Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. I, too, share with all Albertans in wanting to make sure that we get to the bottom of this. That's why I was so pleased, when we were announcing the dental fee review outcomes on Thursday, to stand beside the incoming president for the association and college, who said that this is why it's important that we have a fair process to make sure that everyone is held accountable and, at the end of the day, that we make sure we're doing everything we can through the college and association to make sure that Albertans are protected and that best practices are guiding the industry as we continue to move forward.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that dentists have reached out to me demanding separation of the Alberta Dental Association and College into two distinct professional and advocacy bodies and given that such separation is required for a profession to be both transparent and accountable and given that the same dentists have also requested whistle-blower protection so that they can address serious gaps in the regulation of dental professionals in Alberta, to the Minister of Health: when will Alberta's dental professionals receive the same protection, accountability, and independent advocacy as professionals in Alberta's other health professions?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of professions which have both a college and association combined. The teachers, for example, come to mind and the nurses. There are a number of different professions where it works well together, and there are a number where they've been separated. I think that we have an opportunity as we move forward in reviewing this process and watching how it unfolds. The president of the association and college said that his college hat is the biggest, that public interest is always his number one priority. We'll be able to see that unfold through this review and determining the next steps.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the family of Amber Athwal is continuing to experience a full fallout from the tragedy and that providing care has become a full-time job for both parents and given that they are now facing a $2,800 per month bill to rent a wheelchair-accessible vehicle to transport their daughter to much-needed medical and other support services and given that this is yet another high-profile tragedy where Albertans expect their government to be there for them, to the Minister of Human Services: why is your department letting yet another Alberta child fall through the cracks by not providing enough support when the Athwals need it most?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I continue to be committed to working to support the family in helping them liaise with the system and making sure that we provide opportunities for Amber to live as inclusive a life as possible as she continues to progress in her recovery. We'll continue to work side by side with the Athwal family to do everything we can to connect them with the important programs and supports that exist both through the government and through the not-for-profits in our province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Student Achievement in Mathematics

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 2015 OECD PISA results were released last week. Alberta is known for an excellent education system, and this is something that we are all very proud of. However, my constituents were very concerned with the declining math scores that our students were receiving. To the Minister of Education: how did Albertan students do on these tests overall?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, overall Alberta students did quite well on the PISA exams. Where we saw that we needed improvements, we've taken immediate action. In science, for example, Alberta did the second best in the world, behind Singapore, and in reading we were third best in the world. We know that we will not rest, however, to ensure that we've learned from where we've made these marked improvements but also learn from where we can make specific gains in a place like mathematics.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Parents in my riding of Edmonton-South West view the education of their children as a top priority, and we are very concerned about the math results that are going on. To the same minister: what is the ministry actually doing to address parental concerns and improve achievement in math?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three points. We are reinstating the written portion of the diploma exam for 30-1 and 30-2. This was removed as a cost-saving measure by the previous government, and we believe that it should be there. We also are adding a no-calculator portion to the grade 9 PAT exam, which I already did for the grade 6 PAT exam. Finally, perhaps most interestingly, we are introducing a bursary program for current and preservice teachers to help cover tuition costs to help strengthen their knowledge and confidence in teaching mathematics in our schools.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that math and math skills are increasingly important in this technology-driven world, to the same minister again: how does the ongoing education review address concerns around math?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Well, thank you very much. Further to the announcement last week we are looking to develop new curriculum, of course, in all subject areas but specifically for mathematics and looking for the continuity of instruction, let's say, with fractions or linear equations right through the different grade levels. So you'll see continuity there, and people can move from one strength to another. Of course, we built a very large public survey and feedback on our curriculum in general, the largest of its kind in the history of Alberta Education. We have our working groups. We have people consulting in the consortium with public meetings. I believe we've built a strong case to build a strong curriculum.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

FireSmart Community Grant Program

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, when I toured northern Alberta this year, one thing I noticed was that very few communities had fully implemented FireSmart. Winter is here, the muskeg is frozen, people are unemployed and need jobs. It is time to get out there and cut trees and brush. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: what have you done to implement FireSmart, and can you name specifically in which communities?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the devastating Fort McMurray fire reminded us of the importance of continuing to invest in programs that help reduce the risk of wildfire to Albertans, like the FireSmart program. Certainly, Wood Buffalo has received $465,000 in grants to work on things like clearing out vegetation that can fuel fires and education for the community. We'll be working with communities to help with more vegetation management and educational programming. We've allotted more than $1 million to the Forest Resource Improvement Association of Alberta to allocate for just such programs.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, whereas sources indicate that the beast is sleeping, as in that the Horse River wildfire has gone underground into the peat of the muskeg, and will surface again at the right time, Minister: with so many people unemployed, what's being done to ensure Fort McMurray and other vulnerable communities across Alberta have FireSmart completed in time for the spring 2017 fire season? Not just Fort McMurray, all of the communities.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The safety and well-being of our communities and our forests are of utmost importance. FireSmart has made significant progress to reduce the fire risk in communities across Alberta. Many recommendations of Flat Top, including additional resources like more firefighters, are well under way. Again, we will continue to work with communities. We will continue to provide funding for FireSmart programs. The opposition's reckless cuts would have meant fewer resources for communities to prepare for wildfires and fewer resources to fight these fires when they happen.

2:40

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that the holdouts of forest management agreements like Tolko and Al-Pac are partners in making sure that FireSmart is implemented and given that the forest management agreements require 10-year plans signed off by the minister, to the minister: how many forest management agreements and plans are being held up, waiting for authorization to allow timber cuts and the continued implementation of FireSmart, and is the caribou management plan holding them up?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, due to the profuse amount of noise coming from the other side, I actually had great difficulty hearing that conversation. However, I have to stress once again that the safety and well-being of our community forests are of utmost importance, which is why we've continued to provide funding. We've allocated more than a million dollars to the Forest Resource Improvement Association of Alberta, which ensures that funds for FireSmart programs are disbursed across this program, ensuring that the government continues to work with the communities of this province to not only ensure the safety of our communities and forests but ensure those important jobs during these tough times. I'm proud of the work we do in supporting those programs.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Sturgeon Foundation Seniors' Housing

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For many families in our province access to services for our seniors is one of the biggest challenges. Whether finding affordable housing, independent or supportive living options, many families are forced to look outside of their communities. This is especially true in our rural areas, where the nearest opening may be in the city.

Many communities respond to this problem with a variety of solutions, but I would like to highlight just one of the solutions found in my community. Established in 1962, the Sturgeon Foundation is governed by a board of directors composed of officials from St. Albert, Sturgeon county, Bon Accord, Gibbons, Legal, Morinville, and Redwater. Together these are the supporting communities.

The Sturgeon Foundation is only one of the ways that these communities come together in co-operation. Currently operating at least one facility in each community, the Sturgeon Foundation is continuing to see growth. Phase 2 of the North Ridge Lodge in St. Albert began construction in November of this year.

Earlier this fall I had the opportunity to attend the Sturgeon Foundation's Better Living Fundraiser, where we were entertained by none other than former Senator Tommy Banks. This fundraiser saw widespread support from the community, and it was truly an honour to attend.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans owe a lot to our seniors. They built this province. As we look forward to returning to our communities, let us all remember that and do what we can to return the favour.

Official Opposition Sessional Retrospective

Mr. Loewen:

'Twas two weeks before Christmas and all through the land,
The NDP were passing legislation getting way out of hand.
The Dippers were all proud of their world-saving bills,
But Wildrose was worried about the jobs they'd kill.
They meddled with oil sands by installing a ceiling.
Our fragile economy, it will be left a-reeling.
They couldn't resist twisting their electricity act.
They had no good excuses, so they made up the facts.
Now, messing with something you know nothing about,
Can leave Albertans and investors with nothing but doubt,
Not to mention the costs that surely will rise,
Proven by an electricity price cap twice the original size.
Now phasing out coal has Santa upset.
Naughty children rejoicing, you surely can bet.
Now these young 'uns who have been misbehaving,
When they hear of no coal, they'll surely be raving.
The joy they feel will have them hopping,
But renewable options will be reindeer droppings.
Now the reindeer had heard what the caribou plan did.
Many forestry and other jobs, it surely will rid.
The millions of dollars they have spent on their cousins,
And killing hundreds of wolves, just to save a few dozen.
Now there were some things upon which we could agree:
Ukrainian day, economy, health, fires, and ABCs.
Now the elves are feeling all smug, of course,
As minimum wage the NDP did endorse.
But Bill 6 was tough for Santa's reindeer farm,
Because it will cost him a leg and an arm.
Elections financing act or re-elect the government law,
Has opposition parties feeling like they've been rubbed raw.
Nine million bucks wasted to sell carbon tax spent,
So no one was surprised when they were found in contempt.
Now, a big part of the problem is the people they've hired.
A history of anti-oil activism should have them fired.
So in order to bring sanity to this great place,
We need to solve the problems, right from the base.
So off, Premier, off, ministers, off, backbenchers, too.
Goodbye, radicals like Tzepporah, Karen, and Topp's B.C crew.
You're no help to Albertans because of the things you do.
Pipelines might be built, but no thanks to you.
[interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two notices of motions. The first motion that I will make is as follows.

Be it resolved that the following changes to

- (a) the Standing Committee on Families and Communities be approved: that MLA Miller replace MLA McPherson, that MLA Aheer replace MLA Smith, that MLA Aheer replace MLA Smith as deputy chair;
- (b) the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future be approved: that MLA van Dijken replace MLA Hunter, that MLA van Dijken replace MLA Schneider as deputy chair, that MLA Smith replace MLA Panda, that MLA Drysdale replace MLA Jansen;
- (c) the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices be approved: that MLA Drever replace MLA Jabbour, that MLA Pitt replace MLA Cooper;
- (d) the Standing Committee on Public Accounts be approved: that MLA Cyr replace MLA Fildebrandt as chair, that MLA Panda replace MLA Hunter;
- (e) the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services be approved: that MLA Orr replace MLA Fildebrandt;
- (f) the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship be approved: that MLA Hunter replace MLA Aheer, that MLA Hunter replace MLA Loewen as deputy chair.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to give oral notice of a motion for the next Order Paper, the motion being as follows.

Be it resolved that:

- (1) a special select Ombudsman and Public Interest Commissioner search committee of the Legislative Assembly be appointed, consisting of the following members, namely MLA Shepherd as chair, MLA Horne, MLA Littlewood, MLA Malkinson as deputy chair, MLA Kleinstaubler, MLA Woollard, MLA Ellis, MLA Pitt, and MLA van Dijken for the purpose of inviting applications for the position of Ombudsman and Public Interest Commissioner and to recommend to the Assembly the applicant it considers most suitable to this position;
- (2) reasonable disbursements by the committee for advertising, staff assistance, equipment and supplies, rent, travel, and other expenditures necessary for the effective conduct of its responsibilities shall be paid subject to the approval of the chair;
- (3) in carrying out its responsibilities, the committee may with the concurrence of the head of the department utilize the services of members of the public service employed in that department and of the staff employed by the Assembly;
- (4) the committee may without leave of the Assembly sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued;
- (5) when its work has been completed, the committee shall report to the Assembly if it is sitting. During a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued, the committee may release its report by depositing a copy with the Clerk and forwarding a copy to each member of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, is this the time for your requesting a notice of motion on a question of privilege?

Mr. Mason: Sorry? Points of order and points of privilege now? What do you wish, Mr. Speaker?

2:50

The Speaker: Government House Leader, did I understand correctly that you rose on a point of privilege during the discussion earlier today?

Mr. Mason: Yes, I did.

The Speaker: Would you like to do a notice of motion with respect to that matter now, that you will be dealing with it at the end of the Routine?

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would like to do that. How much information do you require?

The Speaker: Just the notice of motion that you will be speaking to a point of privilege, as I understand it, at the end of the Routine.

Mr. Mason: Yes.

The Speaker: Is that for the record clear enough? Yes?

I'm being asked, hon. member, the substance of the question, the point of order.

Mr. Mason: Three points of order, one point of privilege.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, the substance of the point of privilege.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the point of privilege is directed against the Member for Calgary-Elbow and his allegations that the negligence of the Minister of Human Services resulted in a murderer walking free. I believe that that transgresses the privilege of the House and of that member.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 210

Protection of Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Protection of Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2016.

I'd like to begin by thanking Parliamentary Counsel for their assistance with this bill. It wouldn't have been possible without them.

This bill is a culmination of years of advocacy dating back to 2009, when the Alberta Land Stewardship Act was introduced. The legislation limited property rights without notice or adequate compensation. Bill 210 proposes to correct this by amending the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and the Responsible Energy Development Act to ensure that Albertans will once again have the right to a fair hearing if their rights are affected and have recourse through the courts when their lands or interests are affected by a regional plan.

I look forward to discussing this bill with my colleagues in the House, Mr. Speaker, and ultimately winning their support for this important piece of legislation.

[Motion carried; Bill 210 read a first time]

Bill 212

Employment Standards Code (Volunteer Firefighter Protection) Amendment Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod on behalf of the hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, the hon. Member for Highwood is currently suffering a medical setback, but I'm honoured to rise on his behalf today to request leave to introduce a bill being Employment Standards Code (Volunteer Firefighter Protection) Amendment Act, 2016.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to begin by thanking Parliamentary Counsel again because without their assistance this bill would not have been possible.

I was surprised and disappointed, actually, today to discover that volunteer firefighters can lose their jobs for responding to emergencies. It's my hope that this bill will close that loophole and prevent anyone who volunteers their time and energy to protecting their communities from having to worry about whether or not they will have a job to come back to.

I look forward to discussing this bill with my colleagues in the House and ultimately winning their support for this important piece of legislation. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 212 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a peer-reviewed journal article which I expect to refer to in debate of a motion this afternoon.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a report submitted on February 4, 2015, by the Child Intervention Implementation Oversight Committee, which was formed to guide action on Human Services' five-point plan to improve outcomes for children and ensure action on priorities and recommendations for improving the child intervention system. I referred to this report in my question earlier today.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, I have the requisite number of copies of seven articles and letters from producers that refute the statements that the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry made last week when I asked him about agribusiness and the impending carbon tax legislation. Unlike the government, the Chicken Producers did an economic analysis of how the carbon tax will affect their bottom line.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies of the request for a private member's bill that I referred to in my question earlier to make it the lawful responsibility of adults to notify police if they are aware of a child in need of intervention through the following amendments to the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I believe we have two points of order. The Government House Leader.

Point of Order Interrupting a Member

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All of my points had to do with the disorder created in the House today by various opposition members who were loudly interfering with the answers to questions that they themselves had asked of the Minister of Human Services. I would ask that in future this disorder restrained and ended. It doesn't fit the dignity of the House for members to ask questions and then shout so loudly that they cannot hear the answers.

Mr. Cooper: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to rise to speak to the point of order, which clearly isn't a point of order. There have been some very, very sensitive and passionate topics that have been discussed in the House this week, including the death of children in care, particularly the case of young Serenity. Obviously, members on this side of the Chamber feel passionately about this particular issue. I know that the Government House Leader has a track record of trying to call the House to order, but clearly that job resides in your chair.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, I know that the pages get a lot of exercise when I stand up and sit down and, it seems to me, far more often than necessary. They're all very healthy people, and they don't need the kind of exercise that the other people in this room do.

However, I have from the outset reminded each of you – and I hear both sides of the House talking to me in individual meetings about your desire to exchange across the hall. Some might even call it heckling, but the requests seem to be a shared desire. My request is simply with respect to volume and, of course, at specific times the use of certain words. If I've learned anything in this House, it's context. Today and last Thursday was one of context, a very sensitive matter that I think virtually everyone in this House is concerned with, but short of sending a number of people to take a turn outside of this Chamber, I think that the responsibility for the volume and for the substance of your words rests with each of you individually. Noted, and I'm sure that as we all take this long-overdue break, you'll remember those words and begin to practise this as we come back in the future.

Does that cover two points of order?

Mr. Mason: That was all three of my points of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Okay. Was there a point of privilege that you were making as well?

Mr. Mason: Yes.

The Speaker: I'll seek guidance from the table. I have a point of privilege from last week that I would like to rule on.

Mr. Mason: Go ahead. I'm waiting for my notes. Thank you.

The Speaker: You're not ready to make your point of privilege now, hon. member?

Mr. Mason: I can, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, I'm being suggested that we should do it that way.

The Government House Leader.

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to raise this matter of the House. I'm citing House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, 2009, and I want to refer you to page 108. It says:

Members of Parliament, by the nature of their office and the variety of work they are called upon to perform, come into contact with a wide range of individuals and groups. Members can, therefore, be subject to all manner of interference, obstruction and influences. Maingot states:

Members are entitled to go about their parliamentary business undisturbed. The assaulting, menacing, or insulting of any Member on the floor of the House or while he is coming or going to or from the House, or on account of his behaviour during a proceeding in Parliament, is a violation of the rights of Parliament. Any form of intimidation . . . of a person for or on account of his behaviour during a proceeding in Parliament could amount to contempt.

O'Brien and Bosc state that members should be free to perform their duties free from intimidation. Today, Mr. Speaker, in question period the Member for Calgary-Elbow made a comment, a very offensive comment, which could impact the ability of members and specifically the Minister of Human Services to dispose of their duties. The member made a comment that the minister's negligence had allowed a murderer to walk free or was allowing a murderer to walk free. It is completely inappropriate for members to make such allegations in this Assembly. I would suggest, first of all, that the use of a murderer walking free presupposes the decision of an investigation and a court proceeding that has not yet taken place and could therefore have impacted people outside this House.

In particular, I am concerned about the member's reference to the minister and the impact that such a statement made in the public could have on the minister and his ability to conduct his business. If, in fact, the public believes this nonsense that is spewing from the Member for Calgary-Elbow, that his negligence allowed a murderer to walk free, then that in fact places that minister in a very, very difficult position and may in fact threaten his very safety, Mr. Speaker. There's an ongoing RCMP investigation. My understanding is that no charges have been laid at this point, and the investigation is very much alive. It is inappropriate and wrong to assume which charges may be laid and, in particular, to state that a murder has occurred and that it was directly the fault of a member in this Chamber.

Members of the Assembly are expected to be well informed of the matters of which they speak. Comments such as these could impact or influence the RCMP's ongoing investigation, including impacting witness statements or later in the trial, if there is one, jury decision-making or test bias, Mr. Speaker. It is completely offensive and inappropriate as members opposite ramp up the rhetoric in this place, each trying to outdo the other in making wild accusations and grossly exaggerating the situation and pointing the blame at one person for their own political benefit. It's unacceptable, and the statements of the member, in my view, represent a direct interference in the ability of members on this side of the House to do their job and I believe must be treated as a contempt of Parliament and a matter of privilege.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I will ask for your indulgence in deferring my detailed arguments until tomorrow on this matter.

I will just say today here that it does surprise me that the Government House Leader feels that a single MLA from not even a recognized party in this House . . .

The Speaker: Could I ask you to sit a moment, please? I'd like to consult with the table officer.

Hon. member, you may recall a point of privilege that was dealt with last week, and at that time the Government House Leader was asked the question as to whether or not he was prepared at that time. He did prepare. So I want to say the same thing to you that I said to him last week, that you either speak now, or you speak your argument tomorrow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will defer until tomorrow. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The House leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Without the benefit of the Blues and passions being high, I think it would be advantageous if I could also defer till tomorrow, but I would like to provide comment then.

The Speaker: Any other members? The House leader for the third party.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, sir. We would also like to defer until tomorrow.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I, too, would choose to defer until tomorrow.

The Speaker: I'm advised that the government has spoken in terms of the Government House Leader. I don't believe I have the prerogative of recognizing another representative of the government.

I'm sorry. What did you say, Government House Leader?

Mr. Mason: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. It's my understanding that you do in fact have that discretion although you may have been advised not to use it.

The Speaker: Well, I will go back and do further study, and at the time that I deal with the point of privilege, I will indicate whether or not, in fact, it is admissible for another member of government to speak.

Are there any other matters today, any other points of order? We've got a point of privilege.

Privilege Misleading the House

The Speaker: I would now like to deal with the point of privilege from last week. I am prepared to rule on the purported question of privilege raised last Thursday, December 8. I'd like to start by stating that I concur with all my colleagues in this Assembly who have commented on the tragic and horrible nature of this young child. We, I believe, all need to remember that phrase that we have heard, that it takes a village to raise a child.

With respect to the formalities of the purported question of privilege my office received notice from the Official Opposition House Leader on December 8, 2016, at 11:16 a.m. of his intention to raise a question of privilege under Standing Order 15; therefore, the member satisfied the requirement for two hours' notice as per Standing Order 15(2).

The debate on this matter occurred on December 8. The arguments can be found on pages 2486 to 2489 of Hansard on that day. In his arguments last Thursday the Official Opposition House Leader alleged that on a number of occasions from November 22 until December 6, 2016, the Premier, the Minister of Human Services, the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, and the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation made statements that deliberately misled the Assembly with respect to the tragic death of the child in care.

He stated in his arguments that the government led the Assembly to believe that it had provided all information vital to the investigation to the RCMP when he knew it had not been done so. He stated on page 2487 of Thursday's Hansard that the government "didn't ensure that the RCMP had the information until . . . December 6."

Both the Minister of Human Services and the Government House Leader made statements on Thursday outlining the timing of events concerning the communication of that information to the RCMP. The details of the events can be found in the December 8 edition of Alberta Hansard. Therefore, I will not go into these details except to say that both the Minister of Human Services and the Government House Leader indicated that the Ministry of Human Services sent the case file to the RCMP on November 22. In the words of the Minister of Human Services as found on page 2478 of the December Hansard:

Human Services received a written request on November 18. A few days later, on November 22, we provided the file, the password, a secure file. There were some issues. As of yesterday the RCMP has confirmed that they have received the needed material.

Hon. members, this is the first time during the 20th Legislature that a purported question of privilege concerning an attempt to deliberately mislead the Assembly has been raised. This type of question of privilege, which purports that members made a statement to deliberately mislead the Assembly, is treated as a contempt of the Assembly. Erskine May's Treatise on The Law, Privileges, Proceedings and Usage of Parliament, 24th edition, on page 254 states with respect to the United Kingdom: "The Commons may treat the making of a deliberately misleading statement as a contempt."

The second aspect to be noted is that there is a test for deliberately misleading the Assembly. The test was referenced last Thursday in the arguments made by the hon. Government House Leader, and it is found in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, on page 86. It's a three-part test, first articulated by the former Clerk of the New Zealand House of Assembly, David McGee. It can be found in the third edition of his book, Parliamentary Practice in New Zealand, at pages 653 to 654. The three parts of the test are: firstly, "it must be proven that the statement was misleading"; secondly, "it must be established that the Member making the statement knew at the time that the statement was incorrect"; finally, "that in making the statement, the Member intended to mislead the House."

In the words of the former Speaker Kowalski of this Assembly, which are found on page 1367 of Hansard from November 24, 2011, "Deliberately misleading the Assembly is an extremely serious allegation, which seldom satisfies the test for constituting a prima facie [case] of privilege."

Similarly, in his November 20, 2014, ruling with respect to meeting the test of deliberately misleading the Assembly, Speaker Zwozdesky quoted a 2002 ruling by former Ontario Speaker Carr. Those comments can be found on page 88 of Hansard for that day. The ruling by Speaker Carr summarizes the issues surrounding allegations of meeting the test of deliberately misleading the Assembly. This ruling also explains the role of the Speaker in adjudicating such purported questions of privilege.

On June 17, 2002, at page 996 of the Ontario Hansard, Speaker Carr said:

The threshold for finding a prima facie case of contempt against a member of the Legislature on the basis of deliberately misleading the House is . . . set quite high and is very uncommon. It must involve a proved finding of an overt attempt to intentionally mislead the Legislature. In the absence of an admission from the Member accused of the conduct, or of tangible confirmation of the conduct, independently proved, a Speaker must assume that no honourable Members would engage in such behaviour or that, at most, inconsistent statements were the result of inadvertence or honest mistake.

Hon. members, in the matter that our Assembly has before it, I must apply the test. The question is whether the statements made by the Premier, the Minister of Human Services, the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, and the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation were in fact deliberately misleading. I have reviewed the statements that the government made in this Assembly from November 22 to December 6 with respect to this issue. Hon. members, I can find nothing in these statements to indicate that the minister did not provide the file to the RCMP on November 22, 2016, and conclude that the ministers in question did not deliberately mislead the Assembly. There is no prima facie question of privilege here. This concludes the matter.

Orders of the Day. The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Before that, I would like to seek unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 8(1) such that Motion 511 be called at the beginning of Orders of the Day and that following the conclusion of 511 Government Bills and Orders be called.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Orders of the Day

Downstream Water Security

511. Mr. Westhead moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to increase its efforts to conserve and manage public lands in Alberta's headwater regions to optimize downstream water security for future generations of Albertans.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to move Motion 511. Before I begin, I'd like to start by thanking everyone who has written to my office expressing their support for the motion and those who helped me craft it. I'd also like to thank the members of this Assembly for granting unanimous consent to discuss this very important issue.

Mr. Speaker, it is a true honour to be discussing the topic of water here in the Legislature again today. Previously in this Chamber, I described water as a common denominator. The United Nations has declared that clean drinking water "is indispensable for leading a life in human dignity . . . [and] is a prerequisite for the realization of other human rights."

Mr. Speaker, here in Alberta most people would say that our water comes from rivers originating in the majestic Rocky Mountains, but, more accurately, as author and naturalist Kevin Van Tighem points out, water doesn't come from the river; it comes to the river, which is an important distinction that the motion we have before us is predicated on. That is, a river is a product of its watershed. It is the landscape that produces the water, which in turn determines water quantity, quality, and its rate of discharge. Therefore, the way we manage our public lands has a direct relationship to Alberta's water security.

The eastern slopes of our province are where nature lives and also where the water we all rely on begins its journey. Indeed, the gravel-bed river is the ecological centre of nature, and its resilience relies on the degree to which this ecosystem remains intact. Members can refer to the research paper that I tabled earlier today on this topic for more information on the importance of gravel-bed rivers.

One of the world-leading experts on water security is Bob Sandford, a constituent of Banff-Cochrane. Mr. Sandford is the EPCOR chair for water and climate security at the United Nations University Institute for Water, Environment and Health. For many years Mr. Sandford has clearly and unequivocally articulated that in order to effectively respond to a changing climate, we must take the domain of water management seriously; that is, climate change mitigation is about carbon, but climate change adaptation is about water, and therefore we must follow the water. When I spoke to Mr. Sandford about this motion, he also suggested that not only does the way we manage and conserve public lands relate to water security; it also relates to climate stability.

Our opposition colleagues across the aisle remain skeptical about the scientific consensus of anthropogenic climate change, but there is a significant cost if we were to accept the Wildrose's do-nothing approach. You see, Mr. Speaker, water and climate are reflections of one another. Management of one of these aspects effectively means we are managing the others. The energetic processes involving climate are intimately coupled with the water cycle. A case in point is the way in which our glaciers act as a thermostat for North America.

Alberta is fortunate to have some of the most significant headwaters in western Canada, with many of those located in Banff-Cochrane. This presents Alberta with an unparalleled opportunity to demonstrate leadership not only in taking action to confront climate change but also in terms of following land-use management best practices. These crucial watersheds also represent a massive responsibility that we owe to future generations, who will judge us by the decisions we make today to ensure their water supply is secure in the future.

During my consultation on this motion I had the opportunity to meet with Dr. John Pomeroy, who conducts his research in Kananaskis Country. Dr. Pomeroy is the Canada research chair in water resources and climate change, professor of geography, and director of the Centre for Hydrology at the University of Saskatchewan. The basis of Dr. Pomeroy's research is that alpine catchments receive and produce a disproportionately large fraction of global precipitation and runoff. Given that snow and ice dominate the behaviour of alpine hydrology, these indicators are especially sensitive to climate warming. The significance of his research is based on the understanding that the sensitivity of alpine hydrology to changing high-elevation climate is of disproportionate importance to downstream water resources.

Indeed, Dr. Pomeroy has demonstrated that the ongoing climate change in mountain climates has resulted in shorter snow cover duration, earlier spring hydrographs, greater rainfall as a fraction of total precipitation, glacier volume decline, ground thaw, and woody vegetation increase in many alpine catchments, with some alpine catchments contributing to a higher frequency of floods and/or droughts. A conclusion that can be drawn here is that a concerted global effort is needed to address how changing high-mountain hydrological processes will mediate the influence of atmospheric change in alpine catchments. Furthermore, mountain streamflow is shifting in timing and magnitude due to complex interactions of climate change with hydrological processes governed by vegetation, geology, and topography.

A valued partner in the stewardship of Alberta's mountain ecosystems is the nonprofit organization Yukon to Yellowstone, with its headquarters located in Canmore. Y2Y does this work in part because they know that Alberta's mountain headwaters provide water for millions of people, deliver important natural services such as flood and drought control, provide critical habitat for wildlife, and offer abundant recreation opportunities. Y2Y points out that while some of our headwaters and surrounding habitat are protected, many are not. Y2Y founder Harvey Locke and Alberta program director Stephen Legault would like to see the Alberta government increase its efforts to keep our mountain watersheds healthy and intact.

Mr. Speaker, as the world experiences and prepares for the effects of a changing climate, it is also critical for our continued economic prosperity that we ensure that Alberta's supply of freshwater can meet our future demands. To illustrate the importance of this in a global context, I'd like to once again turn to the work of Mr. Bob Sandford, who points out that the primary response to climate change has been to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Of course, while this is necessary, it is also inadequate by itself. In concert with reductions in greenhouse gas emissions we must also make efforts to adapt to the current and anticipated effects of climate change as it relates to water.

Mr. Sandford goes on to describe that the convergence of trends relating to both global food shortages and water scarcity will have implications for Alberta's economy. Climate change impacts can extend rapidly far beyond ranges of variability and can also become permanent. The term to describe hydrological patterns in relation to geography is known as stationarity. The lesson for Alberta in all of this, Mr. Sandford proposes, is that "we should take neither water demand nor hydrological stationarity for granted." In the future the favouring of virtual water exchanges in the form of food exports could greatly advantage Alberta's agricultural sector but – and this is the crucial point – only if we are able to address issues relating to land-use practices as they relate to water. Clearly, this is an important policy matter whereby we can position Alberta to continue to be a leader in agricultural exports in addition to taking action on climate change and water security.

To do that, we must ensure that our decisions are consistent with long-term water security in order to respond to a changing climate. "What is required, however," Mr. Sandford implores, "is proactive, well-informed, and visionary political leadership." Mr. Speaker, we have the opportunity to provide that type of visionary political leadership here in the Chamber today. Climate change is real. This government has positioned itself as a leader in taking action against climate change through our climate leadership plan. That is something to be proud of, but there is more that we can do to ensure that our province remains prosperous as our climate changes. We simply must ensure that Alberta's water future is secure. There's no question that our public lands and watersheds play a key role in determining water quantity and quality. Therefore, conserving and managing our public lands in Alberta's headwater regions with a view to optimizing downstream water security for our future is a critical and worthy pursuit.

I look forward to the debate on this motion this afternoon and urge all members to support the motion. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As members of this Assembly know, water security is vital to the health and well-being of Albertans and to our long-term environmental sustainability. The mission of our watershed resiliency and restoration program is to build "long-term watershed resiliency for flood and drought mitigation by improving natural watershed functions and engaging stakeholders in the conservation, restoration, enhancement, and stewardship of priority watersheds."

The grants will go towards such projects as the restoration of riparian areas, creation of wetlands, installation of rain gardens in urban locations, soil bioengineering, implementation of agricultural best management practices, and the increased use of beaver structures. This program has provided $18.5 million in funding to 35 projects which support healthy watersheds, many of which are located in Alberta's headwaters and help to optimize downstream water security for future generations of Albertans.

The program has supported Western Sky Land Trust's Bow and beyond initiative to meet with over 200 riparian landowners this year in the Bow River basin upstream of Calgary, which has led to 1,660 acres of riparian land being secured for conservation in the Ghost watershed; 4,565 acres are in the stage of negotiation and will be secured for conservation; and an additional 11,700 acres are being considered for conservation by riparian landowners. Over 12 kilometres of riparian lands are being restored and enhanced in the Jumpingpound Creek watershed and in the headwaters of the Oldman River basin.

Through Cows and Fish and forest research institute research we are assessing the riparian areas in the southeastern slopes, which will help us target effective land restoration and conservation in future grant rounds. Through the ALCES watershed simulation model we are identifying areas where conservation and restoration will have the best results for watershed resiliency. Further, our drinking water safety plans address risk associated with source water. Mr. Speaker, a healthy watershed is our first and, arguably, best defence against flood and drought. If appropriately managed, Alberta's natural watershed systems will help mitigate severe natural events and will provide many other ecological benefits.

Improving natural watersheds is an important part of our plan to help vulnerable communities like Calgary and others across the province adapt to a changing climate. These projects will enhance our natural environment and reduce the impact of both floods and drought. The director of water resources at the city of Calgary affirms:

The City of Calgary is pleased to hear that the province is moving ahead with additional Watershed Resiliency and Restoration Program projects in the Bow and Elbow River watersheds. We are grateful for the support Calgary received in the previous round of funding, which recognizes the important role riparian areas play in the health of the rivers, streams and creeks we all depend on.

Mr. Speaker, our government is working to ensure that Albertans have confidence that amidst a changing climate our most essential water resources are protected and managed for current and future generations. I think that regardless of whether we believe in man-made climate change or not, we can't deny that the world's supply of water is dwindling. Our lakes, rivers, and aquifers are getting lower and lower, and there is extreme drought all over the world, especially in areas that didn't cause climate change, like Africa. There are areas in Africa where people have been living for thousands of years, and now because of the lack of water their families can't live there anymore. It's not sustainable. The land is like sand or ash. Nothing will grow there, and it just blows away in the wind. What this also does is cause massive climate migrations, hundreds of thousands of people who have to leave their homes because they can't survive on their traditional lands.

Mr. Speaker, we are lucky because we live in a land that has a lot of fresh water. We have an abundance right now, but we need to be careful. We need to manage our resources properly, and I think that this motion speaks to that. I am very much in favour of it. It's a balancing act when humans are dealing with our watershed issues. It's something that we need to conserve over time. It's not just about us. It's about all the species that we have, to be honest, under our care in this province and in this country.

Thank you very much for your time, and thank you to the member for his motion. I support it wholeheartedly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Very pleased to rise in support of this motion. It's an easy motion to support. It's our lifeblood, after all. The eastern slopes provide all the water to Alberta and to the rest of the prairie provinces, in fact, and it's the source of all life and productivity, whether it's agricultural or industrial. So it's very clear that this really should be a higher priority than it has been for decades.

Peter Lougheed back in the '70s established an eastern slopes policy that actually restricted industrial and commercial activity on the eastern slopes. Somehow over time that has gradually fallen away, and we're in a state now where the designated areas for protection have not only become – what would I say? – thwarted or incompletely implemented but certainly misunderstood and certainly violated by past governments since Peter Lougheed. All manner of development has gone on now on the eastern slopes that not only threatens the quality of our water and the cost of cleaning the water, in Calgary for example, but all urban areas downstream of the mountains have to spend more and more dollars to clean the water because of not only more depositions from erosion but also from industrial and agricultural, even recreational use up there. Certainly, logging has added to the erosion and the loss of capacity to control high levels of flow or, as the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane mentioned, control the flow for drought circumstances as well.

Dr. Brad Stelfox is a neighbour and has been an adviser to me for a decade. He has visited most environment and agriculture ministers since I got into this Legislature and has presented his ALCES model, which is recognized around the world as a wonderful visual indication of cumulative impact over many decades of development and has helped us get a sense of just how the pace of our development is threatening not only our water supplies but our industrial activities and all manner of activities that we are associating with economic development. By failing to manage the eastern slopes, we are failing to manage our economy in a very fundamental way. It's a reminder that the economy is a subset of the environment. It's not the other way around. If we don't preserve the environment, we do not have an economy, and certainly we do not have our health.

Three levels of importance to water: not only the quality, not only the quantity of water but the in-stream flow needs, the so-called adequate volume that has to be maintained in streams and rivers for life to be supported there. Fish life, plant life, animal life: all of these require a minimum in-stream flow, which is threatened every fall. With the glaciers being limited further and further as years go by, there is a real threat, especially in southern Alberta, which has been known as the desert part of Alberta in past generations. The area that early explorers felt was uninhabitable and potentially desert has been close to that, especially through the Depression. We cannot assume anything for our future, especially with the unpredictability of climate change and the extremes that we can expect in terms of rain and water loss.

Those are some of the key elements of this. It's one thing, though, to pass a motion that is motherhood; it's another thing to actually put in place clear limits to activities and zones of development and protection against development. I applaud the hon. member's efforts to highlight this yet again. In my time, 12 years in the Legislature, this is probably the fourth or fifth time that it's been highlighted. It needs now to move on to much more substantive protection measures: bills, I would argue, regulations.

Off-highway vehicles have been a big issue in the eastern slopes that continue to be a damaging factor, especially in southwestern Alberta. But I think that on up the eastern slopes it's going to be a growing problem as we get – I think Alberta has the most off-highway vehicles per capita of anywhere in Canada if I'm not mistaken, perhaps not including the Northwest Territories. We are increasingly using off-highway vehicles for recreational use in the mountains, and it's causing very substantial impacts.

I would welcome the chance to move this forward in the next phase to some very clear guidelines, beyond what the South Saskatchewan River basin plan has done. It has made some steps towards limiting development and identifying protection areas like the park and wildland that have been established in southwestern Alberta, but I think it's clear that we have to do more in relation to better logging practices, designating trails for off-highway vehicles instead of letting people go wherever they want, wherever there's a trail, and designating recreational use, which is a tremendous possibility for our future economic development. Recreational tourism and the film industry out in the mountains have to be long-term economic drivers for us, which will have that as a side benefit, the primary benefit being, of course, protection of quality and quantity of water for all of us and indeed for recreational activities such as fishing and so on.

If any area of the province is absolutely dependent on better eastern slopes management, it's the south part of this province. We don't have a lot of water here. Most of our water is in the north. Most of our population and demands are in the south. It's very clear, from all the reports that this member has referred to and others, that we neglect this at our peril. There have been no new water licences issued since 2006. It's 10 years ago that we realized we'd reached the limit of our water capacity. Surely that's the writing on the wall that says: folks, we've gone too far too fast. Especially in southern Alberta, what has to be the primary focus of policies on the eastern slopes is water protection for the future.

With that, I'll take my seat. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to rise to speak to Motion 511 as brought forward by the Member for Banff-Cochrane. On the surface this motion seems fairly innocuous. Everyone wants to protect public lands, and water security is extremely important. I think we can all agree to that.

However, the concern of our caucus and Albertans beyond these walls is that unintended consequences are once again quite reliably rearing their ugly heads. While I expect that the member has the best intentions in mind – and I truly believe that – there are serious implications if the government starts to go down a road such as this, and that's because a motion such as this, if acted upon and turned into government policy, could have serious implications for the mining of metallurgical coal in Alberta. This is because the eight metallurgical coal projects in Alberta are primarily along the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains. I'm sure everyone in this House and beyond knows that there's a huge difference between metallurgical coal and thermal coal, at the feet of which this government lays many societal ills.

Metallurgical coal is used in steel making and is a significant export product sold around the world to economies that are growing and urbanizing at an increasingly rapid rate. Ironically enough, because metallurgical coal is needed to make steel, it's also needed to make wind turbines, which this government would so desperately like to see in every field across Alberta.

These eight metallurgical coal projects on the eastern slopes have the potential to generate between $10 billion and $13 billion in government revenue. Now, along with these dollars, which are obviously significant, these projects are able to directly employ between 3,000 and 4,000 people, and there's a potential for an additional 8,000 to 12,000 indirect jobs as well. Like so many Albertans who care about both the economy and the environment at the same time, I feel that we can balance these by enforcing very strict environmental standards while also creating the jobs that Albertans so desperately need now and on an ongoing basis. Mr. Speaker, these are thousands of good, mortgage-paying jobs, and these projects often form the main source of direct and indirect employment in their respective communities.

I just wonder if the member has taken the opportunity to speak with any of the companies which mine metallurgical coal or perhaps the Coal Association of Canada to inquire about the impacts that this motion potentially has on their operations. I'm wondering this, Member: what is not currently being done that the member would like to see being done going into the future? I know that companies that work in headwater regions are already subject, as they should be, to very stringent regulations, sets of them, which govern how they're allowed to operate in these areas. By stating that the government should "increase its efforts to conserve and manage public lands," the member is clearly calling into question what is being done at this moment in time. Has the member indeed consulted with the ministry of the environment? I would have thought that it would have been within her purview to act upon this already within regulations currently set. What additional steps need to be made that are not already being made? I think we need to know that. We all want to protect the water.

Again, Alberta has very strict environmental regulations. Albertans expect that, and they have every right to, Mr. Speaker. So I am interested to know what additional actions the member is calling for and what specific problems he is looking to remedy. If there are instances of compromised water quality, Albertans already expect that the Department of Environment and Parks is doing everything that is in their power – and they have great powers – to remedy these situations already. Now, these individuals, who up until May 2015 included an individual who is now a minister of the Crown if I'm not mistaken, do great work – that's an honest, sincere compliment – and I have the deepest of confidence in their abilities, as I had confidence in their abilities when they were with the previous government, to take action when it was needed and to suggest policy and legislative changes when they were deemed necessary.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, this motion – definitely, credit where credit is due – is well intended, but the problem is that it has potential to prevent the creation of thousands of jobs in Alberta at a time when our province desperately needs them while respecting the environment with the regulations that are already in place.

Metallurgical coal, as I've said, is required around the world, especially in economies that are growing at an accelerated rate, and this motion has the potential to cut all of that off at the knees, selling a high-quality product into a market that already has an increasing level of demand. That is nonsensical in my understanding, Mr. Speaker, and when I say the word "redundant," it is not meant as an insult at all. Some would say that the motion is redundant because there is all sorts of great work that's already being done by ministry officials with the capacities that they already possess.

So for these reasons and more, Mr. Speaker, the motion falls short. I can't support it, and I encourage all other members of this Assembly to vote against it and do something different and better on a different occasion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that well-managed land and water systems will help our communities and industries to adapt to a changing climate where severe weather will be more common. I've had the privilege to see a lot of the world's great rivers. I've seen how destroyed and how polluted the Chao Phraya River going through Thailand has been, how the Mekong is becoming a cesspool, and how the Ganges is already polluted. I've also seen what happens to some of our great rivers in the north like the Mackenzie River and how we fought really, really hard to protect its source and all of its riverbank.

Water is one of the most important resources that we have. Alberta has some of the most significant headwaters in western Canada. Protecting those headwaters will ensure our environmental and economic prosperity well into the future. Alberta's three top industries – oil sands, agriculture, and forestry – rely on having a stable and secure source of water. If we put our water security at risk, then we are putting our most important industries at risk as well, and we just can't afford to do that.

I think that all MLAs were gifted with a book called Living in the Shed, authored by Billie Milholland, which details the headwaters of the North Saskatchewan River within Banff national park to its watershed up to the border with Saskatchewan. I would urge all MLAs to read the book and to discover the importance of our agricultural, forestry, and oil and gas industries along this river. The book also details the fauna and flora, the important settlers, the indigenous settlement, and trading and trapping areas that have depended on the river. I personally learned a lot about the importance of this river through this book and how important the preservation of our public land and watershed is through the research by this author. I also know how important the river is to industry and how they value the preservation of water through the action that they take in how they build the industries along the North Saskatchewan River.

Along with three other MLAs I was privileged to go down the North Saskatchewan headwaters. The trip was organized by the North Saskatchewan Watershed Alliance Society. We were asked to meet in Rocky Mountain House so that we could meet our hosts and guides. I was looking forward to a wonderful day, drifting down the river in a canoe powered by the river and my guide. Instead, myself and the other MLAs had a wonderful day learning to paddle, ride rapids, learn about the currents, the conservation challenge for the river and its watershed, and the work of community groups who watch out for the river.

We learned also the way the river changes year by year and the erosion of the cliffs. The MLA for Edmonton-South West and myself had a very close call with finding out how cold the river was when a tree, whose roots had been eroded from the cliff, started to fall just as we were underneath. There were some jokes among the canoes. We were wondering if someone, maybe from the opposition, had been watching our canoes and had caused the cliff to fall.

The importance of the trip was that we learned about the history and the importance of its watershed and we discovered who had been the first settlers down the river. I know that I can speak for the other MLAs who were on this trip about how impressed we were with community groups' initiatives to preserve the watershed. In particular, Clearwater county has begun a program to limit the use of OH vehicles in sensitive areas by using the sasquatch program to indicate which areas were off limits to OH vehicles. On the canoe trip we also met with Environment and Parks staff who talked about ongoing planning to manage conservation of our water source and the river watersheds.

The motion will support local counties' and municipal governments' ongoing efforts to preserve the headwater regions in their area. It will also support the work of groups like the North Saskatchewan Watershed Alliance Society, whose mandate is to ensure our water security in areas like the capital region. There is also a group called RiverWatch that works hard on our river, working with youth groups and the education sector to make sure that all young people understand the importance of the headwaters and the river and how to preserve water for our use.

Mr. Speaker, I would really like to urge all members to support this motion and to support the government in increasing its efforts to conserve and manage public lands in Alberta's headwater region to optimize downstream water security for future generations of Albertans. I think that this motion is going to go a long way toward supporting groups like the watershed alliance, RiverWatch, Clearwater county, and all of the groups that have worked really, really hard to preserve the headwaters and our rivers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to Motion 511, brought forward by the Member for Banff-Cochrane. Our government is committed to building long-term watershed resiliency for flood and drought mitigation by improving natural watershed functions and by engaging Albertans in the conservation, restoration, enhancement, and stewardship of our priority watersheds.

Water is one of the most important resources, and Alberta has some of the most significant headwaters in western Canada. Our eastern slopes watersheds are the source of water for three prairie provinces. Water flows from the Rocky Mountains eastward to the Hudson Bay, with legal agreements between our provinces for how we share this life-giving natural resource. Water connects us all.

Mr. Speaker, we depend on our eastern slopes watersheds to provide water of good quality in sufficient quantity with suitable timing of flow. Timing of flow relates to the right quantities of water arriving at the right time rather than a flood of too much or a drought of too little. Water is the common denominator for life, and timing of flow is of special concern to millions of Albertans.

When we speak of headwater conservation, we typically think of water as being in our rivers. Yet the water in our rivers actually comes from the landscape. Precipitation makes its way over and through the landscape on its way to our rivers, and this water runs off the surface or percolates through soils. It picks up traces of whatever is occurring on that landscape, delivering the effects of land use into our rivers, where they can be carried downstream to millions of Albertans depending on this water supply. Whatever we do to the landscape, we do to the water. And whatever we do to the water, we do to ourselves. This is the reason for headwater protection.

Our watersheds are under increasing pressure to serve a growing population, a population that uses more water for domestic and industrial purposes than ever before while that same population frequents our headwater landscapes with a heavier footprint than ever before, a footprint that includes both industrial and recreational uses. Most of our headwater landscapes are found on Alberta's public lands, lands heavily used by Albertans in three main industries, lands also heavily used by Albertans seeking recreational opportunities. Public lands are held in trust by the government for all Albertans. Activities on this landscape matter, particularly as they relate to watershed health. The management of human behaviour in headwater regions has a direct connection to securing our water quality, water quantity, and timing of flow.

The government of Alberta is currently taking action to care for our public lands and, in a way, our headwater landscapes through an increased enforcement and educational presence upon public lands, an increased commitment of fire risk management, investment into campgrounds and other much-needed infrastructure on public lands, recreational trail repair and bridge-building, management of linear densities, recreational management planning, subregional land-use planning, completion of a biodiversity management framework, and ongoing oversight of forest management planning activities. Our government continues to fund the watershed resiliency and restoration program, providing $18.5 million for 35 projects furthering healthy watersheds, many located in Alberta headwaters, to help optimize downstream water security for Albertans.

At a time when climate change threatens to disrupt our reliance on known precipitation patterns, it is especially prudent to optimize the health of our headwaters. Well-managed landscapes with healthy watershed systems will help Albertan communities adapt to climate change, in which severe weather and unexpected precipitation patterns become more common. Protecting our headwaters and ensuring our future water security is absolutely necessary for us, the residents in Calgary-Northern Hills, the ridings downstream from the eastern slopes, and, in addition to that, our economic prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, I'll be voting in favour of this motion because protecting our land and water is the right thing to do for ourselves and for future generations. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to this, and thank you to the Member for Banff-Cochrane for bringing it forward.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Motion 511 reads:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to increase its efforts to conserve and manage public lands in Alberta's headwater regions to optimize downstream water security for future generations of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, we certainly agree that managing water is a very important issue and that we can always strive to be more effective in how we manage our water. Now, the suggestion from the Member for Banff-Cochrane that the Wildrose has a do-nothing approach on this matter couldn't be further from the truth. In fact, it is of such great importance that it is something that the Wildrose has always stood for.

I will be only too happy to outline how so; namely, our caucus's existing environment policy, which includes the following points under the heading Clean Water:

- Implement independently conducted water quality testing for all industrial projects to ensure downstream water quality is unaffected . . .
- Ensure all groundwater connected to fracking and other drilling is independently tested before and after to ensure landowners are not adversely affected
- Develop a comprehensive on and off-stream fresh water plan to ensure Alberta's agricultural producers, developers and residents have access to the clean water needed for quality of life and economic growth
- Promote improved water conservation by eliminating regulations that make it impossible for developers to implement new conservation technologies such as grey water recycling for residential or commercial use

- Design and implement a “Water Use Strategy” that ensures adequate supplies of water for food production and enables our small urban and rural communities to develop and grow as they see fit
- Ensure that all Alberta municipalities are able to provide safe and reliable drinking water to their population and that proper sewage treatment practices are followed.

Now, the crux of the motion is to urge the government to optimize downstream water security, and that’s good. In our caucus quite a few MLAs are active in the outdoors. We have a love of fishing and hunting and believe that, like us, the tens of thousands of Albertans that support fish and wildlife through the purchase of hunting and fishing licences are strong stewards of the land. This point has been reiterated by government members many times over the last 18 months as well. All of us know that protecting our headwaters is not only crucial for maintaining healthy fisheries and their ecosystems but for clean water for our communities and the businesses that rely on it.

While our position seems to closely align with what I believe the member opposite is trying to achieve with this motion, I would be remiss if I was to neglect bringing up some of our concerns. Several of my colleagues have expressed a certain unease with some of the vagueness in the language in this motion, in particular where the motion speaks to government increasing “its efforts to conserve and manage public lands in Alberta’s headwater regions.”

As I said at the outset, we can always improve the effectiveness of our efforts, but too often with this government their approach to every issue is to throw red tape and more bureaucrats at it with no regard for what it does to kill jobs in Alberta. I’ll note at the outset that, in general, current environmental regulations, the Alberta land-use framework, and even the federal Fisheries Act are world leading, and I would certainly like to hear what exactly this member finds deficient.

Now, if you look at the Alberta Water Act, it says:

- 2 The purpose of this Act is to support and promote the conservation and management of water, including the wise allocation and use of water, while recognizing
  - (a) the need to manage and conserve water resources to sustain our environment and to ensure a healthy environment and high quality of life in the present and the future;
  - (b) the need for Alberta’s economic growth and prosperity;
  - (c) the need for an integrated approach and comprehensive, flexible administration and management systems based on sound planning, regulatory actions and market forces;
  - (d) the shared responsibility of all residents of Alberta for the conservation and wise use of water and their role in providing advice with respect to water management planning and decision-making;
  - (e) the importance of working co-operatively with the governments of other jurisdictions with respect to trans-boundary water management;
  - (f) the important role of comprehensive and responsive action in administering this Act.

That’s all under the Alberta Water Act.

Now, the federal Fisheries Act says this on ecologically significant areas.

- (1.1) If a person proposes to carry on any work, undertaking or activity in any ecologically significant area, the person shall, on the request of the minister – or without request in the manner and circumstances prescribed by regulations made under paragraph 3(a) – provide the Minister with any prescribed material and other information relating to the work, undertaking or activity, or to the water, place or fish habitat that is or is likely to be affected by the work, undertaking, or activity.

Now, in the same federal Fisheries Act under the powers of the minister:

(2) If, after reviewing any material or information provided under subsection (1) or (1.1) and affording the persons who provided it a reasonable opportunity to make representations, the Minister or a person designated by the Minister is of the opinion that an offence under subsection (40)(1) or (2) is being or is likely to be committed, or that the work, undertaking or activity results or is likely to result in harm to fish in an ecologically significant area, the Minister or the designated person may, by order, subject to regulations made under paragraph 3(b),

- (a) require any modifications or additions to the work, undertaking or activity or any modifications to . . . plans, specifications, procedures or schedules relating to it that the Minister or the designated person considers necessary in the circumstances, or
- (b) restrict the carrying on of the work, undertaking or activity.

The minister or designated person may also direct the closing of the work or undertaking or the ending of the activity for any period that the Minister or designated person considers necessary in the circumstances.

So we can clearly see there’s already a pretty good amount of regulation and restrictions on things happening that could affect the water in Alberta. Yes, we can always be more effective, but effectiveness means doing better for both the environment and jobs. We know how crucial access to water is for our farming and ranching communities. Any changes that may come forth from this motion cannot mean breaking existing grazing leases or water licences, and it must be said that we will fight hard against any attempt by the NDP government to take any such action.

While on the subject of business I should point out that we also have a tremendous amount of resources in our mountains, and there is no reason we can’t develop them responsibly and be responsible stewards of our headwaters. Let me be perfectly clear. I hope this motion does not mean any kind of future blanket ban on development near the headwaters, be it agriculture, forestry, or industrial. There must be a proper balance between the environment and Alberta’s economy at all times. This government is already killing jobs every time they announce a new economic policy, and I certainly hope that any policies developed from this motion are cognizant of that fact.

Our forests in particular need a responsible management plan, and that plan includes harvesting trees even if it is a select harvest in conjunction with FireSmart or even pine beetle strategies. Protecting a forest from responsible harvesting is not protecting a forest. It’s quite the opposite. The pine beetle population in B.C. exploded because it was in a protected forest. The trees got old and weak and were vulnerable to infestation. In addition, our mountain forests are vulnerable to forest fires. Old forests that are not harvested will burn eventually and will burn big, not only just as we’ve seen in that fire in Fort McMurray and in Slave Lake but in the eastern slopes near Hillcrest and the Crowsnest Pass. That happened not too long ago also. This could be devastating to many of our most vulnerable areas, and forestry should be based on proper modelling and not ideology. As we have seen in the Castle area not far from the Crowsnest Pass, we have a case of logging companies being forced out of contracts with little recourse at the whim of government.

Any future strategies should not mean turning wilderness areas into parks. We have a lot of protected park areas in our mountains.

Companies also need to have access to parts of the mountains to responsibly develop our natural resources. For instance, the Alberta export of metallurgical coal is some of the best in the world. It's essential for steel and an export that we need to responsibly develop. There are concerns that this motion is but a prelude to further actions against Alberta's already reeling coal industry. I hope that this is not the member's intent.

Development of resources and the environment can occur in concert. In fact, a business in my area is exploring new techniques to make sure that in any encroachment sensitive ecosystems are impacted in a less intrusive way. We can develop resources and maintain healthy headwaters. The place that I've discussed, I'm talking about here is the Evergreen Centre for Resource Excellence and Innovation. Here they have a part of the area just outside Grande Prairie set apart just for studying the effects of industry on stream beds, on wetlands, and on soils.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who would like to speak to Motion 511?

Seeing and hearing none, I would offer the Member for Banff-Cochrane five minutes to close debate.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In closing debate today, I'd like to thank members for their input on this critical policy issue. I'd also like to thank all of those who helped me fully appreciate the way that land-use practices affect water quantity and quality and assisted me in crafting this motion. These are people like Sharon MacDonald, Kevin Van Tighem, Bob Sandford, Dr. John Pomeroy, Harvey Locke, Stephen Legault, Gord MacMahon, Bill Motherwell, Heinz and Marilyn Unger, Fritz and Hanna Seidel, Hugh Pepper, Judy Stewart, and groups like Yukon to Yellowstone, the Nature Conservancy, the Ghost Watershed Alliance Society, the Bragg Creek Environmental Coalition, the Elbow River Watershed Partnership, and all of the others who I haven't mentioned who have made water their life's work. These individuals and groups worked tirelessly to raise awareness that the way in which we manage our landscape affects the common denominator that is water.

Just in response to some of the comments that were brought up during the debate today, people asking what kinds of things that I would like to see as a result of this motion, I can name two that are quite salient. I think one would be the protection of Westslope cutthroat trout, which are an endangered species, and there is a federal protection order for those fish. You know, some of the practices that occur in our headwaters can place those fish at risk, and I would like to make sure that we don't lose another species that's at risk here.

Another one is that there is an international goal for countries to reach 17 per cent of their land base as protected spaces. Alberta is quite short of that. We know we're doing good work, and we have a little ways to go. Looking at some past reports, I'm surprised to hear the Member for Calgary-Lougheed say that he won't support the motion, but it's not surprising to me because the action of his government, when they were in government, was described as dismal when it came to conserving protected spaces, so we've got a long way to go there. I know that the previous government really watered down their commitment to protecting spaces, but we've shown action on this file. We've protected the Castle wilderness area, and there are lots of other activities that we can make sure that we're doing to add and work towards that 17 per cent goal.

I'd like to just talk about the way that water is a prerequisite for a strong economy. I know the Member for Calgary-Mountain View pointed this out, that if we're not managing our water, we're not managing our economy. I think that's a very powerful statement, Mr. Speaker. One example that we can turn to here in Alberta that demonstrates that quite clearly is the example of the town of Okotoks. Now, I know that the town of Okotoks has done a very good job in managing the water that they've got, but they have reached the limit of their water allocation. They're worried that their economy can't grow, so they've taken real concrete steps to address this issue. They're looking at solutions, and I applaud them in their work, but this is a situation that illustrates to us that if water is restricted, we can't grow our economy. That's a state that I don't want to see Alberta in, which is why I proposed this motion. I'm hoping that down the road, 100 years from now, someone will say: Hey, I'm glad we took water seriously because our economy and our environment are better for it today.

I also think that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View mentioned the side benefits of this motion, and one of those is tourism. Tourism is one of our top economic drivers in the province, and the type of places that tourists like to go are these protected spaces and national parks and provincial parks. This is something that we can be very proud of, Mr. Speaker, that we have these places that people from all across the world want to come to Alberta to see. Not only does this help in terms of water, but it also helps our economy in terms of tourism.

With all that said, Mr. Speaker, I think we've had some really good debate here today. I'm a little bit surprised to see that the Official Opposition isn't going to be supporting the motion, but it doesn't surprise me because the Leader of the Official Opposition when under Stephen Harper – they took away protection from hundreds of lakes and rivers across Canada. It doesn't really surprise me that they don't take water seriously, and there's certainly not any kind of advice that I want to take from them.

Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for the debate today. I look forward to voting on this.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 511 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 32 Credit Union Amendment Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills on behalf.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to move third reading of Bill 32, the Credit Union Amendment Act, 2016.

As noted by other hon. members in this House's previous readings, this legislation was developed using input from stakeholders of Alberta's credit union system. This government is committed to ensuring that Alberta's credit unions have the business tools necessary for their work and to encouraging them to support small and medium-sized businesses in their communities.

By modernizing aspects of our province's credit union legislation, consumer choice will be expanded for regular Albertans. Membership rules are being clarified to create more opportunity for small and medium-sized businesses to access loans, which supports job creators and encourages economic growth in our province. Increasing transparency, facilitating access to information, and enabling all shareholders to better influence the direction of credit unions will enhance governance and accountability within the credit union system.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Finally, some technical changes are being proposed to update provisions and promote the flexibility necessary to keep the framework current. These changes have the support of Alberta's credit union system and are generally consistent with best practices and directions in other jurisdictions.

In closing, our credit unions are a vital part of Alberta's economy, and these amendments will modernize and strengthen this legislation so that these important institutions can continue to be a viable alternative for Albertans. I would ask all members of this House to support third reading of this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, I will ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills to close debate.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: I move to close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 35 Fair Elections Financing Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move an amendment to Bill 35, the Fair Elections Financing Act, and I have the appropriate number of copies to circulate before I speak to it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Your amendment will be referred to as A9.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Let me know when you'd like me to proceed.

The Deputy Chair: Please go ahead.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that the bill be amended in section 43 in the proposed section 44.1 by striking out subsection (1)(c)(i) and substituting the following:

- (i) the production of an election advertising message or political advertising message in the format in which the message is to be transmitted, and by striking out subsection (1)(d)(iv) and substituting the following:

- (iv) the transmission by a person, corporation or group, on a non-commercial basis on the Internet, of the political views of that person, corporation or group, next, by striking out subsection (1)(g)(iv) and substituting the following:

and by adding the following after subsection (2):

- (3) The Chief Electoral Officer may issue guidelines respecting the application of this Part and shall publish any guidelines on the Chief Electoral Officer's website.

Madam Chair, I think this amendment is helpful for clarifying what should be captured under third-party advertising by doing three things. First, the amendment would clarify that the definition of production of election advertising should be focused on expenses that are directly associated with the making of a third-party political or election advertisement. The reason I believe this is necessary is that I don't think we want to hamper organizations who perform work that is not meant to be captured. Civil society is important, public discourse is important, and these things should be protected. I also believe in making sure that we provide as much clarity as possible within our legislation, and I hope the government will agree with this approach.

Second, this amendment offers clarity to ensure that third-party advertising does not include the noncommercial transmission of political views expressed by individuals or organizations on the Internet, where there is no paid expense. We don't want to inhibit that. We know that regulating third-party advertising helps improve transparency and confidence in the electoral system. However, we do not want to restrict individuals or organizations from engaging in public discourse through the Internet where election or political advertising is not in fact taking place. Some may argue that this intent is already clear in legislation, but I would submit to the House that we should be as strong and clear as possible in our language. This amendment clarifies that we intend to capture paid advertising where the third party, an individual or organization, is engaged in an advertising buy that comes in an expense, whether the expense is in-house or from a hired individual or firm.

The third rationale, Madam Chair, is that in order to ensure that third parties understand fully the letter, spirit, and intent of the legislation, I'm proposing that we make a change to allow the Chief Electoral Officer to issue guidelines with respect to this part from time to time. This will follow the common practice in federal elections financing, which allows the Chief Electoral Officer to work with the parties and issue important guidelines from time to time with respect to the application of these new rules.

Madam Chair, these are big changes, and I believe these amendments will help to ensure the smooth transition to a more transparent system, which will provide clarity and balance to our electoral system and public discourse. I encourage all members to consider this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to amendment A9? The hon. Member for Rimbe- Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to rise today. Actually, I probably have a couple of questions for the hon. member through you about his amendment. I do think that this emphasizes the concern that the opposition has had the entire way through this piece of legislation. As you know, Madam Chair, the work that the government members did during the Ethics and Accountability Committee to try to bring forward amendments to be able to get their campaign expenses paid for and the party expenses paid for ultimately derailed the entire process before it could complete its work on third-party advertisement.

Now, third-party advertisement was one of the most important things that the committee was undertaking. There are some constitutional issues with that. As well, there are some clear examples across the country and across North America, for that matter, where things like PACs have had some serious issues that we have to make sure that we get right. I think the member is touching on some of those areas that it would've been nice to have seen completed to make sure that we did get it right and that we were understanding the issue completely.

I probably will have some more to say in a second, but first I would like to ask through you, Madam Chair, to the member if the intent of this is to make sure that individuals could protect their right to free speech on concerns they have through things like social media and mechanisms that they may have on this. First, I would support that intent, and I believe the committee made it clear that they support that intent. But my concern in the way that I'm reading this right now – and I've only had it for a short time – is that this would allow a PAC to complete their $150,000 cap on billing content of some sort for a general election, let's say, and then we allow something like a trade union or a corporation to be able to unlimitedly use social media and their resources to push that content out across the sphere, which I think would be counter-productive to what we're trying to do on third-party advertising.

If the member is trying to make sure, again, that an individual or an individual corporation could share something on Facebook or say that they agree with something, that would be freedom of speech, something that I think we should protect. But the way I'm first reading this right now, Madam Chair, is that this will leave a bit of a loophole and allow trade unions and corporations to be able to use their financial resources, et cetera, to push this out on social media.

So I'd like to get a little feedback on that, and I'll probably have a few more comments to make after that, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I'm puzzled as to why that would be the interpretation. I think it's relatively clear in the amendment that what we're trying to do is ensure a level playing field for all in a nonwrit period, especially, to express themselves, their views, their political views, their economic views freely. This amends the original bill in order to ensure that we include corporations and not exclude them from their rightful role in society, again limiting that role in the writ period but allowing it in the prewrit period so that everyone is indeed on the same level playing field, social media notwithstanding.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to the proposed amendment to the Fair Elections Financing Act. Let me just begin by saying that I appreciate the Member for Calgary-Mountain View's amendment and consideration on this. This bill, as we know, aims to provide a system of transparency and fairness to the electoral system, and in that spirit I believe this amendment actually helps clarify what will be considered an advertising expense and what will not. I think, as all of us understand, the progression of the way our technology is moving has quickly surpassed the lack of movement in election financing and updating election financing, so it doesn't include things like social media and the possible considerations there.

In terms of Internet usage we need to be careful, and I agree with that. The Internet is a powerful tool for public discourse and conversation, and we need to respect that. This amendment, from what I'm reading, will make clear that third parties are able to express themselves on the Internet in a normal way, just like average Albertans do. In short, it clarifies that individuals and organizations can indeed feel free to use social media. We want to be clear that if a third party posts something on their website, this would not be considered advertising because they did not incur advertising expenses. That is the distinguishing piece: where you incur advertising expenses.

Finally, I would like to speak on the proposed new subsection (3). This seems to be well reasoned as it allows the CEO to provide clarification when issues arise around third-party advertising. Providing these guidelines will also assist with the nature of communications as it's evolving. In general, the amendment helps and adds clarity and assurances to Albertans that we are striking a balance between transparency and encouraging a healthy participation in the democratic process. I believe that we definitely have to look at ways of making sure that the guidelines are continuously upgraded as social media moves forward but making sure that we're also protecting the capacity for organizations to engage in the same ways Albertans do.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Madam Chair. Again, I agree with the need to make sure that people can use their ability through social media and things along those lines to exercise their right to free speech, including corporations. We've only had this amendment for a short time, unfortunately, but what I'm receiving feedback on is that this amendment would provide an exemption that would allow unions and companies to circumvent the reporting rules that are currently under the EFCDA by having third-party advertisers produce content, let's say a $100,000 video. This amendment means that the union or corporation could then promote this content via social media without accounting for the costs incurred to produce the video. This exemption should only be limited to individuals, in our view, rather than corporations and unions, who can use their particular reach and their significant financial resources to be able to reach multiple thousands of people.

Again, during committee this was discussed in great detail, the need to make sure that people can still exercise their ability over social media to free speech. The question now becomes between commercial and noncommercial. Clearly, I would think, Madam Chair, through you to the hon. members across the way, commercial would be something like TV advertisement or something along those lines, which this amendment would clearly not allow. The question then becomes: is Facebook commercial? The different social mediums that we use in our political world: are those commercial? It probably depends on whose hands they're in. If an individual at home or throughout their day is sharing their political thoughts on Facebook, that probably wouldn't be commercial. But our political organizations, when they're spending thousands of dollars promoting Facebook ads, promoting content on Facebook, unions when they're doing that, that starts to come into the realm of political advertisement. That ultimately is my concern with this amendment.

Again, I want to clear. We're all for protecting free speech. I think that's really, really important. It's one of the important issues that should have been dealt with in committee with regard to third-party advertising, stuff like this, so we could discuss it in detail and make sure we get it right.

At this point, at first glance, without a doubt it appears that this is just another attempt by the NDP government to continue to stack the deck to their advantage during the next election, and that's unfortunate.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A9? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. When the hon. member from the government side was speaking, she used an interesting phrase, that I did my best to write down. I hope I got it right or close to. She said that this is about “protecting the capacity for organizations to engage.” I’m sure that the hon. member was sincere about that. Part of the problem with this legislation is that some of the organizations that are being licensed and enabled to engage are third-party organizations, and right now under this legislation there is the ability for an unlimited number of third-party organizations to spend $150,000 each. Of course, that leads to a whole bunch of other issues about: what if those organizations know each other or are related to each other and have reason to work together on common grounds? Then, of course, you multiply that $150,000 worth of influence by an unlimited number when the political parties are only allowed to spend $2 million, and what you have is injecting big money into the elections.

What you have is allowing exactly the opposite of what the government wants: organizations whose donors, I’m sure, will be known, but likely not well known until after the votes are counted, to influence the results of an election. This just adds more flexibility for that to happen, and it is, as my worthy colleague from the Official Opposition said, one more way in which the government is trying to tip the scale in their favour.

Madam Chair, it’s why I won’t be supporting this. What this legislation is doing, while it tries to tip the scale in the NDP’s favour, is actually going to make it less transparent. It’s going to make it harder for Albertans to know who’s giving money to elected parties and elected people. It’s actually building a maze, a whole matrix, of inconvenience for people who want to know who’s supporting elected parties rather than keeping it simple and straight-forward.

This is, unfortunately, one more sad example of how this government is misusing their majority in this House to tip the political scales in their favour, and as such, I can’t be supporting it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A9?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A9 carried]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment that I would like to introduce, but there’s a certain volume to the amendment, so I’ll perhaps wait until the pages have had an opportunity to distribute it in full, and then I’ll discuss both the subject matter of the amendment and the actual gist of the amendment.

Mr. McIver: Does it include pictures?

Dr. Starke: No, sadly, it does not include pictures.

Mr. McIver: Crafts?

Dr. Starke: No crafts either, to answer the question of the interim leader.

Madam Chair, the amendment, which is now being distributed, is somewhat voluminous, as you note. It’s four pages long, and that’s not typical for an amendment, but in this case an amendment of that length is required . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, if you could just stop for two seconds to make sure we have the appropriate . . .

Hon. member, please go ahead.

Dr. Starke: We’re good?

The Deputy Chair: Yeah. You’re good. Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Thank you.

Madam Chair, this amendment is an attempt to correct what I felt was one of the most egregious parts of the bill. I mentioned it in the debate on second reading, and I mention it again here now. During the course of our committee’s discussion – and, specifically, most of this discussion happened on September 9 – the government members on the committee put forward the notion that the state should become involved with the process of how political parties decide who their candidates are. That is something that the state has never become involved with before.

While some may view the placing of both contribution limits and spending limits on nomination contestants as being a small step or a small entry into the overall process of choosing political nominees that represent political parties in our system, I would suggest that it is representative of something considerably more onerous and considerably more dangerous to our democratic system. Political parties should run relatively independently of the state, and government should not become directly involved with the internal operations of political parties. That principle was, in fact, upheld in a decision which was quoted by the Chief Electoral Officer on September 9 in our committee hearings, in which he quoted from the 2007 decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal in Longley versus Canada. I’ll quote this again.

It deals with discussing the Chief Electoral Officer’s restraint from involvement in political party affairs and specifically states that any regulatory regime governing political parties must interfere as little as possible with the autonomy and internal affairs of political parties.

Now, Madam Chair, I object to this particular inclusion of nomination contestants into the EFCDA on two bases. One, on principle: I don’t think the state, the government, should be getting involved with how political parties run their internal operations. We’ve talked at length in this House about how there are different models for how political parties operate. The NDP operates on a centralized model. That is fine. The NDP has a system whereby one person is the president of 35 different constituency associations and the CFO of 36 different constituency associations. I don’t think that’s a model that I would necessarily support, but it doesn’t really matter what I think. What matters is that that is the way they choose to run their party, and they have the right to do so. I especially don’t think it is the right of the state to decide that that shouldn’t happen. If that’s how they decide to run their party, that is just fine.

But, by the same token, Madam Chair, other parties may decide to run their parties and run their nomination processes completely differently. For the state to specifically get involved with fundraising by nomination contestants and for the state to come out and say that they are going to set specific spending limits for nomination contestants opens the door to the state becoming involved in a wide variety of other parameters that are decided by political parties in terms of how they decide who their nominees are going to be. I can say that, for example, in the Progressive Conservative Party our different constituency associations all have specific guidelines and rules that they abide by in terms of advertising requirements, in terms of a deposit that is required to be put down by a candidate in order to help defray some of the costs of running a nomination meeting, the requirements for the number of ads, and the number of signatories they need for nomination papers.

There are a wide variety of different parameters that are involved in the nomination process. To become involved in any aspect of that, to me, is a gross overreach of the state into the internal operations of a political party. Personally, I think that should send a shiver down the spine of anybody who is interested in a free and democratic society.

Now, I try to avoid, Madam Chair, wherever possible, some of the hyperbole in the description of the NDP in terms of them being so far to the left side of the political spectrum that they could be in any way equated with some of the more leftist totalitarian regimes that we have seen in the history of the world. So I'm not going to go to that extent, but I am really concerned when we see a government that sees absolutely nothing wrong with delving into nomination contests.

In fact, during debate on this issue on September 9 the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, who was in attendance on that day at the committee meeting, made a passionate argument as to why it is indeed the state's business and that it is indeed the state's business to get involved right from the earliest stages of the electoral process. I think that is something we should all be very, very concerned about because if they can get involved with the nomination process in terms of spending limits and in terms of donation limits, how long before other parts of the nomination process are dictated by rules from the state? I think that's a question that we should legitimately ask ourselves.

So, to begin with, on principle I don't feel that the state has any role whatsoever in terms of regulating or legislating nomination contests. That is an issue that is completely up to the political party, not up to the state, and different political parties will decide on it in different ways.

Let's perhaps turn the tables on this. Before the last election many of the nominees that ran for the New Democratic Party did not face nomination contests. In fact, they were appointed or acclaimed. What if, in the next Legislature, we were to decide that, no, all candidates, all nominees should have to face a contested nomination and that acclaimed candidates would be disqualified? What if we decided to do that? I think that that would be complete overreach. I think that would be completely out of bounds, and I'd be a little upset myself because I was acclaimed for both of my nominations.

Nonetheless, the fact remains that it is a complete and total overreach on behalf of the state. The state has no business in telling political parties how they are to choose their nominees. None. Once a person becomes a nominated candidate, then the state has a right to get involved with ensuring that there is equity in the playing field between the various representatives of different political parties, but up until that point that is the sole purview of the political party, and the state should have no involvement with it.

My second objection to this is one of practicality, and that is that I asked, specifically, the Chief Electoral Officer at committee whether this is something that they currently have the resources to take care of, whether they currently have the resources within Elections Alberta to take care of the extra workload that would be required. The Chief Electoral Officer unequivocally said no. They don't do any of this right now. This is completely new. They don't have the resources to handle this right now, and it would require the hiring of additional staff. And I said: "Well, how much? You know, how many additional staff?" His estimate was that it would include five new full-time equivalents at a cost of about $350,000, new office space, and that it would require developing a new platform for the reporting of these expenses and also for the monitoring of these expenses.

You know, to start something that would require additional expenses at a time when we're running close to an $11 billion budgetary deficit seems to be very counterproductive, especially when we have to ask ourselves a question: what problem are we trying to solve here? What is the burning issue that we need to bring this rather dangerous measure into our democratic system? In reality, there is no answer to that because there is no problem being solved here.

In addition to the cost, estimated by the Chief Electoral Officer at something in excess of $350,000, the other one is a very practical consideration. If we have 87 constituencies and if each of, say, four or five political parties runs five candidates in each nomination, we could be looking at upwards of 1,300 nomination returns that require auditing, and on many occasions the nominations happen almost immediately before the dropping of the writ. In some cases the nomination even happens after the dropping of an election writ. How on earth are 1,300 forms, 1,300 returns, going to be completely audited to ensure that whatever problem some people feel seems to exist out there, that whatever problem is in fact detected by the excellent people at Elections Alberta? There would have to be a period of time set out whereby after a nomination contest is completed, the provincial election could not be held simply because of the required processing time for these 1,300 forms.

I ask the question: what would happen if in the processing of these forms it was determined that a nominee had in some way violated the rules within that are set out? Would that candidate then be disqualified? What if the form hadn't been audited until after the election and that candidate had now been elected? Would that candidate now be required to withdraw and resign the seat that they won in the election and force a by-election?

You see, these are all questions, Madam Chair, that I think are legitimate. They are all questions that very much speak to the impracticality of including nomination contestants in this bill.

The amendment I've proposed – and it's long because "nomination contestant" appears several times throughout the course of the legislation – would remove nomination contests from the purview of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. We should be doing this if for no other reason than that it may not even be constitutional. It may not even hold up in court. In Ontario it was very clearly stated that the state should interfere as little as possible with the autonomy of political parties. This very clearly interferes with that autonomy. To pass a piece of legislation that includes clauses that may not even be constitutional I think is a dangerous thing for us to be doing.

But beyond that, even if we say, "Well, no, that is a principle we want to get into," I would urge members to pass these amendments because of the cost saving. We simply don't have an extra $400,000 lying around to hire extra staff at the Chief Electoral Officer's.

The second issue is the practicality of it, that because of the timing of a nomination contest, generally happening shortly before a general election, there simply won't be time for the processing of some 1,300 returns or thereabouts prior to the dropping of the writ and prior, in fact, even to the election being held. There would be some requirement for a nomination period, then, sort of a cooling-off period, of maybe three to six months while all of these nomination contestant forms are audited and reviewed to ensure that none of the nomination contestants, in fact, violated the rules, and then the election could be held.

I think you'll agree, Madam Chair – and I hope members agree – that this is a gross overreach of governmental authority into the affairs of political parties. In order for our society to have a functioning democracy, we should have as little interference with the function of those parties as possible. I would encourage members on all sides of the House to support these common-sense amendments to remove nomination contests from the purview of the state.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The amendment will be referred to as A10.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in favour of the amendment brought forward by my colleague from the third party, and I do thank him for bringing it forward. I think he did a good job of articulating the concerns around the silliness and the gross overreach of reaching into individual political parties' nomination processes, the fact that this may not even be constitutional, and that this may not hold up in court.

I rise, actually, just to add two more points to what he spoke about, and I think he touched on them a little bit. The first is around the fact that just the very idea of this will make it harder for certain people to enter into our political process. That's something that concerns me very, very much. Something that the government members in the committee said, as you know, Madam Chair, because you were there often, was that they were concerned about making sure that people from all different walks of life inside Alberta could participate in the political process.

Most people, the large majority of people, that seek a nomination, even the large majority of people that win a nomination, are not fortunate enough to be able to come to this Assembly here, but they still have a tremendous amount of value to our political system. To put your name forward on a ballot for any political party in any constituency takes a tremendous amount of courage, and it is absolutely essential to our process, so that we can have an active democracy, that people are willing to put their names forward and stand up on the ballot to discuss what they believe in.

By making the process more restrictive for people to be able to seek a nomination and to receive a nomination inside a party will actually just make it harder. Fewer people will probably want to participate in certain circumstances, particularly candidates that run for and get nominations for parties to run in ridings where they really often do not have a significant opportunity, where their parties traditionally have gotten a low percentage of the vote, and they're truly just running to be able to make sure that they can voice the views of the party.

The last thing I want to bring up is the taxpayer, who seems to have been forgotten in this process. As you know, Madam Chair, the governing party often forgets the taxpayer, which is greatly disappointing. I know it's disappointing to my constituents and many of the constituents that belong to the members on this side of the House.

The fact is this. During committee not one example was provided by the government members on why this was needed, not one example of a situation that took place in the past or any sort of situation that would justify why this was needed. When asked – and the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster discussed this briefly – during that committee about this, the Chief Electoral Officer made it clear that this will cost the taxpayer a lot of money, significant, significant increases that will have to continue not just for one year, though there will be some capital upgrades required to computer systems and that type of stuff to track it, but it will be an increased cost to staffing and an increased cost to their budget.

Now, from sitting on the Legislative Offices Committee, I could tell you that we're already seeing and hearing from the Chief Electoral Officer that as a result of this bill there will be drastic, drastic increases of 12 per cent to 25 per cent or more to that budget because of this bill. This is one section of the bill, as the Member for Calgary-North West spoke about passionately in committee, that is not needed, and there was no example at all provided to justify taking taxpayer dollars to pay for this.

This will not stop one thing that the government has presented that needs to be stopped. There is no problem to be solved. All it will do is make it harder for certain people to be able to participate in the political process, which is a shame and something that these members say that they were concerned about. It will cost the taxpayers more money, and it will not prevent anything except for making it harder for parties that use constituency associations and a more detailed nomination process, which I know that you know, Madam Chair, as a general rule the governing party really doesn't do. They just appoint their candidates. I don't know if it's because nobody wants to run for them or what the situation is. You may know. I don't know.

The fact is that this will make things harder for people that participate in the process, and again, Madam Chair, it's sad. It's just another example of this party across the way trying to stack the deck in their favour, as was passionately pointed out by the Member for Calgary-North West during committee. I think we should stand and support what she said and vote for this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I, too, stand in support of this amendment. You know what? There are a lot of things we know about this. We're about as sure as you can be without actually testing it in court that this won't stand up to a Charter challenge. Government members particularly should be worried about this because with all this paperwork in the middle of a nomination it would make it almost impossible – almost impossible – for people to become accidental MLAs in an accidental government. Maybe not impossible, but it'll make it a lot harder for people to be accidental MLAs in an accidental government. You would think, knowing that, that members of the current government wouldn't even consider voting against this amendment because this would actually make it possible in the future for accidental MLAs to become part of an accidental government.

The other thing that I think is really important . . .

Connolly: So people accidentally voted for me just like they accidentally voted for you?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, if we could just listen to the speaker, please.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate that.

Madam Chair, the other thing that I think will occur to . . . [interjection]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member.

Mr. McIver: The member on the other side: I invite him to get on his feet at some point and actually defend why he's going to vote for or against this rather than chirping from the sidelines constantly. But I'll try to continue despite the racket.

Madam Chair, what occurs to me when I look at this piece in the legislation – and I thank my colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster for bringing this really important amendment up – is that the government is sticking its nose into the business, essentially, of a private club, of several private clubs called political parties. Now, I realize they're public facing, but in terms of the point of nominating people, it's figuring out members of a private club.

You know, members of the public might, if the government won't support this amendment, be looking forward to the government having the next piece of legislation deciding on whether the chess club pieces are made of plastic or metal or stone. They may be looking forward to the government passing legislation to determine what colour of soccer balls the soccer club uses and how long the sleeves are on their uniforms because that's about as much business of the government as these pieces on the nominations. They might look forward to the government deciding how long the needles can be in the quilting club and what colour and what type of thread it could be because that's about as much of the government's business as it is getting into the minutiae of a political party's nomination.

I like the fact that the government members are rolling their eyes because I think they're starting to realize just how ridiculous these sections of their legislation are, and I think they're thinking: "Wow. How did we let that get in there? This is none of our business." It's (a) none of their business, and (b) they already know that it probably won't stand up to a court challenge. So they could probably keep a lot of egg off their faces, save themselves a lot of embarrassment, and save the taxpayers a lot of money if they were to support this amendment.

On that basis, I think that there's probably room for this if the government goes ahead with this. You know, they had #trudeauologies. I could think of NDP government club advice or things that they could legislate for private clubs because this is very much along those same lines.

Mr. Nixon: Have you ever been to an NDP club meeting?

Mr. McIver: I have not been to an NDP meeting although I'm sure they're wonderful.

Madam Chair, particularly for the government members that want to keep it open for accidental MLAs to become part of an accidental government in the future, they should absolutely be supporting this amendment, as I shall, and I hope all members of the House do the same.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, as I'm listening to this conversation, I really reflect on how we got to this point. I think all of us can agree that Albertans want transparency and accountability. They know it; we know it; everyone knows it. The way we do that is by making sure that information is accessible to Albertans, especially in the democratic process, and one of the very first ways that that starts is a nomination.

As the legislation currently sits and by keeping it as it is, we're making sure that backdoors where big money can come through are stopped. We're not getting involved in internal nomination matters. However, if you want to flip a coin to pick your nominee, you can still do that. What this includes is that nomination candidates have to register with Elections Alberta, and this goes back to my first point. Albertans want to see a transparent process for their democratic processes and their political system, and one of the ways in which we do that is by reporting. I believe that, you know, to make claims that we're getting involved in internal party matters when we're asking for reporting and information is quite inaccurate. I think we need to continue moving forward with the bill as it is.

It was four pages, but the premise was simple: just remove that. Having read the amendment, it doesn't go with what was originally presented and the intention of the bill, and it doesn't take into account the ability to have these loopholes built into our democratic process. That's what our government is committing to closing. We are committing to Albertans that we will make sure that they have the information they need in order to understand who is making donations to nomination candidates, to leadership candidates, and we will continue doing so, Madam Chair.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Mountain View and then Calgary-Elbow.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. I, too, remember this discussion in committee and felt at the time that this was a solution in search of a problem. I don't think we've really seen the evidence that the cost of this relative to the benefits of this is really a reasonable approach. I'm quite convinced by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, with his very passionate and clear argument, that this a step too far, that this is a bridge too far. We have not seen this as a significant problem. It's going to cost very substantially in terms of manpower and dollars, and as far as I'm aware, no other jurisdiction is following this guideline.

Yes, indeed. After someone is nominated, after someone is running for election, we have every right to know everything about where this potential new member of the Legislature or Parliament is receiving their support, but I think it's just a step too far. And I hope the members in the government will consider this in terms of the balance between the right to know everything and the costs to the public purse and the relevance of nomination processes. In the vast majority of cases for Albertans it's simply not substantive enough to require this, what I would also echo as an overreach in terms of what is a legitimate concern about transparency and accountability. I have yet to see the evidence that it is a problem that requires this magnitude of intervention and solution.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to speak in favour of this very reasonable, thoughtful amendment brought forward by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. Yes, I also remember the conversations we had in committee on this. I would concur with the member who brought this amendment forward that the role of the state is to govern our democracy and to disclose information relevant to the continued functioning of democracy. I think government has no place trying to control matters which clearly belong internally to parties.

I do have a concern that this may not withstand a court challenge. That will require individuals, parties, and the government to spend a tremendous amount of money on something that solves a problem we don't have. I've seen very little evidence presented, if any, from the government as to what problem this provision of the bill seeks to solve.

What I'm curious about is perhaps their fear that some of what they perceive to have happened in the past with nomination contests will happen again. Does that mean that they feel that we're going to return to some form of one-party state in this province, and if so, do they believe that they would be the ones who would be in charge of that one-party state? I suspect they wouldn't because this doesn't impact the NDP because they rarely have party nominations. I'm not sure there were any contested nominations. Perhaps there were some in the provincial NDP in the last general election, spring of 2015. Probably not.

They seem to be seeking to solve a problem that perhaps by perception, if not reality, existed in the past, but I certainly have seen very little evidence of it. Even if there were challenges in the past, those are challenges to be dealt with by the political party in question, not the government, because anyone who wins a nomination is then subject to disclosure rules. Albertans have an opportunity to know who has donated to a political candidate who seeks elected office.

Now, I want to raise another very important point as to why I believe it's very important that we all support this amendment, and that is that the NDP talks constantly about removing barriers for women, for people of colour, for indigenous peoples, for people with lower incomes, people who are underrepresented in the political process from participating in the political process.

Well, I know many people who will seek a party nomination in perhaps a contested nomination to learn about the process, to just give it a try, to see what it means to go out and campaign, to find out what it means to go door-knocking, to find out what it means to raise a bit of money, to put a platform together, to give a speech in front of a church basement full of people. They may or may not prevail in doing that, but what this does by forcing these folks to register with Elections Alberta, to file all of their paperwork is that it creates an administrative barrier that people who are underrepresented in the system already have a difficult time overcoming.

For the NDP – the NDP – of all people to be putting this in place is unconscionable. They are disadvantaging minorities, women, indigenous people, people of colour. The impact of this change is exactly what's happening. This change means the NDP are skewing politics to the elite and those who can follow processes because they already know how. That is not in the spirit of democracy. That is not in the spirit that I would expect this government to be following.

Those are things, Madam Chair, that I believe passionately in. I believe that we as legislators need to ensure that this place is truly representative and to remove barriers from people running for office, not to increase and add barriers. This adds barriers, so by supporting this amendment, we remove those barriers.

I think it's a very important and essential point that I would in all genuine sincerity ask the government private members to think very hard about, whether you believe that this, in fact, makes it easier or more difficult for people to seek office. The answer is that it makes it more difficult. That is an indisputable fact. So I would ask you, please, to really consider that. If you believe that this amendment is consistent with your values of representative democracy, I would ask you to consider supporting this amendment. Irrespective of what your party whip may say or may tell you to do or what the message on your computer screen may say, look in your heart and decide whether you think this is a good idea or not. I think you'll find it is.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A10? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. I was fortunate to be able to be part of the Ethics and Accountability Committee and to participate in discussions all summer long with regard to the elections financing act. I remember this meeting in particular very clearly based on the fact that technology had allowed me to participate in this meeting from a distance while I was harvesting my crops. I was in the combine, and the GPS was allowing me to participate in a committee meeting while harvesting my crops.

I find it interesting that the NDP are delving deep into political party business here. I do understand that there is a need for transparency and accountability within our electoral system. We have processes in place that once you become an MLA, once you become a candidate even, you are then covered by the processes in place to address any unethical behaviour that could arise. I do believe that moving in this direction, where we create barriers that stand in the way of individuals wanting to possibly get involved in the process and wanting to test the waters, is a negative impact of this part of Bill 35.

In that meeting I remember very clearly – and I looked it up here – the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster asking the Chief Electoral Officer:

Now that, you know, this has been changed around a little bit, we have a clearer picture as to what is being proposed, and this is a completely new area of involvement for Elections Alberta. Elections Alberta previously has had no involvement whatsoever in the nomination process at the party level. Sir, if you'd be able to outline for the committee what your estimation will be of the required additional resources in your office to administer these stipulations in terms of personnel, in terms of things like support staff, IT, reporting mechanism, that sort of thing.

The Chief Electoral Officer essentially replied: on an annual basis we'd be probably looking at an additional five staff members.

Also, having to accommodate that, there would be capital costs of upgrading the IT and all that goes along with it and, likely, in excess of a million dollars for at least the first year trying to implement this and in continual costs for what I believe is an issue where the government, the governing members have not been able to identify that there is a problem. I believe that it would be prudent for the governing party members to identify the problem and let us know where the problem actually exists and show us that there truly is a problem that Albertans need to be concerned with. If they're not able to actually identify that, then, if there's no problem identified, there is no solution that is necessary.

I stand in agreement with the MLA for Vermilion-Lloydminster, and I will be supporting this very reasonable amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other hon. members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I feel I do have to rise in support of this amendment. I think it's carefully thought out. I think the reasons for it are very well stated. You know, as we look at the actual bill itself and the need for these amendments, the truth of the matter is that this is a bill that's meant to try and manipulate the system, and the amendment is an attempt to somehow try and reduce the impact, or the effect, of that. The truth of the matter is, though, that as Albertans see how this Bill 35, I think, questionably called a Fair Elections Financing Act – when they begin to discover how entirely unfair it is and how much it's intended to actually stack the system in favour of one party, Albertans will not be pleased.

This is an act that utterly disrespects democracy. It's an act that has no respect for the freedom of the people to create political parties and then put themselves forward as they feel they should.

This really is an act that seeks to dismantle the constituency associations that we have, to dismantle their structure and their function and somehow bring it under the control of a single socialist idea. The people of Alberta are not going to be in favour of this. It is disgraceful. It is legislative interference with political parties in our province. As already has been stated, the courts of Ontario have been very clear that this kind of interference is inappropriate, it is not to be supported, and it in fact could be challenged in court, not to mention the very practical issues of the fact that it won't work.

Elections Alberta is not able to accomplish these numbers of audits in the amount of time that's provided. They don't have the staff; they don't have the space. We are going to end up in a complete disaster in the next election if we go through with this.

What this bill presents is the reality that the NDP don't care about the people in Alberta. At this very moment there's not a single minister opposite even here to pay attention to any of this. [interjections]

Mr. Westhead: Point of order.

Mr. Orr: Oh. Pardon me. I'm sorry, deputy whip. My apology. I retract that. Definitely no one on the front bench.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, if you could please sit down while we address the point of order. Please sit down while we address the point of order.

Thank you.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of Members

Mr. Westhead: Madam Chair, I just have to point out that the member has indicated the presence or absence of members. It's against parliamentary tradition, and I would ask him to cease and desist from doing that and apologize.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
Please continue.

Debate Continued

Mr. Orr: The reality is, though, that we need this amendment because the bill, quite frankly, makes it very clear that the NDP are not democratic, that this is not a level playing field, and that it doesn't create equal opportunity. I think Albertans will not appreciate that when they are given the time to vote on it. It really is an attempt to solve a problem that doesn't exist, and I think the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has brought forward a very important amendment to this bill which, in fact, everybody in this House should support.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A10? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Yeah. The only, last point I'd like to make on this, Madam Chair – and thank you for recognizing me – is that this again goes back to the fact that we have supporters of our party that say that they've been told by the government that if they get seen on a list of supporters giving money or on our boards, they won't be considered for government contracts for being on their boards. This reach into the nominations is just one more way for the government officials to try to intimidate supporters of other parties, one more reason to support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A10?

Seeing none, I will put the question on the amendment.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A10 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:16 p.m.]

[Motion on amendment A10 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back on the original bill. Are there any other amendments, comments, or questions to be offered in respect of the bill? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I believe we're back in Committee of the Whole.

The Deputy Chair: We are.

Mr. Nixon: Excellent. I have listened to and participated in the debate over the last several days in the Legislature in regard to this important piece of legislation. I discussed in great detail, as have many of my colleagues, both the positive and the negative portions of this bill, particularly the negative effects that this legislation will have on certain other people within our political process, negative effects which I strongly believe are being purposely done by the government. We talked a lot about what is clearly the effort of the government to use this legislation to stack the deck in favour of themselves during the next election.

We talked a lot about the campaign subsidy situation and the reason that this bill should have stayed in committee. We should have got the work done, just like all the members from the NDP that were on the committee voted to do. The reason that it derailed in committee was the fact that government members continued to try to put forward motions that would get their campaign expenses paid for and the party campaign expenses paid for . . .

An Hon. Member: Shameful. Just shameful.

Mr. Nixon: . . . which was shameful. You know, that was the main reason, of course, that this process derailed, as you know, Madam Chair. You were there to witness that unfortunate behaviour.

We also talked a lot about the attack on the political structure, that the NDP are going out of their way to be able to rig the system to make it better for them and to hurt other political parties. What's so disappointing about that, Madam Chair, is that it's going to hurt volunteers, people that participate in our political process that don't make money off it, that just do it for the good of our democracy. It's going to hurt smaller parties, not the large parties. I know the government is probably hoping that it'll hurt the larger opposition parties. I can assure you that they're wrong and these parties will replace them in 2019, but there are other, smaller parties that will struggle because of this. I can't help but wonder why the government would do that.

Now, we've talked about that in great detail. We've even brought forward amendments during Committee of the Whole that were the exact amendments brought forward by members opposite during committee, one of which was brought forward by the government whip, who somehow have changed their minds since committee, from a few short weeks ago till now, similar to, as you know, Madam Chair, all the hard work that was spent over the whole summer by the government whip and other members that were on there trying to get their campaign expenses paid for, which is extremely disappointing.

Now, I have said from the very beginning that I suspected that this legislation was about stacking the deck in favour of the government. I talked about that in great detail, my concerns with this legislation and the fact that it was clearly, in my mind and in many people's minds, designed to try to give the incumbent government an advantage over the opposition in the next election. I've seen their poll numbers. I understand why, but it does not make it right to be able to do that. Now, members opposite, Madam Chair, as you know, each time that I rose in this Assembly and talked about that, would heckle back and say no. They would rise in their seats occasionally and say no to that.

I and members from all parties in this Assembly have given them opportunity after opportunity after opportunity to rise up and do the right thing and show that I'm wrong and that this is not about stacking the deck to the advantage of the government. But each time as those amendments came forward, the government got up and gave often very ridiculous arguments to try to defend their position and clearly proved over and over and over that this is not about making the election system fair, that it's not about getting big money out of politics because that has already been done and everybody is in agreement about this. At its core, this is about giving the government an advantage during the next election because the government is concerned, obviously, about their election chances.

Now, this summer they got caught with their hand in the cookie jar trying to manipulate the system to get their campaign expenses paid for by taxpayers, which was appalling.

An Hon. Member: I thought it was a pickle jar.

Mr. Nixon: Maybe it was a pickle jar, Madam Chair.

Now here we are. After days of debate inside Committee of the Whole, with many reasonable amendments being brought forward, many of which, just previously, members across the way, before they were told that they weren't allowed to support them, did support and actually, in some cases, even moved inside committee, it is clear now that they have been caught again. It is without a doubt to anybody watching this that this is about the government and making things easier for the government, and it's extremely disappointing.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

It makes me think about the name of this piece of legislation. Mr. Chair, welcome. I do note that there is long history in this Assembly of naming bills not for political purposes, of not using political stunts to name bills, and it is disappointing, as we look at the names of bills that we've seen so far from the government, that members that sit across from me, in their legislation, over and over and over use the act, the name of the bill for political purposes.

It's extremely disappointing, you know: Bill 1, Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act; Bill 4, An Act to Implement the Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services; Bill 9, An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences; Bill 15, An Act to End Predatory Lending. That's not political at all, Mr. Chair. An Act to Ensure Independent Environmental Monitoring, Bill 18; Bill 19, Reform of Agencies, Boards and Commissions Compensation Act; Bill 20, Climate Leadership Implementation Act; Bill 21, Modernized Municipal Government Act; Bill 22, an act to provide for reparation – no, that's a different one. Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act; Bill 36, An Act to Enhance Off-highway Vehicle Safety; Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta; Bill 2, An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue; Bill 4, An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act; and Bill 6 – this is one of my least favorites – the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act. That is not political at all.

Now, I look at this, and I look at the situation that we've seen over the last few days inside this Chamber, where over and over my point has been proven by the members across the way, that this has absolutely nothing to do with the people of Alberta, this has absolutely nothing to do with making our elections better, and it has everything to do with them attempting to stack the deck at the expense of Albertans. It is extremely important. That is all that this bill has to do with. I know that you know that, and I know that you, Mr. Chair, are just as concerned as I am with that. Now, I thought, when I looked at it, that maybe what I should do – it should be probably named the unfair elections act, or how about the kneecapping the opposition act, or the incumbent election act, or the NDP election act, or the act to stack the deck? But I would not want to do the same as the NDP and use political purposes in names. It's disappointing that they continue to do that.

As such, I am going to move an amendment. I have the appropriate copies of the amendment. Can I continue, Mr. Chair, or would you like to see the amendment first?

The Acting Chair: I just need to see it first. This will be amendment A11.

Mr. Nixon: Clearly, we have reached, you know, the stage with this bill, during Committee of the Whole, where it is clear that the government is not prepared at all to work with the opposition. It is not prepared to try to prove us wrong, to make the system work better, and is going to continue down the path of rigging the system to their advantage. I will tell you, Mr. Chair, that Albertans will remember that during the next election. They will not be successful. This government will not be the government after the next election. They know it, and this last-ditch attempt to manipulate the election system to their advantage is shameful.

With that said, I would encourage every hon. member of this Assembly to at least rename the bill for what it is and to remove the name that has been put in place by this government to continue their political propaganda.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: Are there any members wishing to speak to amendment A11?

Cortes-Vargas: I'm reading the amendment. Absolutely, it looks like the change that he wants to do is really to make a point, that he's in disagreement with the bill. But what we know is that the previous government really has mentioned on the record multiple times that they didn't do anything about election financing, that it was there beforehand, and therefore it wasn't them.

Really, what we're doing here today is making sure that we're introducing the Fair Elections Financing Act, and the part about that that we need to remember is that this act is giving Albertans Alberta back in their hands and taking it out of corporations and unions that have been part of this democratic process in a way that allows pay-to-play. That is something that Albertans know and Albertans want to see changed. The statement that is being made by calling it the Fair Elections Financing Act is a statement to enhance that this is about Albertans. This is about increasing accountability and transparency. This is about making sure that we get big money out of politics, and it is time for change.

Mr. Chair, at the end of the day, we want to make sure that elections are about ideas and not about money. What we need to make sure of is to put the things in place that will allow that to happen, and that's what we mean when we say, "Fair Elections Financing Act." This is about Albertans. This is about contribution limits, about introducing campaign spending limits. All of that contributes to a fair election process.

I am strongly in agreement with the fair elections act, and unfortunately I won't be supporting the amendment.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Chair, what the hon. member for the government, the last speaker, has right is that I am one hundred per cent in disagreement with the government on their attempt to rig and to fix the next election, in 2019. They do have that a hundred per cent correct.

Again, every member of the government who rises on this bill continues to rise and say that this is about contribution limits, about donation limits, about spending caps. Mr. Chair, they will continue to gloss over the fact that every party has already agreed to that. The argument that has happened in Committee of the Whole over the last few days is over their attempt to rig the system to the advantage of the NDP – that's where the argument is at its core – their attempt to attack the structure of opposition political parties, their attempt to attack our volunteers who make our political process work. They want to gloss over that every time that they rise, just like they want to gloss over the fact that the committee was derailed by them as they continued to try to get their campaign expenses paid for. That's a fact. It's disappointing.

Now, the title of this bill is one hundred per cent political. It is disappointing that the government continues to do that with their bills. This bill is far from fair. The facts have been completely established on that, and the government should be ashamed of itself for continuing this sham.

The Acting Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A11?

Mr. McIver: I just wanted to stand and say how much I support this amendment. I appreciate – even a government member suggested, and I agree with him on this much – that this is symbolic. But this is an important symbol because the title of this act suggests that somehow this is going to make things fair when we all have demonstrated through our debate and our discussion that exactly the opposite is the truth. This is the government's attempt to put themselves in a position to intimidate other parties' supporters and donors. It's an attempt to put themselves in an advantageous position. It's an attempt to actually disguise who the different political parties are getting their money from by making it so there's an unlimited number of third parties that can spend $150,000 each when each party can only spend $2 million in total.

The government hasn't put limits on government spending. As we've talked about, they've spent $9 million selling a carbon tax that nobody likes, which is more than four parties can spend combined during the next general election under their legislation. They didn't even wait till the ink was dry. They didn't even wait until we voted on this to start abusing their own legislation and taking unfair advantage of everybody else in the House.

You know what? Taking the word "fair" out of the title is obvious, and any government member that is the least bit honest about how they feel about their legislation should be voting for this amendment, as I intend to do.

The Acting Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A11?

Seeing none, I will call the question on amendment A11 as proposed by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A11 lost]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, December 12, 2016

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 34 Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, I think it's rather obvious to everyone here that we have before us a problematic bill. It's very troublesome. A couple of things, I think, should be mentioned about Bill 34. This government doesn't seem to want to put caps on spending. It doesn't want to put caps on borrowing. It doesn't want to put a cap on lending borrowed money to the Balancing Pool. But, of course, the one thing this government will do is cap development. They'll cap emissions in the oil sands, but when it comes to borrowing money, this government just doesn't want to have any limits whatsoever, and even the limits that they originally put on they then removed. Kind of telling, I think.

So here we have Bill 34, and the situation with Bill 34, of course, is that there isn't really anything to amend. It's something like 50 words long. It is problematic from a number of points of view, one of which, of course, is that it isn't necessary in the first place. We have before us a bill that is completely unnecessary unless, of course, there's something else we haven't been told, and I'll get there.

But first let's talk about some of the things that we do know. Bill 34: some people might consider it the culmination of a series of errors, a comedy of errors except that the comedy is not so funny. It's going to cost Albertans nothing but money. We have before us this bill that is an attempt by the government to make sure that Albertans don't fully, clearly realize the cost of this government's mistakes. It's about covering the cost of the PPA debacle that this government created when it raised the price of the specified gas emitters levy only a few weeks into their mandate without doing any homework on the consequences.

It wasn't very long after that, as you all well know, FOIPs being the wonderful thing that they are – we know that the government was in fact warned repeatedly through 2015 from different sources about the impact that their meddling in the specified gas emitters regulation was going to potentially have, that PPAs could come back to the pool under section 4.3(j), the famous change-in-law clause. So raising that specified gas emitters tax resulted in the first of a series of dominoes that started to flip over, and the government then started to run from crisis to crisis to crisis to crisis trying to fix it.

Now, I'm going to dwell just a moment on the lack of necessity for this bill. The Balancing Pool already has and has had the power through the use of an approved rate rider to recover any losses experienced by the pool. Historically, if you look at your electricity bill, you will see that you've been getting a credit on that rate rider for years now. For years. The Balancing Pool has been run profitably by the people running that pool, so any profit that they have made, of course, they pass on to you and me.

Conversely, should the Balancing Pool suffer any losses, those too must be passed on to you and me in that same line item on our bill. We believe that the government is somewhat afraid of showing Albertans the true cost of their mess, the mess that they've created in the Balancing Pool.

Now, the government estimates put the needed rate rider at just over $1 a month per bill. Independent estimates from Andrew Leach have estimated this cost to be under $3 per month per bill. It isn't like we're talking about a great deal of money per bill, per household, which leads to the question: then why? Why unlimited borrowing to the Balancing Pool to cover this? I mean, it's three, four bucks on our bill. What's the big deal over that? That's why I believe there's more to this that we're not being told than what we are being told.

Whether the higher or the lower estimate that we've been told is correct, the fact of the matter is that that low cost does not justify the removal of an important check on government spending. When I talk about an important check, it is simply the transparency to Albertans that they can see on their electric bill that the government has messed with the electricity system and that now it's costing me and you and all other households $3 or $4 on our electricity bill. The government doesn't even want us to see that on the bill.

Instead, in extending an open-ended line of credit to the Balancing Pool, the Balancing Pool now won't have to show that on our electricity bill. Furthermore, the pool is being given 14 years to pay back whatever it is that the government has to extend to them in the form of credit to cover the losses. What that means, then, as I have mentioned before in this House, is that the Balancing Pool will have a liability. That's a debt owed the government. The government on their books will show that liability that the pool has as, actually, an asset to the government. Such very creative bookkeeping. Lovely.

But the reality is, Madam Chair, that Albertans are still going to have to pay for that somehow. Now, if I was to conjecture just a little bit, I think the government is betting that electricity prices are going to climb high enough so that the Balancing Pool is back in a profit situation again and that the Balancing Pool is going to be able to pay that loan off. Still, here again, if prices in the pool go high, you and I still pay that. There is no way of escaping the reality that Albertans are going to be paying more money.

Whether we're paying it through increased power prices because prices are going up in the pool, whether we're paying it on a rate rider where the Balancing Pool is billing us for their loss, whether we're paying it in taxes as the government pays that debt down, any way you want to slice this, Madam Chair, Albertans are going to be on the hook for hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars, all because a stubborn government refused to listen to the industry and take the industry up on some very good offers the industry put forward back in the late part of 2015.

This government stubbornly increased the taxes under the specified gas emitters regulation and wouldn't back off from that position. Then, to make matters worse, they decided to sue Enmax in some kind of a crazy attempt to appear to be battling on behalf of Albertans when, in fact, Enmax is owned by Albertans. So the press correctly said in one of the headlines: the government of Alberta is suing Albertans. Here we are. The government is suing us, the people, specifically the good people of Calgary, taking them to court because the company that they own was well managed.

We have some lawyers that are going to be making some good bucks out of this whole deal. Calgarians, unfortunately, are going to be on the hook. And, of course, the government's lawyer isn't even from Alberta. They couldn't find a lawyer in Alberta, had to bring in a lawyer from outside of Alberta. Here we have the NDP currently suing Alberta-owned companies because this government did not know our own laws that have been publicly known for nearly 17 years, and somehow that's grounds for a court of law to go back and undo that contract. It is the most frivolous lawsuit, I believe, that any government could possibly have ever launched against anyone.

Furthermore, we've got a government that is not being fully honest with Albertans about what they knew, when they knew about power companies being allowed to return their agreements to the Balancing Pool because of the change-in-law provision. This government has been somewhat economical with the truth. The NDP government has got to come clean with Albertans about what they knew and when they knew it regarding the PPA issue and the change in law.

Evidence continues to mount that the NDP government's claim of not knowing about the risks of PPA terminations until March 2016 is patently not true, which means they could have done something about this before they raised the specified gas emitters tax and created the excuse for the power companies to turn back their PPAs. Now, Capital Power and TransCanada both outlined their concerns about PPA cancellations for this government in their submissions to the climate action panel, reports that ministers in this government have repeatedly claimed to have read. If you read TransCanada's and Capital Power's submissions to the climate action panel in the fall of 2015, they clearly delineate the nature of the potential risk, that if the government continues down this road of taxing carbon, they run the risk of PPAs coming back to the Balancing Pool. It's very clearly stated in those submissions, which ministers in this government claim they read. So they knew full well.

FOIPs that were obtained and released by the Wildrose clearly show that in November 2015 a briefing was prepared outlining the potential impacts on Alberta's coal-powered companies as a result of the NDP government's climate change policies, and though heavily redacted, the documents explicitly mention PPAs. On the 9th of December Enmax notified senior bureaucrats and political staff that they were considering terminating Battle River 5 under article 4.3(j), and Enmax alleges in documents they filed in the court that they directly informed Grant Sprague, Deputy Minister of Energy; James E. Allen, assistant deputy minister of electricity; Allison Hansen, senior policy adviser to the Minister of Energy.

Furthermore, an e-mail sent from the hon. Minister of Energy's chief of staff to an issues manager in the Premier's office stated, "Attached is a draft briefing note that has yet to be finalized but I believe provides the context that you need for question period . . . Should something arise." The title of that draft, of course, was "Change in Law" provision.

The evidence is quite undeniable, Madam Chair. The incompetence shown on our province's Energy file is unjustifiable. This government was elected on a mandate of increasing accountability and transparency, and it has completely failed Albertans on this particular note.

Now we have this Bill 34, a completely unnecessary extension of credit to the Balancing Pool, that already has a mechanism for recovering losses, losses that will only amount to a few dollars on our bills. But the longer this government continues down the road of changing their story and being less than honest about the facts surrounding PPAs, the more taxpayer dollars will be wasted on this mess. This government is either, as I said, being really economical with the truth or grossly inept. Economical with the truth: it's because I can't use the L-word.

No one forced this government to make any rash changes to the specified gas emitters regulation just weeks after getting into power. That was completely within their hands to do or to not do. Rather than take the time to see what kind of impact this might have, what kind of implications this was going to have throughout our electricity system, the government just forged right on ahead anyway.

The energy companies' claims are legitimate. Under section 4.3(j) the PPA explicitly outlines the right of a company to return its contract on the grounds of a change in law. This government attempted to convince the people of Alberta of the narrative that this was some secret backroom deal. They tried to get Enmax confused with big, bad, old Enron in order to paint a picture of Enmax as being a greedy, underhanded, shady, backroom-deal type of company when, in fact, Enmax is one of the most respected and well-run companies in this province. They run well on behalf of their owners, the people of Calgary. They are a stellar company, and it's shameful that this government attempted to tar them with the same brush as Enron. That was shameful.

Furthermore, the government's narrative was absolutely false. This was not a backroom deal. PricewaterhouseCoopers was watching over the entire proceedings in the development of the PPA contracts and the auction. PricewaterhouseCoopers reviewed the requests for inclusion of the more unprofitable clause, and their response was very simple. In writing they stated clearly that that was the government's intention all along, so, yes, include that clause. That is not a backroom deal. Everyone who was a player in the auction knew about that clause, knew about the letter from PricewaterhouseCoopers. The whole thing was being done above board. There was no backroom deal in spite of what this government has tried to suggest to the good people of Alberta.

Calgary's power company, all the power companies, the players in the auction, the Balancing Pool, and the creation of the PPAs: everything was above board. But there was somebody who didn't know. That would be the nondemocratic party members. They didn't know. And when they took power, they still didn't know. It's simply because they did not do their homework.

It's interesting to note, Madam Chair, that when this government took power and they started appointing ministers, one of the first things that happened was the doing away of mandate letters. Do you remember that? It wasn't very long after this government took power. Ministers were appointed to different ministries, and for the first time, I think, in generations ministers of the Crown were not given mandate letters by the Premier. In other words, they didn't have their job description. They didn't have a list of expectations that the Premier had for them as ministers of the Crown.

I should point out that the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition gave those of us that have portfolios a mandate letter. In fact, it was a mandate binder, frankly. It was a mandate binder. He had specific expectations for each and every one of us to fulfill with regard to the portfolio we were responsible for, but the Premier didn't seem to think her ministers needed mandate letters. So what was one of the first things that happened? Along comes Bill 1, the job description bill for the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. Had he had a mandate letter, we wouldn't have needed a piece of legislation to tell him what to do. This government's handling of things is just terrible.

Had they had a mandate letter, maybe the Minister of Energy would have had a little note in there somewhere saying: "You should probably read up on our electricity system that you're responsible for. You should maybe find out about what's going on there, what some of the issues are." It's just crazy how things have been going along here. So now we have the consequences of the government's actions. Their mishandling of the electricity file is upon us, and I guarantee you that Bill 34 is not going to be the end of it.

The other interesting thing about Bill 34 being an open-ended loan to the Balancing Pool is that the unnecessary facts of this bill, like that we don't need this bill, tell me that something else is going to happen to the Balancing Pool. Look, the Balancing Pool is not run by a bunch of dummies. They understand. They are professionals. They've been in this for a very long time, and if they believe that they need an open-ended line of credit from the government, then I guarantee you that it is not simply to cover the losses from the PPAs coming back.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: I was so enthralled with the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. I would like to hear more about the PPA arrangements, especially when it comes to how the government feels it has a mandate in this area to move in this direction even though they hadn't campaigned on it. Please, member, I would love to hear some more.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak? Seeing none, the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you.

Well, it's interesting where this government has been taking this province compared to what they campaigned on and what they did not campaign on. They did not campaign on a carbon tax. Neither did they campaign on completely destroying our electricity system. They did not campaign on completely undoing a relatively good energy-only market in our electricity system and going to a regulated capacity market. These are things they did not campaign on but, you know, shockingly, both those items, the carbon tax and what we see them doing in the electricity system, are going to amount to tens of billions of dollars. Maybe that's why they didn't campaign on them. They were too chicken to tell Albertans what was really going to happen.

Is it possible, Madam Chair, that all along the government knew that they were going to seriously meddle with our electricity system? I believe that they did, and the reason I believe that is because within just six or eight weeks of coming to power, they started the attack. They meddled with the carbon levy under the specified gas emitters regulation right out of the gate without doing any analysis of the impact. I don't believe any government would come to power and do something so dramatic, so impactful if they hadn't actually had a plan to do that all along.

I will state here on the record, Madam Chair, that I believe this government knew they were going to do that, and they were too afraid to tell Albertans the truth. Now that they see what the impacts are going to be, the unintended consequences that they're now seeing, they're attempting to cover up the facts.

Mr. Cyr: With debt.

Mr. MacIntyre: With debt.

They're attempting to move the facts off the Balancing Pool and onto taxpayer debt to hide the reality, even a couple of dollars, even three dollars or so. Although, I will say this, and I was getting there. Because the Balancing Pool and the government probably know full well there's more stuff coming down the pipe here that is specifically going to impact the Balancing Pool adversely, I believe the government knows they're going to have to give the Balancing Pool an open line of credit to cover something else that's going to hit the pool. I believe that that something is directly tied to the renewables program of 30 per cent by 2030.

I believe that the Balancing Pool is going to be experiencing so much volatility, so much financial adversity that they are going to need tons of money to cover it off, and the government doesn't want that showing up on our electric bill either. So they're going to lend the pool the money, and it's simply going to be shifted over onto our taxes. I believe this government is doing what became known as Enron accounting. If somebody is doing an Enron deal around here, it isn't the people that were the players in the Balancing Pool. It's this government right here, shifting things around from the pool to the taxpayer, from the ratepayer to the taxpayer, but it's the same Albertan. The same Albertan.

This Bill 34 is not necessary. It's covering up the truth from Albertans. It's a shameful piece of legislation. You'll note that we haven't put any amendments forward on it. There really is no point. There's nothing to amend. It simply needs to die.

I will not be supporting Bill 34. I would encourage all members of this House to not support Bill 34. This bill is not necessary, and it's simply going to be another government attempt at masking what's really going on with the people of Alberta's money.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 34?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 34 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? So carried.

Bill 25 Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered on this bill? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to bring forward an amendment, please.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, this amendment will be referred to as A7. Please go ahead.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to move that Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be amended as follows. Section 1 is amended by adding the following after clause (h):

- (h.1) "partial upgrading" means processes that remove various proportions of the heaviest fraction of bitumen to allow for either a low diluent ratio or diluent-free transportation of bitumen.

Section 2(2) is amended by adding the following after clause (a):

- (a.1) partial upgrading emissions as determined in accordance with the regulations.

Section 3 is amended by striking out clause (e) and substituting the following:

- (e) prescribing a method for determining partial upgrading emissions and upgrading emissions excluded under section 2(2)(a.1) and (b).

Madam Chair, I'd like to talk a little bit for a moment about the aspects of partial upgrading. As the House knows, we've brought forward several amendments with regard to this bill, several very good amendments that we thought would help the government to actually have policy that will help us to make sure that jobs stay in the province, that we create the best products here in our province most environmentally and keep carbon leakage out of the process at least to the point that our portion of the market is not being snatched up by other people who do not produce as ethically and environmentally compared to what we do.

I would like to speak for a moment about an article. This is a little bit older article from 2014, just to clarify in case anybody mentions that this is an old article. It is, but the whole purpose of reading parts of this article and bringing it into the House is to keep in mind that these numbers were during peak times and peak prices, so it's just to give you some comparative information. The article is called Field Upgrading Is Making It Possible to Pipe Bitumen without Thinning Agents.

Now, when we're talking about pipelines and about bitumen flowing through pipelines, one of the bigger issues we have is that a good chunk of the capacity is taken up with diluent. I would hope that most of the members in the government would understand that diluent is expensive and that it's a hot commodity in this province and in Canada.

I'm just going to read some information into the record if that's okay. Natural gas condensate, which is sometimes referred to as natural gasoline, is an extremely necessary component in western Canada as the oil sands companies turn out more and more bitumen and diluent, and condensate thins that lovely, gooey bitumen so that it can flow through the pipelines and get to market. Now, the government has repeatedly told us about their two pipelines. Well, this is how we make sure that everything flows through the pipelines. The rising demand for diluent has, however, led to a condensate shortage. In fact, oil sands companies actually use about 350,000 barrels of this stuff per day, and we actually only produce, at least in 2013, around 145,000 barrels. So that supply-demand imbalance has condensate trading, as you can imagine, at a very, very hefty premium to heavy oil blends like western Canadian select.

Condensates help to move bitumen, but they hog space in the pipeline. This is extremely important when we're talking about capacity and actually making sure that we're getting as much product to tidewater or to refineries as possible. Industry might even be able to find a way to eliminate it. In fact, many companies are well on their way. One barrel of dilbit, which is diluted bitumen, is made up of 3 parts bitumen to 1 part condensate.

Again, if I could reiterate the importance of knowing the utilization of pipeline capacity. You are moving a ton of diluent around, and actually it has absolutely no real gain or benefit other than to move this heavy oil. If you could move this without diluent, which would mean encouraging partial upgrading, you would eliminate that cost, and that would be huge to these companies. I have some numbers to show what the difference would be in terms of efficiencies and costs. If you're able to remove that diluent from the pipeline, again, you have a lot more capacity in your pipeline. This would solve a humongous oil sands industry, as they call it, condensate conundrum.

The aspect of what we're talking about today: what we'd like to see happen here is the emissions that are coming from partial upgrading be exempted. This particular aspect that we're referring to is called partial upgrading. There are a couple of companies that I'd like to cite: Ivanhoe's heavy-to-light – HTL is the acronym.

They have an idea, and this again was in 2014, so depending on where they're at with this process right now – they've found a cost-effective way to upgrade bitumen so that it not only flows through the pipeline without diluent, but, even more importantly, it fetches a higher price at the other end.

I think this is something that we could all agree on because, at the end of it, that means more for Albertans, which means that there is more for – these are our minerals and our resources. The more that we can get from these, the better off all of us are going to be. They're going to fetch a higher price, and you don't need to build multimillion-dollar upgraders, so this is a fantastic opportunity. It bears the question: why would the government decide that they would like to cap emissions or not exempt emissions from a process that actually fetches us higher dollars, gets more of our product into the pipeline, and produces jobs here with an ethical and environmental method that, I think we can all agree, we do best? Albertans are amazing at this. Let's give them the opportunity to do what they do. It's in their DNA.

If we're talking about bitumen production, did you know that even in 2014 it was projected to dramatically increase from at that time 1.9 million barrels per day? Then the Canadian Energy Research Institute forecast oil sands production at that time, 2014, to reach 3.1 million barrels per day by 2020. As you can see, we need to be producing. It needs to be us. It needs to be done here. CAPP had seen at that time, too, that production could reach as high as 3.8 million barrels per day and 4.5 million barrels per day by 2025. I mean, the numbers are obviously going to vary, and the forecast will change as well.

There are increases, and by extension, obviously, without partial upgrading, that means a lot more diluent. Again, I need to reiterate that diluent is massively expensive. We either lose it, or we have to pay to get it back. It is a very hot commodity, and it is extremely expensive. But we need some way to change the API of bitumen in order to get it into the pipeline, so if the industry has developed ways to alter the viscosity so that it is pipelineable without diluent, why would the government want to stop that from happening? This is a great idea, isn't it?

Again, to reiterate, it frees up a whole bunch of space in the pipeline networks. Believe me, they are currently facing bottlenecks, and even with the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion and the upgrading of line 3, without Northern Gateway we are without a ton of capacity. It is imperative, without that extra pipeline at this point in time, that this government is upgrading to the best of their ability or partially upgrading to make sure that we're not bottlenecking the capacity that we have right now, which isn't even close to being enough.

Again to go back to Calgary-based Ivanhoe's technology, they have, as they call it, cracked the code on partial upgrading and were planning to use this technology in its two heavy oil projects. The two projects are Tamarack in the Athabasca region and block 20 of the Pungarayacu field in Ecuador. They have, you know, interests everywhere. The government is always talking about Alberta-made. Well, here's a technology that's Alberta-made, and it looks like it might happen outside of the country first before it happens here. Together with Ivanhoe, another group, MEG Energy, who is actually on the OSAG panel, is another company with a high-profile plan to roll out partial upgrading in the field, and these are just a couple of the initiatives. There are also Fractal Systems Inc., Petrosonic Energy, Value Creation. They are all looking to commercialize partial upgrading technologies.

Let me state again that the world's oil supply – the need is bigger. We're not reducing. Again, you know, if we're looking at GHGs and we're looking at reducing the footprint, obviously if we're keeping it in the ground and not producing, we're going to change our footprint. But wouldn't it be nice if the footprint was changed because we actually put in the technology to alter that, giving us a lot more product to take to tidewater, which obviously helps out Canada, Alberta? It makes complete sense to me. I'm assuming this must be an oversight by the government.

One of the things I want to mention before I go on with this is that when we were reaching out to stakeholders, which were many, the industry was asking for clarity with regard to partial upgrading. Is it even included in the cap? The stakeholders are actually requiring and asking for clarity. They have actually asked for this amendment. As stated by oil and gas companies, partial upgrading is the technological Holy Grail for the oil sands industry because it actually enables producers to achieve considerably more value for their bitumen, which I've already said.

There's just no downside to this, and if the government is going to choose to not exempt these companies for their emissions, then what are we saying? That we're just going to fill the pipelines with diluent at a capacity that is not as good as with these technologies, potentially, and not get our full economic benefit from what is in the pipeline and still talk about capacity yet not allow capacity to happen? This in-the-ground, out-of-the-pipeline movement has to stop.

The full upgrading uses like Syncrude's take the mined bitumen, and it eliminates the heavy ends, the impurities like sulphur, nitrogen through coking. The result is the synthetic crude, and that can be shipped without diluent through pipelines and is essentially refinery ready. It can be distilled into other products with little or no additional treatment. That is a very good-quality material, and it will get very good value. It is generally shipped down from Canada to the U.S. Light oil refineries love this material. Again, why are we stopping this? I'd like to know. How is this helping the climate leadership action plan? I'm not quite sure. It seems counterintuitive when the whole point is to change the footprint, yet we're allowing other jurisdictions to produce in much, much worse situations than what we have here.

I would like to go on to talk a little bit more about partial upgrading. As the name implies, it doesn't go as far as the full upgrading, like we were talking about with synthetic crude oil, that is done by Syncrude. It does not eliminate all the impurities and the residuals. But, at the end of the day, the whole purpose is to be able to send it diluent free. Even if it's not fully upgraded, there are still so many opportunities for jobs and for those dollars actually to stay here in our province and in our country.

Even with partial upgrading, some of the companies that are working on this want to go even further. They've actually said that it "misses the point if it's just about getting it to the end user without the requirements for diluent or for pipeline capacity." There are actually even more opportunities to take responsibility for those heaviest, carbon-rich portions of the barrel.

On top of that, Ivanhoe again has talked about how they economically process volumes as low as 10,000 barrels per day, and that actually makes it extremely well suited for the steam-assisted gravity drainage products in the oil sands, where the daily production could run to 20,000 to 30,000 barrels per day. These are wonderful changes, that we would be able to produce at that level and produce well and have the dollars to support that.

HTL, which is Ivanhoe's – that is, their framework with which they work – is a very straightforward matter. The way that it works is actually really neat. They put it in a cylinder. The bitumen has coke and gas molecules, and they blast it out with the application of intense heat. The lighter end product can be shipped in the pipeline without diluent. But the partial upgrading process does lead to a loss of about 10 per cent of that bitumen. However, they do have the benefit of generating coke and gas by-products, which actually can be reused and converted to steam for the power of the operations and the purpose of developing the field.

And then another fellow, whose name is Kuhach, was talking about the HTL as well, that it improves the net-backs from Alberta heavy oil production by 65 per cent. That's massive if you think about the dollars that are associated with that, not to mention the amount that we can get into a pipeline. That's tremendous. There is a humongous difference in the profit for the barrel that you're producing, he says.

I must state again that we have to try and avoid or at least alleviate some of the pipeline bottlenecks that we're dealing with right now with western Canadian heavy crude. We're trading at steep discounts to the global benchmark. Having partial upgrading will help us make sure that we're getting our product to the markets that it needs to go to without losing that extra value-added.

In 2014 CAPP was talking about these bottlenecks. Again, we don't have Northern Gateway, so even with the two proposed pipelines, the expansion and the upgrade of line 3, we need to figure out ways to make sure that we're getting as much capacity into these pipelines as possible. In 2013, actually, CAPP listed 12 proposed pipeline projects, which did include the Northern Gateway at that time. If you can imagine, if we can up our capacity – and much of it is in the Gulf of Mexico refining hub – we could actually eliminate the bitumen bubble discounts. That would be massive.

I mean, if I remember correctly, when the minister and the Premier were in opposition, they talked about this all the time, about value-added and about the difference and about the discounts. But the fate of some of the bigger projects such as Northern Gateway and all of those is uncertain, so we really have to work toward what we have with capacity at this point in time and make sure that we're doing our very best. I mean, depending on when these actually get in the ground, even right now with what we have, we need to get as much capacity into pipelines as possible. If you look at transportation constraints, we don't know what's going to happen with Keystone XL, and if we're talking about that transportation, until we know that that's improved, again, we need to get as much capacity into the pipelines as possible.

If we're talking about more profit per barrel and we're talking about the ability to do it in Alberta, where we can create jobs and do it more environmentally and economically, and we're talking about actually being able to get our product to tidewater, which is talked about in this House on a regular basis, we need to be on the same side of this. We need to make sure that we are exempting the emissions for partial upgrading.

MEG Energy actually has their own proprietary partial upgrading technology. Now, this is called Hi-Q process, and it's like the HTL by Ivanhoe. It cuts the diluent out of the transportation equation. A presentation states that diluent adds $12 to each barrel. Twelve dollars. We're talking millions of barrels of oil a day. Twelve dollars is huge in the cost of producing a barrel. Actually, in 2013 MEG Energy was producing about 35,000 barrels per day, give or take a couple of hundred, but it is hoping to have an installed production capacity of 260,000 barrels per day by the end of 2020. So imagine.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A7? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to speak to this amendment. This is just, I think, a fantastic amendment. I think everybody here should agree that this is a fantastic amendment. You know, partial upgrading just makes sense from all the points that were previously brought up. Less diluent is needed, and in a lot of cases virtually no diluent is needed. That's going to save literally millions and millions of dollars, and now we'd have the ability to have more space on our pipelines. We can send more product down there. If we're sending more product down the line, well, we're going to be creating more jobs, and we'll be creating more taxes for this province, which is more revenue for the government. It's something I think the government should be happy and excited about.

Really, this increases jobs. This partial upgrading, like I say, just increases so many different jobs and revenues for the province. You know, if you look at that, if we're busier working with these, then we've got more people in the hotel industry. They're busy. You've got people with more vehicle sales because now those things are going to be back up and active again. They're busy. You've got people – I guess part of the vehicle is your tires. Well, they're going to be running up and down the roads a little bit more. The people that are selling tires, people at the convenience stores, restaurants, all sorts of jobs right across Alberta, are now busier. It's got this effect that keeps flowing. It just, like I say, frankly, helps our province to no end.

So there's more money, more taxes, more jobs, more exports. It just makes, like I say, a lot of sense. And the NDP ran on this. They ran on the idea of more jobs and being able to get more from the product. So I'm excited. This is something that you should be able to embrace because it's something that you ran on, the idea of having more jobs, and this will help make sure that that happens.

Last week they had a puffball kind of a question on that one, and it spoke to it, but you were embracing the idea, it seemed, on that question – I don't have it in front of me – of having partial upgrading. Like I say, it's just good for our province.

You know, Reagan talked about this in a kind of way. He had a quote on big government attempting economics. Reagan said: "If it moves, tax it. If it keeps moving, regulate it. And if it stops moving, subsidize it." That's what the NDP is trying to do with our oil industry right now. They're subsidizing it, but we need to be able to use practical, sensible approaches that our stakeholders, the people in the oil industry, are asking for.

This one just absolutely makes more sense. You know, it's more environmentally friendly. When you think about it, if you're reducing risks to the environment by reducing the well-to-wheel greenhouse gas emissions – where you have to move it by the train, if you've got a pipeline, then you don't have to have it from the well to the wheel.

You've got so many ways to look at this. It's more environmentally friendly. You don't have to worry about some products maybe contaminating water or soil because it's going to be more of the pure product, so you eliminate the risk of a dilbit spill and eliminate greenhouse gas emissions. Long transportation of dilbit is eliminated. There are so many different ways that you could look at this. Probably about 30 per cent fewer export pipelines are going to be required, so we don't have to go and ask as many times for more pipelines.

Lower costs, value-added for petrochemicals – and we want value-added. We want to be able to have some more money stay in this province. If we have these things happening with this partial upgrading, you're producing more jobs that are going to stay in this province. Then, frankly, we're not shipping that money down to the United States. If we're keeping our money here, well, that's better for us. I'm standing up for Alberta. Whenever I have a chance, I'll do what I can to stand up for Alberta, and this stands up for Alberta, for Alberta jobs, for our values that we have.

So, frankly, I'm all for this one. I truly think that all members should be able to agree that this is, I guess, the far superior way to go. With that, like I say, I'm in favour of this amendment, and I hope that all the members here will vote in favour of it, too.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A7? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am pleased to rise to speak to amendment A7. I do wish to encourage all members to oppose the amendment, as I do. We've got nothing against partial upgrading. In fact, partial upgrading is a technology that's well on its way to being a reality on a large commercial scale. The caucus is extremely familiar with this process and looks forward to seeing it adopted on a large scale so that indeed we can increase pipeline capacity by not requiring diluent to be added to the bitumen. And it flows without diluent. It is definitely a game changer, and it's almost here. In fact, about a quarter of the caucus was up visiting MEG Energy's Christina Lake project and had this explained to us there, letting us know that they were looking very closely at upscaling to a commercially larger demonstration project so that the process could be confirmed. That definitely is something that will be happening.

What this amendment seeks to do is, really, to just simply create an exclusion of the emissions cap, which is totally unnecessary. This process is on the way, and it's going to be out the door. It's a prime example of companies competing to get a process in place that will benefit the whole industry, but each of them is looking to claim the process for themselves. It's an example of what can be done when companies do compete with each other to improve their capacity to let oil flow more quickly and without diluent in our pipelines and to improve the bottom line for the companies and also the revenues for the province. So, definitely, we certainly champion the technological improvements that we see in partial upgrading of bitumen to the point where it will flow without diluent. It's a great thing, it's almost a reality, and we look forward to its implementation.

This exclusion to the emissions cap, that this amendment seeks to create, is an unnecessary benefit, and I look forward to opposing it. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. I was really surprised by the comments from the previous speaker because of his partial knowledge and because of these partial facts he brought up, and I'll tell you why. The Member for Calgary-Fort may be an expert in finance, but I can call myself an expert on upgrading and refining and extraction mining. It may benefit you if you let me just bring you the facts, unlike the partial facts brought up by our colleague from Edmonton-McClung.

You're right when you said that large scale is happening. When you say "large scale," large scale is a full-scale upgrader like what Suncor has or Syncrude has or CNRL has, with full-scale operations like cokers, hydrotreaters, hydrocracking, and all that, which, to build that upgrader, will cost something like $15 billion. To have 150,000 to 200,000 in upgrading operations, it will cost something to that tune. So that's full scale. It's happening. It's happening on the major sites where we have mining operations. But the fact is that mining operations are limited in terms of the resource availability. Eighty per cent of the resource is deeper, which has to be extracted using thermal technologies like SAGD. That said, those facilities, you know, like the SAGD facilities and the cyclical steam facilities do have partial upgrading on-site.

Let me take you back to the full-scale operations of upgrading. When we talked about the Voyageur project at Suncor, for example, we did the engineering for that project three times, three different times. A hundred per cent of the equipment was ordered, the foundations were even built for the cokers, and the cokers were on their way. Four years ago that project was shelved because of the cost differential between WCS and synthetic crude oil. There was a reason why they did it, because it's not economical anymore because the difference was too low to invest $15 billion in an upgrading facility when you have pipelines which can take it to the Gulf coast of Mexico, where the refineries are upgraded to handle our heavy crude. That's a fact. That's why they shelved that project.

That's the time when the previous Premier of the province was talking about the bitumen bubble, if you remember that. That was because of the differential and whatnot. At that time, conveniently, when the Government House Leader was the NDP opposition leader, when he was here, sitting on this side, they used to cry aloud every time: "Oh, the PC government is shipping jobs and prosperity to the south. We should do more upgrading here, more upgrading here. Keep the jobs here." Now that they're the government, they've changed their minds. We brought in an amendment to at least exempt upgrading our cogen from this arbitrary 100-megatonne cap, which government members have generously voted out. They speak from both sides of their mouths now in this House. I don't get that. I don't get that. If you're not a technical expert, please do consult the industry.

You mentioned MEG Energy, that your caucus has visited, probably the bus tour to show you the facility, which is good. But then did you consult them about this amendment before you asked – Madam Chair, I'm asking the Member for Edmonton-McClung: when he quoted MEG Energy, had he consulted them before opposing this amendment? No, I don't think so. If he consulted them, they probably would have told him the difficulties of shipping the bitumen, which is not viscous, which is not easy to flow in the pipeline.

Either they have to partially upgrade and have a diluent recovery facility there, so they can build another hot bitumen pipeline so they can straight away ship it to an upgrader, or if they don't have partial upgrading, they'll be spending more money using diluent and shipping it to the terminals which are located in Hardisty, which is represented by the most hard-working member on this side.

You know, when he spoke about partial upgrading, at least, you know, he knows what he is talking about because Hardisty is there, in his riding. That's where most of his operations are happening. They have to recover the diluent and send it back. That means they are incurring additional costs. That's why SAGD facilities' economics are not in their favour when the bitumen price comes down. That's a fact. Having said that, Madam Chair, it's a common-sense amendment to help improve the economics of these SAGD producers because 80 per cent of the resource has to be extracted using thermal technologies like SAGD.

Today the Minister of Energy during QP to one of the puffball questions said that, you know, it's important to ship the oil through pipelines so we can get the $3 premium for our product when we get it to tidal water. She's absolutely right. That's why we needed those pipelines. She said that by not having the pipelines, we're going to lose $13 billion, or something to that extent, which, again, she's right. She doesn't need to convince me of that, not even my colleagues on this side of the aisle. She has to convince the people on the OSAG committee who are opposing pipelines, not us. We agree with her. If there is anything we could do to help her, we are happy to do it.

One way of helping her to get some credibility with her stakeholders is to approve this amendment. That way she can actually help the companies the previous speaker mentioned, MEG Energy and those kinds of companies. Partial upgrading really helps them. I'm sure they would have, you know, contacted the government members to speak for that. If not, maybe they're really scared of the government. I don't know what's going on because they didn't stand with them at the climate change plan announcement.

There are maybe some reasons that they are not speaking about that, but if the Energy minister takes time to call them tomorrow, I'm sure they'll say that this is the right amendment. I would encourage her to take time and do the right thing: talk to the stakeholders and get the facts straight. Not partial facts; get them fully correct. That's how we should operate in this Legislature. We shouldn't base our decisions on ideology or half-cooked information. We should have the full information.

That said, Madam Chair, I support this amendment brought in by my hon. colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View. There are so many reasons to support this amendment. By partially upgrading, we are going to improve the economics of SAGD projects. That will help us to free up the pipeline capacity, which is really crucial. Also, that would actually bring in more investment from the existing SAGD operators. I can give you a few examples. For example, Firebag stages 3 and 4 of Suncor operations are already doing kind of partial upgrading. They have a diluent recovery unit there. They take out diluent there. Then the bitumen is still at 300 degrees centigrade, so they built a hot bitumen pipeline. Instead of shipping it to the terminal, they're shipping it directly to the upgrader. So they're reducing their costs.

There are other SAGD operations where they can actually do partial upgrading, like sulphur recovery units or vapour recovery units. Those are all called partial upgraders. But now if you count the emissions from them in this overall cap of 100 megatonnes, that will restrain investments in those SAGD facilities for partial upgrading.

You know, in the first place, this cap itself is very arbitrary. They just pulled in that number from thin air because it's round and nice and an easy number. But there is no impact analysis done by the Department of Energy or the department of environment to show to us. If it is done, please show it to us. Convince us that 100 megatonnes is the right number to cap at. If not, at least apply common sense and support reasonable amendments like that.

You talk about creating jobs. These are the projects. There are so many SAGD projects approved. They're not going into construction because of all these problems. We have about 1.7 million barrels worth of new SAGD projects approved by regulatory authorities. Taking that, if we approve partial upgrading, at least some of them may go into construction and production, which will in turn create jobs and improve our overall economics.

I don't know what else to say, Madam Chair. These are the basic facts. Anyone who wants to actually apply their mind to that will easily understand that. They will easily make the right decisions. So I urge my colleagues on the other side of the aisle to please talk to the stakeholders and do the right thing by supporting this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

8:40

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A7? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate that. Let me just say that I want to thank the hon. member for the amendment that's before us because I think it's well thought out, and I think it's logical for us to support it.

There was a time when some of the government members were over on this side of the House, and one of the things that I remember several of them saying when they were over here is: pipelines just ship jobs to somewhere else. Well, that's partially true. It's not completely true, but it's surely partially true. It was true when they said it then, and it's still true now. It's not a hundred per cent true, but there is some wisdom to that that I actually believe is true. What you're talking about here, this amendment, is to (a) provide all the benefit that we can get out of the pipeline and (b) actually look for opportunities to do some further processing here so that you keep more of the jobs here. That's why I think this amendment makes very good sense.

Again, the mover talked about diluent-free upgrading or partial upgrading of bitumen, that would make it more friendly for pipelines, and I think the logic of that is absolutely inescapable and wise to think about. If the technology is there and can be developed, I think that's very, very insightful and thoughtful thinking. As the hon. member said, there are people actually working on that technology and some that think they have – I think the phrase used is “the code cracked.” They think they have found a way to actually make it happen. So, Madam Chair, I think that's a good thing.

The other thing, too, is that it actually provides some more room for production of our oil and gas industry. There are lots of troubling things about Bill 25, but one of the most troubling things about it – and the government should be more troubled about it than I am and that members on this side are – is that they're very happy that the federal government has approved two pipelines while they've been in government, and I would think all members of this House are happy about that, but then the government side continues with Bill 25, which essentially may at some point nullify one or both of the pipelines by making it to the point where you can sell more product, but you actually can't produce it to get it to market because you're on some artificially invented emissions cap.

Let's face it. If you actually care about the environment and you care about emissions, one thing that we all share in this world is the air. We share the air with every other country in the world, with every other city in the world, with every other citizen in the world because, of course, it moves. So if we don't put our oil and gas in a pipeline, get it to the coast, and sell it to somewhere else, you know where they're going to buy it from, at least some of it? They're going to buy it from Venezuela. They're going to buy it from Russia. They're going to buy it from OPEC countries that have a lot lower environmental standards than Canada does. In other words, this artificial cap will probably have a negative net effect on the environment over time, and it will have eventually a net negative effect on Alberta's economy and Canada's economy for a whole number of reasons.

Listen, Madam Chair, the government should be happy about the two pipelines. They should be happier when they get built. But they need to bear in mind, the government, that they have spent so much money – so much money – that by the time the next election comes, even when they fill this pipeline up with everything that it can take, the one to the west coast, the royalties that come from that actually won't even pay the annual interest payments on the money that this government has in loans. This government, in order to turn the corner in a positive way for themselves, actually needs another pipeline or two yet to keep up with their incredible spending habits.

When they put a cap on the emissions, they're actually cutting off their own governmental opportunities for success. Wouldn't it be a shame – and it may actually come to pass at the next election – if one or both of these pipelines are under construction, everybody believes they'll get done, and people do the math, and they say: “Well, you've got two pipelines, but we're still going backwards because you have borrowed so much money that the royalties from the pipelines won't even pay the interest payments”? So with the cap on the emissions the government is kind of shooting itself in the foot. On the best news that they could have in getting pipelines, they're actually making an effort now with Bill 25 to nullify that. This amendment actually gives the government a chance to partially save themselves from their own lack of planning, their own lack of foresight.

The other thing that I think is true is that with the emissions overall – and this would help with some of that, too – right now the large oil sands companies seem to like Bill 25, of course, because they've made it incredibly uneconomical for anybody else in the oil sands to put in a large installation and compete with them. Who wouldn't be happy if the government gave them a virtual monopoly with the four players that are there. Between the four, the government has given them a monopoly because somebody else, to make it economical, would have to put in the same level, essentially, of investment that they have – $8 billion, $10 billion, $12 billion – and feel assured that they could recoup their investment over 50 or 60 years. How could they possibly be confident of that with Bill 25 in place and this artificially manufactured limit on emissions?

The interesting thing is that many of the innovations that are good for the environment, many of the innovations that are good for competition come from small oil and gas companies. The Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act essentially cuts those small companies out from getting into the oil sands because with the emissions cap there, again, they won't feel confident that they can put the large investment in that they have to and then feel confident that they can fully exploit those large investments for 50 or 60 years because if they bump up along the emissions cap along the way, then, of course, why would you start? You know, investors are smart enough to ask these questions of companies, and this NDP government has put conditions in place with this legislation that the investors may not like the answer.

Madam Chair, what that adds up to is that this amendment from my hon. colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View actually kind of bails the government out of something that they missed and didn't think of when they put this legislation in place. As much as it's not our job to help the government out, it is our job to help Albertans out, and if the government was wise, they would support this because by helping Albertans out, they may actually reap the benefit for it at some future election date.

Again, while this is bad politics for me to suggest that the government approve this, it's good for Alberta. That's who I really get paid for and we all really get paid for, Albertans. We should be thinking and acting in their best interests, and from what I can see and understand, this amendment is in Albertans' best interest, which is why I'll be supporting it and why I recommend other members in this House to do the same.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A7? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. Now, I had spoken on one of the past amendments, the cogen amendment, and I spoke in favour of that one because it was actually a good route to go. It was doing something very similar, trying to remove a cap that would prevent possible cogeneration being built in the future. That, specifically, in my discussions in front of the government was saying that this is actually going to affect my riding and the ridings around me because when we're not actually going out there and utilizing all of the resources at hand, we have a real problem.

Now, this specific amendment, because I should get to this amendment – I am very distressed about what the Member for Edmonton-McClung was talking about. He was going on and on about how it's not ready yet and all that kind of stuff. You know, what I did is I actually did a little bit of research on it, and I went to Alberta Innovates. For Hansard that would be albertainnovates.ca. I actually have a wonderful article here from October 27, 2016 – October 27, 2016 – so very recent. This isn't something that was written eight years ago, 10 years ago. This is something that was written months ago. I would like to read the opening statements.

The header is Enhancing Alberta's Competitiveness: National Partial Upgrading Program. Then it goes on to say:

Thanks to synergies between [Alberta Innovates] and [national resources Canada], a national program on partial upgrading was initiated in 2015. The goal of this program is to support the 2030 target that 20 per cent of in situ production will become partially upgraded to improve the quality, reduce the need for diluent and improve transportation and access to new markets.

Wow. That does seem to be a route that we are probably going in.

What is partial upgrading? You know, I always like to have a clear understanding of it. Well, in this thing here they did this national partial upgrading program. This study was to identify the gaps in understanding and development [and] help prioritize future research focus and direction in partial upgrading – which is of strategic importance for [Alberta Innovates], the province and Canada.

Wow. How can this government vote against that? That's remarkable. This is voting against my riding. This is truly, truly remarkable.

When we go on, this is a success story within their group of success stories. They actually go in and say that partial upgrading is a success that was brought forward by Alberta Innovates. That's, again, something that our province can proudly say that we've moved in that direction. We are moving our oil production in a responsible direction, yet our government continues to put artificial caps out there so that it attacks our oil sands. It attacks our ability to be able to be competitive. It attacks our ability to be able to bring down the CO<sub>2</sub>, that we are looking to bring down across the world.

This is all that you've heard. You've heard from an expert from Calgary-Foothills, who explained the process. He is going through this and explaining how it should work. We hear from another expert from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, who is explaining exactly what is important for us and that this is an important part of Alberta's future. Yet here we are. We're hearing from the government, and they're saying that this is not the direction to go.

Now, another point that they've got here is:

As part of our leadership role, Alberta Innovates works to champion the innovations and informs the public about the importance and the scope of this work. Our publications tell stories of impact and provide accountability for our investments and activities.

Well, "champion," "innovations": this is exactly what this government has been talking about. We haven't seen it so far, and that's a true shame. What we have seen is a government running headlong into the wall numerous times.

I'll tell you that their jobs plan, that was supposed to be stellar, ended up being a total failure. In the end, they were warned repeatedly that this was not the direction to go, and my riding took the brunt of it. High unemployment: this is something that we could have prevented by bringing stable government, but this is nothing that this government has moved forward. There's no stability here because we continue to run headlong into an ideological roof from this government. That is just tragic.

I am going to go into a bit of it. Bitumen value-added: this wasn't just something they took idly. What it is is that they completed [a phase] of the Oil Sands Competitiveness study with participation by the Federal government, the governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan and six companies. The study concluded that partially upgraded bitumen (PUB) will increase the overall value of Athabasca bitumen and that PUB products will be broadly accepted in global crude oil markets.

The most attractive markets are refineries across this world. It also brings additional high-capacity access to tidewater, which is necessary for other markets.

Now, they do go through a whole bunch of other wonderful points – and I don't want to go through all of them – but the one that actually piques my interest is:

Managed, on behalf of Emissions Reduction Alberta (ERA) . . . two multimillion dollar/multiyear pilot projects of partial upgrading technology. Other projects managed on behalf of ERA included piloting a low cost oxy-fuel technology to capture CO<sub>2</sub> from a once-through steam generator for in situ oil sands extraction, and converting waste CO<sub>2</sub> into high value products such as Dimethyl Carbonate.

It is remarkable what we can do – it is truly remarkable – and we are planning on capping that innovation. This is a tragedy.

I can tell you that this is a move forward for my riding. This is a move forward for Alberta. I encourage every government member to vote for this because, in the end, they're harming Alberta if they don't.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A7? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. The reason that we're sitting here debating this amendment to bring partial upgrading out from underneath the cap is because our motion to remove upgrading, period, from underneath the cap failed. The NDP government voted it down.

Now, I just want to quote something here from Alberta's royalty review advisory panel. It described partial upgrading as an "opportunity to diversify our product range and alleviate some of the challenges facing the marketing of our oil sands resources." The panel recommended accelerating the commercialization of partial upgrading technology. There we have the government's own royalty review advisory panel suggesting that this is a great idea.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

Now, anytime I'm faced with a great idea that I would feel is something that is worthy and worth while, I think the last thing I'd want to do is to cap it, try to keep it down to some lower level. It doesn't make any sense. A partially upgraded product produces a medium to medium-heavy grade of oil, which fills a currently undersupplied demand in refineries and doesn't compete directly against U.S. shale light oil. What we're talking about here is a value-added process, a process that takes the oil that's produced in the oil sands and puts it into a form that not only is more valuable but also easier and less costly to ship.

We have a government here that seems to be all excited now about pipelines. I mean, they protest them, and then they celebrate when they get approved. I'm not sure how they justify that in their own minds. That seems to be a little bit odd. If you're celebrating pipelines and the purpose of a pipeline is to move product and the purpose of upgrading and partial upgrading is to move product, why wouldn't you celebrate the same thing? If you're going to cap moving product based on an upgrading process, then, obviously, you're capping oil transport, so you're capping pipeline capacity.

I would laugh, but I guess it isn't really that funny to hear the Member for Edmonton-McClung get up and say that he thinks upgrading is good; therefore, he's going to vote against the amendment. Now, does that make sense to anybody – or is it just me? – that the Member for Edmonton-McClung would say that upgrading is good, so let's cap it? That makes no sense at all.

He also says that they champion upgrading – I believe that's the term he used, "champion" – champion upgrading with a cap. Well, Mr. Chair, that makes no sense to me, though I have to admit that much of what this government does makes no sense to me and probably not just me. I think that there are a lot of Albertans that are wondering what this government is doing and why.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

I mean, we look at bill after bill that comes across our desks here that is damaging to business, damaging to Alberta's economy, and this government forges ahead with them. If they're not passing bills that are damaging the economy, they're passing bills to deal with the effects of the bills that they passed that are damaging the economy.

Anyway, Madam Chair, I have to support this amendment. It only makes sense. If we want to have value-added products in our province, if we want to create employment in our province, if we want to get our product to market, then it makes no sense at all to cap upgrading. There's nothing else to say.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A7? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. Okay. First of all, I just need to talk about a few things that were said by the member from government on this side here. I don't have the benefit of the Blues, but I think the words that he said were that we are impeding it and that the government has championed it. Yeah, I'm just going to go on those two for the first little bit here. Actually, what we're trying to do is to open the door so that these processes could actually do what they've said they want to do.

Maybe I should read my amendment again because the amendment is actually reducing the red tape, that's been put in by this government, stopping upgraders and partial upgraders from actually being able to do what they've said to do. As the member so eloquently said, this is a great idea. So maybe the government would like to get out of the way and actually let these processes happen. Just saying.

Then, secondly, that you've championed it: well, again, you might want to read my amendment because the industry has actually asked for this amendment. It actually comes from them. I didn't just make this up. Again, you might want to read the amendment before commenting on it. The government has excluded industry from this process.

The Deputy Chair: Member, speak through the chair.

Mrs. Aheer: Sorry, Madam Chair. Thank you for the reminder.

The government has excluded industry from this process, not included them. If you're going to include them, how about we exempt them from the emissions cap so that they can actually do this great work that the member said himself – speaking of members, the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater last week asked some great questions about upgrading. It says here that these are the people who add value to our resources right here at home, and he went on to say: "Given that our economy has for far too long relied on exporting our raw resources and given that Albertans want to see more jobs in the value-added sector." I mean the hypocrisy is palpable, Madam Chair.

Here we go. We have on one day the government voting down upgrading and not exempting them from the emissions on upgrading and then on Thursday talking about value upgrading. Here we are presenting another amendment to actually help with value-added, and based on what this member was saying and what the other member was saying about value-added, I would assume that actually allowing upgrading to happen would be probably the next most logical thing. I don't know. Maybe it's too late in the House, but reading the amendment would be a start. Just saying.

One of the other things needed – and maybe the government needs this, too – Madam Chair, is some clarity. The sector is certainly asking for clarity, and maybe we need some definitions here.

The more diluent that is in the pipelines, Madam Chair, the more money we lose. The more that we're able to upgrade and partially upgrade, the less diluent is in the pipeline, which increases our capacity, which helps all of us out. The more diluent we keep out of the pipeline: that is value-added material that actually increases the price of the barrel of oil for us. As the Member for Calgary-Foothills mentioned, we get ourselves out of the bitumen bubble. We bring closer the spread between western Canadian select and the cost of what that does. We're actually going to be making money.

On top of that, the added benefit to this is that we do it environmentally and we do it economically here in our province, where we should be producing more. If the government actually cares about the environment – and I'm assuming they do – then you'd want to produce here and not be exporting these jobs and these upgrading processes elsewhere.

In your own royalty review, the one that the government keeps touting – and I mirror what the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky said – the panel recommended accelerating and commercializing partial upgrading. It is worth saying again: it was in the royalty review. But then, again, there have been a gazillion other panels that haven't reported yet or that did and the government hasn't listened to them, nor will they because this bill will be put through this week without any information coming from the panel.

We have an opportunity here. Partial upgrading provides a unique opportunity for this province, a unique opportunity for the government to do right by the people of Alberta. This is their resource. We don't have to build multimillion-dollar upgraders to do this process. Come on. Can we just talk about this in a common-sense way and not have members who actually are not reading the amendment commenting on it, telling us that we're the ones who are impeding this process, when it comes from stakeholders and we're bringing forward amendments that are actually going to help out this process?

This will fill a currently unsupplied demand. Let's just talk about the economics of it for a minute. Partially upgraded products of medium and medium-heavy grade oil fill an undersupplied demand, and it doesn't compete directly with U.S. shale oil, which fully upgraded materials do. This is an immense opportunity for this province. The jobs created through this association, through being able to do this – there should be absolutely no reason to debate this. This is a no-brainer, but the government already took upgrading off the docket. We can't convince them about the 100-megatonne cap, and we can't convince them about the 10-megatonne cap. Please consider that if this government is so behind partial upgrading, as the member has said, this actually allows the process to happen.

The minister of environment has said that the entire reason for doing this was to be able to address central issues facing the oil sands. Well, here you go. Here is an opportunity. It also is supposed to talk about investment and innovation and the developing process and to address local and regional environmental issues. Well, I can't think of a better way of addressing this issue than developing here, producing here, using our assets here, especially for the folks that live in these areas, their ability to be able to do this here. By allowing this amendment to happen, you are creating jobs, bringing forward diversification, adding dollars into this province. An Alberta-made project in Alberta, by Albertans, that is for Alberta and the prosperity of Canada. We are the economic engine. We say it all the time. It bears saying again.

Thank you.

9:10

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A7?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Mr. Panda: What a day, Madam Chair. I'm really thoroughly disappointed that government members chose to defeat this common-sense amendment. We made so many attempts to make this bill better. I think I'll make one more attempt to get the members on the other side to understand the basics of this bill and the basics of this business.

In the words of my colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake – he talked about 101 programs, so I can say that this is my oil sands 101, if you like. At least for my neighbouring ridings, members like Calgary-Northern Hills or Calgary-Hawkwood or Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill or Calgary-Varsity – I'm surrounded by government members. The people in Calgary-Foothills expect me to at least share what I know, a little bit about this business. At least that may sink in. I know it's tough to understand at 10 minutes past 9 o'clock at night, but pay attention a little bit, and you might change your mind.

Madam Chair, the reason I oppose this bill capping emissions at 100 megatonnes, like I explained so many times before, is that the way I see it and the way Calgarians and Calgary-Foothills people see it, it's an attack on the economic prosperity of Alberta. The Member for Edmonton-McClung is on record in Hansard saying that it is capping production. It is truly capping production. It's capping jobs, it's capping economic development, and it's capping immigration. I talked about that, too, previously. You know, people like me come here for the economic opportunities. They want to cap those opportunities for hard-working people here who want to play by the rules and pay taxes in Alberta and contribute to the economic growth of Alberta. That's why I'm disappointed.

We have a resource that nobody else has. We are blessed with the resource, and we want to strand it in the ground for no rhyme or reason. There is no common-sense logic that government members gave me to agreeing to strand this resource in the ground, which is $250 billion, not a small amount, Madam Chair.

I talked about good reasons to not support this bill. Then we tried to make it better by bringing in common-sense amendments in line with what the NDP used to say when they sat on this side of the House. None of those cut logic with the government members.

To take you one step back here, we are talking about the resource we have, which is the third-largest in the world behind Saudi Arabia's and Venezuela's. Unlike Venezuela, you know, which has a similar resource to ours – most of it is also oil sands, which is heavy and needs more resources and more money to make it light and sell it in the market – the Saudis have a distinct advantage because their oil is light. Ours is heavy, and we don't have access to the market; we are landlocked. So to start, although we are blessed with the resource, we are at a distinct disadvantage compared to the largest producers of the world or the countries that have the largest resource as compared to Canada.

That's why, although we have the resource, our costs are too high, so we have to make it easy for the businesses who want to develop those resources. But this government is making it too difficult for those companies that want to invest and grow jobs here. That's why I suspect, you know, that there is something beyond this because government members, on one hand, say that, yeah, they like upgrading. They say that they like pipelines. But they act differently. It doesn't make sense.

As I said before, there are projects that were already approved, SAGD projects, which, if they actually go into construction and ramp up production, can add 1.8 million barrels more. And there are mining projects which are already approved – these were all cleared by the regulatory authorities – 740,000 barrels worth of projects. Mining expansion projects were also approved. So together it's 2 and a half million barrels of additional production which can come onboard in the next 10 years if they start building those projects now and if the government is making it easy for them to do that.

On one hand, we are saying that we support pipelines, and tomorrow there will be Keystone XL, there will be Trans Mountain, there will be Energy East, whenever it comes, and we won't have enough oil to ship by capping this production, so it doesn't make sense. If you want to really, you know, be forward looking, then at least, even if you don't withdraw Bill 25, you should have accepted these common-sense amendments with respect to removing the cap on upgrading or removing the cap on cogen production or at least partial upgrading.

None of them were accepted by the government side, so, Madam Chair, today Canada is, you know, having the resource of 180 billion barrels, and we're only producing 4 million barrels per day as opposed to Saudi Arabia or Venezuela, who are producing far, far higher than what we produce. If you look at the resources they hold and look at the resources we hold and what we are producing, it's not in the same ratio. Here we're trying to strand the resource in the ground. Out of the 4 million barrels we produce here, about 2.3 million comes from oil sands, and there are another 2.5 million barrels' worth of projects already approved, cleared by regulators, but the investors are not putting in that money ever since the NDP came into power and started bringing these policies which create so much uncertainty and instability.

They say, you know, that they consult the stakeholders. They haven't consulted the main stakeholder, which is CAPP. Madam Chair, CAPP, the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers: their vision is to "enhance Canada's prosperity by enabling responsible growth of Canada's upstream oil and natural gas industry." On behalf of the Canadian upstream oil and natural gas industry CAPP is "to advocate for and enable economic competitiveness and safe, environmentally and socially responsible performance." That's their vision, that's their mission, and here we have the government, who doesn't want to talk to them.

I'm asking anyone in this House on the other side if they made any effort to talk to CAPP or any other stakeholder. If you asked and if they said that these are not reasonable amendments, tell me that. I'll shut up. The Premier must have heard what I was saying. I'm happy to see her in the House. Hopefully, now some common sense prevails here.

Madam Chair, I'll talk a little bit more about upgrading. We talked about upgrading. When the Premier was in the opposition, she said that the PC governments were shipping the jobs because they were not upgrading the bitumen here. They were shipping the jobs, they were shipping the prosperity south of the border, but now this Premier, under her leadership this government want to cap the production. It doesn't make sense. That's why we brought in that amendment to exempt upgrading from the overall cap of 100 megatonnes.

Then we talked about cogen. Madam Chair, I was involved, as I said before, in building four cogen projects at Suncor. Each one of them was 85 megawatts. I talked about the advantages of building cogen because it was a deal, like, 2 for 1. Cogen combines the production of heat to produce steam and electricity so we can use that steam to pump into the reservoir in the oil patch and make the reservoir viscous so we can pump out bitumen. The government said no.

We tried to explain that cogen emissions should be exempted in their entirety from the 100-megatonne cap, and we talked about why we should exclude it: because excluding all cogeneration emissions from the oils sands limit in Bill 25 supports the continued adoption of cogeneration at in situ facilities. Why at in situ facilities? Because in situ facilities need electricity, need steam. In situ facilities, unlike mining – mining is more labour intensive, truck and shovel operations – are more energy intensive. They need more steam. If this government cares about reducing emissions, we should exempt cogen because cogen is serving a dual purpose.

As I said before, only 16 per cent of heat generated at oil sands cogen facilities is being used. Only 16 per cent. So that means that by adding more cogen units on-site, we don't have to build transmission infrastructure. That saves us that cost, that helps those SAGD producers to reduce their costs, and that gets them the steam they need. Steam plays a huge role, Madam Chair, in the SAGD operations. The cost of SAGD operations, the economics of SAGD operations is based on the steam-oil ratio. The best operators have the best steam-oil ratio – with less steam they can produce more oil – which is fewer greenhouse gas emissions. I tried to explain that, and I failed to convince my colleagues on the other side.

So if we build those cogen projects, that would bring in a lot of economic opportunities. It's an opportunity for investment, and it's an opportunity to create jobs. But government voted down the common-sense amendment, Madam Chair.

When I worked in private industry, sometimes logic helped people make those decisions. Nobody is expert in every field or every subject, but at least when somebody has some logic and valuable input, you know, that helps people with differing opinions come to a common understanding and move forward in the interest of that particular business, in the interest of the company, or in the interest of the stakeholders. Here we are representing Albertans, who are all stakeholders, and our job is to understand the bills in front of us and look at the overall economic impact of them, whether it's good in the long term or not, and do the right thing for the people of Alberta.

But this government chose not to act in the interest of Albertans, in my opinion. That's what people in Calgary are telling me, people downtown are telling me, and I'm sure if any of the government members from Calgary go and talk to downtown businesses, they'll tell them exactly the same thing that they're telling me. As I said before, there are so many SAGD projects that are already approved, but they won't go into the business of expansion because of these government policies.

Cogen projects have so many – so many – salient features that would have helped this government tell the voters they did the right thing by excluding cogen from the overall cap. This government doesn't want coal. They don't want petroleum coke emissions because they have nasty particulates like nitrogen oxide or sulphur dioxide. You know, with cogen you won't have those kinds of emissions, and with cogen the efficiencies are 30 per cent better than existing combined-cycle generation. We talked about that, too, Madam Chair. Cogen has the lowest levelized capital cost power generation of a fossil fuel.

Madam Chair, we talked about all this in the last couple of weeks, but, you know, it's become increasingly clear to Albertans just how detached the members of this government are from the realities on the ground in our energy sector. There has been a pattern here. In this House in the last seven days we discussed the Fair Elections Financing Act, and the Member for Calgary-Elbow and the Member for Calgary-Hays talked about how the NDP is trying to rig the system, tilt the scales. The Member for Calgary-Elbow and the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, actually, who most often side with the government, tried to reason with these government members that they can't do that. So there is a pattern here for the government. How they say things and how they do things are two totally different things.

Madam Chair, in democracy all we can do, being the Official Opposition or other opposition parties here, is to try and work with the government, to collaborate, and also to bring reason to the common-sense amendments. But just because government has a brutal majority, they just want to ignore common-sense, practical amendments from opposition. You know what? They can do that, but members from the third party said that when they tried to do that, people sent them to this side of the aisle. The Member for Calgary-Hays has said that a few times already: don't do that; otherwise, you'll end up sitting on this side of the aisle in two years. Now the option is yours.

Thank you.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

9:30

The Acting Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 25? The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to please bring an amendment forward.

The Acting Chair: Just one minute for me to check the amendment. This will be referred to as amendment A8.

Please proceed, hon. member.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. This amendment is to move that Bill 25, the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be amended as follows. Section 2 . . .

The Acting Chair: Sorry, hon. member. I just want to make sure that you're moving this on behalf of the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Aheer: Yes.

The Acting Chair: Okay. Please continue.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much. On behalf of the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake I'd like to move that Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be amended as follows. Section 2(2) is amended by adding the following after clause (a): "(a.1) biomass emissions as determined in accordance with the regulations;" also, section 3 is amended by adding the following after clause (d): "(d.1) prescribing a method for determining biomass emissions excluded under section 2(2)(a.1)."

What we're looking for here – we're going to again assume that, potentially, there may be some oversight on behalf of the government. I'd like to just read from here. This is from the Alberta government bioenergy producer program outline from the Alberta climate change office.

The Bioenergy Producer Program (BPP) is intended to support bioenergy production capacity in Alberta in order to:

- reduce greenhouse gas emissions from the use of fossil fuel alternatives
- create value-added opportunities with economic benefits

This short-term program is meant to support bioenergy production while a bioenergy industry review is conducted to inform long-term policy options that would support a sustainable sector in Alberta.

That seems like a mandate to have biomass brought forward.

The question that we're asking and trying to amend, again, is to make sure that this is amended so that for renewables, as the government keeps talking about, the emissions are exempted. It has to be an oversight because this innovation is on the cusp of being economical, and at the very, very, very, very least, I mean, you could go buy this and subsidize it, or if you exempt the emissions, well, then the businesses may feel compelled to actually go forward with this. I've got a few very, very good programs and, actually, projects that I'd like to share with the government here at some point just to reiterate the absolute imperativeness of exempting emissions from biomass.

Let's talk about renewables for a minute. We've mentioned before that the only way the government at this point in time is going to be able to reduce its footprint is by actually keeping products in the ground, and that is by putting a cap on emissions so that only a certain amount can be produced within a certain frame – that's obvious – but, again, that's only here. Any of the market that we don't produce here will be produced elsewhere with the aspect of carbon leakage, which means that what we're not producing here will get produced somewhere else less environmentally, less ethically, and to the detriment of our own people, our province, and our prosperity here.

I would just like to go over a few things. I know that the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills has already said this, but let's go over a review of a few amendments that we've brought forward to help the government, some common-sense amendments to help this be a better bill. Let's start with what we just tried to amend, which was partial upgrading. To my great despair the members in this House who have spoken in favour of partial upgrading didn't understand that the amendment was to actually help partial upgrading come to fruition, to get out of the way so that companies can actually do these processes: partially upgrade, get the diluent out of the pipeline, increase capacity, get the dollars into this province, make sure that we're getting our full dollar value, and make sure that Alberta is prospering from this.

Then we can go backwards to fully upgraded prospects, for which we also asked that the cap be removed and that emissions be exempted. If you're capping upgrading at 10 megatonnes, that is keeping it out of the pipeline. So we've got one that is stopping us from doing it with less diluent, which actually costs us more. That makes no sense to me. Then we have another part of the bill that is actually not allowing upgrading to occur here, which means that we are putting extra capacity into a pipeline full of value-added hot commodity stuff that is – we don't even have enough here, and we're going to have to pay to either get it back, or we don't get it back at all.

Back up a couple of days to cogen. This was explicit from stakeholder outreach. In situ is high intensity; it requires electricity and heat. Well, guess what? Cogen actually is able to do that. They produce on-site and are able to use the energy that is created in the system again and in the grid. How is that not a feasible thought process, and why would the government vote against that? I don't understand. If we just go to the whole reason that this bill came forward, the 100-megatonne cap, again it is the leave it in the ground and out of the pipeline movement. It makes absolutely no sense. We want to fill these pipelines to capacity with the best product that we can put in there and actually change the differential.

The Premier and the ministers themselves have in the past in this House in opposition talked at length about the amount of money we lose by not having value-added. When we're bringing forward amendments to actually contribute to that discussion, how is it that nobody in this House on the government side can see the value in what we're trying to bring forward? I mean, this is supposed to be collaboration, I thought. Well, our job is to actually come from a different perspective. This is based completely on stakeholder outreach.

If we're talking about reducing GHGs, we all know that the carbon tax is not going to do that. If we're actually talking about reducing GHGs, if you actually care about the environment, we should be producing here as much as possible, where we have the best regulations, where we have the best environmental records.

On top of that, given the right economic environment there is so much incredible innovation. We talk about economic diversification. The amount of available innovation and diversification is just – there's too much to talk about just standing up once here. You know, I've only had 19 months at this, and I couldn't even recap for you the amount of incredible – incredible – innovation that is in this province. I mean, some of the things that are happening in this field are just literally, like, miraculous. If we're looking at it from that point of view – and these are simple requests – we're encouraging industry to do that which the government is saying and to do better, not just keep it in the ground and out of the pipeline but actually produce better.

Again, let's talk about the whole aspect of biomass for a moment. Well, we have an entire boreal forest, a monster, monster amount of land, hectares and hectares and hectares of incredible trees. Now, trees die, and they rot, and we have a tremendous amount of methane coming from that, which is extremely, extremely detrimental to the environment, 25 per cent more. What biomass does on one level – and guess what happens to be in the boreal forest? That's where the oil sands are. If we allow and, especially, if we're able to exempt emissions from biomass, they're able to burn a product, a renewable resource, and create the heat and electricity that are needed for this high-intensity process of bringing these resources out of the ground.

If you think about it, it's on-site, and there is a CO<sub>2</sub> equivalent. This is a neutrality thing. The carbon cycle is a self-contained circle, so you're using something that is readily available to create heat and electricity. Not only that, but just imagine: from a forestry perspective, there are opportunities for forestry also, in terms of warehousing or anything like that, to use sawdust, wood pellets. It's basically the garbage that can be used to produce heat and electricity in order to bring our resources out of the ground. I mean, it's a fantastic idea. If the government opens the door and allows industry to be able to do this, especially if you exempt emissions, this gives a tremendous opportunity not only for the oil sands but also for forestry as well. I mean, this seems, I think, very common sense. Again, this comes from stakeholders. These are the technical experts in this field.

If you want to balance the environment and the economics, these are really, really sensible exemptions, right? If we are looking at the overall benefit, this is a renewable resource. I mean, this is what the government keeps talking about. Why would you not exempt it? It's a renewable resource. It's part of the climate leadership action plan, so it doesn't make any sense that biomass would not have this exemption on it. It falls under the auspices of exactly what the government has been asking for. On top of that, we're not quite there economically, but given this window, given the opportunity there are so many projects.

Like, there is this one project. It's called the algae project, and I'll table this. This is the neatest project. Just to give you an example of another version outside of forestry, what they can do is to take the CO<sub>2</sub>, the waste heat, and the waste water and put it in a photobioreactor with the algae in it. Basically, what happens is that they release oxygen into the air. Now, this is a ways off, but here is diversification, and this is innovation. This could be a possibility if a company was given the ability to function without having to worry about the emissions aspect of biomass, which actually is a renewable process.

This is just one idea. This is neatest thing ever. They harvest the algae, and the possibilities are that you can produce bio jet fuel, biodiesel, which could be put back into the oil sands for extraction. I mean, this could be usable fuel. Other products are nutraceuticals, livestock feed, fertilizer. I mean, that's fantastic, isn't it? Imagine. This isn't because of subsidies. These are opportunities. These are companies that are willing to put their own skin in the game to get these things brought online so that they're able to contribute viably to the industry and to the sector in a way that is being asked for but without subsidizing it. That is amazing.

I'd also like to quote from Canada's forest products industry. This is the Forest Products Association of Canada. One of the highlights in the key recommendations for government from this was to "continue to support carbon neutrality of biomass at the facility, since carbon is accounted from a full lifecycle because Canada's forests are sustainable." So here we are. We have the availability of a free resource, a local waste product like sawdust, Weyerhaeuser's wood pellets, wood chips. What is the word for that? There's an actual – it's called hog feed?

Mr. MacIntyre: Hog fuel.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Hog fuel. That's what it's called. Thank you.

Here we are with these by-products, and we can burn them, create the heat and electricity necessary for resource extraction from a free resource, and it's a resource that's actually creating problems for us in our atmosphere. Methane is bad. You know, this is huge, that we could get these products right out of the forest, right where the oil sands are. It's not an issue of transportation. We're right there. Yet the government seeks to cap this availability, seeks to stop this door opening to this process by not exempting the emissions from biomass. It's completely counterintuitive. If you have the choice between the technology and staying under the cap, can we ask a common-sense question of where you'd like to be? Quite frankly, I think the payout on the other side will come in strides, and that's just one product.

If the government had listened to us on partial upgrading and upgrading and cogen and then, aside from that, that 100-megatonne cap on emissions – everything that we don't produce here is going to get produced somewhere else. This government takes responsibility for that. Yeah, it's not in our backyard. Congratulations. But it's in somebody else's. We still pay the price for that. Where are the talks with the other countries and other jurisdictions that are supposed to be in lockstep with Canada, right?

How are we supposed to – I mean, there are so many opportunities here. There are other companies that are able to actually upgrade underground. They're able to take the coking materials and use them underground to create heat and partially upgrade underground. This is something that has actually got government federal and provincial dollars in it and has yet to see the light of day. Is it because the government just doesn't know or it's not reading its own bill or the amendments, for that matter? I mean, we keep bringing lots of ideas. We are tasked with critiquing and finding solutions. I am offering a whole bunch of solutions here. A whole bunch of solutions.

There is a mass boreal forest here, a free resource that companies are actually showing interest in. Literally the only thing the government needs to do, at least at the beginning here, is to open the door and give these folks the opportunity to do the right thing, which they want to do. But the government is actually impeding the process. It makes absolutely no sense. I mean, it's got to be an oversight. It has to be. Like, help me out here. We should be encouraging oil sands operations to integrate biomass into their heat and electricity generation. If we have cogen and that, this is tremendous. We're utilizing the heat and energy that is coming from the oil sands.

The one thing that this government keeps saying is that we are Mordor, that we are dirty oil producers. There is a panel with anti-oil activists on it that is supposedly going to at some point bring us some sort of recommendations. Here are some opportunities to do exactly what the government is asking, but we can't seem to get a single amendment put forward. Why? The nonsense that we get back about why these aren't going through is coming from people who aren't reading the bills and aren't reading the amendments and are saying that we're the ones that are impeding the process. I'm sorry to remind you that we are not the government. We're not impeding anything.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member. I just want to confirm that the documents you referred to will be tabled in the Routine tomorrow.

Mrs. Aheer: I will happily table them. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Thank you very much.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Well, I want to rise and speak in support of this amendment to include biomass as an exempted emission.

This government has at least said that they want to do something to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. But, you know, actions do speak louder than words. We have a carbon tax, and the government has done nothing whatsoever to mitigate carbon leakage. We haven't heard anything from the government side at all as to how they're going to address the very real risk of carbon leakage. It will happen. Of course, if you look at the reasons why we have Australia and France and other jurisdictions looking at ditching their carbon taxes, it all comes down to carbon leakage. They have come to the correct conclusion, that carbon taxation does nothing to reduce global greenhouse gas emissions. But this government seems to think that they have some answers to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

Then, when we come to Bill 25 and we bring in some amendments to address upgrading and partial upgrading, both of which, by the way, have significant impact on emissions, the government votes that down. Now we have before us an amendment excluding biomass, and I want to just read in a couple of things regarding biomass and how biomass could be helping.

The truth of the matter is that it doesn't make any sense at all to include any kind of renewable emissions underneath the cap because the very nature of renewables' emissions is that they benefit us in that they are a reduced form of emissions over conventional methods. For example, residual waste streams – we're talking about organic waste streams – have very high transportation costs and are expensive to dispose of. After landfilling those, which is predominantly what's been going on, we do have some problems that occur such as leaching through the surrounding soil and, of course, the release of methane.

As has been noted in this House many, many times – I know this is known by anyone on the other side that has been paying attention – methane has approximately 25 times the impact that carbon dioxide does as a greenhouse gas. So any time we can do anything to mitigate methane, we should. This government has already talked about a methane reduction strategy. Well, biomass has the capacity to actually address methane in a big way. It is very well known that if you do not deal with the waste stream, if you simply take it to the landfill, the anaerobic processes that then come into play produce massive amounts of methane. That's just a reality. So it is very important to divert as much organic waste as you possibly can out of the landfill scenario. There are some really innovative companies right here in Alberta that have been dealing with this very issue for a number of years, and I'll get to some of them.

But I wanted to talk a little bit about some research that was done at the University of Calgary, where they were investigating how biomass such as straw and wood left over from agricultural and forestry operations could be used to clean up chemical contaminants in water from oil sands operations. This was quite an interesting research project because here we were taking agriculture and forestry residue and using that residue to actually positively enhance oil sands operations. It was like we were bringing our number one, our number two, and our number three industries in this province all together to solve a major problem; namely, toxic water. That's called synergy, when you can bring things together like that.

Now, it is a fact that when you bring all of these residuals together to help the oil and gas sector solve some of its environmental problems, there are all kinds of wonderful consequences to that. I'll just cover a few of them. For example, our current oil sands mining industry uses somewhere in the order of 100 million to 125 million cubic metres of water annually, and that ends up in tailings ponds. Now, the organic compounds in that processed water are dominated by a particular acid called naphthenic acid. This is both toxic and corrosive. But here microbes in the ponds take this naphthenic acid, and they convert that to methane gas. The microbes use it as a food, and then they convert it to methane gas. That is then emitted into the atmosphere, and as I just mentioned a minute ago, that methane gas has 25 times more potential in our atmosphere than carbon dioxide does.

But there's an interesting thing about biocarbon, also known as biochar. It is a fixed form of carbon. Microbes love some sort of fixed carbon, and here's what happens. When you use an activated biocarbon tailored for absorbing naphthenic acid in tailings pond water, it actually prevents the formation and release of methane greenhouse gases. Very interesting, how activated biocarbon and these microbes react with one another and naphthenic acid. Then the spent biocarbon can be used either as a source of renewable energy to displace fossil fuels, or it can safely be landfilled as permanent carbon storage. In other words, you have fixed some carbon now, after it's done its job of absorbing the naphthenic acid, preventing the microbes from converting it to methane gas. Then, in addition, you can landfill the spent biocarbon.

Now, I was reading research sometime ago regarding the use of biochar as a soil enhancer. It has amazing properties if it's put into the soil. It improves crop production substantially, in the double digits. They've done tests in both Japan and Australia on biochar. It's an amazing product. Again, it's a fixed carbon. So here we are reducing greenhouse gas emissions in a couple of ways. It would give us a very low-cost greenhouse gas advantage from using a bioproduct, and it reduces the oil sands industry's environmental footprint.

As you can see, Mr. Chair, the reason why we're putting forward this kind of amendment to exempt biomass from the cap is because of the enormous potential that it presents in reducing greenhouse gas emissions. Why would we ever want to cap biomass? It has the enormous capability of dealing with methane, 25 times more potent than CO<sub>2</sub>, so it only makes sense to exempt something that has that powerful a potential for reducing the environmental footprint in the oil sands.

Given this finding, it seems to me that we need to be encouraging more and more biomass, especially more research and development in it. But when you have a cap on something, you're going to stifle innovation in that area. You're going to stifle investment in that area. Now, research and development are astronomically expensive. It takes years and years and years, especially on the scale of things like developing biochar, and hundreds of thousands of dollars. They need to know that there is going to be a market for what they do. Putting a cap on it totally takes away that incentive.

Now, I want to talk a little bit further about the benefits of biochar. I'm going to call it biochar. That's how I know it. That's how we talked about it at NAIT. I'm going to brag a little bit of a couple of students from NAIT. Two gentlemen, who graduated, I believe, from the very first group of students that went through NAIT's alternative energy program, by the names of Chris Olson and Bruce Saunders started a company to make biochar. They had been through the two-year program at NAIT, and they came out of there pumped. They were just so eager to start this little company, so they researched and researched and spent a gazillion dollars on building prototypes to create biochar, basically a system of controlled pyrolysis. In other words, it is a slow heating process with a very measured amount of oxygen being allowed in the process. You control everything, and the fuels that come off the organic matter actually are then used to heat the whole system. It's sort of creating its own gases and burning those gases. The whole system is so controlled, though, that the amount of emissions coming off this thing is very, very low.

They started a company called IRSI, and I'm very happy to report that they're working on a unit right now. They actually have this at the stage of commercialization, and they have put everything on the line. I'm so proud of those guys and the company that they have built. The unit itself is a great big beast, and it's called Ulysses. They have actually got a process from this innovation, an efficient and sustainable method for managing residual waste in an economical and environmentally friendly manner through that system.

Now, I just want to talk to you a little bit about the real numbers because they have had a unit running. Here are some real numbers for running something like this unit that makes biochar, called Ulysses. Just operating Ulysses for 300 days out of the year, 10 hours a day, five tonnes per hour – get this, Mr. Chair – landfill diversion in tonnes per year is 14,440; biochar carbon sequestration is 12,500 tonnes per year; the number of trees, carbon sequestered, grown for 10 years is 690,000. It's just amazing. As I said, that is just running 10 hours a day, five tonnes an hour, 300 days out of the year.

This system was invented, researched, developed, and commercialized right here in the province of Alberta by two graduates from NAIT. I am so proud of those guys. It's just amazing, the innovation that we have here. They are doing something that's genuinely impacting greenhouse gas emissions. I would like to see Ulysses units all over this province. Wherever there are residual wastes, we could be using this. We could be creating biochar. We could be treating our tailings ponds, reducing more greenhouse gas emissions in the form of eliminating methane production by the microbes in the ponds. On and on and on the benefits go. Yet this government comes along and caps emissions, directly impacting the ability of this particular development right here, this technology right here, invented, built right here, commercialized right in Alberta.

This is why this amendment is before the House, to take the limit off innovation. Do not limit innovation that reduces greenhouse gas emissions. If this government over here and if you members in the backbenches really care about greenhouse emissions, don't cap them. Don't cap innovation that directly impacts greenhouse gas emissions, especially greenhouse gas emissions related to methane because you're talking about 25 times the impact. It makes no sense whatsoever. I would hope that this government would see the kind of benefits that we're talking about. We're talking about a pyrolysis system that takes waste and turns it into a fixed carbon that is extremely useful in a lot of ways.

Now, just to brag of the guys a little bit more, because I'm just so proud of these guys – I mean, I've been involved in some research and development when I was a younger guy. I tell you, it's expensive, it can break you financially, and everybody around you is saying, you know, "You're not going to make it; this isn't looking real good," especially when you have some failures, and there they are, piling up. But these guys hung in there, and they kept going. Now they're at the point where they've got this process perfected. It's an amazing unit. I've seen it. It was built right here in Edmonton, down on the south side.

These units are somewhat portable. They can take and site them anywhere in the province, wherever there is waste. Now, I should point out that one of the Achilles heels of biomass is the cost of transporting the feedstock from wherever the feedstock is generated to wherever the unit is that's going to burn it. The transportation costs are really the one thing that has been problematic for biomass, specifically in the United States because that's where a lot of the original work was done. But here in our province we have such a massive boreal forest. We have such a huge forestry industry. We also have a huge agricultural industry. We have some significant feedstock, and that feedstock is available all over this province. It's not like, you know, places in the United States where they may have to truck it or places in Europe where they have to truck in biomass. It's not the case here.

We have just scads of this stuff all over, and we need to be making use of it. We need to be diverting all of it from decomposition because it is in the decomposition that we now are going to have methane gases released. Putting it into a unit like Ulysses deals with that issue completely and creates a very valuable value-added product.

10:10

This government wants diversification. Well, here's a good bit of diversification right here, creating biochar plus the jobs that are created. Now, we have some statistics, even. There were some studies that were done on biomass, and as it turns out, using biomass to generate electricity is fairly labour intensive. Lots of jobs are created from it. It always has the potential for a significant reduction in greenhouse gas emissions. In addition, though, it is a job creator because it's so labour intensive. Because we have the ability in this province to fabricate absolutely anything you can think of, those units can be built right here, putting jobs in manufacturing right here. Further research and development into advancing that technology right here in Alberta: this could be a huge diversification type of industry. Manufacturing those units here in this province . . . [Mr. MacIntyre's speaking time expired]

The Acting Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A8? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I was going to, I guess, read in part, anyways, this article here from Alberta Innovates. This is an important article. It's Biomass Innovation: Canada's Leading Cleantech Opportunity for Greenhouse Gas Reduction and Economic Prosperity. This is the executive summary. I could say that there are a lot of points here that really should be spelled out. It's important. It says:

Canada has a tremendous opportunity to build upon its inherent strengths and take a cleantech leadership position in the production of bioenergy and bioproducts produced from sustainable biomass.

It goes on to say:

This document, which identifies why biomass should be the cornerstone of Canada's greenhouse gas . . . reduction and economic growth policies, is intended to initiate a dialogue between policy makers . . .

That would be us.

. . . large [greenhouse gas] emitting sectors, and biomass feedstock and technology suppliers that will result in deployment of Canada's biomass resources to reduce [greenhouse gas] emissions. Reasons for pursuing biomass cleantech innovations . . .

These things are included, and this is what's important.

- Biomass can reduce [greenhouse gas] emissions from Canada's largest and fastest growing sources. Canada's unique [greenhouse gas] profile, dictated by a large landmass, northern climate, resource-based economy, and the 3rd lowest electricity [greenhouse gas] intensity in the G20, means deployment of electricity-based renewables, such as wind and solar, will not address the largest and fastest growing sources of emissions including oil and gas extraction and processing . . .

It will not address the largest and fastest growing sources.

. . . heavy duty transportation, and process/space heat. Deployment of biomass can.

So biomass can look after that.

- Biomass can be economically utilized in Canada's existing carbon-based infrastructure.

So it's something that can be worked into what we're doing.

Biomass is the only source of renewable carbon that can be used within the existing fossil-fuel infrastructure, including coal-fired power plants, oil sands operations, transportation fuel distribution systems, the vehicle fleet, natural gas pipelines, heavy industry (steel, cement, fertilizer) facilities, and residential and commercial building heating systems.

It can be included in all of those. It goes on to say:

This avoids stranding valuable assets and can enable market access for Canada's other natural resource products including oil, gas, chemicals . . . and minerals.

Mr. Chair:

- Biomass creates far more jobs than other renewables and builds upon human resource strengths.

Projects that utilize biomass can create 10 times . . .

That's 10 times.

. . . more operating jobs than wind and solar on an energy output basis.

That's important because, I mean, we're heading towards these things. This is a renewable, and this can mean 10 times more operating jobs.

In addition, production of bioenergy and biofuels economically complements the production of higher-value products such as food, lumber, pulp, biochemicals, and bioproducts that produce significantly more jobs than energy on a feedstock input basis.

And if we can create more jobs, especially since what Alberta needs right now is more jobs, this is very important.

Many of the skills developed by workers in the oil and gas, chemicals, pulp and paper, utility, and food processing sectors are in demand by bioenergy, biofuel, and biomechanical producers.

It goes on further to say:

- Biomass provides significant economic development opportunities for Indigenous peoples.

So it's not just one sector; this is more inclusive.

Indigenous peoples can play a major role in the development and management of bioenergy and bioproduct projects as providers of traditional knowledge of ecosystems, suppliers of biomass, operators of facilities, exporters of bioproducts, and consumers of bioenergy – particularly in remote and isolated communities.

That speaks volumes for what it can do to help indigenous peoples and create jobs.

- Biomass [also] provides immense cleantech innovation and technology development opportunities. [Development] of commercial biomass conversion technologies can create sustainable livelihoods today and form the basis for a biotechnology and cleantech innovation-based bioeconomy, replete with high-quality bioproducts research, technology development, and commercialization jobs. Management of Canada's extensive biomass resources also offers vast potential for linking high tech industry development with resource management via big data, GIS, drones, and remotely-operated/autonomous machinery and vehicles. These cleantech, high tech, and biotech innovations can become high-value exports for Canada.

So we can look at other exports because we have such a large mass. This is something that we would be missing out on. It's important for us to be able to take and use that and realize what we can make from that.

It also goes on to say:

- Canada has more biomass per capita than any other country on Earth.

Any other country on Earth. We've got it here per capita.

No other country has the combined forestry, agriculture, and urban biomass resources of Canada and others recognize the climate mitigation value of Canada's biomass resources by importing large volumes for use in heating, electricity generation, and transportation . . . ('wastes') alone could provide 20% of Canada's yearly energy supply.

That's just waste alone that can supply that much. Frankly, that's huge.

So, you know, biomass is a very important, I think, part of the overall plan for us to have sustainable energy in our province.

Canada has an opportunity to become the world leader in the use and development of clean and sustainable technologies and processes that utilize biomass . . .

What is biomass? Biomass is the only renewable source of carbon. It can be converted into transportation fuels, heat, electricity, chemicals, and materials.

It has that many different components to it. It can be used for everything, almost.

The most abundant forms of biomass . . .

as you can figure with our country,

. . . are wood, agricultural residues ([such as] straw and manure), and organic municipal waste. Canada has more biomass . . . than any other country on Earth.

So it's something that we need to make sure we're looking at. We don't want to lose that. "We don't want to limit innovation" is what the member next to me just said, so it's super important.

Meeting Canada's Greenhouse Gas and Economic Development Goals

Canada is facing significant economic and environmental headwinds, [particularly] due to the country's reliance on currently low-priced resource commodities and the greenhouse gas . . . emissions associated with recovery, extraction, processing, and utilization of those resources. Fortunately, Canada has an opportunity to become the world leader in the use and development of clean and sustainable technologies and processes that utilize biomass to reduce GHG emissions while improving the performance of the Canadian economy.

What could be wrong with that? We can improve our economy and utilize what we have.

The document goes on to describe how biomass – forest, agriculture, and municipal waste resources – can be effectively used to meet [greenhouse gas] reduction targets and why it should be a central part of Canada's climate change mitigation plan. Canada . . .

and, I would argue, Alberta as well, specifically,

. . . has an unparalleled opportunity to utilize biomass to meet its climate leadership goals . . .

That's what you're after. You're trying to meet your climate leadership goals.

. . . while creating a large number of jobs . . .

something that this province desperately needs,

. . . and enabling market access for the country's other natural resources including oil, gas, chemicals, metals, and minerals.

It goes on to say:

Biomass is the bridge that links traditional resource and heavy industry sectors with cleantech and biotechnology. Not only are many of the skills developed by workers in the oil and gas, chemicals, pulp and paper, utility, and food processing sectors in demand by bioenergy, biofuel, and biochemical producers, but development of new technologies and processes that convert biomass into high-value bioproducts for domestic and foreign markets requires highly-qualified biotechnology and engineering personnel.

You need to get those personnel in there. We already have them. We already have so many people that are experts in the field of engineering for these.

In addition, Indigenous peoples can play a major role in the development and management of bioenergy and [bioprojects] as holders of traditional knowledge of ecosystems, suppliers of biomass, operators of facilities, exporters of bioproducts, and consumers of bioenergy.

Again, we want to make sure that there are jobs – there are so many jobs that are out there – and that they're available.

This goes on to say:

Many of the technologies that would allow [new] biomass to be utilized to reduce [greenhouse gas] emissions are commercially available and already deployed in Canadian or foreign jurisdictions. In many cases, existing infrastructure [would include] coal-fired plants, transportation fuel distribution systems, oil refineries and bitumen upgraders, cement and steel plants, natural gas pipelines, and building and heating systems.

All those are included, are already existing infrastructure that could be utilized. They can accommodate biomass products, thus avoiding stranding assets. We have the assets. We've already paid for them. They already exist. We stop and we avoid stranding those assets while attaining significant GHG reductions. [interjections]

Mr. Panda: There are some distractions.

Mr. Taylor: There are some distractions over there, yeah.

The Acting Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright has the floor.

Mr. Taylor: This is not typically the case with other renewables, avoiding stranding the assets – not typically the case with other renewables – however, development of a sustainable economy based on biomass, a bio-economy, does not need to be limited to existing technologies. It does not need to be limited to existing technologies. Deployment of commercial technologies to reduce GHG emissions and create operations and resource management jobs today could be leveraged to form the basis for a biotechnology, clean-tech, innovation-based economy replete with high-quality research, technology development, and commercialization jobs tomorrow. The paper, if you were to read all of it: it goes on, and it demonstrates that no other clean technology option can effectively address Canada's unique GHG profile while building upon the country's strength in resources, both human and physical.

Many other countries yearn – they would love to have what we have. They yearn to have the biomass resources of Canada while Canadian biomass is already exported in large volumes – for example, 1.6 million tonnes of wood pellets every year – to help other countries meet their GHG targets. Their domestic potential has been largely ignored. In order for Canada to be a leader in climate change mitigation, the country's economic structure necessitates that biomass form the cornerstone of plans that reduce GHG emissions while reshaping the Canadian economy for the better.

Mr. Chair, it's important that we recognize that Canada can be a leader in this, and we have the opportunity now to be able, with the bills that are being passed, to become that leader. That's why I'm supporting this amendment here, that the biomass emissions, as it says here, be excluded under the section from there. If we exclude it, we're only helping our province create new jobs and create a better place for Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Similar to the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, just ensure that you're tabling that.

As much as I'm enjoying throwback Thursday coming early, please ensure that the side conversations' volume is being kept down to a minimum as well.

The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I think it's just important to start off by noting that biomass emissions for electricity, agriculture, or otherwise, outside of the use in the oil sands, are obviously not capped in any way. We would absolutely encourage the development of biomass, and we think that Alberta and Canada absolutely can be a leader in this area. However, in terms of biomass use in the oil sands, our government is very excited to see the ingenuity of a tremendous private sector, and as new technology is developed, we will absolutely, gladly explore any functional innovations that can take carbon out of the barrel. There's room within this bill to have these conversations about new technologies and experimental ideas as they come online.

I'll just point out again that this annual emissions limit was jointly recommended to government by leaders in industry and the environment. It's a limit that provides room for growth and development of oil sands resources that will be higher than any time in our past or present. The exemptions that we have included allow for expansion in cogeneration and upgrading, which are areas that industry has identified as being key areas that we need room for expansion in here in Alberta. In fact, the CEO of the Canada's Oil Sands Innovation Alliance praised our cap and said, "With the technology being developed in Alberta we are confident Alberta can continue to grow its industry while reducing emissions."

We can obviously have conversations with stakeholders who are exploring biomass use in the oil sands going forward, and we're absolutely looking forward to doing so. However, it's an unnecessary exemption at this time, and I will not be supporting this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I see some interesting movements here in the House, and the top government officials have chosen their seats for 2019, it looks like. Congratulations. I can't wait to see you, and I will be speaking from that side soon. They already got the message that Albertans have noted that this government is not listening to common-sense solutions offered by the Official Opposition, so they're already rehearsing their future roles in opposition. Good to see that.

Mr. Chair, some of my colleagues talked about the resource, where we can find it, and the abundance of it. I also talked about the resource we own here in Alberta, how fortunate we are to have that resource, unlike Saudi and Venezuela. For conventional oil you have to actually explore to find it. In Alberta we don't have to do that. We already know where it exists. It's about: how can we extract that resource, both economically and environmentally, in a responsible way? That's all we are talking about. We already know where it is.

Now this government wants to strand that resource. This Bill 25 is about capping that development and capping that production. Even if the cap is at 100 megatonnes for the time being, till the Premier, Deputy Premier, House leader move to this side and until we move to that side, assuming that they cap it at 100 megatonnes, still those operating plants in the oil sands need heat, energy. They need heat for all the operating processes in the hydrocarbon operations up north, and one way to reduce those emissions is to use biomass.

It's interesting that my colleague and the previous speaker quoted a document, Biomass Innovation, by Alberta Innovates: Bio Solutions, and it's also prepared together with the Climate Change and Emissions Management Corporation. They coauthored this document. My colleague from Battle River-Wainwright quoted this document extensively, and I got curious, so now I'm just looking at that. There are portions that I am reading out of that, and it is defining what is actually biomass, Mr. Chair.

Biomass is the only renewable source of carbon. It can be converted into transportation fuels, heat, electricity, chemicals, and materials. The most abundant forms of biomass are wood, agricultural residues (e.g., straw and manure), and organic municipal waste. Canada has more biomass per capita than any other country on the Earth.

So it's all about harvesting the resource we have in front of us, that we are blessed to have, that no other country has, which is the envy of many nations in the world.

I talked to you about the energy poverty and energy hunger I personally experienced when I lived and worked overseas. In this country we have all sorts of resources. Like my colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake said, we are rich in these renewable and nonrenewable resources. When I talk about the nonrenewables, oil sands are the major resource we own. When we talk about renewables, we're talking about intermittent sources like wind and solar, which are renewables, but they need backup. So to substitute alternative energy-efficient resources in oil sands operations, biomass could be a good alternative.

The Member for Calgary-East said: oh, we like biomass; we'd like to develop that, but we want to cap it. Look at the inconsistencies there, again and again and again: "We like this, but we want to cap it. We want to create jobs . . .

An Hon. Member: But we'll stifle.

Mr. Panda: Yeah.

"... but we'll stifle. We want pipelines, but we want to cap production, so we don't need to move the product to the pipeline." It's totally inconsistent, Mr. Chair. Like I said, you know, this government doesn't want to harvest oil sands resources we own to the full potential and for the full benefit of Albertans not only of this generation, of future generations, just because of ideological reasons. Again, we are blessed with these forest products.

When I was young, Mr. Chair, I saw people using wood waste products to cook food and to heat up their homes – I saw that – during the winter. They didn't have electricity, and they couldn't afford diesel generators to heat their homes or to power their homes. They were using forest waste products or municipal waste products. So it's a good opportunity here to allow oil sands to use biomass for their heating requirements. They need the heat for all the chemical operation processes to crack – first of all, in the SAGD process they need heat to heat the reservoir so they can pump out the bitumen.

I don't know why we want to not exempt biomass from this cap of 100 megatonnes. It's, again, a reasonable amendment. You want to harvest the natural resources you have, which are renewable. Okay. Other alternatives in these operations use natural gas. They burn it to make steam. But when I travelled in northern Alberta, I saw places like Al-Pac and all, who said that they have this capacity to produce 100 megatonnes of electricity with the feedstock of biomass, which we have in Alberta. Others don't have the same kinds of forest products we have.

10:40

We want to use that effectively, but I don't see why these government members are selectively saying that they like renewables but that they don't want oil sands operations to deploy those renewables to help reduce their emissions. I don't get that. We should actually be encouraging oil sands operations to integrate biomass into their heat and electricity generation because if we keep using natural gas in the oil sands, whether to recover bitumen or in the process of upgrading bitumen to synthetic crude oil, we'll be producing more greenhouse gas emissions. We should, rather, exempt biomass from the emissions cap so we can incent the usage of greener resources by the oil sands operators.

An Hon. Member: A hundred per cent renewable.

Mr. Panda: Yeah. A hundred per cent renewable.

It's a slam dunk. It's low-hanging fruit. What's missing here is common sense. Why do you reject that? I don't get it. Yeah. It seems that common sense is short here, a scarce resource.

An Hon. Member: Common sense isn't so common.

Mr. Panda: Right.

Mr. Chair, biomass also provides a baseload of deployable power. The fact that wind and solar are just intermittent renewables – we have an opportunity here to provide constant, invariable electricity, which can be used for resource extraction or processing operations. It could be used for both purposes. If you see any of these operating plants up north, you'll see that there is a lot of equipment, whether it is heat exchangers, columns, reactors, or pressure vessels. They all need heat. Here is an opportunity to use biomass, which is a hundred per cent renewable, to help reduce their costs and also to have a renewable baseload power and to reduce their greenhouse gas emissions. And it's not the Wildrose who is saying that. This is Alberta Innovates: Bio Solutions, overseen by the minister of economic development. They are telling you. At least you should listen to them.

My colleague the previous speaker talked about some of the other features of this biomass. He talked about how biomass can reduce greenhouse gas emissions from Canada's largest and fastest growing sources. He talked about how biomass can be economically utilized in Canada, suggesting carbon-based infrastructure. He talked about how biomass can create far more jobs than other renewables and build upon human resource trends.

Now, speaking about creating jobs, Mr. Chair, you and I represent ridings in Calgary, and our city has lost so many jobs. Creating jobs should be the top priority of this government, and Alberta Innovates is suggesting that utilizing biomass as a resource here can create far more jobs. This creates jobs, and it provides significant economic development opportunities for indigenous people. This is interesting. Now, the indigenous minister is not here, but this government, which is supposed to be the champion of indigenous people – Alberta Innovates is telling us that this biomass can provide significant economic opportunities for indigenous people. If you care about indigenous people, then exempt biomass from the oil sands emissions cap of 100 megatonnes.

Biomass also provides immense clean-tech innovation and technology development opportunities. We heard so many times in this House, Mr. Chair, about clean tech, about innovation and all that. Here is an easy solution. All we have to do is act on that. This government seems to not be willing to act on that.

This document also went on to say: "Canada has more biomass per capita than any other country on Earth." Why can't we use it? No other country has as much biomass as Canada and Alberta, but we refuse to harvest that. Why?

Our children are going to ask us those questions, Mr. Chair. Your children, my children, my grandchildren are going to ask us: you had an opportunity to deploy more biomass in the oil sands operations to reduce greenhouse gas emissions; why did you not act? When they ask, what's going to be the answer? Can the Member for Calgary-East speak about that? Or can the Member for Edmonton-McClung get up and talk about this and explain it to us?

This document also quotes:

Biomass that is degraded . . . (in the absence of oxygen), such as decomposition in a landfill, releases methane . . . a GHG 25 times more impactful than [carbon dioxide]. By using biomass as a fuel, these methane emissions can be avoided and fossil fuel consumption reduced. This is one way that bioenergy and biofuel use can reduce GHG emissions by greater than 100% from a fossil fuel baseline. The other is by combining bioenergy with carbon capture and storage . . . or utilization.

Probably, Mr. Chair, that's what the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake was talking about, how we can handle methane by using biomass.

Like I said before, Mr. Chair, intermittent renewables such as wind and solar cannot address baseload electricity GHG intensity challenges, as per this document.

Mr. Chair, we talked about cogen operations in SAGD facilities. I keep parroting that back every time because I feel very strongly about that. I was really disappointed that this government has rejected the amendment to exempt cogen operations in the oil sands from the cap of 100 megatonnes. It's very disappointing. So now we are saying: "Okay. You might have rejected that because it's a nonrenewable source. Here we have a renewable source, which is biomass. We don't understand why you don't exempt that." [interjection] I think the Member for Calgary-North West should be the next speaker to explain as to why. It seems there is some reason. I want to understand.

Mr. Chair, this document also highlights how biomass can be a great job creator. "Biomass creates by far the most long-term, operating jobs of any renewable energy: up to 5.5 per MW vs. 0.2-0.7 per MW for PV solar and on-shore wind."

I'll table this document tomorrow, Mr. Chair. There is lots of good information. This is not a Wildrose document. This is not from my shadow budget or anything. This is the document prepared by Alberta Innovates: Bio Solutions, coauthored by the Climate Change and Emissions Management Corporation.

With all the good things and good intentions this government seems to have in theory, in practice they're very inconsistent, and they don't allow any of those innovations or any of those technologies they talk about. It's only for talk, not for adopting. They don't want to act on them. It doesn't make sense. Also, biomass that is degraded . . . [Mr. Panda's speaking time expired] Oops. Sorry.

The Acting Chair: Sorry to cut you off.

Are there any other members? The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I promise to be brief. I just wanted to applaud the members for Calgary-East and, actually, Edmonton-McClung for speaking on behalf of biomass and others. The only issue that I foresee here is that as much as the members are speaking on behalf of it, they're forgetting that without the exemptions that we're adding into this bill, the door just can't open for these things to go forward, much as we appreciate the fact that you're maybe starting to hear what we're saying. Unfortunately, one of the things that the Member for Calgary-East had mentioned is that within the bill, if I remember – and I'm sorry; I don't have the Blues – there is room to address these issues. I would like to know where that is.

Secondly, that the leaders of the industry were the ones that proposed this: well, the industry has spoken clearly to us that these exemptions would certainly help to move these things forward. That is actual stakeholder outreach.

That somehow, without adding in the exemptions that we're wanting to add in, that could promote growth: that seems counterintuitive when you are not exempting that which could open the door to actually growing these industries.

Finally, I think the most concerning aspect was that the member mentioned about going forward and talking about stakeholders in the regulatory process of this bill. Well, that should have been done previous to this bill. Stakeholder outreach needed to happen already. That doesn't happen in the regulations. I'm sure there are things within regulations that will need to be discussed, but – I'm sorry – that should have been done previous to this. That is a telltale sign that the government has not done its due diligence in stakeholder outreach.

The exemptions that are in this bill at the present do not go even close to far enough to incite companies to invest, and that's what we're actually talking about here, investing in the opportunities to actually create processes that will help to reduce GHG emissions. Diversification requires an economic environment conducive to compelling companies to invest in that development.

One thing I would like to say specifically is that biomass fuel is renewable. It is renewable. It has a sustainable, renewable availability to us. We should be encouraging its use in the oil sands, and it cannot be treated as equal to nonrenewable emissions.

Thank you so much.

The Acting Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A8?

Hon. members, if we could be cognizant about standing as well. It's hard for me to recognize members whenever we're opening it up for debate.

I'm just confirming if there are any other members wishing to speak to amendment A8.

Seeing none, I will call the question on amendment A8 as proposed by the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View on behalf of the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

[Motion on amendment A8 lost]

The Acting Chair: We are back on the main bill. The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Surprise, surprise. I know you're surprised.

I would like to bring forward an amendment, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: Sorry, just bear with us, hon. member.

Carry on, hon. member. Sorry for the delay.

Mrs. Aheer: No, that's fine. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to move that Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be amended as follows. Section 2(2) is amended by adding the following after clause (a): "(a.1) sequestered emissions as determined in accordance with the regulations;" and section 3 is amended by adding the following after clause (d): "(d.1) prescribing a method for determining sequestered emissions excluded under section 2(2)(a.1)."

This amendment basically makes a new exemption for sequestered gases similar to our attempts with biomass and cogeneration.

This is a bit of an inquiry, too. Again, maybe this is just a mistake, but it doesn't seem to make any sense to count captured GHGs the same as GHGs that are emitted. In the definitions, at letter (g) in the actual bill, it says, "'Greenhouse gas emissions' means all greenhouse gases, expressed in tonnes on a CO<sub>2</sub>e basis, that are released from sources located at an oil sands site, including greenhouse gases sent off site." Just to clarify, I'm asking this because I need to know what that means because not all CO<sub>2</sub> that is sent off site is just released, right? We want to know – like, it's not necessarily released. It could be sequestered for projects and for feedstock, for the algae project that I was talking about earlier, plastic, or petrochemicals.

Whether they're used in petrochemicals, enhanced oil recovery or other processes, stored underground, the government should be finding ways, I would think, to encourage activities and not discourage them. The inclusion of greenhouse gases sent off site under the cap in the definition requires some serious clarity from the government because it sounds like the emissions sent for sequestration count under the cap. I honestly believe with all my heart that you don't mean that. It doesn't make any sense.

Maybe the NDP meant to exempt sequestered GHGs in 2(2)(e), where the bill actually talks about emissions from enhanced recovery, but by enhanced recovery do you mean oil sands? I'm sure. If the government could please clarify, however, because otherwise this really doesn't make any sense. Like, if it was forgotten or was an oversight, could that please be mentioned?

We're very concerned about the gases that are separated for petrochemical processing being counted here. The government should actually take a look at a way to exclude those from the definition and make this an exemption as well. Unless you're wanting to discourage petrochemical diversification, it kind of goes against everything that we hear pretty much every day in this House.

I'd like to enter a few pieces of a document into the record, and I will make sure I have the required copies of this tomorrow: Recycling Carbon Dioxide to Make Plastics.

Why is this important?

By using CO<sub>2</sub> that would otherwise be emitted to the atmosphere, the process has the potential to cut greenhouse gas emissions while simultaneously reducing petroleum consumption and producing useful products for . . . consumers.

The PPC polymers, copolymerization – that's a fun word – of CO<sub>2</sub> and chemicals, can be tailored for applications with a broad range of material characteristics, everything from plastics to foam. It depends on the size of polymer chain. We want to make sure that if these are being sequestered and used in actually producing something, I would say that that would be very much aligned with what the government is trying to do with this act.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Secondly,

converting captured CO<sub>2</sub> into products such as chemicals, plastics, fuels, building materials, and other commodities is an important component for any energy carbon capture and storage program. This could be especially valuable in reducing carbon emissions in areas where there's no geological storage. Just as the waste wood products can become energy in different processes such as biomass, waste emissions can become inputs for petrochemicals and plastics. I mean, as we say very often, one person's trash is another person's treasure. So let's use the opportunity within this bill to actually promote opportunities to turn waste products into something useful.

Again, this is asking for an exemption for sequestered gases, and I highly recommend that the government vote in favour of this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Your amendment will be referred to as A9.

Just in future, for the House, we need to make sure that we have an intervenor speaker between one speaker and the next speaker. I'm just flagging it for next time.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to take a couple minutes and thank my colleague for another amendment, another good idea. In the four hours or so that I've been sitting here and listening, I've heard and seen our government against biomass, cogeneration, partial upgrading, sequestration. Now this hundred-megatonne cap. When I see all of these good amendments and these ideas, what you're really against is innovation. What you're really against is opportunity for the experts, the people in the industry, the people that grow wealth, the people that create jobs, the people that give us the opportunity to have strong families and communities. You're really against giving them any opportunity to flourish. As we talked about when this bill first came to pass, your idea of managed growth is going to set us back.

It makes me think of a couple of things when it comes to being against innovation and the consequences of this government's actions and what it may have. I remember reading six months ago how scientists accidentally discovered a CO<sub>2</sub> process, turning it into ethanol, people in the field, people creating wealth and jobs, what this may lead to.

Then I look at how neighbouring jurisdictions have flourished. I'm still shocked about a breakfast I had two weeks ago, when a senior oil and gas person in Alberta told me that when they're buying oil fields now, they ensure that they sell off the Alberta portion before they go forward. My God. What does that cost us?

Then I'm seeing the other day that in somewhere called Stoughton, Saskatchewan, an Arizona company called Quantum has decided to put in a 40,000-barrel-a-day refinery, full slate. Is it because Saskatchewan has sequestration? Maybe; maybe not. I understand that sequestration is very expensive and maybe not that wholesome a process. Is it because they have biomass cogeneration and partial upgrading allowed? I have no idea. But what they don't have is a cap. What they don't have is a government that manages decline. What they don't have is a government that is all about holding back the talents, the resources of their people.

You know, once here tonight in the last four hours it would have been nice to see the Alberta government do a little bit of the same.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A9?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A9 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Are there any others wishing to speak to Bill 25?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 25 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 27 Renewable Electricity Act

The Deputy Chair: We are currently on amendment A7. Are there any comments or questions or amendments to be offered in regard to the amendment? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. Would you kindly read the amendment for the House?

The Deputy Chair: Just one second.

Mr. MacIntyre: Bring us all back to Bill 27, back to the future.

The Deputy Chair: Amendment A7 reads as follows:

[The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake] to move that Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be amended by adding the following after section 5:

Landowner consultation

5.1 A proposal under section 5 shall not be approved by the Minister unless the Minister is satisfied that reasonable consultation in respect of the proposal has taken place with any affected municipalities and landowners.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you very much. I appreciate that. I want to bring everyone in the House back to our last time together on this bill. We received a speech at that time from the Member for West Yellowhead, and the member stated in regard to my amendment the following:

This amendment demonstrates a remarkable failure to understand the full scheme of the regulatory and approvals process applicable to renewable energy projects and, also, how renewable energy projects are developed in co-operation with landowners who receive revenues from the projects.

Frankly, Madam Chair, this statement does demonstrate an excessive amount of unlearnedness to the realities of the Alberta Utilities Commission requirements to consult with landowners, not to mention a complete disregard for the policies that the Member for West Yellowhead ran on.

Point 1. The AUC requirement to consult can be fulfilled by simply holding a town hall without regard for who attends or who feels that their feedback was taken into consideration. The NDP should have learned this lesson during the Bill 6 rallies. Consultation requires more than a mere meeting where property owners are told how it's going to be. Consultation requires a back-and-forth conversation. It requires that these projects receive approval only after both parties are in agreement that it is mutually beneficial.

The reason why there has been so much anger in this province historically over the issue of property rights is because the existing processes never resulted in a win-win for both sides, and frankly both the Alberta Energy Regulator and the Alberta Utilities Commission have the ability to run roughshod over property owners, which is why we need this amendment.

The NDP and Wildrose shared, at least we did during the last election, a mutual dislike of the heavy-handed principles contained in the province's existing property rights legislation. The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky took great strides to review the hon. Government House Leader's, the former leader of the NDP's, position on property rights, and I think perhaps the government members might need a bit of a review. The hon. Government House Leader was quoted on property rights on October 27 of 2015 by saying:

Thank you very much for that question, hon. member. I want to assure the hon. member opposite that our party has always believed in due process, in proper notification, rights of appeal. All of the fundamental rights of property owners are things that we support, and we're going to make sure that in the fullness of time those continue to be protected.

There you go. During the last election we saw the NDP making promises to deal with the property rights issues, and here they are in power well over a year and a half now, and we still don't see any action on that file. What happened to the hon. Government House Leader's stated strong position that in the fullness of time we're going to make sure that property rights are protected? Something happened here. Something fell by the wayside, it looks to me.

Furthermore, the hon. Government House Leader goes on to say:

Back when some of these bills were passed – Bill 19 and, I think, bills 36 and 50 if my memory serves well – the Wildrose didn't exist. It didn't have any seats in the Legislature, and it was the NDP opposition that led the fight for a balanced and fair approach to property.

But, again, the hon. Government House Leader has been sitting on the government side since May of 2015, and he has yet even once to put forward any kind of legislation or amendments to legislation to deal with this issue.

Then I happened to come across an interesting bit of paper. I believe it was a mailer sent out to all kinds of people in our province, and it's entitled Your Land, Your Rights: The Alberta NDP's Stand against Tory Land Grabs. It's an interesting document.

Alberta's NDP stands for . . .

- Due process with respect to rights of landowners . . .
- Power customers must not be required to pay for utility projects of for-profit companies . . .

The NDP opposition has submitted two private members' motions to the Legislature demanding action.

One of them says:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the Government to introduce legislation to protect the rights of landowners, ensuring property rights cannot be arbitrarily violated or extinguished without consultation and fair compensation.

Well, hallelujah. You know, we're getting older by the day waiting for this. Haven't seen hide nor hair of it. But here we have an amendment that is before the House right now attempting to deal with this very thing, this very issue. We waited and waited and waited, and there was nothing coming from the government side, so here we have an amendment that actually deals with it.

The truth is that Alberta has not done enough to secure the property rights of Albertans to be implementing wide-sweeping changes to the electricity system. Here again we see the government going whole hog in a certain direction without taking care of some unfinished business with respect to property rights in this province, and it is little solace that can still be provided to protect Albertan property owners. You know, this amendment is attempting to right a wrong, a wrong that was recognized by members opposite when they were in opposition, but as we have seen repeatedly from this government, something happened to their memory.

Now, the Member for West Yellowhead went on to tell us something about what facilities brought to local economies, again missing the point entirely, stating that, and I quote, in the municipal district of Pincher Creek a wind farm brought $12 million into the local economy. End quote. Well, I wonder what the farmers in the member's riding would say in response to the member's logic, that their property rights are secondary to financial gain. Wildrose is not opposed to privately funded wind farms. Investing $12 million under agreeable property rights circumstances is an important part of growing Alberta's economy. What we are opposed to are draconian property rights laws that see Albertans left without solace after their properties are expropriated under this province's existing laws, laws that the NDP recognized needed to be changed, needed substantial overhaul, and to this day they've done nothing whatsoever to right that wrong.

An Hon. Member: Nothing?

Mr. MacIntyre: Nothing. Lip service during an election doesn't cut it in this province. The people of Alberta are expecting this government to live up to their campaign promises to deal with the long-standing issue of property rights.

In the 2015 Property Rights Advocate report expropriation was a top-five concern. In the top five, Madam Chair. Eleven per cent of the 127 inquiries received by the Property Rights Advocate office were specifically about expropriation and adverse possession.

Here are a few more pieces of scathing information from the Property Rights Advocate office's 2015 annual report.

Compensation for those affected may not always be appropriate, likely due to gaps, overlap and fragmentation in the way laws and policies are written or interpreted. Laws may have been written with the intent of fairness but when the components are not integrated into a complete system there are challenges that prevent equity and fairness in the outcomes.

In other words, the equity and fairness is by no means guaranteed just by the wording of the specific regulation. It's how it is actually delivered that counts.

Certain activities or legislation are viewed as an invasion of property rights and Albertans want clarification on the rules when it comes to their rights . . . Ownership implies that an asset "belongs" to the owner and that it cannot be taken away unless, or until, the owner elects to release it.

That is what ownership means.

When government affects property rights in some way, owners are paid for their losses in some circumstances but in other situations are not compensated. Albertans want to know the circumstances in which the erosion of a property right will trigger compensation. Albertans want to know exactly what an Albertan owns when he or she owns a property or a property right.

The report goes on to say:

Albertans are also connecting with [the office of the Property Rights Advocate] to ask for justice – justice for intrusions on their property rights in the form of appropriate compensation and adequate appeal mechanisms. An appeal mechanism, to be adequate, must provide timely and easily accessible (in terms of process and cost), hearings by an impartial tribunal with broad jurisdiction to consider all relevant influences. Absent any of those factors, an owner can find themselves not only stripped of their property rights but also feel emotionally and financially subjected to an ineffective, time-consuming and overly-complex process.

Madam Chair, these are serious, serious statements being made by the advocate's office, and they are referring to what still exists to this day, terrible lacks in our laws, laws that are draconian, heavy handed, that put far too much power in the government to expropriate without appropriate consultation and compensation. So while the member might believe that policies are already in place to ensure that renewable energy projects are also subject to public scrutiny under the [AUC's] strict regulatory processes and reviews of new generation projects. It does that. The AUC's processes include reviews with local communities, in consultation, this is fundamentally not a true statement. It is, frankly, embarrassing to hear a member of this House make such grandiose and ill-informed statements about the state of property rights in the province of Alberta, property rights that the hon. member and his party agreed to do something about but, to this moment, have done nothing.

The member went on to say in his speech last week: "This can include full hearing processes, where the AUC deems it necessary." Oh, really? "Where the AUC deems it necessary": that is an actual quote from the member. The member believes Albertan property owners should find some solace in the fact that the AUC has the option of listening to their municipalities or not. Shameful. The Member for West Yellowhead went on to say: "The AUC can put conditions on the project to require certain mitigations of various concerns. So there is consultation." Wow. The member actually said that the AUC can put in place conditions. Nothing whatsoever has been learned by the members of this government during the Bill 6 consultations or lack of consultations. You still do not understand how consultation works. You cannot call it consultation if it's only a win-lose situation. Genuine consultation has to end up in a win-win or it's not consultation; it is simply conformity, forced conformity. That is not democracy.

We get e-mails and letters and phone calls from concerned constituents across this province, constituents that attend these AUC so-called consultations only to find out that they do not have a choice about the construction of wind and solar farms in their area. Albertans are very concerned about the impacts on wildlife. Albertans are concerned about the impacts on human health in terms of the constant low-level vibration and sound waves, the noise, the dizziness, the sleep deprivation, the constant flicker effect of sunlight passing through moving blades. Albertans are concerned about stories coming out of Ontario about wind power inflicting injury upon their livestock. They're concerned about decreased property values, soiled water systems because of how far down the foundation supports for it have to go. On and on and on, these are concerns. If this government was really consulting Albertans, they have to answer all of these questions satisfactorily to Albertans, and one of the most fundamental roles of government is the protection and preservation of private property.

We should have repealed bills 19, 24, and 36 by now, just as promised by this government during their election, and we should be passing the Alberta property rights preservation act before trying to pass Bill 27. We should be passing legislation and amendments entrenching property rights, protection in law, and reviewing all existing laws dealing with property rights to ensure that when needed public projects are undertaken, negative impacts on affected property owners are minimized and fully compensated for.

In short, Madam Chair, we have a situation here where we've got a bill before this House that is going to potentially add fuel to the fire regarding property rights in this province that have yet to be dealt with appropriately. I would encourage this government to start doing something positive and approve this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? We will go with the Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Yes. Well, here we go. I'm going to rise and oppose the amendment, like I did last week. [interjections] No kidding. Yes. It's really interesting how the members opposite fail to understand the extent of regulations and the approval process applicable for renewable energy projects. It's amazing how you misunderstand things. It's just unreal.

You know, the involvement of municipalities. It's true that municipalities continue to have their own opportunities for scrutiny and participation in the hearing process. Isn't that good? They also continue to set and apply their own setback rules governing distances between equipment, property lines, and dwellings.

An Hon. Member: Imagine that.

Mr. Rosendahl: Imagine that. Good one.

Okay. Let's look at the rural landowner concerns a little bit further. The other side also doesn't understand how renewable energy companies work with landowners to develop projects. We have been hearing some members opposite raising concerns about expropriating property for renewable energy projects or them forcing themselves on the landowners. How silly is this? This is silly. We've heard this in this House, and we have no doubt that we've seen them write it in newspapers and that kind of thing as well, trying to support their argument. What does this show? A clear misunderstanding of the bill, perhaps. It also suggests, maybe, a misunderstanding of the development – a fellow member left – and regulatory process involved in building new renewable energy projects.

Well, let's be clear. In our legislated renewables target there is no mechanism that allows renewable companies to force development on land where the owner doesn't want them. This bill does not require that, nor does it exist in law. Why do they keep saying these things? If a landowner chooses to participate, however, in a renewable project on their land, then they would enter a private agreement with the company and be compensated over the life of the project.

An Hon. Member: It sounds good.

Mr. Rosendahl: Very good.

Interesting. This is always a choice that the landowner has. Nobody is forcing it on anybody. It's a choice, right? This is always a choice, and it's important to understand that. This will continue to be the case. I don't think I want to hear any more fearmongering from over there.

You know, we talk about listening to the landowners and municipalities that have hosted wind farms. The mayor, Kym Nichols, from the village of Carmangay, near Blackspring Ridge, the largest wind project in western Canada, states:

I am honored to have been involved in such a monumental project. To see all of the wind turbines across our beautiful countryside is truly remarkable. I think the Blackspring Ridge Wind Farm shows the world the huge opportunities for untapped renewable energy in southern Alberta. The community of Carmangay is proud to be part of this project, helping to reduce our carbon footprint and offering renewable energy for generations to come.

There are other mayors that have said things.

11:30

Then we get to a landowner, right? Gary Sproule in Wheatland county, near Suncor's Wintering Hills wind project, said:

It's ... nice to have an idea of a pretty good [chunk] of income that you are going to have available in the next 20-25 years. You can make some plans and have a little money set aside. You're not always sure of a lot of other things when you farm, so this is kind of a nice, reliable number that you [can] work with.

What's wrong with that?

Dixon Hammond, another farmer, said:

It was ... added income for us, and it actually made it so that we could purchase our home quarter from my dad.

Keeping the family farm: what's wrong with that? Like he says:

It's important for me to have land for my family to live on and understand agriculture and the country way of life.

That's fantastic, right?

David and Flora DeCock, another farming family, said:

The income [wind turbines] provided helped us as cattle producers to get through the BSE crisis.

Well, let's look at the future. Imagine how many stories like this will come about with our plan to support investment in 5,000 new megawatts of renewable energy for Alberta. Imagine that.

And what does the other side say about this? When the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake says that people are going to flock to our renewable energy program "like hogs to the trough," does he mean these municipalities that are gaining huge revenues from wind farms for their community services? Does he mean that these landowners want to keep their family farms? Revenue from renewable energy makes this possible because the people are partners in renewable energy. Renewable energy doesn't get forced on their land. They work with developers to share these benefits.

We oppose this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak on amendment A7 to Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act, "A proposal under section 5 shall not be approved by the Minister unless the Minister is satisfied that reasonable consultation in respect of the proposal has taken place with ... affected municipalities and landowners," essentially protecting and recognizing the natural rights of property owners throughout this province.

I think what the Member for West Yellowhead fails to recognize is that the legislation that we currently have in this province is not fully compensating and recognizing the rights of property owners when governments come forward to appropriate, expropriate land in the best interests of the common good and possibly on the backs of a few individuals without proper consultation and without proper compensation and without due course of being able to appeal to the courts. This is where the concern arises, and until this government finds a way to improve legislation with regard to property rights in this province, we will continue to have a concern that individuals will be taken advantage of by a government that decides to move in on their land.

It's easy for a government in Edmonton to insist on all these renewables. One thing that is for sure is that renewables do have a significant impact on the rural communities. Vast areas of land are necessary for solar and wind energy installations, and that's just a reality. But what's trying to be identified here by the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake is that in that reality we need to be sure to protect the property rights of those individuals.

For example, wind energy has both positive and negative impacts on our environment. We see some potential positive impacts where we have reduced environmental pollution and also less water consumption possibly, benefits to the society at large. However, the negative impacts of these types of installations – the noise pollution, the visual interference, the negative impact on wildlife, those types of impacts – are felt by the local community where those installations occur. So I think what we have to recognize here is that we need to improve property rights legislation to be protecting the natural right of individuals to be in pursuit of property.

One of the reasons I still have concerns whether or not this government truly is on the side of improving property rights in this province is an experience I had during estimates this spring with the Minister of Transportation and questioning the compensation where the Springbank dam is being proposed to the landowners there and how the government was going to be able to settle those agreements. The minister made a comment quite concerning to me. He said, "It's a negotiating process which I think would be assisted if we refrain from discussing projected prices. We want to get the lowest possible price." I responded by saying, "The landowners deserve the best price possible because we are interfering with their ability." I do believe that it's necessary to have a win-win situation in these types of discussions and these types of negotiations. The minister said at that time that he sees his responsibility as getting the best value for the taxpayer with no concern for the landowner, apparently.

Property rights are at the core of our way of life. Albertans depend on having and being able to exercise these crucial rights. They rightly and understandably wish to see their rights preserved and respected. Albertans want certainty with respect to their property rights, and good governments will protect those property rights. Bad governments trample on property rights for power.

I do believe that this is a very reasonable amendment that has been brought forward, and it will improve the protection of property rights for the people that are impacted at the local community level, many of them in the rural communities, so I will encourage the Members of the Legislative Assembly to support this amendment and improve Bill 27 with this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A7? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will support the amendment because I think the reality here is that this is about property rights, and the only thing this amendment seeks to introduce into the bill is just a small statement that there should be some reasonable consultation with respect to the municipalities and the landowners. Any government that will not allow that to be in print and then who tries to tell us, "Oh, it'll all happen, and it'll all work out" might be likened to a salesperson who says, "Oh, just believe me" but doesn't want it in the contract. We all know that if it's not written in the contract, it actually doesn't exist.

It's easy for government and big companies to sit in Edmonton and think about what they want to do and all the things that they want to build and how this is going to save the world and how all these things are going to happen, but the reality is that it's the smaller rural communities, the neighbourhood family farms that actually have to live with this. In some cases it works out well, but truthfully, it doesn't always work out well.

To say that this bill in itself includes property rights as the bill would affect individuals is simply not correct. The reality is that there are a number of existing bills that intertwine with this one as this will come into force and they, in fact, do already infringe on property rights. The previous government put those in place, and I do have to give some credit to some of the members of the previous government who have acknowledged that they forgot about the people. They became too aristocratic and too autocratic to remember the people. They put into place laws that have in fact eroded property rights in our province, as the members opposite a few years ago clearly understood and were willing to espouse in their own publications to the province. But now all of a sudden they changed the tune. They've forgotten all that. They've lost all that.

The truth is that Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, takes away the important right of notification and appeal. If landowners have no right of appeal, then their rights are being trampled on.

Bill 24, the carbon capture and storage act, is another one that ignores common law principles. The government just autocratically and universally declared that all the pore spaces underneath belonged to government, and the landowner has no say in the issue. They can't even question it.

Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, which is still a huge concern, grants to cabinet the autocratic powers to decide what will happen. The landowners have no right of appeal, no right of a response. This is overstepping of government for the people.

This is not democratic rights when these kinds of bills are in force currently in Alberta, and they will impact how this bill, the Renewable Electricity Act, is in fact applied. You know, the rights of democracy and property together were fought for in the 1700s and 1800s. It was the individual against the king and the nobility. As long as individuals could be driven from their property or have their rights of use and benefits denied by the state, then they had no democratic rights. That's what's happening with Bill 2, Bill 24, and Bill 36, that I've already mentioned. It will intertwine with this bill as long as there is no statement of landowner rights acknowledged in it at all.

We are in a very real way, over bill after bill after bill in the last years in this province, eroding the rights of individuals. We are regressing to the excessive power of the king and the state when we entrench the power of either cabinet or the bureaucracy, which is the executive and the policing enforcement hand of government. Therefore, it makes life easy for government and hard for the people. Big government is never democracy. It always is autocratic and tyrannical. When government takes more power than the people give it, then they have trampled the rights of the people. That's the bottom line. When government takes more power than the people have given it, then they have trampled the rights of the people.

I will be supporting this amendment because it is the only amendment in the bill that even gives a nod to property rights. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A7? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just to remind the hon. Member for West Yellowhead that a considerable number of the statements that I made came from the Property Rights Advocate office's 2015 annual report and that I didn't make them up. So the concerns that the other side were mocking and laughing about are actual concerns from Albertans, brought to the attention of the Property Rights Advocate office, the very office created to advocate on behalf of Albertans who feel trampled by the system. The property rights legislation that we currently have in place is inadequate to protect Albertans, and the Property Rights Advocate was reporting on the feelings of our people. The mocking that was coming from the other side wasn't against me; it was against all of those people that made submissions to the Property Rights Advocate, raising their concerns about how this Alberta government tramples on them. That's who you were mocking, and you should be ashamed.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Hi, Madam Chair. I actually have an amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Your amendment will be referred to as A8. As soon as I get the original, you can go ahead.

Mr. Fraser: Thanks, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be amended in section 12 as follows: (a) by renumbering it as section 12(1); (b) by adding the following after subsection (1):

- (2) Payments from the General Revenue Fund under subsection (1) shall not exceed 10% of the total revenue of the Climate Change and Emissions Management Fund under the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act for that fiscal year.

Again, thank you, Madam Chair. It's almost midnight, and it is a pleasure to represent the constituents of Calgary-South East and Albertans as a whole and be a member in this House. Today I propose an amendment to Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act. I'd like to first say that the aim of this bill is not entirely without merit. There is certainly room in Alberta for the development of more renewable electricity options, and certainly that's what I believe. I also believe that we are blessed and privileged in Alberta with the abundance of wind and solar in this province, as anyone who has seen that that has lived in Alberta can certainly attest to.

The idea behind this bill is certainly one that I can understand, but I don't think that we're fulfilling our duty as legislators, with the duty to protect the interest of Albertans, if we allow this bill to pass in its present form because at this point there are still some rather glaring risks to the taxpayer contained in this bill. Leaving aside the fact that there are too many unknown aspects of this legislation, too much that will be decided in regulation and not without supervision of this House, there are some other issues as well.

The issue that I'd like to discuss today and the issue that my amendment is designed to address is essentially the issue of liability. That's to say: who is going to be responsible if things don't turn out as this government planned?

We know that money being handed out to renewable electricity companies is supposed to be coming out of the government's climate change fund. So all the money that they are taking from Albertans through their carbon tax, for example, is supposed to be able to support this program, but the government is hedging their bets there. They're making an allowance in this bill that if there isn't enough taxpayer money, they can start dipping into general revenue to make up the difference, and I think we can hazard a pretty good guess why the government thinks this is necessary, because they have all these programs whose funding is supposed to come from the carbon tax. I think it's pretty clear that all of these promises they are making, all the money they are handing out is going to exceed the money in their climate change fund.

They certainly don't want to admit this to Albertans, but they are going to have to pay for a lot of these programs straight out of general revenue. That isn't necessarily a bad thing, and there are some legitimate reasons why this makes sense to have a safety valve like that built into the financing of certain programs. But the problem is that once you're tapped into the general revenue, there is almost no limit on how much the taxpayer can be on the hook for.

We've seen this in other jurisdictions under other renewable and green energy products that can be successful, but we've also seen some of these projects become colossal failures. That is why I believe we need to guard against this. The amendment I am bringing forward will put a limit on how much money can be drawn from the general revenue on these programs. If we cap the amount that can be drawn from general revenue, we can protect the taxpayer from assuming this huge liability if things go wrong. So we're proposing that the payments from the general revenue shall not exceed a 10th of the total revenue of the climate change and emissions management fund. This will give the government some flexibility in dealing with shortfalls, but it will also protect the taxpayer from having to shoulder cost overruns.

I hope this amendment will find support from this House. Thanks for your time.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A8? Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A8 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back on the original bill. Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 27? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. We wish to propose another amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, your amendment will be referred to as A9. If you could just wait until I have the original copy and then you can go ahead.

Please go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you. Another one of the issues that we have facing us with this particular act is the idea that at some point in time these projects, be they wind turbine projects, be they photovoltaic projects, all have a life to them and an end of life, and one of the issues that is not to be found anywhere in this bill is: what is going to happen at the end of life of these projects? For example, if you're talking about utility-scale solar projects that are covering very large amounts of land, hundreds, possibly thousands of acres, at some point in time those modules are going to start to deteriorate, and the rate of deterioration on solar modules is not a straight line. It's a curve, and it drops off very quickly towards the end of life.

Most of these modules have a life anywhere from 20 years to 30 years long, and then what? This bill does not deal with the "then what?" In addition, if we talk about wind turbines, we're already seeing some of the wind turbines in our province coming to an end of life. Cowley Ridge, for example, is about to be decommissioned. Because of the nature of the new wind turbines, the old concrete bases and footings for the old units are completely insufficient to be reutilized for new towers. So that means we have this enormous cleanup that is going to have to take place.

In the United States, where they have a large number of failed wind turbine projects, failed for various reasons, we now have situations where they are literally disintegrating: broken towers, broken derricks that some of them are on, broken blades, and collapsing towers. Some of these projects, of course, belonged to companies that are now bankrupt. They're defunct. They're not there anymore, and everybody's pointing fingers at who's going to be responsible for cleaning the mess up.

There's nothing in this bill that deals with the end of life of these things, and they all have an end of life.

So if you look at this amendment – it's very clear – to move that Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be amended by adding the following section after section 7:

Reclamation

7.1 All renewable electricity support agreements entered into under section 7(4) shall include the requirement for reclamation of any affected lands including the following:

- (a) the removal of equipment or buildings or other structures;
- (b) the decontamination of buildings or other structures, or land or water;
- (c) stabilization, contouring, maintenance, conditioning or reconstruction of the surface of the land.

Really, Madam Chair, this isn't a whole lot different from what we require of our oil and gas developers now. Reclamation is a very important thing. When we have orphaned wells, for example, we have an orphan well fund. It just makes perfect sense. And there are any number of ways that reclamation could be handled, either through a fund, through bonding, through all sorts of mechanisms. But in Bill 27 there was nothing whatsoever about reclamation, and I would recommend to all members in this House that reclamation is going to be something extremely important, given the thousands and thousands of acres that are going to be taken up with 5,000 megawatts of renewable power generation.

It is incumbent upon this government to make very sure that there is something solid in place that the people of Alberta can look to and say, "All right; they've got the end of life covered off here," just like we do for oil and gas. There's no reason not to have this. It's a friendly amendment. I believe it's a necessary amendment to this to bill, and it was simply an oversight or something, not thinking about the end of life. I know that a lot of people look at the beginning of these projects and don't focus on: well, what happens 25 years from now or 30 years from now when we've got to clean this thing up or they've got to be replaced or something?

So I would hope that the hon. members in this House would consider the merit of this amendment A9 and that all members in this House will support it. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A9?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A9 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back on the original bill, Bill 27. Are there any hon. members wishing to speak to Bill 27?

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to take a second and talk again about Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act. On behalf of my hon. colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake I have an amendment, and I have the requisite copies here.

The Deputy Chair: This will be referred to as amendment A10. Please go ahead.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chair. It is moved that Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be amended in section 7 by adding the following after subsection (2):

(2.1) The Minister shall make any advice given by the ISO under subsection (2) publicly available within 18 months of the advice being received by the Minister.

Madam Chair, we talk lots in this House about openness and transparency, and from time to time we remind each other that, you know, there is only one taxpayer and it's Albertans that matter and count. It is their province. When I look at the tremendous amount of changes being made to our electric system and the consequences and the unintended consequences that all these may have – from time to time there's been a lot of criticism about the government going around our experts, going around a lot of advice, not paying heed to other jurisdictions where costs have tripled, quadrupled, where citizens on more fixed incomes can't make ends meet and have to make the choices between eating or heating, as some journalists describe it, you know, the fact that some of these technologies aren't nearly as efficient as what is being replaced. Instances where the sun doesn't always shine and the wind doesn't always blow lead to the necessity of a very, very expensive redundancy system, a very, very expensive backup, and, jeez, maybe having to pay somebody for capacity, maybe having to pay somebody for not producing and, heaven forbid, what that may lead to, and, you know, still adding the tremendous transmission and distribution costs on top of that for our citizens.

Again, the ones that concern me are the hardships that people on fixed incomes and families starting out may have. I know we don't always like to compare to Ontario because we're told that it's not going to be exactly the same, but when I read the other day that there were something like 1,400 Ontario families that had lived over five months off the grid because they couldn't afford their electricity bills – I've been to Ontario a few times, and maybe it's not quite as cold in Ontario as it is in Alberta, but it's not Arizona or California either, Madam Chair. This is of great, great concern to me, great, great concern as to, you know, the fixed incomes, the families starting out, the areas of our province where there's less opportunity, never mind what it's going to do to our industry, where Alberta has the highest percentage of industrial use, I believe, in all of North America, where in our natural resources, in Albertans' talents, and in our existing electricity market companies were able to take advantage of that to provide jobs, to build wealth.

Here's a little system and a great amendment by my hon. colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake to put in a little bit of transparency. I mean, I sat in here for the first three years, where we saw a 44-year-old government that seemed like every day they were forgetting to tell Albertans where they were going and where they were headed. I don't think this government wants to go down that path. I don't think that this government wants to hide from 4.3 million Albertans what experts are saying, what the consequences of their actions are. Hey, this is your opportunity to be open and transparent and show Albertans that this is the right thing to do.

People on this side of the House, many, many in social media and mainstream media have talked at great lengths about how this is going to be the wrong thing to do, how it's not going to be efficient, how it's going to cost great lengths and cost our economy jobs and opportunity. So my hon. colleague is just asking that the Energy minister make any advice given by ISO, our experts, publicly available within 18 months. The information will help the minister act with the greatest of objectivity in the knowledge that the information will be public soon.

Yeah. You know, I applauded the government on their sunshine list. Nothing like the light of sunshine to make people think about how they're spending hard-earned taxpayer dollars. [interjection] I think I applauded that, hon. colleague. I think it was a good step. For taxpayers' money openness and transparency is where it's at, so why not the same thing with our electric system? This is all we're asking for.

I understand that under the new capacity system there is still going to be a small, small element of bidding into the system, and as complex as our electrical system is with generation separated from transmission, I absolutely believe that the one component that the last government did get right was the generation part of it, the fact that many, many companies bid in at zero, especially on renewables, to ensure that they were paid something. Who benefited from that? The 4.3 million Albertans, the very people that we're here to represent, the very, very people that we're here to ensure there is competition and choice and a strong economy.

This new capacity payment system, paying for people to be ready to produce, I understand, although I don't think we've seen the regulations yet, will have a slight element of bidding instead of a full-blown robust portion, and that's a huge step backwards. But at least have ISO within 18 months show us what was happening.

You know, Albertans are tired. Albertans are tired of governments hiding critical accountability under the advice to the minister provision. They're tired of not being fully involved in their system. It's what I spoke of earlier when I talked about innovation.

If this information is out there, it will give our companies, renewable and more conventional electric generation companies, the opportunity to develop some innovation to make it more energy efficient, make it so perhaps carbon is used less and renewables happen more, which is obviously the government's goal. Of course, we're all concerned about the environment. So maybe this advice could lead to some tremendous innovation for Albertans.

Hon. colleagues, again tonight I've seen every single amendment turned down and generally not listened to, so I would just ask that you strongly consider this one just on the basis of openness and transparency. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment A10?

Seeing none, I will call the question. [interjection]

An Hon. Member: She wants to speak.

Ms Luff: Or you can call the question.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you. I'll just speak very briefly. I just wanted to note that with this bill, Bill 27, we do have a very transparent process inherent in the bill. All of the programs that are present and that will be put out will be subject to a competitive process, and the competition documents will all be published. So all that information will be readily available to members of the public to see what agreements we have entered into and under what conditions.

Also, the MSA will review the program administration and auction administration, and all of the renewable electricity support agreements will be made public. One of the things that I was really impressed with with this bill when I was reading it was its amount of inherent transparency measures that are written right into the bill that really make sure that we are getting the best value programs for our renewable energy competitions here in the province.

So I would argue against this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you again, Madam Chair, and thank you to the hon. Member for Calgary-East for that. I'm glad to hear about some of the transparency, but then I'm wondering: why stop short? This is asking for just a greater degree of transparency, advice given by ISO, the experts.

Again, I think back to the third party now, where one of the main reasons in 2012 that led to the start of the Wildrose was the fact that under their electricity bill and building the big transmission lines, they had absolutely left out the needs assessment. Albertans were horrified at the $16 billion, which I think may turn into $30 billion, in the cost of these transmission lines that were built without a needs assessment, built without a competitive bid process, and now, I think, aren't even fully built. So why in the world would your government want to follow that huge mistake?

Thank you again to the hon. Member for Calgary-East and her helping clarify some of the transparency. But why stop short? You know, we saw in all the motions on Monday afternoons how anything under advice to a minister you wouldn't put forward. Again, we're all accountable to Albertans, we're all accountable to make the right decisions, so I ask the government to be fully transparent in this matter.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A10?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A10 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill, Bill 27. Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's already 10 minutes past midnight, and I'm trying my luck. The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat just said that every common-sense, reasonable, practical amendment was voted down today. Here we go. I have another amendment.

Mr. Barnes: Let's try one that's not reasonable.

Mr. Panda: Yeah.

I can send the requisite copies to you and wait.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. The amendment will now be referred to as A11. Please go ahead.

Mr. Panda: Yeah. Madam Chair, I move that Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act, be amended as follows, as written in this one that everyone has. It's asking about economic impact assessments. I'm saying that the following be added after section 2.

Economic impact assessment

2.1(1) One month after the date on which this Act receives Royal Assent, the Minister shall prepare a projection of impact of the renewable electric energy targets established in section 2 on Alberta's economy.

(2) The Minister shall lay a copy of the projection prepared under subsection (1) as soon as practicable before the Assembly if it is then sitting or, if it is not sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.

In part B section 23 is struck out, and the following is substituted. Coming into force 23 This Act comes into force 60 days following the date on which the Minister lays the projection prepared under section 2.1(2) before the Assembly.

Madam Chair, we presented similar amendments to all of the major bills this government has brought which have the potential to transform our system massively. This Bill 27 and other bills, like Bill 25, can transform this system, and this can have far-reaching impacts on our economy presently and also in the future. That's why it's only fair that an economic impact assessment be prepared and tabled before this act takes effect.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

Before going down the track of the ISO developing proposals, Mr. Chair, the minister needs to know what the province is getting into, what they are asking us to accommodate in future. Albertans have every right to know what the impacts are of these agreements before they're developed by ISO, the Independent System Operator.

Governments often go headlong into ideological policies without first establishing what the real-life impacts will be. The case in point here, Mr. Chair, is Ontario. Ontario put their ideology and communications before economics in their quest to look green, and now we all know where they ended up. It's not a laughing matter. Ontario has ended up with $37 billion more in electricity payments by the consumers or ratepayers or taxpayers, whoever it is. It's all the same. Ontarians ended up paying that bill.

That's why, Mr. Chair, this is a very friendly amendment. You need to know what you're doing before you do it, actually. The minister needs to know because Alberta's economy is at stake. We're talking about billions of dollars here. That's why we needed a robust debate before we start down the wrong path. Nobody can argue. This government wants to cap the electricity prices at 6.8 cents, but renewables need almost twice that to be profitable, and on top of it, the system requires major investments in backups. So how are we squaring this circle?

This government is trying to transform the whole economy. They're trying to transform how we live, how we make our living. They're attacking the jobs. There is no solid plan to create an equal number of jobs in this renewables sector. If there is, if somebody has done the economic impact analysis, we're asking the minister to present it. If they really did that, they should share with Albertans. What are they trying to hide, and why are they hiding? I don't get that, Mr. Chair. To not have an economic impact on this kind of transformation to bills, major bills, is irresponsible.

Also, Mr. Chair, we all like renewables – and we mean it – but we want the renewables to be economical, reliable, efficient, and safe. How do we know if the renewables that are proposed by this government are any of those if an economic impact analysis is not done? For us to determine that these renewables are economical, reliable, efficient, and safe, we need an economic impact study. For example, on safety we don't want solar panels turning into giant bug zappers. We don't want it. Albertans don't want it. Nor do we want wind turbines killing birds and bats, and we certainly do not want hydro turning fish into sushi.

On reliability we want the electricity there when we need it, not like in Pakistan or some other country where government says when you can have the power. I've seen that in other countries where I've lived. The government will determine when you can have power. I have seen that, Mr. Chair. There are mosquitoes in those countries, and you can't switch on your ceiling fan because the government of the day decides whether you can have power during that particular time or not. They can turn on and turn off the switch as the government chooses to in their wisdom. They may have good intentions, but they didn't have reliable power to support the public. That's why countries like India and China still have hundreds of millions of people without electricity. They're not stopping. Their priority is to electrify those villages and supply power to hundreds of millions of people. They're going to add hundreds of gigawatts of whatever power, whether it is thermal, renewable, whatever.

They're not going to take the suggestion from the Member for Calgary-East or west or north or south. They're not waiting. Their priority is to feed their population. They have to first provide shelter, food, clothing for their poor people. We can sit here and give all sorts of lectures, and we can't control those emissions that they're generating because we can't build walls in the sky. It's going to flow in our direction whether Mr. Trump decides not to have a cap on emissions or Mr. Wall decides not to have emissions. There's nothing we can do about that. We can't protect our boundaries. That's why, you know, we have to look at the big picture and we have to do the economic impact study.

Another reason, Mr. Chair, is efficiency. We want the electricity as close to the consumers as possible so there is little loss of power as it converts to heat going across power lines. Have you ever heard of Ohm's law at all, Mr. Chair? This is the Greek omega symbol in the equation where resistance equals the voltage divided by the amperage. It's what I studied in electrical technology when I did mechanical engineering. That's a requisite subject. The lower the resistance, the more electricity that goes through the lines, and that's why there is so much research and development into superconductors.

But if we don't do an economic impact analysis, we won't figure it out, whether it is efficient, reliable, safe, or economical. We won't. And it's our job to convince Albertans that we have done all that and we are ready to implement this bill. No government member, neither the minister nor the members from the ruling party, can tell us that they have done that. If they have done it, either they are not sharing with us because of the reason that they want to hide it from Albertans – we don't know. If you haven't done it, do it. If you have done it, share it with us so Albertans know what are the economic impacts before ISO goes and does their gig and sends bills to the taxpayers or ratepayers, Mr. Chair. That's why it is quite essential to do an economic impact analysis before we get into it.

It's not too late. I urge all members of this House to support this amendment and prove to Albertans that we can work together and we can collaborate and we can make bills better. So I ask all members to consider that and vote in favour of this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A11? The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm just rising to speak to this amendment, of course, just to say that from what I've seen from the research of the ministry and in talks with the ministers themselves, I think it is very important to recognize that the economic impacts of this piece of vital legislation are most definitely positive for our province. As I'm sure we've heard in this House or has been stated before, it will bring $10.5 billion in private investment and a conservative estimate of about 7,200 jobs. I think it's important to recognize what that means. I mean, 7,200 jobs for families and Albertans: once again, that's a very conservative number. Well, a conservative – I can't say "very."

Of course, this act will enshrine our targets in the legislation. This will bring greater clarity for companies looking to invest here in Alberta. We've heard the argument, once again, I believe, from the last speaker but often throughout this discussion that we don't want to end up like Ontario. I think it's important to recognize how our version of renewable energy here in Alberta will be different and our system as a whole.

Also, the act will provide that the program will be funded from the carbon levy payments off major emitters. It will not cost anything for electricity consumers, and the act mandates this specifically.

Once again, I think that is very clear, that this legislation will be positive for the province as a whole and our energy industry. I think it's time that we move forward on this legislation now and not later. I will not be supporting this amendment, and I do encourage my colleagues to do the same.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just one thing. The hon. member just talked about some research that he has seen from the government convincing him of something. I would ask that he please table that tomorrow.

The Acting Chair: Any other members wishing to – the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: I request unanimous consent to revert to tablings of documents.

The Acting Chair: Sorry, hon. member. That cannot be done during Committee of the Whole.

Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A11?
Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A11 lost]

The Acting Chair: We are back on Bill 27. Are there any members wishing to speak? The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

An Hon. Member: Surprise.

Mr. MacIntyre: Surprise.

Thank you, Mr. Chair. One of the issues, another of the many issues that we have with Bill 27, comes to the issue of fairness and reporting. So I would like to propose an amendment if I may.

The Acting Chair: This will be referred to as amendment A12.
Please proceed, hon. member.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I move that Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be amended by adding the following after section 6.

Fairness report

6.1(1) The ISO shall prepare a report at least once each calendar year on the advice provided by the fairness adviser under section 6 and, when it is complete, provide the report to the Minister.

(2) When the Minister receives the report under subsection (1), the Minister shall lay a copy of it before the Legislative Assembly if it is then sitting and if it is not, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.

It is extremely important that the fairness adviser's work be effective. The issue that we have, though, is that if it never sees the light of day, it's not really going to be all that effective. This government campaigned on an issue of transparency in government, on a campaign of fairness, consultation, listening to Albertans, and doing things differently. Well, one of the things that we would hope this government could do differently is to make things public to the good people of Alberta.

Now, specific to this, in Bill 27, section 6, it currently reads:
Fairness advisor

6 The ISO shall engage a person who is external to the ISO to serve as a fairness advisor

- (a) to provide advice to the ISO with respect to the development of the competitive process referred to in section 5 to ensure that it is a fair process, and
- (b) to ensure that the implementation of a program under section 7 is conducted fairly.

Here we have an individual that is going to be contracted, hired, or put in the position of fairness adviser to provide advice to the ISO regarding the competitive process and the implementation of the programs.

Now, one of the things about accountability is that you can't really call something accountable if everything is done behind closed doors because in ensuring fairness, it is incumbent upon whoever is involved in this – in this case, it's the fairness adviser – that that person's work to be brought to the light of day so that Albertans can see that, "All right; according to the fairness adviser's report things are being conducted in a fair and equitable manner," or, conversely, if there are issues, that they be brought to the light of day.

Now, we have a number of persons in similar positions such as the Ethics Commissioner, the office of the Child and Youth Advocate, the Auditor General. We have a number of these people in positions, very important positions in a democracy, who create reports giving a report card on the government's activities. It only makes sense that the fairness adviser's work be brought to light as well so that Albertans can see how well the ISO is doing. Our electricity system is extremely important to every Albertan, and I believe it is incumbent upon the government to ensure that this person's work is brought out.

An annual report would give some distance from some time-sensitive items but would ensure accountability. Now, we realize that one of the reasons why we have this put out as an annual report is that there are going to be some dealings within ISO that are sensitive, some things to do with bidding processes and such like, and having a monthly report would of course compromise the confidentiality that needs to be surrounding things within that process. That's fine. An annual report would give some distance from such time-sensitive items but would still ensure accountability at some point. In other words, at some point we're going to hear about how fair the process has been.

I would hope that more thought could be put into the purposes of this position, perhaps something pertaining to landowners being treated fairly. That ought to be something that a fairness adviser should be looking at. It would be great if there was a really fulsome discussion about the mandate of the fairness adviser. What all is the fairness adviser going to be looking at?

This amendment attempts to make an improvement here by simply saying: "All right. Yes. Great. We're going to have a fairness adviser. Let's get his report out into the public annually so that we can have a look as Albertans and see if the fairness adviser is even being fair." So I would hope that all members in this House would consider this friendly amendment as a good amendment, one that will improve Bill 27.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Chair: Any members wishing to speak to amendment A12?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A12 as proposed by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

[Motion on amendment A12 lost]

The Acting Chair: We're back on the main bill. The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to bring forward an amendment if I may.

The Acting Chair: That will be referred to as amendment A13.
Please proceed, hon. member.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Chair. On behalf of the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake I would like to move that Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act, be amended in section 7(1) by adding: "and shall make information about each competitive process publicly available at least 60 days prior to the start of the competitive process."

I'll make this short and sweet. Obviously, this amendment will be something that I'm sure the government, at 12:35 in the morning, will be ecstatic to vote on on behalf of and with us. What this does: the obvious transparency gives the government the opportunity to make sure that they will not quietly open bids and have only their friends have the inside track. Obviously, you're going to want to vote to make sure that this amendment goes through because that would be transparency, and this is what this government campaigned on.

Mr. MacIntyre: You think?

Mrs. Aheer: I think so for sure.

I'm so excited to also make sure. I mean, the NDP has a ton of connections within the renewable electricity sector, so let's make this as transparent as possible and make the process competitive. What we're asking is that we want to make sure that it is made publicly available for a certain amount of time so that Albertans are aware of that and we get the best people coming forward in this competitive process, which means that you're going to get more of the best people at the best price and make sure that these contracts are in front of people and that they know what's going on.

Obviously, given the desire of the government to want to show Albertans that they're not going to just have their friends hired into these contracts, they're going to definitely vote for this amendment. I'm absolutely sure although I'm not a betting person. We would love to be able to give the government the opportunity, Mr. Chair, to keep the temptation away from them, to keep these bids open and not under the radar because we want to make sure that that transparency is the first and foremost idea coming forward with these contracts coming online. Obviously, the government is going to want to vote in favour of this.

The renewable gambit could be a complete boondoggle in the making if we're not careful. If you do not maximize the opportunity for competition, that is the road that we will head down. Obviously, the government is going to want to maximize competition. Obviously, they're going to want to post who is in the bidding for these competitive processes. Sixty days prior to the competitive process is not a lot to ask. I think it's very reasonable.

Most importantly – most, most importantly – is that we have to do everything that we can do to reduce the extra costs of some of these very irresponsible targets that have been brought in by the government and that will actually fall onto the backs of Albertans. Very irresponsible. We have numbers like 30 by '30, 100 megatonnes. We have a lot of different numbers that have kind of been pulled out of thin air.

In order to hold yourselves accountable and in order for Albertans, Mr. Chair, to make sure that the government is accountable and transparent, we would suggest and highly recommend that the government vote in favour of the amendment to hold themselves accountable by making sure that at least 60 days prior to the start of the competitive process it is publicly available.

Thank you.

12:40

The Acting Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A13?

Seeing none, I will call the question on amendment A13 as proposed by the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View on behalf of the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

[Motion on amendment A13 lost]

The Acting Chair: We are back on the main bill. The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Again, you can't say we aren't trying to help.

Mr. Cooper: We're here to help.

Mr. MacIntyre: We're here to help.

We have a situation now with this Bill 27 where it needs another amendment.

The Acting Chair: We will refer to this as amendment A14. Please proceed, hon. member.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I move that Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be amended by striking out section 8. Now, section 8's heading is ISO Interest in Generating Unit. I'm just going to read this section briefly.

8(1) Despite section 9(6) of the Electric Utilities Act, the ISO may, in accordance with any commercial terms that are part of a renewable electricity program, hold a security or other interest in a generating unit, as defined in that Act, as security in relation to generator default or insolvency.

(2) The ISO shall

- (a) notify the Minister prior to enforcing a security interest held pursuant to subsection (1), and
- (b) enforce a security interest in accordance with any direction of the Minister.

(3) Any interest in a generating unit held by the ISO pursuant to subsection (1), and any ownership interest resulting from the enforcement of a security interest, shall be transferred or assigned in accordance with any direction of the Minister.

Now, we have a scheme here that is already enough of a boondoggle without the government taking over any potential money pits. If we have a situation where – well, I'll back up a minute. This section is really very vague, Mr. Chair. If the government needs some kind of transitional ability to keep these things running between private owners, they should go back to the drawing table and come back with something that is at least more narrow and certainly more prescriptive than what we've got. We don't even have a clear definition in Bill 27 as to what a security or other interest means. That's really leaving the door wide open to any definition of other interest.

It seems to me that what we've got is a situation here where – you know, under section 9(6) of the Electric Utilities Act there was a perfectly good reason why the ISO was protected or limited or hindered from holding security. Now we have 8(1) saying “despite section 9(6)”; in other words, in spite of – in spite of – a section under the Electric Utilities Act now ISO can hold a security or another interest. Then on top of that, the minister can transfer it, can assign it, can do what the minister wants with it, this security interest.

The road that we're going down with this particular section of Bill 27 is a very slippery slope. It means more or less that in the case of an insolvency or who knows what, the government of Alberta, the taxpayers of Alberta, could be in the ownership position of generation. That's not a road we want to go down. So I would hope that every member in this House will vote in favour of this amendment and strike section 8 completely. It is too vague. There is no clear definition of “security or other interest.” I mean, in other words, there's no definition whatsoever. It's just “other.”

Thank you very much.

The Acting Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A14?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

The Acting Chair: The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the chance to rise one more time. On behalf of my hon. colleague and friend from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake I would like to propose one more amendment to Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act.

The Acting Chair: This will be referred to as amendment A15. Please proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I move that Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act, be amended in section 7 by adding the following after subsection (5):

- (6) The Minister shall make all renewable electricity support agreements filed under subsection (5) publicly available within 14 days of being received by the Minister.

Mrs. Aheer: Hear, hear.

Mr. Barnes: Yeah.

I mean, publicly available clearly means to Albertans, to the ratepayers, to the people that build our economy, to the people that pay the bills for this electricity. Obviously, Mr. Chair, once an agreement has been entered into, both the public and competing bidders deserve to know the details. A lot of my hon. colleagues on this side of the floor have stood up on amendment after amendment, time after time, and have talked about all the benefits of openness and transparency, so we don't need to repeat those. I would hope that the government and NDP members would finally have . . .

Mr. Cooper: The courage of their convictions.

Mr. Barnes: . . . the courage of their convictions to remember that it's Albertans' system.

The last two or three little thoughts I want to leave with are about where the system is at now. I think this government is going to have one heck of a hard time taking something away from Albertans. I know this speaks particularly to any public support agreements to renewable electricity. When I think of the electric generation system now – it's on the Internet, for goodness' sake. You can see what the rate is. You can see what companies are bidding in at. You can see who's won the bid and the contract to serve Albertans, and you can see who came in too high.

Now we're going to a system where our new government, Albertans' government, is going to be hiding some of the agreements, some of the support. Whether it's taxpayers or ratepayers – there's only one taxpayer; there's only one ratepayer – it will all come out of our standard of living. It will all come out of the opportunities that we'll be able to leave for the next generation. I absolutely believe that your government will be in trouble when we back away from transparency.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

We're also going from a system where one of the strengths of it was that the people of Alberta had no public debt on electric generation. Obviously, I have seen a government love of debt and the interest payments that go with it and what you're going to do with our electricity system and how the ratepayers are going to end up being responsible for that and what that may do to our bond rating, what that may do to our credit rating, whether it's triple A or double A or A, except when it comes to building schools, except when it comes to hiring nurses, except when it comes to providing AISH programs, support programs for our seniors, and the programs that we all want to provide.

Yes, we're talking about transparency. Yeah, we're talking about within 14 days providing something that the ratepayers and the people of Alberta are going to be paying, but you're taking a big step backwards. You're taking a big step backwards in disclosure, you're taking a big step backwards in the amount of debt you're taking on, and you're taking a big step backwards in the affordability that our families and Albertans and our industries had.

So I would ask in our last try of the night for my hon. colleagues to please consider this amendment and support it. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A15?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A15 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill, Bill 27. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. What we've seen this evening is an ideological government that has no regard for the facts, an ideological government that has no regard for what Albertans are speaking about, an ideological government that has chosen to put their political interests ahead of what Albertans are looking for. It is well past midnight, 10 to 1, and what we see is this government going in a direction that isn't respectful of taxpayers. It doesn't respect landowners' rights. It doesn't respect accountability. It doesn't respect transparency. It is more than a bit disappointing. It is more than a bit disappointing that this government has chosen to put their ideological agenda ahead of the needs and interests of Albertans, and it won't soon be forgotten.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 27?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question on Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act?

[The remaining clauses of Bill 27 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that we rise and report bills 34, 25, and 27.

[Motion carried]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Mr. Rosendahl: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 34, Bill 25, Bill 27. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this day for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur with the report? All those agreed, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Considering the hour I would move that we adjourn and resume this morning at 10.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 12:56 a.m.]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect or pray, each in our own way. This is a time of peace and happiness, a time of reflection, and a time of compassion. Let us reach out to those who may be struggling in this holiday season. Let us lift up, give back, and help out.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Fair Elections Financing Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Good morning, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Good morning.

Cortes-Vargas: It's an honour to rise today to move third reading of Bill 35, Fair Elections Financing Act – sounds good, the title – on behalf of the minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Bill 35 proposes a number of changes that will amend the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act and modernize Alberta's election financing laws. These changes are important and valuable to our democratic process. Albertans, not big money, will be the drivers of our elections. If passed, not only will they bring Alberta's laws in line with the rest of the country, but they will also provide greater transparency and accountability.

The bill looks at making critical changes in three areas: contribution limits, spending limits, and third-party advertising. In regard to contribution limits Bill 35 proposes that an individual can donate $4,000 per calendar year, full stop. The limit would apply to any funds going to political parties, constituency associations, candidates, leadership contestants, and nomination contestants. Mr. Speaker, some hon. members have objected to these limits, saying that they do not go far enough. We believe that these limits provide voters with choice and flexibility. Albertans can choose where their $4,000 goes and how they want to spread it around. It's a reasonable aggregate limit that will help to ensure that no single person, deep pocket, or special-interest group has significant influence over a political party, candidate, or contestant. With the exception of ongoing leadership contestants, the contribution limit would be effective as of November 28, the day this bill was introduced.

Bill 35 would also change the definition of contributions. Services provided to candidates and campaigns by self-employed persons would be considered a financial contribution. The normal value of the nonmonetary services they provide would count toward their contribution limit. However, audit and professional services provided free of charge for work relating to compliance with the act would not be considered contributions. Volunteer services would not be included in the limit as long as the person providing volunteer labour is not being compensated by their employer or is not being given paid time off to volunteer. This would mean that the days of unions, corporations, and other third parties offering paid staff to work on campaigns are over. Alberta's laws are lagging behind all other Canadian jurisdictions, including nonvolunteer services and their contribution limits. These changes would align our laws with the rest of Canada.

The second section is on spending limits, establishing spending limits in Bill 35. Political parties would have a $2 million spending limit during the writ period. This would also include spending prior to the writ for items used during the writ period. Candidates would have spending limits of $5,000 in an electoral division. Expenses incurred by the party or constituency association on behalf of the candidate will count as election expenses incurred by the candidate.

For by-elections a party's spending limit would be $23,000 per electoral district. The $23,000 amount is approximately $2 million divided by 87, the number of electoral districts in Alberta. Nomination contestants will also be subject to a spending limit of $10,000, which is 20 per cent of the spending limit in each electoral division. In addition, both nomination contestants and leadership contestants would be required to register and report to the Chief Electoral Officer when they announce their intention to seek nomination, begin incurring costs, or accept contributions, whichever occurs first.

For leadership contestants an amendment will also require that an audited financial statement and a copy of the auditor's report shall accompany each financial statement if the campaign expenses of the leadership contestant exceed $25,000.

Mr. Speaker, no two candidates in constituencies are the same. To acknowledge this and help level the playing field, some expenses would not count towards campaign spending limits. These include a candidate's or contestant's travel costs reasonably related to the election contest, including transportation, meals, and accommodation; care for the candidate's or contestant's children or other dependants; expenses related to the disability of a candidate or nomination contestant; audits and other fees necessary for compliance with the act; incidental fees, expenses like parking and gas incurred by volunteers. Most of these expenses would still need to be included in the financial statement or report to the Chief Electoral Officer. Changes to Alberta's spending limits will align us with the rest of Canada as other jurisdictions have spending limits with the exception of Yukon.

There have been concerns from various hon. members regarding the quarterly reporting requirements for constituency associations. The Chief Electoral Officer did say that quarterly reporting was not providing value to his office. His recommendation was to either move to annual reporting or enhance the quarterly reporting. We chose to improve the quarterly reporting to put more information rather than less in Elections Alberta's hands to better assist them with catching inaccuracies or violations. Quarterly reporting becomes even more important with the changes proposed in Bill 35 due to lower limits and changes in contributions laid out in the bill.

The last major focus of the Fair Elections Financing Act is third-party advertising. Any third party, regardless if they are individuals, corporations, or groups, would have a spending limit of $150,000 during the writ period. No more than $3,000 of this amount could be used to support or oppose candidates in an electoral division. These limits will still allow third parties to express their views but will ensure that their advertising does not overwhelm the political discourse. Third parties will still be required to register with Elections Alberta when they incur $1,000 in election advertising expenses, receive $1,000 in contributions, or plan to do either, and to identify themselves in their advertising.

During an election third parties will also have to disclose contributions over $250 on a weekly basis, which will then be published by Elections Alberta. Between elections third parties would also be required to report contributions on a quarterly basis instead. Thanks to an amendment to this bill third-party reporting requirements will come into effect on November 28, the date the legislation was introduced.

Another amendment will help clarify what will be considered an election advertising expense and what will not. The cost of producing an advertisement will be considered an advertising expense along with the cost of buying the advertising space and any other costs associated with transmitting the message. However, any costs that may have been incurred while forming the opinion or conveying the policy position behind the message would not be considered advertising expenses. For example, if a third party does any polling, holds conferences, or consults with experts to help them decide where they stand on a certain issue prior to advertising their position, the associated costs would not be counted as an advertising expense.

This is a common-sense amendment. Only those costs that are directly linked to producing an advertisement will be considered an advertising expense. We are not seeking to restrict third parties' ability to conduct research or develop informed opinions. Furthermore, we have clarified through another amendment that third parties are able to express themselves on the Internet as any average Albertan might do. When the political views of a person, corporation, or group are posted on the Internet on a noncommercial basis, the rules regarding third-party advertising would not apply. This amendment better reflects how people talk to one another in this day and age and supports freedom of speech and freedom of expression while still providing transparency as to who is paying for the advertising. When big money comes into the equation, when third parties pay to transmit their message, that is when our legislation comes into play.

We have also added a provision that authorizes the Chief Electoral Officer to develop guidelines to help stakeholders understand the rules around third-party advertising. It is ultimately the Chief Electoral Officer who is responsible for administering and enforcing the act, and as such the Chief Electoral Officer will determine how the act should be applied in real-life scenarios. Guidelines could help stakeholders understand the legislation and how it applies to them. Ultimately, this may help ensure that stakeholders understand and follow the rules.

One more thing that I would like to mention, Mr. Speaker, is that Bill 35 would also ensure that corporations, trade unions, and employee organizations are no longer able to guarantee loans. Only individuals ordinarily resident in Alberta would be able to guarantee loans to a political party or make a payment on a loan guarantee to a political entity. The amount of any guarantee would apply immediately to the contribution limit of the guarantor.

Mr. Speaker, all of the changes that Bill 35 proposes will remove undue influence from special interests and help ensure that Albertans are true influencers in our political process. We began this road towards change with Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta. Bill 35, the Fair Elections Financing Act, continues that work. These are vital changes being proposed to improve our system and will lead us to a better, more modern, and more transparent democracy. It takes recommendations made by the Chief Electoral Officer into account, and it will give Albertans the confidence that their concerns are being represented.

I ask that all members support me in moving third reading. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise on third reading of Bill 35, the Fair Elections Financing Act. I appreciate the comments made by the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park in addressing the Assembly this morning in her carefully prepared text. I will say, though, that there are a number of phrases and a number of suppositions that she makes within that prepared text that are completely and totally contradicted by the actions that have been taken within this bill, and I'm going to point out a few of those contradictions now.

The entire premise of the hon. member's speech and, in fact, the entire premise of the government side on this is that big money should not decide elections. As I stated when we debated this in committee over the summer, if there was ever a demonstration that big money does not necessarily decide elections, the last election we held should be proof of that. The candidates, the parties that spent the most money in the last election were not necessarily the ones that were successful. In fact, in most individual constituencies the candidate who spent the most money was not necessarily the successful candidate. It was a very small number out of the 87 constituencies in which the candidate that spent the most was, in fact, successful at the ballot box. To suggest that big money always decides elections and that we have to necessarily do something about that: that myth, hopefully, was put to bed by the last election. But somehow this government still thinks that we need to do a lot of things that are of questionable necessity to move into the realm.

In fact, if we were to look at the spending limits that have been proposed for parties, in the last election the party that spent the most won only 10 seats. Both the governing party and the party in the Official Opposition spent less than half of that party. So to suggest that big money always decides elections is, quite frankly, simply not true, and to take measures that are to supposedly repair that situation is questionable when in the most recent election that we had, that was clearly not the case.

Let's move forward to the specific areas. As I said in my speech on second reading – and I'll repeat it here because it seems that it has not necessarily registered with the other side – our caucus and, I would say, most hon. members and most Albertans support the concept of lowered contribution limits and the concept of spending limits in order to put some sort of parameters around the process. But the balance has to always be struck that if there is too restrictive a level of spending and of contributions, the dollars will simply find another way to influence the process.

This bill does not take big money out of politics. What this bill does is that it takes big money out of sight, and that should concern all of us. The Chief Electoral Officer was very clear when questioned on this to indicate that increasing restrictions on spending, increasing restrictions on contributions in every other jurisdiction where they've been applied has taken the money that has normally been put into areas that are reviewed and are monitored and are reported upon and moved it into areas that are not reported upon and not reviewed. It has decreased transparency rather than increased transparency. There has to be a balance that is struck.

Now, are the numbers that have been proposed within this bill the right balance? I guess time will only tell. But, certainly, the Chief Electoral Officer, especially when we were discussing what is still very much an emerging and evolving field of third-party contributions, indicated that putting too onerous a set of restrictions on those bodies and those entities, which are closely monitored and which have to report, simply means that the dollars will find their way into the system through means that are not reported. So to pass legislation that, in fact, encourages that to happen, to me, is counterproductive to the aims and the goals of this legislation.

Let's talk a little bit about contribution limits. Much has been said and much was just recently said by the hon. member who just moved third reading that the $4,000 limit provides choice and flexibility to the donor, saying it as if under the current regime, there is no choice and no flexibility. Well, to suggest that somehow this regime provides enhanced choice and flexibility over a regime where there are only two limits – one is $15,000, and one is $1,000, but every other way that you can contribute to a political entity is unregulated – is simply not a true or not an accurate description of what is going on. As has been pointed out painstakingly by multiple speakers in the House, the $4,000 limit when applied to constituency associations and coupled with the $50,000 spending limit would allow for three individuals to completely bankroll a candidate's campaign over the course of a four-year election cycle.

You know, in her moving speech on third reading – and I don't have the exact Blues in front of me, but as I understand it, it was that no single person has significant influence over a candidate. No, not a single person, but certainly three single people could have significant influence over a candidate. Now, this was a flaw that was pointed out to the government members on the committee during the summer months, and then they immediately made some changes to bring back the $1,000 constituency association limit to remedy that scenario. But when it was brought back to the House, all of a sudden that $1,000 limit was gone, and we were right back to $4,000 across the board.

10:20

This is a significant flaw, Mr. Speaker, in this legislation. To suggest that this flaw has somehow been remedied by the legislation is simply not accurate, and to suggest that we have now removed a scenario where a single person could have significant influence is just simply not true. That is a concern, and it's been pointed out and clarified. Yet this government continues to maintain focus on their speaking notes, focus on their key messages, that were prepared, I would suggest, sometime ago, that they have not waived from. I guess to a certain extent we should applaud that singularity of purpose, that clarity of vision. Nonetheless, the facts fly completely opposite to that.

Let's move on then, Mr. Speaker, to spending limits: $2 million for a party in an election, $50,000 for a candidate, $23,000 in a by-election, $10,000 in a nomination. These figures are largely arbitrary, especially the one for candidate campaigns, where the number went from $40,000 to $70,000 to $40,000 and $50,000 to $70,000 and $80,000, and now we land on $50,000, with a basket of exemptions that are somehow supposed to provide for the variations in the different constituencies around our province. Well, I can tell you that to single out things like travel and meals and incidentals, that's not the biggest variability of what makes different constituencies very, very different in terms of campaigning and in terms of running.

Mr. Speaker, we suggested an amendment that would tie the campaign limit to what has been worked on and what has been developed as a very careful algorithm and a very careful formula by our former Clerk to determine MSAs, and that amendment, of course, was rejected by the government.

The mover was correct in saying that no two candidates or constituencies are the same, but to single out things like travel costs as being the main variation is simply not true. For example, how many newspapers do you have in your constituency? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, for example, has 13 weekly newspapers, I believe, in his constituency. To run even two ads in the two weeks leading up to that chews up a significant number of dollars. I have seven weekly newspapers in my constituency. One of the issues there is that if you advertise in one or two of them and not in the others, you hear about it from the editor and the publisher, many of whom are friends. So, Mr. Speaker, to suggest somehow that removing travel costs and meal costs and other incidentals from the overall equation provides crossprovince equality and equity from candidate to candidate, from constituency to constituency simply fails to recognize some of the realities of campaigning in Alberta.

The other concern that I have, Mr. Speaker – and we spoke about it yesterday – is the invasion by this legislation into the nomination process and, therefore, into the operation of individual political parties. The fact that it is now something that this government thinks is a good idea is something that should cause Albertans grave concern. This is something that, as the Chief Electoral Officer pointed out to the committee, may not even stand up in court. It may not even be constitutional. And we know that it will cost significant additional dollars to the taxpayers of Alberta.

When the hon. leader of the Liberal Party, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, stands up, someone who has been largely in support of this bill, even signed on to the press release announcing this bill, and says in debate that this is a step too far and that this is a solution looking for a problem that has not been defined, he is absolutely correct.

To include nomination contests in this is an unnecessary additional expense, it is an unnecessary additional burden to those who wish to participate in the nomination contest, and it has a very practical problem for the Chief Electoral Officer in having to review what could be as many as 1,300 forms that have been filed and to do it in a very short period of time given that the time from nominations to the dropping of the writ for an election is often a very short span.

The government failed to answer my questions when I asked: well, what would happen if a candidate's return on their nomination report was found to be in error or there was found to be some sort of spending or contribution violation? What would happen then? Would they be disqualified from the election? What if the election had already occurred by the time the return had been processed? Would that candidate then have been disqualified? Would the results of the election in that constituency be annulled? Would a by-election be required?

None of those questions were answered, and they are legitimate questions. They are legitimate questions that are hard to answer because this has never been done in another jurisdiction. As the Member for Calgary-Mountain View said, this is a bridge too far. This is going too far into the realm of individual political parties.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, quarterly reporting. Again, this is perhaps the most egregious example of where the party in power is exercising their authority and their majority to put an undue burden on other political parties that have, in fact, active constituency associations and where, I very clearly pointed out, most of the constituency associations of the government in power are not active at all. The only thing you have to be able to do if you're the CFO of most constituency associations for the New Democratic Party is to be able to make the number zero and do it repeatedly. That's the only thing that you really have to do.

On the other hand, we have volunteers working on our boards who have to be able to file reports within 15 days of the end of each quarter, and now we're told by this government that we're going to make that reporting more meaningful. More meaningful. Now, more meaningful, to me, usually means more detailed, that there is going to be more in the report, that there are going to be additional requirements. When they know full well that that is something that has very little effect on the CFOs on their side and a great deal of effect on the CFOs on parties on this side of the House, that has a fundamental sense of unfairness.

As I've said in this House before, I believe that Albertans have a great sense of what is fair and what is unfair. Some of what happened going into the last election, some of what happened that made the amount of money spent in the last election immaterial was that Albertans felt that some of what was done by our party, the party that was governing at the time, was fundamentally unfair. It was unfair to other parties that are represented in Alberta, and it was unfair to the Alberta electorate. And the voters of Alberta spoke. They spoke loud and clear. Well, Mr. Speaker, this is also fundamentally unfair. Now, the voters of Alberta may or may not notice this as much as they did those measures, but I can tell you that this is fundamentally unfair. We will remind the voters of Alberta about these fundamentally unfair measures that were taken by this government when we go to the polls the next time, in 2019.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, I cannot support this bill in third reading. While I support the idea of lower contribution limits in general – and I actually think $4,000 is not a bad compromise number – and in general most of the spending limits, I think, are a reasonable place to start, although I think we have to watch very carefully to see where the dollars will go, the intrusion into nomination contests, the fact that three people can bankroll an entire campaign over the course of a four-year election cycle, and, finally, the lack of removing quarterly reporting, which was agreed to unanimously by the committee, are all measures that we tried to amend in this bill and that the government rejected. Because they refused to listen to these reasonable amendments, that would have made this bill better and would have reflected much of the discussion that happened during the course of the summer by the Ethics and Accountability Committee, I cannot support Bill 35, and I will be in opposition to it on third reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to third reading as well on Bill 35. I listened with fascination to the government whip present that speech in regard to the moving of third reading and, quite frankly, was still a little bit shocked that even after all this time, months of debate in committee, days and hours of debate inside this Assembly, the members across the way would still have the gall to rise in this House and try to say that members of the opposition were not for lowering contribution limits, were not for fixing big money in politics.

10:30

Mr. Speaker, as you know and as has been established clearly, without a doubt, this side of the House has led the way on that topic, and I know I'm always excited to see the NDP follow us. That's usually when they get something right. From the very beginning of this process all opposition parties were okay with getting spending on political donations in control. This party, the Wildrose Party, fought for that long before the NDP even thought of it, again following us. I think it's great. I think the members across the way should follow us a little bit more. They would often, probably, get legislation better because this side of the House speaks to Albertans. That side of the House, as you know, rarely does.

With that said, though, we need to also recognize that the argument presented by the government, that this was all about getting big money out of politics, is ridiculous and has been shown to be just not the way that it is, Mr. Speaker. This government has brought forward legislation against the will of every member of the committee, including their own members, and has raised constituency association donations by 400 per cent – 400 per cent –

taking the donation limit in constituency associations from $1,000 to $4,000. It has also been painstakingly shown by all parties in this Assembly how that will allow one or two or three individuals to be able to have complete influence on MLA campaigns when it's coupled with a $50,000 cap. In fact, that could just be one family, a husband and a wife and a child, who could do that.

That was brought up in committee, the members agreed with us at the time, and then it went to cabinet, and – I don't know – somewhere along the way the decision was changed. I would say that it was the government whip normally, but the government whip was on the committee and agreed with us at the time. I don't know if there's another level or how it works with the NDP, Mr. Speaker. I don't know if you know. But let's be clear on that, and then we move on. This party and every opposition party has stood and said that they want to lower donation limits, and we're willing to work on spending caps.

The fact is that the governing party, the NDP, has refused to get big money out of politics, not just because they've increased constituency association donations by 400 per cent but because they've left their ability to continue to use the taxpayer purse to their advantage, to continue to use the taxpayer purse for political advantage to the governing party despite the fact that every party that was on the committee disagreed with that at the time.

This government, Mr. Speaker, shockingly, has spent $10 million in the last year advertising their carbon tax, $10 million for probably the single most hated piece of legislation in modern times by the people of Alberta, a piece of legislation that is damaging and hurting every member of this province in devastating ways. They spent $10 million of taxpayer money, after taxing them with an unpopular tax, to advertise the tax. So big money clearly is still in politics. The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler's motion in regard to this, that the government members said that they supported, has been completely ignored to continue to keep big money in politics for the incumbent government. I have said from the beginning of this that it appears the government is attempting to stack the deck in their favour. It appears the government is attempting to rig the process with this legislation to their advantage.

Now, I would have liked to have been proven wrong. I certainly would have liked to have been proven wrong during this debate. Mr. Speaker, we have given plenty of opportunities for the members opposite to prove us wrong. Instead, over and over and over they voted down reasonable amendments that would make it fair, make democracy fair. The name of their act, this bill, has nothing to do with fair. It's pretty clear. But they had an opportunity to do that. Instead, members continued to vote against making things fair, continued to work to stack the deck, to rig the system, to kneecap opposition parties when it comes to how constituency associations work, to increase donation limits in areas where it's beneficial to them, to make government advertisement easier during political processes, another thing that's an advantage to them.

It's extremely shocking and disappointing, stunning, particularly when you look at some of the amendments that have been brought forward that would make things easier for volunteers to participate in our political process, to make it easier for people that are not successful in being MLAs but who still want to run for parties to be able to participate in the political process. They've made things harder for people to participate in nominations. They've made things easier for incumbents to be elected on all sides, which is disappointing, something that I am fundamentally against. They have harmed democracy in our province. That will be their legacy with this bill.

Now, the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, from the third party, who just spoke, is a hundred per cent correct. We will be reminded. We will remind the people of Alberta during the next election what has taken place here. The people of Alberta like things to be fair. The fact that this government would use their majority to attack democracy – to attack democracy. It's one thing to push through an ideological agenda with a majority. It's another thing to attack something as fundamentally important as democracy is to our province. It's shocking, and it's appalling, in my view.

Again, members from all parties on the opposition side brought forward reasonable amendments to deal with some of these things, to give every member across the way an opportunity to say: "No, we're not trying to rig democracy. We're not so scared about our election chances next time that we're going to manipulate the rules to our advantage. Instead, we're going to work to make sure that democracy works well in the future."

Mr. Speaker, they're so focused on their 2019 election chances that they're forgetting that when they are back in opposition, in the end they will hurt their own party because this legislation will hurt the smallest parties the most, not the larger opposition parties. We'll get around it, and we'll get the job done and replace this government. This will hurt the smaller parties, something that this party across from me has traditionally been in this province and, I promise you, will be again, particularly if they keep moving this type of legislation.

But the number one thing that has always concerned me is the amount of time that was spent at committee focused on something else that stopped us from getting this right, that stopped us from working on third-party issues, which is an important part of this bill, on which we now are likely going to see constitutional challenges, court cases, because of how badly the government has dropped it. Nomination issues: we also may see some court cases along the way because of how badly the government dropped the ball on this.

The reason we saw that, Mr. Speaker, is that members across from me, the members in the government, spent their time at committee trying to stack the deck and get their campaign expenses paid for, which stopped them from being able to do the important work in committee to make sure we get this right. Now we're rushing through legislation, knowing that it's probably going to end up in court, all to try to advantage the governing party, all because the work wasn't done because the governing members across the way spent their time trying to get their campaign expenses paid for. It's shocking.

What's most interesting, Mr. Speaker, is that the members across the way – and I have their voting records on this issue here in front of me – fought long and hard over the summer on this issue, and in the end the opposition, by staying in the fight as long as they could on behalf of the good people of Alberta, were able to stop that silly, ridiculous idea, and it just shows me that this government is moving too fast. They need more time. They obviously have no idea what they're doing.

With that in mind, it is pretty clear to me that the only intention that the government has with this is to rig the system to their advantage. It's absolutely ridiculous. As such, I do believe that this bill should be hoisted, and I will move the appropriate amendment.

The Speaker: Hon. member, we will refer to the amendment as amendment HA. Please continue.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reason I am moving a hoist amendment, again, is because it is clear to me the government has not taken the time to adequately look at their legislation and to take into account the consequences that this legislation will have on the people of Alberta. Instead, the government has been blindly focused on trying to advantage themselves with this legislation.

It's the same pattern that they did in committee. Mr. Speaker, in committee the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, the Member for Edmonton-Decore, the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, the Member for Calgary-Bow, the Member for Calgary-Shaw, and the Member for St. Albert all voted to get their campaign expenses paid for, to get their party's campaign expenses paid for.

The Member for Calgary-North West, who was an opposition member at the time and is now a government member, moved forward a motion shortly after that, a rescinding motion, to give those members an opportunity to rethink their decision. I agreed with the motion and supported the motion, but the Member for Red Deer-South, the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, the Member for Calgary-Bow, the Member for Calgary-Shaw, the Member for Leduc-Beaumont, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, and the Member for St. Albert all voted against that. In fact, those members spent the remainder of the summer and the remainder of their time on committee fighting to make sure, again, that they could get their campaign expenses paid for.

Then time went by. The opposition continued to stay in the fight on behalf of the people of Alberta, and ultimately, because I think the government got caught with their hands in the cookie jar, they wanted to see the committee be able to provide them legislative cover to be able to do something so ridiculous to the people of Alberta. But they got caught. The opposition did their job and were able to stop the silliness that was going forward.

My point, Mr. Speaker, is that the same stuff is happening right now. The same stuff is happening right now with this legislation. The government is continuing to try to gloss over it, to try to distract people by saying that the opposition is not for lowering contribution limits, which is not true. They're trying to gloss over that when, really, they need more time to be able to make a decision. By hoisting this bill to a later date, we're able to provide the government with more time to do the right thing for the people of Alberta.

Clearly, the behaviour in committee, Mr. Speaker – I know you would agree with me – shows that the government has struggles to make decisions, the government members, and that their focus is often on what appears to me to be very selfish reasons, to benefit their election chances. That's not what this piece of legislation should be about. This piece of legislation should be about giving Albertans an opportunity to renew some of the democratic reforms after many, many years since that's been looked at under the previous government's rule.

The reality is that this legislation is a direct attack on democracy. It's a direct attack on the constituency associations of this province. It's deliberately being put forward in a way that will detriment smaller parties and other opposition parties and in a way that would attempt to advantage the government.

It's going to make things harder for the Chief Electoral Officer, who has already said that. Some of the things that have been brought forward in this legislation, Mr. Speaker, the Chief Electoral Officer referred to as useless, so they should not be here. There's no benefit at all to the system. Some of the things being brought forward by the government members in this legislation will now cost taxpayers significantly more money, with no benefit to the taxpayer, lots of benefit to the incumbent party during elections but no benefit to the taxpayer.

In regard to nominations the members across the way have not provided one example to justify the cost to taxpayers, to justify the significant increase in the budget of the Chief Electoral Officer that will come as a result of their decision. Not one reason. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View rightly pointed out that this is a solution looking for a problem. So why would the members continue to do that?

They also have not stood up and justified at any time being about to raise the contribution limits when we have told the public that we are here to lower the limits, when the government is doing exactly the opposite. Mr. Speaker, $1,000 and $4,000 are a significant increase, 400 per cent, of course, as you know, without a doubt, and that's what this legislation is doing. I think there's no way the government can continue to justify with any sort of seriousness the idea that this is only about getting big money out of politics.

With that said, Mr. Speaker, unlike committee, where the opposition fought till the very end, this process, unfortunately, is running out of time. We've given the government every opportunity to do the right thing on behalf of Albertans. We've given the government an opportunity to stop attempting to stack the deck in their favour or rig the system in their favour and to really show that this is about democracy. Unlike when they tried to line their campaign pockets with taxpayer dollars and we were able to stop it, this time it appears the government will continue down this road.

I encourage all members to vote for this hoist motion to be able to give the government an opportunity to do the right thing on behalf of Albertans. I certainly do hope that's what happens though the behaviour that I've seen from the government to date does not provide me with a lot of hope, Mr. Speaker. I think that it is very clear that this is about the government members. It's about their re-election chances. It's about trying to manipulate the system back to their advantage.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me be clear with you. It will not work. The people of Alberta will not fall for it. In fact, I actually think that in the long run, it will damage the government's reputation, certainly, across the province, and Albertans will send them a clear message in the next polls.

Honestly, Mr. Speaker, there is so much other stuff this government has done to the good people of Alberta that has damaged them, hurt their families that this will probably just be one of the smaller things in the pile that the people of Alberta will send them a message on, but we will know in this Assembly, as the Member for Calgary-West pointed out many times during the debate, that this has been done to rig the system to the advantage of the NDP government. It is extremely disappointing, and as I've said the whole time, each and every member across the way should hang their head in shame.

The Speaker: Are there any question or comments to the Member for Rimby-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre under 29(2)(a)?

The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on the amendment, correct?

Loyola: On the amendment, or on the motion. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you're not speaking under 29(2)(a); you're speaking to the amendment, correct?

Loyola: Yes.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please proceed.

Loyola: Thank you very much. Good morning to all the members of the House through you, Mr. Speaker. It's always a pleasure to get up in the House and speak to bills, legislation that we're attempting to get passed. Let me say this. When I've gone out to speak with Albertans regarding the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, I've talked to people about the fact that there has never been a comprehensive review of this act, that we had a government in place that had many, many, many, many opportunities to make changes to the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, but they never made any. Under that piece of legislation, a wealthy individual could give up to $15,000 to a political party, and that would double when it came to an election year. People were just astounded. They just couldn't believe that we live in a democracy where that kind of money would be able to influence the electoral process.

Now, I'm happy that we as a government have decided to reduce that amount from $15,000 to $4,000 in a year, with no doubling up in an election year. When I go out and talk to Albertans about that, when I'm out on the doorsteps and I let them know about that, they're incredibly happy. They're incredibly happy. I also tell them about how now people have an opportunity that they can donate some of that $4,000 to an electoral district association, to a candidate in an election year, to a leadership candidate if they so choose, to a nomination candidate that would be running for the position before the election would come. All those things are widely received because people know that if their cap is $4,000, they can choose how they want to spend it, and the tendency would be that they wouldn't put all their money into one of those options. They would most likely spread it all around. They would spread it all around, Mr. Speaker, because they would have the choice and the flexibility to do so if they so choose. This is really important.

The other thing that's really important is that we're putting spending caps on campaigns. Before that, someone could run an election and spend however much money they wanted to spend. If you just look through the report of the Chief Electoral Officer about the last election, you can compare how much some of the people who ran for the third party and for our Official Opposition spent in comparison to some of the people over on this side.

Now, I've heard it said many a time: oh, so big money doesn't decide an election. In the last election people were fed up, and they decided that a change needed to happen. Historically when you look at the influence of big money in the electoral process, you will see that big money would influence the process. So I'm so happy that our government has presented this fair elections act and that we're doing a number of things to make important changes to our democracy here in the province of Alberta, things that Albertans agree with. If you go out there and you talk to Albertans about it, they agree with these changes.

Now, the other thing I want to stress is that the Chief Electoral Officer recommended that he would suggest moving to annual reporting. This is true, but he also said that you could either do that or you could enhance quarterly reporting. So we chose to improve quarterly reporting, to put more information rather than less information so that this would best help Elections Alberta in catching inaccuracies or violations. As we've heard it stated many times by several members of this House, Albertans prefer having more information than less information. Having more information during quarterly reporting will actually benefit the process because Albertans will have all the information at hand so that they can understand how political parties are being financed and who's giving that money. This is actually something that Albertans have asked for, transparency.

We've also asked for transparency when it comes to third parties and the contributions . . .

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Nixon: We'd love to hear about the hoist that has been moved by me. There's nothing relevant that the member is talking about, specifically about the hoist. If the member would like to talk to the main bill when we're done debating my amendment, I very much look forward to hearing his comments on that, but there's nothing in what the hon. member is presenting in regard to the hoist or the arguments of why this should or should not be a hoist.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, this is not a point of order. This is quite absurd, as all members are given quite a bit of latitude in this House. He's clearly speaking to the bill and why members should not vote in favour of a hoist to delay this. He's talking about all the good work that's gone into this legislation and how Albertans have asked for it.

This is not a point of order, and the member is wasting the House's time.

The Speaker: In this particular instance I agree. The member has still got time left in his notes, and I'm sure he will be speaking to the amendment. There is no point of order.

Please proceed.

Debate Continued

Loyola: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. So where was I? Maybe I should start from the beginning. I'm only joking.

I was talking about third-party financing and third-party elections advertising and political advertising. When I go out there and speak to Albertans, they insist that when they hear on the radio a particular advertisement . . .

An Hon. Member: From your government.

Loyola: . . . from any position out there, they want to know who's funding that particular advertisement. They want to know. So in no way are we suppressing freedom of speech, Mr. Speaker. In no way. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm sure you're getting to the hoist part.

Hon. members, please keep the voices down. Let's get this thing rolling here, please.

Get to the hoist amendment.

Loyola: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't want to waste any more time of the members here, but I'm making all these assertions because – and remember that every statement that I've made I've brought back to individuals that I've spoken to personally in my constituency, on the doorstep, people that I've connected with all over this city and all over this province that have said that they want these things and that not only do they want these things, but they want them now.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I am voting against this hoist amendment, and I encourage all of the members in this House to vote against it.

The Speaker: The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Nixon: Absolutely. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I listened with great interest to the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. Particularly, the core of his argument is that the people he's speaking to inside his constituency would expect him to vote against this hoist because they want things done immediately. It seemed to me that he was indicating that primarily around contribution limits, capping certain spending limits during the electoral process.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, it's been clearly shown that this side of the House wants the same thing. My constituents want the same thing. But I can tell you that I know without a doubt that his constituents will be just as concerned as my constituents are with his attempt and this government's attempts to rig the system to their advantage, which is the point of this hoist. This is the reason why this process should be stopped, not forever but to get back to a committee, to get back to a process where we can fix the terrible mistakes that are being made by the NDP and by this member, the attack that is happening on democracy, which I pointed out very, very clearly – and I will point out that the member never addressed that anywhere during his comments – the attack on constituency associations, and the attack on volunteers.

The core of my argument as to why this should be hoisted, Mr. Speaker, as you know from my comments from just a few moments ago, was around the behaviour of this member and other members during committee, that shows the need to slow the process down, that this government needs help to get things right. There are so many examples since this government has been elected. They often hurry, go too fast. They go headlong into things. You know what? I don't care about this government's reputation or what's left of it, but I do care about the people of Alberta. So while they're going headlong into these things and destroying their own reputation along the way, they're hurting my constituents and the people of Alberta, which is why there needs to be a hoist.

Now, this member across the way, the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, led the way during committee to get his campaign expenses paid for, led the way to get his political party's campaign expenses paid for. Passionately. Passionately. Read Hansard. It's absolutely shocking. It's absolutely shocking, which is the core of why I brought forward the hoist.

Clearly, this government needs more time for the people of Alberta, for the opposition to be able to help steer them to do the right thing, to help make sure that they don't continue to make the terrible mistakes that they keep making, that are hurting families, hurting Albertans, hurting the people that I'm elected to represent and defend proudly inside this Chamber. Just like during committee, as I defended my constituents against the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and his colleagues as they tried to take their taxpayer dollars and pay for their campaign and political expenses, I am doing the same here today.

Now, that member – and I'd be curious to hear his comments – has not risen once to talk about the serious issues with this bill, to talk about the serious things that this bill does to the people of Alberta. Instead, that member, like his colleagues, continues to rise in the House and say that this is about getting big money out of politics. Again, Mr. Speaker, that's something that every party has already agreed to. The question now to the member and the reason that this hoist motion should pass to give the government more time is: why all the extra stuff that's making things harder for political parties? Why the attack on the small political parties? Why the attack on volunteers in our system? Why raise the political donation amount for CAs when you told the people of Alberta that you're lowering them? The people of Alberta know the difference between $1,000 and $4,000. Why make it so that only one or two people can totally fund one MLA's campaign? Not once has a member risen there.

I will note, Mr. Speaker, that in committee, as we debated the ridiculous motion to get his campaign expenses paid for, he sure had a lot to say about that. He talks a lot about talking to his constituents. I'd like to know what his constituents think about him trying to get his campaign expenses paid for. I'm sure his constituents would be extremely concerned about that and would recognize that I'm right by moving this hoist because, clearly, this government can't be trusted.

This government can't be trusted with their decision-making. Their focus is on themselves and not on the people of Alberta. Their focus is on making the process easier for them and not on the people of Alberta. Their focus is on their re-election chances and not on the 100,000 people that are out of work, not on making our election system work, not on being fair to candidates that participate in the process. Their focus is on interfering with individual political parties to try to advantage their party, not on lowering donation limits, because they're increasing them by 400 per cent.

Not once did that member, when he rose, address that. Instead, he went back to the same government talking points that we've heard time and time and time again in this House – they're getting old; you should e-mail whoever sends them to you and get some new ones – and that is that they are trying to get big money out of politics. If they were trying to get big money out of politics, Mr. Speaker, they wouldn't be raising the limits.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak. When I think of this bill, I think of it in terms of the good, the bad, and the cynical. There are some good things in this bill. Getting big money out of politics is something that I campaigned on. It's something I believe in very strongly and personally. My party members have told me time and again that they want it, and reducing the donation limit from $15,000 to $4,000 is a good thing. That's a positive thing, as are spending limits within the bill. That does in fact get big money out of politics. Given those two things, I did want to support this bill. I wanted to see a bill that I could support, that I could get behind.

I think we had a real opportunity to fundamentally transform how Alberta's democracy works. That was the promise of the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, which was created, you'll all recall, in conjunction with the government and the Official Opposition. It was an all-party committee involving all members of the House. Had we done that, the government could have won. They could have been seen in the eyes of Albertans to have done the right thing. They could have established election laws that stood the test of time, that allowed Albertans to participate freely and actively in democracy without giving an unfair advantage to any one group and, equally, not disadvantaging one group. Most importantly, Albertans would have won in that scenario, Mr. Speaker, not just political parties. Albertans could have won.

That committee was a chance to reset democracy and to create a long-term legacy for this government, but instead they chose the cynical path. Instead, they chose to lock in their own advantage while they can, and in so doing, they have diminished democracy in this province. They have done that by reinforcing in Albertans' minds that the only thing politicians do are things for themselves, that when they get into a majority government, they just ram through whatever is best for them. That is sad, Mr. Speaker. It is troubling, and it didn't have to be this way. It really didn't.

This government had a chance. It was elected on this wave of optimism, this time for change, and they could have fundamentally changed Albertans' perceptions of politics. That would be good for not just this government; it would be good for democracy. It would have been good for our province. That, Mr. Speaker, is why I'm so profoundly disappointed to have to vote against this bill, to vote in favour of the amendment on the floor from the hon. member, and to vote against this bill, ultimately, at third reading.

Increasing constituency donation limits from $1,000 to $4,000 goes exactly against what all members on the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, including eight New Democrats, voted for. They voted and accepted a very reasonable opposition amendment to continue to keep constituency donation limits at $1,000, as they are now. As we've said many times in this House, what this change does, combined with the $50,000 spending limit, is that it allows just three people – three people – to fund the campaign of a given MLA. If three people give $4,000 a year for four years, that's $48,000. That is the full cost of one MLA's campaign. If we wanted to get big money out of politics, you would have accepted my very reasonable amendment, which was accepted in committee.

I can't understand why that change happened, and I have yet to hear from any of the private members on the ND side why they changed their mind on that beyond thinking: well, I guess I just have to do what I'm told. You did what you were told in the committee. You read the briefing note you were given. You read the speaking points you were given. You read them out. You didn't offer any thought or perspective, and that, again, is frustrating. It doesn't have to be that way. As private members of the Assembly you have remarkable power. You have the most power in this entire building to represent the views of your constituents. Stand up in this Assembly and cast a vote. That is the most powerful thing you can do. Instead, you've chosen to just fall in line.

Including party nominations in campaign disclosure and spending limits not only disadvantages those of us who regularly have nominations – and I have yet to hear how many provincial NDP constituency associations held contested nominations for the 2015 election. I don't know any. Maybe there were some.

Mr. Malkinson: There were many.

Mr. Clark: I'd like to know how many. The Member for Calgary-Currie tells me there were many. I imagine you have better access to that data than I do. I have yet to hear anyone from that side stand up and tell me how many. How many of you in this room are here because you were the winner in a contested nomination for the 2015 election? How many? Hands up. There's one. Any others? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The point is that other parties, including ours, regularly have contested nominations. As a result, this disadvantages those parties that do.

More importantly, though, far more important than those internal party mechanics, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that people who are underrepresented in politics – and this is the part that baffles me the most. People who are underrepresented in politics – women, people of colour, indigenous peoples, people on low incomes – are already disproportionately underrepresented in the Legislative Assembly. This creates a barrier for those people to participate in the electoral process because now they need to also be able to raise money, fill in all of the paperwork from Elections Alberta, comply with the rules. I can tell you for a fact that that is going to put people off running for a nomination, people who ought to be involved in the process, and for the NDP to be creating that situation is unconscionable.

Adding four times the amount of work for the dedicated volunteers who manage our constituency association finances is unconscionable. That locks in the NDP's central-command-and-control model for other parties as well. We will absolutely comply, Mr. Speaker. That's who we are. Of course we're going to comply with the rules. Of course our constituency associations will file the massively increased filings that are going to be required quarterly. Of course we will because if that's the rule, that's what we will do.

But I can tell you as an emerging party that this particular provision is directed absolutely straight at us. There's absolutely no question. We don't have the resources of the larger parties to hire staff to take care of quarterly reporting for constituency associations. Now, we will comply with it. Make no mistake. We absolutely will comply. But – make no mistake – this is about short-circuiting the growth of emerging parties, the NDP locking in their advantage as government, locking in large parties. Our system works best when new parties emerge to challenge the government to reflect the views of Albertans. Albertans will see this for what it is.

They cherry-pick the recommendations of the Chief Electoral Officer, this one included. The Chief Electoral Officer recommended that we eliminate quarterly reporting for constituency associations, and the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, nine New Democrats included, agreed with that recommendation and voted unanimously to eliminate quarterly reporting. Instead, they've gone in the other direction and ramped that up by at least four times if not more. I made amendments on quarterly reporting and on reducing the $4,000 constituency reporting, and those were rejected by this government.

When it comes to third-party advertising, better known as PACs, or political action committees, this legislation creates a fertile ground for those political action committees to spring up, with the sole purpose, unfortunately, of tearing down one party or another, tearing down one candidate or another. And they've done that by constraining the campaign financing system so much that Albertans who want to participate have no choice but to put their money outside the system.

It's not just about acknowledging that those things are going to happen and exist and disclosing – by the way, I absolutely agree with third-party donation disclosure. I absolutely do. What worries me very much is that in the rush to constrain the system to exactly the maximum that the NDs can extract from it yet disadvantage everyone else, they've created a fertile ground where third parties and PACs will rise up, will create American-style politics in this province. That, I know, is not what Albertans want, and I fear very much, Mr. Speaker, that that's what's happening here, that that is what's going to happen. I think the NDs are playing with fire. Albertans are going to see that.

The cynical, Mr. Speaker: they're locking in their own advantage, creating cynicism, and exacerbating the unfortunate perception Albertans have that politicians will only do what's in their best interest, not the best interest of Albertans. Albertans want a fair fight. Albertans want a fair fight. They don't like it when the person in charge puts their thumb on the scale to their advantage. They don't like that.

There's no question that the NDs are trying to constrain the growth of the Alberta Party, trying to constrain the growth of the Alberta Liberals and other small, emerging parties that may rise up over time. Rules are much more difficult to comply with for smaller parties. Now, we will comply, Mr. Speaker. Unquestionably, we will comply.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will vote in favour of the motion that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has put on the floor. I wish I didn't have to. I really wish that we were here celebrating the successful passage of an important bill, but unfortunately the NDs have taken advantage of their position in a majority government in such a way that I simply cannot support the bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments for the Member for Calgary-Elbow under 29(2)(a)?

The Member for Calgary-Hays. Are you speaking to the amendment?

Mr. McIver: To the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. McIver: Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise in support of the amendment before us, put forward by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. For a whole number of good reasons the government needs more time to actually think about what they're trying to do here. Let me give you some examples where they will be found wanting and they will be found, really, in contempt of Albertans in that they're trying to tip the playing field in their favour.

Let's start with the fact that the premise of the bill, that the government likes to talk about, is to take big money out of politics. Well, what the big print giveth, the small print clearly taketh away because, again, annual donations to a constituency go from $1,000 to $4,000. How does that reduce the money in politics? You know, maybe the government members need to think about that a little bit and think about how that relates to the honesty of what they're putting forward here. I think six months thinking about this would actually do them some good, Mr. Speaker.

Let's talk about that $4,000 number for a little bit because somebody did some work on this. If anybody listening wants to know why this is clearly tipping the scale in the NDP's favour, during the 2015 election the highest donations received: the NDP received six donations over $4,000, just six, where the Wildrose had 30 over $4,000, and the PCs had 66 donations over $4,000. So here's where it is. The NDP got six, 30 for the Wildrose, 66 for the PCs.

So who does this favour, Mr. Speaker? Those people listening won't have any trouble figuring that out. They are tipping the scales in their own favour in a very demonstrable, unarguable way, that the public record supports, and the public will be very unhappy if the government doesn't take six months to reconsider what they're doing here. You know what? The facts actually confirm that the NDP is trying to tip the scales in their favour. It won't be very pleasant for them when Albertans figure out that they are actually trying to mess with democracy.

They're messing with democracy in a whole number of ways. The fact that they are allowing essentially unlimited spending by third parties: I appreciate that the $150,000 is per third party, but there's no limit on the number of third parties – anybody that can raise $150,000, has a friend who can be up front to raise another $150,000 and another friend that can raise another $150,000 – yet the government has limited each of the political parties to $2 million during the campaign period. In other words, those people actually trying to get elected and make it a battle of ideas in the public realm, which is what an election should be, will now be overwhelmed by people that haven't put their names forward in the contest. That's the risk that this government is prepared to take with Alberta's democracy. In fact, they're inviting it, Mr. Speaker.

You know what? With the rules that are in place now and have been in place, the government could make a legitimate argument, which, frankly, our party and all the other opposition parties have agreed with, that $30,000 is too high a limit. We've all agreed to that. What they haven't dealt with is the fact that they are now making it – I'll tell you what the other system did have. Everybody that gave money: it was reported directly by which party or which constituency they gave the money to, so members of the public could see who's supporting people and make their own judgment about whether the amount of influence was legitimate or not, whether it was too much or not enough, or whether there was something wrong there. Now you'll never be sure because people will be able to give money to third parties. Of course, you know, I appreciate that that'll be disclosed, too, but by the time people figure out which third party is giving money to whom and for what purpose and who gave money to the third party, the election will be long over, and people won't be able to make those judgments.

Mr. Speaker, again, this government is doing their best to tip the scales in their favour and their favour alone. The fact that they haven't properly limited government spending during and near the writ period: again they've demonstrated this month, this week that they're prepared to stomp all over a fair fight in the fact that they've spent now $9 million pushing their carbon tax, that nobody likes or very few people like in Alberta. That, by what's in this legislation, is more than the four parties, the other four parties in this House, if they all spent the maximum $2 million under this legislation – the government this month and last month spent more on the carbon tax than that combined and another million dollars on top. They are willing to overwhelm with their government advantage everybody else's voice. If that also doesn't make it obvious to anybody listening to this that they are tipping the scales, the playing field in their favour, I can't think of another. Those are two indictments that are absolutely inescapable.

Six months for the government to think about this, six months to maybe take it back to committee, where some good work was being done, six months to make sure that it's fair in the eyes of Albertans will do this government a world of good. It may even allow them to see, to have some clarity on the damage that this piece of legislation could do to the very concept of democracy.

You know, democracy is not something to be sneered at or laughed at. It's actually the difference between countries that people want to live in and countries that people fight to get out of so they can come to countries like Canada and the United States and Britain and others of the world's great democracies. People choose to go there because in a democracy there's a much higher chance that the rule of law will prevail, that you'll be safe, that your kids and your family will be safe. This NDP government wants to stomp all over and wipe their feet on democracy. That's what this legislation does. Six months for them to think about it will actually be good for them because it will give them a chance to see this with some clarity and understand what a despicable piece of legislation this is.

You know, I understand making the rules fair for everybody. That would be good, but this doesn't do it. Again, they've set the limits for constituency donations four times as high as they are now, and they have actually tailor-made it to do the least damage to the NDP and the most damage to their biggest competitors. Black and white. Black and white. It's so wrong, so unfair, so designed to tip the scales in their favour that no one could deny it, Mr. Speaker.

Then we get into the fact that – here's another reason why they need six months – the committee was warned that some of the changes in this legislation will not stand up to a constitutional challenge. Freedom of association, freedom of expression are issues. This is begging for a constitutional challenge, and we don't know how much that will cost Alberta taxpayers and how much egg will be on the government's face. Yet if they had six months to think about it, maybe they would take that out.

My colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster made a very long amendment, that he tried to push through, one that was important to keeping the government out of a party's internal business because at that level, before someone's even nominated to a party, essentially they're private citizens. Yet this government is trying to reach into the lives of private citizens before they even become a nominated member of a party. They're trampling people's privacy. They're trampling the ability for private clubs to operate in a private way.

There have been things said over time about where a government's nose belongs and where it doesn't. It doesn't belong in the private business of private citizens. This legislation sticks this government's nose right in the lives of private citizens before they're nominated: another reason why thinking about this for six months more will not only be good for this government, but if they change their mind and decide to straighten up and fly right legislatively, it will be in the government's best interests, Mr. Speaker.

They may have a chance of having some credibility, when they get back to their own constituencies, that they haven't actually tried to be unfair with the democratic process, the very process that makes this country and this province a great place to live, a place where the rule of law prevails, where equality of all people prevails. Yet they want to tip the scales in their favour. Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, they've been caught. They've been caught tipping the scales in their favour. My colleague who moved the amendment here – I guess it's a good thing. He's embarrassing the government. He's embarrassing the government by making them look at their own legislation and see just how damaging it is, how unfair it is, and how unworthy of this Legislative Assembly this piece of legislation is.

Again, Mr. Speaker, part of that reaching into the constituency contest actually allows the government to find out who is donating to parties, who supports them, and to intimidate them. Again, we've heard from members that are supporters of ours, that have been on boards of our constituencies that they're dropping off because they've been told by government officials that if their name is on a list, they won't be nominated to be on agencies, boards, and commissions and that it may be harder for their companies to do business with this government. This legislation actually enables that very intimidation.

Six months to think about that, Mr. Speaker, is something that may have the government come to their senses and decide to do something much more reasonable, much more fair, much more respectful of democracy, and much more respectful of the very Albertans that we should all be here to represent and to look after the best interests of, making sure that when they pick their next government by picking their next MLAs, the contest, both province-wide and in each of the constituencies, is a fair fight, not one tilted with this terrible piece of legislation, this piece of legislation that, obviously, the government has tailor-made to suit their electoral chances in the next election and tip the scales in their favour and move the playing field in their favour.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to support this amendment. I'm going to support this amendment because while I don't have a whole bunch of faith, I live in hope that the government may actually see right from wrong and make the changes that would make this right, the changes that desperately need to be made in this piece of legislation.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) for the Member for Calgary-Hays?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask for unanimous consent to move to one-minute bells.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to the . . .

Bill 27 Renewable Electricity Act

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise and move third reading of Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act.

This is a historic occasion for our province. After years of announcements about studies, discussions, plans to plan frameworks, and even short-lived cabinet positions to pursue renewable energy in Alberta, we can stand proud and proclaim that this government, our government, is taking action that will bring more widespread renewable deployment to our province. We are introducing the first piece of renewable energy legislation in Alberta history. The idea of a policy framework to encourage the development of renewable electricity energy in Alberta goes back to at least 2005, when it was recommended to government that the province develop and implement such a framework.

Well, it's been a long decade. It's been a long 10 years for Albertans excited about the opportunity for more of our electricity to be produced cleanly here in Alberta. It's been a long 10 years for developers looking to bring their investment capital to our province to create jobs and generate clean energy, and it's been a long 10 years for landowners awaiting opportunities for supplemental farm income and for rural municipalities awaiting the considerable new municipal renewable energy projects that will bring and support the community services they provide.

But we have made it to today, and today we are enacting the framework that we need to create a series of renewable electricity programs to achieve our 30 per cent target. With our target of 30 per cent renewable energy by 2030 we are creating the opportunity for the largest market for new renewable energy investment in Canada. By legislating that target, we are maximizing the conditions for investment and economic development and jobs and for the lowest cost renewable energy projects. We are talking $10.5 billion in private investment, 7,200 jobs. That's what we hear from the experts and stakeholders and investors that we listened to.

Also through this framework we are enacting the structures we need to maximize the amount of new, clean, renewable electricity generation we can get for our investment of carbon revenues from major industrial emitters. This bill has been carefully written to deliver the lowest cost renewable energy projects to supply our target. The provisions in this bill are the result of considerable engagement with stakeholders and advice from noted experts in electricity and renewable energy development.

With this bill we move forward with Alberta's renewable energy opportunities at last. We leave behind the myths and disproven, disparaging innuendo. We leave behind the era of inertia and inaction. We enact one of the key planks of the climate leadership plan. We are reducing our greenhouse gas emissions and curbing our air pollution. We are diversifying our economy, and we are creating good, clean jobs in renewable energy development, operations, and maintenance while ensuring reliable and affordable electricity for Albertans. We look forward to continuing to work to bring these benefits to Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to everyone for the opportunity to speak to this in third reading. I just want to say that I know for myself and on this side of the House our key plank is for Albertans, hands down. Our key plank is about protecting Albertans, about protecting their jobs, and about making sure that there is transparency, something that is wholly lacking in this piece of legislation. As an Albertan and a mom, a sister, a wife, a legislator, a musician, a business owner, and a teacher I have to say that I have a great deal of disappointment with the lack of collaboration that I have seen in the hours and hours and hours and hours that we've stood in this House and debated on these bills. In every other role in my life there are always going to be confrontational situations. There are always going to be things that come up that people don't agree on. You can come to an understanding – maybe you agree to disagree – or you go back and forth and find some sort of middle ground, and you still remain civil and kind and thoughtful and open minded.

I'm truly appreciative of the members that actually stood up on the government side of the House and spoke to this bill. I would have preferred if they had actually read the amendments that we had brought forward before speaking on them or to the bill, for that matter, because the amendments that we brought forward were there to actually add accountability and transparency, mechanisms for metrics, mechanisms to make sure that there were reasonable ways for the government to show Albertans that what we're doing there is in the best interests of Albertans. That's my key plank. That is the key plank of the Wildrose.

I've said this before: we are small but mighty over here. I am absolutely blessed to be surrounded by people who have become my mentors and are extremely intelligent on these files, have the academic background to support the information that they bring forward. You know, we've done so much research. We've stood in this House and brought forward so many reasonable amendments to help this bill be better. The bill, in its essence, to me, is not a bill that I would want to bring into legislation, but given that it's here, we have tried at every opportunity to give some credibility to the legislation that this government has brought forward. We have spent hours talking to stakeholders, especially when some of this legislation lands in your lap and you're dissecting it, reaching out to them to try and find out what it is that we're doing here, hours and hours and hours in here trying to wade through this bill, which basically should be called an arbitrary target bill. You want to know – I'd like to know – what's really behind this bill. It's a question that I keep asking myself. The government has set arbitrary targets. Do you want to know who the target is? Albertans. Albertans are the target. Albertans, my family, your family, Mr. Speaker, everybody's family.

All I can think of is that the only reason that the government moved to a capacity model in the first place is because it's just given the government a licence to subsidize the renewable sector. I mean, you cannot get to this arbitrary target of 30 per cent with a deregulated market, or a free market. This legislation is going to cost Albertans in their pockets every day, and this government will have that legacy. Albertans are the target. They're certainly not the key plank of this government. You know, the hard part and the part that's so sad is that the government is fine with that. It charges the taxpayer and the ratepayer. I mean, what is the government thinking? Or worse, they were thinking, and they knew that by tearing up those PPAs, it would trigger this domino effect and this ridiculous legislation. The government is going to build their green legacy on the backs of Albertans who are suffering, who are losing their jobs. We see a government that cares more about the climate leadership action plan than they do about the well-being of the people that they represent.

What about the stranded assets? The plan, as I understand it, is that the government is going to take $3 billion from Albertans for this slush fund, this green slush fund. This resulted in the destruction of the PPAs, which is about $600 million to $900 million approximately plus the $1.4 billion in losses for the coal phase-out. You add to that the cost of the massive infrastructure, the subsidies that we know are going to be going to these investors that are going to be coming into our province – that is going to be on the back of the taxpayer – and the subsidies that are going to be required to actually keep these mechanisms running. The market cannot.

Also, on top of that – and I think this is extremely striking – when you hear the words “fair and reasonable,” “fair and responsible,” I would think that at every opportunity, Mr. Speaker, this is something we would want at every phase of legislation. Doesn't that just describe to you, in a nutshell, transparency and accountability? Those two words, for me, are words we use in our household all the time. We use it with our kids. We use it in the things that we do, how we live our lives.

It's certainly a mandate that I would like to live by, yet the government feels that at any point in legislation it may be redundant. Okay. I personally would honour the fact that a government would like to be redundant in being fair and responsible. That, to me, is a good redundancy. We've seen a lot of other redundant things here that I wouldn't agree with. That is one that I would agree with. Why, why, why would you remove the words “fair and responsible” from any piece of legislation ever?

Then, on top of that, we see reduced accountability with the MSA – this is the electricity police – and oddly enough it's only in renewables. Why? Because then the MSA cannot do its due diligence in making sure that the renewables portion is actually doing what they're supposed to do. It is called economic withholding. That is what the MSA did. That is why they were able to police, Mr. Speaker, all of the other companies when they tried to overcharge Albertans during peak times. That has been removed from this legislation along with “fair and responsible.” I'm telling you: Albertans are hearing this. They know what's going on. They are not happy, and that is an understatement.

How is it that the ISO, an arm's-length portion of this, is now all of a sudden able to hold securities and interests in generation? Now, how does that work? Nobody has been able to explain that to me well quite yet, and I am extremely concerned about that aspect.

I think the simplest thing that we asked for, that got voted down as well, is that we asked that the minister's website post any upcoming projects that the government is looking at, and they wouldn't even do that. Why? Well, I think Albertans can probably figure out why. If they don't post it, they don't have to honour the entire idea of accountability and transparency to Albertans about who it is that they're bringing in on these projects.

The minister mentioned about $10.5 billion of private-sector investment. Excellent. We love that. That would be wonderful. But I'm just curious. These people who are going to be incentivized to come in and invest in Alberta: I'm sure that you will have it on your website that this government likes to tear up contracts. When you sell a car that's been in an accident or anything like that, you have to disclose the mistake. You have to disclose that you've been in an accident. This is an accident of mass proportions. So I'd like to know where that's going to be disclosed. Is that going to be on, like, the header: "Come invest in Alberta. We tear up contracts"?

What about peaker plants? Have you thought about that? This is an important aspect. When you're bringing renewables online, it's going to be an important aspect.

Anyway, I feel it's very important that the government understand that what we are looking at here is a lack of accountability and a lack of transparency. I'd love to count up the number of hours that we have stood up on this side of the House talking about this, trying to bring credibility to this legislation.

Again, I just have to end, Mr. Speaker, with that it's extremely disappointing to me that, at least in some instances, we couldn't come to some agreements on these amendments that would have made this very, very poor legislation better. Thank you.

11:50

The Speaker: Hon. members, is there anyone who wishes to speak to Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, in third reading? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we have before us a pretty significant bill with some pretty far-reaching implications, and I'm going to present an amendment this morning.

The Speaker: Yes. Please proceed.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the motion for third reading of Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence."

The reason for this hoist amendment is because of the far-reaching implications of this bill and the obvious lack of consultation and planning and analysis that this government has not done. If we go through this bill – and I have gone through this bill countless times now – we have just a few things to point out here. In the beginning of this bill we have a target that says: "at least 30%." We have no information, no analysis, and there have been no independent studies presented by the government on how they arrived at a 30 per cent number other than a suggestion from some hon. members that it sounds good to say "30 by 2030." But that's not really good enough from technical or financial points of view.

Furthermore, the act says, "At least 30%," which, of course, then leaves the door wide open for even a greater amount than 30 per cent when, in fact, technically our grid would be substantially unstable beyond that. That tells me right away that there was not, obviously, consultation done with the technical experts in the field of our grid. Otherwise, the government or whoever authored this would have known that pushing the envelope, actually, beyond 25 starts to get technically touchy.

Then we come to the issue of fair and balanced, where this bill strikes a section from the Electric Utilities Act where the ISO must act in a way that is fair and responsible to provide for the safe, reliable and economic operation of the interconnected electric system and to promote a fair, efficient and openly competitive market for electricity.

This bill strikes the fair and reasonable, fair and balanced requirement. That, in and of itself, ought to be enough of a red flag for this bill actually to be struck down. Why in the world would any government in any democracy want to remove the word "fair" out of a bill, out of an existing act? Why in the world would any democracy in the world want to remove "fair and responsible," "safe, reliable and economic," and "efficient and openly competitive market for electricity"? Why ditch that? Is this really a New Democratic Party that's in government here when they're striking things like "fair and responsible" out of legislation in our province?

Then we come to the lack of economic assessment. We tried to put forward an amendment that would require an economic impact assessment, but of course the government didn't want to have that. Before going down this track, ISO, in the development of their proposals, really needs to do economic impact assessments, even social impact assessments. Environmental impact assessments are done, but how about economic impact assessments? Of course, if you don't have to be fair and reasonable, then why on earth would you ever want an economic impact assessment, right?

Albertans really, Mr. Speaker, have a right to know what the impacts are of the agreements that are going to be made by this government with renewables corporations and generators in the whole development of this 30 per cent by 2030 business. This government has been proceeding headlong into its ideological agenda without a whole lot of checking the facts, doing assessments, doing analysis, talking to the experts. The purpose of this hoist is to give some time for Albertans to actually be consulted, some time for Albertans to actually speak to this government, not just experts, because I'm hoping that they would do such a thing, but also everyday Albertans.

We had a situation in this bill where we tried to put forward an amendment because there was a section in it that said that "the Minister may establish" certain program objectives. We wanted that changed to "will establish" or "shall establish and make public" those kinds of program objectives, and strangely the government voted that amendment down. They didn't want the minister to be compelled to set clear objectives and make them public. Very strange.

A total of 11 amendments were voted down, and all of those amendments had as their purpose accountability, transparency, clear objectives, performance measurement, that sort of thing. All in all, every amendment was ratepayer and taxpayer facing, making sure that Albertans knew the facts, making sure that Albertans were involved in the process, making sure that Albertans had everything that they needed. Interesting. [An electronic device sounded] That's just ducky.

Then we come to a fairness adviser, yet the fairness adviser's work wasn't even going to see the light of day. How fair is that? Not fair at all.

Then respect for landowners. We tried to introduce an amendment that would ensure that landowners' property rights were respected, and it was amazing the vitriol, I will call it, from the other side over something they also campaigned for, like we did. That was just the strangest thing. I will chalk it up to it occurring after midnight, and, you know, weird things happen after midnight in this place.

On and on we saw it. We tried to introduce some things requiring performance bonds and reclamation bonding, making sure that at the end of the life cycle of these projects there was something in place regarding reclamation specifically. No. The government wanted to vote that down, too. Very strange. Very strange.

It leads me to suspect, given the power that the minister is going to have to push renewables, given that the Market Surveillance Administrator will have no power whatsoever to look into complaints against renewable projects, the secrecy, the hiding of things, the lack of reporting required, the lack of analysis required, the lack, generally, of accountability . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, if I could interrupt. I thought that for a moment you were going to have duck for Christmas dinner rather than turkey.

The House stands adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, December 13, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 31 students from Afton elementary in the beautiful constituency of Edmonton-Meadowlark. The students are accompanied today by their teacher Nicholas Suvanto and chaparrone Carlowin Irang. I would now ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, there are no other school groups?
Seeing and hearing none, the Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you three community advocates and leaders from the Alberta Somali Community Centre. I have the honour of meeting with them a little bit later this afternoon. New Canadians are such an important part of our province, and I look forward to their insights into how we can improve mental health supports in their community. I ask that Habiba Abdulle, Sudi Barre, and Dhahabo Salad please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, any other introductions? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my very great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two guests that are in attendance. The first is Stephanie Shostak. Stephanie is the regional director for Edmonton north on PC Alberta. I ask Stephanie to rise and receive the warm greeting of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second guest is someone who could certainly not be called a stranger to these august chambers, perhaps has attended more sessions of question period than most of us here perhaps even combined. It's my pleasure to introduce Mr. Rory Koopmans.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

Cavendish Farms Expansion in Lethbridge

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, since being elected in May of 2015, I've listened to a barrage of negative rhetoric from opposition about our government. Well, I'm proud to be part of a government that gets things done. Yesterday in Lethbridge the myths that are told about this government were blown away with the announcement of a $350 million private investment by Cavendish Farms with J.D. Irving, a Canadian blue-chip company. This is the largest private investment Lethbridge, and probably southern Alberta, has ever seen. This investment will boost the province's GDP by $90 million a year during construction and $26.6 million during operations.

Mr. Speaker, this investment came because of certainty and a vision of prosperity and growth for our province from this government and Cavendish Farms. I am so proud of being just a small part in the process which brought this to fruition. I'm so proud of all those involved: Mayor Spearman; Lethbridge city council; Economic Development Lethbridge, in particular, CEO Trevor Lewington; our city manager, Garth Sherwin; our provincial government; and, of course, Mr. Robert Irving and all of the Cavendish Farms staff. I know the long hours of work which have gone on for the last nine months to make this happen are worth it as we see the economic impact roll out in Lethbridge, southern Alberta, and Alberta as a whole.

Thank you to all of my colleagues for their support of all of this positive legislation this past session. I had planned as my statement today wishing a happy 50th anniversary to my former union, the Public Service Alliance of Canada. I am sure they will forgive me.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Whitefish Lake First Nation Education Program

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to congratulate the elders, chief, council, and members of the Whitefish Lake First Nation. For the last three years the nation has provided members with a 16-week program offering life skills, job readiness, and safety training. They offer five entry-level trades, including carpentry, plumbing, electrical, insulating, and scaffolding. The program prepares graduates for the workforce in the construction industry, mainly oil and gas. To date there have been six successful programs with approximately 80 graduates in total. Ninety-five per cent of the students completed the program, with an 85 per cent employment success rate. That's more than 60 First Nation members who have been trained in the trades in three years. What a great accomplishment.

On Friday I had the very real pleasure to speak at the graduation ceremonies. These 14 grads started the program in September and hope to start work very soon in the new year. This is only one example of what the First Nation offers its members in support of building a solid educational foundation. They provide studies at different times to allow people facing different life experiences lots of opportunities to continue their postsecondary studies, including intersession in spring and summer, part-time, home studies, and evening courses. To paraphrase the Whitefish Lake postsecondary education philosophy statement, the program will endeavour to provide and maintain service delivery in education, individual and career counselling for all of the band members . . . whereby education will be the means by which each student may develop physically, socially, intellectually, emotionally and spiritually so that he or she can become a competent, responsible and contributing member of the community of Whitefish Lake . . . and the society at large.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the elders; Chief Brian Favel; councillors James Jackson, Kevin Half, and Greg Sparklingeyes; and special thanks also to Rennie Houle, the program director, and the First Nation members who are taking advantage of this great opportunity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Protection of Children in Care

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to address comments made in the Chamber yesterday by our hon. Premier. Specifically, the Premier claimed that for 44 years Progressive Conservative governments did not adequately address flaws in Alberta's child intervention system. This is true. Although not for a lack of trying, still, we fell short. While previous PC ministers, most notably late Manmeet Bhullar, made significant and well-intentioned efforts to improve the system, we know now that it wasn't enough to save Serenity from her terrible fate. If it was easy, we would have fixed it. If it was easy, the NDP would have fixed it. Because it's not easy, now is the time to work together to make it better in public. Because we did not get it right, both the PCs and the NDP will take some criticism in the process. Let's both agree to take that heat if it results in saving young lives like Serenity's.

Children in care are the personal responsibility of all members of this Assembly. We owe them our very best efforts to get this right. Let's start by passing Serenity's law today. Then, Mr. Speaker, let's take part in an all-party committee of the Legislature, where the public can watch us do our best to fix the system.

Let's face it. Both this government and the last one have been shocked into action by public pressure in the media. Keeping the public pressure on will force all of us to do our best and move forward. The choice is simple, Premier. We can do this publicly and openly and give hope of getting better results in the future, or we can bury the process for six months behind the secrecy of a ministerial panel and hope the public forgets, at least until the next scathing report from the office of the Child and Youth Advocate. I know which choice the public thinks is best.

Let's commit today to making better choices as our own Premier has advised Albertans to do. Then, and only then, will we have earned the right to go home for Christmas vacation, knowing we will have done our best and that we can dig in for Alberta's children in care. Alberta kids deserve no less.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

1:40 Climate Change and Energy Policies

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am passionate about a great many things – my community, my constituents, my family, and the world we live in – and I am not alone. Albertans also have a great many passions that they feel strongly about.

This weekend I watched a National Geographic program on climate change with my kids, and the figures were devastating. Looking over at my sons, I knew that in the future I'd want them to be able to say: "Thank you for understanding and believing in the science of climate change. Thank you for working to make a difference and caring about our future." Mr. Speaker, I want my community to know that we are working towards a better plan for tomorrow for all Albertans.

I am proud to be a part of this government and the climate leadership plan, which has resulted in two pipeline approvals and is driving the new businesses that are popping up to meet the demand of this new, less carbon-intensive energy market.

Areas like the Nisku and Leduc industrial parks get hit hard when the price of oil fluctuates. We've seen thousands of job losses in our community and an entire energy park slow down. However, the importance of a pipeline is something that constituents have said again and again would help, a pipeline to help create jobs all across the country and to put skilled tradespeople and engineers back to work in Nisku, where advanced manufacturing has been a shining example of what happens when entrepreneurship and innovation meet opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are resilient, from farms taking advantage of extra funding for on-farm solar to the leadership of the city of Leduc in GHG reduction, with the rec centre having the largest municipal rooftop solar install in Canada.

We are adapting to the new energy climate, an energy climate that is about balance and a less carbon-intensive energy market. The carbon levy is an important part of this, and it shows our commitment to this new market while at the same time we are protecting Alberta families and my constituents through the rebate program.

Mr. Speaker, the changes happening to our climate are real. I want my children to look at me as a man who chose to do the right thing for this province and the world even when it was difficult. Decisions made in our backyard impact backyards across the globe. We are taking action now with our climate leadership plan, not simply because we want to but because we need to.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Festival Place in Sherwood Park

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the hard work and debate that this House has engaged in over the last few months on serious issues, I would like to encourage members to get out this holiday season and throughout the year and support art and culture organizations in their communities.

In my community we have a wonderful facility, Festival Place, which offers world-famous musical acts in a perfectly sized venue where one can bring their drink in. Recent acts include André-Philippe Gagnon, and comedian Ali Hassan will be there in January.

But beyond professional acts every year this theatre presents a community musical with many community actors and singers. I look forward to the performance this year of Anne of Green Gables.

My favourite event at Festival Place is the summer patio series, held outdoors with food and beverages, featuring Canadian and international Celtic, blues, and folk acts. For $8 per night it is affordable and has introduced me to the work of many wonderful musicians.

This performance space also hosts school award ceremonies, music festivals, and space for multicultural dance and music acts as well as trains young people during the summer in the circus arts.

Like all communities Sherwood Park is home to many dance studios, music schools, choirs, and school drama groups, who spark and nurture artistic talent in residents of all ages. Last year one of these choirs of older adults sang in the rotunda.

Through support from government, including the Ministry of Culture and Tourism, and foundations, Albertans outside of the major cities often have access to Alberta's major performing art institutions. But even in smaller communities there are always many talented persons who nurture talent and provide opportunities for performances.

Mr. Speaker, as we approach the end of a session and the festive season, I would like to urge everyone in this House to take the opportunity to support their local theatre, symphony, ballet, music venue, attend performances of community groups, and enjoy the season through the arts. See you all at the theatre.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

National Finals Rodeo Champions

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is well known for cowboys and the sport of rodeo. This sport has become part of our culture and the identity of Alberta, recognized around the world. The first recognized Canadian rodeo was held in 1903 in the southern Alberta town of Raymond, near Lethbridge. Since that time we have had a great many men and women who have represented our nation in the world finals.

This past weekend the national finals rodeo in Las Vegas, Nevada, concluded with three homegrown cowboys reaching the pinnacle of success in rodeo. Unfortunately, this success has gone largely unreported by the Canadian media. Levi Simpson from Ponoka and Jeremy Buhler from Arrowwood brought home the title of world champions in the team roping event, this after becoming the first all-Canadian team to qualify for team roping at the world championships. Mr. Speaker, not satisfied with just qualifying, they put down a smoking 4.3 second run on the final go-around to seal the deal and bring home the coveted gold buckles of world champions.

Not to be outdone, Zeke Thurston from the diverse riding of Drumheller-Stettler followed up that success. Zeke, who calls Big Valley home, is now sporting his own gold buckle as the world champion saddle bronc rider. Again, Mr. Speaker, Zeke showed the grit and determination cowboys and Albertans are known for, turning in the performance of 747 and a half points on just nine head.

Today it's my privilege to stand in this House and recognize these impressive accomplishments by Levi, Jeremy, and Zeke. I invite the entire House to join me in showing our appreciation of these Canadian cowboys. They have competed and represented our nation with pride and honour at the national finals rodeo. We congratulate them on a job well done.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a petition today that says:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta petition, the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to take the following measures to improve the treatment and protection of the wolf population in Alberta.

- (1) prohibit the posting of bounties on wolves by individuals, clubs, special interest groups, or municipalities;
- (2) abolish the use of poison, such as strychnine;
- (3) approve humane standards for the use of snares and make documentation for all snare by-catch mandatory;
- (4) reduce the six-month trapping season and ten-month hunting season upon wolves;
- (5) keep an inventory and monitor the wolf populations of Alberta;
- (6) educate ranchers and promote the non-lethal wolf control methods; and
- (7) introduce legislation protecting wolves on public lands, including community grazing pastures.

Mr. Speaker, the petition has been approved by Parliamentary Counsel. It contains about 10,000 signatures from residents of Alberta.

The Speaker: The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition. I have several hundred names that have signed a petition that has circulated, actually, throughout the province, and I'm here to table it today. The petition reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce legislation to repeal the Daylight Saving Time Act and require the observance of Central Standard Time in Alberta throughout the entire year.

Mr. Speaker, this is a petition that has been signed by Albertans throughout the province. It was, I believe, started by some constituents in the town of Mannville, and I'm happy to table it at this time.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to table the appropriate number of copies of the annual report of the Appeals Commission for Alberta workers' compensation. The Appeals Commission is the final level of appeal for workers' compensation matters in Alberta. It is independent of the Workers' Compensation Board and accountable to the Ministry of Labour. The document reports on the performance of the Appeals Commission for the period between April 1, 2015, and March 31, 2016, inclusive.

The Speaker: The President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the required number of copies of the Report of Selected Payments to the Members and Former Members of the Legislative Assembly and Persons Directly Associated with Members of the Legislative Assembly, also known as the MLA report – this is for the year ended March 31, 2016 – pursuant to the Legislative Assembly Act and the Conflicts of Interest Act. As members are likely aware, the report includes such things as salary, benefits, and travel expenses while on MLA or government business.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of the Northern Alberta Development Council 2015-16 annual report as required under the act. This report contains a summary of the council's activities from April 1, 2015, to March 31, 2016.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to be able to table five copies of the report that I was citing yesterday from Alberta Innovates: Bio Solutions, Biomass Innovation, which talked about a solution for us in Canada. It has a renewable resource that we have, that we can continuously use.

Statement by the Speaker

Decorum

The Speaker: If you would hold the clock.

Hon. members, I don't choose to speak as a teacher lecturing students. It's not my intent. Yesterday was very noisy, and a very sensitive topic was being discussed. I urge all of you to treat the matter with respect and, more specifically, to control the violence. [interjections] I didn't see that part, but the words nonetheless connect. Be conscious of the words that we all use in here.

Start the clock.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Policies

Mr. Jean: Well, it's been a busy fall for the NDP. Here are just a few highlights: 13,000 full-time jobs lost in October; a $10.8 billion deficit; and, of course, a $1.4 billion price tag to shut down coal in Alberta. To top it all off, the Human Services minister took weeks to get a critical report to the RCMP about the probable murder of a little girl named Serenity. What does the Premier have to say to Albertans, who will be poorer, who are out of work, and who have lost any trust in this government because of this appalling NDP government's record?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, you know, when our government was elected, we knew that the economy was going into a significant downturn as a result of the drop in the price of oil, and we committed to focusing on having the backs of Albertans, and we committed to working with them in terms of job creation. The last few weeks have actually not been so bad. Just a couple of weeks ago in Lethbridge the single biggest private-sector investment in the history of that city was made to the tune of $350 million. The PDP announcement that we made last week will bring in 4,000 construction jobs and 1,400 long-term jobs.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: The Premier should tell that to the 100,000-plus Albertans that are out of work, Mr. Speaker.

It is bad. It is very bad, and here are some more highlights: helping Ottawa out by blocking equalization reform, caps on oil sands, caps on refining, asking Alberta taxpayers to be on the hook for billions of dollars in new generation, and an ongoing lawsuit, of course, against a Calgary-owned power company. What could be better? This lawsuit has sent a chill throughout all of Alberta. It's a lawsuit that, if the NDP is successful, will mean property tax hikes for all Calgarians. When will the Premier drop this ridiculous lawsuit and reverse the tax hikes . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we covered a number of topics there, but to go back to equalization, I would of course go back to the member opposite and ask him, when he was in government federally, which actually has some level of authority over that matter, what exactly he did with respect to the equalization issue. I believe he got up to speak over 200 times in the House during his career, and not once – not once – did he raise the matter of equalization. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Ms Notley: So you know what? I think he's kind of missed his opportunity.

Mr. Jean: Of course, the real reason, Mr. Speaker, is because it wasn't renegotiated when I was there.

Here's one surprise that is really rubbing Albertans the wrong way: a commitment to do Ottawa's bidding and raise the carbon tax by another 67 per cent. That's right, Mr. Speaker. The Premier and the NDP have shown open contempt for the millions of Albertans who don't support the carbon tax. The Premier thinks that they need to make better choices, choices like heating their homes or possibly buying groceries, perhaps. This is the largest tax hike in Alberta history. Can the Premier finally tell Albertans why she won't scrap this tax or at least put it to Albertans in a referendum?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member opposite for allowing me to go back to the issue of jobs; for instance, two pipelines, 22,000 jobs – 22,000 jobs – billions of dollars back into the coffers of Albertans, billions of dollars back into the profits of oil and gas companies here in Alberta because of our climate leadership plan, that, as clearly indicated by the Prime Minister of the country, made that decision happen. Our government delivered for Albertans, and I am very proud of that.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Jean: And not a single shovel in the ground, Mr. Speaker, employing any Albertans.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Jean: It's just 18 days until families see their heating bills go up, pay more at the pumps, and see the price of everything else that they buy skyrocket, but the environment minister has decided, 13 months after first announcing this job-killing tax, that it's finally time to roll up her sleeves and take some phone calls. I have a better idea. Why don't the Premier and her ministers get out of their comfy offices and hold some public town halls across Alberta and look the people in the eye that they're hurting and destroying their lives? That would be a good idea.

Ms Notley: Well, interestingly, Mr. Speaker, it is actually the case – I'm not quite sure what the member opposite was doing, but before we introduced the climate leadership plan, there were actually a number of public consultations out there, but he must have missed them.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the renewable energy that our program will produce: 7,200 jobs. With respect to our tax credit program: 9,000 jobs. Interestingly, in just the last couple of weeks we have heard oil and gas companies announce billions and billions of dollars of increases in capital investment for just next year.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Most of that investment is in Saskatchewan.

Two-thirds of Albertans don't support this carbon tax, and the Premier knows it. It's why they've unloaded $9 million in taxpayer-funded propaganda. It's why the Premier is sending the environment minister on a carbon tax telethon to help explain to Albertans how to, as the Premier would say, make better choices. Instead of wasting millions of dollars trying to sell Albertans on something they don't want, why doesn't the Premier take her own advice, make better choices, and scrap the carbon tax?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, there are two ways to approach building a jurisdiction over which you have some responsibility. You can say no to everything, or you can be the people who say yes. You can be timid, or you can be bold. You can have faith in the people of your province, or you can be xenophobic. You can ultimately decide that you want to move forward with leadership or that you want to go backwards and reject facts. We are moving Alberta forward. We are standing up for Albertans. We have their backs. We will not vote against Alberta's future for political points. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Mr. Jean: You can create jobs, or you can do what the NDP has done and kill jobs in Alberta.

The NDP seems content with denying basic economics. Here are the facts. Australia has axed their tax, France has axed their tax, and now the United States will be cutting their business taxes and their income taxes and will have no carbon tax. Mr. Speaker, they will be more competitive in attracting investment, and that only hurts Alberta. This is a big deal. This is not a joke. This is a carbon tax that will hurt people's lives. Why does the Premier think Alberta should pay a carbon tax when none of our major competitors across the world will be paying a carbon tax?

Ms Notley: Well, interestingly, Mr. Speaker, one of the folks from whom many of the members opposite take great inspiration just nominated a Secretary of State, who made the following statement, quote: at Exxon Mobil we share the view that the risks of climate change are serious and warrant thoughtful action; we have long supported a carbon tax as the best policy of those being considered. End quote. That is the statement of the nominated Secretary of State for our neighbours to the south. The folks over there should maybe do a bit of research. [interjections]

The Speaker: Third main question.

2:00 Protection of Children in Care

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked the Premier why Albertans should trust this government to fix the problems of children in care which resulted, of course, in the tragic death of a four-year-old girl. She pointed to residential schools and the legacy of the '60s scoop. She pointed to fired social workers in the '90s and the actions of the previous PC government. Can the Premier explain exactly how all these events have stopped this government and this minister from changing how child intervention works in Alberta right now, and can she explain exactly how her government has messed up the investigation of Serenity's death under her government's watch?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, we have for a very long time been very, very concerned about the fate and the state of children in care and children who are at risk in the province of Alberta. This is something I think all Albertans care about. Some of the things that we have done, in the 18 months since we've gotten elected, to address the root causes of the risks that are faced by these children are an Alberta child benefit and tax credit which provides $340 million in benefits to 380,000 children in poverty, to 200,000 families, and we went from a flat tax to a progressive tax, which every...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Yesterday I also asked the Premier why she allowed this Human Services minister to ignore recommendations for improvements made by the previous panel to study children in care. Her reply was that some of the recommendations of previous panels weren't helpful. Can the Premier please tell us which recommendations made by the Richter panel she rejected because they weren't helpful, and can she please tell us about any specific recommendations made by the Richter panel that this Human Services minister has actually implemented for the people of Alberta?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that roughly two-thirds of the recommendations have either been implemented or are in progress of being implemented. In addition, other things that our government has done in order to prevent the kinds of tragedies like Serenity's are that we engaged in a $25 million increase to FCSS for prevention programs which help families at risk, and we put $15 million into women's shelters, one of the first increases in decades, which allows children at risk to be removed from dangerous situations. That is critical prevention work. We've reversed cuts to...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Let's all try and practise time control.

Mr. Jean: Yesterday I also asked the Premier why this minister's incompetence and negligence on Serenity's file goes unpunished and why it's taking more than two years to investigate what's almost certainly a murder, Mr. Speaker. The Premier deflected to talk about child tax credits. The system is broken. This minister didn't break it, but he has had 19 months to fix it and he hasn't even started. He's failed, and he needs to go. The minister says that he's done a good job. If that's the case, I would really hate to see a bad job. Why won't the Premier fire this minister?

Ms Notley: Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I believe I was cut off before I was able to finish. One of the other things that our government did, the first thing, was to reverse the cuts that were made to the office of the Child and Youth Advocate, who engages in these investigations, to reverse them so that he could continue to do his work. We are also moving forward on child nutrition programs and also better child care programs. All these things are focused on preventing these kinds of things because we need to do those as well. As the members opposite know, there has been an RCMP investigation in place from the beginning of this, and it continues to be in place. That work continues as...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The leader of the third party.

Child Death Review Ministerial Panel

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier told me in question period to read the terms of reference for the ministerial panel. Here's what it says. Panel members "will not have access to case-level information about specific children." Instead, they can interview the Child and Youth Advocate or read his investigations. The multiple agencies that failed Serenity did not give the advocate the information he needed to properly investigate her case. That's why we're here talking about this. Premier, how on earth does this keep it in the dark panel give Serenity or any child justice?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, that particular clause was taken completely from the terms of reference that were used in the work that was done by former Minister Bhullar. Nonetheless, you know, the member opposite just finished saying and taking responsibility for the fact that this is a very complex file. It is a very difficult file. It is a 44-year-long file that they admit they weren't able to fix because it's hard. Yet today they proposed terms of reference that would only have the investigation go back to May 2015. For heaven's sakes, how...

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental question.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I urged the Premier to throw off the blanket of secrecy she has thrown over the ministerial panel, and I got nowhere. The Premier assured me that secrecy will allow for "excessive public opportunity, high levels of transparency," and she started to say: prevent political grandstanding. That really means muzzling MLAs on the panel. Premier, isn't the real goal of the keep it in the dark panel to whitewash the inaction of your incompetent minister?

Ms Notley: Actually, Mr. Speaker, the real goal of the panel is to try, finally, after 44 years plus 19 months, to make more significant progress on this matter. The member opposite, as I said before, signed onto a set of recommendations that would have the panel stop looking past May 2015. That's where it would stop. Then they suggested that the minister should be called to testify and be put on trial. Then they proposed those terms of reference with a two-hour ultimatum just before question period. How in heaven's name can we believe they're . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. McIver: The government gave no notice of that bogus media conference last week.

Because the concept of an all-party committee was my recommendation, I feel some responsibility for it. Never did I expect it to morph into a ministerial panel designed to cover up the actions of two ministers who did not take action on a key file. Even worse, the Minister of Human Services is being tried publicly, and you've made him judge and jury over his own trial. To the Premier: are you really going to let this sham go forward? If you do, you should resign with your two ministers. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I mean, honestly, the way in which these guys are going forward in terms of positioning themselves is – we are trying genuinely to reach across and develop a process that can actually create and recommend meaningful proposals. It is very, very difficult to engage in that with the kind of yelling that we're hearing right now, this kind of behaviour, very, very difficult to have this kind of conversation, and people wonder why it won't be successful . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Could you please stop the timer? I indicated at the outset: keep your volume down. You continue to do it, both sides.

Was there any time left on the Premier's comments? There was? Proceed, Madam Premier.

Ms Notley: As I've said before and as I said in the letter back to the members opposite, we are still happy to engage in a constructive conversation about the terms of reference. We are prepared to accommodate some of the requests that have already been made, but we will not do so in a two-hour ultimatum immediately before question period.

The Speaker: Thank you, Madam Premier.
The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Opioid Addiction Treatment and Death Reporting

Dr. Swann: Bah. Humbug. Mr. Speaker, deaths from opiates are still increasing in year 4 of the most serious public health crisis in memory. Today I talked with a grieving mother who lost her daughter, presumably from a fentanyl overdose, in July. We still don't know. Tragically, her daughter had been succeeding in a drug rehab facility right up until the point she was thrown out before her program was ended, allegedly because she also had bulimia, which the facility couldn't accommodate. This girl, a college student without meaningful family input, was literally dropped off at a gas station to be picked up. Does the Premier feel that we are doing enough, that she is doing enough to create a sense of urgency . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. As we've often discussed – but let me reaffirm – the rise of illicit opiates, including fentanyl and the more powerful carfentanyl, has created a public health crisis here in Alberta and, quite frankly, across the country. Our hearts go out to the parents, the spouses, the brothers, the sisters, and the children who have lost loved ones. This government believes in harm reduction, and we believe in offering Alberta supports, not just stigma. So we are working carefully on a number of different avenues to improve the way that, as government, we can respond to this crisis, and our members will be . . .

2:10

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
First supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that opioid death rates in Alberta now exceed one per day – public health doctors estimate that we have approximately 40,000 to 50,000 addicts in Alberta – and given that together Calgary, Edmonton, and Cardston, the main Alberta Health Services clinics, manage only 2,500 patients a year and given that four- to six-week wait times are now the norm in our treatment centres and given that many of Alberta Health Services' clinics close at 3 o'clock every day, does the Premier feel that the urgency of this matter is being addressed in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I have to say that I really do appreciate the member's compassion and advocacy on this issue. Our government is working very diligently to expand access to opioid replacement therapies, which are known as best practice, in order to address opioid misuse disorders. He listed off the number of clinics that are being operated by AHS. We're working with partners in the private clinics as well as working with doctors in the primary care setting so that stabilized patients in ODT centres can then be transferred back to the community for maintenance with their doctor.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that B.C. is managing to report on opiate deaths, emergency room visits for opiate conditions, naloxone survivors, and wait times for therapy every month but given that Alberta reports every three to three and a half months, with some families not receiving reports on their dead loved one for eight to nine months, can the Premier tell us: is she going to direct the Justice minister and the Health minister to provide more timely information on these deaths?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, in B.C. they have a different set-up than we do here in Alberta. Here in Alberta we are having the information around emergency room visits reported to the chief medical officer of health, who is leading our government's response to this very important crisis. Additionally, the reporting information that we're getting from the Chief Medical Examiner is being reported back on a continual basis to the chief medical officer of health. They're working quite closely. I look forward to talking more in depth with the member in our meeting later this week.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Renewable Energy Development

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While many rural Albertans are excited about the opportunities that renewable energy brings, some are concerned about renewable energy development on their land and in their communities. To the Minister of Energy: how will the government protect the rights of rural landowners?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. It's unfortunate that such a serious thing as landowner concerns get laughed at by the Official Opposition. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: In our new legislation there will be no mechanism that allows renewable companies to force development on landowners if they don't want it. Should they choose to do so, they will make their contracts with the companies and do private agreements. To suggest anything else is absolutely irresponsible.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how will this government ensure that landowners and rural municipalities benefit from renewable energy developments?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, CanWEA, who oversees wind projects, suggests that 5,000 megawatts of wind would bring in $1.4 billion in new property tax payments to communities in rural. In the MD of Pincher Creek, for example, TransAlta's wind farm produces 130 megawatts of energy. One megawatt will power 625 homes. That puts $12 million back into the local economy during construction and now injects $5.2 million . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Madam Minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that landowners are worried about new transmission lines owing to the build-out of renewable energy products, again to the same minister: how will the government address these concerns?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. Our renewable build is not expected to require new transmission. We currently have lots of good infrastructure in Alberta. Programs will be designed to choose projects that have access to existing transmission capacity.

I want to correct one thing. I meant 425 homes per one megawatt.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Protection of Children in Care (continued)

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last August the implementation oversight committee, or IOC, released a report on 58 government-accepted recommendations for improving the child intervention system. The report details that they had received responses for most, but one recommendation about child abuse was not verified. To the minister: has the improved process for the child abuse case conferencing been shared with all regions? If not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Last August's report tracks the progress that has been made after those recommendations were made; 58 of them were implemented. The progress was tracked independently. On those which are remaining there is ongoing progress, which is also publicly reported on the Human Services website.

Mr. Taylor: Given that following the IOC assessment the only other recommendation unable to be verified was a critical response protocol for staff when tragic events occur, that the recommendation is coupled by the Child and Youth Advocate's repeated calls for more caseworker training and oversight, and that this evaluation was released under this minister's watch, will the minister tell us what critical response protocol staff is or explain why he's failed to do his job?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That report certainly was released under my watch, and the independent implementation oversight committee was tracking the progress that Human Services made. He referred to more staff training. Those things do take money. That's why we increased by $37 million, so we can support those front lines, so we can support our staff, so we can resource our front lines with the needed resources so that they can do their job.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Taylor: Given that the death of Serenity has served as a wake-up call for us all, that the report detailed the need to consult with front-line staff on new, reliable policies and processes, and that the minister has not outlined the consultation with front-line staff in his published plans for the panel, will the minister stop removing front-line workers from the process and provide them with the whistleblower protection they need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've said it many times in this House and will say it again. Whatever we do at Human Services, at the heart of that work is the dedication of our front-line staff. So a couple of things: one, I sent out a survey a couple of weeks ago to hear directly from the front line. [interjections] Second thing. [interjections]

The Speaker: Stop the timer, please.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, your voice continues to escalate in volume.

Rebalance the timer.

Mr. Minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the opportunity for front-line staff to appear before the panel, certainly there will be opportunity, and I can provide assurance that there will be protection for front-line staff, that there will be no repercussions whatsoever when they appear before the panel.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, there was a correction. May I go on?

The Speaker: My apologies. Yes. Please proceed.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you. Unfortunately, there are more cases like Serenity's. Sadly, I can recount a number of times when I've responded as a paramedic to fatalities of children in care: once, doing a welfare check, another child who had starved to death, left alone, no caregivers in sight. I can't express in words the effects of seeing and holding these children in my arms. Ministers, members, we're not talking politics here. We're talking about defenceless children. Minister, do you understand that?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Certainly. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. The story of Serenity is not just a one-off. We have been failing these children for decades. That's what I have said. In order to find a solution, we need to look at the root causes, why children come into our care. That's why the Premier yesterday mentioned that there is a legacy of residential schools, there is a legacy of intergenerational trauma, there is a legacy of the '60s scoop, there is a legacy of the '90s firing of social workers. All of these things need to be looked into. These are hard decisions.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fraser: You're right, Minister. We did fail. You're failing, and you're the leader right now.

An 11-year-old girl who was sexually molested over and over to the point where she hung herself with a blind cord: she seized so hard that she almost decapitated herself. Eleven years old. Minister, visualize any of these kids. Now pretend they were your children. What would you want to happen, and what does justice look like to you?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These are children in our care, and these are my children. These are Albertans' children. That's why I'm reaching out to the other side. I believe that you do care, and that's why I'm setting up this panel to work on these issues, to address these historical injustices, and to put enough safeguards in place so we can avoid similar incidents from happening in the future. It's not a partisan issue.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Mr. Fraser: Minister, we failed to do it alone. You will fail to do it alone. That is why we need everybody in this House to work collaboratively.

The cutest 18-month-old baby boy, bundled in his blanket, had scabies all over his body. He was killed as a result of his intoxicated caregiver sleeping on him and smothering him in the middle of the night. Hold that in your arms. Hold that in your memories. Minister, if these were your loved ones, would you have confidence in your office, and would you have confidence in your actions to date?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I never claimed that I can do it alone. That's why I'm asking all the parties in the House, and that's why I will be reaching out to experts and Albertans and front-line staff. Having said that, we have taken steps to address these issues, including $37 million in the child intervention system, including a new child tax benefit, including a progressive tax which can sustain these services, including $25 million in FCSS, including $15 million for women's shelters. These are the children that . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Openness and Transparency in Government

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Access to government information in our province has gone from bad to worse. The recent Supreme Court ruling has FOIP advocates concerned that simply CCing a lawyer will be the magic solution to avoid transparency and good governance. To the Minister of Justice: is the government abusing solicitor-client privilege to avoid transparency?

The Speaker: The hon. Justice minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Of course, transparency is a value that this government holds so dearly. That's why we've taken so many steps to ensure that we're increasing transparency of government, to ensure that we're increasing transparency in our agencies, boards, and commissions, and to ensure that everyone has the necessary information. It's always important to balance the rights of Albertans in certain litigation cases against the rights to information. It's a very delicate balance, and we'll continue working forward to make sure we do the best job for all Albertans.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again no answer.

Given that lawyer and FOIP expert Michel Drapeau believes that the practice of simply copying any lawyer in any capacity is a way for governments to avoid transparency and accountability and given that the Justice minister has refused or failed to comply with Tobaccogate, political interference investigations, and FOIP law in general and given that this is the department responsible for enforcing our province's laws, to the minister: is transparency simply not a priority of this NDP government?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Transparency is always an important value for our government, and we think it's very important to ensure transparency in all aspects of governance. Obviously, I can't comment on the specific case, but in general there is a balance to be struck between ensuring the interests of Albertans in a multibillion-dollar tobacco litigation versus ensuring their interests in terms of access to information. So we will continue moving forward, ensuring that that balance is struck as appropriately as possible.

The Speaker: The second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again no answer to the question on the CCing of documents.

Given that this problem now risks spreading to other ministries and given that the risk is a direct affront to democracy, will the Minister of Service Alberta confirm that other departments will not abuse legal privilege by unnecessarily involving lawyers from start to finish to avoid open and transparent government?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, openness and transparency are important to our government. That's why some of our first actions as a government were on this issue. We post all sole-source contracts over $10,000 online so that Albertans can be confident in how the money is being spent, and unlike the previous government, which only posted salaries for a handful of senior staff, our government posts salaries and full contracts for every staffperson. This is very important to us. We've taken a number of actions on this front. Frankly, the assertions that the opposition are making around simply CCing lawyers on this are just absolutely absurd. Privilege is a complicated issue that they need to obviously read up on.

Government Policies (continued)

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, it's Christmastime and Santa's elves are making sure that they have all the toys for all the girls and boys, but the Wildrose has real concerns about the impact the NDP policies are having on toy production and the elf labour market. According to legitimate statistics from the Fraser Institute a $15 minimum wage will mean a huge bar for young elves entering the toy production labour market and could result in the layoffs of hundreds of elves. The NDP's plan to unionize Santa's workshop will devastate toy production levels as seniority is rewarded over merit. Will the Premier tell the House why they're willing to accept less toys for the girls and boys at Christmas?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, the Official Opposition seems to think with regard to the elves – we call them workers for government, or we call them the civil service – that we can break employment contracts, that it's okay to do that. Well, that's not the way we roll on this side. You may want to do that, but we're not going to break employment contracts. We're going to support workers so that they can do the best job possible for this government, whether it's in Human Services or any other ministry. You break contracts. We don't. [interjections]

The Speaker: The subject matter has changed, but the volume is still there, folks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, Merry Christmas from Enmax, Mr. Speaker. For nearly 2,000 years Santa has responsibly used coal, but the NDP are demanding the phase-out of this reliable and cheap source of energy. Without coal Santa will not have anything to give the naughty children except for billions of dollars of government debt, amounting to $23,000 for every boy and girl, naughty or nice. If the oil sands emissions cap was applied to Santa, he would have to begin scaling back toy production right now. Seeing as how it's nighttime half the year in the North Pole, solar panels won't do. Does the Grinch understand the devastating impact this will have on toy production?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, what the opposition doesn't understand is that if we don't curtail the use of coal and the emissions of CO<sub>2</sub>, the North Pole is going to melt. What will happen to toy production then?

The Speaker: Hon. member for Grinch, I would just like to thank you for allowing me to enjoy this.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, Santa will just have to move to Alberta, Mr. Speaker.

According to Ethical Ocean, Santa's reindeer will emit 54,000 metric tons of greenhouse gases; milk and cookies, 9,000 tons; lumps of coal, 230,000; wrapping paper, 290,000; his workshop, 983,000; toy production, 68 million. That all adds up to a total Christmas carbon footprint of 70 million metric tons. The carbon tax, or, since it's Christmas, levy, will cost Santa $3.5 billion. Does the Premier understand that if their carbon tax was applied to Santa, there would be no Christmas?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, I just want to ask the member opposite if in all of his facts and figures and numbers – and there are so many facts and figures there, so scientific – he factored in the cost of Santa's workshop occurring on an ocean liner in return for the ice cap that it is no longer sitting on because we failed to take action because we don't believe that climate change is real. Santa is very glad that we are saving him and Christmas and toys.

The Speaker: I do hope the hon. Premier recognized the contribution of Mrs. Claus as well.

Carbon Levy in Lloydminster

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, Lloydminster is Canada's only border city, but we always strive to have our city as a singular, seamless entity, and where provincial disparities arise, our government in the city has always worked with provincial governments to minimize or eliminate them. Now, for decades the Saskatchewan government has forgone collection of the provincial sales tax from businesses on the east side of Lloydminster so that they can compete on an equal playing field with those on the Alberta side, but coming soon: the NDP carbon levy. To the Minister of Finance: did your department give any consideration of the inequities that your carbon tax will create in Lloydminster?

Mr. Ceci: You know, the inequity of note – what we've concluded is that Alberta still will have a $7.5 billion tax advantage over all provinces, so we believe that we still have a really great Alberta tax advantage. Lloydminsterites, Lloydminsterians, people from Lloydminster will continue to enjoy that tax advantage like the rest of Alberta because this is the lowest tax jurisdiction in the country.

Dr. Starke: Well, you're welcome for that thing that you inherited from us.

Given that 2017 is only 19 days away and given that Alberta fuel dealers in Lloydminster are gravely concerned that their customers will flee across Meridian Avenue to get away from the soon to be imposed NDP carbon tax and given that the Saskatchewan government has always taken action to keep businesses on their side of the border competitive, to the minister. Meetings have been held, and people are waiting anxiously. What specific actions are you taking to support Alberta businesses in Lloydminster?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. We will follow up on the specifics of the questions he has asked and further point out that there is, in fact, no PST in Alberta.

Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll point out to both ministers that they've met, and people from their departments have met, and people are waiting. The businesses on the Alberta side of Lloydminster have historically had an advantage over the Saskatchewan side, and the Saskatchewan government has always stepped up to ensure that businesses on their side of the border remain competitive. Given that this NDP government has in 19 short months completely turned the tables to where it is now better to operate on the east side of the fourth meridian, to the Premier. Residents have worked hard to keep the two halves of Lloydminster joined together. Why is your government tearing us asunder?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Actually, the premise of the member's question is quite off. Number one, Alberta continues to remain the lowest tax jurisdiction in the country. As of January 1 our government has reduced the small-business tax to the second lowest in the country, much lower than Saskatchewan's. As well, we don't have a PST. As the Minister of Finance pointed out, even with our carbon levy coming in, Alberta is $7.5 billion cheaper. I'm wondering what Saskatchewan is going to do when Ottawa imposes a carbon levy on that province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw. [interjections] Quiet, please.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and through you Merry Christmas to all the members in this House.

Calgary Southwest Ring Road

Mr. Sucha: Mr. Speaker, Calgarians have been waiting decades for the construction of the southwest ring road. Given that construction will impact the quality of life of my constituents, to the Minister of Transportation: what is the government doing to keep residents up to date on construction milestones and road closures?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. We're taking every opportunity to inform and engage residents on the southwest ring road project, Mr. Speaker. The contractor has been reaching out to community members to let them know about information issues. We held three information sessions last week at sites along the boundaries of the construction, and they informed local residents of the upcoming timelines and traffic impacts as well as what we're doing to minimize environmental impacts throughout the project. In addition, there's a . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that construction of the east section of the ring road dealt with heavy delays and challenges with traffic flow, to the same minister: what is the government doing to ensure that this project will remain on track and open at the scheduled time?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll just mention that there is a project-specific website, www.swcrrproject.com, a direct e-mail address for questions, and a 24/7 phone line. We are going to be working with a selected contractor, Mountain View Partners, during design and construction to ensure that the traffic impacts are minimized and that the project is completed on time and on budget. We have staff supervising the project, and we have clear expectations of the contractor. We will hold them accountable to meet all of the guidelines that we've set.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that major transportation projects can cause impacts to neighbourhoods such as construction noise and given that Calgary-Shaw is a peaceful suburban area in Calgary, what safeguards does the province have to combat noise pollution during and post construction?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. During the construction phase we are restricting the hours of work to minimize noise impacts. Hours of work are 7 to 10, Monday to Saturday, and 9 to 10 on Sundays and statutory holidays. We're having the contractor undertake a noise modelling study to determine whether noise mitigation is required for those communities adjacent to the construction. After it's open to traffic, Alberta Transportation will do an ongoing noise monitoring study to verify that the noise levels are not exceeding the provincial guidelines.

Oral Question Period Questions and Responses

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, over the course of the last session we've received plenty of stock responses from the government to our questions. The answers have become so trite and predictable that I'd like to propose a game of government policy Jeopardy. Quote: they are "a party full of folks who deny the science of climate change." To the minister of environment: what was the question?

Ms Phillips: It's quite possible, Mr. Speaker, that the question was on the value of carbon pricing. Over on this side of the House we recognize the value of carbon pricing along with a number of Canadian corporate executives, including GE Canada, SNC-Lavalin, Shell Canada, Rio Tinto, Teck Resources, the Forest Products Association of Canada, Suncor, Cenovus, CNRL, Enbridge, all large job creators in this province who have asked the Prime Minister and the Premiers to continue with carbon pricing, unlike the folks on the other side, who believe that these job creators are just "self-immolating their own industry just to get Trans Mountain twinned."

Mr. Cooper: Wrong, Mr. Speaker. It was on caribou.

Given that the Minister of Health responded, quote, to the members opposite, who are "proposing billions of dollars worth of cuts [in the public service] which would result in laying off many nurses [and teachers]," to the Minister of Health. The topic is NDP hyperbole. What was the question?

Ms Hoffman: Well, I'm happy to give some more answers, Mr. Speaker. Albertans deserve the right care in the right place at the right time by the right provider, and that means that they have a government that's going to have their back, that's going to make sure that we protect nurses and teachers, and I'm proud to do just that.

Mr. Cooper: Nnnnn.

Given, Mr. Speaker, that we all know that the real money increases in double jeopardy and given that the Finance minister knows something about playing Jeopardy with Alberta's financial future and given that the Finance minister said, "They would have thrown kids out to the street by not having them in schools" and closing hospitals, to the Finance minister: what was the question?

Mr. Ceci: Well, I'm sure I'll find out in about 35 seconds. But I would like to say first: beer is good. Secondly, I'd like to implore the opposition over there to stop being nattering nabobs of negativism. Stand up with us, stand up for pipelines, and stand up for Alberta. [interjections]

The Speaker: I wish you could just spread this out over other parts of the afternoon. It would be a lot more productive.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. And, Joe, we'll take that beer later.

Mr. Gotfried: Given that the Premier has unilaterally committed Albertans to a $50-per-tonne carbon levy, taxpayers anxiously await timely updates on the financial impact. Current estimates of the burden are based on $20, scaling up to $30 per tonne in 2018. To the beer-drinking Minister of Finance: as $50 is supposedly the new ceiling, when will this government provide estimates reflecting the new impact of both costs and rebates of the Trudeau-Notley carbon tax on household budgets, excluding the beer?

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this session we released the economic impact and analysis of $50 per tonne by 2022. In fact, Kinder Morgan's Trans Mountain expansion was approved and put into place. Of course, that announcement showed a positive economic impact for Alberta, which is why we have taken the positions that we have at the Council of Ministers of the Environment table and the first ministers' meeting, which is that the environment and the economy go hand in hand and that we can be responsible oil producers while also leading on climate change.

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My apologies to the beer-drinking Minister of Finance.

Given that the government's own charts show that the full rebate of 60 per cent that Alberta households will receive is based solely on direct costs of the carbon tax and given that this full rebate does not take into account indirect levies on public transportation, food, clothing, and more brought about by the carbon tax so that no Albertans will actually receive a full rebate, to the minister of environment. Your carbon tax generates enough revenue to reduce income taxes for all Albertans while investing in your green agenda. Why have your organic beer and eat it, too?

Ms Phillips: Okay. Thank you to the hon. member for the question on the matter of the rebates and the indirect costs and the direct costs. Analysis shows that the indirect and direct costs are still being rebated up to an approximate $100,000 income for households, Mr. Speaker, and this is well established using StatsCan data. Now, as to the carbon price in the out-years, you know, particularly in the New Democrats' perhaps second or third term, we will have a look at the rebate levels as the federal carbon price escalates.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess the clock will tell us what's happening with that.

Given that this government's 1 per cent reduction in small-business tax is based on an initial $20-per-tonne carbon tax, if this government is sincere about helping small businesses, we should expect further decreases in the small-business tax as the carbon tax increases. To the Minister of Finance: if a $20 carbon tax decreases the small-business tax by just 1 per cent, a $50 tax should decrease it by 2.5 per cent. Can we expect to see further reductions in the small-business tax, including to your brewers, as the carbon tax burden increases?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we will review the uptake of the energy efficiency programs. Of course, many of those for small businesses will be rolling out by the second quarter of 2017, the first of the $645 million that this province will be investing in energy efficiency. We will review that. We will also review many of the new investments and new job-creation benefits in clean tech and other sectors to examine how those programs are working along with our annual review of all of our programs. We'll have more to say about that through the 2017 and 2018 budgets.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

We could allow a 20-second departure if people would like to depart.

Hon. members, please. Go on out, folks.

Now, I have sensed the feeling of the season's happiness and frivolity. I'm wondering if everyone would agree to withdraw all of their points of order, and then I would get a present. I will try and keep a . . . [interjections]

You withdraw yours?

Mr. Mason: If the opposition does.

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order
Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Cooper: My apologies, Mr. Speaker. My hon. colleague from Rocky View-Chestermere has . . .

Some Hon. Members: Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. Cooper: Yeah, that one.

. . . asked if I would just very briefly point to one statement that the Premier made during question period – and it will be under 23(h), (i), and (j) – when the Premier implied that the opposition was xenophobic. Obviously, that particular word is not in the list of unparliamentary language; however, one thing that you certainly know, Mr. Speaker, is that language in this Chamber is all about context, and if I was to share the definition of xenophobia, it would be very clear that this sort of language is likely to create disorder inside the Chamber. It would be quite easy for the member to withdraw and apologize.

The Speaker: The Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to start by pointing out that the Premier didn't call any particular member xenophobic. She was simply talking about the broad choices facing the province of Alberta in this time. Additionally, I can advise that in the House the word "xenophobic" has been used in the Assembly on a number of occasions without a point of order being raised. It had been raised on Thursday, November 16, 2000, 1:30 p.m.; Tuesday, November 2, 1993, 1:30 p.m.; Friday, August 18, 1989, 10 a.m.; Thursday, August 17, 1989, 8 p.m.; Thursday, July 3, 1986, 2:30 p.m. I could go on, but I think I'll just sit.

The Speaker: Any comments?

Hon. members, I would agree that the word "xenophobic" – this is not a point of order. However, even as late as this afternoon I cautioned all members, particularly at these kinds of times, on the use of certain words, and they are – sometimes a flame near fuel is not good. But there is no point of order in this situation.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Yes. I think that it is relevant to activities that will take place this afternoon. As such, under 23(j), “uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder” – while the words that the Minister of Human Services used were not insulting, they certainly were of a language that would create disorder, when the hon. minister said on a couple of occasions that he had reached out to this side of the House and consulted around terms of reference. Nothing could be further from the truth.

At no point in time did any member from the front bench at any time during any of this discussion around the tragic events that surround Serenity’s death reach out and speak to anyone on this side about terms of reference of a panel, about a multipartisan committee. So for the minister to say that he reached out and spoke to the opposition, certainly, was untrue. Those sort of statements are definitely going to create disorder.

I might just add that when we proposed our motion 42, while the timing may not have been perfect for the government, we reached out over an hour and a half prior. We reached out multiple hours in advance of any time that we efforted to bring forward terms of references or adding to the discussion to the government. So for them to say that they reached out to us, which absolutely isn’t true, and then imply that we were playing partisan games is unhelpful to this situation.

The Speaker: The Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don’t have the benefit of the Blues, so I’m going off memory, but my understanding of what the hon. Minister of Human Services said was that he was reaching out to members across the House. The committee is set up to have members of all parties on it. The suggestion was that he was reaching out for their help because he believed it to be the case that we care deeply about this issue, that members on the other side of the House care deeply about this issue. I think it’s an issue we can all be involved in, so he had indicated that he was reaching out for them to participate in this panel going forward. I don’t think that that’s a point of order.

The Speaker: Well, I do have the Blues, and I’ll just read it for the record. The hon. minister indicated:

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These are children in our care, and these are my children. These are Albertans’ children. That’s why I’m reaching out to the other side. I believe that you do care, and that’s why I’m setting up this panel, to work on these issues, to address these historical injustices, and to put enough safeguards in place so we can avoid similar incidents from happening in the future. It’s not a partisan issue.

I’m glad the Official Opposition House Leader did put your opinion on the record. This may be a difference of opinion in interpretation, but the way I read it is that it was intended as a nonpartisan event. In this particular situation, again, context, which the Official Opposition House Leader has pointed out many, many times – not really a point of order but one of opinion and shared interpretation.

Ms Ganley: There was a point of order called, Mr. Speaker, at approximately 2:43 p.m. by the Government House Leader with respect to comments by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

The Speaker: Thank you for pointing that out. I had understood in his remarks that he had withdrawn that comment and apologized. Am I correct, hon. member?

Mr. Gottfried: You are correct, and I’ll do it again with apologies. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Privilege Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

The Speaker: Hon. members, you will recall that there was a point of privilege raised yesterday. The hon. Government House Leader made his points to the points questioned – excuse me just a second.

First of all, to the question that was addressed to me by the deputy House leader yesterday, I’m of the view that in this particular situation, particularly given the decision I made earlier in the week, the point of privilege – I think there was a request to give some more information. I only allowed him that one opportunity. I think the principle applies here, so I think we have to go on the basis of what the Government House Leader said yesterday. I have a different interpretation of the events as I reviewed them than the one that maybe the House leader had yesterday.

The other reason as to why I don’t think it’s appropriate in this situation is that the point of privilege that was originally raised before was for other members, all of government. For that reason, I think the government side has had an opportunity.

I would now call upon the Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate that. I will make my case here today. You know, I will start just briefly by saying that I am somewhat confused. The government, with all its power and the tools at its disposal, would choose to use this as an opportunity to go after an opposition member for doing what is our job, which is holding the government to account.

I will cite several citations here in reading my interpretation of the rules of privilege and associated precedents, and I will present today several precedents from Speakers of both this Assembly as well as Canada’s House of Commons. In doing so, I want to emphasize the key point is that there is an exceedingly stringent test to prove a breach of privilege through words spoken, especially words spoken in this House. I have to say that I find it remarkable and more than a little troubling that the government would suggest that it’s even possible for an opposition member to constrain a minister of the Crown to do their job simply with our words. If it’s an attempt to make me sit down and be quiet, I think they’ve got another thing coming, Mr. Speaker.

I will start with the citation used by the Government House Leader yesterday. He quoted House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 108.

Members are entitled to go about their parliamentary business undisturbed. The assaulting, menacing, or insulting of any Member on the floor of the House or while he [or she] is coming or going to or from the House, or on account of his [or her] behaviour during a proceeding in Parliament, is a violation of the rights of Parliament. Any form of intimidation . . . of a person for or on account of his [or her] behaviour during a proceeding in Parliament could amount to contempt.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have a number of points here that will contradict the Government House Leader’s assertions. First, I’d like to clarify that I never once accused the minister specifically of negligence. In fact, look in Hansard yesterday. My exact words were: "His inaction means that whoever murdered Serenity is walking free today." First, his department and therefore the minister had not provided information requested by the RCMP in a timely manner. This inaction means that whoever is responsible for Serenity's death is walking free.

Second, in my comment I was also referring to the minister's lack of action in implementing the recommendations from the Richter report and others. Two of the recommendations were creating a joint death review panel and conducting and releasing internal reports into all child deaths. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, had these two recommendations been implemented, the processes and investigations surrounding Serenity's death would have been expedited and the charges would have been laid by now.

The Government House Leader and I do agree that whoever is responsible for the death of Serenity has not currently been charged; therefore, by that definition they are walking the streets of this province. This statement does not in any way presuppose any investigation or future judgement but is simply a matter of fact.

We'll go to Beauchesne, sixth edition, section 75 on page 22. It says:

The privilege of freedom of speech is both the least questioned and the most fundamental right of the Member of Parliament.

I think that's an essential point, Mr. Speaker.

Further in section 69, page 20 in the same document, it says: Something can be inflammatory, can be disagreeable, can even be offensive, but it may not be a question of privilege unless the comment actually impinges upon the ability of Members of Parliament to do their job properly.

Again, this sentiment is echoed in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, page 109.

In order to find a prima facie breach of privilege, the Speaker must be satisfied that there is evidence to support the Member's claim that he or she has been impeded in the performance of his or her parliamentary functions.

House of Commons Procedure and Practice on the same page goes on to say:

In some cases where prima facie privilege has not been found, the rulings have focused on whether or not the parliamentary functions of the Member were directly involved. While frequently noting that Members raising such matters have legitimate grievances, Speakers have consistently concluded that Members have not been prevented from carrying out their parliamentary duties.

Specific to this incident at hand, Mr. Speaker, as we're talking about question period, House of Commons Procedure and Practice on page 111 says:

A Member may also be obstructed or interfered with in the performance of his or her parliamentary functions by non-physical means. In ruling on such matters, the Speaker examines the effect the incident or event had on the Member's ability to fulfil his or her parliamentary responsibilities. If, in the Speaker's view, the Member was not obstructed in the performance of his or her parliamentary duties and functions, then a prima facie breach of privilege cannot be found.

Further, on the same page:

The unjust damaging of a Member's good name might be seen as constituting an obstruction if the Member is prevented from performing his or her parliamentary functions.

The last point from that book, on page 112:

There have only been a few instances of the Speaker finding a prima facie breach of privilege related to the damaging of a Member's reputation.

Mr. Speaker, one of these instances was quite extreme and was very different from what is involved here, the incident that is in question today. The incident that was found to constitute a prima facie breach of privilege involved concerted efforts by a member to distribute a bulk mailing containing inaccurate and misleading information which the Speaker at the time found clearly impacted the minister of the day's ability to carry out his duties.

The situation that we're talking about here on this point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, is categorically different. Again, I remind the House and the Speaker that it is a very high bar that needs to be met. Citing Alberta Speaker Kowalski from Alberta Hansard, April 19, 2007, page 679, in his ruling on the purported breach of privilege arising from a question asked of a minister in question period – and I think that this is especially relevant – he said:

The general rule in issues of this nature is found in Joseph Maingot's book, Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, the second edition, at page 254, where he states, "Language spoken during a parliamentary proceeding that impugns the integrity of Members would be unparliamentary and a breach of order contrary to the Standing Orders, but not a breach of privilege."

Speaker Kowalski goes on to say:

In this case the comments raised could have given rise to a legitimate point of order. The chair does not, however, believe that this is a case that falls into that . . .

And I'll emphasize this point: does not fall into that . . . very small category of comments that would impede a member in performing his or her parliamentary duties.

I'm just about finished, Mr. Speaker.

Finally, I'd like to cite the May 5, 1987, ruling by Speaker Fraser, which can be found on page 5766 of the Commons debates. In this ruling Speaker Fraser says:

In the case before us certain questions were asked which, in the view of the Hon. Minister, conveyed grave implications against his integrity and were, therefore, damaging to his reputation. That is the position which the Minister took. I have carefully examined the questions, together with the interventions which took place following the Hon. Minister's statement, and I confess to be very troubled as a result . . .

Given all the circumstances in this case, I am sure that the Minister's capacity to function as a Minister and a Member of this House is in no way impaired. I point out to Hon. Members that this is the real issue of privilege.

I believe the case here is whether or not my question yesterday impeded the minister's ability to function as a member of this House. It's my opinion that this question alone in no way resulted in such an impediment, nor has the Government House Leader in raising the question provided sufficient proof of that impediment. Therefore, I would ask that you find, Mr. Speaker, that there is no point of privilege in this case.

Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to the point of privilege raised yesterday by the Government House Leader. First of all, I'm not entirely sure that proper notice was given because when I checked the Blues, the Government House Leader merely raised a point of order. I certainly don't think that appropriate notice was fulfilled in accordance with Standing Order 15(2).

Having said that, breaches of privilege ought to be raised only in the rarest of circumstances and when the situation warrants it. I know that I weigh very carefully whether or not to bring forward a point of privilege. I try to take time. I rarely make my mind up in the half an hour it takes between question period ending and when the breach took place. Perhaps if the Government House Leader had taken a night to prepare, he may have realized that what he wanted to argue was a point of order. I remind you again, Mr. Speaker, that that is what he originally called it at the time.

I note that the Government House Leader read from page 108 of O'Brien and Bosc to lend credence to his argument, but I would suggest that we perhaps could have continued reading on page 109.

While frequently noting that Members raising such matters have legitimate grievances, Speakers have consistently concluded that Members have not been prevented from carrying out their . . . duties.

On page 111 it goes on to say:

If, in the [view of the Speaker], the Member was not obstructed in the performance of his or her parliamentary duties and functions, then a prima facie breach of privilege cannot be found.

Perhaps it also might be important for us to remember that it's only a matter of privilege if a member is obstructed in the performance of their parliamentary duties. It is not privilege when it comes to constituency or ministerial duties.

When I read the arguments put forward yesterday, I did not notice the Government House Leader's claim that the comment from the Member for Calgary-Elbow obstructed the minister in his parliamentary duties. "In particular, I am concerned about the member's reference to the minister and the impact that such a statement made in the public could have on [the minister's] ability to conduct his business." Obviously, the minister has not been obstructed in the performance of his parliamentary duties because he was able to answer the question from the Member for Calgary-Elbow. He voted in the House later that same afternoon on no less than three occasions.

Reading the statements from the Government House Leader, it would appear that he was mostly concerned about the minister's public image. Let me be clear. The moment that damaging a minister's public image becomes a breach of privilege, we will never get any business done here. Indeed, I would argue that every time the opposition does its job of holding the government to account, there is a real and substantial risk that the public will think less of the minister or of the government, and that, in many ways, is the point. Indeed, one could argue that the principle of ministerial accountability flows from the fact that the minister's conduct and the opposition's exposure of the minister's conduct will have damaged the credibility of the minister to such an extent that he can no longer command the confidence of Albertans and thus should resign to protect the public image of the government. As an aside, Mr. Speaker, I think that is where we are at here today on this minister and on this broader issue.

Mr. Speaker, it is an important point. If there is a point of privilege here, it is the privilege of the Member for Calgary-Elbow to hold the minister and this government to account, the privilege of the Member for Calgary-Elbow and all members of the opposition to ask uncomfortable questions that run the risk of damaging the minister's and the government's public image. We have a privilege of free speech that exists within the parliamentary system. We ask questions and debate topics here to make sure that the executive branch is held to account.

The executive branch may not always like being held to account, but the statements made in the question by the Member for Calgary-Elbow are legitimate points to raise in a question or in debate. If the Government House Leader wants to declare the point debatable, he can do so. If he wants to raise a point of order on objectionable language, on being inflammatory, he can do so. In my opinion, that is what he should have done yesterday.

In summary, I think that at best there was perhaps a point of order, a debatable point and quite likely a weak point around a matter of debate, but this certainly does not in any way meet the threshold for a prima facie case of breach of privilege, and I encourage you, Mr. Speaker, to find the same.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. Some interesting information was submitted today. I need to deliberate upon that and read some of the references that are cited. I will return to you with my ruling at a future meeting time.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Information and Privacy Commissioner

30. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the November 2016 report of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, sessional paper 347/2016, and recommend to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that Ms Jill Clayton be reappointed the Information and Privacy Commissioner for the province of Alberta for a five-year term commencing February 1, 2017.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in favour of Motion 30. I think that there is broad support for the reappointment of the Information and Privacy Commissioner. It's just my hope that the government will work closely with her. I know that she has made a number of public comments with respect to the FOIP process and some of her concerns around it. I implore the government to work as closely as possible to ensure that all Albertans have access to the appropriate information.

[Government Motion 30 carried]

Committee Membership Changes

33. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the following change to
- (a) the Standing Committee on Families and Communities be approved: that Ms Miller replace MLA McPherson, that Mrs. Aheer replace Mr. Smith, that Mr. Orr replace Mr. Smith as deputy chair;
  - (b) the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future be approved: that Mr. van Dijken replace Mr. Hunter, that Mr. van Dijken replace Mr. Schneider as deputy chair, that Mr. Smith replace Mr. Panda, that Mr. Drysdale replace Ms Jansen;
  - (c) the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices be approved: that MLA Drever replace Ms Jabbour, that Mrs. Pitt replace Mr. Cooper;
  - (d) the Standing Committee on Public Accounts be approved: that Mr. Cyr replace Mr. Fildebrandt as chair, that Mr. Panda replace Mr. Hunter;
  - (e) the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services be approved: that Mr. Orr replace Mr. Fildebrandt;
  - (f) the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship be approved: that Mr. Hunter replace Mrs. Aheer, that Mr. Hunter replace Mr. Loewen as deputy chair.

The Speaker: Anyone wish to speak to Motion 33? The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and present an amendment to Government Motion 33.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Notice of amendment to Government Motion 33. I move that Government Motion 33 be amended as follows. Part A is amended by striking out “that Mrs. Aheer replace Mr. Smith” and substituting “that Mrs. Aheer replace Mr. Orr” and by striking out “that Mr. Orr replace Mr. Smith as Deputy Chair.” Part B is amended by striking out “that Mr. Smith replace Mr. Panda” and substituting “that Mr. Orr replace Mr. Panda.”

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

[Government Motion 33 as amended carried]

Select Special Ombudsman and Public Interest Commissioner Search Committee

34. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason: Be it resolved that:

1. A Select Special Ombudsman and Public Interest Commissioner Search Committee of the Legislative Assembly be appointed consisting of the following members, namely Mr. Shepherd, chair; Mr. Malkinson, deputy chair; Mr. Ellis; Mr. Horne; Mr. Kleinsteuber; Mrs. Littlewood; Mrs. Pitt; Mr. van Dijken; and Ms Woollard, for the purpose of inviting applications for the position of Ombudsman and Public Interest Commissioner and to recommend to the Assembly the applicant it considers most suitable to this position.
2. Reasonable disbursements by the committee for advertising, staff assistance, equipment and supplies, rent, travel, and other expenditures necessary for the effective conduct of its responsibilities shall be paid, subject to the approval of the chair.
3. In carrying out its responsibilities, the committee may with the concurrence of the head of the department utilize the services of members of the public service employed in that department and of the staff employed by the Assembly.
4. The committee may without leave of the Assembly sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued.
5. When its work has been completed, the committee shall report to the Assembly if it is sitting; during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued, the committee may release its report by depositing a copy with the Clerk and forwarding a copy to each member of the Assembly.

[Government Motion 34 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 27 Renewable Electricity Act

Mr. MacIntyre moved that the motion for third reading of Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence.

[Debate adjourned on amendment December 13: Mr. MacIntyre speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s early yet. As I was saying . . .

An Hon. Member: Briefly.

Mr. MacIntyre: You wish.

We have a number of issues with this particular bill, Bill 27, and I was delineating some of those issues. We don’t have within this bill protection, I feel, that is adequate for Albertans. We don’t have such things as performance bonding requirements. We don’t have such things as reclamation bonding requirements. These things will come to an end of life, and there’s nothing in this bill that protects the taxpayer.

3:20

Now, Mr. Speaker, to be really clear about that, we have an orphaned well situation in this province that is becoming extremely large. The orphan well fund, it appears, is not going to be adequate. Here was a situation where there was something in place, at least an attempt in place, to ensure that something could be done, that there was a pool of money available to handle such things as orphaned wells. In Bill 27 there is nothing, not a single sentence, dealing with the issue of the end of life of these massive undertakings. Across the landscape around the world we have failed solar farms, massive solar farms, we have failed wind farms, massive wind farms, time and time again. My staff has a list of a total of 64 – so far 64 – massive failed projects, and time and again it befalls the taxpayers or local municipalities who have to deal with the cleanup.

Yet in putting forward some kind of an amendment that might at least address this, this government foolishly voted it down. I have huge problems with that. That is irresponsible, and don’t tell me: oh, it’ll be in the regulations. Look, we have a bill before the House, and that is an amendment that should have been there.

It doesn’t stop there. I talked about the electricity police being totally eliminated from involvement in renewables. It’s like renewables are this sacred cow that this government is trying to protect from scrutiny, from transparency, and from accountability. To have the MSA eliminated from that process is absolutely irresponsible.

Then we have issues such as making agreements, that the minister is going to be making agreements. Of course, there’s nothing in this that talks about making those agreements public. Not a thing. You talk about backroom deals. There’s nothing preventing that in this bill.

Then we have the issue of public advertisement of the competitive process. Again, nothing in the bill about that. We heard earlier, just less than an hour and a half ago, I think, someone on the other side spouting off about how transparency is such an important thing. Well, I’m calling them out on that, Mr. Speaker. We tried amendment after amendment trying to put some transparency in Bill 27, only to see them rejected unanimously by the other side. So don’t tell me you’re interested in transparency when you keep voting those kind of amendments down. That simply is being beyond economical with the truth.

Then we come to things like advising the results of competitions. We tried an amendment there, that 18 months we felt was a reasonable time to protect the business interest of bidders, but let’s see these things.

Then, of course, there was the issue of: what happens to landowners when generators are in arrears of payment? We have that already taking place in the oil and gas sector, where companies go bankrupt, disappear, and the farmer is left with pumpjacks and other infrastructure on his land, and he isn't being paid for that. There's nothing in this bill that protects landowners from the very same thing happening. Nothing at all.

This bill is woefully inadequate, Mr. Speaker, and this government refused helpful amendments to improve it. On and on.

Then we come to the section regarding the government holding a security or other interest in a generating unit.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions for the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, the Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move that we move to one-minute bells.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to the amendment?

An Hon. Member: Question.

[Motion on amendment to third reading of Bill 27 lost]

[The voice vote indicated that motion for third reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:26 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

Carlier	Kleinstauber	Payne
Carson	Larivee	Phillips
Connolly	Littlewood	Piquette
Coolahan	Loyola	Renaud

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a third time]

Bill 25 Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act

The Speaker: The hon. minister of parks and minister responsible for the climate change office.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to move third reading of the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act.

This is a bill, Mr. Speaker, that demonstrates that we believe in our oil sands companies' ability to innovate and to continue to reduce their environmental footprint. This is a bill with historic implications in firmly establishing Alberta as a world environmental leader amongst energy producers. This legislation puts into law a 100-megatonne limit on emissions from Alberta's oil sands. It is a limit on emissions, not on production. When our oil sands companies, Alberta's job creators, tell us that they can rise to a global challenge, that they can rise to the very serious consequences of climate change and limit their emissions, when they come to us and say, "Yes, let's lead the world as Albertans, as an energy producer, as a place that takes action on climate change," this government does not shout those good ideas out of the room.

This limit, Mr. Speaker, was jointly recommended to government by leading members of Alberta's oil sands industry and national and Alberta-based environmental nonprofit organizations. As you know, Alberta has under several previous administrations faced increasing scrutiny related to greenhouse gases resulting from oil sands development.

Our energy industry is unique in providing a significant amount of provincial and national revenue. It has also contributed to significant increases in emissions at a time when global pressure to lower emissions is growing. Our province faces very real negative economic consequences if we fail to access new markets for our energy and if we fail to act credibly on climate change. Already, Mr. Speaker, we are seeing the benefits from the climate leadership plan. The Prime Minister of this country specifically referenced the oil sands emissions cap and its legislation as an important reason for his government's approval of the Trans Mountain expansion and the line 3 pipelines.

The cap on oil sands emissions complements work that industry is already doing to lower costs. It internalizes the cost to emit carbon at a time when executives like Suncor's chief executive, Steve Williams, are dealing with what they call a lower for longer scenario for oil prices. Carbon, Mr. Speaker, is an input cost. Lowering it lowers the cost for producers. The emissions cap will speed the transition to lower carbon fuels, it will allow companies to accelerate their innovation efforts, and it will provide new jobs and revenue as Alberta-developed technology is applied and adapted in other parts of the world.

Instead of just talking about the issue, as some have done in the past, or wishing it away or denying that it even exists, Mr. Speaker, our government sought to find specific, credible solutions that will ensure the world looks at Alberta differently. We can either have a made-in-Alberta future for our energy or we can have a made-in-Ottawa or made-somewhere-else future, but what there isn't is any turning back the clock. There is no nostalgic previous era where no one objected to greenhouse gas pollution or the climate change it causes. With this bill Alberta makes clear to the world that energy-producing jurisdictions can establish limits and work and, in fact, thrive within a carbon-constrained future. We can be an energy producer and a world leader on climate action. The environment and the economy in the 21st century go hand in hand.

Alberta must get the most value for our resources and find new markets for our products, but we cannot do it unless we are taking credible action, which we have demonstrated just this month with the approval of two new pipelines. Alberta must get the most value for our resources, and our plan will drive innovation in the oil sands sector and allow room for growth. Alberta got the oil out of the sand, Mr. Speaker, and now we will take global leadership to get the carbon out of the barrel.

Mr. Speaker, we are doing this for all of the working people of this province because it is the right thing to do for the environment and, more specifically, because it puts our economy on a better trajectory to deal with the reality of climate change and the reality of a carbon-constrained future. That is why so many of Alberta's job creators asked us for this legislation, and that is why we are moving forward with it. It is key to ensuring that Albertans have access to good-paying, long-term, family-sustaining jobs right here in this province.

By passing this bill, Mr. Speaker, we can show the world that Alberta doesn't just do business; we mean business. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there other members who wish to speak to Bill 25, the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act? The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have before us this Bill 25, and let's be really clear: it is, in fact, a cap on development. It is very much a cap on development. Insofar as the minister wants to try to make statements about how we need to get the most value for our products, it's interesting that every value-add amendment that we attempted to put forward on this bill was voted down by the minister's party, so that statement, while it might sound good in a sound bite, is, in fact, patently not the truth.

This government rejected the amendments we put forward, ranging in topics from accountability to investment to encouraging greener technologies, notably upgrading and partial upgrading to expand those because they so significantly reduce greenhouse gas emissions, but for reasons that are still unknown, the government was not really interested in reducing greenhouse gas emissions by increasing or improving the amount of upgrading and partial upgrading, instead putting a 10-megatonne cap on it. Both amendments would have increased pipeline capacity. Again, the minister's statement that we have to get the most we can for our product rather falls to the ground when you consider that partial upgrading and upgrading significantly increase pipeline capacity, yet government members unanimously voted those amendments down.

Again I say that if the minister was genuine and sincere about her statements regarding getting the most for our product, it doesn't make any sense at all, then, to cap that. Once again, the evidence would indicate that those are just empty words.

Limiting upgrading emissions means not only one hundred per cent carbon leakage but a hundred per cent value-added job leakage because anything we stick in that pipe in an unupgraded condition will have to be upgraded somewhere. It sure would be nice if it was here, but an awful lot of it will not be because, ultimately, the evidence would indicate that this government isn't really that interested in getting the most for our products, like they claim they are. Otherwise, they would not have capped something so important as upgrading and partial upgrading.

We put forward an amendment that would have removed the ability of cabinet to implement a cap and trade on the oil sands on top of the existing carbon tax and the high cost of abating these emissions by capping production. Now, the cost of abatement, which I don't think is entirely understood by members opposite, by capping production, would amount to $1,035 in Canadian dollars per tonne of GHG emissions by 2040, but I don't believe the members opposite understand abatement and the cost of abatement and how you even calculate that. Nevertheless, that is a reality. That is what it's going to cost.

An amendment on removing cogeneration technology from the cap, again another technology that would dramatically reduce greenhouse gas emissions, was rejected unanimously by the other side. An amendment to remove renewable biomass emissions from under the cap, again another technology significantly reducing greenhouse gas emissions, was rejected by the other side. Both amendments would have encouraged producers to adopt technologies on the fringe of being economical, green technologies with the potential of reducing significant levels of GHGs.

Then, of course, one of my favourites: I'm always asking for economic impact studies and have yet to see one from this government. I know that they have staff that can do it.

On and on what we've seen, Mr. Speaker, are introductions of amendments for technologies to be exempted that result in significant greenhouse gas reductions, yet those amendments were voted down by this government. I really only have one conclusion to make, and that is that they're not all that interested in greenhouse gas emissions, that this bill, Bill 25, is another bill from this government that has a name that's wrong. It's not really Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act. Oil Sands Development Limit Act would be a much more appropriate name. The details of this act are really nothing more than an underhanded manner in which to keep it in the ground in some measure and not look like you're trying to keep it in the ground. Time and time again we've put forward amendments to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, yet they get voted down. It's really very straightforward. The evidence is quite clear.

I'm not going to be voting in favour of this bill at all. I know you're surprised about that. It's going to result in carbon leakage. It's going to result in job leakage. We have proven that clearly. There is so much more that could be done for greenhouse gas emissions, but the other side have voted that all down. This particular bill, just like Bill 27, is woefully inadequate. It is counterproductive. It is a job killer. I can't see anyone who has even a remote understanding of this process of development voting in favour of this. We have estimates losses to Alberta's economy in terms of the cumulative value of lost production to be anywhere from $153 billion to $254 billion worth of development. This is indeed a cap on development.

I should also add that an emissions cap was never recommended by the climate leadership panel. If anyone in the House was to go through the leadership panel's report now, at this point in time, after seeing bill upon bill upon bill coming from this government, and read through the climate leadership plan that was developed by the Leach panel, I believe that now in hindsight everyone would be able to look back and say: "Wow. Well, the government didn't do that. Oh, they didn't do that one either."

There's probably quite a bit throughout that plan that this government isn't doing, yet this was the panel that was called to advise the government on what to do. We cannot argue that carbon taxes are a better alternative to cap and trade, but we are going to see cap and trade taking place in oil sands development with the remaining window of 32 megatonnes of emissions.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

In short, Bill 25 is being praised by people like Tzepporah Berman for forcing us to leave our resources in the ground and making more pipelines unnecessary, in her words. Frankly, to sum it up, this bill is anti-Albertan. I would prefer that it not see the light of day, but that's just my opinion.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I wish to speak to Bill 25, the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act. We tried to go to committee to haul witnesses in to get the expert opinion. It didn't happen. We tried to delay the bill so that we as members could go out and consult the experts. It didn't happen. This bill must be defeated. Unfortunately, this government will not let that happen.

This bill is surrounded in controversy. The oil sands advisory group, the OSAG, is chaired by ecoradical Tzeporah Berman, a signatory to the Leap Manifesto. Avi Lewis and Naomi Klein couldn't be more proud. Another member of the OSAG, Karen Mahon, is out fundraising to stop the Trans Mountain expansion pipeline. It's true. We have the e-mail.

Multiple panel members are involved with forest ethics, a group that boasts about having stopped the Northern Gateway pipeline. These are the people tasked with considering how to implement the 100-megatonne per year carbon emissions limit for the oil sands industry, and the industry is concerned that their panel members are there only as a favour for endorsing the NDP climate action plan.

OSAG will not complete their work until February 2017, yet we're being asked to pass legislation without the feedback of the panel tasked to determine the law's viability. This cap is bad policy. Global leaders like Mark Carney, governor of the Bank of England and former governor of the Bank of Canada, are talking about stranded assets occurring to fight climate change. In an article in the Financial Times, September 29, 2015, Carney warns that "investors face 'potentially huge' losses from climate change action that could make vast reserves of oil, coal and gas 'literally unburnable.'" He told a Lloyd's of London dinner: "The exposure of U.K. investors, including insurance companies, to these shifts is potentially huge."

This NDP policy does just that. It strands assets. Investors, people like you and me, who bought RRSs and mutual funds, who have pension plans, even the Canada pension plan: those savings are taken by financial managers and invested into assets like the oil sands. Investors demand a rate of return so they can be comfortable in their retirement. When we are too old to even work at the cash register at 7-Eleven, we will require an investment return from these investments.

Alberta has the largest free world holding of oil, and the NDP would strand it, make it undevelopable, and create capital flight to other dividend-generating assets for those investors and savers. The junior oil and gas producers are worried, and rightfully so, that they will be squeezed out of the market. As capital flees, there will be market consolidation and only the big players will remain. Murray Edwards at CNRL and Steve Williams at Suncor would love that, maybe even collect a big fat performance bonus for a job well done. This is nothing short of another example of the NDP's failure to recognize the incredible work that is done on an ongoing basis in the oil sands and the energy sector, more generally, to innovate and reduce emissions.

Innovation and technology like carbon capture and storage, to quote Mark Carney again, "would render the vast majority of reserves 'stranded' – oil, gas and coal that will be literally unburnable without expensive carbon capture . . . technology, which itself alters fossil fuel economics." Alters fossil fuel economics. Some might say that with technology we might have our cake and eat it, too. It will be costly one way or another.

Technology is also helping to find more oil. Down in the United States the U.S. Geological Survey released news on November 15 of this year.

The Wolfcamp shale in the Midland Basin portion of Texas' Permian Basin province contains an estimated mean of 20 billion barrels of oil, 16 trillion cubic feet of associated natural gas, and 1.6 billion barrels of natural gas liquids . . . This estimate is for continuous (unconventional) oil . . . and consists of undiscovered . . . technically recoverable . . . resources.

The estimate of continuous oil in the Midland Basin Wolfcamp shale assessment is nearly three times larger than that of the 2013 USGS Bakken-Three Forks resource assessment, making this the largest estimated continuous oil accumulation that USGS has assessed in the United States to date.

"The fact that this is the largest assessment of continuous oil we have ever done just goes to show that, even in areas that have produced billions of barrels of oil, there is still the potential to find billions more". . . "Changes in technology and industry practices can have significant effects on what resources are technically recoverable, and that's why [the USGS] continue to perform resource assessments . . . Oil and gas companies have been using horizontal drilling and hydraulic fracturing, and more than 3,000 horizontal wells have been drilled and completed in the Midland Basin Wolfcamp section.

Madam Speaker, the United States of America is heading for energy independence. They will no longer have to bring in tanker loads of oil from hostile foreign countries. But until the NDP policies are replaced, capital flight will take place, and it's going to Texas, North Dakota, Montana, and Saskatchewan. The movement of capital will take jobs from Nisku, Medicine Hat, and Slave Lake to El Paso, Lubbock, and Amarillo. There will be a brain drain from Calgary and Edmonton to Houston, Dallas, Fort Worth, Austin, and San Antonio. Perhaps Albertans will have to adopt a new motto: remember the Alamo. We in the Wildrose cannot support such a devastating piece of legislation that will impact Alberta's ability to sustain its wealth and prosperity as the Texans yell: drill, baby, drill.

That brings me to my final point. Why would the NDP be doing this to the province they say that they love? The answer is found in the Alberta NDP's own constitution. I had to read to the very end of this to get the answer. It's found in appendix C under The Principles and Aims of the Alberta New Democratic Party. You might want to listen to this because I'm not sure that everybody on the other side has actually read The Principles and Aims of the Alberta New Democratic Party. They list three. The first is democracy.

Democracy is one of the most valuable parts of our heritage and recognizes that all citizens, including minorities, must receive equal civil rights with representatives elected by way of proportional representation.

It goes on to say:

The necessary role of governments must be recognized in order to build an equitable and socially just society.

That's step 1.

Step 2 talks about the economy. It says:

Socialism is essentially the application of democracy to the economy. Economic democracy, i.e. democratic socialism, assures production to supply the needs of all people. Decisions about what shall be produced, when and where, and decisions about where we shall make our living and under what conditions, are now left largely in the hands of private interests. The market economy produces transnational corporations, who give private profit priority over public interest, social justice and workplace democracy. Through the efforts of many, we have achieved a degree of social and political democracy. Economic democracy, or democratic socialism, as they call it, demands a co-operative rather than a competitive system.

[interjections] The members opposite are saying that it sounds great. Of course, it would sound great to them. I'm starting to understand why they would be putting a cap on oil sands production.

The third part of this says:

Ecological Sustainability must permeate all economic and social policy. Meeting human material needs must not use more of Earth's resources than can be renewed within each generation.

I guess that means that they would not be able to use gas, oil, natural gas because it cannot ever be renewed within a generation. So I'm actually extremely excited about the fact that soon the NDP will be walking to work. They will not be taking any planes, and they will not be driving. This will be the final outcome of capping oil sands production.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise to request unanimous consent of the House to move to one-minute bells for the remainder of the afternoon.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 25 at third reading. This is an ill-advised bill, meant to cap oil sands growth and development. There are many alarming things about this bill. To start off with, this government has chosen an arbitrary number, a 100-megatonne cap. They have given us no data, no information on how the decision was reached on 100 megatonnes. Obviously, they've grabbed numbers out of the air. That's an alarming way to do business.

Now, there have been reports that suggest that this bill will cause at least 3 billion barrels of oil to be left. That represents $150 billion to $250 billion to the Alberta economy. We can look at that as just barrels of oil and billions of dollars, but that represents jobs. That represents families. It represents livelihoods. It's not just money and oil. It's our economy here. It's what keeps this province alive.

Now, another alarming thing is the potential for stranded assets. Companies that have invested money in good faith in the oil sands may not be able to produce the leases that they've invested in, and that will result in the government having to pay compensation. Again, that isn't the government paying compensation. That's Albertans paying compensation to these companies for their investment and their loss of opportunity.

This government has brought in the carbon tax. It's phasing out coal. It has tampered with PPAs. It's doing loans to the Balancing Pool. It has put a cap on electricity rates. All these things have created all sorts of consequences for the Alberta economy. Some of these things have been done to make up for the mistakes that previous bills had caused.

This government seems to be embarrassed about our resources here in Alberta, and that's shameful. They protest pipelines. Now they're in charge of championing our resource? Then we expect that bills like this are somehow favourable to our economy, our resource-based economy? I don't think Albertans buy that, Madam Speaker.

We brought amendments forward, in particular an upgrading exemption. When that didn't pass, we did a partial upgrading exemption amendment. These are processes that are value-added, that create jobs right here in Alberta. They increase pipeline efficiency so that we can actually get more of our product to where it needs to be. That's the point of pipelines, getting our product where it needs to be. So by voting against amendments that would allow more of our product to get to our customers, they're voting against pipelines.

Now, the Member for Edmonton-McClung says that upgrading is good and that they're champions of upgrading. So why put a cap on it? Why would you cap something that you're championing? That doesn't make any sense.

The Member for Calgary-East: a protester holding a sign, "No more dirty oil," at a pipeline rally. How does that make sense when that member stands up and says that she supports pipelines, that she supports the resource industry? How does that make sense?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, if I could just interrupt for a second. Just a reminder that we are in third reading, which means we need to be in our chairs if we're in the House and not moving around, please.

Thank you.

Mr. Loewen: Now, even recently, if people want to talk about how things that were a few years back don't count, well, how about the recent appointment of anti-oil, antipipeline activists to the oil sands advisory group, that when pipelines were announced here in Alberta, they came out saying that they were going to stop them? These are people that are appointed by this government, paid by taxpayers, and they're against our industry, and they're supposed to be representing our industry.

Now, one of the members across said something that is absolutely true – absolutely true – that we produce some of the most responsible oil in the world. Agreed. So why are we wanting to ship it elsewhere to have upgrading done? Why wouldn't we do it right here? Why aren't we championing our oil right here in Alberta?

Now, they talk about these made-in-Alberta solutions, but this government has hired anti-oil activists from across Canada, I guess, to develop this made-in-Alberta solution. But the truth truly came out, Madam Speaker, when the Prime Minister came up with his plan on the carbon tax and it was $50 a tonne. How did the Premier respond to that? She says: well, our plan was $30, but that was never really the top; I mean, like, I guess we're kind of flexible or something.

So now this made-in-Alberta solution, as they like to call it, is automatically made in Ottawa right now. That's what it was here for. They kept saying: why would we want to have Ottawa dictate to us what to do when we've got a made-in-Alberta solution? What happened when the Prime Minister said $50 a tonne? Basically, he said, "Jump," and the Premier said, "How high?" Fifty dollars a tonne high. That's how high.

Now, they also talk about how the President of the United States loves it. If he loved it so much, how come he didn't do it? He didn't do it. He didn't do any of this stuff that this government is doing. But he loves it, I guess.

Mr. Hanson: He loves that we're doing it.

Mr. Loewen: He loves that we're doing it because we're in competition as countries. We do business back and fourth. It's always better when you're dealing with somebody at a worse economic advantage than you are.

Now, we brought up amendments for economic assessment. They don't like them. We've never seen any. We have no idea what anything is going to cost. We don't even have any idea what the emissions will be reduced by with any of these bills that this government has brought forward. They refuse to recognize carbon leakage. Well, it's very plain. We just talked about upgrading and how this upgrading has to take place somewhere, so if it doesn't get done here, it's going to get done somewhere else. That is carbon leakage.

We know that the members opposite at least say that we have some of the most responsible oil in the world. We've got environmental standards on the top. Why wouldn't we want to do that here, where the environmental standards are higher? Why would we ship it somewhere else?

Now, a week or so ago we received the good word that the Enbridge line 3 and the Trans Mountain expansion pipelines received federal government approval. Enbridge line 3 is the replacement of an existing pipeline to the U.S. Midwest. The Trans Mountain is an expansion of an existing pipeline to Vancouver. These are not new pipelines; however, they will provide additional volume. They were approved by the NEB last spring. These pipelines were only waiting for political approval, which would have been hard to deny as these pipelines were already existing, but the government takes credit for these pipelines, and they use it to justify bills they pass in this Legislature like the one before us today.

The Premier and the Prime Minister suggest that the approval of these existing lines was because of Alberta's climate change leadership. Let's be very clear and honest. These two individuals are using these pipelines to justify their taxes. It would be shameful to think that pipeline approval was linked to anything other than its own merits based on the guidelines of the NEB. The suggestion that safe transport of oil is held hostage by any government action is extortion. The arm's-length NEB reviews these projects; government approves them based on the NEB recommendations. This government insists on taking credit for something that happened in spite of them, not because of them. What's sad is that the media buys into the false narrative purported by the Alberta NDP and the federal Liberals.

To suggest that climate change action was responsible for the approval of these pipelines and that previous governments got nothing done is false and insulting to anyone with a hint of common sense and who can see through this smoke and mirrors. Under the federal Conservative government two entirely new oil pipelines were approved and actually built: the non-XL version of Keystone from Alberta to Nebraska, completed in 2010, and the Alberta Clipper to Wisconsin, approved in 2008 and active in 2010. The changeover in line 9 taking oil west to east was also approved and activated under that federal government. In total, Alberta got an added over 1 million barrels a day worth of pipeline capacity under the last federal government. The Liberals will add just about half that much, 600,000 barrels, with the approval of Trans Mountain's expansion. That's if it actually gets built in the face of so much protest.

You see, under the previous federal government Northern Gateway, worth 525,000 barrels a day, was also approved, but the Liberals caved to protests and cancelled it, actually proving the point that a pipeline approval is a far cry from getting it done. The Northern Gateway pipeline was approved by the federal Conservative government on June 17, 2014, but due to the B.C. NDP, which cabinet ministers of this government campaigned for, and radical interventionists, some of whom this government has hired, the pipeline was delayed, and just days ago the Prime Minister cancelled it, caving in to these protesters. He also renewed his decision to ban tankers on B.C.'s northern coast, which would have provided the only new opportunity to access the Asian markets. This proves that pipeline approval is not necessarily a done deal, and these two are not out of the woods yet. We still need to actively fight for these lines.

Now, a few months ago the NDP unanimously voted for my Motion 506 to support Energy East, Trans Mountain, and Northern Gateway and "to request that the federal government not implement the moratorium on crude oil tanker traffic along British Columbia's north coast." What has this government done to represent the motion it helped pass? Nothing. Clearly, they supported it in words but refused to support it in any practical way. This is saying one thing and doing another. They passed it for political reasons with no care for the importance of pipelines. Albertans truly deserve better than what this government is delivering.

So, Madam Speaker, I will then propose an amendment to this bill.

4:10

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. The amendment will be referred to as HA.

Please continue.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that the motion for third reading of Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence."

Madam Speaker, I've outlined some pretty good reasons why this amendment is necessary. This amendment is necessary because I don't think the government truly realizes the damaging effects of its policies. Therefore, they need to take some time. They need to consult with Albertans. They need to do economic and environmental impact studies and come to the full realization of the damage that they are creating with these bills.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, I think we've heard a lot about the government's climate change plan, and at the end of the day, often, I think, what we're realizing time and time again is that they're putting the cart before the horse. Certainly, I believe and I think many of the members on this side believe that action on climate change needs to happen, but in that, just like a reasoned amendment, we need to be reasonable how we approach it.

There is confusion around the piecemeal approach, with bill after bill after bill or a bill having to replace a mistake or an oversight. It's difficult when you're in government to always get it right. We've heard over and over again from the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake about technology, and I think there is much out there. In talking to stakeholders, we have an opportunity to take a look at this once again, wait six months, check with the industry, take a look at the technologies, wait for a new President-elect to be sworn in in the United States to see what kind of effect that has on Alberta, whether it's good or bad. Again, sitting on this for a little bit, having regular dialogue about it I think is good for Albertans. There is no rush to put this cap on emissions today but to wait six months, check again, and do what I believe would be the right thing for Albertans.

I'll be supporting this amendment. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Sure. Under 29(2)(a). Absolutely. I just want to thank the hon. member for rising to speak about this important piece of legislation. I know that my colleague from Airdrie is looking forward to speaking about this legislation, so I want to rise just to recognize what the hon. member brought forward and thank him for supporting this important amendment. I know that he will eagerly await the comments from the Member for Airdrie, like I do.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Yes.

Mrs. Pitt: Really?

Mr. Gotfried: Well, I don't know. Just for fun.

You know what, Madam Chair? Again, this Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act is really just too controlling, I think, for the opportunities that may lie ahead in terms of our ability to maximize the opportunities in our economy. Let's keep our fingers crossed that we have those opportunities ahead that we can move ahead with.

I just would like to say that this is an opportunity for us to actually put some more sober thought into this, to not rush into something that's going to hog-tie us in the future when opportunities arise to understand where we're moving with pipelines and with capacity and with production in this province. I think a six-month period would be appropriate and would be happy to hear more on that from the member.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, we are back on the amendment. The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to this amendment. Now, this amendment is our last opportunity to make sure that we get this legislation right. We tried other amendments, amendments to support industries like biofuels. Biofuels are not only a large employer but a renewable resource. Why should it be under this cap? We tried to amend to support cogen. Cogen is a 2 for 1. Not only do you get the steam for the in situ oil sands extraction; you also get the electricity to power the grid. Since coal is being phased out rapidly from the grid, that baseload is going to need to be replaced because renewables are not always available. Don't want coal or petroleum coke emissions with nasty particulate matter and NO<sub>x</sub> and SO<sub>x</sub> emissions? Convert to cogen. But the NDP voted that amendment down, too.

This is the last chance for the NDP backbenchers to go out there and consult with industry to get their own answers. Yes, you. Don't listen to your House leader. Don't listen to your cabinet ministers, the government, and the whips. [interjections] Madam Speaker, through you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Mrs. Pitt: I wish this government wouldn't just listen to the people inside their party but go and consult because, Madam Speaker, the NDP MLAs are also free-agent MLAs. The NDP MLAs are contractors. They are hired by their constituents to represent them. They need to think for themselves.

Madam Speaker, we want the NDP MLAs to go out there and talk to the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers. Pick up the phone and call Husky, Jaco, Syncrude, Devon, MEG, ConocoPhillips and ask them what they think about Bill 25. Go and talk to the professors at the University of Lethbridge, Calgary, University of Alberta. Talk to the engineering faculties, the chemists, the geologists, the physicists – yes, even the atmospheric scientists and economists. They will give you the real deal here on Bill 25.

They will tell you that capping emissions in Alberta is going to cause carbon leakage. Carbon leakage means there is no benefit to the environment since the atmosphere doesn't care where the GHGs come from. They don't care, but to Alberta it means fewer jobs, less prosperity, less diversification. Obviously, any bitumen extracted will be upgraded somewhere, possibly with more emissions and pollution than if it were here, likely China but probably also India and now the USA, too. Donald Trump is certainly very pro-energy and will happily take whatever investment that the NDP government scares away.

Capping emissions like this is like some kind of weird Rhinoceros Party policy. Donald Trump wasn't the first person who ever wanted to build a wall. The Rhinoceros Party wanted to build a wall, too. It was going to be a great big, beautiful and very tall wall. It would be somewhere up north, across the length and breadth of Canada, and the wall's job would be to keep winter out. I know that sounds funny, but it is true. The Rhinoceros Party wanted to build a wall to keep the winter out of southern Canada. Donald Trump, eat your heart out.

Now, the NDP barely beat the Rhinoceros Party in the federal by-election, but I don't think that imitating the party that you beat is going to help you improve on your 1 per cent vote here. But, Madam Speaker, that is pretty much what we have here, a nonsensical policy to be done in the name of climate change and will have nothing to do with climate change. It will just hurt our economic development, the people in this province.

I wonder, Madam Speaker, how many of the NDP backbenchers have ever called CAPP, ever had a conversation or reached out and touched someone on the other end of the phone by calling the rest of the oil companies. [interjections] Oh, the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers. Please pick up the phone and call them. I'm wondering if they've called or spoken to the professors at the universities. I wonder what the investment bankers have to say. You know, the folks like the Dragons' Den star Brett Wilson: they will help you out. Mr. Wilson will be very helpful. Or the people that the Finance minister goes and sees on Bay Street in Toronto to sell Alberta's bonds to: what do they think?

I trust that this amendment will be adopted and that the NDP backbenchers will take the opportunity to go out there and talk to the stakeholders about this bill to make the final decisions for themselves before the final vote without government interference and propaganda adjusting their thoughts. I urge this government to do just that.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none . . . [interjections] Members. Thank you.

Does anyone want to speak to the amendment? No? Okay.

Bill 34

Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise to move third reading of Bill 34, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016.

Inheriting the existing system has meant dealing with two serious threats that unpredictably came together. First, the sweetheart deal struck for deregulation to allow companies to foist any market losses and all their market losses onto the public after enjoying long profits. Secondly, the recent prolonged collapse in electricity prices set off the result of the price uncertainty and volatility of deregulation.

These two consequences were built into the very design of the deregulation machinery. Together they resulted in the return of unprofitable power purchase arrangements to the Balancing Pool, posing a threat to consumers. The result was clearly unfair. That's why we took action to protect consumers, to defend consumers' interests in the proper interpretation and application of the law. Despite considerable opposition we stood up for Albertans. As a result, we entered reasonable settlement agreements with three of the four PPA buyers, extracting considerable value for consumers. We took our knocks for that decision, but I am proud of that result. I am proud that we had the courage to draw the line, and we didn't stop there.

Although the deregulation apparatus created the preconditions, it failed to provide the Balancing Pool the tools it needed to manage the consequences. With Bill 34 we are providing the tools and the flexibility that the Balancing Pool needs to cover its financial obligations. This will allow the Balancing Pool to smooth price volatility, helping to ensure that consumers' electricity costs are reasonable and stable.

In the face of opposition we chose to act to defend consumers. We chose to look forward to develop the systems and structures that will serve Albertans with reliable electricity at reasonable rates for the long run. We are assembling the full program to make that possible, one part of which is the amendments before us now. That makes me proud to vote for Bill 34 today.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, I think that it might do for some of the members opposite, when they find themselves out of a job in 2019, to maybe apply as fiction writers because they're getting pretty good at it, frankly, or, you know, as historical reconstructionist or something along that line.

Mr. Hanson: They're not writing their own stuff.

Mr. MacIntyre: Yeah, that's true.

There is a reason for every bill that comes before this House, and Bill 34 is no different. The real problem is that this government is afraid to own up to the reason for Bill 34's existence. This government right out of the gate started attacking our electricity sector, and the volatility that the hon. minister was talking about was at the wholesale price level. Frankly, I don't find anything wrong with a low price on electricity, and the Balancing Pool has been very low for a very long time now. That benefits consumers like you and me. I don't have a problem with that. If I can buy electricity for 2 cents or 3 cents a kilowatt, happy day.

That's what happens in a competitive market when supply and demand are allowed to move the market freely. That's called free-market enterprise. It's not supply management. The hon. member, my colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner, was reading the NDP's manifesto. It's interesting how they don't like the idea of private enterprise. They would prefer to have supply management in place. Well, how is that working in Venezuela? How did that work so well in the Soviet Union? They had really good supply management going on there. You couldn't buy bread, and when the shoe factory was making shoes, they were shoes no one wanted and sizes no one could fit. There's some really good supply management for you.

A competitive, free-market enterprise provides for people what people need at a price people can afford. That's the nature of a competitive, free market, but this government doesn't want to go that way. They absolutely detest the idea of a deregulated electricity market, where Albertans can benefit from that competition. Instead, they are going to reregulate the market under the name of a capacity market.

Then they had – it was almost silly. They were saying, you know, that in all of North America there are only two jurisdictions with energy-only markets, Texas and Alberta. It's interesting to know that the Texas energy-only market was also a pioneer in renewable portfolio standards. They pioneered it. They made a botch of it for a number of years, but you know what? Texans, being a lot like some Albertans I know, were stubborn, and they stuck with it, and they fixed it. They now have a situation wherein their energy-only market works in tandem quite well with RPSs. They didn't have to destroy free enterprise to bring in renewables. This government seems to be of the mind that you can't possibly have renewable technologies and free enterprise.

Although they want to try to distance themselves from the Ontario debacle, the reality is that they are taking us down that same road. They are in fact hurting private enterprise. As a result of their Whac-A-Mole policies, with unintended consequences popping up at every turn, we now come to Bill 34, which is nothing more than a shallow attempt at clouding the realities that Albertans are going to be facing increased costs. Whether this government succeeds in getting those costs not shown on their electric bills but hides those costs in taxation or in the great big hole called government debt, the reality is that it will be costing Albertans more money for no good reason.

Renewables should be made to compete on a level playing field, head-to-head with every other technology that is out there, and may the best man win. That is free-market enterprise, and it can be done. But this government isn't going to risk that because they have a target, their arbitrary 30 per cent by 2030. Come hell or high water, regardless of how much damage it's going to bring to the economy, we're going to have 30 per cent renewables by 2030.

[The Speaker in the chair]

I stand opposed to Bill 34 on the basis that it's going to harm Albertans. It's just more debt. This government has an answer for everything, and it is always either more debt, more taxes, or to throw more money at it, more borrowed money at it. This Bill 34 is a direct result of this government's mismanagement of the electricity file. It is just that simple.

I was very pleased to see over the weekend a number of news articles from reporters who understand this. They're reporting accurately. They have not been fooled by what this government is doing with Bill 34. I had one of those reporters call me over the weekend, and he said: "You know, this bill is only 50 words, but I've read it, and I've thought about it. Correct me if I'm wrong, but this looks like it's actually pretty dangerous given how short it is." He explained to me what his take was on it. It was excellent, and we saw articles coming out explaining it that way. So I am grateful to the news media for reporting correctly on this electricity file. They've done a great job in seeing through the government's smoke and mirrors on bills 27 and 34 and the other things that they have done.

I would say to all members in this House that you have an opportunity – not many more left, but you have an opportunity – to get it right. I don't believe it's appropriate that a government hide things from the people of Alberta, and I believe that Bill 34 is an attempt to do just that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow. Please proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am just so frustrated and disappointed by this bill. It may go down in history as one of if not the very shortest bills in the history of our fine province, but the impact of it is far reaching – far reaching – and lacking any positive changes that I can see that will actually improve our electricity system. The minister had a choice. The minister could have chosen not to sue electricity companies. The minister could have worked with the Balancing Pool and worked with PPA owners to recoup, to accept back the PPAs, to allow the Balancing Pool to run those PPAs at market rates and avoid this whole mess.

But there is a much bigger agenda at play here, Mr. Speaker, a much bigger agenda. Despite all of our efforts in this House, I would suggest that there are still very few members in this Assembly who fully understand the magnitude of the changes that have been made and the implications of all of the changes that have been made in rapid-fire succession to Alberta's electricity system.

But what we do understand, what we understand clear as day, is that this bill gives the government a literal blank cheque to backstop any and all losses from the electricity system. The government in Alberta has got a pretty bad track record, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to backstopping losses from industry: Gainers, which is still on the books and comes up every year in the budget; NovAtel, $600 million; MagCan; and there was an airline if I'm not mistaken.

There are many, many, many examples where the government, in backstopping private business, has run into big trouble for Alberta citizens and taxpayers.

There is already a mechanism to address any losses within the Balancing Pool. In many ways this solves a problem that Alberta doesn't have. It's not that the Balancing Pool would simply go bankrupt. They would simply put on a consumer allocation. But that would be politically unpopular, Mr. Speaker. Albertans would be able to look at that and say: why is this $2, $3, $4 charge showing up on my electricity bill? Well, that would be because of NDP bungling of the electricity file. Well, gosh, we can't have that. Instead, what they're going to do is that they're going to backstop losses within the Balancing Pool with Alberta taxpayer dollars at a time when Alberta already pays $1 billion a year in debt-servicing costs in interest alone, for which we receive no value: not a single teacher, not a single nurse, not a single seniors' residence. That is shameful.

And this is only going to make it worse. How deep is this hole going to get? We have no idea. The government could have chosen to cap this. The government could have provided estimates and said: "You know, we need $10 million. We need $50 million. We need $100 million. We need $200 million. We need a number to backstop here, so you know what? We're going to come forward. We're going to put this legislation forward, and we're going to backstop it to that number." I wouldn't have liked that either, Mr. Speaker, but what I like a lot less is not knowing how deep this hole could get. This is a literal blank cheque. It's absolutely unacceptable.

You know, the government thinks that this is just sort of magic, that magical money unicorns come and rain cash from the sky and that those magical money unicorns are in the form of big corporations. Big corporations, if you were to ask the NDP, are the ones who have all the money, and all we need to do as a government is to just go get the money from the big corporations. Well, guess what? Where do you think the big corporations get the money from? They get it from Albertans, especially when we're talking about electricity providers. Ultimately, Albertans pay one way or the other, and it is the policy choices of this government that mean Albertans have to pay more, Mr. Speaker. At the end of the day, it is Albertans who will pay.

All of this could have been avoided had the government accepted back the power purchase arrangements. Instead, they chose to go on offence. They chose the political path. They sat there in their ivory tower, three or four folks who are the most powerful in this province, very few, if any, of whom are actually elected, and decided: "Aha. I know what we'll do. We'll sue the big electricity companies, and Albertans will thank us. We the NDP are going to take on the big, bad corporations, and we'll be thanked for it." Well, guess what? Albertans were wise to your game. Albertans are smarter than that. They know how this all works. They like free enterprise. They like the free market.

To think that the government tried to bully companies into settling: well, it managed to succeed with three of them, but interestingly the one that's owned by the city of Calgary has yet to settle. I wonder why that is. That's because they've drawn a line in the sand and said: "No. This lawsuit is unfair. It's vexatious, predatory. You're using your power as the government to threaten the corporations that own the PPAs that maybe you might bring in retroactive legislation." That is the ultimate threat, retroactive legislation. That's the hammer that was held over the heads of all of these companies. That is absolutely the hammer. [interjection] The Minister of Justice is saying that I don't know that.

Maybe one day my FOIP will come in, Mr. Speaker, and we can prove all of this, that there absolutely were representations made that the government may consider retroactive legislation so that, folks, you'd better settle. It's pretty tough when you're negotiating with the people who make the rules, and then they change the rules on you. The government has all the power. That's what this comes down to.

You know, what it comes down to even more essentially than that, Mr. Speaker, is a lack of oversight by this government, a lack of awareness of the contracts their government had signed, that the government was responsible for. I don't believe for one second that it was March 2016 that "or more unprofitable" or the "change-in-law" clause was known to the minister or the Premier, and if it was, that is remarkable. We know it wasn't. We know it wasn't.

If it wasn't told to the minister or the Premier, there's a bigger problem in this government because we know senior bureaucrats knew about that provision. Court documents show definitively that there are senior members of Alberta's public service working today, one of whom is in the same role that he had 15 or 16 years ago, when these contracts were signed. It is beyond imagination that this government didn't know. But if you didn't know, you should have known. You absolutely should have known. There is absolutely no excuse for it. It's poor management, poor governance.

Ultimately, at the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, I absolutely cannot support Bill 34. It proves the government is following a clearly ideological agenda. They have a preconceived idea of how this is all going to work, and it doesn't matter if it ends up costing Albertans tens of millions or even more in interest and debt repayment. They have their plan. They're going to execute it no matter what we say on this side, and that is deeply frustrating.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions to the Member for Calgary-Elbow under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any other members who would like to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to bring forward an amendment, please.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm advised that this will be amendment HA.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move that the motion for third reading of Bill 34, Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 34, Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence."

There are some very, very obvious reasons, actually, laid out by the Minister of Energy herself as to why this bill needs to – well, I would prefer to actually get rid of this bill altogether, but if we must look at this bill, let's put it ahead into the distance a little bit here because it is obvious to this side of the House, at least, and to Albertans that this minister needs some time. She needs some serious time to consider some of the things that have been brought forward and some of the things that the minister alluded to as to why this bill came forward.

I'd like to bring those up for just a moment. One of the things that the minister had said was that they are defending consumers. Well, I find that intensely interesting because as it works right now, consumers are already defended by the mechanism that is there. Unfortunately, in the other bills that we've talked about like Bill 27, mechanisms that actually protected the consumer have been removed like on the renewables file. So I find it very interesting that those would be the first words that would come out of the minister's mouth given that in other bills the words "fair and responsible" have been removed, that they tear up 16-year-old contracts and expect other people to come in and then all of a sudden invest in this province.

On top of that, the mechanism that is already there right now is called a rate rider. That rate rider balances things out for Albertans already. Interestingly enough, the part that the minister didn't mention in saying "defending consumers" was about transparency. Right now, as I understand it, we know exactly what we're paying for, so this is a smokescreen, a complete smokescreen. The government right now is throwing Albertans right under the bus.

I would highly recommend that the House, this Legislature, vote to push this ahead a little bit, with all my heart, given the fact that the government made the mistake of tearing up those PPAs in the first place. And there were a bazillion excuses as to why that happened. They didn't have the information. They didn't read the information. Their binders were not complete. Well, maybe the binder wasn't complete on how the Balancing Pool works either.

So maybe we should take a few minutes here and give Albertans a bit of a Christmas present and have the government actually stand up and say: "Whoa. Let's put the brakes on this one for a moment and take a few minutes. Let's breathe over Christmas and take a step back and see if there's some way, actually, that we can come forward and make this better for the very people that we represent in this House."

This bill, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow mentioned, is a blank cheque. I find it appalling that this government thinks that that is okay. How is it that we're supposed to just blindly pass this? Really. To quote the minister again, she feels confident that she's done the right thing and is okay with taking the knocks for her decisions. Well, let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that those knocks are going to come in strides, in humungous numbers here in the next little while, when those bills start coming forward, on top of the carbon tax, on top of all of the other things that are coming down to all of the people in this province. Let me tell you: it is going to be one thing after another.

We have tried consistently to amend, to change, to help, to provide metrics, to provide accountability, to provide credibility to these various bills that are coming forward, and one after another: done, knocked down. No, no, no, no, no. One after another. Well, here's an opportunity. Put this one to bed for a little while. Take a step back and take a look at this. We have some amazing experts on this electricity file right in this House. I would highly recommend that the minister take a moment and speak to some of the experts, one of them being from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. But that would require something called collaboration. That would require reaching out across the aisle to people that actually have some background in this file, to actually talk about how it is that we fix this. This is a mess. And, now, 50 words? How can so few words wreak so much havoc? On top of that – I mean, we are completely dumbfounded. There is so much. Where is the mindfulness of the bottom lines of Alberta families and the businesses that are going to be impacted by this?

Rate riders. Just to re-educate, rate riders must be approved by the appropriate regulatory authority. That is the check and balance that is already provided to Albertans. This government with this bill seeks to completely cover that up. Gone is the transparency. That rate that you will see on your bill will not even begin to cover the mass proportion of infrastructure and builds and renewables coming online, that have not even been laid out yet in any regulations or forms, let alone the efficiency panels or anything. Nobody has brought forward any information explaining to this side how this is going to work other than the fact that we're supposed to blindly sign a blank cheque, convince Albertans that somehow the advertisements that the government is putting forward about the carbon tax are in their best interest. Yet all the government cares about is the climate leadership action plan but shows no feelings or emotion towards the actual Albertans that they're representing right now.

Mr. Speaker, this bill – normally we would have brought forward amendments. There was absolutely no amendment that we could make to this bill. This government with this bill is actively hurting Albertans. Customers once upon a time would be able to see in the rate riders – they would be able to see the credits or the debits on their monthly bills. That is what transparency actually looks like. That is a concept that has been lost on this government.

What is the government up to? What is the future here that requires that such sweeping, irresponsible changes are necessary in order for some form of control, that I just don't quite understand? You know, there have been a few speakers on the other side of the House that have stood up and spoken on this. I have yet to receive any clarity on this. Every time it's just more frustrating. We keep trying to bring to the Energy minister the ideas of what this function actually is, how this actually works, and we still keep getting the same rhetoric back about how they're going to protect Albertans. Well, Albertans don't believe this. Not for a second.

I would highly recommend that the government take a moment, take a breather, take a step back, and give us six months to take a look at this. This minister needs some time, needs some serious time and some thought about this blank cheque, that ultimately will define for this minister a legacy of what is going to be left on the back of this bill. Because this is just the beginning. We don't even know how this is going to look in the next few months, let alone the next few years.

This is not the legacy I want to leave behind for my great-grandchildren, and I would highly recommend that you vote in favour of this amendment so that it is not yours as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any questions under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View?

Then the chair would recognize the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great opportunity, I think, to speak to this bill today. I'd like to preface it by saying, again, that I have deep concern with the direction of so many of the bills that we've seen passed through the House this session. It deeply concerns me that we are seeing a decimation of yet another part of the Alberta advantage that this province has enjoyed for so many years and that we enjoyed and that we'd hoped our children and our grandchildren would enjoy as well. It's a slippery slope indeed.

I firmly believe that this bill needs to be sent back to the drawing board.

An Hon. Member: To the Dumpster.

Mr. Gotfried: To the Dumpster, in fact, yes. But six months is better than nothing, Mr. Speaker.

It's of deep concern to me that so much of what we've seen from this government is a litany of unintended consequences. Albertans cannot suffer more unintended consequences during this downturn, this unprecedented downturn in our economy.

Mr. Speaker, members of our caucus have looked at this bill from a lot of different angles, every angle we could think of, trying to come up with amendments that could serve to improve this legislation and the obvious short-circuits when it comes to the best interests of Albertans. Our conclusion, in the end, was that this is simply a bad piece of legislation. So we agree with our colleagues to the right here that we need to push this back six months and give us some breathing room to take a look at what's happening in the economy, to get some real scientists and some real economists to take a look at the unintended consequences that could come out of this.

We've tried modest amendments which would limit the scope of the damage done to the Balancing Pool, although, I suppose, maybe we need to come up with some new names for things. Maybe we should be referring to it as the borrowing pool as there is no balance left in this pool anymore, Mr. Speaker. The balance is gone because the ability to balance is no longer there. It's really a one-sided street.

Restrictions on what the Balancing Pool could do with the borrowed money. We tried to do that and similar amendments to try and narrow the scope and the damage of what this government is attempting to do on the backs of Albertans. Those amendments were not accepted. Let's be clear. This is on the backs of Albertans. They say that it's not on the backs of consumers. It's on the backs of taxpayers. It's on the backs, sadly, of future taxpayers and future generations.

Mr. Nixon: Generational theft.

Mr. Gotfried: It is generational theft indeed.

None of these restrictions addressed the major single issue with this bill, that the Balancing Pool should not be allowed to borrow money, specifically on the public's backs, the red ink, full stop. No borrowing. The Balancing Pool was never designed to borrow money, and absent the meddling of this government, it would never have been in a position where borrowing was even considered because there was a mechanism in place. Sadly, what was once a pool, I would suggest, is going to become a sea, from a little pool a sea of red ink on the shoulders of Albertans today and for generations to come.

It's been raised in this House before, but I think the concept is so fundamental to what the Balancing Pool is supposed to be that it bears repeating. The Balancing Pool, without borrowing money, has already had a mechanism to address a negative balance over time. It was talking about time, it was talking about balance, and sometimes you need time to generate balance. That mechanism was to adjust the price that people paid for electricity, to add on a rate rider that would go towards addressing the Balancing Pool's shortfalls, again, over time in a fluctuating market, the key word being "market." I think we've heard that from some of the members here. Markets actually, given their own devices and proper tools and proper mechanisms, do work over time and create balance, not the need to borrow just because there's a hole in today's market or tomorrow's market or a deep hole. As they often say, when you're digging a hole, what's the best thing to do? Get rid of the shovel. I see a big shovel attached to this bill.

This is the point where the government would like to simply highlight the point and paint all of us who oppose this legislation as enemies of consumers, stepping on the downtrodden, those same consumers, who are the same taxpayers, out of those same wallets, that we're going to be seeing – we take our hand out of their left-hand pocket, and we put it in their right-hand pocket, or maybe it's the other way around, from the right-hand pocket into the left-hand pocket.

The first point is that the Balancing Pool, in addition to charging a rate rider when it had a negative balance, provided a rebate when it was turning a positive balance. Isn't that a unique concept? Gee, when times are really good, we get to give you a rebate, and you pay less, which might actually happen in a time when the economy needs that rebate – wow; unique concept – a rebate that would go towards actually reducing the price that people pay for electricity during such times, which could be during tough times. Wow. Again, another way to actually put money back into the wallets of Albertans and put food back on their tables and put services back for seniors who may need them. This wasn't some pie-in-the-sky hypothetical scenario. The Balancing Pool actually had a positive balance – a billion dollars, I think we heard – for the last few years. That positive balance was only threatened when the government started to void contracts with their irresponsible and misguided environmental policies. They blew that system up pretty well, didn't they?

The first point to recognize here is that the previous government had a system that actually returned money to consumers when conditions allowed and drove the price of their electricity consumption down. Interesting. Consumers actually won in that scenario. This government has chosen to disrupt that well-functioning system. I think we could talk to people in the Balancing Pool, and I suspect that they might tell us that it was a pretty well-functioning system. I suspect that they're not really in a position to speak out on that issue right now.

This has now left consumers on the hook for increasing electricity prices. "Oh, no. Well, we'll put in a cap, so that's okay." Hmm. The same taxpayers are going to get stuck paying it in the end, right? That's what's going to happen. From consumer to taxpayer: the same people. I'm sure this is where we hear the government crying out: "Wait, wait. That's why we're letting the borrowing pool" – sorry, the Balancing Pool, but we'll call it the borrowing pool – "borrow all this money." It sounds like a big balloon, like a water balloon that's going to keep blowing up with debt, and eventually it's going to explode, and we're all going to get soaked in our wallets.

We're going to get soaked by this, which brings me to my second point. Do they really think that they're protecting consumers by making them pay through the back door? Actually, they're not making them pay through the back door. It's like: "Well, let's push it off to your kids and your grandkids. That's really what we want to do here. Let's push this down the road because everything is going to look rosy, and the consumers are going to think that this is wonderful."

By the way – I think one of our members mentioned earlier – I think it was $24,400 per person of debt. You know, I think I remember doing some math on that about a year ago, when it was only $14,400 per person, 2.6 people per household. It was about $34,000. We can pay that back. Every household can pay that back, but $234 a month for the next 25 years is what that's going to take. That's the mortgage. That's the debt, the mortgage we're taking out on behalf of every man, woman, and child in this province: 25 years to pay it back at $234 a month. That's probably subject to low interest rates. What happens if they go up?

The government is going to loan money to the borrowing pool, our money, future money, future debt, money that comes from the same consumers, also known as taxpayers, that they purport to be protecting. That doesn't sound like very good protection to me. It's not that you won't still be paying for this shortfall; it's just that you won't see how much extra you're going to be paying or maybe future generations are going to be paying. It sounds like a lot of money to me, and it sounds like an irresponsible approach to the Balancing Pool, the borrowing pool.

The amount will be hidden amongst billions in red ink that this government is amassing on the shoulders of unassuming Albertans, who are of course going to feel good because they're being protected by this misguided legislation. So the government can go out and spend $9 million and convince people that their policies aren't going to have an effect on their household budgets through nice flowery and fluffy ads on the TV, which drive me crazy every time I see them. I get phone calls, and I hear from Albertans telling me: why am I being told that something is good for me that I know is not good for me or my children or my grandchildren?

And if I may briefly go on a tangent, doesn't that sort of defeat the purpose of having a price on carbon, to change people's behaviour? You say that you're going to put a price on carbon. It's going to get the people to use less so that they can, oh, make better choices, right? Make better choices. Then you turn around and hide the additional costs in government borrowing and loans, trying to leave today's wallets with the appearance – and I emphasize "appearance" – that they are intact when, in fact, you're digging a deep hole to bury their finances and their family's finances and their children's finances, perhaps for generations to come.

If this government was really interested in having people reduce the amount of electricity they use, wouldn't you want the true cost of your policies to show up on people's electrical bills, not in a carbon tax? I'll throw that in: not in a carbon tax. Maybe we can actually have the market and the people react to market pricing as it is balancing up and down. Let's not forget those rebates, that we can have sometimes when it gets tough because we built up a pool through the Balancing Pool, in the way the Balancing Pool is supposed to act and used to act. These citizens can really see how much they're contributing to your climate leadership action plan: nothing to clap about here, Mr. Speaker.

I suspect the reason that you're tucking away this cost in the borrowing pool is that you know there is only so much that people and their families can do to reduce their electricity use. Note our recent cold weather records, just this past week, and the impact of short winter days, Mr. Speaker. I do not think Albertans are interested in freezing in the dark just because you want them to make better choices. They still need to keep the lights on. They may need to do some laundry, perhaps take the odd shower, or they might even wish to cook the occasional meal. There is simply a reasonable base amount of electricity that even an environmentally conscious household needs to use.

We are bound and determined – this government is – to penalize them, not to change their behaviour, Mr. Speaker, because they do need to put food on the table, hot food, on an occasional day. They do need to take showers and do laundry. They do need to take their children to school and get themselves to work. This government is making all of that more expensive on the shoulders of struggling, hard-working Albertans – hard-working Albertans – and some of those hard-working Albertans are not going to get rebates down the road on carbon taxes and things like that. They are going to pay the price here because they're going to pay it in their taxes, and they're going to be penalized in the future even more, those same hard-working, middle-income Albertans.

So to save some political face, they'll punt the responsibility down the line and saddle whoever comes after them, that government in 2019, with the true cost and burden of these misguided policies, and that is simply wrong. This bill is about shirking the responsibility to be accountable to today's and future Albertans for their policies. Mr. Speaker, that is why at least six months – six months – is all we're asking for to start with now to bring some scientists, not just political scientists. I want real scientists here to do the work, to do the numbers and real economists that can crunch the numbers.

An Hon. Member: He's sitting right here.

Mr. Gotfried: There he is.

Nothing against political scientists, but you know what? I think even the Member for Calgary-Elbow would say that we actually need some of those real scientific scientists to be shoulder to shoulder with us because that's the way we do things in Alberta.

This government needs to take this piece of legislation back to the drawing board, they need to rewire the circuits, they need to test the resistance, they need to replace the balance, and they need to come to their senses before the real sparks fly on this irresponsible, costly, and ideologically driven piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker.

You know, our caucus is absolutely willing to work with this government to make legislation better, and we're willing to work with our fellow opposition here as well because to at least buy that six months might give us an opportunity to develop better legislation, or maybe we're really smart and we throw this legislation out and let the Balancing Pool get back to balancing instead of borrowing. But the only way to improve this bill, the only way to redeem this government from this electrical malfunction and meltdown is to recognize that Albertans' fuses are about to blow. To send this social and electrical – I'll call it maybe a social engineering project because I'm not sure that there are any electrical engineers or economists behind this. Send this back to the drawing board for at least the six months, for a well-reasoned, responsible, balanced piece of legislation that's not overloaded with unintended consequences and the burden of generations of public debt.

Mr. Speaker, for those very reasons, I would like to support this amendment, this hoist amendment, to put this aside for at least six months. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any members who would like to speak under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek?

Seeing and hearing none, is there anyone who would like to speak to the amendment? No.

[Motion on amendment to third reading of Bill 34 lost]

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:13 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a third time]

The Speaker: The Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would now like to advise the House that pursuant to Government Motion 22 the business of the sitting is now concluded. I'd like to thank the opposition members for their co-operation in this expeditious end.

The House stands adjourned.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I think I have to do this officially. First of all, it's been a challenging yet rewarding time for all of you, I know. Be safe. Spend the time with your loved ones and take the rest that you all deserve.

Hon. members, pursuant to Government Motion 22, agreed to on November 1, 2016, this House stands adjourned until February 2017.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:19 p.m. pursuant to Government Motion 22]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 2nd Session (2016)

Activity to Wednesday, December 14, 2016

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.
