritzler's discoveries are in wide use in clinical diagnostic and research labs around the world.

As chair of the Alberta Research and Innovation Authority Dr. Fritzler further contributes to the physical well-being of Albertans and the economic health of our province by providing strategic advice to this government on research opportunities, emerging technologies, and policies to enhance innovation.

Please join me in congratulating this extraordinary Albertan for his many accomplishments and for this well-deserved recognition.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Distracted Driving

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Lucky. Lucky is a good word most of the time. We're very lucky to live in this province. But when it comes to distracted driving, being lucky is not what it seems. Were you simply lucky that you didn't hit your neighbour's six-year-old daughter? You were talking on your cellphone and didn't notice her crossing the street until you were inches away from her pink jacket.

Were you just lucky that you didn't get hit by a gravel truck? You were texting and didn't look up until you were already through the red light and a truck's grill was at your window.

Were you lucky that you didn't hit your golden retriever? You were reading a report for your meeting and didn't see him bounding across the road until you were a tire's length from his front paws.

Maybe tomorrow you won't be so lucky. Maybe it's time to change your luck by paying attention behind the wheel. This month we're working with our traffic safety partners to remind Albertans about the distracted driving law and the importance of complying with it. While we know that fewer Albertans are talking on their cellphones since the legislation was introduced, it takes time and effort to change behaviour. Through advertising, enforcement, and other awareness initiatives throughout February we are working to ensure that Albertans are safer on the road.

Distracted driving. It's not about being lucky. It's about giving your full and undivided attention to your driving. Drive safely and keep your eyes on the road.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Health Quality Council Review Report

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Health Quality Council report released yesterday confirmed what the NDP opposition has been saying for a long time. There are major problems in the health care system, and these problems mean that sick Albertans are not safe in our system.

Doctors and other staff, who have a professional and moral obligation to advocate for better patient care, are constantly bullied. The government is clearly the problem here. The report is crystal clear. The massive reorganization of the system that led to the creation of Alberta Health Services is identified as a significant part of the culture of fear and alienation that physicians say they are experiencing. This reorganization was deliberately initiated by this government under the leadership of the former health minister, now the Finance minister, without a plan or consultation. The chaos created by this massive reorganization destroyed confidence in the system's accountability, leading to an increased culture of fear and an inability to advocate for better patient care.

To continue to have the chief engineer of this costly upheaval still sitting in an important position at the cabinet table is unacceptable. It reveals that there is no real change in this government. This government continuously disregards the well-being of ordinary Albertans in order to pursue its own agenda.

The same people who are in cabinet now stayed quiet for two and a half years while they had shocking information from physicians about these problems. They continued planning significant and dangerous changes to the health system after the next election. They broke their own promises to build necessary long-term care spaces. Adequate long-term care facilities would have taken much of the pressure off our acute-care system to free up acute-care beds for patients in urgent need of them.

This report makes evident just how important a full judicial public inquiry is. Things that are hinted at in the Health Quality Council report need to be given full investigation. We have to know exactly what this intimidation by politicians in the government consists of.

These are very large issues, that we've only begun to understand, and we need the right process, a full judicial inquiry.

Roseanne Supernault

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, you and I both know that coming from a small community, we face many challenges. We also know that coming from a small community can bring many opportunities. First and foremost, you learn the importance of knowing who you are and accepting yourself for who you are and what your talents are. Over time, as you excel in the areas you are good at, the community also accepts and recognizes you and your talents.

Today I recognize a beautiful, talented young actor, Roseanne Supernault, who has excelled in the arts. Pride arises in me as I congratulate Roseanne on recently winning the best supporting actress award at the American Indian Film Festival in San Francisco for her role in the film Every Emotion Costs. Not only did she win this award; she has also won two straight Rosie awards from the Alberta Motion Picture Industries Association for her role in Blackstone. While she has big dreams, including honing her talents in comedic acting roles, Roseanne remains closely connected to her small-town home.

Mr. Speaker, it pleases me to no end when I learn about young Albertans becoming role models in their communities. I know that her actions will inspire not only the youth in East Prairie Métis settlement but young people across Alberta in the film industry.

On that note, I was pleased that the Minister of Culture and Community Services indicated her support for the film industry during budget estimates last night because there are so many talented Albertans just like Roseanne in this industry. I believe the minister's vision for the film industry in Alberta will go a long way in helping many other role models like Ms Supernault reach their potential.

Again, congratulations, Roseanne, on winning your award. You deserve it. I ask my colleagues to give you a huge round of applause.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Minister of Health and Wellness

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's Health Quality Council report said that sick Albertans who go to the ER wait 10 to 20 times longer than the national standard. Their safety is at risk, and many needlessly suffer in pain for hours, metres from care. Tragically, those needing end-of-life care spend their last few hours in the emergency department hallways. This report gives the minister of health, who has been part of the PC government's health policy for several years, a failing grade. Will the Premier take the first necessary step to repairing trust in our health system and fire this minister of health?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very proud of our minister of health. Our minister of health is working very hard to respond in a meaningful way to all of the issues that he is having to deal with in managing his department. There is no doubt that it's probably one of the greatest responsibilities in our government. We know what a great percentage of our expenditure is spent on health care. What we also know is that this is a man who has committed his life to improving health care administration and to the provision of better health care for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, as we know, the population in this province is growing, the system is growing, and to have someone who is intimately familiar with this work is something that we should have confidence in.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this same minister has committed the last few years of his life to breaking this system and that the Health Quality Council states that a culture of fear and intimidation exists and that bureaucratic and political interference is to blame, this health minister's interference, I'll ask again: will the Premier show leadership and fire her health minister, the one that helped break the system, Premier?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, in the past year and a half there have been a lot of discussions with respect to how to manage the health care system. One of the commitments that I made to supporting a publicly funded health care system in this province was to ensure that while I was Premier, there would be no political interference in the health care system, and there won't be.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure if this Premier read this report. We all know that the same minister is the principal architect of the PC government's failed seniors' housing policy, the disastrous seniors' drug plan, and now this health system and ER debacle. How can the Premier possibly stand up in this House in front of Albertans and defend him? Premier, will you please show some leadership and fire this minister?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, it's been fascinating for me to travel across the province in the past four and a half months and talk about health care. I'll tell you one thing that there is an awful lot of consensus on, and that's when I say that our minister of health is doing a good job, a strong job, a competent job and that we have to ensure that we support him in continuing to improve the health care system. I believe that's what Albertans want, and we're going to stand behind our health minister.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health System Restructuring

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What Albertans want is the health care system to be fixed despite the political rhetoric.

Exactly four years ago, in the wake of the Health Quality Council's last such report, the former Premier made many promises, promises on long-term care beds and on how the health care system would be fixed if he won, on this PC letterhead. After the election this government broke all of those promises and actually went on to make the system even worse by forming AHS, by bringing in our code of conduct, and by closing these long-term care beds. What in yesterday's report can the Premier point to that could possibly give Albertans any reason to trust this PC government anymore on health care?

Ms Redford: It's fascinating to review the report because, in fact, there are some very good recommendations in that report. Our minister of health has said that in a continuing effort to strive to improve the health care system, he is going to accept those recommendations, review them carefully, and make sure that we're able to actually make changes in the health care system.

I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that one of the reasons that Albertans can have confidence in their health care system is that for the past 18 months we've been hearing wild allegations about lists from the 2000s and hundreds of people dying from many members who are hon. members of this House, and one thing that the Health Quality Council did yesterday is that they said that those allegations were completely unfounded.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier. Let's consider sticking to 2012. In this report the health care system is still broken. Given that the Health Quality Council report says that many of the problems we're experiencing today stem from the hasty dismantling of the regional health system and that there was a report from the Health Quality Council that wasn't listened to in 2007, Premier, while you were in cabinet, why did you and most of these cabinet ministers decide to close long-term care beds and break an already broken system by bringing in AHS? Premier, you were in cabinet.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, first of all, that is an unfounded allegation.

Secondly, I will tell you that I am sticking to 2012. The press release I'm looking at is dated February 22, 2012. What it says is that a number of allegations that have been made in the past by this hon. member were found to not have any foundation. Every single time that an allegation is made in the future, we must question whether or not there's a foundation for it.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, it's a sad day when this Premier says that this report is an allegation of patient suffering.

Given that when the former minister was asked about the current crisis, he said that it was an unavoidable result of forming AHS, how can the Premier justify rewarding and defending these rude, insensitive, harmful, and offensive comments made by her Minister of Finance, the former health minister, who broke an already broken system? Answer that question, Premier.

Ms Redford: Discussions with AHS in the last four or five months with respect to work that they're doing to improve and enhance the system involved one very clear message to me, and that, Mr. Speaker, was that where we are right now with the administration of health care in terms of having a provincial board is where we need to stay. What we know is that change is sometimes difficult. There is no doubt that there are comments made in this report that have been identified as things that we need to improve upon, and there is no doubt that, being open and transparent about that, we have to accept that.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View

Health Care System

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I quote from the Health Quality Council association report: “distrust,” “engagement,” and “conflict.” These are terms used in the report to refer to many physician experiences in the health care services today. The report cited “increasing control among unelected deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers,” clearly creating a conflict for conscientious physicians trying to advocate for quality care. To the Premier: how do you suggest restoring trust in an organization that continues to employ most of the senior staff that created this health care mess?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I find this a very interesting question. We have one member of this party standing up and saying that they're concerned about political interference in the health care system. Then we have another member standing up, referring to quotes, saying that there's not enough political interference or control in the system.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we believe that there should not be political interference in the system. We have confidence in the health care administrators that are running the system. We believe and Albertans have said that they have confidence, that as we move forward and continue to deliver a health care system, they expect excellence and they expect improvement, and we will continue to provide that.

Dr. Swann: Well, maybe I'll repeat the question as the Premier wasn't listening. I said that “increasing control among unelected deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers” clearly conflicts with the physicians' duties to advocate for their patients. How do you suggest restoring trust when you have the same people who authored the problems in the first place still managing the system?

Ms Redford: Do I have to answer, Mr. Speaker?

Dr. Swann: I see that she doesn't want to answer that question.

Lack of any accountability has been the hallmark of this government for years. Here is the author of the health care chaos sitting beside her now as health minister, exemplifying the lack of accountability of this government. When are the people truly responsible going to be held accountable? When are heads going to roll, Madam Premier?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this kind of emotional reaction does nothing to improve health care in Alberta. We are not going to implement any program that's going to suggest that anyone will be punished for wild allegations that have been unfounded.

2:00

Public Health Inquiry

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, the PC slogan for this upcoming election ought to be: vote PC; we'll tell you our plans after the election. The Premier says that we'll have a discussion about taxes after the election. She says that she'll start balancing the budget after the election. She says that MLAs will vote on their new salary packages after the election. She'll start enforcing the unpopular .05 registry after the election. Premier, will you commit to ensuring that your long-promised public inquiry into physician intimidation and the ER crisis is up and running before the election is called, or are you going to wait until after the election, just like everything else you've promised?

Ms Redford: I believe that we had a very robust debate with respect to this yesterday in my estimates. The answer to the question is that we put a plan in place in the fall, we passed legislation, and we said that we would wait for the health quality report to ensure that we established terms of reference that made sense for the independent inquiry. There's no reason for anyone to suggest that that's not going to happen, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Anderson: Still waiting for an answer.

Given that on October 15, mere days after being sworn in as Premier, you told Don Braid at the Herald that a full public inquiry into health care would be “up and running before an election next year” – up and running, Premier – were you just saying that to get a reporter off your back, or were you betting on Albertans forgetting you said it, or door number 3, are you going to keep your word and have the health inquiry well under way, meaning actual public hearings, before the election is called? Call the public inquiry.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I've never in my life not stood by my word.

Mr. Anderson: Well, we shall see.

Given, Premier, that on September 13, mere days before you were selected as PC leader, you told Rick Bell at the Sun that the public health inquiry would include a probe into “alleged queue-jumping by the politically connected” and given that former superboard CEO Stephen Duckett recently confirmed that there were dedicated go-to guys in the health regions to help PC MLAs with these requests, will your health inquiry, if you ever call one, include a probe into politically influenced health queue-jumping, or are you just saying that to get elected as well?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I've always stood by my word.

Mr. Mason: And her words have different meanings at different times, Mr. Speaker.

Yesterday's report of the Health Quality Council confirms what Albertans have known all along: wait times are atrocious, doctors are being intimidated, the government's constant restructuring is creating chaos, and health outcomes are worse. All of these things hurt Albertans and threaten their health, and all of these things represent the government's failure to provide good-quality health care to Albertans. My question is to the Premier. Will she apologize to Albertans for this government's disastrous handling of health care?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, what we do in this system is that we ensure that we're making it better. We ensure that we're making decisions and putting resources into the system to make it better, we come up with new ideas about how to improve health care such as family care clinics, and we take advice from people who are experts. There's no doubt that there were experts on the Health Quality Council panel who have given very good advice to this government and to this minister. This minister is undertaking consideration of those recommendations now, and that's what we'll continue to do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the reorganization foisted on the health system by the former health minister, now the Finance minister “created a sense of chaos and instability” according to the report and given that doctors called it irresponsible and semi-criminal, will the Premier finally take responsibility, hold the minister accountable, and fire him?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, this Premier, this minister, and this government are accountable. As we have said since the report was released yesterday, unlike other hon. members we are going to take the time to carefully consider this 420-page report and its 21 recommendations influenced by the input of experts such as the former Chief Justice of the Court of Queen’s Bench of this province; a former Deputy Prime Minister of Canada, who was also a Minister of Health; and the head of an international organization that has expertise in cancer treatment. We’ll take the due diligence. We’ll provide hon. members with a thoughtful response.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I didn’t know that the health minister could fire the Finance minister. Isn’t that interesting?

Given that the restructuring caused an increase in wait times and longer hospital stays and given that the report says that major performance deterioration is only now being overcome and given that the minister responsible is still sitting there in her cabinet – not the health minister’s cabinet but the Premier’s cabinet – can the Premier explain why he is still there?

Ms Redford: The Minister of Finance is a fantastic Minister of Finance. He’s given great leadership with respect to building a budget that responds to what Albertans want. One of the things that Albertans want, Mr. Speaker: they want an investment in education, and they want an investment in health care. We’ve made sure that we’ve addressed that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjection] I have the floor now, hon. member. Thank you.

Health care, an issue that should not be political in nature, has become entirely politicized because of the decisions that were made by this PC government, the most disruptive and damaging of which were made while this Premier sat at the cabinet table. Now Albertans justifiably have no trust in us politicians to fix the very system that we made sick. To the Premier: given the unfortunate reality that the only way to remove the politics polluting our health care system now is to understand the decisions that led us here and who made them, when will the public inquiry begin? Will it be fully independent and led by a judge?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, if what the hon. member is seeking is a diminution in the politicization of health care, then perhaps the hon. members opposite should look in the mirror and consider what they’re saying in this House each and every day to Albertans about their health care system.

With respect to the public inquiry, Mr. Speaker, the government remains committed to holding the inquiry that was promised. Unlike other hon. members, we do see some redeeming factor in taking the time to review the report in detail and the recommendations. Our recommendations with respect to the inquiry will be forthcoming.

Mr. Taylor: Wow, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: since you’re promising an inquiry and since you brought in a bill last fall to have the Health Quality Council conduct it and since the Health Quality Council said yesterday, in essence, “Well, you know, we’ll run it if you want, but we don’t really want to,” will you finally call a fully independent, fully public judicial inquiry and nothing less?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member fails, of course, to recognize all of the other recommendations in the report that point to improvements in the system that have already begun and that we can further enhance. The point of the report is to improve health care for Albertans. The report is not about the hon. members opposite. It is not about individual members of this government. It is not about money and institutions. It’s about delivering better care to Albertans, and in any decisions this government makes with respect to these recommendations or with respect to terms of reference for an inquiry, that will be paramount.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would expect the government to study and implement the 21 recommendations made by the Health Quality Council anyway. I’m seeking an answer about the public inquiry. Will it be judge led? Will it be fully independent? And when are you going to call it? Simple as that. The Premier, please. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hold on here, okay? Please. Questions to the government can be answered by any member of Executive Council. That’s a long-standing tradition of parliamentary democracy.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is no confusion about the fact that there will be a fully independent, judge-led inquiry called in this province with respect to health care issues. What is in question, I think, is whether the hon. member is expressing support for the findings of the Health Quality Council report or whether he is dismissing those because he somehow thinks that an appropriate study of the matters that were referred to the council has not been completed. We refer again to the expert panel that was part of this process. Some of the other individuals involved include the Hon. Anne McLellan, whom I spoke of earlier, former Health minister of Canada; and Dr. Zaheer Lakhani, known to many members opposite.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

European Union Fuel Quality Directive

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A very important vote was taken today. Today European Union member states voted on a proposed fuel quality directive that rates fuels based on greenhouse gas emissions. The member states did not pass the discriminatory fuel quality directive, but they didn’t reject it either. To the Premier: what does this mean for Albertans?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this is a success for Alberta today because working with the federal government, we have been making the argument that anything that was being considered with respect to the sourcing of our resources that might be available in Europe should not be discriminated against based on their source. What we saw today were technical experts in a committee agree with our position. It gives us an opportunity now to ensure that we can work with people that support our position, understand the people who aren't quite sure and haven't made up their mind, and know that there are some people that may not agree with us. For us this is a tremendous success. It shows that people are listening to what we're saying about Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the Minister of Energy. The European member states did not pass the fuel quality directive, but that doesn't mean the misperception of our so-called dirty oil has been dispelled. What will this government do to mitigate the damage done to our oil industry?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the vote yesterday was a small victory but a very significant victory for Alberta and for Canada, and it shows that the success of our communications effort with members of the European Union is working. We've made it clear all along that we support the objectives of the Europeans to reduce carbon intensity in their fuels but that we want it done in a fair way that treats all oil on the same basis; that is, scientifically based. I think yesterday's vote shows that we're making progress.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: knowing that Alberta was singled out in the fuel quality directive in part due to information on the carbon intensity of our oil, will the minister change the way his ministry releases information in the future?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the way we both monitor and report carbon intensity of the oil sands is one of the best – the best – in the world. Ironically, we actually get punished for it because the other sources of oil that Europe gets have very shall we say incomplete, if not shoddy, ways of reporting total CO₂ emissions. So it's the very efficiency and comprehensiveness of our system that actually ends up some of the objections that the Europeans bring. [interjection]

The Speaker: Did I hear "Sorry"?

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, you did.

Long-term and Continuing Care for Seniors

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, placing my mother into long-term care was an extremely difficult decision, particularly for my father, who had become her primary caregiver. A year later when she suffered an irreversible stroke, our family, with Dr. Gladman's advice, chose to have her remain in her room to make her last days as comfortable as possible. I am grateful that my mother didn't die in a backless hospital gown on a cold steel gurney, abandoned in a frantic emergency hallway. My questions are to the Premier: why are Alberta seniors denied their final dignity by this government?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, first, let me say to the hon. member that we all have had family issues and families that have gone through tough times. I feel for you, and I know the exact circumstance that many in this House have gone through. But to suggest that this government and our Premier does not care for these situations is absolutely wrong. This minister, this government, your government, sir, care about the seniors in our facilities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Again to the Premier: why are recovering seniors forced to occupy badly needed acute-care beds because of the ongoing shortage of affordable home care, continuing care, and long-term care options in Canada's wealthiest province?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we have had very good discussions so far with respect to the budget that was tabled in this House two weeks ago. When I look at what we have reflected in that budget in terms of commitment for long-term care, for enhanced home care, and for ensuring that we're creating a system where there are more options available for long-term care for seniors with publicly funded health care in place, this is incredibly important in terms of creating spaces. It is a commitment that we have as this government. We want to ensure that all Albertans, particularly our seniors, are living their last days in dignity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Again to the Premier: given this latest damning report by the Health Quality Council will you at the very least commit to not selling out seniors and their families by removing the cap on long-term care fees? Please make that commitment here and now.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you for that comment. I'm going to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I have no plans on removing the cap right now. I had over the last four months an opportunity to personally review the benefits and the impacts, sir. I made it very clear in the estimates the other night that until I've had a thorough discussion – it's a policy discussion – in this House with all members, with Alberta seniors, with all Albertans, I'm not removing the cap at all.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, many of my constituents have brought their power bills to my office looking for answers on high electricity prices. They're confused about the high costs and the different charges, that seem to fluctuate on a monthly basis. To the Premier: are Albertans destined for another winter of ridiculously high power bills?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is no doubt that we've all heard that volatile electricity prices are a hardship for many Albertans, and while we do have programs in place that can assist people that are vulnerable, we also have to know that for an Albertan who's living in their home, they need some certainty with respect to what those electricity prices will look like.

The first thing we know is that the regulated rate option will drop the price of power to approximately 8 cents in March, which is good news, and that will probably be a 40 per cent decrease over January and February prices. More importantly, Mr. Speaker, I've ordered that an independent review panel take a look at the variable rate option and all ancillary costs, to report back before the summer so that consumers can have protection and certainty.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, my constituents will be very happy to hear that, but it's not only the electricity rates that are the issue here. It's also the distribution costs and all of the other ancillary costs that fluctuate. To the Premier: what can be done about those costs?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, in addition to the review of the variable rate, we will ask the Alberta Utilities Commission to freeze ancillary costs, which are included in other respects. Those are costs related to distribution, to transmission, to riders, and to administrative charges. We need to bring some certainty to this issue. We can't snap our fingers and fix it, but we are going to fix it for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If costs are going down, why would we talk about pushing consumers to contracts? To the Premier: is there really any advantage to being on a contract?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have had this discussion many times in this House, and we do believe that in a deregulated system there is an advantage to having a contract. We also understand, though, that it's sometimes a challenge for people to be able to enter into contracts.

I have directed the Minister of Service Alberta to ensure that regulations are in place that will ensure that people who are having difficulty getting into contracts right now, Mr. Speaker, will be able to get into contracts and have that dealt with through a deposit.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Land Conservation Trusts

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Land conservation trusts receive donated land to steward and conserve. For each donation of land offered, trusts must raise money to assess the suitability and then raise money for fencing, removal of garbage, upkeep, safety precautions, et cetera. Conservation land trusts in this province are being stymied in their valuable work by this government, and I'd like to know why. My first question is to the minister of AGLC and lotteries. What is the reason the land conservation trust organizations have been consistently denied casino licences?*

Do you not know who that is? Pick somebody.

The Speaker: Hon. member, second question, please.

Ms Blakeman: They don't know who's in charge of AGLC. That's bad.

Okay. Well, how about to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation: why do these conservation land trusts not qualify for funding under Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can take a look at the regulations that deal with that, but I can tell you that we have 480 parks in Alberta, more parks than any other jurisdiction in our country, and all Albertans are within one hour of them. I can check into it, but we're doing pretty well.

Ms Blakeman: Minister, there's a difference between conservation land trusts and parks, but I'll help you figure that out later.

Okay. The last question, then, is to the Minister of SRD. Where in the Land Stewardship Act is the place for land conservation trusts?

2:20

Mr. Oberle: The hon. member should know, Mr. Speaker, that the Alberta Land Stewardship Act is about long-range land planning out there, land-use planning, not about the granting of funds to organizations. As a matter of fact, the land conservation trusts are funded through my department through the land trust grant program. The hon. member should have known that as well.

It sounds to me, because she's got guests in the gallery, that she's got an issue. I would advise her to, rather than scaring them, have them come and talk to me, and maybe I can work that issue out. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary . . . [interjections] Whoa. Whoa.

Mr. Mason: It wasn't me.

The Speaker: It wasn't you today, hon. member. Aren't you lucky. The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Long Gun Registry

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to preface my questions today by saying that I'm talking about long guns and the long gun registry. Many years ago, when the long gun registry was proposed and passed, there were many here in western Canada who did not register them, and they were concerned about whether their guns would be seized. The owners' responses ranged from registering them to hiding those in places where they were boarded up. My first question is to the Premier. With the present announcement that the bill passed the House of Commons to abolish the long gun registry, Madam Premier, can you reaffirm Alberta's position now and into the future?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, from the very beginning of the introduction of this registry this province, this government, and me personally as minister have been opposed to the registry. We have worked in partnership with the federal government to ensure that other Premiers could follow that same direction. I think it's very good news today that we've finally seen success with respect to a piece of legislation that simply did not need to be there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Given that illegal guns, whether handguns or rifles, are still illegal and should be confiscated, when the bill passes the Senate as proclaimed, will the law enforcement people recognize this bill if they find a lawfully owned firearm in a vehicle they stop for whatever reason?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, in a word the answer is absolutely. There are many, many hard-working peace officers and police officers throughout this entire province that work to keep us safe every day. They enforce many laws, and they will enforce this new law when it is passed in the Senate.

Mr. Mitzel: My second supplemental is to the same minister. What will happen to present regulations regarding storage and carrying of rifles and ammunition, and will the existing restrictions continue to exist with regard to such things as the purchase of ammunition? I'm talking about the firearms acquisition certificates and the firearms possession certificates.

The Speaker: Go ahead.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to advise this member and this House that we will continue to enforce the new regulations and the existing regulations as they come to pass.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Health Care System (continued)

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's record on health care is truly unforgivable. I don't know if the minister of health gets it, but it is the patients, everyday Albertans, who lose out when the doctors can't advocate for them. Worse yet, the Health Quality Council report states clearly that this government's political mismanagement is responsible for creating a top-down culture of fear and intimidation for our doctors. Does the minister of health even understand the important role of doctors in advocating for their patients, and does he honestly think his government is not at fault for the declining state of our health care system?

The Speaker: Well, if this is policy, proceed.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, this government completely understands the importance of physicians and other health professionals being able to advocate for their patients effectively. What I will say to the hon. member is that the Health Quality Council report does a very good job of citing some of the conditions around the creation of Alberta Health Services, such as a very short transition period and lack of opportunity for physicians to have input into the transition process, that are part of the reason for the concerns that are expressed in this report. We take those concerns very seriously, but we also note that much has been done since then to address them.

Mrs. Forsyth: You don't get that it's not a workplace issue; it's bullying.

Given that yesterday's report quotes physicians who feel that obvious systemic harassment and intimidation does have a negative impact on patient safety, could the minister please clarify if his government believes a task force that is held away from the public eye is enough to cure the ailing state of our health care, or will they do the right thing and include the rampant bullying of our health professionals in a full judicial public inquiry?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I'll refrain from commenting on the characterizations that the hon. member has made about myself and the government and physicians. What I will tell you is that it was very important that this report provide the opportunity for physicians and others to tell their stories about their individual experiences and the very real challenges they faced in terms of advocating for their patients. The Alberta Health Services Board has put in place a very rigorous set of medical staff bylaws since then that not only provide a clear process for physicians to advocate for patients but actually puts resources in place to actively support them in doing so.

Mrs. Forsyth: It's peculiar, Mr. Speaker. The minister called it a workplace issue; I didn't.

Given that this government refuses to accept responsibility for their incompetence in managing our health care and has lost its credibility and given that Dr. Cowell has said that the government has a problem implementing recommendations made by the Health Quality Council, how can the health minister expect Albertans to trust this government to preside over the health care system any longer?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's hardly a question of government policy, and the hon. member can call things whatever she wishes, of course. That's her prerogative. What we have acknowledged, I think, once again, are the very real challenges that were faced by physicians and other people who worked in the health system at the time of the creation of Alberta Health Services and in the transition process that followed. I think this government, Alberta Health Services, and the health professionals themselves have learned a lot from that experience. All have provided very meaningful and real suggestions for solutions and improvements to the process in the future. They're well under way now, and there's more that we can do that's cited in this report.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Regarding the formation of Alberta Health Services the Health Quality Council's report yesterday states, "The decision to create a single regional structure was made by the government without physician consultation." My first question is to the minister of health. Why would this government make a radical change to a health department with a $12 billion budget without consulting physicians in the first place? That's incompetent.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to attempt to speak to all that the report has to say about this issue. It is certainly much more dimensional than the one issue the hon. member has raised. What I will say is that in my experience and I think in the experience of most people that have worked in health care any major change in health care delivery requires full consultation with the people who are going to be affected by those changes, not just health providers but the patients themselves.

Mr. MacDonald: Let's talk for a moment, Mr. Speaker, about taxpayers. The Health Quality Council report yesterday indicates: "If money is being wasted, you have to blow the whistle on that." What exactly is being talked about here? Is it the fact that someone is complaining about Jack Davis, the former regional health authority CEO in Calgary who received a $22,000 per month pension, or is it the legal fees that were racked up to fire the nine health authorities and create the superboard?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question invites a speculative answer, and I'm not prepared to do that. I don't know what specific portion of the report he's referring to. What I can tell you is that this government, while we certainly pay attention to the total cost of health care, is much, much more concerned with the value of the health care dollars that are spent. That value is expressed in things like wait times. It is expressed in things like efficiency of administration and many other performance measures, all of which have been adopted by this government and are reported on publicly for all to see.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the minister of health: given that over a long period of time this individual has been one of the masterminds of this flawed plan, this radical change to our public health care system, if the Premier will not fire you, will you do the honourable thing now and resign because of this incompetent performance?

Mr. Horne: Well, all I'll do, Mr. Speaker, as in response to a similar question from members opposite on one of my first days as minister of health, is that I will repeat again that in some cases there are questions that are asked that simply do not warrant an answer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

2:30 Health Quality Council Review Report (continued)

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Now that the Health Quality Council has released its final report, it shows that we face challenges in the health care system that would not be uncommon to any large corporation. As a matter of fact, a number of these matters could be characterized as labour relations issues. Could the minister please tell us what will happen next?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health Services is indeed a large organization with over 90,000 employees. In terms of the process, following up on the Health Quality Council report, we're taking the next few days to review the recommendations and the findings in detail. The government will respond fully to all 21 recommendations as well as present our plans for the public inquiry that's been promised by the Premier.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After reviewing the report, it's clear that the Health Quality Council did not substantiate the allegations made in this Assembly by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. To the minister: what were the report's actual findings?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the report refers to allegations made in this House with respect to, first of all, the existence of a lung cancer surgery waiting list and then, secondly, the alleged death of 250 patients waiting for treatment on that waiting list. The Health Quality Council and the panel of experts that I referred to earlier examined all of this evidence, interviewed many people regarding these allegations, and found them clearly to be unsubstantiated.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how will the minister be addressing the recommendations in the report, and how will Albertans learn about what he's planning to do?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I was in discussion yesterday with the Health Quality Council after they released the report. I'll be meeting by telephone with the Alberta Health Services Board tomorrow. Over the weekend I'll be meeting again with the board of the Health Quality Council of Alberta and speaking as well with the College of Physicians & Surgeons. Because all of these organizations are mentioned in the report and are the subject of recommendations, I'll obviously be consulting with them prior to any government formal response to the recommendations. We expect the formal response to occur within a week or so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Education Funding

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, I have noticed a distinct pattern in the minister's responses to questions regarding educational supports in this province: blame the school boards. In Alberta classrooms today there are 450 fewer teachers than there were at this time last year. Why are there 450 fewer teachers, and who is to blame, the school boards or your government?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, this is a good question because I think that what this question really does is show clearly the difference between this government and the opposition. They tend to be focused on blame. There is no blame, and no one should be blamed for anything. As a matter of fact, indeed, our school boards in Alberta have duly elected trustees, and they are the employers, and they make the staffing decisions.

We will be debating the Alberta Education budget in a few days, Mr. Speaker. Trustees will get their share of the money, and again they will be making staffing decisions. No blame.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, that's a different answer than I got last week when he did blame the school boards when I asked him that question.

Nevertheless, given that schools across Alberta have more than a billion dollars in deferred maintenance debt and kids are going to schools with leaky roofs and the like, who's to blame for this deferred maintenance? Is it this government or is it the school boards' fault?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Again, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the confusion lies in the fact that this member doesn't differentiate between responsibility and blame. The Minister of Education has a wide scope of responsibility, and we are living up to it. Boards have their range of responsibility, and they are living up to it. If he has issues with local authorities and locally made decisions, he would be well advised to meet with the board in question. At the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, what he forgets is that we are all, the boards and the government of Alberta, together delivering a superb education throughout this entire province. We work in collaboration; they're focusing on blame.

Mr. Hehr: Last week in the paper the minister blamed the school boards for parents having to pay hundreds of dollars in school fees to send their kids to school. Now are you retracting that statement here today that you made last week, or do you stand by it?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, one should never read his own quotations in the newspaper. It very often leads you to wrong conclusions. I have clearly said to the newspaper and I will repeat it again today that, indeed, there are parents in Alberta who are concerned about school fees. Those school fees are put upon students by locally elected officials, by boards, and we will be reviewing those decisions. Again, there is no blame. Locally elected officials have the ability to make local decisions. We support that, and we will be working in collaboration with them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Residential Construction Standards

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the city of Leduc announced an evacuation order for a partially completed apartment-condo complex, which will require some 150 individuals to find new accommodations by March 31. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what is the province doing to protect my constituents and all Albertans from shoddy construction practices?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, my colleagues in this House, and this government sympathize very much with the residents of Bellavera Green condominiums. This is an incredibly stressful situation, and it's incredibly unfortunate that anyone would be taken advantage of by what can only be seen as unethical developers or builders. We have legislation in place that provides the necessary tools for safety officials to enforce compliance with the building and safety codes. The city of Leduc is taking the appropriate steps necessary to protect the public and to protect those who are in the condos, and our ministry is willing to work hand in hand with the city of Leduc to help those people who are being evicted from those condos.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Building codes represent the bare minimum that builders are expected to adhere to. Shouldn't Albertans expect at least this and more?

Mr. Griffiths: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are entitled to have homes and buildings that meet the safety codes. Our fire and building codes are based on the National Research Council standards and are adopted in conjunction with their development, but no matter what those standards are, they will always be the minimum. Anybody in Alberta who is building a building or a house can ask their builder to exceed those codes at any time. That's their prerogative.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year a number of people in Fort McMurray found themselves in the same situation that we're now faced with in the city of Leduc. There seems to be a problem with the system. Mr. Minister, is there something wrong, and what can you do to deal with this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that litigation is proceeding in the Bellavera Green condo association and the Penhorwood Condo Association cases, so it would be inappropriate right now for me to speak on those particular cases. But I can promise the hon. member and all Albertans that we're working very hard right now to improve the safety training for officers. We're working on a new home warranty program to help protect people who are making the largest purchase in their life. We're working on updating and improving the safety codes and on improving and extending the limitations and fines that go along with violations of the safety codes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Heartland Electricity Transmission Project

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Infrastructure, but he is not here today. Albertans recognize the need for proper electrical infrastructure in Alberta, but with Bill 50 this government bulldozed the requirement for a needs assessment for new transmission lines. This week concerned parents of Colchester elementary school, which is right in the shadow of the transmission lines in Sherwood Park, took to the radio to defend their school. To the Minister of Infrastructure: why didn't the government think it was important to do a comprehensive needs assessment of the schools, daycares, and homes within close proximity of the heartland lines?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I guess I'll take it. I'm not sure. This is not an Infrastructure/Transportation issue. The government of Alberta is not in any way suggesting that any schools in that particular area have to be closed. However, we will be respecting the choice and the school board will be respecting the choice of the parents if they choose not to send their children to that school in September. If that decision indeed happens, we are already discussing with the affected school board the possibilities of accommodating those children in other schools that will provide them with adequate space.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again: given that the Colchester school is less than 200 metres from the two-storeys-high towers, will this government provide the Elk Island public schools with the $20 million to renovate the school in Sherwood Park that it needs to move these students to?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, what will happen is that Elk Island school division will make a decision whether they want to renovate an existing school, whether they want to move the children to other schools that don't require renovation, whether perhaps there is a number one priority under their capital plan to construct a new school. There are a number of combinations of what may happen, and parents will still have to make a decision as to whether they will indeed decide not to send their children to the affected school. Once those decisions are made, our Ministry of Education together with the affected school board will find accommodations for all the children so that they will have adequate space to continue learning.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The issue is the money. Will the minister commit to providing the funds to move those kids to a different school?

To the same minister again: given that Colchester school was built long before the transportation and utility corridor was created, why didn't this government already have a plan to relocate the students and staff of Colchester? Why didn't it consider their needs?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I think you can help me on this one. The utility and transportation corridor was put in place, I believe, in 1967, so I would have a very difficult time to respond to that question in this position right now. But I can tell you one thing, this government in co-operation with the school board will do what we have to do to make sure that the children of the affected area are properly accommodated in a school that provides them with adequate space to continue learning up to the internationally renowned standards of Alberta Education.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I may be older than you, but if you don't make an issue out of my experience, I will not make an issue out of your inexperience.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mr. Zwodsky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly about 90 representatives of the Alberta native friendship centres. We have elders, presidents, executive directors, and youth who have travelled here from all across Alberta to visit our Legislature and to participate in their workshop called How Governments Work. Alberta native friendship centres provide great support for aboriginals, as we know, and have been doing so since 1950.

Among our guests are five individuals whom I'd like to introduce personally, and I'd ask them to rise as I call out their names: President Merle White; Vice-President Bob Oshanyk; the secretary, Lucille Cook; the national board representative, Kevin Provost; and the national youth board representative, Jessie Johnson.

Mr. Speaker, in my capacity as chair of the secretariat for improving outcomes for aboriginal children and families I'd ask all of our guests seated in both galleries to now please rise to accept our thanks and our gratitude.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts I am pleased to table five copies of the committee's report on its 2011 activities. Additional copies of the report have also been provided for all members of the Assembly.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and pursuant to Standing Order 30 and after having provided your office with the appropriate notice, I wish to inform you that upon the completion of the daily Routine I will move to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to hold an emergency debate on a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the issues of patient safety as described by the Health Quality Council of Alberta report titled Review of the Quality of Care and Safety of Patients Requiring Access to Emergency Department Care and Cancer Surgery and the Role and Process of Physician Advocacy.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies of a document from St. Albert protestant schools, which is headed The St. Albert Protestant Separate School District #6 Board of Trustees Statement Regarding Bill 4, the St. Albert and Sturgeon Valley School Districts Establishment Act.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings today. First, I'd like to table a letter and an electricity bill from William and Marie Chascha of Grande Prairie. They wrote to say: "Our charges are ridiculous . . . I have to work full-time just to pay these bills." Their January 2012 statement from Direct Energy was $521.16.

I'd also like to table a letter and a bill for the month of January 2012 from Annalee Swensrude of Lac Ste. Anne for the amount of $603.95. She writes: "Living is getting worse and worse . . . Someone in the government needs to take action and help the working people."

Ray Welsh of Vegreville sent us notes and a bill from January and February for $507 and $475 respectively.

As well, I have a tabling where we can see the effects of high power prices on small businesses, too, which includes EPCOR power bills for Independent Bath Products Ltd. where their bill was $432 and $967 at their two locations.

Those are all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. One is an article from the Calgary Sun back in September, which I quoted today in my questions, that talks about the Premier's then position that we should call a public inquiry into the queue-jumping. I'll table five copies of that.

The other tabling, again with regard to my question, is the article of October 15 in the Calgary Herald, where the Premier is quoted as saying that the public inquiry will be up and running before an election is called next year, referring to this election coming up.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. My first tabling is an e-mail from Alison Ainsworth, who I introduced previously in the House along with her daughter, Emily, and son, Nathan, and Emily's service dog, Levi. After 10 years of closed doors and dead ends in trying to secure funding from FSCD for her daughter Emily, Alison recently announced the formation of a community resource consulting service. Alison's website is www.communityresourceconsulting.com.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a further 20 e-mails out of the hundreds I've received from the following individuals who are seeking the preservation of the Castle wilderness: Jacques Thouin, To and Alison Martin, Chris Hooymans, Krystal Kamanos, Alison Luco, Andrea Becker, Erinn Collier, John Davis, Teena Cormack, Amir Shams, Andrea Hull, Eva van Loon, Michael Callaway, Jill Lutz, Samanta Zbinden, Frithjof Lutscher, Carolyn Ferguson, Justin Wheler, Irv Gerling, and Lorna Lyons.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of petitions.

- Alberta government and Industry Canada [need to] audit . . . CCI Wireless with respect to the terms and conditions regarding competition with private industry.

- Claw back any infrastructure that has been deployed in defiance of the terms and conditions regarding competition.

Recently grants were provided by Broadband Canada and Alberta Government for improving high speed internet access in areas of Alberta where internet is unavailable or unsatisfactory. The recipients of the grants were restricted from competing with existing private enterprise that was already providing high speed internet . . .

I've got hundreds of receivers of those Internet providers that are very concerned and are asking that government audit the data that CCI Wireless submitted to the government in order to get their contracts.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have 11 tablings today. Today I asked an hon. member to resign, and I'd like to table tablings concerning the interactions and involvement that he's had with the health system. Here's an e-mail dated November 10, 2006.

The Speaker: No, no. Just table them.

Dr. Sherman: I have five copies of this e-mail discussing the policy for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud when he was running for leadership.

On November 11, 2006, I have five copies of a tabling from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford thanking me for the advice and said he would tweak the policy with respect to the emergency crisis that was present at that time.

Here's another letter dated December 19, 2006, between myself and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. I was asking for help as there were medical disasters in the waiting rooms of Edmonton and Calgary. The hon. Member said he was starting work as the EA to the minister at that time, and he was wondering if he could take a rain check.

Here's another letter between myself and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford dated December 27, 2006, wishing ourselves a Happy New Year and me requesting a meeting with the minister at the time, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, an emergency meeting to discuss the emergency crisis at the time.

Here is a comprehensive letter, five copies, dated January 14, 2008, which happened just prior to the last election, regarding the ER crisis that occurred during the election.

Here are another five copies of an article titled Crisis in the ER – Mr. Speaker, that's when I was a handsome young lad and practising freely – saying: this is a severe crisis. This is in 2007.

Shortly after that letter, that article that appeared in the Edmonton Sun, here's an e-mail between myself and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford dated January 27, 2007, and a copy of an e-mail, dated January 23, 2007, between myself and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, who was the health care minister at the time, discussing the ER crisis.

Here is a letter, Mr. Speaker, a signed letter on PC Alberta letterhead, dated February 23, 2008, I believe exactly four years ago today, when the previous Premier of the province promised to build 600 long-term care beds and 200 replacement beds and to convene an expert emergency panel to fix this ER crisis. It's my understanding the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford helped draft this letter.

Here, Mr. Speaker, I have five copies of a graph. It's labelled Historical Expenditure: The Big Two, Nominal, which are Alberta Health and Education expenditures, from the Institute for Public Economics at the University of Alberta, showing the health care spending curve under this PC government.

We're almost done, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of the performance measure that's used in the United Kingdom, the same performance measure applied to the Capital health care system right here in Edmonton from when a patient presents to ER to being discharged to a hospital ward bed at the 95th percentile. This is a graph from between June 2005 and December 2010. It highlights the average length of stays, up to 75 hours at the 95th percentile, when the international standard is only four hours in the United Kingdom.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker – I thank you so much for your patience – I have five copies of a presentation dated July 12, 2010. It's from the government of Alberta, Alberta Health Legislation: Moving Forward. It's a process and timing map of the Alberta Health Act, part 1, which was building public trust, and part 2, which was physicians opting out into a parallel private medical system and, as well, private insurance: basically, the Americanization of health care. It shows evidence where the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, presented this to the government caucus.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, hon. member, that was only six minutes' worth of tablings. One question, though, for you. Have you tabled any of these documents in the House previously? If you have, sir, you know that's a no-no.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Oberle, Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, a listing of full-time equivalent employment for the Department of Sustainable Resource Development for the fiscal year 2012-13, tabled by the hon. Mr. Oberle in response to a question by Ms Notley, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, during policy field committee consideration of the estimates for the Department of Sustainable Resource Development on February 21, 2012.

On behalf of the hon. Ms Klimchuk, Minister of Culture and Community Services, a listing of full-time equivalent employment for the Department of Culture and Community Services for the fiscal year 2012-2013, tabled by the hon. Ms Klimchuk in response to a question by Ms Blakeman, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, during the policy field committee consideration of the estimates of the Department of Culture and Community Services on February 22, 2012.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: To the Government House Leader: would he be so kind under 7(6) as to share the government House business for the week commencing March 5? Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Monday, March 5, of course, is private member's business.

On Tuesday, March 6, in the afternoon in Committee of Supply the estimates of Education will be considered. It's also day 10 of the consideration of His Honour's Speech from the Throne; and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, March 7, in the afternoon in Committee of Supply the estimates of Health and Wellness will be considered as per the schedule that was previously provided to the House, and thereafter as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, March 8, in the afternoon we anticipate for second reading Bill 2, the Education Act; Bill 4, the St. Albert and Sturgeon Valley School Districts Establishment Act; Bill 5, the Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act; and Bill 6, the Property Rights Advocate Act; and as per the Order Paper.

Emergency Debate

Health Quality Council Review Report

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll now deal with brief arguments about urgency with respect to the Standing Order 30 application by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I repeat, brief urgency.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I'll be making the comments on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. As I've indicated, I put forward a motion under Standing Order 30, and the motion reads as follows:

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the issues of patient safety as described by the Health Quality Council of Alberta report titled Review of the Quality of Care and Safety of Patients Requiring Access to Emergency Department Care and Cancer Surgery and the Role and Process of Physician Advocacy.

The report released yesterday by the Health Quality Council of Alberta described several factors in the management of the health system which have compromised patient safety, including excessive crowding in emergency departments, reorganization of the health system under one health board, and the ongoing perception of more than half of physicians surveyed that their ability to advocate for their patients' safety is constrained. This is clearly an important public issue which requires a full debate in the House. I note Beauchesne's paragraph 390 states:

"Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the House do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and the public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

Mr. Speaker, I am making this motion under Standing Order 30 because I see no other opportunity for the House to address this issue. I see nothing on the Order Paper related to the health care system or patient safety. I would further suggest that the public interest demands that this discussion take place immediately as the conditions described in the report released yesterday represent an ongoing threat to the health and safety of Albertans who are in our hospital system throughout the province, and there was no indication within that report that those conditions are being ameliorated in any fashion.

In addition, the Premier has stated that the government will make a decision within a week about its response to the report and the appointment of an inquiry, including the terms of reference for such a public inquiry. Today is the only opportunity the House has to discuss this before these decisions are made. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the House is scheduled to adjourn for a full week following this day and will not return until Monday, March 5, so this would be the last opportunity we would have to discuss this matter at least before the 5th of March.

House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 689, says that the motion must relate to "a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration." I would suggest that the specific matter that we are referring to, Mr. Speaker, is the health and safety of patients in Alberta in emergency rooms across the province. I would suggest that it is an important matter because, in fact, in the report itself the authors of the report, who engaged in extensive surveys and discussions with stakeholders across the province, concluded that patients have suffered as a result of unreasonable wait times and that the margins of safety experienced by those patients were substantially compromised. Indeed, the authors of the report noted that in some cases the wait times to which urgently ill patients are subjected are 10 times that of what is recommended as the best practice. As a result, I would suggest that speaks to both the urgency and the importance outlined under the section that I just quoted.

The Health Quality Council report points to a number of ways that safety has been compromised, including reorganization of the health care system.

The Speaker: Hon. member, get to the urgency, please. It's not the issue. The issue has nothing to do with this. It could be about anything. It's the urgency. Please.

Ms Notley: Okay. Well, again, the authority that I was referring to actually speaks to specificity as well and the degree to which this is something within the authority of the government and of this Legislature. The report that I'm referring to talks about organization of the health care system, the relationship of political interference with the ability of doctors to advocate for the health and safety of their patients, and, of course, the excessive crowding of emergency rooms as a result of an inadequate number of long-term-care spaces.

I would suggest that all of these are within the jurisdiction of this Assembly to discuss, and as noted this all, of course, would amount to urgency both in the minds of Albertans and also in terms of the ability of this Assembly to address the matter in a timely fashion.

I hope you will give due consideration to this motion, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Government House Leader, do you want to make a comment on this?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to comment on this. The Health Quality Council has been tasked with a very major task of looking into a number of allegations. One of the things that's very important to Albertans is to have confidence in their health care system. Normally I would not believe it is appropriate for the House to take time away from its normal practice to debate issues that it cannot actually come to resolution on, but I think it is important for Albertans to know that their health care is in good hands, and it is important for Albertans to understand what the Health Quality Council was doing and what the effect of the report is. Therefore, I would encourage members to support this motion for a Standing Order 30 debate this afternoon.

The Speaker: Well, I gather the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre wants to say the same thing. If you want to have the debate, I'd better make a ruling on this. Otherwise, it'll go on for another 45 minutes on procedural matters.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I would like to believe that I'm going to add to it, not repeat. But, of course, if the Speaker would like to rule on it, I will make way for the Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, I am prepared to rule on it. I've had this petition before me since 11:25 this morning, so it meets the requirement. We've already heard what the motion is. I have a long way to go to try to find that this would be a conducive motion that I should actually put the question for. I've heard no argument whatsoever about urgency and emergency with respect to this matter other than one. There is always an out. If the mood of the House is such that it wants to do this, I am prepared to accept the mood of the House with respect to this. So I will put the question forward.

As I repeat again, I heard no argument to suggest that I should, but I will because of the mood of the House and the position of the House. You all know the rules with respect to this. They were dealt with last week. They're all very, very clear. Shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed? You know what you have to do. Okay. Then I'll repeat what you have to do. If 15 or more members rise, the debate will proceed.

[Several members rose]

The Speaker: Okay. Yes. It will proceed.

Shall I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood or the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona? Just a second. Before we do that – you determine who it is I should recognize – I just want to draw the attention of the Leader of the Official Opposition and the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. When I had recognized the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, the two of you violated the standing orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. You might want to think back to how you violated the standing orders when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was speaking, and you can think about that later.

Here is the process. I will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Then I will recognize a government spokesman, I presume the Premier. Then we'll go to a rotation back and forth. We will conclude at 4:30. The rules are 10 minutes maximum speaking time each. There's no resolution. It's an open debate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Proceed.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the support of members of the House to have this emergency debate. I think that it would be good to begin with a brief recapitulation of the history around this issue. Of course, initially allegations were made by emergency room physicians, in a letter that was released publicly, that their repeated efforts to get the government to address very poor emergency room waiting times had fallen on deaf ears. As a result of that, a series of events unfolded, and it became very clear that not only was there a serious problem with emergency room waiting times and in other areas of the health system but that doctors who had attempted to advocate on behalf of their patients were being systematically intimidated.

[Mr. Zwozdesky in the chair]

It's also important to note, Mr. Speaker, that at the time the government denied that this was happening. We did not have accurate information relating to the actual waiting times coming forward from the government, and the government, of course, denied and ridiculed claims that there was intimidation of doctors. But more and more doctors did come forward, and the demand that had been put forward for a judicial inquiry was met, instead, by a government response of asking the Health Quality Council to look into the matter. That was, in our view, insufficient in order to get to the bottom of it. The Health Quality Council then proceeded. They issued an interim report, and they significantly delayed the final report, which was finally released just yesterday.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, the report that came forward yesterday underlines very clearly that what physicians and opposition members have been saying about what's going on in the health system is, in fact, verified. They have concluded that emergency room wait times in this province are extremely poor and that patients have suffered as a result. They claim in the report that there is no evidence that anyone has actually died as a result of this, but we do know of some suicides and other things in emergency rooms that have taken place. They do talk about people in the final stages of their lives dying in emergency rooms because there are not suitable beds for them, and that is, of course, a real tragedy.

The report also deals with the question of certain allegations that have been made by one of the members of this House with respect to cancer waiting lists and deaths of 250 individuals on the waiting list and has concluded that there is no evidence for that.

Interestingly, Mr. Speaker, it does talk about the sense that the reorganization of a number of health regions into one superboard was done in a way that was very high handed, very arbitrary, very quick, and which caused very considerable disruption to the health system.

So, Mr. Speaker, in that sense it is clear that this government's own policy has reduced outcomes in our health care system very substantially. People are spending more time in hospitals, more time waiting for beds. There are longer emergency wait times, more demoralization of physicians, and it also fanned the culture of intimidation that was already there.

That leads us to the fourth part of the report, the part which is, in my view, completely unsatisfactory. That is that while they talk about a culture of intimidation, they don't trace its source. They don't say where it comes from. They say that it's widespread. They say that doctors feel very much intimidated, including by the College of Physicians & Surgeons, which is seen to be a body that doctors fear arbitrary punishment from for speaking out. But it doesn't say where it came from.

It's clear, Mr. Speaker, that it comes from the government. It comes from the political level. I believe that the culture of intimidation took root originally with some of the major cuts that took place in this province in the 1990s. Obviously, health outcomes deteriorated significantly, and it became a major problem for the government in terms of managing public opinion. So they bore down on those people who were most vocal, speaking out on behalf of their patients and on behalf of the health system, and that was physicians. That is where the culture took place.

It's clear that the irresponsible reorganization undertaken by the former minister of health, who is now the Minister of Finance appointed by this Premier, had an enormous negative impact on our health care system. There is a word for doctor-induced illness. It means something that is not naturally occurring but is caused by a terrible mistake or a bad decision or bad judgment, and that is exactly what's happened here. This government has complete and full responsibility for the damage it has created in the health system, and they don't want to take responsibility for it, Mr. Speaker.

This Premier has not only kept that former minister in her cabinet; she has made him the Finance minister, and he is now pushing through her pre-election budget. There is no accountability. A person who is the health minister forces a reorganization of the health system that causes chaos, is considered by some in the health system to be semi-criminal, that reduces the outcomes very dramatically in the health system – and we're only just recovering from it now – and that person is given a promotion by this Premier, Mr. Speaker. This government is very, very responsible yet refuses to be accountable.

Now, I believe that there should be a judicial inquiry. I don't think that the body that we've just had the report from is going to get any further into this. They pulled their punches on where the culture of intimidation came from because it came from the very people who created them and who appointed them and to whom they are responsible. So they're not really in a very good position to point the finger at this government, Mr. Speaker. In actual fact, a judicial inquiry with an independent judge could do it. I think that that's what we need to do: look at the intimidation and look at why this government can't run health care.

Albertans do not trust this Progressive Conservative government with our health care system. We've seen over and over again the government hiding its true plans for health care before an election. In the case of the 2004 election we had the third way appear just months afterwards. After the 2008 election we had the former minister, now the Minister of Finance, foisted on the health care system. And we know, also, that the current health minister presented a paper to the PC caucus a year and a half ago talking about the delisting of services, creating private insurance, and allowing doctors to practise both in the public and the private system. That's the current minister of health, that has been appointed by this Premier.

This Premier is clearly not the champion of public health care that she claims to be. This Premier is appointing people who have done great damage to or are planning to do further damage to our health care system to important positions in her government. So it is not – it is not – a government that is going to be different from previous PC governments. It's going to be a continuation of the same thing.

Mr. Speaker, unlike this government, that introduced as its Bill 1 a bill to do value-added budgeting – what's it called?

Ms Notley: Results based.

Mr. Mason: Results based is what they call it. Our private member's bill was a bill that would have strengthened public health care. We don't just talk about publicly funded health care; we talk about publicly delivered health care. We talk about extending medical coverage in the areas of dental and pharmacy. Mr. Speaker, those are the things that we stand for.

We would get rid of the private clinics. We would make sure that there's no need for private insurance. We would make sure that our public health care system is strengthened, that accessibility is improved, and that people do not take profits before people get better. That's this government's vision. We can see it with respect to their plans for long-term care, something that has created massive problems in our emergency rooms because the government doesn't get the connection between long-term care beds and mental health beds and emergency room time.

Mr. Speaker, I think my time is almost up, but I want to say that I appreciate the opportunity to have this debate. This government cannot be trusted with our health care system, and I think this report shows it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, just before we proceed with the next speaker, as you know, we have 10 minutes each at this time, which leaves us room for about seven, maybe eight speakers before the House time runs out today, so we will proceed in the following order. The Premier will speak next, followed by the Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by the minister of health, followed by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the Government House Leader, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the Minister of Education, followed by Calgary-Mountain View, followed by West Yellowhead, then Airdrie-Chestermere, and there's a list that goes on after that. I would ask people to please bear in mind the 10-minute rule and also the fact that there are 15 speakers so far on the list who wish to address this point.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today our Government House Leader supported the standing order because, while there might be a suggestion that the particular issue isn't of urgency to this House today, there is no doubt that Albertans on a daily basis are thinking about their families, they're thinking about health care, and they want to make sure that in government and in this Legislature we're having the opportunity to clearly understand what our successes have been, what our challenges are, and what we need to do in the future to move forward.

Fundamentally, for me personally and also for this government, we believe that Alberta needs to have a public health care system, exclusively a public health care system. We are fully committed to supporting a public health care system so that every single person in Alberta, whether they're a mom or a dad, a child or a senior, will all get access to the services that they need to allow them to excel and have the quality of life that they need to have.

Now, if I look at the budget that was tabled in this House two weeks ago, I think that the percentage of expenditure with respect to health care is well over 40 per cent, perhaps over 45 per cent. When I look at that, Mr. Speaker, I know that it is an issue that dominates what we talk about in this House, what we talk about in government, and what Albertans are talking about.

The other thing it does in a budget of this size, Mr. Speaker, is that it tells us that's it terribly important to understand how big the system is and that we have very important partners in this system. The government has a role, Alberta Health Services has a role, and professions have a role: doctors, nurses, licensed practical nurses. Our pharmacists have a role in this system.

What Albertans have been saying for a year is that they want to have more ownership of the health care system. What they mean by that, as we all know, is that in our families we're taking responsibility for our own health care. We know where we want to go. We know how we want to be treated. We're often very well informed with respect to the issues that we're facing and in some cases even have ideas about whether or not the treatments that we want to have can be or should be provided by a doctor or perhaps by an LPN, perhaps by a chiropractor. And that's a good thing because that allows us to have a real discussion and design a system and change a very big system so that we're not only dealing with acute care.

There's no doubt that in the Health Quality Council report there are issues identified with respect to the fact that you can't run a health care system based exclusively on acute care. When you do that, you end up putting all of your money into emergency rooms, into acute-care beds, and very often into the services the doctors are providing in order to keep up with that demand.

One of the things that we need to talk about in this debate – and I hope it can be a constructive process – is: what does health care look like in the future for Albertans? What have Albertans told us they want health care to look like? When I think about the report that the Health Quality Council put together and the fact that they put some very constructive recommendations in place that the minister of health is committed to reviewing and responding to, not alone but with our partners at the Alberta Health Services Board, with the Health Quality Council, and with professions, we know that we can design a health care system that will meet the needs of Albertans.

We talk about family care clinics. We've had primary care networks, and we're very proud of the fact that this government implemented primary care networks. Primary care networks were a new model of delivering health care. It allowed for a team approach. It allowed for multilevels of practitioners, let's say, to work together to support a family and to have ongoing support, whether they be doctors, whether they be nurses, whether they be dietitians. That was innovative, and it was strong.

Now, 10 years later, we know that there's something different going on in our communities, and that is that people are being terribly proactive with respect to managing their wellness. They want to have clinics in place that are in their community, that are consistent for their families, and where people can go to get a full spectrum of services not only for themselves individually but for all members of their family.

You know, my husband is 46 years old, and it's absolutely a struggle every year to get him to go for a physical, and I know that. I think there are probably a lot of people that feel that way. I have a nine-year-old daughter, and I have an aging mother-in-law and father. They all need different supports. What I want to have, through what we're doing with respect to family care clinics for all Albertans, is the ability for families to manage where those services are, what they need, and how they can access those services.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that that is going to transform health care. It's not pulling back on everything we've done before – there are lots of doctors and nurses and patients that are very satisfied with the work that primary care networks are doing – but we're going to continue to strive to deliver different approaches, again in a public health care system.

The other thing that's important about family care clinics is that they are connected to communities. They are based in communities, and they can respond to the needs of a community. You could very well have a family care clinic that had one or two doctors and perhaps six or seven licensed practical nurses. As we move forward, what we have in our minister of health is a person who understands health policy, who has trusted relationships with people in all aspects of health care, and who can begin to change the way that we deliver health care, and that's real change, Mr. Speaker.

I do want to speak for a minute yet again about an independent judicial inquiry. There's going to be more discussion about this in the next two weeks, just as there has been in the past two days. We as a government and I personally have been very clear as to what steps we believe need to be taken in order to ensure that we have an inquiry.

As I've said before in this House, standing up and saying something different over and over again doesn't mean that it's the truth. We know – and we've been very clear – that we introduced legislation to ensure that we could have an independent inquiry, that after we introduced that legislation, we said that we would wait for the results from the Health Quality Council report, which were quite comprehensive. We're now at a point where, as the minister of health has said, we will establish terms of reference for an independent inquiry.

I don't expect people to stop asking for one, but to somehow suggest that when the government announces an inquiry, it's related to anything other than our fundamental commitment last year to hold one would be wrong. I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when we move through that process, the important part of that is that we're going to be able to clarify some of the issues that have become so political in the past couple of months and particularly, I would say, in the last couple of weeks.

I listen to the opposition, to many parties in the opposition, and to many hon. members who in one breath criticize the Health Quality Council and in another breath cite the report as evidence that the system is collapsing. We hear many discussions with respect to the fact that there is evidence of problems in the system, usually through very select quotes, and then we hear that we can't actually trust the work of the Health Quality Council because they're somehow associated with government.

Very clearly, Mr. Speaker, the Health Quality Council report was tabled in this Legislature yesterday, and the reason it was done was because we passed legislation saying that that's where the report had to come. It must be a public report, and we're going to be honest and transparent about what the health care system is and how it needs to be improved. As we move ahead, we're going to be able to get clarity with respect to where Alberta Health Services can improve, and in some cases perhaps policies will need to be changed. We're completely open to that. We know that government has to respond continually to change.

The other thing that government has to do is drive change. That's what we're doing with respect to health care, Mr. Speaker, so that it's responding to the changing needs of Albertans. This is a government that's committed to delivering a health care system that's going to ensure that Alberta families are getting the services that they need.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to stand before you to discuss one of the most significant issues in our nation and our province facing our people not only in terms of financial expenditures but, more importantly, in terms of human suffering. I tabled an article earlier where I called it a crisis in the emergency room in February 2007. Subsequently the Health Quality Council conducted a thorough review in September 2007 to fix this emergency room crisis.

I advised the current minister, who was an EA to a previous minister, on the solutions. I along with many other colleagues put patients in hallways and in between two beds in a room as a short-term solution to a crisis where people were dying metres from care. The government implemented the short-term solutions, and they wrote a letter on letterhead, on PC letterhead, a promise to Albertans to solve the medium- and long-term problem, which is long-term care beds, family doctors, and engagement of front-line staff, an expert panel. Mr. Speaker, it's not an ER crisis; it's a health care system crisis that sits in the ER. True experts in this area call the ER crisis a canary in a coal mine. That's all it is.

Here we are again, four years to the day of the previous Premier's letter and commitment and promise, before an election.

Here we are, again, with a 428-page, exhaustive report – 428 pages – examining just about 800 cases of emergency visits, a small number of cases in Alberta amongst more than 1 and a half million cases, one small snapshot in time.

The conclusions of that report, one with respect to the system – here we are still despite the promises and the rhetoric from that government for years – are that half of emergency patients, the CTAS 2 and 3 patients, the sick ones, Mr. Speaker, waited 10 times longer, that 20 per cent of the patients waited 20 times longer than the Canadian standards, suffering metres from care, either in a waiting room chair or an ambulance stretcher, with the ambulance fleet waiting to get sick patients into the departments.

It states that this demonstrates that the system was incapable of responding faster to patients whose well-being was at . . . risk.

The safety of patients at risk.

Half of the patients who were suffering with pain waited to receive analgesia for more than 4.5 hours and 20 per cent . . . waited more than 7.5 hours.

Wow. Patients suffering, metres from care, for at least seven and a half hours.

Mr. Speaker, we on the front lines call these third-world conditions. In the Third World human beings do not wait for eight hours metres from care from a doctor or a nurse to get an analgesic, a painkiller. This is tragic and devastating. What's even more tragic and devastating is that still despite report after report, announcement after announcement we have many people at the end of their lives who spend the last few hours of their lives half naked in a cold bed in a cold hallway all alone, with the world walking by. It's in this report.

3:30

It talks about front-line staff not being engaged. It talks about how when there was a crisis, they actually broke a very broken system and brought in a system where staff were even less engaged. That led to what was called a potential catastrophic collapse of the health care system in 2010.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind you that a doctor's brother successfully hung himself in an emergency waiting room at the Royal Alex hospital. His name was Shayne Hay. It was September of 2010. Nowhere is he mentioned in this report.

A certain doctor's father waited for eight hours during this time period in an emergency department. His heart had failed, and he spent eight days in an intensive care unit, five days on a ventilator tube, and nearly died. That's my father. He is not in this report, only a small number of cases and a small snapshot in time in one ER. This was happening in every ER in the province.

Secondly, cases of physician intimidation. The colleague next to me spoke up and spoke the truth. Another elected member of this House, who was working for a region, fired him because he supported the Kyoto protocol. I stood up and spoke the truth. This government was a threat to public safety. I stood up here and spoke the truth. The current minister of health stepped out of the Legislature, called Dr. P.J. White, his friend and AMA president, and made very serious and slanderous allegations. He, in turn, called an ER department. The College of Physicians & Surgeons' registrar, Dr. Trevor Theman, and a psychiatrist showed up at my constituency office the following day, when I was doing my job in the House with 30 members and the hon. member, who is a doctor, right here. That's called intimidation, Mr. Speaker.

There were many doctors who came forward that that Alberta Medical Association supported physician intimidation. Many doctors have come forward and risked their lives and careers, said that this happens when we are just doing our job, Mr. Speaker. I was just doing my job as a legislator.

The third issue. I did ask a question. Doctors who I trust told me very serious information, and I asked a question. Dr. Ciaran McNamee and Dr. Tim Winton are thoracic surgeons whose surgeries were delayed because surgeries were cut by 25 per cent in 1999-2000, and these doctors have publicly said that they will not appear. In the Health Quality Council review that was recently done, they were not compelled to testify; they were not subpoenaed to testify.

I'd like to table evidence from The Lancet, a report dated January 8, 2011, volume 377. It's an internationally respected publication, which states that in Alberta the five-year survival rate for lung cancer from 1995 to 1999 was 13.8. In the years in question, when the Dr. McNamee and the Winton affair happened, the survival rate went down to 13.1 per cent. From 2005 to 2007 it was 15.1 per cent. During that time period in Canada nationwide the survival rate was 15.7 between '95 and '99, 15.9 between 2000-2002, and 18.4 between 2005-2007. In Ontario in those same time periods the rate was 16.6, 16.7, and 19.1. The survival rate went up in the nation and in every province. In that two-year time period the survival rate in Alberta went down, and we are still not leaders in the nation, Mr. Speaker. Here is evidence, in fact. This is not a part of this report. International, irrefutable evidence.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, let's talk about tomorrow. The real solutions lie in fixing the health care system. The real solutions lie in the solutions here. Number one, let's immediately get all of our seniors out of hospital – immediately – by investing in world-class long-term care, nonprofit long-term care, where seniors are not used as commodities to be sold to private entrepreneurs who support a political party.

Number two, let's actually stop our seniors from coming into hospital or long-term care in the first place with a massive investment in home care. Keep our couples and our seniors and grandparents together. Keep them together in their own community and their own home. We propose a $400 million investment – a $400 million investment – a massive investment. It's an investment because it saves on building hospital beds.

We need accountability, Mr. Speaker, true accountability, which I tried to legislate with many other political parties here in the fall of 2010, legislate true performance accountability measures. Let's take these primary care networks, put nurse practitioners and health care workers in there, and connect them to hospitals and to seniors' facilities and to the school system. Primary care networks. Great idea. But they're not resourced adequately with enough staff.

At the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, let's get every Albertan a family doctor. Let's guarantee emergency and surgery wait times and guarantee to get you a family doctor. Let's fix this problem once and for all.

With respect to the allegations I made regarding cancer treatment, the Premier, who is a QC, knows that nondisclosure agreements and patient files of thoracic surgeons are not accessible.

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member, but the time for this segment has now expired.

The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to take part in this debate this afternoon with respect to the findings of the Health Quality Council. I would like to spend the majority of the time allotted to me talking about what I think Albertans are really interested in, and that is the measures that are currently in place and the measures that are planned for the future to address some of the issues that were raised in the report.

What I do want to say, Mr. Speaker – and I do this with greatest respect to the hon. Leader of the Opposition – is that I want to remind the House once again that this report is the result of a number of allegations that were raised in this House with respect to emergency department wait times, with respect to alleged deaths of people awaiting lung cancer surgery in this province, and with respect to allegations about physician intimidation.

I sincerely hope, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition is not in these proceedings questioning the independence, the credibility, or the competency of the Health Quality Council in doing the work that they have been asked to do. I would like to be the first to say on record, at least in the course of this debate, that I think they have done an excellent job in thoroughly reviewing the matters that were referred to them and providing us with some very substantive recommendations that will guide not only changes in the health care system in the future but the development of terms of reference for the public inquiry that has been promised by this Premier and which this government will deliver.

I also take exception, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. Leader of the Opposition's remarks with respect to the Health Quality Council's response to his allegations about alleged deaths of patients awaiting lung cancer surgery. I'm not sure whether to interpret from his comments whether he's simply saying that the Health Quality Council didn't do an adequate job of review of this matter. I am not certain whether he is answering their findings by raising new allegations in this House this afternoon, and I sincerely hope that is not the case. I certainly hope he is not ignoring the fact that this review was guided by an expert panel that included some of the individuals I mentioned earlier in question period, and that includes, with respect to cancer, Simon B. Sutcliffe, president of the International Network for Cancer Treatment and Research and past president of the B.C. Cancer Agency.

Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Leader of the Opposition is suggesting that he has a monopoly on the findings and the truth with respect to this allegation or with respect to any of the other allegations and findings of the Health Quality Council, then I suggest we have a much more serious problem than we're going to have the capacity to debate here in this House this afternoon. But I will leave it at that, and I will not respond to the personal remarks that the hon. leader made. I made a very thorough explanation and account of my involvement with respect to his allegations last November in this House, and it does not serve Albertans and it doesn't serve these proceedings to spend the time recounting that once again. So I will not dignify that with a further response.

What I do want to talk about, Mr. Speaker, in my role as Minister of Health and Wellness, is what we are doing about the issues that are raised in this report. With respect to emergency department wait times I think the hon. leader does his colleagues in emergency medicine a disservice by not acknowledging their valiant efforts over the last year to 18 months, working in collaboration with the government, with Alberta Health Services, and with other stakeholders, to implement real solutions. Many of these solutions were alluded to by the hon. member both before he joined the Liberal caucus and after he joined the Liberal caucus. He should know full well – and I'm sure he does know full well – that since these allegations were raised, his colleagues have played a meaningful role in the development of strategies within emergency departments to improve throughput and to reduce wait times.

Some of these, Mr. Speaker, include procedures within the emergency department to move patients who have been admitted to hospital out through an initiative called the overcapacity protocol. That has met with significant success. Some of it has included initiatives in triage and in the waiting room area to identify patients who need to be seen immediately and cannot endure a lengthy wait and to also identify other patients who would more appropriately benefit from a referral to a family doctor or to a primary care provider.

As well, Mr. Speaker, we have worked diligently to address some of the root causes of emergency department wait times, which include access to primary care. This Premier spoke very eloquently about our vision for enhancing primary care networks and implementing family care clinics; in short, giving every resident of this province a place to go to access the health care system, a place where they only have to tell their story once, a place where there is a team of professionals awaiting to provide them with appropriate service, and many of the other features that the hon. the Premier explained.

We now have 41 primary care networks across the province of Alberta. We have three family care clinics, pilot projects that will be implemented by the end of March, and we have over 40 communities that have expressed an interest to this minister in developing a family care clinic as a viable, community-based, appropriate solution that will meet the needs of their citizens.

With respect to continuing care, Mr. Speaker, this has been a source of great debate in the House. I'm pleased to inform the House that we have increased the number of continuing care spaces through the leadership of the hon. Minister of Seniors. We are well on track to achieving our goal of 5,300 additional spaces over five years. This year we expect to again open over a thousand spaces. This is by far the most aggressive capital infrastructure program for health in the country that I am aware of.

A number of comments have been made about access to long-term care. While I would agree that long-term care is extremely important, what we are doing, Mr. Speaker, is that we are facilitating a shift away from the focus on institutions and money and providers to providing affordable housing for seniors that brings health care to them in accordance with their needs and as their needs change over time. In fact, I was pleased to announce our two first continuing care centre demonstration projects in Red Deer a few weeks ago. These are 100-bed projects that are under development by Covenant Health, 100 beds in each city. They will offer seniors the opportunity not only to age in place within a facility but to age in place within the same unit. We hope that, in particular, couples who live in these communities will be able to take advantage of these services within a year or a year and a half.

That involves a significant commitment of capital. In order to facilitate aging in place, it involves a lot more than labelling a bed a long-term care bed, Mr. Speaker. It involves a commitment to staffing, a particular staffing mix, a construction design, and a community that is willing to support seniors over the long term aging in place and being appropriately supported in their own communities.

This government will continue to lead Canada in the development of innovative thinking around continuing care. We will not be bound by a 1970s model that focused – well, it focused on attempting to deliver good care and was very much focused on institutions, the needs of institutions, and the needs of providers. We are focused on serving the needs of patients, residents, and families in communities in or near where they live.

With respect to the future, Mr. Speaker, the Health Quality Council report did talk about an additional strategy, which I'll be looking at very closely over the next few days, that is focused on more efficient management of acute-care bed capacity in our hospitals. The analysis, if members had a chance to read it, indicated that we are currently operating at somewhere between 95 and 100 per cent occupancy of acute-care beds most of the time. They suggested that 90 to 95 per cent would be a more appropriate indicator for this. If we take a moment to think about that, we need flexibility in the acute-care system in order to be able to accommodate things like flu epidemics, to be able to accommodate large-scale motor vehicle accidents or other disasters in the community. We need to be able to adjust our level of acute-care service as the needs of Albertans change.

I will be placing a considerable emphasis on reviewing that recommendation in the report. I've already had a number of discussions with Alberta Health Services about things that we might try, not just to add acute-care beds to the system, Mr. Speaker, but to make more efficient use of the beds that we do have. That requires a proactive approach. It requires the commitment of physicians and other health professionals and administrators, but I'm very confident that we can make it happen.

Since the allegations around deaths on lung cancer surgery waiting lists were found to be unsubstantiated, Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to comment on that part of the report other than to remind the House that those allegations were determined to be unfounded.

What I would like to spend the last few minutes talking about is the culture within our health care system, Mr. Speaker, and particularly the comments in the report regarding physician intimidation and other difficulties physicians and other health professionals are facing in advocating for their patients. I want to say again that while this government wholeheartedly believes that the policy decision to move to one health region for the province was the right policy – we are beginning to see benefits from that policy now – we are quite willing to acknowledge that the transition to Alberta Health Services was a very quick transition. We need to pay more attention to how to improve.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It saddens me to stand up in this Legislature and once again debate an emergency debate that has been brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. You know, it talks about: pursuant to Standing Order 30 he wishes to advise that on Thursday, February 23, he intends to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly "to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely the issues of patient safety as described by the Health Quality Council," and it goes on to what the report is.

Mr. Speaker, I've listened very, very intently, and I listened to the Premier, who, in my mind, was giving an election speech instead of talking about what's really important and what the issue is that we should be talking about, and then to the minister of health. The problem with the government that we're facing right now is that they're not talking about the issue. You know, it's where you were, where we are now, and where we're going.

I still hearken back – I think it was last November – to when I was questioning the minister on the physician intimidation. We have it in Hansard. We have it on YouTube. We have it on video. He stood up in the Legislature and spoke about the physician intimidation as a workplace issue. I have been in this Legislature a long time. It takes a lot to knock the socks off me, and I've got to tell you that that comment knocked the socks off me. My immediate reaction was: he just doesn't get it. He just does not get it.

I have been the health critic as a member of the Wildrose for just a little over two years, and I have to tell you that it's consuming probably 90 per cent of my time. I can't even tell you at this particular time how many physicians I've talked to, talked to in confidence. Some of them, like Dr. Parks, Dr. Maybaum, and Dr. Magliocco, have come out in regard to the physician intimidation. I've got probably another 20 doctors in my BlackBerry that will not come out publicly. One of them, that I spent two hours with yesterday, said to me – and he actually came to the press conference with us – immunity from what? The long tentacles of this government? They may not get you today, but they'll probably get you tomorrow or a year from now. That is clearly, clearly indicated in this report. We have had many heartfelt discussions and heard very heartfelt comments in this report in regard to how our physicians are feeling in this province.

I had the opportunity on the 15th of February, which was a week ago, as a member of Public Accounts to have the Health Quality Council come before us, which was very interesting because a week later we got the report. It was absolutely fascinating in the Public Accounts meeting with Dr. Tyrrell and Dr. Cowell when we were asking them what their major struggle was. Well, their major struggle is the fact that the government accepts their recommendations but that they don't implement them.

I found his comments very, very fascinating. When I asked both Dr. Tyrrell and Dr. Cowell about that, they shared their frustration, and they shared their concerns about there being no powers in any legislation whatsoever to follow up in regard to the recommendations that you, the government, have accepted. So you can go back to the H1N1 Health Quality Council review, you can go back to the medevac review and all of those recommendations – I can't remember exactly how many have come out – but the government hasn't done anything.

So here we are – fast forward a week later – and we have the 420-page report that I even haven't had the opportunity to read and which I will be reading this weekend because it's amazing what can be buried in a report when you take the time to read it word for word and start absorbing some of the things that you're reading. Even in the executive summary they talk about some of the recommendations that the government should do. Some of them are absolutely fascinating, and some of them are what I would consider alarming.

I went home last night after I'd been at the press conference and then had another meeting – we were in budget – so didn't get home till probably 9 o'clock at night, tired. I had the opportunity to sit and try and absorb what transpired through the whole day. I'm thinking: surely to goodness, Albertans are going to start waking up after this report. Contained in this report is some very, very alarming information. When we start looking at recommendations that are contained in this report, it's as simple as talking about: the Canadian triage and acuity scale in regard to emergency patients is defined as five levels of patient acuity, and they number them.

When EDs [emergency departments] become crowded it is impossible for these ill patients to be assessed in a reasonable time frame. In basic terms ED crowding occurs when the demand for ED services exceeds the capacity of the ED to provide them.

We had the problem in 2008. We had the problem in 2009. We had the problem in 2010. We had the problem in 2011. Here we are in 2012, and we still have the problem, and the government is not even making the numbers that they're supposed to be making, and we had a problem with that. So now the minister stands up and he says: "Albertans, trust us. We're going to fix this problem. Just trust us." And I'm just going back from 2008.

We go on in this report, and we talk about conclusions in regard to the waiting times to see emergency department physicians experienced by significant percentages of ill patients. The report goes on. "The crowded space, the excessive waiting times for care, and at times the suboptimal space available to provide necessary care compromised patients' margins of safety." Frightening. Frightening. We're in 2012. We're talking about Alberta, one of the richest provinces in the country, and we still can't seem to get ourselves together.

I love this one. It goes on to talk about: let's form a task force. This task force is going to go out and tell docs how to be advocates for their patients. Oh, my gosh, Mr. Speaker. When I read that, I thought that we have probably the best physicians in this province, and their job is to advocate on behalf of the people that they're taking care of. They tried to go through what was set before them by the government: go see your supervisor; then go do this.

Hence Dr. Parks in 2008, after extreme frustration, even writing a letter to the Premier of the province, comes out and says: Albertans, we have a problem. Now we're going to teach them how to advocate on behalf of their patients? Who are really losing on that recommendation, quite frankly, are Albertans, patients. You can have an orthopaedic surgeon who decides he's fed up and had enough because he can't get enough OR time. He has gone through all the proper channels, he has got patients that are waiting two years to get surgery, and he can't get them into the OR. So he finally comes out. We've had that happen. That's just one.

It's the same thing for a psychiatrist who is trying to advocate on behalf of his patients that are mentally ill, and there are no beds. All of a sudden he comes out and says: "We have a problem. We have no beds in this province. I can't tell a patient, 'Come back to me in three weeks if you're contemplating suicide because we have no beds.'" That's the role of the physicians in this province on behalf of the people that they're taking care of. They take the Hippocratic oath to take care of their patients, and we're going to establish a task force?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege to serve the people of Alberta. I've had the privilege of serving the people of Alberta in a number of capacities, and some of them actually are relevant to the debate today. I served on a hospital board before regionalization. I had the ability through that service to understand the complexity of the acute-care delivery system and the challenges of dealing with the varying demands, requirements, and needs within that system: the constant need when you're in that circumstance, whether it's a hospital, whether it's a regional health authority, whether it's a provincial health authority or, indeed, the ministry of health, and the constant difficulty of dealing with competing demands for resources and also dealing with many people who have the considerable ability and much passion for their service to Albertans.

I think we need to start by saying thank you. We need to start by saying thank you to the people who work in the health care system across this province each and every day, whether it's in an acute-care facility or whether it's in a long-term care centre or an extended-care centre or a designated assisted living care centre, the people who provide the very technologically assisted, significant, and invasive procedures that might happen in a cardiac centre, or whether it's the day-to-day loving and giving care that they provide to individuals who are resident in a facility or in their own home through home care. I think we need to say thank you.

We've had a lot of talk over the last couple of years about how destroyed the system is, how bad the system is. The fact of the matter is that we have a very good quality of life in this province, and that quality of life is very much supplemented and supported by the quality of the health care services that are available right through the system, whether it's the ability to support people living in their own homes, whether it's the ability to support people who are living in lodges or in designated assisted living, whether it's the ability to support people with health care services and long-term care, or whether it's in acute or subacute situations. That is very important.

I think we do need to recognize it because one of the things that has to come out of it and one of the things why I thought it might be appropriate for us to deal with the debate this afternoon and deal with the Health Quality Council of Alberta's report is that one of the most significant things that government can do – and when I say "government," I'm including in this circumstance all of us here in this Legislature as the Legislature is part of the governance of this province – is to provide assurance, provide assurance to Albertans that there is a system in place to take care of them when they're most in need.

When you talk to Albertans, certainly there are struggles. There are struggles at emergency. I've been to emergency with my mom. I've been to emergency with my daughter. I've been there sometimes for lengthy waits and have always been concerned about those waits, but I've also been there knowing that one of the reasons that I was waiting was because someone had a greater need than we did, than our family did at that particular moment in time. That's triage. The emergency system is there for people when they need it.

One of the things that we can give assurance to Albertans on – and I think this report does a good job of helping us to give the assurance to Albertans – is that while there are lengthy waits in emergency and while there is much work to be done to improve our health care system and to continue to keep up with the pace of growth in our population and the aging of our population and all those factors which continue to put pressure on a health care system, we can give Albertans the assurance that the care they need will be there when they need it. I think this report goes some way to assuring Albertans that some of the reckless comments of the last couple of years have no basis in fact.

In fact, what we have is a system which is a very decent system for Albertans. Could it be better? Absolutely, Mr. Speaker, it could be better, and it will be better. We will do a lot more. There's been a lot of work done on, for example, quality of life for seniors. There's been a lot of discussion that one of the problems for emergency is being able to admit patients to hospital and that one of the problems about admitting patients to hospital is having acute-care beds available.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark indicated in his comments that when he was providing advice to me as health minister, one of the things he talked about was the full capacity protocol. Yes, indeed, there were mechanisms put in place and processes put in place to help move people through emergency and into care when they needed it. Those protocols are being used now, and other processes have been put in place. In fact, one of the things that's clear from the Health Quality Council's report is that this is not a stand-in-place system. This is a system which has been improving and continues to improve.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, I would reference a couple of the recommendations. Recommendation 3 – I don't have a page number – says:

Alberta Health and Wellness and Alberta Health Services review the current need for long term care and supportive living facilities based on detailed forecasting created by appropriate models . . . to further reduce the percentage of alternate level of care bed days.

"To further reduce"; in other words, an acknowledgement that progress is being made, that work is being done, that the issues that we deal with on a day-to-day basis and that we are concerned about on a day-to-day basis are, in fact, subject to progress.

In fact, recommendation 6 in that same portion of the report says that "Alberta Health Services continue" – continue, Mr. Speaker – "with innovative solutions to support palliative care patients in their community setting and prevent, wherever feasible, the transfer of these patients to emergency departments." That's an issue that's been dear to my heart.

My mom had congestive heart failure, and we were in the hospital a number of times when she needed treatment, but it wasn't an emergency. The problem that I was facing was that this was not an emergency situation, but that was the only place to go for that kind of treatment.

Could we do better? Yes, we could. Do I advocate for changes so that instead of sending patients to hospital, there can be a different place where they can go for the kinds of treatments that they need, particularly for our seniors, who need sometimes specialized care, with frail skin, with the need for particularly trained health care professionals? Emergency isn't necessarily the best place to go. We can do some work on improving that, and that kind of work is being done.

It's interesting that the Health Quality Council in their report, in looking into a lot of these allegations that have been made and tossed around about our system not being there for Albertans or about the system being broken, doesn't say that you need to start doing this. They say that you need to continue with innovative solutions, an acknowledgement of the fact that there's some very good work being done between the department of health and Alberta Health Services and the health care professionals in the system.

Mr. Speaker, I think we need to focus on what's important to Albertans. Yes, there's work to be done in the health care system, and there will always be work to be done in the health care system, but there needs to be an assurance for Albertans that we do have quality care. People throw around the concept of third-world countries. I think that sometimes the people that talk about third-world countries have never been to a third-world country because what we have in Alberta is certainly not third-world country.

What we have in Alberta is a very, very high-end, technologically savvy, technologically supplied system with well-trained, very well-educated health care professionals, in some cases some of the best in the world, who are attracted to Alberta by the quality of life that we have in Alberta and by the opportunity that they have to further the knowledge in the area of health care. In fact, Mr. Speaker, we could talk about the fact that we've done some leading-edge research into health care and the provision of health care services in this province, both on the acute-care side and on the wellness side, and the reason it's being done here is because we have some of the best facilities in the world. We can attract some of the best people in the world to do it, and they bring others, and that provides an even higher standard of care for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I'm straying from where I started, but I really did want to emphasize that, first and foremost, we as legislators, we as governors, we as people who are leaders in the province should be careful about what we're yelling out there. Fundamentally, one of our first roles is to provide assurance to Albertans that care will be there when they need it. That doesn't mean we shouldn't be critical. That doesn't mean we shouldn't point out where there are problems. We should, but we do need to be careful about how we do that because there is nothing more important to most of us than the health of our children, the health of our parents, and, indeed, in some cases even our own health.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Minister of Education.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to get up and speak on this very, very, very important issue. The reason we're here, of course, is because we've gotten what I think can be characterized as a reasonably objective description of the current state of certain elements of our health care system. Notwithstanding what the Premier and other speakers have said in the past, I think that it is quite legitimate for members of the opposition to take seriously and find credible the description of the health care system that is found within the Health Quality Council report while at the same time potentially rejecting or not completely agreeing with the recommendations that flow from that report.

It is clear that the members of the Health Quality Council spent a great deal of time interviewing thousands of people within the health care system, so it is quite reasonable, then, that their description would be an accurate reflection of what's going on there. They did not, however, ask the vast majority of those people they interviewed for their specific recommendations on how to make things better. So while the credibility and the value of that report can be founded on the breadth of the surveys and the conversations they had for the purposes of the descriptors, the same credibility would not necessarily flow to the recommendations.

I think those recommendations were constructed after the fact, and that's fine. I'm not saying that the Health Quality Council itself doesn't bring a great deal of expertise to the table – of course it does – but it's completely reasonable for members of the opposition to take as a matter of course the very detailed descriptions as a legitimate subject of debate while at the same time perhaps having a different view about how best to move forward.

I want to be very clear. There are many recommendations which are found in the Health Quality Council report which I think are very accurate and which, in fact, in many ways reflect many of the representations that our NDP caucus has been making for many, many years. That's one of the points that I wanted to speak to.

I wanted to just briefly comment on a couple of points that members opposite have made and just respond to those very briefly. The Minister of Human Services spent the majority of his speaking time suggesting that it's our role as members of the Assembly to engage in public assurance. I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that were we to simply focus on engaging in public assurance to the exclusion or at the expense of passionately and thoroughly and constructively advocating for the change that we know needs to happen, then I think that we would not be doing our job. I do not believe, in fact, that it is the role of members of this Assembly to engage in sort of a 1984-esque assurance process for the public.

I think we always need to be prepared to subject our public enterprises to a critical eye and a critical analysis because that's how we get better. I think that the notion that was just articulated by the Minister of Human Services is something that comes from a government that's been here for 40 years, which sort of seems to think that the first priority is to kind of placate everybody and to make them think it's okay and that then we'll quietly work on teeny, little problems behind closed doors, but anyone who suggests more outwardly that there's a problem is somehow an enemy of the state. I think that that's why we run into the kind of problems that we've run into here.

Now, I'd like to move fairly quickly to the issue of the solutions, that I think are really very, very important, that we need to focus on. Clearly, we have a problem in our emergency rooms. Clearly, we have a problem in our health care system. The Health Quality Council very clearly identified that people's safety was put at risk, that the margin of safety was compromised, and that we are not meeting anything close to the guidelines and the standards that experts would recommend that we should attempt to meet.

Then how do we deal with that? Well, it's definitely a complex problem. We could all sit here, and if we removed our political hats, we would probably have very good conversations that would address a number of issues. I do think that what this report points to are at least two issues that we have tried to raise with this government repeatedly and which they have not addressed yet and that I think it's vital for us to talk about.

The first of those issues is, in fact, the issue of appropriate long-term care. As you know, Mr. Speaker, going into the last election, the former Premier committed to Albertans that somewhere between 750 and a thousand long-term care beds would be constructed. After the election that promise was broken, and subsequently a document that was internally generated by this government suggested that, in fact, we would slowly reduce the number of long-term care beds and that, instead, what we would do was that we would build sort of quasi-care beds that were publicly subsidized but privately run and that those would be the model of what we'd move to. Ever since then the government has clung desperately to the language that their communications folks have come up with around that: "Oh, we want to move away from institutions" or "Oh, we want to age in place," all those kinds of things.

Now, even if we take, however, the government at its word on this, I have to say that we are extremely concerned about what is going on in this area. As I raised in question period last week and as I raised in estimates last week, the fact of the matter is that this government is unable to tell us, of the 4,000 or so new beds that they're so proud of having created in the area of continuing care, what kinds of beds they have built. Are they AL 1, are they AL 2, are they AL 3, are they DAL 4, or are they long-term care? The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that there's a significant difference between those categories of spaces and the degree to which those spaces can act as the recipient of these patients who are otherwise in our hospitals accounting for the crisis that we see in our emergency rooms.

You know, the Health Quality Council says that we need to plan to have appropriate places, alternative places for these people to go. They say – I'm not sure of the page as I don't have the page numbers – under recommendation 1, under their analysis:

Reducing inpatient occupancy rates begins with accurately estimating the number of acute care and long terms care beds that are required in order to have enough resources available for the demand that exists now and over the next few decades. This estimate should include detailed human resource planning.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we have kicked about half a billion dollars out the door. We've built somewhere between 3,000 and 4,500 beds – we never know for sure – but we don't know if those beds are capable of providing the care that is necessary because our Minister of Seniors and his staff, even though I have asked them for three years in a row to describe to me the kinds of beds that we are building with all that half a billion dollars of money, can't tell us. What I'm saying is that with the very solution that the Health Quality Council is saying is absolutely critical to fixing this problem, this government has spent three years not knowing what they're doing on it. That is an emergency, and that has to change. I mean, I still don't actually think that the model they are proposing is the right model, but even if you think that it is the right model, you should be able to then describe to Albertans what it is you've just done, and that hasn't happened yet. That's a very, very serious concern, and it should be a concern for all Albertans, who want to see these recommendations followed and met and see the improvements that we're talking about.

The other issue that we've raised repeatedly in this Legislature is the whole issue of mental health services. Now, even before we had the elimination of the regional health boards with everything moving into Alberta Health Services, previously we had the Mental Health Board, and it was chronically underfunded. Being able to sort of count the amount of services through that Mental Health Board was an extremely difficult process. Well, it's become far more difficult now with it being embedded in Alberta Health Services.

Every now and then when we ask the minister of health about the mental health services, we have these cavalier references to: well, under the Minister of Justice we had the safe communities project, and we opened up 30 beds in Calgary, and we had a great press conference, and we had lots of people there for tea and lots of media showed up, and we provided 30 beds for people who would otherwise be in jail and yada, yada, yada. But finding out what the overarching investment is in mental health in this province – nailing Jell-O to the wall is a thousand times easier than getting an answer from this government on what they're doing to deal with the fact that we are grossly underfunding mental health services.

Anybody with an expert in emergency room care will tell you that that's the other problem, so what we need to do is . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for this opportunity to speak to the House on this important issue. I have to tell you that the reason I voted in favour of having an emergency debate was not because I believe that there is suddenly an emergency as such that Albertans lives are at stake. I would agree with your comments that perhaps this debate may not have met all the requirements of what this procedure is meant to accomplish. But I do believe that it is important, and perhaps it is somewhat of an emergent nature to advise Albertans on what truly is going on in the health care system, perhaps even more importantly what truly is going on in this House and how this very important topic of health care, that I think every single Albertan, if not on a daily basis then at least from time to time when they're found in need of using health care, finds very dear and important in their life, is being manipulated and used for purposes that simply are inappropriate.

Mr. Speaker, let me give you a few examples, some personal ones. I will be the first one to tell you that there is a great deal of room for improvement in the health care system, as there probably always will be. Yes, we have pressures. During the cabinet tour in the town of Athabasca at a great meeting with a number of physician specialists and support staff and nurses and other allied professionals they were telling me what the issues are in the system. One of the main issues in the system is the fact that Albertans have a difficult time accessing family physicians. We know that. As a matter of fact, I have to tell you that I'm personally concerned because my physician of some 30 years is considering retiring, and I will be in a situation where I will have to look for a GP.

I have to tell you one thing, Mr. Speaker, and I know this for a fact, and the reason I know this for a fact is because not only have I been told of it by a number of constituents and Albertans, but I have actually experienced it in my own family, on my own skin. When you need medical care in this province, you will receive world-class medical care in this province.

I'll give you an example. Just about three months ago my three-year-old needed medical care. At the time when it happened, I took her to Sturgeon hospital just in St. Albert. Yes, Mr. Speaker, she and I waited there for about three hours, but she wasn't truly an emergency. The only reason I was in that room with her was because there was no family physician available at that time to go to, so I had to utilize that service, perhaps myself contributing somewhat to the problem. When she finally got to see the physician, she received the care she definitely deserved.

Mr. Speaker, I would insist that the members of the Wildrose and NDP actually not interrupt me and listen to the conversation because it is after all they who wanted this debate to occur, but obviously they are more interested in other topics. I know that I'm not allowed to speak on the attendance in this House, but it's very tempting to. Those who are here, it would be good if they would at least allow me to speak.

Nonetheless, Mr. Speaker, when she did receive care, it was top notch.

The cabinet tour as well, Mr. Speaker, gave me an opportunity to get away from education issues. We visited the Calgary Children's hospital and the new trauma room that was put in for children, showing me not only the calibre of specialists that, I would say without much hesitation, the rest of the world would probably be envious of but the quality of equipment and the technology that is available there to assist children when they are in trauma. Also, the soft services, the support services and psychological services for traumatized parents who are waiting to find out what the results of an emergency surgery would be, were simply world class.

We know that, Mr. Speaker. We are attracting doctors to this province from all over the world, renowned specialists from all over the world, not only because they want to work with other specialists of equal calibre but because there is equipment over here which they have access to to do their research and to provide quality care.

Mr. Speaker, there has to be some balance to what's being said about Alberta health care. Is it perfect? No. Will it ever be perfect? One would hope so but perhaps not. Is there room for improvement? Yes. But I do have full confidence in our minister of health not only because I know him to be a friend but because I know that he actually cares. He lives in this province. His family lives in this province just like other members of this particular Assembly.

I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that what really concerns me is that the confidence of Albertans is being undermined. Situations where the Leader of the Opposition and his colleague, who are both trained medical doctors – those are the individuals that we think of and we turn to when in trauma. If a car hits you or me, you hope that there is an emergency room doctor waiting there for you to provide you with quality professional service. Now, to have that very same individual stand up the House, mind you not in the capacity of a medical doctor but now a politician, to tell us all in this House and, de facto, tell all Albertans that Alberta has third-world class health care really not only disturbs me but it offends me.

I would hate to know that somewhere out there there is an Albertan who is in dire need of help and prays to God to be saved or a mother or a father looking over a child hoping that their child will be saved, and they hear from an emergency room doctor that this province has third-world health care. That's simply shocking, Mr. Speaker, and unbecoming not only of a politician in this room but unbecoming of a medical practitioner, who should be working hard to increase Albertans' confidence in the system and pulling together with government, pointing out constructively how the system can be repaired, as opposed to engaging in such damaging activities and behaviour simply by tabling over and over and over again the same package of letters.

Mr. Speaker, if you were to look into this Legislature's archives, I bet you have multitudes of copies of the same letters and newspaper articles that the leader of the Liberal opposition has tabled because those are all he really has.

One has to ask him- or herself a question: are we here in this Chamber debating this emergency because there is a true emergency that needs to be resolved today, or is there really a bona fide emergency at all, or is this for political gain? I hate to question the motives of any individual member in this Assembly, so I will give them the benefit of the doubt that they actually are well intended but horribly misinformed, and perhaps that is what leads us to having to debate this particular issue.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that having had numerous discussions with colleagues in our caucus and particularly the minister of health, undeniably there is a hundred per cent commitment on this side of the House to work constructively with allied health care providers, medical doctors, and others to make the system as good as it can be at any given time and be open to criticism.

I think that the report that has sparked this debate is just that. You know, some members of the opposition – I can't refer to them now – would say that it's a damning report, that it definitely convicts this government in many different ways. The members of another opposition party would say that it's a whitewash, as a matter of fact, that it doesn't point out anything, that it is some kind of a cover-up. Well, the fact is, Mr. Speaker, and you know well enough, that if you have opponents equally upset at the report, one saying that it is too good and another one saying it is too bad, odds are you actually ended up dealing with a fair report that fairly reflects what the situation in the system is.

This government is not about to deny sections of the report. We will take it as constructive criticism and work with this report to continually improve the system. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that many of the comments are subjective. The Premier has made a commitment, our minister of health has made a commitment to further investigate those issues and get to the bottom of it and make sure that Albertans have confidence in their medical system, particularly at the most crucial time when they truly really need it.

I know Albertans are busy. They're raising families, and they're working hard, and they don't have time to pay attention every day to what happens in this House. But there's an interesting development, Mr. Speaker. For months members of the opposition were demanding an inquiry. The moment the Premier said, "Yes, we're going to have an inquiry," then this inquiry wasn't good enough. It had to be a judicial inquiry with subpoenas. The moment the Premier said, "Yes, you will have an inquiry that will meet all the requirements" of what she feels is appropriate and reflects, actually, what the opposition was asking for, now the request is that it has to happen before an election. Well, it's obvious that it will never . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I can always tell when the dart has hit dead centre of the board because I just heard it here repeatedly, and that's when the government gets up and says: "There's no problem, and if there is, we'll fix it. Anybody that's complaining about this has just got, you know, problems."

It's a consistent pattern, and after the number of years I've been in this place, I can speak to that pattern. As any member of opposition brings up issues, the first thing that happens to us is that the government members trivialize the issue: "Oh, that's really not," or "It's a labour problem," or "That's just not an issue," or "I've never heard that," et cetera, et cetera. Then they demean the questioner by commenting on their heritage or their ignorance on the subject or their presence or absence in the House or some other thing. So they demean the person asking the question. Then, finally, they diminish the problem: it's really not a big deal.

Where have I seen this? Well, I've seen this happen on electricity deregulation. I've seen it happen on the education system and teachers in the education system, full-day kindergarten. I've seen it happen around a savings plan for the government and royalty rates. I've seen it happen around health care more than once. It has become a pattern, and it tells me that this government is in big trouble.

They've all had very good speaking notes today. My compliments to the Public Affairs Bureau.

What did we actually get out of this report that we are here to talk about this afternoon? Well, what we got was: there is a huge problem with wait times in urban emergency rooms. That's in the report. It says that there's a problem. It says that acute-care beds are blocked by frail, ill seniors who need to be in a care facility with a high enough level of care to look after them. In this system in this world in this province those are called long-term care beds. They have a medical component to them that is co-shared between the government and the individuals.

This also talked about physician intimidation. Yes, it happened. Yes, people were intimidated. Yes, people were blocked or punished when they tried to advocate for their patients. And it talked about the fact that massive reorganization over and over again in the health care system in Alberta destabilized the system and messed up the authority and accountability.

Despite a huge elected majority, despite astonishing revenues in the bank, despite 40 years of control and the power to do what they want to do, this system has suffered under this government a series of crises in labour relations, in access and wait times, in cancer treatment times, and in a failure to integrate poverty reduction strategies, mental health strategies, and social determinants of health.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) I must advise that it is now 4:30 on a Thursday night, and pursuant to the calendar published under Standing Order 3(7) the Assembly will stand adjourned until Monday, March 5, at 1:30 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m. to Monday, March 5, at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 27th Legislature - 5th Session (2012)

Activity to February 23, 2012

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills with lower numbers are Government Bills. Bills numbered Pr1, etc., are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If it comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned a chapter number until the conclusion of the fall sittings.
