The huge damage that has been done to investor confidence in Alberta is going to have a real cost. Even if the government can find people who are willing to sign a contract with them, they're going to pay a risk premium because this is a government that obviously does not respect the sanctity of contracts. Now, interest on a loan is largely variable, based on risk. If you are a not particularly credit-worthy borrower, you're going to pay a higher interest rate. The same is going to go for the risk to who you're signing a contract with. If a business is signing a contract with another business and they believe that that other business might not deliver on their end of the deal, chances are that one of those parties is going to have to pay a higher cost to account for that risk premium. That is exactly what's going to happen here. Consumers and taxpayers are going to have to pay more, Madam Speaker.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers on the amendment? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to have the opportunity today to speak to this referral amendment for Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act. Just the other day – it's much the same as what my friend from Strathmore-Brooks talked about – I read the article in Maclean's about the Premier of Ontario's words at her political party's annual general meeting. I mean, it just bears repeating again, and I will provide this document for the House. I'm quoting directly from it. Wynne said that part of convincing Ontarians that she wants to do what is in their best interests is admitting when she's made a mistake. She was quoted in the article as saying:

People have told me that they've had to choose between paying the electricity bill and buying food or paying rent.

A quote from Ms Wynne again. She said:

That is unacceptable to me. It is unacceptable that people in Ontario are facing that choice. Our government made a mistake. It was my mistake.

Then:

After her speech, Wynne wouldn't point to any specific decision on the electricity file that she deems a mistake, but said her focus was on the big issues [rather than] facing the system and she hasn't always paid enough attention to how costs were accumulating on people's bills.

Auditor general Bonnie Lysyk has said the electricity portion of hydro bills for homes and small businesses [in Ontario] rose 70 per cent between 2006 and 2014.

Seventy per cent.

Well, Madam Speaker, the government of Ontario also decided to phase out coal-powered electricity and pursued hefty contracts for wind and solar power.

Mr. Yao: Where are they now?

Mr. Schneider: Well, that's a very good point. Where are they now? They have an overabundance of electricity that they sell at cheaper than what they can produce it for. It seems to me that this government may be running down the same rabbit hole. I don't know. It's maybe not running down the same rabbit hole, but the parallels begin to become very noticeable. Not only is this government pursuing the same path, but it's doing so in a particular hurry, it seems like.

Madam Speaker, 55 per cent of Alberta's power comes from coal, so replacing that capacity will be challenging, to say the least. You know, there's always a question: what will it cost to kill coal completely by 2030? Well, that seems like an important question, what it'll cost in the sense of dollars and cents. It has been said that 30 per cent renewable energy by 2030 is a plan that could very well require over $10 billion.

The provincial government's carbon tax, when you get to the human side of it, will cost the average Alberta household a thousand dollars annually by 2018 and getting on to twice that amount by 2030. That's according to the climate leadership action plan. Now, what was that called again?

Mr. Fildebrandt: The CLAP.

Mr. Schneider: Oh, there you go. Commissioned by the Alberta government. That's very clever. I find that very clever of my colleague from Strathmore-Brooks.

An extra thousand dollars a year, of course, will be a burden. There's no question. Although the government does plan to subsidize some of the lower income consumers, this act will legislate the government of Alberta's 30 per cent renewables target by 2030 as measured on an annual basis.

This bill will necessitate the phase-out of coal. Under the bill the minister will be given the power to set interim targets within 30 per cent by the 2030 framework. It's hoped that legislating the target will give investors more confidence.

It states in the act that the Alberta electrical commission must put regard for obtaining the goals of the Renewable Electricity Act, once again, 30 per cent by 2030, above regard for "whether the generating unit is an economic source of electric energy in Alberta or to whether there is a need for the electric energy to be produced by such facility in meeting the requirements for electric energy in Alberta or outside Alberta." This legislation is needed, to be perfectly honest, because renewables can't get to 30 per cent in a free-market situation.

The legislation will inevitably drive up costs to families and businesses. While there is a federal plan that is being phased in – and it's actually a plan to be phasing out coal after 50 years per plant – that particular plan did not wastefully strand assets, which is what is going on in Alberta here, in this particular plan.

Phasing out coal is obviously a costly decision – I think we all determined that – because we will have to pay generators out for stranded assets. That cost hasn't been determined yet. There's been money put aside, but we haven't heard what the actual number may be. We could probably find out that number if we were headed to committee. Then after we have paid out generators for stranded assets, we pay them again for new gas production to serve as a replacement baseload.

We have not seen a plan for coal-dependent communities and how they'll be transitioned towards new industries. We just don't know what that will cost. Getting to committee to have experts come and tell us about the dismantling of a coal-fired plant and potential refitting for natural gas is something that Albertans probably would like to hear the numbers on. They're big numbers, no matter how you add it up. Ten billion? Well, those numbers kind of roll off the end of your tongue. Millions, billions don't seem to matter when we're talking around here in big numbers like that, but they certainly do to Albertans.

Once again, the minister, with this act in place, "may, from time to time or on a periodic basis, direct the ISO to develop a proposal for a program to promote large-scale renewable electricity generation in Alberta," a level of government involvement that we have not seen in our deregulated sector, energy sector, electricity sector. Whether you like the way that works or not, I believe that will be pretty accurate.

You know, I believe in a realistic renewable energy program driven by private-sector investment and not government subsidies. Ratepayers in other provinces have been promised painless accelerated transition to renewables only to see either government-funded bailouts or increased rates on their power bills. Phasing out coal early, regardless of technological improvements, is potentially the wrong decision and an expensive one, and that is why it would be nice to see this go to an all-party committee for discussion and for experts to come and give testimony.

This government is rushing through legislation without doing, I would say, due diligence. Substantial research and analysis is how we get to the bottom of this kind of stuff. I'm afraid this only increases the chance that they will actually make things worse for Albertans, not better.

This is a terrible time in Alberta's economy. There have been job losses. There are people going to be placed out of work. Certainly, some have already lost their jobs. It kind of makes you wonder what will happen to the folks that have been mining for years, whose family members have been mining for years. This is how they make their living. This is what they've been doing. We don't have a concrete decision on what that'll look like either.

If this government truly believes they're on the right track with their policies, then why – why? – are we scared of engaging in more thorough research and analysis, which is what a committee would provide. We should refer this bill to a multiparty committee and use the services of the hard-working, nonpartisan research staff at the Legislature and other experts and stakeholders that the committee can reach out to.

I would hope the members of government at least think they have the best interest of Albertans in mind when they introduce bills like this. It's just hard to believe that with something this huge – I mean, the dollars and cents that we keep talking about are monstrous. That decisions about that kind of money can be decided without experts, that would be invited to committee to determine the economic impact study – I mean, "economic impact study" seem to be words we use around here quite a bit. We don't seem to ever be able to convince the government that these kinds of things are fairly important.

Madam Speaker, even policies pursued with good intentions can go wrong and have negative, unintended consequences, but then you want to be able to look back and say: look; we made a mistake. Based on careful research and talks with stakeholders and those that we invited to our committee to help us make decisions, we can turn back and say: "Okay. Well, we kind of missed that a little. We can certainly go back and relook at this again." The best course of action may be something other than where we're headed right now, but no one has brought up this aspect that we see at this point.

Unintended consequences of coal being phased out and renewables coming in and the cost, and where we sit with this government at the moment is that places like municipalities have not been exempted from – what was it? – the climate leadership action plan. Municipalities. Goodness gracious. We were just at a meeting last week where representatives from municipalities all over the province came to one place for four days, in Edmonton, and talked about the climate leadership action plan. They talked about the pain that it'll cause their municipalities. They voted, actually. They determined to vote amongst themselves as to whether or not the carbon tax was something that they could support, and 93 per cent of them voted against that. A gentleman stood up and asked the people that were there. He wasn't even talking to the government, who was sitting there, waiting to speak to them. He didn't even ask a question of the government. He asked a question of the people in the building that represent rural Alberta all across Alberta.

Mr. Hanson: He asked them to listen to Albertans.

Mr. Schneider: Yeah. He asked them what they thought: show us your hands if you believe that shutting down coal-fired power plants was the right idea. One hand went up. The next question he asked was whether or not this was something that could possibly be the worst decision in Alberta's history, and the rest of the hands in the place went up. The last thing he said before he left his microphone was: "Please. We're just asking you to listen to Albertans. We are telling you that this is not what we . . ."

Mr. Hanson: They were there.

Mr. Schneider: Oh, I know they were there.

I asked a question today about the carbon tax and agriculture. There are unintended consequences with agriculture, too.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Madam Speaker, and thanks, of course, to the hon. member for his presentation. He talked about a lot of concerns about this bill in that presentation and, I think, articulated several good reasons why this bill should go to committee. Particularly, I think what resonated with me in this hon. member's presentation were the concerns that he's hearing in the communities that he represents and also at places like AAMD and C, where there are locally elected politicians from all over the province that represent municipalities and counties that are in constituencies, of course, from the opposition caucus and the third-party caucus as well as the government caucus. And the overwhelming frustration that was being expressed by the reeves and the mayors and the town councillors and the county councillors of our province was: this government will not take time to discuss things with us. Overwhelmingly, that is the main thing that you would have heard at AAMD and C.

I don't think – and I think that's what the hon. member was trying to point out, Madam Speaker – that it is unreasonable for our local municipal politicians to expect to be consulted with by the provincial government. They are elected by their communities to represent them on issues important to that community, to their town, to their county, and to towns and counties in my riding, in your riding, and in other members' ridings. That's their job. Overwhelmingly, the number one concern over and over and over is: this government won't talk to us. That's why this is relevant, in the course of this referral motion, to what the hon. member was discussing. That's why this has to go to committee.

We've seen in other jurisdictions that ratepayers were promised painless, accelerated transition into these types of products, only to see either government-funded bailouts, so our kids and our kids' kids paying for the mistakes of the government – we're seeing it right now in Ontario – or really, really expensive power bills and a Premier having to come out in another province and apologize for a mistake that was made.

This government has a chance to look at other jurisdictions where this has taken place in the past and be able to get it right, and if they think that they can convince the opposition and most of the province of Alberta, most of the people in Alberta, that to bring this through without consulting with the people that it impacts is appropriate or is going to be effective – and to not provide any sort of comfort or confirmation that they've been able to avoid the mistakes of other jurisdictions both in our country and abroad. As the hon. member said in his comments – and he pointed it out very, very well – this government still will not stand up and explain or answer the questions and concerns that are coming from municipalities that they represent as well as that I represent. They're not doing that, Madam Speaker. As the hon. member said, that is at least the first step that should be taking place when we're bringing forward legislation like this.

Instead, we continue to see this pattern. I'd like to hear the hon. member's thoughts on the pattern that we continue to see from this government and the concern that his constituents and the people that he represents have with that pattern of not consulting the very people that the legislation they're bringing forward is going to impact.

Committee is a perfect place to do it, as the hon. member pointed out. I think he did a great job of pointing that out. I don't think that it's unreasonable and most of the constituents that I talk to do not think that it's unreasonable to expect the government of Alberta to consult with the people that they're trying to make laws for. So through you, Madam Speaker – and I want to hear if the opposition member that just spoke agrees with me – I challenge the government to hold a town hall in Hanna, you know, and to go there and ask that community how they feel. If they won't take this to committee and give an opportunity for that community and the other communities that are going to be impacted to be able to speak to how this legislation impacts them and their families and their livelihood, then, at the very least, pack up and drive down to Hanna, to Stettler county, and see how it impacts them.

Go to other communities in the province. Get outside of the bubble of Edmonton – because you won't go to committee, and I wish that you would – and talk to the people that are outside of this area that we have around the dome. Hear their fears and their concerns, and you might find out that the legislation that is being brought forward by the government is going to have a negative impact on those communities. There is nothing wrong with making sure that Albertans are happy with the legislation you're bringing forward and understanding all the consequences of the decision of the legislation. We're talking about whole communities that could be devastated because of these bills.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I speak to this motion for referral of the Renewable Electricity Act, Bill 27. You know, we have a very serious job that we do in this Legislature. We have the opportunity in a democracy to represent the wishes of our constituents. We cast forth visions, where we want this province to go, but that vision should always be directed by the will of the people. This motion for referral allows the people to have impact beyond just us as legislators in this institution. It would allow people that are often better versed and have more experience to come before us as legislators and help us better understand the consequences of the laws that we bring forward in this institution. That's an important thing to be able to do, especially when we're dealing with a piece of legislation where I have yet to be able to see how it will propel this province and its people towards a more prosperous future.

I am not against renewable energy, but I insist, if it is going to be used, that it have a productive and a positive impact on the future of Alberta and Albertans. This government has set forward a target of 30 per cent by 2030 for renewable energy, perhaps a laudable target, but we really don't know because we haven't seen anything – I have yet to read or hear anything – that would explain to me: why 30 per cent? Why not higher? Why not lower? With the impact that this can have on our economy and on the lives of Albertans, I think there needs to be more discussion, so I would prefer this motion for referral so that we can have that discussion, Madam Speaker.

This increase of our energy sources to 30 per cent renewable energy, Madam Speaker, implies a phase-out of coal. We know that this government has been moving towards that. It's been a frustrating experience for me simply because I know that one of those electricity-generating coal plants that will be shut down is in my constituency.

We've heard the government cite some statistics about the number of people that are hurt by the coal industry, and I question those sometimes. When I look at the West Central Airshed Society, that has been studying air quality in my constituency for over 30 years, I know what the facts say. I know what the statistics say. I know that we have better air quality in my constituency today than we had 30 years ago. I know that the air monitoring stations right next to the Genesee coal plant meet or beat every ambient air quality test that the province does. So I question what value, from a health perspective, we're actually bringing to Albertans when we meet the air quality standards or beat them. There's a disconnect here that I think this government needs to pay attention to because when they make these decisions, they are impacting Albertans, and they are impacting my constituents. They are taking them out of jobs that pay well, where they can be taxpaying citizens.

I have been to these generating facilities. I have seen the Westmoreland Coal facility. I have seen the work that they do in regeneration and reclamation. I know that they are a very responsible industry. When we start talking about shutting them down and when we start talking about putting up 30 per cent renewable electrical production at the expense of the coal industry and at the expense of coal-generating stations and shutting them down early and impacting the ability of electricity-generating companies to be able to make a living and to make a profit and to hire people and to keep workers being productive, it's a very big concern.

We are presently, to my understanding, at somewhere around 11 per cent renewables. I spent some time last year in Holland looking at one of those kinds of renewables, biomass, to see if we could bring that over to Alberta and into my constituency and do so in a productive fashion. I was very impressed with some of the facilities that I saw there, how they are taking biomass products, producing methane gases, producing electricity, producing heat that is put back into businesses in that area. But while I was over there, the one question that I had for all of them was: how much are you subsidizing? Would this make sense in a free market economy, or are you subsidizing this? When we came back, then, at the end of the day, when they crunched some numbers, we saw that it wasn't going to be able to be a market-driven solution.

At the end of the day, then, Madam Speaker, that means that it's going to have to come down to the taxpayers and to either some form of grant or subsidies in order to make this thing work. While there may be some areas where you may want to try to do that at some point in time, I suppose, you've got to make the case for it, and I don't believe this government has.

Instead, legislation is being used because we know that the free market cannot do it and go down this path economically. We know that it's going to raise the costs of everything for families. And as so many of the people on this side have already pointed out, Madam

Speaker, there are many, many countries and many, many places in the world where we can look to see the price of electricity escalating when we go down this path, creating all sorts of problems for the communities and for the nations that have pursued this path.

When you see the price of electricity double and triple, as it has in Ontario, and when you realize as a business that you have to cover those costs, that is going to make you less competitive in an international market. When companies start abandoning the places where they have been able to receive competitive electrical prices based on coal and they leave because they cannot compete and more people lose their jobs, I don't believe that it is an unreasonable thing to ask ourselves as legislators on both sides of the House: why are we going down this path, and why are we pursuing it?

We have one of the cleanest, if not the cleanest, coal industry in the world. By phasing out coal early, we leave stranded assets, as we've talked about already in this House. That really speaks to companies that are going to have stranded assets, which means that it's going to affect their profit margins and their bottom line, and it's going to make it more difficult for them to be competitive and to stay in business. At the end of the day, these increased costs do get passed on to the consumers and to the taxpayers of this province. I think that's worth studying, Madam Speaker, before we go down that path. We need to ensure that we have a stable replacement for the energy that we're taking offline. From everything I've heard, renewables are not going to be able to do that.

I don't understand. I think it's a poor idea to pursue this path, and I believe a motion for referral is the appropriate thing to do in this House presently because we know that the Boston report has not yet reported its findings. It's supposed to look at costs and provide a timeline for the phase-out of coal. It's not yet reported. How can we pursue this without first hearing from these individuals and this report? That is responsible, appropriate decision-making which I would hope this government would pursue. We need to pass legislation with appropriate and proper study. We have to have the consultation to determine that this legislation is actually viable, if it is actually going to help the people of Alberta. This government has not made that case, yet it continues to move forward. It makes no sense to me, Madam Speaker.

We have communities that are dependent on the jobs that are being produced through the production of coal-generated electricity. I was out in my area at Genesee, and I went and toured the Westmoreland Coal mine. I stood on the deck of one of those huge cranes and watched it as it scooped up the coal. I drove through the reclamation sites and saw the responsible reclamation of land and the planning that's gone into that. Every one of those families, every one of those men and every one of those women working in that mine was proud of what they were doing. They were proud of the fact that they were taking care of their families. They were proud of the fact – and they produce electricity from the coal that they were mining – that that's being done in the most responsible environmental way that we have anywhere in this world, yet we are shutting it down early. It makes no sense.

I can tell you that I have talked to the people in my constituency that work in these mines, that work in these electrical plants, and they don't understand. When they see their jobs on the line, when they see that they can't pay for their kids' tuition to a school or a hockey team or for music lessons, when they see that they can't take care of their families – this is not an exercise in just wishful thinking or just some ideological university discussion. This is something that is impacting their lives in a very real fashion, and I don't understand how anybody in this House could sit here and ignore those concerns. I don't think any one of us, Madam Speaker, got elected in a democratic fashion to ignore the wishes of the people of this province. I find it very difficult, therefore, to understand how anyone in this House could support this legislation.

Let's take this to referral. Let's take this to a committee so that it can be studied, and perhaps then we can make an informed decision rather than just one that respects party lines.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Hanson: Under 29(2)(a). Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just briefly, then, I'll ask the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon to expand if he can. On March 17, 2016, the headline read, "Ontarians just signed up for more expensive, unreliable electricity they don't need." It goes on to say that "in 2015, the auditor general found that from 2009 to 2014, Ontario consumers paid generators $339 million [just] for curtailment" of power. That means: because they don't need their power, they're just going to pay them to idle and coast. We have some wonderful coal-fired generators that would coast for a very, very long time.

Carrying on, on September 27, 2016, the headline now reads, "Ontario cancels plans for more green energy, citing strong supply of electricity." In six months a total flip-flop. Now, it had a lot to do with the plummeting polls of the Premier of the day there, and I think probably politics has got a lot more to do with it than common sense or trying to save the taxpayers any money. So I'm just wondering.

You know, as the Member for Strathmore-Brooks had mentioned before, we can look back at all of these different jurisdictions. We can look at Germany. My wife and I were actually lucky enough to be over in Europe this fall for a week or so, and we talked to people over there. You know, I asked a lot of people what they thought of the wind-powered energy because you see a lot of power lines, a lot of wind turbines up there, and a lot of them said: well, it's kind of a joke. They're so expensive to maintain that a lot of times when they break down, they're not even fixing them. They rob parts off them until there's nothing left to rob, and then they tear them down. They say that some of them are actually not even tied into the grid; they just stand up there and spin for no reason. That's part of the reason why they're going back to coal-fired generation in Germany. We saw a lot of turbines in Germany. We saw a lot in the Netherlands and also in Sweden and Denmark and offshore.

I actually like driving down the highways and looking at the hills and the forests without turbines on them, thank you very much – and all the power lines and infrastructure that will be needed to supply this stuff. So I think that people really need to understand what we're getting ourselves into.

I'd like the member, if he could, to talk a little bit about whether there are any proposed projects for his area of Drayton Valley-Devon. I know that there are a lot of people unemployed there, and they'd probably welcome the work. I'm just wondering. We have all these indications from other jurisdictions that have gone green and they've tried to promote wind power and solar power to the point where the government is using taxpayers' money to subsidize this, but they find that they still can't make this work.

The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky also mentioned a bunch of companies that have been in the business, and I'd like to mention one called SunEdison, one of the biggest solar panel producers, installers, suppliers, maintainers, global market, very heavily subsidized by the Obama government. They couldn't even make it; they went bankrupt this year. So why would we not look at the examples that are being laid out for us? All over the world it's been tried. Why does this government have to keep following? Are we that much smarter that we're going to do it so much better than Germany or Ontario or Sweden or any of the other countries? What is it that makes this plan so much better than all of those other plans world-wide?

Thank you.

5:10

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the question there. You know, I think the member makes a very good point. Why would we use and follow a plan that has only pushed us down in other jurisdictions and other nations of the world?

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 27. One of the things I did throughout my research here in consultations about this bill is take a look at our Electric System Operator website. It says that Alberta has about 800 windmills connected to the grid here today, and as you can see – well, you can't see, but this morning coal and gas were generating about 95 per cent of the demand, and wind was generating a stunning 41 megawatts of their 1,434-megawatt capacity over a 10,000-megawatt demand. That's about .4 per cent of Alberta's demand.

We know that you're phasing out coal. While it may seem like a good thing, this plan of putting up windmills, let's follow through the NDP thinking. Let's assume the government forces Alberta to build another 7,200 green windmills to 8,000, or 10 times what we currently have. Today 8,000 windmills would only be producing 4 per cent of all of Alberta's power requirements. Four per cent. The cost of 7,200 new windmills would be about $14 billion, or about $3,500 for every single man, woman, and child in this province. That's it. Right? Simple.

Now, if we can't rely on wind from day to day – the wind doesn't always blow – other forms of generation will need to be built as well for backup. Now, hydro is out. We don't have Niagara Falls in our backyard. It likely means that we'll use more natural gas power plants, and we need to build them. Now, that can take out our cheap coal. Think billions more. If windmills actually worked, you would think companies would scramble to put them up for free in Alberta. If this made economic sense, we'd have them everywhere. But it doesn't, so this government is going to subsidize them. Of course, these companies will only do it with a guarantee from the Alberta government.

Now, Ontario: if you want to see a real-world example of how green energy has failed, look no further than Ontario. Many of my colleagues have stated the disastrous experiments in Ontario, the Premier herself admitting that it was a mistake. They've spent billions upon billions putting up wind power, and because we really can't rely on it, billions more on other types of generation so their lights will work on calm days. In the last five years Ontario's electrical power has gone up 88 per cent for every residence and business.

Mr. Yao: How much?

Mrs. Pitt: An 88 per cent increase in Ontario's electrical power. That's not going to do anything to help people.

Now, at the same time Alberta's has gone up just 7.7 per cent. Ontario is facing another mass increase here in January, and they will continue to skyrocket for years. This is out of control. Manufacturing in Ontario is facing these costs, and they will move to lower cost jurisdictions over time. Automakers have already begun to leave Ontario. Alberta may soon be on the same pathway, billions spent to look green while doing little, if anything, for the environment. Now, the website updates every 30 seconds or so, and I've seen wind as high as 730 megawatts but only for part of the day. I encourage you to keep an eye on that website.

One of the other problems, concerns that I've heard from constituents and people right across Alberta – and it actually gets very little attention – is the high number of birds that are killed by windmills. As you may know, birds and bats especially are an important part of our ecosystem. [interjections] The other side doesn't care about birds, apparently, as they yell across the aisle at me about how false they think the words that I'm saying are, that windmills kill bats. But they do. It's a real thing. Look it up. They actually kill a high number of these birds. If you ever go to visit a wind farm, which I suggest that you do, you will actually see the death on the ground, and I don't think that's funny. [interjections] The other side resents what I say.

You know, it's such a news media story when the birds are killed in our oil sands, which are actually very few and far between now because they have made great strides, but it's less of a tragedy when a windmill kills a bird, especially for this government. But it's extremely important to keep that in mind.

Now, bats are especially important to an ecosystem and probably one of my favourites because they eat mosquitoes. With the threat of the Zika virus floating around, I think we should do whatever we can to protect our precious bats. [interjections] And the government laughs at Zika virus. Absolutely.

We have a wildlife rescue foundation in my constituency which I was fortunate enough to visit, Madam Speaker. It was a really neat trip. They had animals of all kinds. Particularly when I was there, there were birds of prey. Raptors and vultures are especially vulnerable to windmills. In many cases where the windmills are placed also tends to be where they fly most of the time, again creating a threat to the ecosystem.

Without that balance, which has not actually ever been mentioned once, I think, in the dialogue from the government side, this isn't a good piece of legislation. I've never heard this government talk about the birds.

An Hon. Member: Why would the PC MLA cross the floor?

Mrs. Pitt: I don't know why PC MLAs cross the floor. I'm sorry.

Now, I must say that the Wildrose believes in a realistic renewable energy program driven by private-sector investment, because if there's money in it and it makes sense and it's a good idea, it will garner investment. Government subsidies do not create a sustainable program.

Now, 30 per cent by 2030 is a plan that requires over $10 billion of added private investment, but the PPA debacle has created investor uncertainty in Alberta's electricity markets. There are actually a lot of debacles that are creating uncertainty in many, many industries and markets. Will there be a change-in-law provision for renewable investments? Put an Enron clause – is that what you're calling it? – in the new subsidy program.

Now, ratepayers in other provinces have been promised painless accelerated transition to renewables, only to see either government-funded bailouts or increased rates on their power bills. We all know people in Ontario who regularly post their bills on Facebook with outrage, and these are regular human beings who could, you know, perhaps be able to pay for their daycare a little bit better, but instead they're going to try and keep their lights on.

Phasing out coal earlier than the federal timelines regardless of technology improvements is the wrong decision, and it's an expensive one. We've heard this before. We're just not quite there yet. Why don't you take your slush fund from the carbon tax there and do some research and improve these technologies before we force them on Albertans? Unreal. I mean, the cost to make a solar panel actually puts out more in pollution than it is worth in energy intake.

Now, this bill gives increased power to the Alberta Electric System Operator, AESO, but it also makes them less arm's length, and there is more involvement of the minister.

The ISO may, in accordance with any commercial terms that are part of a renewable electricity program, hold a security or other interest in a generating unit . . . in relation to generator default or insolvency.

Now, it isn't clear what they mean by "hold a security."

There are instances in which the minister is given the power to interfere with the ISO. For example:

Any interest in a generating unit held by the ISO . . . and any ownership interest resulting from the enforcement of a security interest, shall be transferred or assigned in accordance with any direction of the Minister.

Also:

The [Market Surveillance Administrator] is not permitted to investigate complaints against the ISO regarding the development of a proposal for a renewable electricity program.

Now, there are many more problems that exist with this bill. Where did the 30 per cent target come from? Out of nowhere? How did we get there? This is unfair to existing renewables because they won't get this special treatment. Companies here in Alberta who have gone out of their way to try and figure out how to make renewables profitable: they will not be rewarded. The fact that this legislation is needed because renewables cannot get to 30 per cent in a free-market situation is scary.

The federal plan of phasing out coal after 50 years per plant did not wastefully strand assets. Phasing out coal early is a costly decision because we will have to pay generators out for stranded assets and then pay them again for new gas production to serve as a replacement baseload, with, in addition, more gas as a fitting complement to intermittent renewables.

We have not received the recommendations of the Boston report advising the government on the costs and the timeline for phasing out coal. So once again this session we are being asked to pass legislation without hearing back from the panel that this government commissioned to determine the legislation's viability. Is that a smoke-and-mirrors show? It certainly sounds like it.

We have not seen a plan for coal-dependent communities and how they will be transitioned towards new industries. This is the cart before the horse. There isn't a requirement to consider the economics of an electrical project or the demand for an electrical project.

The Minister may, from time to time or on a periodic basis, direct the ISO to develop a proposal for a program to promote large-scale renewable electricity generation in Alberta, a level of government involvement that we have not seen in our deregulated energy sector. More government can never be good. Now, this government thinks that competitiveness is an issue from program to program and not for the overall process.

In general, directed targets are a terrible idea. Electricity should be generated in response to market demand. There are many examples in other jurisdictions that we can learn from, so please do.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the Member for Airdrie for her comments. I think she made a lot of very pertinent points about Bill 27 and what we're talking about here. I was particularly interested in her comments around the large number of birds and bats that wind-powered mills kill every year. Now, members on that side of the House think it's funny that birds die needlessly. They're not hunted; they're not eaten; they're not used for anything except grist in the windmill. They seem to find that funny.

I know I recall that the Minister of Energy certainly, you know, made a comment in the exchanges here asking us to table evidence that windmills kill large numbers of birds. That might be a fair trade-off, having a large number of our birds and wildlife killed by these wind-powered mills, but even if it's a fair trade-off, it is certainly well known that these windmills are killing a lot of birds, contrary to what the Minister of Energy might think about it. She has asked us to show her the evidence. I think that she could expect some tablings in that regard.

I'm hoping that the Member for Airdrie could perhaps elaborate on her points around what windmills are doing for fowl life in Alberta.

Mrs. Pitt: Well, thank you very much for continuing to pursue knowledge. [interjections] Sorry. It's been a long day. [interjections] But perhaps we should talk about the birds instead of personal insults from across the floor from the Member for Calgary-North West and perhaps focus on the issues.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Airdrie has the floor, please.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The very real issues that are very rarely given the appropriate amount of time to discuss, the very real issues for the people of Airdrie and for many people across Alberta, who are actually frustrated with the lack of attention to windmills causing deaths of birds in this province, a very, very important part of our ecosystem and something that should be talked about in this House – I hope that I'm not the last in this conversation because it is important, and I would be more than happy to come back with stats on the deaths of birds here in our province, here in Alberta.

Certainly, I'm sure Ontario would be more than happy to share their information with our province, and I hope we can learn much from what's going on over there. I hope we can learn much from other jurisdictions in this world that have gone to a subsidized renewable energy market and have realized that our technology is not quite there yet and that perhaps we need to go back to the drawing board and do something different. It would be kind of neat to see a lot of these projects, but they need to be done the proper way. They need to be economical. They need to be able to run my refrigerator in the nighttime and all of my neighbours' as well because that is a very real problem. At the end of the day, I think we all need to realize that sometimes the wind doesn't blow and sometimes the sun doesn't shine. Those are two very real factors in a renewable energy market. Sometimes facts are tough. I get that. I really do get that.

I should find some . . .

5:30

An Hon. Member: Cats kill 200 million birds a year. Should we get rid of cats?

Mrs. Pitt: Wow. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to this motion. I wanted to preface it by saying that I don't believe there is anybody in this Legislature who isn't for renewables. I think it's something that we all would like to see in our mix of electricity production. I think that it's something that we'd like to see done properly and in a businesslike fashion. I think therein maybe lie some of the challenges that we're facing right now. As much as we'd like to see it and there's a vision and an opportunity to do something right, we do need to address it in a businesslike fashion.

Just last week I met with a senior vice-president of one of Canada's largest financial institutions, and their specialty was energy-sector financing. What they told me was that most of the projects that we're talking about here stand alone in their own right, are not really currently viable for commercial investor financing, which is a challenge for us, Madam Speaker. We do need financing to achieve this. We need them to be economically viable. The question is always asked: if they were economically viable, we'd already be building them today. We wouldn't need subsidies. We would just need a good fiscal and regulatory and taxation environment, and those investments would be happening. But they're not. There are some reasons behind that. Obviously, there are some risks here associated with it, and there are economics.

One of the other things that was mentioned is the lack of PPAs. It would be great if we could go to all of the renewables and say, "Here's a PPA, and here's another PPA," and they could take that as collateral to the bank to get the business loans that they require to take those innovative ideas forward. But, sadly, I don't think there is a lot of trust, not even from the renewables community but certainly not from the investment community, in a PPA in today's world, sadly, and we all know why that's the case. So really we're down to the large companies that can finance across a large base of assets to finance these jobs. Only large companies have the ability to do that: the TransAltas, the Capital Powers, the Enmaxes, the ATCOs. Strangely, that's the same list of companies that this government is suing, and those are the ones that have the financial wherewithal to move ahead. I fear that they will decline that opportunity.

So where does that leave us, Madam Speaker? Basically, that says that unless government or let's call it the taxpayer is willing to take on the risks of these renewables or to provide huge subsidies and take on risky loan guarantees, many of these projects just are not going to happen. We're not going to get to that 30 per cent target that we're looking at. We're not going to be able to replace the other 25 per cent of coal that we're shutting down. People forget, of course, that we have to build the 30 per cent baseload that goes with the renewables to ensure that we have reliable and, hopefully, affordable energy as well.

Madam Speaker, I met with one of my constituents a couple of weeks ago who has what I thought was a brilliant idea. It's not out in the public realm yet, and he asked me not to give too many details, but he had an amazing idea. It was utilization on unused but flat, three-phase electrically serviced land that is not being used. It's actually some parcels that are contiguous but in between some highly productive agricultural land. He has an amazing plan in place that he could move forward with, and he can't find financing. He's talked to ATB. He's talked to the commercial institutions and the other commercial banks, and they've told him that they can't finance him because he doesn't have that collateral of a PPA, he doesn't have a contract that will ensure that he actually has a revenue stream when he builds this. So he's caught in a conundrum right now because he can't get support. He's talking to ATB. Obviously, we've heard a lot about next year $1.5 billion of loans out there and some dollars from AIMCo and other organizations, but he can't find out how he can access those dollars. That's one of my concerns. How are we going to finance this? How are we going to move forward? How are we going to achieve it?

I have another concern, Madam Speaker, which I'll call the apples-to-apples syndrome here. You know what? I think we all love the idea of renewables and wind turbines and solar panels, but I'm going to talk a little bit about a wind turbine. I had another constituent that came to me, an academic. He said: you know, the problem is that everybody talks about solar panels and wind turbines as if they're kind of a magic thing and we snap our fingers and they appear and they generate renewable energy, but they don't. If we're going to approach the renewables in a businesslike and logical and rational manner so that they can be viable, so that they can compete, can produce electricity for Albertans in an economically viable way, can provide investment opportunities so that we can move ahead with it, we need to look at the reality here. We need to actually compare apples to apples, and nobody seems to want to do that.

I've heard that it takes 285 metric tonnes of metallurgical coal to build a wind turbine. That's an interesting fact right there. That is burned, and that creates effluent into the environment, and we don't seem to want to know about that or capture that. That same plant that builds it needs power input. I suspect that those very plants are not driven by wind turbines and solar panels. I would guess that that is not the case, and I'd like to be proven otherwise.

What about the costs for the supports of those manufacturers and the fact that it's unlikely that that's going to be manufactured here in Alberta, Madam Speaker, or probably even anywhere in North America because of economies of scale and divisional labour? It's probably going to be Korea or China or some other industrialized nation with the economies of scale to do that. So we're exporting jobs. We're affecting our balance of trade significantly because all of those products are going to be brought in when we could actually produce energy from our mines here, coal mines, and natural gas drilling as well.

So we finish that wind tower, and then it has to be trucked to a port, burning up some hydrocarbons. Where are we accounting for that? Then it goes onto a ship. Last time I checked, those ships are not running on wind turbines or solar panels either, so we're burning up some more hydrocarbons. Then it gets to the west coast, and we put it on a train or truck to get to Alberta. Then we have to truck it to the site. Then we get a helicopter to hoist it into place.

Then there's another consideration here, Madam Speaker. Gee, we don't have transmission lines to where those wind turbines are. So we get the backhoes out, and we get the earth movers, and we get the equipment and machinery to lay down those transmission lines. Oh, by the way, those transmission lines were produced using hydrocarbons. Nobody's captured that, Madam Speaker.

We've got all that captured, so when is the break-even, Madam Speaker? It's not on day 1, when we go and we admire and we cut a ribbon of that wind turbine or that solar panel. When is that payback? Why are we not willing to address the facts so that we actually go into this with our eyes wide open, so that we compare apples with apples? So when we walk in and turn on that switch or we cut that ribbon, we can say: "Isn't this a wonderful thing? We have now created an opportunity to capture renewable energy resources. By the way, the payback's not going to come until seven years and six months from now, but that's okay because if that turbine will last us 20 years, that means we can get some net back on that after seven years and six months. It'll only be 12 years and six months where we get the payback before that is past its serviceable life and then we have to haul it away and recycle all that."

At least we'd be honest with ourselves, Madam Speaker, that what we're achieving – we are actually willing to talk about the facts so that we can deliver that in a way that is economically justifiable, financially feasible, and actually means something to Albertans.

Some of the other hon. members have talked about some of the other costs, and I think we have to look at that. It's not just the financial costs and the greenhouse gas costs and all those other things. We need to factor in: what about the birds that we're killing? What about the land that we take out of agricultural production? What about the talk of the low vibration waves that are rumoured that are also causing effects to residents and to cattle and to the birds that are out there as well?

Madam Speaker, I just worry. I'd like to think that everybody in this Legislature is for a good thing, for reducing our footprint, for reducing greenhouse gas emissions. But let's do it responsibly. Let's do it in a way that recognizes that just because we wave a magic wand of renewables, it doesn't mean they don't have a footprint and an impact. And let's know that. Let's know that it's five years and two months or seven years and six months or 12 years and three months that we're going to get a payback. I think that that's a responsible thing to do.

And I think that that's one of the flaws of this move forward, that we actually need to be responsible. We need to be willing to look at the facts. We need to be willing to balance the pros and the cons of everything we do. We need to look at the unintended consequences, and we need to play our own devil's advocate. I would challenge the members across the floor here to be that to themselves, to make sure that they take a look at the unintended consequences, to look at it from another perspective of "Why should we?" and "Why shouldn't we?" and balance those and make sure that we're doing the right thing.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments for the hon. member under 29(2)(a)?

Any further speakers to the amendment?

I'll call the question.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect or pray, each in our own way. Hon. members, let us empower and encourage one another to speak up about issues that are important to us, particularly those issues that are important to the residents we represent. Let us respect the differences of opinion amongst us and use these differences to work collaboratively for the greater good of this province.

Please be seated.

Hon. members, I would just like to take a moment before we proceed with the business this morning. I would like to introduce to members a new person at the table. As some of you know, I'm a bit challenged on the pronunciation of certain names, so I'm sure she won't hold it against me if I don't pronounce this correctly: Aurelia Nicholls. Aurelia was born and raised in Ontario and obtained her undergraduate degree, with a double major in history and business, at the University of Waterloo in 2003. Aurelia subsequently moved to Edmonton, which many of us have also done, and attended the University of Alberta, where she completed her law degree in 2006. Aurelia has been seconded from Alberta Justice, environmental law section, and is working in the office of Parliamentary Counsel as part of our professional development opportunity for the fall sitting. I would encourage all the members to please welcome Aurelia to the table.

Aurelia, I must tell you that this will be an experience like none other. Welcome.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 29

Vital Statistics and Life Events Modernization Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today at third reading to discuss the amendments outlined in Bill 29, the Vital Statistics and Life Events Modernization Act. While we have debated the details of the bill during Committee of the Whole, I'd like to take this opportunity to provide some real-life examples of the impact these amendments will have on the lives of average Albertans.

The first relates to new parents, Mr. Speaker. Once the online birth registration service is fully operational, new parents will be able to submit the required birth registration information online either at the hospital or at home instead of filling out a paper form that needs to be completed before they leave the hospital. Not only will this give new parents some time to consider important registration information like the name of their newborn; it will also reduce registration errors and increase the speed with which new parents can obtain a birth certificate by giving them the option to order it at the time of registration.

The next example relates to adoption information. Recently a young man, born in Alberta but adopted in British Columbia, contacted vital statistics requesting release of his original registration-of-birth document. After hearing about the requirement to provide the registrar with an Alberta court order, he decided against pursuing his option as he could not afford the time and expense to obtain a court order. As a result of the new amendments, Alberta will now be able to share this information with B.C.'s postadoption agency, allowing this young man to obtain birth registration information directly through that organization. Individuals born and adopted in Alberta already have this option through Alberta Human Services.

The third example involves the LGBTQ community. As a result of these amendments, an LGBTQ youth working with a social worker can now ask the social worker, with whom they have an established relationship, to complete the required letter of support to assist them in applying for a change of sex. This will make the process more comfortable for the youth and reduce barriers. For the transgender community, once the nonbinary marker is operational, an individual will have the opportunity to obtain a birth certificate with a nonbinary marker instead of a male or female marker.

Finally, commemorative certificates for many happy celebrations will now be possible, like a commemorative marriage certificate for a 50th wedding anniversary.

These are just a few examples of the many ways these amendments exhibit both compassion and inclusivity and positively impact Albertans while demonstrating this government's commitment to innovation in service delivery.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I wonder if you might read into the record the actual movement of third reading, if you would.

Ms McLean: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I move third reading of the Vital Statistics and Life Events Modernization Act.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Opposition House Leader. Good morning.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to congratulate the minister on moving third reading of an important piece of legislation this morning. I had the opportunity to speak at some length, as often is my weakness, about this particular piece of legislation at an earlier stage of the bill, and there are many wonderful things in this piece of legislation, as I pointed out at that time. I look forward to a smooth passage the rest of the way.

The Speaker: If the House will allow me, hon. member, I think I recall you saying earlier in the day that your son is very wise because he has recognized you as the person who makes the most points of order in this place.

Are there other members who wish to speak to Bill 29? The Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As one of the cosponsors of Bill 29, the Vital Statistics and Life Events Modernization Act, I'm pleased to rise today to speak in support of the bill. The way government handles vital statistics isn't talked about often, but it's important because every Albertan interacts with the government on vital stats at some point in their lives, whether they are getting married, welcoming a new addition to the family, or dealing with the death of a loved one. It's important that when Albertans have these interactions, they feel included and respected by their government, and that's why it's necessary that we modernize this legislation.

The amendments proposed in this legislation lead the way for Alberta to become one of the most inclusive and compassionate jurisdictions when it comes to our approach to life's major events. I'd like to highlight some of the key changes we're making to increase the inclusivity and compassion of our vital statistics practices.

The act clarifies that parents can choose any last name for their child. This helps families avoid costly and complex processes when changing a child's name. It empowers parents to use cultural naming conventions like placing the family name before given names, which is a custom in many cultures.

Our government respects the dignity of people with disabilities. The 1928 Sexual Sterilization Act was indicative of the misguided and dangerous eugenics movement. Thankfully, people with disabilities are no longer sterilized without consent simply because they have a disability, but still there are many leftovers from the eugenics movement, like section 27 of the Marriage Act. This section forced people with disabilities to obtain a doctor's note in order to marry. Some of the most important aspects of a fulfilling life for all of us are to be as independent as we are able, to be included in our communities, and to be loved. Like anyone, people with disabilities have the right to fall in love, to marry, to divorce if they need to, to have children if that's something they feel able to do responsibly, and the old legislation removed their decision-making power and left it in the hands of people who in many cases did not know them or only knew them by their labels.

Changing the requirements for people with disabilities to marry is an important step toward honouring their human rights and supporting their access to the same things we all want, a loving partner and a life in which we can enjoy fundamental freedoms. That's why we're amending the Marriage Act to remove the requirement for a doctor's letter for a represented adult to marry the person they love. At the same time we're giving guardians more time to intervene, if they feel compelled to, by extending the notice before a licence is issued from 14 days to 30 days. I know Albertans with disabilities from all over the province applaud this long-awaited change.

We are making changes to help families who have experienced the heartbreaking tragedy of stillbirth and reducing the burden on grieving parents by not requiring them to name a stillborn child in order to register the birth.

We're protecting the privacy of Albertans by restricting who can search for vital records such as registrations of birth, marriage, or death.

We're removing the need for legal name changes to be published in the Alberta Gazette, and we are removing the need to provide a reason for requesting a legal name change. These changes will help to protect the privacy and safety of people who are going through major life changes, those who may be transitioning their gender, or people who might be fleeing domestic violence.

We've heard from Albertans, who expect access to government services to keep pace with modern technology. This act enables a future online birth registration system that will make it easier for parents to register births. The act also paves the way for other services, including online marriage registrations. We are also introducing a new commemorative certificate to commemorate major life events like milestone wedding anniversaries or 100th birthdays, if we should all be so lucky to get there.

At the heart of our government's work is the idea that everyone in Alberta deserves to feel included and to be treated respectfully. I'm proud of this modernization of vital statistics legislation. It moves Alberta toward an even more inclusive and compassionate province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a) are there any questions for the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill?

Seeing none, are there individuals that would like to speak to third reading of Bill 29?

Seeing none, is the desire to bring closure to debate, if you're ready?

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Agencies, Boards and Commissions Review Statutes Amendment Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much and good morning, Mr. Speaker and members of the House. I rise today to move second reading of Bill 31, the Agencies, Boards and Commissions Review Statutes Amendment Act, 2016.

This legislation continues to implement results of the first phase of our review of agencies, boards, and commissions, also referred to as ABCs. Government initiated the review to ensure that agencies are relevant, effective, well governed, and continue to meet the interests of all Albertans. Phase 1 looked at 135 ABCs subject to the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act, excluding postsecondary institutions, which will be reviewed in phase 3 early next year.

As part of Budget 2016 we announced that 26 agencies will be consolidated or dissolved, saving $33 million over three years. My colleagues in cabinet have proceeded with dissolving identified agencies that were established by ministerial order. These entities do not require the repeal of legislation. However, three of the entities being dissolved were established by statute, and this legislation is necessary to dissolve them. The three entities are the Government House Foundation, the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta, and the Wild Rose Foundation.

An Hon. Member: And anything with that name.

Mr. Ceci: The Wild Rose Foundation.

Though these three entities are to be dissolved in the legislation, the functions will carry on within government or through other existing mechanisms. We do not anticipate any service disruption to Albertans.

The Wild Rose Foundation ceased operations in 2009. Since that time programs and services in support of the nonprofit, voluntary sector have been administered by the Ministry of Culture and Tourism. Government continues to support community-based organizations across this province with matching grants through the community initiatives program, or CIP, and the community facility enhancement program, or CFEP.

The Government House Foundation was responsible for guided tours of Government House. This function is now carried on by the Alberta protocol office.

The Seniors Advisory Council was established more than 25 years ago as a voice for Alberta seniors. The way government connects with seniors has evolved over those years, Mr. Speaker. Alberta now has a strong network of senior advocacy groups and organizations that accomplish the role of the council, including but not limited to the Alberta Council on Aging, the Canadian Association of Retired Persons, the Alberta Association of Seniors Centres, Seniors United Now, and many other groups that provide effective voices for Alberta's seniors.

The proposed legislation before you also includes provisions to enhance the administration and governance provisions in statutes for the Human Services appeal panels. There are five key changes that are reflected in the Human Services appeal panel statutes and regulations. These include: one, maintaining a quorum of three for all substantive appeal matters and allowing for a panel of one to convene for procedural matters and emergency situations, which will be identified later in regulation; two, the ability to appoint a provincial chair and vice-chairs for each of the panels; three, adding a three-month grace period to ensure no lapse in services when appointments expire; four, defaulting to the maximum term set in APAGA for quasi-judicial bodies, which is 12 years; and five, removal of the maximum cap to total number of panel members for family support for children with disabilities appeal committees. These enhancements are administrative in nature and will facilitate alignment to enable efficiencies in cross-appointments of panel members and consistency within the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act.

As part of our commitment to openness and transparency this legislation also includes a requirement for dissolved or amalgamated public agencies to disclose compensation if a board member or employee has met the disclosure threshold when the agency is dissolved or amalgamated. To enact this policy direction, an amendment to the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act is proposed and a regulation will set out the process for doing this.

Provincial agencies, boards, and commissions play a pivotal role in delivering innovative programs and services to all Albertans, which is why we are committed to ensuring that they are relevant, transparent, accountable, and well governed.

Additionally, this bill would amend the Travel Alberta Act to remove the requirement for the Deputy Minister of Culture and Tourism to be a member of the board of directors. We've identified that there could be a potential conflict for that deputy minister as an operational lead of the department and the minister's representative to the board.

I look forward to discussion on this bill and would ask that all members of the House support it. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this morning and speak to Bill 31, Agencies, Boards and Commissions Review Statutes Amendment Act, 2016. We'll call it the ABCRSAA act for short.

Mrs. Aheer: That's short?

Mr. Cooper: Okay. We're not going to call it that for short.

It is always a pleasure to rise in the House, and I do take a certain amount of pleasure when the government has begun to see some of the light and the truth in Wildrose policies.

Mr. Ceci: Amen.

Mr. Cooper: I appreciate the amen from the minister, and it's great to know that he's seeing the light. He can take some time to step into the light as well.

Oftentimes, Mr. Speaker, we hear from the government constantly, consistently telling us that our financial policies don't work, that we would cut every front-line worker from every ministry to save money. Of course, nothing could be further from the truth. This bill is an example of policies that include a Wildrose suggestion about shrinking some of the agencies, boards, and commissions and agencies of government all at a time that preserves front-line workers.

This bill is full of Wildrose savings policies. We've recommended them many times to the government to make government ministries and agencies, boards, and commissions more efficient. They, of course, when speaking about our policies, say that that would be impossible because it would lead to hundreds and thousands of job losses and we would have cut eleven billion dollars. It's just not true, Mr. Speaker, because here we see a common-sense solution that's been proposed by the Wildrose in Bill 31, which shrinks the size of government and will quite likely save money and at the same time preserve front-line services to Albertans.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I hope we see more bills like this put forward by the government, and I hope that they'll put forward a bill, like Bill 31, that takes aim at some of the bloat in government. You know, I think we can look at AHS and see that there are significant amounts of redundancies in an organization like that, that spends $14 billion or $15 billion a year. There is the opportunity to find efficiencies and redundancies that don't affect front-line services, and the government proved that that's possible through this piece of legislation. This bill shows that it can be done, that less government can provide the same services. B.C., for example, does more with less government spending when it comes to their health services and a number of other areas, and now this government is doing more with fewer ABCs and, hopefully, less spending of taxpayers' money.

Sometimes I get a little frustrated that I have to constantly defend our policies when they clearly work, and we can see that by this piece of legislation. The government likes to attack us when we ask questions about ways that we can find efficiencies, but even though they're attacking, it sounds like there is some listening when it comes to finding efficiencies here. I might just add that this was recommendation 5 in our 2016 Budget Sustainability Recommendations plan.

I do have a few questions, and I'd like to just put those questions out. I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that this particular stage of the bill doesn't really provide the best opportunity for the minister to answer the questions, but I think it's fair that we put some questions out before the House, and then that, I hope, will give the minister the appropriate time that he needs in order to respond to some of our concerns, perhaps at a later stage of legislation in Committee of the Whole, or I'm happy if he reaches out directly to me and I can share those with some folks.

First of all, you know, I'm curious to know how much the review of the agencies, boards, and commissions has cost so far. I know that there were some estimates at the beginning of what the costs were going to be, and I'd love an update for the House on the progress. I also understand that the government sometimes doesn't like to provide the House updates, but I think it's really important in the name of transparency if the minister would be able to let us know where we're at in the process, the costs, and whether or not the review costs are going to come in in a comparison against the savings and just exactly where we're at with this.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, the review is being done, as I understand it and has been spoken about, in three phases. It would be great if the House could get an update on the timelines and when we can expect the next phases to be finished and exactly what phase we're in and where we're at in that process so that we can have a bit of a sense as to the overall direction of the review of the ABCs.

A third question is: for each of the ABCs that were affected in this review, can the minister provide some more details and explanation behind the closure for the House to review? We want to ensure that there wasn't any mismanagement that's been reported to the people of Alberta and that the actions that have been taken were as appropriate as possible so that we can continue to be as transparent as possible.

Next, I'd just like to touch on the portion of the bill that's dealing with appeal boards. With the implementation of a single person being able to preside over an appeal in an emergency situation, does the government foresee appeals being granted more or less or about the same as the three-person panel appeal board? Obviously, you know, the minister has mentioned that there will be some emergency situations. It sounded like they will make an effort to limit those, but where does the government expect those situations to arise, and is it likely that those situations will be more or less likely or about the same? Will there be oversight to ensure that single-person panels are not approving appeals significantly more or less than the three-person panels?

Mostly, I want to ensure that the system is not being abused in the case where appeals are being granted at a higher rate in single-person appeals and encouraging people to create emergencies that might not actually be, just to try to get their appeal granted. I hope that we will ensure that in the case of an emergency the appeal is not more likely to fail if a single person is the appeal. I'm hoping that we can get some reassurances and that they can be provided to the House, that the single-person appeal will be as effective as a normal panel.

Mr. Speaker, my last line of questioning that I'm hoping we can get some feedback on in committee is around the emergency part of the appeal. The bill states that emergencies will be defined in regulations. It's seems we're beginning to see a trend, and I used to keep a list of quotes from former members of the government, including the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, the Premier, the Minister of Transportation, and the Minister of Education, from when they sat in the fourth party around this issue of moving concerns that really ought to be in the legislation into regulation. I know that when they were in the opposition, on a number of occasions they rose in the House to speak just to this issue and the concerns that it creates.

We have a significant issue around what is going to be an emergency and how it will be defined, and as the minister mentioned this morning, it's going to be defined in the regulations. Any time that that happens, it opens the process up to abuse. Now, I'm not saying that in every case regulations are abused, but I'm saying that it opens the process up to abuse and to a lack of transparency and to the ability for concerns to be raised in the future. I just believe, Mr. Speaker, that we are in the process of legislating. This is a significant portion of this bill, and how emergencies will be defined is of critical importance to this bill. So it's not something that should just be put into regulation but really needs to be dealt with here.

I have many questions as to why the government seemingly is continuing to do these sorts of things behind closed doors with less transparency, and it is very concerning. Why does the government want to define emergencies behind the closed doors of cabinet with less transparency? I don't know the answer to that, but I think it's critically important that we bring these things to the House so that we can all have input.

Mr. Speaker, this isn't just about – you know, oftentimes when I speak about bringing things to the House, it sounds like it's important just for us MLAs to know it. But when we bring things to the House, it's really about being transparent to the people of Alberta and being transparent to the folks in each of our constituencies that may have an interest in this piece of legislation as it may affect them with respect to appeals and Bill 31. I see no good reason why the government could not create an emergencies definition here in this bill for everyone to see and debate. It's concerning that the government is hiding behind the closed doors of cabinet to create these definitions.

We have seen a track record or pattern of when this does not work out well already in the short tenure of this government on bills like Bill 6. Without significant encouragement from Albertans and the opposition, it's quite likely that the vast majority of those regulations would have been created behind closed doors. Now we see that they are out there continuing to consult on those regulations, but that's not the case with most regulations, Mr. Speaker. Oftentimes it's the work of concerned Albertans and the opposition who bring these things forward. We shouldn't be having to force the government to be more open and transparent. They were elected on a platform of doing things differently than the former government, and we're seeing them do more of the same.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I have spoken in this House at great length about the need for committee and for consultations around pieces of legislation like this. You know, there are many really strong things. I still think that on the vast majority of legislation, it would be advantageous for it to go to committee so that experts in the field – and, obviously, many pieces of this legislation are very, very good with respect to the reduction of the overall number of ABCs, but on this emergency piece there's no reason why we shouldn't send it to committee and have some discussion around the definition and really work for a positive resolution on that.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I know that you've seen me move a lot of amendments that would send a bill like this to committee. I'm not going to do that this morning, much to the excitement of all members of the Chamber, quite likely. But I would encourage the minister to try to clarify a lot of the questions that we've raised, a lot of the concerns at a later stage in the bill.

I do look forward to being able to support this piece of legislation. However, if the minister is unable to provide that sort of clarification that I think Albertans deserve, it does – you begin to have to weigh the pros and cons of some of the concerns that still are in the bill and the pros of listening to some of our suggestions and ideas around preserving front-line services yet still working to correct the size of government.

Thank you for your time, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to the ongoing debate around Bill 31.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 31, the Agencies, Boards and Commissions Review Statutes Amendment Act, 2106. This bill is part of a larger effort to ensure that the government's agencies, boards, and commissions are relevant, effective, efficient, and well governed. While this bill is a small piece of the overall legislation, it can't be overlooked that there has been some good and important work being done at Government House Foundation, Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta, and the Wild Rose Foundation.

Ultimately, Bill 31 and the dissolution and amalgamations that have already occurred or will occur with the passing of the budget will make the ABCs function more effectively to the benefit of public interest. The proposed amendments will help make people the focus of the good work being done at the agencies, and it will have immediate benefits. I do recognize that this is good legislation, and it's focused on people and good governance. We don't need to clamour for praise on this, Mr. Speaker.

For instance, Mr. Speaker, proposed amendments will enable effective administration for the Human Services appeal panels through several changes that ensure consistent governance provisions. The Human Services appeal panels provide a fair, impartial, and independent quasi-judicial process for Albertans to appeal decisions made by the department. I think we have heard the proposed amendments from the Treasury Board, but I think I will just reiterate them.

The proposed amendments to the appeal panels include to remove maximum and minimum number of members or quorum per panel, remove maximum length of service as an appeal panel member, provide authority to designate a chair and more than one vice-chair, change authority to designate a chair from mandatory to permissive, remove power to designate the secretary as well as provide a three-month grace period for members to continue after appointments expire if they're not replaced.

A good example of the proposed amendments having an immediate positive impact is the removal of a quorum of at least three members. Currently there must be at least three panel members for all files brought before the panel. Dropping the quorum to one or two will remove unnecessary costs to the department and time delays in the proper disposition of appeals. Mr. Speaker, there are many times when certain procedural matters can be fairly adjudicated with one or two panel members.

Another example is the removal of the maximum of seven appeal panel members from the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Appeal Panel. The FSCD is the only Human Services appeal panel with a maximum number of members. Due to this maximum, when cross-appointments were done in May of 2016, members could not be appointed to this panel. This leaves this panel at a disadvantage, and any increase at all in the volume of cases would place tremendous strain on the other members and delay appeals.

In addition to improving Human Services appeal panels, Bill 31 continues the effort to provide the public with transparency in regard to public-sector compensation. It was identified that the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act does not provide sufficient authority to disclose compensation related to entities that are dissolved or amalgamated throughout the year. Amendments to the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act found in Bill 31 will require disclosure of compensation for public bodies that are dissolved or are amalgamated.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the three ABCs in this bill have done good work for the province; however, these boards have either been nonfunctioning or their functions have moved under the purview of a ministry. The Wild Rose Foundation has not been an active board since April of 2009, and the Ministry of Culture and Tourism was assigned responsibility for the foundation at this time. Much of the $6.5 million that the foundation had was used to support Alberta's Vitalize Provincial Voluntary Sector Conference, a conference used for training Alberta's volunteers. The future of the conference and new ways of delivering training and support to volunteers are being looked at as we speak.

The work of the Seniors Advisory Council has been valuable, and we thank members for their work over the years, but there are a number of organizations that work on behalf of advocating for seniors in this province. The seniors ministry is also working to clarify the Seniors Advocate role, and it is seen as being able to provide some of the reporting and awareness functions previously performed by the council. This is an annual cost savings of approximately $200,000.

Also, Mr. Speaker, the Government House Foundation will be dissolved; however, funds will be provided to the Alberta protocol office in order to continue public tours of Government House, keeping this historic building accessible to the public.

While, of course, there are cost savings with this bill, Mr. Speaker, I believe that we should focus on the efficiencies and good governance that is being created in our ABCs with this bill and the fact that this will be beneficial to the public that utilizes these services. As such, I urge all members of the Assembly to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions or comments to the Member for Calgary-Klein under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this morning to speak on Bill 31, the Agencies, Boards and Commissions Review Statutes Amendment Act, 2016. You know, I was kind of saddened, I guess, to hear these woeful words from the minister and the other members on the closing of the foundation in 2009, but I have words of encouragement for them. The Wildrose Party started around the same time as that was completed, so there are words of encouragement for you.

I'm also pleased to see that the government is looking for ways to reduce governance and to look for ways to improve spending practices. Just a few short days ago the Auditor General criticized this government because the AISH program was too hard to navigate. The AISH program is systematically failing severely handicapped people who cannot otherwise provide for themselves. There are roadblocks, inconsistencies, and inefficiencies, said Merwan Saher. Anyone who could not fill out the application forms properly or who could not navigate the system was being left in the dust. The assured income for the severely handicapped was riddled with severe issues, which failed a lot of the most frail in our society.

When it comes to the agencies, boards, and commissions that we're talking about today, we're seeing some positive steps, where the government evaluates a system and makes improvements. I know that AISH is not a board, but I'm happy to see that this approach is being used. The point is that we need to step back and evaluate the government's services. There are too many examples of where we need to do this.

For this simple reason alone I'm happy to see that with Bill 31 the government is at least, hopefully, attempting to make some positive changes to the system that is extremely broken. The need for a more transparent system is vitally important so that the inefficiencies are caught. When agencies and boards are held accountable through legislation for their actions and when things are brought to light, then and only then can the changes be made.

I am also encouraged to see that there will be some appeal board changes, especially in the face of emergencies. As we know, the Auditor General found grievous problems with the AISH appeal process. I'm also hopeful that some of the changes in this legislation will make things easier for decisions to be made quickly when emergencies appear.

It's also encouraging to see that this bill will bring about the beginning of a reduction in spending. For far too long this government has had a spending problem. This province spends more per capita than any other province in Canada, and this can potentially start to be curbed with this legislation. So that's where I'm happy with this legislation, which hopefully brings about further and more changes. By reducing the number of ABCs and by reducing the amount spent on the ABCs where inefficiencies lay, we may begin to see an improvement in how much the government will need in the upcoming budget. One can always hope, Mr. Speaker.

Right now almost 50 per cent of the provincial budget is spent supporting the ABCs, and of course a lot of that is for Alberta Health Services, but I am sure that with the help of the support in this bill, we can now begin the work of finding inefficiencies and improve and tweak the system. Overlapping of the ABCs will be, with any luck, done away with, and inoperative ABCs will be done away with completely. This will likely save the taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars. That encourages me.

Wildrose has been an advocate for smaller government for a long time, and getting rid of the front-line staff is not the answer. We have never advocated for this even though there may be some that have tried to paint us into that corner.

An Hon. Member: Are you sure?

Mr. Taylor: I'm sure about that. I'm absolutely sure that we've never advocated for that. We want to get inefficiencies out.

We have always run with a premise of getting rid of inefficiencies. Simply correct the doubling-up of services and agencies that no longer have a purpose. That's what I'm sure of. The need for increased transparency and open government is the belief that citizens deserve the right to documents and to proceedings that allow for effective public oversight. For far too long there's been an entitlement of secrecy in this government, and this should not be allowed in any democratic society. We have seen too many instances of abuse of power. People fail to perform their duties, and financial abuse occurs when they are not held accountable. [interjection] I know the minister is pointing on the other side to the third party, but they have to take responsibility now. They've been in power for well over a year and a half, so it's time to own up and start saying: we're responsible.

Transparency also encourages residents of Alberta to become more engaged in the legislation process. I can't stress how important this could be on bills. Take Bill 6, for example. This bill was made better by the engagement of stakeholders, who literally gave me hundreds, perhaps thousands of calls, e-mails, letters. Although it's not perfect, the bill itself, far from it, these farmers and ranchers helped us make that bill better than its original form. Greater transparency was needed on this bill. Too much of Bill 6 was done through regulation after the bill was passed.

So I'm somewhat hesitant but happy to see that the government is willing to start this process. Even though there are some improvements that could be made to this legislation, which, I feel, are important to discuss, my overall sense is that the legislation may be the beginning of improving services, decreasing our provincial budget, and beginning the process of restoring some trust in the system once again. This will hold our government to a higher standard, something that has been needed for quite some time.

This bill isn't perfect, of course. For instance, the bill states that emergency situations will be defined in regulations. I see the need for this somewhat as we never know what will be necessary to add. However, I know that I and other Albertans worry about what the government can do with these regulations. The unknown is what happens, and there are problems at times that arise from it.

Many times this government has said one thing and done another. We see how they've managed to push legislation through without thought to the taxpayers or the elected representatives of this House. I truly hope that this is not one of those times. I truly hope that some good will come out of the legislation, that emergency situations will be treated as such, an emergency. There's been so much waste. I hope that this will completely improve a broken system. It's time. It's time to start looking for a different way of making things better, just like what the Auditor General said about AISH. So many people are working inside a broken system and all of them working hard but failing to provide assistance to the most vulnerable.

That's sometimes how I view this government. All are working hard but working with a broken system. Take a step back and with the help of others, also known as the Wildrose opposition here, find the inefficiencies and truly put the pieces back for the good of the province. I know you were saddened with the closure of the Wild Rose, so you should be encouraged that we're willing to help. We're here to help. The government has been working hard, throwing money at this program and at that program without a thought to consequences for the taxpayer. For us to pursue action, we must develop a vision. We need a vision, and I sure hope that this government will step back a bit and stop forging on, thinking that money will change everything.

This bill, I have to say, is a step in the right direction: smaller government; the removal of ABCs that no longer serve any real purpose; the removal of the duplication of the ABCs; and, of course, the one that I hold really near and dear to my heart, reduced spending. I will give this government credit for those items. On this bill I just mentioned, one thing is for sure. The truth of this government's intention for this bill will eventually come out. Let's hope that they are all sincere.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) for the Member for Battle River-Wainwright?

Are there any other members who wish to speak to Bill 31? I recognize Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to speak today. I have to say that whenever we look at efficiencies within government, this is something that I myself take pride in. I would have to say that this is about Bill 31, Agencies, Boards and Commissions Review Statutes Amendment Act, 2016. From now on I'll be calling them the ABCs, the agencies, boards, and commissions. Now, it's important here to understand that as of November 5, 2016, we have 301 ABCs in Alberta, all working towards one goal, and that's to help Albertans.

I'd like to put some, I guess, understanding behind what it is exactly that we're trying to encourage here in Alberta. I keep thinking of how I can put this into something that I can actually move forward into an example so that I can get a better understanding, and the best way for me is commercial vehicle insurance. Now, as an accountant my past was to sit down with my clients and say: is your commercial vehicle insurance updated regularly? This is important because commercial vehicle insurance is very costly. The reason I bring this up is that almost immediately when you buy a new vehicle or a piece of equipment, you get insurance on it because you have a loan. It's automatic. You need to have it in order to be able to take that piece off the lot. So you go and put it on your policy, and you add it to the cost of that policy. Now, over the years what happens is that this equipment gets paid off, and you have to ask yourself: do I have the appropriate insurance on that piece of equipment?

What happens is that you'll find that you've insured it for more than its value, which means you are actually paying more than you need to. This is important because sometimes what happens is that you actually will be overinsured for something that you will never get a payout for on the policy. Now, when we're looking at this commercial insurance, you need to be looking at: do I have the appropriate insurance for this? Let's say, for instance, that you have a backhoe, and in that year or several years ago that backhoe's motor died and you can't find a motor for it anymore or its frame is no longer able to continue working. What happens is that usually it will sit in the yard, and they'll use it for parts for other pieces of equipment. The problem is that that backhoe never actually gets taken off the insurance, and when we're looking at this, that means that it's an added cost to the business, which is why I would sit with my clients and say: have you reviewed this?

This is why these 301 ABCs are important in this. We need to establish that it was set up for a purpose, that it has a mandate. At some point did it fulfill its mandate, or has its mandate changed? In this case we have the three agencies. We have the Government House Foundation, the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta, and the Wild Rose Foundation. They all started with a premise and a mandate. That was to encourage Albertans to move forward. This is something that is important, but over time something changed, and – you know what? – government didn't go in and review in this case the insurance policy to make sure that they were actually functioning the way they were supposed to.

Now, one concern that I did hear from across the other side here was that they are unfunding these organizations and in some cases taking those funds and putting them back into government. I'm not saying that this is not maybe needed, but we do need to ask ourselves: are we creating bigger government out of this? This is a question that I would like the government to answer. It is important that we are establishing that even though we are reviewing these ABCs. Are we actually finding savings here? Is there duplication that we are now moving away from, or are we creating duplication in the government departments?

Now, I understand that it's important that we identify each and every one, and I'm glad to see that the government is moving this forward because this is needed. This is a recommendation that Wildrose brought forward as well, and it's good to hear that the government is actually wanting to look at the opposition's route to saving money. Whether these advisory or decision-making, quasi-judicial, or governing bodies were all formed with the intent to provide Albertans with opportunity, we always need to be looking at how to do it better.

I do understand that we need ABCs. There is a function that they bring, and we need to be looking at each and every one of them. We need to know exactly what each one of them is doing, and it's healthy to have a review. I believe that it's long past the time that we have the review.

It is important that when we start looking at these agencies – you know, my colleague for Battle River-Wainwright did bring up the valid point that if there was an agency out there that would connect with the Wildrose Party, it would be the Wild Rose Foundation, but we recognize that the Wild Rose Foundation also needs to be able to fulfill a mandate, and it is responsible for us as MLAs to be looking at finding ways to reduce the burden on our taxpayers. We need to continually look at reducing the red tape that we are seeing within Alberta, and we also need to be looking at duplication, both of which have been something that the Wildrose has been committed to addressing and moving forward.

Now, I do see that we have about $33 million of potential savings over three years. I am curious as to exactly why we used three years. That does seem to be an odd time, and it seems like the government does use three years for a lot of its estimated savings or costs. I suppose that if it took three years to wind these three ABCs down, well, then that would be applicable, but from what I'm hearing, this is something that more or less is going to be done pretty much right away.

10:00

Now, we do need to note a concern that I know my colleagues have touched on. Section 6(3.1) reads:

The quorum to hear an appeal is 3 members, but an appeal may be heard by one member for procedural matters related to the appeal or in emergency circumstances provided for in the regulations

Could someone from the other side elaborate on how they came to the standard provision for emergency meetings? It does seem to be odd.

It would be nice to see exactly how the regulations are going to be rolled out. It does seem that a lot of this does seem to have – when it comes to regulations, an important part of the process when it comes to the bill, it would be nice to have an idea or even an outline of where these regulations are going. This is something that we have not heard from the government with most of the bills that have been brought forward, and this is a concern. Really, it's about the regulations, that really make the difference for a lot of these things being moved forward.

Mr. Speaker, while I say that this is a great move by the government to move forward with this, I do have concerns. My colleagues have brought concerns forward. I do believe that in this case I would encourage all the members of the House to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) to the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake? The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes. One brief question, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member talked about a concern about wrapping up the activities of these things immediately rather than, say, over three years if I heard his argument correctly.

Mr. Cyr: No. I was asking if you are wrapping them up over three years, or is this something that's immediate?

Mr. Mason: Okay. I guess the question I have is – as the President of Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance indicated at the beginning, a number of these ones that are being terminated have actually not been functioning for several years. They really don't exist except in theory. Is there a reason for delaying in that case? That was my question. I may have misunderstood his comment.

Mr. Cyr: I would like to thank the Government House Leader for the question. My question is: how is it that we're saving $33 million over three years? You brought up the point that we're terminating these things right now. That is my question. How did you come up with three years' worth of savings?

Mr. Mason: By consolidating some of the actuals.

Mr. Cyr: But why three years?

The Speaker: Hon. members, through the chair.

Mr. Cyr: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I got flustered. When you talk about savings, this is something that I'm very passionate about.

I guess the question is: how did you come up with three years? Why not five years? Why not six months? Is there a specific reason that you had chosen that time, and how is it that $33 million is the savings for that time frame? If the House leader can answer, that would be . . .

The Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any other members who would like to speak to Bill 31? I am presuming that we're prepared to move the second reading of Bill 31.

The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Sorry about that, Mr. Speaker. Just in response to my colleague and the questions of why three years and why $33 million, as he probably remembers, I opened my deliberations on this topic by talking about the dissolution of 26 agencies, boards, and commissions, three of which we are talking about today because they are in statute and need to be in this bill to dissolve them. The other 23 were amalgamations or dissolutions that didn't need to be raised in statute because they were created in other ways.

The three years, in particular, speak to the 2016 budget that was introduced in April of this year. It's a three-year fiscal plan, and we identified the savings over the three years of that fiscal plan, introduced in April. That $33 million is real money that will be taken out of government in addition to the hundreds of millions of in-year savings that we've found in 2015-16, 2016-17. There are real savings in addition to the $33 million, but the three years responds to the three-year fiscal plan that was introduced in April 2016.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I may have made a disconnect. Were you speaking under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Ceci: Yes.

The Speaker: I see. Seeing that any other individuals do not wish to speak to the bill, would you like to bring closure, hon. minister?

Mr. Ceci: No. I think I appreciate the members of the government side who spoke to this and are passionate.

An Hon. Member: How about the other side?

Mr. Ceci: I was going to get to that. I was.

I just want to reflect first on the government's side and thank them all for their understanding of the reasons to do this and ongoing support as we move forward with phase 2 and phase 3.

On the opposition side I know that there are many people who agree passionately with the direction of this government with respect to the removal of monies that are no longer needed for the presentation of organizations that aren't necessary any more. We will be working to get some answers for those people who have asked them, and in Committee of the Whole I'll have a portion of those answers. I won't have them all, but I'll get back to people in writing with respect to other things.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity and latitude.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 31 Agencies, Boards and Commissions Review Statutes Amendment Act, 2016

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam. Just with respect to some of the questions that were put earlier, I want to reflect on timelines for all phases of this work that we are undertaking. As members of this House have heard me say, before we started this work, there were 301 agencies, boards, and commissions doing the work of government. The amount of money they were involved with spending on behalf of government was significant, is significant. It amounts to somewhere in the neighbourhood of 20 billion more dollars.

The timelines for the review. We are in the second phase of that review now, where we're looking at the non-APAGA agencies, boards, and commissions. There are 146 of those that we are taking a rather in-depth review of to make sure that they're all providing the good cost of service, quality of service and doing what they were originally set up to do and asking the question: do they still need to be there, or can some other vehicle deliver their work in an amalgamated form, or if they're dissolved, can they be brought back into government or indeed some other way of delivering that service? So that's what we're in now, the second phase of that review.

The third phase is looking at the postsecondary institutions, and that is coincidental with this phase. We're doing that work now, and we're hopeful that by the new year we will be completed and make recommendations on phases 2 and 3.

Also on the agencies, boards, and commissions we're looking at the compensation of the 26 large ABC CEOs and designated office holders. We're looking at that to ensure that the remuneration of those individuals fits with a public-service approach to the delivery of their programs and services. So that work is ongoing as well.

The 26 agencies that have either been dissolved or amalgamated have been reported. You know, they're numerous, obviously. Some of them, as I've shared and as others have shared with you, stopped their functions a while ago, so they're in name only, and we've eliminated those, ensuring that the closures of those 26 agencies or amalgamations in some cases was as appropriate as possible. It's something we've circled back and made sure of. So we feel like we're on good ground that way.

With regard to the single-person appeal panels I can tell you that the part that hasn't seemed to be a concern to anybody is where there's a procedural matter: you know, someone hasn't shown up for their appeal, and the procedure needs to be that that appeal is now closed. We don't need three people to decide that. One person can make that administrative decision and give that judgment, that decision.

But where there are emergencies – and that was the question that was raised, too – and a single person is brought in to hear about those emergencies and those emergencies aren't defined in legislation, we are taking the opportunity to reflect before we put it in a statute. We're not going to put it in a statute because we don't think it would be the right thing to do, to put a definition for emergencies in statute. You can't actually put down in writing an understanding of every emergency a client would experience in their lives. So we're taking the step to gain input from others about how they would define emergencies, and then we'll take that and put it in regulation.

We're leaving that up to the Minister of Human Services to discern after gaining input from knowledgeable people about what an actual emergency could be defined as, and we're doing that, again, so we don't have to come back into this House, so that he doesn't have to come back into this House at some point and say: "You know, people are showing up for emergencies. We want to help them. We want to review their situation, their file, but the statute won't allow us to do that because it doesn't adequately define all aspects of that person's life that they are experiencing an emergency in." So I think that's the wiser course in this case. Certainly, we'll continue to monitor how that works through the Minister of Human Services.

Other questions: will a single-person panel be as effective as a panel of three, or will people be manufacturing emergencies, when ultimately they're defined in regulation, to get in to see an appeal panel? You know, those and more questions like that really need an experience, really need us to understand through experience, where the problems are before we're making judgment about people or circumstances or raising potential problems that don't exist.

With the caveat that I'll provide more information directly to the member with regard to things like the budget for the ABCs and where we are with that – and I mean the budget for the review process of the agencies, boards, and commissions and where we are with that – and, further, perhaps discussion with that member about any concerns that he has with regard to the 26 agencies that have either been dissolved or amalgamated, I think it's probably a better thing to zero in on as opposed to just saying: how are all of the dissolved or amalgamated agencies doing? Alberta Innovates was four agencies, and we've taken steps to harmonize and make one large agency, a more effective, efficient agency, out of Alberta Innovates than the four portions it had before. So it's continuing to operate.

Lastly, as we move forward, Madam Chair, to review the non-APAGA boards and then the postsecondary institutions, Albertans will always know that we are working to make the agencies, boards, and commissions system better. Where it is not working, we'll make improvements to ensure that there is value for money being provided to Albertans. We took some pains to open up the whole recruitment process to agencies, boards, and commissions through a new boards.alberta.ca website. I heard yesterday that that website has had I think it was 14,000 Albertans either seek it out or apply for different agencies, boards, and commissions as a part of our recognition that, really, the old system of getting appointed to an agency, board, or commission in this province was out of date and not transparent.

So with a lot of pride I say that Albertans, when they know they have the ability to step forward and to help out this province and to give their best, have come out in droves to put forward their names. Now, not every Albertan will be suitable for every agency, board, and commission that needs to be . . .

An Hon. Member: What?

Mr. Ceci: Not every Albertan will be suitable, but many who were suitable had no avenue, had no way in to put their name forward because they, frankly, weren't connected in ways that the previous government required people to be connected. We are making things more transparent, we are making things more open, and that's one small example of how that has occurred.

I'd be remiss if I didn't mention during this debate that I know Albertans are watching us. They're learning lots about our agencies, boards, and commissions. They now know that they can go to boards.alberta.ca and apply and learn more about the agencies, boards, and commissions or put their name forward. All Albertans deserve the opportunity to serve, and a transparent posting and recruiting process is a way to do that.

I hope that that answers some of the questions or all the questions that have been posed to me as the main mover, and I appreciate my cosponsors for this.

I'll turn it back to you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments with respect to this bill? Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Madam Chair. When I returned to Alberta in 2012, I got involved with several groups, and I began hearing from, certainly, many Albertans in my community but, really, Albertans throughout the province. They were complaining about the number of boards, agencies, and commissions and the amount of money that was going into them, and they didn't seem to see anything visible or tangible to show for all of those ABCs. I listened quite intently, and certainly now our government has also listened. This act to amend is presented, and we're debating it.

This has been an interesting process for me. I watched the dissolving of the three entities, and the one that, I guess, stood out for me was the Seniors Advisory Council, which was one of those entities. I'm a senior, in case you didn't notice, and I'm a member of several senior groups, so I felt that this is where I should really focus my comments in this debate. Initially I felt a little concern that seniors' issues would not be heard if this council was dissolved. Having said that, though, I know that there's a huge network of seniors' advocacy groups and organizations which provide input to the government on seniors, and I know this because I was part of those groups, and I did advocate for seniors as a member of those groups.

The two seniors' groups of which I'm a member are Nord-Bridge Seniors Centre and the National Association of Federal Retirees, and they continue to provide to me feedback, concerns, recommendations. I continue to advocate on these issues as an MLA, issues such as the federal-provincial health accord. I reach out to seniors in Lethbridge-East on a regular basis, in fact at least twice a month, to get their thoughts on a number of issues. I receive plenty of feedback, and that feedback I share with the minister of seniors and whatever other ministry those issues happen to relate to.

Last week I was very fortunate to facilitate a session with representatives from seniors' groups across the province and the Minister of Finance. The purpose was to garner input as part of prebudget consultations. There were about 19 groups represented, and that actually represented tens of thousands of Alberta seniors. The southern Alberta branch of NAFR reported to me their participation in a town hall meeting the week of November 8 in Edmonton with interested stakeholders, provincial government officials, and the Canadian Mental Health Association to share their views on the development of the new federal-provincial health accord.

These are just a couple of examples of ongoing information and issue-sharing that is being done on behalf of seniors. There are community think tanks such as Public Interest Alberta, the seniors' task force, the Canadian Mental Health Association, even the Fraser Institute, who share with the government on a regular basis about seniors' issues.

NAFR actually held eight town halls across the entire country during November to discuss seniors' health care issues. At the Edmonton meeting there were 120 people in attendance. Some of the issues discussed included the federal government's level of financial support to the province's health care and pharmacare strategy, the issue of dementia. The recommendations coming from these may in fact save some money. Long-term care, home care, elder abuse, palliative care, et cetera, are all issues considered, discussed, and brought forward.

As you can see, seniors' issues are being brought forward from many advocacy groups. Recommendations were given on many of the focus areas given the unsustainable health care costs across the country. Because of this ongoing input from advocacy groups such as the ones I've mentioned, I as a senior feel that the dissolution of the Seniors Advisory Council is a reasonable action, and I stand in full support of this bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in support of Bill 31, the Agencies, Boards and Commissions Review Statutes Amendment Act, 2016. I will also respond briefly to the question raised by my colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Bill 31 includes many things, but it also includes some amendments to legislation and regulations governing Human Services appeal panels, of which there are six. These amendments will make sure that the appeal process remains efficient and that the concerns respecting services are heard in a timely manner and in a fair and consistent manner. These six appeal panels are established by different means. Some of them are in legislation, some in regulation, some established by ministerial orders. They relate to assured income for the severely handicapped, child care licensing. They're under the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act, the Income and Employment Supports Act, and the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Services Act.

These panels provide a fair, impartial, independent quasi-judicial process that enables Albertans to appeal certain decisions that are made by the department. Last spring we decided that as we move towards more person-centred and more integrated service delivery, we will have these panel members appointed to hear a spectrum of supports, so they will be approved for cross-appointment to these panels. Any panel members can hear about PDD, AISH, income support, a variety of concerns, and look at those things in a more holistic manner. This will also help us manage appeal time because some panels are busier than others, so it will give a consistent kind of workload to the panel members across the spectrum.

Certainly, with these amendments it's our hope they will create administrative consistency with respect to the quorum requirements. Quorum requirements are not the same across the board. Some just require one, some require three, and some say three to seven.

Chair and vice-chair appointments, the grace period for expired appointments, maximum years of service, and maximum number of members allowed on the panel: I will briefly touch on these changes.

As I said, the quorum requirement will be amended to allow a quorum of three for all substantive matters and a quorum of one for procedural matters or emergency hearings. That was the question of the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, so I will address that.

Then the designation of a provincial chair and several vice-chairs will be clarified to ensure that the leadership structure is there to support cross-appointments of the panel members.

We are adding a three-month grace period to all appeal panels, allowing members to continue to serve for a short period of time after their term expires so that the process continues without any disruption.

The references to the maximum length of service will be removed from all pieces of legislation and regulation, and by doing so, what will happen is that the default length of the term, which is a 12-year standard in the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act, will apply to the term limits. So there will be no limit set in the specific pieces of legislation. Rather, we will default to the APAGA 12-year default term, so they won't be able to serve more than 12 years.

Finally, the cap on the maximum number of appeal panel members will be removed to allow members to be cross-appointed to all six panels. Currently that cross-appointment is not possible for the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Appeal Panel, which has a maximum membership of three to seven members.

The concern regarding the one-member panel, when that will be used: it will only be used for very specific purposes. When determining, for instance, whether a panel has jurisdiction, one member can adjudicate on that procedural thing and make a judgment. But for all substantive matters there will be a three-member panel to hear the merits of the appeal. For instance, for a person with developmental disabilities: the authorizing legislation provides the minister with the authority that they can establish a panel of one member, but in practice that was never the case. It was always a three-member panel. Sometimes people appeal and then they abandon those appeals, so we still need to adjudicate and make a judgment that the appeal has been abandoned. In that case maybe a one-person panel will be able to make that decision.

Then there is the question: what will constitute an emergency? Human Services will be looking at different hearings and will develop a regulation on what constitutes an emergency. That provision will provide us with the flexibility that if somebody is in palliative care or something and their appeal is scheduled for some later date, in case of an emergency, to make sure that the benefits are made available in a timely fashion, we can constitute a panel of one. But I just want to reiterate that in all circumstances appeals will be heard by a panel of three members on all substantive matters.

In short, I fully support Bill 31 and the changes that we have proposed with respect to Human Services appeal panels, and I ask my colleagues to do the same. These amendments will make our panels, our hearings more efficient, more fair, more consistent across the spectrum of our services, and they will allow us to do cross-appointments so that the appeals and concerns of Albertans can be looked into from a more holistic perspective and can be addressed as quickly as possible.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: I will recognize the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. Bill 31, the Agencies, Boards and Commissions Review Statutes Amendment Act, 2016, appears to be one of those omnibus pieces of legislation. Sometimes omnibus legislation can create some difficulties moving forward. I would suggest that this time we're mostly doing some housekeeping with regard to things that need to be tidied up, agencies and boards that have not been operational for a period of time. I would agree that these are things that government needs to continue to review to be sure that their bodies of governance are relevant to the day and that they are doing the work that's necessary at the time.

I want to thank the ministers for speaking to some of the questions that we've had already. That's very helpful in moving forward in a way that is transparent and open, and it allows us to feel a certain level of comfort with regard to the process that's being moved forward. Reducing the size of government bodies that serve little or no use at this time is important work to do and also moving forward with some amalgamations where we can see that there's opportunity to tidy things up.

Moving two, three, four bodies under one umbrella can be a very effective and a very efficient way of doing things. With that being said, there is a certain amount of review that has to continue to be sure that that's working effectively also as we move down the road. I know there were some questions with regard to Alberta Innovates moving under one umbrella. The member from the Liberal Party did bring forward some concerns. Again, it's important that we continue to review and be sure that we are providing Albertans with open, accountable, transparent governance in all of these situations.

Following on with the review of agencies, boards, and commissions, the ABCs, Bill 31 is going to eliminate three more that needed a statute in order to be eliminated, and that's a good thing. One of these is the Wild Rose Foundation, a funding agency for volunteers and nonprofit organizations. These volunteers and nonprofit organizations are very important in all communities right throughout the province, so we want to be sure that we are continuing the work that the foundation did.

Programs affiliated with the foundation moved into the ministry in 2009, so the foundation was, effectively, not being utilized. The financial support for this sector is available through the community initiatives program and the community facility enhancement program. While I know that the Wild Rose Foundation was popular with some – and I do love the name; I like the name – I'll be watching to see whether we have covered it with the CFEP and CIP programs, and I think we might. This is where we can recognize that sometimes there is overlap within government and that efficiencies can be gained by moving things and amalgamating things.

The next agency to be eliminated is the Government House Foundation. I never understood why we needed an agency separate from Alberta Infrastructure to oversee a provincial heritage asset. We don't have an Alberta Federal building foundation per se, so I believe that this is a good move again.

The next ABC to disappear is the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta. It was set up at a time when we had no seniors ministry. The roles and responsibilities of this body have largely been assumed by the ministry and activism opportunities, as the Member for Lethbridge-East has spoken about, and taken over by other seniors' organizations. I also would agree that the move to eliminate that advisory council is necessary in this bill as we do some housekeeping to tidy things up.

Bill 31 will also make sure that the finances of these bodies that are being wound down will be disclosed.

Now, I mentioned that this bill is omnibus, and there are some things here that have nothing to do with ABCs. The Travel Alberta Act is amended to remove the deputy minister from being mandated to be part of the board of Travel Alberta. It will now be up to the minister to decide if they want their deputy minister there or not, to sit on the board of Travel Alberta. Perhaps the Minister of Culture and Tourism could provide some insight into why this move was made. Fundamentally, I don't see anything wrong with it, but some insight into that could be useful.

The next omnibus part of this bill deals with amendments to six acts, and we received some information from the Human Services minister on how that's moving forward: the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act; the Child Care Licensing Act; the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act; the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act; the Income and Employment Supports Act; and the Persons with Developmental Disabilities

Services Act. The changes to all these laws are said to make the appeal panels transparent and set panel sizes and quorum, important parts of governance.

Bill 31 allows an appeal panel of three people to be represented by one person in the case of emergency and that emergency situations will be defined in regulations. This is a part where I find there is a little bit of a lack of transparency. The minister, I must admit, did speak to it and gave some clarity, but whenever we get to the point in pieces of legislation where we have emergency situations that will be defined in regulations, on this side of the House we can never be sure that all of our concerns are being answered when it's done behind closed doors. So we will trust the government to do what's right for all Albertans in this case.

This makes things nice, clean, simple, and easy to understand. Small "c" conservatives like less government. Keep-it-simple government is part of this drive to small, efficient government, and I would suggest that this is a good thing.

Madam Chair, no red flags come up, from my perspective, with this piece of legislation. I am pleased that this bill does the housekeeping necessary to eliminate three of the ABCs that were already being served in other manners. We look forward to additional ABCs being eliminated or amalgamated, whichever the case may be, to find those effective cost savings and efficiencies.

I must also note, as the Opposition House Leader had noted in his comments at second reading, that it is important that we move forward in a way that is very open and transparent. Accountability is important, not only for members in this House but also to be fully accountable and transparent with all Albertans. I believe that that's the best way to gain trust with Albertans, when they can feel that no political games are being done with regard to agencies, boards, commissions, and the like and that no political games were done in the past, no political games are done in the future. Albertans will reward governments that are open and transparent, I believe.

With that, I would suggest that this bill is a necessary bill to help improve and move towards more effective and efficient government. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 31, the Agencies, Boards and Commissions Review Statutes Amendment Act. The ABC review and this act give government the authority to dissolve the Wild Rose Foundation, the Seniors Advisory Council, and the Government House Foundation.

The government is committed to managing the province's resources in a fiscally responsible manner. Our review of agencies, boards, and commissions is identifying what is working and what could be improved and what is no longer providing value to Albertans. As announced with Budget 2016, government has decided to amalgamate or dissolve 26 of the 136 agencies explained in the first phase of our review. Most of this is now complete, but three agencies require legislative amendments for their dissolution. This bill will accomplish that.

I would just like to take a minute to talk about Government House Foundation. The Government House Foundation is a historic site, including promoting the public interest and receiving donations of historic objects and art. I am pleased to say that the Alberta protocol office will continue to operate public tours and special events at Government House, and the foundation's assets will be transferred to the department. The projected cost savings are approximately $40,000. However, $23,000 of this would be transferred to the Alberta protocol office to support continued public tours at Government House, so the cost savings would be $17,000. I would just also like to say that the board, which has four women and four men, which is great because that means there is gender parity, had four members' terms expiring on April 30, 2016, and the remaining four in 2017.

I just wanted to have my minute to talk about Government House and the great things that it does for the public and for all Albertans and how open and transparent this bill is. I think that we are doing a great job as a government to make sure that there is transparency for all Albertans, and I just would like to ask every member of this House to support this piece of legislation.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity just to speak briefly to this. I won't be long because I along with my colleagues find it quite easy to support the bill. Obviously, it is in the interest of smaller government and savings and efficiency, and of course that's something I think we can all support. I'm glad to support it. I won't repeat a lot of what's been said.

I'm also glad to see that in this particular case, from a culture point of view – I need to refer to the Auditor General's report which identified these items, that flagged the effort on this. I realize that this was attempted once already, and the entries had to be reversed. I'm glad to see that the government is coming back and doing it right this time, getting the process right. I do think that's important when you're dealing with the assets and the procedure, the legal proceedings, those kinds of things. Congratulations to government for coming back and getting it right this time.

Also from a culture point of view, the one question I might have had would be if some of the benefit of these organizations was being lost. In this case it clearly isn't. For instance, the preservation of the asset of Government House and all of the benefits that go with that is continuing and will continue to benefit Albertans, so I appreciate that.

The Wild Rose Foundation: of course, the support for nonprofits and volunteers is extremely important. I want to continue to say that that needs to be a part of what happens in Alberta because they really are the ones who in many cases are not just the culture makers but also the culture carriers. They do much of the work. They have the vision. They have the donations. They just do a lot of the work, so my thanks and my congratulations to all of them.

The only last thing I might say about the Wild Rose Foundation is: my thanks to the Minister of Finance for clearing up any possible future confusion about the use of the name. There could be the possibility of confusion when we form the next government as to conflict of interest, those kinds of things, so thank you for clearing up the name and making the path clear for us. Congratulations.

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I do have a couple more questions based on the answers that I got from the Minister of Finance. From the answer that we got, it was $33 million, to go back to the nuts and bolts on this, over three years. My understanding is that that would mean that $11 million was, I guess, saved by the dissolutions, amalgamations, and consolidations. I'm trying to get what was said by the minister from the press release that was given out, and I'll quote the press release that was sent out on November 9. "Those agencies were among 26 agencies, boards and commissions identified for consolidation or dissolution in Budget 2016, an initiative that will save $33 million over three years." Now, I guess there's a little bit of confusion. It makes it sound like because you shut them down, you're going to save $33 million.

Now, just to be clear here, I heard from the Member for Calgary-Klein that you're going to be reviewing some of the functions that were being done and moving those functions, maybe, into government departments. They can correct me if I'm wrong on this. Is this $11 million, like, a gross amount for just shutting down the money that you're putting into these different commissions, boards, and agencies, or is this $11 million in net savings that Albertans and taxpayers will see? This is an important part. We're showing through government press releases that we're going to be saving money because of an action of this bill. I would say that it could possibly be shown as misleading if we're actually either spending the exact same inside of government or we're net zero for savings. If the Minister of Finance could answer this question. Again, it doesn't mean that I won't be supporting this bill even if it is net zero because I do believe that bringing simplicity to our agencies, boards, and commissions is admirable, but I would like to hear a little bit more about the $11 million.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak?

Mr. Ceci: With regard to the savings that have been identified, this bill, that's been brought before, is not the trigger for all that's happening. That started when we started phase 1 of our review, in April 2016. We are seeing those savings in terms of bringing administrative functions back into government for agencies that have been dissolved whose function was still necessary but could be delivered better by government, administrative savings; savings in salaries that have occurred as a result of not needing the executives or the staff who were responsible for either those dissolved agencies or the consolidated ones. So the savings occur as a result of paring back the number of agencies and amalgamating agencies and dissolving agencies.

That $33 million has been identified over three years. It is monies that won't get spent as a result of the actions, and that's just the start of it, Madam Chair. We still have 146 agencies in phase 2 of the review that are getting examined for similar kinds of opportunities.

Not so much on phase 3, which is the postsecondary institutions. There won't be that sort of direction taken in that area. You know, are they functioning as well as they can possibly function, and do they have the necessary board strength and governance strength they need? We know that there are a number of postsecondaries that are waiting for appointments to their boards and governance structures, and we're working quickly. I know the Minister of Advanced Education is working as quickly as possible to make sure that they have the necessary people in place to continue to drive forward their important mission and function for postsecondary education in this province.

Thank you.

The Chair: Just before I recognize the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, just a general reminder that when we are in committee, yes, we've got a little more freedom to move around. But it's difficult for me as chair, when individuals are standing, to determine who actually is standing to speak. So if you want to have a conversation, taking a nearby chair would be appreciated. Thank you.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I guess one of my follow-up questions to this, then, is – it sounds like the government is dissolving these. My question to the Finance minister is: are we moving all of the staff and management into government directly?

Has there actually been somebody that has been, I guess, reduced in the government agencies, boards, and commissions? If not, then it does appear that all we've done is said: we were funding these agencies, boards, and commissions by $11 million, and then we moved those people all inside the government, but that $11 million is now saved because they're no longer in there. That, again, is a concern that I've got with this. In essence, my concern here is that it's a shell game. It's just moving around the actual cost to taxpayers to a different part of the government. Has there actually been a reduction in the management and the staffing within these agencies, or did they just actually all move into the government and become government employees?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Chair. To answer the member's question – I think the Finance minister did quite a good job of that, actually – it depends on the agency or the board, and in this case there will be differences. For example, the seniors' advisory panel will be completely dissolved, and some of the functions will move under the ministry, so there are direct savings, as the Finance minister said, as a result of salaries being reduced. I don't think it's the shell game that the member is alluding to. Also, Madam Chair, I just wanted to . . . [interjections] Yeah. That there are no net new positions is the bottom line on that.

Also, Madam Chair, I just wanted to clarify something on the Travel Alberta piece that the member from Morinville and surrounding area alluded to.

Mr. van Dijken: Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you.

What was actually in the legislation prior to this bill was that the Deputy Minister of Culture and Tourism was automatically appointed to the board. With Bill 31 what we want to do is remove that provision from the act because we thought that there was some potential conflict of interest with the deputy minister sitting on that board as the deputy minister does, of course, participate in policy discussions and finance discussions. So we thought that it was appropriate that we remove that individual from the board.

That's all at this time. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Yeah. Just for follow-up on that, the way I understood it was that the minister still had the ability to appoint to the board, but maybe I misunderstood the way the wording was. It sounds from the comments that there will not be that opportunity for the minister to appoint the deputy minister to the board. The way the comments were worded was essentially: it will not happen again.

Mr. Coolahan: Madam Chair, the member is correct.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Yeah. Thank you, Madam Chair. I think there is a necessity to also identify some of the concerns that were raised by my colleague for Bonnyville-Cold Lake with respect to one of the agencies that was dissolved. I do know that there are a number of those individuals, if not all of those, who have found a spot within the ministry now to work. So it can be perceived as possibly saving money by efficiencies in dissolving agencies, but in this respect the majority of the cost of employees under the agency now becomes a cost of government under the ministry, so possibly we're not saving as much as we think we are through this whole process. It's something to be very aware of and to continually work to make sure that we're delivering the services necessary in an efficient and an effective manner at all times for Albertans.

Mr. Coolahan: Just a quick note on a question that was asked previously, Madam Chair. The total ABC review cost is $800,000, and so far we have spent $630,000, making this an excellent value for taxpayers.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions or comments with respect to the bill?

If not, are you ready for the question on Bill 31?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

[The clauses of Bill 31 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Chairperson. I move that the committee now rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Rosendahl: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 31.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.

Bill 25 Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act

[Debate adjourned November 10: Mr. Yao speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to Bill 25, the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act. Immediately I'm struck by the fact that once again we are discussing yet another way the government intends to limit this province, yet another way the government is putting its clumsy fingers into the management of our economy, yet another way the government is regulating away our prosperity, yet another way the NDP is treating Alberta as an obstacle to be managed as opposed to a place of limitless potential to be unleashed.

Madam Speaker, I'm also struck that the government is regulating away the survival of many Alberta businesses, communities, and towns. My goodness, I think of the number of welders, fabricators, and construction people as far away from the oil sands as Bow Island, as Medicine Hat, as Redcliff, as Foremost that provide valuable products and services to the oil sands, that provide valuable jobs for families, for the youth, and here we are limiting – limiting – that opportunity.

Madam Speaker, I think it was actually Liberal leader Laurence Decore who said that the government must be careful that its arms do not become tentacles. Government must avoid the temptation to believe that they can micromanage and command the economy to do their bidding with every tinkering and decree. This government has clearly not heeded such wise advice.

Sometimes I wonder if this NDP government wouldn't actually prefer that they were governing somewhere else, somewhere without a robust oil and gas industry, but instead, alas, they make Alberta in their utopian image. I believe that the Premier said in this House yesterday that business in Alberta would have to – would have to – reposition itself to the NDP's agenda. She used the word "reposition." I humbly submit that it is perhaps the NDP government that should reposition itself to Alberta, to Albertans' communities, families, and needs. But, Madam Speaker, until that happens, we're here to talk about more limitations.

I find it interesting that the NDP's panel of advisers on the newly created oil sands advisory group hasn't even completed its work yet, and here they are charging ahead anyway. The OSAG was supposed to give a somewhat apolitical and legitimate gloss to the NDP's actions, trying to cover this rigid dogma with yet again the appearance of objective analysis, but of course that really didn't materialize, did it? Instead of giving any sort of reasonable expert advice, it seems that hardly a week can go by without yet another member of the NDP-appointed panel revealing their true feelings about Alberta's energy sector.

They started out on the wrong foot with a co-chair, another signatory of the Leap Manifesto, by the way, comparing our industry to a mythical place of doom and evil straight out of a fantasy book. Though you think it might stop there, you'd be mistaken. Madam Speaker, yet another OSAG member insisted that, no, we don't need pipelines. She even sent out a fundraising letter to that effect. Just imagine, an NDP appointee living off the Albertan tax dollar making fundraising appeals for her eco-radical buddies. We are past the point of parody now.

Finally, I'd just like to note that in response to an economist analysis that we need increased pipeline capacity, the same co-chair of the NDP's advisory group insisted that, no, we don't because of the limits we're putting into place. It is her belief that we must charge towards a future of, and I quote, managed decline. A future of managed decline: fewer jobs, fewer opportunities, less wealth, less opportunities to help our communities and our families. Madam Speaker, I never thought I'd see the day when the Alberta government – the Alberta government – would be talking about managed decline. From this cap itself: $154 billion of managed decline estimated, never mind all the spinoff.

Madam Speaker, in a province of free enterprise, economic liberty, innovation, and hard work, in a province that brought us the Alberta advantage, in the best jurisdiction in the entire world, here we are talking about how to manage our decline. So perhaps it's not really a surprise that the NDP is charging ahead with our decline even though they don't have the completed analysis of their advisory panel. We all know what's going to come out of that, and the NDP does, too. If they didn't know, they wouldn't have appointed them. I thought it was interesting that the managed decline comment came in response to a discussion about pipeline capacity. Pipelines in this cap are very much related in that they are capacity issues, wealth issues.

The analysis concluded that even with both Trans Mountain and Keystone XL we would reach maximum capacity within a decade. The same economist also stated that getting Keystone XL would mean a reduction of $5 to $6 per barrel in the price differential, the discount that producers here must accept to sell Alberta's product. That's $5 million to $6 million every day for tax revenues, for services, for wealth for our employees, for wealth for our investors: managed decline.

But building capacity is not really the goal here, is it? Despite the fact that the world needs our oil and gas, despite the fact that eastern Canada buys 800,000 barrels a day from Saudi Arabia, despite the fact that we produce it here in an incredibly responsible way, and despite the fact that our oil sands contribute a fifth of 1 per cent in global emissions – a fifth of 1 per cent – while supplying the world with ethically produced energy, Madam Speaker, despite all of these things the government feels a strong need to cap.

This government has a remarkable faith, a blind faith, in its ability to create economic growth and innovation, growth for its chosen winners, of course, its chosen winners by decree. They seem to believe that enough central control, enough bureaucracy, enough regulatory hurdles, and enough tax will suddenly create a bustling and booming economic climate. Under their all-knowing and watchful eye they think they can guide production as they see fit. And it seems that each intervention spurs another. Every time the NDP meddles, they create the need for more, and all the while business confidence is in free fall, people are nervous and anxious, investment is limited, and the economy contracts.

Madam Speaker, I had breakfast this weekend with an oil and gas investor, and I was told that when his company buys a field that straddles Alberta and Saskatchewan or straddles Alberta and B.C., before they close on the deal, they ensure that they sell off the Alberta part. They don't want to be part of the managed decline. They don't want to be part of this government picking winners and losers. They want the right to create jobs, take care of their communities, and build wealth for all Albertans.

There is a very real temptation for politicians to enter this building and believe they know best about all facets of the economy and the way that Albertans choose to live, build, and raise their families. Rather than getting out of the way, there's a temptation for a government to insert itself where it shouldn't and create artificial constraints where they ought not be. The government's limitless belief in itself creates limits on people everywhere else. I'd mentioned the jobs that are going to be lost in Bow Island, Medicine Hat, Redcliff, and Foremost, never mind Leduc and Beaumont and Fort McMurray and Sherwood Park and everywhere where this will impact communities and families.

Expanding government boundaries into the space naturally requires other entities, whether individuals or businesses, to feel the squeeze and leave or quit. I'm afraid that, contrary to the NDP's belief that it can create by limiting, that it can encourage growth by constraining, and that it can spur investment by intervening, the reality is that growth is a function of people going about their lives and producing for themselves, their families, and their communities.

We are not going to create lasting economic growth and productivity by putting limits and managed decline on our strongest sectors. In fact, estimates have put our total expected loss as a result of this policy at roughly $150 billion. One hundred and fifty billion dollars gone from our economy. These are dollars that can no longer be used to invest, to hire, to donate, to build, to enjoy, to share, to live, to help.

Ironically, while the government boasts about diversification, they may actually be achieving it by driving down our powerhouse industries. They have bought into the myth that we can incentivize growth in smaller sectors by punishing the larger ones.

Madam Speaker, I cannot support this bill. I cannot support further limitations on our economy and on Albertans, who have created such extraordinary wealth, expertise, innovation, and opportunity already. Wherever I go around Alberta, Albertans are telling me the same thing. I reject the flawed idea that government alone can direct us to do better things when I have already so clearly seen what the unleashed potential of Albertans has achieved. We do many things incredibly well in this province, perhaps none better than excellent energy production. It's time that this government respects what people here can do, have done for all of us in Alberta.

Madam Speaker, thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments for the previous speaker under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to move an amendment if that's all right. Do you want me to read it now?

The Deputy Speaker: If you could just wait a second until I get a copy of it.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Drysdale: On behalf of my colleague from Calgary-Lougheed I would like to move that the motion for second reading of Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

11:20

Madam Speaker, I rise today to issue a hoist amendment on Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, and have the requisite number of copies to do so. The rationale for this hoist is based on a lack of stakeholder consultation and the haphazard rationale to rush this bill into law while the oil and gas industry is facing the ill effects of the NDP world view as well as the low oil prices.

Madam Speaker, I know, in speaking with industry representatives in Calgary, that small to medium-sized oil and gas businesses have not been consulted on this plan. These companies employ thousands of Albertans and Calgarians, and they are vital to the Alberta economy. Why this government has chosen to forge ahead with such a plan when we are facing record unemployment levels within our province has me perplexed. This is a time when we need to be incentivizing all small and medium-sized start-ups. This legislation sends a very poor signal to business. Bill 25 will undoubtedly strand a significant portion of oil sands resources and limit Alberta's economic growth potential by preventing responsible growth once the cap is met.

This bill also favours current players by artificially limiting the size of Alberta's oil sands market. This only serves to stifle competition and create unnecessary barriers to future participants. Additionally, by failing to provide any details on potential regulations, this legislation creates even more uncertainty and risk for investors and further weakens an already fragile economy.

Again, corroborating my point with respect to the lack of consultation, if the government has nothing to hide, then please finish this legislation within the Legislature, not behind closed doors in cabinet. Transparency has also been a common theme for the NDP. The government must provide clarity around the role of oil sands advisory group membership and how their role will be affected by regulation. Will the group be acting as de facto regulations for all future oil sands development, or are they merely a cover to provide legitimacy to NDP policy?

Madam Speaker, for the sake of all Albertans, I encourage this government to consult appropriately and to take into account the current business climate, that is putting us all at a disadvantage and which is being made worse by this government and the uncertainty that they continue to create.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any others wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd just like to say that I clearly will be supporting the amendment, and I appreciate the member moving it forward. The NDP in this case are setting out a greenhouse gas emissions limit, and my concern with that is that, quite frankly, this cap on emissions does two things. It is a complete business killer, and secondly, it will do almost nothing to actually reduce real greenhouse gas emissions. The cap on emissions is, in effect, not just a cap on emissions. It's a cap on oil sands. It's a cap on Canada's GDP. It's a cap on business. It's a cap on innovation. It's a cap on jobs. It's a cap on the future of Albertans and Canadians. It's a cap on affordable energy, a cap on transportation, a cap on competitiveness. It's a cap on everything we do in our life.

For instance, just this last week, constituency week, while I was home, I had three different business owners come to me and express their frustration with the policies of the government. One of them put it this way. He asked me to come to his place of business. He sat there, and he looked at me and said: "Can you give me one reason why I should not move my business to Saskatchewan today? Everything I do I can do just as easily over there for a lot less cost. Why should I stay here?"

The other business I spoke with is on the edge of insolvency, a small retailer in the area who is struggling because of loss of rent, loss of business activity, essentially on the edge of bankruptcy.

The third one is actually a fairly large business in central Alberta, the owner of which I met with the other day. His comment to me was: "Well, you know what you can say for me? You can thank the NDP for forcing me into early retirement." He had just gotten back from Phoenix. He'd bought a house in Phoenix. He was moving. He's leaving the province.

These are the real realities. This is an antiprosperity bill. It's an antifuture bill. It's a bill that puts up barriers in front of businesses and is literally driving them out of the province. You might think that, well, it's just a couple of small businesses in a small riding. Then I read a week ago today in the Calgary Herald, November 16 – actually, it was first published on November 15 – a column by Don Braid, who points out that the number of businesses that have closed in Calgary is staggering. In the range of 11,000 businesses have closed or moved this year in the city of Calgary.

He goes into some details if you want to read it. He calls it "a disaster, a small business extinction unlike anything we've seen in nearly 40 years." He goes into the details: "Two thousand Calgary businesses [have absolutely] closed their doors over the summer." Another 1,800 have moved into smaller digs, trying to survive. "In the first nine months of this year, 11,400 Calgary businesses have either vanished or moved."

These are astounding numbers. Even if you want to add in the new businesses that have started, many of which are people who have lost their jobs and are trying to create something to stay alive, in the city of Calgary we're still at a net loss of over 4,000 businesses. The reality is that most of the new businesses are not going to be big-time employers. They're not going to have big-time wages to hand out to people. This cap on emissions is part of what contributes to a cap on almost everything that happens in our province. This is self-harming behaviour, quite frankly.

Albeit it's for a cause, to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by .035 per cent, the reality is that it's not going to reduce greenhouse gas emissions in any measurable way. I guess you'd have to forgive some Albertans for feeling that all of this is just a cover for socialist engineering, a grand wealth transfer, a desire to take wealth and distribute it in different kinds of ways, to create some kind of a new fantasy green economy. Who knows where that's going?

The environment minister said on January 11 in Calgary that we may not need the carbon tax forever if we can find ways to reduce emissions. Fine. The suggestion that the tax may not be permanent is an interesting idea. I would suggest that maybe a single province-wide greenhouse gas free day would actually reduce the annual emissions of our province a lot more than a cap on emissions on the oil fields and on business and on our futures actually would.

What would it take to actually reduce our net annual greenhouse gas emissions? How about a greenhouse gas free day or no coffee for a whole day? Just turn the utilities off for a day. Prohibit fuels for a day. Prohibit the creation of electrical power for one day. It would actually reduce greenhouse gases more than this bill will, and I think it would actually even create more awareness of the difficulties of reducing greenhouse gases. It would bring people's attention more to it. If this is about changing behaviour and creating awareness, let's create awareness.

There's another option, too. You know, we can talk about the science of various things. There is pretty good science out there for clean coal. We could actually engage in clean coal and reduce greenhouse gas emissions without putting a cap on everybody's businesses, on their futures, on their jobs, on their lives. There are options out there whereby we could actually reduce greenhouse gas emissions without capping the existence and the future of Alberta's economy. So my challenges are to you that this really is about reducing the prosperity of Alberta while at the same time not effectively actually reducing any greenhouse gases in serious ways.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I neglected after the mover of the amendment to offer the provisions of Standing Order 29(2)(a). Does anyone have any questions or comments for this member under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Just a quick question for the member. He suggested shutting down the entire Alberta economy for a day, and I'm just wondering if he's done an economic impact analysis and what that's shown. How much would that actually save, and how badly would that hurt the economy?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. A wonderful question, actually. The answer is no, just as you haven't done one on your whole carbon tax thing.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, is there another speaker to the amendment? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for this opportunity to speak on the hoist amendment today. I rise to speak again in opposition to this ideological bill. There are many reasons why I think that this bill is onerous and why it will not have my support. The government is yet again trying to control industry and impose another cap and hamper investment and create more uncertainty in Alberta's energy sector. Once again, this government is forging ahead without consultation and without feedback from the very panel they asked to determine the law's viability. The oil sands advisory group, chaired by Tzeporah Berman, has not even completed its work, and it won't be complete until February of next year. Sounds like a great reason to put this off, as the hon. member next to me has suggested, until the spring, doesn't it?

We can't possibly trust that the regulation will be fair or positive for the industry. What about all the leases the government has already sold? How do you accommodate for them? Are you planning on using taxpayers' dollars to pay them out, too? Where is this money going to come from?

This cap will cut out any possibility of new investors, and investors' confidence will continue to wane. This 100-megatonne emissions cap has been introduced by this government as one part of their climate leadership action plan. Did the government not consult with all the stakeholders before going ahead and arbitrarily coming up with a figure? The oil sands have been paying for CO<sub>2</sub> emissions under the specified gas emitters regulation levy since 2007. Alberta was the first jurisdiction in North America to put a price on carbon. However, industry was in favour of this agreement and did not see all the funds go towards industry research and development.

The government holds fast to the claim that it has faced increasing investigation over unmanned emissions. All mine sites, in situ sites, primary production sites, and the processing plants will be held accountable by this emissions cap. Alberta oil sands only make up approximately 9 per cent of the nation's total CO<sub>2</sub> emissions, and Canada is about 1.8 per cent of the world's. As China brings on coal power over the next four years, that 1.8 per cent that our entire country produces from all kinds of electricity will shrink. While the 100-megatonne cap will allow 50 per cent growth from 2014 levels, if Alberta isn't producing the energy the world wants because of the cap, our competitors, many of whom have horrible environmental and human rights records, will supply the world with the energy that they need. The world needs more oil, and no other jurisdiction is limiting their production, except here. This hurts our economy on so many levels.

Industry is trying to maintain, and many oil workers are out of jobs due to the strain on the economy. I'm not really entirely sure why the government wants to hamper further production and let other jurisdictions pick up the slack, ones that, frankly, don't have the record that we have. Oil will be produced, and it will be used world-wide. If we don't produce it, someone else will, jurisdictions that, frankly, don't have either the environmental standards that we have here in Alberta nor the mechanisms that will give their workers a fair pay and a safe work environment.

If this bill is passed, I feel the government has missed the mark on trying to cut down global emissions. Jurisdictions outside of Canada that do not have our standards will produce more as a result of increased global demand for oil, but here in Alberta we will be limited. Can you imagine that? Clean, ethical oil limited because of bad policy. This truly needs to be thought through completely. Why not try to rebuild the Alberta advantage and build a strong economy? So much could come from it.

In Alberta we're experts in clean oil production. I believe that we need to place more focus on that and on our technologies that we're good at and export that to the world, sell that to the world. That's part of diversifying our economy and supporting what our industries already have. We have to ask ourselves: why are we discussing this right now while we have all these problems in our province? What's the hurry? Are we not sending out a negative message to investors that this province is not in support of their investments and all the businesses that come along with that?

Unlike Saskatchewan, all the decisions that the NDP has made over the last year and a half have made our economy worse and will continue to stifle growth while Saskatchewan picks up in this industry. Increases to corporate taxation, emissions caps, increases to personal taxes, the massive carbon tax, shutting down of a valuable industry like coal produces, and destroying contracts: this is so far what the government has done for our province and still has the audacity to say how oil production is the reason for the huge deficit. No. Actions from this government to destroy the industry, department overspending, and the borrowing of billions of dollars to run the province will eventually drive the last nail in the fiscal coffin that we're facing.

Oil will bounce back, but we won't be able to capitalize on it because, frankly, companies are leaving our province. They are leaving. From all over my riding I get word that they're leaving for Saskatchewan or that they're closing up shop and going and doing something else in British Columbia. They are leaving. This government's antibusiness stance is driving thriving businesses to other jurisdictions like Saskatchewan, again, or the States. You look at North Dakota. Have you asked Albertans and leaders of industry for their input regarding your climate change plan?

Some Hon. Members: Yes, we have.

Mr. Taylor: Okay. Good.

Have you asked outside investors what they think of our province?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Taylor: You know, what I find interesting, though, is that investment now is flowing into Saskatchewan. So if you asked them, how well did you ask them? If they are starting to move their investments and shift to other jurisdictions, I don't think you asked the right questions or maybe listened to what they were saying.

According to the report released by the Fraser Institute... [interjections] Okay. I was waiting for that.

The report, entitled How Alberta's Carbon Emission Cap Will Reduce Oil Sands Growth, states that placing an emissions cap will cost Albertans between $150 billion and $250 billion in revenue due to resources not being produced. This decision will have a severe adverse effect on our economy for years to come. Where's the social licence that this government bought?

Now that the newly elected President promised approval of the Keystone pipeline, in the new year will the Premier be discussing this with the new President, or will she kowtow to the environmentalists she has appointed to the oil sands advisory group? It's a good question. We will soon see if what the Premier has been promising this province will come to fruition or if she is going to be just appeasing us with empty words.

The Middle East, Texas, North Dakota are not – not – placing a carbon tax on their production. The U.S. has elected people at all levels who are prioritizing economic growth – that's something we sure need in this province – over carbon reduction, and they're happy to steal any North American investment they can from us. Many countries will not entertain a carbon tax because they know it will cost jobs. I ask the government to stop trying to control the industry and imposing further damaging caps that hamper investment and create more uncertainty in Alberta's oil industry sector.

For these reasons I will not be able to support this bill in its present form. [interjections] I know that saddens you guys over there.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a) for the hon. member who has just spoken?

Seeing none, I'll recognize Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I believe this is the third amendment to this bill that I've risen to speak on. This one wants to read the act in six months. Now, I find that a bit strange. I know that when I talk to industry and when I talk to front-line workers, what they want is certainty out of the government. They don't want us delaying things for six months on something we've already talked to them about so that we can go back and talk to them again and then do the same thing. That's just a poor way of doing business. So in the interest of that certainty, I rise to speak against this amendment, as I'm sure the Opposition House Leader is surprised to learn.

We need to be able to get investment flowing in Alberta. I know there are lots of people waiting. I had a meeting with an individual just last week who is contemplating whether or not he wants to build a refinery here in Alberta. He actually thought I was a member of the Wildrose Party when he came into my office, which was a bit interesting. What that does show me is that there are people looking at this province, but what they are waiting for is certainty. They are waiting for things like this bill to pass third reading, to get royal assent so that they know what they're investing in. The more we delay on these things, the longer these investors are going to sit idle, and that's further down the road that we're creating these jobs. We need to get Albertans back to work, and quite frankly I can't support delaying this any longer.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, Madam Speaker, I am saddened and wounded, shocked by the government members' decision to not support such a sensible amendment, proposed by a colleague of mine from the third party.

An Hon. Member: No colleagues here.

Mr. Cooper: Well, you do know things about changing colleagues.

An Hon. Member: Not on your scale.

Mr. Cooper: Certainly not on the scale that I understand about it, but I think that the results might be similar with respect to this.

You know, I do find it interesting with respect to the comments around investment in refining given that this piece of legislation provides an additional cap or exemption for refining, which may be why individuals are chatting about that. I'm certain that you're not hearing from many individuals or mid-sized companies that are coming to your office speaking to you about making significant and large multibillion-dollar investments in oil sands productions because you're capping their future. While I believe the member when he said that he had someone come speak to him about refining, Madam Speaker, the bill provides an exemption for refining. It is possible that people want to continue to invest in refining, but what they don't want is a cap on the direction of our province. I understand that they want certainty, but they certainly don't want this certainty. They want a certainty that provides a path for investment in the future, and this doesn't provide it.

It's more than a little disappointing to see the government continue down this path of capping our ability to extract resources out of the oil sands, and it's disappointing that the government isn't willing to stop and wait for their experts. Now, I get that they think that the folks that we on this side of the House often refer to – I get that they don't like those experts, but they've selected their own experts. You would think that they would want certainty from them prior to rushing through this piece of legislation.

It's unfortunate that the member isn't willing to wait six months. It's unfortunate that the government is not willing to wait six months. With respect to refining there already are some provisions in this although I am certain that at Committee of the Whole we will have some significant discussions around that 100-megatonne cap. It's unfortunate that they're not willing to wait for their experts to provide certainty that they're on the right path.

The Deputy Speaker: Spruce Grove-St. Albert, did you wish to respond?

Mr. Horne: Just a quick response. If we're interested in providing certainty, then I would suspect that what the hon. member really wants is not to in fact wait six months for a decision on this but instead to move it to third reading, where he could vote against it. I'm a bit concerned about the strategy of delaying six months longer to provide that certainty to industry. The only conclusion I can come to is that this is little more than a political game.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for the comments. I would just like to follow through with the aspect of certainty. I would like a little bit more clarification on that because my understanding would be that in order to have some of that certainty for the industry, we would need to see that panel come forward with some of their discussions. So much of the certainty, in my understanding anyway, would be coming from understanding the direction that the panel is going to come back with regard to the cap because the whole point of the panel being put forward was to make sure that we had an understanding about that 100-megatonne emission cap. It's very hard, I would think, to provide certainty without having the panel coming back with their research and their information. Whether or not we agree that the people that are on that panel are the right people, that's at this point not relevant, but to the government in order to provide that certainty...

The Deputy Speaker: Any further speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you so much. I am very honoured to stand and speak to this amendment. Thank you to the member for bringing forward this very important amendment to make sure that we actually have the time to look at this bill. There are so many reasons that this bill needs to be put off for at least six months so that we can actually take a look at some of the information that's coming forward. There are so many reasons. Again, I'll reiterate the fact that the panel has not brought forward their information.

This gives us the opportunity to actually bring in more stakeholders into our space, to be able to talk to them. As the member across the way had mentioned, he's had people come into his office to speak to him about that. Can you imagine? Given a little bit more time, I think that all of us would have a lot more visits from people in the small and medium-sized groups to be able to come back and give us some information.

One of the things I want to say is that the aspect of slowing this down – and we've mentioned this before – is to bring forward an economic impact study. Albertans are on a roller coaster already. They really are. Some of that roller coaster is being imposed by this government. The volatility of the market is further being hampered by the volatility of the policies that are coming forward. A lot of that has to do with the inability to create stability or to create certainty.

Like we've mentioned before, we don't know if this 100-megatonne cap on emissions is even the right number. It was a number that was pulled from thin air. It could be more. It could be less. Who knows? Unfortunately, the panel that's been put together to bring this discussion forward will not be giving us any of that information till February, as I understand it, so how are we supposed to put through a bill that has not had the information brought forward by the panel that was created by the government to actually advise all of us on how that's supposed to work? It seems like a common-sense idea. I would think that the government would have amended their own bill to actually bring this forward, realizing that the panel's information was not going to coincide with this bill going through. It really makes us question the validity of putting this bill through without actually having all of that information.

If you look at the forecasts into 2040, the prohibited production will cost Canadians billions of barrels of prosperity, somewhere in the neighbourhood of 2 billion to 3 billion barrels. I mean, how is that a win in anybody's imagination? I just don't understand it. There are interests outside of Alberta that are laughing at us and literally applauding the government for keeping our oil in the ground and capping our production. There are competitors absolutely everywhere globally that are completely grateful to this government for giving them our piece of the market because what we are not producing here we can guarantee is going to get produced somewhere else.

I mean, obviously, this is not a piece of legislation that is for Albertans because it's actively – actively – hurting the people that live in this province and hurting Canadians. Anybody else in the rest of the world are going: woo-hoo; we get to buy into this market right away. [interjection] I find it appalling that you think it's funny. It's not. This is actually a very serious concept and one that the government doesn't seem to understand. Other people, other nations, other jurisdictions are literally ecstatic that we are not going to be in the market, that our piece of the market is being capped.

This government is actively campaigning against Canadian oil. The panel co-chair, Tzeporah Berman, has actively spoken out and continues to speak out against responsible development, but where's the response to other development? Why is it that our oil and gas and our production here in Alberta is under attack? We should be producing more here, not less, especially if the regulations are in place to make us better. Why would we be giving away that piece of market when we know ethically and responsibly that we are the best developers of this energy? I mean, we should always, always continue to want to do better, work together to do better but not be against the very thing that brings prosperity to Albertans and Canadians. So many people are asking these questions.

I was so surprised at the member across the way. The person that was coming in to look at potentially investing in a refinery was not concerned about the fact that they may invest into something that may also have caps on it, may not be concerned that whatever investment might come into this province – that we have a government that chooses people to be on a panel that actively works against Alberta and Canadian oil. I'm not sure how a person would feel that there's a relative investment to make there. But, like I said, I would be interested to hear about that.

Again, where is the engagement with the stakeholders? That's really what we're asking for here with not pushing this bill a bit forward. We do have every manner of technical expertise in this province. If you want to know how to get things out of the ground here, this is the place to do it. We have the technical expertise. There's a huge brain drain happening right now. They're leaving our province. There's going to be a time that we're going to want to ramp this up, and where are these folks going to be? We're just pushing them out the door.

What about our small and medium industry? How is the government planning on compensating the leaseholders? Has that mechanism been worked into this? This might be a really good reason to hold off on putting this bill forward. It may not have been something that was thought of when this bill came out on paper.

There are a minimal number of leases that are left over after where we're at with this megatonne cap already. Those are very, very valuable leases. So how is that going to be determined? It might be something worth putting time into and a little bit of space between what's happening right now, the panel coming back to figure out how that's going to work. How is the government going to compensate for leases that have already been sold?

Mr. Cooper: That's a fair question.

Mrs. Aheer: I think it's a reasonable question.

Again to the member across the way: how do you entice investment? I mean, how do you feel about shutting down economic prospects? We're the third-largest oil reserve in the world and, at least for the moment, the fifth-largest producer. So how do you justify somebody like Karen Mahon, the national director of Stand? The Premier hired environmental lobbyists and protestors to help with climate regulation, evidently to buy a social licence for pipelines. What this government and the federal government fail to remember is that they're not giving enough credit to the thorough and legitimate NEB process. There are no provincial or municipal vetoes.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2.1) the Assembly stands adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 23, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Statement by the Speaker

Mr. Manmeet Singh Bhullar

The Speaker: If I might, hon. members, I would ask that you remain standing. One year ago today we in this House lost one of our colleagues and friends, Manmeet Bhullar, in a tragic auto accident. Mr. Bhullar represented the constituencies of Calgary-Montrose and Calgary-Greenway from 2008 until his untimely passing, on November 23, 2015. For those of us who knew him, we recognized him as a passionate and unwavering member dedicated to public service, and he will long be remembered by Albertans. If we could take a brief pause.

Thank you. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this House sitting in your gallery the Honourable Valerie Garrido-Lowe, minister within the government of Guyana's Ministry of Indigenous Peoples' Affairs, and Toshao Gideon John of the Paramakatoi village. Minister Garrido-Lowe and Toshao John are here on a reciprocal visit after two staff members from my ministry had the privilege of joining them at the national Toshao's conference in Guyana earlier this year. During their visit they will continue their exchange of ideas and dialogues on a range of topics, including indigenous consultation, with staff in my ministry. They both bring a wealth of experience and a passion for strengthening their communities, and we are grateful they could be here. I would ask them to please rise – thank you – and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you, and welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 60 students, staff, and chaperones from the Centre for Learning@Home. The students and chaperones are accompanied today by teachers Brittany Cushion and Daryl Drozda. They join us from many different communities across this province, and I'm grateful that they could be here this afternoon. I know they have all learned a lot already today as earlier they had debated both lowering the voting age and whether or not candy should be banned from schools. I would now ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 28 students from Dewberry school. Now, Dewberry has distinguished itself as being the home of three generations of winners of the Rangeland Derby at the Calgary Stampede, and based on statistical probability, at least four of these students will someday become chuckwagon drivers. They are accompanied by their teachers Jen Romanchuk and Shalene Zayac along with chaperones Kelly Davies, Melanie Stevenson, and Sheldon Quickstad. They are seated in the public gallery in the corner, which is sort of where I spent most of my school years as well. It is a pleasure to have them here, and I ask my colleagues to join me with the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. Hon. students, at times today this might remind you of chuckwagon racing.

Are there any other school groups to be introduced today?

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to the House two individuals co-ordinating a campaign to urge the federal government to reverse a decision to move the case processing centre out of Vegreville: Marianne Hladun, regional executive vice-president for prairies, here from Winnipeg, a Public Service Alliance of Canada activist and member serving many committees and bargaining teams; and Michelle Henderson, chief shop steward for the Canada Employment and Immigration Union, a component of PSAC, local 30876 rep, and employee of the CPC in Vegreville. I ask that they rise so that we may extend the traditional warm welcome of this House and continued support because it does affect us all.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, do you have another introduction?

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time it's a great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the Anderson family, Curtis and his parents, Karen and Norman, who are visiting us from the Innisfree area in my constituency. In 2002 Curtis was a combatant in the bull riding event at the Ponoka Stampede and suffered a severe brain injury, but never one to be deterred, he cowboyed up, and since that time Curtis and his family have conducted the Courage Canada Trail Ride on the last weekend in May and have raised over $167,000 for brain injury survivors and their families. [some applause] Yes. Thank you. Additional funds have also gone to the Canadian Pro Rodeo Sport Medicine Team and the Make-A-Wish Foundation. I ask that all my colleagues give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some very special people who work in the schools in the Wood Buffalo region. When fire swept through the area in early May, these fine individuals put the safety and well-being of the students first while often not even knowing how their own families and homes had fared. These officials are just a small group out of hundreds who acted very quickly to get students out of harm's way, and their actions deserve to be commended. Joining us today are trustees Nathalie Lachance and Karen Doucet and superintendent Robert Lessard. From Fort McMurray Catholic I have trustee Tracy McKinnon, superintendent George McGuigan, and deputy superintendent Monica Mankowski. From Fort McMurray public I have board chair Jeff Thompson, vice-chair Linda Mywaart, trustee Tim O'Hara, and superintendent Doug Nicholls. I would ask them all to please rise and receive a very warm greeting from the members of the Assembly here today.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Legislature three guests from Advocis. Advocis works with Albertans to provide financial advice and help ensure the financial well-being of many Alberta families. They're not here specifically to give me guidance; they help all Albertans out. They're in town to have a conference later. Joining us today from Advocis are Greg Pollock, the CEO; Wade Baldwin, the board chair; and Rob McCullagh, a member. I ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Ceci: The second group of guests I'd like to introduce to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to the Assembly are two guests from the Alberta credit union system. They are here as we introduce the Credit Union Amendment Act, 2016, later today. Garth Warner is the president and CEO of Alberta's largest credit union, Servus Credit Union, and Steve Friend is the president and CEO of Vision Credit Union. I'd like to ask these guests and others who are here with them that I didn't get an opportunity to introduce but who are with the credit union system to stand up and receive the traditional warm welcome.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three home-schooling families from my constituency of Wetaskiwin-Camrose, strong advocates for parent-directed education and also very successful stories in that area. If they would please rise and remain standing as I call out their names. We have Shane, Robyn, Josh, and Josie Smith; we have Nola, Emma, and Marta Hutchinson; and also Neal, Emily, Joan, and Amy Bishop. Please join me in welcoming these three wonderful families, and let them receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Courtney Hare. Courtney is currently the public policy manager for Momentum, a Calgary-based social enterprise focusing on poverty reduction and economic inclusion. Her work involves designing social and economic policy. Most recently she's worked on payday lending, children's education savings, and local investment funds such as CEDIFs. Courtney also has the distinct honour to have replaced the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board at his job at Momentum. I would like to ask Courtney to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Dr. David Bailey and Dr. John Basarab. Dr. Bailey is the president and CEO of Genome Alberta, a not-for-profit funding agency focused on genomics research. I look forward to speaking about Genome Alberta later today. Dr. John Basarab is one of Alberta's, if not Canada's, leading researchers in beef cattle management and breeding. I would ask that they rise and please receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and introduce to you and to the House Kathy Hughes: Calgary schoolteacher, educator, volunteer for the Canadian Mental Health Association, and a passionate member of Forward Action in Mental Health. Kathy has also courageously shared her own lived experiences and expert opinions as government implements the mental health review. She's a strong advocate for timely, patient-centred continuity of care for mental health and addictions and a health system that truly supports these values. I'll ask Kathy to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other visitors to introduce today? The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this House Oscar Buera Jr. Oscar is a financial adviser, life insurance agent, and associate vice-president of Greatway Financial Inc. He is also a member of Advocis and supporter of YMCA international, and Oscar is a Filipino-Canadian community leader. More importantly, he came all the way from the most beautiful and diverse riding of Calgary-McCall. I ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Manmeet Singh Bhullar

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was one year ago today that our friend and colleague Manmeet Singh Bhullar headed north on the QE II highway to join his colleagues in this Chamber. As he drove, the weather deteriorated, and he wound up in the middle of the first snowstorm of the season. Seeing multiple vehicles in the ditch, Manmeet pulled over to help a motorist in distress. It was then that the unthinkable happened, and just like that a bright light in all of our lives went out.

In the months since the terrible day we've had no choice but to carry on. Our constituents elected us to bring their voices to this place and to make sure that their views are heard loud and clear by the government. We take the responsibility very seriously.

Manmeet took that responsibility very seriously. Mr. Speaker, never before have I met anyone so selfless in their dedication to serving others, whether it was a constituent, an Albertan in need, or an Afghan family seeking to flee religious persecution in their homeland. He worked tirelessly to achieve a positive outcome for all who came to him for help.

Mr. Speaker, there are reminders of our dear friend everywhere, and his absence, even a year later, is glaring. Whether it's catching a glimpse of his photo on the wall in our caucus office or preparing a question on an issue that was important to him, Manmeet crosses our minds every day. We miss his big heart and his booming laugh. We miss his compassion for all who suffer and his passion for helping them. We miss his dedication to his family, his constituents, his community, and his province. Most of all, we miss his friendship.

Manmeet died as he lived, helping others and as a hero. As we go about our work, we strive every day to honour him by carrying on that legacy of selfless service, and I hope that we're making him proud.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have a bizarre situation unravelling here in Alberta. Our government, the one that should be creating an environment that attracts investment and creates real private-sector employment, is doing anything but. The carbon tax will put Alberta business at a distinct disadvantage not only interprovincially but internationally as well. Instead of listening to the thousands of Albertans who rallied against the tax across the province, this government instead is pushing ahead with its job-killing strategy. It's like owning a gas station on a corner, advertising your gas for 20 cents higher than the station across the street, and then wondering why no one will stop at your convenience store.

A perfect example of how bizarre this tax is relates to our greenhouse industry. I spoke to an independent greenhouse that will be facing a $20,000 increase in operating costs just due to the carbon tax. There is no way they can absorb these costs, so it will be passed on to consumers. Of course, those consumers are also being hit by the tax at home, so they'll have fewer dollars to use for buying vegetables and landscaping. Not only will the greenhouse face unmanageable new costs as a result of the tax; they will also have fewer sales to compensate.

Even more bizarre is the impact on two nurseries in my area that supply seedlings for reforestation. They may be facing insolvency because they can no longer compete with operations in British Columbia and Saskatchewan due to our higher minimum wage and now the carbon tax. Mr. Speaker, reforestation actually increases carbon absorption, yet our government's tax is penalizing the very producers who will reduce our carbon footprint. This government is not only working against Albertans, but this tax is working against the very situation that they are trying to address.

The most recent real poll, the by-election in Medicine Hat, showed that NDP support is at 1 per cent. This is consistent with the cold shoulder they received at the recent AAMD and C conference last week. Albertans clearly are saying: bring on 2019, and let's hope there's something left to salvage.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electricity Power Purchase Agreements

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, there are real big changes coming in electricity, driven by a government that has demonstrated that it doesn't know what it is doing when it comes to electricity, but I will respect the embargo. So let me ask a question on behalf of the people of Calgary, who have been so poorly served so far by this government. Actions of this government threaten the profitability of Enmax, and that means no dividend for the city of Calgary, and that means the property taxes of every single home in Calgary could go up by as much as 4.5 per cent a year. Why is the Premier kicking Calgary when it's already hurting so much?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Quite honestly, the foundation of the member opposite's question is not particularly accurate. The issue of the PPAs does not have a direct correlation to property taxes in Calgary, and to suggest otherwise is really not helpful. However, we will continue to stand up for Albertans. We will continue to do everything we can to get the best deal for Albertans and to get the best outcome for all Albertans because we are on the side of consumers. We are on the side of Albertans who are trying to make a go of it here in this province.

The Speaker: Thank you, Madam Premier.

Mr. Jean: Well, Albertans know that there is a disagreement on the facts between what the Premier is saying and what the mayor of Calgary is saying, and I know which one we think is telling the truth. The NDP changed the law relating to power plants and to Enmax, and it exercised its change-in-law provision. Action and consequence: straightforward stuff. But this government sued when they were in the wrong and is now threatening to legislate a change to a 16-year-old contract. Enmax and all of its profits belong to the people of Calgary. Why is the government continuing to punish Calgarians?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the only person talking about threats of legislation is the member opposite. It certainly is nobody over here. Quite frankly, that kind of hyperbole, whether coming from there or from other parts in the community, is not helpful to a reasonable, respectful, grown-up, mature discussion focused on coming to pragmatic business outcomes that ultimately will serve Albertans, serve Alberta consumers, serve Alberta homeowners, and serve Calgarians, too.

Mr. Jean: The government rails about big companies making big profits, but these are Alberta companies with Alberta investments creating Alberta jobs. What this is really all about is that the NDP government wanted to raise the carbon tax. It didn't understand the consequences of its action and where we are now, but now we have court cases and threats of banana republic, retroactive legislation, and a wholesale change in electricity, all the result of NDP incompetence. Will the Premier admit that when it comes to this file, her government is simply in way over its head?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I will admit is that our government is committed to ensuring that Albertans get off the roller coaster of volatile prices in their electricity brought about by the risky ideological experiment of those folks over there. We are focused on that. We are also focused on moving this province forward into this decade, into the future, by ensuring that we take the appropriate action to protect our climate, to get off coal, and to reposition our economy for the success that we know we can all attain.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Jean: Food bank use in Alberta is up a staggering 136 per cent since 2008. These are moms and dads who are trying desperately to take care of their families as we get closer to Christmas. Demand is going up while people's ability to give is going down. The NDP's carbon tax will just make things worse. In just 38 days it will add $21,000 in extra costs to the Calgary Food Bank alone. Why is the Premier taking money away from charities and Alberta's most vulnerable citizens and those most in need at a time when they can simply not afford it?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to hear the member opposite talk about food banks because, quite frankly, we would like people to use them less. That's why this government got rid of a regressive flat tax and brought in a progressive tax. That's why this government brought in the first-ever child tax benefit, to take 350,000 children off the rolls. That is why this government raised the minimum wage, so people working full-time don't have to stop at the food bank on their way home.

Mr. Jean: Well, what this government is not working – and Albertans from every background know the damage the carbon tax will have. School boards across the province are worried. They're the ones who pay for the fuel and gas that run our buses and heat our schools. It's why Wildrose put forward an amendment to exempt school boards from the carbon tax, an amendment, by the way, the NDP voted against. But now the Education minister is saying that school boards will be, quote, first in line for the money. Will the Premier please confirm whether funds taxed from families will be used to compensate school boards, yes or no?

Ms Notley: Well, what the Education minister was talking about was that through our energy efficiency program, something that we clearly talked about, something that is long overdue in this province – we were the only province without an energy efficiency program, if you can imagine that, Mr. Speaker. One of the first announcements through there was for $9 million to 36 schools to put in solar panels so that they could reduce their emissions. And that is the kind of thing that we will continue to do because we believe in moving this province forward. We believe in increasing renewable energy. We believe in bringing down our emissions because we believe climate change is real.

Mr. Jean: Here's the problem. There are moms and dads in Alberta who will receive zero dollars for paying more to heat their homes and to drive their kids around. There are truck drivers, farmers, construction workers, office assistants who won't be receiving a penny in compensation for paying more to drive to work. Every municipality will be on the hook, and our most vulnerable and our charities will see millions of dollars taken from them to pay for a massive slush fund and corporate handouts. Why is the Premier trying to pick favourites? Just scrap this ridiculous carbon tax that will hurt all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The favourite that this government is picking is the environment. The favourite that this government is picking is the health of our children. The favourite that this government is picking is our ability to move forward into a 21st-century economy, not staying stuck in the past, pretending that there are no challenges for us to face, because that's what good leadership looks like.

Investigations of Deaths of Children in Care

Mr. Jean: The circumstances surrounding Serenity's death are tragic and deplorable, and she deserved so much more from this government. I am appalled at just how little movement there has been in investigating her death and how much secrecy continues to surround this file. We now know that the RCMP continued to wait for paperwork related to Serenity's death. It's been two years, and we don't need more excuses; we need action from this government. What steps is the Premier taking to remove backlogs and secrecy in government departments so we can give Serenity the justice she so clearly deserves?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me first begin by saying that it is not appropriate for me or anybody in this government to comment on the course of the RCMP investigation. The RCMP will manage the issue the way they should because that's what's appropriate. As we've already talked about, there are a number of efforts going on within the ministry and will continue to go on within the ministry to improve the support that we give to all children at risk because, quite frankly, I think all people on both sides of this House believe that that is a fundamental priority for all of us.

Mr. Jean: The legislative tools that we have to investigate Serenity's death are broken. In the Kinship Care Handbook, drafted in 2015, it clearly states, "The Enhancement Act provides the [Child and Youth] Advocate with full access to information," but clearly that is not the case. The advocate was unable to receive a copy of Serenity's autopsy report. We don't know if her death has been ruled a homicide, was left as undetermined, or something else. Why was the enhancement act circumvented? And why was the advocate, who is supposed to represent vulnerable children in our province, not receiving full disclosure?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Again, Mr. Speaker, I believe that we've already answered this question. The fact of the matter is that the medical examiner gave ongoing reports to the advocate as this matter unfolded. The final official report was not forwarded until later, in part at the request of the police. But the fact of the matter is that the information was shared, and the advocate was able to prepare a report. Most importantly, we continue to be focused on moving forward on the recommendations of the advocate from this report and others because, quite frankly, we want to make sure that the system is better.

Mr. Jean: A system set up on a foundation of secrecy is always destined to fail. The longer we allow our child services system to operate in the shadows, the greater the chance is that what happened to Serenity will actually happen to another child. I know there are wonderful people on the front lines trying everything they can do, but there is a culture of secrecy that is failing our children. Change needs to start at the top. What specific measures is the Premier taking to end the secrecy that permeates the department related to children in care?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't actually think that the issue of secrecy is at the heart of the challenges that we face today when it comes to keeping children at risk in Alberta safe. What I will say that this government has done is that when we were in opposition, we lobbied relentlessly to have a children's advocate who was independent, and it was as a result of our work that we now have an independent child advocate. The next thing we did was reverse cuts that were made by the previous government, these guys' forthcoming in-laws. We reversed those cuts in order to ensure that the youth advocate had all the tools at his disposal to do the investigation.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Could we please stop the clock for a minute so I can speak to the parliamentary adviser?

The leader of the third party.

Child Intervention System

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, one year ago today our friend and colleague Manmeet Singh Bhullar tragically lost his life on the QE II highway helping a fellow Albertan in need. Among Manmeet's many accomplishments were changes he made to the child intervention and welfare system when he was Human Services minister. After learning the details surrounding the death of little Serenity, it's clear that the system still needs care and we have much more work to do. To the Premier: will you work with all of us, establish an all-party committee to take an in-depth look at the systemic issues plaguing Alberta's child intervention system?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's certainly a very interesting question. We've certainly had forums within which we've been able to have more wide-ranging conversations, and we have a committee that would appropriately consider that matter. It's a question of whether that can be put forward on the agenda through the all-party committee that already exists, but I'll take the request under advisement because I think there's a certain amount of merit to it.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Premier. I know all Albertans that read Paula Simons' column on the tragic death of Serenity were heartbroken. The system failed the little girl, and Albertans want answers. We're halfway there, Premier. Will you commit today to referring this to a committee that could properly deal with this issue? We can all work together on it. This is not partisan.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I certainly, as I said, will take under advisement the suggestion that the member has with respect to the particular matter that the member refers to. Because it's still under investigation by the police, that's not one that we could refer to committee, but actually I suspect that it touches on a number of issues that could still be discussed at a committee and that would be effectively addressing some of the issues that were at play in this particular tragedy. As I say, we'll give it some consideration.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we know that as we speak, there are many children in care who could benefit from immediate action to improve the system. Premier, when will you tell this House which committee this could go to to be dealt with? I appreciate where you've come today with these questions. Thank you for that, but I think Albertans at home will be interested to know when we'll hear back from you about what committee and how that might happen, please.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I can't give you a specific time or date on that one, but I certainly will make my commitment to the member opposite that I will report back to him personally on the matter and on how we can address the matter as soon as possible.

The Speaker: Hon. members, as we move forward with the questions – I've received several notes over the last couple of days – I want to remind all members to address their comments through the chair.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Electric Power Price Cap

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently Albertans are benefiting from historically low electricity rates. However, many of my constituents in Edmonton-Manning have raised concerns about the volatile nature of our province's electricity system. I have heard from families and businesses alike that they feel vulnerable to sudden price increases. To the Minister of Energy: why is the government capping electricity rates for consumers?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. We are standing up for consumers, for families, small businesses, and farmers. That's why we committed in our election to look at smart regulating and why our party has a long tradition of standing up for consumers and families. Yesterday we were proud to announce a cap to protect families so their bills will be fair and affordable. I know that when we had a small business, a cow-calf operation, it would have been nice to be able to predict our bills from month to month.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the capping of electricity rates impacts everyone from distributors to retailers to consumers, to the same minister: how will the government be working with stakeholders to implement the rate cap?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We committed yesterday to a cap, and we also committed that we will work with retailers, distributors, and consumers to come up with the best plan to meet the guarantee. We want to make sure we get it right. We also understand that there are areas such as Medicine Hat, Lethbridge, and the REAs that don't fall under this system right now, but we will be consulting with them to make sure they are included.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the current economic climate and the need to diversify Alberta's economy, again to the same minister: will this rate cap apply to small businesses and farms?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Yes. As I mentioned: families, farms, small businesses. They all feel the squeeze of budgets, and as prices skyrocket such as they did in 2013, they want to be able to predict their bills. The opposition sometimes talks about protecting investment, but we need to look at protecting small businesses that suffer from a volatile electric system. As our economy stabilizes, we do know prices will go up, and we need to make sure that things are stable, predictable, and affordable.

Child Intervention System and Indigenous Children

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, there were 53 reports of serious injury and death to the office of the Child and Youth Advocate in 2015-16, and indigenous children and babies represent 51 per cent of these incidents, yet this government chose to reduce the child intervention budget by more than $3 million. That just does not make sense. Can the Minister of Indigenous Relations stand here today and tell Alberta's indigenous communities that his government is doing everything it can to prevent these horrible things happening to indigenous babies and children in care?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to say that it's a priority for our government to provide children with the right supports and the right resources. I heard the member say that we made cuts in this budget. I disagree. It's incorrect. We have increased the child intervention budget year over year, and I can provide the details. I can submit the estimates. That's not the case. We didn't cut the budget for child intervention. We increased it by $37 million.

Mr. Hanson: Given that this isn't a new problem and the troubling fact is that many children in care are being neglected and abused and given that the Auditor General found in July that the department does not have a process to follow up with instances where it has identified that services don't meet standards and given that the AG also found that more than 80 per cent of children in care did not receive frequent and enough contact with their caseworker to meet minimum standards, to the Minister of Indigenous Relations: how can there be any assurances that what happened to those 53 babies and children won't happen again? Where are the safeguards in our system?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. There's no question that the death of children in our care or otherwise is a heartbreaking situation, and we do know that our system has fallen tragically short for too long for too many children. That is the reason that we are taking action. We have increased the budget for child intervention. We are providing training to our staff. We are providing foster and kinship care with opportunities for training and the supports they need.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hanson: Since our system is in particular failing our indigenous youth and given that in the AG's report indigenous children were on average nearly one and a half times as likely not to have face-to-face contact with their caseworker every three months and more than one and a half times likely to have gaps of seven months or more between face-to-face contacts with their caseworker, will the Minister of Indigenous Relations take some responsibility and acknowledge that under his watch his department is failing indigenous children?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. The member correctly points out that there are issues in our indigenous communities. These are the broader discussions that we need to have, and we need to talk about the root causes of these issues. We have seen from a Canadian human rights decision that historically our children on First Nation reserves have been underfunded, and these are the priorities that our government is working on. We are working with indigenous communities, with our federal counterparts to make sure that our indigenous communities . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-West.

Electricity Power Purchase Agreement Lawsuit Legal Counsel

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have offered the government five opportunities to tell us why it snubbed Alberta lawyers by choosing a friend of the NDP counsel in B.C. to handle the PPA court case. We asked if there was a sole-source contract and how much the lawyer was being paid. We received no answers, but we discovered that it is a sole-source contract with a $500,000 retainer. The only information the government provided is that the B.C. lawyer has a track record of standing up for the public interest. To the Premier: do Alberta lawyers not stand up for the public interest?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud of our Alberta lawyers. I think that we have many that are doing excellent work in this area. We also know that Mr. Arvay is the pre-eminent constitutional law expert. I think Alberta lawyers would agree with that. I think his track record is very clear, and he's been recognized by national organizations for his tremendous work in this area. I think that Albertans deserve somebody who has that kind of a track record to stand up for them for this specific case when the party that's asking this question set them up to be taken for billions of dollars of loss. That's not fair. That's why we hired Mr. Arvay.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in his report last week the Auditor General noted that sole-source contracts are acceptable under certain circumstances, for instance if only one qualified service provider exists, and given that based on the sole-source contract Albertans can only assume that the friend of the NDP lawyer in B.C. is the only qualified service provider, again to the Premier: did you even look in Alberta for other qualified lawyers?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We did follow our sole-source contracting guidelines as outlined by the Auditor General. That's why we posted the amount of the retainer in the blue book. I'm glad that the member figured out how to use Google and look up things in the blue book. That's what it's there for, so that you can have information to ensure that you're aware of how the public is spending its money. That is the cost of the retainer. We know what the cost would be if we did nothing, and that's $2 billion of liabilities passed back to consumers. We deserve the best on the side of Albertans, and that's what they've got in this government and Mr. Arvay.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Given that the Auditor General directed the government to provide thorough rationale for sole-source contracts and given that members of this government while in opposition were highly critical of the previous government's sole-source contracts and given that I am offering the Premier one last chance to outline the process for retaining their NDP world view lawyer before I ask the Auditor General to investigate, again to the Premier: as per the direction of the Auditor General, what was the process used to retain this out-of-province lawyer? Please tell us now.

Ms Hoffman: We did not break any rules, Mr. Speaker. This was a sole-source contract, with the aim to get the very best counsel to defend the public interest. I know that the members opposite have no interest in defending the public, only in standing up for corporations. Another day, another member: this is not fair. We used the public interest and somebody who's a pre-eminent lawyer in constitutional law, and we're proud of that. We will be happy to disclose everything through the traditional Public Accounts process that the Auditor General has endorsed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Electric Power System

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few minutes ago the NDP announced an ideological antimarket overhaul of Alberta's electricity system, a system currently providing Albertans with plentiful power at low, low prices. The NDP's brilliant plan is to move the burden of risk away from corporations and onto the backs of our taxpayers, all this in support of their misguided policies on carbon. Will the Energy minister just admit that the NDP have created the investment hemorrhage in our province that they are trying now to solve?

The Speaker: The Energy minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. What I will admit is that we have had a broken system for a long time. Continuing to do the same thing and expecting different results is not leadership. We're choosing leadership. We're coming up with a capacity market. We have consulted with investors and industry and the AESO, and they have advised us that this is a good direction to go in.

Mr. MacIntyre: There's nothing broken, Mr. Speaker, about low energy prices.

This government recently clued in to the fact that they are the ones responsible for scaring away $20 billion needed to make their 30 per cent by 2030 renewables plan a reality. TransAlta and Capital Power were ready to invest billions to build combined-cycle natural gas units, shovel-ready plans that were prepared and would be financed without taxpayer debt. Will this government please explain why they are now shifting the financial risk of future electricity projects onto the backs of our overburdened taxpayers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. I'm surprised at the question about TransAlta and Capital Power since they were the ones standing up with us today and they're the ones we have consulted with, who have also told us that this is a good system to go to. [interjections] They also stood up today and said that this will change their plans to invest in the future and in the near future.

The Speaker: It's getting warm in here.

Mr. MacIntyre: Albertans are getting sick and tired of Whac-A-Mole governments, where the government enacts one crazy policy, then legislates crazier ones to try to deal with the unintended consequences of the first one. Given that the one thing we know for sure is that this change will result in higher prices and given that we know that just seven months ago this government was asking for electricity-for-dummies briefings, why does the minister think that tampering in a market she doesn't understand is a good idea for Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for that question, Mr. Speaker. Currently we have an outdated market – there's only us and one other jurisdiction in North America – but there are states like Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Maryland, 33 states in the United States, and the UK who have systems like this. Industry has told us and investors have told us that they will invest in a system like this. They will not invest in one where we rely on volatility for consumers and for business.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Seniors' Issues

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week it became clear that shareholders have hit a tipping point with their frustration over the lack of co-ordination in the Ministry of Seniors and Housing. This government stands accused of failing to take seriously significant seniors' issues like surgical wait times, transportation, insufficient home care. Minister, this government has been in for 19 months. What are you doing to tackle these issues and protect our seniors community?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to talk about the things that we're doing. We've invested $1.2 billion in our capital plan over five years in supporting seniors' and affordable housing. We've kept the Alberta seniors' benefit even in these tough economic times. We've put $1.2 million into supporting groups to make sure that elder abuse doesn't occur in this province. There are many things. I could go on, and I will in the next answer.

Mr. Yao: You've committed a lot of money, but you haven't spent much of it.

You're also supposed to do a review of the Alberta Housing Act, if I recall. Since this review includes a survey with the very same stakeholders that have decried this government's treatment of Alberta's seniors and vulnerable and given that a similar review of the seniors' lodge program has been completed and its results were made public, will the minister commit now in the Assembly to making the results of this survey public?

Ms Sigurdson: We are reviewing the Alberta Housing Act regulations. They come due ahead in March 2017. That consultation is under way, and certainly we will be very happy to talk about that when it is complete. We have been very busy going across the province regarding our affordable housing strategy. Again, in contact with housing management bodies across the province we have gotten very positive feedback about our consultation process. We're very proud. We've appointed a Seniors Advocate in a transparent competition. We're so pleased. We are one of only two provinces. We're really trail blazers in . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, given that this government still does not have a seniors strategy after almost two years into its mandate and since the same government still does not have a plan in place to replace the ASLI grants, again to the minister: cabinet shuffles aside, what is taking your government so long to make a viable plan for Alberta seniors? When are you going to make it a priority?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. This government is working very hard with stakeholders across Alberta to make sure that we're working on a very great plan for the Alberta affordable housing strategy. We're working with housing management bodies. I've been to many sod-turnings, was at one yesterday. There is a lot of investment across it. We're getting money out the door so that housing management bodies can maintain their units and take care of the deferred maintenance of a billion dollars that we inherited. We're working diligently to support seniors in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Electoral Boundaries Commission

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government has recently established a new membership for the Electoral Boundaries Commission that will recommend changes to electoral boundaries for the next provincial election to reflect Alberta's changing population. This committee will decide for all Albertans what any potential changes will look like. This commission should be set up as fair and effective representation for all areas of Alberta. To the Minister of Justice: why has no one been appointed to this commission that represents rural northern Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The committee contains five members: a chair and then four other members. Two of those members are required to represent rural Albertans, and they do.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many rural ridings are expansive in geography and it has been noted that for many of these, if expanded, it would be impractical for an MLA to travel across their constituency and effectively represent their constituents and be able to meet Albertans face to face on many occasions, to the minister: can you assure northern Albertans that this commission has their best interests in mind when assessing electoral boundaries?

The Speaker: Just a moment. Stop the clock for a second, please. I'll just remind the House that the particular line of questions is with respect to a matter which may not be the direct impact of the government, so I would caution both sides in terms of discussion on this item.

The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for what I think is a very important question. It's important that the Electoral Boundaries Commission represents all Albertans, which is why the legislation puts certain brackets around who can be on that commission and how it's set up. One of the interesting things about this particular act is that while only a certain amount of population variance is allowed, there are certain exceptions allowed for remote or northern ridings to ensure that MLAs are able to effectively represent their population, and those will be respected.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a majority of the NDP seats are held in urban ridings and given that it would be in the best interests of this government to ensure that urban ridings are increased but that the rural ridings are combined and, as such, will hold fewer seats in the House, to the minister: are you trying to tilt the electoral boundaries in your favour to help you in the next provincial election?

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

I want to remind the House about the comment I made to the member earlier. It seems the last particular question – I'm going to wait to see the Blues on that. I'll address the point of order at the end.

Are there any other comments the minister would like to make on the matter?

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, just that the Electoral Boundaries Commission is set up as an independent commission. We're happy to have them do their work, and we're happy to ensure that all Albertans have effective representation and fair representation.

The Speaker: The Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Rural Transportation Infrastructure

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a challenging time for rural Alberta. Many small towns are struggling, and businesses are being hit by the downturn in the economy. I have heard from my constituents in Wetaskiwin-Camrose that one of the challenges small towns currently face is aging infrastructure. These projects require significant investment that rural municipalities often cannot bear on their own. To the Minister of Transportation: what are you doing to help rural Alberta sustain their local transportation infrastructure?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government has chosen to significantly invest in improving infrastructure throughout the province – urban and rural, north and south – to help stimulate the economy and to keep Albertans working. As part of the Alberta jobs plan I'm happy to share that we're planning to restore funding to the strategic transportation infrastructure program, or STIP, after it was defunded by the previous government. Thirty five million dollars in STIP funding is going to be made available in 2017, if the budget is approved, and I'm looking forward to elaborating in my next question.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that STIP has existed for many years and some municipalities have asked for changes in the way it is delivered, to the same minister: what changes have you implemented to reflect the needs of rural municipalities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this program will allow local and rural municipalities to invest in local bridges, local resource roads, and community-owned, publicly used airports. We consulted with multiple stakeholders, including my attendance at a workshop of AAMD and C in March. We have increased the eligibility for airports for lighting, and we have increased the eligibility for resource roads.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, to the same minister: can you speak to the timelines for when rural communities like Wetaskiwin and Camrose will be able to apply and access that funding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We want to get projects under way in 2017. Applications are now open and the application deadline is February 3, 2017. We should see construction on approved projects this coming spring and summer, which means we will be taking advantage of the next construction season. We know these projects are important to rural Alberta to provide the jobs and the infrastructure that make those communities prosper.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

School Fees

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's actions are frustrating Albertans. This government introduces and passes bills that they never campaigned on and which Albertans do not want, and then they do not fulfill the campaign promises that they actually made. This government campaigned on an education promise to lower school fees by 50 per cent, and then they, quote, consulted with stakeholders in education as to the best way to do this. Now, when they could actually keep a promise, the silence is deafening. When is this minister actually going to fulfill his education promises to the people of Alberta rather than breaking those promises?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. We know that, certainly, school fees are difficult, and we know that in these economic circumstances there's even more of a burden on families, so we are certainly working hard to rationalize what school fees are being charged around the province, between school fees that might be for field trips and so forth and then base instructional fees. I know that I have, for example, the Fort McMurray trustees up here who very generously waived all school fees for the school year in Fort McMurray and Wood Buffalo. I congratulate them for that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Calgary's unemployment rate is now in double digits and given that the Calgary Sun has reported that there is a 58 per cent increase in families receiving school fee waivers because they cannot pay those fees and given that the Calgary board of education says that there has been a steady increase each year in fees waived since 2012, when will this minister recognize that Calgary families are struggling under the economic realities of today and work with the school boards to lower school fees?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the last part of that question is the essence of what we are doing, engaging with school boards, not just in Calgary but around the province, to look for ways by which we can reduce school fees. Certainly, we have built it into our longer term budget to fulfill this campaign promise.

It's important to note that the choices we did make for this year were to fund for enrolment. If you don't do that, if you follow something like the Wildrose plan, you would be losing teachers and support staff and have an increase in school fees as well.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the carbon tax will increase transportation costs, heating costs, electricity costs, and extracurricular costs for schools and given that the minister has refused to provide an exemption for schools but is now making vague promises to access money from the NDP green slush fund created by the carbon tax, how is the minister actually going to keep his government's promises to reduce school fees that Albertan families can't afford to pay and which are the result of an NDP belief that you can tax people into prosperity?

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, that's such a tangle of questions, but I'll try my best to work through. First of all, I will not apologize to advocate for monies to go to my schools in regard to building carbon leadership, and that's where it belongs. Carbon leadership belongs in the schools, and school boards have told me explicitly that they're happy to participate in that program. We will make sure that we have compensation. You can see already, as a measure of good faith, the 36 schools boards that we're putting in solar panels for. In regard to school fees: yes, we are going to reduce them as part of our campaign commitment.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

AAMDC Fall Convention Attendance by Cabinet

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nearly a week has passed since the AAMD and C fall convention, but I'm still hearing from rural leaders who are upset that only eight cabinet ministers chose to show up for their ministerial forum. Now, I know that the environment minister was off riding on the Marrakesh Express, and the economic development minister was on a non carbon-emitting slow boat to China, but that's left eight other ministers with some explaining to do. To the indigenous affairs minister: what pressing piece of government business kept you from attending AAMD and C?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, I was caught in the airport for eight hours in Fort McMurray and missed the event. I am proud to say that I was in Fort McMurray for the oil sands gala honouring the heroes of the fire in the spring. It was a wonderful evening. We honoured many heroes, and I was very proud to spend time in Fort McMurray, unfortunately more in the airport than necessary.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the Leader of the Opposition drove to Edmonton to be there that morning while he sat in the airport, that's a pretty weak excuse for someone who shows so much strength in condemning others.

Let's move on. Now, given that the rural leaders also noted the absence of the Human Services minister and given that this led them to speculate that this minister must feel that there is no need to answer to the pressing needs of rural Albertans who seek to obtain services from his department, to the minister: what pressing piece of government business kept you from attending AAMD and C?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I guess when the member was doing the counting, we were doing the real work. We were focused on the relationship that we had with municipalities, and our minister was working with . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: I thought we were going to make some records today and get further down the list, but the last five minutes have been very intense.

Can you finish your answer, and then we go to the second supplemental?

Mr. Sabir: I just wanted to say that we were focused on our relationship. We have a very capable minister who deals with the leaders from rural Alberta, and we are working on the priorities they are sharing.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure rural leaders will be interested to know that this minister doesn't consider consulting with them "real work."

Given that public safety is a major concern in all parts of Alberta and given that many rural leaders wanted to address the issues of mounting crime in their municipalities, the absence of the Solicitor General was also duly noted. Mr. Speaker, would the minister explain her scheduling decisions, or are rural leaders accurate when they say that you and your government must think that criminal activity never happens outside the big cities?

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I'll begin by saying that of course we think that crime in every part of this province is important. That's why we invest more in policing than any of the other western provinces. That's why we have the ALERT model. On that particular day I was, in fact, in Red Deer, meeting with the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police to discuss such issues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Rocky View County Roads

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite the best efforts of Alberta Transportation to make improvements to the intersection of highway 1 and highway 791, accidents are still happening. Ultimately this intersection needs to be converted to a proper interchange, and being a federal highway, federal building Canada fund money could be applied. Since I received your letter a week ago, can the Minister of Transportation also share with the Assembly the status of the interchange? How much national infrastructure component of the building Canada fund money will be applied to this project?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, hon. member. Thank you very much for the question. Well, the safety of Albertans on our highways is of critical importance, and that particular intersection has some particular safety issues. I'm happy to talk to the member, as I have in the past, with respect to steps that we can take to improve safety for Albertans at this intersection and throughout, in fact, our whole system. We're looking at the phase 2 now of the federal infrastructure program. When we receive details, we'll have a much better answer, and I'll be able to provide her with more information, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Given that the local high school is about a kilometre away from this dangerous intersection and given that young novice drivers are challenged to make a left-hand turn across two lanes of 110 kilometres an hour traffic, can the minister tell me when his department will hold community conversations with the residents of Chestermere on either installing Jersey barriers to convert the intersection to a right in, right out or force traffic on the Trans-Canada to slow down to 70 kilometres an hour for the traffic lights that will need to be installed as an interim measure?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, there are many potential solutions there, and we have implemented some additional lanes to allow for acceleration. We've looked at reducing the speed limit and installing lights. In fact, there's a considerable risk that that could increase the danger if people are expecting traffic to move slowly and it doesn't slow down. We have to be very careful about what that looks like. We're certainly in conversation on an ongoing basis with the city of Chestermere with respect to this matter.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Given that the Glenmore Trail, highways 8, 560, 791, and 797 are all provincial highways serving the commuters of Rocky View county and interfacing with county roads and the hamlet of Langdon and given that Alberta Transportation faces challenges with growing urban and suburban development, what agreements exist between Alberta Transportation and Rocky View county to fix the highways where growing development negatively impacts the highways along the provincial highway that may not fall within the highway rehabilitation timelines?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not quite sure I grasp the full intent of the question, but we're certainly working with all of our rural municipalities with respect to the intersection of provincial highways and local roads with respect to safety, and we're going to continue to do that, including in Rocky View county.

The Speaker: Hon. members, my apology. I skipped a member on the speaking list.

The Member for Calgary-Klein.

Renewable Energy Strategy

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents agree that we all have a stake in ensuring long-term environmental sustainability, but they are also concerned about the current economic challenges we are facing here in Alberta. The Minister of Environment and Parks attended COP22 in Marrakesh last week and met with global leaders and companies looking to invest in clean energy. To the Minister of Environment and Parks: what can Albertans expect from the global renewable energy market?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we heard loud and clear after meetings with the World Bank, international investors, and others is that there is a $23 trillion private-sector investment opportunity as the world moves towards addressing climate change. What that will mean for Albertans is that we'll be creating good jobs in Calgary, in places to address our methane emissions, for example, in clean tech, in efficiency, both on the engineering side and on the construction side. You know, we're opening the door to those kinds of investments because we're not ideologically opposed to taking action on climate change.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Albertans are eager to get back to work to support their families, to the same minister: how will our government's climate leadership plan bring investment to Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the 30 per cent renewable generation target by 2030 opens the door to a minimum of $10 billion of investment and a minimum of 7,200 jobs throughout Alberta. I mean, this is a nonideological economic undertaking. That's why people like Iowa Republican Senator Chuck Grassley says that clean electricity creates good-paying jobs for Iowans, boosts farm lease receipts, and grows the revenue base. Kansas Republican Governor Sam Brownback says that Kansas is not just the wheat state; it is the renewables state. I wish that the Wildrose were similarly interested . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Minister. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what are companies saying about investing in renewable energy in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the VP of Siemens Canada says that Alberta gives the industry something to focus on in Alberta. The VP of a U.S.-based renewable company, Colin Edwards, says that Alberta is a dream place to build, not the least of which because of our skilled labour. Now, I know that the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake just two weeks ago in this House called these companies "hogs [at] the trough," but we call them job creators. We look forward to working with those companies to create good jobs for Albertans.

Indigenous Community Environmental Initiatives

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Treaty 7 Grand Chief Charles Weasel Head recently joined the Minister of Environment and Parks on the mission to Marrakesh to talk about the importance of collaboration among different orders of government in addressing climate change and to speak about indigenous efforts on adaptation and mitigation. A key take away was that indigenous communities around the world face similar challenges of having enough capacity to address the impacts of climate change while having the opportunity to take advantage of economic opportunities and job creation through renewable energy development. We all understand the serious threat of climate change, not just for our own communities but for the whole planet, Chief Weasel Head said.

First Nations and indigenous communities have an important resource, their traditional knowledge. These traditional systems of adapting to extreme weather like drought and floods are shared and protected among elders. Collaboration and knowledge sharing is key, Chief Weasel Head says, and about also respecting treaty rights and ensuring that indigenous communities are included in decision-making early on. The Kainai First Nation is working with the University of Lethbridge to assess ways to mitigate emissions and adapt agricultural and ranching practices, develop training programs, and find alternative transportation choices. In Marrakesh it was really important to hear what is going on globally, but it's also important to go back to our communities and see what we can do, he said.

The economic benefits for First Nations in Alberta are great, particularly when it comes to jobs and revenue from renewable energy projects like wind and solar. The governments of Canada and especially Alberta have been very co-operative in helping the Kainai nation develop ways to engage with industry on renewable energy projects, and Chief Weasel Head hopes to see some of the projects come to fruition in the coming years.

I'm proud to be part of a government that will collaborate meaningfully with First Nations, Inuit, and Métis so we may all continue to carve a respectful path for all our peoples as we move Alberta forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Genomics Research and Methane Reduction

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Albertans ramp up their efforts to go green and our government takes the lead on climate change, we often talk about what we can all do to meet the challenge. I would like to point out to all members that in addition to our government's latest initiatives, Alberta researchers are working diligently to find new ways to meet the challenges of climate change head-on.

Livestock operations are often cited as a major contributor to methane emissions, but researchers led by Genome Alberta, a not-for-profit research funding agency at the University of Alberta, are using genetics to reduce the emissions from dairy and beef cattle: fewer burps and belches, it is often said, with tongue firmly planted in cheek. With funding from the government of Alberta and matching federal and industry funding, research has been under way since October 2015 to find the genetic markers that will make livestock more feed efficient. On-farm operations such as Sunalta and U of A teams led by researchers Dr. John Basarab and Dr. Paul Stothard are hard at work to increase feed efficiency in cattle, which in turn reduces emissions. Their work has the potential to reduce emissions by 11,000 tonnes per year, which could mean as much as a 26 per cent reduction in agricultural methane emissions in Canada over 10 years.

With the strong support of the government of Alberta, Genome Alberta has been able to take $7.7 million in provincial core funding and leverage it into $155 million worth of research over its first 10 years. Most of this funding has stayed in the province to support research jobs, bolster genetics research at our academic institutions, and add to the diversification of the Alberta economy.

In early 2017 Genome Alberta will be part of an $85 million national funding competition to bring clinical genetics into the health care system through personalized medicine. We wish Alberta researchers the best of success in this new research funding competition that will be at the forefront of using precision genomics technology to improve the health and well-being of all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Educational Curriculum Review

Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I held a consultation in my constituency to hear what Albertans want to see in the revised curriculum. I'd like to thank the parents, teachers, and students who attended and told me clearly that they want a 21st-century curriculum that will reflect the current realities of Alberta and the most up-to-date teaching methods.

At my consultation I was happy to hear a wide variety of opinions on education, from parents asking for consent-based sexual education to teachers asking for updated art, drama, and music programming to students asking to not be limited to a certain amount of credits if they choose to take two or more languages. One thing nearly everyone agreed on is the need for more specialized teachers and smaller class sizes, which is why I'm proud to be a part of a government that puts public education and students first. We are committed to consistent and stable funding through tough economic times, in contrast to the opposition, who believes that firing teachers and school staff will somehow invigorate the economy.

With a properly funded education system we are supporting our youth, and we will continue to have the strong, intelligent workforce that Alberta is known for, but there are changes that need to happen. Teaching outdated and oftentimes problematic concepts to our students reflects poorly on our province, which is why revising the curriculum is so important. The revised curriculum and our government's stable funding will give our students the tools they'll need to succeed in the future, whether they choose to go to university, a polytechnic, or head straight right into the workforce.

Thank you.

Conservatism

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, nearly two years ago a majority of the members of the former Official Opposition abandoned their duty to hold the government to account and to stand strong for the conservative values that their constituents elected them to represent. Their shortcut to power and promise of cabinet was short-lived when Albertans overwhelmingly rejected politicians who put themselves and not Albertans first. I believed then that for conservatism itself to be saved, the Wildrose must be saved, and here we are with 22 MLAs and the strongest Official Opposition in a generation. We have stood by our principles, and we have stood for Alberta first.

Putting Alberta first means putting Alberta before ourselves. It means putting Alberta before our parties. It even means putting Alberta before our constituents. It means doing what's right, not necessarily what's popular. It means boldly looking to the future while anchoring our values and moral compass in the greatest achievements of our history.

Alberta is the beating heart of conservatism. From Ernest Manning to Ralph Klein to Stephen Harper, Alberta has been the cornerstone of the conservative movement across Canada that others have looked to for strength.

As a growing number of us no longer saw ourselves reflected in our government over the last decade, the conservative movement nationally has suffered. Conservatives across Canada look to us again to show strength and leadership. They are looking to us to demonstrate the vitality of the conservative movement, and here at home they are looking to us to put Alberta first.

Ronald Reagan coined the 11th commandment when he said: thou shalt not speak ill of any fellow conservative. I've been guilty of breaking that commandment. After a year and a half of socialist rule Albertans expect us to be better than that. Our history demands that we aspire to something better. Alberta was built by great men and women who stood by the strength of their convictions. Alberta was built by great men and women who put Alberta first, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I need to remind you again that in Members' Statements there's been a practice – and I think it's a good one for this House – not to make any comments. I heard a few more today. So, again, please practise what the practice has been here in the past.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation and Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to give oral notice of a motion for tomorrow's Order Paper, the motion being as follows:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(1), commencing November 28, 2016, the Assembly shall meet on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings for consideration of government business for the duration of the Second Session of the 29th Legislature 2016 fall sitting unless the Government House Leader notifies the Assembly that there shall be no evening sitting that day by providing notice under Notices of Motion in the daily Routine or at any time prior to 6 p.m.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Bill 32

Credit Union Amendment Act, 2016

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Credit Union Amendment Act, 2016.

Credit unions are an important part of Alberta's finance industry and communities. The proposed bill includes amendments that will modernize and strengthen the credit union system and help them continue to contribute to a growing and vibrant Alberta well into the future. These amendments aim to improve consumer choice, encourage economic growth, and strengthen governance and accountability within the province's credit union system.

I said earlier that there are members of the credit union system who are here to witness this near-historic event because this act hasn't been changed in over 30 years.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the five copies of the article that I referenced yesterday in my member's statement, The Unbearable Smugness of the Press.

The Speaker: The Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several documents to table in response to comments from the Minister of Energy that windmills for power generation do not kill birds. I've got some documents, many of them peer-reviewed, to the contrary. The first is Wind Energy Development, which shows that wind power can have a negative impact on both birds and bats through fatalities or displacement or habitat loss.

I have a document titled mitigating wind energy impacts. This paper approaches ways to reduce, although not eliminate, the deaths of birds and bats caused by wind farms.

I have a paper titled research priorities for wind energy. This paper talks about mitigating the damage caused by wind farms to migrating animals.

I have a document titled Bird Communities and Wind Farms. This paper uses an extensive database of bird fatalities at a wind farm in Mexico to examine ways to further reduce bird fatalities.

I have a document titled white-tailed eagles. This paper examines the white-tailed eagle deaths in Norway caused by windmills. They did not show any clear evidence of avoidance flight responses to wind turbines.

I have a document titled estimation of bird fatalities at wind farms. In Japan protected species of birds are examined. They found 52 dead birds in a 17-month period at this particular wind farm.

I have a document titled a collision risk model. This paper predicts avian fatalities, which they say are a leading concern for wind farms.

I have a document titled prioritizing avian species. This paper talks about the decline in population for those species that are long-lived with low rates of reproduction. This examines 428 different avian species located in the United States that are at risk. They point out that the golden eagle was at high risk of population decline.

I have a document titled ABC's bird-smart. This paper examines how poorly proposed and existing wind farms can harm the environment. They list ways to prevent death through preconstruction risk assessment and science-based decision-making.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have a document titled Canadian estimate of bird mortality. This paper estimates that eight birds were killed per year per turbine at wind farms in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Minister of Energy takes the time to read these documents.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I believe we had a point of order earlier today. I think it was the Government House Leader's.

Point of Order

Allegations against Members

Mr. Mason: It was indeed, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. Well, I rise under Standing Order 23. I'm going to go with (j), and I'm certainly going to go with 23(i) as well, and I guess (h), too. So we'll go for all three of them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, during question period today the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti asked a number of questions of the Minister of Justice, and his second supplemental question, his final question, contained an allegation or implied an allegation that the government was doing something to prejudice the outcome of the Electoral Boundaries Commission's report in its favour.

I've got the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act here. First of all, the chair is appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, and it must be someone who's either

- (i) the Ethics Commissioner;

- (ii) the Auditor General;
- (iii) the president of a post-secondary educational institution . . .
- (iv) a judge or retired judge of any court . . .
- (v) a person whose stature and qualifications are, in the opinion of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, similar to those persons referred to in subclauses (i) to (iv).

Mr. Speaker, we have, of course, appointed a respected judge as chair of that commission.

Then the other four members are appointed by yourself, Mr. Speaker, "on the nomination of the Leader of Her Majesty's loyal opposition in consultation with the leaders of the other opposition parties represented in the [Legislature]." I'm certain that the Official Opposition fulfilled their duty with regard to that section. So two of the five are appointed by you, Mr. Speaker, on the recommendation of the Official Opposition, and two are appointed by you on the nomination of the President of Executive Council.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are other requirements as was referred to, specifically that there must be rural and urban representation amongst the commission and so on. So to suggest with no evidence whatsoever that the government is somehow trying to structure an Electoral Boundaries Commission to provide a biased outcome is an outrageous allegation, and it reflects not just on all members of the Assembly but on yourself as well as the person who makes the final appointments. I think it's very important for the work of that commission that the hon. member apologize and withdraw those comments contained in his second supplemental question because without any evidence whatsoever the hon. member has now called into question not just the government appointees but all appointees, including the Official Opposition's recommendations to yourself as well as the chair, who is a judge.

I don't think we can allow that to pass, and I would urge that you rule in favour of my point of order and that the hon. member withdraw those comments and apologize.

The Speaker: The House leader for the third party.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I find it quite baffling that with the wealth of experience of the hon. Government House Leader he has to take the rest of question period until he stands up to flip open his Standing Orders and choose, oh, I don't know, "I'm going to go with (j)" – that is what he said – and to add the others. You know, we need to do our homework before we come to this Legislature, and obviously that was not done in this case.

It's quite obvious from the questions, if you have the opportunity to review the Blues, sir, that the hon. member was simply inquiring about an issue that is directly related to an act passed in this Legislature. He has every right to do that. He was asking a question related to which the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General is responsible.

You know, I can tell you that, again, question 1, he was simply trying to ask why the government had not appointed anyone from rural northern Alberta to the commission. He was also attempting to understand why, in the minds of many people from rural and northern Alberta, they had been ignored in that choice. He wasn't asking about the commission and its work but the choice of this government. That's government policy. It was not directed at any government member, which is directly related to 23(h), (i), and (j). Therefore, it does not apply.

Mr. Speaker, you know this as well as anyone. Rural Albertans matter, and the hon. member was simply asking the exact questions that his rural Alberta constituents are asking. That is his job. It will be a sad day indeed if a point of order is ever ruled such that the questions that affect Albertans are ruled out of order.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you seem to be . . .

Mr. Rodney: Answering the question.

The Speaker: Hon. member, would you please be seated while I'm standing, with respect.

You seem to be arguing the point that was raised rather than the substance with respect to the standing order. Could you get to the final point in terms of why you believe that I should rule against the point of order that was raised?

Mr. Rodney: It's because the sections he picked don't apply, sir.

I will end with this. Questions are regularly asked about third parties, quasi-judicial bodies, agencies, boards, and commissions, and much more. There is no point of order here, Mr. Speaker, and I trust that you will simply rule as such.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, do you have any comments?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, you know, if it's your wish for me to apologize, I will do that. I just found it strange that nobody from the whole northern half of this province sits on that commission, and that was my question. The whole northern half of the province isn't represented.

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise. Well, there may have been the opportunity for the Government House Leader to take some objection to the fact that they were asked to answer a question based upon a set of facts that they're really not responsible for on the role of the commission. There may have been a point of order on that. What we're currently discussing because of the citation that the Government House Leader used was clearly a matter of debate. My hon. colleague didn't use abusive or insulting language likely to create disorder. He merely asked a question about it.

As has been said by numerous speakers, sometimes we have to accept two versions of the facts. That is what I would encourage you to do today. This is clearly a matter of debate. If he had raised a point of order about a piece of policy that was beyond the control of the government, perhaps that would be different.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, if I might, to the last point made by the Official Opposition House Leader, had I not interjected on the first supplemental question, the case might well be made, but I did caution the House. I have read the Blues, which I have. The question in this instance, which was addressed to the government, is: "Are you trying to tilt the electoral boundaries in your favour to help you in the next provincial election?"

In fact, I do recall this matter with some clarity. Under the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act it is very clear – and I quote – that two persons are appointed by the Speaker of the Legislature. Members are appointed, the first two being nominees from the government, the next two by the Official Opposition. In fact, I can recall the discussion with the Official Opposition House Leader to ensure that the third party was consulted in this matter.

With respect, hon. member, I would request in this instance that you consider an apology to the House. It would be appropriate, in my opinion.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I won't apologize for representing the whole northern half of Alberta, but I will apologize to you and this House for my actions.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Bill 30

Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act

[Debate adjourned November 22]

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any members who wish to speak to Bill 30? The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, please proceed.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity today to stand and . . .

The Speaker: Could we just pause a second while the members exit? Stop the clock. Thank you.

Proceed.

Mr. Hunter: Again, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity today to stand and speak on Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. I'd like to start off by saying what I like about this bill. I think it is an opportunity that we as the Official Opposition offer positive remarks when warranted. Alberta is facing a jobs and economic crisis, so I view this bill as an attempt to take a step to address this crisis.

While I don't support attacking our oil and gas industry, I do support positive initiatives to diversify our economy. I'm pleased that this bill targets developing industries more generally and isn't simply another exercise of corporate welfare where the government singles out a specific company for benefits here and there.

I appreciate that this bill calls for tax credits to be issued rather than grants. Grants would imply more taxpayer dollars being spent, which need to come from the private sector in the first place, and that private sector is struggling. This province also has a debt problem and needs to watch its spending. Grants can be important for some nonprofit organizations, but here we are talking about businesses that do make a profit if they are successful.

A loan is another alternative to a grant, and I'm glad the government isn't expecting businesses to take out government loans and then pay them back. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased that this bill provides tax credits and lets businesses keep money they've fairly earned.

To the members opposite I'd like to say thank you for their work on putting together this bill. However, I do hope that they will listen to me offer some concerns and suggestions that I have. While the bill targets industries more generally, the AITC aspect seems to be narrowly targeted at specific industries. I would appreciate some explanation as to why specific industries were targeted over others. I hope that there are no conflicts of interest involved here, Mr. Speaker. Why is an agribusiness eligible, for example?

An issue that I'm personally interested in, Mr. Speaker, is red tape. Paperwork can get very onerous for businesses. This bill is lengthy, and we don't have the regulations yet, so I'm worried that this act will be too complicated to be useful to Albertans. I also think that awarding these credits on a first-come, first-served basis will increase the chances of businesses making errors because they might be acting with haste. While we want to create jobs now, we also want sustainable job creation.

I'm also concerned about all the hoops that companies have to jump through and then make a deal before they even get confirmation that they will get a credit. They have to go through registration, receive approval from the minister to change a share structure, and receive approval from the minister to raise capital. The minister may impose conditions such as how many employees the business has or what their wages are before an investment is permitted. This seems a bit like bureaucratic micromanagement, but I look forward to the minister illuminating this House as to why they are necessary.

I hope that as the regulations associated with this bill get crafted, the government will put themselves in the shoes of business owners. The eligibility requirements for this tax credit should be clear and transparent. I also hope that the registration process and the process to obtain those credits will be clear and uncomplicated. It seems to me that the minister is more involved than should be necessary. My fear is that there is still too much discretion to select the actual businesses that will receive the credits. Who gets the credits should be established with objective criteria.

In the bill there is a clause giving the minister the discretion to refund the excess amount of the tax credit over the Alberta tax otherwise payable. I hate to say it, Mr. Speaker, but that does sound like cronyism. I think that all governments should be mindful when they pass legislation that they won't always be the government in power. So while in power it might be nice for oneself to have more power and discretion, but do you really want the subsequent government, that may be formed by members of a political party that you don't support, to have that same broad power and discretion to pick winners and losers? I think not.

I think the focus needs to be on ensuring that this legislation actually leads to more investment in the economy. If investors are too skeptical about whether they'll end up receiving the tax credit or not, they might not take the risk.

British Columbia, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba, and some states in the United States have similar investment tax credit programs. Has the government taken a look at those and done comparisons to see what works and what doesn't? If so, will they share this research with the public? If not, why not?

In addition to a crossjurisdictional comparison, is there an economic analysis that has been done? If so, can we see it? If not, why can't we see it?

Finally, are there any measures in place to evaluate the success after the first year to see if we are actually creating jobs and investments or just giving tax dollars away?

While I think the government took a step in the right direction by introducing this bill, I hope they will take another step that I can support, which would be to listen in good faith to the amendments proposed by the opposition as we debate this bill. That could lead to helpful amendments and, I think, lead to a good piece of legislation that will benefit all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions of the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing no one, the Member for Edmonton-Centre to speak to the motion.

Mr. Shepherd: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and have the opportunity to speak to Bill 30. You know, recently I had the opportunity to attend the Startup Canada awards, which were held here in Edmonton. While I was there, I had the opportunity to speak to Dr. Randy Yatscoff, who is the executive vice-president in business development with TEC Edmonton, TEC Edmonton being a group that supports entrepreneurs and innovators here in our city.

As I was talking with Dr. Yatscoff, I asked him his thoughts on the bill as proposed and on the work of our Minister of Economic Development and Trade. As I spoke with him, he had very high praise for the minister. He said that this was a minister who finally gets it. He spoke of how proud he was of the work that the minister had been doing in meeting with stakeholders and discussing the parameters of this legislation, conversations that I know he's been having quite a few of since we first discussed the possibility of these credits in our budget earlier this year.

I know that the minister has been working hard to consult with stakeholders. In fact, I can assure all members of this House that we worked especially closely with stakeholders here in Alberta, in particular the Calgary Chamber and other chambers across the province, to create the Alberta investor tax credit, a credit that they have been asking for and, as Dr. Yatscoff noted to me when I spoke with him, that they have been asking for for years in this province and that other provinces have been enjoying for decades.

It's our intention that this legislation be as broad as possible to provide the greatest benefit to investors, job creators, and their employees. Our proposed Alberta investor tax credit would be applicable across sectors and would offer a 30 per cent tax credit to investors who provide capital to Alberta companies doing research, development, or commercialization of new technology, new products, or new processes in sectors including but not limited to renewable energy, manufacturing or processing, agriculture, agribusiness and agrifood, transportation and logistics, financial services, and the creative industries.

To put it simply, this legislation will keep eligibility criteria as broad as possible and allow investment and business leaders to make the best decisions to help diversify our economy and create good jobs for Alberta's families. In fact, based on conservative calculations, we know that this credit would support up to 4,400 new jobs over three years and contribute up to $500 million to the province's GDP. We will be sharing the outcomes of this tax credit in future years pending the passage of this legislation.

I want Alberta business leaders and investors to know that they can be confident that Alberta will continue to be an investment leader because we are listening and working together to build an economy for the future. I also want them to know that their views matter and that we are open to finding the best way to ensure this tax credit works for them. Despite the stubbornly low oil prices Alberta's GDP remains the highest per capita among provinces, and we are still attracting the highest level of private investment in Canada. In fact, per capita investment in Alberta today is more than double the national average, and we are on track to hit record levels of investment in a variety of sectors. We want Alberta to continue to be Canada's best place to invest in business growth, and that's why we are listening to Alberta workers, economic experts, and business leaders to support even more investment in the province.

I look forward to having the opportunity to speak some more to this credit as we move forward with this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud under 29(2)(a)?

Dr. Turner: Yes, sir. And Edmonton-Whitemud is the most beautiful riding in the city.

The Speaker: I know. I'm told that very often.

Dr. Turner: Thank you for the opportunity to ask some questions of the MLA for Edmonton-Centre. Dr. Randy Yatscoff is a constituent of mine, and I wanted to provide a little bit of background on Dr. Yatscoff. Dr. Yatscoff is the president of TEC Edmonton, but prior to that he was the CEO and chief research pharmaceutical company that was successfully developing a substitute immunosuppressant that would replace a drug called cyclosporin, which has a lot of toxicities that make doing things like kidney transplants very difficult.

It's interesting that another physician here in Edmonton just received the Prix Galien, which is the top lifetime research award from the Canadian pharmaceutical association, for the work that he did on this same drug. Dr. Yatscoff is a very good witness to what we need in this province for developing new opportunities and supporting our entrepreneurs. I'd like to hear a bit more about what Dr. Yatscoff had to say about this bill.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud for the question. As I said, when I spoke with Dr. Yatscoff, he was quite open with his praise for the Minister of Economic Development and Trade, noting that the minister had spent quite a bit of time consulting with the community and talking with people in the technology field, innovators, investors here in Edmonton and across the province. He spoke of a trip they had taken to California to have the opportunity to see the tech sector there, the kind of investments that were being made, and to discuss the kinds of opportunities that are available here in our province as well. Certainly, it was an excellent evening that I had the chance to spend with him there.

The Startup Canada awards for the prairie region did celebrate and recognize several businesses here in Edmonton and around Alberta who are, as the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud discussed, innovating particularly in the field of health services with some very innovative, I think, products that are being distributed around the world and have great opportunity for us to continue to grow that sector of our economy. This credit is something that's going to help build on that by encouraging further investment, providing the start-ups – these innovators, these people who represent the real spirit of Alberta – with more opportunity to be able to develop their ideas, to innovate their products, and to share those with markets around the world.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other questions for the Member for Edmonton-Centre under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any other members who would wish to speak to second reading of Bill 30?

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a second time]

Bill 25 Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act

Mr. Drysdale moved on behalf of Mr. Rodney that the motion for second reading of Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

[Debate adjourned on the amendment November 23: Mrs. Aheer speaking]

The Speaker: Is there any member who wishes to speak to the amendment to second reading of Bill 25? The Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment, an amendment that would give the opportunity for the government to do the right thing, an amendment that would provide the government an opportunity to heed their own advice in many respects.

You know, we saw this government propose what they are talking about, being a very important multistakeholder consultation group in the form of OSAG. I'm sure that there are literally dozens of people watching at home, and for their sake OSAG is the oil sands advisory group. I know that sometimes we in this House have our own sort of language around different abbreviations.

This particular group, OSAG, has been identified and put into place to try and provide some feedback and information on ways to proceed in the oil sands industry. We've seen all sorts of extremists appointed to this organization, many of which we certainly have some concerns around, those who have lobbied and actively campaigned against Alberta's resource industry. So, obviously, we have some reservations about this particular advisory group.

But that being said, Mr. Speaker, the challenge that we face is that the government is legislating on something prior to hearing from this group, on which they have placed a lot of weight. They've spoken at length about the need to hear from all stakeholders, and they've made excuses for those who have campaigned actively against our resource industry, saying that these are important stakeholders to hear from and that that's why they've been appointed to this particular advisory group. While I fully accept that that is the case, then why not actually listen to them?

What this amendment does is provide an opportunity for the government to do just that. It provides them an additional six months for the oil sands advisory group to report back. There has been significant investment in this organization, significant investment in terms of resources that they're going to need to be able to provide information to the government, yet the government seems a hundred per cent committed to charging forward on this piece of legislation.

Now, I wouldn't want to presuppose the recommendation of OSAG, but it's my guess that even the recommendations that come back, given that they've appointed many of their friends and closest allies – my guess is that the information is going to come back and report something very similar, that the government has done an incredible job of capping emissions. Some would say that that's capping our future. I will say that in just a couple of minutes. You know, my guess is that when the report comes back, it will support their position, but that doesn't mean that we should not allow them to report back in a timely manner that can influence this very, very important piece of legislation, that in many respects will curb Alberta's future, that will guide the policy in the oil sands over the next number of years until, hopefully, there's a new government and the cap can be removed.

I've got to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the very best thing about this piece of legislation is the ease with which it can be undone. Just as they are placing a cap, a cap can be removed. But the real risk is in the period of time between the implementation of the cap and as we see capital flee to other jurisdictions because of the uncertainty that this legislation creates with respect to what may happen in the future around the ability for additional investment in the region.

Now, I know that there are a number of organizations who have spoken quite highly about a cap on emissions, but, Mr. Speaker, most of those organizations, particularly the industry side of those organizations, stand to receive the most benefit from driving away competition in their marketplace from a cap just like this. If the government is going to legislate in a manner that provides certainty to – I don't know – let's just say, four big companies, why wouldn't they want to support this? It provides a disincentive to new investment in their market share. We often hear the government speaking about that. I'd like to know how much consultation they did with other relatively significant industry players but not the big four, the ones they like to speak the most highly about.

I know I've spoken in the House, Mr. Speaker, about some of what very well could be the unintended consequences of legislation like this, when you've guaranteed certain players a significant ability to grow and really not have to be as innovative as they may have otherwise been to try and be more competitive because they're going to get the lion's share of the growth in emissions. It's quite possible, as my colleague and friend from Drumheller-Stettler says when speaking about legislation, that there can be unintended consequences of legislation. I'm curious to know if the government has really taken any time to consider just that.

One of the things, Mr. Speaker, that the oil sands advisory group might be able to provide some feedback to the government on is just that, the unintended consequences of this legislation and whether or not there's a possibility that innovation will actually decrease because of lack of competition in the marketplace, less requirement to be competitive, because the lion's share of the emissions are going to be made available to the four companies that are already the largest players in the region. It presents a real challenge to other players in the industry. It presents a real challenge to Alberta, frankly.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday you were able to meet a young lady who's concerned about just this. Well, it may not be her specific concern, the emissions cap. Her concern is around the economy and what's happening here in Alberta. A bill like this does not help the economy grow. A bill like this does not help the economy grow; it will do the opposite. We see people like Jorja Fisher expressing their concern about the direction that the government is taking with respect to our economy, with respect to our energy industry and the impact that the energy industry has on our province.

This government is steadfast in their commitment to cap these industries' opportunity. Mr. Speaker, Alberta has long been a haven of free enterprisers, a haven of the entrepreneurial spirit, with the freedom to create, the freedom to grow industry. Alberta has long been a haven that has created a desire amongst its people to expand. The whole time that we've done that, we've done that in one of the most environmentally responsible ways in all of our neighbouring jurisdictions and, frankly, the world. That doesn't mean that there are no improvements that need to or could be made, because we can always do more.

Mr. Speaker, you've heard me say this before in this House: at the heart of being a conservative is the need to conserve. The very first environmentalists were the ranchers, the farmers across our province, that knew we needed to take care of the land this year so that we would have the land to be able to provide next year. That in many ways has been the foundation of resource extraction in our province.

Now, that doesn't mean it's perfect, but putting a cap on our ability is not the path forward to creating balance between economic reality and responsible energy development. We have this significant overreach by this government trying to put their hand on every aspect of our economy, trying to engage in industry in the way that should be left to entrepreneurs and to the innovators, and creating a circumstance that really limits Alberta's potential to grow.

So I encourage the government to take a pause on this. I know that the government often – I almost said “always,” but that might not be true – believes that the opposition is only out to get them, that the opposition is only here to sabre-rattle and try and score political points, but, Mr. Speaker, I can point to a whole bunch of points where the opposition's goal and desire is to create a better Alberta. The problem is that when we bring things to the House, the government – you know, their immediate reaction is: well, the opposition has said it; it can't be a good thing. But there are lots of examples where we have provided meaningful ideas, and to the government's credit I think that maybe twice they've listened.

But here is an opportunity. Some would say that three times is a charm. Here is a charm that is an opportunity, a place where the government can make a difference. They can go out to Albertans – I know, Mr. Speaker, that during the last provincial election I knocked on doors and said: “Hi, I'm Nathan Cooper. I'm running to be your MLA in the next provincial election.” There wasn't one person who said: “You know what we need, Nathan? We need a cap on oil sands emissions.” It didn't happen. It didn't happen. The people of Alberta are not asking the government to create a cap on emissions.

The Speaker: Hon. member, as an individual with so much experience in this House, the use of your own name is really inappropriate in the House.

Mr. Cooper: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure. I didn't see you rise, so I wasn't sure if you were speaking to me or heckling me. But, with that said, I would never want to use the name of any member of this House, including that of myself, so for that, to you, sir, I withdraw the use of the words “Nathan Cooper” and apologize unreservedly.

Mr. Speaker, a cap on our future is not what the outstanding constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills were asking for when the now current Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills was knocking on their door.

The Speaker: Are there any questions for the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills under 29(2)(a)? Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm curious to know from the hon. member for the outstanding riding of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills: what exactly were people concerned about when you were knocking on their door?

Mr. Cooper: You know, Mr. Speaker, I'll definitely make sure that this is relevant to the debate because rarely were they chatting – I might just add that I'm glad that other members of the House are beginning to understand just how outstanding the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills is. You know what? They were talking to me about good government. They recognized that the prices of our commodities weren't the government's fault, just as they are not this government's fault today, but they were asking about things like not making our economic situation worse. They were concerned about jobs and the economy.

They were concerned about our energy industry. They wanted to know that they would have a government that had their backs, not a government that would in the first days of their reign be attacking industry, not a government that would be implementing a carbon tax that they didn't campaign on, not a government that would be taking runs at all different types of sectors in this province. They wanted a government that knew that Alberta's primary economic driver was the energy industry and that we ought to do what we can to assist that industry. So far the constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills have been very disappointed. I'm sure there are a few that haven't been, but the vast majority – I want to try and represent everyone, so I recognize that there are a few of them, like, at least half a dozen, that are pleased with the government's role.

An Hon. Member: About 1 per cent.

Mr. Cooper: About 1 per cent, Mr. Speaker.

The vast majority of them are expressing to me disappointment about the way that the government has gone and attacked our industry. Here's an opportunity for the government to take a step back, put a pause on the cap, and really re-evaluate the best path forward for our province.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to ask the member how many constituents are in the constituency . . .

An Hon. Member: The outstanding constituency.

Ms McLean: Yes, the outstanding constituency, you know, which I certainly agree with.

. . . of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, as that was his poll, potentially, and whether or not he has had the opportunity, I suppose, to door-knock in some other fine constituencies. His door-knocking seems to suggest that he has only done that in the run-up to the election, which is interesting, in fact, given that, you know, the issues of the day at the time were significant, certainly. However, some of the issues of today were not perhaps fodder at the door at the time. Really, I'd like to know the size of his poll, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cooper: Obviously, some polls are bigger than others.

Let me tell you, hon. minister, that I have spent a lot of time . . . [interjections] Easy, easy. I have spent a lot of time knocking on doors since the election . . .

Ms McLean: How many?

Mr. Cooper: Thousands.

Ms McLean: How many? You don't know the number . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister.

Mr. Cooper: There are well over 30,000 constituents in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I have spent a lot of time since the election knocking on a lot of doors, holding town halls, and speaking to people about the economic damage that this government is doing. I can tell you that a cap is not what they're asking for, and larger polls is also not what they're asking for.

The Speaker: Not sure where the rest of the story was going to go. The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was highly entertained when the minister, as my old English teacher would say, left her participle dangling.

Mr. Speaker, on to the amendment before us. I rise to speak in favour, and there have been some good points here that I've heard in the last few minutes. Really, what needs to be seriously considered is: how will this affect the future of Alberta? When you consider the cap, it's been noted before that 100 is a pretty round number, which does really speak to the fact that when the government came up with the number, it doesn't seem to be – and it's not indicated in the bill – actually based on anything. It doesn't seem to be based on any need or want. It's more, I think, checking a box of some promise somebody made, but the work hasn't been put into it to actually know. I'm not sure a cap is appropriate, Mr. Speaker, but even if there was one, you would hope that it would be based on some thought and some science and some research, and with the round number like 100, with none of the research included in the bill nor presented in this House by any of the government members, one can only assume that it hasn't been done. That alone is a good enough reason to support this amendment.

You know, Mr. Speaker, 100 megatonnes is one and a half times the emissions right now. You can see, really, why the current large oil sands companies would be in favour of that, because it essentially locks out other large projects. Here's what I believe that we all know about this. The oil sands are probably the world's largest environmental cleanup in history in the fact that the industry is doing that. But the projects are very large, Mr. Speaker. In fact, just to give some context to that, the projects that get built in the oil sands are so large that the government of Alberta has actually created pieces of legislation to make it possible for them to get built. What I mean by that is that I can say from my time as labour minister once upon a time, I made I think it's section 30 in the labour code. Even if I don't have the section number right – and I apologize if I don't have it right – I can explain what it is. It's something quite unique in the labour code because most of the businesses in Alberta make a choice whether they use a non-union shop, or in some cases that would be a Merit Contractors model, or a fully unionized shop with the building trades or work with the progressive contractors in CLAC.

Well, in the oil sands projects, Mr. Speaker, we've actually got legislation where to get the projects built, all three of these groups are allowed to work on the same site together, and they've all signed off on each other working there. Why? Because the sites are so big. There is so much work. Each of the groups, each of the labour groups recognizes that no one is going to invest that amount of money, that number of billions of dollars, into a project unless they can be sure that they're not going to have labour stoppages. In case any of the labour groups can't provide all the labour, they don't want to make it impossible for those projects to get built because each of their groups gets so much labour and so much work that none of them wants to take that away from themselves or each other. I say that just to explain just how massive the projects in the oil sands are.

Consequently, when someone has to sink that many billions of dollars into a project with, you know, the companies up there tell me, a payback of 50 or 60 years, I'm not sure, Mr. Speaker, who's going to do that in an environment where the emissions are capped on day one and when they don't know how much of those emissions the people that are already there are going to use up. Who's going to put $8 billion or $6 billion or $10 billion into a project that you are not even guaranteed that you can run at full capacity for a number of years to get your money back, to get your investment back? That really highlights for me just what a bad idea this cap is and how much thought has not gone into it by this government.

Further, right now we're talking about blocking future development, future jobs for Alberta families. We're talking about blocking future revenue for the Alberta government, which, if they're wise, will put it to good use. That is actually limiting the potential of Alberta, where Alberta's government should actually be expanding the potential of Alberta, actually reaching for the sky and challenging Albertans, and, oh, getting out of the way so that they can actually build a bigger, brighter, better Alberta with more opportunities for their children and grandchildren. This seems to do exactly the opposite.

That's why this amendment should be supported in the long term but even in the shorter term, Mr. Speaker. There was an election south of the border recently where a soon-to-be President of the United States has said quite clearly and openly that he supports the Keystone XL pipeline. Again, there is another opportunity for Alberta families for jobs, for opportunity to create futures for children and grandchildren, and another opportunity for the government to have more revenue, again, only if they do their job right, to spend on things that are good for Alberta or maybe even spend on paying down the debt that they're accumulating at a superfast rate. So there are more reasons why the government shouldn't lock down and limit the opportunities, because we don't know how much of those remaining emissions will be used to put product in the Keystone XL pipeline.

Now, the Premier and the government have been pretty inconsistent, but lately, I will say, to their credit, the Premier has been saying that she is in favour of pipelines to Canadian tidewater. I thank her for saying that. I sincerely hope that she means what she's saying, and today I'll take her at face value. I'll just say: good; thank you. Even that, Mr. Speaker, talks about how much product it's going to take to fill those pipelines to the east coast, to the west coast, to the north coast. When you start artificially putting caps on emissions, limiting the future of Albertans, the unintended consequence might be that if a pipeline gets approved by the federal government, it will limit our ability to take maximum advantage of that. Again, the legislation doesn't make mention of that. It doesn't make mention of any plans, any contingencies. It doesn't make any mention of having maximum opportunities for Alberta families and even the government's revenues under this arbitrary number that the government has put on the legislation.

It tells me that the amendment should be passed so that the government can take some time, talk to not just the oil sands energy companies but the other energy companies across Alberta, too; to really think about if indeed a cap, any cap, is a good idea; but also to think about: if you are going to put one on, what is a reasoned set of logic that you could support that with? Clearly, that work hasn't been done yet. Further to that, it even matters, Mr. Speaker, if the government and industry are able to work together and get further processing done here in Alberta. I know the North West upgrader is under construction for upgraded petroleum products. There are other projects coming forward to take the liquids out of gas and make all manners of plastics and polyethylene and polypropylene and butane and all the other elements that are available and ways to ship them. To have done the work to know whether the good results of those projects would be shipped on train or truck or pipeline and actually have a logical set of conclusions adding up to some cap, if the government was indeed to put one on: clearly, that work hasn't been done.

Again, by putting the cap on without the work being done, it actually puts the government at risk of artificially limiting the opportunities of Alberta families, limiting the opportunity for the government to pick up revenue to pay some of the debt that they're taking on, limits the opportunity for Albertans to have the best quality of life they can have and the jobs in these different industries in these different places around Alberta. Mr. Speaker, it actually by extension limits the opportunity of Albertans for all the diversified ways to make a living in a province with a good economy that is underpinned with energy, agriculture, tourism, and forestry, the big four. It limits those opportunities, too, by extension.

When you add all of that up, I think it's pretty clear that this amendment actually improves the arbitrary legislation with a round number, which gives somebody the ability to check a box and say: I said I was going to do this, and I do it. It actually is going to offer the government an opportunity to check the box and say: I did it with good reason, I did it with good research, I did it with good background, and that is why you should support it.

This is a very good amendment. I intend to support it. I encourage all members of this House to do the same for the reasons that I have outlined just now and for the reasons that other members of this House have given here ever so recently.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know . . .

The Speaker: Excuse me. I'm sorry. Are we under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Fraser: No, on the amendment.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Klein. Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Coolahan: Correct.

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to ask a clarifying question to the member. First of all, I'm just blown away at his lack of knowledge of the labour code, and that was the labour minister. Anyhow, I'm glad we have a change in government. My question I'm asking the member is: did he suggest that unionized environments are less efficient than non-unionized environments and that unionized environments are keeping investment out of Alberta?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I didn't even say anything remotely similar to what the member is asking, so, no, I didn't say that. I would correct the member that actually there is a section that allows on the big oil sands projects for CLAC, Merit, and Building Trades to be on the same site. That co-operation is actually helpful. It's actually helpful to get big projects built. All three of the groups have signed on to it. I know that when I was minister, I signed off on at least one order to make that possible on a project. I appreciate that the hon. member across tried to take a cheap shot, but he, frankly, didn't really do his homework before he went down that road. That's unfortunate. What I was saying was that all these groups are important. They all have something to offer. Why? Because they put Albertans to work in Alberta. When they co-operate, they're even more valuable together than they are separately although they are valuable separately, too, Mr. Speaker. Each one is very valuable separately, and they each contribute a great deal to the economy of this province and the future of Alberta families. I would thank them all for that.

I don't think I talked about efficiency at all, but I am talking about opportunities for Alberta families, for Alberta's economy, opportunities for the government, that the hon. member supports, to achieve more revenue to meet their goals. Now, I know their goals may not always be the same as ours because we're more business friendly and really more in touch with what Alberta families need and what is actually good for the economy and good for the future of this province. I think that we're hearing that every day from Albertans from across this province, how much better they were served about – what? – 19 months ago than they are today, and that's been a consistent message. Mr. Speaker, that's why I'm counselling this government to actually start thinking about what is better for Alberta families. Putting an artificial cap on is going to take away jobs from Alberta's children and grandchildren in the future and Alberta families today, that need those jobs to support themselves, to be self-sufficient, and to create a quality of life that they and their kids and grandkids look forward to.

I would encourage the hon. member and all members of this House to support this amendment because this amendment really supports improving this piece of legislation, that, frankly, needs improving. That's why I've chosen to get up and speak to it. I sincerely hope that members of the House will see the wisdom in improving not only this but any other piece of legislation that they can. I would say to hon. members that the amendment brought forth by my colleague here from Grande Prairie-Wapiti – and I think my colleague from Calgary-South East is looking forward to speaking to it – makes it better.

I think that's one of the key things that we want to do here as members of this House, to look at how we can make the future better for Albertans. The 100-megatonne cap actually makes it worse. It actually limits the potential for Alberta's economy to grow and the jobs and the opportunities. That truly is a shame.

Again, that's why I'll be supporting the amendment, and that's why I encourage members of this House to do the same, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't come from an oil and gas background, and predominantly that's why I wanted to take the role of the Energy critic, the Environment critic, because I have no ties to big oil and gas and I have no ties to any junior oil and gas companies or environmentalists. I really wanted to approach this position from a perspective of new learning, eyes wide open, and try to understand all the issues. I think that in terms of speaking to other members and some of the work I've done in this House, people can see that I take an approach of collaboration and, really, not just wanting to oppose to oppose but really trying to articulate an argument that makes sense.

This amendment, Mr. Speaker, I think is pragmatic. I think it's one that certainly I'll support because it gives us an opportunity to take a second look, to really understand what this bill will be doing. It gives the government some time to consult, to look at the environment around us.

Mr. Speaker, I can only think of a couple of things – I look at my medical background, and, you know, just historically there was a time when it was immoral, wrong to use a cadaver, to study it for medicine. After somebody had passed, it was a sacred thing, and people thought of the body and the spirit all in one. Certainly, imagine if they had limited that exploration around medical science because it didn't match with the Church or it didn't match with certain spiritual practices and traditions.

What I'm saying, I guess, is that when you look at this, there are so many things – and the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays had mentioned it, the North West upgrader. I think what we're seeing around the world, particularly from the Paris convention, which this government attended on our behalf – there is an opportunity. We are seeing countries more and more – as the technology becomes stronger, particularly around wind and solar and other renewables, it is now more affordable. It is easier to tie those things into the grid. I certainly admit that, and I would say that in Alberta, because we have those resources, wind and solar, we should be using them. Biomass: we should be using it. Full stop. But we should not limit our ability around certain technologies with other resources.

I'll use coal, for example. Yes, I understand the government wants to phase out coal, but we have coal-fired plants in this province that burn as clean as natural gas. When I look at some of the infographics that the government has given, they want 30 per cent renewable energy and 70 per cent natural gas. I guess my question is: why would you limit the coal piece of it if it's burning as clean as natural gas? To me, that's an equal, and let those coal-fired plants phase out in the time that was originally allotted.

When we think about the oil sands, one of our greatest resources, that has employed millions of Albertans, given them good-paying jobs, supported families, supported numerous charitable groups, made life better here in Alberta, not to mention the technology that has come along with it – there have been great advancements because of the work done in the oil sands and other parts of the oil industry in Alberta – why would we want to limit that? The reason why I say that is because I think what you're seeing, going back to the other countries that are coming along and certainly with the new government – and this is something they can be proud of – is that they have certainly pushed people into a space of uncomfortableness, and that's not necessarily a bad thing, but you've got to give them time to adapt.

We don't know that right around the corner there is a technology that improves the way that we pull the bitumen out, the way we process it. There is huge opportunity. I don't see why it's so hard for the government – and maybe they will. I'm not sure, Madam Speaker. We're talking about six months, a six-month reprieve, then maybe send it to committee. Maybe there's a piece of technology that allows us to produce more. Maybe there's a breakthrough in terms of pipelines to tidewater. I can tell you that there are some excellent things out there. Again, I'm approaching it as a wide-eyed paramedic, never in the oil and gas industry, taking courses at SAIT with my colleagues, talking to oil and gas industries, visiting new technologies that are amazing, Alberta technologies by Albertans that one day, I guarantee you, will resonate around the world. People will go again, "There's Alberta, a leader," like we always have been.

So I think it is prudent to step back, take a little time. Government members, I know you're so busy with the work as you stare at your computers, but think: if we could take six months, take a look at it, hopefully there's some technology that helps. We're talking six months. We're not saying, "Don't do it," but if there's a technology piece there within six months, isn't that a benefit to Albertans? Isn't that what we should be trying to do here?

I think every member in this House – and we've heard a lot of it, you know, particularly from the Member for Calgary-North West. There is nobody in this Chamber, I believe, that is here to do harm to Albertans. We're all here for the common goal to make sure that Albertans succeed and, hence, our children. That's my stake in the game: my kids, my parents. So you want to try to make the best decisions. They don't always come easy, and that's why we need to work at it.

Madam Speaker, I'll be supporting this amendment. I hope other people just take a minute, look at it, maybe talk to the people in their departments, particularly around the energy file, and talk to their members and say: what's six months? It gives them time to consult. It's a win-win for both sides. We're not saying, "Don't do it"; we're just saying at this point: "Take six months. Take a step back."

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments for the previous speaker under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Last we spoke here, I think we ran out of time. Not everyone got to hear the poetry that was flowing from my mouth, so I'm just going to continue on that a little bit here.

The Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act limits growth of our own industries at a time when we need to create jobs, increase the ranks of the employed, initiate and dictate the conversations with other Premiers and provinces, and get pipelines built to tidewater. We need more time to evaluate this act; thus, we need this amendment passed.

This environmental initiative of limiting emissions in order to get social licence from other provinces and countries is noble, but it's naive. Every province in this country has benefited from the oil revenues that come from Alberta. Every other country that is condemning Canada for our natural resources is a hypocrite. Whatever happened to ethical oil, ethical energy? Everyone jumped off that bandwagon when they realized the implications of limiting their access to energy, but they did find a nice target to direct their hypocritical ethics towards. They feigned concern about our energy industry using tactics to their own benefit. It gives our own citizens a perception that their governments are environmentally ethical, and they all have good feelings the next time they vote for their hypocritical governments.

To the members of the government side: our NDP comrades understand how they have benefited from our oil riches. Would the minister of environment understand that she couldn't sit and sip lattes with her professor and debate the finer points of a green Earth policy if it weren't for the industry that funded the very schools and universities that she hung out at while others worked hard in our northern communities, paying taxes on their hard-earned money? This government speaks of the environment like they own it. Truth be told, I've never met anyone that doesn't believe in clean air, clean earth, clean water.

The point is that I feel that we as Canadians are feeling the brunt of environmentalism, and it is unnecessarily impairing us from succeeding as an economy and, more importantly, as an influencer. You see that when we are at our finest and our economic engine is humming along, Albertans and Canadians put their kids through higher education. They invest in their future. It's because we want our children to have a better life than we did. We want our children to work in prestigious professions and industries that ensure their financial viability. They can learn the finer points of life and listen to their idealistic professors with tenure who can preach about the most virtuous aspects of our society, the most idealistic desires of mankind. That is where we can be most effective.

We are worldly people with a good reputation throughout this world. Canadians volunteer across the world. We work in orphanages, communal farms, rescue and respite operations in environmentally challenged areas. We have Canadians that volunteer to teach people about language, clean water, and sustainable families. This is where Canadians are most effective.

It's countries in Central America, South America, Africa, Asia, and so many other areas where there is far greater pollution and contributions to global warming and climate change. They still burn their garbage. They use so much plastic. They do not recycle. We need to educate people in these countries and ensure that they do their part in contributing to a low carbon intensive world.

We understand climate change. We understand your concerns and the intent of this bill. We just feel that we should be targeting the real problems in our global environment, and that is every other country out there but not Canada because we already are the highest standard. The minister of environment recently came back from overseas, Marrakesh, I believe, where she attended an international environmental conference. I would ask this minister if she were here: did she propose any changes ...

An Hon. Member: Point of order.

Mr. Yao: Oh, sorry. I withdraw.

The Deputy Speaker: I won't hear the point of order, but just a reminder that we don't refer to the presence or absence of members in the House.

Mr. Yao: Right.

I wonder if we had any representatives that proposed any changes to measuring the environmental impacts of man. Carbon limitation by itself is only one part of the solution. Did the conference consider any other measures to make the overall measures be more accurate? You see, they're clear-cutting rainforests in Central and South America that are large carbon sinks. Instead, they're expanding housing divisions, cattle ranges, and coffee farms. Land is key. Virgin land, untainted by man, is even better. We need to promote undeveloped, undisturbed land all over the world. In Canada we have an abundance of that. There needs to be a certain amount of weight, a certain value for countries that promote nature and reward conservation.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Population. You know, Mr. Speaker, from the minute that man lit his first fire, he was contributing to carbon pollution. Every man needs a fire to keep warm, to cook our food, to heat water into steam that starts a process of harnessing energy. Quite frankly, if it weren't for immigration, Canada wouldn't be growing because our first-world lives have led to an educated people, people who focus on the finer things in life that are inherent in our culture. We are having fewer children. In some cases people aren't even choosing to have any at all. We are following our intellectual pursuits, our higher education, our careers.

But not so in so many other countries of the world that continue to grow at an exponential rate. Our population is currently 7.4 billion and is expected to grow to 11.2 billion by 2100. Sir, that is a lot of people. Keeping it simple, that's a growth of 50 per cent from current numbers. Where we see two people, there will be three right across this world. If you recognize the impacts that man has, we need to add this to the measurement when determining this environmental pricing scheme that is currently in place.

To summarize, the current measuring tools don't fairly weigh all the aspects of mankind's impacts. If this province's ministers are going to support their home and protect their environment, they have to do more than tout how they're impairing their own economy. They have the ability to influence the world to more accurately measure man's impacts and then pressure the world to be more responsible, because only when the world changes its habits will we see our planet's health improve.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Anyone under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake under 29(2)(a)? Please proceed.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak in support of this amendment to put a pause in a process that's been quite hurried. We have seen repeatedly from this government a pattern of legislation coming out before all the facts are in, legislation coming out before a full analysis has been conducted, legislation coming out even before a fulsome consultation has taken place with the people of Alberta. Repeatedly, repeatedly, bill upon bill upon bill, in this way: legislate first, and then stay tuned for the details. Unfortunately, when the details start coming forward, when Albertans start realizing the nature of a particular piece of legislation, the people of Alberta rise up in alarm.

I remember Bill 6 very clearly, like it was yesterday, and now we have a bill that is before this House when we still have not heard from OSAG. Yet we were told, when OSAG was first commissioned, that this was going to be the body that was going to have the experts and consult with the experts to craft the details surrounding oil sands emissions. But for some strange reason – and I personally was very surprised to one day find Bill 25 being introduced in this House when we had not heard so much as a peep from OSAG.

It just seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this pattern of legislate first and then find out there's a problem is like what one of the people in the press told me the other day. It's like playing Whac-A-Mole. It's like: the government comes up with a policy, and then up pops an unintended consequence, so they whack that one down with another policy, only to see another unintended consequence pop up, and they try to whack that one down. It's bill after bill, policy after policy like this.

All we're asking with this particular hoist is to pause for a minute and have an opportunity to get things the right way around here and to listen to everybody – and I mean everybody – that's going to be impacted by limiting development like this. I realize that there were a handful of oil sands companies that the government consulted on the drafting of this bill that they have talked about, but that is confirmation bias, Mr. Speaker, to surround yourself with people that will shake their heads and agree with you and never hear the dissenting side of things.

There are other investors out there who have leases that they've paid good money for, and now somehow this government is legislating their investment to be nothing, to be worthless because those leases now – and they're massive – have to try to squeeze into the remaining 32-megatonne window. So although we talk about this Bill 25 as an Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, it is really an oil sands development limit act. That's really what it is. Unfortunately, the government of Alberta has already been paid for the leases that have been sold, and to limit the development without hearing from those companies that invested substantial amounts of money, were prepared to invest substantial amounts of money into Alberta jobs for our people, taxes to be paid to our government, royalties to be received, to just shut them out like that is highly offensive and very irresponsible action on the part of a government.

What needs to happen, really, is for everyone to just chill for a bit, park this thing for six months, have an opportunity to talk to everybody that's impacted by this limit. Is this limit actually reasonable? Does this limit not in fact favour a few and disfavour a lot? Having that confirmation bias by having just a handful of major players influencing the construction of a bill like this leaves some Albertans questioning whether this, in fact, isn't just the choreographing of an exclusive club, creating an environment up in the oil sands that's going to favour just a handful of companies who've had their hands in the crafting of this and to disfavour or cause to be at a competitive disadvantage a bunch of other players up there who have innovation, have innovative ideas, can employ a lot of Albertans, could pay a lot of revenue for taxes and royalties. These companies are scrambling now. They're at a significant disadvantage because of this development limit act, which is what it really is.

Although it has been asked for a number of times by persons on this side of the House, we still have not seen the methodology used to calculate or to come up with 100 megatonnes as a limit. Let's see the analysis. Where is it? We've asked. Numbers of people over here have asked. I mean, if this is the right number, then fine. Justify it. That's not an unreasonable request. Albertans ought to have confidence that their government actually took the time to do some kind of scientific analysis to determine that this 100 megatonnes is the right number, but we haven't seen that. We've asked, and it has not been forthcoming.

Some things that have been calculated are that we have a cumulative lost opportunity cost here of somewhere between $150 billion and $250 billion in lost economic activity.

Mr. MacIntyre: Between $150 billion and $250 billion.

I don't know what that translates to in jobs, but, you know, just as a good old guess I suspect it would put most Albertans back to work again. But it's not going to because there's this arbitrary figure that's been determined, 100 megatonnes. Now, if there isn't an economic impact assessment that's been done or some sort of technical analysis that's been done, then how was that number developed? Was it just a dart thrown at a wall full of numbers and it happened to hit 100 that day? Albertans need something that is much more scientific in its origins than that.

I think it behooves the government, especially this government, that has, as I've said, this track record of legislating first and then finding out, oops, and then having to backtrack and come up with Band-Aids to fix something that could have been avoided if they just would have slowed down and taken some good old objectivity and listened to Albertans, the experts that we have, and we've got a lot of experts here in this province.

I would dare to suggest to this House that there is no other jurisdiction in the world with the level of expertise in oil and gas development that we've got right here in this province. That expertise needs to be brought to the table and listened to. Let's be really clear about one thing: this act that we're looking at here was crafted by politicians. Politicians made this thing, and this province is full of experts in the field, thousands of them, tens of thousands of them, and they have not been heard from. It's incumbent upon the politicians that craft legislation, regardless of whichever government is in power, and it's incumbent upon us all as legislators to listen to the people that actually know way more than we know.

Now, we have a couple of people that have been elected to positions here who are experts in their field. We have, you know, an hon. member over here that's an expert in the world of EMT. We have another one here in EMT and firefighting. We have different expertise represented around this room, but when it comes to this kind of stuff, when we're talking about oil sands development to the tune of $250 billion, it really behooves us all as legislators to just put it in neutral for six months, and let's listen to what those experts have to tell us.

Let's have a look at the analytics that were done to determine the 100-megatonne cap to begin with. As I've said before in this House, it's a little bit deceptive because we're not really talking about 100 megatonnes. We're talking about a 32-megatonne remaining window and a massive amount of oil sands development that's going to have to squeeze into those 32 megatonnes.

I would like it very much if everyone in this House would support this amendment right now, this hoist amendment, just to put this thing on hold for a while. Let's take a really good look at this so that we can avoid having to try to come back later and fix this bill.

I remember the Bill 6 situation. The government brought in Bill 6 and threw it down on the table here, and it was advertised as being perfect as it was. Perfect. "Let's just run this thing through the House: first, second, third readings. Let's get it proclaimed, and let's rock 'n' roll. We've got farming solved in the province of Alberta." You remember that? It was all perfect. Well, that five-page bill that was so perfect caused such a furor within the field of experts that were out there, the farmers themselves. If there was such a thing as a PhD in farming, they'd each have one. Those experts did not feel like they were consulted whatsoever. They rallied here, they rallied all over this province, and we had a massive petition because they weren't consulted, because the government was rushing through a piece of legislation. Eventually, thanks to the farmers and the uproar that they caused, we saw six pages of amendments to what was touted as being a perfectly fine piece of legislation. Obviously, it was not so perfect.

So here we are again. We have a bill coming before us in a hurried manner when the very body commissioned to advise the government on this thing has yet to report. It's absurd in the extreme, just absurd, because we're talking about, really, the future of our province. This is definitely impacting the future of our province. When you look at that price tag of the lost opportunity cost of $250 billion, we're talking about a significant chunk of Alberta's future. That's your children and mine, our grandchildren, and the future employment opportunities they have. This is going to impact the revenue stream coming to the provincial coffers to fund education and health care and seniors and all of that. When you consider the enormous economic impact that limiting this development poses to our province, how important it is, therefore, that this is done right and not in a haphazard way.

I submit to this Assembly that by pushing this thing through based on its first iteration, without amendment, this government is looking for trouble. They really are. They're looking for trouble. This is going to be another catastrophe looking for a place to happen. It's going to be another Whac-A-Mole policy, where a bunch of unintended consequences are going to pop up, and this government is going to have to try to whack them down, just like we're seeing in the electricity sector, where the government came into power and without even thinking about it increased the carbon levy under SGER by 50 per cent, and, oops, it triggered section 4.3(j), an unintended consequence. So let's whack that down. We'll just go to court and sue Enmax and stop them from complaining about what we've gone and done to them through SGER.

Well, that court challenge was a sham, and obviously they were going to lose. So, okay; whap, now we have got to come up with a solution. Well, we'll legislate. We'll have retroactive legislation. That will solve the problem. Well, does it? It absolutely destroys any credibility the government has as a partner in a contract.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was listening, of course, to the member speak and talk about "do it right" and how maybe taking a little time and maybe, for instance, waiting for the report from OSAG might be something that could happen in that six-month period while there's going to be some more consultation. Of course, there's always been some concern over the members that have been appointed to OSAG. Of course, there are some people there that seem to have some pretty radical views and views that don't line up with Albertans' and don't line up with support for the industry that they're representing in that committee.

I just wanted to know if the member would like to comment a little bit more on some of those things. He's brought up some really good points, and I'd be interested in hearing some more, too, if he had any other points that he'd like to bring forward. Obviously, he's somebody that has a pretty good handle on this file, both with the energy issues and the oil sands and that sort of thing but also with the electricity market and some of the changes that this government has brought forward there. So if this member would like to expand on some of those things and about consultation, about waiting for a report and how much of a benefit it would be to put this off and have some time to consult and find out what the report is going to say and what Albertans want to say about this.

Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Well, thank you to the hon. member for his request. I'll just talk a little bit about OSAG and the potential value that isn't going to happen. You know, the people of Alberta look to government for good governance. The government put in place the oil sands advisory group to advise them on this very subject right here. Now here we are with this bill before us, before we've even seen the OSAG report. If this bill passes before the OSAG report comes out, it's going to send a signal to Albertans that's really very clear. First of all, the OSAG was a complete waste of their tax dollars, an absolute waste of tax dollars. It was nothing more than an attempt of window dressing on a government's already predetermined plan – already predetermined – and there was no reason for OSAG to be commissioned in the first place because the government already had signed, sealed, and delivered what they wanted to do.

Having this bill actually before the House in this form, as it is right now, already confirms the suspicions of many Albertans that the government simply had this thing already ironed out as to what they wanted to accomplish and that we never needed OSAG in the first place, that it was already mapped out. So even from just, you know, a basic imaging look on this thing, this looks really, really bad. It looks tacky as can be. The government had a predetermined plan here. It is: oops, we forgot we hadn't heard from OSAG yet. There wasn't even a pretense. It's just terrible.

So OSAG is going to issue a report. Well, I have a prediction. OSAG's report is going to look an awful lot like Bill 25. Won't that be a surprise? Surprise. Won't we be shocked? Frankly, Mr. Speaker, they've already let the horse out here. You know, the OSAG now is just a sham. It's just a sham. It's just window dressing. It has no credibility left.

Mr. Cyr: It's like the consultation with the farmers.

Mr. MacIntyre: Yeah. Just like Bill 6 and the supposed consultation with farmers that never happened.

We have here a bill that is going to be impacting hundreds of thousands of potential jobs in this province, and it behooves this government just to put it on pause for a while. Let's listen to the juniors that are out there, listen to every single stakeholder in the oil sands, every company that's invested up there and is looking at that 32-megatonne window and saying: how are we going to squeeze in there? They need to come and talk to us. We need to hear what they have to say rather than have just a small group of very large corporations determining the outcome of oil sands emissions.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Members wishing to speak to the amended motion? The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm here today to speak to Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act.

The Speaker: Hon. member, are you speaking to the amendment?

Mr. Loewen: Yes, I'll be speaking to the amendment to Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act.

Mr. Speaker, while the government continues to defend this ill-advised bill, we have to continue to point out some highly relevant facts that Albertans do not know. We now know that an independent estimate predicts that this cap could cost us in production 3.3 billion barrels of oil by 2040. Three point three billion barrels of oil. Reports have determined that we could have a cumulative loss of between $150 billion to $250 billion in lost production. That isn't just money; that's jobs. It's people's livelihoods that this impacts. Further to that, this policy is likely to result in the stranding of oil sands assets. This government just doesn't learn.

With its carbon tax, its accelerated phase-out of coal, and the tampering with PPAs that's causing alarm in the investment world, this bill will surely not help. This bill's emissions cap is entirely arbitrary. There has been no rationale given for this from a government that clearly hasn't thought this out. Did it not occur to them at any time that we are already in a position that if the present leases were fully developed, we will have already exceeded the 100-megatonne cap?

This is where stranded assets come in. How is this government going to deal with producers that want to develop their oil interest but the cap will prevent this? Are the taxpayers going to be on the hook for compensation to these producers? Who is going to decide which companies get to develop their interests and who doesn't? The government once again put itself in a position of picking resource winners and losers. Why can't the government get out of the way and let the market decide? Why must they insert themselves into every market? It's a story we are seeing over and over again with this government. Once is bad enough, but this is a pattern developing over many different business sectors.

This government seems to be embarrassed by our resources rather than to take a position to celebrate them. This could not be more obvious than by the numerous examples of government members actively protesting our natural resources. They gave speeches. They helped write books. They appoint radical environmentalists to the very panel that has been tasked to oversee this law's viability. Seriously, you can't make this stuff up. It's so ludicrous. These radicals even in the last month have been protesting against projects that would help our resource industry. In the Premier's leap of logic this provides balance to the panel, she says. Mr. Speaker, if balance is appointing fundamental opposition based on ideology, then the members opposite need to put down the manifesto and listen to Albertans.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the minister's own words she says, "We are seeking to find specific, credible solutions that will ensure that the world looks at Alberta differently." You know what? That's true. The world is looking at Alberta differently. This government's policies are driving investors out and keeping investment out of Alberta, investment that creates jobs, investment that has left Alberta, that has cost jobs. That's the message that people are getting from Alberta. Every time we turn around, this government comes up with a new policy, a new bill, a new regulation that destroys investment. Now, the minister went on to say, "By doing nothing, Conservatives at both the federal and provincial levels led Albertans to an economic dead end and a boom-and-bust economy." Well, this government: there's no boom; there's only bust. Only bust.

She goes on to say that they've gained recognition from U.S. President Obama during his address to Parliament earlier this year. Mr. Speaker, President Obama didn't put a carbon tax in in the U.S. Hillary Clinton said that she wasn't going to either. President-elect

Donald Trump is not going to do it either. So our largest trading partner is not doing a carbon tax, but this government is. So when we sit here and we ask this government to take six months so that they can receive the report that their appointed people are supposed to prepare and to have a chance to listen to Albertans, to study the effects of what this bill could do, that's not unreasonable. It actually is only common sense.

Now, the minister also said that we need growth in oil sands. I'm trying to figure out the discrepancy here. We need growth in oil sands, but we're going to put a cap on it. That's a contradiction. "We have Albertans from all parts of the energy industry who have taken great pride" – this is the minister speaking again – "in telling the world for decades just how good Alberta is at energy development." Well, I would hope that this government is telling the world how good we are here at energy development.

Now, this government doesn't like to conduct or release economic impact studies. Over and over again they have come up with bills and ideas and regulations. No economic impact study. In fact, when we did find one through FOIP, we realized it had been hidden for a good reason, because it didn't stand the test of what Albertans would have liked to see.

Mr. Speaker, I think it only makes sense that this amendment pass, that this government take the time it takes to figure out exactly what this is going to cost Albertans. That's what we're here to do. We're here to represent Albertans. We're here to do what's best for Albertans. We've had over 100,000 job losses in the last year and a half, since this government has taken over, not including the contractors that have lost their jobs, that won't show up in the figures, or that have lost contracts and are only working a small percentage of the time. Wouldn't it make sense to step back and say: "Okay. What's really happening here? What are the full ramifications of this bill?"

Now, Mr. Speaker, every day I have struggling Albertans desperate for help and work. They come into my constituency office, they call, they e-mail, and they text. Job loss: they're suffering. They're desperate for help. But we don't see the help coming from this government. We just see bill after bill that sends messages to the investment community that Alberta isn't a place to invest, and that's sad. They suggest that this bill is going to provide certainty. This bill provides nothing but uncertainty along with everything else that this government has been doing.

Of course, they like blaming the low price of oil for all the problems. The low price of oil this government has no control over, but these bills that they have passed that have created the uncertainty in the investment community are the government's doing. They have to take responsibility for those actions. Those actions have cost jobs and will continue to cost jobs into the future. There are other jurisdictions around us that are doing a lot better than us that used to never do as well as us, but since this government has come in and started passing these bills and doing these things that create uncertainty in the market, the jobs aren't coming back. The jobs are going.

Now, the NDP doesn't like to keep track of what impact their policies will have on greenhouse gas reductions either. They don't seem to want to keep track of anything. What are the effects economically? What are the effects environmentally? Where is it? There's nothing. Now, there is a report that's supposed to come within a couple of months from OSAG, but we're going to be passing this bill before it shows up. That's what the government wants, anyways.

Now, we have to realize that Alberta is an extremely environmentally responsible jurisdiction. The oil that we produce here is better than anywhere else in the world. If we look at some of the other jurisdictions where oil is produced, they don't have the standards that we have. Now, as other countries move forward in their development and increase their energy consumption, our global energy demand will only grow. The needs of the new, emerging markets for energy products will be met. The question, Madam Speaker, is: will they be met by us, or will they be met by some of these other jurisdictions that don't have the environmental standards that we have, that don't treat their citizens like we treat them here? So that's a choice we have.

With respect to emissions, it does not matter whether Canadian or Iranian supplies meet this growing global demand. As long as there is a demand for energy, that demand will be met, so we need to be the ones to produce this energy and do it in an environmentally responsible way. Can we improve? We're always improving here in Alberta, always. Oil sands is a classic example. The way it started and the way it is now are totally different: far better environmental standards now, far less impact on the environment.

It's not just the environmental policies that we have here in Alberta that make it better to produce the oil here rather than in these other jurisdictions. Socially we have a far better record than a lot of these other jurisdictions.

Now, this government doesn't seem to like the idea of carbon leakage. They don't seem to want to recognize that that's a real phenomenon. But if this government truly wants to do something to help the global fight against climate change, then Alberta's economy should be producing more because this is where it's done in a most responsible manner. There is no more environmentally responsible jurisdiction than Alberta. We're doing better than we were before and will continue to do better. We'll continue to improve. Albertans have always taken that stewardship seriously. We've always demanded that polluters do better to reduce their impact, and that will continue.

Madam Speaker, we need to understand that taking the time to review this bill, taking the six months, hearing what the committee has to say – I mean, we have no idea what they're going to say. We can presume, based on who's been appointed to it, what they're going to say.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to thank the hon. member for bringing up some very important reasons as to why we need to give a pause to this particular bill and give some time to put some ideas, too. I just have a few comments, and then I have a question for the hon. member.

One of the things that you were talking about that is really, really important is the impact that this is having, not only on Alberta, and that other jurisdictions are going to produce when we're not doing that. There is absolutely no slowdown here. It's a matter of where this production is going to happen.

If you're willing to do an economic impact study – and there are very, very good pieces of information out there that give some very good direction as to what that may look like, and I highly recommend that the government take a look at this because the roller coaster that Albertans are on due to, as the government has said, the volatility of the market cannot also sustain volatile policies. It's one thing to have to be able to bend and change due to the volatility of the market, that the government has no control over.

It's a whole other thing to be creating policies that are volatile, that actually contribute to the demise of this market.

So if the government is going to hamper the ability of the sector to produce properly and environmentally and ethically in this province – again, to bring up what the member had said, there are reasonable forecasts of prohibited production, that Canadians will lose billions of barrels of prosperity, and this is not a win for us. There's no way that we can even conclude that that's a possibility.

Also, the member had brought up some very important things about stewardship. That is something that is not mentioned in this at all by the government, the stewardship that is actually happening here in this province, the unbelievable environmental regulations, and what this industry already does that is so right, that given the opportunity, given the economic opportunities to do so, we'll continue to do better. It has to do with efficiencies. Efficiencies are created by doing things better, by doing them faster and spending less money and reducing energy costs all around. This suits the industry, to be able to do this given the appropriate economic environment to do that.

He also mentioned something about emerging markets. How is it that we're supposed to bring in emerging markets when we're capping the very prosperity that is driving this province forward?

My question is to the member. You were going on to explain about the small and junior companies, and I was curious. I'm sure that like probably every member in here you've had people reach out to you, potentially talking about investments or what they would have liked to invest. The government members seem to think that there's a need to rush this legislation through. Would you be able to comment or discuss why it is that you feel that this government is in such an absolute hurry to get this legislation passed before the panel has a chance to respond back to us?

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the member for the questions and comments. Obviously, this bill will have impacts on other jurisdictions, not just ours here. It will have repercussions around the world because, as we've already stated, this demand for energy is going to come from somewhere. The question is where. Do we want it to come from here? Do we want it to come from some of these other countries that don't have the standards that we have? That's definitely a concern.

Now, one thing we should be doing: if we want to really make a difference on climate change, we need to spread our technology around the world, our clean-burning coal. There are coal plants being built all over the world right now that don't burn as clean as our clean-burning coal here. We should be getting that technology to those countries because that would actually make a difference on climate change.

Now, when we drive investment away from Alberta, it's not just Albertans that lose. It's Canadians that lose because this is a major part of the Canadian GDP. We've seen that with the . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's no secret that I'm not a huge fan of adding arbitrary caps to anything, and we've already had the experience, as I've mentioned before, of the debt cap. We've seen what happens when government starts to go down the road of just pulling numbers out of the air.

Now what I'm looking to say is: let's take a different direction. I went with the direction last time of trying to explain it through past legislation that had been pushed through the House. Let's bring this down to a different level. I was thinking about Christmas and my youngest daughter, Charlotte, the pride of my life. Both my daughters are the pride of my life.

Ms Hoffman: Good catch.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. The Minister of Health said, "Good catch," and I have to agree with her.

My daughter is at the point where she's picking toys out, right? Of course, she's got to pick that toy that every other child in Canada or probably North America wants. I've never heard of this toy before, so when she came to me with it, I was, like: "Wow. Can you tell me all about this new toy?"

An Hon. Member: Is it a Hatchimal?

Mr. Cyr: It is a Hatchimal. Thank you very much. Apparently, the government has also run into this difficulty.

It's called a Hatchimal. Now, these little toys are furry, birdlike creatures. I had to look this up because I didn't know. I really didn't. All I heard from my daughter was: it's a toy you cuddle with, and it hatches. That's essentially what I knew about it. It's a furry creature that is inside of an eggshell. What happens is that the child needs to cuddle with this little toy for about half an hour, and it'll hatch. It comes in various colours, and it's quite the amazing little toy.

Now, in the case of this little toy, it's about $70, which . . .

Ms McLean: Did you get one?

Mr. Cyr: I don't want to ruin my daughter's Christmas gift – I've got a question from the minister – but she's going to probably be very happy.

This Hatchimal is about $70. Coincidentally, it is – and I'm going to go into it – very close to our current megatonnes, which is 68 megatonnes. I'm going to slowly work into how exactly this toy has relevance to this amendment. What we've got here is a dynamic company in Toronto that came up with an incredible idea that our children are really engaged with, and they really, really, really want to have this new toy. Now, it's meant for and its target is little girls between six and eight. My daughter is seven, so it kind of makes sense that my daughter would be the target for this.

Now, the problem, as we all know, with these toys is that they are always sold out, and this toy specifically – and I need to go slowly with this. NPD marketing, not NDP but NPD, says that it holds five of the top 10 spots: first, second, sixth, ninth, and 10th. This toy actually holds five of the top 10 spots. So when we look at this toy, it is in an insane demand right now, and we're looking at this toy possibly selling for thousands of dollars when it comes to eBay.

What we're looking at here is going back to the debt cap. I told you I'd get back here. Now, my concern is that when you've got a debt cap, you've got a commodity suddenly that has value, that 30 megatonnes. In this case, with this toy, would it be reasonable for us to allow a company to start selling these toys for a thousand dollars? Well, that doesn't seem to be a thing that we would allow in Alberta. I do understand free enterprise – we need to go there – but we also need to understand that there's gouging involved in this as well.

The problem here is that by setting an arbitrary debt cap, we are creating a market that would never have been there, and this market is worth, as my colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake has stated . . .

Mr. MacIntyre: Magnificent Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Magnificent Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: It should be "incredible."

Mr. Cyr: I'm getting a lot of feedback. I will say that when it comes to ridings, though, Bonnyville-Cold Lake is the most beautiful.

But let's get back to this. Now, what we're looking at here is that we've got a commodity suddenly that we've created with this 30 megatonnes. To hear my colleague, he says: "You know what? There is a ton of value with our oil, and there is an incentive for us to have people say that they want all of that profit." This is the important thing – and this is something that he's mentioned as well – that when you use very few people to create an arbitrary cap, a lot of times what happens is that they may take advantage of the opportunity of being the only ones being heard. That is why it is important that we go and we start hearing what the oil sands advisory group has got to say even though – and this is important – it is stacked with people that are not for extracting oil sands, because I would like to know where they are going with this 100-megatonne cap.

My concern is that when we get to this report, we're going to see a one-page document, and that one-page document is going to tell us that it's good for us. There's not going to be any economic study done, but it's going to talk about our social licence, the social licence that we're purchasing with this, a social licence that has been rejected by our closest trading partner.

Now, with this hoist that we are moving forward, it is reasonable to say that we don't know what the President-elect is going to do because he's not in office until January. It is reasonable to say that we should at least know the direction of our closest trading partner. This is distressing, that we are setting arbitrary amounts without talking with any advisory groups, without any experts. But we do have a 100-megatonne cap – well, that's great – and we do have a carbon tax. Well, that's great, too. What we don't have is the fact that this was not something that the NDP campaigned on. Shutting down our oil sands, which potentially could happen here, is not something that was campaigned on.

I will tell you that when it comes to Bonnyville-Cold Lake, we are seeing incredible unemployment right now. We have people coming into my office saying: Scott, what can I do? [interjection] I apologize. I withdraw using my name. I will say that when it comes to my constituency, they are coming to my office and saying: "What is the outlook? Where do you think you're going to go?" You know, I do have to say that it has slowed down for the layoffs when it comes to the oil sands in my riding, and I have also heard that this new drilling program that's being brought forward is possibly going to bring a few more wells into my riding.

The thing that distresses me about this is that I've had, actually, a couple of constituents come to me and say that they put out job requests for these drilling rigs that they are planning on starting, but they can't get the people to run them. How can that happen? The reason is that people right now are struggling to find jobs, but they know it's only temporary. They know that this is going to be a six-month window maybe for work, and the job that they've got right now they need to hold on to, or the job that they've got in another province, which is, unfortunately – Saskatchewan is my closest neighbour. We're right on the border with Saskatchewan, and they're booming right now. They've got all of my tradespeople moving across the border and putting their houses on the market to buy in the province next door. I get distressed when I hear that, when we've had such a strong investment in my riding.

I also have to say that right now, when I hear that somehow we are getting a skilled labour shortage because we are only seeing short-term investment, this distresses me as well. This was never a problem in my riding before, but here we are today. Now, in my riding, unfortunately, when it comes to jobs – and this is serious. I just need to say that when it comes to my riding, we do need to consider the fact that this cap that is about to be put onto my constituents without any consultation is going to affect them further. I'm going to see more layoffs, and I'm going to see more houses vacant in my riding, and that is tragic.

Madam Speaker, I will be encouraging everyone to please hold off on this bill, at least until we can find out where the current President-elect is going and when our advisory committee can get back to us on exactly what the intent of this cap is going to be.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), questions or comments?

Seeing none, are there any further speakers to the amendment?
The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to speak in favour of this motion. One of the things that I wanted to first of all say is that I was living in a community – and I won't say which community it is – and there was a desire by that community to put a cap on growth of the community. A lot of the people in the community were thinking: oh, actually, this is fantastic, because what's going to happen is that it's going to put a higher value on the homes and the rest of the lots that they have available. In reality, that was the outcome. The housing prices skyrocketed.

But the problem with it was that this was a community that a lot of young people wanted to move to. The price of those homes got to the point where they were priced out of these young families' price range, and they were no longer able to move to this community, that they were moving to prior to when this cap on its development was implemented. So this was an unintended response to this policy that they had made. Unfortunately, in my opinion, it was ill thought out, ill planned, and because of that, there were a lot of problems that were created.

It turns out – hindsight is always 20/20 vision, Madam Speaker – that what happened in this situation was that there was still such a desire to be able to move to this community that the then mayor and council ended up getting rejected by the people of the community because it was just such a shemuzzle. They were elected out, new people were elected in, and they removed the cap.

Now, I say that because this bill seems to be ill conceived. It really is something that I've been thinking a lot about. I thought: here is an industry that we have, being blessed to have the kind of natural resources that we have in this area, yet the strategy of this government is to actually keep it in the ground. I know they don't like us to say that they're trying to keep it in the ground, but this is, in effect, the same thing. There's no difference with this.

They just don't like what happened the last time, when the Leap Manifesto group said, "Let's keep it in the ground," and you know the outcome. We know what the outcome was. Down in Medicine Hat we saw what the outcome was. The Leap Manifesto federal NDP got 1 per cent of the popular vote. The reason why that happened is because people here in Alberta are very grateful for that resource that we have, very grateful for it. So to put a cap on that, in my opinion, is absolute folly.

But here's the other point that I wanted to make on this. The federal government comes to us, and their climate leadership plan is that you'd either have a cap and trade plan or a carbon tax. Now, I know that in Alberta we love to give equalization payments galore, so we've decided that what we're going to do here is that we're going to do both. We're going to provide Albertans with a double whammy, a double gift, cap and trade and a carbon tax.

This is a government that keeps on giving. I'm pretty sure, seeing as we have Christmas coming up, that Albertans will consider this simply coal in their stockings. It's not something that I think they're going to be grateful for, and in 2019 I think that they're going to tell this type of Santa what they really think of those gifts.

Mr. Cooper: They're getting rid of coal, so you won't get any of that in your stocking.

Mr. Hunter: That's true. They're getting rid of coal as well. Maybe they're just trying to get rid of any of the evidence there.

Madam Speaker, in reality, what this bill is doing to Albertans is that it is saying: "We want to abandon the resources that we have. We want to abandon those assets." I think we've already heard ample evidence here today that those leases have already been oversold. We've gotten again into another situation where an ill-advised decision has been made, and the unintended consequences are going to be that there are probably going to be lawsuits from these companies. All of a sudden now a bill or a policy has been made, and we're in a situation where these guys are going to have to sue them. They're going to have to sue the Alberta government again, and who's going to have to pay for that? The people of Alberta are going to have to pay for that, just like they're going to have to pay for the outcome of the lawsuits against Enmax and the other ill-advised lawsuits that are going on right now.

I think that it would be wise for this government to take a look, go back to the drawing board, look at this over the next six months, consult, consult, consult with as many of the stakeholders and as many Albertans as they can so that they have the opportunity to be able to get it right this time. That will allow this government to be able to step back and say: "What are those unintended consequences? Are we actually going to be in a situation where in 2019 Albertans cast their judgment on us and say that we didn't do right in multiple situations but especially in this situation?" You know, I think that by stepping back, they could put a feather in their cap versus capping the emissions, and I would highly recommend that they do that.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any further speakers to the amendment?

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

9 a.m.

Thursday, November 24, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect or pray, each in our own way. Hon. members, as we conclude our work for this week in the Assembly, let us allow ourselves to take the time to refocus on the tasks ahead. Let us continue to work diligently on behalf of our constituents and to seek to understand before trying to be understood.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 31

Agencies, Boards and Commissions Review Statutes Amendment Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today on behalf of the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to move third reading of Bill 31, the Agencies, Boards and Commissions Review Statutes Amendment Act, 2016.

I appreciate the excellent discussion we've had with our fellow hon. members on this bill, and I'm pleased to see the general support for our government's direction on agencies, boards, and commissions. This bill is an important step in our ongoing work to make sure Alberta's public agencies are relevant, effective, and serving the interests of Albertans. It reaffirms our commitment to transparency and providing Albertans access to the services and organizations they require.

To briefly recap the discussions that we've had, this legislation would dissolve three agencies identified in the first phase of our review and will contribute to an overall savings of over $33 million over three years. I want to confirm that these savings are indeed net savings, given the questions from the opposition during second reading and Committee of the Whole yesterday. The work of the agencies dissolved through this bill continues within government or through other mechanisms. This bill also enhances governance and provides consistency for Human Services appeal panels. It is in keeping with our commitment to transparency and disclosure of compensation for top officials. Our government's work will continue in the coming months with reviews of agencies not subject to the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act and postsecondary institutions.

I'd like to thank the hon. members for their ongoing support of this work and for this bill. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Mr. Clark: It's Calgary-Elbow, Mr. Speaker. Close.

An Hon. Member: Right around the corner.

Mr. Clark: That's right. We're right there.

Yes. Thank you. I did want to rise briefly and speak to Bill 31. I'm certainly happy to support this bill at third reading. It's always nice to see government looking carefully at some of the structures that are in place that were in existence under a previous government and going about finding some efficiencies. That seems to be a unique and new thing from this particular government, so I'm pleased – pleased – to see that they have gone down this path. I'll be very interested to see the results of further reviews of agencies, boards, and commissions. It seems like an area that is ripe for further consolidation. Again, very, very interested in seeing what comes forward.

One area, as we speak of agencies, boards, and commissions, that I always think about is governance, their role in governing and providing leadership and appropriate controls over different aspects of the provincial government. That's obviously always a very important topic. Some would argue that the most important thing we do as legislators is to provide that governance function, and certainly each of these boards has a very important role.

One of the most challenging and troubling aspects of board governance at the moment in the province I think – and it doesn't get enough coverage or discussion amongst Albertans because often their work is done out of the public view although a lot of their work certainly is in the public interest – is board governance at postsecondary institutions. We have in this province seen under this government a remarkable and, I would say, shocking lack of attention to the important work of replacing board members of postsecondary institutions in particular.

They've gone about two or three, at least, different cycles and ideas on how they're going to replace retiring board members. First they refused to accept nominations, reappointments of dedicated board members who had been there for a number of years and were doing so in a volunteer capacity, bringing their tremendous skills. Then they asked those board members to reapply for the same position, and in good faith the vast majority of them did so. Then they moved the goalposts again and said: well, actually, that's not what we're going to do; we're going to put together a website, and we're going to open it up.

Now, I want to hasten to add and emphasize my belief that diversity on boards is critically important. It's very, very important that we ensure that our agencies, boards, and commissions reflect the diversity of this great province. That absolutely ought to be a goal. Equivalent to that goal, however, Mr. Speaker, is actually running these organizations, running them effectively in the immediate term and ensuring that they have people at the board table who are capable of doing the job. But, frankly, before we even get to capability, we need to make sure these boards have quorum. There are boards in this province who are at quorum or perhaps even below quorum, and they've had to beg board members to simply stay on.

So I really encourage this government, as you consider agencies, boards, and commissions, to please get on with the job of appointing board members to postsecondary institutions, to not bias the process by choosing a narrow world view as part of the criteria, and to, absolutely, I think, appropriately seek diversity on boards. Again, I want to emphasize how important I believe it is that the boards around this province reflect the diversity of our province, not to shortchange those institutions – in many cases they're multibillion-dollar institutions or billion dollar-plus institutions – by discounting the tremendous experience that a lot of the existing board members have or people with formal designations like the Institute of Corporate Directors designation, or ICD. That's a very high standard that is brought to these boards. I think it's very important that we maintain that expertise.

Having said all of that, I will support Bill 31 here at third reading. I think it's nice to see some consolidation work.

While I have the floor, very briefly, Mr. Speaker, I do find it always fascinating how numbers are thrown around this floor:

we're going to save $33 million over three years. You could easily say that we're going to save $66 million over six years or $88 million over eight years. It's always interesting how the numbers get big. We just sort of decide: "$11 million dollars a year doesn't sound like a lot, you know, but $33 million seems like a pretty good number. Why don't we choose that?"

With that personal opinion and commentary on the state of political communications in our society today, I will return to my place, Mr. Speaker, and listen to the remaining speakers on this important bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak to Bill 31, the Agencies, Boards and Commissions Review Statutes Amendment Act, 2016? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 31. Now, I don't have a particularly long habit of saying nice things about government bills in this House, but it's never too late to say nice things in the spirit of the approaching holidays. I think we can all agree . . . [interjections] I am getting heckled for saying nice things already. It's American Thanksgiving today. I suppose old habits die hard. I'm trying to be nice, and even then I get heckled by this government. It reminds me of old times.

I think we can all agree that this bill will save taxpayers some money, and that is a rare thing coming from this government. But it will save taxpayers money. You all know that if there is anything that I like, it is saving taxpayers money. In my time at the Canadian Taxpayers Federation I made it my business to harass politicians who did not like to save taxpayers money and in fact squandered it. I made it my job to point out as often as possible where money was being misappropriated, where it was being overspent, and that merely throwing money at a problem is not the solution for everything.

Now, while there were very significant problems with spending in the previous government, I didn't think it could get any worse than that. Well, I've been wrong before, Mr. Speaker. But I'm happy to see that there is at least some silver lining to the gold-plated spending habits of this government.

When the ABC, agencies, boards, and commissions, review was announced, I was skeptical. I was not sold at the time that this government would go through with their plan to cut the size of government and spend less money, but here we are. The Minister of Finance is showing some solid conservative Wildrose qualities in this reduction in spending and in the size of government. [interjections] You see, I try to say nice things about them. This government doesn't know how to take a compliment, Mr. Speaker.

When those of us on this side of the House propose cutting spending or cutting the size of bureaucracy and eliminating duplication, it's apocalyptic. It's going to result in the mass laying off of all of our nurses, all of our teachers, all of our doctors when we propose cutting one orange cent out of this government. But when the NDP do it, it's merely good administration. [interjections] Mr. Speaker, these guys really just don't know how to take a compliment. I invite them to join the Wildrose. We can't offer them cabinet, but we can offer them a good conscience in the next election.

I truly hope that this review of agencies, boards, and commissions continues and that this government will continue to cut bloat in government and to save taxpayers money.

The primary issue and perhaps the only issue I have with this bill right now – and it is an issue for every member of the government who sat on the opposition side, all four of them – is the part that will be defined by regulations. My colleagues have pointed out that this government used to be against regulations to define things that affect the lives of Albertans. The minister said yesterday that . . . [interjection] Well, I know the Minister of Education does love regulations now, Mr. Speaker, but I do remember a time in opposition when they were quite opposed to giving the government broad powers to merely regulate things without any accountability to this Legislature, but things do change. Now, at least for today, this government does believe in cutting the size of bureaucracy and cutting spending, and I hope that this spirit can continue all the way through to budget day.

The minister said yesterday about this issue, which I need some clarification on:

We're not going to put it in a statute because we don't think it would be the right thing to do, to put a definition for emergencies in statute. You can't actually put down in writing an understanding of every emergency a client would experience in their lives.

Now, perhaps the government could clear up how you cannot put in writing in statutes what an emergency would entail, yet they somehow are going to put in writing in regulations what an emergency would entail. They'll put it in regulations, which would require writing, but they're not going to put it in legislation. I would like some clarification as to what the difference is between writing in the bill and writing in regulation.

If the only difference is that they have not yet consulted and that's what they are waiting for, then this is not a reasonable excuse. This bill could have gone to committee, and we could have consulted there and put it in this bill instead of ink it in the regulations, Mr. Speaker. We could have gone to committee and consulted to determine this before we pass it into legislation. To quote the minister again from yesterday, "So we're taking the step to gain input from others about how they would define emergencies, and then we'll take that and put it in regulation." It sounds like that is the case. It sounds like this minister has not yet consulted on what an emergency would entail.

It makes me wonder: what else did the minister not consult on with this bill? The minister obviously knew that emergency appeals exist, but who did he consult with to find out what emergency appeals exist, and how come those people could not have told him how an emergency would be defined? Did they not give a definition of what an emergency was when they told him that there were emergencies?

So let's be straight with the minister. I will support this bill and the Official Opposition will support this bill because it saves taxpayers money, and we can change regulations if they don't consult properly, and then stakeholders will revolt.

I am getting frustrated with this government refusing to consult before a bill is drafted and not after. It's like their ability to regulate the beer market. Instead of consulting lawyers before they created rules around beer taxes, they consulted after. Now they are being sued.

Mr. Cooper: Did they get a B.C. lawyer for that, too?

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'm not sure if they hired B.C. lawyers, Mr. Speaker, or Alberta lawyers, but in either case they have drafted legislation and regulations, and they got sued.

I believe this is now the second time in a year that this government is being sued on the very same issue. I expect at least a strong possibility that this government will be on its third beer tax system, perhaps within a matter of months, depending on how things go in the courts. It is an example of this government's inability to do their homework before they draft legislation. They draft legislation. They put it out there. They'll put out all the government propaganda to support it, perhaps even go on a pub crawl to support it. Then they end up in the courts, or they end up in hot water with stakeholders and people who have a serious stake in this legislation. The government needs to learn to consult before, not after, it legislates and regulates.

Bill 22 isn't even on the docket anymore because the government consulted after and found out that they don't even need the legislation to do what they wanted to achieve. Too often this government is sloppy and at times even amateurish, and that is why I'm a bit of a stickler on the topic of consultation. I have no agenda when it comes to how an emergency appeal is defined. I just want to ensure that stakeholders are being properly consulted on the topic, and I know that this government is not properly consulting stakeholders.

Just yesterday I met with Advocis, a group who wanted to talk to the Minister of Finance about regulations that could potentially jeopardize up to 5,000 jobs in this province, and the minister cancelled the meeting just hours before the scheduled time. Stories like this flood into our offices about the minister not properly consulting the people involved. That's why I'm very concerned every time this government says that they will consult after the legislation is passed. What is holding this government to account so that they will consult? What is holding this government to account if they would just define emergency appeals however they like? Will the regulations prevent those who need an emergency appeal from getting that appeal because this government did not consult properly? I've not seen evidence to the contrary.

Another example is Bill 6, Mr. Speaker. I don't think we even need to say much more about how that went when this government decided that it knew best, before farmers and ranchers in this province. I suspect that it will probably cost the jobs of quite a few members on the opposite side of this House in 2019.

We will support this bill, Mr. Speaker, but I do not support how this government constantly insists on defining everything in regulations and not legislation, and I am seriously concerned about their inability to consult before, and not after, they draft legislation. So I and, I believe, the Official Opposition will be supporting this bill, but let's take this as yet another warning of what is a proper way to govern this province.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Klein under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Coolahan: I actually just want to clarify some . . .

The Speaker: With the Member for Strathmore-Brooks? Yes? Proceed.

Mr. Coolahan: Okay. I just wanted to thank the hon. member for his very kind words – that was wonderful; thank you – and his support of this bill.

I just wanted to clarify on the consultation around emergencies. Of course, consultation was done with members of the boards and the commissions. We were led to understand that it is actually better to define emergencies through the regulations because, you know, it's much more difficult to change it in the legislation. Defining emergencies through regulation allows us greater flexibility to expand on that definition because emergencies, by definition, are sort of ad hoc things that happen.

Anyway, I just wanted to clarify that we have consulted on that and that this was the best route to go for defining emergencies. Thank you.

The Speaker: Member for Strathmore-Brooks, any comment?

Any other questions to the Member for Strathmore-Brooks under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any other members that wish to speak to Bill 31?

Seeing and hearing none, is there an hon. member who would close debate on the matter? To close debate is Banff-Cochrane. Oh, I'm sorry. Lethbridge-East wants to speak.

Ms Fitzpatrick: I move to close debate.

The Speaker: Sorry. The Member for Banff-Cochrane can close debate on the matter because he initiated it to the hall.

Would the Member for Banff-Cochrane like an opportunity to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

The Acting Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 21 Modernized Municipal Government Act

The Acting Chair: Currently we are on amendment A1. Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Chair. Before we get started here in the debate this morning, I'd like to make a request for dealing with amendment A1. If it's okay with you – and I'm not sure if the third party has additional comments – I am comfortable if we debate the amendment as a whole, but I wondered if we could request that votes be separated so that we can vote on part C and part X separately and that then we vote on the rest of the package.

The Acting Chair: Yeah. Please proceed.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Okay. Thank you, Chair. If I might, I have a subamendment to the amendment, and I have the requisite number of copies here. Then I'll wait until you give me direction to proceed.

The Acting Chair: I just need to see the original, and then we'll proceed.

Mr. McIver: Okay. Well, I'll have that for you just as soon as I can. As soon as you give me the word, Chair, I'll continue.

Chair, while we're waiting, on the government's motion, we'd like to vote on the subamendment separately so that we can make it clear which ones we're for and which ones we're against.

The Acting Chair: That's fine. Please proceed.

Mr. McIver: Okay. Thank you, Chair. I rise today to move a subamendment. The requisite number of copies have been delivered. I move that amendment A1 to Bill 21, the Modernized Municipal Government Act, be amended in part EE by adding the following after clause (c):

(c.1) in the proposed section 708.29(1) by striking out clause (h), which says that we "must meet any other requirements established by the regulations."

Chair, the intention of the amendment is to provide clarity to municipalities with respect to the purpose and objectives of the intermunicipal collaboration frameworks. Stated within the legislation, ICFs could have a scope much larger than anticipated by municipalities given the proposed regulation. This amendment would respectfully force the government's hand to provide clarity to municipalities in regard to the role of an ICF.

As the legislation reads currently, the latitude of what could be included in an ICF and what it could require is very large. It would be beneficial, I believe, if the government could communicate clearly with municipalities what their intention with respect to this matter is instead of making decisions without proper consultation. I believe this will improve the legislation. I think it'll actually help the government in the future to stay onside with municipalities.

Mr. Chair, I encourage all hon. members to support this subamendment, and I thank you for this opportunity to speak to it.

The Acting Chair: All right. We will refer to the subamendment as SA1.

Are there any hon. members who wish to speak to the subamendment? The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to the subamendment. It didn't appear that anyone from the government was going to talk about whether or not it was a good idea or a bad idea, so I guess somebody in the House needs to be ready to do some work.

My hon. colleague the Member for Calgary-Hays has moved a subamendment that really seeks to provide some clarity to municipalities. I know that I have done a significant amount of chatting with municipalities all across the province with respect to this particular bill. I know that I had the opportunity to spend some time at AAMD and C last week, which was a good chance to hear from municipalities. Certainly, this issue is one that is important to them and wanting to make sure that the parameters are very clearly defined and wanting to ensure that the direction with respect to the surrounding municipalities and other issues that are associated with that are clearly laid out.

That's what my colleague intends to do, and I would encourage members of the House to support it.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Okay. Thank you, Chair. Actually, I think I'm glad that I'm standing up and speaking on this bill. It's especially good since my colleague and I are often mistaken because we share the great, wonderful Strathcona county. As I think we've both spoken about in this Legislative Assembly, Strathcona county is one of only four specialized municipalities, so the issues around the Municipal Government Act have a lot of importance to our county because we're both an urban and a rural area. We represent a lot of the issues that are faced by most members in the Assembly, including those who live in rural and urban areas. I'm looking at the amendment, and I'm trying to figure out why the hon. member thinks that this would really be better for municipalities and what issues he really wants to address in proposing this subamendment. How would that, for example, better benefit a county like mine?

Mr. McIver: Okay. I appreciate the question, and to be clear, what's really interesting is that within the hon. member's question exists the answer. In other words, she says: I don't know what you would want to talk about that would be different in the ICFs. That is exactly the reason for the subamendment, because municipalities don't know either. The government has given itself unlimited power to make all kinds of changes to what's required in the ICFs, and this kind of says – it encourages, by taking it out, that they have to follow any other regulations. It's kind of a reminder to the government that before you put other regulations in, you probably should talk to the municipalities. You know, don't give yourself a blank cheque.

You know what? Actually, the government will probably be even more popular with the municipalities. This won't really limit their legislation. It'll be a sign from the government that they're going to talk to municipalities before they change the requirements for municipalities to meet on ICFs in an unlimited way, thereby probably bringing the government closer to the municipalities. When the member says, "I don't know what the government could possibly change that you're concerned about," the question is the answer. The municipalities don't know either, and this, hopefully, will encourage the government to talk to the municipalities before they add a big burden on them in a great number of regulations on things where municipalities may not have any idea of what is in place today.

I'm grateful for the question. I think it's a good question, and I think the question itself points to how important it is that all members of the House support the subamendment.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you so much, Mr. Chair. You know, with the greatest sincerity, folks, let's just boil this right down to what this is about. The subamendment's intention completely is to provide clarity to municipalities with respect to the purpose and objectives of intermunicipal collaboration frameworks. I dare say that it would also provide clarity for this Chamber and every Albertan. That's what I hear continually. Perhaps you have.

I know it's been 12 years for me where I've been hearing people thank previous governments when we do this. It's not as though we're trying to pat ourselves on the back. Think about this, folks. When you go to events like AUMA and AAMD and C, don't you hear them say: "Look, we've got our fingers on the pulse here. This is a local decision. Please. We know the situation. Work with us"? It's the same thing with you on the government side when there are decisions that you fear the federal government is making that really are your prerogative. It's not right for them because you are more local than they. We could use the example of: if something applies to a condominium association, those who are involved in that government would be saying: "Hey, back off, provincial and federal governments and even municipal governments. We have our own bylaws. Please allow or work with us to change it, and we'll do it together." That's all that this is about.

The last point that I wanted to make: folks, this really is a win-win-win. It's for the municipal governments, it's for you as the provincial government, and it's for every Albertan. I truly believe – and I'll conclude my remarks this way, Mr. Chair, by saying that it would be greatly beneficial if the government could communicate clearly with municipalities what their intentions are with respect to this matter instead of just making decisions without appropriate consultation. We certainly learned the hard way that if you legislate first and consult second, that's a big problem. This just allows you to do that. There's nothing more and nothing less.

I encourage – perhaps one of the ministers could let us know if there's any reason that they see as to why this would cause any problems whatsoever. This is sensible, nonpartisan. Let's help local decision-makers be part of the process so that we get it right the first time no matter who happens to be in government or opposition, who happens to be in the mayor's chair or the reeve or a councillor in any jurisdiction here in Alberta.

The Acting Chair: I will recognize the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, followed by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm rising in the House today, I guess, to speak against this subamendment. You know, I understand, maybe, the intention behind it, but, I mean, we're not talking about – if this was a process where you could even, with any sort of plausibility, talk about a blank cheque, I could see the reason behind it, but this is one of the most consulted-on pieces of legislation in Alberta history. Many stakeholders on multiple occasions have had opportunities to discuss the intermunicipal collaborative framework.

Indeed, it is, I think, going to be doing the most work as part of the MGA. This is, I think, critical for ensuring rural sustainability, for finding the kind of synergies, you know, that close collaboration can bring. This is something that we heard loud and clear from stakeholders at the various consultations around the province, including the four that I had the great privilege to be able to attend. Now, we have been talking, as members of the opposition and the third party are aware – I mean, we've been working very closely with the municipalities step-by-step through the consultation and through this process. My understanding is that they do support ICFs and that they do support the process that we're following right now.

As the Member for Calgary-Klein made reference to just earlier, sometimes the most appropriate tool for a legislator is actually to leave certain aspects of the bill to the regulations. That's for excellent reason. The reason is because that provides a type of flexibility that is necessary for certain types of situations, and I think this is that type of situation. I mean, they're meant to be deliberately broad so that municipalities have that option to be able to actually, you know, sort of have the ICF agreement fit their local context. So if through mutual agreement there are some items that make sense for them to be able to include in the ICF, there's a flexibility in the process that allows them to do so.

I guess, in addition to that, these regulations are not something that the government is intending to do in isolation. These are indeed being developed in collaboration with the AUMA and with the AAMD and C. [interjections] Well, I mean, actually, I'm not going to respond directly to crosstalk.

From my understanding – I was at AAMD and C for a huge part of it, and I had an opportunity to talk to a lot of county councillors, a lot of village mayors, a lot of towns, and I know that they were greatly appreciative, actually, of the tack that we've taken with the MGA. They were really impressed with the level of consultation, the level of accessibility that our Minister of Municipal Affairs and Municipal Affairs staff provided throughout the process. Of course, there are always questions. Of course, when there's change, there are concerns. But, I mean, these concerns weren't about a lack of trust in legislating the parameters. These were the types of concerns that could easily be handled through regulations that they have, through their close, collaborative agreement, you know, or relationship, that we're able to handle.

I think that not only are ICFs a wonderful element of the MGA and a great compromise for the types of, you know, cost-cutting concerns that the province, counties, municipalities, and, indeed, residents have, but also the way they're being developed and the way that we're leaving certain elements to the regulations, which, I want to reiterate, are going to be consulted on and are being developed in collaboration with stakeholders, is the most appropriate way to go.

So it is for these reasons that I think this subamendment would actually be a bit counterproductive in the sense that if it was legislation bound, it would, you know, take us coming back to the Legislature to perhaps provide some flexibility to the ICFs. I think the municipalities, rather than being thankful that we made this change, might end up being a bit frustrated that we've put a box around, well, what types of discussions they can have and they can't have without any easy or simple remedy for that box.

So I would urge my colleagues to vote against the subamendment. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. Let me just first address the issue of whether municipalities feel that they've been completely consulted with or hurt. I think that in this case, clearly, there's been an attempt by the government to consult with municipalities, which is a pleasant change from what this government has done for the last 18 months. I will agree with that. But I represent 22 towns and counties and school boards, and I can tell you that every one of those municipalities does not clearly understand – they've made it very, very clear in all my meetings with them – what the government intends to do with this. So the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays is attempting to make sure that we take away the blank cheque and that we make sure the government has to consult and work with the people that the rules and the regulations that they want to build are going to impact. I think that's a great subamendment.

Now, we have a government member standing up and saying: "Oh, don't worry. Take our word for it. Everything is going to be okay." Well, the constituents I represent have heard that too many times. "Take our word for it. We consulted you about regulating your farms": no, they didn't. So why would they accept it again this time? There's no reason, not one good reason that has been provided by this government, and not one cabinet minister has risen to answer the questions, good questions, from the Member for Calgary-Hays. Not one cabinet minister has taken the time to answer them, and they expect the opposition to believe that they truly were consulting and working with the communities that this legislation will impact. I think that's ridiculous. It's ridiculous. And to say that they have a complete blank cheque from the AAMD and C and the AUMA on this is not true. That I can guarantee you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman, and congratulations. It's the first time I've seen you in that position. I look forward to working with you in a proper manner this morning.

I'd just like to talk on this subamendment that the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays has put forward for a couple of moments if I could. I think one of the things that has, you know, been brought to light here this morning is that a lot of us feel as if the government tends to continue to put forward legislation and not do enough proper consultation and so on and so forth. One of the things that has always come forward over the years that I've spent here is the regulations. The member has, I think, made a great point here.

We're going to be going to a new system, where we're going to have these things called intermunicipal collaboration frameworks. They're brand new. A lot of small municipalities all over the province have never had to have such things. These things aren't just any other statutory document like MDPs and IDPs. These things are things that they will have to pay a consultant to put together, and they will have to take the time and the money to travel here and there between the other municipalities to have these discussions over the next two and a half, three years to try to put something together, yet that is being asked of them when they don't know what's going to come up in regulations that haven't been written yet. They have no idea. So how can any municipality – and I know that the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays and I used to sit in IDP committee meetings years ago. You know, you can have a reasonably good conversation about something if you know what the details are. Well, that's not going to be the case here.

With these bits of legislation in Bill 21 we have an awful lot of things that are going to be new, as I've said, and an awful lot of things that will probably raise the steam a little bit in most of these meetings because they've never had to do this. It's pretty difficult for me to understand, if the details are not known, how these things can be done. So if we leave (h) in there as has been written, that just says that the government can continue, as they do with a lot of bills, to make regulations as they please, and this House has no control of that. We have no discussion about it. We do not bring in a regulation document.

I've got a few here this morning with me. I think one of them is on municipal corporations, and another one has to do with subdivision and planning regulations. The MGA is a book that is that thick, 800 sections long. It's not a normal bill, like any other bill that we normally debate here. So we have to realize that the regulations are where the details are. Pardon my language, Mr. Chair, but most municipalities think that the damning is in the details and the damning is in the regulations, but we don't get to debate them.

I am in support of this amendment, Mr. Chair. I would urge all the members here to give this some reflection.

I'll only close with this: how can municipalities deal with a new intermunicipal collaboration framework document, how can the consultants deal with it if they don't know what's going to be in the regulations and they're not debated here?

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to subamendment SA1? The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Chair. Just a couple of short notes on this. I'm actually quite proud of my area, Leduc and Beaumont, for a lot of reasons.

Dr. Starke: Big win yesterday.

Mr. S. Anderson: Yeah, there was a big thing going on.

One of the big things that I really appreciate with my area and what they do down there and that I noticed right off the bat was the way that they work together. You know, they've got so many agreements that have come over the years. I think that's down to, to be honest, the two mayors for the county, a big part of it, and the city of Leduc work so well together and their councils work so well together, not only around the city of Leduc but with some of the smaller areas in the county – Warburg, Thorsby, Calmar, New Sarepta – all these little areas that are in there and the little towns and villages.

You know, my eyes got opened to it, I think, at the AUMA, the first AUMA I had gone to. My two mayors did a presentation on collaboration, intermunicipal collaboration. One councillor from the province that watched it: she was actually in tears because of how well they were working together. I know that a lot of other places around the province are doing similar types of things and are working well together. Our citizens cross boundaries, and we can have duplication. You know, we can have people paying twice for the same thing, using all these taxes for one thing here and the other. We've got to work together, which is a good thing.

To this subamendment – I've just got a few notes that I wrote down. I'll read them so that I can stick to my script a little better. I know that we are proud of these municipalities. A lot of the consultation – because this type of consultation is not just from yesterday or last week or two weeks ago. This has been going on for years. It started with the previous government. All this legislation has been ongoing for a long time. We have been working with these associations on details for the ICFs for a while now. We're not saying that it's perfect. We're not saying that there's a blank cheque, like the opposition tries to throw out there all the time. To be honest, Mr. Chair, I don't like making things up. I don't like speculation and things like that. It's not how I work. I don't appreciate that.

There's a lot of work going on. Are there issues? A hundred per cent there are, and that's why we're consulting. That's why we keep speaking to people out there, and we will continue to do that. If you actually read what's going on with this bill, you would know that, but sometimes some people like to put things out there that might not be quite exactly what's laid out in the bill and maybe a little misinformation. Some people like to do that, but I go on truth and facts, and we're reading this right here. Nobody's ever said that we're perfect, and I'll reiterate that again. I try to tell my wife that all the time, that I'm perfect, but it doesn't really go over very well.

An Hon. Member: What?

Mr. S. Anderson: I know. It's amazing. Shocking. I know, guys.

You know, we have been consulting a lot on this, and we will have regulations outlining more specifics from the ICFs coming forward once we complete the collaborative work . . . [interjections] Nobody wants to hear me? Jeez.

The Acting Chair: Hon. members.

Mr. S. Anderson: Then we'll draft it so it's something that works with all the municipalities for the residents for the benefit of that regional co-operation.

In regard to the subamendment from the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays the clause that is in question in this is a standard clause in legislation to allow for flexibility, and I think that's a key word, "flexibility." We have to be able to adapt, and we have to be able to listen and to understand what the concerns are. It's there to deal with these unanticipated circumstances, but we haven't to date, that I'm aware of, had anybody come up with concerns about this particular clause, and most importantly we are actually actively engaging with municipalities on the ICF framework as part of a robust, transparent, and extensive consultation.

I'd just like to say that I'm pretty proud of what we've been doing, and it's a continuation of some good work from before, and we need to continue to have these conversations. We always do. You know, I love being at AUMA and AAMD and C and meeting with regional officials from around the province. I think it's incredible to have these conversations and always understand the concerns and issues from particular areas because every area is different. You know, I think my amazing area of Leduc-Beaumont is outstanding and far and above the best place in the province, but other people might have words about their own. For me it's due in part to the collaboration that we have in our area. I think it's amazing what they do down there. I really appreciate it. It's the way I was brought up, to try to work together with people, and I think that we're doing that.

I'll sit down and let other people have a chance to speak now, Mr. Chair. Thank you very much.

The Acting Chair: Are any other members wishing to speak to the subamendment? The Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you again, Mr. Chairman. I want to express my appreciation to the Member for Leduc-Beaumont for bringing up the comments he just had. You know, once again, we are talking about this regulations issue and whether or not we're going to leave the section (h) in the bill. The hon. member brings up some great points, but we have to keep in mind that he lives in an area where there is a capital region board. They have a bunch of things set. They have a bunch of rules. It's already been done and in motion for the past eight years.

Mrs. Littlewood: And it's working.

Mr. Stier: It may be working. I don't argue that, hon. member across the floor.

What we are talking about, though, is that these new collaboration frameworks will have to be created, as I said a moment ago, and his point versus my point I think is a little bit moot. It's not necessarily fair to compare an area that's got an established, huge metropolitan area plan with a whole bunch of rules and guidelines whereas we're trying to legislate and put together a new collaboration framework with a lot of these kinds of clauses that are going to really change how things happen out there in those other municipalities that don't have such a big capital region board.

Again, fair enough. I understand his points of view, and I recognize and respect them, but what we're talking about are two different kinds of things here. So that we can be clear, I'm supporting this motion to strike item (h), and we should be able to be talking openly ahead of time about what the regulations will be before we just allow an open-ended clause that any regulations can be established at any time.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: I'll recognize the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, followed by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Yeah. I just wanted to actually respond to the last comment here. Now, once again, I'm having a difficult time seeing how this process could be considered a blank cheque or how this process could be construed as not actually allowing for a maximum of consultation. Now, the previous member was saying: well, I hope that we get an opportunity to look at these regulations. Well, as a matter of fact, every single MGA regulation that's going to be coming out of the review is going to be posted online for 60 days so that all Albertans can see what is proposed and give feedback on it.

Mr. Nixon: Six whole days.

Mr. Piquette: Sixty. Six, zero. Yeah.

I mean, we've shown right from the beginning of this process that we are committed to open and transparent consultation on all of these MGA regulations, and members of the opposition are speaking to a lack of trust that I certainly have not seen among our partners and stakeholders. These draft regulations, you know, are going to be developed, and I just want to be kind of clear here on who those stakeholders are. They are, you know, the stakeholders most affected, so we're talking about municipalities, municipal associations, school boards, community organizations, business and industry, developers, everyone. These regulations will then be presented to Albertans in early 2017.

I mean, I'm nonplussed that the members could construe this as anything but an open and transparent process involving all stakeholders. As, in fact, the two peak municipal organizations in the province are both part of this collaboration, I'm just kind of a bit confused where they're saying that this lack of trust and lack of communication is coming from because it's certainly not coming from the partners and stakeholders that I've had the great pleasure to meet, like I said previously, at AAMD and C just recently but also as part of the consultations during the summer and then also in discussions with the municipalities that I have the privilege to represent in my own riding.

Now, of course, they do have questions, and when I previously spoke to this bill, I think we talked about that and brought some of the answers. But, you know, those questions are certainly not revolving around a lack of trust that we're not going to be open and transparent about the regulations. The concerns that they might have about the scope and parameter: like I said, they will be getting ample opportunity to discuss them with Municipal Affairs and, of course, with the minister, who, as I've said before, has been very accessible throughout this process.

One thing I should say is that, you know, I don't want the members across to give an unfair characterization of the level of respect that I've seen municipalities actually have for our Minister of Municipal Affairs. I've heard wonderful things, saying that she's down to earth, she's accessible, straightforward, and understanding that, really, it is with the best of intentions that this legislation is going forward in a spirit of true collaboration. On those grounds I think that this is – and I've said this previously – the way that legislation, ideally, should be done.

One thing that's a bit unfortunate is that, you know, at the beginning of this – we were at the last reading. I was quite impressed by the constructive tone that members of the opposition took, where they were bringing forward some of the concerns that I'd also heard. I don't think that this amendment seems to fall into that same category, where they want us to – I don't know – kind of step back in this process, where we actually have some good consensus around the broad parameters and now we have to work out the fine details in a process that's actually acceptable and suited to the task and with a degree of flexibility that means that if there are some adjustments that need to be made further down the line, there's a capacity to make them easily.

You know, maybe that is unfair. Perhaps there are a few that have those concerns. For those I just want to reiterate that we are continuing to consult on the regulations. We've committed to doing that. We are going to be working with stakeholders. And just one more time so there's no possible misinterpretation: these stakeholders include the municipalities, the municipal associations, the school boards, community organizations, business and industry, developers, everyone who has an interest in it. These regulations will be posted online for 60 days – that's six, zero, just to be clear on that – so that all Albertans can see what is proposed and give feedback on it.

Finally, through this and continuing to the present we are absolutely committed to open and transparent consultations on all of the MGA regulations. If there are any municipalities that have those concerns, you can lay them to rest.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair, for the opportunity to rise again to speak to this subamendment, which I am happy to support.

Just a couple of responses to the last hon. member who spoke. He asked the question: which communities did not trust this government during this situation? In fact, he said that he has not found any communities that did not trust what's going on with the government right now. I can name many: town of Rocky Mountain House, town of Sundre, village of Caroline, county of Clearwater, county of Mountain View, Red Deer county, Lacombe county, Ponoka county, Rimbey, the town of Bentley. The list goes on and on. That's just in my constituency. I can assure him that maybe where he represents there are no trust issues, but I would encourage this government to leave the House, as I have many times before, and travel Alberta, and they will find out very quickly that there are very few municipalities and people in this province that trust this government.

With that said, the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont in his well-prepared comments pointed out concerns that he felt that this amendment was an attempt or something along those lines that would maybe prevent co-operation between municipalities. I certainly echo his comments. I agree with him that co-operation between municipalities is important, and many of our municipalities work very, very hard together already. Rocky Mountain House and Clearwater county received an award from this minister just last year for the hard work that they do. Both that town and the village and Caroline, for that matter, in that county and that county work very, very hard together. That's very impressive. They've got concerns about this. That doesn't mean that they're going to stop co-operating. It doesn't mean that anybody says: we don't want to make it easier for counties and towns to co-operate together. To say that is ludicrous, Mr. Chair. They've got concerns about this.

The reason they have concerns about this and the reason the hon. member was right to bring forward this amendment is because they don't trust this government, because this government over and over and over through their legislation have passed things that have punished their communities and have made things harder for them. To continue to ask these communities to trust this government while they make regulations – if that's the answer all the time, then the answer back to them, Mr. Chair, is: Albertans don't trust you no more, so try something different.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I wasn't going to bother getting up and responding to this good amendment till the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater stood up because every time that we stand up in opposition to each other, my popularity in his constituency improves, so I really can't miss this opportunity.

Just one other thing I'd like to point out. We talk about municipal collaboration, and the Member for Leduc-Beaumont got up and spoke about his concerns there. I just want to say that the announcement yesterday is going to do anything but improve the collaboration efforts between the city of Edmonton, the town of Beaumont, and the county of Leduc. I just wanted to point that out.

Now, the amendment seeks to strike out clause (h), which reads, "must meet any other requirements established by the regulations." It's kind of a redundant statement because if it's in a regulation, then it's going to have to meet it anyway. The concern here is that the regulations aren't yet written, so we're going to bind municipalities to something with clause (h) that isn't even written yet. Until we know those regulations, you know, saying that it has to be bound by the requirements established in the regulations when we don't know what they are yet just seems to be a bit of a blunder on that part, so I will be supporting this amendment to remove clause (h).

Thank you very much.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Chair, for the opportunity to speak to this amendment. I certainly would be challenged to hear that there has been any lack of consultation on this bill. I've been told even by members of the opposition that this should be the role model for consultation with municipalities and with the people of Alberta. I'm very proud of the work we did consulting broadly right across this province. Even at AAMDC I met with many, many municipalities and had the opportunity to talk with them one-on-one with any questions or concerns that they had.

Mr. Chair, this particular question did not actually come forward to me, but I think that the most important thing is – and I thank the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater for bringing up the process – that even in the regulation process we're fully committed to very transparent, open consultation on this. I look forward, and we're continuing. Right now we're engaged in an intensive process to develop more details for the ICFs with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, with the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, with the Association of Summer Villages of Alberta, Alberta Rural Municipal Administrators Association, the Local Government Administration Association of Alberta, Metis Settlements General Council, Canadian Home Builders' Association, Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers.

Mr. Chair, beyond that, once we have a draft regulation in place, I cannot repeat enough that that regulation will be posted for 60 days to the public, including all of the members across the floor, to submit their feedback on that so that we can all work together to ensure that that regulation is in the best interest. Once again, there is nothing being done behind closed doors. I've been fully committed to that. I've received a lot of positive feedback from municipal leaders across this province, and I'm proud of the relationships I've built with them and the trust that I have personally built with many of those municipal leaders. I look forward to continuing to build those relationships.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just wanted to preface my comments and question on this subamendment to thank the minister for what I've heard has been some very robust consultation. I think that that's a positive thing and there's been some very positive feedback. But I think, you know, what we're trying to do here is in the spirit of best practices and continuous improvement and to make sure we have the best legislation. There are many of us out there talking to many different stakeholders and finding out that there's some fine-tuning that we can do at this stage, which I think will improve this legislation and then help you to guide the regulation as we go forward.

I'd like to think that there's an opportunity for us in this House – and I think maybe it's a lesson for all of us, whoever is sitting on that side – to consider that amendments are not meant as criticism; they're meant as an opportunity to improve. If we work together in this House as legislators, then our main goal is actually to provide the best legislation for Albertans, to provide input, constructive input, to improve that legislation, and that we not see amendments as an affront to good legislation and the good work that's been done across the floor.

I'd like to encourage everybody in the House to support this amendment, not because it's meant as criticism but that it's a constructive opportunity for us to work together in this House to provide positive legislation, to amend legislation to make sure it's the best it can be for all Albertans, to recognize that even with robust consultation there's other consultation and other input coming from across this province, different stakeholders, of which some of us may have stronger or less strong relationships with or a history or a background in certain areas that will allow us to do that. I would just like to encourage everybody in the House to support this amendment, not to criticize what's done but to improve what's done.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the subamendment? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have been listening to this back and forth, and I will say that whenever you've got regulations being drafted, especially something of this magnitude, it's important that before it's enacted, we have a good understanding of what exactly it is that we're moving forward.

Now, I did go to one of the open houses, and I have to thank the minister for setting those up. Unfortunately, the minister couldn't be at the open house that I went to in Lac La Biche, but the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater was there. I will say that a lot of the concern that I had heard from inside that meeting was specifically about ICFs, and one of the concerns was: exactly how is it that you're going to bring this forward? It was my understanding that more information was going to come out afterwards on exactly what was going to be brought forward with regulations. Now we're hearing that we have to wait for the regulations after the bill has been passed through the House.

I guess my concern here is that when it comes to consultation, in this case I think that we did hear in one of the open houses that it was a concern that regulations were being drafted and there wasn't enough input into those regulations. I think that by getting rid of or striking (h), this subamendment will add clarity to exactly what it is that the government is trying to do. I think that we need to be working together with the municipalities. I do believe that we have heard that ICFs, especially in my riding, are going to be a contentious issue when we bring this forward.

I would like to know more about the 60 days. We put the regulations down, we wait 60 days, and then you just pass it through anyway? Or is it going to be 60 days, we have our Municipal Affairs do their changes to the regulations, and then we're going to get another opportunity to see what comes out? I think this is important. We're going to only get one crack at something as important as ICFs. I'm not saying that we need to put this off another three years. That's not at all what I'm going for, and I'm not saying that. In legislation you can't always make every party within Alberta happy, but you can at least find compromise in a lot of places. How exactly is it that we're going to know that the government seriously took the recommendations from our municipalities, specifically Bonnyville-Cold Lake, and implemented them into the changes, into the regulations? My question is: will there be a second draft, if you will, for our municipalities to be able to see that they've been heard?

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Yeah. I'll be brief because I've spoken once, Chair. All I would say on this is that I heard a lot of concerns, particularly at AAMD and C, about the ICFs, particularly from some of the smaller population municipalities. What they said to me was that this seems to be insensitive to them. What I mean by that is that there are municipalities with one, two, maybe three ICFs to do because those municipalities are on their borders. But there are a lot of rural municipalities. I know that even the Member for Leduc-Beaumont, I think, named half a dozen in his area where one rural municipality would have to deal with half a dozen other municipalities.

When this House sets regulations, that's one regulation, but for some municipalities that could be 10 or 20 separate negotiations that they're triggering. I see the minister nodding, and I'm sure that she knows this, so thank you. All I'm saying is that this amendment is essentially intended to not put the minister offside with the municipalities by having unintended consequences by burdening them with 10 or 20 negotiations or even four or six because that's a lot of work, too. One is a lot of work, for goodness' sake, but four or six for a small municipality with limited resources and limited staff is not a small burden. It's a large burden, so this is just a way to have the government check in to make sure that they don't accidentally put too big a burden on these municipalities. That way the minister will be more popular than ever with them if the government supports this.

The Acting Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the subamendment?

Seeing none, I'll put the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on subamendment SA1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 10:15 a.m.]

[Motion on subamendment SA1 lost]

The Acting Chair: I would remind all hon. members that during the recorded vote count we must ensure that there is silence so that we can record it appropriately.

We are back on the amendment. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Actually, I just wanted to make a suggestion that we move to one-minute bells.

The Acting Chair: Under the standing orders it's already provided for.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to speak again here to Bill 21, and I'm going to be talking about the amendments that we received just two days ago. I'd like to give a little, brief overview, if I could, to start.

Once again, having met at the briefing on this document and its introduction, I'd like to take a quick moment to acknowledge the dedicated work that the Municipal Affairs staff have done, you know, to get things right. It's a great opportunity to be in this process again today to talk a little bit about those.

I think it's also important to mention, as I said the other day, that the previous government started the review of the MGA with the co-operation of a lot of the municipal associations and stakeholders. So as we move on, I think it's important to thank them again for getting this going.

Mr. Chair, the amendment document that we're talking about from a couple of days ago has been organized into a few basic groups, as they had done in the first instance with the bill, and it talks about elected official training, appeal board composition, municipally controlled corporations, decision timelines, off-site levies, planning matters, assessment, and, of course, the intermunicipal collaboration frameworks. We have organized ourselves a little bit on this side of the House with the Official Opposition in having a few speakers on some of these topics, so I'll be referring to some of this as a brief overview and then move into allowing my colleagues to speak up on specific matters.

Bill 21 amendments, just like the mother ship, the actual MGA itself – as I said the other day, it's one of the largest bills that the Legislature has been asked to pass, in my experience, so far. It is, I think, bigger than the Responsible Energy Development Act. We worked on the Education Act, which has yet to be proclaimed. I remember that that was a big one. But this is the elephant in the room, I guess, if you want to put it that way. So it's possible to talk a little bit about a lot of things, but it's not possible to talk a lot about everything. It's just huge.

Let's just get down to some of the things that I had mentioned a moment ago with my colleagues. I personally believe, first of all – we're talking now about the training of councillors and so on, and I said this the other day, too – that in a provincial election there is a tendency sometimes, as there has been in the past actually, to notice a bit of a gap in the knowledge and the education of people once they are elected, particularly with reference to the roles and responsibilities of a councillor. You know, as an MLA now I've seen a lot of the municipalities across the province that had a lot of turnover after the last election go through a lot of difficulties and hurdles with their new roles.

So I'm happy to see that this issue has been raised, as I've said before. I think that the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills will be digging into this here in a bit more detail, but I'm certainly supportive of having the training that has been indicated in the bill, and I'm certainly supportive in most respects about the intention to try to make it virtually almost mandatory to offer this. That's sort of what I feel on this. I think it should be mandatory for all ratepayers to have the benefit of the people who are judging on the merits of various issues that come to their desks having some knowledge to make proper decisions. It's so important.

I think a lot of the feedback that we've received from the municipal associations who represent the municipalities and their councils has indicated their support for the most part as well. How that will happen, how that will take place, who will administer that: those things are a bit of an unknown. I myself, when I was first a councillor many, many years ago, was fortunate because the AAMD and C provided those kinds of courses, and I suspect maybe that is how those kinds of things will go in the future. But our Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, or the House leader for the Official Opposition, as he's known, will probably be digging into that topic.

On to municipally controlled corporations just briefly, as an overview. We certainly understand – and I've experienced where municipally controlled corporations exist, and they seem to work very well. We are a little bit concerned, as I said before, about how these things might take place. We are aware of the regulations that are actually in place now. You can actually see those because they've been discussed and they've been in place. Our Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills will be talking in more detail about that. We do like some of the things that are in the regulations now, and we think that the suggestions by the department to make it a little bit more open may give us a little bit of angst. So we'd like to talk a little bit more about that.

Moving on to the other topic of how municipalities plan, develop, and grow. I said earlier today and I will say it again, going into the intermunicipal collaboration frameworks topic area – this is a new area for the MGA in the 700 block of the 800 sections in the MGA – that for the bigger cities, mid-size cities, larger municipalities that have internal staffs and administrations that are quite familiar with statutory consents and the various documents, this may not be as much of a challenge.

But for the bulk of the smaller municipalities that have larger areas, although they may at some point in time, I suppose, one day after I'm long gone, have larger administrations, frankly, a lot of them will hire consultants or have extremely expensive types of ventures to consider because those consultants will have to work with several municipalities at once to try to put these things together. They will be billing for their services, and these are huge documents that will have to be considered, a lot of meetings, a lot of time, et cetera, et cetera.

My colleague from Little Bow will be digging into that matter shortly, and we're going to be talking about IDPs and all the interrelationships between the intermunicipal collaboration frameworks that are proposed, IDPs, and MDPs. We're certainly glad to see some attention paid to timing. But, relatively speaking, we need to talk, I think, and we will be talking to the main bill about that matter as well.

Moving on, Mr. Chair. I'd like to also get a little bit into the centralized assessment topic that's part of the amendment document, of course, and for the record just say that we understand the needs of the industry to try to get some sort of stability in how assessments are done from an industrial point of view. We understand that the major industries in the province have some pretty complex installations and that they have some marvellous, marvellous different types of processing facilities and all kinds of things and that there would perhaps be a benefit in some respects of having assessments sort of all being done out of one spot and then some sort of standards established throughout the province.

On the other hand, we also note that for a lot of the smaller municipalities some of the rules that exist can be worked with perhaps more easily and more locally, too. The removal of having someone do industrial assessments locally would also perhaps hamper some of those smaller departments if they were to lose some of that responsibility. Our associations have mentioned to us that those are concerns. We think they're valid. The assessors' associations have mentioned – and the assessors are highly trained, skilled people – that these kinds of changes are a little bit of a concern for them, too.

Our hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake will be speaking here to that as well. We're fortunate to have a gentleman in our presence who has a bit of an accounting background. I'm looking forward to hearing what he has to say in great, fine detail, as accountants can do, and he's got a bag of beans here with him, by the way.

Another one – and the one that I'm going to speak a little bit about because I have a bit of experience with it – is the amendments regarding the actual members that can sit on appeal boards. Of course, the appeal boards have over the years provided the public with an avenue to get their decisions reviewed and somewhat perhaps addressed and/or decisions of councils overturned, especially on the subdivision and development appeal board side. Of course, too, some of this applies, but not so much, to the actual local assessment review boards. Nonetheless, the intent, I understand from the department and from all the documents I've obtained so far, is that the idea is to limit the number of councillors that can sit on some of these boards.

We have several boards that are being dealt with here in the act and in the amendment. There's the subdivision and development appeal board, and most often a lot of municipalities separate those meetings up. They have different members on different boards because, of course, the subdivision appeal board meeting is generated as often as not by an appeal from the applicant who didn't like conditions that were given to him as a result of his meeting, or it may be launched by the municipality itself if something wasn't quite correct.

Nonetheless, it's odd to think that a councillor could sit on a matter that he was already acquainted with when he sat in judgment on the original application when it came for redistricting or rezoning and eventually for subdivision. If that councillor, you know, had taken the training as, as an example, I did and looked and perhaps was aware that the government does produce a subdivision and an appeal board training manual – and it talks about different kinds of issues that happen during appeal board hearings and all of the kinds of rules and different administrative laws and natural law kinds of things that they have to be aware of – it is possible that that subdivision appeal board member, if he was a councillor, could have some sort of influence on a decision that the board would make that would perhaps not be fair. Particularly, having more than one councillor, which sometimes, I guess, has happened on some of these boards, even makes it more difficult to render a fair decision for the board.

We're in support of, again, having a maximum of one councillor as part of the group on these boards, but, you know, I'd like to remind members in the House today that the selection of appeal board members is critical. Development appeal board members – developments are usually handled by the development officer in a municipality and their staff. Whether it's a garage that's being applied for or someone wants to put up an arena or something, usually development officers make that decision. That decision can be approved, or it can be denied, and, as is the case many times, it might go to an appeal board if they couldn't get what they wanted. But developments, therefore, and those kinds of processes have not involved councillors at that point, so it's okay for councillors to sit on a development appeal board, and they usually do, but again we're talking about not having undue influence from the council in these decisions. We're supporting that we do not have too many councillors on these boards. We think it's a great idea, actually.

Nonetheless, the apprehension of bias is so important. I can recall many times when I have actually had to appeal decisions that I was involved in. Maybe people in the room don't know this, but when an appeal board meeting first starts, the chairman is usually required to ask if anyone has a problem with any of the members on the board because they feel there may be a bias issue and so on. Sometimes an applicant of an appeal sees a councillor there or maybe two councillors that may have been saying things prior to the meeting starting and prior to the meeting being held. The appellant can actually challenge that member, and often as not sometimes they can ask that that member be not able to sit on their matter because they feel that they have some bias.

This is a very important part of the system, and I, in fact, have had to ask some members of appeal boards to not sit on the matters that I was against. The system works fairly well, but certainly when a councillor is there, it does give one a little bit of an angst as to whether or not that person could be fair because they deal with a lot of these things throughout the week and may not necessarily be totally fair because of that extra knowledge. We're supportive of that.

I think that that's my portion of it. Now, Mr. Chair, my time is coming to an end, I think. I don't know how much more time there is.

The Acting Chair: You have four minutes.

Mr. Stier: Four minutes. Thank you for that.

I'll just end my end for now. We're generally supportive of a lot of the things that were in the amendment here, I think. My other colleagues are going to speak to some of these matters, and I look forward to hearing the discussion on that today.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 21 in Committee of the Whole. The Municipal Government Act is an incredibly important piece of legislation. It's been referenced before that it is one of the most in-depth, longest pieces of legislation that governs municipal governance throughout our province. Because of that, of course, it is one of considerable concern, whether you are involved in the governance of a large urban centre, like Edmonton or Calgary, or whether you're involved in the governance of a smaller centre, even a village or a summer village, or indeed whether you're involved in the governance of a rural municipality. For that reason there has been considerable interest in this whole process of amending the Municipal Government Act, which, as has been correctly pointed out, has been under way for some time.

You know, the consultation process, really, has been ongoing. I'd like to actually stress that I don't think that it will stop once the MGA is passed. I would actually hope that the conversation continues. Although, perhaps just out of deference to the people who have been involved with this project for so long, especially people in the department, it might not be bad to give them a bit of a breather because they've been working on this for a long, long time.

Nonetheless, I do want to acknowledge the various people involved in the Municipal Affairs department who have been working on this for a long time. I do think, you know, very sincerely, that they are trying to produce the best piece of legislation possible. As my colleague the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek pointed out in debate on the previous amendment that we were talking about, really, our goal here is to produce a piece of legislation that is as acceptable, as workable, and will stand the test of time. Again, just owing to the size and the complexity of the MGA, this is not an act that gets amended every other day. Hopefully, this act, whether it ends up getting passed in this fall session of 2016 or perhaps in 2017, is an act that will be around for perhaps some considerable length of time.

It is in that interest and because we are trying to improve this piece of legislation as best we can that I have a subamendment, Mr. Chair, that I'll distribute to the pages. Once they've had a chance to hand it around, once they've had a chance to get that subamendment to you, Mr. Chair, then I will go into some of the details of it. Just give me a second, and I'll also bring it up here on my screen as well.

In broad measure, Mr. Chair ...

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, just one second. I just want to verify that.

An Hon. Member: Easy. Whoa.

Dr. Starke: Whoa. Where have I heard that before?

The Acting Chair: Please proceed, hon. member. I just wanted to verify that I had the original copy.

This subamendment will be SA2.

Dr. Starke: Thank you. For the record, Mr. Chair, I move that amendment A1 to Bill 21, the Modernized Municipal Government Act, be amended in part E by striking out clause (a) and substituting the following: "(a) in subclause (ii) in the proposed section 284(1)(f.01) by striking out subclauses (iii) and (iv)." What does all that mean when you boil it down? Well, if you're following along either in the House or at home, we're looking at page 14 of Bill 21. It has to do specifically with the definition of "designated industrial properties." This is an area of considerable concern to both rural and urban municipalities.

Now, many in this Chamber will recall and certainly I know that the Municipal Affairs minister will recall that a considerable concern was expressed about the status of linear property. I know that she heard a lot about linear assessment in the months leading up to the introduction of the MGA, and she probably heard a collective sigh of relief go out from municipal leaders across the province with the assurances that linear property would not be one of the things that is, you know, removed from their own tax base. That was there. This section indeed deals specifically with that and, in fact, deals with linear property as well as, as it says in subclause (i), "facilities regulated by the Alberta Energy Regulator, the Alberta Utilities Commission or the National Energy Board."

But it's subclauses (iii) and (iv) that are causing considerable concern to municipalities and to municipal councillors right across our province. In subclauses (iii) and (iv) it indicates that designated industrial properties will be defined by regulation. We once again get into this discussion of what is included in legislation and what is included in regulation. I know that we have received assurances not just from the minister but from other members that the regulations would be posted online and that there would be the opportunity for consultation and discussion. But, you know, once again, here we really need to provide a level of assurance to our municipalities.

When I was attending the AAMD and C last week, I heard from a number of different rural municipalities right across our province, and I certainly heard from the three that are within the constituency of Vermilion-Lloydminster: Minburn county, Beaver county, and the county of Vermilion River. All three of these counties expressed a major concern in the definition of designated industrial property because indeed the tax base that they go from, the tax base that these counties depend on, and indeed it's not just rural municipalities but includes urban municipalities as well, is one that they depend on in order to provide the revenue that they need to be able to run their municipality. The notion that it could be defined in regulation and not within the legislation is of concern to them.

It is a subamendment that is intended to provide assurance and to provide some level of certainty to these municipalities that designated industrial properties will be very clearly defined and that it'll be defined, hopefully, within the legislation but at the very least that regulation cannot allow an arbitrary definition of something as a designated industrial property one day or in one county and then something else in another county.

You know, there is concern about the application of regulations in this situation. I think the minister did the right thing by making it very clear that linear assessment was not part of this overall, that this would stay within the bounds of the municipality, but the designated industrial property is yet another area that they depend on in order to be able to have a tax base so that they can provide the necessary services for their ratepayers. I think that it's very important that we clearly define what designated industrial properties are within the legislation and not simply leave it up to regulation. That's what this subamendment essentially does. It removes subclauses (iii) and (iv), which allow for that degree of uncertainty to creep into this.

Again, I know that the Minister of Municipal Affairs is interested in maintaining a good working relationship with municipalities all across our province. That has always been the goal of Municipal Affairs ministers, and I think they also find that municipal governments are exhilarating to work with. They can sometimes be very challenging because by their very nature they serve the same group of taxpayers that we as provincial representatives do or indeed at the federal level, and sometimes you can run into jurisdictional conflicts – let's just call it that – in which there seems to be, you know, working at crosspurposes. We don't want to see that, wherever that's possible, to mitigate or avoid that.

I'm going to encourage my colleagues to take a very close look at this subamendment. I do believe that it improves the overall bill because I think it removes one of the potential sources for a lack of clarity, and I think clarity is something that I know we always aim for when we're drafting legislation, and I would encourage colleagues to support the subamendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: Hon. members, before we proceed with the discussion on subamendment SA2, I would like to advise the committee that on amendment A1 we will be having separate votes for sections C, E, K, and X.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to subamendment SA2? The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and I want to thank the member for acknowledging the work of my department. I don't know how I will ever make up to them the amount that I've asked from them in the last little while to make sure that this is the best piece of legislation, and they have delivered exceptionally, and I'm glad to put it on the record that I feel that I have the most amazing department staff in the government of Alberta.

In regard to centralized assessment the truth is, Mr. Chair, that we certainly heard from industry that there was a desire to have consistent assessment across the province and that a way of doing that would be to have a single assessor, not only a single assessor but a single appeal process. You can imagine that with 344 municipalities that's an awful lot of rules to manage, particularly when you're talking about infrastructure that crosses borders. For example, you would have something such as a compressor station on a pipeline. Basically, it came from exactly the same factory. Identical. Literally identical. Same place. No difference in structure. The value of it, not just the taxation because rates vary, of course, between municipalities but the assessed value of identical property is different from one side of the municipal border to the other. Of course, with that, the challenge of appealing on so many different fronts simultaneously created a substantial barrier.

With that, we committed to ensuring that there was a consistent, fair process to ensure that there is consistent assessment of the value of industrial property across the province, very similar to what we do with linear property right now. With that, we brought forward the recommendations that we have now. Interestingly, because of the fact that this brings to industry that consistency, that stable prediction, they know exactly what's coming, and we certainly know the value of predictability to industry in terms of making investments. By doing that, they actually are willing to pay the cost of the assessment. Actually, right now municipalities have to pay the cost for linear property assessment and, of course, the other industrial property, and now industry will be picking that up. I'm glad that we could actually find some cost savings for municipalities in that as well.

You know, for many of us, when we make a change in things, there's some anxiety with that, Mr. Chair. Certainly, those municipalities that have a substantial amount of industrial property, I've been meeting with them, working with them, and assuring them that the transition process will be respectful and worked out with them. I look forward to those ongoing conversations. They are great partners, and I always value conversations with them.

Mr. Chair, in terms of this subamendment there is some guidance in terms of what designated industrial property is in Bill 21, and the regulations actually will include the specific plants around the province that are considered industrial property. Obviously, there's some recognition that when you have a list that is that specific, it really needs the opportunity to be amended in real time. Certainly, I respect my colleagues and would love to have them at the table to have these conversations about policy decisions. However, having to bring to the floor an amendment to the MGA every time there is a new plant that is built or a new plant that is decommissioned in the province would be burdensome to us all and I don't think the best use of our time.

I look forward to continuing to work with the municipalities to ensure that we do have the very best legislation that meets their needs going forward, and again I look forward to those continued conversation with our respected partners, our municipal governments.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I just want to get some clarification while we have the minister here. The clauses that we want eliminated by this subamendment refer to (iii) and (iv). Clause (iii) is: a "property designated as a major plant by the regulations." Now, if we look at the heading of subclause (ii), it says:

by adding the following after clause (f):
(f.01) "designated industrial property" means

- (i) facilities regulated by the Alberta Energy Regulator, the Alberta Utilities Commission or the National Energy Board.

Now, could the minister give me one example of a major plant of any kind that wouldn't already fall under the jurisdiction of the Alberta Energy Regulator, the Alberta Utilities Commission, or the National Energy Board?

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Of course, they all do fall under those jurisdictions. We're using those plants to be a guide as to what is considered industrial property or not so that everybody has clarity. If they fall under the jurisdiction, they are industrial property. Those provide some guidelines in terms of that, but the regulation will specify individual plants, and that's where the regulation comes in, in terms of specifying them. It is not just about providing guidance and criteria. You actually just listed some of the guidance and criteria there. This will go beyond that to make sure that we work with the municipalities to target those specific plants and ensure that those are listed in the regulation so that there is no lack of clarity with municipalities, right down to each individual place, if they are industrial property or not.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I just have a couple of quick comments and then a question about regulations, I guess, and this government's desire to continually increase their ability and expand the opportunity to make significant changes inside regulations. I guess I'm a little bit confused. The minister spoke about, you know, hearing from industry and sounds very supportive of industry. There are lots of days when I appreciate that from the government, but there are also lots of days where they come and sue our industries and create all sorts of havoc amongst people in your fair city and the mayor of the city that you represent with respect to the power companies. I think it just sends a very confusing message. One day the government is suing industry. The next day they're saying: we're great partners, and this is exactly what industry wants. I hope that the minister might provide some additional comments.

As well, I have some concern about the comments that she raised with respect to basically saying that, you know, if we had to make an amendment to the MGA that would include information around the regulation, that would be a waste of time. You know, these pesky laws just get in the way all the time, really slow down the decision-making of the government. Mr. Chair, I acknowledge that there is some balance that needs to be met with respect to regulations or the legislation, but making these broad-based statements – and we heard from the minister and from my hon. colleague that, you know, generally speaking, the majority of the plants are already considered to be a facility regulated by the AER, the AUC, or the NEB.

Then there's this little problem at the bottom here in clause (iv), "any other property designated by the regulations." It winds up being this significant catch-all. It has no requirement to be based upon the above. I get that these are industrial guidelines, but "any other property designated by the regulations" provides a wide swath for the cabinet to be able to make decisions based upon perhaps the needs of the day. You know, we need to be very cautious. I know that this cabinet is honourable, and they would never do anything in regulations that would be untoward. Now, not all of the constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills are convinced of that, but I believe the best of this government. The challenge is that we don't just legislate for today but we legislate for tomorrow and the government after that and the government after that. So when we leave these large catch-alls, "any other property designated by the regulations," we open ourselves to significant risk.

I am a firm believer that finding the right balance is important, and that's why I'll be supporting this subamendment.

The Acting Chair: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I did want to take the opportunity in the interest of ensuring that we have clear information on this. I recognize that not every member, because it is a large document, has had the chance to make it through all the pieces, so I want to assure the member that if you look at the amendment, it actually says to strike out subclause (iv), "any other property designated by the regulations." We've already taken that action, removed that, and replaced it with more specifics, again, in recognition that flexibility is required and that regulation engagement with our stakeholders will continue.

It is important that this is a responsive, flexible piece of legislation, Mr. Chair, because what I promised to the municipal governments is that it would not be something that would be necessarily burdensome. With that we're making it as responsive as possible to meet and be responsive to their needs.

You know, Mr. Chair, certainly, I want to say that there is no contradictory stance when we talk about the fact that I'm happy to advance the interests of industry here in this House and that at other times we have challenges with them. I'm unapologetic about that because the reason that we are here is to ensure that we meet the needs of Albertans, and in many cases it is in Albertans' best interests to support industry as best as possible. They contribute to a healthy Alberta, and I'm proud to work with them and to support them. But when industry brings forward or makes some choices that are not in the best interests of Albertans, that is when the government is required to step forward and to challenge industry on that. So 99 per cent of the time we'll be working with industry and supporting them, thankful for the work that they do and their presence here in the province. We would not be Alberta without that. However, that does not mean that in every single instance we will do so if it is very clear that it is not in the best interests of Albertans.

Once again, I do not support this amendment. I think it's in the best interests of municipal governance that we have the flexibility to change the actual specific listing of those plants by regulation, a much more responsive action to take. There is the clear criterion in terms of an overarching guideline as to what would be included in the legislation, which provides a lot of information to municipalities, but moving forward to bring the specific listing of properties into this or failing to identify them at all I don't feel is in the best interests of municipalities.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Chair. Just rising briefly to support the subamendment by my hon. colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster, and I would ask the minister politely, I hope, to reconsider her opposition to it. I think this really is an improvement. I heard the minister say something – and I don't think I can quote her exactly – about all municipalities understanding what's industrial or that they all agree or something of that nature. I appreciate, Minister, that I know I didn't get the quote right exactly, but it was something of that nature. That's part of the problem here.

I know the minister is working hard to get this right, so I want to give her credit for that. Despite that fact, she's not right about that.

I can tell you that after spending nine years on a municipal council, not only do all councils not agree on what's industrial and what isn't; lots of times there are divisions within council about what's industrial and what isn't. You know what? These are honest disagreements. There's nothing bad, nothing nefarious, nothing evil going on. There's just real, honest disagreements of opinion. Not only that, but each municipality in their land-use bylaws gets to designate classifications of property. One might go I-1, I-2, I-3 for heavy, medium, and light industrial, and one might go IH, IM, and IL and then maybe have subcategories on there, where you've got medium or light industrial that includes retail or medium and light industrial that doesn't include retail.

You know, for example, you might have a machine shop that sells some particular gadget or something that they make in the back that has become popular, so they have a retail store and sell it out the front. It could be an industrial butcher shop in the back that sells meat out the front. It could be a whole range of – Princess Auto, I think, in some ways in Calgary at least, is designated industrial, and in other municipalities it may be designated as pure retail. Neither municipality is really wrong. They've just chosen within the proper scope of authority that they're given within the Municipal Government Act to make these determinations, and they are right in so doing. That is why we need to look at this, because the assumption that I think the minister is making, that it will be easy to get everybody to agree on what's industrial and what isn't, isn't quite that straightforward. There are so many nuances, so many nuances, from a machine shop making parts for RVs or trailers or cars that are broken and not easily available, to a machine shop that's actually making skids that will have gas and oil plants that get shipped around the world and be put together as massive oil and gas production facilities, or it could be something that's making frames for affordable housing, you know, factory-produced housing, or any other range of things that get produced.

Again, no one is lying here. No one is lying here. The government is not lying here. The municipality is not lying here. Nobody is lying here. The fact is that there are honest and true disagreements on what's industrial and what isn't, and I think that the subamendment by my colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster actually helps in getting past some of those misunderstandings, which is why I hope that the members of this House choose to support this subamendment.

The Acting Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the subamendment? The Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to take a brief moment or two to support this subamendment as well. You know, I'm not a litigator, and I am not as experienced as some of the hon. members that are here that preceded my election. Nonetheless, there are a lot of experienced people here that used to sit on councils and have got a lot of experience on the government side, and when they bring forward a subamendment such as this, I tend to listen.

When I look through the original Municipal Government Act and I look at section 284 – and I'm looking at my old copy that I used to use when I was a consultant; actually, I've got the older copy, but it hasn't changed a lot – one of the things that strikes me on this whole thing is that section 284 of the act included a complete and very detailed set of definitions in section (k), which described what linear property was. In that section (k) there are an awful lot of descriptions about electric power systems, street lighting systems, cables, amplifiers, antennas, pipelines. You name it and it was fully described in section 284. So when we were talking about linear, we knew what we had, and it was in the act. Of course, therefore, if it was in the act, it's something that can be debated in the House as we are talking today.

It's interesting to see that in Bill 21 on page 14, as the hon. member has mentioned, they are taking that set of definitions, clause (k), and striking the whole works out. Then they are giving a new definition to linear property. There are four or five items under linear property, and instead of all the detail that was in the act, they talk about, first of all, electric power systems. Where they had a large definition for electric power systems and all the information pertaining to electric power systems so that we knew what they were going to be working with there, they've now said that "electric power systems" is going to have "the meaning given to that term in the regulations." This House doesn't deal with regulations, as we've known. They've done that to the street lighting systems, to the telecommunications systems, to the pipelines, to the railway property. So they've taken all the clarity out with the striking of that clause.

As the hon. member has pointed out, there are a couple more clauses that he is concerned about and that I am as well, and so are our members here on this side, too. Designated industrial property comes up with a new set of definitions, and it is pretty open. It basically says:

(iii) property designated as a major plant by the regulations . . .

Well, we don't have the regulations. We're not dealing with any regulations.

(iv) any other property designated by the regulations.

So where we had some specifics before in the old act, they're going to move that all over to regulations, and we won't have a chance to work with it.

Based on that and a lot of the other comments by the members on this side of the House, Mr. Chair, I cannot do anything except be very happy to support this subamendment. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to subamendment SA2? The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. There have been several questions that have been brought up specifically about this, and it looks like we're taking quite a bit of detail and shoving it into, well, almost – what? – half a sentence in both cases here. My concern always when we start to move away from detail in the legislation – and don't get me wrong. I do understand that going with clear, precise terms in legislation is our goal in everything we do. Actually, to be honest with you, it makes a big difference when we're trying to interpret.

When we see that linear property has a very extensive – very extensive – definition here and see that it goes down to (k), linear property, I have a concern that now suddenly we are going to see a specifically different definition for linear property coming up in the regulations. Now, this is a concern for my riding of Bonnyville-Cold Lake because there is a lot of linear assessment in my riding. My worry always is that when there were discussions about the MGA review, there were extensive discussions on how to deal with linear assessment. Now suddenly that whole issue has gotten thrown off to the side, saying: we're not going to deal with that. Okay. Apparently, this is something where the government feels that what's being done, in my opinion, is the appropriate direction that was done in the past. Through regulations is there a way of being able to change exactly what is deemed linear assessment?

Now, when we look at this, there's a lot to linear assessment, and I do want to touch on some of it because it's important. My honoured colleague has actually brought up some very good questions, but specifically let's look under section 284(1)(k)(i).

Electric power systems, including structures, installations, materials, devices, fittings, apparatus, appliances and machinery and equipment, owned or operated by a person whose rates are controlled or set by the Alberta Utilities Commission or by a municipality or under the Small Power Research and Development Act, but not including land or buildings.

Going through this, this is very, very specific on exactly what power systems would include.

Now, going forward, I know that regulations really are, in the case where we do one of these acts, something where it's important to know what you're dealing with. It may not be brought up as a specific concern because we actually don't know what's going to be in the regulations. We've talked about regulations already, saying that by using regulations, stating that you're going to dictate or define something after the fact – what we did here is 60 days. Again, I'm thankful that it's not a week. It does seem that there is a little bit more time on that.

In this case, let's say, for instance, that the definition of linear assessment does change inside of the regulations and that somehow this is going to very much impact my riding. I am going to have constituents from Bonnyville-Cold Lake saying: Scott, why wasn't this brought up?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Names.

Mr. Cyr: I would like to thank my colleague. I will again say sorry about using a name in the House.

An Hon. Member: Third time, we've got to kick you out.

Mr. Cyr: I have been told that I might be thrown into the corner soon.

As the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, representing them in the House, what exactly is it that I brought forward as a concern saying that these definitions should have been brought forward before the legislation went in? I guess the thing here is that when we start looking at definitions, because in the end definitions actually are very important when it comes to linear assessment or industrial assessment, how exactly is it that we can go so broad with something so important?

Now, I will say that when we were looking at this, this is a new definition. This is something where the government looks like they're reducing the Municipal Government Act, and then they're trying to, it looks like, make this a smaller act. That's always admirable. I have to say that when it comes to some of these acts that we've put through, it needs to be something that we can actually be able to interpret. But when we've got regulations doing the work of the act, that's never a good thing. So that's one point that I've already brought up.

Now, I am, again, concerned with part (iv) under (f.01). What we've got is: "any other property designated by the regulations." I did a quick check, and I didn't see . . .

Mr. Cyr: What I am looking for specifically is the definition of what "any other property designated by the regulations" actually means. Now, I don't see the definition here – and the government will correct me if I'm wrong – and in this case that does bring concern to me as well because this really opens up exactly what other property designated by regulations could be. In this case one of the thoughts that comes to mind would be, let's say, that we get a small solar farm, for instance. Could that suddenly be deemed an industrial property? This is an important one because we don't know the extent of how large or small this operation could be. I always have to be concerned because we had it very well laid out before about linear property.

Now, again, I'm not here to hamper the government from being able to do its job – that's not the entire goal of this – but what I am trying to do is say that I do have concerns brought forward by my constituents and my colleagues, and I would hope that the Minister of Municipal Affairs can answer a few of my questions.

The Acting Chair: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Once again, I have to state that I understand, given the size of not only the legislation but even the amendment package that I presented, there may have been some oversight on that piece. But I want to be clear that I did hear some concern around the broad, undefined nature of subclause (iv), that includes “any other property designated by the regulations.” You will note that in section E of the amendment that I brought forward, if you look on page 3, clause (a) actually says: “striking out subclause (iv).” So I already recognized that. I heard that from stakeholders.

The amendment that I brought forward certainly allows for greater transparency with respect to the designation of property as designated industrial assessment, and it provides clear guidance that it includes solely assessing the land and other property that supports the operation of regulated facilities and major plants. That particular subclause I already had suggested that we remove. I'm really thankful for agreement that that is a good way to go. Hopefully, that lays to rest some of the concerns with that particular issue there.

The Acting Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to subamendment SA2?

Seeing none, I'll put the question on the subamendment SA2 as proposed by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on subamendment SA2 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 11:31 a.m.]

[Motion on subamendment SA2 lost]

The Acting Chair: We are back on amendment A1. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise today to move subamendment SA3 to Bill 21. I have the requisite number of copies, and I will begin reading once the table indicates for me to proceed.

The Acting Chair: Please proceed.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I move that amendment A1 to Bill 21, Modernized Municipal Government Act, be amended by striking out part Z and substituting the following:

Z Section 112 is struck out and the following is substituted:

112 Section 664(1) is struck out and the following is substituted:

Environmental Reserve

664(1) Subject to section 663 in subsection (2), a subdivision authority may require the owner of a parcel of land that is the subject of a proposed subdivision to provide as environmental reserve that part of the parcel of land which is unsuitable for development if it consists of

- (a) a swamp, gully, ravine, or coulee, or
- (b) a strip of land abutting the bed and shore of a water body.

(1.1) A subdivision authority may require land referred to in subsection (1) to be provided as environmental reserve only where, in the opinion of the subdivision authority, the land is unsuitable for development for one or more of the following reasons:

- (a) the natural features of the land present a significant risk of personal injury or property damage occurring during development or use of the land;
- (b) the land is required to prevent pollution lying within the bed and shore of a water body on or adjacent to the land;
- (c) to ensure public access along the bed and shore of a body of water lying on or adjacent to the land with an area of not less than 6 metres in width.

(1.2) For the purposes of subsection (1.1)(b) and (c), “bed and shore” means the natural bed and shore determined under the Surveys Act.

Mr. Chair, this amendment seeks to bring mutually beneficial clarity to the term “environmental reserve.” In speaking with industry, this has been a glaring concern for them. The scope with respect to what can be classified as environmental reserve is ill-defined. By defining environmental reserve as land not suitable for development, it is my hope that we can support and bring some clarity to municipal and industry partners. This is a fair and balanced clarification of the parameters, and the needs of both municipalities and industry I believe will be met by this subamendment. It respects the priorities of both parties. It recognizes the need for environmental reserves to be balanced with the economics of sustainable development and growth in light of a tight land supply and development density targets.

Further, Mr. Chair, I think that this is an opportunity for us to consider those broader partnerships that we need within our communities to ensure that we have both the economics of development but also the protection of the needs of Albertans and also the protection of the sustainability of municipalities.

Part of that partnership I think recognizes that we have an industry that's not very good at blowing its own horn. It does a lot of good. I'll speak a little bit more about what we see in Calgary. We have the Resolve campaign, with millions of dollars donated by the building development industry towards affordable housing; supportive organizations and institutions like SAIT, Bow Valley College, University of Calgary, Mount Royal University, and the list goes on; supportive nonprofits and charities like the Kids Cancer Care Foundation, Children's hospital, Habitat for Humanity; the development of industry-driven solutions to affordable housing, PEAK home ownership, Attainable Homes Calgary, and many others, Mr. Chair.

I believe that there are future partnerships here that can be developed if we're able to balance, again, those needs of economic sustainability and the needs of municipalities, the ability to partner on things like recreation centres, schools, parks, playgrounds, constructed wetlands, those things that make communities great, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Chair, this is an opportunity for us to, again, improve the legislation, not to discredit any of the great work that I think has been done by the minister. Some consultation: again, we've heard from industry and we've heard from municipalities with robust consultation and, actually, significant alignment on many, many issues. So it's my hope that all members can rise in support of this subamendment because it improves the legislation. It does not take away from the great work done. It does not take away from the opportunity to do what's best for Albertans and, again, as has been mentioned by many of our colleagues here today, is an opportunity for us to take enduring legislation to make sure it's as appropriate and robust as we possibly can.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: Are there any members wishing to speak to subamendment SA3? Are we ready for the question?

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Yeah. I just thought I would rise and give the government a couple of additional minutes perhaps to collect some thoughts and see if they might be able to add some comment to my hon. colleague's subamendment and have some sense about whether or not they will be supporting this subamendment.

I certainly know that my colleague has taken some significant time and thought as well as reached out to a number of stakeholders. I feel like I'm saying a few more kind things about him than maybe I ought, but I know that he's done a lot of very good work on this subamendment, and I think that it is certainly worth chatting about. It's my hope that prior to the call of the question we may be able to hear some thoughts from folks on the other side of the House as to whether or not they believe that he has good thoughts.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Chair. An interesting challenge here near the end of the morning session with respect to a section of the MGA that goes to my heart and soul, and having sat on councils and rendered decisions about the taking of environmental reserves when subdivisions are being worked upon, I'm quite acquainted with this section of the old act. It seems to me that perhaps this generates a few questions that some of us that have experience with this may have for the hon. member.

In Bill 21 the department has gone to a great length to change the definitions of "water body" and "body of water." In former days this gave the department a fair amount of difficulty because the Water Act had a definition for a body of water; various acts had a definition of a water body, drainage courses, natural drainage courses, rivers, shores, streams. Hon. member, on page 2 of Bill 21 it talks about a new definition of a water body, and it says:

- (i) a permeant and naturally occurring body of water, or
- (ii) a naturally occurring river, stream, watercourse or lake.

What they've done is change the way that the environmental reserve is to be dealt with by using those new terms.

I'm just wondering if you want to expand on your thoughts with respect to the changes you're suggesting under environmental reserve based on that new definition or if you're just wishing to change, more importantly, the other suggestion you have where you're talking about a bunch of other things that haven't normally been here before, specifically about (1.1)(b) in your subamendment: "the land is required to prevent pollution lying within the bed and shore of a water body." Do you have definitions of what "pollution" would be? Do you have other things to back this up so that if this were to be challenged one day at some hearing that I happen to be at, there would be some clarity for the applicants or the appellants? Do you have anything on that, please?

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Member, for your questions. I think what we're trying to do here is ensure that there's an opportunity for us to take a look at this land in a different perspective, in terms of the use of the land and the potential use of the land, for the most part here.

With respect to the pollution clause you're correct. I think that there may be some additional regulations required to define that more clearly, but I think the intent here, really, is to ensure that the land that is unsuitable for development also recognizes the adjacent use of the land and the potential for contamination of that land. It could be from drainage issues and things like that that may be subject to concerns with respect to water quality and drainage. We, obviously, have storm ponds that are most often parts of developments to ensure that there is appropriate storage and collection of stormwater, which may be contaminated from other sources, road sources and things like that, that we're also able to recognize some of the concerns around that.

You're absolutely correct. I think that we're trying to define the use of the land and the disposition of the land that can be put into environmental reserve, but there's no doubt that the regulations will need to clearly define what some of the other terms are there. I think that's part and parcel of what we're going to have in many different aspects of this legislation.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you once again. I appreciate the time and the patience of everyone in the House while we try to get legislation right.

Along the same vein, the previous clause that would relate to some of the stuff that you're actually asking no longer be there, I believe, was the former clause (b): "land that is subject to flooding or is, in the opinion of the subdivision authority, unstable." That was the old clause that we had for some time, and I guess you're suggesting, therefore, that your section (1.1)(a), (b), and (c) replace that broader definition. Is that what we're going with?

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you again to the member for the question. That's entirely correct. These are some definitions that we've looked at and spoken with industry about in terms of clarification. Again, a lot of it, I think, is recognition of the disposition of land for environmental reserve, how it is classified before it is pushed into environmental reserve, and the fact that it is not developable land. That really is the key, that that land can be utilized and considered for the environmental reserve without sort of prejudice to the opportunities for further development on that land but also recognizing that some of the land can be rehabilitated and used for development in many cases as well.

The Acting Chair: The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Having had some experience in protecting wetlands and water bodies from development, I think it's important, when you talk about swamps, gullies, ravines, or coulees being natural habitat for wildlife, if we can somehow incite developers to – because the equipment exists to change the landscape completely. A gully: whereas you say that it's undevelopable property, with a few dirt trucks and some track hoes and Cats you could eliminate a coulee or a gully pretty quickly. This serves to give some incentive to developers to, rather than developing those areas, leave them natural and promote some natural habitat.

You also mentioned that they may be dangerous to construction. That would be my only concern, that if they're dangerous to construction, they might be dangerous to little kids that are going to live in that neighbourhood as well. But a few bumps and scrapes and bruises probably aren't a bad thing when you're growing up either.

If the intent of this is to promote the protection of some of these natural habitats, I would support this subamendment. Thanks.

The Acting Chair: Any other member? The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you. I'm going to stand to support this. I think my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has done some work on this. I don't see that he criticized what the government had there but rather that this is an attempt to improve it.

This is a sensitive area and an important one, Mr. Chair. During my time on a municipal council a lot of these issues came up constantly. You know, when somebody wants to develop a piece of land, I think they accept right away that they have to give up a bunch of it. I mean, they give up 10 per cent of it typically for green space. They give up allowances for roads and sidewalks. Sometimes they give up allowances for public amenities, maybe a police station, maybe a fire hall, maybe parks, whatever it happens to be. Sometimes they even will build a park for the municipality and even put in the deep and shallow services for the municipality. All that is part of the business.

Where it gets sticky or dicey or where you get misunderstanding is on some of the definitions of further dedications and further expropriations on things like environmental reserve. I think the hon. member has done a good job of trying to make it clear what is and what is not a potentially good idea for environmental reserve.

As the hon. member from the official opposition talked, I didn't hear him recommending it, but he was just recognizing the reality that you can change the shape of any landscape if you've got big enough equipment. You can move water courses. You can eliminate hills; you can create hills. You can remove gullies; you can create gullies. I didn't hear him suggest that you should always do that, and I'm surely not suggesting that you should always do that. It's just a recognition that that can happen.

The dedication of an environment reserve is very often completely appropriate, and very often those that develop land are a hundred per cent in favour of it because they recognize that when they're doing ethical business, they want to leave things behind that are good. Where it runs into problems is when you get into a discussion about what is and what is not environmental reserve, and those discussions could be around where a piece of land, for example, is completely dry and has been dry for as long as anybody can remember. The municipality, on the other hand, may have aerial photos from every year back 150 years, and from 25 to 75 years ago that piece of land might have been wet. Once that happens, when a piece of land is dry . . .

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt . . .

Mr. McIver: I was just – I respect that, Chair. I'll stop.

The Acting Chair: Pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee will rise and report.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 21. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, I think we've made some good progress this morning and had some good discussions, and just seeing the time, I would move that we adjourn the House until 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:55 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, November 24, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It would be my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a distinguished guest representing the Republic of Turkey. I'm very happy to welcome Mr. Anil Bora Inan, consul general of the Republic of Turkey. With the consul general here today is the honorary consul general in Edmonton, Mr. Kenan Tan. Between 2011 and 2015 Alberta averaged approximately $27 million in annual exports to Turkey, and, in turn, Alberta averaged approximately $66 million in annual imports from Turkey, so we'll have to balance that off at some time. We share an appreciation of learning from collaborative relationships between our postsecondary institutions. I would now ask Consul General Inan and Mr. Tan to rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly the fantastic students of the grade 6 classes of Simons Valley school in Sandstone in Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill. They're here today with their teachers and chaperones, and there's a lot of names: Charlene Mudry, Laurie Reeve, Andrew Cull, Colleen Nabata, Vanessa Blyth, Beth Potter, Amie Lee, Susan Nicoll, Jessica Mehain, Kristi Peterson, Megan Limbird, Cherallee Rutledge, Maegan O'Brien, Candy Moe, Maha Abbas, and Tejinder Singh. I had the pleasure of visiting these classes earlier this year, and I'm so impressed with how well behaved and engaged the students are. I would like everyone to rise and please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school groups, hon. members?
Seeing none, the Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Ms Rosalind Davis. Rosalind has been here meeting with all sides of the House to talk about the scourge of fentanyl addiction. Sadly, Rosalind lost her partner, Nathan, to fentanyl addiction, and my member's statement later today will be about that. I would ask that Rosalind please rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Ava Touch, who is a student with the Simons Valley school that was just introduced so well by their MLA. Ava is an important part of the Oxford House family. My dad is the executive director of the Oxford House, an organization I'm proud to support, that works with addicts in our province. Ava's grandmother, Ms Twitney, is the finance co-ordinator at Oxford House, an important member of that team. I would like to let the Assembly know that just recently Ava, through a cycle-a-thon, helped the Oxford House to raise $12,000 for addicts. I can tell you, of course, that the Oxford House family is very, very proud of her, but I can also tell you that her grandmother is very, very proud of her. I would ask that she rise – I know that she's behind me – and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: She's pretty small for $12,000.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three members of the Strathcona County Diversity Committee: Anna Attademo, Parvaneh Tashakor, and Mariam Farooq. Coming from very different backgrounds, these three women provide leadership to the committee. They are also involved in volunteering for organizations such as the arts council, affordable housing, Heartland Housing, and Movie in the Park. Their wisdom and passion make them natural mentors for some of the less-experienced members of the committee. It has been a pleasure for me to get to know them and to support their activism to create an environment where everyone is welcome and supported. I would like to ask Anna, Parvaneh, and Mariam to please rise to receive the traditional warm welcome from the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly another home-schooling family from Wetaskiwin. If my constituents would please rise as I read their names: Yoshiya Kim, a surveyor from the oil field now working in Edmonton; his wife, Sandra Kim, a former volunteer firefighter with the city of Wetaskiwin and now a home-schooling mother of five for the past six years; Abigail, the oldest daughter who's in grade 10 and is interested in how policy is shaped; Anna, the younger daughter in grade 6 and here to learn about how government is formed and runs; and the youngest son, Daniel, grade 1, just happy to explore the grounds and building. If we could please welcome them with the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly Mrs. Leah McRorie. This is not her first time, and I doubt it will be her last. This fierce advocate for inclusion of people with disabilities has reached out to every side and party within this House. Whether you've met in person, received e-mails, or been skewered on social media, you know this tiny and mighty advocate will hold us all accountable as it relates to inclusion, equality, and human rights. Please join me in thanking her and giving her the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who have guests here today? [interjection] Hon. member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, I didn't see you; my apologies.

Cortes-Vargas: That's okay, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly guests of one of our pages, Jessica Hermary. Her parents, Nadine and Robin Hermery, live in the constituency of Strathcona-Sherwood Park, and they run a family business that has been in operation for 50 years. They are accompanied by Erika and John Auton, Jessica's grandparents, who also live in Sherwood Park. I would just like to ask them to all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Now, are there any others, hon. members?

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta and Minister of Status of Women.

Violence against Women and Girls

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to acknowledge the International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women, an annual day on November 25, which is tomorrow, designated by the United Nations General Assembly in 1999. To be free from violence is a basic human right, and every citizen has the right to live without fear, harassment, and violence.

Around the world and here in Alberta women continue to experience actions that threaten their dignity as human beings. It can be a demeaning comment, an act of physical or sexual violence, or it can end a life. Some people believe that violence against women and girls only happens in other parts of the world, yet I look around this Assembly and see the faces of women who have courageously shared their stories of abuse and survival. It happens in Alberta, and it happens far too often, leaving survivors to deal with fear, shame, powerlessness, and loneliness.

There is no excuse, Mr. Speaker, no reason that validates violence against women and girls: not a disagreement, not drinking too much, not the loss of a job. Canada's chief public health officer called family violence a serious public health issue, noting that women are most likely to experience violence, and the outcome is even more dire for indigenous women. Today and every day I will stand up to violence against women and girls in this province. It is entirely possible to prevent gender-based violence, and even more importantly, it is essential that we do.

That's where the 16 Days of Activism against Gender-based Violence Campaign leads the way. Every day from tomorrow until 16 days later, on Human Rights Day, December 10, Status of Women will highlight a different action aimed at preventing and eventually stopping violence against women and girls. In addition, on December 6, the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence against Women in Canada, we will be holding a vigil on the front steps of the Legislature, Mr. Speaker, in commemoration of the 14 young women who were murdered at l'école Polytechnique de Montréal, who died only because they were women.

You will notice many members, Mr. Speaker, wearing an orange button today with the phrase "share your action, 16 days, 16 ways" and our Twitter handle @Alberta_Women. We wear orange as it's the United Nations symbol of a brighter future and a future without violence. Tomorrow the Calgary Tower and the High Level Bridge in Edmonton will glow orange to remind us that a future without violence is possible.

We can all be part of the solution, Mr. Speaker, to a problem that has absolutely no place in our province. Thank you. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise in response to the statement given by the hon. Minister of Status of Women. Violence against women is a very serious problem, affecting thousands of people in this province. We know that Alberta has some of the highest rates of violence against women in the country, whether it is intimate partner violence, sexual violence, or the issue of missing and murdered indigenous women and girls. Many Alberta women may be suffering in silence, unsure or simply too afraid to leave the situation that they're in.

It is the duty of all political leaders, not just in our province and our country but around the world, to be part of the solution, not the problem. It's especially incumbent on men to recognize the pervasiveness of violence against women and ensure that the language we use does not minimize the seriousness of the issue. I will be the first to admit that in the past the language I've used has failed in that regard, but I commit to being part of the solution, rather than advancing the problem. When we hear someone minimize the impact of violence against women, we must call it out. When we see someone in danger or experiencing violence themselves, we must step in.

There is no simple solution to this serious problem. It will take all of us – every one of us – as political leaders to work towards solutions. Every single Albertan deserves to feel safe, and it's incumbent on all of us to raise our sons and our daughters and to teach our peers that violence against women in any form is absolutely unacceptable. There is no grey area. Strong communities that recognize the dignity, value, and worth of all women are better for it. Together we must work as political leaders and as all Albertans and all Canadians to curb violence in our communities. Value all people, and we will all be better for it.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the House to provide unanimous consent so that a representative of the third party as well as the two independent members be allowed to respond if they so choose.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the existence of a day dedicated to highlighting the desperate need to end all violence against women, but I am saddened that we need to have this day at all. While this day is recognized internationally, sadly we cannot think of it as another country's problem because women are being victimized daily in this province.

It is true that violent actions committed against women can sometimes have a direct correlation to the state of the economy, and we say that because we all know that Albertans are struggling at this time. Police services around the province are citing that domestic violence has spiked. In the first 10 months of the year the Calgary Police Service has responded to 20,000 domestic calls with close to 3,000 involving suspected violence. Think about that. We are talking about thousands of women and children in crisis.

As legislators we spend time debating the best actions for the economy, job creation, investment, and so on. During these economic arguments we put up a lot of figures and make dire predictions, but let's not forget what we're really here for, and that is people. We have a responsibility to understand the human impact when jobs disappear, unemployment jumps, bankruptcies spike, mental health deteriorates, addictions spin out of control. None of these are acceptable excuses, but inevitably domestic violence raises its ugly head.

As an advanced-care paramedic I've seen the toll that violence takes on our society when women are victimized, and all too often first responders, like the hon. Member for Calgary-West, see the start of it, and we also see the fatal end.

I reiterate: everyone in this House needs to remember what we were sent here for, and that is people. More than ever we need to let the women and children of Alberta know that they are not forgotten and that we will stand with them. As legislators we are privileged to have this ability to address this issue, and so we should. On this day, International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women, we can take a vow to protect them while we fight to put an end to this terrible epidemic.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to stand, too, and speak to International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women. Around the world mothers, daughters, sisters, grandmothers are at risk of injury simply because they are female. In Canada alone the statistics are horrifying. Half of all women in Canada have experienced at least one incident of physical or sexual violence. On any given night in Canada 3,500 women and 2,700 children live in shelters because it isn't safe at home, and on any given night 300 women and children are turned away from shelters that are already full in Canada. Finally, every week a woman is killed by her intimate partner in this country.

Violence includes the far more common psychological abuse, trauma every bit as damaging as physical trauma, causing fear, anxiety, and even suicide among women and their children. These may appear to be distant acts committed by anonymous people, but the women suffering, often in silence, are our friends, our neighbours, our family, our co-workers.

Right here in this Chamber the hon. Member for Calgary-North West has to be guarded physically because of the utterly contemptuous threat to her life. Tomorrow is not only a recognition of this widespread violence; it's also a commitment to end the violence, a task that falls to all of us.

Silence is complicity. Strong supportive voices, especially from men and boys, must be heard to say that misogyny, whether oral, in print, in social media cannot be tolerated. Awareness, education, and advocacy are tools used to fight this, but we in this Assembly have the power to do more. We can pass bills, reduce poverty, increase access to education and life skills for girls and boys, and ensure stable, safe living environments for women and children, as well as improve the criminal justice response. By speaking and acting together against violence wherever it occurs, by increasing the supports available to women and the children they care for, we will end violence against women.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise today to recognize the International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women. Violence against women is a human rights issue and a consequence of systemic discrimination and the persistent inequalities between men and women. This is especially true for indigenous women and girls, who are far more likely to be the target of violence. It's not just a global problem we discuss in theory; it's an issue that we see here in our province, in our homes, in our communities, and, sadly, in our own political arena as women are abused and mistreated every day in our province.

Half of all women in Canada have experienced at least one incident of physical or sexual violence. I'll say that again. Half of all women in Canada have experienced at least one incident of physical or sexual violence, and that doesn't count the taunts and psychological abuse that far too many women continue to endure. Worse still, every six days a woman in Canada is killed by her intimate partner. It's absolutely horrifying to me that women and girls across the world and in our own province live in fear of violence.

As the son of a strong mother, as husband to a strong feminist who every day leads by example, and as a father of daughters this issue of ending violence against women is deeply personal for me.

We must recognize that violence takes many forms and acknowledge the difficulties many women face when they come forward about the violence that they have faced in their own lives. We must believe women when they do come forward and stand with them to fight against the culture of violence and harm that permeates our society. Our first response must be: I believe you.

I encourage all Albertans to participate in the United Nations 16 days of activism against gender violence, but it's also important to continue the activism every single day beyond that. It's up to all of us, men and women, to call out people who harass women online or in our daily lives. Believe the women who come forward with stories of violence, listen and act on what they have to say, work to create a culture that rejects violence, threats, or verbal abuse as a way to deal with problems or to exert control, teach and encourage the people around you that any and all forms of violence against women are simply unacceptable, and, most of all, support the women in your lives in their activism to end violence against women.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Policies

Mr. Jean: Today the NDP's economic plan received another thumbs down from Alberta's job creators. A survey from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business shows that 45 per cent of Alberta businesses are preparing to let go of workers over the next three months. In 37 days the NDP's carbon tax comes into effect. They are destroying with that 10,000 coal jobs in the province, and they are just flat out making life far more difficult for Albertans in need of hope and a hand up. With Christmas just around the corner and more jobs expected to be lost, how can the Premier possibly stand behind these NDP job-killing policies?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Leader of the Official Opposition has his sources; we've got ours. Yesterday Canadian corporate executives urged the federal government and the provinces to keep taking action on climate change. This letter was signed by companies like General Electric Canada, SNC-Lavalin, Shell Canada, Rio Tinto, Teck Resources, Forest Products Association of Canada, and Suncor, a major employer in that member's riding. I hope he'll stand up for the employees at Suncor. I know this government will.

Mr. Jean: Well, 71 per cent of entrepreneurs also say that tax and regulatory costs are hurting their business. Translation: the carbon tax and NDP red tape is hammering their bottom line. Nearly everything the NDP has done since coming into government has made it more difficult for Albertans to succeed. They have taken more money out of people's pockets, they are attacking Alberta-owned power companies, and they are shutting down safe and reliable coal-generated electricity. How does the Premier think taxing and regulating jobs out of existence in Alberta will do anything but make things worse for Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: The market we inherited was broken. A government that shows leadership steps up to the plate and finds ways to fix it, and we fixed it by making sure we have a capacity market that will also ensure that the market benefits are affordable, stable, and predictable for consumers, both small industrial and local consumers. We have an obligation to keep the lights on in citizens' houses, and we're going to make sure we do that in an affordable way, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jean: Yesterday the Premier said that she would like to see Albertans use food banks less, but everything this government has done has made Albertans use them more. In Calgary alone food bank use is up 22 per cent in just one year. What's the NDP's response? Well, to tax charities through a new carbon tax, to put a tax on everyone else, and to destroy 10,000 jobs in Alberta's coal industry, which will devastate many communities throughout Alberta. When will the Premier actually meet with the working men and women her policies are hurting so much?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, our government works every day to engage with Albertans. It's important that we hear their voices. Guess what? We heard their voice loud and clear a year and a half ago when we held an election, where the Official Opposition was proposing a plan that would relive the deep cuts of the '90s, laying off teachers, laying off nurses. Instead, we're working to support our private investments, those jobs that we have in Alberta, as well as supporting the public. I have to say that they were given a choice: do the proven failed methods of the past or choose a better path, and they chose that path.

Electric Power System

Mr. Jean: When I asked the Premier why her NDP government is punishing the people of Calgary, she responded, "The issue of the PPAs does not have a direct correlation to property taxes in Calgary." That's not true. Mayor Nenshi has made it clear that cancelling the PPAs threatens Enmax profitability, and that could mean losing the Enmax dividend. That means that property taxes in Calgary will go down by 4.5 per cent per year every year. Does the Premier think Mayor Nenshi is not telling the truth? Yes or no?

Ms Hoffman: The government has been very clear all along that we would welcome discussions with other parties involved in the PPA agreements that were executed. We're working to negotiate settlements, Mr. Speaker, as we have stated. We will protect Albertans by shouldering the up to $2 billion cost that the members opposite are pushing so hard to just pass on to consumers without having their day to stand up for themselves and get a fair return. All Albertans deserve to have an opportunity to have their voices heard, their bills affordable, and that's what they have in this government.

Mr. Jean: Well, I know that profit is a dirty word for many across the aisle. Here's the bottom line. The profits Enmax has generated over the last eight years mean that they have been able to send back over $450 million in dividends to their shareholders, the city of Calgary. When Enmax profits, the people of Calgary profit as well. By risking that dividend, this Premier will force property tax increases on every single Calgarian at the same time she's bringing in a massive new carbon tax. How does the Premier expect Calgarians to pay for all these new taxes?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. How does the member opposite sleep at night knowing that he wants to pass $2 billion worth of potential liabilities onto Albertans from all parts of this province? That's the real question we should be asking ourselves.

While we have some provisional agreements moving forward, we're working on creating more opportunities to have a reasonable, fair, and balanced approach. When we have tough times, Mr. Speaker, we're always going to be on the side of Albertans. I wish the opposition would consider doing that every now and then instead of just siding with corporations.

Mr. Jean: The member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake had it right. This government is practising Whac-A-Mole politics. Change a policy without thinking, realize it is a mistake, and then make a bigger mistake trying to fix the first mistake. When it comes to the electricity system, we have seen thoughtless and reckless tax increases, ridiculous lawsuits, and banana republic like threats of retroactive legislation. Now we have a complete overhaul of the electricity market from a Premier that just months ago needed a basic primer on electricity. Can the Premier understand why Albertans are very worried right now?

Ms Hoffman: The member opposite quoted one of his caucus members. I'll be happy to quote another. The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka suggested that we scrap the climate leadership plan and replace it with one day a year when all utilities in the province are shut off. He said: "Prohibit fuels for a day. Prohibit the creation of electrical power for one day. It would actually [really] reduce greenhouse gases more than this bill will." [interjections] I don't have a punchline here, Mr. Speaker. I just want everyone to know how deep the Wildrose think tank is when it comes to climate change. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, you may have noticed that all of the children are sitting very quietly and watching because they know that there is soon going to be a recess. Very soon this afternoon you're going to get a recess.

Third main set of questions.

Investigations of Deaths

Mr. Jean: Secrecy and confusion continues to cloud the tragic death of four-year-old Serenity. Yesterday the Premier claimed that the child advocate received ongoing reports from the medical examiner, but the advocate says that that's not the case. His office didn't even receive a response from the medical examiner despite repeated requests for information on the autopsy. In fact, the advocate says that the only information he has is what's been reported in the media. So I'll try again. Were files hidden from the Child and Youth Advocate related to Serenity's death? Yes or no?

Ms Hoffman: I want to thank the member for raising this important question. All child deaths are tragedies, and this one is, of course, no different. The Premier did misspeak yesterday, and I want to apologize for that. When she said that the Chief Medical Examiner had been in touch with the Child and Youth Advocate, it was, in fact, the RCMP that the chief medical officer had been in contact with. There was, as I understand, no intention to keep any records. She simply misspoke. It was the RCMP, not the advocate.

Mr. Jean: Thank you for that answer.

Secrecy also pervades the office of the Chief Medical Examiner, however. Serenity's death has highlighted a serious problem with the time that it takes to complete an autopsy report, with hers taking more than two years to complete. When Alberta Justice was asked specifically how many other files have taken over two years to complete, they wouldn't even provide an answer, so I'll ask the Premier the same question. How many other cases have taken or continue to take the Chief Medical Examiner over two years to examine and conclude?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for a fair question. Obviously, this case in particular is very complex, and the government is reviewing the specifics of this case to identify what can be done better and to move forward as quickly as we can in due course and with due process.

With regard to other cases at this point I think that the office is right to focus their energies on making sure they wrap this up and move forward. But that's a fair question, and at a later date I'll be happy to answer it.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you. It comes as no surprise to many Albertans, however, who read the headlines that the office of the Chief Medical Examiner has had problems over the past few years. With all the distractions that have taken place within the office, cases have simply lagged. We are coming up on the fifth medical examiner in a span of just two years. This office must operate properly so that deaths are properly investigated. What is the Premier going to do to reduce secrecy and increase stability within the medical examiner's office so that these deaths are properly investigated?

Ms Hoffman: I just want to say that I believe that all members on all sides of this House believe that we must do something to improve our child intervention system to also prevent those types of tragic situations from happening in the first place. I know that the staff works to prevent them as much as possible. We do need to focus on decreasing poverty, addressing systemic and long-lasting inequality. Not enough has been done to continue the review and augmentation of services for children. Of course, there is work to do to make sure that the resources are adequate to prevent these things and, if they do occur, that they are properly investigated. I think that's owed to all Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, Deputy Premier.
The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Child Intervention System

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin asked why the Child and Youth Advocate was not given access to little Serenity's autopsy report as he's entitled to under the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. I thank the Deputy Premier for admitting that the Premier misspoke yesterday. It was courageous to admit that. Thank you. But it still takes us back to the original question, which I'm sure you'll agree is important, so I'll ask it again. Why did the Child and Youth Advocate not get access to little Serenity's autopsy report as he is entitled to under the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question. I'll be happy to answer the first, but probably the specifics around the office will be better addressed by the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. I do want to say that the RCMP has been in touch, and the Chief Medical Examiner was working with the RCMP. Of course, the Child and Youth Advocate office is well respected, and we will continue to work with them to find ways that we can improve the system. Thank you for the question. I will be happy to have my associate respond further.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Ms Simons' column today revealed that the Child and Youth Advocate was not supplied with an interim report, nor were they told that they could not have access to the information due to an ongoing police investigation. To the Premier: with an issue as serious as abuse and death of a child in care, what can you do in the future to get better and more timely information so (a) you can act on it and (b) you can keep this House up to date?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. There is nothing more heartbreaking in the world than the death of a child. In this particular case the autopsy report wasn't forwarded because the RCMP still has an ongoing investigation, and they've asked us not to release this information at this time. So we are committed to working with them in ensuring that they have the tools that they need to continue their investigation.

In terms of the lack of communication around giving or not giving the report, we will work with the office on their procedures to see if we can make some improvements going forward, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what? I think we all agree that Alberta's child intervention system is broken. It's a shame when Serenity and other beautiful children fall through the cracks, and Serenity has yet to receive more justice. I was happy to hear the Deputy Premier say that she wants to work with the Child and Youth Advocate. The Child and Youth Advocate told me that he likes the idea of an all-party committee. The Premier yesterday said: maybe. Has the Premier been able to move from maybe to yes on agreeing to an all-party committee to deal with children in care of the government so we can all work together as a team?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The question was raised yesterday, and the Premier did commit to following up with the member, particularly about his proposal. We still stand by the fact that we need some time to consider that and find the best path to move forward should that be the one executed. I appreciate that the member is proposing something that's solution focused. Of course, we all are committed to finding solutions, and this case in particular, I think, speaks to the tragedy that has occurred and the fact that none of us want to stand by and have to talk about another one in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Government Policy Development

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In 2016 this government brought in a host of new policies that are changing the very fabric of Alberta society, from energy and environmental transformation to large minimum wage hikes to dramatic investment decisions, in the midst of a profound recession. What is missing, of course, is a comprehensive analysis, details. Albertans and all of us are being asked to take a lot on faith. To the Premier: can you tell us why the government continues to announce massive policy change without tabling appropriate analysis, which the Legislature needs to properly inform debate?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We continue to address a number of problems that we've inherited, and I think the responsible thing for our government to do is: when you have a system that you've inherited, show leadership, step up, do what's best, make determinations, work with the public service to gather the evidence, and move forward in a thoughtful way.

With regard to specific items of interest, I'd be happy to respond to any of those. I think we've tried to do that as best we can as a government in an open way as we move forward while protecting the interests of all Albertans, Mr. Speaker. So we're very proud of the work that we're doing and the fact that our government is addressing a number of very serious issues.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Dr. Swann: My follow-up question is for the Energy minister. Given that the government has referred repeatedly in the media to the expected report of the oil sands advisory group and given that this group has been tasked with, quote, how government might implement the legislated 100-megatonne-per-year limit on oil sands emissions, end quote, and given that there's no indication that the oil sands group will report while we debate the bill, what deliverables should this Legislature expect from the oil sands group?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and climate change.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. It's a good question. The oil sands advisory group was tasked with providing the government with advice on how to give regulatory effect to the oil sands emissions limit. Of course, the oil sands advisory group is made up of folks who asked for the oil sands emissions limit. They asked for it because it provides investment certainty going forward as we act on climate change and provide an investment climate that signals to the world that, yes, we are a carbon-constrained jurisdiction but that, yes, we are also a responsible oil and gas producer.

Dr. Swann: It's a bit confusing that they wouldn't report to the Legislature while we're debating the bill. That's all I'm saying.

To the Finance minister: given that on Tuesday this week both the Education minister and the Energy minister promised carbon tax funds, one to schools and one to backstop the electricity industry, and given that the agriculture minister has promised carbon funds to farmers and given that 60 per cent of Albertans have been promised a refund cheque, can the Finance minister show us the calculations for how this tax will cover the growing list of promises ministers are making?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you for the question. We have modelled the amount of money that'll be coming forward with the carbon levy over five years. We know what the amount of money is, and we've portioned, basically, a third to rebates, a third to efficiencies, and a third to innovations over those five years. So we have to, going forward, keep within those monies, that we don't have a bigger envelope than that, and I trust the ministers to come forward with requests that fit within that envelope.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Physician Services Agreement

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On November 18 the government of Alberta and the Alberta Medical Association signed a historic new agreement that I consider to be good for physicians, taxpayers, and, most importantly, good for Alberta families. Can the Minister of Health elaborate on the benefits Alberta families will see from the new amended agreement?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for this important question. The agreement that was in place certainly was seeing increases at rates that were unsustainable, 6 to 8 per cent increases in that one line item every single year. The agreement was negotiated by the third party. As soon as we took government, we asked the AMA to come back to the table because we knew that that wasn't sustainable. We want to have a strong public health care system for decades to come. Both recognized their responsibilities, and we were able to come up with a really strong agreement that's going to provide a significant benefit to Albertans both in terms of savings and access.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: for patients and families living in rural and remote communities, how will this new agreement help them?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was very pleased at the signing of the agreement to be joined by the president of the AAMDC. We know that for the first time Alberta will have in process a plan to actually manage where doctors go, where they're most needed, and the specific skill sets that are required for those communities. Many of those could be rural or remote communities, which we've heard from, or it could be specializations within urban centres as well. I know that one of the members opposite talked about how sometimes it feels like a whole gaggle of kids chasing after one ball to secure a doctor to come to their community. That's not fair. We're going to make sure that we're working in partnership with the communities and with the AMA.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Carson: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that the budget for physician services is a large component of Alberta health care costs, how will this new agreement reduce the rate of growth in health care spending?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We did see, as I mentioned in the first response, historic increases of 6 to 8 per cent. This deal, we know, will save us in the range of up to $500 million over the next two years. That's a significant investment that will be returned to the citizens of Alberta. And I have to say how proud I am of the fact that we had a very difficult situation, and we sat down with the impacted parties and found a better way to move forward, saving money for taxpayers as well as ensuring that we have stable access and actually an improved system in areas where it's certainly needed. This is going to help us enable the right care in the right place, the right investment.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Government Communications with Agencies

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP has a big problem with secrecy. The Information Commissioner pointed out that she shouldn't have to tell the government not to break the law. Well, we received a FOIP that included an e-mail, sent after Enmax briefed the Assistant Deputy Minister of Energy about turning back their PPA, telling a public body recipient to read and delete the sensitive e-mail and its attachment. Is the Minister of Energy complicit in ordering the destruction of these documents, or is this another example of her not being aware of what's going on?

Ms Hoffman: It's my pleasure to be able to step up and assure this House and all members that neither did the minister nor any political staff direct the destruction of records that are required to be saved under the FOIP Act. My expectation is that public records are preserved and managed under the FOIP Act. I think we all deserve that expectation to be executed. With regard to a request for an investigation I have no concerns with that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacIntyre: Given that we have an ADM in Energy telling the Balancing Pool, an independent agency, to break the law and given that we know that most of the Balancing Pool board has now resigned and given that court documents relating to the PPA lawsuit show significant discrepancies between what this government says and what Enmax says happened, what can we expect this minister to do with senior officials telling others to break the law?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Some days the opposition uses Google. I'll be happy to update them that this ADM is no longer an ADM within the ministry or the electricity file that was mentioned. The same briefing note that the opposition has released since July is the note in question, and this briefing note did go on to say that the "or more unprofitable" clause was never brought forward to the government. That's the update on the situation, and I can provide those assurances to the members opposite.

Mr. MacIntyre: About a year ago we had the CEO of Alberta Health Services resigning, citing that she was uncomfortable with the government's instructions to operate in voice mode. Given that now we have an assistant deputy minister telling an arm's-length agency to delete embarrassing e-mails in violation of the law and given that almost every day we have discrepancies between what this government says and what the evidence shows, what answer can this minister offer Albertans disappointed in a government that once upon a time claimed to do things differently?

Ms Hoffman: I'm proud of my government's record, Mr. Speaker. The member who asked that very question has asked me on a regular basis to intervene and help his community increase access to 24/7 care. I'm working hard to make that happen, and these are the types of interventions that he's speaking to. That's the job of the Minister of Health, and I am proud of the record I've had in standing up for every one of our communities, including for the members opposite.

In terms of this situation it was made very clear that neither did the minister nor any political staff act in any way that was ill becoming of the office or our expectations. My expectation is that FOIP records are preserved and managed under the FOIP Act, and I welcome an investigation if one is approved. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Tobacco Reduction Strategy

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, decreasing tobacco use is the single most impactful public health measure that could be pursued in our province. To that end, I would like to commend the Health minister for extending the ban on flavoured tobacco to include menthol. Minister, that was good work. But I am dismayed that AHS has decided to cut funding for highly effective programs funded by community-based grants under the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy. Minister, could you please tell Albertans why AHS is cutting funding for these programs?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for raising the important question and for your support in moving forward in making sure that Albertans can be as healthy as possible and finding ways to improve smoking cessation as well as limiting access for children, who are proven to be attracted to some of these flavoured products. That certainly is a step in the right direction. I'll be happy to follow up with Alberta Health Services with regard to the specific question that was raised. I haven't had an opportunity to do that yet, but now I will certainly do that and be happy to follow up with the member.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the 2014 AHS annual report noted that there was a direct link between Alberta's increased life expectancy and decreased tobacco use and given that these community-based grant programs have been shown to be highly effective in contributing to decreased tobacco use and given that the Health minister should be actively supporting these measures that have been proven to contribute to the health and longevity of Albertans, to the minister: will you commit to restoring funding to these valuable and effective programs?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the important question. I want to point out that the last question from the Official Opposition was about me intervening. This question is about me intervening in a different way, Mr. Speaker. I think the question is a fair question. If we know that there's an opportunity to have proven programs that have supported Albertans, I will ask the questions to make sure that the programs are moving forward in the best way possible in service of Albertans. That's the job of the Health minister, and I'm proud to do it.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the cuts to community grants programs are hard to justify or, indeed, even comprehend and given that these programs can be cut without involvement of protected AHS staff positions and given that community-based programs are one of the most effective parts of the tobacco control strategy, to the minister: are you allowing AHS to protect union jobs instead of funding these programs, or have you been too busy defending your government's losing position on PPAs this summer to even notice that it's happening?

Ms Hoffman: That's quite a long stretch, Mr. Speaker, to get from point A to point B. Kudos for trying. I have to say that I will do my job, which is speaking to the organizations that we fund and entrust to deliver the best care to Albertans. In term of AHS that's smoking cessation. I will be happy to follow up with them and report back to this House. I'm proud to stand up for Albertans when it comes to smoking cessation opportunities as well as standing up for Albertans when it comes to making sure they're not being gouged unfairly for electricity deals that that party invested in.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Access to Information

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three weeks ago Premier Notley told the Assembly that transparency and openness are exactly what her government is endeavouring for, yet 19 months into office and the Privacy Commissioner is describing Alberta's access to information as a crisis situation. According to the commissioner's annual report 13 of the government's own ministries are heavily redacting documents requested by the Privacy Commissioner. To the Premier: why under your leadership is the government following the previous government's trend and keeping secrets from the people of Alberta?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think there is an annual period that the member referred to there, and I'm pretty sure it was before May 2015. We all agree that it's important to ensure that Albertans have timely access to the information that's important to them. It's clear that there have been many challenges for many years here in the province of Alberta in part due to the increase in complexity of the requests. I filed many of those when I was supporting opposition MLAs. I'm sure you're filing many as well. This includes requests that require consultation with third parties and involve multiple departments. We'll continue to work on moving forward and providing timely access and appropriate responses within the guidelines of the legislation.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, given that when this government was in opposition, they wrote letters to the Privacy Commissioner asking for investigations into delays in the release of records, clearly we know that they were well aware of the access to information problems before they took office, and given that they have done nothing to improve our system of governance, again to the Premier: is accountable government not a priority for the NDP, or does she just not care?

Ms Hoffman: Absolutely we're committed to being accountable. We have been addressing the backlogs, which have been impacting the ability to respond to requests in a timely manner. The system that's been in place is able to adapt to some of the different types of information requests, but it does take time, Mr. Speaker. We know that it's important to have timely access. That's one of the reasons why in the last budget we provided for increased investments in a number of areas that would support FOIP officers. Amendments were brought forward by the members opposite to take that increased funding to the FOIP offices out. You can't have it both ways. We're trying to move forward to increase access, and that includes supporting FOIP officers.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government has had 18 months, and that's about all they have left, so I suggest they hurry up.

Given that in 2006 the Government House Leader promised to "open the curtains on government secrecy and let the sun shine in on the closets of the most secretive government in Canada" – I agree – why, Madam Premier, does your government continue to fail to honour the promises of the Government House Leader to "ensure that the public information is available to those to whom it belongs, the public"? Stop the secrecy.

Ms Hoffman: I seem to recall times where people were making assertions that perhaps in 18 months we'd be looking at Premier Smith sitting in this very seat. We sure know what happened there, Mr. Speaker, so I'd ask that the members opposite respect the public and the choices that they make in democracy.

Mr. Cooper: Just let the sun shine in.

Ms Hoffman: We are committed to letting the sun shine in. That's why we're moving forward to develop best practices guidelines for all departments, to ensure consistency in how FOIPs are processed and also improve co-ordination across government departments to ensure more timely responses to requests. That includes in some areas needing to have the staff available to do that, so I hope next year you don't propose cutting those as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Violent Crimes

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. New data from Stats Canada determined that Edmonton is third in line for the murder capital of Canada. According to this data there were 604 victims of homicide in Canada in 2015. More than 5 per cent of those murders in Canada were all attributed to Edmonton. What is your ministry doing, Minister, to address this alarming increase in homicides within Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Keeping Alberta communities safe is a priority for our government. That's why our government puts more than half a billion dollars into policing. That's more than any of our western neighbours. We contribute on a per capita basis to municipalities to assist with policing. We also have investments in ALERT, which is an Alberta-specific model that does a great job of gathering intelligence and keeping it together. We will continue to work with our police partners to ensure that Albertan communities are safe and resilient.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in Calgary the crime severity index, or CSI, which measures the volume of severity of police-reported crime, rose to its highest level since 2009 and given that Calgary reported the largest jump in crime for any Canadian city, what is your ministry doing about violent crimes in Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. I think I'd like to take a moment to clarify that even though the crime severity index has increased in Calgary, it is still down compared to years previous in the 1990s, you know, so this is still an improvement. Both Calgary and Edmonton and the whole province of Alberta are very safe. We will continue to invest in policing. We already invest more than in any other area. We have some of the best police in the entire country, and we will continue to work with them.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in another study Alberta led the country in killings related to organized crime and given that this is shocking since in 2015 we saw a 205 per cent increase from the previous year in gang-related killings, to the minister: is the funding provided to ALERT and other police agencies enough, or have you just dropped the ball on this file?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, as I have said, we provide more funding to municipalities to assist with policing than in any other western province. I find it a little ironic that the members opposite who would cut billions of dollars out of front-line services are now complaining that we don't fund front-line services well enough. We invest in ALERT. It's a fantastic program, and we're proud of it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Small-business Assistance

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recent article by Don Braid highlights tough times in Calgary. Unemployment is at 10-plus per cent, and job seekers are nearing a hundred thousand, these both occurring without the full impact of minimum wage increases and a punitive carbon tax. The article notes these as primary concerns amongst struggling small-business owners and their employees. To the Minister of Finance: can you provide us with any research that shows that the 1 per cent reduction in small-business tax will offset negative impacts of your misguided minimum wage increases and carbon tax?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question from the member opposite. For research, I can tell you that other provinces have cut their small-business taxes, and the small-business owners are very happy with that in those provinces. We're harmonizing our small-business tax so it's not uncompetitive with other provinces. That's what small-business owners in the chamber told us. We are doing what they want. That's the right move.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Maybe you should get some researchers instead of those ideologues on your staff.

Given that the same article cites a CFIB study indicating that 94 per cent of business owners lack confidence in the government's plan to support small businesses and entrepreneurship and given that this government has had ample time to consult and develop a plan to support the very survival of small businesses in Alberta, to the Deputy Premier: if you have been consulting with small business, why do the vast majority of them lack confidence in your actions and plan?

Mr. Ceci: You know, these two years of recession have created a challenge for everyone, not just small-business owners but people who have day jobs, who work, who are employed on a daily basis, so it's a challenging time. What we've done is that we've put investments back into this province. We are putting more money back into capital investment than this government over here did. We're investing in small business by taking taxes, lowering them, and we're investing in tax credits all across this province – those will come in 2017 – which will create greater and greater stability.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'll just remind you, no preambles, please.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, but a few short years ago the Alberta advantage was in place. Given that 40 per cent of small businesses indicate imminent layoffs, citing low revenue and high costs, and given that local city councils and chambers are clamouring to provide lifelines even though the full impact of the carbon tax and minimum wage is yet to be felt, again to the minister: how high does unemployment have to get in Calgary and across Alberta before government takes real action, like suspending minimum wage increases and delaying the carbon tax, to address the real and devastating crisis Albertans are now facing?

Mr. Ceci: Perhaps the member opposite wasn't sitting – well, we delivered a budget in 2016, in April, and our main approach there was to invest in infrastructure. Jobs are happening as a result of that. We invested in the STEP program that they cut; 2,700 jobs resulted this summer from that. We're also investing in diversifying the economy, and that will create more jobs. And there's been an uptick in jobs, I think you would recognize as well. We're getting back on our feet, not going backwards, where you want to go.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Government-owned Housing Safety

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, recently I was reminded of the danger of carbon monoxide poisoning as it took the life of Steve Steffler, a stalwart supporter and investor in our local music scene. I was very concerned to hear that in October another tragedy occurred, where a family of seven in Edmonton was rescued and evacuated from their social housing unit due to carbon monoxide poisoning. Now, given that this housing unit did not have a carbon monoxide alarm, to the Minister of Seniors and Housing: what is the government doing to avoid tragedies like this in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of seniors.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm deeply saddened by this tragedy. My condolences go to the Turi family and the Steffler family.

My ministry is taking immediate action by providing additional funding to install carbon monoxide detectors in all government-owned units by the end of January 2017. We have asked housing management bodies to make this a top priority.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can she update the House on what the housing management body at Capital Region Housing has done to address this problem in this particular unit?

Ms Sigurdson: We have spoken with Capital Region Housing staff, and they have installed a new furnace and a carbon monoxide detector in their unit. Mr. Speaker, many social housing providers have been installing carbon monoxide detectors while doing other upgrades for a number of years. For example, Capital Regional Housing installs carbon monoxide detectors whenever it replaces older furnaces in the units. The action we are taking will accelerate having detectors installed in all government-owned social housing units across the province by the end of January 2017.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that this situation is indicative of the larger deferred maintenance deficit that we have in the province, that has built up over a number of years, to the Minister of Seniors and Housing: what steps is our government taking to ensure that we begin to address this deficit?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're investing $1.2 billion in seniors' and affordable housing to ensure that Albertans have a safe and affordable place to call home. We have also partnered with the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation through investment in the affordable housing agreement. This new agreement gives the province an additional $95 million to address the disrepair of some of our aging housing units that we inherited from the previous government.

Financial Services Industry Regulations

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, we understand that the Alberta Securities Commission has under serious consideration, following the lead of their Toronto counterparts, eliminating the commission-based fee structure for financial advisers. The opposition has not yet decided if this is a positive or a negative move, but it is a move that will have significant ramifications for this industry and for our economy. Will the Minister of Finance commit to open and public consultations with the Alberta Securities Commission to hear all sides out before any changes are made?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we're very interested in this issue. Financial planning is an important thing for all Albertans, and I wish more and more Albertans did it because we have such a high debt level in this province as individuals. You know, the thing I want to say is that the ASC is looking at this. They're following the lead of not only Ontario but of Canada, the Canadian Securities Administrators. They're looking at this issue. They'll start open consultations in December. The member opposite doesn't seem to know that, but in December, for five months, the ASC is going to be ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, I wish the government took financial planning more seriously.

Given, Mr. Speaker, that Advocis represents 9,000 financial advisers in Alberta – they're a hugely important part of our economy and a key part of helping Albertans plan for their future – before a major change to regulations affecting their industry is made, it only makes sense that they should undergo substantial consultations with them first, but for the second year in a row the Minister of Finance cancelled his meeting with them and instead sent a member of his staff. Is the minister as uninterested in smart financial planning for Albertans' personal lives as he is in smart financial planning for Alberta's government?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Ceci: Actually, nothing could be further from the truth. I introduced Advocis here. I went to a reception last night where – I talked at the Advocis reception, and many members of this House were there. A member of my staff did meet with them for a good long time, and I understand that the Minister of Health met with them, too. So we are very interested in that sort of thing. We're interested in jobs all across Alberta; 9,000 people work in financial planning. We're interested in that here. You know, the member opposite seems to be more interested in jobs in Ontario, in jobs in Saskatchewan, in jobs in B.C. because he stands up for brewers in those places and not ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, I'm pretty sure that's just where they hire their political staffers from.

Given, Mr. Speaker, that financial adviser and financial planner are not professionally protected titles – anyone in Alberta can use those titles without repercussion, and this has the potential to leave the consumer of financial services open to advisers and planners who are clearly not qualified in financial matters. I'll refrain from discussing the qualifications of the Minister of Finance in financial matters. Does the minister have under consideration any proposals to protect Albertans from unqualified financial authorities other than themselves?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question. As I said in my first response, the Alberta Securities Commission will have an approximately 130-day consultation period, where any Albertans can weigh in on the paper that will be written and put out, and there will be public meetings as well. That's one thing. Then there will be a long period of review of those consultation responses. So I'm not sure what the member opposite is looking for. There will be consultation, there will be review, there will be recommendations. Is he saying that we should just make a decision here and not hear from Albertans? That's what we're going to do. That's what we're following up with, and we're doing that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Electricity Power Purchase Agreements

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans don't know what to believe from this government when it comes to the PPA lawsuit. When asked recently if she would introduce retroactive legislation in order to nullify PPA litigation, the Premier refused to deny that she would, stating the simple catch-all that the government is prepared to do what it takes to protect Albertans. Just yesterday she accused the opposition of being the only ones talking about retroactive legislation. Can the Premier please clarify for everyone in Alberta: has your government at any point considered or drafted retroactive legislation that would impact this crucial PPA situation for all Albertans?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for paraphrasing what the Premier has said on many occasions, which is that we are going to make sure we stand up for Albertans. We've made it very clear that we welcome discussions with the parties that were directly involved, and we've made some good progress on that. I look forward to updating members soon. We are working to negotiate, but of course when parties maybe aren't at the table, I think it's important for you to consider what other tools you might have to deliver the best results for Albertans. Certainly, I think that's what Albertans expect, a government that will take any measure necessary to defend them.

Mr. Rodney: Given that Albertans deserve more than just words – they need actions – and given that we've been told that the government has indeed drafted this legislation and that cabinet has approved it already and that the NDP may be utilizing it as a hard-ball negotiating tool, to the Premier: is your government stooping to the level of using potential retroactive legislation as a leverage club in your ongoing negotiations with Alberta PPA negotiators and holders?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, there are many hypotheticals and long reaches in that question, but in terms of what we're doing, we're absolutely committed to standing up for Albertans. We've made that clear since I stood up about eight months ago and said that we were going to do that moving forward, and we've taken measures to make sure that we have the best legal supports that are experts in the area to defend Albertans. We've also been engaging in active conversations to get the best results for Albertans, and I'll be happy to update all Albertans about that very soon.

Mr. Rodney: Given that in response to a question yesterday the Premier stated, "The issue of the PPAs does not have a direct correlation to property taxes in Calgary, and to suggest otherwise is really not helpful," and given that the mayor of Calgary has stated the complete opposite to that and given that the question was asked earlier today but unanswered by the Deputy Premier, let's try the Minister of Finance, who served on Calgary city council and must know: if Enmax pays Calgary no dividend, what is the exact significance for the city's budget, and who has a better understanding of what impacts municipal taxes in Calgary, this government or the locally elected city council? Please tell Calgarians.

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is about government policy, and I'm proud to say that our government supports a policy that will make sure that Albertans are protected. Consumers shouldn't have to pay for business losses because of regulatory loopholes that were secretly negotiated by Enron and also secretly approved so they wouldn't have to be published in the traditional way. I think that they are working very hard to try to pretend that they are experts on this file, and the only thing they're experts on is what happened in the past, and that was not good. We are doing things to move forward and protect Albertans.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Syrian Refugees

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This month marks the anniversary of the first Syrian refugees coming to Canada and to our province to escape the unimaginably tragic circumstances still going on in Syria. Can the Minister of Labour please inform Albertans on the current number of Syrian refugees in our province and what supports this government is providing to them?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government remains committed to successfully resettling these extremely vulnerable refugees who've come to Alberta. Over the last year we've welcomed more than 5,800 refugees, of which nearly 4,200 are Syrian. My ministry and ministries across our government in collaboration with community partners have taken a number of actions to support the refugees, from providing health services, education, and housing to income supports. Our government is working hard to make sure refugees are getting settled and receiving the supports they need to enter the workforce.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: with the federal government now beginning to reduce its support to Syrian refugees after being in our country for a year, what is our government doing to address this change?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite the reduced federal funding for the almost 4,200 Syrian refugees who now live in Alberta, we will continue to support them. Refugees can continue to access the supports provided by our settlement agencies such as language training, employment supports, orientation, and referrals, among others. When the Syrian refugees arrive in Canada, they already have permanent resident status and, like all Albertans, have access to a wide range of employment and training opportunities.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Loyola: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: in our current economic conditions has the settlement of these refugees in the province affected Albertans' ability to receive similar supports or find employment?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned earlier, the Syrian refugees are like all Albertans and have access to the same resources. Immigrants to Alberta have played and continue to play a vital role in shaping our province's social, economic, and cultural life. There is no question that the current economic situation has affected many Albertans, including new Albertans. Our government continues to offer assistance to those seeking employment and training opportunities. Refugees are not taking anything away from Albertans. They are Albertans.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Strathcona County Diversity Committee

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sherwood Park has a reputation for being a homogeneous and exclusive community. In fact, it is comprised of people from many cultural, family, and socioeconomic backgrounds. As in all communities, there are people who feel excluded. Sometimes these voices aren't heard, but more importantly there are people who work to create a community in which everyone feels genuinely welcome no matter what their circumstances are.

I was pleased to work with others in the community to initiate the formation of the Strathcona County Diversity Committee. This committee is a group of individuals who strongly believe that there is unity in diversity. The members of this committee demonstrate their passion and commitment to respect and inclusion by working alongside others who share these values. The main objectives of this group are to share, encourage, and celebrate diversity in Strathcona county, to identify and work through challenges faced by newcomers, and to promote safety and inclusion for all people.

It has been less than six months since this committee was formed, and already they have a list of remarkable achievements. They have become a familiar addition to community events and festivals, setting up booths to actively promote diversity in public settings. They joined forces with altView, the LGBTQ support agency in Sherwood Park, to walk in the local Canada Day parade. This committee responds to negative messages that speak against inclusion and diversity by writing letters to the local newspaper and by promoting positive messages through social media. They organize the highly successful blanket exercise to familiarize the community with indigenous history and begin a community dialogue.

Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the members of the diversity committee for the leadership they have shown to address the issue of inclusion in Strathcona county.

Thank you.

Harassment and Women in Politics

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, last week I posted the following on Facebook.

I have increasingly become disappointed with the level of debate and public comments directed towards public officials and in particular women serving the public.

Hateful, violent, sexist comments are not acceptable in any way or in any form.

I want to encourage all individuals to consider our words carefully. These are people's mothers, daughters, fathers and sons. We owe each other our best. Women in politics should not [have to] serve in fear.

I will do my best to ensure I speak in ways that will honour the women in my life and remind others [to do] the same.

This post isn't about one particular [incident] or case study, but the state of politics as a whole. If I want to be a part of the solution to the current level of debate, I need to add my voice. We encourage what we tolerate and we should no longer tolerate this.

When we work together to elevate [public discussion], we create a path where more women will want to get involved in politics. And that's in the best interest of all of us.

In the modern world, personal values are often discussed in [very impersonal ways] with total strangers on social media. This can be a good thing. We can learn a lot about each other through discussions of identity, matters of faith, and politics.

However, too often these discussions end... without resolution, when debate over competing rights escalates into [name-calling]. This is... where... attacks and bullying tactics are employed to devastating effect, driving wedges between us and tearing at the very fabric of [our] society...

I am hoping to point out that, lost in all this noise is the concept that as true equals, we have a responsibility to treat each other as such...

We all owe this much to each other, our Province and most certainly our children.

It's time for all [Albertans] to choose a better version of ourselves so we can bring the best out in others!

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Fentanyl Use Prevention

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're joined today by Rosalind Davis, whose partner, Nathan, tragically died from a fentanyl overdose. Illicit fentanyl is a scourge that knows no boundaries. There are no typical opioid addicts. On average, more than one Albertan dies every day from an overdose. It is a crisis and deserves to be treated like the emergency that it is.

Rosalind and Nathan had big plans. Both of them were professionals, Nathan holding an MBA and had a career as a stockbroker. They bought a house together and set about renovating it. It was while working on their house that Nathan hurt his back and was prescribed opioids. It became apparent there was a problem, and Rosalind confronted Nathan and asked him to seek treatment. He did. But this is where the system let him down. He was told that there would be a four-month wait for an outpatient treatment program. Fortunately, they had the means to pursue private treatment.

Sadly, after getting clean and sober, Nathan relapsed, something that is tragically common amongst people overcoming addiction. He again sought help but was unable to find the supports he needed to get and stay sober. Over time he started sourcing opioids on the street and died from an accidental fentanyl overdose.

Nathan is just one of the hundreds of Albertans who have fallen victim to the terrible disease of addiction to the point of losing their lives. Each and every one of these lives has their own story. There is no typical opioid addict. It could be your sibling, your parent, your friend. It could be someone who's street involved, or it could be your next-door neighbour. Opioid addiction is a crisis in Alberta, and while the provincial government and professional bodies have taken some steps to address it, much more needs to be done. Declaring a public health emergency seems to be an obvious step, and I again call on the Associate Minister of Health to do so immediately.

We also need to ensure treatment is available, both in-patient and outpatient, and we need to provide a variety of methods beyond traditional 12-step programs, which do not work for everyone.

I want to recognize and thank Rosalind and Nathan's family for dedicating their time to ending this crisis. It's too late for Nathan, but it is not too late for others.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Psychological Harassment and Bullying

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently tabled private member's Bill 208, which seeks to add psychological harassment and bullying to the Occupational Health and Safety Act. I introduced this bill because it's needed. Alberta is one of the few provinces that does not have this type of legislation. While I've received a great deal of positive feedback for this bill, what was unexpected was the volume of inquiries I've received about whether this legislation would cover political parties and politics in general. Most referred to the level of harassment and bullying seen in the general public towards each other and, in particular, from those in public office and those seeking public office. Curbing this type of discourse is, of course, not something that we can legislate. Treating others with dignity and respect must be taught in schools, modelled by our teachers, our parents, and our public officials.

We here in the House, from all parties, have a role to play in this. Defending actions by saying that we have a “victim-as-virtue culture . . . creating a leadership class of wimps” will and does impact the future of this province. Mr. Speaker, how do you think this impacts young adults thinking of seeking public office? Do they think the path to success is found only by belittling and bullying those that oppose us? I surely hope not, and I strongly believe that this is not what Alberta is about.

We recently saw the most divisive election ever south of the border, that was defined by bullying. Let’s not bring this type of politics to Canada or Alberta. Apologizing after bullying and harassment isn’t good enough, Mr. Speaker. We need to check ourselves before we cause damage, use a filter, and think about who’s listening.

I am proud to say that I belong to a party and a caucus that preaches and practises respect, dignity, and inclusion for all. It is evident that if other parties can’t grasp and practise this, it will clearly be our gain.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Child Protective Services

Ms Sweet: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to rise and speak to an issue that has been at the centre of my professional life and close to my heart. Like all Albertans, the story of a child who is traumatized and neglected has touched me deeply. It has made me reflect on the choices we make in this Chamber and on the decisions we choose to make collectively as a society.

As you know, I had the great honour of being a child protection worker before I was elected. This was my career for 12 years, and I engaged in this work because I believe that every single child in our society should be afforded the opportunity to succeed. It was also a career that forced me regularly to confront the single most difficult question that can ever be asked of a parent: can you still care for your child? Mr. Speaker, there is not a single child protection worker who wants to remove a child from their home and from their family. There is simply nothing more difficult. Nothing cuts more deeply than this fundamental decision.

Today I’d like to express the enduring respect I have for my colleagues on the front lines, who are committed on society’s behalf to nurturing the well-being of Alberta’s most vulnerable children. My colleagues sacrifice their personal safety, time with their families, and their own mental health to do this work. They do this work because they care about our children, and in doing this work, they see the best and worst in our society. They see a world full of complexity, filled with intergenerational trauma, poverty, addiction, and mental health concerns. They see parents on the margins of society who simply can’t fulfill their basic duties.

But our front-line workers also see the very best in our communities and in our society. They see communities come together in times of need. They see hope in the eyes of every child. They see opportunity in working with parents, and they see the joy that occurs when families are reunited in a caring and safe environment.

Mr. Speaker, when members of the opposition ask what we have done to address children in care, I can personally tell you that we have protected thousands of children, we have reunited thousands of families, and we have supported our front-line workers in the most desperate of circumstances. At the end of the day, that’s why I’m here, to support our children and our future. [Standing ovation]

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, if I may, I don’t want this to run out. I would wonder if we can get unanimous consent to continue with the Routine.

The Speaker: The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Home-schooling Funding

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are proud of our education system, which is based upon the principles of parental choice. We fund all educational choices to one degree or another, and in the case of home-schooling we fund a sound education and a good value for the tax dollars. Albertans are concerned over the actions of the Ministry of Education with regard to Trinity Christian school and Wisdom Home Schooling. Among other things, Albertans expect the Ministry of Education to do at least two things, hold Trinity and Wisdom and all education programs accountable for using sound practices in governance and funding and, secondly, apply regulations the same way that they would for any other educational authority.

The Department of Education began an audit on Trinity and Wisdom during the summer and informed them that they should continue operations as usual, yet in spite of that direction the department forwarded only a small portion of the funding for September and none for October, when the government arbitrarily and suddenly closed the school without warning. It would appear that the department predetermined the outcomes of the audit before it was complete. The minister needs to extend the full funding allocated to Trinity for their student enrolment up to the time that the school was closed.

This is not the only fiasco in home education. There are concerns about teaching resources, clawbacks to funding, and inconsistent implementation of reimbursement standards between home-school programs and public and independent school authorities.

Home-education families from across the province are coming together this Tuesday, November 29, in a rally at this Legislature to bring attention to the challenges they are facing with this minister and his Department of Education. We encourage all Albertan families to join us on the steps of the Legislature at 11 o’clock and ask this government to listen to them and to support your educational choices fairly and equitably.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two items for which to provide notice to the House today. First, I would like to give oral notice of the intention to introduce Bill 35, the Fair Elections Financing Act, which will be sponsored by the hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Secondly, I would like to give oral notice of the intention to introduce Bill 36, An Act to Enhance Off-highway Vehicle Safety, which will be sponsored by the most-excellent hon. Minister of Transportation and Infrastructure.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday during question period in reference to the budget for Human Services I mentioned some numbers. I'm happy to provide five copies of the budget for Human Services, where it does show indeed that there is an increase, but on three separate occasions, which I've taken the time to highlight for the minister, where it comes to child intervention, the amounts for 2016-17 are indeed less than they were for the year previous, which shows to me that they have made cuts to that.

The Speaker: The Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a letter from 60 groups, including those in the oil and gas industry, urging the government not to back away from plans to bring in a country-wide price on carbon. These companies include Shell Canada, Cenovus Energy, Teck Resources Limited, and Suncor. Together they represent 15 per cent of Canada's GDP with $300 billion in sales and over one million employees. "Putting a price on carbon, to reflect the real environmental costs, is the most effective way to reduce emissions, stimulate innovation and drive energy efficiency."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Ellis: Calgary-West, but thank you, sir.

The Speaker: Sorry. My apologies.

Mr. Ellis: I'm just tabling an article on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I believe he referred to a Calgary Herald article by Don Braid: Deepening Economic Crisis Spells Trouble for the NDP. I have the requisite number of copies to be tabled. Thank you.

The Speaker: Anyone else?

Hon. members, I believe there was a point of order from the Government House Leader. I'm going to use the fast track on this issue. It seems to me that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre may have inadvertently used the name of the Premier in his speech, and I'm sure he would agree to withdraw it.

Mr. Nixon: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. In my eagerness to ask my questions today, I mistakenly used the hon. Premier's name. I certainly do withdraw and apologize for that.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Orders of the Day Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Evening Sitings

26. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(1), commencing November 28, 2016, the Assembly shall meet on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings for consideration of government business for the duration of the Second Session of the 29th Legislature 2016 fall sitting unless the Government House Leader notifies the Assembly that there shall be no evening sitting that day by providing notice under Notices of Motions in the daily Routine or at any time prior to 6 p.m.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure that the Clerk did not want to miss the evening sittings next week.

[Government Motion 26 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 27 Renewable Electricity Act

[Debate adjourned November 22]

The Speaker: Individuals wishing to speak? The Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly a privilege to rise today and move a hoist on Bill 27.

The Speaker: Sorry. Hon. member, I'm advised that on this particular bill you have spoken already.

Mr. Ellis: I have not.

The Speaker: Is there another member who wishes to speak to the referral amendment? Oh, I'm sorry. It's on the main motion, sir.

We're back on track, we think. Main motion. Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise today to move a hoist on Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, on behalf of my hon. colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster. I have the requisite number of copies for the House. I would move that Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

The Speaker: Hon. member, you're moving an amendment to the main motion. Is that correct?

Mr. Gill: Yes.

The Speaker: Would you like to continue?

Mr. Gill: Please.

First of all, I'd just like to say that we in the caucus are not against the development of renewable energy in this province, not at all. In fact, I think you'll find that our government oversaw the growth of the wind energy sector in southern Alberta quite successfully. We're absolutely on board with expanding the role that renewables play in the Alberta energy market. There are a number of benefits that we could see from the increased use of renewables if these programs are implemented in a way that actually ensures their long-term viability and in a way that ensures that Albertans aren't going to be on the hook.

But what we are seeing from this government and specifically with regard to this bill is that the appropriate steps aren't being taken to ensure the success of these programs. Forgive me if you've heard this one before, but we don't believe that the government has done their homework on this. I'm sure you have heard me saying something to this effect before because it's a point that this government simply doesn't seem to get.

We recently saw that this government is actually bringing in a cap on the rate that Alberta power companies can legally charge for their product. This to me sends a very clear signal, and I think it's sending that same signal to the industry, by the way. The signal that they are sending is that they are slowly realizing that their collective actions, all these various policies that they have brought into force in the last year and a half, are harming business.

You won't hear this government admit it, but that is exactly what this rate cap is all about. They know that they're harming these businesses and that in a normal marketplace all of these costs that they are piling on mean these companies would have to raise rates. There's simply no other way for some of these companies to stay viable. They need to be able to offset the money that they're losing because of the NDP policies somehow. The government realizes this too late, once again, so they go with the heavy-handed approach to keeping the rates low.

They should have just done the actual work that being in the government requires, to go to industry, and not just the industry they want to pick and choose, and get some input. It can't just be their favourite companies that are getting to help shape policy. It has to be all the various hard-working Albertans that these ideas will impact, which brings me back to my point today. I don't believe that this bill can, in good conscience, pass second reading.

These are simply two unknowns presented in this bill. There is too much power being delegated to the office of the minister and too much uncertainty that we're told is going to be resolved in regulation. The problem with that is that we simply don't have confidence that this government will make those regulations in a responsible way. They haven't shown themselves capable of doing the necessary homework to bring forward responsible regulations that'll protect Albertans from the kind of favouritism they have displayed.

This bill needs to go back to the drawing board because there needs to be a lot more detail that gets brought forward to this House because we are all representatives of Albertans in this House. We are here to give them a voice, and I think that this bill in its present form takes away that voice. So in recognition of this, Mr. Speaker, and in the best interests of Albertans it's my hope that the government can take the appropriate time to revisit this legislation at a later date and ensure all related externalities are minimized and that Albertans are consulted appropriately.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'd like to clarify for the record that you are moving the motion on behalf of the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. Is that correct?

Mr. Gill: That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Under 29(2)(a), anyone else wishing to speak to the amendment to Bill 27? The Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today to support the amendment moved by my colleague for Calgary-Greenway on behalf of his colleague the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned recently in this House, I am very much in favour of renewables being a power source, but I'm not at all certain that this Bill 27 is the way to go about increasing their use. By going to the committee, at least we could have got the experts here from the energy industry, could prepare properly, and they could have educated all of us, including me and the backbenchers of the government, about this Bill 27, whether this is the way to go or not. But we have been denied going to committee, so now all of us here, MLAs, are to go out into the stakeholders' community and do our own consultations.

We know the NDP has a hate for thermal coal fired electrical generation and label it a main source of climate-change-causing CO<sub>2</sub> emissions. In fact, people from Leduc-Beaumont actually call me and wonder why their MLA actually hates coal-fired electrical generation. We know the NDP cite coal-fired electric generation as promoting premature deaths, but, Mr. Speaker, clean coal retrofit technology is not being allowed by this NDP government in order to reduce emissions and save our rural communities like Hanna, Forestburg, and Genesee.

We have not received the recommendations of the Boston report, advising the government on the costs and timelines for phasing out coal. At the time of writing this speech, I haven't seen that yet. The government told us that it will be soon, but we haven't seen that yet. Let's go out and hear from the experts first-hand.

This bill proposes to have 30 per cent of power from renewables, and the NDP brag that it will generate $10 billion in investment. That sounds good, but of course we all will be paying for it through either our power bill or through our carbon taxes. What the NDP has not told anyone about this massive, arbitrary 30 per cent target on renewables by 2030 is that the estimated $10 billion of private investment required is going to be more, much more.

Why will it be more? For every megawatt of installed solar, wind, and biomass from the NDP plan an equal megawatt of natural gas generation will need to be installed as a backup. The sun does not always shine, and Tesla storage batteries are not mainstream yet, Mr. Speaker. The wind does not always blow, and again the storage issues of that energy are not entirely solved. So for every coal plant we pay out, we will need to build wind or solar to match it and then build a gas peaker plant to be running all the time, ready to ramp up when the wind dies down or the clouds block the sun.

Biomass. Well, it's not clear whether biomass counts, but it requires a secure supply. Given that the forest management area plans are due and have not yet been approved by the minister of environment, there is no security of biomass supply. Natural gas will be needed. The nice thing about natural gas is that next to no transmission infrastructure is needed. The gas lines are already in the ground, and the generating can occur very close to the need. Natural gas is cheap and plentiful. Thanks to fracking technology, natural gas is being found everywhere, and high prices are not expected to return.

So why would someone waste their time and money and only install renewables, without guaranteed production of electricity and with a gas backup needing to be built anyway, when they can simply divert their money into natural gas only and be guaranteed to make money?

When you drive south along highway 2, Enmax has a natural gas electric generating station installed just south of Crossfield. There are three exhaust stacks, one for each 50-megawatt unit. That's 150 megawatts installed, and more 50-megawatt units can be installed on-site. As power is needed, the units come on, and as power is not needed, the units shut down. [A cellphone rang] Mr. Speaker, I think all the members are eager to get home soon.

Mr. Speaker, these natural gas power generation units are very clean, simple, reliable, and provide cost-effective electricity.

The NDP plan to tinker with the market to drive the price of electricity up in the hope of making the renewables viable. If the renewables aren't viable, the NDP will make them viable with the infusion of taxpayers' dollars. Shades of buying shares in or entire power producers and assets outright are right here in this bill in section 8, Mr. Speaker.

Then there is the build-out of transmission lines. Ratepayers have only started paying for the Bill 50 lines that connect our coal plants. Now, how much more do we need for these renewables and gas? I assume that it's not going to be $10 billion. It's going to be much more. Such a waste of scarce capital, Mr. Speaker.

Relying on renewables alone is not enough, Mr. Speaker. That's why we need to consult the experts and delay this bill and hear the answers from the experts that the government is denying us. I'm certain that we can make this legislation much better than it is currently presented. That way, we all can encourage lower carbon dioxide emissions to fight climate change.

Having said that, I urge all members of all parties here to support this amendment, brought forward by my colleague from Calgary-Greenway, and help make this legislation better. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Calgary-Foothills? Are there other individuals? Were you wishing to speak to the matter?

Mr. Rosendahl: Yes.

The Speaker: Please proceed, Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member says that Albertans will be on the hook. Well, we disagree in more ways than enough. Then he talks about the cap on energy and what the cap will do to business. Well, let's be clear. The cap is here to protect business and, of course, the consumers. The consumers are the ones that we really want to protect from the spikes in the energy bill. That's why we're proposing a cap. It makes sense, and it's the important thing to do.

Also, you talk about our bad policies, too many issues, and that we didn't do our homework. Well, I disagree there, too. We consulted with the AESO, the Alberta Electric System Operator; the Market Surveillance Administrator; the Alberta Utilities Commission; Alberta Environment and Parks; Alberta climate change, plus Alberta Treasury Board and Finance. We worked with these people in putting this bill together. It's important that we consulted with these people to do that.

It's important that we protect, above all, consumers against, like I said, the spike in the energy bills. One of our key priorities is to help ensure that electricity rates remain affordable for all Albertans and to avoid the price spikes of the past. In fact, from other jurisdictions we've seen the lowest price for renewables emerging from a competitive process. In some cases the addition of renewables will reduce the market price of electrical energy.

The bottom line here is: why should we wait another six months to put this legislation into practice? I urge all the members to vote against this hoist.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Any questions for the Member for West Yellowhead under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to stand to speak about this motion to Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act, and to talk about some of the concerns I have heard from my constituents. I got out a bit further than the dome and talked to some of the constituents that would be affected by this bill. Some of my colleagues on this side have talked to their people as well. We've talked about renewable energy projects being started in their ridings, and these renewable energy projects are wind farms and solar projects. I'm disturbed by the manner in which the government is overhauling our power grid.

Mr. Speaker, I want to share with this House an experience I recently had that was very illuminating to me. I attended an open house where a solar company was talking to the residents of the municipal district of Taber. Representatives from that company were touting to the residents the virtues and values of having this solar plant put up in their neighbourhood. Many of the residents at this open house were upset about the project because it was going to be an eyesore right next to their acreages, that they had invested in for their retirement. I can definitely sympathize with the reasonable concerns they expressed, and that is why I went to this open house.

I found out new information at this open house that was very concerning to me. I asked someone from the company specifically how much they can produce electricity for at this proposed plant, and they said, "15.4 cents per kilowatt hour." So then I asked, "What is Alberta's Balancing Pool buying electricity at right now?" They said, "1.2 cents per kilowatt hour." So I asked them, "Well, are you going to get subsidized to the 15.4 cents?" They said: "Absolutely not. We're only going to get an 11.4 cents per kilowatt hour subsidy." I asked for how long this contract would be, and he said that they're getting a 20-year contract. So then I asked him, "Where else have you been doing projects like this one?" He responded that they're an international company. I asked about whether they had plans to do these in Saskatchewan, and they said, "Not at this time." I said, "Would you be doing it in Alberta if you didn't have this subsidy?" Their response was illuminating. They said no.

So the real question, Mr. Speaker, is: how can the government claim they are creating jobs with these renewable electricity projects? The reality is that they're buying jobs. We'll be paying a whole whack of money – and by "we" I mean taxpayers – to pay for these international companies to come set up shop here in Alberta, which they wouldn't do unless they had these subsidies.

I want to point out some hypocrisy in this government. I personally don't judge a company based solely on its size or solely where its headquarters are located, but I've heard NDP members rage against big multinational companies, and I hear them encourage Albertans to buy local. I find it ironic that this government plans to engage in big multinational contracts, with huge implications for Albertans, to build these renewable energy projects in our province. The government is getting its money from a massive carbon tax that they are levying from everyday Albertans to pay these multinational corporations to come in and do this. It would be interesting to hear how Albertans feel about the so-called champions for the little guy and for Albertans if they knew that this is what they were doing.

But back to my story. I also asked this company what the capital injection would be from this government. Now, they didn't quite answer this question, but looking a little deeper into this, I found out that the government is going to act like a cosigner, essentially, so that these companies can go to the bank and actually get the money they need to get these projects off the ground.

Mr. Speaker, let's say that your child, fresh out of university with a student loan and not a long track record of paying back credit, goes to the bank and says: I want to buy a $500,000 house. The bank would look at your child's track record and financial circumstances and say that they're not going to give your child any money. So the child goes to you, the parent, and asks if you'll cosign for the mortgage, and you say yes. The bank doesn't look at your child's ability to pay. The bank is now only looking at your ability to bail out your child, which you're legally required to do as a cosigner. This is a situation that these companies have been presented with. What company would say no to such an arrangement with the government guaranteeing their loan?

Without these massive subsidies these projects aren't viable to stand up on their own two feet. While this government might claim that we'll have $10.5 billion in private investment coming in, if the government is guaranteeing these loans and taxpayers might have to pay all that money back to the bank, that means nothing in terms of new investment in Alberta. Would that money be coming in if the government was not guaranteeing these loans? If not, would the bank be willing to give them these loans? I guarantee you, Mr. Speaker, that they would not. So this whole idea that the government is creating jobs is ludicrous.

Projects of this nature and size haven't been sustainable in any other jurisdiction. They've been a complete disaster.

Now, I'm not saying that renewables can't work. We had over 10 per cent of our grid renewable even before this government took over. Many individuals, like my colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View, have been using solar panels for years. But when the government forces massive transition like this, we are looking at a boondoggle of epic proportions in the making.

In Germany they put more than a trillion dollars into making it work there, but it didn't. Now the government of Germany is moving away from this and back to coal. For some reason this government doesn't want to look at history and learn from past mistakes. I believe it was George Santayana who first said, "Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it." We're not even looking back into the histories that far, Mr. Speaker. As we speak, people in other jurisdictions are suffering from policies like the ones this government is just introducing now.

Pursuing a 30 per cent target by 2030 is a huge undertaking, and a target that seems to have been chosen by a communications department, not an economic one. Rather than making that percentage and due date the goal, how about we make this the goal: to keep electricity prices stable for Albertans while achieving a sustainable, stable power grid? No matter what kind of shell game the government tries with our power bills, when they drive costs up, we will either pay as ratepayers or as taxpayers, Mr. Speaker.

Meanwhile Albertans are already facing this economic downturn and struggling to pay their bills. Electricity is a daily essential. People can't simply stop using it, and I highly doubt families could reduce their usage enough to not see cost increases. I'd like to see this government provide numbers on this. I hope this government will look at the situation in Ontario, the situation in Germany and tread carefully when it comes to our power grid.

I want to say one more thing before I finish. I'm disturbed by the unwillingness of the current government to engage in proper consultation with landowners who are going to be living next to the visual evidence of these boondoggles. When NDP members of this House were in opposition, they slammed the government for – and I quote the now Minister of Infrastructure – "trampling" over property owners' rights. Well, I think the members of this House should review what they've said in the past about the Land Assembly Project Area Act, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, and the Electric Statutes Amendment Act and see if they're talking differently now because they're the ones in power and their ideology favours some forms of electricity generation over another.

With that, I think I have made my views clear today, but this discussion is not over, and I look forward to many, many more robust discussions about it. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments with respect to the presentation by the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I think it's very interesting to listen to this member speak because he lives in an area where there are windmills already, power-generating windmills, so I think he can speak with some experience as to the desirability of them in the community and as far as what the local people are saying about them. It's also interesting to note, of course, that they already exist in Alberta. These are ones that have existed before Bill 27. So there's wind power already being generated in Alberta.

I think it's also interesting to hear some of the comments that he's heard from these companies that are going to be taking these projects and bringing them to Alberta: guaranteed return on investments, guaranteed prices for power. Of course, the government has put a cap on the price of power now, but what happens when these companies all of a sudden aren't making money with the price cap? Who's going to pay then, Mr. Speaker? That is what I'd like to find out. Who's going to pay for the power then?

If the companies can't make money, it would just be like a restaurant where they put a cap on the price of a hamburger. Once the price of a hamburger comes to the point where the restaurant can't make any money, what's going to happen then? The restaurant has to close, or somebody has to subsidize the restaurant to help pay for the hamburger if they want that hamburger to be produced still.

There are two ways companies can make money in this market. One is by selling electricity, and the other is by subsidies from the government. What's important to remember is that, either way, that money comes from the taxpayer, either in the form of electricity costs or subsidies to the companies to keep operating. I wouldn't mind hearing the member speak a little bit more about that. I thought it was interesting to hear the comments from the companies that he was able to talk to.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the esteemed Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky. He talked about windmills. After the conversation with this solar company I went to them and talked to them about other renewable projects, and I asked them if they had any track record. They said, "Yes. We have actually built one of the largest wind farms in Alberta." I said, "Well, that's great. Tell me about it." I said, you know, "Is it viable?" They said, "Well, sort of." Their answer to this was that it was only viable in the fact that if they sold into the power grid at the going rate, they had to actually sell their carbon credits to California in order for it to become viable. Even projects in the past were not viable on their own in terms of selling into a grid.

I am a hundred per cent for renewable energy as long as it's sustainable and viable, as long as it is not going to put an undue burden on the taxpayer and the ratepayer. If our technology hasn't gotten to the point where we can actually on a large scale implement these projects, then we need to wait until we have that wholesale change in technology or that advancement in technology so that we can do that. These decisions should never be based upon ideology. They should be based upon: what is the best thing for Albertans?

Unfortunately, again, I alluded to the situation in Germany and in Ontario. Those are recent examples of where ideology was placed before the economics made sense, Mr. Speaker, and I would say that after a $1.2 trillion boondoggle in Germany we don't want to go anywhere near that kind of a boondoggle. What we're looking at, in my opinion – and this is the thing where I think that Albertans, once they start right waking up to what's going on, are going to be absolutely irate. If the government thinks that Bill 6 concerned them, I think that they're going to see a lot more concern after Albertans realize what's going on.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I'd like to speak to Bill 27 and this amendment. This plan is unrealistic and adds further uncertainty to Alberta's economy and electricity market. Wildrose believes in a realistic, renewable energy program, driven by private-sector investment, not government subsidies. Thirty per cent by 2030 is a plan that requires over $10 billion of added private investment, but the PPA debacle, which was created by the government's carbon tax, has created investor uncertainty in Alberta's electricity markets and all across the economy. That's why these companies need subsidies, or guaranteed prices, in order to operate.

Ratepayers in other provinces have been promised painless accelerated transitions to renewables, only to see either government-funded bailouts or increased rates on their power bills. Ontario is a prime example of this kind of mishandling, and this government is determined to go down the same route as Ontario.

Phasing out coal earlier than federal timelines, regardless of technological improvements that have made our coal as clean burning as natural gas, is the wrong decision and an expensive one. To think that the plan is to pay billions of dollars to shut down clean-burning coal and replace it with natural gas is ludicrous. The government is committing to an arbitrary target of 30 per cent with no data or analysis to say whether that figure is realistic and at what cost and what the effects will actually be on the environment. This legislation is needed because renewables cannot get to 30 per cent in a free-market situation, which, of course, means that legislation will inevitably drive up costs to families and businesses, not to mention that this is unfair to existing renewables because they won't get this special treatment.

Phasing out coal early is a costly decision because we will have to pay generators for stranded assets, then pay them again for new gas production to serve as a replacement baseload. The previous federal phase-out plan left no stranded assets as the generators were allowed to run out the lifespan of their plants.

Now, we have been waiting for recommendations of the report advising the government on costs and the timeline for phasing out coal. One report, we've heard, says that it'll cost about $8 billion to phase out coal, but once again this session we're being asked to debate legislation without hearing back from the high-priced panel that was commissioned with the task of determining the legislation's viability. Again, as usual, we have not seen the plan for coal-dependent communities and how they will be transitioned toward new industries.

There isn't a requirement to consider the economics of an electrical project under this bill or the need for that electrical project. Electricity should be generated in response to market demand, which includes ratepayers voluntarily choosing retailers who offer a portion of renewables. This legislation involves far-reaching government involvement, which, as we've seen, is never helpful. The renewables this government is considering have failed around the world. Why must we go down these same twisted and harmful trails? Can't we learn from others' past experiences?

There are other things. Why is this government so dedicated to destroying investor confidence that would create so much investment and jobs for Albertans?

Mr. Speaker, when this bill was introduced, the minister said this: "It also helps to diversify our economy and create jobs while protecting Alberta's environment." Well, there's one thing for sure: we have seen absolutely no evidence of any of those statements because we've seen no impact assessments. We've seen no reports. We don't know the cost this bill will cause. Where's the analysis? It's truly a wait-and-see bill. "Yeah, it sounds good. Let's do it. Let's pick some arbitrary numbers. Let's throw some ideas together and see what happens." Well, I don't believe that Albertans want us to gamble on their future, on their jobs, on their families, and what this will cost.

Again, this plan is going to require over $10 billion of private investment. Of course, we don't even know exactly how much. That's just a figure that we've picked because we haven't seen any reports. We haven't seen any analysis. Now, we know what's happened in other provinces, the damaging effects of going down this road without truly understanding the costs and the impacts that it will have. We look at places like Ontario that, of course, went down this route. Now they're backtracking. Now they're trying to find ways to solve the problems that they created. But this government wants to carry on and do the same thing.

This amendment makes sense. Why not take the time to get the report, do some analysis, and see what's actually going to happen here, what the possible effects are?

Now, Mr. Speaker, this government is just picking numbers out of the air again. No analysis, no facts, nothing that we can go on: over and over again we see this with this government. They say that some of these policies they have are supposed to bring stability to the marketplace, but every single thing has actually brought instability – no investor confidence anymore, investor confidence that would add jobs. They sue power companies. Do you think that's a good selling feature for getting companies to invest in Alberta? Lawsuits and talking about retroactively changing contracts? I don't think it sends a good message, not a good message at all.

Now, they talk like there was never a plan to phase out coal already. The federal government did have a plan to phase out coal over time. It wouldn't have left any stranded assets that would've been the responsibility of the taxpayer to pay for. That was actually a plan that wasn't going to cost taxpayers' money. That was clear.

But, Mr. Speaker, this government again is jumping into things that they don't understand fully. They're running by the seat of their pants. They continue to try these experiments, and these experiments are costly to Albertans, to families: over a hundred thousand jobs lost since this government came into power, and no plan to change that.

Mr. Speaker, I think it only makes sense that this government take the time to look at this properly and see what the effects will be. There's no protection for the consumer, for the taxpayer that will be on the hook for this. Nothing. Can you believe that we'd be considering a bill where there's no requirement to consider the economics of a project before it's approved? Does that make any sense? I don't think it makes any sense to Albertans.

Now, one of the members opposite – I think it was the Member for West Yellowhead – gave a list of who they consulted on this. You know who I didn't hear on that list, Mr. Speaker? I didn't hear "Albertans." All sorts of companies, of course, would love to jump in and have a guaranteed return on their investment because they build these things. You know, if I was building these things and you came and asked me if I thought it was a good idea, I'd tell you: "Yeah, it's great. Sign me up." No Albertans were consulted on this. Six months would give that time.

We have a government here that's losing popularity fast. I think that if we look at the last federal by-election, we can easily see that. That was, of course, close to your own riding, Mr. Speaker. Right there, in fact.

An Hon. Member: One per cent.

Mr. Loewen: They received 1 per cent – the same candidate that ran in the 2015 provincial election. That shows a lot, Mr. Speaker,

1 per cent, 1 per cent of the vote. [interjections] I mean, they were just narrowly ahead of the Rhinoceros Party, just narrowly. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, let the member finish.

Mr. Loewen: I think there'd be time for this government to sit back and listen to Albertans. If something like an election like that doesn't send a message to this government, if people rallying on the steps of the Legislature for multiple things and more rallies coming doesn't send a message to this government, I'm not sure what does. Obviously, all they can think of is going down the same rabbit holes that other governments went down that have caused nothing but grief to taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, obviously, the opposition hasn't had much success in getting the government to step back and do some research, provide the research to this House and to Albertans. Over and over again they expect us to pass bills with no economic impact study, no study on what the effects will be on the economy, no effects of what it'll do for the environment. Nothing. Over and over again this government comes up with these plans without any research to back them up.

Of course, you know, through a FOIP document we did find something about the carbon tax that the government had researched. It wasn't a very good response that they got to that, but of course they didn't provide that though we asked for something multiple times in this House. They pretended like it wasn't there. Obviously, it was. Over and over again, Mr. Speaker, the same thing: this government continues to pass bills in this House without the information to make an informed decision. Now, there's a possibility that if you had this information, maybe Albertans would buy into it, but I don't think so. Otherwise, the information would be here, but it's never here.

Now, obviously, Mr. Speaker, the best way for electricity to be generated is in response to market demand. People will buy; people will sell. The government having to get its hands in everything – and that's another thing this bill does. It allows greater intervention by government. I don't believe that's helpful. I don't believe that Albertans think that's helpful either.

We don't have an idea of the costs. There must be some studies out there on what's available right now for electricity and how much is needed and how much they plan to create and at what cost. These companies are already going around to places in Alberta and discussing what their plans are. Why don't we have those plans? Why hasn't the government compiled those and brought them to this House so that we could see what the cost is going to be and see how it's all going to work? This is an incredibly complicated system, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Were there any questions to the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky? The Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's really very informative and educated information whenever my esteemed colleague from the outstanding riding of Grande Prairie-Smoky gets up and tries to hold the government to account. I see the heckling, but there is no information coming forward on the questions he's asking about economic impact analyses or evidence or consultations. I can understand them heckling us being the Official Opposition, but today even our colleague from Calgary-Mountain View, an experienced legislator in this House, asked the same questions. Kudos to him. In fact, it was music to my ears because I never saw him asking the kind of tough questions he had, but it's great to hear him asking those questions. That's our job.

We talked about polls. I don't want to go into that, you know. We can look at recent polls in Calgary-Foothills or Calgary-Greenway or other polls. I don't want to go into that, but I'm curious to ask my colleague about this amendment we are debating here and the points he raised about analysis. Also, to me, personally, based on my own observations here and the information I'm getting from my constituents constantly by e-mail and phone call, they're saying that the government appears to be tinkering with the market just to drive up the price of electricity with an intention to make renewables viable. That's the observation by many Albertans these days, Mr. Speaker.

I'm curious to ask my colleague from Grande Prairie-Smoky if he heard the same thing in his area of northwest Alberta and if he had any further success when he talked to the members opposite in private discussions, you know, if they were able to provide any evidence or analysis so all of us can make an informed decision. Really, if renewables are going to be meeting the target of replacing coal-fired electricity in a timely fashion, with no further economic impact to the taxpayers, maybe then we all will be open to supporting the bill. We are looking for that information. I'm curious to ask my esteemed colleague: what are his thoughts are on that? If he can finish his thoughts on that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to my colleague for the questions and comments there. You know, when I talk to my constituents about these things – my colleague used the word “tinkering,” and I think he's being kind when he uses that word. Tinkering would signify something small, but it's not small. What the government is doing are enormous overhauls of the Alberta economy. The carbon tax, $3 billion: I'm sorry, but that's not tinkering. That's meddling heavily. That's interfering. That is not helpful to the Alberta economy. Making things more expensive here as opposed to other jurisdictions around us is not helpful. That doesn't help investment on a large scale or a small scale.

Living in the Peace Country, we see a lot of British Columbia plates – lots of them – at all the stores: Costco, Walmart, Staples, and Home Depot. Why do you think they come to Alberta to shop? Taxes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, I won't belabour issues, but I'm pleased to speak to the second reading on this important bill, Bill 27, and enthusiastically support this in principle. This is the second reading. This is where we talk about the principle of the bill. Generally in third reading we talk about the details of the bill and how it might be implemented and what some of the problems . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, just for clarity, you're on the amendment.

Dr. Swann: We're on the amendment. I will be speaking against the amendment. This is a critically important time in Alberta history. You know, we are almost the last ones to the game here in Alberta. The rest of the world is going on way ahead of us. I was wanting to just illustrate that by some numbers from the United Nations environment program which indicate public market investment in renewable energy was up 21 per cent last year, $13 billion. This is a market that is booming. This is an investment opportunity that's growing. It is recognizing that we are moving on from a fossil fuel dependent province to something that's a better mix. Obviously, we're going to need fossil fuels for decades, but let's start, at least, to make a serious commitment to renewable energy.

So let's not toss this bill out quickly. We are being asked to support, in the first phase, 400 megawatts of renewable energy in 2017 on a competitive bid process. There's nobody that's going to build new renewables without a longer term commitment, and we don't want people to bid without a competitive bid process. So if we want to see any start, any indication to the rest of the world that we're serious about shifting our energy dependency from coal-fired power to renewables, let's start now.

There may be many details that are untenable, depending on how this market unfolds. I agree in many ways that we haven't been given the details that we need to ensure that the energy that we are going to be paying for is competitive and that it's not going to cost more. But, frankly, as somebody who has been waiting for legislation for 12 years in my own political life and even before that, before I got into politics, we have to start making progress not only to convince our partners in Canada as well as internationally that we're serious about climate change but that we see the writing on the wall for energy savings, cost savings in the long term, jobs.

Increased numbers of jobs will be associated with renewable energy – that's a fact – two to three times more jobs associated with renewables than with the traditional fossil fuel energy. When people like our esteemed Calgary Economic Development director speak so positively about the opportunities even in Calgary to start moving in this direction for jobs and diversifying our economy, becoming less dependent on this single resource, I think we have to take notice. I think my concerns, like many, are that if we lose control over this building and if we, as a result of going too quickly, don't attract either the investment or have to start subsidizing investment because of artificial targets that aren't met with the phase-out of coal, then we're all going to be very uncomfortable with what happens in an already difficult economy.

But this is the time to talk about, in my view, the important message we're sending if we're now talking about the principle of the bill, slamming it at this level and punting it at this level without talking about all the dimensions that we need to, including how it's going to be, what the bidding process is going to be like, how much we're going to have to subsidize in some cases if the price is too low. If the price of electricity continues to be as low as it is, there is no question that those who are in contracts to produce renewable energy are going to have to be subsidized because they are going to have to make some money over the next 20 years or they're not going to build. That's just the reality.

Frankly, I'm willing to pay, as the Stern report from the U.K. has said, 1 per cent of GDP today so that my children don't have to pay 20 per cent of GDP to deal with the extreme weather events, the new infectious diseases, and the massive migration of people that are going to be coming here looking for a place to stay because they are flooded out of their own homes and can't get the access to the resources. I am willing to pay more to try and make sure that we move along this line.

This is a baby step, folks. This first 5,000 megawatts particularly is a baby step. Let's make sure that we don't throw out the baby with the bathwater. Let's give this a chance to see what it can do. We obviously don't have all the facts, but we're going to have to hold it accountable. We're going to have to have checks and balances. We're going to have to see what the timelines are with the coal phase-out.

But let's get serious about what is the most serious threat according to many institutions, including the United States Defense department. It says that global warming is the most serious threat to stability on the planet today. That's pretty impressive when the United States Defense department says that this is something that we have to get serious about.

I misspoke, Mr. Speaker. It's only 400 megawatts at the first bidding. I said 5,000. It's a 5,000 surplus. That's what we have right now, and that will be keeping our prices so low, but it's 400 megawatts that's actually being proposed in the first competition.

I just wanted to get my views on the record because it sounds so negative right now. We can see the holes so far in the lack of detail, the lack of costs and benefits and how it's going to work in terms of sequencing, but I guess at this stage in the debate, pending more information, that I'm hoping we will see over the course of this debate, I am in principle very much in support of finding a way to move forward on renewable energy for our sakes and for future generations and for the sake of our pipelines. This seems to be an issue for much of Canada, that Alberta has not been responsible in managing its carbon, has not been responsible in enforcing good environmental regulations, has not been responsible somehow in ensuring that the health of the environment, which is the basis of our economy, has to be paramount if we're going to have an economy and if we're going to have a healthy population.

I will be voting against this amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)? Cardston-Taber-Warner to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hunter: Yes. I was interested to hear the points made by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. He says that he's very much willing to pay more, but the question this House has to ask is: are we willing to tell other Albertans that they have to pay more? My question to the member is: are you so sure that you are right that you are willing to trump the 80 per cent that are against this and tell them that they have to pay more for their price on electricity?

Dr. Swann: Well, that's a fair question, Mr. Speaker. I've wrestled with this ever since I got into the Legislature. The population of Alberta in certain polls has said that they want to see business as usual. What does leadership look like when you see the writing on the wall and you see that many Albertans are not fully informed? In this case none of us are fully informed about the details of this issue. I guess they elected me to lead, to represent not only their interest but their children's interests. They elected me to ensure that I looked not only at short-term economics but the longer term economics and environment and health. That's part of the reason I was a champion for getting coal out of our electricity sector.

I think the question has not been asked: how much would you be willing to pay to ensure a better future for our children? It's usually presented to the population as, "Are you willing to pay substantially more for cleaner energy?" without saying what the health impacts might be and what the long-term impacts will be in terms of our pipeline opportunities. It's always a black-and-white question that seems to be asked in polling without kind of the nuances that people, I think, need. "Well, compared to what? What benefits am I going to get, and what costs am I willing to pay?" It's a much more complex question than just: are you willing to pay more or less for your electricity? It's kind of like asking people: are you willing to pay more taxes? Well, very few people will say yes unless it's going to deliver something more to their lives.

It's a difficult question. We have to wrestle with it as legislators. Are we going to kind of follow the polls, or are we going to actually lead on something that we know at a very deep level has been neglected for many years, particularly in Alberta, where we have the technology, we have the money, we have the smarts, we have all the resources we need to lead on this issue rather than be dragged along with the rest of the world, that are moving way ahead? As I mentioned, the UN environment program indicated a very substantial increase in renewable investment all over the planet. People are looking for business opportunities not only because it's making money for them but also because it's moving us in the right direction as a planet.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other questions under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. That is very, very important and insightful information that you shared, those data. I'm not saying that we're against that. All the intent of this amendment is: let's call a time out because we have seen the behaviour of this government. We have seen the behaviour of this government on Bill 6, on the MGA, on the carbon tax. Can we consult on it with the stakeholders? That's the whole idea. Just delay it six months so that we can consult. Every single Albertan will be impacted. We recognize climate change, and we recognize that this is important. The whole world is going towards this direction, and we need to be there. I understand that, and we support that. All I'm saying is: why is the hon. member opposing that we do more consultation, sir, if I may?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Swann: I wasn't going to speak about Trump, but I guess I have to. He has thrown a wrench, I think, into a lot of our thinking and planning. He has certainly raised a lot of questions about how competitive we're going to be. If the coal industry gets a huge spur from Trump in the States, it raises real questions about our ability to compete in our own petroleum industry, and it highlights, again, our overdependence on the U.S.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to seek unanimous consent of the House to move to one-minute division bells for the remainder of the afternoon.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Yes. Just speaking to the hoist amendment still.

The Speaker: Yes. You have not spoken to the amendment yet?

Mr. Hanson: Not to this hoist, no.

I just want to quickly, you know, reaffirm that what we're looking for is a six-month delay in processing this bill at second reading. It puts us into May. We'll be back in the House in May for sure. What can happen in six months? Can people change their minds about green energy? Absolutely they can. I spoke earlier about how in March of this year the Ontario government announced a 1,000-megawatt project in green energy – wind, solar, and hydro – and all of sudden in September: whoops; let's stop this. They announced in September that they're getting out of the renewables industry because it's just not profitable and it's costing Ontario, especially in the opinions of Ontarians toward their government, some pretty heavy costs. The Premier actually got on record apologizing to consumers in Ontario. This is what can happen in six months. It happened in Ontario. You go from a 1,000-megawatt project to: we're shutting down our investment in renewables. All we're asking is to take a step back.

We say that we're here looking out for the best interests of Albertans, so why don't we do that? Let's take six months. Move this bill to the spring session. We can have a second look at it, and maybe during that time we can do some consultation with some people that aren't actually in the renewables business, talk to people that will be affected by it instead of the people that will profit from it. If those are the only people that you've consulted with, that's a little one sided.

I spoke also about the European countries. I mean, we don't have to look very far. We don't have to do very much research. You can get on the news wire. You can get on the telephone and call other jurisdictions and see how things are working out for them. Germany is going back to coal. Why is that? Because the wind turbines and the infrastructure are too expensive. They're not providing a good service to their citizens. Germany has a population of 80 million people. They've got a lot more tax base to work from than our entire country, let alone our province. They have 20 times the population of the province of Alberta. They can't afford to do it with their tax base.

What is it that makes our government think that they're so much smarter than the people in Ontario, so much smarter than the people in Germany, so much smarter than the people in Sweden, so much smarter than the people in New Zealand? All these people are going away. Oh, you're shaking your head yes. You're all that much smarter than all of those people. That is amazing. [interjections] Well, that's just plain arrogance.

The Speaker: Through the chair, please.

Mr. Hanson: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I will address the Speaker.

We have an opportunity here. Not to scrap the bill, okay? Everybody agrees that green energy is something that we can invest in, something that the private sector should invest in. But if we have to start subsidizing the solar industry and the wind industry and hiring companies from Ontario and manufacturers from outside of the country, how is that going to benefit Albertans other than the odd job for a labourer here or there? It's not going to benefit us at all.

We need to take six months for some sober thought, take some time for consultation, take some time to do some research into other jurisdictions. Maybe there's something that they've done that's failed that we can do differently. I don't know. But until we have that conversation, we're just guessing and going ahead blindly.

I remind the House that there's a project planned for my area. You know, you talked about consultation. Nobody was consulted. Suddenly a landman from a company from Ontario showed up, started banging on farmers' doors trying to make deals with them to sign contracts. He actually lied to them, said: "Well, your neighbours have all signed. You're going to miss out if you don't sign." People are smart enough to say: "You know, I'll wait. I'll talk to my neighbours first." Then they go talk to the neighbours and find out that he told them the same story. Absolutely nobody has signed out of 75 quarter sections of land that they want to put 90 wind turbines on. Nobody has signed an agreement with them. They didn't even come and consult with the county before they started knocking on doors. Is that consultation? As I said, he didn't have a whole lot of luck.

I don't believe my constituents want this project. I think they've been very clear on that, especially without any real plans or numbers showing that wind turbines are even feasible in our area. There aren't any in our area. There are some in southern Alberta, the Pincher Creek area, where it's windy all the time. Wonderful. You know, I've lived up in my area for 50 years plus, and I don't see it being a place that could sustain wind turbines of any sort. It looks to me like it's a blind investment. It's only going to be there – as was said before, a private-sector company would not be investing without heavy subsidies from the government. Is that good planning, just throwing money into something because it's an idea and idealistic? It's ridiculous, right?

Why are we doing this? If there was such a profit to be made in green energy here in this province, up in my area, the people in my area would be building windmills on their own – I can guarantee you that – just like they do when it comes to oil and gas. We talked about this in the other bill, where small, innovative companies sprout up. You have a geologist and a petroleum engineer get together, and they have an idea. They go take over some fields that the other companies have walked away from and start building that up, and you end up with a company as big as Canadian Natural Resources, that started out just that way, innovative and willing to take a risk. They didn't ask for government subsidies.

We need to leave this to the public sector. Take six months and do some real research, do some real homework, make sure that this is what's right for Albertans before we just start throwing their money. Even if you use money from the carbon tax for the green slush fund, it's still Albertans' money. You're taking $3 billion out of our economy to put into this stuff so that companies from Ontario can come here and install it and take the money home. Fabricators from other countries that are building the steel in the wind turbines can send their material over here and take their money home. That's going to take $3 billion in investment out of our province every year. Again, everybody shook their head yes, so I have to assume that they still think that they're smarter than Ontario, Germany, Denmark, Sweden, all of these countries.

An Hon. Member: We're learning from other people's mistakes and moving forward on that. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Mr. Hanson: Please, yes, why don't we learn from other people's mistakes? Why don't we? We're clearly learning from Ontario and Saskatchewan's mistakes when it comes to voting.

What I ask everybody to do is please vote in support of the hoist motion, put this bill back to May. [interjections] It's funny that you always want to yap but you never stand up and talk to anybody.

The Speaker: Hon. members, point made.

Mr. Hanson: Anyway, if I could get everybody to vote in favour of the hoist motion. If you're really interested in protecting the interest of Albertans, support the hoist motion. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions for the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Sabir: Yeah. Under 29(2)(a) it's my understanding that I can have a brief comment relating to the member's statement and a question, so I will have a brief comment, in the interest of time. We are almost at the end of the day.

In his comments the hon. member used the example of Germany, that Germany is moving back towards coal because renewables are not working. Well, in Germany over the last four or five years the portion of renewable energy has increased. The reason they might go towards coal is that they have put a plan in place that they will retire all their nuclear plants by 2022. With that plan they have also stated that they will move towards a target of 80 per cent from alternative, renewable resources by 2050. These are just simple facts. [interjections] Yes, they're entitled to their own opinion but not to their own facts. That's the comment.

Mr. Hanson: After having the opportunity of actually visiting Germany over the last couple of months and talking to people there, actually talking to people, asking them what they think of their green energy program, the real people, the people that are paying the bills – they're actually not even repairing wind turbines because they're not profitable and cost too much to maintain. When the thing breaks down, they just leave it hanging there unless they can steal a generator off it or one of the propellers off it to supplement one, to get another one going. Once they've robbed all the parts off of it, they tear the thing down. They're still paying for the footprint on the land because of the infrastructure, but the units themselves, they're finding, are too expensive to maintain to justify the feeble amounts of power that they do get out of them when the wind is blowing.

Yes, they are replacing their nuclear power plants with coal. So we're going to shut down our coal and build turbines. It's like we're swimming – have you ever tried to swim upriver? That's exactly what we're going to be doing, sir, in the next six months.

All we want to do, Mr. Speaker, is move this bill to the spring session, give the government a chance to do some real research and some real consultation with people other than those that are going to profit from this bill.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: Any other questions under 29(2)(a)?

Is there anyone else who would like to speak to the amendment? The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much. I recognize that we're late in the day here, but Albertans pay us to be here right till 4:30, so let's be here right till 4:30, shall we?

The fundamental question here is: do we as an Assembly, do Albertans and we on Albertans' behalf want to address climate change or not? Do we believe it's a problem worth addressing? If so, how are we going to do that? What tools are we going to use? What's the most cost-effective way of doing that? I think we do want to address climate change, and I think that even though we have a new administration coming in in the U.S. that appears to be sending very strong signals that they don't want to, that doesn't mean that we as Albertans don't have an obligation to do something.

Now, that raises the question: what is something? What should we do? The real question then is: do we trust the government? Not really is the short answer if you ask me. I don't really trust the government because if you were to ask the government, everything is fine. They're willing to enter into lawsuits that scare away investment, and while we sit here, they're in the process of announcing a settlement. I understand that there's about a hundred million dollars that is coming from the climate leadership plan that is going to go into coal-fired power phase-out. I don't know if that's a smart idea or a bad idea. I've no idea. But I don't really necessarily trust the government.

I'm not sure I trust the opposition either, though, because I'm not convinced of their sincerity that they would like to tackle climate change. I imagine that's a topic of some debate within their caucus.

I don't think there's a universal belief within the caucus as to whether or not they should. There are some who believe climate change is real and human caused, there are some who believe that we ought to do something about it, and there are some who don't believe that and think we ought to not do anything, that we should let the ice caps melt.

So, you know, I will be voting against the amendment. I will likely support the bill in principle, to the great disappointment of my good friend from Calgary-Greenway. I will bring some amendments, I think, once we get to committee. I have questions about the target of 30 per cent, I have questions about where the money is actually coming from for this, and I have questions about the minister's control.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will return to my seat and see if we can vote.

The Speaker: I think it is 4:30, and the House stands adjourned until 1:30 p.m. on Monday.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 2nd Session (2016)

Activity to Thursday, November 24, 2016

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

Bill 1 — Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act (Bilous)

First Reading — 5 (Mar. 8, 2016 aft., passed)

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, November 28, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us bow our heads and reflect or pray, each in our own way. Today let us allow ourselves to speak passionately and freely about the issues before us. Let us also practise patience with one another.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I proudly stand today to introduce a class from Westbrook elementary school, who are here in the gallery, from the Edmonton-Rutherford constituency. This school is well known for their creativity, their work with diverse students, and their extensive French program. Today we have with us 36 members of the school, including their teacher Shawn Nordstrom and the parent chaperones Momina Muhammad and Taqi Syed. If I could ask them to all please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, both the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park and I are pleased to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly a group of Sherwood Park home-schoolers. The students are accompanied by their teacher. Les étudiants et étudiantes sont accompagnés par leur enseignante Mme France Gagnon and with chaperones Ms Judy Wolowich Negrey, Mr. Todd Faulkner, Mrs. Jennifer Kennedy, Mrs. Dawnelle Block, Ms Sharla Quantz, Ms Jane Fernandez, Ms Shelley Brewer. One of the parents, Mrs. Jennifer Kennedy, is a published writer. There's a very special young man with them. One student's grandfather is Roger Brewer, who is the current sessional recordist, and the other grandfather was the former Sergeant-at-Arms William Semple. The student's name is Dominic Semple. I would like to ask the parents, the teacher, and everyone to stand up and receive the customary welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school groups, hon. members?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly five representatives from three organizations dedicated to improving the physical and mental health of youth in Alberta. Mr. Bill Wells is the chief executive officer of the Alberta Recreation and Parks Association, and with him is their president, Mike Roma. John Jagersma is the executive director of the Association of Independent Schools and Colleges in Alberta. Brian Torrance is the executive director of Ever Active Schools, and with him today is student Tiffany Gingras. All these organizations recently provided me with valuable input and feedback on my private member's bill, the Active Schools Week Act, which I'll be introducing later today. I'd ask that all my guests rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly two constituents of mine, George Winter and Pam Carlton. George is a retired professor of economics and the dean of business at Athabasca University and still runs a grain farm in Athabasca. George spent two years in Indonesia as director of the Sulawesi regional development study, which was a joint University of British Columbia and Canadian International Development Agency project. Then he spent an additional two years as dean of agriculture at the CIDA project. Pam was an Australian volunteer abroad and spent two years in Tonga, where she was a librarian at a large girls' school at Queen Salote College. She then spent two years at the University of Swaziland as a librarian and at the faculty of agriculture. This accomplished couple are both seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I ask them to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and Minister of Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you members of the information management branch in my ministry of Service Alberta. I ask that our guests rise as I read out their names. The work of this branch is certainly paving the way forward for how our government manages one of our most strategic resources, information. I'm so pleased to introduce them. We have Maurine Johnson, Madeline Driscoll, Hany Alanwer, Sunea Corry, Kelly Foisy, Matthew Brown, Ryan Dyck, David Kruch, Andrew Chu, Boryana Vasileva, Johanna Loyola, Kathleen Levesque, Sherry Lovelace, Garth Clarke, and Jeff Kocuipchyk.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my incredible constituency staff for Edmonton-Decore. Maria Vicente and Denis Sidlin have been with me since the beginning and continue to be invaluable not only to me but to all my constituents of Edmonton-Decore as well. I would ask that they now please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today – and I'm very proud to do so – to introduce Lindsay Law and her lovely children Eliza, Adaline, and Isaac. Now, Lindsay is a happy home-schooling mom of no fewer than five children. Her family has just finished a cross-Canada tour, visiting many of the legislative buildings across the country. Of course, they're very happy to be here in our Legislature building in Alberta. Eliza is 12 years old. She loves to play the piano and cook and sew and read and help with her baby brother. She's organized a number of activities to raise money and goods for organizations such as the Calgary Food Bank and coats for kids. Next is Adaline. She's 10 years old, and she positively enchants with her cello and loves gymnastics and yoga and helping organize the house. She's currently working at starting a snow removal business. Finally, last but not least, Isaac, 7 years old, loves to build cities with Lego and play outside and read. His favourite place to visit on that recent trip was the CN Tower. I ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you two great friends of mine, dedicated pillars of our community in southeastern Alberta. They know the importance of family, community, and staying involved in politics in our communities, all the time raising a family and running a successful farm. In addition to that, Joan is the niece of former Premier Harry Strom, and Jim has greatly helped me through two campaigns, knocking on hundreds of doors, attending 30 or plus town halls with me, all the time only falling asleep once, and talking to many Albertans about property rights and the problems of excessive taxation and government. If I could ask Jim and Joan Babe to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome. Welcome, neighbour. There are several people who do fall asleep when the hon. member for Cypress-Medicine Hat is speaking. They occasionally fall asleep.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great honour to stand up in the House today and introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly an individual that is actually at the core of my life, an individual who's so incredibly supportive, an individual whom I could not live without. She's incredibly dedicated to our children as well, a wonderful mother, an incredible volunteer on the campaign when I needed her, and that's my beautiful wife, Johanna Loyola. I'd ask her to please stand and for her to get the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for the St. Albert constituency.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you a group from the Skills Society, a local nonprofit organization that has provided supports to people with disabilities since the early '80s. In advance of International Day of Persons with Disabilities they're here to celebrate. I'd ask them each to rise as I say their name if they are able to: Lisa Robinson, Sanja Zenkijevic, Cathy Monk, Dawn Kamara, Chris Bruce, Geneva Auger, Emily Hannem, Michelle Pasemko, Sue Brewer, Sarahlynn Sparks, Jennifer King, Erin Mueller, Erin Kinloch-Galesloot, Barbara Wegoye, Danielle Hayes, Lasha Robert, and, last but not least, my friend Bev Hills. Please join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Active Transportation

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, as most in this Chamber know, I'm a bike commuter, and I try to use it as my main means of transportation year-round. It's not always possible, though, particularly when I have to travel longer distances in a short time, so there are days when I have to drive even just a short distance from my home to this House.

But I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, on the days that I ride, I feel better and I arrive in a far happier, healthier state of mind. The small bit of exercise I get riding from home to here helps clear my head, connect me to the world around me, and reset my perspective. This was also true when I was young and, like most kids, used to walk or bike to school; however, as of 2009 only 13 per cent of children were still doing the same. Studies show that when children get a small amount of exercise before school, they arrive more focused and ready to learn. With rising rates of obesity and chronic disease, it's more important than ever that we start learning healthy habits while we're young.

That's why I'll be introducing Bill 209, the Active Schools Week Act, which mandates that the first full week of October be designated active schools week and that in that week all Alberta schools hold participatory activities encouraging students to bike, walk, or wheel to school, activities like Belgravia school's walking school bus supported by Ever Active Schools or the Blood Tribe in Treaty 7, who bus their students within a kilometre or two of school and then let them walk the rest of the way. These are small steps that make a big difference in building community and healthy habits that can last a lifetime.

Mr. Speaker, active transportation is the best way to start and end a school or work day. I look forward to introducing Bill 209 later this afternoon.

Government Policies

Mr. Barnes: Medicine Hat and southeastern Alberta know all about ups and downs. From the introduction of the railway to bumper crops to drought and depression the area was forged in times of challenge and bold determination. We know the hardship of times like the 1980s, but we also know the abundance of the boom years.

The circumstances may change, but do you know what has stayed constant? Through it all the people have always believed that hard work and the bonds of local community could create great things. The weather might not co-operate sometimes, the land doesn't always produce as it should, energy prices fluctuate, but ultimately Alberta is great because of Albertans, the people who go to work to provide, the people who donate generously to help others, the people who care for family and loved ones.

There's something wrong with the picture today. In Cypress-Medicine Hat we have innovative, productive businesses like greenhouses and fabricators already being crippled by new taxes and regulations. We have investors looking at other jurisdictions because they fear what the NDP government is doing to the economy here. We are told that we need to aggressively raise the price of carbon to get less of it.

Well, come to Medicine Hat and ask a local not-for-profit what raising the price of labour does. All of these damaging actions have one theme tying them together: the government does not believe in Albertans enough to let them grow and thrive, free from burden. The NDP believes a myth that they can create growth by adding constraints, that they can encourage productivity by punishing earnings, and that a stick is a better incentive than a carrot.

If the strength of Alberta is the people, then the goal must be to foster freedom and self-determination. The Alberta advantage was about much more than money. It was a fundamental principle that free enterprise, opportunity, and the strength of our people could guide us far better than any government. Mr. Speaker, it's time to bring that spirit back.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish-Creek.

Government Policies

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in witness of a disturbing trend in policy and legislation from this government since formation, in May of 2015, a trend that has no doubt contributed to the unprecedented decimation of investor confidence while undermining our economy's ability to claw its way back from the effects of low oil prices. Fully 45 per cent of Alberta businesses say that they expect full-time equivalent reductions in the next three months, and I have three articles here to table in support of this claim.

To be clear, Mr. Speaker, we do not hold the NDP responsible for the price of oil. We do however believe that the actions taken by this government have exacerbated the situation. But beyond this, it's this government's attitude toward private-sector interests in Alberta we find most disturbing. In the short time the NDP have wielded power, they have taken every opportunity to vilify business and, indeed, all those who dare to risk capital in hopes of modest profit in our province.

When it comes to corporate and personal tax increases, they tell Albertans that greedy business owners can afford it. When it comes to minimum wage increases, they call business owners who are concerned about their ability to remain solvent selfish. When it comes to Alberta's electricity companies, they paint them as profit-mongers who have earned billions on the backs of Albertans, but what they fail to mention is that these same companies have invested billions at no cost to the taxpayer in building Alberta's electricity generation infrastructure. These companies deserve our respect and gratitude, not the contempt they have received from this government.

We all know that, ideologically speaking, New Democrats are fans of neither private capital, the demon root word of capitalism, nor industry. They would rather create 10 public-sector jobs on the back of taxpayer debt than the hundred private-sector jobs we need. What's most disappointing to me is that they have clung to this misguided ideology at Albertans' expense. For Alberta's sake I hope they will listen to those who elected them and act accordingly.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Her Majesty's Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Jean: While no one blames the Premier for the low price of oil, Albertans are tired of our province's finances being driven into the ground. Following multiple credit downgrades today's fiscal update presents a very bleak picture indeed. The department of debt interest payments is quickly becoming one of the largest departments across this government: a $10.8 billion deficit, multiple tax increases, and 13 per cent in new spending over the four years. Given that the Premier refuses to actually cut spending, how long does she think it will be until our next credit downgrade?

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is apparently a cut week, an ideology week and also a cut week. Last week was a spend week. It's never clear to tell. You know, it's interesting, for sure.

The Q2 update was just presented to the people of Alberta today. It shows that we are more or less on track with what we outlined previously, and it shows that we are slightly ahead of the game. When we went into the last election, we said to Albertans: we are going into hard times, and you can have a government that has your back, or you can have a government that's going to blame you and download costs onto you and your family. We chose the former, and so did Albertans.

Mr. Jean: Here's an easy tip for some cost savings: don't throw out $200 million in outdated government-run laundry services, or the Premier could try not spending an eye-popping $1.4 billion on killing good jobs in Alberta's coal sector. I know Albertans don't care much for paying for international junkets to promote the carbon tax. The NDP could cut those, too, or just take the easy step to thin out the layers of bureaucracy through attrition. Will the Premier take just one of our Wildrose ideas to save Albertans from crippling levels of future debt?

Ms Notley: Well, I'll tell you one thing we won't do, Mr. Speaker. We will not follow the member opposite's first priority, which is to spend over $2 billion on the wealthiest, most profitable corporations in the province, because that's their first spending priority. That is not what Albertans voted for. They voted for the exact opposite.

Mr. Jean: Today's announcement means every Alberta household will owe $56,000 in debt by 2019. Here's why it's a problem. Eventually governments run out of spending other people's money and have to pay back the banks, and that money does come from Alberta taxpayers. At a time of record unemployment that means more taxes on Alberta's families. More taxes means less for families to spend on groceries, on their kids, or on taking care of all their loved ones. Will the Premier then start fixing the budget and commit to no more tax hikes to Albertans? Yes or no?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I think the really important thing that the members opposite like to try to forget is that even now, even with us moving ahead with the carbon levy — you know what? — Albertans have an over $7 billion tax advantage over the next lowest taxed province in the country. So that is being maintained while at the same time we invest in teachers, we invest in nurses, we invest in Albertans, and we ensure that we have their back while we come through these hard economic times.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Jean: In just 34 days this NDP government's carbon tax will take effect. This tax will have severe implications for hard-working Albertans who are already suffering through one of the worst economic downturns in recent memory. Albertans have been incredibly vocal in clearly stating that they do not want and cannot afford this NDP carbon tax. To the Premier: will the NDP cancel the January 1 implementation of this tax before it causes any further damage to our economy and everyday Albertans across our great province?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, just last week a significant group of Canadian corporate leaders came out to say that what Alberta is doing with pricing carbon is exactly – exactly – what our economy needs. Indeed, the TD Bank came out with a report saying that what we're doing with respect to pricing carbon is exactly what our economy needs. You know what else? What it will do is that it will help move our province toward reaching the kinds of environmental goals that our children and our grandchildren need us to start working on today.

Mr. Jean: The NDP knew this carbon tax was not going to be popular. That's why they didn't put it in their election platform, and now, with just over a month to go before it's implemented, they won't give Albertans a chance to have their say on this tax before they put it in place. Families are going to see the cost of filling up their cars, buying their groceries, and heating their homes go way up all because of this NDP carbon tax. To the Premier: before implementing the tax, will you please respect the will of Albertans and put it to a referendum?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, we are proud that we are leading the country in moving our nation forward in terms of taking action on climate change, something that is long overdue and something that will also coincidentally position our economy to be a leader worldwide. While we are doing that, we are ensuring that low- and middle-income families will receive a rebate so that should they reduce their carbon they will actually come out ahead.

Mr. Jean: The NDP insist on plunging ahead with the carbon tax, yet they still don't know what the full economic impact will be of the carbon tax. Municipal governments are trying to figure out how large a cost this tax will have on Albertans but aren't getting any answers at all from this government. In fact, the Lacombe county council wrote to the Premier, asking her about the financial impact of the carbon tax, but they still haven't heard back. To the Premier: have you still not figured out the numbers, or are they so bad that you just don't want Albertans to know them?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we know is that we will have over $2 billion invested in green infrastructure in our municipalities. What we know is that we'll have over half a billion dollars invested in energy efficiencies, something that the members opposite, over there, forgot to do for 40 years. We didn't have an energy efficiency program in this province at all. Jaw dropping. Shocking. We are finally moving forward, and I'm very proud of that fact.

Energy Policies

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, the NDP interfering in our electricity system will cost our province and taxpayers billions of dollars. Their ideological drive to wipe out coal generation in our province will mean rising costs, the end of low power prices like we're paying today, and higher taxes. We know that the impact of these changes could wipe out Enmax's profitability, and that means that property taxes in Calgary will go up as much as 4.5 per cent per year, every year. Will the Premier admit that her government didn't understand the consequences when they decided to mess up our electricity system?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are very proud of the fact that we have been able to move forward as effectively as we can on a number of different electricity files. We inherited a system that was falling apart, and we've been working diligently – diligently – to fix it. We are getting off coal, we're moving our economy forward, and we're creating stability and affordability in our electricity system at long last.

Mr. Jean: The cost of wiping out six fully-functioning, high-efficiency coal plants will ring in at roughly $1.4 billion. Killing coal plants likely means that the town of Hanna, for instance, will lose hundreds of jobs, putting the whole town at risk, but this government doesn't seem to care at all. They're more interested in flying to Paris and Morocco than meeting with the hard-working men and women whose livelihoods are being destroyed right across the province. Eliminating coal generation means that we need up to $25 billion in new generation, an investment that would be subsidized, of course, through Alberta taxpayers. Why is this government punishing Albertans during a recession?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've said before, we are very proud to be moving forward and phasing out coal. But let me just say that as a result of some of our announcements last week, the coal compensation and the capacity market, one of the heads of the coal companies said, and I quote: the fact that we have this capacity market really enables us to convert some of our coal plants to gas, keep our workers working, keep those communities strong, and be able to provide capacity to the system as we go through the decades. That's not this government speaking. That's one of those industry leaders who actually has faith in our system.

Mr. Jean: All paid by Alberta taxpayers.

In the past 18 months this NDP government has introduced a carbon tax that they didn't campaign on; accelerated the phase-out of coal, that will cost Albertans billions and billions of dollars and devastate whole communities; overhauled our electricity system, that offered consumers some of the best electrical rates in Canada; and scared away investment by suing energy companies over long-standing contracts. It's quite a mess in a very short period of time. Does the Premier understand that none of these changes will lead to a more prosperous Alberta?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the status quo situation with our electricity market was this: there was only one other jurisdiction in North America that was still relying on that kind of electricity system. In Alberta we know that electricity would have capped out at $999 per megawatt hour. That jurisdiction, Texas, in order to keep their system going, had to increase that to $9,000 per megawatt hour, a one thousand per cent increase in volatility. I am not prepared to make Albertans put up with that kind of volatility for their risky, ideological experiments.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Government Spending

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Over the last 18 months thousands of Alberta families have had to take a hard look at their household expenses and make some tough decisions to balance the bank account in the face of lost jobs and reduced income. Albertans are making sacrifices, yet the government that they elected to spend their dollars wisely has proven itself incapable of making those same tough decisions in the face of this recession. To the Premier: why does your government refuse to acknowledge reality and adjust spending like Alberta families are doing every single day?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the last election the member opposite's party ran on the idea of firing nurses and sending 12,000 new kids to school that September without a new teacher. And you know what? Albertans said: no, that's not the way we invest in the future, that's not how we have each others' backs, that's not how we move forward. So we're going to go with what Albertans told us to do.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I congratulate the Premier on bragging about her $7 billion tax advantage – I will remind her that it was $11 billion two years ago – and that's before the carbon tax and the $3 billion in debt from all the borrowing they're going to do.

Albertans expect their government to avoid borrowing for day-to-day operations, and the second-quarter fiscal results today reveal that operational spending continues to rise. To the Premier. Our caucus has provided just a few examples where you could significantly trim expenses without impacting the front lines. Why do you refuse to even try?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that increased our spending in this last quarter was a $100 million addition to Human Services, and just last week we were hearing from members opposite about how that should be a priority. You can't have it both ways. Decisions aren't magical. When you make something a priority, then there are consequences to it, and we made that a priority.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. The Premier points to something that represents 1 per cent of the deficit that they're taking on this year alone. There's another 99 to try on, Premier. Don't quit yet.

Mr. Speaker, you know what? Eleven billion dollars is going to need $3 billion in taxpayers' money just to service it without paying down the principal. To the Premier: when can Albertans expect your government to show how you plan to pay the billions and billions back that you're borrowing and when?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the plan is to establish a careful and prudent way forward that supports Albertans, that supports our schools, that supports our hospitals, that supports Human Services, that supports firefighting, that supports the things that Albertans count on. As we do that, we will carefully manage and reduce our spending in a way that gets us to an appropriate outcome with respect to balancing the budget.

But, you know, it's really quite rich for the member opposite to be talking about this because if you look at the way spending was done over the last ten years, it looks like an outline of the Rocky Mountains: no planning at all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Provincial Fiscal Deficit and Coal Phase-out Costs

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today the government claimed that we have a $10.8 billion deficit. Now, that in itself is a very big number, but they haven't included the $1.1 billion coal settlement because they say that they're still trying to figure out the accounting treatment. Well, that's like driving a hundred miles an hour but still trying to figure out if you're actually speeding. To the Finance minister. Your department is full of experts who have the answer; I just suspect that you don't like the answer. Will you confirm that, including the coal settlement, we actually have an $11.9 billion deficit?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I will conclude and tell the House is that this member's staff was briefed fully on this this morning. The answer that I'm providing to the House is the same one that officials from Treasury Board and Finance provided earlier, and that is that this transition payment will start next year and be paid out over 14 years. That's the answer.

Mr. Clark: Today's announcement said that it's still to be figured out, but I don't know what's still to be figured out. This money is money that the government owes to others, which is the textbook definition of a financial liability. If you don't believe me, why don't we check the actual textbook. The public-sector accounting standards define liability as having a legal responsibility to pay, must be paid in a specific timeline, and the obligation to pay has already occurred. Again to the Minister of Finance: can you tell me which of these three does not apply to the coal settlement?

Mr. Ceci: What I will tell the member opposite is that we will start paying out the transition payments next year. Q2 is focused on this year. The officials have briefed people. Out of an abundance of caution we put that note in the Q2 update. That was occurring at the same time as we were concluding our Q2 deliberations, so we're being transparent, upfront. We'll start paying next year, not this year.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, there are plenty of liabilities that we are not currently paying that show up as liabilities.

Even if you didn't know the exact number of what that liability would be, you knew that during coal negotiations there would be a number. It's irresponsible and negligent but, I suppose, politically convenient not to include the coal settlement in the deficit estimation. Can you confirm here and now that in the Q3 update and beyond we will see a $1.1 billion increase to future deficits?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. What I can confirm is that in our annual report we will include a contractual obligation as a note that will be present for all to see.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Softwood Lumber Export to the United States

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the United States Lumber Coalition submitted petitions to the U.S. Department of Commerce to request an investigation into Canada's softwood lumber. This means that our province's forest industry can expect higher duties on wood products exported to the United States. Because the United States is a key market for our forest products, this will have great impacts on Alberta's forest industry and the communities it sustains, including many communities in my constituency of West Yellowhead. To the minister . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member, for the question.
The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to the member for the question. Forestry is the backbone of the economy in 70 communities supporting 20,000 Albertans. It's a sustainable industry built on a renewable resource. The industry is not subsidized, as the Americans would have some believe, and I'm confident that the courts will once again agree.

Both Minister Bilous and I recently concluded trade missions to Asia. We need to continue to look for opportunities in these rapidly expanding markets. At the same time we will support the federal government's actions to fight this unfair trade action and continue to support good jobs in the forest sector.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that nearly 20,000 Albertans are employed in the forest industry, including hundreds of my constituents in Grande Cache, Hinton, and Edson, what will the minister do to fight this decision and support thousands of Albertans that work in the industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government will continue to work closely with the Alberta Forest Products Association and our federal counterparts to fight this unfair and punitive trade action. While this action is disappointing, it is not unexpected. We knew the Americans were gearing up, once again, for a fight. We shifted resources within the department to handle legal issues that might arise. I've also asked my officials for strategies to deal with the impacts of this action, keeping in mind that the Americans are looking for every excuse to justify their move. But at the end of the day, it's an international trade dispute, so it falls on the federal government to fight it in the courts.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the imposition of duties will reduce demand for Alberta products in the U.S., again to the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: what is the government doing to support our forest industry during what will likely be a long dispute so that these communities can remain prosperous?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, it's clear that we need to diversify Alberta's forest product trade. This is the fifth time the Americans have alleged unfair practices here in Canada. Every time their allegations have been untrue. I am confident that this will happen again. The fact is that our forest management practices are amongst the best in the world. This is something that our trading partners in Asia recognize, and this presents a great opportunity to increase trade. We must also look for opportunities here at home. This government will develop wood-first policies through the development of an Alberta wood charter. A wood charter will reduce greenhouse gas emissions from construction by using sustainable forest products. It will also stimulate . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Health Care Wait Times

Mr. Barnes: Last week yet another report shed light on the wait time problems that continue to plague our incredibly expensive health care system. In fact, the problem seems to have only gotten worse since the NDP was elected, with wait times for medically necessary procedures far exceeding what health professionals deem reasonable. The minister's own health data confirm a system moving in the wrong direction for Albertan's hard-earned dollars. Will the minister's legacy in this role be one of increased rationing or one of actual improvement?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to respond to the report that I believe has been referenced as a Fraser Institute report. I look forward to seeing it tabled later in question period.

We are working to make sure that we have a stable, well-funded public health care system that helps to address the needs of Albertans. Addressing wait times: I think we have work to do in that area, Mr. Speaker, and I'm committed to addressing it as opposed to the members opposite who were proposing to cut billions of dollars from public services, which would have resulted in laying off nurses and teachers and increased wait times. That's not leadership. What we're doing is.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that wait times have worsened across a wide array of procedures, as confirmed by the government's own reporting, and given that patients and advocacy groups tell us that these excessive wait times cause tremendous physical and mental anguish, putting further pressure on our systems' needs, does the minister intend to actually do something for those living in pain and create efficiency in our bloated health care system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to highlight some of the things that we have done. We restored $800 million in health care spending that was projected to be cut by the last government on their way out the door. We also have made significant improvements in terms of wait times for mental health treatment for young people and children, a 92 per cent reduction. I'm incredibly proud of that. Instead of a 13-day wait, these children now have what they need in terms of care the same day or the next day in either Edmonton or Calgary. We're building 2,000 more long-term care beds so that our seniors can live in communities instead of acute-care hospitals. We're moving forward, and those members are proposing that we move back to the '90s, which will result in deep cuts, and we are not doing that.

Mr. Barnes: More money into a broken system is like pouring water into sand.

Given that the minister's actions have not created any meaningful improvements and have not come with any expectations of results and since her promised cost curve bending has been blown apart by constant budget overruns, is it finally time that the minister check her ideology at the door and start to focus on real solutions that actually help Albertans who rely on the system that we so lavishly fund?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wish that the research department for the Official Opposition would roll their sleeves up and actually look at data, not estimates put forward by the Fraser Institute. We have reflected on some of the specific data: a 92 per cent reduction in wait times for children with mental health needs. That's significant improvement, and I'm proud to stand up for those children, those families and continue to move forward.

Provincial Fiscal Deficit

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, earlier today the Finance minister released his second-quarter update, and it was interesting to compare his numbers with those released last week by his counterpart Minister Doherty in Regina. Saskatchewan is facing the same global oil price shocks as Alberta, to say nothing of potash and uranium. Because of lower revenue, their projected deficit has doubled to $0.8 billion, only one-fourteenth of our own projected $10.8 billion deficit. To the minister: have you called Minister Doherty, and have you asked him to share some of his spending restraint ideas with you?

Mr. Ceci: You know, I don't need any more spending ideas. What I do need is an economy that turns around. In 2017 we're seeing an uptick in the economy of 2.3 per cent. We are seeing that we're reducing our expenditures on operations. Those are the things that'll get us in the long run. Saskatchewan, frankly, has – what have they got? – a $14 billion economy. Fourteen billion dollars. We're at $300 billion. Their budget is $14 billion; ours is $50 billion.

Dr. Starke: Minister, Saskatchewan has a $14 billion budget, not a $14 billion economy. Get your numbers straight.

Mr. Speaker, given that the Saskatchewan Finance minister has released five pages' worth of ministry-by-ministry spending restraint initiatives, which I will table for this minister's edification, and given that these initiatives are trimming over $217 million from that $14 billion budget, a 1.5 per cent reduction, without laying off a single teacher, doctor, or nurse, to the minister: if you were doing your job as well as Minister Doherty, you would be able to realize $777 million in savings. When can we expect you to do that?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think this was answered by the Premier earlier. We will get back to a balanced budget in time. We are going to work on bolstering the economy. We are going to work on diversifying and investing and protecting Albertans through this downturn. We will get back to a balanced budget, and when we do – 2024.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, the Riders will win the Grey Cup long before then.

Given that today's Q2 update shows an increase in general debt-servicing costs of $33 million and given that Saskatchewan's debt-servicing costs are forecast to actually decrease by $5 million and given that Saskatchewan is quickly gaining on Alberta in having the lowest debt-to-GDP ratio in the country, which we used to be the undisputed leader in, to the minister: what measures are you taking to try to curb the growth of our debt and attendant debt-servicing costs, or are you simply too proud to ask for helpful advice from our neighbours?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the fiscal plan we have before this government and Albertans, we will get to about 15.5 per cent debt to GDP by next year. We're at about 10 per cent now. I'm comfortable at 10 per cent debt to GDP. That's not the lowest in the country, but I'm comfortable with it, and we will get to lowering that when our economy picks up.

Vacancy Rate in Calgary

Mr. Panda: According to Friday's Financial Post close to 40 per cent of Calgary's available residential rental listings are unoccupied. As of this March 15,000 households in Alberta are on a wait-list for social and affordable housing and housing supports. With higher supply, does the Minister of Seniors and Housing see the opportunity to get more people off the streets of Calgary, or is the NDP trying to implement rent controls?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government, even in these very difficult fiscal times, is showing our commitment to people with our investment of $1.2 billion in affordable housing over five years in our capital plan. We are taking care of repairs. We inherited a billion dollars in deferred maintenance in units that were not kept up under the previous government, and we are investing in that right now, so we are working very diligently to support vulnerable Albertans.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that the commercial real estate in Calgary is also suffering with an office vacancy rate of 25 per cent and continuing to rise and given that Alberta Infrastructure spends almost $210 million leasing office space for the government every year, is the Minister of Infrastructure actively shopping for bargains on new premium office space so he can consolidate government offices in downtown Calgary and lower taxpayer expenses for the years to come?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Department of Infrastructure has an extensive program to consolidate office space, to move out of lease space, where possible, into government buildings, and to increase the density of employees. I'm sure that the department is always looking for a better deal for the taxpayer. I want to say that we are working consistently to reduce the amount of space that the government occupies, and that is something we inherited from the previous government.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that 11,400 Calgary businesses have vanished or moved in the first nine months of 2016 due to NDP economic policies and given that the NDP has a passion for driving away jobs and investment to other jurisdictions, hence the 10.2 per cent unemployment rate, how does the Minister of Economic Development and Trade propose to fill Calgary's vacant residential and commercial real estate? With Manitoba NDP staffers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta jobs plan is making a difference in the lives of Alberta families by diversifying the economy and creating employment here in Alberta. We have new infrastructure projects added to the capital plan that are estimated to sustain over 10,000 jobs a year for over three years. We restored the STEP program, that was cut by the previous government, providing 2,700 jobs. Alberta's modernization of the royalty framework has led to increased drilling this year. By early fall 2016 more than 129 new wells had been approved, which is 135 new jobs. We're doing many things.

Forest Industry Issues

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, the softwood trade agreement with the U.S. has expired this past October, creating an unease in an already uncertain industry. Now we are hearing of efforts by U.S. lobby groups pressuring their government to impose trade sanctions on our lumber imports. This could be devastating to our forest industry. Both the ministers of economic development and Agriculture and Forestry have recently travelled overseas on trade missions. Can you tell us today if any sizeable new agreements have been signed to send Alberta forest products to the Asian markets?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I continue and we will continue to stand for our forests – it's a viable industry in Alberta – stand for the communities and all the workers in the forest industry. The member is right. I did recently return from an Asian market, where I had an opportunity to speak with Canada Wood, both in China and South Korea, looking for what the member just suggested: extending our markets into those countries.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Loewen: So nothing new.

Given that the lumber industry is already highly trade exposed and given that the carbon tax will cause increases in fuel for mills, for the rail transportation, and fuel for transportation of the raw logs, all of which will do nothing but compound this disadvantage, to the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: how does this government expect our forest industry to remain competitive in any market when your policies continue to handcuff industry and risk its continued viability?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We absolutely recognize the importance of the viability of the forestry sector to Alberta. It continues to be important. It relies heavily on exports, obviously the United States markets as well. We continue to support them in every way we can, expanding and extending those markets also into Asia, into South Korea and China in particular.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Loewen: Support them by raising taxes on them. Okay.

Given that I recently asked the environment minister about her caribou draft plan and given that it contains no timber supply analysis but makes recommendations that if implemented will cost hundreds of jobs in the forest sector, job losses that could be compounded by the lack of a softwood deal with the U.S., and considering companies already have uncertainty surrounding their forest management agreements, to the minister: will you state for the record that your government will do a proper timber supply analysis and consult with industry and affected communities before implementing any further action on your caribou draft plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To make it perfectly clear to this House and the member opposite, the Species at Risk Act is federal legislation. We're working with that legislation to make sure that we have something built here in Alberta, working with the forestry industry on a draft plan to do just that, to ensure absolutely the viability of species at risk but also to ensure that our forest industry remains working on the landscape, and we'll continue to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Amber Athwal

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By now most of us have heard of the tragic story of Amber Athwal, a lovely four-year-old who has yet to regain consciousness following a dental procedure. Her family is not satisfied with the response they have received from the Alberta Dental Association and College with regard to their ongoing investigation. They simply want to know what happened. To the hon. Minister of Health: will you commit to ensuring that the findings of this report are made public so that something like this never, ever happens in Alberta again?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. I, too, had the honour of getting a chance to spend some time with Amber and her family. This is a very difficult time, so for them to welcome us, I think, is a tremendous credit to their strong spirit. We have been working with them. We at this point are confident and want to respect the college's process, but I want to be very clear. The family deserves answers, and so do all Albertans. So we'll be working to make sure that the college's process is complete, and then answers can be shared with the family and with Albertans.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that when I met with the Athwal family last week, they told me that they feel they have been left in the dark by the government and that despite any efforts that may have been made, they're hoping for increased communication from the Ministry of Health, again to the minister: will you personally ensure that more channels of communication are open with the family and that they receive the information they need in this difficult time?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. We have been corresponding with them regularly. My deputy chief of staff and my office have recently spoken with them, and we'll make sure that – I believe they have his personal phone number, so it's even deeper than the ministry, somebody directly in my office, because it's important that they have an opportunity to feel heard. While it's a very difficult time and we might not be able to give them all the answers we want, we want to know what their questions are to be able to support them through this transition.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Amber's father, Raman Athwal, has been forced to quit his job in order to be by his daughter's side and given that this loss of income is compounded by the fact that this family does not fully know the extent of the brain injury suffered by their daughter, again to the minister: in order to ease the suffering from this tragedy, will you or someone from your ministry reach out to this family and help them access any and all support which they're entitled to moving forward?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Yeah. When we did have an opportunity to meet, I talked about what some of their nervousness was and some of their concerns. Certainly, having some support and liaising with Human Services is one of the areas around what types of supports might be available to help with transportation and those types of things when you have a child who's in a wheelchair. So we're working with them and co-ordinating with them and Human Services. I also want to say that Amber's mom made it really clear that she wants Amber to be in an inclusive school environment, and it made me feel very proud to be able to say that no matter what, no matter how full Amber's recovery is, she has every right to attend a public school, and we'll make sure that we support them in that initiative, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Bridge to Teacher Certification Program

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have more than a dozen schools in my constituency of Calgary-Shaw, and when I visit these schools, I can see that students want to develop skills and knowledge that will benefit them in the changing and more diversified economy. Many industry professionals and tradespeople have real-world experience to share and assist our teachers in the classroom. To the Minister of Education: what is the minister doing to support these types of collaboration in our schools?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you so much for the question. We all know that good jobs begin with a good education, and we also know that industry professionals with experience can help to prepare our students for success. So that's why we have initiatives that we're building up, like the bridge to teacher certification program. This program allows professionals to begin teaching in the classroom while still earning their postsecondary degree. We're hoping to expand this program considerably, and I believe it'll give us lots of good exposure for young people and industry professionals to work together in our classrooms.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the bridge to teacher program provides students with an opportunity to collaborate with local experts, to the same minister: what impact has this program had on our students and schools?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm certainly seeing first-hand the positive impact of this program in our schools. Last month I was at Salisbury composite high school in Sherwood Park and met a professional there who was teaching cosmetology while working to earn her teaching degree, Zena Duguid. She's been paired up with a certified teacher through the bridge to teacher certification program and sharing real-world knowledge and experience with her students. I know first-hand that the kids really connect with industry professionals like this in different programs, in cosmetology and different trades, and it just gives kids another perspective that they wouldn't otherwise have.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what amount of funding is being provided to the bridge to teacher certificate program this year, and what are the plans for the program moving forward?

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've invested $800,000 for the certification program in Budget 2016, and this funding will build professionals for, we're hoping, 10 different trades. We're starting to see medical professionals interested in this now as well, so it just keeps expanding exponentially. I'll have further conversations with Alberta Education about expanding this program in the future.

We are hoping, of course, that this will help us to build a more diversified economy. We know that education is the cornerstone of a healthy economy, too, and that supporting programs like the bridge to teacher certification program will help to have our kids being ready for the future.

Didsbury Hospital Services

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, on November 8 I asked the Minister of Health a question regarding the slow death by cancellation of health programs at the Didsbury hospital. The associate minister responded with, "We are going to support health care where it's needed." When I asked her specifically if it was "a long, drawn-out plan to close the Didsbury hospital," she replied with, "We are not going to make ad hoc promises" and then said that we'll be using "a strategic approach." To the minister. I'm a little confused. Does your strategic approach include closing the Didsbury hospital?

Ms Hoffman: Not at all, Mr. Speaker. We're committed to making sure that we work with communities and support them. We have no plans to close the Didsbury hospital or any other hospital. We'll certainly be working with communities around challenges that might be encountered. I know that sometimes it's difficult to attract and retain staff in some of these communities, and we need our local communities to help us address some of those concerns. But we look forward to working with them, and there is no plan to shut down the Didsbury hospital.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Minister. Given that two major cuts have taken place at the hospital, including the most recent to the cardiac rehabilitation centre, which came as a complete shock to residents, doctors, and front-line workers, why was this cut made with no consultation of patients or doctors in the hospital and seemingly no consideration for aging patients who now have to drive to Calgary and pay $500 for the same service?

Ms Hoffman: I'm very proud to be the Health minister in a government that believes in public, universally accessible health care, so I'd be happy to answer if you can provide details around the dollar amount you raised. That certainly doesn't reflect the values that we have around public, universally accessible health care, Mr. Speaker.

With regard to the specific program at the hospital itself I believe that their AHS zone co-ordinators are working on how best to ensure that everyone has access to the right services in the right place, and sometimes certain programs might need to be moved. But I'll be happy to follow up in further detail with the hon. member if he chooses to raise that question after . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, all patients have been asked to pay.

Given that this cut is real and will cost front-line jobs and potentially puts at risk the lives of those living in central Alberta, not to mention the cost and burden of having to drive back and forth to Calgary, and given that if you have a heart attack in central Alberta, you are 70 per cent more likely to die than having one in Calgary, will the minister please tell me why she's willing to make such a risky decision, and will she reverse this damaging cut at the Didsbury hospital?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I know that some numbers were thrown around there, and I really hope that the member does follow up with me so that we can ensure that we are clear about what it is he's referring to when he says that patients are being asked to pay. I think that's important for us to be able to follow up on.

With regard to the strategic clinical network report regarding cardiac care, that was released publicly. There is a desire to increase capacity for cardiac care throughout Alberta, and we want to make sure that everyone, no matter where you live, whether you're in the central zone, north, south, Edmonton, or Calgary, you have access to the right care in the right place at the right time, Mr. Speaker.

Coal-fired Electric Power Plant Retirement

Mr. Fraser: As a paramedic you're trained to read people's voices, their tones, to pick up when they're in distress – the crackly voices, the tension, the fear – and that's exactly what I heard when I decided to call a few mayors in communities that would be impacted by the Terry Boston report, released last week. What was more concerning, they said that they hadn't heard anything from the minister's office in months: no further engagement, no briefing on what was in the report, and nothing that would explain the impact on families in their communities. They didn't even receive a copy of the report. Premier, you promised families impacted by this coal phase-out that they would be engaged. Why did you break that promise?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. The Minister of Economic Development and Trade is leading the process of engagement with the affected communities. His department has worked with over 40 stakeholders in this area across the province where we have post-2030 plants and even some of the communities where we were seeing some coal-fired shutdowns between now and 2030. Part of the work – and I will discuss it more in subsequent questions – is to ensure that we have the right regulatory framework for coal-to-gas conversion.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Fraser: Minister, respectfully, if you'd listen to these mayors and you'd talk to them, they're genuinely concerned and afraid.

Given that this government has passed the buck to electricity companies, stating that the $1.1 billion settlement will cover transition – and that doesn't seem like a lot of money spread out amongst dozens of coal communities – and that what's more disheartening is that you don't seem to care about these rural families, why do you think it's appropriate at all for this government to skip out on these conversations with these families, period?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, earlier this year the Minister of Economic Development and Trade met with over 40 community leaders from municipalities, First Nations, and labour organizations. We also received more than 800 submissions from the public on this plan. Our three-member panel will travel to affected communities early in the new year, but what we announced on Thursday provides us the architecture and a policy framework in which to ensure that we are doing the right kinds of transition for these communities, including coal-to-gas conversion, where it's economically achievable and where the investors want to make those decisions.

Mr. Fraser: Again, respectfully, if my job was being taken away and the announcement came, I would like to know either before or very shortly after, not months later.

Given that these families are still left in the dark regarding their income, their social well-being, their future and given that you haven't contacted the leaders of these communities, what commitment can you make today to reach out and appropriately engage the leaders of these families, who need answers today?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the well-being of the workers in the community has been at the forefront of our minds as we've been moving through this plan for what happens 14 years from now. That is why the Minister of Economic Development and Trade has met with over 40 community leaders and others, that is why we have ensured that the companies that we negotiated with are making investments back into those communities, and that is why we have ensured the regulatory framework that is required to do coal-to-gas conversion and that will keep the municipal tax base and ensure jobs in those communities into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Well, thank you very much. I'm very proud and pleased today to rise for the first time in question period as one of the fabulous five members of the overflow government caucus who sit to the left of Mr. Speaker.

Legal Aid

Mr. Dach: As a former volunteer probation officer I know firsthand that there are several parts of the justice system that need to function together for it to work effectively. An important piece of that puzzle is legal aid. Last year alone Legal Aid Alberta served close to 300,000 Albertans. To the Minister of Justice: what is the government doing to ensure that legal aid services are available to Albertans who need them?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the critical question. Our government understands the vital role that legal aid plays in a functioning justice system. That's why we've invested an additional $9.4 million this year, bringing legal aid's total budget to $77.9 million. Since taking office, our government has increased funding to legal aid by 20 per cent.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I have heard concerns from my constituents in Edmonton-McClung about whether legal aid is reaching the Albertans who need it the most, to the same minister: what is the government doing to support low-income Albertans with serious legal issues?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for another important question. We have increased the qualifying income threshold for legal aid, which means that more people are able to qualify for services. There's also been a change in the scope of service to ensure that we're focusing to a greater degree on assistance to low-income Albertans. The fact that Alberta needs a predictable and long-term plan to deliver legal aid services is something that we are working very hard to achieve.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there is an ongoing review of legal aid, again to the same minister: what is the status of that review?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the question. Our goal with the legal aid review was to ensure that we had an efficient and sustainable legal aid program providing service to low-income Albertans for years to come. We continue to engage with stakeholders, including Legal Aid Alberta, the Law Society, and the legal community as well as service providers and the courts. This review is ongoing, and I look forward to sharing more information as we move forward.

Water Management

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, I'm going with the Tragically Hip theme again. In 1989 the Hip released the song Trickle Down.

Thoroughly discredited by none other than the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, trickle-down economics stifles growth and creates damaging income inequality. It remains a mystery why the conservative parties continue to pursue this failed ideology. But the kind of trickle-down I'm pursuing has to do with the way our most precious resource trickles down through the landscape. That resource, of course, is water.

In order to effectively respond to a changing climate, we must take water management seriously. Climate change mitigation is about carbon, but climate change adaptation is about water. Intact ecosystems slow and moderate the impact of climate change by preserving the water cycle. Indeed, our glaciers act as the thermostat for North America.

Alberta is fortunate to have some of the most significant headwaters in western Canada. As the world experiences and prepares for a changing climate, it is critical for our prosperity that we ensure Alberta's supply of fresh water can meet our future demands. Global water scarcity will not necessarily be defined by direct transfers of liquid water but by how much is traded in the form of water embodied in food. This could greatly advantage Alberta's agricultural sectors but – and this is the crucial point – only if we are able to address land-use practices as they relate to water quantity and quality. Alberta's water future depends on the ecological integrity of our eastern slopes. Conservation of intact wild spaces like these is a deeply rooted Alberta value consistent with the goal of water security.

Like the Tragically Hip, I'm also waiting on the trickle-down. Water takes time to get around. When it comes to water security, it's just a matter of a trickle-down.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Legacy Children's Foundation

Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to talk about an important organization in my riding, the Legacy Children's Foundation. Since 2006 the Legacy Children's Foundation has been working hard to create all-inclusive music programming in Alberta that engages financially challenged families and vulnerable youth.

I want to congratulate Legacy on receiving funding to continue their work across the province. They've received a $20,000 grant from the municipality of Wood Buffalo and a $30,000 grant from the Red Cross disaster relief fund to buy instruments that were destroyed during the devastating fire that raged through Fort McMurray.

I'm proud to say that Legacy bases its operations out of my riding. The organization and its executive director, Darryl Wernham, work tirelessly to improve the lives of children and youth. They believe that all children and youth have the potential to grow into self-reliant, contributing citizens.

Through Darryl I had the pleasure of meeting a young woman who was having a hard time in school and who started learning guitar through their programming. This spring she played on stage at the Juno awards in Calgary.

Earlier this year Legacy received a community initiative program grant from our government that went directly to help youth living in poverty in Calgary. With the money Legacy was able to buy turntables to start a DJ program. These initiatives are a perfect example of how our government and community partners can work together to improve the lives of youth and families across Alberta.

I would like to thank Darryl and their board of directors and everyone involved in Legacy Children's Foundation. The work you all do is invaluable to the countless youth you help every day. I would also like to point out that Legacy is currently running an Indiegogo campaign to help with funding. Their goal is to raise $50,000 for their gift of music long-term mentorship program. I urge all fellow members to make a pledge today and help Legacy continue their work across Alberta.

Thank you.

2016 Football Championships

Mr. Rodney: Congratulations to the Calgary Stampeders on one of the best seasons in history: 16 wins, including the complete dismantling of the CFL's second-best team in the western final; winning every single home game; most points scored; fewest sacks allowed; most wins by a rookie head coach, Dave Dickenson, the coach of the year; rookie of the year, DaVaris Daniels; most outstanding offensive lineman, Derek Dennis; most outstanding Canadian, Jerome Messam; and most outstanding player, quarterback Bo Levi Mitchell, with a league high 32 touchdowns and an .853 winning percentage, the best in league history.

Apparently, however, the Ottawa Redblacks did not get that memo. After the Stamps overcame a 20-point deficit, they could have claimed the biggest comeback in Grey Cup history if they'd punched it in from the two-yard line with only seconds remaining, but instead Ottawa, with a losing record in the regular season, played their best game of the year and scored the biggest upset in Grey Cup history in overtime. Congrats to the Redblacks and to former Calgary Stampeders Henry Burris, the oldest quarterback to win the cup.

Sadly, Mr. Speaker, the news was similar for the Calgary Dinos, whose starting quarterback was injured in the first quarter but came within 23 yards and 23 seconds of winning the Vanier Cup.

Quick note to Mr. Commissioner: if you want the Vanier and Grey cups to remain Canada's biggest parties and if you want to engage and inspire newer and younger Canadians while increasing attendance and revenues, please start the season in June, end it in October, and expand the CFL to 12 teams. We can do that. Canada is ready.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, to everyone within the U of C and the Stampeders organizations: thank you for an incredibly entertaining year. It wasn't the first time that the better teams lost, and it won't be the last, but I promise you: we will be back, and we'll be better as we learn lessons from this year.

Mr. Speaker, we were dreaming of big wins this weekend in honour of number 31, Mylan Hicks, who was tragically killed earlier this fall. I know that everyone in Alberta was hoping to have his name etched on the cup. I just trust that the family knows: no matter what, we will never forget you.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Mylan.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to give oral notice of a bill for tomorrow's Order Paper, that bill being Bill 34, Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016, which will be sponsored by the hon. Minister of Energy. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and responsible for democratic renewal.

Bill 35 Fair Elections Financing Act

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Fair Elections Financing Act.

This bill ensures that Albertans have a fair, democratic, and modern electoral system. Alberta's election spending and contribution laws have lagged behind other Canadian jurisdictions, and it's time we did more than just catch up. We want to lead the country in limiting the influence of big money on elections. It's why we passed Bill 1 last year to ban corporate and union donations, and it's why we're taking the next step with these amendments.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans want an electoral system where good ideas matter more than deep pockets and where integrity and transparency of the system is paramount. With these amendments in Bill 35 we can provide them with exactly that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 35 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Minister of Transportation.

2:50 Bill 36 An Act to Enhance Off-highway Vehicle Safety

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise and introduce Bill 36, An Act to Enhance Off-highway Vehicle Safety.

The amendments we are proposing would require people who use off-highway vehicles on public land to wear helmets during OHV operations. Mr. Speaker, if it passes the House, this bill will help to reduce thousands of unnecessary injuries and dozens of deaths that Alberta's OHV community suffers every year.

There are certain provisions within the proposed amendments, including exemption for Alberta's farming and ranching community and for operation on First Nations and Métis settlement land. It is our intention to support Alberta's long-standing OHV tradition by requiring people to wear helmets whenever they are operating an off-highway vehicle on public land.

I look forward to the conversation with all of the colleagues in this Chamber. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 36 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Bill 209 Active Schools Week Act

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today to request leave to introduce a bill being the Active Schools Week Act, Bill 209.

Studies show that when students get a small amount of exercise before school, they arrive more focused, attentive, and ready to learn. As rates of obesity and chronic disease and provincial health care costs continue to rise, it's more important than ever that we encourage Albertans from a young age to build habits that will improve their physical and mental health. This bill mandates that the first full week in October be named active schools week and that all Alberta schools have participatory events or activities that encourage students to walk, bike, or use other active means to get to school.

I look forward to the opportunity to discuss and debate this bill with all members of this Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 209 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table a document that will clear up some misinformation respecting our supports for foster and kinship families. As you know, our commitment includes stable funding for Human Services, although it was suggested by the Member for Calgary-Elbow that we have made some cuts to that.

I'm tabling a quick facts sheet, and I have the requisite number of copies. It shows the government investments in this area, including the total budget for foster care over the past three years, the number of approved foster and kinship homes, and additional investments in training. The March 2015 budget proposed by the third party reduced foster care funding to $163 million while our 2015 fall budget included a $7.5 million increase for foster care supports to make it $170.5 million. As part of Budget 2015 approximately $1.4 million of additional funding addressed the increase in monthly respite costs and annual vacation allowances provided to caregivers. Caregivers also received an additional $50 per month for respite support, increasing respite days from once to twice a month.

The Speaker: Hon. member, there's no need to read the document. You simply could table it for the House.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you. Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that there were no cuts made to Human Services for foster care.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Minister of Treasury Board and Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table two reports. The first is the requisite number of copies of the 2016-17 second-quarter fiscal update and economic statement.

The second is the requisite number of copies of the 2016-17 second-quarter Alberta heritage savings trust fund report.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of the report I talked about in question period. Although the Health minister does not like the source, she cannot deny the results. As a matter of fact, her own information supports the same. We are now second last in wait times in Canada.

The Speaker: Hon. member, the same speech I gave to the minister.

Mr. Barnes: Five copies showing that access to a waiting list is not access to health care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the five copies required of a letter from the Lacombe county reeve, referred to by the leader during question period, in which the reeve asked the government to provide all relevant information to all citizens of Alberta regarding the financial impact of the proposed carbon levy. Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table five copies of a document from the October edition of Windpower Monthly. This paper recently named our very own Minister of Environment and Parks as one of the world's most influential renewables policy-makers. Investors around the world know that Alberta is open for business when it comes to renewable energy.

The Speaker: The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of the document that I referenced during question period, entitled Spending Decisions Backgrounder, from the Saskatchewan Department of Finance. No speech.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the requisite five copies of three articles referenced in my member's statement today: Nearly 50 per cent of Alberta entrepreneurs may lay off people in [the] next 3 months; Alberta small business confidence wavers; and Three-quarters of Alberta entrepreneurs oppose expedited phase-out of coal generated electricity.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Why, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of the document I referenced during question period, which, I'm sure, will be of great interest to the Minister of Finance: the public sector accounting standards, concepts and principles, section PS 1000 to 1300, which very clearly define liabilities. I have the requisite five copies and look forward to a long, thoughtful discussion with the Minister of Finance about the same.

The Speaker: Government House Leader, you have a request?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would respectfully request the unanimous consent of the House to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this House a number of distinguished guests. Denise Pelletier is an HR practitioner, author, speaker, and traumatic brain injury survivor. She is a strong advocate for helmet use on ATVs. Joining her today is her father, Leo Pelletier. Brent Hodgson is the president of the Alberta Off Highway Vehicle Association, which is dedicated to providing motorized recreational opportunities and which advocates for the safe use of off-highway vehicles. Laura Nelson is the executive director of the Farm Safety Centre, which promotes safe agricultural practices and also supports the use of helmets on off-highway vehicles. I would ask that Denise, Brent, and Laura rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, I hesitate to mention it, but it is 3 o'clock, and we are ready to go to Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day

Motions for Returns

Primary Care Networks Review

M22. Mr. Barnes moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of documents or reports prepared by or on behalf of the government, excluding documents that constitute confidential advice to the minister and excluding data and information that is specific to an individual or a specific primary care network, from May 22, 2015, to March 7, 2016, pertaining to the financial review of primary care networks conducted by the Minister of Health, as referenced during consideration of the Ministry of Health's main estimates on November 16, 2015.

[Debate adjourned November 7: Mr. Cooper speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to what is a very important question. The challenge is, Mr. Speaker, that we've heard from the government that what they intend to do is to amend the question to ask the question that they want to answer, not the question that's helpful for Albertans to know but, clearly, the question that they would have preferred my hon. colleague to ask.

As you know, we had a chance to speak briefly about this a couple of weeks ago. We have this continued trend of lack of accountability on behalf of this government. This government, when they were the fourth party – I remember the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood standing in this very place, a little bit to the left of me, which really should have been a lot to the left of me, but he stood in his place on numerous occasions and spoke to questions just like this. The government of the day, the now third party, used to do this exact same thing.

This government, Mr. Speaker, while running for election, often promised that they wouldn't ever be like the previous government. Now we see them doing the exact same thing, and that is trying to hide information that's critically important to Albertans with respect to their health care. As you can see, the question is with respect to the financial review of primary health care networks that was conducted by the Minister of Health when we were at main estimates on November 16 last year.

It's incredible to me that throughout this process the time to get information is so delayed. We've seen this government delay FOIP requests. We saw the FOIP commissioner, the Privacy Commissioner, just two weeks ago make some very, very significant claims and express some significant concern around the direction that this government is going.

The Speaker: Are there other members who wish to speak to Motion for a Return 22?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to close debate.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As my colleague has just clearly outlined, here we have a government saying one thing in opposition and now clearly wanting to answer a question that doesn't fully involve what was asked and what we were looking for.

Why it's so critical, why it's so important to have internal working order documents for this government: the first reason is primary care. How often do we hear that acute care, that hospitals and our front-line workers are great and necessary, but they're not the answer? They're not answer to improving many, many Albertans' quality of life. They're not the answer to wellness and prevention and mental health and all those things that we spend hours and hours debating and tens and tens of thousands of taxpayers' dollars on. Here we had an opportunity for the government to show us – to show us – you know, what they're considering, what their plans are, if any. Maybe that's what they're hiding, but we'll let Albertans decide.

It dates back to how these primary care networks were set up, Mr. Speaker, by the last government. The idea of our great doctors and our mental health people and our dietitians and our physiotherapists and our allied health people, as I hear them called, doing so much for Albertans: I'm told now that the idea was to put these different primary care networks throughout the province and let them develop independently so they could all work on their strengths and their own individual ideas.

But, Mr. Speaker, so much of the criticism of them has been that that at times has failed because what has been best practice in one area was not shared with another. Then we've looked at a situation where: did Albertans, did the taxpayer, who was so willing to pay for this, you know, to help somebody with mental health or wellness or prevention, get the value that they could have achieved otherwise? That's why those internal working documents would have been so crucial. They could have showed us that the government actually cared, cared about helping Albertans and cared about value for our hard-earned tax dollars. Instead, we have a situation where the government is clawing back surpluses, they're not clawing back surpluses. Are they communicating? Are they reaching out to primary care networks? Who knows? Obviously, this government doesn't want to tell us.

I would ask all my colleagues to vote against the question as amended, and I would ask this government to please provide the information to truly help Albertans, all Albertans, with those things that are past the acute care and the emergency care but those things that can truly make a difference. A good start would be sharing internal working documents with the 87 representatives of Alberta's 4.3 million people.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion for a Return 22 as amended lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:07 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

[Motion for a Return 22 as amended lost]

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, just one clarification. The division that was just called was on the amendment?

The Speaker: Motion for a Return 22 as amended.
The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Calgary Emergency Medical Services

M23. Mr. Barnes moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of internal working documents or reports prepared by or on behalf of the government between May 22, 2015, and March 7, 2016, pertaining to the review conducted by the Minister of Health into the decision to incorporate Calgary emergency medical services into a central dispatch system, as referenced during Oral Question Period on December 8, 2015.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I feel this is a very, very important question. It gets to the heart of local decision-making, it gets to the heart of communication and consulting between the provincial government and the duly elected representatives of our municipalities, and it gets at the heart of value for hard-earned tax dollars.

We maybe all remember the story of the building that Alberta Health Services leased for EMS in Calgary and then basically never occupied it for that reason, and now the building appears to be drastically underutilized. I think the number was $60 million that it's going to cost Alberta taxpayers over the next five years. That number is not drastically underutilized.

You know, we have this system where – and I'll just talk about it in a big way for a second. We're spending over 21 and a half billion dollars this year. I think the NDP government is already $260 million over budget, and the costs grow and grow. At the same time, on their own websites and by independent third parties the results are slipping. We are finishing more and more consistently in the bottom of the pack when it comes to wait times, when it comes to transplants, when it comes to emergency response.

What better way, Mr. Speaker, for the government to engage all Albertans and maybe particularly the 87 of us that sit in here with the opportunity to discuss what works, how we could make it better? Clearly, what works in this case is what the Mayor of Calgary said some time ago, and that was: let Calgarians, let local people, best allocate resources to needs.

It's also clear that there was some miscommunication, some uncertainty between the ministry and Alberta Health Services. They seem to be on different pages. Alberta Health Services wanted to move towards centralization. The minister seemed less sure. How confusing for local decision-makers. Mr. Speaker, that would be bad enough if it was a road or electricity or something that would be necessary for making our economy stronger, but, my goodness, this is life and death. This is EMS services.

It is clear now that certain plans were in the works that were not compatible with the goals of local decision-making. We've kind of backtracked. We're kind of in this no-man's-land, and we can't stay there, especially when we've leased a building that is millions of dollars and is now underutilized, especially when there is some uncertainty on the best way to help Calgarians.

There's a review under way, apparently. The Minister of Health promised that, but we need to see the evidence of if this review is under way and what it's looking into. Then, of course, Mr. Speaker, maybe the most pertinent step: we need to share this information with the public. That sunlight, that transparency is what will lead to a better system, is what will lead to cost savings, is what will lead to helping Albertans. I think it's only fair that communities that have been grossly and greatly affected by centralization have the exact same access to information that the government does so they can look at the process and see where they fit in, to see how they could help more Albertans, more Calgarians.

3:30

You know, if the minister is reviewing this information, Albertans, especially Calgarians, need to see what the minister sees on matters like this that have a direct impact on their community, a direct impact on their families, a direct impact on their neighbours and friends, the information, Mr. Speaker, pertaining to the review conducted by the Minister of Health into the decision to incorporate Calgary emergency medical services into a centralized dispatch system and the miscommunication around what the city of Calgary wants, the miscommunication between Alberta Health Services and the Minister of Health and all of us with the goal in mind of working together, of making it so Albertans and Calgarians are truly served as best as they can be with our limited tax dollars. So, Mr. Speaker, I will ask all my colleagues in the House to please support the following motion, and I look forward to receiving this pertinent, necessary information from our government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite has filed a motion relating to the incorporation of Calgary EMS into a central dispatch system. On behalf of the Minister of Health I move that Motion for a Return 23 be amended as follows: (a) by striking out the phrase "internal working" and (b) by adding "excluding documents that constitute confidential advice to the minister" after "government."

The amended motion for a return would read as follows: that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of documents or reports prepared by or on behalf of the government, excluding documents that constitute confidential advice to the minister, between May 22, 2015, and March 7, 2016, pertaining to the review conducted by the Minister of Health into the decision to incorporate Calgary emergency medical services into a central dispatch system, as referenced during Oral Question Period on December 8, 2015.

I am proposing this amendment to reflect our responsibilities under FOIP section 22(1) regarding cabinet and Treasury Board confidences.

The Minister of Health has been unwavering on her statement that she's going to make the right decision for Calgary and the province. Our government is very proud of the respectful and collaborative relationship it has with the city of Calgary, and the minister has heard the mayor's valid points about the plan as it was implemented by the previous government. The Minister of Health has directed AHS to pause on the changes to EMS while we negotiate an effective shared solution that will improve EMS dispatch in Calgary and its surrounding communities. I am very optimistic that Albertans will get better emergency response service as a result of these negotiations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there other members who would like to speak to the amendment as proposed by the Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Health? To the amendment, Cypress-Medicine Hat?

Mr. Barnes: To the amendment, please, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. I'm against this. I'm surprised that again the current government is trying to hide behind hopes, and hope is not an acceptable strategy.

Just a short time ago the Privacy Commissioner outlined how freedom of information requests are apparently slower and, you know, more infringed upon than even the last government's. My goodness, when is this government going to learn that it's Albertans' system, it's Calgarians' system? I said it earlier. If we put some sunlight, some transparency on the internal working documents, not the confidential advice but the internal working documents – let's see what we're looking at. Let's see how we can get more value for Albertans and for Calgarians, and let's see how we can get better service.

We've seen a government that says that it's going to do it differently, says that it's going to do it better, but we're not seeing that, Mr. Speaker. So I would strongly encourage all of my colleagues in the House that are not part of cabinet to vote against – to vote against – this amendment and ask the government to provide more information so when we return to our constituencies, many of which, of course, are in Calgary, we have more complete, robust, and wholesome answers, that we can tell Calgarians, as to where their tax dollars are going and how we can make the system better.

Again, I just feel the need to say once more that we see report after report showing how Alberta's system is slipping, how where we used to be the top in transplants and waiting times and those kind of things, we're now last or second last in spite – in spite – of good, good front-line workers, in spite of over $21 billion of taxpayers' money put into the system. You know, maybe the thing that is lacking is the transparency, the chance for some sunshine and some innovation.

So please, colleagues, vote against this amendment, and let's try to make Alberta better for all Albertans. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to support my colleague in his advocacy to have members of the Assembly vote against this particular amendment. I'd just like to highlight an article, that I'll be happy to table in the House, that I think speaks to the culture that's being created in this government and a lack of desire for transparency and openness to providing information.

I know that while I may have forgotten exactly where we were in the process recently, I know that you'll remember from a few weeks ago, while I was chatting about the ability that the House has to call for documents – I get that the deputy deputy deputy House leader rose and suggested that there were issues around caucus confidentiality. But the fact of the matter is that the Assembly has the ability to require the production of those documents if the Assembly has the will, and while cabinet may not have a significant desire, it's in the ability of the House to call upon cabinet to produce those documents. All it takes is a few private members to go ahead and support that desire. I'd encourage those members of the Assembly particularly who aren't in cabinet to support that, to support openness and transparency because the decisions that cabinet makes are important to all Albertans – not just to the government and not just to the bureaucracy but to all Albertans – so that ought to be shared with everyone.

As I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, this document speaks to the culture that's being created in the government, a culture that doesn't encourage transparency and openness but does the opposite. And I'll be happy to table the document that I referenced. It is a CBC article dated October 27, 2016. The headline is FOIP Commissioner Orders Investigation of Alberta Justice.

While I recognize that here we're speaking about a motion for a return with respect to the Minister of Health and we see the Minister of Health dodging, in many respects a motion for a return or a written question is much like a FOIP request except that the opposition or, in this case, my hon. colleague the private Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat shouldn't have to jump through all of the same sort of hoops. Mr. Speaker, if you've put any FOIP requests in, I'm sure you'll see that there are a lot of them – a lot of hoops, that is – that often result in an initial: no; we won't tell you that. Then there's a significant amount of appeal process and so on and so forth. That shouldn't be the case inside the Chamber, but here we have it; it is.

This culture that's being created – and I'll mention specifically the document, where it says:

Alberta's freedom of information commissioner has ordered an investigation into whether Alberta Justice wilfully attempted to mislead or obstruct the commissioner, or altered or falsified a record to evade FOIP requests.

Now, the Privacy and FOIP Commissioner, in ordering the investigation, accepted a recommendation from the former Nova Scotia FOIP commissioner, who is actually having to adjudicate the inquiry because it could be putting the FOIP commissioner, who essentially reports to Justice, in a bit of a bind.

Now, in this case the FOIP commissioner's request for the investigation is specific to tobacco litigation, but in a letter released to the CBC, Clayton said that she had opened up an offence file and retained a certain Edmonton private investigator to conduct the investigation.

Clayton said her office would usually contact special prosecutions at Alberta Justice at the outset of an investigation and arrange to meet with a designated Crown ... [but] said that in this case, "I don't see how my office can work with a designated Crown prosecutor from Alberta Justice since any potential offences may involve Alberta Justice, who would be in a conflict advising my office."

Therefore, by separate letter she's requested that the Minister of Justice and Sol Gen appoint an independent special prosecutor to work with her office.

This is exactly the type of problem that we have with this government and, quite frankly, the former government as well, but when this government was elected, Albertans were hoping that they would see a change. I know that my colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake has spent some significant amount of time working to try and ensure that access to information can be granted, but what we see is more roadblocks being put up by that.

Mr. Speaker, I actually believe that we put a FOIP request around this particular issue with respect to the documents and internal working documents but had limited success there, so we thought: "Well, you know what? This government believes in openness and transparency, or at least that's what they told everyone. Why don't we go ahead and do a motion for a return? I'm sure they'll be happy to provide the information." Unfortunately, that's not what we have seen. We've seen this government doing exactly what they're doing in Justice, in the words of this particular journalist – and I'll just double-check to make sure – when they asked the question "whether Alberta Justice wilfully attempted to mislead or obstruct the commissioner, or altered or falsified a record to evade FOIP requests." These are significant and serious claims, and it was a big enough concern to the Privacy Commissioner that she went ahead and wrote this letter and so on and so on.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps the next time I'll be able to speak about this issue of the government not doing the right thing. Just last week we saw the Privacy Commissioner make statements that she didn't feel like she should have to order a government body to follow the law. I look forward to referencing the exact quote from the Privacy Commissioner because one thing I know for certain is that the Privacy Commissioner is doing her job with respect to trying to get information to Albertans. It certainly appears that this government isn't doing their job in respecting the FOIP process, and now we see them not respecting the Assembly in the way in which they ought.

I strongly encourage members of this House to vote against this amendment, and I strongly encourage members of this House to think about not just my words, Mr. Speaker, because I know that oftentimes the government objects to things that I say, but about an independent commissioner of the Assembly who has very similar, strong words directed at this government. It's my hope that they will take that into consideration as they oppose this amendment. Should they accept the amendment, I hope that what we don't see is the government making a decision to then oppose the question altogether and not provide any information, as we saw in the last question.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other individuals who would like to speak to the amendment?

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: Are there any other speakers to the original motion as amended?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to close.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Things have been kind of interesting in here this afternoon. If I've got it figured out, it seems like the government, the NDP caucus, will – you know, should I be happy with maybe just getting part of what I asked for, or should I encourage a system where the government closes the door totally on transparency and openness of the system, which is what just happened in that last vote? We saw a government that totally turned down an opportunity to provide a little information. To provide a little information. [interjections] We're still confused over here.

The Speaker: Through the chair, please.

Mr. Barnes: I guess, you know, we'd like to have as much information as possible. We'd like to have the government be open and transparent. We'd like to reduce or eliminate articles like the one my hon. colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills talked about, where the government was totally castigated and criticized for being worse than the previous government for openness and FOIP and transparency.

My goodness, in my four and a half years of being in here, it surprises me that we have to FOIP information as much as we do. It surprises me. It surprises me that, for the benefit of the people I represent, for the benefit of Albertans, we are not given more information so that we can make the system better for all, again, especially in this case, where there were the three entities involved – the city of Calgary, Alberta Health Services, and the ministry – that had huge, huge communication difficulties all the time. Tens of thousands of taxpayers' dollars were being spent on a near empty building.

You know, here we are. I guess I'll just sit back and see what the government decides to do, but again I would ask each and every one of you to vote according to providing more openness, more sunshine, more transparency to all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 23 as amended carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Alberta Health Services Lawsuits

M24. Mr. Barnes moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a list of lawsuits in which Alberta Health Services was, as of March 31, 2011, named as a defendant, indicating the cause of action and amount of damages claimed.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. For a number of reasons I feel this is a very, very pertinent, very, very important question. First of all, in my constituency office a number of people come in and talk, usually with a lot of care and concern for neighbours, friends, and loved ones, about lack of access, lack of surgery opportunities, wondering why, then wondering sometimes whether it's pharmaceutical situations and wondering how they can truly make the system better. Some speak a lot about how they end up going to Montana, to Kalispell and Great Falls, because they want to return to productive lives, and they can't wait the length of time that the rationing of Alberta Health Services has caused. So they go to Montana and spend tens of thousands of dollars to get their surgery done.

Mr. Speaker, the ones that really, you know, make me think longer and harder are the ones that feel that they've been so wronged, they go to a lawyer. They actually go to the extent to file a claim, to spend money, to cause that extra stress and concern on their family. When it's gotten to that point, it's a situation where we, as the people that are given the oversight of the system by Alberta voters, if we had this information, could really help make the system better.

I'm sure there are a myriad of solutions and answers, whether it's back to the primary care networks, where we direct an Albertan to an allied health worker, whether it's mental health or a dietitian or physiotherapy. Maybe it's a system of ensuring that our good front-line workers, whether they're nurses or doctors or aides, have the opportunity to understand something better. This is the kind of information that those of us that aren't in cabinet and government – and that's the vast, vast majority of us. If we had this, we could truly make the system better. We could help Albertans not go through that stress, that monetary setback of having to go in a direction that I'm sure they do with only the most seriousness of thought and concern.

Mr. Speaker, I'll ask all my colleagues that are here today to ask that this question be answered, to please, please support this, with the idea that, once again, sunshine is the best way to make the system better. Openness and transparency will help all Albertans, and in the last three or four motions for returns the government's desire not to do that is very concerning, as highlighted by the press, as highlighted by other speakers. I will ask my colleagues to do the right thing and provide as much information to all Albertans as we can.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other individuals who wish to speak to Motion for a Return 24 as moved by the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Health I move to reject Motion for a Return 24. The motion asked to return a list of lawsuits in which Alberta Health Services was, as of March 31, 2011, named as a defendant, indicating the cause of action and the amount of damages claimed. Any lawsuits filed against AHS in the Alberta courts are generally matters of public record and could be sought by the opposition outside of the Assembly. Generating this list and a description of each lawsuit would require considerable resources that could better be used elsewhere to support our health system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Speaking to the amendment?

Mr. Cooper: There's no amendment, but I'll speak to the main question because they just rejected the question, which is what they regularly do, reject accountability, responsibility. It's not my words. It's the Privacy Commissioner's, the FOIP commissioner's, who I may have been paraphrasing. They are equally as strong. I will be happy to table a document, Mr. Speaker, an article from November 23, just last week. The headline reads this: Access to Information in Alberta Nearing 'Crisis Situation,' FOIP Commissioner Says.

We have very important business before the House that has to do with the liabilities that the government is responsible for in terms of the number of people that may or may not be seeking legal action against AHS, and there is one organization that has the ability to provide this information. Every single lawsuit isn't published. You can't google every single lawsuit. It is not possible to know every time the government is named in a lawsuit, so my colleague merely asks a question that would provide information to Albertans. What and how many lawsuits has the government been named in as a defendant? It doesn't ask for all of the details of everything to do with those lawsuits as some of that would likely not be admissible, but it asks for a list of lawsuits in which AHS was named as a defendant.

You know, Mr. Speaker, this is about the government knowing exactly what Alberta Health Services is up to, and while AHS being sued isn't always an indication of whether or not they've been doing a good job or a bad job, it can give some idea of the number of claims that are on the increase or decrease. It can give an idea of whether or not we are moving in the right direction. It can help us take the temperature of what Albertans are feeling. Instead, the government decides: no, we won't provide you any information.

Now, I know that the government two weeks ago passed an amendment to ask the question that they wanted to answer and then voted against the amendment that they had passed. That can be confusing. What they are choosing to do is to not provide information to Albertans. In not just AHS, but also in virtually every area of the government we see this.

As the FOIP commissioner has said, access to information is at a near "crisis situation." A quote from Ms Clayton: "What I do know is that Albertans are not receiving timely responses (or any response, in some cases) to their requests for access to information." Clayton wrote: "I am calling on this government, and public bodies in all sectors, to reverse the course we are on."

All that we're doing here is asking this government to act on the words of the FOIP commissioner and reverse the course that we're on. Mr. Speaker, I know that this afternoon we're going to see a number of situations, including around information with respect to Bill 6, which is now a year old and the consultations are yet to be completed, including some areas of the agriculture industry, education, and human services and some other things that the independent Member for Calgary-Elbow is interested in, a consistent pattern of doing exactly what the FOIP commissioner has said not to do; that's to provide no response at all, which is exactly what's happening to my hon. colleague. He's going to receive, in some cases, no information at all, just as the FOIP commissioner mentioned.

She went on to say, in that same article from just last week, "I do not believe I should have to order public bodies to comply with a clear obligation under the law." Mr. Speaker, agencies and departments of government have a requirement to provide information to Albertans.

This government is on a very disturbing trend of not providing any information, as we see in this question and as we saw in question 22. The government has determined that they don't want to reverse this dangerous course that we're on, that they don't want to provide any information to this House, not just to public bodies but to the Legislative Assembly, the body that represents all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very troubling trend. I know that I've spoken at length about it because it's something that I care a lot about. I care about the ability of Albertans to have access to information that is important to them. I care about Albertans having access to information that gives some indication of the work that AHS or other bodies are doing. I care about access to information around human services.

We had a case in the House just last week where the government said one thing and did another. They said that the Child and Youth Advocate had been getting updates when they hadn't. It is a major, major problem and a major obstacle that this government is going to face if they don't respect Albertans and their ability and need to have access to information.

We're not asking for the moon when we ask for a list of lawsuits where AHS is named. We're not asking for every detail around that lawsuit. We're merely asking for the ones where they're named as a defendant, the cause of the action, and the amount of damages claimed, not even who's asking the question or not even who's filing the lawsuit, but just the information that AHS is responsible for.

I know that the government has a track record of ducking and weaving around information that AHS has and what they should and should not be responsible for. Sometimes it's AHS's fault, and sometimes it's not. Here we have another case just like that.

Mr. Speaker, it's my hope that members of the backbenches, who are filling the vast majority of the Chamber today, would not reject this question but require the minister and, in turn, AHS to actually answer the question that is important to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just thought I would stand up and engage in some of the conversation around privacy and what the government can and cannot do and what the government is doing in regard to this particular amendment and the issues around discussion about Alberta Health Services being able to have records provided to the opposition around their court cases.

My understanding when I look at the government of Alberta is that there are ministries within the government of Alberta that have the capacity to share information when it's public record. Justice would be considered one of those ministries that can disclose information when there is litigation in place. So if we're looking at Alberta Health Services and we're discussing whether or not there are potential lawsuits in place, that is public record. That is not under Health but, in fact, under Justice.

I would encourage the opposition, when we're talking about these things, to make sure that we're actually talking about them in what the capacity of the government is. The capacity of the government is, of course, to release information when requested through Justice about potential litigation. That can already be happening with the Alberta Health Services request, and as the minister correctly said, this request is only a matter of asking Justice to release the information around the litigation.

I would also like to caution the opposition that when we talk about the legislative officer in the context of privacy breaching and not providing FOIP requests when required, this request under this motion is not actually something that would have to be under a FOIP request. This would be something where you would just specifically go and look on the registry of Justice and see that there is potential litigation. It is a matter of just researching what Alberta Health Services may or may not be involved with within the justice system.

Again, I would be looking at defeating this motion in the context of: this information is relevant, it is open to the public, and it can be done at any time if the opposition so chooses to request those records.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to Motion for a Return 24?

Seeing and hearing none, I would give the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat an opportunity to close debate.

Mr. Barnes: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two overwhelming thoughts I'm sitting here with. First of all, this is not about providing the information to the opposition; this is clearly about providing it to Albertans. The FOIP process can be expensive and cumbersome. Let's just make it so that they have direct connection to their system. After all, it's Albertans' system.

My other thought is almost scary. I'm sitting here thinking that if they can't provide basic information on lawsuits, the cause of action and the amount of damages claimed, my goodness, maybe it's because there are too many lawsuits. Maybe the people of Alberta are in huge financial jeopardy and risk with the amount of lawsuits. But, my goodness, how will we know? How will we know? The Alberta government is not willing to provide this in a clear and concise manner.

I wonder when Alberta Health Services – again, way past $21 billion annually now, when we look at it. You know, there's a management principle, Mr. Speaker: if you can't measure it, you can't manage it. As I said earlier, here we are in a system where Albertans, I'm sure the vast, vast majority of them, at the end of the line, where a loved one, a family member, a community member, as maybe the system has failed them, has fallen through the cracks, not had the access that we know our good front-line workers can provide, have gone to, you know, the extent of a retainer and a lawsuit and all those things, and our own government – our own government – can't easily provide this information. My goodness, how are we going to run $21 billion, over half of our revenues, over 40 per cent of our spending?

This transparency, this openness would allow Alberta Health Services and the Ministry of Health to do it better. Granted, okay, she's the minister. It's her prerogative to run the system her way, but I think there's a lot of trepidation, and there's a lot of, you know, peril ahead if you don't run it in an open and transparent way.

I will clearly say that the 2012 election was so different than the 2015 election. In 2012 at the doors Albertans wanted to be more involved in their government, wanted to be more open and more knowledgeable, more part of the process. Fewer Albertans falling through the cracks was a huge, huge concern. Maybe two years from now we'll be there again, and the government will feel the accountability of the voters.

Mr. Speaker, I ask all my colleagues that aren't the percentage that's part of cabinet to please make it so that Albertans can have access to this information – as my colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills has pointed out, it's just the cause of action and the amount of damages claimed – so that Albertans clearly know where the system is broken, where we can make it better, and what the extent of our liability and responsibility is.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 24 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Legal Aid and Self-represented Litigants

M25. Mr. Cyr moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of any studies or briefing notes prepared for the government between January 1, 2012, and February 29, 2016, regarding legal aid or self-represented litigants in Alberta.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, when we start talking about legal aid, this is something that we need to consider as one of the most vulnerable parts of Alberta's entire population: people that can't afford to defend themselves. This is something that has repeatedly seen news saying that it's underfunded and has some real strain within the system. To hear that the government is going to be rejecting this motion for a return is very distressing for myself. I would argue that a lot of Albertans would agree with me when I say that these briefings that are being put forward by the Alberta government should be made public so that we can have an understanding of exactly what needs to be fixed within legal aid.

Now, I will read from a CBC article posted July 15, 2014. It was called Legal Aid Funding to be Probed by Auditor General. This is an Auditor General being asked by our current Premier for a review of the legal aid system. A quote that she's got in that article – I'll go word for word – is:

I know Legal Aid is doing the best that it can with the ridiculously meager resources it has at its disposal.

But ultimately the best decision is to properly fund Legal Aid and that's a decision our justice minister needs to make, and that's a decision he's choosing not to.

Now, at this point we have seen our Minister of Justice putting money into legal aid, and I will applaud that decision, that we need to actually reinforce – I know this is a contentious issue because, in the end, putting money right now into anything is a huge concern for all of our taxpayers when we're running this much of a deficit. We're running, I believe . . .

Mr. Ceci: A $10.8 billion.

Mr. Cyr: Yes. Thank you, Minister of Finance.

... a $10.8 billion deficit.

Whenever we start to look at deficits this large, we do need to be making sure that every dollar we put forward is accounted for. That's why these briefings are so important, to find out how exactly it is that Alberta is spending its money. Are there efficiencies that we can find within the system? That actually is what I'm after. Is there something that we can go forward with?

Now, this is something that came up when I was working as an accountant. One concern that I would have is because my office would do low-income single parents' returns for free. What would happen is that we would get these low-income single parents coming into my office, and they would have some very distressing stories, and some of those were related to our legal system. Now, when it came to their situations, it was hard for them to move forward with their lives without resolving some of these concerns that they had.

I myself heard that the way legal aid works right now – and the government can correct me if I'm wrong – is that in order to apply for legal aid, you had to go several times before being accepted for it. That tells me that it may not be working the way that it's supposed to. It looks like what it's doing, from what I can see and through what my clients could see, was using that as a filter to avoid bringing people into the system. Whenever we've got something along that way saying, "Let's bring red tape into protecting our most vulnerable," that does seem to be a problem. That's why I'm saying that when it comes to these briefing notes, is this something that has been identified as a problem within the legal aid system, or are there some other problems that we're just not aware of?

Now, I do know that when it comes to legal aid, we're always looking to see how we can help people. That always seems to be the root of everything when it comes to legal aid. When we start looking at how we can help people, it's coming down to what studies we've done. I know I've been pounding on the government for economic impact studies. Well, this one here isn't an economic impact study. It's just a study that the government has already probably done on how the system is working – how the system is working – and on what needs to be improved and on who exactly is being impacted by the fact that we have people that may not be able to get legal aid.

Now, one thing that does trouble me – and it has been brought up by myself – is that when we do bring up the minimum wage, people working at minimum wage will no longer qualify for legal aid. This is a concern. If you're working for minimum wage, will you be able to continue moving forward? That's something that I believe would probably be in one of these briefs that we are asking for. It is amazing to see how one change the government can make will actually have an adverse impact on our most vulnerable. That is a concern that I have, that in the end we're not able to help people because we've set the bar too low, because the fact is that minimum wage is going up so rapidly.

We only find out this stuff after it's become a tragedy. We've seen this going through with the child advocate and the recent discovery with Serenity. We don't identify these problems until way too late, and then we start working on solutions way after the fact. This is the problem with the legal aid system. Are there systemic problems that need to be identified, and why are we not moving forward on this?

Now, many of you may not know this because this was something that we had done in our training session within the Legislature. Actually, legal aid was the very first question that I asked the Minister of Justice about. This is something that I myself have a deep interest in, making sure that legal aid is actually functioning the way it's supposed to. If it means that maybe funds aren't the problem here, then what is the problem, and how can we get to it?

I hear frustration. I hear frustration from all the stakeholders that have been involved with legal aid. It goes from the lawyers to the prosecutors and the actual vulnerable that are using the system. I also know that a lot of people right now in my riding are really having troubles because of the fact that they were making large amounts of money before and with this downturn are making no money, and they don't qualify for this because of their past incomes.

Now, I'm not unilaterally saying that we need to go in and increase legal aid's funding at the risk of going the other way. But that's why these briefs are so important to be actually going through. Why is it that the government is choosing not to release something as simple as briefs that are prepared? This is something that we, as all Albertans, should know. Is our system working? I will make the argument that, in the end – from the beginning, which is January 1, 2012, all the way up to February 29, 2016, we may see a progression of how legal aid has changed in the last four years. That progression: what exactly is it that the Alberta government is doing? Is it getting better? Is it getting worse? We won't know because, again, we don't have any of these briefings.

I encourage the government and the minister to release this and become transparent when it comes to legal aid. These are people in need, especially right now in the hard times that we're having.

When it comes to my riding right now, unfortunately ... [Mr. Cyr's speaking time expired]

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my hon. colleague the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General I stand today to respond to the motion for a return from the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of any studies or briefing notes prepared for the government between January 1, 2012, and February 29, 2016, regarding legal aid or self-represented litigants in Alberta.

Unfortunately, the motion is too broad to be accepted. If the ministry were to provide copies of all briefing notes and studies regarding legal aid or self-represented litigants, it would be inadvertently releasing personal information, waiving legal privilege, and jeopardizing security measures at courthouses.

First, self-represented litigants often have unique and complex issues. As a result, specific issues in cases may be discussed at length within the ministry, and releasing the accompanying documents would publicize the litigants' name and legal complications.

Furthermore, it is a reality that vexatious litigants tend to be self-represented. Therefore, some briefings concerning self-represented litigants provide advice on whether or not to seek a vexatious litigant application. My hon. colleague tells me that publicizing these briefings would in effect disavow the importance of the solicitor-client privilege in our judicial system.

Lastly, some self-represented litigants are also vexatious litigants who have persistently engaged in inappropriate courtroom behaviour. Security considerations are also outlined in some briefings.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I hesitate to interrupt; however, the time limit for consideration of this item of business today has concluded.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Equalization Program

509. Mr. Jean moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to complete and make public a report by August 31, 2017, that evaluates the current equalization formula and outlines the improvements the government will seek on behalf of Albertans when the equalization program is next renegotiated.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to stand up and present to this Legislative Assembly my very first private member's motion. I did have an opportunity to pass a private member's bill in Ottawa, and I remember it was with extreme interest for myself and my colleagues to be able to do a first private member's bill. It's a practice that didn't start all that long ago but certainly has evolved and that I think can only get better as time goes.

This particular motion is a motion to urge Albertans and this Assembly to move in a certain direction, and that direction is towards declaring ourselves on a national issue, an issue that takes much of the wealth out of Alberta and returns it to Ottawa, and in return we get no service back to that same value.

Many of you may not realize that we do have the opportunity to speak our mind on the national stage in relation to how our money is spent. Our Constitution is not very clear in relation to the formula itself, and there is an opportunity, therefore, to express ourselves, much like Quebec did in the last go-round. Every 10 years or so, depending on what is decided between the provinces and the federal government, there is the opportunity to discuss the renegotiation going forward. In this case we've got 2019, the next time the equalization will be changed, and we're just asking that the Legislative Assembly take seriously this motion and put forward an argument or a position of where Alberta is.

You've all heard me talk a lot about that this year. You know, I think the reason why I talk about it so much is because when I go from constituency to constituency, I hear Albertans clearly tell me that equalization is important to them. They think that since we sent somewhere between $22 billion and $28 billion a year between 2007 and 2014 to the federal Parliament, to the federal government, which we didn't get back by way of services, that gives us a pretty good position to negotiate from, especially when you consider that Quebec receives about $10 billion a year for equalization and Quebec has some services much less expensive than ours. In particular, I'm not sure if many of the members across the way know this, but in Quebec you actually have an opportunity to receive tuition as a student for almost half the price that it would cost an Alberta student. That means that somebody is subsidizing that or paying that amount, and in part it is Alberta.

Right now we have what I would consider to be one of the biggest downturns in Alberta's history as far as I've been alive, and it really concerns me. It concerns me especially when you consider that we have over a $10 billion deficit, and this government hasn't curbed its spending whatsoever, in fact increased it, not looked for any efficiencies in government at all. There is a tremendous opportunity, then, to move the other way, which is to say that compared to the rest of the country, we need to be treated the same.

Now, I know that to date the Finance minister and the NDP government have said that they are agnostic to equalization, but for Albertans I think it's an issue they care deeply about, and I would suggest that the minister take that into consideration. For any members, as I've said, that have travelled across the province in their constituency, whether it be in rural or urban Alberta, Albertans make it clear that they want to renegotiate the deal on equalization and get a better deal for Albertans, especially at this time.

I believe that's especially true because Albertans as a whole work hard. They pay taxes, they support their family, and right now they have a family member or a friend for sure that's unemployed. They're saying to themselves: why can't I get employment insurance? In Quebec 58 per cent of the people that apply for employment insurance are covered. In Alberta it's less than 40 per cent. In many of the maritime provinces it's over 90 per cent; if you apply, you get covered. You know, there are a lot of Albertans right now that are not just unemployed and their employment insurance has run out, but they weren't on employment insurance because they were private contractors and, therefore, weren't eligible for employment insurance.

While the Montreal mayor has been actively campaigning against our pipelines, the province of Quebec continues to enjoy many payouts as a direct result of the taxes generated here. This wealth is generated largely as a result of our petroleum industry, our oil and gas industry, our energy industry. They're being disingenuous when they won't exploit their own natural resources in the north, yet they're prepared to take the money from us, our hard-working Albertans who pay their taxes, pay their employment insurance benefits, send it to Ottawa but don't get services back in return.

As many of you know, many of these people, the men and women that work in the oil sands and elsewhere around Alberta, do pay taxes in other provinces. It's definitely something to consider. I do believe that Albertans are deeply compassionate and very interested in helping the rest of Canada when times are tough, but we need to follow through and put our best position forward, especially considering that the federal government right now is spending a lot of money on a lot of projects, and that money comes from Alberta at a time when we simply don't have it.

We're going to continue to pay, my understanding is, equalization payments even while we're in this deficit, even while we have over a hundred thousand Albertans that are unemployed. You know, some people think that it's just numbers, but somebody has to pay it back. By the time this government is finished, at the trend they're going, it will be the people of Alberta that pay back over $2 billion a year in interest payments. Two billion dollars a year in interest payments: that's $2,000 a household just to pay the interest at the current rates.

So it's not a laughing matter, and I think that what we need to do is make sure that during this period of time we find as many efficiencies as possible but also put our best foot forward to the federal government in negotiating what I think could be a tremendous opportunity for this entire Legislative Assembly. I truly think we could move forward with an opportunity to work together and to create an environment where Ottawa would actually take notice.

Last year at this time at our AGM our members passed a resolution to ask for us to do this. In February our caucus convened an advisory committee of three economists from across Canada: one from Alberta, one from Ontario, and one from eastern Canada. They came up with that amount, and the study is online if you want to see it. It does actually indicate that between 2007 and 2014 Alberta did send about $190 billion to Ottawa that we didn't get back in any form of service. That's an average of over $20 billion a year, and it's more than 10 times the value of our heritage savings trust fund. Primarily, that money appeared as a result of our exploiting our natural resources. That's $6,000 more per person per year than we send to Ottawa through things like taxes, CPP deductions, EI premiums, and they don't come back to Alberta by way of programs or infrastructure.

The fact is that whether it's pipeline approvals or infrastructure investments or CPP benefits that even reflect what we get for seniors in Alberta, it doesn't seem like we are getting our fair share, and we're still paying. We've never seen, I believe, more people out of work in this province than are out of work right now. I really do implore this government to negotiate and negotiate hard, to bring together a committee of like-minded MLAs that could put forward a good argument. I would suggest that there's never been a more important time.

It is designed for the opportunity for all Canadians to benefit in our natural resources indirectly, and I think that's contrary to the Constitution. Notwithstanding, there is a clause within the Constitution that defines the amount we pay based upon the room for taxation, or the fiscal capacity. That doesn't mean overtax us any more than you already have done, but it does mean that the formula itself fails to acknowledge what the recipient provinces are providing by way of either hydro rates or subsidization for babysitting, and it doesn't take into consideration the fact that there are higher costs in Alberta as a result of sometimes a boom. That's gone now, but it means that costs are higher here for the things that we need such as babysitting or other services that we as parents or homeowners or businesses have to pay. In Quebec we have a situation where the electricity bills are subsidized. I think it's wrong. Even in Manitoba the same thing exists.

In essence, that's not considered in any equalization calculation; it is exempted. Our oil and gas, our oil sands are not exempted, and once we burn it, it's gone. So there's certainly a situation there that we believe is unfair. Even over the entire country other experts have stepped forward and suggested that the equalization formula needs to be renegotiated, and other provinces have as well, including Saskatchewan, who is right next door to us. There is also an opportunity to reach out to Saskatchewan and talk to their minister, talk about that we as two provinces have a lot in common, more in common than most jurisdictions, that we could work together and try to improve our position with the federal government. We can't afford the status quo any longer because we're not going to be in the same situation that we were in just a number of years ago for a long time.

This would be an opportunity, I know, to reach out to other caucuses or to other governments right across the provinces. We have even opposition parties in Ontario and other parts of eastern Canada that are interested in a fairer deal. We do have an opportunity to build not just strategic partnerships on legislation that might be to our advantage in negotiating with the federal government but also, as like-minded people across our country, in bringing in legislation that will help the people. We've seen, for instance, that Saskatchewan has a much better issue of wait times in the health care system than does Alberta, and there are some opportunities there to adopt that model instead of continuing to pour money into the existing model.

As I mentioned before, I think it's important as well because we can truly expect that Quebec will probably bring forward a position paper this time as well since they did last time, and I think it's incumbent upon us to represent the people of Alberta and put forward a good argument on how to reduce equalization payments from Alberta and all of those other payments that we need to worry about. I truly believe that when we send tens of billions of dollars to Ottawa that we don't get back in services and other provinces receive that money instead, I don't think it's fair when we have people living on the streets.

I went to Grande Cache just a few weeks ago, and there I met a gentleman and his wife that had to live in their vehicle. I don't know why we have people living on our streets and living in their cars who would rather live in houses when we're still sending billions of dollars to Ottawa. I'd rather see them employed and living in an apartment or a house and building up their life.

Truly, by supporting this motion, you could reach out to your constituents and show them that you're actually working for them and interested in keeping more dollars in Alberta. You talk about that as a government in relation to upgrading and refining capacity. Why not just straight cash and income tax and CPP benefits and EI benefits that go one way and don't come back the other?

This is an opportunity, in conclusion, for all parties to come together and say, "We in Alberta right now need your help, Ottawa," because we do. I know that you stay a lot in downtown Edmonton, but if you get out to Calgary and see the 40 per cent vacancy in residential, the 25-plus per cent vacancy in commercial in towns like Hanna or Grande Cache, Parkland county, where people are very worried, this would be a good signal to them.

I would encourage this government to come forward and support this motion. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to rise in the House today to talk about how our government stands up for Alberta's interests and actually gets things done. The folks on the other side of the House are all about talking and tweeting, but when it comes to actually getting things done for this province, they get nowhere.

Today the topic is equalization – and I'll get to that in a moment – but I do think it's curious that the Leader of the Official Opposition wants to raise an issue on which he was virtually silent when he was in Ottawa. For nearly a decade, Mr. Speaker, he represented Alberta in Parliament and sat in a desk behind the Prime Minister from Calgary. What happened on equalization?

An Hon. Member: Nothing.

Mr. Ceci: Absolutely nothing.

The Leader of the Opposition could be forgiven if he was out there fighting the good fight every day, but he wasn't. In his decade in Ottawa with the Prime Minister from Calgary he mentioned equalization once in the House and twice in committees. He sat on the Finance Committee for nearly a thousand days, and he mentioned equalization a single time. Not much of a record. The success of the former Conservative government on moving forward on their hobby horse is equal to their success in getting pipelines built to increase international markets at tidewater. You would think that after all that time and all that talk and so little success, they would have even an ounce of humility, but instead they puff up their chests and they let the rhetoric fly like the last decade didn't even happen.

Let's talk about our record. Our government is focused on working with the federal government and other provincial partners to get results that help Albertans right now. Our government signed an agreement with the federal government to make $1.08 billion in funding for infrastructure available through the federal public transit infrastructure fund and the clean water and waste-water fund. That means getting roads, bridges, transit, and other infrastructure projects built to create jobs now. We are working with other provinces to get a new agreement on health care funding, Mr.

Speaker. We are working with the federal government for approval on much-needed pipelines so we can get Alberta's oil to market.

People on the other side are very excited about the possibilities of getting the Keystone XL project built now. They are ready to hang a mission-accomplished banner along the border, believing the work is done now. If it gets built, it will be helpful, but it does not solve the biggest problem that our industry has. It does not stop the fact that we are selling our product at a discount every time we ship out a barrel of oil. We need those pipelines built in Canada, and from coast to coast we need those pipelines built so that oil flows to China and other markets and we get full value for our product. If pipelines to offshore markets get built, it also means we have some leverage with our American customers. We also have to recognize that there is a huge risk of unintended consequences if we open up the issue of federal transfers to the provinces.

Equalization is a comparatively small part of the federal transfers. It's a comparatively small part. In the 2016-17 budget the federal government sent just over $49.4 billion to the provinces through the Canadian health transfer and the Canadian social transfer. The federal government is paying out nearly $7.3 billion of those transfers to our province to help pay for health care and other services Alberta families need. By contrast, less than $18 billion is available through equalization. The per capita system for these transfers helps Alberta. If we begin an argument for significant change to equalization, it opens the door to a broader conversation that could be very, very bad for Alberta.

Any good strategy that deals with transfers needs to consider all of the pots of funding, not just one. That's why my colleague the Minister of Health is fighting hard for better funding for health. That's what is in Alberta's interests, not engaging in the hack-and-slash approach to health care that the Leader of the Opposition is pushing for now.

As for the report released by the opposition, it's little more than a bashing exercise to other provinces. Think about that for a second. In 2019 we are going to enter into complicated multilateral negotiations, and the Official Opposition's plan, if you can call it that, is to poke any potential allies in the eye even before those talks begin. That gives you a little insight as to why the Conservatives have failed so miserably in getting anything meaningful done for this province.

We believe in fighting for Albertans' interests, but we believe in doing so in a way that is based on results and not just headlines. We will get our share of the federal infrastructure funding. We will work with the federal government to get pipelines built to improve access to markets. We will continue to fight for new funding agreements for health care. When the time comes – when the time comes – we will make sure Alberta gets its share of transfers. We'll do so in working together respectfully and collaboratively and like adults. But we refuse to cherry-pick and pick one issue in isolation without looking at all the other issues that are at stake. Looking out for Alberta's interests means working with our partners and toning down the rhetoric. We refuse to engage in the opposition tactics, Mr. Speaker, which are loud, misguided, and an unqualified failure.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak on this motion about equalization payments, and I note with interest that the member opposite, the Minister of Finance, presided over a period of time in Calgary where the increase in taxes was almost double the rate of inflation. It's interesting to see that he's found a way to become so prudent in his spending.

But let's get to some more details about the issue at hand. What we should be talking about here is the entire system of transfer payments from the federal government to the provinces and territories rather than just the equalization payments in isolation. That gives us a more fulsome picture of the topic at hand. As you may already know, the government of Canada's transfer payments to the provinces include the Canada health transfer, the Canada social transfer, and the equalization payments. The Canada health transfer is provided to all provinces on a per capita basis to support access to public health care. The Canada social transfer is also provided to all provinces, again on a per capita basis, to support core social and education programs. By contrast, only six of Canada's provinces receive equalization payments: P.E.I., Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba. Mr. Speaker, we know that those numbers are large and largely on the backs of Albertans in many cases.

In order to have a fruitful discussion, though, about the equalization component of transfer payments, it's important to understand what equalization payments are. From the letters and comments my caucus colleagues and I have received, we see that there's a lot of misinformation out there being spread, unintentionally or otherwise, about equalization payments. That is really of no value to the conversation for Albertans in benefit of what we need to do in the future.

Every Canadian income and sales tax payer in every province contributes to the funds used by the federal government to make transfer payments; hence every taxpayer contributes to the equalization portion of transfer payments. Provinces with more residents or whose residents are more economically productive – that was an Alberta we once knew – will generate more taxes to the federal government. The provincial governments themselves do not give money to the federal government for transfer payments or equalization payments. There is no cheque.

Equalization payments are intended to ensure that each province has enough fiscal capacity to deliver core government services. Equalization payments are provided to provinces whose per capita gross domestic product is less than the national average per capita GDP. Equalization especially benefits those provinces that have relatively weak tax bases due to small industrial or consumer bases or small natural resource endowments, which, of course, shows that we have broadly spread resources but that they're not always within the geographical areas of all of the provinces within Confederation.

To clarify the misconceptions of some Albertans who have been misinformed about how the transfer payments work, the Alberta government transfers exactly zero dollars – again, no cheque – each year to the federal government for transfer and equalization payments. The funding for federal equalization payments comes only from individual Canadians and businesses by federal personal and corporate income taxes, the goods and services tax, customs duties, and other sources of money for federal general revenues. A high-earning individual in Quebec will pay more tax dollars towards equalization payments than a low-earning individual in Alberta, so it is indeed a federal program meant to benefit across the board in Confederation.

Out of the federal government's $71 billion in total transfer payments in 2017, Alberta will receive $5.79 billion, or $1,364 per Albertan, in transfer payments under the Canada Health Act transfer, $4.226 billion to deliver health care in this province, and the Canada social transfer is $1.546 billion for postsecondary education, social assistance, social services, early childhood development, and early learning and child care. Those transfer payments can only be used for the purposes specified. Again, the money for transfer payments and equalization payments comes from individual taxpayers, not provincial budgets.

Mr. Speaker, what is Alberta's role in Confederation, this country we all love, the one that we are all patriotic about while also being passionate about our own province and our own cities within Alberta? As we take a closer look at which provinces receive equalization payments, let's remember that Alberta's role in Confederation was not always as an economic powerhouse. It isn't today either, but that's another story. It's important to regularly update how we calculate transfer payments because the provinces in our great country are always changing and, with that, of course, going through challenges.

For the last 50 years Alberta is the only province not to receive money from the equalization program.

An Hon. Member: Say that again.

Mr. Gottfried: It's 50, 44, some kind of a number in there that's kind of interesting.

Despite a projected 2.9 per cent, or $9.5 billion, decline in GDP Alberta's $317 billion contribution to Canada's trillion-dollar economy will still be close to 16 per cent.

As a comparison, Alberta's GDP has been approximately $80,000 per person each year while Quebec's GDP has been around $45,000 per person each year. Again, that was the Alberta advantage we once knew. The amount of taxes collectable by the two provincial governments will continue to favour Alberta until Quebec's economy catches up to the national average at around $55,000 GDP per person per year or until Alberta's economy, unfortunately, declines to the national average, that race to the bottom that I think we've heard from some of our members here. Alberta's GDP would have to fall by approximately one-third in order for Albertans to stop being net contributors to equalization. I personally am hopeful that we actually won't get there.

A province's fiscal capacity is determined by their ability to collect personal income taxes, business income taxes, consumption taxes, property taxes, and natural resource revenues and is currently used to determine how much a province may receive in equalization payments from the federal government. Under the current formula unique large-scale revenue sources such as electrical generation are not captured by the definition of fiscal capacity. That needs to be captured. Consequently, provinces like Quebec, Ontario, and Manitoba receive more in equalization payments than if those resources were counted like Alberta's energy resources. That's something we need to do going forward, Mr. Speaker, to compare renewables and nonrenewables in the same calculations and in the same way. Those are value and those are resources that we hold within our provinces and as part of Confederation.

According to the province of Quebec's most recent budget the way that the federal government treats revenues from Hydro-Québec is a point of contention with the federal government. They expect to receive approximately $2.7 billion in revenues from Hydro-Québec on incomes of $78.6 billion. By comparison, with an almost fully developed energy industry Alberta received an estimated $2.7 billion in natural resource royalties in 2015-2016, $1.5 billion in bitumen and $1.2 in natural gas and other.

Meanwhile some provinces continue to block efforts to increase the national economic benefits of fully developing and diversifying our potential energy exports without recognizing changes in the provinces' natural resource exploitation since the last major change to transfer payments, back as late as 2004. We must think seriously about what it means to have financial and economic models that position some of our natural energy resources but not others as expected drivers of sustainable economic and social growth and the wealth that we enjoy thereby.

Mr. Speaker, we need to help Alberta help Canada. That's really what we're about in this Legislature. We can continue to be one of those economic engines, and we can contribute more than our fair share sometimes, but – you know what? – we need to do it in a respectful way that balances the resources and revenues and income of these other provinces and compares like with like. As we approach scheduled renegotiations of transfer payments in 2019, Alberta needs to ask our fellow partners in Confederation to help us help Canada. If Canada's provinces and territories want to enjoy the financial benefits of Alberta's natural resources, we must all clear the way for Alberta's exports to flow freely and responsibly to markets where they are demanded.

Mr. Speaker, it reminds me of I think it was 2012-2013, when 80 per cent of the new jobs in Canada were created here in Alberta. We were supporting the graduates, the youth, the workers that were being displaced by other industries across this country, and we need to put our stake back in the sand and re-create that Alberta advantage that we've lost, because we don't mind supporting this great country. You know, Albertans are proud to contribute to Canada's strength and prosperity through the jobs and resources that tens of thousands of individuals have helped our province develop and share, that risk capital that I talked about earlier today.

Now Albertans are asking other provincial leaders to support Alberta's role in Canada's transition to a more diverse economy that builds and sustains long-term investor confidence – those two words again – all-important not only to the future of Alberta but to the future of Canada. Alberta can fulfill its responsibilities as a key member and contributor of Confederation by being thoughtful in its approach to renegotiating transfer payments in 2019, possibly with some new leadership in this great province. In addition to strengthening Canada's economy through internal trade, opening pipelines from Canada to the east and to the south will reduce our dependence.

Mr. Speaker, thank you. We need to be responsible . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today and speak about the motion introduced by the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin regarding equalization. One would hope that having spent 10 years in the House of Commons as a Member of Parliament, one would have learned something about bringing people together rather than creating division amongst the Canadian population. Pitting Canadian against Canadian, Albertan against Albertan seems to be true to form for the Leader of the Official Opposition.

But I think one little detail kind of explains this a little bit, and it's his pronunciation of the name of our second-largest province, which is a bit of a pet peeve for me. I'm thinking that after 10 years in the House of Commons he'd learn to pronounce the name of our second-largest province in either one of our official languages. Quebec is English; Québec is French. Q-bec: I have no idea what language that is.

What I'd like to do, though, is insist that we do things in this province that minimize the divisions in this country, that don't pit Canadians against Canadians, that don't lash out against other parts of the country.

I'm very proud to stand up to speak to this motion, Mr. Speaker, because it actually allows me to talk about what our government is doing to promote the interests of Albertans. The members on this side of the House are getting things done while members on the other side would rather keep their talking points to rhetoric.

After almost 10 years representing Albertans, there was zero movement on equalization from the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin. He served under a Prime Minister, sat behind him yet virtually was silent on equalization. The Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin was not lobbying his colleagues and the Prime Minister to do anything. During his time working with the former Prime Minister, as was mentioned, he mentioned equalization once in the House and only twice in committee. During his time on the Finance Committee, a committee on which the Leader of the Official Opposition sat for a thousand days, the member only said the word “equalization” once, yet he stands today in this House and pits Canadians against each other, pits Albertans against each other, following his true-to-form – true-to-form – analysis in trying to tell us that equalization is something that is damaging to us as Canadians. Well, in fact, it’s a design that is one of the underpinnings of our Confederation. After 10 years of virtual silence, no matter how you look at it, it’s a bad record that the Leader of the Official Opposition demonstrates when he talks about equalization today. Nothing was said before.

Let’s, Mr. Speaker, now talk about the current government’s record. The government has shown its commitment to Albertans. Our government and the federal government signed an agreement to make $1.09 billion in funding for infrastructure available through the federal public transit infrastructure fund and the clean water and waste-water fund. Given these and other infrastructure projects – these investments will stimulate job growth. Our government recognizes that job creation is crucial during these times, so our government is doing what it can to ensure that Albertans remain employed, with good-paying jobs. We also recognize the importance of our public health care system. We heard from Albertans on this issue. This is why our government is consulting with other provinces to get a new agreement on health care funding. Our government is also working with the federal government for approval on much-needed pipelines so we can increase market access for Alberta’s oil.

Mr. Speaker, I must speak against the motion before the House today. The fact is that there is a real risk in opening up discussion on equalization at this time. Be careful what you wish for. As the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin is aware, equalization represents a small portion of our federal transfers. To discuss equalization would signify discussion on all federal transfers, which could create many unintended consequences. In 2016-17 the federal government will be providing Alberta with $7.3 billion through the Canadian health transfer and the Canadian social transfer. Of the $49.4 billion sent to all provinces, Alberta is receiving nearly 15 per cent of all transfers. These funds are helping to pay for the health care and other services Alberta families and communities rely on, yet the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin wants to maybe put those at risk by opening up equalization negotiations at this time. On the other hand, less than $18 billion is made available for provinces through equalization. I cannot support this motion because if we start restructuring equalization today, it may open up wider discussions that could negatively impact Albertans.

We need a holistic view on the whole issue, and I do not believe the Leader of the Official Opposition has used this perspective on equalization. He simply looks for ways to divide Canadians and Albertans unnecessarily. Our government will not put the services Albertans rely on at risk, and I’m proud to be part of a government that is proactively engaging with federal and provincial partners for Albertans rather than undermining our health care system by cutting funding, as the Leader of the Opposition is pushing for.

Almost one month ago the opposition released its report on equalization, which proved to be an exercise in criticizing our provincial partners. Given that we are entering multilateral negotiations on various issues in 2019, including equalization, the Official Opposition is asking for the Alberta government to start infighting with potential allies. Once again: division, division, division. Let’s do something that joins people together and has a positive effect. I’m proud that our government is not aligning itself with the rhetoric used by the members opposite given that this would only weaken our government’s position, which would adversely affect Albertans.

On this side of the House we’re committed to standing up for Alberta’s interests. This is why we’re standing up for Alberta’s health care system as the Minister of Health continues to work on a new funding formula. This is why our government has signed agreements for the federal infrastructure funding and in the process is improving the services that Albertans use while ensuring they remain employed. This is why our government works with the federal government to ensure that oil has access to new markets.

This is why our government will collaborate with its federal and provincial partners to ensure that Alberta receives its fair share of transfers. These negotiations will be based on pragmatic and forward-thinking solutions, not on the rhetoric of the Official Opposition, and they will be in a spirit of bringing people together rather than dividing them and looking for solutions that have a positive effect for both Albertans and Canadians as we move forward in ensuring that the equalization that is negotiated in the future is one that continues to join us together and benefits both Albertans and Canadians right across the country.

Thank you.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I’m really disappointed that government members forgot who elected them, who they have to represent, but the Official Opposition and all the opposition here are actually representing Albertans because they know that they were elected by Albertans. We are on the side of Albertans.

I am proud to rise to support the Leader of the Official Opposition’s Motion 509, calling on the government to make Alberta’s position public by next summer so we can begin a national conversation. This reasonable motion before us today gives everyone in this House the opportunity to tell their constituents about this danger and do something to help Alberta get a better deal from Ottawa. The aim of equalization payments is to ensure that reasonably comparable levels of services are available at similar taxation levels and, second, that the commitment is only to the principle of achieving reasonable comparability. In 2014 over $28 billion was extracted from Alberta taxpayers and sent to Ottawa, never to return. How are we supposed to grow and develop Alberta if we force Albertans to make a net contribution to Ottawa that is bigger than the entire budget for the national defence of the Canadian federation? It’s not right.

It is not just we politicians who have been saying that we need a better deal on equalization. Academics, economists, and ordinary Albertans all realize that equalization isn’t working for Canada, whether we are a have or a have-not. This is why the Wildrose turned to the experts and the think tanks to help understand equalization better and figure out what we need to do. Yes, the Wildrose sought help from Dr. Marco Navarro-Génie at the Atlantic Institute for Market Studies out of Halifax.

Halifax is surrounded by four chronic net-recipient provinces of equalization: Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, and Quebec. Some say that equalization allows those provinces to not reform their public services to get better value for money. That is recommendation 3 from our report, that equalization be made conditional on steps being taken by recipient provinces with relatively high program delivery costs to reduce costs so that the per capita costs of providing programming in the recipient provinces would not exceed the national average.

Equalization also creates disincentives for recipient provinces to grow their economy for fear of going off the equalization payments. We see that in Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick they do not want to develop their resource industry out of unfounded environmental fears, fears that we have dealt with in Alberta for 50 years. But Quebec can sure offer substantially lower tuition fee rates at public universities and colleges than other provinces, and the students will misbehave and riot and bang pots and pans together to protect that low price. They will also protest Energy East and fracking without realizing that it's Albertans, many working in the energy sector, that are paying for their cheap tuition.

Besides the equalization program, there are other cash transfer programs from Ottawa that put Alberta at a disadvantage – we call these stealth equalization – programs like employment insurance. If you fish for a living on the east coast, after two days on a boat you can qualify for employment insurance. Fishermen's employment insurance is income based, not based on the number of days worked. These self-employed people are no different than farmers and ranchers. I don't see farmers' employment insurance based on the income they made; in fact, they, like all the other self-employed folks in Alberta, aren't eligible at all. It was Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau that set this scheme up for fishers in the 1970s with the support of his Maritimes lieutenant, Allan J. MacEachen. It was a bad scheme then, and it's a bad scheme now.

Maritimers and Newfoundlanders – and I should know; I have one working for me – joke about going on lotto 10/42: work 10 weeks, and get employment insurance for 42 weeks. Wow. What a great disincentive on the search for work, job creation, and innovation. Who would want to do anything when all you have to do is work for 10 weeks and get pokey for 42 weeks? Then you can spend your time going for coffee, driving a quad or snowmobile on the trails, or working under the table in the black market. Maritimers and Newfoundlanders will complain that their industries are seasonal. That's right. Some probably are, but what about the rest of the year?

Alberta farmers and ranchers have a seasonal industry, too. So does oil and gas. Did you ever hear of a spring breakup? Some people will complain about all the people that will have to move away from their communities to find work. Well, I promise they won't have to move as far away as I did. That's just life sometimes, Mr. Speaker, especially when your government isn't generating an investment-friendly economic environment. People all over the world move all the time to find work. Look at all the economic immigrants like myself. We didn't choose easy street. Why do small communities out east get to live on easy street on the backs of Alberta taxpayers? It's a wealth transfer, pure and simple.

Here we have oil and gas workers out of work, and their EI has run out. What are they going to do? Our guys out here can't work anywhere for 10 weeks and then get 42 weeks of employment insurance. Of course, they can't rotate in and out of a rig for 10 weeks each and collect from the government for the rest of the year. That would be wrong and a terrible disincentive. Instead, if they can't find any work, they'll have to turn to the Minister of Human Services and demand income support. It's not fair, Mr. Speaker.

Our recommendation 5 reads, "That substantial reforms to the Employment Insurance (EI) Program be made to [ensure that it treats] similarly situated Canadians with more parity." Alberta paid over $3.3 billion into EI in 2013 and received only $1.4 billion in benefits. That includes maternity leave. That means that almost $2 billion was transferred out of Alberta to pay for EI in places like Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the case for reforms is clear, and negotiations will get nowhere if we wait. We need to educate Albertans and Canadians on the facts. So I rise today to add my voice to that of the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin and call on the government to evaluate the current equalization formula and outline the improvements they will see on behalf of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, with that, I ask all members of this House to support this private member's motion. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for proposing this motion. You know, our government is working collaboratively with our federal and provincial partners. We're also working hard to create made-in-Alberta solutions to the situations that Alberta is facing. And while I agree that Alberta has a role to play when equalization is next renegotiated, I'm quite concerned that the Leader of the Official Opposition has a profound misunderstanding of how equalization payments actually work.

He would rather drag other provinces through the mud, provinces whose co-operation we are seeking to work towards approval for a pipeline to tidewater. You see, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition has been encouraging Albertans to stop equalization payments, but that is so preposterous. I have to state that again. The Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin, the Leader of the Official Opposition, is encouraging Alberta to stop equalization payments. Does anyone want to take a guess how much Alberta has paid in equalization payments to other provinces?

Some Hon. Members: Zero.

Mr. Westhead: You're right. It's zero, Mr. Speaker. We have paid nothing to other provinces. It's the federal government that makes payments to other provinces, not Alberta. The motion proposed by the opposition leader leads me to believe that he would rather have Ottawa impose a solution for us. Alberta is facing difficult economic circumstances due to the low price of oil. We have a challenge ahead of us, and there's no doubt about that.

I can tell you that our government is working hard to address the situations Alberta faces. We're putting more money in Albertans' pockets by raising the minimum wage. We're putting Albertans back to work through our $35 billion infrastructure plan, a plan that, I might add, the Leader of the Official Opposition wants to cut billions of dollars from and risk thousands of jobs. We are investing in our children's education by hiring teachers and support workers, but the opposition wants to cut those jobs, too. We are ensuring stability in our health care system, saving millions by working with Alberta's doctors to slow the rate of growth and ensure we have a sustainable public health system, but the Official Opposition wants to cut billions from health care, putting front-line services at risk.

Mr. Speaker, is the Leader of the Official Opposition asking Ottawa to solve our problems for us? Albertans are enterprising and resilient people, and I will always stand up for Alberta. I know that we have an important voice to add when the equalization formula comes up for renewal.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition owes Albertans an explanation why he sat as an MP for 10 years and failed to speak up for Alberta's interests. Of all the topics the opposition leader could have chosen, he picked something that we have no control over. He says that he stands up for the energy sector, so why didn't he propose a motion on that? I know why. After he resigned from federal politics, he actually said that the rate of growth in the oil sands is too fast, that it should be slowed down. Shame. [interjections] That's right. I will table the document tomorrow showing that the Leader of the Official Opposition was opposed to the growth of the oil sands. I can't believe it. That's not how we feel on this side of the House. All I know for sure is that this government stands up for Albertans, and we have shown that through our actions. The opposition, on the other hand, would rather look to Ottawa and argue that the oil sands shouldn't be allowed to grow. That's not what I call standing up for Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, the opposition leader clearly doesn't understand how equalization works. In his opening comments he confirmed that. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member, it's with some hesitancy that I want to interrupt such a fruitful and constructive discussion as exists here today. I interrupt.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to provide up to five minutes on the motion.

Mr. Jean: You know, Mr. Speaker, the last member was right. I did ask and suggest that we should slow down the oil sands in Fort McMurray, in that area. I have to tell you why, though. You see, we were sending so much money to Ottawa that we had no money for infrastructure for the people of Alberta, and that's what they forget. They forgot that I don't work for the people of Ottawa, and I don't work for the people of Manitoba or Newfoundland or British Columbia. I don't work for the people of the Northwest Territories or the Yukon, and I love those places like I love all of Canada. I love the people of Alberta more, and that's why I work for them.

When we're sending $22 billion to $28 billion a year more in money through our income taxes and EI and all of our CPP payments – and, yes; it's me. You know what? You pay it, too. Yes, you do. You pay all those payments, too. They go to Ottawa, and they don't come back to us in any way of a service. That's what happens. You're right. It's not a cheque that we sign to other provinces. It's actually cheques that all of us pay to Ottawa in taxes that we don't get back in any way, shape, or form in services. That's why I'm working for the people of Alberta, and I'm saying to them that I'm prepared to, since – what the heck – the contract comes up every 10 years for renegotiation, stand up and say: let's renegotiate; let's speak for the people of Alberta.

Do you have any idea how many people aren't covered by employment insurance right now? Here in Alberta there are thousands of people that aren't covered by employment insurance. That's because for years and years we've paid into employment insurance far more than we ever get back, and we only get about 38 per cent of our people that apply that get covered but in Atlantic Canada almost 100 per cent; in Quebec, more than 58 per cent. [interjections]

The Speaker: Government members, members, could we have some silence so I could hear his final, closing arguments, please.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sorry I feel passionate about it, but this contract opens every 10 years. So we have an opportunity right now to sit down with Ottawa and say: what can we do differently to make it more fair since right now we're not in the same situation we were in a couple of years ago? You may not have noticed because you're still spending money the same way, but I've noticed because I see thousands and thousands, tens of thousands of Albertans out of work, and I'm worried. So I'm saying: if we can, if you're not prepared to look over in the expense column, please look out over on the other column, where the money that comes from all Albertans goes to Ottawa and doesn't come back. It's a net number. It's not a gross number. It's a net number. It's a big number, and that number is going to continue for the next couple of years because you guys aren't prepared to do anything about it.

They subsidized hydro rates. We know that for sure. Our baby-sitting costs here in Alberta, daycare, are 550 per cent greater than the average cost in Quebec. All this member can do in his speech is make fun of my pronunciation of Quebec. I've never heard my name used so much, my title. Sorry, Mr. Speaker. Have you heard my name used so much in any particular 10-minute segment? They must be worried because when you don't have anything of substance to say and you're concerned and worried, you throw dirt. That seems to be all they can do, throw dirt, while the Wildrose Party on this side of the House is standing up for Albertans and saying: how about we renegotiate a contract that comes up every 10 years and make it better since the province that receives the most money out of that program – they put forward a position paper. What's wrong with us, since we're paying it? It seems fair.

Mr. Speaker, what I'd like to do is first of all implore them to reconsider because I would like to see some of them re-elected in the next election, not a lot. Only a couple need to stand up.

But I would ask for unanimous consent to move to one-minute bells.

[Unanimous consent granted]

[The voice vote indicated that Motion Other than Government Motion 509 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:59 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, November 28, 2016

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 27 Renewable Electricity Act

Mr. Gill moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be amended by deleting all the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

[Debate adjourned on the amendment November 24]

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? I'll recognize the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, here we are. I want to speak about a story, a fantasy, and a narrative that is in a story that is being written. Is the government assuming that Albertans are not paying attention to this convoluted puzzle that is starting to take shape, with the punchline being that Albertans will be on the hook no matter what is said here, how it is justified, and how much the present under the tree could have the most beautiful wrapping on the outside of all the provinces in the universe and that we are doing something magnificent for our province? So let's rehash some of the finer points that have come leading up into this bill. I mean, this is a gift that keeps on giving, starting January 1, 2017.

Let's go back a little. We have the carbon tax. We keep hearing that in order to be competitive or worthy to participate in the global market, that as a petroleum-producing jurisdiction, that whether it's a carbon tax, which does nothing, nothing to change our environmental footprint – it doesn't change emissions. We don't know where these dollars are going to go, although I'm assuming at some point here there's going to be some information that is passed along to us as to how these dollars are going to be spent. Or whether you add in a lawsuit that will cost Alberta families billions in taxpayer dollars, or we could even take a look at the subsidies that will fill the gaps between generation and distribution of renewables – honestly, I don't know about anybody else in this House. I know that on this side we have a lot of people asking us, Madam Speaker: when is enough enough? Like most fantasies, we ponder what it would look like, and it paints a very pretty picture, but the reality is way less picturesque. I'm curious. What is the enough factor for the government?

We have a massive combination of taxes, lawsuits, ideological overhaul of the electricity industry, no metrics, zero accountability, a tax on our prosperity, caps on our environmentally responsible development of our oil sands, panels that are paid for by Albertans that do not report previous to the legislation it represents. The fantasy continues with the promise that the government is going to stabilize the electricity market. So then the question is: how is the government or, more aptly, how are taxpayers going to pay for the difference between the cost on your bill and the difference for bringing in renewables and bringing them online? Where is that going to be? How are Albertans going to know what's going with that? Right now, when you look at your bill, we know exactly what we're paying for. So that's my question.

That subsidy will make up the difference, will come out of the pockets of every single Albertan. Here are some of the consequences. Once upon a time you could choose your retailer because it was a competitive market. Once upon a time we had zero electricity debt. Once upon a time we had efficient and economical electricity. I might add, we are the leaders in clean-coal technology.

How does the story end? Well, Albertans are sacrificed to ideology. Albertans lose competition that they once had and kept those electricity prices low. There is absolutely no justification at this point in time, at this economic point in Alberta for this to be going on right now. How is that justified? How is anybody going to look into the eyes of their constituents and say, “Oh, well, you know, we have a plan but absolutely no information to Albertans about how that's going to roll out.”

Albertans are on the hook for new builds of the new power plants, wind farms, and everything else, and those costs will be hidden. This is not a fantasy. This is a . . .

An Hon. Member: Nightmare.

Mrs. Aheer: . . . nightmare. Ha ha. Thank you.

There will be massive debt – massive debt – to compensate for this new infrastructure, let alone the maintenance, and with absolutely no plan on how this is going to roll out. Where is that discussion? When Albertans ask me, I'm certainly not able to give them an answer about that. We'd sure love for the government to be able to provide us with some information, some concrete information about how this plan is going to roll out, aside from the fact that they're going to sue themselves, aside from the fact that they're going to charge a carbon tax to Albertans, aside from the fact that we don't know how those stranded assets are going to be paid out. But we're assuming that you're going to use those dollars that you're bringing in from Albertans to pay off those stranded assets. These are all questions that come in on a daily basis to me. I'm quite certain you're going to be having some of those questions as well. How are we going to compensate for this new infrastructure, let alone the maintenance, with no plan?

Why is the government not looking to other jurisdictions where renewables have failed? Obviously, we would love to see renewables come on in line and be successful. But the only way that we're legitimately going to learn about how to do this appropriately is also to honestly take a look at what has not worked. It's a difficult thing to do, but it's probably the most important aspect of putting forth policy: doing that comparative analysis and making sure that everything that you're trying to do and all of the policies that you're trying to bring forward are actually conducive to what you're trying to accomplish. That's part of the responsibility of creating policy: making sure that that transparency and that aspect of accountability is available to Albertans so that they understand what they're paying for.

Are Albertans going to have to choose between heating their homes and eating? I'm just curious. It's a question to the government. We've seen it in Ontario. There are actual stories about people who are having to choose between paying their hydro bill and putting food on the table. How is this justifiable? How are we going to explain to the families and the people that come in to see us that that's the priority of this government? We are in an absolute downturn, economically, right now, and this is the priority. It's mind boggling. Ontarians cannot afford their power right now. Has the government not understood the very serious consequences of this policy?

We've been saying it since the beginning: if you are able to give a positive economic environment and the ability for the market to do what it needs to do, there are natural things that happen within that. One of those things that we have benefited from is low electricity costs. It's unimaginable to me at this point in time especially that the priority would be to go into a massive change within the market itself when there are probably a million other ways based on other jurisdictions and other information as to how to bring these online appropriately.

This is called the climate leadership action plan. Where's the leadership? We understand the action items. Those are coming across loud and clear to Albertans. What is the plan? This is a massive puzzle: little, little, tiny pieces that are kind of being put together, and as we see that picture develop, it's a little bit scary.

Mrs. Aheer: It's a lot scary.

We will and would be able to produce cleaner – and would probably continue to be leading in clean technology given a positive environment and given the opportunity for the market and for the innovation and the diversity that this government touts on a regular basis to actually kick in and do what it's supposed to. I don't know about the rest of the government, but I certainly hear from people all the time about incredible innovations, incredible ideas, incredible things that are feasible and possible. These are things that people have, in the private sector, already put their money, ideas, energy, everything into to already create an environment that is going to be better for our great-grandchildren.

I don't understand why, if we're going to look at what's possible, we're not looking to our own technical expertise and talent right here in this province before initiating a plan that has absolutely no ability to change emissions, that will not change the footprint by 2025. I'm not sure. It seems strange and counterintuitive in a petroleum jurisdiction, where we have the lead on environmentals in the energy sector, that you would not be pushing that forward and seeing that technology come to light.

Why are we penalizing Albertans? Why is there no accountability to these dollars within the carbon tax? Where are those dollars going? I'd like to know. I'm sure that everybody on this side of the House would like to know, too. I'd really, really like to have an idea of where those tax dollars are going to go. We've heard all sorts of ideas of where we think they might be going, and it seems to be getting stretched over a whole bunch of different things, but, like I said, as that puzzle comes together, it seems to me that those dollars aren't going to be helping out Albertans at all, but that it's going to be going towards paying off mistakes that this government has made already, and we're not even into this plan yet. Those dollars are already spent because of the mistakes that this government has already made.

The question that we should be asking is: why a capacity model? Well, the only way that the government can get to their random number of 30 by 2030 – I mean, where did this number come from? The only way to possibly get there is not through deregulation because you can't attract investment right now. There's no way. When you tear up a 16-year-old contract, who is going to invest in that? There's no way. There's absolutely no way. You have to go to a model, and you have to be able to subsidize those markets in order to be able to bring them online. The contracts themselves – I don't know. Tearing up contracts: as a businessperson I would have a very, very difficult time looking at a government assessing my risk and putting my dollars into something that could potentially not mean anything. There is absolutely no trust in the words at all.

The government has itself created uncertainty. You know, the question is: why now? Why at this time when Albertans are down? We're at a low. Our morale is down. There are so many things that are happening around us. Why? Why would the government choose this moment to kick Albertans while they're down? Another slap across the face.

Again, maybe I can only speak for myself and the people that I meet, but I can say decisively that every single place I go, the first demand is "Get rid of the carbon tax," every single time. Every single time. Then you add on to that the capacity model that is happening now and the lack of transparency within that model – because all Albertans are going to see on their bill now is that one small amount. Everything else is going to come from their tax dollars, and they're not going to know what they're paying for. Congratulations.

Well, again, I can't imagine why you would be doing this in such devastating times and why the government would want to drive away investment dollars. Well, it certainly leads to the question of so many other things. Why cap prosperity? Why bring in a capacity model to a deregulated market that people have a choice in? Why would you do that? People are scratching their heads yet again.

Policy matters, Madam Speaker. Policy matters. Contracts matter. Investment also means that there is risk. Investors are going to look at this and see that contracts are not honoured, and we will see investment leave. We already have.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) comes into effect if there are any questions or comments for the previous speaker. The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yes. I was listening to the previous speaker talk with passion about how scary it is for investors to invest in Alberta at this time, with all the different programs and bills that this government is passing and all this different legislation. Obviously, investors want to see some stability, and of course we see nothing but instability from this government day after day after day in this Legislature. They keep bringing in bills. They keep bringing in legislation. They bring in Bill 27, and of course the next thing you know, they're putting a cap on electricity rates. I'm not sure why they put a cap on electricity rates. They say, "The price is going to go down; it's going to be good for Albertans," but I can't imagine why you'd put a cap on something that you felt was going to go down or stay the same. Obviously, they have a big fear of it going up.

I'd like to hear the speaker talk a little bit more about that and also the other legislation that has been brought forward by this government that has created instability. Obviously, this market here, this plan with Bill 27 is going to require a massive amount of outside investment in this province, and I'd like to hear more about why this investment hasn't been happening already. We know there has been some. We see windmills out already on the landscape. Obviously, those ones happened without Bill 27. But what we would really like to understand is: how come all of a sudden there is going to be billions and billions of dollars' worth of investment in renewable energy in Alberta? How come now, and why not before? I'll maybe listen to what the previous speaker has to say about that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Chestermere-Rocky View, do you wish to respond?

Mrs. Aheer: Yes, please. Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the question. Well, I'd have to say in response to some of that that I don't know if the government quite understands the up-and-down nature of the market, that was taken care of in the retail market. That transparency in that retail market is what actually has kept us debt free with regard to electricity. This is huge. I don't know if people truly understand what a gift that is, to not have electricity debt, to actually understand that what you're paying on your bill is transparent and that you have an option to look at what's going on and that you have an opportunity to make decisions based on that bill. That's not a fantasy. That was actually real. That is a part of what we've all had the benefit of for the last 16 years.

To your point: I'm curious, too. Is the government promising that they can control volatility? What about the times that we are calm and dark? Oddly enough, calm and dark are the peak times during the morning rush to school and work and other activities and also when we come home. So what is it going to cost to get wind energy from the rural areas to the city? I'm assuming – I'm assuming – that we're not going to be building wind farms on the tops of city infrastructure. I'm curious about the cost of tying wind into the larger bits and pieces.

Again, there are some serious transparency issues here which are contributing to the instability of which you were speaking, and for a government that continues to suggest that previous contracts were all done in secrecy – well, I think Albertans would like to understand how this is any better. It is going to take billions to shut these companies down, not to mention the job losses. The taxpayer, Madam Speaker, is on the hook for $97 million a year for 14 years. That's because of this government's policies. Again, congratulations. That doesn't even include the money that it will take to bring these very expensive renewables online. Now, on top of that, we're replacing high-efficiency, world-class generation, and we are losing thousands of jobs.

Again, to recap one more time: we have the carbon tax; a 100-megatonne emission cap, then trade, I might add, because – guess what? – the leftover megatonnes will be very lucrative and extremely pricey. I would think there are going to be some winners and losers there. Thirdly, the lawsuit for power purchase agreements: that's going to cost Albertans millions. A capacity market that kills competition and will cost Albertans in their tax dollars, will not be transparent in their bills, and will lead to electricity debt – an arbitrary target, another one, of 30 per cent: that is a policy decision and not a real target and does not reduce emissions.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's always discouraging when we start to see that the government is creating legislation arbitrarily. I thought: well, let's talk about one of the government's predecessors in going down this road. That's the Ontario government.

Now, I want to refer back to a throne speech, actually, on July 3, 2014. It's a Speech from the Throne to open the 41st Parliament of Ontario. Now, in the middle of the speech – I don't want to read the entire speech, but I do think that there are important parts of the speech that we should look at – it's going to start off with what the government is doing.

As it pursues sustainable resource extraction to further the provincial and national interest, your government restates the necessity of protecting our environment for today and tomorrow. Ontario's conservation efforts and clean energy initiatives have moved our province down the road to a sustainable energy future. A growing renewables and energy innovation sector can become an [import-export] industry for our province and our country. It can help to reduce . . .

reduce

. . . climate change-causing emissions in other areas of Canada's energy sector and elsewhere in the world.

That's very ambitious.

Ontarians are proud to be leaders in the global fight against climate change. The closing of Ontario's coal-fired electricity plants stands as North America's most significant climate change initiative. Your government is encouraged by the United States' newly announced restrictions on coal emissions, but Ontarians know there is more to be done here and around the world.

Climate change is an overarching concern for this province, as it is for this country and the world. That is why your government is giving responsibilities for climate change to a new Ministry of the Environment and Climate Change.

Increasingly extreme and unpredictable weather hurts farmers, puts pressure on infrastructure, and at the worst of times, robs people of their homes and livelihoods.

This is important: robs people of their homes and livelihoods. We're going to be going back to that part.

The new Ministry of the Environment and Climate Change will co-ordinate action across government to limit greenhouse gas emissions and will renew work with communities across Ontario . . .

And this is something else we'll go back to.

. . . on adaptation to the growing impacts of climate change.

Your government also knows that climate change solutions need to span borders. Ontario will work with other provinces and territories to develop a Canadian energy strategy, which includes co-ordinated efforts to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, and which recognizes the important role of renewable energy and energy conservation. While the provinces are leading this effort, your government will encourage federal partnership in addressing this challenge, which is both local and global in scale.

Well, as it's not a shock, on November 19 we have Premier Wynne now saying – and there's another article I'll reference. Premier Wynne Calls High Electricity Prices Her "Mistake": that's the name of the article from the Star. It's November 19, 2016. This is a quote from the article. "Premier says Saturday that she takes responsibility 'for not paying close enough attention to some of the daily stresses in Ontarians' lives'."

Now, this is important because right now we're going down the same road. It's like we haven't learned anything. We are using arbitrary numbers, and we're trying to come up with solutions without any impact studies. This is exactly what our Ontario government did.

An Hon. Member: Not our government.

Mr. Cyr: The member of the government corrected me: not our government. Thank you. Not our government yet.

Let's talk about exactly how this is impacting them. We're looking at a government, that is going down a road, that has stated: "We know what's best for you. We are going to continue to go down this road even though we have pulled numbers from the air with no actual foundation behind them." Where did 30 per cent come from? This is a question we've got, but nowhere do we actually have any answer to this.

Mr. Yao: Shame.

Mr. Cyr: It is truly shameful.

We've got to realize that this is going to impact our province so dramatically that people will be deciding between making a mortgage payment or an electricity bill. That is shocking, and that is where Ontario is right now. Now, I do understand that the government brought in an arbitrary cap, or limit, on the kilowatt hours, and this does seem to be what the wonderful Premier of Ontario somehow missed in their wonderful scheme to move Ontario towards this direction with no actual impact studies. That's the point in all of this. When you do no foundational work, when you actually don't put the time in to see if this is the right direction, you get these decisions where our most vulnerable are hurting.

Now, let's go back to this throne speech because it's important that we hear exactly what they said. Bear with me here. "Increasingly extreme and unpredictable weather hurts farmers, puts pressure on infrastructure, and at the worst of times, robs people of their homes and livelihoods." That is exactly what she has done with the high power rates in Ontario. It didn't take a person with a PhD to realize that when you put more costs on people, eventually businesses will shut down, and people won't be able to have a standard of living that we would actually say is a standard of living that we would hope any person in Alberta would hope to achieve. This is something that we've had, a high standard of living, in Alberta for a long period of time.

When we start looking at how exactly it is that we're going down the same road, making the exact same problems, and using, probably, the same throne speeches: how exactly is it that we think it's going to result in a different consequence? We are shutting down coal plants, which is going to affect people's lives. We are going to see massive adjustments when it comes to our electricity prices. We are going to have taxpayers on the hook for the mistakes this government is making for years to come.

How is it that we are not actually bringing forward solutions? We're not actually reducing the CO<sub>2</sub> emissions because what we're doing is that we are taking money out of people's pockets for heating their homes. Now, how exactly is it that you stop heating your home?

Now, we're talking about this bill, which is trying to bring forward some very ambitious goals for the government, and I've always encouraged that government needs to set high priorities for itself, and this government has. I don't remember, in the platform that the NDP put forward, that it said: "We are going to bring a carbon tax in. We are going to go down the same road as Ontario, but we're going to do it right." I don't remember that being there. Was that there?

Mr. MacIntyre: No.

Mr. Cyr: No? I think that had Albertans seen that in your mandate, that you say that you got from Albertans, you probably wouldn't be where you're at.

Let's talk about the recall legislation. How many people right now have these wonderful rural ridings that may consider recalling an MLA should that be there? I know that's the fear of the government. That's because we're not responsible right now with this legislation. We're not looking towards how to reduce our pollution or our greenhouse gases because that's not what this does.

What it does do is to put a burden on Albertans. It puts a burden on our seniors. It puts a burden on all the most vulnerable people within our province. Putting forward a $600 wonderful little payment isn't anywhere near what the cost is going to be because in the end we haven't actually seen an impact study. We don't know that. What we have seen is that the government put forward something that was FOIPed out, and the government said: "Wow. You know what? It's different than what we're actually doing." The study that was actually put out was showing harm.

When we start looking at this as a grand strategy here, we start to actually go to a repetitive plan. What are we looking at? We're looking at debt. What are we looking at? We're looking at a sustained debt going into the future. What we're looking at putting forward is something that is only going to harm Albertans.

Now, when it comes to this, I have to go back to my constituents and say: is this the direction that you think is the right way for Alberta? You know what? I actually – and I don't know how many MLAs did this in the room – held three open houses in my riding regarding carbon taxes. I actually went out to where the constituents were, and I said: "What are your thoughts? This is exactly what's going to be implemented. This is how we're going to move forward as a province. Do you believe that this is the right direction?" What I did hear over and over was "repeal." This is exactly what people are saying. People aren't saying: let's come up with arbitrary caps. People are not saying: let's come up with 30 per cent. What they are saying is: "I need to feed my family. I need to make sure that my business is viable so I can employ Albertans who pay taxes."

You know what? When it comes to rural, we take this very seriously, and it's not a coincidence that we've had rallies within Alberta. When it comes to rural Albertans trying to come forward and bring their concern forward, this government has been deaf. This government has been so deaf when it comes to Bill 6. This government is deaf when it comes to debt. This government has been deaf when it comes to overspending. At some point our children are going to pay for this lack of any sort of governance that this government is putting forward.

When we're looking at this hoist amendment that we're going for, let's at least wait for the panel to come forward and come up with some solutions on how to implement this. I know that's about the debt cap, but at least maybe they've got some solutions there to come forward. But I think that ship sailed a long time ago. When we look at exactly where we're going with this, we always need to be asking ourselves: are Albertans going to be paying a disproportionate amount?

Now, I myself got into this because I was very dissatisfied with where the government was going. I was very dissatisfied, as a person that is conservative to the core, in the direction our province was going, which was a very socialist direction. Now, right now we are looking at a government that is actually socialist moving forward these agendas without talking with Albertans, without consulting with Albertans. What they do is internet surveys to reinforce what it is that they are trying to say instead of actually holding town halls.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I find it fascinating that in the best interest of parliamentary and democratic procedures the hon. member went out and actually spoke to the people. These are the people who are going to be paying the bills. These are the people who are going to be struggling. These are the people who are going to be feeling the full burden of whatever it is this government does to them, and this very responsible MLA went out and sought input from his constituents to bring back to this House to be able to tell this House what his constituents' concerns were, and that is a wonderful thing to do.

Ms Renaud: That's our job.

Mr. MacIntyre: I am mindful that the previous government was punted out of office and out of government because they didn't listen to the people of Alberta, and we are seeing many of the same sorts of things happening with the current government. In every poll that's taken Albertans are saying: no carbon tax.

I would be interested to hear from the hon. member what the constituents were telling you at these town hall meetings regarding this government's performance in general, regarding carbon taxation, yes, and perhaps give a report card.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, what I hear from the government side is: it's your job. That's from the MLA from St. Albert. You know what? I would agree with her. Why isn't she going out to her constituents and doing the same thing that I did with town halls? If she was . . .

Cortes-Vargas: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we have a point of order. Go ahead, Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Cortes-Vargas: I'm just going to say that the member is starting to go into 23(i) there, imputing false motives to the member. I would suggest that if he has comments on the bill itself, he continue with his comments, but I suggest that he retract where he's going with this.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I assume that we were speaking about 23, and clearly what we have is a matter of debate. Now, while I will say that the hon. member may choose a different way of approaching the subject, he hasn't said anything that is unparliamentary. He hasn't moved, in my opinion, in that direction. While, you know, government members may be upset with a position that the opposition might take, I would just remind them that earlier in the House their members made accusations about the pronunciation of a word. This is what happens sometimes in the give and take of this Chamber.

I will assure that the hon. member has heard the comments. Perhaps he would be willing to withdraw, but this is clearly not a point of order. It's a matter of debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Bonnyville-Cold Lake, did you wish to say something?

Mr. Cyr: I'll just withdraw the comment.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for allowing me to continue to speak. To go back to my constituency and the town halls that I had hosted with the local MPs from two ridings, two federal MPs, what it is that we're actually trying to get out there and hear what Albertans are saying about what's happening with the carbon tax both federally and provincially. Now, I'm not going to focus on what we said federally, but I will tell you that people were shocked, and I will say that it is unfortunate that people still haven't heard about the carbon tax.

But they kept saying, "Scott, you need to vote against it," and I'm, like: "Well, unfortunately, that is no longer what we can do with this. What happened is that this has already been through the House." So then they say: "Well, what can we do?" I said, "The only thing we can do is be aware of the taxes that are being levied against us so this isn't a shock, so that when January 1 comes, you're going to see a jump in your price by 5 cents." They go, "Well, what can we do about this?" and I said: "Well, at this point we need to be aware that this is the direction the government is going in. If you don't believe in the government's direction, it is important that you are in constant communication with your MLA."

This is why I am holding these town halls. This is exactly what I'm trying to accomplish. I am trying to get your feedback, but I'm also trying to make sure there's awareness so that people will know that this carbon tax is coming, that they are going to see it on their gas bill, they're going to see it on their electricity bill, they're going to see it on their food bill, they're going to see it on their gasoline, and they're going to see a different level of life when it comes to this.

Now, I do understand that the government has come forward with the $600 amount that they're going to be giving back to our most vulnerable, but in the end I don't think anybody will agree that that is the actual cost. We don't have an impact study. Until we have an economic impact study, we won't ever know what the true cost is. But why bother burdening us with the details? Just like what this bill is going forward, just exactly what this hoist is trying to come up with – it's trying to give the government time to be able to do an impact study, to be able to show Albertans that this is the right direction. We need to put this decision off so that . . . [Mr. Cyr's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just want to rise tonight to try and address, I think, some of the misinformation, perhaps, that is being spread around and that is causing some disconcertion among constituents and among, you know, folks on this side of the House.

One thing that I want to address just right off the bat: we are talking tonight about the 30 per cent renewable target. We're not talking about the cap on emissions. We are not talking about the carbon levy although it is all part and parcel of one climate leadership plan, that will work together to continue to move Alberta forward.

I'm hearing a lot from the other side specifically about Ontario and that we are moving in the direction of Ontario. Now, where we are similar is that we are making a commitment to bring more renewables into the mix in Alberta. Where we are very different is how we are going about this process.

Today in the Calgary Herald there was an article by Blake Shaffer, who is a fellow at the C.D. Howe Institute, and, you know, it says in his article:

Many will draw the connection between Ontario and Alberta. They share the objectives of reducing emissions by shutting down coal and increasing renewables, such as solar and wind. But the policies to get there are critically different. So let's move past the rhetoric and dig a little deeper into the policies.

Let's start with renewables. Ontario made a costly mistake selecting the prices for their renewable procurement . . . Ontario promised prices as high as 80 cents per kilowatt hour, [which is] more than 10 times [the average in] today's Alberta electricity [market].

Alberta is instead using competitive auctions to [drive] the price for renewables. Market forces will drive costs down.

Market forces are something that the opposition seems to like very much. What we are doing here in Alberta is moving ahead with a competitive, market-based procurement process, which will drive investment and bring money into Alberta. Places in the United States that have these kinds of competitive mixes, that have capacity markets – currently we're one of two energy-only markets in all of North America. It's us and Texas. There has to be a reason why multiple markets have moved towards the idea of a capacity market, and the reason that we have is because it creates more stability in the energy market and allows room to incent renewables.

Something that I think is very important for everyone to know is that any funds that are coming in for our renewables programs are coming from the carbon levy on large emitters. So we are not paying for this through taxes levied on people in Alberta. We're not paying for this using everyday Albertans' money. We are using the carbon levy on large emitters, so all of the money that is paying for this is coming through there.

It's very clear that we have made choices to not go down the road that Ontario has gone down, and we need not be afraid. A lot of the time when I'm talking to people in my constituency – and to pretend that we don't go out to our constituencies and talk to people is blatantly false. I have had three in-person town halls, one telephone town hall. I go out door-knocking almost every week. I know that all the members of my caucus are doing the same. Do we hear concerns from people? Of course, we hear concerns from people, but we also hear a ton of support. I hear support for renewables and more renewables every day: people who want the opportunity to work in renewables, people who want the opportunity to put solar panels on their roofs, people who want the opportunity to participate in a new economy.

The opposition, you know, continues to think that we're living in a different world, on a different planet, a planet where, you know, climate change isn't happening, a planet where we have a great international reputation here in Alberta, a planet where we can continue to rely on a single industry to fund our economy in Alberta.

The fact of the matter is that we need to move forward, and people are excited about the opportunity for renewables. When I get the chance to talk to people who are afraid, who are concerned, when I talk to people about the rebates that we're offering, when I talk to people about the opportunities and the investments that are going to be coming through these renewable programs, they're excited, and they're not so scared anymore. It's just a matter of correcting misinformation a lot of the time. You know, this is really exciting. This piece of legislation is exciting, and we need not wait an additional six months.

You know, the AESO has gone forward. We asked the AESO: what do you think is an appropriate amount of renewable electricity to generate here in Alberta? We want more electricity. We asked AESO: how much do you think is a reasonable amount? They came up with the idea that they thought 30 per cent was a reasonable amount.

As the AESO built our recommendations for government, we were keenly aware of ensuring that competitive outcomes drive the best result for the province. Reaching 5,000 megawatts of new renewable generation is a complex task, but we are confident we can reliably integrate this much renewable energy into the electricity system in a cost-effective manner by accessing the benefits of robust competition.

That's from AESO, and that's one of the reasons that we're doing this.

What will this bill mean for families and communities here in Alberta? It's going to mean up to 10 and a half billion dollars in new investments, it's going to mean up to 7,200 new jobs, it's going to mean the single largest market for renewables in Canada, and it's going to mean reduced numbers of incidents of lung disease and reduced numbers of trips to the hospital for asthma.

You know, people are excited about this. To hear the opposition talk, you would think that renewables were going to cause the sky to fall, when we've been very thoughtful about this process. We've been very thoughtful.

Mary Moran, the president and CEO of Calgary Economic Development, said:

As investment in renewable energy in Canada is growing rapidly, Alberta has been largely on the sidelines in this key part of the future energy supply, so we are pleased to see policy that provides the long-term certainty and stability that encourages global and local companies to invest. Calgary is a centre of innovation across the entire spectrum of energy resources and growth in renewables is a key element of our 10-year-economic strategy Building on our Energy to expand the economy and diversify our key industries.

The other important thing, I think, to note is that when we look to other jurisdictions and we look to jurisdictions that have targets for renewables, the states in the United States that have had targets for renewables and that have had a functional renewable energy plan have actually seen the smallest increases in their electricity rates between 2005 and 2010. So states that have the most solar and wind saw the smallest increases in their electricity bills. The smallest increases.

Here in Alberta we're moving forward. It's very possible to have 30 per cent renewables and to not have increases in our energy bills. The fact of the matter is that we are in a situation right now where we're seeing some of the lowest prices in a long time not because of anything particularly special that we've done but just because natural gas is at the lowest market price, you know, it's been in a long time. So we're taking the volatility out of the market. By introducing a cap on electricity, we're taking the volatility out.

Mr. MacIntyre: Volatility was never there.

Ms Luff: There were times when it went from 3.2 cents in February to 14.1 cents in March. There's a huge amount of volatility. You know, members opposite say that we don't understand the ups and downs of the market, talking like volatility is a good thing to have in the market.

I think it's really important that we address some of the misinformation that's out there. It's not true that renewables drive prices up. It's not true that we're going down the same road that Ontario is. It is true that we're bringing new investment and new jobs into Alberta, and it is true that we're moving Alberta forward to a healthier mix of renewables. It's true that that's going to help us meet our global climate contracts. The other side talks about breaking contracts all the time but seems to have no problems with the idea of breaking climate contracts that we've signed with the rest of the world.

In any case, I do just want to point out a couple of things that the opposition has said that have been misinformation. The other week the Member for Calgary-Foothills talked about the fact that "wind power has also been known to generate subsonic sound waves, known as harmonic resonance." Recently a Health Canada study found that there's no evidence to support a link between exposure to wind turbine noise and any of the self-reported illnesses and chronic conditions. There's no association between multiple measures of stress and exposure to wind turbine noise. I mean, that's one thing that they were talking about that has been thoroughly debunked by actual scientific evidence.

Another thing that was mentioned was the fact that solar panels take more energy to produce than they actually create. In fact, that paper that they were citing from was, you know, years old. It talks about Germany and Switzerland, which are much cloudier places than Alberta.

It was mentioned that we are actually further north here than Germany or Switzerland whereas if you actually look at a map, you would find that that's not true. We also have abundant amounts of solar energy here, more sun here than we have in a lot of places.

The price of renewables has plummeted massively in the last five years. It continues to go down. They found that renewables are in fact cheaper to generate than most other – the only other thing that you can put in now that's cheaper than renewables that provides electricity at the same cost is cogenerated gas, which is something that we're looking into as well.

You know, the opposition says that they love renewables. They're constantly talking about how much they love renewables and that renewables are great, but when it actually comes down to it, when the tires finally hit the road, they want to stall, and they want to go back. They don't want to recognize our economy here. They don't want to move forward.

I would argue that everyone in this House should definitely stand against this hoist motion because we need to move forward with this. Companies are counting on investments. Albertans are counting on the new jobs that it's going to bring. Albertans are counting on us to move forward with this.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education, under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to just take a minute to thank the Member for Calgary-East for having the courage of her convictions and addressing the House this evening.

I'd like to just offer, if I may, Madam Speaker, a few comments before I get to asking the Member for Calgary-East a question. Certainly, I want to start off my comments by making an observation that whenever the Member for Calgary-East or another female member of our caucus gets up, the volume from across the aisle tends to rise to quite significant levels. [interjections]

Some Hon. Members: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we have a point of order. Go ahead, hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. I would just like to point to Standing Order 23: makes accusations of unavowed motives to another member. Madam Speaker, I'd also like to say: language that's likely to incite disorder. Now, while the member didn't say anything that was unparliamentary, he certainly made an allegation about how members on this side treat one gender or another, and nothing could be further from the truth. While I think they choose to laugh, I know that my hon. colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View was insulted by the allegation, and when a statement like that is made, it has created disorder, certainly, for her.

Members on the other side of the House often will take this holier-than-thou position and throw allegations toward this side of the House meanwhile insulting members of our caucus, meanwhile insulting the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View. This sort of allegation and accusation is not positive for ongoing debate in this Chamber, and I would suggest that that member withdraw and apologize.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Yes. Madam Speaker, you know, hearing the Opposition House Leader make an argument about past things that happened that I don't know is relevant – the member didn't mention any particular person by name and, as the Opposition House Leader himself pointed out, didn't use any unparliamentary language either. So I'm not sure what the point of order might be. I don't think it was well versed by the Opposition House Leader, and I do not at this time feel that there is any point of order.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just want to reference 23(i), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member." Just to be clear, when a member generalizes about an entire caucus or the opposition, they might as well be saying it to a member, and it includes female members and other members. Again, trying to assume which gender on this side is or isn't – I guess the question is that earlier there was a point of order called by the government on this issue by generalizing from somebody over here that they understand their state of mind.

Now, when we're talking about robust debate in this House, we should be allowed to speak amongst one another about different ideas. Certainly, the ideas that the government proposes we may disagree with – we have constituents that we represent – so sometimes that debate gets a little bit loud. What I would say, Madam Speaker, is that it is equal and the same. I think that what would do this House good is that while, yes, there are issues in this province that need to be addressed – and we spoke about it last week in this Chamber – we should start to respect each member of this House for the work they do and the words that they say individually, and that's how they should be graded, not based on a generalization or a robust debate about certain things.

Now, the Member for Calgary-East speaks about the bill, in particular of hoisting it. There are members here that talk about it, and when they're talking about it, the member is basically saying that (a) we don't believe in renewables, which is not true. Many of us do believe in renewables, and we believe that they are part of the plan moving forward.

Secondly, to say that members on this side haven't done their homework and should take a look at it – this bill, in fact, does talk about taking money out of general revenue to backstop renewable programs.

An Hon. Member: Are you speaking to the point of order?

Mr. Fraser: The point of order that I'm trying to make is that we should be able to have the debate without this type of conjecture imposed one way or the other that limits the ability to debate. What I'm saying is that everybody should take a look at the members of this House, what they've done before they entered this House, what they do in this House, and how they treat people outside of these halls. That's how they should be judged. Certainly, if they're bullies towards anybody – any gender, any race, any creed – then, yes, that may be a subject here or perhaps with the Ethics Commissioner and so on and for the voter, but to just generalize like that, I don't think it does this House any good.

That's our point.

The Deputy Speaker: Any others wishing to speak to the point of order? The hon. government whip.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just want to make a few comments. One, I'd just recognize that the comments that were made previously were an observation of something, and it was an observation of experiences expressed from this side. That being said, we recognize that the opposition has actually, when we've been speaking about this issue of implied sexism that happens, been very willing and vocal in supporting a conversation that invites inclusivity in this House. I think it's important to continuously remind ourselves that the way we unconsciously respond to speakers can be interpreted in different ways, and that's why this is a matter of debate. I think what we have here is a matter of debate.

That being said, what we really want to build is an inclusive space for everybody. The argument that because one person doesn't feel it, it's invalidated, I feel, doesn't recognize experiences. In the sense of what we are here to do today, which is debate this bill, I hope that we can actually get back to that. You know, we do recognize, absolutely, that the opposition works hard with us to create an inclusive space and has been very receptive to doing that. I think we do always have to be aware, and bringing it up is an important thing to do in the House.

Because of that, I think we can go back to the debate and withdraw what was said and move forward.

The Deputy Speaker: I take it, then, that the hon. Minister of Advanced Education is willing to withdraw those comments.

Mr. Schmidt: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: That will satisfy the point of order.

I just wanted to add to the comments. This is the second point of order we've had tonight. The first was moving in the direction of something that was personal towards an individual member, which was perhaps a bit more concerning. This was directed towards a whole group. That doesn't necessarily make it any less serious. I know we're all quite sensitive right now about gender issues and that sort of thing and violence directed towards one gender, but I would really caution the House to try to avoid seeing that in everything that we do. There is a give-and-take that has to happen in this House, and I've been quite lenient allowing that as long as it doesn't get too overwhelming. Please try to be respectful of both sides, and let's move on with the debate.

You are still under 29(2)(a).

Debate Continued

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. To further my comments to the Member for Calgary-East, I certainly appreciate her taking the time to illuminate us in this House about the differences between the Ontario experience with moving to renewable electricity and what Alberta's experience will be moving to renewable electricity. I know, certainly, that when I go door to door in my constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar, I do hear a lot of support for the carbon price, our plans to move to renewable energy, but I do hear citizens in my riding raising the concern of the Ontario experience in particular.

I find that this article that the Member for Calgary-East referred to, that was published in the Calgary Herald today, written by Blake Shaffer, who is an expert in Alberta's electricity market and who currently works for the C.D. Howe Institute, certainly not a front for the socialist hordes but a rather pragmatic think tank – you know, I certainly appreciate the fact that experts are weighing in, contributing to the public discourse. Certainly, Madam Speaker, when we have expert opinion brought to bear on these issues, I think we can all make much better decisions than if we just base our decision-making on wild accusations and unfounded misinformation that we often hear presented in the public discourse on this issue.

I did want to make a comment and ask a question, of course, Madam Speaker, on one of the issues that the Member for Calgary-East raised, and that was on where the money for the renewable electricity generation is going to come from. Certainly, she referenced that the climate change and emissions management fund was going to be the source of some of the money that will pay for our transition to renewable energy, and some of that money will be used to transition Alberta off coal-fired power. Of course, our government was quite proud of the settlement that we reached last week with the coal-fired power generators to transition Alberta off coal and move into the future of renewable energy.

You know, I'm just wondering if the Member for Calgary-East would like to perhaps correct the record as far as the rest of the money. Certainly, it's my understanding that some of the money collected from the carbon levy, that will be levied on natural gas that's used to heat our homes and on transportation fuels that are used to power our vehicles, Madam Speaker, will also be used to help fund the transition to renewable energy. I'm wondering if perhaps the Member for Calgary-East would like to take this opportunity to clarify her original statements on where the money for renewable electricity is going to come from so that all of the people of Alberta are operating from the same set of facts and so that we can use these facts to make a wise decision.

The Deputy Speaker: Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Yeah. Certainly, I mean, I did just want to quickly take this opportunity, which I realize is perhaps not answering the question. I would like to say that perhaps when I do get up to speak, the opposition has a tendency to get quite loud, and I would say that it is not because I am a woman but that it is because I am talking about a subject that they are very passionate about.

Now, given that, I would also like to say that in any other workplace it is not acceptable to yell and badger someone when they are trying to make an argument. This is coming from me personally. When folks on the other side are making an argument that I don't agree with, I have a tendency to not say anything because I feel like that is a more respectful option than yelling at someone and bullying them across the aisle.

I would perhaps like to ask that, moving forward, we try to be more respectful and listen to each other as opposed to yelling because it can be very hard to continue to think when people are yelling at you. In no other workplace is that acceptable. We don't accept bullying in any other workplace. I don't feel like it should be acceptable in this one either.

The Deputy Speaker: Moving on, do we have any further speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Drumheller . . .

Mr. Barnes: Cypress-Medicine Hat. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I couldn't remember either.

I just have six or seven quick little points. I think this hoist is a fabulous idea. Ultimately, we're the ones that are accountable to our constituents, accountable to Albertans, accountable to get it right. I'm always worried about unintended consequences, but, my goodness, the volatility of changing our electric system – I understand right now that Alberta is, I think, the leader in North America, where the highest percentage of our electricity users is industrial as opposed to residential. I think it's 85 per cent. My goodness, if we get that wrong and drive investment and drive jobs out of the province, if we put in a situation that leads to microgeneration, which in the short run will obviously have some benefits, it will pass the cost of this renewable program, the huge cost of the transmission lines, which our last government left us with, on to fewer and fewer users. Madam Speaker, I'm greatly concerned – I'm greatly concerned – about the affordability for people on fixed incomes, particularly seniors, and I'm greatly concerned for both industry's capacity and its ability to be competitive here in Alberta.

Unintended consequences. I have an article here from Forbes, and it's called Germany's Green Energy Disaster: A Cautionary Tale for World Leaders. I'll just jump in to page 6 of 7, and it says:

In other words Germany is dirtying the planet in the name of clean energy – and sticking its citizens with an ever-escalating tab so it can subsidize an energy source which will never generate sufficient power.

Also:

Because renewable power sources have been so unreliable, Germany has been forced to construct numerous new coal plants in an effort to replace the nuclear energy it has taken offline. In fact the country will build more coal-fired facilities this year than at any [other] time in the past two decades – bringing an estimated 5,300 megawatts of new capacity online. Most of these facilities will burn lignite, too, which is strip-mined and emits nearly 30 per cent more carbon dioxide than hard coal.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, I believe, has requested this hoist, and something like that alone makes me think that we should put the time into ensuring that we get it right before we're all accountable to our voters in just two years.

I, too, have another article from Ontario that made me chuckle a bit.

The province [of Ontario] will now buy $6-billion worth of electricity produced by Samsung's wind farms and solar projects over the next 20 years, which is $3.7-billion less than the original 2010 agreement, said Energy Minister Bob Chiarelli . . .

"I think what we've heard here is an admission that the Liberal government's energy project has been a colossal failure," said New Democrat Jonah Schein.

Energy minister Bob Chiarelli goes on to say, "This was the most [important] step our province could take . . . to bend the cost curve for ratepayers." Now, we've heard the Health minister say that many times, that instead of costs going up 6 and a half per cent, we're going to bend the cost curve and only have them go up 3 and a half per cent. Here we are with a situation where the Ontario Liberal government committed themselves to $9.7 billion of renewables and, because it was too onerous on the citizens, backed down to $6 billion, and now the Energy minister is trumpeting his horn like he's actually saved them money rather than just putting them less deep in the hole, again another reason, Madam Speaker, why we should take our time. We should look at this, and we should make it as right as we can before we're all accountable two years from now.

Thank goodness that electric generation has been as affordable as it has been in Alberta the last few years because of the extra transmission costs and distribution costs burdened on ratepayers by the last government. I think we've been paying somewhere around 3 cents a kilowatt hour. This article goes on to say, "Ontario will pay Samsung 13.5 cents a kilowatt hour for wind power and 44.3 cents a kilowatt hour for solar power." Incredible: 44.3.

In my constituency office I've had some of these renewable companies come in, and the talk is that they want the money from the carbon tax and that they want the guaranteed rate or feed-in tariff. We are here to represent the ratepayer. We are here to ensure that our economy stays strong, that we have opportunities, and that seniors and those on a fixed income are in a position where they can live.

You know, there is a whole bunch of things. I understand that each wind turbine takes the same amount of concrete as five house basements. My goodness, think of the energy involved in making that kind of concrete. At some point could we have a little bit of a look at the fuller picture?

I also remember reading in the last two or three days, Madam Speaker, about one of Alberta's electric generation companies that now wants to turn their attention to hydro. It may be a good thing. I don't know if we're set up right for that. I've heard some concerns about the damming, the energy that goes into building the dam, and what happens when you have a body of water stored. I also remember three years ago sitting on one of the legislative committees where we talked to a lot of First Nations groups up in northern Alberta about the possibility of that.

Madam Speaker, as good as that may be, there are thousands of questions around that, too, but in the next six months we could maybe develop some of those answers – some of those answers – so that we could get the best electrical system for all Albertans, the best opportunities for all Albertans. You know, again, because two years from now we're all accountable, it's important for us to get this right.

Because of unintended consequences like Germany having to build a whole bunch of coal electric generation, because of the situation, from what I've heard, where sometimes seniors can't afford to heat their homes in the manner that they need to, because I've already seen tremendous, tremendous extra increases on Alberta ratepayers, I think that it is prudent to take a long, hard look at this in the next six months, Madam Speaker. Let's do everything we can so that the 87 of us get it right.

Madam Speaker, thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), any questions or comments for the previous speaker?

Seeing none, are there any further members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Yeah. Just a quick comment, Madam Speaker. This is second reading. We're talking about the principle of the bill. We haven't seen any amendments to speak of that I . . .

The Deputy Speaker: My apologies, hon. member. It appears that you have spoken to the amendment.

Dr. Swann: Is that possible?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Dr. Swann: It must have been my double.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, any further speakers, then, to the amendment?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on the amendment lost]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 27 Renewable Electricity Act

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to Bill 27. As the House will note, I voted in favour at second reading because I believe in the principle of renewable energy and renewable electricity. Unfortunately, I'm not certain that this government has got it exactly right.

With that, I will propose an amendment to Bill 27. I have the requisite number of copies here and will wait until you receive the original before I continue speaking.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. The amendment reads: Mr. Clark to move that Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be amended in section 2 as follows: (a) in subsection (1) by striking out "30%" and substituting "25%"; (b) in subsection (3)(b) by striking out "30%" and substituting "25%."

The rationale for this, Madam Chair, is quite simple. While the goal to increase renewable electricity generation in this province is a laudable one, I think, one that's overdue and one that absolutely ought to be pursued – I will note that a goal of phasing out coal-fired power by 2030 and incorporating renewable energy was part of the Alberta Party platform in the 2015 election and also part of the Alberta Party shadow climate plan, called Alberta's Contribution, because we feel it is important that we take action on climate change – the question, then, is: how do we take action on climate change, what are the impacts of that, and how do we make sure that we maximize the positive impacts of the renewable electricity plan while simultaneously minimizing unintended consequences or negative impacts?

Fortunately, there's been a very thorough report and study done by EDC Associates. They've prepared a very comprehensive – even their summary report is tremendously comprehensive. What they found is that there is an exponential increase in cost to retire coal-fired power and, more importantly, to bring renewable energy from 4,200 megawatts to 5,000 megawatts, the difference between 25 per cent and 30 per cent. In addition to that, there is a substantial increase in unreliability or, put another way, in concerns about reliability as we move from 25 to 30 per cent. At the same time, we don't necessarily gain much when it comes to carbon emission reductions.

If I can just speak briefly to the details of the report, their direct quote is that 4,200 megawatts of renewables "is a safer level" than a higher level of 5,000 megawatts or more.

If the 2030 renewables target is set at or below 4,200 MW and follows the 2/3 replacement objective, being two-thirds of coal-fired power replaced by renewables, the market is not as stressed ... and can be expected to sustain sufficient spontaneous new baseload capacity additions to ensure the currently specified electricity reliability threshold.

That is a threshold which is set out by AESO in its long-term adequacy rule.

In plain language, then, Madam Chair, that says that if we take it down to 25 from 30 per cent, we still achieve an objective of bringing on substantial new renewable energy capacity, which I think is important. I will agree with the government. It's important to do so. I think Albertans want us to do something. However, it does so at less cost while increasing reliability and also, interestingly enough, reduces price volatility based on the way that the market will operate. Now, I will acknowledge that perhaps with some of the other changes that have been announced by the government, price volatility is a separate issue that will need to be dealt with and debated as we move towards that.

The other thing that I think is important to note is that they looked at a couple of different scenarios. One scenario they called the cliff scenario, which is that you go to 2030 for coal and then the six facilities that would live on beyond 2030 under the current federal regs would drop off a cliff, if you will, which is essentially this government's plan. Interestingly, EDC Associates finds that to be a cheaper option. Being a person who relies on data to make decisions, I think it's very instructive for us to understand that, in fact, it may be less expensive if we allow the market to properly work, sending a strong signal that coal-fired power will in fact be entirely offline by 2030.

With that, Madam Chair, I would challenge anyone else in the opposition, if they have another plan, to please share that plan with us. I think this strikes an appropriate balance between ensuring that we bring on some renewable energy and maintaining reliability but doing so at the least possible cost to Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? Go ahead, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the hon. member's amendment, and I will be supporting this amendment for reasons that are technical in nature. In studying the deployment of renewables into different grids around the world, something that seems to show up is a pattern where anything beyond about 23 per cent generally can cause some grid instability.

Now, I took the time to speak to the actual people in the control centres here in Alberta who manage our grid, and I was saying to them: "You know, you're the people that actually run the grid. You are the ones determining the inflow and outflow of electricity to meet the different demand loads presented hour by hour, minute by minute throughout the whole, entire year." They understand dispatchability. They understand the variable nature of renewables very well. These are the experts. These are the people that really do understand electricity.

I believe the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat was talking about the percentage of industrial and commercial loads that we've got in this province, and he was correct. It is very, very high here. That is often referred to as our baseload because that's sort of what we have to maintain all the time.

In any event, in talking to these experts, I asked them, "Just how much renewables can your management system and the mechanisms throughout this province that we currently have in place at substations and elsewhere, that are the actual devices that control our grid – what sort of percentile of variable dispatchable-type power can you actually handle?" They told me: "At a maximum 30 per cent. We'd be comfortable at something less than that."

I see in this particular bill that's before the House right now the wording "at least 30%." That is a concern from a technical point of view because as soon as we get into a position where our current mechanisms and grid management tools cannot handle the variable nature of renewables coming in, we are talking about more billions of dollars just to handle the renewables coming on. But with our existing system, according to what the fellas were telling me, they can handle 25 per cent. They can handle, you know, that percentile. As I said earlier, in some of the research that we did a few years ago, it appeared that beyond 23 per cent is where some grids in the world started to get a little shaky.

So I'm happy to support the hon. member's amendment here to strike out 30 per cent and substitute 25. Just for the sake of grid stability here it would seem to me to be a prudent thing. The hon. member was mentioning the research from EDC, and I read the same research that he did. I attended a couple of workshops from EDC, and they were mapping out just what happens to the grid, they were mapping out what happens to the cost, and I remember them saying exactly what the hon. member has just said, that there is this point beyond which there is an exponential increase in the cost of bringing more renewables on.

I believe it would be prudent on the part of the government to consider the hon. member's amendment because this amendment is actually based on science. This amendment is based on a technical appraisal of our current electrical system and its ability to handle the variable nature of renewables coming on stream. I believe that from a technical point of view the government needs to listen to the technical experts out there who have done their homework, done the research. They have recommended in their own report and in what they have told me, too, that 25 per cent is manageable. It's a doable number. To go beyond that, we are risking grid instability, and to go beyond that, we are risking an exponential increase in cost. We are already going to have a problem with the cost of bringing these renewables on.

I would hope that every member in the House would give serious consideration to this amendment. I believe it is sound. It is in keeping with the technicalities of the grid that we've got. I'm going to be encouraging all of my colleagues in the Official Opposition to support this amendment. I would hope that members opposite would also support this amendment for the reasons that I have stated and that the hon. member has stated. I believe it's a responsible thing to do. I believe that a 30 per cent target, albeit ambitious, was not based on a technical understanding of the limitations of our grid.

Given that, I would hope that the hon. members on the other side would consider this 25 per cent as being a responsible amendment, one that they can support, one that will achieve a significant percentage of their targets and goals without causing undue instability to our grid and without causing an inordinate amount of extra money for that last 5 per cent, as was quantified by the EDC folks in their research.

In closing, Madam Chair, I would hope that all members in this House will support this amendment. I believe that it is perfectly good.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View on the amendment.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Madam Chair. I won't be long. I can't stand much longer.

There's another reason besides the technical reason to consider, and I hope that the government would at least review the technical evidence before they reject it outright. The second reason is that it would send a message that you're not totally tied to a plan in which the circumstances have changed.

It would send a significant message to Albertans generally but, certainly, the industry in particular that says something like: “We had a plan in place. We had it thoughtfully and scientifically planned, but the whole environment has changed. We recognize the deep recession. We recognize more and more the impacts that the carbon tax will have. We recognize the changes south of the border. We now are seeing a longer term suffering in our industries and small businesses, in employment, and in the economy. Based on good evidence, we are reconsidering the whole plan and just pulling back slightly because we are using evidence to make our decision. We’re not simply blindly going ahead because this is what we said we’d do six months ago or three months ago. We’re going to reconsider the evidence.”

Good leadership also has to do with reassessing the situation, the conditions, the environment, the context, the science and saying that it may be time to adjust course a little bit. This is not a major change in one sense, but it could have a major impact in terms of the negative effects on our economy and on jobs. It has both the scientific and the political benefit of saying to the electorate: “We listen. We take in evidence. When the plan looks like it could be improved based on new circumstances that weren’t in place when we first made the plan, we are prepared to pause and readjust where we’re going.”

Thanks, Madam Chair. I will be supporting it.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, we’ll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: We’re back on the bill. Are there any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, in respect of this bill, this particular bill is going to legislate the government of Alberta’s 30 by 2030 plan, and in the process the government is making some very sweeping changes to the way our electricity system operates. We have seen a cap on the RRO. We’ve seen Bill 27 come forward with some really sweeping changes.

I understand why they are going this route. It’s an attempt to mandate renewables. In some respects the government, I think, sincerely doesn’t want to have some of the horrible problems Ontarians are experiencing right now. I also realize that renewables will not grow within our system without the government’s artificially incenting them because they cannot compete with gas and coal. So this government believes that in order to make a place for more renewables, there must be some sort of system in place to artificially insert renewables into our system here.

Of course, there are some significant public relations advantages for this government because they have spent some time flying around the world, telling the whole wide world that Alberta is taking the lead on climate change globally, et cetera, et cetera.

An Hon. Member: Social licence.

Mr. MacIntyre: And, of course, perpetuating the social licence myth.

So I get that there is need for a photo op or two and that there are some significant PR advantages to pushing renewables, whether we actually need that generation right now or not.

I also understand that the government has finally clued in that in order to get the build-out happening in this province – there are, depending on the estimate you would believe, anywhere from $10 billion to $25 billion worth of build-outs that are going to need to take place here.

In addition to those costs, of course, we are going to be having significant costs relating to the closure of coal and the social costs of taking care of those families that are losing their jobs. I realize the government is going to try to spin some things about job development in that, with the natural gas that’s going to have to be built to back up the renewables, there will be some jobs there. But I’m reminded that in touring the Shepard facility just outside Calgary, it was remarkable how few people it actually takes to run that massive combined-cycle plant down there.

Coal, on the other hand, is labour intensive. It does take a lot of manpower to mine it, process it, burn it, maintain the plant, and so on, and any way you want to look at it, even converting existing coal to natural gas is going to result in job losses. That’s just a reality of things.

In addition, the other jobs number that we’ve seen the government throwing around was 7,200 jobs in renewables. Let’s be real honest. Those are mostly construction jobs. It takes very few people to maintain a solar farm. It takes very few people to maintain a wind farm. So those 7,200 jobs are going to be there for a while, and then they will be gone.

Insofar as the investment of billions, tens of billions, some possibly $20 billion worth of investment in this province for the construction of wind turbines: let’s remember exactly where that money does go. That money is going to be going to corporations like General Electric, Vestas, or SNC-Lavalin, and none of them are Alberta companies. I mean, you can talk about this investment coming into Alberta, but that investment is going to hang a 180-degree U-turn and head right back to Holland or right back to Florida or right back to somewhere else outside the province of Alberta because Alberta does not manufacture wind turbines. We do not manufacture solar panels. We don’t manufacture any of those very expensive components. We are going to get to sell a whole lot of concrete, and we will have some of the installation people but not all and not even probably most.

If you take a look at what happened in Ontario when they were doing their renewables build-out, the money fled the province. It went to places where these corporations are from to supply all of this very unique, specialized equipment. So this story of, "Oh, we're going to get $20 billion worth of investment in Alberta": no. It's going to come in here; it's going to hang a U-turn. They're going to buy this expensive stuff, and that money is going to go. If they choose Vestas, it's going to go to Holland and so forth.

Now, in addition to this, we have in this act some particularly problematic sections. I'm going to be introducing an amendment here to Bill 27. Can I continue, Madam Chair?

The Chair: It'll be a moment.

Mr. MacIntyre: We'll wait. All right. We can wait.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A2.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. Mr. MacIntyre moves that Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act, be amended in section 20 by striking out clause (b).

Now, what's with that? Well, I'm going to read to you something out of the Electric Utilities Act, which Bill 27 impacts. The section I'm going to be reading out of the Electric Utilities Act is found in division 2, section 16, and it is specifically referring to the Independent System Operator's duties and authority. Section 16 is specific to the duty to act responsibly. Now, the Alberta Electric System Operator, which is the ISO as written in this particular part of the Electric Utilities Act – I'm just going to read one of these requirements.

Duty to act responsibly

The Independent System Operator must exercise its powers and carry out its duties, responsibilities and functions in a timely manner that is fair and responsible to provide for the safe, reliable and economic operation of the interconnected electric system and to promote a fair, efficient and openly competitive market for electricity.

Now, I want bring the House's attention to the words "fair and responsible." This is outlining the mandate and the rules by which ISO must operate as a body responsible for our entire electric system. The lawmakers of the day put in place section 16, which is a great section, and it gives specific instructions requiring the ISO to conduct itself, to carry out its duties in a fair and responsible manner.

Now, in Bill 27, for whatever reason the government is striking that out and doing away with the fair and responsible requirement of ISO to operate specifically with regard to renewables. So what the government is actually saying in Bill 27 is that ISO does not have to conduct its duties in a manner that is fair and responsible to provide for the safe, reliable, and economic operation of our electric system when it comes to renewables. This is ridiculous, absolutely ridiculous. How can you say such a thing to not just AESO but, I mean, to any management structure? It's like coming along to the management structure of a business and saying: "Well, you know what, guys? You don't have to act in a fair and responsible manner when it comes to this part of our business. You can just do whatever."

But we're not talking about just any little business here. We're talking about the entire electric system in the province of Alberta, serving 4 million people, serving a massive number of heavy industries, an enormous number of commercial industries. What we're saying in Bill 27 is: "You know, AESO, you have to act fairly and responsibly except when it comes to renewables. For some reason renewables are so special, AESO, you don't have to act fairly and responsibly there."

Frankly, that's an irresponsible part of Bill 27. We can't have an organization, a management organization like AESO, not operate fairly and responsibly in anything that they do. They must always act fairly and responsibly, whether it be for conventional generation, whether it be for renewable generation, whether it be for anything to do with our electricity system. It is absolutely incredible that the government would somehow exempt renewables when it comes to being fair – being fair – and being responsible. What that's saying to the good people of Alberta is: this government believes that it's quite all right to be unfair and irresponsible when it comes to renewable technologies, thank you very much. That's ridiculous. That's not sound governance. I can't believe that you guys even – what were you smoking that day? It's crazy. It really is. You can point of order me on that.

What we have is this. Under this act this is the wording concerning subsection (1): "Subsection (1) does not apply to the development of renewable electricity program proposals under the Renewable Electricity Act," completely absolving AESO of any requirement for fair and responsible conduct when it comes to renewables. Somehow renewables are just that special that you can just do whatever you want.

As you can see, Madam Chair, that was, really, pretty low-hanging fruit for an amendment. I mean, it's just glaring, that this government would have our AESO absolved of any responsibility to be fair. What kind of a rule is that, that you don't need to be fair when it comes to renewables, that you don't need to be responsible when it comes to renewables? That in and of itself is unfair and irresponsible, and that's why this amendment is there.

I would encourage every member in this House. You know, the press is going to have fun with this one. We've got a government in place that doesn't think it's important to be fair and responsible. It's kind of strange.

At the end of the day, you know, it makes me wonder: is the reason for this because the government understands that these proposals that are coming into it aren't going to be fair or responsible or economic? Is it because this government already knows that some of these proposals coming in are not going to be reliable, that they're not going to lead to a reliable, stable grid? You know, I had some staff looking at these things, and the statement was: this is staggeringly enlightening. It gives us a really good idea of where the government's head is at. It looks like the government is actually trying to absolve itself and its arm's-length bodies from the duty to act responsibly.

Now, I am aware that in other places within this bill – and we'll get there – is that for the first time since AESO was mandated, the government is actually reaching into AESO, and the arm's-length nature of AESO is being eroded. They are no longer going to be independent from political interference. I can see that this government is wanting to in a way protect itself in that they're not going to be requiring AESO to be responsible or fair because AESO is not going to be able to be responsible and fair when the government is getting in there and politicizing something that should have been independent and arm's length.

I'm wondering if that is not some of the real reason why we just lost four out of five of the members of the Balancing Pool. We've had some resignations. These are professional people. They knew their stuff. They're gone. They're gone. And there was no real reason for them to resign other than that we were seeing an awful lot of interference from this government.

Now, it's not a real surprise to some of us when we see the lack of responsibility that this government has demonstrated thus far in so much of its legislation and policies, but to just blatantly come out like this and say: "Well, you know what? We're going to push these renewables, and we don't care whether it's fair. We don't care whether it's responsible. We're going to have 30 per cent by 2030, and to heck with any of the consequences." That's exactly what this government is saying, and that's why this amendment is vitally important.

AESO needs to conduct everything they do in a fair and responsible manner, as they have been originally mandated to do. That was not broken. It did not need to be fixed. I see absolutely no reason whatsoever why renewables should somehow be exempt from fair and responsible actions on the part of our Alberta Electric System Operator. It makes no sense. I would hope that all members in this House would themselves act fairly and responsibly and insist that the arm's-length agencies within this province also act fairly and responsibly.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would ask that the committee rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Ms Sweet: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 27. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, say no. So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. We've had a lot of good work this evening. I think there are some sensitivities that we maybe need to reflect on over the evening. I move that we adjourn until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:05 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

10 a.m.

Tuesday, November 29, 2016

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect, each in our own way. Hon. members, let us take a moment to send our thoughts and prayers to the family and friends of Captain Thomas McQueen, the pilot of the CF-18 fighter jet who tragically lost his life yesterday. The loss of a life is always difficult, and today Alberta feels this loss.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 21 Modernized Municipal Government Act

The Deputy Chair: The Committee of the Whole has under consideration amendment A1, subamendment SA3. Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to the subamendment? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to speak regarding the subamendment presented by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I want to say thank you to that member for the work on this proposed amendment and to say that while the intent of environmental reserve certainly is to address lands not suitable for development, past experience has shown that there is a need for greater certainty around this definition. The term "unsuitable for development" alone is simply too broad and open to interpretation. That is the reason that the term was removed from the previous planning act in 1983.

Throughout the MGA review we heard that a clearer definition of environmental reserve would benefit municipalities and developers alike because it would address the problem that an unclear definition was leading to different interpretations and applications across the province. For example, AAMD and C told us that the definition for environmental reserve should be clarified within the MGA to promote consistent use of these tools in the land-use planning process. Over the summer we asked Albertans for feedback on our approach to environmental reserve, and two-thirds of respondents agreed with the proposed direction in Bill 21. Only 8.7 per cent disagreed.

Our intent here is to create greater certainty and precision for both municipalities and landowners. That is why we stand by the clarified definition in Bill 21 and do not support the proposed amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the subamendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Chair. I appreciate that, and I just wanted to speak in favour of it. My colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek, I would say, more than knows what he's talking about on this. This is really an opportunity to provide a platform, if you will, or a set of rules under which the many municipalities in Alberta and the people who do building and developing in those municipalities can have a more fruitful discussion and a more fruitful working relationship. So I think that I would ask members of the House to support this.

I think you will find in the fullness of time that this is actually doing the municipalities a favour and will probably make Alberta a better place. I think everybody recognizes that there are certain times when land has to be given up by people that are developing it for a whole variety of legitimate reasons: park space, roads, environmental reserve – very important – protecting waterways, watercourses, wetlands. All of those things matter a great deal, and you need a set of rules under which to talk about these things, where both the municipality and those that seek to develop land can come to the best decision, not just for today but for the long-term future of Alberta.

For those reasons I would ask members of the House to support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the subamendment?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question on the subamendment?

[Motion on subamendment SA3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back on the original amendment, A1. Any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the fact that I'm allowed to stand in the House today and speak to the Modernized Municipal Government Act, the amendment to Bill 21, and the amendment to the amendment. That gets a little lost in the water when I talk to local press about a subamendment to an amendment to an amendment of the MGA. That being said, on Monday of last week a colleague of mine and I met with, among other folks, bureaucrats from Municipal Affairs to go over the government amendments to Bill 21, the amendment to the Municipal Government Act.

Madam Chair, it will be intermunicipal collaborative frameworks that I will be speaking about this morning. Now, ICFs are a new addition to the Modernized Municipal Government Act. Intermunicipal development plans have certainly been around for some time, and while not mandatory right now, there are several municipalities that have completed them. Intermunicipal collaborative frameworks are now mandatory, and intermunicipal development plans will be a mandatory part of an ICF. Wow. That's another one when you talk to local press where they kind of go: wow. Anyway, a municipality must develop an ICF with any municipality, either urban or rural, that it shares a border with. The exception is those municipalities that are part of a growth management board. More about that in a minute.

You know, Madam Chair, it is understood that Albertans routinely cross municipal borders when accessing services or infrastructure, so it may make some sense that if services or infrastructure provide regional benefit, then perhaps all municipalities in that region should share some responsibility in the funding model. I just want to say that rural municipalities understand why the proposed intermunicipal collaboration frameworks have come along in the Modernized Municipal Government Act. Basically, it has to do with linear funding not changing from the rural municipalities and an effort to have collaboration with their urban neighbours. I know urban municipalities have been asking for something, at least they were asking for part of the linear funding for years, so it appears that this was the solution here.

As a rural MLA I represent both rural and urban municipalities in the riding of Little Bow, and in my riding there has been sharing of linear revenue for years. However, there are many urban municipalities in the province that feel that they provide significant infrastructure and service amenities to rural residents without receiving any corresponding compensation from rural municipalities. That one has been tossed around for several years as well. The government hasn't touched linear funding, but the proposed mandatory intermunicipal collaborative frameworks must include provisions for the joint funding of shared services, which ultimately would see linear funding likely being used in those instances. Anyway, I just wanted to make that point clear before I moved on to the particular aspects of an intermunicipal collaborative framework.

You know, Madam Chair, I think intermunicipal relationships for the most part have been generally positive in Alberta. There are always exceptions: some for very good reasons; some for all the wrong reasons, as it turns out. Mandatory council training, on another topic, could possibly help in that resolve, but we're talking about ICFs at the moment.

Anyway, back to these intermunicipal development plans and intermunicipal collaboration frameworks. In the proposed legislation IDPs will be a necessary part of ICFs. Intermunicipal development plans must address things like land use, future residential development, future transportation corridors, possible future annexation considerations between those municipalities. Intermunicipal infrastructure has been removed. In the new amendments from the government service delivery has also been removed. An IDP will also include something like where potentially an industrial site may be located, so that could also be part of an IDP.

Madam Chair, I quote from the Lacombe county and village of Alix IDP.

Intermunicipal planning is an effort between two or more municipalities to make long term land use planning decisions. An Intermunicipal Development Plan (IDP) should approach the area with a regional perspective. Municipal boundaries disappear during the development of future land uses and reappear in order to administer the preferred land use pattern.

IDPs are broad-based policy documents that strive for environmentally responsible development without significant unnecessary costs and unacceptable negative impacts on either municipality. Both municipalities face growth pressures and an IDP searches for mutually beneficial solutions.

I just found that IDP when I was searching around online and felt it relayed an accurate description of what an IDP actually is.

In the past an IDP was a voluntary plan. Now it is proposed that an intermunicipal development plan is a mandatory part of an ICF. Two or more councils of municipalities that have common boundaries must, by each passing a bylaw in accordance with the act, adopt an intermunicipal development plan to include those areas of land lying within the boundaries of the municipalities as they consider necessary, which will be a component of the ICF that is also necessary, mandatory. Madam Chair, that sounds like a lot of municipalities that have to implement two statutory plans plus an ICF.

One more, which will be known as a statutory plan that is now mandatory, is a municipal development plan. A municipal development plan is a long-range planning document that provides a municipality's elected officials, administration, ratepayers, and developers with a framework of policies for making decisions regarding future growth and development opportunities within said municipality's borders. A municipal development plan almost has to be completed before an intermunicipal collaboration framework can be set up. So a municipal development plan used to be mandatory for only towns that had a population of 3,500 or more and cities, of course. Now all municipalities must complete a municipal development plan.

I just want to say, Madam Chair, as a municipal councillor in southern Alberta for several years, that the municipality I sat on received about half of its annual budget from linear funding, so you can imagine the criss-crossing of pipelines and the above ground machinery and equipment that was within those borders. That municipality was certainly favoured with oil and gas exploration.

Long before I arrived on the scene, municipal leaders of that municipality determined that some of its linear money should go to recreation agreements with all of its urban counterparts within her borders. Truth be told, most of the money for recreation in those municipalities came from that linear funding, and it was no small sum at the end of the day. So I have certainly been witness to collaboration between rural and urban municipalities and communities, and I've also been witness to a rural municipality sharing some of its linear funding with its urban neighbours. As it turns out, I guess I was lucky to have been witness to some of that kind of collaboration and sharing.

I also have a rural municipality within my riding that has very little linear funding, yet they still find a way to be able to share something with their rural neighbours, urban neighbours within their municipality. So that's another successful collaboration even based on the fact that they don't have linear funding to share.

However, that aside, consider the statutory plans that I've discussed here plus the intermunicipal collaborative framework. Imagine what small communities, small towns, or small villages are thinking. They have got to be saying to themselves: "How can we be expected to put together all these documents, all these statutory plans? How can we be expected to put them all together within the now three-year timeline suggested in the Modernized Municipal Government Act amendments?" To be frank, it is a short timeline, and from the communities that I've talked to – and, believe me, when I say small, I mean small communities in my riding: 122 in one, 279 or 298 or something in another. Small.

Madam Chair, the opposition, of course, has been engaging in extensive stakeholder outreach, and we've been striving to receive whatever feedback we can get about these proposals. We certainly have feedback from municipalities across the entire province, that I'll share in a moment. But to start off, I think I'll share submissions on the Modernized Municipal Government Act, MMGA, that were sent by the two organizations in this province that represent rural and urban municipalities, namely the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties and the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association. Okay. I will talk about submissions from those two organizations with regard to MDPs, IDPs, and ICFs.

Municipal development plans. The Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties in their submission does support the requirement for all municipalities to have an MDP, is supportive of the idea, but they do suggest a few changes. Number one, "Municipalities should have up to five years to complete [an] MDP." Number two, "The province should fund AAMD and AUMA in developing additional resources and templates to assist those municipalities [as] capacity challenges."

In gathering their data from their rural municipalities, AAMD and C members recognized that this will challenge many small municipalities including summer villages.

There is a reality. AAMD and C believes:

Without sufficient resources or tools, the requirements of developing a [municipal development] plan could push many municipalities into dissolution.

On the other hand, MDPs will not have to be extensive for small municipalities. That's understood.

AAMD and C also notes:

... these planning timelines falling during the election cycle ... could impact how the plans are done. Templates and resources ...

according to AAMD and C

... should be available to assist in this process.

Now, our friends at AUMA, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, say pretty much the same thing about MDPs that AAMD and C is saying. With regard to intermunicipal collaborative frameworks and intermunicipal development plans, AAMD and C supports regional collaboration [of course] between municipal neighbours and [certainly] recognizes the need for municipalities to work collaboratively to plan, fund and deliver services. Where possible, this should be done through local decision making. Bill 21's requirement for ICFs and IDPs presents a balance between local decision making and mandatory inter-municipal collaboration by requiring municipalities to meet province-wide standards in their agreements ... details [can] be determined locally, according to AAMD and C. AUMA also supports the ICF and IDP concepts but also states:

Municipalities should work collaboratively and make decisions on the planning [and] funding ... [while acting] in good faith in the negotiation, something, I think, that almost goes without saying.

As far as some of the submissions that we've received with regard to this topic, I'd just like to quote from some of the municipalities we heard from. Sturgeon county is certainly supportive of the change and the amendments to Bill 21. However, it states that it has some concerns around the capacity for rural municipalities to complete all required intermunicipal collaborative frameworks and corresponding intermunicipal development plans within a three-year time frame.

Parkland county, on the other hand, states that it is unable to support ICFs. Parkland county claims that this change will have a significant impact on the county as this will require intermunicipal development plans with municipalities sharing a border that are not part of the Capital Region Board. They also say that a definition for regional services is something they believe is required. Major concerns exist around the scope of work and, certainly, the costs.

All the way down to the village of Barons: they say that it strongly feels that intermunicipal collaborative frameworks should be voluntary and not mandatory. Barons believes that better relationships can be made when it is done willingly and voluntarily versus mandatorily.

Lac La Biche county states that as a regional municipality their county will have to negotiate intermunicipal collaborative frameworks and intermunicipal development plans with its neighbouring six counties, two Métis settlements, and throw in one improvement district. They don't expect negotiations to be difficult because most of the areas that border them are relatively uninhabited. They are hoping for reduced intermunicipal collaborative framework and intermunicipal development plan requirements for rural/rural neighbours since they believe that the main thrust of intermunicipal collaborative frameworks and IDPs is to encourage collaboration between rural and urban municipal neighbours.

The village of Big Valley suggests that a significant increase to the amount of statutory planning that will be necessary over a very short timeline will cause capacity issues. Developing three statutory plans when you do not have a planning person in the building can be extremely difficult. Financial assistance through provincial grants would be helpful, but it will not address the extra demand on staff time for small offices that often only have one employee.

You can see, Madam Chair, how municipalities think about these proposed changes to the MGA. I have given a fairly broad examples of municipalities' thoughts throughout Alberta about the changes. You know, we aren't necessarily against the amendments here in the Bill 21 amendment, but I think there is a common theme here when we hear the concerns of the two associations and the concerns of municipalities. No one knows what the regulations will say. The legislation is one thing, but the regulations can make things more difficult yet for municipalities.

You know, what we're really worried about is the cost of putting forth an MDP, an IDP, and an ICF, especially for small municipalities in this province. They plain don't have the capacity, whether it be financial or physical, to put together these documents within a three-year time frame. This is a huge concern. This is what we hear. If they certainly don't have the training to begin to put together an IDP, an MDP, and an ICF, they would certainly have to be in contact with a consultant, and those folks cost money.

I guess the last thing would be: what kind of support is the government prepared to offer to these municipalities? Consider the work and the money that's involved for a village of 300 that has, you know, had all of its elevators torn down, which were their tax base. Where will the line item in the 2017 Municipal Affairs budget appear, and how much money will be in that line item to help these municipalities in this endeavour? Those are the concerns that municipalities have. Perhaps the minister has thought about all that and will move forward with something in Budget 2017.

Let's just remember that small municipalities – and there are lots of them across Alberta – certainly may only have one employee. That employee is the CAO, and he writes the agenda for council, and he hires someone to come in and do maintenance, and he answers letters, and he talks to ratepayers, and now he has three statutory documents that he needs to deal with.

Those are the concerns that we certainly have. They pretty much mirror the concerns of the municipalities. Those are our partners. They must live by this document, so let us consider that when we make our decision on this matter.

Madam Chair, I'd like to make a motion for a subamendment today with regard to the intermunicipal collaboration frameworks, municipal development plans, and intermunicipal development plans. I have the requisite number of copies here, and I will wait until you have received it and seen it before I continue.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the subamendment will be referred to as SA4.

Just a reminder, please, to everyone in the House. The volume is getting a little bit loud, and I'm not able to hear everything that the member is saying. So if you could, if you're going to have long conversations, maybe find somewhere else to do it or keep the volume down, please.

Hon. member, please continue.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Schneider to move that amendment A1 to Bill 21, the Modernized Municipal Government Act, be amended as follows:

- (a) in Part T in clause (b)(i) by striking out “2 years” and substituting “3 years”;
- (b) by striking out Part U;
- (c) in clause (b) of Part EE as follows:
  - (i) by renumbering subclause (i) as (i.1) and by adding the following before subclause (i.1):
    - (i) in subsection (1) by striking out “2 years” and substituting “3 years”;
  - (ii) in subclause (ii) by striking out “2 years” wherever it occurs and substituting “3 years.”

The purpose of this subamendment is to extend the timelines for municipalities.

The Deputy Chair: You’ll have to speak again, hon. member.

Mr. Schneider: I’ll have to speak again? All right. That’s fair enough.

The Deputy Chair: I see that one of your hon. colleagues, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, would like to speak to your subamendment, so we’ll let him.

Mr. Cooper: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. The hon. member was giving such a riveting dissertation on the need for amendments to ICFs, and likewise I wondered if he might be willing to just conclude his thoughts, that I’m sure will be persuasive and that the government will be quick to act upon.

Mr. Schneider: You know, Madam Chair, last week I gave a speech where I think it was the same member told me that I had written a speech that had people on the edge of their seats, and I told him that I live to write speeches that put people on the edge of their seats. Now, this is riveting. This is riveting stuff.

Mr. Hanson: Stick to a monotone so we can handle it.

Mr. Schneider: Sure.

The purpose of this amendment, if I could get back to this amendment, is to extend the timelines for municipalities to develop all the planning documents that are being made mandatory in Bill 21. I just want the minister to be aware of what my goal is here. As we know, the timelines for statutory documents changed last Monday. With regard to the Modernized Municipal Government Act, at the end of the day we’d like to see everything, all of the stat documents – ICF will also be called a stat document once it’s passed – be a three-year and that the potential arbitration for an intermunicipal collaboration framework document be given an extra year.

I know that when we met in the meeting last Monday, the government put all these plans so that the numbers weren’t scattered all over the map. They basically said: three years for everything. Well, that means two years for an ICF plus one year for arbitration. We now have municipal development plans and intermunicipal development plans that are allowed three years. I really hope that we can talk about an ICF being three years as well, and in the event of arbitration that can take an extra year.

Intermunicipal collaborative frameworks reduce the duplication of services and increase efficient and co-ordinated service delivery. Intermunicipal collaborative frameworks will allow for improved land-use infrastructure planning across municipal boundaries. That is clear. The ICF changes won’t solve every problem – I’m sure there’s nothing we could write down that would solve every problem – but they will at least get the municipal leaders of the municipalities to sit down at a table and start discussion about what collaboration they can determine between themselves. If they’re still unable to come to an agreement, arbitration allows a year for there to be a settlement. Certainly, there would be an arbitrator involved. That would move that situation forward.

Now, the issue is that this could be burdensome for smaller communities. I’ve talked about that. Folks, outside in rural Alberta there are villages that have one employee, and that person will be under huge amounts of stress to make this happen. Even if they hired it out to a consultant, they now have to figure out where the money will come from. I know that we are hoping to see either some templates for these statutory documents or – I know the minister talked when I was at the meeting in Lethbridge – that there may be potentially some money somewhere to help with all these issues.

We’re proposing that the timeline be stretched out one more year to allow municipalities time to adjust to this change. All plans need to be complete within three years, and the ICFs will still have an additional year for arbitration. That’s where the end result of the amendment is.

That being said, I encourage everyone in the House today to consider what I’ve said about small communities when they make their decision about intermunicipal collaborative frameworks. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to subamendment SA4? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair, and I want to thank the member for recognizing the value of intermunicipal collaboration frameworks. Some of the biggest, most exciting changes we are making to the MGA are about creating a new system of collaboration between municipalities to help make them sustainable, smart land-use and servicing choices that benefit all citizens no matter where they live. These partnerships will bring together neighbouring municipalities to partner on land-use planning, co-ordination of services of regional benefit, and equitable funding of those services, which will mean, for the residents, integrated services and cost sharing on regional projects that transcend municipal boundaries. The MMGA does set a two-year time frame in which municipalities must create ICFs where they don’t yet have agreements on items determined to be of regional benefit.

While this is a lot of work for municipalities in a condensed time frame, we want municipalities to succeed in working together now. Certainly, we do not achieve success as one but as many. We know there is work that has already been done by many municipalities which have great working relationships and similar agreements in place. There are more than 600 examples of intermunicipal agreements already in place, and the provincial government wants to see that work expanded. Intermunicipal collaboration will help communities work together, grow together, and become stronger together, and by working together, we can strengthen Alberta’s regional economies, taking us from a winner-take-all approach to one where we all win.

Certainly, with that, Madam Chair, we are fully committed to support the smaller municipalities to be able to complete this work in a timely fashion. We’ve already been quite clear in terms of the fact that we will be working with the municipal associations to create templates and other resources to ensure they have the support they need to move forward. Certainly, there is an abundance of staff within the Department of Municipal Affairs to provide assistance to municipalities in doing this work, and there is also, of course, a certain amount of funding available through the Alberta community partnership grants. Municipalities can choose to utilize funds from that.

Madam Chair, certainly, there are many examples already of municipalities recognizing the benefit of working together and choosing to utilize those resources to move forward in recognition of the fact that, you know, a few dollars expended at the front and some time expended at the front allows them to find the efficiencies that actually support them to be more viable and more sustainable going forward. Certainly, the citizens and residents of the communities in municipalities do expect that municipalities have a plan for municipalities to go forward.

You know, certainly, the member referred to some municipalities that maybe don't have a lot going on on their borders. We only ask that they have a conversation about those issues, and if they both agree that there is actually no overlap, then they can agree that there's no requirement to come up with a plan on that. There just needs to be documentation of that question. The ICFs are a very flexible tool, recognizing the variety of different agreements and relationships that happen between municipalities. We certainly created a tool broad enough to do that.

Madam Chair, when it comes down to it, again, residents expect their municipalities to have a plan going forward, to know what's happening with that municipality, to know where that municipality needs to go in the future, so we will continue to work with them to ensure that they have the tools they need to go forward with that. It is important, again, that that kind of collaboration actually lead to increased viability and sustainability of municipalities by working together to get that work done as soon as possible so their citizens can have access to the co-ordination of services, the land-use planning, and equitable funding sooner rather than later. For that reason, I will not be supporting this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to subamendment SA4? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. Actually, this amendment was brought to me by one of my local councillors. I'm not saying that this is where it had come from, but I am saying that this was one of his concerns, that there might not be enough time to be able to do all of the municipalities across Alberta within this time frame. There are areas or ridings where the municipal governments aren't collaborating as productively as some of the others, and we've heard, like one of my colleagues here said, that they've had some sort of agreement in place for a lot of years. This is not the case in my riding, and the concern is that we're going to have the two years lapse where they're trying to get through this but not be able to get the support from the municipal government that they need to be able to create this.

Now, I'm sure the minister has got the answers, but my concern is – and this is from my understanding – that I believe this start date would come into effect when the bill is proclaimed. Does that mean that that two-year period starts at proclamation, or does that two-year period start when the regulations are done? This is an important fact because if it takes a year for the regulations to be done for this part of the ICF, then that means we've only got a year left to be able to create the ICF within my constituency.

With the fact that it has got some potential for having, I guess, distractions become part of this process, my question is: will we end up with many of our municipalities caught within this arbitration process? Will we be able to manage having a large volume of municipalities within this arbitration process because of the fact that we don't have enough time? This is where I see that right off the bat we've got to have some extra time so that we can see the regulations, have the municipalities interpret the regulations, and then work together. It takes time for it to be done. Now, if the government has these regulations ready to go, then they should have these regulations released already so that the municipal governments can actually see the direction that this is going.

One of the questions that I've got is that some of these ICF parts in here are a little vague and open to interpretation, and that is, I guess, when it comes to my riding, where some of the concerns are going to be brought forward. And this isn't something that is unique to my riding because when I went to one of the government town hall meetings in Lac La Biche, this also was a concern that was brought up, exactly what Bill 21 meant to ICFs and exactly how to interpret it.

Now, I am looking forward to the process of municipalities working together because I believe that it's in the best interests of municipalities to work together. I don't agree with it being forced, but I do understand that the government is going in this direction. The problem is: are the timelines too tight for it even to be possible? And that is what I would like to hear from the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Have they actually got a timeline on how this is going to take place, and if not, then are we going to be putting a lot of strain on our municipalities in arbitration when that could have been avoided by just adding an additional year? If I could get an answer from the Minister of Municipal Affairs, I'd appreciate that.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to subamendment SA4? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 21. Before I get to the meat of the matter, I'd just like to thank my colleague from Little Bow for his persuasive speech, the silky smooth '70s sounds of the Member for Little Bow. I also heard him use some animations like nnnnn, and I'm kind of curious to know how Hansard will be recording that. I look forward to the reading tomorrow.

But on to important things about this amendment, Madam Chair. The Member for Little Bow has made some very important points, particularly with respect to timelines. That's exactly what this amendment does do; it expands the timelines. I know that you'll be aware that when Bill 21 first was introduced, there was a range of timelines to finish the statutory documents around ICFs and MDPs and all of the other acronyms that are included in Bill 21, some of them two years and some of them five years. So through consultations – and some of the associations were concerned around that lengthy timeline of five years – the government decided to collapse all of the agreements to two years.

Well, the big, big challenge with that, Madam Chair, is that a number of municipalities will struggle greatly to be able to complete all of those documents. For example, the county of Mountain View, which, as you know, makes up a large portion of the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, will need to form an agreement with the town of Olds, the town of Carstairs, the town of Didsbury, the town of Cremona, the town of Sundre, Red Deer county, Clearwater county, Rocky View county, and Kneehill county, and that is only for ICFs. That doesn't include any of the additional stat docs that also need to be completed. So you have nine agreements that need to be done in two years. We're looking at less than three months per agreement for that particular county.

The challenge with that is, as you know, that many of these councils only meet sometimes once, sometimes twice, possibly three times a month. In large respects, these are volunteer councillors who give of themselves to this process. The challenge:

in order to get these very significant documents accomplished, it's quite likely going to take more than three months for each municipality to do that. So now we have a situation where Mountain View county needs to enter into nine of these agreements, and part of my concern is on the enforcement of what happens if this isn't completed.

In Bill 21, under Measures to Ensure Compliance with Frameworks, section 708.43(3)(d) states: "withholding money otherwise payable by the Government to the municipality pending compliance with an order of the Minister." Part of my concern is that if these documents aren't completed in the allotted two years, will then, in fact, the minister act to withhold potential grant funding, MSI dollars, gas tax transfers, and these sorts of funding requirements, that are so critical to our municipalities, based upon them not having finished any of the stat docs? Obviously, that issue would still exist if we accepted the amendment and it went out to three years, but the big difference there, then, would be that we would at least give more time and opportunity to have these ICFs approved.

Now, let me be very clear. The process of accomplishing an ICF is an important process. You know, ICFs certainly will have the potential to reduce the duplication of services and increase efficiencies, co-ordinate service deliveries, so the co-operation that can be found in the ICFs and the co-operation that can be found through ICFs is not necessarily a negative, but the timelines that the department has laid out certainly don't provide appropriate time, particularly in the smaller municipalities. My colleague from Little Bow provided some of those examples. For example, the village of Cremona will need to have multiple ICFs with its neighbours, and I know they only have a couple of employees.

One of the other big challenges with this particular proposal around ICFs, generally speaking, and small municipalities is that it's quite likely that, whether it's in staff time, which is still a very real cost if they do it in-house, or municipalities go externally and get consultants to do it, some of these documents will wind up being a net cost to the municipality of $10,000, $15,000, $20,000, or, certainly where there are larger, complex negotiations, upwards of $50,000.

So there are lots of concerns and potential risks around ICFs, lots of potential positives as well, but certainly the timeline that the government has laid out isn't fair. It doesn't respect small municipalities. In fact, it doesn't respect large municipalities as well, particularly in the case where there are multiple stakeholders or multiple municipalities inside the boundaries, typically, of a county.

I know that we've heard from the minister this morning and that she is encouraging her colleagues to not support this. I hope that she will reconsider. I mean, the Member for Little Bow was exponentially more persuasive than I, and she, you know, isn't going to listen to him. I hope that she'll reconsider and think about some of the consequences of having only two years allotted for the planning process around ICFs. I wondered if she might have a moment to comment around: what exactly are the plans of the department if those aren't completed, and will grant monies be withheld from those municipalities which, either through lack of time or lack of desire, haven't got these documents completed?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to subamendment SA4? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and thanks, everyone, for the time this morning on this very important matter.

I just have a couple of quick comments to add to what my colleagues have already presented this morning with regard to the timing of the intermunicipal collaborative framework idea and MDPs and IDPs and trying to match these up. I think that my colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills did a great job of pointing out a lot of the timing issues, as did the Member for Little Bow. It seems to me that there may be just a little bit of refinement that I'd like to add in, and that is that when we have a lot of municipalities throughout the province that are considering having to now possibly hire consultants to do this because a lot of them, as was said earlier, don't have in-house planning departments and so on, there may be some sort of economical or cost-saving advantage to having these timelines match up.

Given what we've already said in our comments this morning and given that the new change is a very, very big new change, as was pointed out clearly, I too would like to back up what the Official Opposition House Leader has said. To the minister: please, would the minister reconsider her comments that she made already this morning and look at the possibilities of this? All we're asking for is more time to get it right.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to subamendment SA4? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. I was hoping to provide some opportunity for some feedback on this so that I would have the opportunity to respond to it at one time. I certainly want to clarify that the process for this is that, absolutely, they will not be required to start the timeline for the IDPs, the two years, until the legislation is proclaimed.

Those regulations will be posted online, based on the feedback and stakeholder engagement that we do. There will be a draft version posted online this coming spring, spring 2017, and all municipalities, including all the members across the floor, and all of the public will have the opportunity to provide feedback on those regulations as well. I'm looking forward to collecting that feedback to ensure that, just as we worked to make sure that the legislation was the very best piece for the people of Alberta, the regulations also continue to best reflect that.

Madam Chair, those regulations will be in place at the time that the legislation is proclaimed, prior to the election in the fall of 2017. Essentially, incoming councillors will be able to familiarize themselves with the new MGA and all the amendments and all the requirements prior to being elected so that they know what they're getting into and also so they have a fresh slate to work with and have a new council to work through all those processes and there's no interruption mid-term with that.

Absolutely, they will have the full two years to work on that. I think one of the things I wanted to highlight as well is that the legislation provides for and enables municipalities to do more regional planning. So if there are a number of small municipalities embedded within a rural municipality, then they can get together and work together on a plan. It's not a requirement that they have to be bilateral agreements. Certainly, they can have agreements with multiple municipalities if there is indeed an overlap of services in municipalities that reside close together.

Mostly I just wanted to highlight our commitment to working with municipalities. In fact, there are so many municipalities that are excited about this already that several communities have already applied for the ACP grant to get started on developing their IDPs, and there's nothing keeping them from getting started on it now if they so desire. Many of them already have IDPs and productive relationships with their neighbours, so there's a lot of great work going on. A lot of work being started already is going to capitalize on the work that has been done for a long time. But when it comes down to it, we'll make sure that they have the templates, make sure that they have the support of the staff, the advisers, the support of staff in our planning department in order to move forward.

Certainly, for some of the smaller municipalities – for example, you know, a summer village that has 10 people – we're not talking about a document that requires substantial work by a consultant but something that they can work on together through a template, with support of the department, in a very short period of time. Between the excellent work that my department can offer in terms of all the advisers that we have on staff for municipalities along with the templates and along with the ACP grants, I'm looking forward to continuing to work with them to ensure that they get the work done in a timely fashion so that their residents can, sooner rather than later, take advantage of all of the amazing opportunities that this kind of collaboration has to offer.

Once again, I'm not standing in support of the amendment because it is important that we get moving on this right away and ensure that Albertans can have the advantage of it sooner rather than later. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to SA4? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Thank you. I appreciate the comments back from the minister in relation to our request to only extend this by one year. It seems as though she's not convinced that that would be the right way to go, but she's brought up a couple of interesting points that I cannot resist talking to a little bit because the door is open.

Yes, there is an election coming up in October '17. We're going to see a massive amount of interest at the local level, I'm sure, in this, so it occurs to me that we have got to talk a little bit about that. The number of people that come into municipal elections and are surprised by what they find once there is quite surprising, I think. Once again, you've given us another point, I think, Minister. I think this is an added point we didn't think of this morning, so thank you. This is another reason we should extend it one year. All those people are going to be so blind to some of the things that are going on, as they currently are, let alone these changes. The regulations, of course, we won't be debating here today, and I know that you're going to be putting them on the sites, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. Still, I would believe that we're not making a large request – it's a small request – and because of the election I think this is a great reason for it to be extended that extra year, which our amendment is asking for.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion on subamendment SA4 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back on the original amendment. Any members wishing to speak to A1? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Perfect. Thank you very much, Madam Chair. On behalf of the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills I would like to propose an amendment to the amendment to Bill 21.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, if you could just wait until I have a copy of the original, please.

Mr. Hanson: You bet.

The Deputy Chair: The subamendment will now be referred to as SA5.

Please go ahead.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Mr. Cooper to move that amendment A1 to Bill 21, Modernized Municipal Government Act, be amended in part X by striking out the proposed subsection (2.2) and substituting the following:

(2.2) Subject to an appeal under section 648.1, an off-site levy may be imposed and collected for a purpose referred to in section (2.1) only if, in respect of the land on which the off-site levy is being imposed,

- (a) no off-site levy has been previously imposed under subsection (1) for the same purpose with respect to the land on which the off-site levy is being imposed, and
- (b) at least 15% of the benefit of the purpose, as determined under the regulations, is anticipated to benefit the future occupants of land on which the off-site levy is being imposed.

This amendment instates a threshold of 15 per cent rather than the current 30 per cent of the benefit of a proposed community infrastructure – police station, library, fire hall, recreation centre, et cetera – to protect consumers more from the effects of rising house costs.

Originally off-site levies could be charged for water, infrastructure, sanitary sewage, storm sewage, drainage, and roads. Bill 21 originally brought in new capital projects that will now be included, and they are recreation facilities, fire halls, police stations, or libraries. For these new areas in Bill 21 there originally had to be a minimum benefit to the new members of the community of 30 per cent. In this amendment the government has chosen to take away the 30 per cent minimum benefit, or this amendment would propose to take away the 30 per cent minimum benefit. While it's true that the benefit should be proportionate, the 30 per cent minimum was a reasonable threshold to balance needs of municipalities against the rising cost of new homes. We feel that 15 per cent would better reflect a reduction in that.

Housing affordability is very important. Our housing industry not only supplies homes for Alberta families; it also employs many, many workers. So in an effort to regain this balance, we are proposing a new threshold of 15 per cent to protect consumers more from the effects of rising house costs.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Any members wishing to speak to subamendment SA5? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. During the government's summer tour we heard from many municipalities and members of the public who are supportive of our proposal to expand the scope of off-site levies to help build fire halls, libraries, police stations, and recreation centres. Such facilities are expensive but highly valued and should be part of complete, safe, healthy, and growing communities.

Until now municipalities had to dig deep into existing tax revenue to fund construction, the responsibility weighing heavily on them and individual taxpayers. This new policy spreads part of that responsibility to developers, new home buyers, and growing communities to help pay a fair share. Essentially, it's growth helping to pay for growth.

Additional feedback received over the summer identified a number of suggestions to further improve the proposals put forward in Bill 21. In particular, many municipalities suggested that changes were needed to make this tool more accessible to small communities across the province. Most notably, we heard that the proposed 30 per cent threshold for applying these levies was problematic. Under the House amendment that we made, municipalities would be able to – and, of course, it's enabling legislation only – charge developers one-time fees based on the benefit the new development would receive from the new facility, whether that benefit is 1 per cent, 10 per cent, 50 per cent, or more. There's no minimum or maximum benefit, just a shared responsibility among all partners to help pay for growing communities and valuable services.

Madam Chair, we heard very clearly from municipalities that that threshold was a challenge for smaller communities to be able to utilize this tool. So on behalf of those smaller communities and ensuring they've all the tools that they need to support the infrastructure development in their communities, we chose to remove the 30 per cent threshold, and with that, a 15 per cent threshold would continue to present a challenge for those municipalities. By removing the threshold, Alberta municipalities are better positioned to create healthy communities, provide a more consistent level of service to all their residents, and manage growth within their boundaries. Of course, Madam Chair, developers will contribute to the costs of some community facilities based on the degree of benefit while municipalities will continue to find the rest through general revenue.

So this is, again, about providing an opportunity for municipalities to engage with their residents, to engage with their development industry to create a bylaw that would make sense to ensure they meet the infrastructure needs of their communities.

Again, it's just another tool in their tool box so that Albertans in new communities have a more consistent level of service from fire halls, libraries, recreation centres, and police stations. Albertans in existing communities will know they are not shouldering a disproportionate burden in funding services for new development through their taxes. Expanding the scope of off-site levies and basing them on a fair formula is good for communities and good for all of Albertans.

Again, the developers pay only a proportional benefit for this, and it is important that we ensure that small communities have the access that they need to this tool, so I will not be supporting this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the subamendment? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Okay. Thank you very much again, Madam Chair. I just would like to speak briefly to the issue of off-site levies and in particular this amendment. The number one priority that we need to consider, I guess – there are two things: basically, the needs of the municipalities and their ever-shrinking funding abilities. The other thing that we have to consider also is the taxpayer. We're seeing taxpayers being faced with ever-increasing property taxes. We're seeing a lot of people, especially in the construction industry, facing cuts to their hourly wages and the number of hours worked, and then on January 1 we're going to be seeing a carbon tax come in, that's also going to be stepping in on that.

I'd just like to look at section X of the amendment. It says that it is amended by striking out the proposed section and substituting the following:

(2.2) Subject to an appeal under section 648.1, an off-site levy may be imposed and collected for a purpose referred to in subsection (2.1) only if . . .

(a) no off-site levy has been previously imposed under subsection (1) for the same purpose.

I understand that that is where the 30 per cent has been struck from the list.

Looking at the recommendations from the AUMA and the AAMD and C, they voted to support the expansion of the scope of offsite levies to include the land and buildings for community recreation facilities, fire halls, police stations and libraries, and in general, supports the notion that those who benefit from a facility or service should pay for that service in a manner that is proportional to their benefit.

Under the current MGA it says that currently the MGA mandates that off-site levies can only be used to fund the construction or expansion of roads, sanitary sewers, waterways, and land connected to those types of infrastructure. This amendment does seem to reflect the needs and wants of the AUMA and the AAMD and C. The only reflection of the off-site levies that is found in the amendment is the area where it covers appeals of off-site levies. So it does give tools for developers to address that.

I'm going to drift off a little bit onto education of councillors and county employees. I had one incident brought to my attention where a person was going to develop a shop on private farmland out in a county, and when they got their off-site levy, they had factored in all kinds of things like waterlines out to the property and sewer lines out to the property, which would have been totally unworkable anyway. But initiated onto this, roughly a hundred thousand dollar project, was an off-site levy of $750,000. This is a concern for a lot of communities, just these off-site levies put forward under bylaw by the municipalities, and the caution is to make sure that people understand that these can actually lead to lack of development in their areas if they try to introduce too many off-site levies onto developers.

The idea of setting some type of limit on it: we felt, you know, rather than to just have a limit of zero, people would be tacking on anything that they could come up with, and even if a person was building an acreage five miles out of town, they could tack on parts of the police station or parts of recreational facilities. So we do feel a need that there should be some level that reflects the use of a new development and limits, at some point, the ability for the municipality to tack on a levy just arbitrarily. The fact that the municipality should actually have some time frame on when they have to build this facility – and that should be reflected in that cost. There was also the concern about where the funds would be held until such facility was completed.

I really think that having some sort of threshold in there for setting an off-site levy on a new development – and I think 15 per cent is a nice fit between zero and 30. We wonder where the 30 per cent came from. It just seemed like an arbitrary number anyway. Again, our concern is that off-site levies may actually stifle development in some areas, so we do need to have some sort of limits on the levels of off-site levies as well as a time frame on when projects have to be completed by.

It is fairly clear in the amendments where it does cover the ability to appeal, which is a good addition in there.

A couple of the other things. One of the recommendations from AUMA and AAMD and C was to remove the 30 per cent threshold. I don't believe from our conversations that they wanted it reduced down to just a zero but did want some sort of threshold limit on that.

One of the other recommendations from AUMA and AAMD and C was to “enable multiple municipalities to use the offsite levies to fund the same facility when new development in each of the municipalities use and benefit from the new facility,” so we're asking, I guess, if that is going to be a part of the intermunicipality framework, that they'll have to consider these as well. Does that allow one municipality to impose levies through an agreement onto developments in another, which is a concern also to some of the people there.

I guess I would just encourage anybody else that would like to speak to this amendment. I do think that we need some sort of limit on it, and I believe 15 per cent is better than the 30 per cent and also better than just leaving it wide open to interpretation by municipalities.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to subamendment SA5? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. It's great to be back in the House, where it's warm and cozy, and talking about significant pieces of government business and particularly amendments, a very good amendment moved by my hon. colleague. It's just like it was my amendment.

I'd just like to rise and speak in support. You know, this amendment is really about striking the right balance. We went from one extreme to the other, from 30 to zero, and perhaps 15 is, well, about balance. It's approximately in the middle of zero and 30. This is a good opportunity to ensure that there's a threshold of 15 per cent of the benefit for proposed community infrastructure around police stations, fire halls, libraries, rec centres, et cetera. Really, it has the potential of protecting the increasing housing costs for the consumer.

When legislating, oftentimes it is about balance, about finding the right balance between all stakeholders that are involved. I know that the government some days likes to cozy up to industry. The next day they like to sue industry and never really know what's coming or going.

This particular amendment comes to us not as a direct result of industry, but certainly industry spoke out strongly about this particular portion of the MGA. I think that this is a reasonable compromise to developers that will provide some certainty for them and also ensure that off-site levies aren't used where the value isn't there. That's certainly what we can see if the threshold is zero, that development costs can increase dramatically with the use of off-site levies.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

Now, while I appreciate and respect the fact that, you know, municipalities have to be competitive with their neighbours and that if one municipality is overusing off-site levies, perhaps that will have its own way of sorting itself out – there was certainty for the building industry, and now there is zero – this is a very reasonable compromise, one that strikes the right balance. I would encourage the members of the government to also support this amendment so that we can respect both municipalities' individuality, if you will, in local decision-making as well as provide certainty to developers. So I encourage members in the Chamber to support it this morning.

As I've mentioned and as I'm sure you'll hear me mention on numerous occasions, with Bill 21 it is so important that we get it right this time. It's so important that we legislate in a manner that will allow future growth and have consideration both of the development side and the municipality side.

I look forward to the ongoing debate not just around this issue but around issues included in this bill.

The Acting Chair: The Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Good morning. Good to see you there again today.

Just to sum up, then, I think that our colleagues here this morning have talked a little bit about this change, that was proposed in the amendment, from zero and now going to 15 per cent. I think there needs to be a bit of emphasis, which I'm picking out here from what's been said so far, and I'll perhaps provide a bit of that. The growth of a community is so important. With inflationary costs and all of the other things that happen in a small community, small-town situation, where you have higher costs for building materials, road materials, all kinds of different things, a municipality needs growth to offset those higher costs to maintain the municipality's services and programs. Good growth means having the right administrative rules and costs and things about it where it will encourage development and, hopefully, attract investment and speculators to come out and buy properties to develop.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Certainly, one of the economic factors that is so important to developers is that the administrative costs and all of the added costs, that a municipality can sometimes think they should perhaps throw at a developer's application, can make it noneconomic to proceed. With this bill, the original Bill 21, we have seen a lot of changes coming through that may have been a bit of a blow to home builders and developers in general. This is one of them where, you know, if we have no limit as to how much a new development will be making use of new fire halls, libraries, and police stations, et cetera, without a rule, we have the situation where a developer could on the whim of the council be hit with a substantial levy.

So it makes sense to have some sort of level between zero and up to whatever we set. The original bill said 30 per cent. There were some thoughts in the department that 30 per cent was probably a good number. Then the government came back, and their department talked about removing it totally in the new amendment bill that we're working on right now. We think it should still be there but at a reduced level. Fifteen per cent is palatable to the various associations we've contacted with this suggestion. They like this idea so that if it's shown that in their development there will not be any probable benefit to having these types of facilities within their development, they're not hit with unnecessary costs.

I think the 15 per cent level makes sense, and I would encourage all members in the House this morning to support this change as it's not that much different from what they originally had suggested, and it kind of gets it partway and helps to support the developers' positions.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to subamendment SA5? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to speak in favour of this subamendment as well. Having spent about a good dozen years in the building and development community, you know, there's a lot of risk that's taken by people within the industry. These are the same people that we've been talking about over the last few days, people taking risks to invest in creating jobs in our communities. We've seen that take place, creating jobs on the land development side, but that also furthers the opportunity for the creation of jobs in the residential construction industry and in the commercial real estate industry that, as well, complements that.

I'm concerned that if in a headlong approach to do this – and as much as I also understand the municipal side of this and that there has to be sustainable development, the development industry has always said that they're willing to pay their fair share. I think the concern is where that goes into imbalance. I think that we need to be cognizant of that, and I think that this limit recognizes that 30 per cent was maybe too high, zero per cent is maybe too low, and 15 per cent is maybe a compromise that allows us to move forward in recognizing that risk capital that is put forward, Madam Chair.

Without that risk capital, we don't create the economic activity that we so desperately need in this province, and we don't create an opportunity for a fair return on investment amongst those developers, who, by the way, give up land for municipal reserves, who create amenities within their communities, who donate to recreation centres voluntarily. I happen to have worked for a company that put up a million and a half dollars for a regional recreation centre, which was not required by any legislation. We see that time and time again. I think it's an industry that doesn't blow their own horn very often about the other investments they make in communities outside of their commitments. In fact, in Calgary there are voluntary payments that are made towards some of the community amenities and services that are done voluntarily by the industry to support that.

I think this subamendment is one that is in the spirit of compromise. I hope that it's taken as being a balance between the interests of the municipalities, which I think is of grave concern for all of us, to ensure that they can fund the infrastructure that they need and the services that they need to offer and the amenities that are expected by communities – the schools, the recreation centres, the parks, and those things – also recognizing that the best thing for the building and development industry is to also have those amenities. Those facilities are the amenities and the selling features that they go forth with to their potential residents in that community to say: "We have schools not just coming, but they're announced. We have a recreation centre. We have the fire and police services that we require in those communities. We've protected the environment. We've protected areas that we're going to conserve for parks and park reserves and environmental reserves and municipal reserves."

I think that we need to take that balanced approach. We need to recognize again that we live in a time where those investments are at significant risk. We do not live in a robust economy right now, what we've had in the past, which was almost guaranteed strong net migration numbers from not just across Canada but from around the world because of the strength of our economy. Those dollars that are put towards such developments are now at very significant risk.

I can tell you that the people that I talk to within the industry say that they're meeting their expectations and that those expectations are, at best, about 40 per cent of what they would have been just two years ago. They're keeping the lights on. They're trying to keep their employees employed. They're taking on third-party work that they never would have done during regular, robust times. They're still building on spec sometimes, single-family homes, multifamily. They're incorporating attainable home ownership, they're incorporating affordable rental, and they're incorporating accessible housing within many of those through their work with organizations and initiatives such as the Resolve campaign in Calgary. I know that there are similar initiatives in Edmonton and across the province to deliver affordable, accessible, attainable housing.

I think we have to recognize that there are lots of voluntary things going on at the same time as we are putting in legislation to govern what we expect as minimums from the industry, again recognizing that there is always a balancing point there but that that balance has been put a little off balance over the last two years with the economy, Madam Chair.

I would encourage all members of the House to consider this subamendment as being a rational one, a common-sense one, and one that recognizes that we need those investments. We need them to move forward. We need to be cognizant of the economics around those decisions, and we need to use those economics and respect the risks taken to create jobs in this province.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion on subamendment SA5 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back on the original amendment, A1. Are there members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak about Bill 21, the Modernized Municipal Government Act, and the subamendment that the government has put forward. I again would like to recognize all members of this House, government officials, associations, and municipalities who have contributed at various stages of the consultation on this bill and this amendment. This review comes as a result of much discussion, but there's still work that needs to be done.

One topic which I believe requires more scrutiny is the decision to remove local industrial assessment and centralize the process in provincial bodies. I know that I brought this up awhile ago, but I think more answers are required from this government, specifically the changes that have been made to section 289(1), which reads, "Assessments for all property in a municipality, other than designated industrial property, must be prepared [by the assessor appointed] by the municipal assessor." This proposed change would centralize the responsibility for all industrial property assessment with the provincial government. Likewise, the provincial government will be responsible for defending the assessment if appealed. All assessment appeals will be adjudicated by the Municipal Government Board. Industry stakeholders seem to prefer to have one appeals process, and under the new centralized assessment, there is now a specific assessment appeal process and adjudicator, which should result in more consistent rulings. This is something that we can agree with.

My colleague from Livingstone-Macleod, who is also the shadow minister for Municipal Affairs, has been busy consulting with stakeholders to find and hear what the options are on this subject. One thing that we've heard in respect to centralizing industrial assessment was that this change came as a result of inconsistencies found within a few particular municipalities, which may have been better addressed by working with each different municipality. The county of Rocky View, for instance, believes that the change reduces municipal autonomy, is unnecessarily disruptive, and has the potential for significant loss of municipal revenue. The proposal will also result in province-wide job loss as responsibility shifts to the centralized authority. This is one point which was echoed by the AAMD and C, Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties.

Based on our understanding, there are five points which most accurately summarize their position on the centralization. One:

AAMDC members have expressed considerable concern about the centralization of assessment on designated industrial property because it could lead to decreased local autonomy and local knowledge of the properties being assessed. Further, municipalities are concerned that assessment will be lost or missed and that the proposed cost reductions will not materialize as municipalities retain assessors to verify provincial assessments.

Two:

As noted, the AAMDC does not support the centralization of assessment of designated industrial property but if it is going to continue forward, the following recommendations are proposed to strengthen the process.

Three:

Clarify that designated industrial property can apply to residential and agriculture properties only in cases where there is a mixed use on the property.

Four:

Exempt municipalities from paying the requisition to fund the centralized assessment body if an industrial property owner does not pay their property taxes.

Five:

Ensure assessors are based throughout the province and not centralized in Alberta's metropolitan centres.

Now, we've heard that the AUMA, Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, is generally supportive of this bill. There are a few recommendations that they say need to be implemented to improve this bill:

- Require the provincial assessor to share valuation details and other relevant information with the municipal assessor/municipality to ensure transparency;
- Require updates to regulated assessment rates annually;
- Create a third party audit function so that the province is not auditing its own assessment;
- Enable municipalities to participate in any assessment appeals for assessments provided by the provincial assessor.

The Alberta Assessors' Association also provided comments, which I'd like to read into the record. Quote: the association has completed a careful analysis of this issue and does not support the creation of a central agency to prepare industrial assessments. We do recognize ...

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee will now rise and report progress.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 21. I wish to table all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Madam Speaker, thank you very much. I think we've made some good progress this morning. Seeing the time, I move that we adjourn until 1:30 this afternoon.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 29, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Hon. members, I would just ask, once again, that we take a moment to extend our sincerest and deepest sympathies and prayers to the family and friends of Captain Tom McQueen, the pilot of the CF-18 jet who tragically lost his life yesterday. If we could just take a moment.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I've got the pride and joy of being able to announce one of my local schools to you and through you to this Assembly, the Holy Cross elementary school. This school that I'm announcing today is a school that both of my children, Amelia and Charlotte, go to.

I also would like to make a special announcement. We have a young man up in the gallery whose birthday it is today, Luke Boisvert.

I would like the parents to stand first. I will name you by the first name. We've got Leanne, Matthew, Clint, Bev, Joy, Tyra, Joleen, David, Teresa, Julia, and Gerald.

If you could all please stand – and I'll have the students stand as well right now – and we'll acknowledge you to the Assembly. Thank you for coming today.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have two groups that I'd like to introduce at your pleasure. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly the members of the Alberta Home Education Association. The association provides assistance for home-educating students and families and advocates for the authority of home-educating parents. Paul van den Bosch is the president of the association. Paul has degrees in journalism and in education, and he and wife, Mary, have seven children. The oldest two have gone on to postsecondary success. His daughter will be receiving her master's degree this spring from the Franciscan University of Ohio, and his oldest son has his BA from Concordia University here in Edmonton.

Patty Marler is the government liaison for the Home Education Association and has been advocating for home education for over five years. First and foremost, she is the home-educating mother of four children, two of whom have graduated from their home education programs and then graduated from the university and from NAIT. Patty believes that parents are the best decision-makers for their children. She has two of her children, Brianne and Qiu, here with her today.

We had an exciting rally this morning in celebration of home education. Parents from across the province came to bring attention to the successes and the challenges that home education families are experiencing. Could I ask this group to rise and that we give the customary warm welcome of the House to Paul and to Patty.

The Speaker: The second one.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Legislature the staff and students of Aurora elementary school. In a small town like Drayton Valley you get to know your neighbours, and when you teach in a small town, you get to know just about everyone. Some of the teachers today were my colleagues two years ago, and one teacher in particular was a former student of mine. I think that as I talked to the students today, for probably about a third of them I taught their parents. It is a great pleasure for me today to have Aurora elementary school please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any additional school groups?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the Edmonton Salutes Committee, who are seated in your gallery. The mandate for the committee is to promote and recognize our local military community contributions both at home and abroad. Please welcome Tammy Pidner, community member; Alex Tsang, Major (Retired) and president of the Edmonton United Services Institute; Ferd Caron, councillor for Sturgeon county; Marvin Neuman, director of real estate for Canada Lands Company; Kaetlyn Corbould, military and protocol liaison for the city of Edmonton; and in our Chamber Brian Hodgson, Sergeant-at-Arms and director of visitor, ceremonial, and security services for the Legislative Assembly. I would ask the committee to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, it is my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of hard-working civil servants who work for the economics and competitiveness division of Alberta Agriculture and Forestry. They are Ann Boyda, Shukun Guan, Emmanuel Laate, Olubukola Oyewumi, Philippa Rodrigues, and Rawlin Thangaraj. They represent the many women and men who work hard to ensure that our farm families are equipped with information on how they can do better in the competitive market of agriculture. I would like to ask that all of them now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly an addition to our constituency team in Edmonton-Glenora. Lowell Walls is keenly interested in helping others and has a deep commitment to supporting people looking for assistance. That's why he is a social work student who is completing his practicum in my constituency office. I ask that Lowell please rise along with Tonya and Dylan, who've been introduced previously, to receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Greg Tabak, a proud Albertan and a good friend. Greg is a senior manager with Enterprise car rental system, a big supporter of Alberta's tourism industry, and one of the nicest people I know. I ask Greg now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two women who work tirelessly to support constituents in Calgary-Acadia. Carla Lloyd works full-time in our office, and she's a compassionate advocate for people in our riding, with a commitment to equity and a knack for keeping us organized and on track. Heather Erlen works both in Calgary-Acadia and Calgary-Bow, and she does an amazing job supporting our constituents with casework and referrals and is a super-strong voice for our community. I'm honoured to have them both working with me, and I couldn't do what I do if not for them. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If you'll indulge me, I have two introductions today. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a fantastic group of Alberta students and mentors from Mindfuel who recently shared their urban tundra science research project on a global stage. The team is made up of students from Edmonton high schools and has the support of research advisers and a mentor from the U of A.

The students are here today with their mentors in the members' gallery. I ask them to rise as I call their names, and I will apologize in advance for mispronouncing their name: Mindfuel CEO Cassy Weber, Tammy Yamkowsky, Lizzie MacNeill, Mike Ellison, Yassir Mohamed, David Herczeg, Sushil Kumar Senthil Kumar, Rafael Rigon, Teresa Nguyen-Pham, Lujia Cai, Ethan Agena, Karoline Nguyen, Seymour Dadashov, Joshua Cruz, Ejovan Agena, Kelly Shi, Catherine Paet-Pondanera, Farynna Loubich Facundo, Kim Hang, Jacob Xiang, Emman Nnamani, and Rochelin Dalangin. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is a young man named Jordan Latter. He's a social work student at MacEwan University, and he's currently fulfilling his practicum in the incredible Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview constituency office. Before starting school, he worked as a community support worker and a child and youth care worker for several years. He's entered the social work program so that he can be an advocate for those in need and increase his capacity to positively impact human services in Alberta. I see that he's risen. I would ask my colleagues to join me in giving him the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a person that spends each day tirelessly advancing workers' rights. Not only is Mike Scott a constituent from the outstanding riding of Edmonton-Decore, but he's also a supporter, and more importantly he's the president of CUPE local 30. Mike, thank you for all you do for all of your members, and I would now ask that you please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am grateful to rise and introduce to you and through you a group of local self-advocates from the capital region who tirelessly advocate for full inclusion of persons with disabilities. The Self Advocacy Federation is an integral organization, and they continuously remind us: Nothing about Us without Us. I'd like to ask each person to rise as I say their name: Amy Park, Emily Rypstra, Daisy Stacey, and Keri McEachern. Please join me in welcoming this group.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House Brendan Miller of Walsh LLP of Calgary. Brendan is a constitutional lawyer and a strong civil rights advocate, and I am proud to call him a friend. My guest is seated in the members' gallery, and I ask him to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other guests for introductions today? The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Maurice Brunelle. Maurice is an IT specialist in the Ministry of Human Services. Twenty years ago I collected bone marrow fluid from Maurice at the Cross Cancer Institute. Maurice had volunteered his stem cells to the unrelated bone marrow registry, and his stem cells were transported to Ontario, where they were transplanted successfully to a police officer there. Maurice, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Rabi al-Awwal

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rabi al-Awwal is the third month in the Islamic calendar, a calendar that depends on moonsighting. The word "Rabi" means "spring," and "al-Awwal" means "the first" in Arabic. This year the first day of Rabi al-Awwal is expected to be December 1. The name of the month implies celebration and happiness as it is followed by the months of mourning and grieving known as Muharram and Safar.

Rabi al-Awwal is one of the very important and significant months for Muslims. It is a month when two special occasions are celebrated: Eid Milad-un-Nabi, the birth of Prophet Muhammad, peace be upon him, and the Eid-e-Zahra, the festival of Fatima's family. Fatima was the daughter of Prophet Muhammad and the mother of Imam Hussain, alaihi salaam; therefore, she is celebrated on Eid-e-Zahra. On this day the happiness of Prophet Muhammad's family was restored after the martyrdom of Imam Hussain and the announcement of his present successor, Imam Mahdi, alaihi salaam, was made.

The festival of Fatima's family is celebrated on the ninth day of Rabi al-Awwal, and Prophet Muhammad's birthday is celebrated on either the 12th or 17th day of the month. Therefore, the entire week is declared the week of unity amongst Muslims to spread peace and justice all over the world.

In this month both occasions are celebrated world-wide with lighting, decorations, Quran recitals, prayers, parades, communal meals, feasts, charities, and donations along with lectures and poems on Islam. On these days the mosques, homes, and streets are liveliest and the joy of celebration is at its peak.

This year the celebrations of Rabi al-Awwal coincide with the holiday celebrations, uniting all of us together in sharing the joys of the season. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Parliamentary Debate

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The word “respect” is thrown around a lot in this House. I love robust debate and have been subjected to many loud and passionate heckles from all members opposite at some time or another, and I’ve participated. Without passion we wouldn’t come up with the best solutions for our province, but there’s a double standard that is palpable that comes from the NDP members of this House. There is heckling that is part of debate, but there are jabs and low blows, and that is what I experienced last night.

All members of this House are more than capable of standing up for themselves, including the amazing female members on all sides. I was astounded to see the Minister of Advanced Education, of all people, stand up and try to belittle the opposition for sharing our opinions. I happen to think that all of us have our own voice. Yes, even conservative women. I’m not asking for chivalry; I’m asking for respect for my opinions. Words in this House are being twisted to suit the government’s side. I regularly have my motives questioned as I fight for a better province.

It was laid out in black and white for me last night that this minister does not respect me, my caucus, or the Legislature. I have never had to defend myself so much or be afraid to say what I think in this House. A weak apology was offered by the Advanced Education minister last night, and I’ll accept that weak apology and move on, but since you also felt the need to interrupt a debate with attacks on my caucus, my resolve has only deepened. I know that the members of my caucus, that I stand beside each and every day, are going to continue to defend Albertans across this province who are depending on us.

Minister, would you please give me the courtesy of listening to my words rather than judging my tone, gesture, and facial expressions? I will offer you the same.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Paramedics

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The role of the opposition is to hold the government accountable, and it is not necessarily to oppose everything the government proposes. I’m extremely proud to represent the constituents of Calgary-South East as their elected member in this House. In fact, before being elected, I served Alberta communities and my constituents as an advanced care paramedic. In that pride I’m also very humbled that Albertans have allowed me to serve them.

Alberta paramedics and EMTs have been historically recognized as some of the best in the world, and now there is a future where they can build on that success thanks to this government, the hon. Minister of Health, the Department of Health, and Alberta Health Services. Earlier this year the government proclaimed paramedicine and the College of Paramedics under the Health Professions Act. Since then we’ve seen positive changes at the College of Paramedics. There’s been a new president and council elected, a well-attended AGM, and greater engagement from the members it governs. Make no mistake. Former administrations and staff from the College of Paramedics have been strong champions in making this change as well.

With paramedics now under the Health Professions Act, it opens the door to better health care for all Albertans. The possibility for more treat-and-release and treat-and-refer protocols allows for less wait time and more community care based practice. We can now also realize the opportunity for a paramedic practitioner degree program, again, which would combine the best of both skill sets in emergency medicine and community paramedicine. Under the Health Professions Act paramedics can have a greater latitude to work in other health care settings. Again, this will enhance collaborative practice in our health care system. This act also increases the accountability amongst registered members of the college.

Ultimately, Mr. Speaker, while I disagree with this government on several issues, on this particular issue the government has done a good thing not just for paramedics and their profession but for Albertans. I believe that this is going to provide better health care for all communities, and the government should be commended.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Her Majesty’s Leader of the Official Opposition.

Federal Equalization and Transfer Payments

Mr. Jean: Last night the NDP voted unanimously against fighting for a better deal for Albertans on equalization. I would suggest that the NDP occasionally get out from under the dome so that they can actually speak with Albertans across the province. This is a serious issue. Albertans send at least $20 billion or more every year to Ottawa than we get back in either transfers or services. We are compassionate, but we are also getting a raw deal under the current system. Why would the Premier refuse to at least form a position on equalization rather than just ignoring it and voting against it altogether?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to fighting for Alberta’s interests, they’ve got a government that’s on their side. The Leader of the Official Opposition has a record that isn’t worth writing home about when it comes to this file. In his decade in Ottawa he did nothing on the equalization file. In those 10 years he mentioned equalization once in the House and only twice in committees and not with anywhere near the result that I think Albertans would have hoped for if he was going to pretend that he was fighting for this file today. He had an opportunity to do so as a member of the government caucus in Ottawa.

Mr. Jean: I know that the Premier thinks that getting a thumbs-up from Ottawa to shut down coal jobs and bring in a carbon tax is her idea of getting a good deal for Albertans, but Albertans do think differently. They see a system where their taxes subsidize Quebec for cheaper tuition, whose politicians then turn around and attack our pipelines and our way of life. They see neighbours and family members lose their jobs and struggle to qualify for EI payments even under this system. Albertans have been getting a raw deal from Ottawa on transfers, on EI, and on equalization. Why won’t the Premier stick up for Albertans and stick up for all of us and work harder for us?

Ms Hoffman: Well, in his decade in Ottawa he had about as much success as he did on getting pipelines built, Mr. Speaker. When he talks about success, the very thing he's asking about, let's remind ourselves what we have done in working with Ottawa for Alberta's interests. We have new federal infrastructure funding for projects that'll create jobs here in Alberta. We're working with the federal government to improve eligibility for employment insurance with great respect, and we're fighting for Alberta's interests on improving federal transfers to Alberta, not just equalization.

Mr. Jean: And let's not forget a hundred thousand Albertans out of work because of this government.

We all work for Albertans. It's our job to actually stick up for them and fight for them. The NDP had a real opportunity last night to be on the side of the people of Alberta and set the record straight. They had a chance to show Canada that Alberta is serious about getting a better deal for those who pay taxes in this province. Those are Albertans. Saskatchewan has said clearly that they want to negotiate reforms but need partners. Why does the Premier refuse to even work with Saskatchewan's Premier to fight for a fair equalization system for Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition thinks that the way to get things done at the national level is by poking a stick in the eye of our potential allies. We believe in diplomacy. We believe in working co-operatively with our partners. That's why at my FPT meeting and at many of the others we're willing to talk about how fulfilling the federal platform can help to get better results for Albertans. We're going to keep doing that every opportunity we can, with diplomacy and respect, not by cheap headlines, that the Official Opposition is proposing, and Twitter wars.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Energy Policies

Mr. Jean: Here's another example of the NDP failing Albertans. Ottawa is showing the same enthusiasm for killing jobs in our coal industry as the Alberta NDP. The NDP is going to spend $1.4 billion of Alberta taxpayers' money to do it and leave our system in need of billions of dollars more in generation to be subsidized by Alberta taxpayers. Instead of shutting down high-efficiency coal generation across Alberta, why doesn't the Premier just negotiate a deal with Ottawa to keep these plants in Alberta online?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be a part of a government that isn't afraid to take action and be leaders right here in Alberta. Because our government took action, we are ready for the federal accelerated coal phase-out with a made-in-Alberta plan. Under our Alberta plan companies will be compensated $1.1 billion so they can keep investing in Alberta companies. That's leadership. When there's a tough issue that needs to be tackled, our government isn't afraid to do it. We're not just going to look to Ottawa to solve our problems.

Mr. Jean: Here's the problem. Both Nova Scotia and Saskatchewan have negotiated deals to keep their coal plants running past 2030. The NDP has had an opportunity to cut the same kind of deal for the 10,000 men and women in Alberta who work in our coal industry, but instead they're putting ideology above Alberta's job creation. As one of Canada's major money managers of Canoe Financial put it yesterday: there's an insane amount of naiveté with this government. Why won't this government acknowledge this, change course, and start to stand up for good-paying Alberta jobs for Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: We are very proud to stand up for Albertans and for their jobs, Mr. Speaker. That's why we came to the federal government with a plan, and that's why our coal units will be converted to natural gas generation and will have an extra 15 years of operation before they are phased out. Dawn Farrell, CEO of TransAlta, said: we've been very public about the benefits of these conversions; these are low-cost investments that can lengthen the average life of our coal fleet by up to 15 years. They're going to keep mortgage-paying jobs in local communities.

Mr. Jean: Unemployment in Alberta is near record levels, but in just 33 days the NDP's carbon tax comes into effect. That means that in 33 days charities will see millions of dollars taken from them. It means restaurants, farmers, engineers, construction workers, entrepreneurs, and Alberta's families will all have less money to help finance billions of dollars in green slush funds under the NDP. It's a tax that has a full thumbs-up from Ottawa. Why should Alberta have to pay this tax, that will only hurt Alberta jobs, our economy, and our most vulnerable citizens at a time they can't afford it?

Ms Hoffman: Well, it sure sounds like the Leader of the Official Opposition is proposing that we spend 10 times the cost of doing the proper phase-out of these coal units to instead invest in risky technology. Instead, what we're doing, Mr. Speaker, is that we're diversifying our economy. We're creating many different areas so that people can have good long-term employment. We can protect our environment, our air, and our water while protecting jobs, and that's exactly what our government is doing.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Parental Choice in Education

Mr. Jean: Since taking office, the NDP have steadily eroded parental rights and choice in education in Alberta. It shouldn't be a surprise seeing as, before the NDP was elected, the NDP repeatedly took shots against our current education model, that acknowledges the importance of diversity and parental rights. Today on the steps of the Legislature concerned parents voiced valid concerns about the NDP slowly taking away parental choice in education. To the Premier: do you continue to believe, as you stated while in opposition, that you are steadfastly opposed to all nonpublic school options? Yes or no?

Ms Hoffman: No, Mr. Speaker. We stand on our record, which is showing that good education is fundamental to a good society, and that's why we are working diligently with parents to ensure that the payments that they are entitled to do in fact go towards those parents. As a steward of public dollars we owe that assurance to the public and to the parents who are entitled to those payments. We are working to make sure that we support public, Catholic, and our record will stand. We are also standing alongside parents who choose home education, private, or charter education.

Mr. Jean: Recognizing choice in our education system is incredibly important to families all across our province. The Education minister plans death by a thousand cuts when it comes to choice in education in Alberta. He has denied new charter school applications tailored specifically for special-needs students and has made sudden changes that have disrupted education delivery for students and failed to consult about those changes. Will the Premier admit that under her leadership the NDP is seeking to do away with choice in education in Alberta?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our record points to the fact that that couldn't be further from the truth. I'm very proud of the experience I had as chair of the Edmonton public school board, which has a variety of choice programs within a public education model as well, including supports for home-schooling families. If we want to talk about what the Official Opposition is proposing for education, they proposed significant cuts in the last budget. The third party proposed not funding any of the new student growth. Instead, Albertans elected a government that stands by our children and our future, and that's why we're investing in education.

Mr. Jean: It's clear that the NDP is attempting to move parents from the driver's seat as the central decision-makers for their children to the back of the bus. Parents today have the choice to choose from public, Catholic, francophone, public charter, private, or home-schooling. Good choice in education. This diversity has actually strengthened our education system as a whole while saving millions of dollars for Alberta taxpayers. Will the Premier please confirm that all of the choices in education that she has mentioned, that I have mentioned will continue to be options for families all across our province and that they'll stop the attacks on these choices in education and that parents will continue to always be in the driver's seat of their children's education?

Ms Hoffman: The only ones attacking education are the Official Opposition, Mr. Speaker. That's why our government was proud to stand by increases to the Education budget to provide stable, predictable funding so that children can have the very best education. That's why we are working with parents to make sure that the funds that they're owed – those parents who choose home-schooling – are indeed theirs, and we're providing some clarity and stability because we know that we waited for more than four decades under the third party. Today we have a government that's going to stand up for children and for their rights.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier stood there and bragged that her government would, quote, never download costs onto Alberta families during these difficult economic times, yet we see them racking up debt and taxes at an unprecedented rate. The government is incapable of making difficult decisions that Alberta families are making every day and is downloading the cost of their fiscal incompetence onto the next generation, who will ultimately have to clean up this mess. To the Finance minister: do you not realize that by avoiding tough financial decisions now, you're sacrificing the prosperity of our children and grandchildren?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Another member of that party gave me a piece of paper that said that Alberta has the lowest debt to GDP of any province in the country – the lowest debt to GDP – so we are taking the actions that we were voted in on in May 2015, which are to protect services, to protect programs, to invest in this province, and to diversify the economy.

Mr. McIver: Up to what the minister has said, I will say: you're welcome, Minister.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier also bragged that Alberta has a $7 billion tax advantage over other Canadian jurisdictions. Two years ago that advantage was $11 billion. She also inherited a $1.1 billion surplus, a $6.5 billion fund, and a triple-A credit rating. Now we've got a double-A credit rating, an empty contingency fund, and a $10.8 billion deficit in this year alone. For the first time in decades Alberta is borrowing for operations. To the minister: when will you restore Alberta's $11 billion tax advantage?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know what we also inherited from the other side? We inherited the inability to balance a budget. If you look back at the number of times when oil was at $105 a barrel – they couldn't balance the budget. It's at $45, and we're doing a good job.

Mr. McIver: High price or low, we never went in the soup $11 billion in a year, and you're headed way higher.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday I also asked the Premier when Albertans could expect to see a reasonable plan to pay off the mountain of debt her government is accumulating. Instead, she talked about bringing the budget into balance, refusing to give a timeline. Albertans know – and government should – that a plan to repay debt is not the same as a plan to balance the budget. Again to the Finance minister, who ought to know. I'll ask again: when will your government present a realistic debt repayment plan?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I delivered Q2 yesterday, and in Q2 we saw that a more positive economy is coming in 2017, 2.3 per cent growth. We also saw that the deficit is smaller at this point. So with regard to the challenges I want to let you know that the Saskatchewan minister is in the same position we are. He says that you don't want to shock your economy by firing literally hundreds of teachers and nurses and putting hundreds of people out of work. So we're keeping everything stable in this province. That's what Albertans expect.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Tobacco Reduction Strategy

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's second-quarter financial update contained very little good news for Albertans. A quarter-billion-dollar piece of that report was cost overruns in health care. Prevention, now approximately 3 per cent of our health budget, clearly must become a larger part of bending the curve in health care. The Premier has been quite vocal on a number of occasions regarding the health effects and costs of tobacco use to individuals, families, and the health care system. However, tobacco legislation passed in this House three years ago and supported by the Premier when in opposition remains to be proclaimed. To the Premier: what's the delay?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. We have been able to move forward on a number of those pieces, including the banning of flavoured tobaccos, including menthol, in Alberta. We're very proud of that, and we are continuing to work with the chief medical officer of health and others in a public health way to make sure that we're supporting Albertans and moving forward in a thoughtful way as we move forward with implementing additional pieces of the legislation.

Dr. Swann: Given that e-cigarette use is skyrocketing and given that youth are now almost as likely to try e-cigarettes containing addictive nicotine and given that Health Canada has now specifically recognized the danger e-cigarettes pose, will the minister commit to adding e-cigarettes to the tobaccolike products list and protect young Albertans by banning them in public establishments and workplaces?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for a question that is clearly connected to government policy and something that I think we have heard and many of us advocated for in terms of an expansion and looking at an area for implementation. I've been working collaboratively with my federal counterpart, the Minister of Health for Canada, and they are looking at bringing forward a number of different precautions and safeguards in the area of e-cigarettes and vaporizers and other types of tobacco products. We'll be looking at ways that we can have complementary collaboration to provide the very best safety for Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that when in opposition the NDs made strong arguments against lobbyists from the tobacco industry having access to government ministers, in contravention of the framework convention on tobacco control, a global treaty of which Canada is a signatory, and given that there are still more than a dozen tobacco lobbyists currently operating in Alberta and on our lobbyist registry, will the minister commit today to ensuring that neither she nor her caucus members meet with tobacco lobbyists behind closed doors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's certainly my intention. I'm glad to have it on Hansard. That's the way that we plan on moving forward, by making sure that we protect Albertans. They always deserve to be our number one stakeholder when it comes to making important decisions about their public health.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Municipal Government Act Consultation

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I attended the consultation on the MGA in Hinton this past June, and I've worked closely with municipal leaders in my riding of Stony Plain to get their feedback and input. These same leaders as well as many of my constituents would like to continue their participation by engaging in the consultations on the recently released discussion paper. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what will this consultation look like?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the summer during the MGA consultation tour I heard many great ideas from Albertans across the province, and I thank them for sharing them. Some of those ideas led to the current bill while others led to new policy proposals. These new policy ideas were collected in a discussion guide, Continuing the Conversation, where we are now asking Albertans to share their feedback on these new, potentially groundbreaking proposals as they did not have a chance to comment on them over the summer. We will be collecting that feedback until January 31, and based on that, we'll bring forward further amendments to the MGA in spring 2017. I encourage all Albertans . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the feedback the Ministry of Municipal Affairs received throughout the summer during the consultations throughout Alberta, to the same minister: can you tell us what new proposals the government is considering?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're considering a number of new policy ideas from Albertans that are innovative and forward-looking. Included in those are measures designed to strengthen collaboration between school boards and municipalities, that allow municipalities to create parental leave policies for elected councillors, and to empower municipalities to take a greater role in protecting the environment and combating climate change. These proposed policies need careful consideration and thoughtful feedback to ensure that they meet the needs of all Albertans, so I continue to urge interested parties to go online and tell us what you think.

2:10

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I've heard about potentially introducing parental leave for municipal councillors and given that the Ministry of Status of Women launched the Ready for Her campaign, which will encourage more women to seek office, again to the same minister: how is the minister working to remove barriers and diversify these important councils?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is one of the proposed policies that I am most looking forward to receiving feedback on from Albertans. It builds off a lot of the work done by the Minister of Status of Women's Ready for Her campaign and would enable municipalities to create parental leave policies for elected councillors. This change could make elected work more family friendly or encourage more women to run for public office. Women still face more barriers when it comes to deciding to run for office, and it is policies like these that move us forward to more diversified representation in Alberta's local government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Carbon Policies

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Carbon leakage is a real issue in any plan to reduce the amount of greenhouse gases released into the atmosphere. Bad policy choices can lead to economic activity moving to jurisdictions that don't care about the environment. The spectre of a federal carbon tax is looming on our horizon, and there is considerable risk of carbon leakage as a result. Will the NDP be lobbying the feds to apply a hefty carbon tax to oil coming into Canada from regimes with no carbon tax and especially those despot regimes that support terror, enslave people, and oppress women?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, this question of trade exposure and carbon leakage has informed our hybrid system of an economy-wide price with a system of output-based allocations. We are in consultation with the various industry sectors on the question of these output-based allocations in order to allow for the consideration of trade exposure and some of those competitive pressures that many in Alberta's industries face. I just met today, for example, with members of Fertilizer Canada on this very matter. I'll have more to say about it in subsequent answers, I'm sure.

Mr. MacIntyre: Given that this government seems to care more about making their friends in the eco-radical community happy and handing them paid gigs on government panels and given that so far it seems that this government has not thought out the consequences of carbon leakage since we have yet to see the government's real plan to deal with carbon leakage, will the Premier pause the carbon tax until she gets a plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, there are a number of job creators in this province that the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and the Wildrose have called self-immolating, and they're attacking those job creators, folks like Suncor, folks like Shell, folks like Syncrude, who publicly support a carbon price with a system of output-based allocations. Enbridge, TransCanada, Royal Bank, CNRL, the Cement Association, the Mining Association: these are the folks that the Wildrose thinks are eco-radicals. These are the folks that the Wildrose talks down every chance they get.

Mr. MacIntyre: Given that the chair of the NDP's own climate panel knows that carbon leakage is the weakness of carbon taxation – he said, quote: until the rest of the world has policies that impose similar costs, you're not actually reducing emissions to the extent that you think; you're just displacing emissions and the economic activity to other jurisdictions – and given that the carbon tax will hurt economic activity without actually reducing global emissions, why is the NDP blindly rushing headlong down a policy path that hurts Albertans without having an honest answer to the problem of carbon leakage?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've heard this before, a half interpretation of the Leach report, because it went on to recommend a system of output-based allocations, which we are currently negotiating with the industry sectors in question. That is why many, many Canadian corporate executives have been urging the federal government to move forward with carbon pricing and climate action, companies like GE Canada, SNC-Lavalin, Shell Canada, Rio Tinto, Teck Resources, Forest Products Association of Canada, Suncor, large employers in all of our ridings, who are looking to us to find a way forward for Canada.

Coal-fired Electric Power Plant Retirement

Mr. Fraser: Yesterday I asked about supports for families impacted by the accelerated coal phase-out. Clearly, this government completely missed the mark in providing any information to rural families or municipal leaders on how their communities will change. With all due respect to the economic development minister, I'm surprised that you didn't reach out personally to these communities on such an important matter. Minister, I've spoken to a few more mayors since yesterday, and still your office hasn't returned their calls. Why are you afraid to properly engage with these communities?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Most of that premise is actually factually incorrect. First of all, I have sat down with many mayors and councillors from affected communities. That was several months ago. Since then one of my ADMs has been reaching out to each of the mayors individually. We set up a coal panel, which in the new year will be going into these communities. We are engaging with the local municipalities because we value their input.

Mr. Fraser: That's interesting, Minister, because you sat down with them in June, you released the report last week, and they didn't even get a copy of the report.

Given that the NDP have shirked their responsibility on this issue and are hiding behind the very businesses they shut down and are now asking them to help families and communities in the transition and given that families brace for the worst, this government is only planning on speaking with these communities months down the road. Premier, you haven't clearly outlined how businesses are supposed to adequately support these families to make this transition. Will you instruct your economic minister to do his job properly and outline transition support for these families?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the transition plan for workers and for communities has been at the forefront of our minds. That is why we have, first of all, engaged with the companies in an appropriate negotiation to provide certainty. Part of that certainty has been the capacity market and has been the negotiation of the transition payments over time. That is why TransAlta, which is one of the very important, embedded companies in this province, has said: this allows us to convert some of our coal plants to gas, keep our workers working, keep those communities strong, and be able to provide . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fraser: Given that the truth is that the NDP government doesn't seem to have the backs of Albertans and given that the truth is that the NDP seems to have no interest in collaborating with these investors, to the Premier: you've told Albertans that these investments are here to replace the coal phase-out, but we know that these projects aren't even being planned. Where do you expect the investment in renewables to come from if struggling design companies in Alberta aren't even designing the projects?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we have done is put forward a careful, thoughtful plan in negotiation and in consultation with the affected companies, ensuring that we are keeping that capital here in Alberta as we transition our electricity system. Now, when we took over, there were already 12 of the 18 plants scheduled for decommissioning, and we discovered to our horror that there was no plan for any of those communities. That is why we have dedicated funds within the budget. We are looking at our apprenticeship and training investments, and we are moving this province forward.

Health Care Wait Times

Mr. Barnes: Yesterday the NDP benches laughed and dismissed Alberta's serious wait times problem because they didn't like that the source of the report was the Fraser Institute. Well, it's funny because in 2008 the Premier had no problem using the same annual report to criticize access to psychiatric care, and in 2010 the NDP Education minister cited the report to argue that the PCs needed to spend even more. Does the minister deny that wait times are getting worse or just her ability to do something about it?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I said yesterday and I'll say again today that we are committed to making sure that we provide support to help address ways that we can lessen wait times, but instead of what's being proposed by the Official Opposition, which is privatizing and outsourcing and allowing people to queue-jump, those who can afford to, we're doing so in a thoughtful, collaborative way. They're proposing billions of dollars in cuts and privatization. We're proposing stability and working together to address wait times in a reasonable way. I'm proud of our record to date.

Mr. Barnes: Given that wait times for back surgeries are worse than in May 2015 and that median cataract waits are 38 per cent worse and that shoulder surgery waits are 15 per cent worse and that the average pacemaker waits are 68 per cent worse and given that carpal tunnel is worse and hernia repair is worse and prostate surgeries are worse and urgent and semi-urgent CT scans are over 60 per cent worse and MRIs are worse and on and on and on, how long do we have to wait for the NDP to get serious about real improvement?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to respond to the assertions that have been raised by the Official Opposition. Rather than proposing billions of dollars worth of cuts, which would result in laying off many nurses, which would impact our ability to access specialized services, including diagnostics, we are working together with the front lines. While we're in difficult financial times, I'm very proud of the record we have in working with organizations such as the AMA to bring them to the table to find ways, find up to half a billion dollars worth of savings in just the next two years that we can use to address some of the concerns that are being raised rather than proposing ideological transfers to privatization.

Mr. Barnes: Given that in the first-quarter fiscal update Health was projected to blow its budget by a hundred million dollars and seeing as the second-quarter update now shows $260 million in cost overruns and since last year's total health spending was nearly $300 million higher than projected, the Health minister is clearly confused about which way the cost curve needs to be bent. When it comes to the Health budget, where will the minister's wild ride end up this year?

Ms Hoffman: Well, I'll tell you where we're not going to end up, Mr. Speaker. We're not going to end up where they're pushing us, where they really want us to go, which is laying off nurses, firing those who are providing the important front-line care, because it's important that we work to provide what Albertans elected us to. While I want to acknowledge that we haven't hit our targets yet, the member opposite is speaking about a 1 to 1 and a half per cent increase over what was projected, which is down significantly from the 8 per cent that the members opposite have so much fun flirting with around moving forward on their former agenda. We're moving forward in a reasonable, thoughtful way, working with partners in finding ways to reduce the rate of increase.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Victims of Crime Fund

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Crime is rising across Alberta. Because of chronic shortages in courts, sex offenders are seeing their charges stayed and are now allowed to walk free on our streets. Victims are more vulnerable today than ever before. That's why I was surprised to hear at today's Public Accounts meeting that the NDP is thinking about using the victims of crime fund for legal aid. Yes, we need to ensure that legal aid is properly funded, but why isn't this money being used to help victims?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I'd like to begin by stating that the premise of that question is completely false. The member was in the committee today when my deputy said that there are brackets in the legislation for what that money can be used for. We have no intention of using that money for anything but victims of crime. Sometimes victims of crime, victims of domestic violence need emergency protection orders, and those funds can be used for that purpose. [interjections]

The Speaker: First supplemental. [interjections] Folks, if you continue to raise that, I'm going to stop the clock.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Legal aid is important. We both agree with that. It helps low-income Albertans to speed up the justice system, but money needs to go to victims. Given that there are over 170 victims' services organizations and given that we have a massive surplus to support victims, why are these 170 organizations being left to just fend for themselves?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Of course, we're absolutely committed to seeing that those funds reach the victims that they're intended for. The Auditor General has asked us to take the time to do the work to identify the needs of victims and to see how to best meet those needs, so we're going to do that work to ensure that we're getting the money out the door in order to support victims of crime, not just for the sake of getting the money out the door.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The victims of crime fund should go to victims. Period.

Given that Alberta's victims of crime fund has surged to a record $56 million and given that there are several organizations providing counselling and mental health support for victims across Alberta, where is this government's plan for getting more of this surplus to these essential community organizations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Well, of course we intend for all of the funds in the victims of crime fund – I've said it before and I'll say it again – to reach victims because we think that that is incredibly important. We have a lot of organizations working incredibly hard across this province to support those victims. We are going to do the work that the Auditor General has asked us to do to ensure that we understand what those needs are, to ensure that we know how to meet those needs and that we have measurable objectives to meeting those needs. We're going to move forward to support victims, not just to get the money out.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Opioid Use Prevention and Mitigation

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Federal Health Minister Philpott has brought opioids to the national stage with a summit on the crisis. Yes, she called it a summit. Our PC caucus has been blowing the whistle loudly on this ever since Alberta started seeing a shocking number of deaths, including in our vulnerable indigenous communities. We applaud the federal Health minister for this initiative that saw health ministers from across Canada attend, including B.C. and Ontario, the two other hardest-hit provinces. To the Health minister: what did you and your associate minister learn at this summit, or did you even bother to attend?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I was very pleased to represent Alberta at the Opioid Conference and Summit that was held earlier this month. One of the things that we learned at the summit is not just that the opioid dependency problem that we're seeing in this province is a complex, multifaceted one that requires a variety of responses but that the movements that our government has been making are on the right track and supported by experts from across our country. Additionally, provinces across our country are looking to Alberta as a leader on this issue.

Mr. Rodney: Speaking of leaders, the question was whether the Health minister was in attendance.

Now, given that the opioid crisis is a life-and-death issue for Albertans yet our province has yet to declare a public health emergency and given that the summit applauded British Columbia for its network and framework for dealing with its opioid crisis, including declaring it a public health emergency, and given that on November 21 the associate minister told this House that more information and awareness about this crisis would be a wasted PR exercise, again to the Health minister: when will you declare this a public health opioid emergency in this province?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I'm pleased to be our government's lead minister on this file, and I work diligently on this issue day and night. I can't speak to how other governments have associate ministers working, but in our government I am considered an equal member of this team, and I'm working very hard on this issue.

As for the question of data, our government is able, because we have a single health region, to compile most of the data that other jurisdictions require specific legislation to be invoked to gather. I'm very proud of the Q3 report that we've put forward that has a wide range of data, not just . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Rodney: I shudder to think of how the families feel about the leadership.

Given that many provinces, including British Columbia, have approved the nasal spray version of naloxone, which is much easier to administer, especially for those who are not first responders, and given that naloxone is saving thousands of lives and Narcan can save more and given that we have not heard of its use in Alberta, to the minister in charge: has Narcan been issued anywhere in Alberta? If so, to whom, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We do know that naloxone is able to save lives by reversing the effects of an overdose. However, medical attention is still required after administering naloxone. Our government has increased the access to naloxone across the province to have 13,000 kits available. We have also been working with our partners in Justice to have the nasal spray available. The RCMP has made that move for their members, and that is something that we're continuing to explore. We know that getting naloxone in any form out to the community where people need it is going to help save lives.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Banff-Cochrane.

2:30 Flood Damage Mitigation in Southern Alberta

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The municipal district of Bighorn was hit hard by the 2013 floods. They experienced alpine torrent flooding, much different than the overland flooding experienced elsewhere during the 2013 event. Bighorn's small population is now struggling to move forward on flood mitigation infrastructure they need to protect their communities. To the Minister of Environment and Parks: what is the government doing to protect the municipal district of Bighorn?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is of course taking action to reduce the threat of future flooding in communities like the MD of Bighorn. We've committed $500 million over 10 years to protect homes, businesses, and the economy through the Alberta community resilience program. In February we committed over $3.3 million to the MD of Bighorn for mitigation work on Heart Creek. We will continue to work with those communities, like the MD of Bighorn, to make sure that residents and businesses are protected.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that similar to the municipal district of Bighorn the town of Canmore and the hamlet of Bragg Creek eagerly await community-level flood protection, again to the Minister of Environment and Parks: when will residents of these communities see shovels in the ground and these projects built?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we worked with the federal government to secure $5.5 million in federal funding for Bragg Creek and $14.4 million for Canmore. This builds on over $50 million of provincial funding already in place to fund local mitigation efforts in Bragg Creek and Canmore. Working with our municipal partners, we expect construction to start on the Bragg Creek flood barriers in the next construction season, spring 2017.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that indigenous communities such as the Tsuut'ina and Stoney Nakoda First Nations have been quite severely impacted by the flooding, what steps has the minister taken to support First Nations?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, indigenous communities in Alberta were hit hard by the 2013 floods, and it's important that we partner with them to make sure that they are protected and that they have a voice in the reconstruction. That's why we committed $2 million to construct an extension of the Redwood Meadows berm onto Tsuut'ina lands. We also committed $400,000 to flood proof the sewer lines, to prevent flood waters from overwhelming the local sewer system.

The Speaker: The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta ranchers are concerned about what is happening with bovine tuberculosis. According to the federal ag minister the ag recovery program is meant to pay for the ongoing cost for feed, transportation, and interest payments due to the TB quarantines. Now that the CFIA can begin setting up a high-risk quarantine feedlot for these ranchers, who will cover the cost of setting up this commercial feedlot, meeting the CFIA standard, and what is your plan B?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Absolutely, I understand the stress these producers have been going under. CFIA continues the investigation of a federally reportable disease. A lot of the onus is on the federal government. I've had the opportunity to meet twice with the federal agriculture minister. We've met with the CFIA, we've met with the Alberta Beef Producers, the individual producers, Canadian Cattlemen's Association, going through to make sure that programs are in place, that we can support these farmers as they go through this incredibly stressful time.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Every rancher in Alberta knows that they could have been the victim of poor government policy. Given that today the federal ag minister stated that while this program will help out with these costs for these affected ranches, this program will only cover about 90 per cent of those costs, will this government be topping up this federal funding with the newly announced $222 million disaster expense for agricultural indemnities, or is that money strictly for unharvested crops?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I had the opportunity to review the programs with the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation to find out what programs are able to better assist these producers. That work is ongoing. I'm very happy with the department for the work they've been doing, the collaboration they have done with other ministries, including Alberta Health, to ensure that the health of producers are protected, the health of Albertans is protected, and the health of the industry is protected.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, ranchers are worried and scared. Given that there are over 40 premises currently under quarantine and given that there are now 10,000 cattle destined for slaughter, leaving the financial viability of these ranches in question, Albertans are wondering if the minister will use this line item to assist these ranchers with loans owed to financial institutions so that they don't default due to circumstances completely beyond their control.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the follow-up question. This couldn't come at a worse time. These producers are looking for their one and only paycheck. It came at a time now when we want to ensure that the work that's being done by the CFIA is being done to be able to get a handle on this. To ensure that we maintain our tuberculosis-free status is important for the industry, again, working with AFSC, CFIA, agriculture Canada, and the federal government to ensure that support for the producers is there when they most need it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.w

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The late Member for Calgary-Greenway was a wise man. I clearly recall two exchanges he had with the Finance minister in June 2015, when he warned that the NDP's economic policies would push taxpayers and business out of Alberta. The minister confidently responded by saying: they won't leave Alberta; in fact, they will stay here because of our beautiful mountains and our new NDP government. To the Finance minister: it's a year and a half later, and business confidence is at an all-time low. Is this not in contradiction to your earlier pronouncement?

Mr. Ceci: I remember the Member for Calgary-Greenway as well, and I really appreciated his work on that side. I just want to say that our plan is having, you know, across the economy – it's going to be growing next year. Next year the confidence of people will be returning because they know that we're investing massive amounts of money into capital infrastructure across this province, putting people back to work. They know we are working to diversify our economy, and our EDT minister is doing that work as well. They know that if they stick with Alberta, we will stick with them.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that yesterday's second-quarter fiscal update shows a precipitous decline of $877 million in corporate taxes – oh my – and given that corporate taxation has been an important revenue pillar through 80 years of small "c" conservative governance and given that this NDP government continues to display nothing but contempt for Alberta business, again to the Finance minister: given that the late member's predictions have come true, are you going to moderate your policies, or will you continue to ignore his advice?

Mr. Ceci: Well, he just mentioned the Q2 update. I want to say that the Q2 update also talked about signs of improvement in our economy. It talked about many areas where there is an upswing: the number of wells being dug, the amount of manufacturing done, the amount of export happening. That is happening.

You know, the deficit is also smaller. He didn't talk about that. We are holding the line on expenses. We're moving forward. That's what Albertans want, and that's what we're doing.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the proof of this government's policies is evident by the deplorable state of our current economy and given that this government is pushing out corporations with the accumulated effects of accelerated taxation, the highest minimum wage in the country, and court action to renege on long-standing business agreements and given that the carbon tax is waiting in the wings, set to crush those still keen to remain in Alberta, to the same minister: are you willing to at least moderate one of these policies in order to help re-establish business confidence?

Mr. Ceci: You know, the Minister of Economic Development and Trade is so proud of the work he's doing and involved in it out there that he wants me to talk about the record of investment that is going on in this province. The record of investment is $38 billion a year, higher than any other province, private investment in this province. You're not mentioning that. You're also not mentioning that capital investment is ready to flow again because of the work we're doing to increase the capacity market for electricity. That will change things as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Transportation Infrastructure

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents in Red Deer are concerned that the infrastructure needed to reduce traffic congestion and increase safety by providing better access to highway 2 has taken too long. Given that Alberta Transportation is investing $4.7 billion towards new road projects and bridges, to the Minister of Infrastructure: will the concerns of my constituents be addressed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for her question on behalf of her constituents. I'm pleased to say that projects like the Gaetz Avenue interchange are progressing very well at Red Deer and will be ready to serve Albertans and visitors from around the world in time for the 2019 Canada Winter Games. Construction on this $80 million project started in September, and Albertans can see it as they travel between Edmonton, Calgary, and all points in between. Once it's complete, the interchange will improve travel on this very busy corridor and provide access to key destinations for local residents as well.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's capital plan invests $2.1 billion for capital maintenance of roads and bridges, to the Minister of Infrastructure: what impact has this investment had on the province's infrastructure deficit?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Members will know that this government inherited a very, very large infrastructure deficit, and as indicated in David Dodge's report, it's the time to invest now for the future. In fact, we're experiencing many contracts coming in at 10 or 15 per cent below budget, and we can reallocate that money to build additional infrastructure, including transportation infrastructure to make our roads safer and to make the travel more efficient and convenient for all Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the current economy and the state of our province's aging infrastructure, to the same minister: what results is this investment having for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Our $34.8 billion capital plan is putting Albertans back to work. By enhancing the capital plan by 15 per cent, as Mr. Dodge recommended, we're creating 10,000 new jobs over three years. Ten thousand. Not only are these investments in hospitals, schools, roads, and affordable housing creating good family-supporting jobs, but they will result in projects that will facilitate our economic recovery and enhance the overall quality of life for all Albertans.

Members' Statements (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Edmonton Salutes Committee RCAF Captain Thomas McQueen

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak about the Edmonton Salutes Committee, which was established in 1997. I have been honoured to work with this dedicated team over the past year and a half in my role as the provincial government liaison for the Canadian Forces. The committee's mandate is to promote and recognize our local military community contributions both at home and abroad.

The Edmonton Salutes Committee membership is drawn from the city of Edmonton, corporate Edmonton, surrounding municipalities, and the government of Alberta. Military members from the 3rd Canadian Division Support Group, HMCS Nonsuch, and the Canadian Forces recruiting centre prairies and north detachment Edmonton, representing army, navy, and air force, each have a seat at the table. The committee has collaborated to promote and support incentives such as the Freedom of the City parade and ceremonies; collaborating on the Griesbach's Flanders field park commemoration; celebrating the city's namesake ship, HMCS Edmonton; and supporting the Military Family Resource Centre and other organizations seeking to recognize the military in the capital region.

On return from deployment in Afghanistan troops were met by the members of the committee, who offered Tim Hortons coffee and doughnuts. The committee also arranged for an Edmonton Police Service escort from the airport to the base. Edmonton, through the efforts of the Edmonton Salutes Committee, enjoys a strong relationship with the military and a well-deserved reputation as a garrison town.

Through the commitment of support for the military community it is with a heavy heart that I share my deepest condolences to the family and colleagues of Captain Thomas McQueen, the pilot who perished in the CF-18 fighter jet accident yesterday. It is never easy to lose a member of the Canadian Forces. The families and communities, 4 Wing, and CFB Cold Lake, Alberta, and Canada have suffered a tremendous loss. On behalf of Albertans I would like to extend my deepest sympathies and gratitude to the fallen soldier and his family for their commitment to serving Canada. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Organ and Tissue Donation

Dr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to celebrate the altruism and community spirit of Albertans who donate blood, bone marrow, stem cells, and cord blood. I also want to recognize and encourage Albertans in their involvement in organ donation so that our world-class heart, lung, liver, islet cell, cornea, and kidney transplant programs can continue to benefit Albertans.

I was the medical director of the blood transfusion service here in Edmonton for 15 years. I became involved because my leukemia patients needed a reliable local supply of platelets and red blood cells to benefit from their chemotherapy treatments. I learned that Edmonton and Calgary had the best blood donors in Canada, and they are routinely supplying other parts of Canada. Today it was my pleasure to introduce Maurice Brunelle. Maurice is one of thousands of Albertans who have volunteered to donate marrow or stem cells to the unrelated bone marrow donor registry run by Canadian Blood Services.

Twenty years ago I collected bone marrow from Maurice at the Cross Cancer Institute. It was transported to Ontario and transplanted successfully to a police officer with leukemia. Twenty years later donor and recipient are friends, and Maurice's community extends across Canada. Bone marrow and stem cells from Alberta donors have been used across Canada and around the world.

Using what we learned from the UBMDR, hematologists in Alberta now use stem cells to rescue the bone marrow function of patients with lymphoma, myeloma, and other cancers that require high-dose chemotherapy. Our patients in the cancer program now have as good an outcome as patients anywhere in the world.

I also appreciate Alberta parents who contribute placental blood to the cord blood bank. Placental blood cells are particularly important for patients who are unable to find a donor on the UBMDR. Cord blood is special in that it does not cause the graft reaction that stem cells from adults do.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I implore all Albertans to follow the example of stem cell donors like Maurice and sign their organ donor cards and make sure that all their loved ones know about it.

Thank you.

Coal-fired Electric Power Plant Retirement

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, this government is trying to pull a fast one on the people of this province. One day they say that they have to shut down our coal plants or else the federal government will shut them down for us. The next day we learn that both Nova Scotia and Saskatchewan have made deals to keep their coal plants operating beyond 2030. This government didn't even try to get a deal for taxpayers or defend the thousands of Albertans who make a living in the coal industry. They are putting thousands of families out of work in communities like Hanna, Forestburg, and Keephills.

To make matters worse, they're paying a king's ransom to shut down these plants: $97 million a year for 14 years, $1.36 billion. This money could be better spent on pressing needs like building critical infrastructure or even reducing taxes. There is no need to shut these plants down early and put thousands of Albertans out of work.

The federal government is clearly open to compromise, but this isn't about the federal government. This is about that government across the aisle who puts ideology before all else. To no surprise, Mr. Speaker, this government is made up of NDP world view activists from B.C., Manitoba, and also Ontario, where, by the way, the most unpopular Premier in all of Canada just apologized for completely mismanaging the electricity file. This government is already starting to backtrack by imposing a cap on what they know will be higher power prices. Alberta taxpayers will be stuck with paying the rest of the bill. This government knows they've sold Albertans down the river, and Albertans know it, too.

But there is a better, more stable vision for our province, one where the government actually defends people over ideology. This government is letting people down while this government continues to serve the NDP world view.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Bill 34

Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 34, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

The proposed bill would enable the government of Alberta to manage the impacts of the coal power purchase arrangements on the Balancing Pool and provide consumers with stable electricity prices.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I would like to table the requisite number of copies of a letter I received from Dr. Les Ellis, a veterinarian from Lloydminster, stating his opposition to proposed government Bill 207.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of a letter I received from Dr. Tim Goodbrand, a veterinarian from Vermilion, stating his opposition to Bill 207. I have many more.

The Speaker: Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table three documents to which I referred yesterday. The first one is a document regarding an interview with the Leader of the Official Opposition where the title says Help Fort McMurray by Slowing Down Oil-sands Development, ex-MP Says. He says: I'd like it slowed down; sometimes it feels like we're racing to the end; the oil is not going anywhere.

The second document, Mr. Speaker, is a report from the World Bank stating the problems with trickle-down economics.

The third document is a report from the International Monetary Fund also confirming the problems with trickle-down economics, that the Wildrose believes in.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a report by EDC Associates that I referenced last night in debate on Bill 27, Multi-client Study of Potential Impacts on the AB Electricity Market of Policy Implementation Choices for the Climate Leadership Plan, which shows a 25 per cent renewable target is much more economically viable than a 30 per cent target.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Bilous, Minister of Economic Development and Trade, response to Written Question 13 asked for by Mr. Clark on May 16, 2016: what are the deliverables from the Minister of Economic Development and Trade's recent trip to Washington, DC, from February 3 to 5, 2016?

On behalf of the hon. Ms Ganley, Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, the Alberta Law Enforcement Review Board 2015 annual report, Alberta Human Rights Commission annual report 2015-16; pursuant to the Legal Profession Act the Law Society of Alberta 2015 annual report.

On behalf of the hon. Minister Miranda, Minister of Culture and Tourism, pursuant to the Wild Rose Foundation Act the Wild Rose Foundation annual report 2015-16, pursuant to the Historical Resources Act the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation 2015-16 annual report, pursuant to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts Act the Alberta Foundation for the Arts 2015-16 annual report, pursuant to the Alberta Sport Connection Act the Alberta Sport Connection annual report 2015-16.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 25

Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A1.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. Mr. Fraser to move that Bill 25, the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be amended by adding the following after section 2:

Annual Report

2.1 Commencing one year after the coming into force of this Act, the Minister shall, as soon as practicable after December 31 each year, prepare and make publicly available an annual report, which contains:

- (a) the reduction, expressed in megatonnes, from the previous calendar year in upgrading emissions and greenhouse gas emissions;
- (b) the estimated amount of greenhouse gas emissions, expressed in megatonnes, that will be produced in the first year of commercial operation by oil sands sites approved under the Oil Sands Conservation Act in the year for which the annual report is made;
- (c) the amount of funding provided by the Government of Alberta for research or developments to reduce upgrading emissions and greenhouse gas emissions for the year for which the annual report is made; and
- (d) the amount, expressed in megatonnes, of greenhouse gas emissions for each type of greenhouse gas emission excluded under section 2(2) for the year in which the annual report is made.

I rise today to speak about the amendment on Bill 25. We'd like to see this bill amended to include the annual reporting mechanism. As we've certainly noted in this House, we in the PC caucus do not believe that this bill has been thought through enough. We believe that there are some serious issues that have not been addressed by this government and that there are going to be real consequences in the prosperity and everyday lives of Albertans, so we're not generally supportive of this bill.

That being said, we do believe that there are some changes to this bill that this government should absolutely be considering. If the government is committed to barrelling ahead on legislation like this, then we hope that they will at least allow members of this House to provide their input in trying to improve this piece of legislation. The amendment we are proposing today is along those lines, and the amendment tries to at least allow for measures for this government and Albertans that can actually gauge the success of this bill. That's why we are proposing that the government release a progress report of sorts at the end of each year.

This report is going to contain information like how much progress has actually been made in reducing upgrading emissions. We're also looking to see how much greenhouse gas is being produced by facilities approved under the Oil Sands Conservation Act. This will give us some understanding of whether or not this bill is accomplishing its stated goal, which is information that I'd hope the government would like to have and information that I'd hope they'd be willing to share with Albertans.

We would also like to see this report detail how much money is coming from the government in terms of supporting research and development on emissions reductions. I think it's important that we can demonstrate to Albertans that we are delivering value for their tax dollars, and it's hard to know whether or not that kind of investment is worth while if we don't have the information on spending in one consolidated location.

Lastly, we'd like to see this report include a summary detailing the amounts of various emissions detailed in the bill. Again, this is important information when we're making decisions on the effectiveness of the act. We want to measure where exactly we're seeing reductions or, perhaps, where we're seeing increases so that we can measure whether or not we're making progress or simply shifting emissions between different categories.

As you can see, this is a report card of sorts, the kind of amendment that aims to increase accountability and transparency in government programs. Hopefully, if the government is being honest about their desire to increase transparency, they will have no problem with this amendment. I look forward to their thunderous support of what really is just a common-sense improvement to the legislation.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am grateful to the hon. member for this amendment. I will be supporting it, and I would encourage all members of this House to support it. If I had my druthers, I would druther that we had this happening monthly. Given the advent of technology today there are places you can go on the web and you can see, live stream almost, the kinds of activities that are happening with different industries in different places around the world. We know that we have the technology right now to live stream GHG reductions. It would be nice if Albertans could go to a website and actually see: okay; well, here's this particular industry sector, and here's the amount of emissions that are being handled. Kind of like our debt clock. You can go and see how the debt is just clicking off and clicking off. You know, I would like to see that clock run backwards, but it isn't going to happen at least for a few years.

Anyway, back to this particular amendment. As I have said in this House before, you cannot manage what you do not measure. We have attempted on a number of occasions to have this government accept amendments to different bits of legislation to measure the effect of a given piece of legislation or a given policy that this government puts out. I am grateful that we have this amendment before us because here's a performance measurement that we can take to see how effective the government's actions are on this file. It is vitally important because as we go forward, of course, we're hoping that we're going to see some sort of reductions taking place, although as we've mapped out earlier, if they don't take care of the issue regarding carbon leakage, the net to the globe isn't going to be positive.

Nevertheless, as you look through this particular amendment, you've got "the reduction, expressed in megatonnes, from the previous calendar year in upgrading emissions and greenhouse gas emissions." I'm grateful for that because now we're going to be able to look over previous year after year after year and see how we are doing. I would hope that having a measurement like this, the government or the people within the department can then look at how we're proceeding, look at our progress, and make adjustments as we go along.

I mean, it's very important that we do make adjustments because initially, of course, whenever we human beings embark on something, invariably the best laid plans of mice and men end up having to be changed on the fly as we go forward. You know, this particular issue of greenhouse gas emissions is just one of those things where the government has an idea that if we do A, B, and C, it's going to result in a particular outcome. But there's no guarantee those outcomes will actually be reached, and if we don't measure what we're doing as we go forward, the government is not going to know what they're going to need to do to improve the outcome at the end of the day.

Here we have (b):

the estimated amount of greenhouse gas emissions, expressed in megatonnes, that will be produced in the first year of commercial operation by oil sands sites approved under the Oil Sands Conservation Act in the year for which the annual report is made.

Again, if I had my druthers, I'd druther have seen a bill where specific components in this big thing we call greenhouse gas emissions – I would rather have seen a splitting out of those things. Maybe where the government will go if they approve this is actually list for us the particular emission and its level as we go along here. Because with the technologies that the oil sands group are employing and with the technologies that at least some of us in the House are aware of, that are just waiting in the wings to get deployed in the oil sands, there are going to be different emissions impacted differently with these new technologies that are coming out. It would be very important from a scientific point of view, from a research point of view, to actually watch as we go along how we're impacting these different components in the greenhouse gas emissions mix. So I would rather have seen a splitting out here, but that's fine. The amendment is good as it is. It can always be amended later.

"The amount of funding provided by the Government of Alberta for research or developments to reduce upgrading emissions and greenhouse gas emissions for the year for which the annual report is made." It's very important to the taxpayers of this province that they know that their tax dollars are being used wisely. Without a performance measurement like this to actually see how much we're spending per tonne of reduction – that is vitally important to taxpayers. The people of Alberta are hard-working people. Great gobs of the money that they are earning is being taken out of their pocket by this government's tax, tax, tax on this, that, and the other thing. It would be, I think, only respectful that the government would then have some sort of performance measure in place to assure the taxpayers that – you know what? – yes, we took those taxes from you, but look what we managed to accomplish with them.

Without some sort of measurement and verification of that, then what do the taxpayers have to go on? Just trust me that it's working. That's not good enough, Madam Chair. That's not good enough at all. This is their money. It's taxpayers' money. They have a right to know that the money that is being taken from them – and when it comes to carbon taxation, if the polls are accurate, and I have no reason to doubt their accuracy, it is being taken from them against their will. They at least ought to be given the decency of knowing that money is being used appropriately.

What else can I say about this wonderful amendment that we have? I hope to see more amendments like this because it's clear that Bill 25 is going to be shoved through this House, but I would hope that the government will at least have the sense to take good, serious consideration of amendments that are brought forward to the House, that are an attempt to make this bill better than it currently may be. We have to make improvements to it. It is impacting one of the most significant industries in our province. I would hope that the government is not just presuming that they do know best and that we're just going to have to take their word for it.

I'm aware that there are certain industry participants that have reviewed Bill 25. They want to see some amendments made to it because of the impact Bill 25 is going to have on them. I would hope that this government will listen to some of those voices that we represent over on this side and that they would in fact listen to those industry people, who I know have been attempting to make contact with the members on the other side.

All in all, I'm very happy with this amendment. I would encourage my colleagues in this House to support it. I look forward to more such amendments coming forward to try and improve this bill.

Thank you very much.

3:10

The Chair: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I'm very pleased to rise and speak to this amendment. I commend the member and his caucus for putting forth thoughtful amendments to this bill, Bill 25, of course, which was asked for by the oil sands industry. When we took the decision to move forward with this, it was on the advice of oil sands operators, and we listened to them. We listened to their concerns around tidewater access, and one of the things that they brought to us was that they asked us to grapple with the issue of greenhouse gas emissions coming from the oil sands through a legislative mechanism of a cap. So that's what we have done. We listened to Shell, ConocoPhillips, Cenovus, Statoil, CNRL, Suncor, and MEG.

Now, on the matter of reporting, Madam Chair, first of all, the Auditor General has flagged this matter of GHG measurement and reporting several times over the years. Of course, we inherited a carbon pricing system from the previous government, and in successive reports the Auditor General indicated that the government was not providing accurate and timely reporting on emissions inventories. That is why we have taken steps to ensure that our emissions inventories are keeping pace. We have ensured that we have the right kind of support for this given that this is such an important undertaking of our government. In fact, it's so important to the national economy and, indeed, to our investment climate going forward so that investors can make investments in the oil sands in a way that they know there is a climate policy that will surround those investments and therefore insulate those investments from some of the political uncertainty that was arising from having no real serious and robust climate policy, which is why oil sands companies asked us for this in the first place.

So there has been that Auditor General recommendation, and in our department the climate change office is moving forward with a number of different initiatives to ensure that we've got the right measuring, reporting, and verification happening, Madam Chair. However, in the aggregate – and this is broken down by industrial sector as well – we do have reporting via Environment Canada and Natural Resources Canada. They form part of our national emissions inventories, which then, in turn, form part of our nationally determined contributions to the UNFCCC. Those are national emissions inventories to which Alberta provides its data on an annual basis once it has been appropriately measured, reported, verified. We undertake those efforts in conjunction with the federal government.

Certainly, they do take time to verify, Madam Chair, and there's a good reason for that because with carbon pricing now with tradeable permits, with an offset protocol system, and so on, they must be real. They must be substantive. Yes, technology is changing, but that is why there is some lag time. We are working on 2014 inventories right now that form the basis of Canada's analysis and recommendations to the UNFCCC, which is, of course, the framework convention on climate change, which provides, then, the baseline for our nationally determined contributions under the Paris agreement.

In addition, Alberta already is part of measuring, verification, and reporting with other subnational governments. Here again it's important for us to have a uniformity across jurisdictions, particularly as jurisdictions begin to take on Alberta's offset protocols in agriculture and elsewhere. We report through the climate group, our membership in the climate group, which is the compact of states and regions, which is, of course, an international body, Madam Chair. So we undertake those efforts as well.

In addition, the National Energy Board, Madam Chair, does consider emissions as part of their pipeline applications. In fact, they did an upstream emissions impact assessment for the Trans Mountain pipeline, and that's one of the reasons why oil sands operators wanted the cap in place. What it does is that it takes that question of the upstream emissions impact off the table as a consideration in NEB deliberations because the energy infrastructure in question is already within an emissions limit that is then woven into Canada's overall climate strategy. On that point I will simply say this. Having robust measuring, reporting, and verification within an overall architecture of climate policy that is thoughtful, that works with oil sands operators is what leads to success for all Albertans and all Canadians.

So while well-intentioned, we cannot support this amendment because we already have a number of different measuring, reporting, verification, and other systems in place, Madam Chair, and we would not want to jeopardize our intergovernmental relations or other relationships at this time.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View on the amendment.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to commend the member for this amendment. I will be supporting this amendment as well.

One of the things that the minister was mentioning was about the FCCC reporting in conjunction with all of the other reports that come forward. As much as I agree that those metrics are already there, the problem is that those metrics might not necessarily be being translated back to Albertans so that they understand the way that this is working. Metrics are actually about where the dollars are going, how they're being spent, and how that is actually going to not only impact us here in the province but show an overall impact to Albertans about how those dollars are being spent.

As much as there are already aspects of these things that are going forward – and I agree with the minister that there are established protocols to show things already – we're not talking about those specific protocols. We're actually talking about reporting to Albertans about what is happening with the hard-earned dollars that are going into a fund when it is not understood by any of us how that's going to be spent.

There are specific metrics. For example, if we're talking about accountability, what is the difficulty in making sure that some of these reductions – especially because this entire climate action leadership plan is based upon the assumption that there is going to be a change in the overall footprint, I don't understand why there would be an issue or why anybody would disagree with the aspect of wanting to make sure that those express megatonnes are made available to Albertans so that they understand where we started, where we got to, and where we're going.

This is an aspect of accountability that will actually uphold what this government is trying to do, not just at a national level or an international level. We've asked many, many times to make sure that there's crossjurisdictional information to make sure that the ideas that are coming down from this government actually make sense. So these are actually specifics for Albertans. The government keeps saying that this is a made-in-Alberta project. Well, then, make the accountability made in Alberta, too. Make sure that those metrics and those pieces of accountability are actually transferring to Albertans in this province so that they understand what is happening. That's what this amendment is about.

This is about relating back to "the Oil Sands Conservation Act in the year for which the annual report is made." The member is asking to make sure that the first year of commercial production of oil sands sites under this is made available to Albertans. This is different than what the minister is talking about. We're wanting it to be broken down so that Albertans understand where their hard-earned dollars are going. I don't think that that's too much to ask.

When the minister was talking about the oil sands groups that are already involved in talks about this, we understand that. But there are a lot of other smaller companies, small and medium-sized companies, that were not included in those discussions that may be cut out of the megatonnes that are leftover. It brings to mind a question of who it is that's going to be available to be able to even purchase, trade, or participate in the leftover megatonnes. This is another bit of accountability that makes sure that this government is not picking winners and losers and that there is accountability there. That's what this amendment is about, in my opinion.

I think that as much as I agree with the minister that there are things there already, this goes to that next step of accountability, not at a federal level but at a provincial level, on behalf of the folks here that are paying the dollars into this plan to evidently be able to change the way that we do things here, to change our footprint. We've said many, many times that there's nothing in this plan that's actually going to change the footprint. There's nothing here that's actually going to reduce emissions.

So that's why I fully support this amendment, and I encourage everybody in this House to also support the amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just coming back to this amendment again, the hon. minister of the environment said that she didn't want to endanger relationships that we may have with other jurisdictions. Frankly, I think it's kind of a stretch to suggest to this House that monitoring Alberta's emissions is going to somehow endanger a relationship we may have with some other jurisdiction. Like, give us a break here.

Coming back to this, I understand, you know, what the hon. minister of the environment was saying about the monitoring on a macro scale of emissions that does take place currently and that are reported at that level. But if you get down into the details of this particular amendment and take a look, for example, at part (b), the estimated amount of greenhouse gas emissions . . . that will be produced in the first year of commercial operation by oil sand sites approved, what this is basically saying is that when a new site is going to be coming on stream, this amendment would require that there be an estimate made of the GHG reductions for this new site coming on.

Again, you cannot manage what you do not measure. The importance of this is that when we receive an estimate and that site comes on, a year later we have the actual measurements. We can then go back, and we can compare the actual measurements with the estimate. If there's a difference, then both the government and the company involved can go back to the drawing board and say, "Why was our estimate off?" or, if it's close: "Well, great. It confirms the equations and the calculations that we used to come up with an estimate that was right."

Any way you look at it, measuring on a new site coming on stream is very valuable, not only to the people of Alberta but to the company as well. They are going to probably be developing other sites, and if a particular methodology of measurement has proven true for them at this site, then they can use that same methodology in another site, do that same measurement and verification again. If it proves true there, then they've got something very valuable that they can use in planning forward, which is extremely valuable to them, not just valuable from a scientific point of view but valuable in dollars and cents to that company and certainly valuable to Albertans.

I think that part (b) of this amendment is extremely important and one that is not currently being utilized. I would see that as development happens, going forward here to develop the rest of these leases up in the north, this particular section within this amendment is very, very important going forward.

Secondly, we have part (d):

the amount, expressed in megatonnes, of greenhouse gas emissions for each type of greenhouse gas emission excluded under section 2(2).

There is within section 2(2) a list of exclusions. Now, if we are not going to be keeping track of the GHG emissions excluded, we have the potential of a runaway freight train. We have emissions that are happening that are not even being looked at. They're not being reported. This is extremely important. Why would we be going through the trouble of having all kinds of legislation about GHG reductions, but here's a list of exclusions, and we're not even going to watch them. We're not even going to pay attention to them. That just doesn't make sense at all.

It is very important that those excluded GHG emissions be reported and recorded so that we can see what is happening there. Again, you cannot manage what you do not measure. When you have something like this that's an exclusionary and you've got something happening that you're not even watching, that's not a good idea, not a good idea at all.

Again, I would ask the hon. minister to reconsider her position on this. This is an excellent amendment, one that I support, and I would encourage all members of this House to support it because, again, you cannot manage what you don't measure. This amendment puts in place some excellent measurement and verification metrics that I wholeheartedly support.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any further speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. I wanted to offer some friendly advice to the government. The government has talked a lot about risk and what it looks like to partners, investors, and bankers, but ultimately the true test is: what does it look like to Albertans?

What we want and what we need in government and what creates sustainability in our banking systems, our financial institutions, and our partners right across the world is when there is political certainty. When you create a bill that doesn't have a measurement of performance, that is something that other governments that come in the next election or the election after that may want to overturn, that type of uncertainty.

There's an opportunity here to be very transparent, to show exactly what we're doing, mostly for Albertans and for their sake, if the government believes that what they're doing is the right thing, to have those performance evaluations in there. But it also says to everybody else and to opposition members like myself that the government is open and transparent, and it shows to Albertans that they're open and transparent.

Again, I'm encouraging the members to take a look at this, you know, read it, talk to their administrators behind the scenes, and get this done because this is transparency. This is what Albertans are asking for, and we want to see that it gets done, Madam Chair.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to say that I think it is important that the House supports this amendment. It really will tell the rest of the world that we are going to do a good job on monitoring, and that's going to matter.

Today, of course, they had approval for a couple of pipelines, including one to B.C. [some applause] I thank my colleagues in the House for that cheerful outburst, and I share that sentiment with you a hundred per cent. But I will say that I'll be happier – and this is the point of my argument here – when there is oil flowing through the pipeline. [some applause] Good. I'm glad we all agree on that. Thank you.

I think this talks to getting between here and the oil-flowing part because I think that's when we can really celebrate. Today is good news. I'm not going to dampen it. I'm very, very happy, and I think I heard that other members of the House are happy, too. It's wonderful news. But it doesn't change the fact that we have to get to the point where there's actually oil going through the pipeline.

This government has talked about it. Listen, I haven't been sold completely. I have to tell you that. Largely, not sold. They said that the secret is getting along with other jurisdictions. Okay. You know what? I'm not arguing with that. I would just say that it has been presented and not yet proven, and when I see that we get from today's good announcement to oil flowing through and there are no protests along the way, if there are no protests along the way, then I will say that this government has got that social licence.

I'm not sure there are not going to be any protests. I'm still waiting to see, Madam Chair, whether that happens. But if the government truly believes that what they're saying is that it's about working in partnership with other jurisdictions, a very useful amendment like this would be a good place for the government to say that they really mean that.

While I don't like Bill 25 – I make no excuses or exceptions to that – this would improve it, and it would actually give the government a chance to make a demonstration that they're willing to work with other parties in order to get the pipelines built and things done.

For that reason, I am going to recommend that members of this House, including on the government side, vote yes to this amendment. At the end of the day, it doesn't stop the main purpose of the legislation, to put a cap on emissions, whether I like it or not, but it does say that you are going to look at how you measure it. It will actually demonstrate some of that working together that the government has said time and again that they think is one of the keys to getting a pipeline successfully built.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'd just like to stand up and speak in support of this amendment. The technology is there. It has been. We're measuring greenhouse gas emissions right now. It shouldn't be a big stretch to quantify that and do a report to Albertans so that they can feel – you, know, this is a really good opportunity for the government to gain back some of the confidence of Albertans and to show them responsibility, show them that exactly the targets we're shooting for are being maintained. Like I said, the technology is already there. Why not measure and confirm that the policies you're putting in place, that the money you're spending from Alberta's carbon taxes are actually getting the results that you want?

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. Yeah, I would like to speak in favour of this amendment. It starts by saying:

Commencing one year after the coming into force of this Act, the Minister shall, as soon as practicable after December 31 each year, prepare and make publicly available an annual report.

Now, it appears that the government doesn't want to support this motion, which, I should say, is quite alarming. With "one year after the coming into force of this Act," there's plenty of time for preparation for this to happen, and it doesn't have to be produced until "as soon as practicable," which leaves a pretty wide door open as far as when this report would be deemed necessary to be out for the public to see. I don't see any excuses here why this would be any sort of burden on the government. In fact, what it would do is give the government an opportunity to show exactly what it's doing. If this government is serious about being open and transparent, it would only make sense that they do this.

Now, it goes on. This report is supposed to contain:

- (a) the reduction, expressed in megatonnes, from the previous calendar year in upgrading emissions and greenhouse gas emissions.

When we have this cap that this Bill 25 puts in place, I think it would be valuable to know where in relationship to the cap the emissions are, especially concerning upgrading emissions and, of course, greenhouse gas emissions. So there are two different aspects to it. Of course, the upgrading emissions fall under a different cap than the greenhouse gas emissions, but both are capped. This is an opportunity for the government to clearly express what the emissions are to the public of Alberta and to know where they are in relationship to the cap.

Now, it goes on to say:

- (b) the estimated amount of greenhouse gas emissions, expressed in megatonnes, that will be produced in the first year of commercial operation by oil sands sites approved under the Oil Sands Conservation Act in the year for which the annual report is made.

This provides an opportunity for the government to provide the estimated amount of greenhouse gas emissions that would be produced in the first commercial year by oil sands sites approved under the Oil Sands Conservation Act. Again, this gives an opportunity for the government to be transparent, to provide information to the public. If there's any attempt to be transparent, to provide information for people to make informed decisions, then this is the perfect opportunity for the government to do that.

Now, the report is also supposed to contain:

- (c) the amount of funding provided by the Government of Alberta for research or developments to reduce upgrading emissions and greenhouse gas emissions for the year for which the annual report is made.

Again, this should be no burden to the government. It's purely the amount of funding provided by the government of Alberta, taxpayer money paid out for research or developments to reduce upgrading emissions. Clear and simple: taxpayers' money. Really, what that amounts to is: should taxpayers have a right to know where their money is going? I think they do. In fact, I know they do, and I think Albertans expect that, too.

The next part:

- (d) the amount, expressed in megatonnes, of greenhouse gas emissions for each type of greenhouse gas emission excluded under section 2(2) for the year for which the annual report is made.

Now, if we look at section 2(2), that's where it talks about the exclusions that wouldn't fall under the regular 100-megatonne cap. I'll just read from it here.

In determining the greenhouse gas emissions for all oil sands sites combined in a year for the purposes of subsection (1), the following greenhouse gas emissions are excluded.

Item (d) under 2.1 is specifically referring to section 2(2), which is the exclusions, the amount of megatonnes of greenhouse gas emissions for each type of greenhouse gas emissions excluded under section 2(2). What is excluded is:

- (a) cogeneration emissions attributable to the electric energy portion of the total energy generated or produced by cogeneration, as determined in accordance with the regulations.

So one of those exclusions is cogeneration emissions attributable to the electric energy portion.

Now, the next portion:

- (b) upgrading emissions
  - (i) attributable to upgraders that complete their first year of commercial operation after December 31, 2015, or
  - (ii) attributable to the increased capacity resulting from the expansion, after December 31, 2015, of upgraders that completed their first year of commercial operation on or before December 31, 2015.

Some of these exclusions that this would refer to are upgrading emissions under the guidelines that I just read.

It goes on to say:

as determined in accordance with the regulations, to a combined maximum of 10 megatonnes in any year.

So upgrading emissions has the cap of 10 megatonnes.

Now, also excluded are:

- (c) greenhouse gas emissions from any prescribed experimental scheme or any experimental scheme within a prescribed class of experimental scheme.

Again, this request in this amendment would ask for the amount of emissions to be reported from experimental schemes also.

3:40

Now, also excluded are:

- (d) greenhouse gas emissions from any prescribed primary production or any primary production within a prescribed class of primary production.

Again, another exclusion here, described as “prescribed primary production,” that this amendment would ask for a report on.

I would think that the government itself would want this breakdown anyway, and if the testing and reporting that are already being done are, as the minister suggested, robust, then I would suggest that this is already happening, and the only thing that comes into question is whether a report is going to be made for the public. There shouldn't be any problem with passing an amendment such as this. If it's already being done, as is suggested, and it's not going to be hidden from the public, then it would only make sense that this amendment is perfectly reasonable.

Now, it goes on to another exclusion.

- (e) greenhouse gas emissions from any prescribed enhanced recovery or any enhanced recovery within a prescribed class of enhanced recovery.

Again, another exclusion here that this amendment is requesting.

Now, we had a chance to listen to the minister talk about how the oil sands companies asked for this cap. Obviously, as soon as this NDP government was elected, I guess the oil sands companies came running to this government and said: we want a cap. They asked for it. I mean, they had to have. That's my understanding. I wasn't there, so I can't say, but I guess they just came running and said: “We want a cap. Please cap us.”

Now, I would suggest that if their shareholders thought that this was going to be damaging to them, they probably would have said something, so obviously there's something in it for these companies that came running and asking for the cap, because I'm sure those companies that supported this didn't come running to ask for something that would hurt their business. Of course, we weren't there when these deals were made and how this all came about, which is why transparency is such an important thing in this world, especially in politics. I'm sure ourselves and a lot of Albertans would love to know how this all happened.

The minister also said that the Auditor General said that the previous government was not doing accurate reporting. Now, I don't know what's changed since then as far as the accurate reporting, but I guess I would hope that it is accurate now. We haven't seen the latest Auditor General report on that, so I'm not sure where that is, but I would hope that now it's being accurately reported.

The minister also talked about how, as far as investment, the climate change plan that the government has brought in gives industry certainty. Well, there are a lot of different aspects to the climate leadership plan that the government has brought forward, and we keep seeing things pop up all the time as far as other little parts of this plan, almost as afterthoughts, kind of like the exclusions. It's almost like they came up with the idea: “Well, a 100-megatonne cap sounds pretty good. Let's go with that, a nice round number.” Then it was, like: “Oh, except how about this? How about prescribed experimental schemes?” “Uh-oh. Um, well, maybe we'll have an exclusion for that.” Then it's, like, “Well, how about cogeneration emissions attributable to the electric energy portion?” “Well, yeah, we'll just exclude that, too.” “Then how about upgrading emissions? We don't want to stop upgrading.” “Well, we'll throw that into the exclusions, too.” Prescribed primary production: “Oops. Another exclusion there.” Then prescribed enhanced recovery: “Uh-oh. I guess we'll have an exclusion there, too.”

Of course, we sit here in this Legislature, and we just got handed another bill today, where the government has got to figure out how to get money into the system to pay for it, I guess. We just keep coming up with new ideas all the time. The one we were handed today was the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016, loans to the Balancing Pool and guarantee.

Now, obviously, this is all related to the climate leadership plan that the government has, all of this stuff, but they just keep throwing stuff piece by piece at us here. Of course, never is there any sort of report. There are no economic or environmental assessments or studies, none of them. This stuff is just thrown up here, and any time we ask for any kind of report or any kind of study that justifies any of this, there's never anything unless, of course, through FOIP something leaks out, and then you realize: well, that didn't make us look good, so we didn't want to tell you about that even though you asked a hundred times for it.

Now, the minister also suggested that the reporting from Environment Canada and some other groups is already reported annually. She suggests that there's robust testing and reporting, and that leads to success. But then she says that she can't support it. She can't support a bill that provides clarity and appropriate reporting. She made the bizarre statement that somehow it would jeopardize the testing and reporting in the other jurisdictions that are involved. Like, I would hope there's nothing to hide here, Madam Chair. I would hope that the only reason it could jeopardize anything is if somebody didn't want to see it. Are we involved with groups or organizations or jurisdictions that are scared of having reports like this made? I would hope not. I would sure hope not.

Now, we look at the Climate Leadership report. I'm just going to quote from it here. “Alberta's action on climate change will not take place in a vacuum – what happens globally, both politically and economically, will determine its relative success.” Well, Madam Chair, there have been a lot of things politically and economically that have happened since this report was released, so I think that's correct. We can't have this climate change plan happen in a vacuum. We've got to look at what's happening around us. There was a recent election with our largest trading partner that spelled clearly some directions of our largest trading partner, but this government hasn't blinked. We have an economy that's suffering and continues to suffer. More and more each day Albertans are suffering job losses.

3:50

A simple request like an annual report on what this government is doing and what's happening in the oil sands – annual reporting somehow is taboo. I don't understand why. I haven't heard an excuse that makes any sense at all other than, I guess: maybe since it comes from this side of the House, then we've got to turn it down. I think this spells out pretty clearly some reporting that would be very advantageous and beneficial for Albertans.

I don't see a problem with having annual reporting as soon as practicable after December 31. That's very reasonable. It doesn't even put a deadline of, you know, three months or six months or a year even, just “as soon as practicable.” So there’s no problem with that. Then, of course, waiting till one year after this act comes into force: that makes sense. Let’s wait a year, and at the one-year anniversary let’s look at that then.

Now, when we look at this motion, I think it makes a lot of sense. I think it would provide the government with an opportunity to show Albertans what’s happening, what they’re doing, what greenhouse gases are being emitted in various stages of the oil sands operations. So this is just a good amendment.

The Chair: Are there any other speakers to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to elaborate a little bit on what the member was talking about. One of the things that we have to remember with amendments like this is that this is about trust and about making sure that Albertans and Canadians know that they can trust this government.

There have been a lot of aspects – and we’ve alluded to many, many of the aspects – that have come forward with this particular bill and the little puzzle pieces that are coming together, that I know in my constituency – and I’m sure I can speak on behalf of many on this side of the House that are trying to explain what the overall gist of this entire climate leadership action plan is. It’s obviously convoluted. There are a lot of things that are going on, a lot of moving parts at all times. So it’s absolutely imperative that the government take a look and take a step back and make sure that those metrics and that accountability are consistently there in order to be able to show Albertans what it is that you’re doing.

Now, there are so many things. We’ve talked about the 100-megatonne cap on prosperity, and the minister had mentioned earlier that that was something that these companies wanted. They wanted that cap. Well, here’s where the issue comes in of whether or not the government is actually acting on behalf of Albertans appropriately, because as much as those corporations may have suggested that that might be appropriate for them – why is that? Well, it could be because they’re first on the docket to be able to apply for those leases that are left over in that 100-megatonne cap.

This is a major trust issue for Albertans. This is a major trust issue. All of a sudden companies that have leases, that have already paid for those, are now not going to be able to follow through with things that they banked on, with projects that they were going to put forward in the first place. So those metrics for the reasons why the government is making these decisions are imperative. Albertans are looking to the government to give them some sort of understanding and clear process about how these are moving forward.

The other thing: we could go on with the cap on electricity. Any of the companies that, again, are standing up for this cap: well, we have to ask why. Why are those companies standing up? Well, that’s a good question. That’s because the government is not explaining how it is that they’re going to be able to fill the gap between the amount that is supposedly going to be stabilized in the electricity market and what’s left over when we bring renewables online. Where is that coming from? Where are those dollars coming from? Those are subsidies. Even though the average Albertan may not see that on their direct bill for electricity – guess what? – it’s going to be in their tax dollars. That is a piece of transparency that, again, at least when I’m out talking with Albertans every day, is a major issue for them. A major issue.

We could go as far as looking at even the 10-megatonne cap that is going to be on upgrading. There are so many things in here that are counterintuitive for the prosperity of this province.

As the other member had mentioned, with pipeline approvals at this point in time, which are wonderful and that all of us are just jumping up and down and absolutely grateful for – well, that’s wonderful, but now if we’re going to build capacity, all of a sudden, though, we are hamstringing capacity at the oil sands level. How does that work out? How is that in any way conducive to building capacity but not producing?

We’ve said it a million times in here and I’ll continue to say it: we should be producing in Alberta more, not less. We should be doing everything in this province more, not less. We are the best example. We are the people that should be producing. As the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake had mentioned earlier, carbon leakage is a massive issue. If we’re not producing here, somebody else is going to do it. They’re not going to just stop and say, “Oh, Alberta is not producing suddenly” and decide not to produce. That’s not how this is going to happen. This is another issue of trust for Albertans because on one hand you’re suggesting that this is all for the conservation and the betterment of our province, yet we, who produce better than anywhere else in the world, are now being told that we’re not supposed to produce because – I’m not quite sure why.

The question remains, then, that when we’re bringing in and when the member has brought in an amendment that provides the government the ability to show metrics and be accountable, they should, with everything that they’ve got, be ecstatic to have the opportunity to show the things that they’ve done well. If you truly believe in what you’re doing, why not show us? If you truly think that this is the best decision, why not show Albertans? If you really, really believe that this is going to do all the things that you intend it to do, which are all great intentions, why not be as transparent as possible for Albertans and show them that that’s what you’re doing?

You can have all the words in the world, you can give all of the ideas in the world about what you think is going to happen, but the actual metrics and the actual timelines of what’s going to happen – where we started, where we are right now, where we were, and where we’re going – are imperative to Albertans to understand the processes of this government. It’s imperative for us to understand the processes of this government. So why not show us? Why not pass a piece of legislation, an accountability piece of legislation? Do you know that we’ve brought on this side many, many pieces of accountability legislation? Many. Not one has been passed. Why? Why? If this is such a good deal, if this is so good for Albertans, why not show them? Why not be accountable a year from now, six months from now, whatever that is, to show them in emissions, in megatonnes what it is that their dollars have purchased for them? Obviously, social licence was one of those things.

Obviously, this government seems to know better than anybody else about how to reduce emissions, yet every piece of information that we brought forward has shown that there is no change in emissions and there’s no change in the footprint. So I’d like to know why it is that this government is so determined to not pass any accountability legislation to show Albertans how this is going to work.

This is a very, very straightforward amendment that basically gives you the opportunity to show Albertans how this worked out. It gives you every bit of ability to show people that what you’re doing and what you’ve come up with is the right thing. Are you afraid that you are wrong in maybe some of these decisions that you’ve put forward? Is that why you don’t want to be accountable? Is that why you refuse to pass any amendments on accountability when, actually, this amendment does nothing but make you look good? That’s all it does. It gives you the opportunity to do what you said you were going to do when you were campaigning, which is accountability and transparency. So why not pass it?

There's absolutely no good reason to look at this amendment and not pass it. Just because there are other pieces of legislation that are federal and global that have tracking mechanisms of what's going on, how does that translate to Albertans and the carbon tax, that they're paying in order to garner some sort of social licence that this government keeps talking about in order to be valued enough to be able to produce in a province that produces better than anywhere else in the world? Please, please explain to me why you wouldn't want to pass a piece of legislation that explains to the world and to Canada and to Alberta why you're doing such a good job. Please, I would love to understand why.

These are such small asks. This is actually saying: this is what happened; we have this many megatonnes in emissions changes that actually changed the footprint. Albertans will thank you for that. They will be grateful for what you have put forward. Everybody on the government side of the House keeps saying that Albertans are grateful to you, that they're happy that you did this. Well, then, great. Then prove to them that what you're doing is appropriate. Prove to them.

The pipelines are not the jurisdiction of this Legislature. They are the jurisdiction of the federal government. Prime Minister Trudeau has done the right thing by Canada by putting through national infrastructure that is going to help out all of us. That is his responsibility. That is his job.

As I've said before, this House, with all of the activists on that side that have been antipipeline, that have pushed to make sure that it stays in the ground – I mean, wasn't it Karen Mahon, who is on the oil sands advisory panel, that specifically said today that there is no reason to increase capacity? Oddly enough, I don't believe anybody on this side of the House yet has heard anything from the oil sands advisory panel. Anybody on this side? No? So here's yet another piece of accountability that has not come from the government.

Why not pass an amendment that will give you all the credibility in the world to show Albertans that what you're doing is right and fair? Why not? That's all this does. You're already telling me – the minister has already said to all of us that that already happened, so why don't you do it for Albertans, then? Albertans are going to look at this, and they're going to say: yet another time this government refuses to pass an amendment that makes them accountable. That rides on your shoulders, purely on your shoulders.

If you think that social licence – maybe we should talk a little bit about what social licence is. Social licence is an ongoing discussion between the NEB and the people along the lines of disturbance, ongoing, all the time. The NEB is our social licence. We have it. That is their job. Their job is to make sure that they're constantly, every single time, having ongoing discussions with everybody along lines of disturbance, with all people.

If you want social licence, there it is. You want more? Tell Albertans that you're doing the right thing. Give them the opportunity to understand what you're doing, that the hard-earned dollars that you are taking out of the pockets of Albertans in this carbon tax are actually going to do something. Give them the opportunity to be able to understand what you are doing, especially when your panel is not going to even report before this legislation is going to be passed, when you have activists on that panel that are actively speaking out against pipelines and against the oil sands right now, even with a pipeline being passed as we speak. It's up to you.

This is a great amendment. I would highly recommend that everybody in this House consider the opportunity to show all

Albertans that what you say is true and that you're willing to stand behind it and have some accountability for the things that you want to see happen in this province.

Thank you.

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I was planning on reserving some of these remarks for speaking to the actual bill, but since the questions were asked by the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View just in her recent speech, I feel like speaking to the amendment is actually probably more the appropriate time.

I have to say how proud I am to rise on the floor of this Assembly and speak about the proof, which was asked for, and the proof is specifically . . .

Mr. Hanson: Point of order.

The Chair: Hon. minister, we have a point of order.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Hanson: Just relevance, Madam Chair. We're on an amendment.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Madam Chair, it's well known that we provide a great deal of latitude in committee to speak about many matters, but the interesting thing is that the hon. member making the point of order doesn't even know what the hon. Deputy Premier is going to say, and he's already up there trying to stop her from saying it. I would argue, you know, that until the Deputy Premier has concluded her remarks, the question of relevance is absolutely premature.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Madam Speaker, I called a point of order for relevance because if you check the Blues, the minister stood up and said that this has no relevance to the amendment.

The Chair: Any others wishing to speak to the point of order?

I will rule that there is no point of order. I have this afternoon given great latitude to all of the speakers until it became apparent where their point was going, so I shall continue to do that.

Go ahead, hon. minister.

Debate Continued

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. I'm pleased to respond to the last speaker on the amendment, and the speaker asked a very clear question. She said: where's the proof? I have to say, Madam Chair, that the proof is in the pipeline. Earlier this afternoon the federal government announced their decision to approve Kinder Morgan's Trans Mountain pipeline. Prime Minister Trudeau and his government have approved energy infrastructure projects that are critically important to the economic future of the people of Alberta and the country of Canada, and in doing so, the federal government has shown extraordinary leadership.

To all of the members of this House, the members of our House: our province has been brutally slammed by the collapse of commodity prices in Alberta, and the result has been a long, dark night for the people of Alberta, Madam Chair, but today we finally see some morning light. We are getting a chance to break our land lock. We are getting a chance to sell to China and other new markets at better prices. We are getting a chance to reduce our dependence on one market and to be more economically independent, and we are getting a chance to pick ourselves up and move forward yet again. When the member asks, "Where's the proof?" I'll say again: the proof is in the pipeline.

Of equal importance, we are building the economy with a stronger new national environmental policy. We are getting out of coal by 2030. We are implementing an emissions cap in the oil sands, and we will all be phasing in a $50 carbon levy to help reduce emissions and help finance the transition to a lower carbon economy.

Madam Chair, to the people of Alberta who have waited so very long for this day I say this: Albertans are used to being leaders, and that's what we are doing here today. We all knew our province had driven itself into a dead end, so Albertans decided it was time for change. That included ending climate change denial, and that included working constructively with other Canadians instead of just shouting at them or tweeting mean remarks at them. As we've now seen here today, that's how you actually get results.

The message to all Canadians today is also clear. We've made a choice. We've chosen regularly – we've been told by the Official Opposition that you have to make a choice between the environment and building the economy, and that Canada is going to be a global leader on climate change is the answer. We can do both, Madam Chair. Our country will still create jobs and a greater economic equality.

Finally, to our neighbours in British Columbia . . .

The Chair: Hon. minister, if I could just interrupt for a moment. We do need to get to the amendment, so if you could kind of direct your comments in that direction, please.

Ms Hoffman: Very happy to.

I listened to many speakers make arguments counter to this – many other speakers previously – and I want to set the record straight. I was asked: where is the proof? Madam Chair, I am speaking directly in response to the questions that were raised from Chestermere-Rocky View.

Finally, to our neighbours in British Columbia our government says this . . .

Mr. Fildebrandt: Point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Chair, I believe the matter under debate is an amendment on reporting metrics for the bill at hand. I'm not sure how this has anything to do with it.

Mr. Mason: It is absolutely outrageous that the Official Opposition is trying to prevent the Deputy Premier from talking about this critical, important announcement that was made today, that they're using points of order that could have been used against any one of their speakers with respect to their comments because their comments were wide ranging. Wide ranging. The fact of the matter is, Madam Chair, that the opposition doesn't want us to talk about the fact that our program is working. We have got not one but two pipelines approved by the federal government, and they don't want us to talk about it. Well, we're going to talk about it, and we're going to talk about it from here to the next election.

Mr. Hanson: Madam Chair, please. Please don't allow the Government House Leader and the minister to highjack the debate that we're in the House to do today on Bill 25. We are in Committee of the Whole for Bill 25. We are not here to make pipeline announcements that are already all over the media. We don't need it here. We all know about it. Thank you very much for the announcement. Can we just get on with the debate on Bill 25, please?

The Chair: Any further speakers to the point of order?

I will allow the hon. minister to continue, but again I would caution. I have given a great deal of latitude this afternoon, but we are speaking on the amendment, and we do want to stay on topic and not get sidetracked.

Please continue.

Debate Continued

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Chair. To be very clear, I'm speaking in opposition to the amendment, and these are some of the reasons why. We, I think, need to acknowledge the fact that we are engaging in metrics, and we are reporting on these in very clear and concise ways as we move forward.

Just like B.C. was a leader in addressing climate change, the rest of the country is catching up to B.C., Madam Chair. B.C. has always argued for strong measures, which we're referring to in this bill. Some argue that these metrics are irrelevant to the amendment; I would argue that they are relevant. B.C. has always argued for strong measures to protect our coast and its waters, and that's going to happen, and it must happen. B.C. has always played a key role in building our national economy as Canada's leader and gateway to the biggest market in the world, that being the Asia Pacific. These B.C. priorities are now shaping all of our priorities.

These are putting in place strong national climate change policy, and we are getting on with creating jobs and economic equality under the terms of that new policy, which demonstrates as clearly as it possibly can be that we don't have to ask working families to choose between protecting the environment and making a good living, Madam Chair. We can do both; we are doing both. Let's work together right across this country to protect our environment, and let's work together, as we are doing today, to show that there will be jobs and prosperity for Albertans and Canadians alike in a greener future.

The Chair: Any other hon. members to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, in regard to the amendment I just wanted to clarify. Again, the amendment was about providing metrics to make sure that Albertans understand what this government is doing. Just to be clear, the insinuation that only the government can balance environment and prosperity is a slap in the face to every single other Albertan that lives, breathes, eats, and sleeps in this province. So be careful about who it is that you're talking about. This is about Albertans. And you're right; this pipeline will bring prosperity to all of Canada. Thank goodness for that.

But if we're actually talking about the amendment and about proof, this amendment helps you. It helps you. It helps you to make sure that what you're doing actually has availability to the average Albertan to know what it is that you are doing. The fact that the federal government has passed, finally, to get a pipeline to tidewater is a gift to absolutely everybody. It is a gift to everybody. Congratulations to all of us.

Having said that, we need to make sure that the policies in this government, in this province are conducive to making sure that that capacity actually has the availability to fill what's going to be going to tidewater in the first place. Everything that is happening in these bills is kneecapping our oil sands and everything else that is actually going to provide capacity for a pipeline that you obviously find is important.

It's completely counterintuitive to this entire pipeline announcement that you just said right now. Completely counterintuitive. Let's keep in mind that in order for the pipeline to be useful, we have to fill it with product. Why don't we talk about and make sure that in what you're trying to actually accomplish with what you're doing in this bill, which is a 100-megatonne cap on emissions, you are telling Albertans why you're making the decisions that you are? That accountability helps you. That is the proof that we are seeking, not the proof that this government is going to try and take credit for, a pipeline that is put through by our federal government, and that is their responsibility.

Every single province in this country will work in lockstep to make sure that national infrastructure is put through on behalf of all Canadians. It is the responsibility not only of this government but every other one, and the federal government ultimately makes that decision.

Now you're telling me that it's great that we have a pipeline, but you're willing to actually stop production to reduce capacity to go into said pipeline. It makes no sense. How about you show us some proof by actually putting through an amendment that holds you accountable and shows Albertans what it is that they're going to be getting from this climate leadership action plan?

Thank you.

The Chair: Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: I'll defer to my colleague.

The Chair: I'll recognize Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise and speak to the amendment. On behalf of all members of the Official Opposition and, I believe, all members of the opposition and all members of this House we are very pleased to see pipelines being built. This is good news for Alberta, and it's good news for Canada. However, I am certainly concerned that we've got two out of three. It appears that political interference around Northern Gateway is completely unfounded. We are still pleased, nonetheless, to see Kinder Morgan and line 3 being approved.

I think it's very important to note that a key part of that was depoliticizing the process. We should all be thankful to Stephen Harper, who put in place the process to make this happen. You see, Madam Chair, it's important that we depoliticize this issue. That's why this amendment is important. The amendment is important so that we can measure things, you see. The members across have been protesting and have been working with the protestors for years. They opposed pipelines for years. Now I'm happy to see that they saw the light on the road to Damascus. But you know who didn't have to be convinced 10 years ago? Prime Minister Stephen Harper, who was on the right side of history in this.

Madam Chair, many of the members across were vehement foes of pipelines. They opposed pipelines. I remember the Minister of Education chanting on the steps of the Legislature, saying: "No new approvals. No new approvals." He led a chant on the steps of the Legislature. Remember that the Member for Calgary-East, before being elected, was a vehement opponent of pipelines. Now, we certainly appreciate it when people change their minds, when people come to a better conclusion along the way. We are pleased to see members across finally supporting pipelines.

This amendment is important so that we can actually measure the progress of what they're proposing to do here. They're proposing a huge and, I believe, damaging limit on oil sands development. Now, if we're going to get something out of that, we want to be able to measure it. When Ronald Reagan was negotiating nuclear arms control treaties with the Soviet Union and, of course, good friends of the NDP members like Castro, he was accused of not trusting the Soviet Union in their arms reduction. President Reagan's motto in dealing with the Soviets was "trust, but verify." Now, I'm not saying that I trust the NDP, but even if I did trust the NDP, I believe we would still want to verify what they're doing. We want to trust but verify what they're doing, which is why we need to actually measure what they're doing.

We're not convinced that any of this will even necessarily lead to pipelines because, at the end of the day, the radicals have not been appeased. Elizabeth May has stated that she is willing to go to jail. The federal Green Party leader has stated that she is willing to go to jail to stop Kinder Morgan from happening. These are people who do not respect the rule of law. These are radicals. These are extremists who do not understand that economic development is necessary for human existence, Madam Chair.

In addition to getting an official clearance for pipelines, I'll believe it when we actually get some oil flowing through those pipelines, Madam Chair, when we actually get the oil moving through them.

Point of Order Referring to a Nonmember

Mr. Mason: I have a point of order, Madam Chair. There's a well-known convention in this place that you should avoid attacks on individuals who aren't present in the House to defend themselves. As someone who was elected as a member of the House of Commons by the people in her constituency, Elizabeth May should not be dragged into the mud in this way.

Mr. Hanson: Madam Chair, that individual has been mentioned in the paper today. It's simply a matter of debate, and it was brought forward by my colleague. It's public knowledge. It's not something new that he's inventing.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Chair, the individual noted is in the papers. I'm merely quoting what the individual herself said. That individual has no ability, thank goodness, to appear in this Chamber in any case. It is a matter of public debate. There's not a personal attack on anyone. It's not questioning anybody. This is quoting what they have said on the public record, what they have said to the media, what they have said in their own Legislature. This is a matter of debate. The Government House Leader is talking nonsense.

The Chair: Any others wishing to speak to the point of order?

I don't believe we have a point of order at this point. However, I would caution members. Things are getting a little heated in here this afternoon. Let's try to be a little more respectful on both sides and keep this dialogue going, and let's move through the work we have to get done.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. Very good points.

Debate Continued

Mr. Fildebrandt: This is important. It is important to measure what the government is attempting to achieve here. A think tank often quoted and loved by members of the NDP, the Fraser Institute, has as their motto If It Matters, Measure It. When we're talking about limiting the economic development of this province, when we're talking about limiting huge economic drivers like our oil sands, we want to be able to at least measure it. If it matters, measure it.

It is important that we do that because if we do buy into the argument of social licence, which I believe is a phony argument to begin with, even if we do buy into that, we're going to need some evidence to tell the radicals what's actually been done. We've got people who are promising to use force, violence, civil disobedience, and breaking the law to stop pipeline construction.

I'm pleased that we finally got legal approval for the pipeline, but I'm not going to believe it until we get oil running through it. And I'm optimistic that we will get oil running through it. But it will be very, very useful for the NDP to be able to tell their radical friends in the eco-movement what they have actually achieved. If they can go there with a measurable and say, "Mike Hudema, look what we've achieved; we have hurt the oil sands by this much," then perhaps – perhaps – he'll be less likely to want to get in the way of pipeline construction. If we can actually measure these things, they'll be able to have more evidence to actually take to some of their more, let's say, enthusiastic protesting friends and tell them that they're hurting the oil sands just fine, that they can allow some pipelines to go through.

Madam Chair, it is important that we can actually measure what we're doing. In absolutely everything we do in this place, especially on very important legislative matters like this, it's important that we set accountability for ourselves. You know, on the budgets, Jim Dinning brought forward legislation in the early 1990s to require regular, quarterly updates so that government would have to be accountable to the Legislature on how they're tracking their budget in between the bookends of the fiscal year. The government before that, the Getty government, was notorious for going wildly off budget and without any accountability measures in between introducing the budget at the beginning of the year and the fiscal report at the end of that year. So they brought in reporting measures, regular quarterly updates, so that the government would have to be held accountable in between those budgets.

We had a second-quarter fiscal update just yesterday, and I could see that the Minister of Finance just hated – hated – standing at that podium delivering the news that they're still not meeting their budgetary targets. Nonetheless, they had to be held accountable because there were reporting requirements. I think that all members of this Legislature agree that it is important that we have quarterly fiscal and economic updates even when the government doesn't like the news in them. We're asking for something similar when we're talking about reporting and accountability requirements for this bill.

I would thank the Member for Calgary-South East for his important contribution to the debate, and I'd encourage members of all parties to vote for the amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, on the amendment from the hon. Member for Calgary-South East I think there are perhaps some points that need to be made regarding the value of measuring and verifying those measurements. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks was mentioning just how important it is, going forward here, that this government has something to talk about and tell its base, its supporters, as to how well it's doing on the greenhouse gas reduction front.

Any time a government – in fact, with an awful lot of the things that take place within this Legislature, with laws that are made, policies that the government makes, there are often cases of unintended consequences. I'm aware, as I think everyone in this House is aware, that oftentimes when a government enacts policies or laws in an attempt to help something, inadvertent harm is done over here that wasn't counted on. It becomes very important, especially in a democracy, where the mission ought to be for the government to always be helpful to all people that they're responsible for, that any time there is a harm inadvertently done someplace in our economy or in our society, the government would back up and say: "Whoa. Okay. Well, we need to make a little change here, a little change in course because we've inadvertently done something that is going to result in damage."

Going forward, this government is going to need to have some sort of evidence, as the hon. member pointed out, that they can take to their base and say: look; look at what we're doing on this front. Now, we have some conflict that currently exists in that although we have an announcement today of these pipelines being done, we also had earlier today announcements from a member of the oil sands advisory group, OSAG. That announcement came at 5:28 p.m. PST, and it said, Trans Mountain Pipeline, Even if Approved, Won't Be Built. That came from Ms Mahon, who's on the OSAG panel.

Here we have actually a member on the government panel who recognizes that having the federal government approve something doesn't necessarily mean that we're going to be getting oil coming out the other end just any time soon. It's a sad thing when the statements made are things like this: "Granting a permit to build this pipeline will not end this issue. It will only be the beginning of a long and drawn out fight. And the real tragedy is that issue keeps us looking backward to the extraction economy." She ends by saying, "The world doesn't need this pipeline."

It sounds to me like the social licence either got revoked or never got picked up down at the registries. It sounds to me like the social licence hasn't occurred, that the radicals in the environmental movement such as this individual sitting on our OSAG still don't consider this government's actions good enough to warrant favourable response to such a vitally important piece of infrastructure. Obviously, this government's, you know, damage done to the Alberta economy in the name of social licence hasn't done the job.

What I'm suggesting, Madam Chair, is that if this government can adopt some measurement and some verification of that measurement, maybe, just maybe the people who are so – I refer to them often as frothing-at-the-mouth radicals. Maybe, just maybe if they see some hard evidence, real evidence that greenhouse gas reductions are taking place on account of specific policies and specific actions that this government is taking with regard to the oil sands, maybe, just maybe people like Ms Mahon will write out a social licence and deliver it to the Premier.

I'm not holding my breath, you know, that that's going to happen, but it seems to me that the government at least needs to make the effort. After all, they're destroying our economy. They're taxing Albertans into the ground. The very least they could do is at least measure some of that effect.

Now, I want to, if I may, take a moment and explain a little bit about the value of just what we're talking about when we say measurement and verification. Historically, when you're talking about the implementation of any kind of energy efficiency project, it's been carried out by project owners to either replace or upgrade equipment or plants and systems and things like this. Of course, dollars and cents always matter. They matter to everyone. So it is very, very important that any time these kinds of programs are put in place, the savings from the project have to be regarded as an added benefit, and the savings versus the amount of energy reduced, the savings in money versus the amount of energy consumption reduced or pollution reduced needs to be quantified because effectively what you do when you do that is that you justify the expense. It becomes a justifiable expense or perhaps not. Maybe it's too expensive.

In the world of business, anyway, it's always very important to weigh the impact with the cost of achieving that impact. The same thing goes for a provincial economy. We have an impact befalling this economy, and it is monstrous. It's huge, a great impact on this economy. We have an enormous impact on the current leaseholders up in the oil sands, who are going to have to try to squeeze into that 32-megatonne window that remains. We have an enormous impact from this government's action on the upgrading and partial upgrading that we want to see take place in this province.

All of these are huge impacts, yet repeatedly this government has rejected calls for measuring the effect of the impact to deliver the promises this government is making, not only promises to Albertans, but the Premier and the ministers in this government have been making promises to the world about the impact that their policies are going to have on the world's greenhouse gas situation. So a lot of press around the world has been, you know, focused in on what our Premier and the ministers have been claiming, yet when asked to verify that, to measure that so you can verify that, this government repeatedly shoots those proposals down. That really harms credibility. It harms credibility not only here in this province amongst the people of Alberta; this harms our credibility globally because now this government isn't going to have anything to prove that all of these measures they're putting upon Albertans and upon our economy actually result in what they claim it's going to result in.

When the climate leadership plan was first rolled out, this government stood in this House and stood before the people of Alberta and said: we're taking a leadership role; we're going to show the world how it's done. Except what wasn't said was: but we're not going to measure it so we can prove it to anybody. That's pretty silly. Here we have a perfectly good amendment coming forward from the hon. Member for Calgary-South East to put in place a simple little measurement process to prove, in fact, that the reductions are taking place and in such a way that we can quantify the cost per tonne of the reduction.

Now, if you're going to provide leadership to anybody in the world, one of the marks of leadership is that you can turn around and see people following you. If you claim to be a leader in something, you turn around and there's nobody there, you're not really a leader in anything at all. It's just talk. If this government is really serious about providing leadership to the world – and let's be really frank about this. Alberta is a resource giant because of the blessings we have beneath our feet. We have some of the most abundant resources in coal, in oil, in natural gas, and on top, the surface, in agriculture, in forestry, and our greatest resource of all, the precious people of Alberta. We have this abundant resource beneath us.

We're a tiny, little population, but Alberta: right from the very beginning of our province we have always punched above our weight. It's in our blood in this province. We're a strong, innovative, creative, compassionate bunch of people. We love to work together.

I remember in the '70s when our oil and gas people were travelling all over the world because the world wanted the kind of drilling technology that we had developed here. Our experts from oil and gas resource development were travelling all over the world. When I started travelling all over the world – and I was not involved in oil and gas – people in the Middle East knew where Alberta was and they knew what Alberta was. They knew. "Oh, you guys. Don't they call you blue-eyed Arabs?" Yes, they did. We were and are a resource giant in this world. We led. We turned around and you could see nations following our lead in resource development.

Well, this government made a gigantic claim, spent a bunch of money, flew to France. They spent a bunch more money, flew to Marrakesh, claiming to be a leader, claiming to have figured out how to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Lots of claims were made, but without measurement and verification, those are empty claims, unprovable claims, claims that – well, you know, at some point you've got to put your money where your mouth is. So if this government really, really believes that they have the answer and that the measures they're putting in place and the pain they are causing our economy are really going to bring greenhouse gas emissions down to the level that they claim, then there shouldn't be a problem measuring it.

But what happens now, when you have amendments like this coming forward that are asking for simple measurement and verification metrics to be put in place to prove it and the government then votes it down? What kind of message does that send to Albertans and to the world? "Oh, well, what are you hiding? What are you afraid of? Why don't you want these measurements to take place?" "Is this just, you know, not true? Are these claims just fiction? Is this government over there in Alberta putting its people through all of that pain for no real greenhouse gas reductions?" Those are the questions that are going to be asked.

There are going to be more conferences like COP21 and 22. There are going to be lots more. What the world is looking for are some real answers to pollution, not just pretend answers, not just a bunch of academics sitting around in a circle, drawing things out on paper. The world wants boots-on-the-ground, concrete proof that this may work or that may work or this is working or that is working. That's what the world is wanting; they're wanting real proof.

This government has made a whole lot of claims, they brought a whole lot of policies in place, they brought a whole lot of pain to our oil and gas sector, to our electricity sector, and they trot out different corporations, saying: well, they're approving of what we're doing. Well, yeah. Take a look at their share price. You bet they approve of it. Some of them are completely exempt; it's just going to wash right through.

Ultimately, it will be the moms and dads of Alberta that pay every form of taxation in this province. It ultimately comes back to that taxpayer, and there's only one. Whether it be in our electricity sector, oil and gas sector, everything a government does in the form of taxation comes back to the moms and dads and the young people trying to eke out a living in this province. When you're going to put a population through that much grief in the name of reducing greenhouse gas emissions, I believe the government has a moral obligation to actually prove it – to actually prove it – and this government has repeatedly voted down mechanisms to prove it. They're going to stand up and say: well, those pipelines prove it. No, they don't. They don't prove anything at all regarding this government's policies and work. The NEB was created to be nonpolitical. The NEB was created for the very reason of protecting transprovincial pipeline approvals, to remove them from the political process because it was just getting mucked up. Unfortunately, we're starting to see the current federal government start to meddle with it again.

We have the same thing happening in this province with our electricity sector. AESO was originally developed to be nonpolitical, to get the politics out of critical infrastructure, to get it based on what people actually do need. Unfortunately, we saw political meddling in that process even before this government came to power. We saw massive transmission line infrastructure built, and we're still paying for it. It wasn't all needed, but we got it anyhow. Now this government is making things even worse, reaching deeply within the mechanism of AESO and completely gutting its ability to act independently, the same as with the Balancing Pool.

Here we have now Bill 25 capping emissions, capping development. The government is making claims that this is somehow going to lead to greenhouse gas emissions reductions. Here's a wonderful amendment coming along allowing the government the opportunity to prove – to prove – to Albertans and the world that what they're doing will work. You know, the beauty of M and V and the reason why measurement and verification are used in private industry so much – in some projects we measure down to really small, not macro but at the micro levels – is because as we go forward with those measurements and we start getting the data back, we can make adjustments to the processes to maximize, to optimize.

Now, optimization is absolutely critical. I will say that in this particular situation, where we're talking about the entire oil sands development, to optimize the policies is going to require measurement and verification of those results. Otherwise, you start with a policy at the front end, you make the stupid presumption that it's got to be right exactly like the first iteration, and we just start going forward with our eyes closed. Not having measurement and verification is driving with your eyes closed, with no speedometer, no oil pressure gauge, nothing, nothing to tell you the condition of the vehicle or the direction you're going, to know that it's even right. Simple measurement and verification are your eyes and your ears as you go forward with a project. You can make little tweaks as you're going along, and you get it right. Optimization is always the goal, to optimize whatever that program might be.

Measurement and verification come in as an enormous economic benefit, especially if what you're measuring has some value to it. When we're talking about things like carbon credits, things like allocations, those things have value to them. Measuring and verifying the results . . .

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Madam Chair. I just want to take a few moments to make a few comments with respect to this amendment. It is clear that reporting on the outcomes of this policy or any other policy is important. The Minister of Environment and Parks has made it clear that this information has already been gathered and is publicly available, so in that particular case I think this is a little bit unnecessary.

Now, the hon. member has said, you know, that the proof is not in the pipelines, but on a macro level. Madam Chair, I think that the hon. member is not right. The purpose of a number of steps this government is taking with respect to oil sands is to create political conditions. Some have called it social licence. I think that's a very misinterpreted and misunderstood term. Social licence assumes that you're going to get everybody to agree that your pipeline is a good thing.

You know, we've heard from the hon. Member for Brooks . . .

Mr. Fildebrandt: Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Mason: Strathmore-Brooks. Thank you. A beautiful part of the country.

. . . that, you know, there are all these radicals and extremists and all of these protesters and everything. There are a significant number of people in this country, in Alberta, but also a greater number perhaps in the province of British Columbia who have some real concerns.

Madam Chair, the intention of the policies that we have implemented with respect to the oils sands are in order to create the political conditions for the approval of the pipelines, which we've seen today. It doesn't mean that every environmental organization or every environmentalist or every First Nation or every citizen is going to become convinced of the value and the need for pipelines for Alberta. That was never the intention. What it does do is create the political conditions for other governments – the federal government and other provincial governments – to say yes.

You know, the hon. member talks about the NEB. Well, the fact of the matter is that these pipelines already received conditional approval some time ago from the national regulatory bodies. What we saw today was a final political decision by the government of Canada to approve these pipelines. I just want to quote the Prime Minister this afternoon, Madam Chair, with respect to this matter. He said just today: let me say this definitively; we could not have approved this project without the leadership of Premier Notley and Alberta's climate leadership plan.

Hon. members are talking about how we're constraining growth in the oil sands and so on. Actually, putting upset limits on it that will allow saving about a 50 per cent increase over current levels has allowed for the growth of the oil sands. It's contrary to what the members opposite are suggesting. What it actually does is create conditions where we can go forward and continue to grow the oil sands and that we can get infrastructure to get those products to tidewater in place, and that's what we have done.

You know, the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks wants to give credit to former Prime Minister Harper. Madam Chair, I almost choked when he said that because what we had seen under the former Conservative government, of which their leader was a member, and under the former government of Alberta was essentially a policy of pretending that there were no real issues with respect to development of the oil sands. Although they would acknowledge climate change and even admit that it was caused by human economic activity, they in effect wanted to just close their eyes and hope that the issue would really go away.

I remember when I believe it was the Stelmach government decided they were going to spend $3 million in New York in the American market to try and persuade Americans that everything was fine. But, of course, Americans have access to the data that the hon. member says that we need to pass this amendment. The Americans had access because that data was available.

They weren't fooled. They're not fools, Madam Chair, and this whole idea that there were no problems and no changes in policy that had to be addressed was in fact what led to 10 years of systematic failure in the siting of new infrastructure, which led eventually to a situation where the oil sands themselves were going to stagnate. Now, we've lifted those restrictions by accepting a voluntary cap that will allow a substantial expansion in the oil sands. Putting in force other measures as well has created room for the oil sands to continue to be the engine of economic activity of this province and of this country. When the price of oil recovers – and we believe it will – there's going to be renewed activity in the oil sands because they are going to have additional capacity that they can take advantage of to get their products to market.

What I want to say to all the members opposite is that we've seen proof today that the policies of the Alberta government with respect to that industry are working, that it is focused very much on the key economic driver of this province, and whatever individual members on this side or the other side may have had to say about it in the past is immaterial. The opposition keeps going back to that. The fact of the matter is that the government will be judged not by what individual members said when they were much younger and not involved in politics but by what the government actually does and what it actually accomplishes. They can try as they might to discredit individuals on this side of the House, but the fact of the matter remains that the policy has been a solid policy that has allowed for political conditions to allow continued expansion in that key driver of our economy, that key creator of jobs and at the same time acting responsibly with respect to the very real threat faced by this planet by human-caused climate change.

The last point that I would like to make is that the opposition has vehemently objected to being characterized as climate change deniers. Fine. I take them at their word that they believe that climate change is real and that it is caused by human activity. But the fact of the matter is that they have no proposal to deal with it. If, in fact, climate change is going to bring about major changes to the planet that will render significant portions of it uninhabitable in our children's and grandchildren's lives, then that is a most serious matter, and any party that wants to be taken seriously for government must address this very fundamental question. It's fine to say, "We believe in climate change," but you can't say, "I believe in climate change, and I understand the impact it's going to have on future generations on this Earth, but I don't want to do anything about it."

I think we've adopted a prudent course that combines responsible environmental stewardship with sound economic growth for the province, and when the price of oil begins to rise, as I believe it already has, I think we're going to see renewed economic activity and the creation of jobs that we all want to see, that communities that have been hard hit by unemployment are going to recover, and people are going to be able to make a solid contribution to their community, to their province, to their family, and hold their head high because this province is once again, Madam Chair, going to be the economic leader of this country. We have taken the first critical step today.

Thank you.

The Chair: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

5:00

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'd just like to stand up again in support of this amendment because it is all about accountability and transparency, which I believe all parties actually campaigned on in this last election.

I'm really starting to understand why this government doesn't want to wait for the oil sands advisory group's report in February, which we tried to push forward in an amendment earlier to have this hoisted till spring.

I just want to read you a little bit here. It says:

Having been arrested more than 20 times over the course of her career, her work day is equally likely to include an announcement next to [Alberta's Premier] as a stint in jail for blocking a tar sands pipeline . . .

She has no doubt her future will include many more arrests as a "raging granny" and environmentalist, she laughed . . .

The latter occurred before her detention on Burnaby Mountain, B.C. during the 2014 protests against Kinder Morgan's controversial Trans Mountain pipeline expansion designed to bring Alberta bitumen to Vancouver harbour. Almost exactly a year later, [she] was on-stage next to [Alberta's Premier] to announce a climate plan supported by the CEO's of Big Oil and Greenpeace Canada.

No, I'm not talking about a current government MLA. I'm talking about OSAG member Karen Mahon. That's probably why they don't want to wait for this report to come through. You know, the Premier and the NDP might publicly support pipelines, but hiring all of these known anti-oil operatives with Alberta taxpayer money sends a very, very clear message to Albertans, and we will stand by that.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to speak also in support of this amendment about accountability.

When I look at what's happening here and some of the conversations we're having today, I see that, you know, this government has a group of friends and a group of appointees to their energy advisory group, OSAG. They have their hand-picked lawyers. They have their own advisers and authors of the environment minister's stone cold science, one of the wonderful favourite terms that I love to hear, stone cold science. I dare say many of their own MLAs and the rest of the people who perhaps give a rat's nether region about social licence will work tirelessly, endlessly and will chain themselves to trees in defiance of the rule of law and ensure that the celebration, gloating, and claims of single-handed success of a federal pipeline approval will be very short lived. That's why the accountability here is so important.

As pointed out, the Prime Minister once said that the government grants permits but only communities grant consent. As noted by the now famous Ms Mahon, who's a member of the OSAG group, there will be mass protests, there will be lawsuits, Madam Chair. So where is this approval going? Is this actually going to get us to tidewater? Is this going to get Alberta products and oil to tidewater? Let me point out that a permit was issued approving Enbridge's Northern Gateway pipeline over two years ago – this is, again, by claims from Ms Mahon – and no shovel has ever broken ground.

You know what, Madam Chair? The rule of law means nothing. Social licence means nothing to the people who will oppose this in defiance of what's best for Canada and best for Alberta. Your own hand-picked champions plan to openly defy the laws of this land, thumb their noses at democratically elected legislators like yourselves, and tell Alberta where to go with their social licence. Mark my words and make no mistake that these are the vehement, frothing naysayers that even you and your brethren of the Leap Manifesto are ill equipped to convince that access to tidewater for Alberta oil or gas is good for Alberta, good for British Columbia, or good for Canada. It's just not going to happen with the attitude we see from the people that are pushing that agenda.

Their claim is that a hundred people were already arrested: grandmothers, academics, priests, students, and First Nation leaders. Line them up. They're all your friends. Maybe you need to get on the phone and tell them: there's a protest coming; you might want to be there; get the placards out. You might even remind some of your members: get your placards out, guys; this is placard season.

There are already seven legal challenges to the pipeline before the courts, and more are predicted. Wow. Gee. I think there are some lawyers in B.C. that are pretty good on this stuff, aren't there? Some hand-picked lawyers. I'll bet you that the same law firm that you've selected to help you with the PPAs is going to be really busy in British Columbia making more millions of dollars on the backs of taxpayers, Madam Chair.

Oh, by the way, Canadian law requires the protection of endangered species and restoration of their habitat. Oh, we're going to use that. We're going to chain ourselves to trees to do that. But nobody thinks about whether it's appropriate to apply the same rule to thousands of tankers approaching our east coast and heading up the St. Lawrence with foreign unethical oil on it, Madam Chair. Wow. Let's stop that Alberta oil from getting to market.

Granting a permit to build this pipeline will not end this issue. It will only be the beginning of a long and drawn out fight.

Oh, Ms Mahon again. Wow. She seems to be popping up here thanks to the friends of this government, Madam Chair, from coast to coast.

She also says:

And the real tragedy is that issue keeps us looking backward . . .

Backward. Oh, sounds like Alberta.

. . . to the extraction economy that was . . .

Oh, I guess that means that we're dead here in Alberta. The economy is done, isn't it?

. . . instead of forward, to the renewable energy economy that is forming.

That is going to create such vibrancy in the Alberta economy and create jobs out in those coal mining towns and put all those oil and gas workers back to work. Oh, no. Actually, they're going to be putting up solar panels and wind farms, aren't they? Oh, yeah. We're going to be farming wind from now on, and that's going to give us lots of business, except that all the farmers are going to lose their oil and gas jobs, and we're going to replace that with a new economy, so the smaller farms are going to be gone.

This, my friends, is the economy of this government – this Minister of Environment and Parks, this Energy minister, this Premier – and fully consistent with what we have now come to know and loathe, the NDP world view, Madam Chair, that is killing the province that I love. Support this amendment, support accountability, and – you know what? – be honest with yourselves, and make sure that what you're saying and what you're gloating on today are not words that you will eat tomorrow.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. This government is pushing off public annual reporting on emissions. This is absolutely disappointing, and it's quite incredible that this government would not want annual reporting from oil companies on their emissions to be made public. I have no doubt that the government side has really warmed up to those seats over there, enjoying life in the public service, with that big salary, and don't consider themselves members of the public. It's really unfortunate because it's the public that should really appreciate this. It's when you're in the public and you're not in the government that this is the kind of information that you want.

If I might just abbreviate this, you are saying that you don't want the government to publicly make reports that state the reduction in upgrading emissions and greenhouse emissions; that we do not want to release the information that estimates the amount of greenhouse emissions that would be produced by these oil sands sites; that you do not want this information to be released that reflects the funding that the government, your tax money, is paying in regard to research and development to reduce the emissions and greenhouse emissions, gas emissions. Finally, you're saying that you don't want the public to know the amount of greenhouse gas emissions for each type of greenhouse gas emission that is excluded under the act. I find this really incredible because government bodies have a duty to provide frequent and accurate reports to citizens because it's their money, it's their livelihoods, it's their province.

You know, typically bad data isn't detected until it's too late. Nothing is more frustrating and more time consuming and labour intensive than having to start from scratch after realizing that you can't glean any useful insights from the information that has been provided. That's why it's important that our government is transparent and accountable. One example of bad data are the power agreements. If only you'd thought to look at all of the aspects of the contracts, then perhaps Albertans wouldn't be on the hook for billions, like a Wynne-led Ontario. It's astounding that this government, made up of people who criticized and picketed pipelines, oil sands, would not want annual reporting from oil companies to be made public. It is astounding.

5:10

You know, you spent the first eight months of your governance destroying confidence in our oil sands development. How do I know this? Because Saskatchewan is currently absorbing a lot of investment that would have continued here in Alberta; hence, my friends that are moving to Saskatchewan. Why did they leave? That's what happens when you do a royalty review. What you don't recognize is that on the international investment charts these international oil companies simply see this jurisdiction as imperilled; thus, they move their attention away from Alberta. Fortunately, a Brad Wall led Saskatchewan kept their investments here in Canada.

Only after eight months of looking at the facts and understanding how important natural resource development is to the Canadian economy did you truly recognize: oh; maybe we should take the Wildrose stance and support our industries. I congratulate this government for demonstrating that they can indeed learn, that they can indeed be educated. You have gone from picketing this Legislature, from standing in these very same pews above us and getting escorted out, to supporting oil. This is fantastic. Eight months it took for you to listen to the Wildrose and accept our stance.

Measures are important. It is where we use this evidence to help us with our decision-making. When we give pharmaceuticals as an example, we use the science of trial and error, measuring the reactions of patients when they're treated with various drugs. Here we want the public to be given the opportunity to measure the impact and the results of incentives and initiatives that are supposed to help clean our air. These measures can be used to identify good initiatives and technologies that achieve their objectives of reducing emissions and for us to recognize those that have not worked. It's important to measure these things as they will receive other benefits of claiming to achieve these environmental goals. Because what if they're wrong? What if some of this information that these oil companies give us on their initiatives is wrong? We need to measure these things.

Transparency and accountability are Wildrose staples. These are our core values. I thought, perhaps, that a New Democrat government would be along the same path, but the rejection of this amendment is the epitome of your lack of transparency and accountability. It truly is. Not only this, but I can't help but wonder what will happen in a couple of years from now should there be a new government in place. The former environmentalist picketers turned politicians turned back to Joe Public will look back at some of their own decisions and go: oops; we messed that one up, didn't we? I'm asking this government to look back to your roots, to remember where you came from, and to ensure that government and industry are transparent and accountable because you're in the position to support this. You have to recognize that it might benefit you in the future when you're not sitting in that seat any longer.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think we have to say that it is a great day for Alberta to have two pipelines approved today. I think that's a great day for Alberta.

What's interesting is that the Prime Minister approved Enbridge line 3, which will allow western oil producers to ship up to 760,000 barrels of oil per day from Alberta to the U.S. Midwest, not the coast but to the Midwest. It's still good. We're getting our oil to market. That's great. That doubles the capacity of the existing line. This is already an existing line. It's not a new pipeline. It's an existing line. It goes to the U.S., not to the coast. That existing line had pressure restrictions for safety reasons. Now, it's also important to note that Canada's National Energy Board recommended this in April, recommended that the government approve this line 3 replacement project, and of course there were some conditions involved. So this was approved by the National Energy Board last April.

Now, the Trans Mountain expansion – again, it's an expansion of an existing line – would triple the capacity of an existing pipeline network that links Edmonton into the Vancouver regions and that would ship roughly 890,000 barrels of crude oil and petroleum per day. The NEB recommended that project for approval in May – I believe it was around the middle of May, May 17 or something like that – along with, again, some environmental, financial, and technical conditions.

Now, I do want to point out that this government brought in their first Climate Leadership Implementation Act, which is Bill 20, on May 24 of this year. So the NEB had already approved both of these before the government even started on their climate leadership plan. That's when they brought their bills in. I think that's kind of an interesting fact.

Now, another interesting fact is that the federal government approved the Northern Gateway pipeline back – let me see here – in 2014. So the Northern Gateway pipeline was already approved by the government, but of course two years later the federal government has now not approved it. I think these are some interesting facts on pipelines. Of course, it seems like the present Alberta government want to pat themselves on the back for this, but this is similar to getting elected on third base and then claiming that they hit a triple. That's not the case, Madam Chair.

The NEB does a lot of good work to approve pipelines, and there are people that stand in the way. There are governments that stand in the way. These people are like the people that this government appointed to the OSAG panel, who are still threatening to prevent the just-approved pipelines. Does that make any sense to Albertans, that the same people that this government appointed to a panel are protesting pipelines, pipelines that have just been approved? I don't think that makes any sense at all, Madam Chair.

Now, I do want to read one other thing here, too, that I thought was kind of interesting.

In October the International Energy Agency, the IEA, released a review showing that 16 countries around the world are making significant progress towards developing legal and regulatory frameworks. Alberta is the only jurisdiction and the first one in Canada to move forward with legislative amendments, so while others are talking about tackling climate change, we are acting.

Anybody have any idea where that came from? I think we've heard that a lot: "while others are talking about tackling climate change, we are acting." That sounds like something that this NDP government has been saying.

I'll go on to read the next paragraph here.

CCS is a new technology, and quite simply it is a game-changing technology in the fight to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

Well, that probably should be your first indication of where that first quote came from. It came from the previous government on November 3, 2010. They were tackling climate change with new CCS technology, "game-changing technology in the fight to reduce greenhouse gas emissions."

Madam Chair, we've heard this before. This government wants to pat itself on the back for something that it had nothing to do with. The previous government didn't do anything with what they tried. They tackled climate change, too, and six years later we got some pipelines.

5:20

The Government House Leader got up and spoke here just a little bit ago. He talked about the previous government's closed eyes, that they just closed their eyes to environmental problems. Well, reading Hansard from 2010, they had it all under control, just like this government claims to have it under control.

He also said something about lifting restrictions by putting in a cap. That doesn't even make sense. I think a cap is a restriction.

He also talked about discrediting individuals for things that they did and said when they were young, you know, holding up signs that said: no more dirty oil. How about these individuals that were just appointed to a panel by this very government to represent Albertans while they're protesting pipelines that are getting approved now? This government wants to take credit for pipeline approval when they're hiring people that protest pipelines. Does that make any sense? I guess this is the new reality of common sense in Alberta with the NDP government.

Now, he also said that the Wildrose has no plan for climate change. That's not true, simply not true. If they go back to the last election campaign, they can see our plan for climate change. In fact, it had some similar things as far as using natural gas. The government is suggesting that we didn't have a plan for reducing carbon emissions, but some of the plan is the same. So how could we not have a plan when parts of our plan are similar to your plan?

Another thing that the Government House Leader talked about: sound economic growth. His idea of sound economic growth was that the oil prices are going to go up. They're going to recover, so it's all good. We hear this government talking about this roller coaster, that we've got to get off this roller coaster where we depend on the price of oil. But what did he say? Sound economic growth depending on oil prices. They're coming up, so everything is going to be fine. It doesn't sound very promising to me as far as a government that's suggesting that they get off the oil roller coaster.

Now, we know, of course, that the government has cancelled the opportunity to have the Northern Gateway pipeline. I would like to hear what this government is saying about that. We have a Prime Minister that just overrode an arm's-length review process, the NEB, overrode the previous Prime Minister's approving it, but then he wants to do a victory lap, too, on approving two pipelines that already exist. He's the same one that put the ban on the Northern tanker traffic.

This government over and over again is doing things contrary to what they've said in the past. The NDP spent its days in opposition bashing the previous PC government regarding this very thing about transparency, about reporting. They bashed the oil sands for their emissions not being recorded properly, and now somehow today their suggestion is: "Nah, we don't need these reports. That's all fine. The studies are already being done; therefore, we'll just leave it." This is the exact same stuff that the members of this government that were previously in opposition railed on the previous government about over and over. But today it's all different now: "This is different. We don't have to report. Why would we have to report?"

Well, Madam Chair, I think it only makes sense that this government should report to the people of Alberta how their legislation is going to affect emission reductions, emissions reporting, emissions, period. I still don't understand what would be wrong with reporting. What would be wrong with "as soon as practicable after December 31 each year, prepare and make publicly available an annual report"? Annual reports are just a common way of doing business, and it should be a common way of doing business in government. Any government that wants to be open and transparent should not fear an annual report.

The suggestion is that the report contain "the reduction, expressed in megatonnes, from the previous calendar year in upgrading emissions and greenhouse gas emissions." Now, upgrading emissions fall under a separate cap along with cogeneration emissions. So why wouldn't it be appropriate to calculate and report the reduction of emissions? That's what this is all about. I mean, if this is about emissions, if this is climate leadership and climate leadership is reducing emissions to protect our environment, then why wouldn't we want to report the reduction, the amount?

Now, it also goes on to say to report the greenhouse gas emissions "that will be produced in the first year of commercial operation by oil sands sites approved under the Oil Sands Conservation Act in the year for which the annual report is made." Again, Madam Chair, this only makes sense. It's reporting greenhouse gas emissions. This is what this is all about, I presume, the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act. Emissions from oil sands: that's what it's about. Why can't we have a report on the emissions from oil sands if we're talking about the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act? It doesn't stand to reason.

It goes on to say, "the amount of funding provided by the Government of Alberta for research or developments to reduce upgrading emissions and greenhouse gas emissions for the year for which the annual report is made." Taxpayers' money. The government of Alberta doesn't spend their money; they spend taxpayers' money. They spend our money. They spend Albertans' money. That's what the government of Alberta spends. It's not the government of Alberta's money. There's only one place they get their money from, and that's from us. So why would there be a problem with providing the funding amount that the government gives for research or developments to reduce upgrading emissions? I mean, it'd be a pretty simple cost analysis. We find out how much emissions have been reduced, we find out how much money the government of Alberta has put into it, and then we have an idea of what the cost is for reducing emissions. It doesn't seem like much to ask.

Now, of course, the minister suggested that all this testing and reporting is happening, but I don't believe that Environment Canada is doing reports on the amount of funding provided by the government of Alberta for research developments. I would presume that none of the other environmental organizations that are involved with the testing and reporting do that. I don't think that would make sense if they're reporting and doing the analysis. Why would this be a problem, then? This is obviously something that's not happening, but it should be happening.

I think that when we provide people with information, they can make informed decisions. It's pretty easy to go out into a crowd and say, "Wouldn't you like us to do something for the environment?" Everybody says: "Yes, of course, we want you to do something for the environment. We're all concerned about the environment." All Albertans are concerned about the environment. But then if you said, "Oh, we're going to pump millions of taxpayer dollars into something, and we might not get any results," they might think: "Oh, hmm, second thoughts. Why don't you come back with something that works?" That's what I would do. I would want to have something for my money. When I go to buy something, I like to get something. I like to get something when I buy something. So I would think that Albertans would love to have this information.

Now, going on here, it talks about the report on "greenhouse gas emissions for each type of greenhouse gas emission excluded under section 2(2) for the year for which the annual report is made." Again, we get into these exclusions from the 100-megatonne cap, so this is asking for an annual report to include these emissions from all these different things. Again, Madam Chair, I don't know that Environment Canada and these other organizations that are doing the reporting take that into consideration.

The Chair: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak to this amendment. As I think has been pointed out quite effectively by many of my colleagues throughout the evening, it's important to make sure that the government, when bringing forward legislation of this type, can make sure there's a mechanism within that legislation to ensure that the government is accountable to Albertans. I can't think of anybody who would find that unreasonable except, possibly, unfortunately, the government members through their indication of how they intend to vote on this amendment.

We have a bill, Bill 25, which experts are predicting could cost our economy from $153.41 billion to $254.74 billion, somewhere in there. Now, I don't know about you, Madam Chair, but I think that's an astronomical amount. The government is quite excited about some pipeline announcements today, and I agree with them on that, but even if every pipeline that we hope for in our province right now was approved, the expected bump to the Canadian economy would be about $30 billion. Compare that to upwards of $254 billion that we're going to lose from this bill if it passes this House.

The hon. member has brought forward this amendment, which reads, "Commencing one year after the coming into force of this Act, the Minister shall, as soon as practicable after December 31 each year, prepare and make publicly available an annual report, which contains," and then it goes on to describe some metrics of measurement and some measurements that would make the government have to be able to report to the people of Alberta the impact of this legislation that they brought forward, which is going to cost $254 billion, possibly, to our economy.

If we're going to say that Albertans want to invest that much in continued job loss, continued negative impacts on their business, continued negative impacts on the energy industry – now, I would argue to you, Madam Chair, that they don't want to do that. If we are to take at face value the government's argument that Albertans as a whole want to lose $254 billion on their economy, I would say that at the very least Albertans would be reasonable to say to their government, "We want you to be able to show us the results of the legislation that you brought forward that has caused us so much grief, has caused so much trouble for our economy," to show that at least that investment that Albertans are going to make, not the hon. members across the way – Albertans, everyday Albertans are going to make that investment – that the results have had a meaningful impact.

I would submit to you, Madam Chair: why would the government be concerned about a simple amendment to make sure that they are accountable for the decisions they make? If this legislation is going to have such a positive impact – to be fair, no government member has really stood up to show what the positive impact of Bill 25 will be. Assuming that they're bringing it forward because they think there will be a positive impact, if there's going to be such a positive impact from this legislation, you would think the government would want to have some sort of accountability and measurement and mechanism to be able to report to the people of Alberta the success that they've had with this bill.

Now, most people in the communities that I represent have absolutely zero trust in this current government. You would drive a long way through Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre before you could find an NDP voter, and you would drive even further before you would find somebody that trusted this government, particularly now, after they've been in power for two years. That's fair, but there are other places in this province where they might have trusted this government. They obviously trusted them enough to elect them and give them a chance to govern. I would submit to you, Madam Chair, that for those people at the very least this government has the responsibility to report back to them on the results that they're having with their legislation.

By not passing this amendment, it looks to me like the government is concerned about what may be reported in a year, and that shows a tremendous lack of confidence in Bill 25, the legislation that they're bringing forward and asking members to vote on despite clear evidence that it will continue to cause more hard-working Albertans to lose their jobs, more families to not be able to make mortgage payments, less vacations for children and their families, less positive stuff and cause negative things to our economy. That must be it. That's the only thing that would make any sense to me, Madam Chair. They don't want the report to come forward, an annual report to hold them accountable, because they know that Bill 25 obviously won't accomplish what they think it will accomplish, or at least they're concerned that Bill 25 won't accomplish what they think it will accomplish. Otherwise, they would be excited to pass this amendment and make sure that there are accountability measures put in place to show the positive and the great results for Albertans that this piece of legislation is going to have.

But over and over we're hearing from government members that they will not support this amendment, so the only logical conclusion, I would say, Madam Chair, is that the government is not that confident in Bill 25, and given the estimates of upwards of $254 billion lost in our economy, I've got to say that I don't think I'd be too confident either if I was a government member across the way.

This is why the hon. member brought forward this amendment. I think this is why I certainly am going to support this amendment. I believe all of my colleagues in every opposition party will support this amendment. I think it's a great amendment. I thank the hon. member for bringing it forward, and I would encourage members opposite to seriously consider why they would want to vote against a measure that simply requires them to report to Albertans the progress that they've made with this legislation and the results that this legislation has brought forth.

I can't think of any other business setting where you would make decisions that could cost upwards of $254 billion and require anybody to make that level of investment and not put in some sort of measure to make sure that the investment is working, some sort of measure to make sure that you are aware if you need to make adjustments to the decisions that you're making. Certainly, if I was a government member and I thought that legislation was going to have a great, drastic, and positive impact on the people that I serve – and let's be clear, Madam Chair, that they serve the people of Alberta; it's a privilege – I would excitedly vote for this and would excitedly want to put in place something that would show the people of Alberta the great accomplishments of the legislation.

I think for myself – and I know, certainly, that the people I represent and, I suspect, the majority of Albertans, Madam Chair, are asking themselves why the government would not vote for something as simple as this. The fact is that it's pretty clear that they're bringing forward legislation that's going to cost Albertans about $254 billion, and the logical thing is that, of course, you would not want to vote for this if you're the government because you are not proud of what's going to happen and you're scared of what the results of that annual report would be.

So I highly encourage all of the members of the Assembly to vote for this simple accountability measure, which does nothing in any way to negatively impact the legislation the government has brought forward.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:42 p.m.]

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: We are back on the main bill.

Mr. Mason: Madam Chair, I would move that the committee rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 25. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, say no. So ordered.

Mr. Mason: I move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 29, 2016

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 27 Renewable Electricity Act

The Deputy Chair: We are currently on amendment A2. Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered in respect to this bill? Seeing the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much. I will flip here through my notes to find my briefing notes prepared by my crack staff. One of the concerns I have about section 20, as the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake had very adeptly pointed out, is that it talks about the governance and control of the bill and – Madam Chair, I'm going to return to my spot, find my notes, and if there's someone else who would like to speak, I will allow them to do that rather than just rambling on and putting disinfo into Hansard.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? Seeing the hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Okay. Thank you. I believe that A2 was the motion to strike 20(b). Is that correct? Yes. Okay.

Our government has committed to growing renewable energy in Alberta to secure the investment, economic development, and job-creation benefits that renewable energy offers. We are pursuing this in part through renewable electric programs that will promote large-scale renewable electricity generation through fair and transparent competitive processes. When considering this amendment to strike a section, we need to be very clear what this provision does and what it does not do.

With the current provisions ISO still has a legislative duty to ensure that the administration of the auction and contracting processes of the renewable electricity program are fair, efficient, and openly competitive. This provision does not absolve the ISO from its responsibility to provide for the safe, reliable, and economic operation of the interconnected electric system. The ISO continues to operate under its duty in this regard. In fact, this responsibility is reinforced by section 4 of this bill. Section 4 makes clear that the ISO will develop proposed renewable electricity programs that employ fair and transparent competitive processes and do not jeopardize the safe, reliable, and economic operation of the electricity system. In other words, the bill does not relinquish the ISO's duty to act under these principles of fairness nor to provide for the safe, reliable, and economic operation of our system. On the contrary, if you read the bill, not just section 20 in isolation, you will see that we are reconfirming this duty with respect to the ISO's new role of designing renewable electricity programs.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Those are precisely the aspects of this section which I think are so vital for us to retain. While I appreciate the Minister of Energy assuring us that safe, reliable, and economic performance of the electrical system is maintained in other areas of the bill, I'm not sure I see it quite the same way.

Obviously, we want our electricity system to be reliable. We obviously, I would hope, would like it to run economically. But above all else it's important that it is safe. So for a bill to be striking the provision that requires renewable production to be anything other than "safe, reliable and economic" strikes me as not just odd but, frankly, dangerous. It seems like, without question, renewable electricity is getting special treatment, preferential and positive treatment in a way that other forms of electricity do not.

Although, again, I suppose we have to take the minister at her word, that other aspects of the bill ensure that this will be the case. I'm generally quite concerned about the concentration of power within the minister's office and away from an independent, arm's-length body like the Independent System Operator.

I'm certain that our electric system can be operated, including renewables, as it is now, with the same set of rules for all forms of electricity. Ensuring that "safe, reliable and economic" stays in the bill, I think, is exactly the intent of this amendment brought by the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, which is precisely the same amendment that I had intended to bring. He got to it first, so I can only enthusiastically support him and would really encourage all other members of the House very much to do the same.

Again, as much as I would like to take the minister at her word and, as she said, trust me, I'd frankly trust but verify. So let's include it in the bill. Let's accept this amendment and ensure that section 20 remains in the act.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to speak in favour of this amendment, too. The minister had us go through and check section 4 and section 20 in the bill. They do read differently. Though I'm not sure of the exact differences, there is a difference between what she's suggesting.

Section 4 says:

When directed by the Minister under section 3(1) to develop a proposal, the ISO shall develop a proposal for a renewable electricity program that

- (a) promotes large-scale renewable electricity generation in Alberta,
- (b) employs a fair and transparent competitive process,
- (c) does not jeopardize the safe, reliable and economic operation of the interconnected electric system, as defined in the Electric Utilities Act, and
- (d) addresses the renewable electricity program objectives and evaluation criteria, if any, established by the Minister under section 3(2).

Now, when I read the existing section 20, it says:

The Independent System Operator must exercise its powers and carry out its duties, responsibilities and functions in a timely manner that is fair and responsible to provide for the safe, reliable and economic operation of the interconnected electric system and to promote a fair, efficient and openly competitive market for electricity.

So there is a difference there as far as one of them saying, “When directed by the Minister,” and the other one saying, “Must exercise its powers and carry out its duties.” Of course, the existing one relates to “the interconnected electric system,” and section 20 just says, “When directed by the Minister.” So I think there is a difference between these two, and I think that by striking this section, that ISO act in a way “that is fair and responsible to provide for the safe, reliable, and economic operation” – I think that is very worrisome.

I don’t think that there should be anything like that taken out of a bill or any other act by government. Obviously, it was in there for a reason, and I think we need to make sure that we don’t have any problems down the road with striking out something that says fair and balanced. So I’m going to suggest that all the members of this House should support this amendment and make sure that this doesn’t lead to any sort of misconception of what should be and shouldn’t be fair and responsible.

This section of the Electric Utilities Act is titled “Duty to act responsibly.” Duty to act responsibly. Now, I think that that spells something out very clearly, and by removing it, obviously, that changes things. In 20(b) it says that this section doesn’t apply to renewable proposals. Why would that not apply to renewable proposals? If in section 4 it says the same, then how come 20(b) says that this section doesn’t apply to renewable proposals? Is that because renewable proposals aren’t economical or they’re not reliable or the government doesn’t want to see them economical or reliable or safe? This is actually kind of incredulous to think that this type of wording has been taken out by this act.

Now, it seems like this government is trying to absolve itself and its arm’s-length bodies of the duty to act responsibly when it comes to renewable energy. I would suggest that renewable energy shouldn’t be treated any differently than any other energy. To suggest otherwise is bizarre, to say the least.

Now, I think that when we look at Bill 27, we have a lot of issues. I’m just going to read a quote from the Energy minister when she talked about it here. She says, “It will facilitate $10.5 billion of new private investment in our economy by 2030.” Now, it’s always great to have investment in our economy, but this investment has to be paid for by somebody since it’s for our electricity. Who’s going to be paying for that $10.5 billion? Which company is going to come in and drop $10.5 billion into our laps here in Alberta and not expect that it’s going to be paid for, plus profit? This isn’t a $10.5 billion gift. It’s a loan with interest with profit on top of it because, being as this is to produce electricity here in Alberta, that we will be using as Albertans, it’s going to have to be paid for by Albertans. Does that not make sense?

When I see somebody talking like that, just like, “Oh, yeah. Here’s $10.5 billion. Look at all the jobs it’ll create. Look at all the money that’s coming in,” well, it all has to be paid back by Albertans because this isn’t something we’re exporting. This is something we’re consuming here. If it was $10.5 billion of investment and we were exporting oil, for instance, then the return on investment could come from outside the country. But unless we plan on exporting electricity, then it’s going to be consumed here, and it’s going to be paid for by Albertans.

What I would suggest is that we should support this amendment, make sure that renewables are treated like all the rest of the energy produced in this province, make sure that it’s fair and balanced and that the companies have a duty to act responsibly. Madam Chair, I’ll leave with that for now, that I believe that this amendment should be supported. It seems that this government – I’m not sure why they would want to do this. Maybe it was an oversight, but if it’s an oversight, let’s correct it. We have an opportunity right here right now to correct it if it’s an oversight.

If it’s not an oversight, then I think Albertans should be as alarmed as I am over this government’s willingness to strike a section that seems so common sense. I don’t know. It just seems like it’s bizarre to have this taken out and for the government to sit there and think that it should be taken out and leave it the way they have it.

I’m going to suggest that all members of this House support this amendment. Let’s get this back into the act, where it belongs, and let’s do what’s right for Albertans.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to support this amendment to put the words “fair and responsible” back into this bill. There are a couple of things. The fact that the words “fair and responsible” would in any way need to be excluded from any part of this bill or any bill, for that matter, seems absolutely ludicrous to me. I don’t know. Maybe it’s just late at night, but those are not words that I would be recommending that you cross out from any piece of legislation that is going to bring forward a bill that is supposedly going to be good for Albertans. “Fair and responsible” would be the first words that I’d want put into anything.

Having said that, as the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky said, it’s not just those words, “fair and responsible.” It actually is a precursor to the other part, “to provide for the safe, reliable and economic operation of the interconnected electric system.” Maybe the question is: whose idea was it to scratch this from legislation? Who would remove the words “fair and responsible”? It doesn’t make any sense, Madam Chair. I look at it from this point of view. Lookit, we have an arbitrary number that the government has told us that ISO picked. ISO picked 30 per cent. Okay. Well, that’s interesting.

I’m curious about the renewables groups that already have skin in the game and that have already contributed to the market from the aspect that they’ve actually invested in this province with their hard-earned dollars and work already. I’m just curious: is it fair and responsible to them to have this come in, that will potentially not even allow them to come into this system? I’m curious: is that fair? Is that responsible? I’m assuming – I may be wrong; it may be somewhere else in the bill – that they’re going to receive some sort of fair treatment as a result of this, considering that they’ve already put skin in the game, that they’ve already done this. These subsidies and everything else that is going to make up for these gaps: is that going to be attributed to them as well? It doesn’t sound very fair and responsible, does it?

Then, on top of that, the 30 per cent: is that even possible in a free market? Again, is it responsible or fair to Albertans that somehow within this capacity market you’re going to subsidize it enough, based on the taxpayer, to make up for the gap? It doesn’t sound very fair and responsible, does it? I would think that this government, again, would like to potentially take some accountability and transparency.

I’ll try it again. This is accountability and transparency written into a bill that will protect you in the decisions that you’re making. I find it appalling that a government would decide that pulling out the words “fair and responsible” is okay. I don’t care how many times it’s in the bill. Put it in 15 times, 20 times, a hundred times, enough times to make sure that Albertans feel that they are being adequately represented by this government on this file. There is absolutely zero justification that this government can make for pulling those words out of this. If it was, as the member had mentioned, an oversight, so be it. We'll let it go. But my suggestion would be that this government would want to vote for "fair and responsible."

If you look at, as the member had mentioned, the $10.5 billion of private investment that is supposedly magically going to appear somewhere for these projects, I would assume again that they would want the words "fair and responsible" in this legislation so that they understand that when they come into a contract – although this government likes to rip up contracts. Maybe that's why they pulled out "fair and responsible." Then again, if it's in there, maybe you might have a chance of actually bringing investment online.

I'm telling you, as a person looking at this, that if I was an outsider looking in with my $10.5 billion sitting around, I would certainly be looking at that part of the bill and going: I don't think I'm going to take on that risk. And given the track record of ripping up contracts, of creating a carbon tax that you did not campaign on, of costing the taxpayer $97 million a year for 14 years, I would highly recommend that you vote yes for this amendment with "fair and responsible."

Right now, as it stands, not only does this government pull these words out of the bill, but you have to pay generators for stranded assets. Where is that going to come from? Oh, yes. That's right. The specified gas emitters. Well, once that ends, then we go into the carbon tax. Those are tax dollars that you're going to be using to pay back stranded assets. You have – what? – about a year left of specified gas emitters, I'm assuming, before the carbon tax kicks in at $30 a tonne. Yes? So now that money is going to come from the taxpayer. You've got that plus the subsidies the taxpayer is on the hook for to fill the gap between your 6.8 per cent and whatever else the differential is for the renewables coming online. Then – guess what? – the taxpayers are also on the hook to pay for new infrastructure.

Let's go backwards again: carbon tax, subsidies, the new infrastructure – gee, that seems like an awful lot; it doesn't sound very fair and responsible – and then, on top of that, the new gas production that is going to replace the baseload. Depending on the volatility of that market, the taxpayer is on the hook for that one, too. It doesn't sound very fair and responsible. You might want to think about putting those words back into this piece of legislation.

An Hon. Member: But how about that pipeline?

Mrs. Aheer: I would talk about fair and responsible. Actually, it was one pipeline. The number three, just so you know, is a fix. They fixed it. It already exists. Number three already exists. They're fixing it. I can send you the article.

Anyway, back onto "fair and responsible." "Fair and responsible" is something that maybe this government should put back into their legislation – I'm just suggesting – but you could stand and vote against "fair and responsible." That would be fantastic. It's another Facebook moment. It's up to you. You're the ones who are pulling this one out. My recommendation to you would be to put "fair and responsible" back in so that the ISO has the ability to at arm's length make some decisions, based on this new legislation coming through, that will be transparent and accountable to the people that we all represent in this House.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, it's interesting. The hon. Minister of Energy stood in this place just a little bit ago and went on at length about how we don't need this amendment, claimed that there are other places in the bill where "fair and transparent" was covered off, but the reality is that we're talking about "fair and responsible."

Furthermore, this bill that's before us, Bill 27, makes a couple of amendments to existing legislation. One of those is the Electric Utilities Act, and I'm going to go there. Maybe the minister didn't quite understand what this bill actually does, but it makes a serious amendment to an existing piece of legislation. The particular section that this messes with – and I'll just word it that way – is the duty to act responsibly under the Electric Utilities Act, and it is specifically stating in law that the Independent System Operator has a duty to act responsibly. That is the law.

Now, I'll just read it out. It's not a big sentence.

The Independent System Operator must exercise its powers and carry out its duties, responsibilities and functions in a timely manner that is fair and responsible to provide for the safe, reliable and economic operation of the interconnected electric system and to promote a fair, efficient and openly competitive market for electricity.

One of the key words in here is "must," that the Independent System Operator must carry out its duties this way, that it must act responsibly.

Along comes Bill 27, and Bill 27 says, "No, you don't," because Bill 27 says that section 16 does not apply to the development of renewable electricity program proposals under the Renewable Electricity Act. So here we have an act, or what the government hopes will become an act, the Renewable Electricity Act, going in and saying about another act that it doesn't apply, that it doesn't apply to renewables, that they're exempt from ISO operating in a responsible manner, that it does not apply to the development of renewable electricity program proposals under the Renewable Electricity Act.

The minister stood in this House, gave us a speech, but not once did she mention any reason not to include "fair and responsible." There was no rationale given, none whatsoever, for the removal of it. But she did sort of infer: well, trust me. Well, guess what? That's not what we're here for. If we lived in a world where it was "trust me," we wouldn't have a single law on the books about anything. The department of highways could post a speed limit of 100 K. [interjections] Yeah, some of the hon. members on the other side, you know, could say to the policeman: "No. Don't use that radar on me. Just trust me. Trust me." Not going to happen. Not going to happen. If we could live on "trust me," we wouldn't need this Legislature. We're not here to live on "trust me," especially with this government that we've got. Trust is something you've got to earn, and so far you don't have real good marks. You don't have real good marks.

Here we have this bill, and we're trying to put an amendment in place to provide accountability. Now, we just spent a significant amount of time earlier this evening talking about accountability, and again for – I don't know – the umpteenth time this government voted down an amendment that was attempting to put in place some measurable accountability. Here we have another amendment, and this amendment is attempting to stop the government from removing an existing accountability measure under the Electric Utilities Act, an accountability measure that has been there a long time already that states that the Independent System Operator must act responsibly, that it is their duty. And not only just responsibly, but it must be fair. The other key words here are that it must be an "efficient and openly competitive market." Now, I get why the government wants to trash that particular section. This government is attempting to force upon our good people an entire agenda of renewables that they cannot guarantee will be fair or responsible or efficient or openly competitive. There really is no other conclusion a person could draw.

As much as they don't like the comparison to Ontario that is drawn not only by myself but by members of the press – I've been receiving some e-mails and some comments from people in Ontario who've been watching what's been going on out here, and both on Facebook and in our e-mails we're getting these things from people in Ontario, and they're saying: "Guys, don't go that way. Don't do what's happening to us in Ontario." They're saying: "Stop that government from going down the same path that Kathleen Wynne and McGuinty took us." So as much as this government doesn't like that comparison, the reality is that if this government is trying to ruin or take out of an existing act an existing measure of accountability, then we're really only left with one conclusion, and that is that this government doesn't want to be held accountable for acting fairly, responsibly, efficiently, and competitively in providing us safe and reliable electricity.

Now, if this was just a single oversight on the government's part, I could kind of live with that and say: "Okay. Well, you missed that one, but you could back up and fix that." But that is not the only little piece of evidence here regarding the irresponsible manner in which the government is pushing Bill 27 and the contents of it. I'll touch on that a little bit later on.

I will close with this comment. You have an opportunity to leave in place a duty for our independent system operator to operate in a fair, efficient, responsible, competitive manner. You have that responsibility. You have this opportunity, and I would recommend that you don't miss this opportunity.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to A2?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A2, proposed by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A2 lost]

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Are any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to present an amendment to Bill 27. I have the requisite number of copies here and will await you receiving them before I continue.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The amendment will now be referred to as A3. Please go ahead.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. This amendment, which I will read out, is as follows: "Mr. Clark to move that the Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be amended by striking out sections 10, 11(2), and 12."

I seek to strike these sections, which I refer to as the blank cheque sections of this bill. [interjections] I knew that would get a rise out of my friends in the Wildrose, but I think it should attract the attention of all members of this House because it presents a substantial risk to Albertans, to the public purse.

You know, I want to preface my comments on this, as I do all comments on Bill 27, by reiterating my support for renewable energy, renewable electricity. I think that it's an important part of Alberta's future and ought to be something that we see more of in this province. The question is how we go about doing that and what risk we put taxpayers at in so doing. When we look at the example of Ontario and the mistakes that have been made there, one of the mistakes was an unlimited backstopping of renewable energy to the significant detriment of Ontario taxpayers and Ontario citizens. These three sections put Alberta taxpayers at precisely the same risk.

Let's step through what these sections are. Section 10(1) says:

If, according to a monthly statement provided under section 9(b), the ISO is to pay a generator, the Minister shall pay the ISO the amount set out in the statement.

Now, I presume and hope, for the minister's personal finances, that that isn't her personally. I can only think that it is, in fact, the Treasury that ultimately would backstop that.

Section 10(2):

If, according to a monthly statement provided under section 9(b), the ISO is to collect funds from a generator, the ISO shall, on receipt of those funds, pay them to the Minister.

So if there's money to be collected, it goes back to the government and goes to the minister, but more troubling, of course, is that if there's money to be paid, it is paid in an unlimited capacity by the minister.

Section 11(2) says:

If the Minister determines that the ISO's costs and expenses are prudent and that the fees levied under subsection (1) are insufficient to recover these costs and expenses, the Minister shall pay the ISO the amount of the shortfall.

So if the ISO is short of money for any reason that is deemed, quote, reasonable and prudent, the minister shall cover that as well, without limitation. I've no idea how deep that hole could get, but my sincere worry is that that hole could get awfully deep.

Section 12:

On notice from the Minister to the President of Treasury Board, Minister of Finance, payments shall be paid from the General Revenue Fund for the amounts payable by the Minister to the ISO under sections 10(1) and 11(2) that have not been paid from [CCEMC] under the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act.

So that's interesting because, first, the ISO and the minister, the Crown are going to drain the CCEMC. If you've been following the news at all in the last week or so, you'll notice that there have been an awful lot of calls on the climate change and emissions management fund and the climate change fund. Those funds, as far as I know, have already been spoken for for coal contracts, coal payout contracts, and other areas. At some point you can no longer get blood from the stone, and money will have to come from the general revenue fund.

Again, this creates nothing more than a blank cheque, where any losses under the renewable energy plan are borne exclusively by Alberta taxpayers. Again, while I am very much a supporter of action on climate change and I believe that renewable electricity ought to be a big part of Alberta's future, I have a very difficult time giving this government or, frankly, any government a blank cheque, unlimited funds from Alberta's treasury, to backstop renewable electricity projects. I wouldn't want to give unlimited funds from the public treasury to backstop anything. That's absolutely, grossly irresponsible. I propose to fix that problem by removing the ability of this government to backstop renewable electricity in its entirety and allowing these contracts to work within the market, allowing the market to work to balance out the costs and, potentially, the profits.

The other challenge I have with this is that it weakens the independence of the ISO. There are a lot of aspects of this bill, and I imagine, as this evening rolls on, that if I have an opportunity, I'll present further, additional amendments – I imagine my colleagues in the opposition may do the same – that address the weakening of the ISO's independence. The ISO is intended to serve at an arm's length from government, and as we've seen from this government time and again, especially on the electricity file, the government is reeling all of these independent agencies back in under the purview of the government because they want to have command and control over everything that happens within the electricity file.

Now, this is a tremendously complex file, and I don't expect rank-and-file Albertans to unpack all of the details. That's our job in this Assembly, to understand the details behind the management of the electricity system. I have a hard time believing that we can trust the minister and her ministry to run the electricity system as effectively as an arm's-length agency like ISO, so I have substantial concerns both on the financial side but also on the governance side and the independence side. The system was set up to allow for independent, arm's-length control, not to allow the minister to dictate what happens on a minute-by-minute basis. That is a substantial concern. Again, we'll bring specific amendments that address other aspects of independence as the evening progresses, but this amendment primarily focuses on addressing the financial aspects of this.

I really do hope that we hear from the minister on this. I'm very interested to hear her perspective, and I would love this evening at some point to hear from some of our friends on the government side as well. I know they're here. It's lovely to see them. I see you all over there having a chat, playing on your phones. That's very good. I hope you're enjoying yourselves, but, you know, in all sincerity, I would really love to hear from my hon. constituency neighbour in Calgary-Currie. He often has something interesting to say, and I would love to hear his perspective.

But in all sincerity, this is an important issue. We have a government that is writing a bill that seeks to allow the government of Alberta to backstop renewable energy projects with absolutely no limit whatsoever. Perhaps if the government feels that there is a reasonable limit that they'd like to propose, they'd maybe consider introducing a subamendment to this. But until we see something like that, I seek to remove these sections to constrain the government's ability to commit Alberta taxpayer dollars to really the nth degree because I think that's absolutely poor governance in the first case and incredibly risky for Alberta taxpayers and an already stressed public purse.

With that, Madam Chair, I will return to my seat and look forward to hearing from both sides of the House on this important issue. Thank you.

8:30

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I very much appreciate the amendment coming from the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow. Here again we have a situation similar to what we just went through, where accountability seems to be necessary in this bill. You know, we just talked about the duties of ISO to operate an efficient, openly competitive but also economic operation. It's a duty of ISO to operate in an economically responsible manner, but of course if you're going to strike that down, then you can do what you want. As properly noted by the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, we need to have something in place here that is at least going to bring some financial accountability if not any other form of accountability.

Madam Chair, the world is littered with failed renewable projects and failed renewable companies, literally hundreds of them. During the years 2010 to 2012 there were over 100 serious failures, and I'm not talking about some little solar company that did, you know, 20 installations on houses one year. We're talking about billion dollar corporations around the world that succeeded in getting hundreds of millions of dollars in taxpayers' money in the form of incentives and then, well, went broke. The money is gone. Oh, well. So sad. Too bad. The taxpayers ultimately end up on the hook for it. As noted by the hon. member, there needs to be some accountability, some financial accountability.

We had the minister stand in this House saying more or less: trust me. No. Not going to do that. That's not what we were sent here to do. We were sent here to hold government accountable. We were sent here to enact legislation that is responsible, that is fair, that is an appropriate use of taxpayers' money. Now, here we have a situation where under the sections noted, under 10, 11, and 12, it would appear that we have the government deeply involved in what was once an arm's-length organization, an arm's-length organization that was really supposed to manage on its own, stand on its own two feet, staffed with professionals to manage Alberta's electricity system. And they managed it fairly well under the terms of the Electric Utilities Act. Now we're seeing this government striking some of those sections regarding accountability from the act. That's a very irresponsible thing to do, not one that I believe is in keeping with what Albertans want.

So I'm very much in support of this amendment. I believe it is the responsible thing to do to put some accountability back in place, and I would encourage all members in this House to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to speak in favour of this amendment. All too often we see this government saying “Stay tuned” or “Trust me.” That’s not our job. Our job is to investigate bills and legislation on behalf of Albertans to determine whether they can do damage to Albertans and our economy. That’s our duty here.

Now, we see an opportunity here where the government basically wants to have a blank cheque. There are no numbers here at all. Whatever it takes, the government is just going to fork out the cash, I guess, and this cash, of course, isn’t the government’s cash. It’s taxpayers’. It’s Albertans’ money. I find it alarming, as the Member for Calgary-Elbow did, that this government would leave us in such a situation where they would want a blank cheque in this legislation to cover any costs of a basically failed renewable electricity project.

Now, Madam Chair, it seems like everywhere we go in Bill 27, all we see is the government backstopping all these different things in this bill. I’ll just read a part here. Well, for one thing, I got a kick out of the minister’s comments. She said, “Using a competitive process.” I’m not sure what kind of competitive process would be involved with taxpayer money incentivizing this process. That’s not really a competitive process. I guess you can find out which companies can . . .

Mr. MacIntyre: Who can hit the trough the fastest.

Mr. Loewen: Yeah. Who can hit the trough the fastest. They’re lining up there to see: “Okay. Who can we get this money from?”

It just seems like everywhere I look in here – let’s see. Here’s another comment from the minister. “It would enable the AESO to take security interest in projects that receive support as this is the best way to protect the government’s investment.” We’re talking about investors coming here and spending money on renewables, but the minister herself is saying that we have to have a way to protect the government’s investment. What investment does the government have? It’s the “investment of carbon funds in case of generator default or insolvency.” Carbon funds. Where do the carbon funds come from, Madam Chair?

Mr. MacIntyre: From Albertans.

Mr. Loewen: I think they come from Albertans. Exactly. That’s where the carbon funds come from. It’s taxpayers’ money. It’s Albertans’ money. This government not only wants to support these investments with carbon tax funds from Albertans in order to incentivize them to open up shop, but then if something goes wrong and they all of a sudden go broke, go into default or insolvency, the government is still going to kick in and take care of it on that end, too. So it’s taxpayer money initiating it and taxpayer money in the end if it fails.

I think this is a good amendment. We should support this amendment. The government doesn’t need a blank cheque. The government needs to explain to Albertans what their plan is, how much it’s going to cost, and then Albertans can make a decision from there.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I need to stand up and speak to oppose this amendment. It’s clear that the opposition do not understand how capital investment is attracted, and eliminating these clauses would eliminate the backstop altogether. Through engagement sessions with government, renewable investors and developers told us that the funding certainty would allow the project developers to secure finances at much better rates. This funding certainty would also reduce program costs. This feedback was verified by Alberta Energy’s review of programs in other jurisdictions.

To encourage investment, the legislation backstops the primary source of funding, the climate change and emissions management fund, with reinvested carbon levy funds from the general revenue fund. Setting a limit would undermine the objectives of these sections to facilitate better access to financing and lower financing costs. For example, Alberta Energy calculated that the increased funding certainty will reduce program costs by hundreds of millions of dollars, Madam Chair, using the indexed renewable energy credit for the first auction of up to 400 megawatts of renewables. By increasing financing costs through getting rid of these sections, that would cause prices to increase and would decrease the faith that investors would have in this legislation.

8:40

So we need to not vote in this amendment because it would be damaging to investor confidence. It would signal loud and clear that we aren’t fully committed to this program in the long term. On the whole this amendment would increase program costs. It would limit interest in investing in Alberta. The general mechanism of budgeting and reporting and transparency will still be applicable to this program, so this would demonstrate and verify that reinvestment in carbon levy funds be would used to fund the renewable electricity program.

Again, I speak against this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I will first recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow and then the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Clark: Madam Chair, thank you so much. I appreciate the minister standing up and sharing that insight with us, but of course the government backstopping a loan is going to make rates better. You’ve got a multibillion-dollar organization willing to essentially, literally, cosign a loan.

You know, I have a business idea. I’m going to open a car wash, and if my credit is terrible and there’s a lot of risk that my car wash might fail, I would like to get a loan. Now, I’m going to go to the bank, and the bank is going to say: “Greg, you seem like a nice guy. You don’t really know what you’re doing, and you’re going to have a high rate of interest if I’m even willing to give you a loan at all.” But I go: “No, no. I’ve got the government of Alberta, you see. They’re going to backstop my loan. It’s all good.” And the bank goes: “Really? I’m in. That sounds fantastic.” It’s really like asking mom and dad to cosign your loan for a car. That’s what this is. Oh, that’s fine. What could possibly go wrong? What could go wrong? It’s renewable electricity.

Look, I want to be really clear. I believe in human-caused climate change. I believe we need to do something about it. I believe that renewable energy ought to be an increased part of the grid in this province. I believe we need to ramp down coal and eliminate it altogether. Those are things I believe. There’s a better way of doing it, though.

Let’s get back to the argument at hand here. What could possibly go wrong with the government backstopping loan guarantees? I mean, it's not like anywhere in Alberta history we've ever had a loan guarantee backstopped by the government of Alberta go wrong. Has that ever happened? Oh, wait. Wait. Hang on. The last time oil was in the tank in a big way was the mid-1980s. There was a Premier – I think his name was Getty – and he had this idea that we were going to backstop business ideas. Now, one of them was the Gainers meat-packing plant, a giant multimillion-dollar loan guarantee. You know what? That defunct organization's loan guarantee is still on the books and the budget of the government to this very day.

Surely that was the only one that happened, right? They wouldn't do that more than once, would they? No, no, no. Oh, what? Wait a minute. MagCan in High River. That's right. I love High River. Some of my best friends are in High River. There's a giant MagCan facility. You know what we're going to do? We're going to process magnesium because, why, it's the metal of the future, isn't it? We're going to diversify Alberta's economy. We've got a brilliant idea. We are going to create hundreds if not thousands of jobs. All we need to do is have the government of Alberta backstop a loan. What could possibly go wrong? Well, we found that out. But it only happened twice.

An Hon. Member: It only happened twice?

Mr. Clark: No, it didn't. It didn't. We also had NovAtel. That's right. Now, NovAtel, while I will grant you that they do still technically exist, cost, if I'm not mistaken, $500 million, $600 million, and that's in 1980, 1990 dollars, right? That's a lot of money.

While I will acknowledge that there could perhaps be some differences between direct investment by government in specific businesses and a plan to backstop renewable energy, there actually isn't that big of a difference because the similarity that runs through those three historically poor choices by previous governments in this province and this plan is an absolute blank cheque. If things go wrong on the renewable energy side, Alberta is on the hook irrespective of how much it costs. There is no bottom here. This is a bottomless pit, potentially, of money. Now, I hope I'm wrong. I hope this doesn't come to pass. I hope this succeeds because if it does, it's good for Alberta, and that's all I care about. That's what I'm here to do, make things better for Alberta.

There is a way of ensuring that we can bring renewable energy on stream in this province without putting Alberta taxpayers at this massive risk, and it's not backstopping. I don't have the Blues because the minister just stood up, but I believe the word "backstop" was actually used in the minister's speech. I would at the very least like to see some limit on the amount of money that this government is willing to put up and backstop, but barring that, I think we need to take these out entirely, which is why it's very important that this amendment pass, Madam Chair.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Okay. Well, I'll just take a few minutes to speak to this amendment, too. The Member for Calgary-Elbow just listed a few different failures right here in Alberta where the government backstopped loans, which cost taxpayers millions of dollars. But none of them were renewable energy ones, so we could say: what could go wrong with renewable energy? Well, how about Amonix solar, a manufacturing plant in Las Vegas? More than $20 million of tax credits and grants given by the Obama administration. It didn't last a year. Solar Trust of America filed bankruptcy also.

BrightSource warned Obama's energy department officials in March 2011 that delays in approving a $1.6 billion U.S. loan guarantee would embarrass the White House and force the solar energy company to close. BrightSource lost billions of dollars but is getting more money to keep trying. It's not working.

I'll end on one of the nice big ones that everybody should remember: Solyndra. Obama gave $500 million – that's half a billion dollars – to Solyndra, who shut its doors, laid off 1,100 workers after billions in losses due to failure to make a solar product that worked. They couldn't even make one that worked. We don't need to do the same thing as Mr. Obama did, throw taxpayer money down the drain.

This is a good amendment. We can support this one. We can make sure that the taxpayers aren't on the hook for unseen amounts of money. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I listened with rapt attention to the hon. Minister of Energy actually admit in this House: well, when I talked to the renewables companies, they said that if I'd underwrite their loans, if I'd protect them, they'd come and play in our sandbox. Like, hello? You know, a fact of banking: if a regular financial institution or investment house is not going to back a particular project, what in the world is a government doing backing that project? We went through how many failed projects by Mr. Pocklington and that whole era. If you remember, it was one thing after another after another, and the government of Alberta was just shelling out the money, doing this exact same thing. Those businesspeople back then gamed the government. They schooled the government big time, promising: well, you know, it's going to be 500 jobs or 300 jobs or 200 jobs, whatever. It was hundreds of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money just vaporized, gone, and then these things failed anyway.

In the world of renewables all over this world we've been seeing the very same thing: massive corporations taking advantage of the reality that there are some politicians who don't understand the very things that they have so much authority over, one of them being finance. Here we have our minister, the hon. Minister of Energy, saying: well, the renewables company said that, you know, if we will backstop their loans, they'll come and put renewables in our province. I say again: if the investment community, if the shareholders in those companies won't finance those things, no government has the right to do it. It is wrong to do that. When the financial experts, the ones who understand risk, the ones who understand how to even calculate risk, have done the calculation and say, "No; that's too risky," then no government ought to be backstopping that thing with taxpayers' money. No way. If these corporations cannot come here and stand on their own two feet financially and compete in this market and build renewables, then they need to go. They need to go someplace else. It is totally inappropriate for this government to put the taxpayers on the hook. Totally inappropriate.

We're going back now, way back to an era in this province where governments – it was cronyism to the nth degree. Government was in the business of business. Wasn't it called the Alberta Opportunity Company? Isn't that what it was called? They were just lending out money left, right, and centre. I remember that in the industrial park just north of Leduc there was a company that started up and got a bunch of government money. They said that they were going to be producing marble tiles for new home construction taking place in Hong Kong and Shanghai. And somehow or other here in Alberta, where we don't have marble in the first place . . .

An Hon. Member: They got shanghaied.

Mr. MacIntyre: Yeah, they got shanghaied.

They were going to slice marble and granite here into tiles and ship them all the way over there for the housing market that was just going crazy over there. There was millions and millions of dollars. I remember that the photograph in the newspaper at the time showed the owners standing in front of a very large saw blade. Well, when I was a young fella . . . [interjection] Yeah, I'm still a young fella.

When I was slightly younger than I am now, I worked in a sawmill in British Columbia, and we had saws just exactly like that saw blade. So I took a little trip over there to the industrial park in Leduc – I didn't live very far from there – and here was this great big 8-foot-diameter saw blade sitting outside. This was apparently the saw blade that was going to be cutting marble and granite and making these tiles. I looked at that saw blade, and I thought to myself: "Man, I worked on saw blades exactly like that in the mill. That is no marble-cutting, stone-cutting saw blade. That's a saw blade with removable carbide teeth for cutting logs." And I thought, "Our government just got gamed by two people from Holland who are way smarter than the politicians that just gave them a bunch of money." Sure enough, within weeks – within weeks – the owners were gone, the warehouse was empty, the saw blade was still sitting outside the warehouse, and the money was gone. Imagine. It boggles my mind, first of all, that the politicians of the day were . . .

Mr. Taylor: Gullible?

Mr. MacIntyre: Gullible: that's a much better word than I was thinking of.

They were gullible enough to believe that somehow we could import huge slabs of marble all the way to Leduc, Alberta, slice them into floor tiles, and ship them to China and actually be a viable business.

Then there was the one in Prince George, British Columbia, where they were going to make chopsticks and bowls out of poplar for the Chinese market. Yeah, they were going to compete with the Chinese, making chopsticks and bowls out of poplar. Guess what?

An Hon. Member: Don't give them any ideas.

Mr. MacIntyre: Yeah. I shouldn't be giving you ideas.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, as much as I love the history lesson that we are going down, I'm just curious if you can loop it back to the debate, please.

Mr. MacIntyre: Let me loop it back. Thank you, Madam Chair. Fasten your seat belts. We're going to loop back. Here we go. Ready? [interjection] Now, the hon. member is suggesting that I want a free trip to China, and this is not true.

Let me loop it back for you, Madam Chair. The reality is that too many governments, including this one, have been bamboozled by carpetbaggers, salesmen that know more than they do and absolutely convinced the government: "Well, we'll do this for you if you, government, will backstop our loans. If you will underwrite our investment, then we'll come here." All of a sudden when a government does that, there is zero risk – zero risk – for that corporation. They don't have to act responsibly anymore because they are going to be smart enough to come in and get what they need.

Let's just look at this. The renewables companies that are going to be coming in here are going to be subsidized. Now they're going to have their loans underwritten – this is a licence to print money – with absolutely zero compunction on their part to stay viable. They could pull the plug next year and walk away, have all of whatever plums and carrots this government is going to give them to come here, and we the taxpayers of Alberta are going to be left holding the bag. All over this world there are failed projects like this one.

Here we've got a California project. If you know the Ivanpah solar thermal plant in California, it's one of the largest renewable projects in the United States: $2.2 billion. Guess what? Ivanpah had said to the government of the day: we're going to generate this much electricity with this plant. The government goes: "Ooh. Let us help you out." Well, guess what? Fifteen months later they're only producing 40 per cent of the promised amount of electricity. Take a guess who's on the hook. The taxpayers, good old taxpayers.

An Hon. Member: Same ones.

Mr. MacIntyre: Same ones.

Over and over again we have governments trying to look good by incenting something. It doesn't matter what industry. When governments get involved in the business of business, business they don't understand, when they start providing backstopping, underwriting loans, grants, or guarantees to corporate entities, those corporate entities will take advantage of that. They will not act responsibly, and they will put us at risk because they no longer have any. It is patently wrong for this government to be backstopping anything to do with the renewables industry.

This amendment that we have before us is a sound amendment, and it needs to be supported. The government has a moral obligation to protect the taxpayers of this province and to stop fleecing them. Enough is enough already.

Thank you.

9:00

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to add a few little things into what the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake was saying. This is just a few other, just a couple, failures that Barack Obama had when he was in power. He blew $150 billion to increase renewable energy generation by a mere 1 per cent. I'd like to read this into the record from the Institute for Energy Research.

Obama has spent at least $39 billion a year on his green energy projects . . . President Obama subsidized solar and other renewable energy in the United States with taxpayer money to the tune of $39 billion per year on average for the past 5 years.

An Hon. Member: How much?

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

Mrs. Aheer: Thirty-nine billion dollars per year.

These massive subsidies, however, have done little to increase the contribution of solar power to the electricity generation mix as solar is expected to produce just 0.6 percent of electricity generation this year.

This was in 2015.

Disregarding the cost to the American taxpayer and the failed solar projects in the United States, President Obama has pledged billions of dollars to fund solar energy development in India. On his trip to India, President Obama was hoping to bring back a deal similar to the one he made in China to peak the country's carbon dioxide emissions by 2030. However, Prime Minister Narendra

Modi rejected the President's proposed global warming deal, realizing his priority should be to bring power to the hundreds of millions of Indians that lack access to electricity.

At least 36 of his taxpayer funded green energy projects went belly up. Now here's just a small portion of this list. These are all bankrupt green energy companies that were subsidized by the American President.

Evergreen Solar ($25 million)
SpectraWatt ($500,000)
Solyndra ($535 million)
Beacon Power ($43 million)
Nevada Geothermal ($98.5 million)
SunPower ($1.2 billion)
First Solar ($1.46 billion)
Babcock and Brown ($178 million)
EnerDel's subsidiary Ener1 ($118.5 million)
Amonix ($5.9 million)
Fisker Automotive ($529 million)
Abound Solar ($400 million)
A123 Systems ($279 million)
Willard and Kelsey Solar Group [$700,000 and a little bit]
Johnson Controls ($299 million)
Schneider Electric ($86 million)
Brightsource ($1.6 billion)
ECOtality ($126.2 million)
Raser Technologies ($33 million)
Energy Conversion Devices ($13.3 million)
Mountain Plaza, Inc. . . .

It goes all the way down. I can read about at least 20 more.

This adds up to a tremendous amount of money that was taken out of taxpayer pockets in the United States. Now, the reason that we read about this and the thing that we need to understand about this is that that money actually disappears. It goes towards the corporations that have been made promises and not towards the people that should actually be benefiting from what renewables could actually do for us.

I would just like to do this as we wanted to have some crossjurisdictional information here so that going forward better decisions can be made so that we don't end up going down the same route.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: I would recognize the Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It says here that if there are insufficient [funds] to recover those costs and expenses, the Minister shall pay the ISO the amount of the shortfall.

You know, all of this would not be possible if it was not for Bill 10, the Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016, the unlimited debt ceiling. This is the problem with this, and we need to make sure that we support these amendments because we'll have this happening in the future. We won't have any limit as to how much the government can spend. I don't know if the government was thinking ahead when they put Bill 10 in or it just dawned on them that they could spend this much money. This, to me, is wrong to backstop.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

If not, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Acting Chair: We are back on Bill 27. The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

9:10

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you so much, Mr. Chair. I'm happy to pass this on through the pages and read it into the record at your earliest convenience, sir.

While it's on its way, I'm happy to just read it into the record.

The Acting Chair: Please go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you again, Mr. Chair. I'm very pleased to move an amendment actually on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-South East, and it reads as such. Mr. Fraser to move that Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be amended in section 13(1) by adding the following after clause (c), and, ladies and gentlemen, it's just two sentences:

- (d) the estimated number of jobs created under renewable electricity programs during the fiscal year, and
- (e) the total dollar amount of investments, other than funds provided pursuant to section 10, made under renewable electricity programs for the fiscal year.

In the spirit of all-party co-operation, if that indeed would be possible tonight, and just for the sake of efficiency, Mr. Chair, I'll just briefly point out the relevant points that are leading us to, you know, the rationale for this amendment. The first and most important point to make here is that it's only right and only fair that we ensure that Alberta taxpayers are receiving value for their tax dollars because we recognize the opportunities and the benefits that we can receive from greater renewable electricity generation in this province and also because we recognize that our first responsibility, of course, is always to the citizens of this fine province.

Inherent in that responsibility is, I would say, the duty, honour, and obligation to be sober guardians of the public purse so that we're able to face all of our constituents, as all 87 of us in this House need to be able to do, and say to them that we did the best job we could to ensure that their hard-earned money was spent in a responsible way. I don't believe that if we voted for the bill before us today in its present form, we could honestly say that we were certain that the money was being treated in a responsible way. Now, part of the problem is that we in this House do not have enough tools to effectively measure whether or not that money is being invested under these renewable programs and that it's actually benefiting Albertans in the way that the government is hoping for, and we are all hoping it would be a wise investment.

Additionally, there's a section of this bill that deals with annual reporting. That's what everyone is looking for these days, annual reporting. The reporting that's included does deal with some important issues – and I'm happy to acknowledge that that is happening with this government on this bill in this case – but we would like to see that reporting expanded just a little bit. So our amendment, the amendment that you see before you, Mr. Chair, adds two additional categories to that reporting section.

We'd like to see that report include statistics. I mean, people are always looking for performance measures, in this case regarding how many jobs are actually being created by these renewable energy programs. You know, I've got to say that that would actually be a very good thing for this government to share. I would think that they'd be very proud to share the number of jobs that are created as a result of this. That's a good-news story. I would really want to know why the government would not want to include this. Perhaps it was just an oversight, but perhaps it can be fixed right here and right now, with this simple sentence asking for exactly that.

Mr. Chair, since this government expects that these investments are going to kick off what might be called a green energy gold rush, I expect that they'd be very happy to include these numbers in the reporting. Albertans would also like to see additional details on the dollars. How many dollars are being invested into these programs? It's their money, and they deserve to know. That's what we're asking for here. This way the government can make a reasoned – a reasoned – evaluation of whether or not there's value provided in these investments, and that's only fair.

Mr. Chair, that's all we're asking in these simple, short amendments, that the government commit to providing reasonable additional information and simply reaffirm their commitment to transparency, which is something that they've said is a hallmark of theirs, and good for them if that indeed is the case.

In advance I will say thank you on behalf of Albertans if you simply make those numbers available to all of us so we can better evaluate the success of the program and the effect that it's having. I hope the government will see it the same way.

I thank you for your time, Mr. Chair. Onward and upward.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

We'll recognize this as amendment A4. Are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I want to rise to speak in favour of this amendment. I do hope – really, sincerely hope – that the government will agree to include this in the bill. It doesn't have anything to do with spending money or restricting the spending of money. It won't cost anything. But what it will do is that in the interests of transparency but also of garnering support from Albertans for what I believe is an important policy initiative of the government, which is promoting and expanding renewable electricity in this province – if we want to get Albertans onside, let's provide them with the data to show them what the benefits of the program are.

And if I could offer one constructive criticism of the government's efforts to date, it is that they have not done, I think, a very good job of explaining the need to Albertans for action on climate change in a way that answers the “what's in it for me?” question for Albertans. I think it's a fair question for any Albertan to ask of their government. Sadly, I don't think this government has done a very good job of that. This amendment addresses that particular problem.

Anyone who's ever run any organization – private sector, public sector, not-for-profit – knows that if you don't measure something, you can't manage it. So if we don't know how many jobs are being created in an objective way, how are we going to know whether or not this is a defective program or if, in fact, the government's claims to be creating jobs and spurring economic activity are in fact truthful or if they were fantasy? I'd like to think that it is true, and if it is true in fact, we should see a positive jobs report.

The dollar investments, I think, are also very important information for Albertans to know, especially if it excludes the dollars spent under section 10, which, as I previously had tried to do, amends out what I would – I'm not using my word “backstop”; I'm using the minister's word “backstop.” That's what section 10 does. But the opportunity here is for this government to provide not just transparency but a report back to Albertans.

In all sincerity, Madam Minister, I think this is a very thoughtful and worthwhile amendment. I do really encourage the government side to include that. It would certainly lighten the mood in the House this evening and raise all of our spirits. I think Albertans would be pleased to know that while we are in this House in the evening hours, we're not wasting anyone's time or money. In fact, we're making some progress, doing some good work on behalf of Albertans. I think that by passing this amendment, we have an opportunity to show them that. But, you know, materially, I think, it also improves the bill, and I would sincerely encourage all members of the Assembly, particularly on the government side, to support this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: I recognize the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Chair. We have had our own Energy minister tell us that the renewables switch is going to result in 7,200 new jobs in this province. The solar industry says that there are 70,000 jobs knocking on Alberta's doorstep. Well, what are we afraid of? Let's see. Let's publicly report.

9:20

Here we have another good amendment to this bill simply requiring some accountability, another measurement and verification number, something that we can give to assure Albertans that the promises that are being made by this government actually come to fruition or, perhaps, not. But it at least allows the government to try to justify the billions of dollars of taxpayers' money that are going to be handed out. When we're talking about the kinds of job creation that this province needs, I don't see why the government wouldn't jump at an opportunity to prove the claims that they're making, that this drive towards renewables that they claim is going to provide jobs actually does just that.

How many jobs? This government is claiming that their answer to the hundreds of thousands of men and women in this province that are out of work, who are the people who work in the patch, work in the oil sands, who had really good-paying jobs – really good-paying jobs. How good, you ask? [interjections] You did ask, didn't you? In excess of $90,000. I had neighbours that were pulling in $160,000, $180,000 a year.

An Hon. Member: Right out of high school.

Mr. MacIntyre: Yeah, right out of high school. I'm not saying that that was necessarily a really good idea, but – you know what? – they were out working hard, and they were earning their pay.

Even in our coal sector the average income was between $92,000 and $96,000. Now, this government is saying that those hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of thousands of jobs that were lost – well, the renewables drive is going to provide work for all those people. Okay. Let's see. Let's see if that is so. I don't know why the government would shy away from a metric like this to measure the amount and also, as the hon. member has asked for in this amendment, "the total dollar amount of investments, other than the funds provided pursuant to section 10, made under renewable electricity programs for the fiscal year." In other words, it's another metric to measure the actual amount of investments coming into this province in answer to this government's drive to renewables.

But especially the jobs: that is very important, Mr. Chair. We have so many people out of work, and so many of those people who are out of work are not on EI. These are the small contractors, that man or that woman that's got a welding truck, a small welding fab shop, things like that, people who provide labour. Some of the other people out there in the patch that were subcontractors: they're not on EI. You don't see their numbers in any of the unemployment figures that are thrown about in the media, but there are at least as many and probably more of them than there are employees that are out of work and are qualified to collect EI. Those are the numbers that are on the roll. Those kinds of people are looking at this government and the government's promises: well, the renewables boom is going to provide you with employment. Really? Really?

Installing solar panels, to that 60-year-old welder that was in my office here a couple of months ago – he's worked on pipelines his whole life. He's got a welding – I'm sorry. He does not have a welding truck anymore, Mr. Chair. He lost it. He lost his house, he lost his welding truck, and his marriage was on the skids, too, because of just a horrendous economic downturn, and this government has aggravated it. You know, that's just not a unique story. There are tens of thousands of men and women across this province that are in similar dire straits. What does this government hold out to them? "Well, the renewables boom is going to provide you the employment you need." Really? Really? Not going to happen. Not going to happen.

Nevertheless, the government has an opportunity with this amendment to put it on the line. Let's see. Let's track the number of jobs created under the renewable electricity program during each fiscal year. Let's have a look at the total amount of investments. This government started out by saying $10.5 billion in investment, and here it just keeps climbing. I don't know that the last figure was. The last one I heard was $25 billion. But we know that this government throws around these billion-dollar figures, and I'm not sure they know exactly how much money that really is. All right. If the government is going to be able to attract all this investment, again let's put it on the line. Let's measure that.

Now, I do understand that, you know, the government is going to backstop investment coming into this province, so I guarantee you and all Albertans that there's going to be a stampede like hogs to the trough of renewables companies like General Electric, SNC-Lavalin, Vesta, Siemens, all those big European and American corporations that make billions of dollars on the sale of wind turbines and solar farms at the utility scale. Yes, they support carbon taxation. You better believe they support carbon taxation. It's like a licence to print money. It is just amazing how much money they make. Now we've got a government right here in Alberta that's just dangling that carrot out to these guys, saying: "Y'all come on over here. We will underwrite your loans. We will backstop your investment. We will incentivize you." And away they come.

All that we're asking for, all that the hon. member is asking for with this amendment is: "All right. Let's have a look. How many jobs are actually going to be created? How much investment is actually going to come into this province?" As I've said before, when you're talking about, you know, a wind turbine that is a number of millions of dollars, that investment is going to come in all right, but then there's going to be an invoice from Vesta or Siemens or General Electric or SNC-Lavalin. That billion-dollar invoice is going to get paid, and that money that came in is just going to hang a U-turn and leave, and we will be left with the debt. The taxpayers and the electricity ratepayers are going to be left with the bill for this. We are going to be paying for all this.

Let's not fool ourselves or attempt to fool Albertans that we're going to have $20 billion or $30 billion worth of investments that are going to come here and remain here. It does not work that way. It doesn't work that way because those units are not manufactured here. The only jobs that are going to be here that are going to employ Albertans are the assembly and installation, and then it's done. There'll be a few maintenance jobs to maintain these. We are not talking about any kind of an industry that could possibly absorb the hundreds of thousands of highly skilled men and women from the patch. That is not going to happen.

If those people have a hope of being re-employed, we need to have pipelines in every direction, we need to have no limits on development in the oil sands, and we need to have to no limit to the responsible development of our resources. This government is constraining development. Constraining development.

The long and the short of it is, Mr. Chair, that I support this. I would encourage all members to support this. It's a perfectly fine amendment to put some accountability in place, and, God knows, this government needs accountability.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4? I recognize the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

9:30

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would just like to start by speaking again in favour of this amendment. Again, the member brings forward an amendment that will do nothing but actually help the government provide accountability and transparency to the people that we all represent. Again, I have such a difficult time understanding why the government wouldn't want metrics to show what you've done, what you've accomplished.

I mean, we can start again with having accountability for the metrics of how it is that this is going to roll out and where you start and where you go, but this is actually about – this government actually created a portfolio for Economic Development and Trade, a portfolio that's actually dedicated towards diversification, that's dedicated towards job creation, that's dedicated towards actually getting people in this province back to work. At least that's my understanding of the creation of that portfolio. Actually, this amendment speaks extremely well towards making sure that the development of that portfolio and the relative jobs and whatnot that would come from that as a result of policy would actually strengthen that portfolio and what is supposed to come from that portfolio. If we're actually talking about job creation, we might not be super proud of that.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The issue that all of us are talking about on this side isn't the government's desire to create jobs. I mean, that is a very important goal, and it's a goal that all of us could get behind. However, what's happening here is that the dollars that are going into these programs are subsidized dollars. Those are not dollars that are coming because the private sector invested and there was a market for it, and then that's what created the dollars that created this job creation. That's not what we're talking about here. We're talking about: the government is going to subsidize these programs and supposedly will be able to create jobs from those programs. And as the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake said, these aren't even jobs that have any sustainability. Again, that's a part of the portfolio for Economic Development and Trade: diversification, sustainability, job creation. These are all things that that portfolio was created to do, so why would the government not want to be able to prove to Albertans that this is actually happening, especially under the auspices of that portfolio?

The amendment is exceedingly helpful, again, to help prove to Albertans that this is what this government actually had intended. The unintended consequence of this is that, once again, the transparency is not there. How is it that you will be able to defend or justify the dollars that are going to go into this when there is no accountability on you to make sure that Albertans understand what you're doing? How are you supposed to justify to Albertans, especially all of these folks that have lost their jobs? As the member had said, there's no way that these jobs are going to in any way be able to get the same people that have already lost their jobs back into other jobs.

We're also talking about a tremendous amount of time between when this kicks in and when these things are actually being built and when we will see these aspects come to fruition. So let's actually consider the timing with this as well so that you have time actually to describe how this will roll out, the jobs that you expect to have happen, and how that relates in regard to the programs that you're actually promoting. I mean, as a businessperson that's an imperative part of any business plan.

As an investor coming into this situation, there's a tremendous amount of risk. We were talking about $10.6 billion, potentially $25 billion. That's a tremendous amount of risk for any person, investor to make.

If you can't even guarantee that you are going to be able to stand by your numbers, your metrics, the rollout of these programs, let alone being able to provide the talent and tech that's going to be there, let alone being able to be sustainable, let alone being able to prove to Albertans that you're actually capable of doing that – I really feel that it's in the best interests of the government to be able to tell Albertans that you actually did this on their behalf, for them, so that these jobs could be created. I can't understand, unless you are actually, truly concerned that this is not what's going to happen. Maybe you foresee the boondoggle well in advance of it actually happening, and if that's the case, well, I mean, we're hooped, then, aren't we?

I would hope that the government would prefer to be able to show Albertans in a very, very succinct way that they have the best interests of Albertans, that they're willing to put themselves on the line like any other person that would be investing in a business like this, in the risk that you're expecting investors to take. The risk isn't on you to tell the truth and to tell the narrative of how this is going to roll out. It's incumbent upon you. It's the responsibility of the government to do that. So I speak in support of this amendment, and for the sake of the government I highly recommend that you also support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Madam Chair, and also thank you to the Member for Calgary-Lougheed for bringing this amendment forward. First, I would just like to say that this government, without a doubt and without any reservation, believes that accurate reporting of jobs and investments through this program is of the utmost importance. This reporting that is in the bill itself already would be consistent with other renewable and climate initiatives and programs currently under development, most of which will not be administered by the ISO. Adding these specific reporting requirements in static legislation would be inconsistent with the reporting structures that are in place already along the broader use. Finally, 13(2) already provides the government the authority to require this kind of reporting with no further legislative action, should the government choose so.

I've heard a lot over the amendments that have been put forward so far, and I do appreciate hearing amendments from all members of the House. It's important that we consider all aspects of the bill and hear from all sides.

It's a common occurrence, I'm hearing from the opposition, that they're telling Albertans that they have to choose between renewables or the oil and gas sector. I think it's unbelievable to hear this conversation taking its toll. I mean, they sit there and they stand up and they say: well, we support renewables, but here are a hundred cases where it failed. That doesn't sound very supportive at all, really.

Hopefully, the opposition will stand up at some point in this debate and talk about some of the amazing initiatives throughout the country and across the world that have been beneficial because I'm sure there are some. I'm sure that if you took a quick google, you'd be able to find one or two that you could talk about if you really care about renewables as much as you say you do. We can look across the United States; for example, the many Republican jurisdictions talking about the importance of renewables. The Republican Governor Sam Brownback talks about aiming for 50 per cent renewables by 2018. I mean, if the Republicans do it, I hope that the Wildrose can see it in their hearts to do it as well.

With all that being said, I am standing to say, first of all, that I appreciate all the work that the minister has done. I think that she's probably done more consultation than has been done on this amendment. With that being said, I will not be supporting this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to A4? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to speak to a couple of the points that the hon. member across the way brought up. One of the things, again, is that we keep hearing that we're making Albertans choose. That's interesting. I was just speaking about it. In my own personal life I have a whole bunch of solar panels on my house, tons of them, 40, in fact. I love renewables, and I love what's possible with those. The reason I bring that up is because there is a mechanism and there's a way to bring renewables online. We're not condemning the idea of renewables. Our issue is how you're doing it.

We all have the same goal. The endgame is the same, but the policy on how we're going to get there is arguably very different. The difference is that the way the opposition sees it is that the market and the demand for these things will ultimately determine the availability to bring these online. If, as you say, Albertans are behind what you're trying to do, then they are going to want these things, and they are going to push the market to do that. They are going to invest in those things, all of those options that we've been talking about.

The thing that's concerning is that the government wants to put Albertans' hard-earned dollars into something that they have absolutely no idea how to roll out at this point. Where is that business plan? What we're asking for is accountability. It's not that we're anti renewables, far from it. In fact, I would argue that the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake has written a tremendous amount in academia based on alternative energy production, and at any time should you want to get more information about alternative energy – the way it should roll out, the economics of it, the viability of it – I would highly recommend speaking with him because he can help many, many people understand how that is viable.

The suggestion that we're not interested is interesting because, quite frankly, this is about doing it the right way and giving the government some very, very useful and thoughtful feedback from our perspective, a different set of eyes, a different perspective, which is good, in order to help this legislation, in order to be able to make sure that you've thought about everything. There's no way everybody, one person or a group of people, can know everything. The whole point of us being here is to make sure we offer you other opportunities and solutions and examples. If that's falling on deaf ears, there's absolutely nothing we can do about that.

But at the same time, please don't assume that we're not interested. Again, you're assuming, then, that everybody that we represent also doesn't care about the earth, air, and water, and that is a slap in the face to Albertans, and it's a slap in the face to everybody that this side represents and potentially even some of the people in your own ridings as well. So keep in mind that when those comments come across, it's not relevant.

More importantly, we're asking you for transparency and accountability. These are things that you ran on. Madam Chair, this government ran on transparency and accountability, and every single member on this side is demanding that, and I would hope that if I ever had the opportunity and the privilege to be in government, that would be demanded of me also.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to A4? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just a few comments with respect to the amendment to Bill 27 presented by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed. You know, there are a few things here that I think we need to take into account. I look at them as – when we're making claims with respect to particularly the jobs that we're going to create through renewable electricity, we are, through a lot of the actions of this government, going to be shutting down a lot of jobs in a lot of towns that are very concerned.

I know I heard on the radio the other day that the price of real estate in Grande Cache is one-third – not one-third less; one-third – of what it was just a couple of years ago, so even with mortgage-paying jobs today, those people have lost all their equity in their homes, and I suspect that many of them are holding mortgages worth more than what their homes are worth now. I worry about those people in places like Grande Cache and Hinton and Forestburg and Hanna and other towns that are going to lose their primary industries, Madam Chair. So when we make claims, we need to do those without them being spurious claims because for us it's just claims, but for them it's their livelihoods and, quite honestly, the survival of these towns, which we hope we don't turn into ghost towns.

I'm hopeful that this government does have a plan and that when we make claims that we're going to create jobs in the new economy and renewable electricity, that is, in fact, something we can do. But, Madam Chair, what we've seen now, all joking aside – we teased the minister of economic development about one job. We'd like to see more than one job created or two jobs or three jobs. We'd like to see those hundreds of jobs created. You know what? To create jobs is not an easy thing. Yes, we can create public service jobs, and we can put those on paper, and we can write cheques from the government, and those can be written in red ink in many cases. But it's not that easy to create jobs. Anybody who's worked in the private sector knows that you have to invest money. You have to invest capital, and you have to be prepared to cover your variable costs and your general administrative costs and all the fixed costs that go with running a business.

You also hope to get a modest return on investment, but, again, many businesses are not getting even a modest return on their investment now. They're struggling to survive. They're looking for some stability in the marketplace. Again, we have a tough economy. There is no stability of revenue or stability of the market that they're dealing in. Even businesses that are trying to take advantage of the opportunities in the new economy in renewables are going to be very, very cautious and very reticent to risk their capital there.

So we need good plans, we need robust plans, and we need to know how those jobs are going to be created because they're only one at a time. We need that to happen not just 10 times and a hundred times; we need that to happen thousands and thousands of times to replace the jobs that we're losing. So to subitem (d) here I would say: let's make that stand for diligence. Let's be diligent in what we're doing and what we're claiming.

Madam Chair, the other thing we're talking about in this amendment, which I think is, again, to make us more accountable, is E for effectiveness. When we're talking about investments, we need to know what those investments are going to do. We need to know how much it's going to cost taxpayers. We need to know what those subsidies are going to look like to encourage investment. Again, I think, as was mentioned by many of the other members here, if you have to do too much to encourage investment, is it a good investment? Not likely. If you have to subsidize too deeply, you may not even be able to attract the private capital you need to supplement or complement those subsidies or those public investments, and if you can't do that, you really have to question: are we going down some of the roads that the member mentioned here before, where we've made bad investments in the past? We know that that has been done. Albertans have been on the hook for those, and we paid for those for years. Luckily, were able to dig ourselves out of that hole.

I think that we need to be cognizant here, again, of diligence and effectiveness in what we're doing here. I think that all we're asking for, Madam Chair, is that we be diligent and we make sure we're effective and we make sure that we provide the metrics and reporting that allow us to make those claims of what we're going to achieve. That's what we hope. We hope that this government is successful in making those claims and in moving forward in creating those new jobs. But let's be diligent in making those claims. Let's make sure we put the metrics in place to hold not just this government but your departments accountable. Let them know the metrics we expect from them. That's what I'm asking for, and that's why I would ask you to support this amendment today.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Mr. Rodney: Madam Chair, the initial remarks were short. I will keep these concluding remarks short as well, especially considering the hour but also considering the substance of this amendment. I was hoping to hear from the minister on this. I appreciate that there was one member from the other side that got up. I think anybody watching on TV or reading Hansard would actually be pretty happy with the deliberations that just occurred, with the thoughtful speeches that I've just witnessed here, and I want to express my appreciation for everyone who stood up to speak to this.

It's a short and simple amendment, Madam Chair. It's about two of the things that this government based its election on, which are accountability and transparency. It's about return on investment and increasing jobs, green jobs. Those are both undeniably important concepts. Everyone here agrees on that. Some would say that this is an apolitical amendment. Please, folks, consider that. It doesn't cost anything, the information is very easy to collect, and it is not at all onerous. Any thought about inconsistent reporting just doesn't hold any water.

I appreciate the initiative of the hon. Member for Calgary-South East. It's in the spirit of the time when I was deputy chair of Public Accounts, before almost everyone was in this House. Those who were might remember that I was very happy to keep the feet to the fire of my own government. Almost every week I would ask the question as deputy chair of Public Accounts – I was constantly challenging my own government – can you improve these performance measures? It's better for Albertans. It's better for the government. It's better for everyone. And when it comes to green jobs and return on investment, why wouldn't you want to share, in fact, brag about your accomplishments?

Again, I would need to hear a good reason from the government why you wouldn't want to do this. I haven't heard one yet. For that reason, I'm going to pray for a little Christmas miracle and hope that this simple, short, clear amendment will pass here tonight.

With that, I'll ask to call the question. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak?

All right. The question has been called on amendment A4 as moved by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed on behalf of the Member for Calgary-South East.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A4 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:50 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. As we work our way through this bill, it's somewhat problematic in certain sections here. I want to talk just briefly about the Market Surveillance Administrator, which is referred to in this bill. The market system administrator in the province of Alberta is akin to being the electricity police. That's what they do.

The Market Surveillance Administrator's job – well, here, I'll tell you what their vision is. "A self-sustaining competitive market that delivers fair and efficient outcomes." What a wonderful vision. "A self-sustaining competitive market that delivers fair and efficient outcomes."

The mission of the MSA is "Taking action to promote effective competition and a culture of compliance and accountability in Alberta's electricity and retail natural gas markets."

[They] are committed to excellence in all [they] do . . . and [they] are prepared to be judged by, the following core values:

One,
Integrity	We are honest and ethical in all we do and engage in responsible decision-making that reflects the highest standards of conduct.
Two,
Open	We strive to be accessible, transparent, objective, and principle-based.
Timely	We demonstrate a sense of urgency in our resolve and decision-making.
Four,
Accountable	We are committed to measuring, reporting and achieving results while prudently and efficiently managing our resources.
Progressive	We value forward thinking and learning as we strive for continuous improvement and development at all levels of the organization. We embrace creative approaches to finding solutions. We value diversity and work hard to create a collaborative environment where we understand and benefit from the views of others.

This is the Market Surveillance Administrator, the electricity police in our province.

How effective have they been? How many can remember, not all that many months ago, last year sometime, when the MSA, the Market Surveillance Administrator, caught TransAlta?

An Hon. Member: Which time?

Mr. MacIntyre: Exactly. Which time? The last time they caught TransAlta playing in the marketplace inappropriately, it was a $56 million fine that was levied against TransAlta for manipulating the market inappropriately.

This is the value of having an organization like the MSA watching as a watchdog over our electricity system, to make sure that all of the players are playing by the rules all the time and not gaming the system, not taking advantage of Albertans, that the regulations are followed. This is the value of the MSA, extremely important in our system. They have proven their worth time and time again.

As pointed out by the hon. Government House Leader, that reference I just made was not the first time the MSA has caught TransAlta and given them a whack on the hand and hurt the pocketbook. That's what the MSA is there to do partly. I mean, they have other functions to do, but they are the electricity police, a valuable, very valuable organization.

Knowing that, I was somewhat shocked when, reading through Bill 27, I come across section 16. I would encourage everyone to turn to section 16(1). It reads as follows:

- (1) Despite sections 39, 41 and 42 of the Alberta Utilities Commission Act . . .

Listen to this.

. . . the MSA is not permitted to investigate complaints against the ISO regarding the development of a proposal for a renewable electricity program.

I mean, that just stopped me in my tracks when I read that. That's exactly the same thing as telling the RCMP: "You are not permitted to investigate this particular kind of crime. You're not allowed."

But it doesn't stop there.

- (2) Despite section 26 of the Electric Utilities Act, the Commission is not permitted to consider complaints against the ISO regarding the development of a proposal for a renewable electricity program.

In other words, if I can paraphrase: don't you dare complain about a renewables electricity program under development because the electricity police under this are being ordered not to even consider a complaint regarding the development of a proposal for a renewable electricity program.

It doesn't even say that you can't listen to a complaint about a renewable electricity program. No; it actually says, "the Commission is not permitted to consider complaints against the ISO regarding the development of a proposal." So if a proposal is under development and there are discussions going back and forth and things are happening, they're not even permitted to consider a complaint. Just what kind of banana republic are we having thrust upon us here? Don't you dare complain about that renewables project. In fact, don't you even complain about the development of its proposal. This is beyond absurd.

Despite sections 39, 41, and 42 of the Alberta Utilities Commission Act, the MSA, the very organization that has so many times caught utility companies doing things they shouldn't be doing, the MSA doing its job repeatedly, is not permitted to investigate complaints against the ISO but only regarding the development of a proposal for a renewable electricity program. Here we see again, as we have discussed today, that a pattern is showing up, and that pattern is absolutely crystal clear. Renewables projects are off limits for any critiquing. Renewables projects are off limits for any measurement and verification of results. Renewables projects are exempt from being examined to deliver on what this government is promising they ought to deliver.

Here we have, right here in Bill 27, that the very agency tasked in this province with being the watchdog of our electricity system can continue to be the watchdog over all the facets of our electricity system except renewables. They are off limits for some very strange reason. Just what exactly is going on behind the scenes in this government that the very agency that is the electricity police is now forbidden by this bill to even consider a complaint?

I am absolutely justified in saying that this smacks of banana republic politics. This is terrible. Just what kind of a government hinders a policing body? Now, granted, they're not police, like, with guns. Nevertheless, they're the agency responsible for ensuring that the good people of Alberta are not being fleeced by underhanded corporations. That's the responsibility of the MSA, and this government is tying the MSA's hands. They can't consider a complaint. They can't even consider a complaint of a proposal under development, for crying out loud.

Therefore, Madam Chair, I wish to propose an amendment – you knew it was coming – to move that Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be amended by striking out section 16. Just take the whole thing out of there.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, if you can just wait until I get the original, please.

Mr. MacIntyre: Yes, ma'am.

The Deputy Chair: This amendment will be referred to as amendment A5.

Please go ahead.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. The job of the MSA, the Market Surveillance Administrator, is to protect Albertans. They have done a remarkably good job over the years. I am thankful that in the original design of our deregulated system the government of the day realized that corporations like to push the envelope.

Mr. Mason: That's such a nice way to put it.

Mr. MacIntyre: I was trying to come up with a nice way of putting it.

Some corporations like to push the envelope. When we're talking about billions of dollars of profit and billions of dollars of opportunity, you know, corporations will push that envelope.

Mr. Hanson: They hire people to push envelopes.

Mr. MacIntyre: This is correct; they do hire people to push that envelope.

In the day that our deregulated system was being developed, the government of the day said: "Well, we are not just going to work on the honour system here. No, no. We are going to have an Alberta Utilities Commission, we are going to have a Balancing Pool, and we are going to have a Market Surveillance Administrator to make sure that everybody's playing by the rules, to make sure that nobody in this deregulated market is taking advantage of Albertans."

The MSA has done a very good job. They have a vital role in protecting taxpayers, yes, but ratepayers, too. It is flabbergasting that this government would explicitly say that the MSA cannot look into renewables contracts or programs or developments.

Let's just remember something here: there are other provinces in this nation and other jurisdictions around the world that have gotten themselves into very deep trouble by making bad deals in their haste to force an uneconomic degree of renewables into their systems.

If you read the MSA's mandate and their mission statement, they "take action to promote effective competition and a culture of compliance and accountability." How many amendments have hon. members presented in this House today on this particular bill? I dare to suggest that every one of them had to do with accountability measures – accountability measures – protecting accountability measures that currently exist in the Electric Utilities Act from being punted right out because of this bill. Other amendments have been put forward by members of the opposition to put accountability in where accountability was lacking in this bill, and repeatedly members opposite have unanimously voted down every accountability measure, every performance measure, one after another after another.

Now we come to the very agency that is the electricity police, and they, the agency responsible for accountability, are being denied the power to investigate. Not only is this just plain bad PR; this is just plain bad governance, very bad governance. To do away with an accountability agency like the MSA, that has been so very effective down through the years, is just crazy.

They are in place specifically to monitor Alberta's electricity and retail natural gas markets, to make sure that they operate in a "fair, efficient and openly competitive" manner. Which of those three elements is this government afraid of? Is this government afraid the MSA is going to discover that this government's renewables program is not fair? Remember, the MSA is only being stopped from investigating renewables; they're not being stopped from investigating any other area of our electricity market, only renewables. So what is the government afraid of? Are they afraid of the MSA discovering unfair practices going on?

Well, another one of the MSA's metrics is efficiency. Is the government afraid that the MSA is going to discover that their renewables programs are inefficient, such as the one that we mentioned a little bit earlier about Ivanpah? Ivanpah guaranteed up and down a certain level of electricity being generated from their CSA, and what happened? They only managed to crank out 40 per cent of what they promised, a $2.2 billion project only able to muster 40 per cent of what they had promised. So if we were to actually pass this bill as it currently is, no one would ever have known that we would have an Ivanpah only cranking out 40 per cent of what they had promised the people of California to deliver.

Now, the problem with not having an MSA checking out the efficiencies of these projects is that this government is going to create artificially a shortfall in generation by taking coal-fired offline. The government is going to try to synchronize the coming online of renewables at the same time that coal is coming offline. Well, what will happen if there is no MSA there to warn the government, "Whoa, just a minute; this renewables project is not going to deliver what we needed it to deliver when we brought all that coal off"? That's called shortfall, generating shortfall.

One of three things must now happen. Either we suffer a blackout or a brownout. The other thing that we can do is phone up the CEO of B.C. Hydro and say: "Guess what? We're short. We're short a whole bunch of power." I had a conversation with the CEO of B.C. Hydro about this very thing, actually. She was a very happy lady. She had a big smile on her face. I was talking about shortfall, and she said: yup; you'll be phoning me. If we don't have a supply contract in place with B.C. Hydro, that means we get to buy that power on the spot market. Do you have any idea what that's going to cost? It's going to be a whole lot of money.

So when it comes to getting rid of something like the Market Surveillance Administrator – just think about that, market surveillance; they watch what everybody is doing. The Market Surveillance Administrator will be able to say: "Hey, just a minute. This renewables program is not delivering. We have a problem." But, no, they can't even so much as listen to a complaint. Not even a complaint about it. This is beyond absurd. This government has a solemn responsibility to safeguard Alberta from bad deals that others have made and not put this watchdog in a kennel when we are going to need it the most.

We have a province to the east of us, Ontario, that is suffering terribly in their electricity market because that government made bad deals. To compound the problem, there were corporations that took advantage of a government that wasn't being careful. Here we had politicians making decisions about highly complex technical issues.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A5? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche . . .

Mr. Hanson: St. Paul-Two Hills. Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You'll get that right eventually without even looking.

Just listening with great interest to your comments, you happened to mention something about – was it the MSA that issued the fine to TransAlta?

Mr. MacIntyre: Yeah.

Mr. Hanson: How much money was that for?

Mr. MacIntyre: Fifty-six million dollars.

Mr. Hanson: Fifty-six million dollars.

Well, I'm looking at an interesting article from CBC from September 27, headline Alberta Announces Almost $100M in Heritage Savings Fund Investments.

Alberta has announced close to $100 million in investments as part of its stated goal to further diversify the provincial economy.

Economic Development Minister [who shall go unnamed] says the money will be used to support job creation and innovation in the renewable energy and natural gas sectors.

How much was that again?

Mr. MacIntyre: Fifty-six million.

Mr. Hanson: Fifty-six million dollars.

He says almost $46 million will go to TransAlta Renewables to expand developments in clean energy.

It's not quite $56 million. The interesting thing is: guess who the major advertiser is on this web page?

Mrs. Aheer: Who is the major advertiser?

Mr. Hanson: TransAlta Utilities. Isn't that a coincidence?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, first thing, if you can table that tomorrow.

Mr. Hanson: Absolutely. I'll print it out.

The Deputy Chair: And if you could please speak through me.

Mr. Hanson: Oh. I'm sorry, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Hanson: I'll go on to mention the rest of it seeing as I have to table it anyway.

Another $46 million will [go] to Calfrac Well Services . . .

Get this.

. . . to further environmental innovation in the oil and gas industry."

Mrs. Aheer: In fracking.

Mr. Hanson: In fracking. Isn't that interesting?

Another little sideline is: six days. Like, these are investments that are recommended or requested by the provincial government to our AIMCo investments. Unfortunately, Calfrac's trading was halted six days ago and then reinstated.

Mrs. Aheer: Why?

Mr. Hanson: Because they're losing $40 million a quarter.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, through the chair.

Mr. Hanson: I'm sorry, Madam Chair.

The next one:

Pine Cliff Energy is getting $6 million will go to consolidate natural assets.

The investments are made through the Alberta Investment Management Corporation, better known as AIMCo.

"In the short term, these investments are helping to protect and create jobs," ...

That is interesting.

"They're also expected to provide a financial return to the fund that will contribute to the priority programs and services Albertans value."

Now, I looked at the last three-year cycle of both of these companies, and they're on a pretty steady decline. I sure hope they turn around because it would be terrible to lose a total of $92 million between the two companies.

A year ago, [the] Premier [who shall not be mentioned] ... gave AIMCo a mandate to invest up to three per cent of the Heritage Fund, equivalent to about $540 million, into Alberta companies with growth potential.

Well, when you see a line going down like this, that doesn't look like a lot of growth potential.

I think I'll just leave it at that. I'll be supporting this amendment. We need to stop this kind of foolishness, open up the insight. You know, the idea of shutting down any ability for anyone to investigate or complain about a huge, huge – we're talking about what? – $3 billion in carbon tax investment per year, and Albertans can't complain about the way the money is being spent or have anybody look into it? This is absolutely ridiculous, Madam Chair.

10:20

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A5? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just a brief recap. The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake had mentioned that we're looking at another piece of legislation or another part of legislation that provides no oversight of potentially billions of taxpayer dollars that are going to have absolutely zero accountability from this government.

Now, to recap, we started off with wanting to make an amendment about "fair and responsible" with regard to the ISO. Now, if I'm understanding this correctly, any company that is wanting to put forward projects for renewables now need not apply. There's absolutely zero oversight. Is that what I'm understanding?

The second part is that we asked for some accountability as to how many jobs are going to be created through the projects, but the government decided to vote against that one, too, again much to their detriment, because it would have been tremendously helpful to put this legislation through with those kinds of accountability metrics.

Then another one was a blank cheque that could go to companies, again without any oversight as to how the dollars were going to be spent: another very, very good amendment that would have created more accountability and credibility for this government, for this climate leadership action plan, specifically towards Bill 27.

On top of deleting "fair and responsible," not wanting to report on how many jobs are created, and a blank cheque, now nobody can complain regarding any development of renewables coming online. So what does that say to the average Albertan? That this government is not going to protect them from folks that may come in and manipulate the system.

You know, there are a lot of things when you're in small businesses. I have lots of friends who open small businesses all the time, and they're selling all manner of things. I love to participate and try all sorts of new items. Sometimes they're really wonderful, and sometimes it's to my detriment. I mean, some of the sales pitches that come along with some of these products are pretty amazing, Madam Chair, like, really amazing, actually. I want to believe it, and I try it. Sometimes I love it, and sometimes I'm disappointed. But, you know, it's a couple bucks out of my pocket. Even then I'm very frustrated.

I can't tell you how – frustration doesn't even begin to describe how Albertans are going to feel when this project or projects fail or whatever it is that this government has planned for Albertans with absolutely no oversight. It is appalling to me that this government thinks that you have the ability to get away with that massive manipulation of the people in this province. You have a responsibility to the people of this province to make sure that there is oversight over projects of renewables, and now you're telling Albertans that that's okay, that they don't need to report to the electricity police, as the member likes to call them, the MSA. That is the only oversight that any of us has to make sure that governments are held accountable, to make sure that the projects that are being put through are for Albertans, not for governments, not for deals that are being made.

This holds you accountable. This is absolutely imperative. Why would you take this out of legislation? Don't you ask that to yourselves? Why would you take out accountability? I mean, the fairness and responsibility part was unbelievable, but to actually pull renewables out, for the MSA to be able to come in and say: "You know what? No, this is not a good idea" – they can't even respond, and nobody is even allowed to complain. If a project is in somebody's area, they have nobody to go to. How is that feasible? How is that possible? Is this part of some grand business plan?

You know, it's amazing to me that when I'm going to go back to my constituency on the weekend or post this session and try to explain to Albertans about what this government is doing – let me tell you, they're already frustrated and angry and do not understand what you're doing. When I go and tell them that you have deleted "fair and responsible," that you will not have any oversight as to how many jobs are being created by these projects, that you're expecting a blank cheque to just do whatever you want without the ISO and, on top of that, to have the MSA not be involved in making sure that these projects actually have oversight with regard to renewables, let me tell you – do you think that they're angry about the carbon tax? This is going to completely blow it up in ways that are unimaginable.

I would love for somebody on the government side to please stand up and explain to me how it is that renewables are off limits for the MSA to critique. How does that work? How is that good for Albertans? How is it that you can actually justify getting rid of oversight? How is that okay?

If you look at the Ontario model, for example – I mean, I'm just reading here. The Auditor General in Ontario said that Ontarians paid $37 billion above market price for electricity over eight years. Do you want to know why? There was no oversight. Is that what your plan is for Albertans? If it isn't, I would love to see somebody stand up and defend this. If that is not your plan, defend it.

Secondly, you want to take additional risks with the rates for Albertans? They're already going to be on the hook as taxpayers now, not just ratepayers but taxpayers. You're going to take that risk as well with Albertans? Explain to me how I'm supposed to explain that to my constituents. I actually am more concerned about how you're going to explain it to yours.

Please, I am begging you. You need to vote in favour of this amendment. This is truly to your benefit to make sure that your accountability is something you can stand on firmly with both legs, on behalf of Albertans, with the oversight of the MSA so that every Albertan can know in their hearts that you have their best interests at heart. Otherwise, without this piece in this legislation you are basically putting us down the path of other failed jurisdictions, and that would be – we are already in trouble in this province, truly.

You want to roll out a renewables program? Let's do it with a little bit of collaboration and understanding that the things that we're bringing forward are not detrimental to the legislation that you have. These are pieces of accountability that add credibility to what you're trying to accomplish. And when you legitimately put into your legislation that you do not care to make sure that Albertans are taken care of by this government for the programs that are being rolled forward, I dare say that Albertans are not going to stand for this. I am asking you as the government, through the chair, please consider this piece because – I mean, there have been multiple examples.

I would like to read an article into the record, if I may, about TransAlta specifically, just to give an example for anybody who didn't know what happened. This is from 2015.

TransAlta's argument that [the] market rules allowed it to shut down power plants during peak demand to drive up prices is simply a "back door" attempt to justify its "blatantly" anti-competitive behaviour, says the market watchdog.

That's the MSA.

In closing arguments filed before the Alberta Utilities Commission this week, the Market Surveillance Administrator (MSA) attacked the defence the utility raised at a price manipulation hearing that began in December.

"TransAlta asserts through its expert economic evidence and its own submissions that it would be beneficial to Albertans in the long run for this commission to confirm that it is perfectly acceptable ...

Now, understand. TransAlta is saying that it's acceptable.

... to intentionally and deliberately ...

These are their own words: intentionally and deliberately.

... time discretionary outages at periods of high demand and tight supply to drive up electricity prices," the administrator states in a 218-page argument filed [on] Tuesday.

TransAlta denies it breached any regulations and will respond to the administrator's filing next month.

The MSA suggests the Calgary-based utility contends it is "perfectly proper" to time multiple outages to occur at the same time to drive up prices ...

Really?

... even if such action threatens the reliability of the provincial electric system.

10:30

Understand that this is the MSA that caught TransAlta.

"Any objective economic expert properly informed of the legislature scheme enacted in the province of Alberta would readily conclude that TransAlta engaged in blatantly anti-competitive conduct," the administrator says.

The watchdog filed allegations of anti-competitive behaviour against Alberta's largest utility last year, accusing it of staging discretionary shutdowns at six power plants during peak demand periods over 11 days in 2010 and 2011.

The supper-hour shutdowns on cold winter nights increased electricity prices by 10 to 60 per cent, and forced the companies that owned the rights to the power to scramble to purchase high ... electricity for their customers, according to administrator filings. The shutdowns in 2011 triggered an emergency alert over a short supply of power.

The administrator claims TransAlta made nearly $16 million profit from the shutdowns by selling power it owned at other facilities after driving up prices and by trading in Canada's only deregulated electricity market.

A TransAlta spokeswoman said that the utility will make its counterarguments.

"We will be responding to the MSA's submission of inaccurate assumptions and conclusions ...

That's what TransAlta said.

... with a written statement ..."

The administrator head declined to comment.

TransAlta has argued that the "economic withholding" of electricity from the grid to reduce supply and increase prices is permitted under market rules and points out the administrator was consulting utilities on the issue when the shutdowns occurred.

But the watchdog [the MSA] disagrees.

"TransAlta's conduct was not economic withholding and it cannot legitimately claim any confusion," the administrator said. "It turned off the power it was committed to supply to its competitors at times of tight supply, principally being super peak."

It says there is no economic theory that can possibly justify TransAlta's conduct and its claim the administrator changed the rules after the fact is "an argument built on quicksand."

This is a transparent review done by the MSA with regard to a company that keeps the lights on in this province and our houses warm, and this government is trying to put through legislation that removes that accountability. Please. I can't say it enough. It is absolutely imperative. If this is an oversight, fine. It's taken care of in this House.

But if you're legitimately going to stand up to say that there's no oversight over the new renewables coming online, that to everybody in this House is going to provide all sorts of new and complicated and convoluted situations that nobody can completely understand all aspects of, and you're going to take the accountability out of it by having the MSA not be able to take complaints or be able to participate in making sure that the new companies that are coming into this are held accountable – please.

Again I ask you to vote for this amendment on behalf of all Albertans. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Just a reminder to table that tomorrow.

Mrs. Aheer: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you so much.

The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Chair. First of all, the opposition's overwrought reaction to this is a deliberate misreading of the act. Oversight remains for the market participants. That should be clear, and the opposition has an obligation to make sure that they don't spread misinformation either because they don't get it or they don't want to get it.

Note that in the capacity market we announced earlier this week, that the opposition had some comments about, this will prevent the kind of market manipulation that TransAlta was fined for. Also, we should all be supporting an electricity system, and you should be joining us in protecting consumers.

The MSA's oversight remains for market participants. The act is very clear. The cop is still able to police the process. The only thing that this act prevents is someone using the MSA's powers for criticizing policy direction coming from the minister or from the government. This would lead to the ludicrous scenario that someone could complain to the MSA about the minister's decision, for example, to create an REP in the first place.

An Hon. Member: A what?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Renewable energy program.

This section is necessary to ensure that the MSA's authority isn't abused by people who want to use it to fight against government policy, which is ridiculous. The opposition's notion of somehow leashing the watchdog is ludicrous and patently untrue. We are providing clarity and focus to the MSA to police the market participants and not be abused by those who want to fight government policy. In fact, the hon. member's speech is a good argument for why we need a capacity market.

I would ask that we vote against the arguments of our opposition. Thank you.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

The Acting Chair: I'd recognize the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Now, the minister just said that we're deliberately misreading it, so what I will do is read it word for word.

Investigation, consideration of complaints re ISO program proposal development not permitted

16(1) Despite sections 39, 41 and 42 of the Alberta Utilities Commission Act, the MSA is not permitted to investigate complaints against the ISO regarding the development of a proposal for a renewable electricity program.

Now, that is right out of the bill, Bill 27. I've read it word for word, 16(1).

What I will do, then, is go to sections 39, 41, and 42 of the Alberta Utilities Commission Act, and I'll read them.

39(1) Subject to regulations made under section 59(1)(a), the Market Surveillance Administrator has the mandate

- (a) to carry out surveillance in respect of
  - (i) the supply, generation, transmission, distribution, trade, exchange, purchase or sale of electricity, electric energy, electricity services or ancillary services or any aspect of those activities, and
  - (ii) the provision of retail gas services, or services provided under a default rate tariff, to natural gas customers by natural gas market participants, or any aspect of those activities.

So far it says that the Market Surveillance Administrator has the mandate to carry out the surveillance of the things I've just listed there.

It goes on to say about the Market Surveillance Administrator:

- (b) to investigate matters, on its own initiative or on receiving a complaint or referral under section 41, and to undertake activities to address
  - (i) contraventions of the Electric Utilities Act, the regulations under that Act, the ISO rules, reliability standards, Part 2.1 of the Gas Utilities Act or the regulations under that Act or of decisions, order or rules of the Commission,
  - (ii) conduct that does not support the fair, efficient and openly competitive operation of the electricity market or the natural gas market, and

- (iii) any other matters that relate to or affect the structure and performance of the electricity market or the natural gas market, including negotiating and entering into settlement agreements and bringing matters before the Commission.

(2) Without limiting the generality of subsection (1), the Market Surveillance Administrator's mandate

- (a) in respect of the electricity market includes surveillance and, where applicable, investigation and enforcement, in respect of any one or more of the following:
  - (i) the conduct of electricity market participants;
  - (ii) the structure and performance of the electricity market;
  - (iii) the conduct of the Independent System Operator;
  - (iv) the conduct of the Balancing Pool;
  - (v) the conduct of owners of generating units to which power purchase arrangements apply in meeting their obligations to provide the generating capacity set out in those power purchase [agreements];
  - (vi) arrangements, information sharing and decisions relating to electricity market participants exchanging or wishing to exchange electric energy and ancillary services or any aspect of those activities;
  - (vii) arrangements, information sharing and decisions relating to electricity market participants providing or wishing to provide retail electricity services to electricity customers, or any aspect of those activities.

I can continue to read if you would like, but I think it's very clear what this says here. It's very clear that these are all conditions that the Market Surveillance Administrator can investigate.

Now I'll go back to the bill. This bill says:

16(1) Despite sections 39, 41 and 42 of the Alberta Utilities Commission Act, the MSA is not permitted to investigate complaints against the ISO regarding the development of a proposal for a renewable electricity program.

I think it's very clear, what it says. I don't think there's any misreading going on here, unless you'd like me to continue reading everything here. I think it's very clear that this government has in this bill taken out the ability of the MSA to investigate renewable electricity programs. That's what it says. There's nothing in sections 31, 41, or 42.

Maybe I'll read 41 just for the fun of it, just because somebody suggested that something was misread.

41(1) Any person may make a complaint or refer a matter to the Market Surveillance Administrator.

(2) Without limiting the generality of subsection (1), the Independent System Operator and the Commission may refer a matter to the Market Surveillance Administrator.

(3) A complaint under subsection (1) must be in writing and must include

- (a) the name and address of the person making it,
- (b) the particulars of the complaint,
- (c) any information or facts supporting the complaint, and
- (d) the signature of the individual or authorized representative of the person making the complaint.

That's 41.

Now, it also says, "Despite sections 39, 41 and 42," so I will read 42.

(1) The Market Surveillance Administrator

- (a) may, on its own initiative, investigate any matter that is within its mandate,
- (b) unless section 43 applies, shall investigate any complaint or referral made to it that the Market Surveillance Administrator is satisfied is within its mandate, and
- (c) may investigate any event that affects the operation of the electricity market or the natural gas market.

(2) The Market Surveillance Administrator shall notify the person making a complaint or referral of the results of an investigation conducted in response to the complaint or referral.

Now, Mr. Chair, I think it's very clear. "Despite sections 39, 41 and 42," which spell out what the Market Surveillance Administrator can do – it says that despite what the Market Surveillance Administrator can do in the Alberta Utilities Commission Act, "the MSA is not permitted to investigate complaints against the ISO regarding the development of a proposal for a renewable electricity program." Am I missing something? I don't think so.

Now, we could go to 16(2).

Despite section 26 of the Electric Utilities Act, the Commission is not permitted to consider complaints against the ISO regarding the development of a proposal for a renewable electricity program.

Let's go to the Electric Utilities Act, and we'll look at what 26 says. Again, in the bill it says:

16(2) Despite section 26... the Commission is not permitted to consider complaints against the ISO regarding... renewable electricity program.

Basically, that's what it says. So renewable electricity programs are off limits for the MSA. I'll read 26.

- (1) Any person may make a written complaint to the Commission about the conduct of the Independent System Operator.
- (2) The Commission must dismiss the complaint, giving reasons for the dismissal, if the Commission is satisfied that
  - (a) the substance of the complaint has been or should be referred to the Market Surveillance Administrator for investigation,
  - (b) the complaint relates to a matter the substance of which is before or has been dealt with by the Commission or any other body, or
  - (c) the complaint is frivolous, vexatious or trivial or otherwise does not warrant an investigation or a hearing.
- (3) The Commission may, in considering a complaint, do one or more of the following:
  - (a) dismiss all or part of the complaint;
  - (b) direct the Independent System Operator to change its conduct in relation to a matter that is the subject of the complaint;
  - (c) direct the Independent System Operator to refrain from the conduct that is the subject of the complaint.
- (4) A decision of the Commission under subsection (2) or (3) is final and may not be appealed under section 29 of the Alberta Utilities Commission Act.

So, Mr. Chair, if there's any misreading done now, I guess, when you read right from the act and read right from the bill, then I'm not sure what the minister's talking about because I think it's pretty clear. Actually, she accused the opposition of deliberate misreading. Maybe I could challenge her to suggest that I deliberately misread something just now, when I read it right out of the two acts and right out of the bill. Okay. I don't hear anything yet.

Anyway, here we are with a government that obviously fears accountability. They've come up with all these grandiose ideas, taxpayer-funded to initiate them, taxpayer-backed on the back end in case they fail, and then this government doesn't want to have any accountability. So we're using Albertans' money, taxpayers' money to bait companies in to invest and then guarantee that they're not going to lose any money and go broke on the back end with taxpayers' money, with Albertans' money. Then: "Oh, no. We don't want to be accountable. We don't want anybody to be able to complain and find out that anything went wrong."

There's an article here, TransAlta to Pay $56M in Fines after Capitalizing on Plant Shutdowns. It says:

The Alberta Utilities Commission (AUC) approved a record-high settlement between the Alberta Market Surveillance Administrator (MSA) and TransAlta.

So here it is: the Alberta Utilities Commission approved a record-high settlement with the MSA, who this part of the bill is referring to, who this part of the bill says should have no power to do anything over a renewable electricity program, for $56 million.

... TransAlta timed outages at its coal-fired generating units such as Sundance and Keephills, located in Parkland County.

It goes on to say:

"They unfairly timed the outages to their own advantage and to their own portfolio and they engaged in insider trading because they knew what was going on and nobody else did," ...

"They engaged in manipulative conduct. They could have deferred the outages to off-peak hours, but they chose instead to take the outages during peak or super-peak hours to maximize the benefit to its own portfolio" ...

and, of course, to cost Albertans more. That's who had to pay.

The settlement includes a $25-million administrative penalty as well as $27 million in economic benefit penalty as well as $4 million to cover the MSA's legal costs ...

According to the AUC, this is the first time plant shutdowns have been used in order to manipulate the market.

Here we have an instance where the MSA discovered a company trying to manipulate the market to its own benefit. Insider trading, they called it; manipulative conduct, they called it.

The MSA was doing its job. "According to the AUC, this is the first time plant shut downs have been used in order to manipulate the market." Obviously, the MSA caught this the first time it happened, obviously doing its job. But we have a government here that wants to take away the MSA's power when it comes to investigating renewable power companies, renewable electricity programs. Why would they do that? Why would they take away the power of somebody, an organization tasked with making sure that Albertans aren't ripped off? It doesn't make sense.

10:50

Now look at another article here. Just listen to some of this stuff. I'm appalled but, I guess, not surprised when we have governments meddling in things they know nothing about.

Ontarians have paid $37-billion more than market price for electricity over eight years and will pay another $133-billion extra by 2032 as a result of haphazard planning and political meddling, a report from the Auditor General says.

Ontarians have had this problem of political meddling, haphazard planning, things like this government just wants to do on a daily basis here in this Legislature: pass bills where they can manipulate things, meddle in things, and then remove any kind of oversight.

It goes on to say:

What's more, Hydro One is in rough shape, with ever-increasing numbers of power outages and aging equipment "at very high risk of failing" that needs $4.472-billion worth of repairs.

The investigator into this said:

"We found that the electricity power planning process had essentially broken down over the past decade" ... "The [energy] ministry has made a number of decisions about power generation that went against OPA's technical advice."

Here we have the Energy minister in Ontario making a number of decisions that went against OPA's technical advice. We've seen things in these bills where the minister has all the power, she can make all these decisions on her own, but there can be problems with that, especially if you don't have oversight.

Now, it goes on to say:

The province has doled out piles of corporate welfare behind closed doors . . . [They] found that in 2007 and 2011, OPA produced such a plan only to have the Liberals overrule it and make ad-hoc decisions on the system.

The Ontario Power Authority goes to the government with ideas and plans and then has the government overrule them.

Now, the Energy minister defended the above-market prices as necessary.

Can you imagine? The prices of power are above market, and the Energy minister defended them.

"Wholesale market prices were not sufficient to attract much-needed investment in Ontario's electricity generation sector . . ."

Now, where have we heard this before? Market prices were not sufficient to attract much-needed investment in the electricity generation. Here we are. They need to be incentivized. In other words, there wasn't enough revenue coming to the generators, so they weren't building generating capacity. Same thing here. Nobody's building renewables. Well, in fact, they are actually building some renewables but not fast enough for the government, so what do they want to do? We'll take some tax money from Albertans and give it to these companies. That'll get them to do it.

[They] also contended that some of the higher electricity prices were a cost of weaning the province off coal-fired power and onto cleaner sources.

Here we are again. Some of the higher electricity prices were the cost of weaning the province off coal-fired power and onto cleaner sources. Where have we heard that before?

[The government] failed to take advantage of low electricity prices and instead mandated higher prices for wind and solar power companies than they had received previously. This added up to $9.2-billion more in renewables costs.

There we are: make higher prices for wind and solar so that taxpayers have to pay more.

In another case, when the government closed a coal-fired power plant in Thunder Bay in 2013, it decided to convert the plant to biomass to keep it going. Energy experts at the OPA told the government the conversion was not cost-effective, but the government went ahead anyway.

I tell you what: this is so much like what we're seeing here it's actually scary to think about.

Okay. Where else can we go?

Some of the biomass burned at the plant is imported from Europe . . .

Doesn't that make sense?

. . . which undercuts part of the rationale for keeping it going, which was to help Ontario's forestry industry.

So they actually had to import from across the ocean for their biomass plant. But, yeah: "Let's not have anybody look at this. No way. We don't want anybody to look at this. You know, this is a renewable electricity program. Nobody can look at this. Shame on you for even thinking such."

In a third situation . . . OPA warned the province that the Lower Mattagami hydroelectric project was $1-billion over budget, but the government allowed it to proceed. As a result, power from that plant costs $135/megawatts per hour.

Sad, sad.

The Acting Chair: I recognize the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. In view of the hour and despite the tremendous efficiency and effective use of time that we've spent tonight, I believe that we should maybe go home, so I will move that the committee rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am quite honourable.

The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 27. Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Having heard the report, does the Assembly agree with the motion? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: All those opposed? That is carried.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, with respect I will move that the Assembly now adjourn until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:58 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 30, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

I must share that as I walked down the hall, I was advised by the Sergeant-at-Arms that today is St. Andrew's Day.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: School groups. The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of extremely bright young people from the incredible constituency of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. These 22 students are from Beacon Heights school, and I must say that every October I look forward to visiting them during Read In Week. They ask some of the most intelligent, thoughtful questions out of all the schools that I visit, and I'm thrilled that they can join us again in the Assembly. They're here with their teacher, Ms Meryl Roberts, and volunteer Vicki Herron. They're also accompanied by Keria Omer Abdu and Scott Gudbranson. I'd ask all the students and their teachers and volunteers to rise and enjoy the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school groups, hon. members?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you Miss Megan Perram. She's a constituent of Edmonton-Centre, a graduate studies student in the newly formed gender and social justice department at the University of Alberta. I would ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly this year's inductees into Alberta's 4-H Hall of Fame. It is fitting that they are here today on the last day of National 4-H Month. Helen Andrews has been a 4-H leader and volunteer for 40 years in many roles, including district treasurer and secretary, regional secretary, and was a founding member of Focus on 4-H. Mrs. Andrews is also involved in numerous community organizations, including the Round Hill agriculture society, and was a pride of Strathcona award recipient.

Corine Verbeek has been a 4-H leader and volunteer for more than 30 years, including roles as district key leader and president, northwest regional president, and provincial equine leaders forum committee member. Mrs. Verbeek is described as someone with extreme passion and enthusiasm who's always willing to do whatever is needed to make a 4-H event successful or help 4-H members learn.

Well, I'd like to personally thank both Helen and Corine for their outstanding service to their communities. They're here today with family and friends as well as Alesha Hill, 4-H volunteer development specialist with Agriculture and Forestry. Mr. Speaker, I'd like them to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mrs. Schreiner: Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all my fellow members in the House my special guests, who contribute to the success of the micro-society in Red Deer-North: Stu Henry, superintendent of the Red Deer public school district; Cathy Peacocke, Red Deer public school vice-chair; Braden Kilpatrick, principal of Aspen Heights; Allan Baile, Aspen Heights teacher; Trent Hagerman, Aspen Heights student and micro-society owner of worm wranglers and the bottle depot, a fully licensed bottle depot; Delila Osmanovic, Aspen Heights student and micro-society member of parliament and minister of small business; Mackenzie Brown, Aspen Heights student and micro-society prime minister. I ask that my guests stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Pasquale Russo and Randeem Burr. They are here today representing Vista Housing for Seniors, a significant provider of quality affordable apartment options for seniors who live in the Edmonton region. Randeem is their chief administrative officer, and Pasquale is a facility manager. I would ask that they now please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce a constituent of mine, Mr. Steve Grover. I met him at an event at the Association for the Rehabilitation of the Brain Injured, where he shared his passion with me for motorcycles, ATVs, and road safety. As a veteran personal injury lawyer with a practice in Calgary Mr. Grover looks forward to observing the debate on Bill 36 and seeing his MLA in action. I would ask him to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Woollard: Mr. Speaker, I'm very happy to stand today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Leslie Sax. Leslie is a fellow supporter of the Schizophrenia Society of Alberta, which, most people know, provides housing for people living with schizophrenia and increases awareness of schizophrenia and other psychotic disorders. We met at an event in which there were family members of people living with schizophrenia who had written and were performing a production, a play called Starry Starry Night. The play illustrates how people living with schizophrenia deal with their illness in a very realistic and moving way. Leslie, if you could please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Infrastructure and Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly members of the board of directors of the Chinese Benevolent Association of Edmonton. The Chinese Benevolent Association has been helping members of our Chinese community since 1929. Their legacy includes Edmonton's Chinatown Gate, the Chinese Elders' Mansion and seniors' lodge, the Chinatown Care Centre, the Chinatown Multicultural Centre, pagodas in Beechmount and Northern Lights cemeteries, and more. They also organize major events such as the Lunar New Year Celebration, the Chinatown Conference, the Mid-autumn Festival, to name just a few. They are strong advocates and excellent representatives of Edmonton's dynamic Chinese community. Joining us today are Mei Hung, Lap Cheek Kwong, Allan Kwan, Henry Fung, and Raymond Ng. I would ask that they please rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of this House Bonnie Lopushinsky and Tony Bagga from the Heart Lake First Nation, just north of Lac La Biche. Bonnie is the communication co-ordinator for the First Nation. In this role she's responsible for communications between chief and council and other levels of government, specifically in the areas of investment and business, justice, social programs, and health. Tony is the consultation director and provides liaison between business and the Nation, focusing on economic development and investments, with a focus on the environment. May I please ask Bonnie and Tony to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

1:40

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly someone who has been on this journey through public service with me from the very beginning, my constituency assistant Kathryn Casement. Kathryn works incredibly hard in our constituency office every day to bring services and to help all of our constituents in Calgary-East. They're incredibly lucky to have her, as am I, so if she could please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, I apologize in advance. I'll go fast because I have quite a few introductions. One of the largest privileges of being in this position is meeting some incredible people. The individuals who are here are here from AARC, the Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre. They're advocating for their treatment program, which is specially designed for adolescents 12 to 21 years of age who are diagnosed with substance use disorder. As I say your names, if you wouldn't mind please rising: Byron, Tammy, Dona, Deb, Robyn, Maureen, Joan, Dennis, another Joan, Pamela, Darryl, Elizabeth, Wendy, Lexi, Linda, Michel, Melissa, Keegan, and Rudi. I hope that I haven't forgotten anybody else. If I have forgotten, please stand with the group. I thank you so much for your service to youth. Members, please join me in extending our traditional welcome to the Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly an Albertan leader who is taking on the fight against adolescent addiction. Dr. Jackie Smith is currently the director of community education and research at the Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre. Dr. Smith has been employed with AARC for the past eight years. She completed her PhD in the Faculty of Nursing at the University of Calgary, where she explored the impact of addiction on the family through the lens of a mother. Thank you to all the advocates here today from AARC. Jackie, I ask that you please enjoy the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other guests, hon. members? The Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have some guests from the most conservative constituency in the world: Strathmore-Brooks. I'd like to introduce some people who do very great work for Alberta and my constituents. Heather Pigott is my senior constituency assistant from Brooks. She has worked for me since the 2015 election. She is here with her husband, Jo, and Doug Fenton. She is an absolute pillar of strength for the work that I do in Strathmore-Brooks. She is really the only reason anyone likes me there.

Her husband, Jo Pigott, is here. He has worked in oil and gas since 1995. He is a part owner of a small drilling company in Brooks and has been deeply affected by low oil prices. I'll not mention anything else that's hurt his business. Jo has been involved as a Wildrose volunteer and is a huge part of our constituency association.

Doug Fenton is Heather's father. He's from Edmonton. He is a retired upstream oil and gas worker of over 40 years.

Liz McConnell is here. She is my constituency assistant from Strathmore, who also does amazing work, particularly on casework like AISH and workers' compensation. She is an asset to my team.

Mr. Speaker, these people make me look good, at least as far as that's possible. I ask that they please stand and receive the greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Andrew Jones. Andrew is here in Edmonton meeting – advocating for an end to homelessness. He's also famous for being the Alberta Party's Calgary-Varsity constituency association president. I'll have Andrew please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, any other guests?

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Pipeline Construction

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Along with most Albertans I welcomed the good news of two new pipeline approvals yesterday. [some applause] I hope I get extra seconds. Line 3 on the Trans Mountain expansion will create thousands of jobs and billions in economic activity. Getting these pipelines will be a long-deserved victory for Alberta.

But as a former pipeline projects engineer I know that many challenges lie ahead. There will be fierce opposition to Kinder Morgan, specifically by those who would deny the science and engineering of pipelines. This ideological opposition will play out in the streets and in the courts.

We will need to come together as a Legislature and as a province to ensure we get shovels in the ground ASAP. As a former energy worker and as a member of the opposition I want to do my part to make sure this happens. There will need to be firm timelines so these projects don't fall victim to schedule and cost overruns. Any delays could cause us to lose access to new markets, billions of dollars, and jobs. This is something that cannot be allowed to happen, and I'm sure we can all agree. We are here to serve the people before the party, and the pipelines serve in the interests of the people of Alberta and Canada.

Unfortunately, we are already starting to hear opposition to the pipelines from inside this government. Members of the Premier's oil sands advisory group have worked to block the Trans Mountain expansion. Elizabeth May said that she would go to jail before she would let this project happen. Let's come together and call these voices what they are: extreme and unhelpful. Let's keep fighting for the new pipelines to tidewater, like Energy East and Keystone XL. Let's demand fair value for our ethical oil. Let's write our own future today and always.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I want to remind all members of the practice we have in this House. When members' statements are made, there are no comments made from any side of the House.

Microsociety School Program in Red Deer

Mrs. Schreiner: Mr. Speaker, I am proud that my statements reflect my sincere fondness for Red Deer-North. Today I bring the unique microsociety within Aspen Heights school to the attention of the House.

Microsociety integrates our educational curriculum with a mini marketplace. The students and staff of Aspen Heights participate in the supply and demand aspects aligned with our present socioeconomic model. Students learn and experience the true essence of government and democratic process. Each student from kindergarten to grade 5 contributes their knowledge, skills, and abilities to the success of their microsociety. With a strong connection between curriculum and market activity, the fundamentals of knowledge achievement is engaged through hands-on participation. Within this unique society is a fully licensed bottle depot, where numeracy, literacy, efficacy, and inclusion are elements of the real world that are engaged.

What is truly exclusive within this microsociety is the strong support of inclusion, parity, and the simple notion that our children can dream big. There are no preconceived societal limitations that prejudice their place within their society. Their active labour market policies support that everyone's contributions are integral and vital to the success of their community.

Mr. Speaker and fellow members, within the heart of Red Deer-North is a place without bias, where our children are learning the true essence of community, which is the fabric of our great province. As their minds are fashioned to learn, they are experiencing a society that is void of division. They are introduced to the concepts of a minimum wage and health and safety at the onset and will carry these values throughout their lives. These are strong sandbox morals and lessons. They reflect socioeconomic ideologies that contribute to an economy where strong social conscience is universal.

I am proud that microsociety exists within my constituency of Red Deer-North. Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Pipeline Construction

Mr. Jean: Given the independent evidence-based approval by the National Energy Board for new pipeline projects, yesterday's announcements were long overdue. While the rejection of the approved Northern Gateway pipeline is a terrible politicized decision, we welcome the approval of Kinder Morgan's Trans Mountain and Enbridge's line 3 pipeline expansion. This decision is good for Alberta if these pipelines actually get built. We've seen pipelines approved in the past, only to be tied up in legal battles by special-interest groups. Is the NDP committed to denouncing those willing to do anything to stop Alberta's pipelines? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I don't think I've ever been more excited for question period than I am for the one today. Today is a good day for Alberta, and it's a good day for Albertans. Because of the leadership of this government, Alberta did see two new pipeline approvals yesterday. We saw what happened with Conservative governments in the past, who move forward on a do-nothing approach. Instead, we did something, and we saw yesterday that we're getting real results.

Mr. Jean: Of course, we also had yesterday several key NDP advisers declaring a battle against Alberta's pipelines. NDP oil sands adviser Karen Mahon is rallying opposition to Kinder Morgan, quote, in the streets, in the courts, and at the ballot box. End quote. Another member, Tim Gray, has his organization promising to, quote, dig in to stop the Energy East pipeline. Oil sands adviser co-chair Tzeporah Berman denounced new pipelines entirely. Sounds like none of them care much about a carbon tax and what that gives us. We can't have people working for Alberta and Albertans who want to destroy our energy sector. It's ridiculous. When will the Premier fire . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: Just to recap what somebody else said yesterday, the Prime Minister said that we could not have approved this project without the leadership of our Premier and Alberta's climate leadership plan, Mr. Speaker.

The mandate of the group that's being referred to is to look at ways we can achieve the hundred megatonne cap on emissions while respecting the work that we need to do with energy companies, environmental leaders, and those who represent workers, Mr. Speaker. We saw what happened when the member opposite was in Ottawa and we had a Conservative government in Alberta here: nothing. I see the score. It's two to nothing.

Mr. Jean: While the Premier claims her oil sands advisers don't approve pipelines, they declared openly that new development will actually exceed the legislated emissions cap, meaning no new oil sands development is even possible. That sends a very dangerous signal to investors and to future pipeline prospects. If president-elect Donald Trump immediately approves Keystone in January, this cap will begin constricting activity in the oil sands for the long term. It'll constrict it. Leave no question about it. This cap puts growth in our oil sands at risk. Why, then, is the NDP doubling down on this decision?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we saw what happened when the Official Opposition spoke into an echo chamber. We got nothing accomplished. Instead, we've brought people together who represent environmental organizations, First Nations, oil and gas. We brought them together one year ago. We all stood on stage, and we moved forward with a very thoughtful climate leadership plan, and it is seeing real results. The proof is in the pipelines.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Jean: Proof isn't action, Mr. Speaker. We've seen very little action actually happen with this government.

Oil and Gas Transportation to the West Coast

Mr. Jean: Wildrose was proud last spring when all parties in this House supported a motion for the government to lobby against a tanker ban and in support of the Northern Gateway pipeline. But yesterday Ottawa ignored approval from the National Energy Board. They politicized the decision-making on pipelines by saying no. They made it worse by implementing a tanker ban that will choke out any new pipeline proposals through northern B.C. Why hasn't the NDP pushed back against a decision that is blocking $300 billion in economic growth in Canada?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. If you spend time in Vancouver, where we're going to see this pipeline expansion go to, you'll see that there are tankers there today. They're exporting Alberta honey, Alberta beef to Asian markets, and we are so proud of that. And because of the good results of this government and action on a pipeline, we're going to be able to add our oil and gas products to the Asia Pacific market, and I couldn't be prouder. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. government members, tone it down. Tone it down.

Mr. Jean: Policy that blocks Canadian oil from moving to the west coast but allows dictator oil to be imported on the east coast is simply ridiculous. It's disappointing the NDP hasn't lifted a finger to oppose it at all. Alberta doesn't need just one pipeline; we need several. A project like Gateway would have meant – listen to this – $98 billion in tax revenues over 30 years. Blocking crude oil tanker traffic on the northern B.C. coast blocks a sensible route for any new pipeline projects and the jobs that will come with them for Albertans and all Canadians. Will the NDP lobby against this tanker ban? Yes or no?

Ms Hoffman: I said it in the first question, Mr. Speaker. I'll say it to everyone. There are tankers on the coast right now bringing our products overseas, and because of the work of this government, because of the successful work in getting two pipelines approved, we will have the ability to sell our product to the Asia Pacific markets, and the only ones talking down Alberta's economy and our great success are the Official Opposition. I wish you'd stop talking down our pipelines. [interjections]

The Speaker: Stop the clock, please.

I can feel the emotion in the room today. There is a very buoyant feeling to the room but also a very noisy one.

Please start the clock.

Mr. Jean: The decision to reject Northern Gateway sets a very dangerous precedent. It shows that Ottawa is more interested in playing politics with pipeline approvals than respecting the evidence-based work done by the National Energy Board. The result today is $300 billion in potential economic growth that has vanished, simply vanished. It leaves all future pipeline approvals up to political calculation instead of science and what's good for the economy and all Canadians. Will the Premier denounce Ottawa's decision to reverse the approval done by the NEB, and if not, why not?

Ms Hoffman: Don Braid this morning in the Calgary Herald said, "The federal approval is a sign of hope just as the economy might be ready to rise again. Politicians who carp at such a moment start to look as intransigent as the hardline oilsands opponents. Nothing will please them." Mr. Speaker, I have to say once again that we are proud to take leadership on the international stage economically, environmentally, and Albertans sure have done a good job in sending us to Ottawa because we're getting results. [interjections]

The Speaker: We warn you again, hon. members: the volume. I've asked that we stop the clock again, folks. Please tone it down.

Third main question. Start the clock.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Appreciate that.

Let me be clear. New pipelines are good for Alberta and Albertans, but I don't think Albertans need to be forced to pay for a punishing new carbon tax. It's a carbon tax that isn't stopping any legal battles, any protests, or even convincing NDP appointees that Alberta has the social licence for new pipelines. The fact is that in just 32 days the NDP's carbon tax is going to come into place before any shovels are even in the ground. This tax is bad news for Alberta families and businesses right across the province. Premier, why won't you just simply cancel the carbon tax?

Ms Hoffman: Well, if he won't listen to the Prime Minister and he won't listen to the Calgary Herald, maybe he'll listen to a CEO, a CEO for Canadian Energy Pipeline Association, Chris Bloomer, who said: this process would not have come to the outcome it has without Alberta's climate leadership plan. He also went on to say: so clearly it fits with the climate policy and the agenda of the government. Guess what? Our agenda is working. Protect the environment. Protect jobs. Grow the economy. I wish you'd stop being so barrel-half-empty and think about the two-thirds barrel we just got yesterday, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, do you want me to stop the clock again? Tone it down.

Mr. Jean: It was bad enough when the NDP imposed a $30 per tonne carbon tax, but slipped into yesterday's pipeline announcement by the Prime Minister was a big thumbs up from Alberta for an alarming $50 per tonne carbon tax. That's a startling amount of money that will come from charities, from businesses, and families' pocketbooks to pay for this Premier's green slush funds. The Premier has given her blessing for an even more expensive carbon tax. Will the Premier release the numbers on the full cost of this carbon tax? Yes or no?

Ms Hoffman: We know the price of doing nothing. We saw the Leader of the Official Opposition do that for 10 years in Ottawa, and the result was nothing. Instead, we've taken a thoughtful motion on moving forward and increasing our market access. And guess what, Mr. Speaker? Here's the result: two pipelines. We're working. It's being successful. I'm sorry. You won't wipe the smile off my face. Today is a good day for Albertans.

Mr. Jean: It seems, Mr. Speaker, that whenever Ottawa says, "Jump," the NDP asks, "How high?" on the way up.

On coal they're wasting billions of dollars to shut off plants. Now a carbon tax that the vast majority of Albertans don't want: the Premier has given her blessings to this, and it's wrong. Energy infrastructure should not be tied to how much we tax people. Every time Alberta asks for a new pipeline, you shouldn't come up with a new way to tax Albertans. Why, then, did the Premier go all in on yesterday's announcement while signing off on a plan that will simply hammer taxpayers at home and hurt Albertans every place across this province?

Ms Hoffman: Well, here's another quote, Mr. Speaker, from Carolyn Dunn from the CBC: the skyscrapers in Calgary seem just a little bit taller today as Alberta's oil industry, a major driver in the Canadian economy, celebrates what it calls a new opportunity to compete globally. We're smiling. The skyscrapers in Calgary are smiling. Albertans are smiling. We're getting real results. I wish you'd just stop and smile and be grateful for the fact that we're actually getting results for Albertans instead of just trying to beat everybody up every day.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Provincial Debt Repayment

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Finance minister complains that the price of oil has left a big hole in Alberta's finances. Nobody blames the government for the price of oil. We do blame them for their response. The NDP has promised to run the provincial debt up to $60 billion, with no plan to pay even one dollar of it back. To the Finance minister. You've made it clear that your plan for getting through the recession is to borrow like there's no tomorrow. Will you now tell Albertans how they'll clean up your mess by paying it back when tomorrow does come?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question from the third-party leader. You know, our plan is showing results. Q2 was released on Monday, and that plan talked about 2017 being a more positive experience and environment in terms of growth, GDP than this year. If we're seeing that happen and we're seeing two pipelines approved, we're going to see even more investment come back to this province. When we see more investment, we'll see a smaller deficit, and we'll get back to the plan of balancing.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Since Northern Gateway, approved when we were in government, was cancelled, you're minus one there.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the government is banking on revenue from the newly approved Kinder Morgan pipeline to bail them out of their leaky fiscal boat, so let's talk a bit more. Trans Mountain is estimated to generate $1.3 billion in royalties a year. The problem is that by 2019 the interest payments on the accumulated debt from this government will be $3 billion a year. To the Energy minister: since the Finance minister has borrowed so much that the pipelines approved won't even cover the interest on the borrowing, do you have a couple more pipelines to support your Finance minister's big-spending ways?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. You know, Mr. Speaker, what we are doing is that we're keeping the spending tap down. That side over there: what they did was that they had their operational spending glued to the price of oil, so it went up and it went down. That hurt Albertans. That hurt investment. That left us in a recessionary hole. We're fixing that. You broke it.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, no Albertan believes this Finance minister is controlling spending, but he does brag that Alberta has the lowest GDP of any province in Canada. You're welcome, Minister. It currently sits at 9.7 per cent, and the government plans to grow it to 15.5 per cent by 2019. The fact is that Alberta's ratio was at 3.4 when the NDP took office. To put that in perspective, this government is going to triple the debt-to-equity ratio in one term of office. To the Finance minister. Albertans deserve to know if your department is even working on a debt repayment plan. Are you simply planning on defaulting on the mortgage?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. I think I've said this many times over. You know, our plan is to make sure that spending stays under control, not like the previous government, where spending sometimes went up 10 per cent, went up 8 per cent, went up 6 per cent. We're far under that in terms of growth plus CPI. I will tell you that if they had put more money away in the good years, we would have a lot more today. They spent it like drunken sailors. Now we're having to deal with it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Breaking Alberta's land-lock and accessing new markets is a significant step towards a stronger economic future for Alberta. Given the economic impact an additional 1 million barrels of oil sold per day will have on our province, to the Minister of Energy: how will the government engage with the federal government and ensure the Trans Mountain and line 3 pipeline projects are built?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we're going to keep working. We haven't been the cheerleaders on the sideline hoping pipelines would get built. We have rolled our sleeves up. We're going to continue to roll up our sleeves and do the work that it takes to support the companies who are trying to build these pipelines. We're going to keep on talking about our climate leadership plan, we're going to keep on working with our First Nations and communities, and we're going to keep talking about how to get pipelines built.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Prime Minister singled out the Premier's leadership and our government's climate leadership plan as the reason why pipelines were approved, to the Minister of Energy: what role did our climate leadership plan have in building a national consensus on these projects?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, you know, within a week of us announcing the climate leadership plan, I started hearing from our stakeholders that the conversation was changing, and it has continued to change throughout the year. The results of that climate leadership plan and talking about it were proven yesterday, when we got two pipelines approved.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the approval of these projects was premised on Alberta's strong environmental policy, to the Minister of Energy: how will these pipelines support the work of our climate leadership plan?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, we've said all along that there isn't a disconnect between being environmentally responsible and extracting our resources. We're going to continue with that message. By getting pipelines to tide-water, we are going to have more money kept in Alberta. We don't have to be at the mercy of our one customer, who is now our competitor, down south. We can get better prices for our product, and that money in Alberta will help to work us towards a greener economy.

Government Spending

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, this week the second quarterly fiscal update was released, containing projections for a record deficit and a record $14 billion of new debt this year alone. The only silver lining is a $100 million rounding error from the last quarterly update, which the minister called a modest improvement. That's .007 per cent of the deficit. Modest indeed. At that rate it will take 35 years to balance the budget. Does the minister have a credible plan to balance the budget before his 95th birthday?

Mr. Ceci: I just wonder how he knows how old I am, Mr. Speaker.

I do have a plan. We do have a plan, of course. If he was reading the Q2 report, he also knows that next year there's going to be 2.3 per cent growth to our GDP in this province. Twenty-five thousand jobs over the last three months have been added, and the deficit is coming down. They would have thrown kids out to the street by not having them in schools. They would have closed hospitals. They would have made life less stable for Albertans.

2:10

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, we can go back to the comment you made at a later time in the agenda, but I must tell you that you looked much younger when you arrived here than you do today.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, it's going to be Albertans who throw them out on the street.

Given, Mr. Speaker, that the government has already blown their budget for this year, overspending by $600 million – in addition, the government has already dropped its commitment to find $250 million of in-year savings just halfway through the year. Is the minister so unconcerned with the out-of-control spending and deficit of this government that he couldn't keep his commitment to find .004 per cent of the budget in in-year savings?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, we take our promises in terms of the budget very seriously. We have found those in-year savings and more, so that's a really good thing. You know, we are working, of course, to bend the curve on spending. That is happening as well.

You know, the other side is: spend some weeks, cut other weeks. We're focused on one thing. Delivering good programs and services, diversifying the economy, getting Albertans back to work: those are the things that are needed now as our economy is starting to come up again.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, every week is a spending week for the NDP.

Given, Mr. Speaker, that on Monday the minister was asked if 2024 was still their rough, shot-in-the-dark target for a balanced budget, despite there being no plan whatsoever to get there, and the minister confirmed that this was still their rough target with an unenthusiastic verbal shoulder shrug – based on the current projections, a child born this coming March would owe $22,500 of provincial government debt by the time the NDP actually balances the budget, when that child turns seven years old. Does the minister believe that it is moral to saddle young Albertans with the reckless borrowed money of today?

Mr. Ceci: You know, what Albertans were unenthusiastic about was the platform of that party in the last election. What we're doing with regard to children is that we're making sure there are schools so that they can get an education. We're making sure there are hospitals so that when they go to the doctor, there's somebody to see them. I welcome the time when there'll be those children on this side of the House, pointing back to you and saying: you would have broken it for us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Credit where credit is due. Trudeau Liberals bless Kinder Morgan seven months after NEB approval. Flash back to Northern Gateway, approved over two years ago. But not everyone is celebrating. Vancouver's Gregor Robertson called it a huge step backward for the economy, environment, and for climate change while he used the terms "fraudulent," "ugly," and "insurrection" in reference to his position that pipelines should never get built. To the Minister of Energy: to the rhythm of NDP chest beating, will you commit to Albertans when we will see shovels in the ground?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. In past conversations with Ian Anderson of Kinder Morgan I understood that shovels will be in the ground within the year.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'll hold the minister to that timeline.

Given Mayor Robertson's steadfast opposition, Elizabeth May's vow to risk jail, and trusted NDP advisers Berman and Mahon suggesting protests, lawsuits, and flaunting defiance of the rule of law, again to the minister: did you not promise to bring our opponents onboard with regard to market access through trade in the magical currency of social licence?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, you know, some of our colleagues elsewhere: I respectfully disagree with some of their stances, but I totally support their right to do so. There is a great deal of people in the middle who love what we're doing and love that we got the pipeline. There will always be people on the extremes that do that, and if they wish to protest, I support their right to do that all the way to jail if that's what it takes.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Always good to have the NDP world view.

Given this government's gloating over pipeline approval despite a lack of any reasonable expectation of timely construction due to opposition from their friends and given that Northern Gateway was approved in 2014, only to be killed yesterday by the PM, and given that the same foreign-funded groups who managed to block Northern Gateway will now shift protest to Trans Mountain, again to the minister: how long will this project sit in courts and the lawless court of public opinion before your government accepts that the groups opposing pipelines care not for social licence?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, you know, there is a fundamental difference between the two pipelines. Enbridge did everything they were asked for Northern Gateway, but who failed that process was the Conservative governments, who did not do their due diligence. The process for Kinder Morgan is fairly solid. It may go to court, but if it does, I think there's been a solid consultation. They have done everything right, as has the government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Addiction Treatment Services for Adolescents

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Addiction is a disease where an individual seeks to escape through substance abuse and other behaviours. This disease affects the lives of everyone around these individuals, and it can happen to anyone, especially young adults, who face many forms of societal pressures. But there is hope, especially with excellent treatment programs which focus on the family unit as a whole. To the minister: what is your government doing to support adolescents and their families who are struggling with addictions?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. Our hearts go out to anyone who has a family member dealing with the disease of addiction. We know that there are great struggles amongst families trying to find the right supports for their family members. We also know that when someone is ready for treatment, we need to do everything that we can to make sure that they can access that treatment as quickly as possible, which is why I'm really proud of the work our government has done around expanding access to children and young adults, especially in the Calgary area. We've seen wait times go down from two weeks to same day and next day.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that the Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre, or AARC, was formed in Calgary in 1990 as a not-for-profit Alberta company with the mission to provide semiresidential placement components which provide training and support to the entire family and given that today they have participated in nonpartisan discussions with all parties here and given that this is a cost-effective program requesting provincial government support to allow their life-saving work to continue, to the minister: will you consider this funding request, and when can this organization expect an answer?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We agree that working with family members to support loved ones with addictions is critically important as well as ensuring that those wraparound services are available for people who are moving through the treatment system. That is why our government is proud to support work through Human Services and other services – mental health and the like – to ensure that those are available. I'm going to be meeting with representatives from the organization later this afternoon, and I look forward to the conversation with them.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, the families, health professionals, and support staff at AARC understand that addiction is a chronic illness. Given that we all know that when we fail to treat chronic illness properly, we put strain on our acute systems, and given that failing to treat addictions properly at all stages of the process can result in merely going from crisis to crisis instead of encouraging health and well-being, does the minister agree that this program can form part of an overall approach to the treatment of chronic illness at the primary care level?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. One of the things that we heard loud and clear through the mental health review panel was the importance of implementing and embedding primary care networks as well as mental health supports and addiction supports. We've been working very closely with our partners in the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta as well as with the primary care network groups to see how we can expand access to those services as well as make sure that those referral networks are there, because so much of the good work done in our communities around mental health and addiction is done by groups operating in the community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Announcing pipelines is one thing; building them is another. Anti-Alberta activists are already getting ready to battle against Kinder Morgan. What's worse, however, is that many of the naysayers are inside the NDP government. Karen Mahon, an adviser for the Premier, swore on Monday that Kinder Morgan will never happen and that this project will be stopped in the streets and in the courts. How can Albertans expect to see the project become a reality when this government is vowing to destroy it?

2:20

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's really unfortunate the partisan games that the opposition is playing today. Almost a year ago the Leader of the Opposition asked: "Can the Premier give us one single example of a pipeline – any pipeline – that is closer to construction or approval as a result of her quiet diplomacy?" The answer is yes. We heard that yes yesterday.

Mr. Taylor: Given that Kinder Morgan is going to face loud opposition from ecoradicals like Mike Hudema, who himself penned the how-to guide on destroying pipelines along with the help of this environment minister, and given that Alberta needs pipelines going west, east, and south to tidewater, will this Premier also be supporting Energy East in order to ensure the pipeline's future isn't left in the hands of a few ecoradicals and the Leap Manifesto friends of this government?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Again, it's unfortunate that you're pitting politics against doing the right thing. In fact, their friends at the conservative think tank prosperity fund called a pipeline approval a doomsday scenario for their own selfish political gains. Again, they're fearmongering today and trying to continue that. That progress is being made because of leadership that this government has shown. We've shown that we can create jobs, protect jobs, and take care of the environment at the same time.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Vancouver mayor has already promised to deliver protests like we've never seen. We need to keep working on accessing tidewater.

Given that the incoming U.S. administration has already pledged to support the Keystone XL pipeline, a project that would create thousands of jobs and billions of dollars in economic activity, and given that the common-sense project is already almost built, will the Premier reject the Leap Manifesto elements of this party and pledge her support here today for the Keystone XL pipeline?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. During the election the President-elect did say that he was looking to renegotiate that pipeline deal, so it's up to us to see what TransCanada feels about the pipeline. We will sit back and wait until those negotiations are done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Government Advertising Expenses

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week the government declared that they were getting big money out of politics, so in the spirit of doing exactly that, can the minister responsible for democratic renewal provide all Albertans with the number of dollars spent on major advertising campaigns since the NDP took office and whether that figure falls within the proposed spending limit of $2 million per party during an election?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are so proud that this government is getting big money out of politics. Our first act as government was to ban corporate and union donations, and I was very proud to introduce the Fair Elections Financing Act, which is going to continue that and make sure that we have a fair elections financing system. We've always said that government advertising should not be used to influence election campaigns, and currently government advertising during elections is banned by policy. Rules on government advertising are currently addressed in the Election Act, and we look forward to discussing them in the future when we revise the Election Act.

Mr. Rodney: Except the minister took it out of the bill.

Given that this government spent $4.4 million on advertising the climate leadership plan, $750,000 for Budget 2016, $330,000 for a coal phase-out, $210,000 for Bill 6, and a hundred thousand dollars for the PP lawsuit and given that these five campaigns alone cost $6 million, which could have been spent around wellness campaigns, for example, again to this minister: if you are sincere in wanting big money out of politics, why does your government insist on spending millions of dollars of taxpayers' money articulating the NDP world view on contentious issues?

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, Albertans have told us that they want big money out of politics. We are working to that effect. Albertans have not said that they want a government that never speaks to them and doesn't tell them what's happening. It is our responsibility to communicate to Albertans the important leadership like the climate leadership plan so that they understand that when two pipelines are approved, it is because of this government.

Mr. Rodney: Given that we all agree that there is a need to communicate government policy to citizens and given that a number of aforementioned advertisements went far beyond communicating government policy and given that spending money on partisan advertising offers an enormous advantage going into an election, especially given the new spending limits, again to the minister: when will you introduce restrictions regarding what types of advertising the government can and cannot engage in preceding an election campaign? When will that happen?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Modernizing elections and elections financing should be a nonpartisan issue. Our government banned corporate and union donations, and we formed the Select Special Ethics And Accountability Committee. The opposition members took advantage of that committee to play partisan games rather than being able to discuss things like government advertising during an election. Instead, they filibustered, and they walked out. This government and I as the minister responsible will be reviewing the Election Act in due time. It's unfortunate that they could not work with the government on that committee.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Trade with Asia

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday it was announced that – wait for it – two new pipelines are going to take Alberta oil to new markets, including in Asia, thanks to the outstanding leadership of our Premier and this government. That means that finally our world-class energy producers will be able to sell at world-class prices. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: what other types of trade are increasing with Asia?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. Earlier this month I led Alberta's largest ever trade delegation to China and Japan. More than 80 Alberta businesses and economic development associations accompanied me on this mission. I can tell you that we were met by hundreds and hundreds of Chinese participants, businesses that are interested in partnering with Alberta businesses. They are interested in investing in our province. I can tell you that our trade with China increased by 16 per cent last year, and that is going to continue growing because of the efforts of our government.

Cortes-Vargas: Given that Statistics Canada recently reported that Alberta small businesses created more than 90 per cent of the 25,000 new jobs in Alberta over the last three months, to the same minister: how is this government supporting small businesses who are looking to start or increase trade in Asia?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our small businesses are leading the way in helping to build a stable, diversified economy for the future. Through our jobs plan we've increased supports for small businesses that are looking to or beginning to export and looking to diversify into international markets. I can tell you that I'm very proud of our Alberta export expansion program, which provides support, both financially and also with mentorship, to help Alberta companies access international markets, which will open the doors to creating more jobs back here at home.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that my constituency of Strathcona-Sherwood Park is home to the Industrial Heartland and that businesses there are looking to expand trade opportunities, again to the same minister: how did the Chinese and Japanese companies respond to the recent trade mission, and what are participating local businesses and organizations saying?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you that our businesses and Asian companies were thrilled that we led this delegation. Face-to-face, government-to-government interaction is absolutely critical for Asian markets. I can tell you that I'm proud that on our mission there were eight agreements signed between Alberta businesses and Chinese companies, with many more in the works. Let me tell you that one of the things that every single Chinese official asked me about was the status on pipelines and where it is. I can tell you that I was very proud and am proud today to stand here to say that we've got two new pipelines.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Deaths of Children in Care

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Fifty-three: it's not a very large number until you consider that it's the number of cases of death and severe injury reported to the Alberta Child and Youth Advocate in 2015-16, with 22 deaths happening while children were receiving designated services and 29 deaths happening within two years of receiving intervention services. To the Premier. These crimes against our most vulnerable Albertans were all reported in the last year. When you consider that this includes three homicides, how many criminal charges have resulted from any of these reports?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Of course, I wouldn't want to speak on investigations that are ongoing because it wouldn't be appropriate, but we can certainly look into closed investigations and charges that have been laid and get back to him with those numbers.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. member.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you. Given that nine kilograms was all that four-year-old Serenity weighed when she was killed in 2014 and given that reports show this poor little girl stole food because she had been starved and given that the report detailed her having been beaten and raped before she eventually succumbed to her death from abuse and given that the death of Serenity is being investigated by the RCMP but people want answers, to the Minister of Justice: why has nobody been charged with the rape and murder of this child?

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Nothing could be more tragic than the death of any child, particularly in circumstances such as these. That is why we thought it was so important to ensure that the RCMP were able to complete their investigation in the way that they saw fit and to protect the information in the report from the Chief Medical Examiner in order to ensure that they could complete that investigation. When they have completed that investigation, I'm sure that they will be happy to share that information.

Mr. Hanson: Given that 51 is the actual number of deaths of children and youth in care reported in 2015-16 and given that these are deplorable numbers that we should all be ashamed of and given that we have heard from the government that work is being done and that they have accepted the recommendations of the Child and Youth Advocate and since we lack specific information, to the Minister of Human Services: have any of the people responsible for oversight on any of these cases been fired, suspended, or held accountable? Anybody?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the important question. It's a deeply concerning issue, and I share in the devastation that members of this House and all Albertans are feeling. As the Minister of Justice indicated, it's an issue still under active investigation, so we will work with the RCMP and all involved to make sure that we get this right. At the same time, we are absolutely committed to making improvements to avoid similar incidents from happening in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Job Creation

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I spoke to students in my constituency who are graduating. These students have put time and money into training for professional jobs, but despite this government's job-creation plan, which promised thousands of jobs, they have been unable to find jobs that would provide a solid base for their future. They have been having to make do with minimum wage, part-time, unstable jobs instead of participating in this wonderful vision put forward by this government. To the minister of economic development: when can tens of thousands of students graduating in Alberta each year expect to find rewarding and fulfilling and sustainable jobs that add to the economic diversity of Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. I will direct the member to look at our Alberta jobs plan and the fact that through our new infrastructure projects, through the capital plan it's estimated that it will sustain or create 10,000 jobs for the next three years. I can tell the member that between March '15 and '16 through the Alberta Enterprise Corporation there were over 800 jobs created. Because our government restored the STEP program, 2,700 students had jobs this summer whereas the previous government had decided to cut that program.

Mr. Gill: Given that there has been a net loss of 5,000 jobs since last October, which was when the government announced their first jobs plan, which has since been cancelled, and given that the Q2 update from earlier this week shows that revenues from income taxes have declined, that indicates that these jobs pay less, that Albertans are being employed in marginal and part-time positions.

This job-creation plan promised to create 25,000 jobs. Even if it's working, it's not building the right bright future for Albertans. To the same minister: how do you actually plan to get the other 75,000 unemployed Albertans back to work?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to let the hon. member in on a little secret. The price of oil hit an all-time low and stayed there for a very long, long duration, which is having a significant impact on Alberta jobs and businesses. What I can tell you is that our government is taking action. There are a number of initiatives: increasing access to capital, supports for start-up companies. We've also as of January 1 reduced the small-business tax rate by one-third. We are the second-lowest jurisdiction in Canada. I can tell you as well that through a number of initiatives, from our export expansion program to the petrochemical diversification program . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gill: Given that these kinds of jobs that have been created are in entry level fields, are not mortgage-paying jobs, don't add to the diversity of our economy, and will not help Albertans support their families and given that the wages alone for 25,000 Albertans at the average wage of $50,000 per year would cost $1.25 billion, none of your unco-ordinated job plans come close to the growing economy by that much. While this government would love to talk about the unbuilt pipeline, what is it doing to restore the Alberta advantage now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I will point the member to our Alberta jobs plan.

I want to congratulate the Minister of Energy. With her new, modernized royalty framework there are over 200 wells that are now being drilled because of our early adoption. Those 200-plus wells create 135 direct and indirect jobs. The two tax credits being debated in this House are forecast to create thousands of jobs and ensure that Albertans invest in Alberta businesses to help them grow. These are our job creators. As well as leading trade missions, the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry and I . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Election Financing Legislation

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's actually try talking about elections financing. On Monday the minister responsible for democratic renewal introduced Bill 35. Like Bill 1, that banned corporate and union donations to political parties, this bill also proposes to get big money out of politics by capping individual donations at $4,000. To the Minister of Labour: why is this government moving forward with a $4,000 single aggregate limit?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Rodney: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The one aggregate contribution limit will apply to all political entities, candidates, and constituencies receiving contributions. This means that in a calendar year an individual Albertan can choose to contribute a maximum of $4,000 in any combination. It also means that the one aggregate limit will apply to elections, by-elections, nomination contestants, and leadership contests.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the bill also limits what we can spend on an election campaign to $50,000 per constituency . . .

Mr. Rodney: Point of order.

The Speaker: A second point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: . . . and $2 million per party, can the minister explain what expenses are not counted toward this limit, and why not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question as the bill is not up for debate today, so the opportunity to speak to it is appreciated. We recognize that not all candidates and constituencies are the same. As such, the spending limit would not apply to a candidate's or contestant's reasonable travel costs, child care, or expenses related to a disability. These exceptions from the spending limit will help level the playing field for candidates with larger ridings and will help remove barriers for those with children or disabilities.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that it's not only political parties who spend money on campaigns for elections, can the minister explain how this will apply to groups other than political parties?

Mr. Rodney: Point of order.

The Speaker: I've noted your points of order, sir.

Mr. Rodney: Three of them.

The Speaker: I've got all three, sir.

2:40

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During an election third-party advertisers, if this bill is passed, would be subject to a spending limit of $150,000 overall, with no more than $3,000 being spent in relation to any one particular riding. This is similar in other jurisdictions. Between elections third parties would have to register with Elections Alberta and disclose contributions on a sunshine list. As well, they will be required to disclose contributions over $250 weekly during an election. Disclosure of those contributions would in turn be published by Elections Alberta. Albertans would then know who was paying to influence their opinions.

The Speaker: You have 20 seconds if any members would like to leave the House.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Pipeline Construction

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, let me offer congratulations to the Premier for yesterday's pipeline approvals because, in truth, if we were in government, we would be happy, too. But, Premier, I caution you against cracking the champagne just yet. Approval is a good first step, but it's only one step of many, something our former PC government was well aware of because we were pleased when the Northern Gateway got cabinet approval on our watch. We were cautious, however, after protests and court challenges, and now because of a new decision by a new government that project is but a memory.

On behalf of all Albertans we sincerely hope the same fate does not befall Kinder Morgan's Trans Mountain pipeline. Let me remind you that this new federal government put 157 conditions on the project. Northern Gateway had 200. Opposition to Northern Gateway was muted compared to the campaign that has already risen up against Trans Mountain. Let's look at a few of the early vows to block this pipeline, starting with – and this is incredible – people on the Alberta government's own payroll, two members of the oil sands advisory group. I will be looking for confirmation that the Premier has fired both of them by Friday. [interjections] Otherwise her commitment to reaching tidewater is a weak promise indeed.

In your own ND Party federally and in British Columbia a friend of the NDP, Green Party leader Elizabeth May, has said that she'd rather go to jail than see the pipeline built. Holy Leap Manifesto, Batman. [interjections] This is on top of the mayor of Vancouver . . .

The Speaker: Please stop the clock a second.

Hon. members, this is the third time today that I've asked you. Don't make comments when a member is speaking, both sides of the House.

Start the clock again.

Please proceed.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the NDP federally and in British Columbia is fighting against it. On top of this, the mayor of Vancouver and a litany of radical envirogroups are rallying as we speak. Premier, we're cheering for you and for the good of Alberta, but we have seen approvals before, and we have seen them fall away.

Premier, what you promised Albertans in return for your misguided climate change plan is a social licence, and so far you have not delivered. So don't sit on you political laurels and do a victory lap quite yet. [Mr. McIver's speaking time expired] Mr. Speaker, can I finish, please?

The Speaker: Go ahead.

Mr. McIver: Thank you.

The work is just starting, and your promise of a clear social licence path is still broken.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I think that represents the time as I am advised. [interjections] I'm advised that there is no time left, and that's the clock that we follow.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Pipeline Approval

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's economy has been too reliant on a single market for our resources for too long, and this has led to a roller-coaster economy that affects every Albertan. For too long Conservative governments in Alberta and in Ottawa were too busy being cheerleaders for pipelines instead of rolling up their sleeves and getting down to work. They did nothing on climate change, and they did nothing to work with provinces and communities across these pipeline routes.

That changed yesterday, Mr. Speaker. As the proud daughter of a pipeliner I realize how critical the oil industry is to Alberta's economy . . .

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

Ms Babcock: . . . and, more importantly, to the families and communities whose loved ones work in the industry. Today we continue to see the effects of the global drop in oil, but yesterday's approval of pipeline projects will provide our province with an opportunity to access new markets at better prices. This is another step towards economic independence and another step towards ending Alberta's roller coaster economy and landlock.

Mr. Speaker, our government is paving the way for a new economy based on both economic and environmental sustainability. These two aspects are linked with each other, and Albertans should not have to sacrifice the province's environmental health for a strong economy. Our government's economic and environmental direction is exciting for all Albertans. Many people have told me that they are delighted to see our government work collaboratively with provincial and federal partners to ensure that Albertans' concerns are being heard. More importantly, there's enthusiastic support for our Premier's leadership, which is putting working families first.

As the Prime Minister said yesterday, Mr. Speaker: "We could not have approved this project without the leadership of Premier Notley and Alberta's Climate Leadership Plan." As the Deputy Premier stated: "The proof is in the pipeline." Yesterday was a win for Alberta workers, a win for Alberta's economy, and a win for Alberta's environment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [some applause]

The Speaker: Hon. members, would you please be seated.

Mr. Clark: Point of order.

The Speaker: What are we at now, six?

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Coal Industry

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are different kinds of coal. Bituminous coal is commonly used to produce electricity in Alberta. Metallurgical, or met., coal is used for steel production and is mainly exported to countries like China, Korea, and Japan. Alberta's met. coal is some of the best in the world and is highly sought after. The coal mines in Grande Cache and Hinton produce met. coal.

I spoke with Gary Taje, the international representative for the United Mine Workers of America's Canadian branch last week. Gary lives in Grande Cache and is a tireless supporter of the local mine and the mineworkers who live there. When I asked Gary if the Alberta government's climate leadership plan was responsible for the closure of the Grande Cache coal mine, his adamant reply was: no, and you can quote me on that.

The Wildrose insists that the free market has all the answers for the economy, but Gary Taje told me that this same free market, not Alberta's climate leadership plan, is responsible for the closure of Grande Cache Coal. The absence of regulation drove the international met. coal price down so far that the mine in Grande Cache was no longer economically viable.

Meanwhile the government of Alberta remains a strong supporter of this mine and is working tirelessly to support this important employer. Now, in spite of continual opposition from the Wildrose and PC members of this House, a plan is moving forward to reopen the mine, and we are hoping that the miners in the community will be back at their jobs sometime this spring.

The bituminous coal industry, which markets to coal-fired electrical generator plants, will be impacted by both the federal and the provincial climate action plan. They will have the support of this government as we help them with moving on to greener and more sustainable industries.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Carbon Policies

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To understand what's going on outside the dome, all you have to do is go talk to the people who are losing their jobs to really understand the damage the government is having on this province, the hard-working men and women who are quickly losing hope as the government looks to destroy our coal industry and the communities that depend on them. I hear it almost every week, the desperation people have as they try to figure out how to take care of their families. They watch as the value of their homes drop, and they don't know where to turn to next.

Of course, no one from this cabinet has actually taken the time to step foot into a community like Forestburg or Hanna, to look people in the eye whose livelihoods are destroyed by the NDP. This carbon tax will kill jobs here at home and hurt our ability to compete against the United States, a country opposed to any carbon tax.

I can tell you that the people in my riding do not share the same fascination with the carbon tax as this government does. In fact, they think the carbon tax is just another way to punish people for having the nerve to drive to get their groceries, to commute to work, to take their kids to hockey practice. This tax will hurt everyone. It means less for a family budget. It means less to invest in the construction industry. It means farmers' bills will go up at a time when they can least afford it. Towns and schools will be paying more. And, unbelievably, charities will lose out big time. This is going to especially hurt towns like Forestburg, Hanna, Killam, Hardisty, Wainwright.

If only this government would learn from the mistakes made in other countries like Germany and Australia or, closer to home, in Ontario, with the out-of-control power costs and job losses. Until then Albertans can trust that the Wildrose has their back.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Bill 33

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2016 (No. 2)

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that it's my pleasure today to request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 33, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2016 (No. 2).

Mr. Speaker, this bill has been circulated to the opposition parties, and I believe that there is consensus on all of the clauses of the bill. Bill 33 contains a number of noncontentious provisions. I'll just briefly list those acts that are affected by this particular bill: the Family Law Act, the Hospitals Act, the Insurance Act, the Notaries and Commissioners Act, the Police Act, the Public Service Act, the Public Service Employee Relations Act, and the Vital Statistics Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 33 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have here a screenshot of tweets by Tzeporah Berman from the oil sands advisory group slugging the Kinder Morgan program.

I also have here an opinion poll printed this week, authored by Karen Mahon from the oil sands advisory group entitled Trans Mountain Pipeline, Even If Approved, Won't Be Built.

The Speaker: The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table two documents that I read into the record yesterday, the first one being Failure: Barack Obama Blew $150 Billion to Increase Renewable Energy Generation By 1%.

The second one is Power Market Watchdog Attacks TransAlta Defence in Price Manipulation Hearing.

The Speaker: Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies of a letter from Dr. Brent Humphrey indicating that Bill 207 "is unreasonably directive and places an obligation on Council which is inconsistent with the principles of self-governance." There is much more coming.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table the requisite number of copies of three of the articles I referred to today, which said such glowing things about the great progress we've made. I quoted these, including Chris Bloomer, Mr. Braid, and the Globe and Mail. [interjection] Just like the leader of the third party prefaced what was in his tablings, that's what I'm doing. I'm happy to present these to the House for tabling.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, this morning when we were debating Bill 30 and the amendments . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, this morning when we were debating Bill 30 and the amendments, I quoted a letter from the Calgary Chamber of commerce, so I'm submitting that letter.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the requisite number of copies of a letter from the Calgary Chamber of commerce that was addressed to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade, sent this morning, expressing support for Bill 30 as it is currently written.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and table a document that includes hundreds – hundreds – of signatures expressing concern about the closure of the cardiac rehabilitation centre at the Didsbury hospital. I'm sure the Health minister will have a great opportunity to review the signatures from these concerned residents.

The Speaker: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last night during debate on Bill 27 I mentioned that the Market Surveillance Administrator had fined TransAlta $56 million for meddling in the electrical market. I have the article showing that the government then invested $46 million of taxpayer money into TransAlta.

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a media release from the government of Saskatchewan where they say that they're number two in this country. The best debt-to-GDP is right here in Alberta. We're twice as good as Saskatchewan, we're four times better than Ontario, and we're five times better than Quebec in terms of having the lowest GDP. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please.

I believe we have numerous points of order raised today. I believe the first was by the Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Cooper: I believe it was, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today in question period, what was a very robust opportunity to express opinion in the House, the hon. Minister of Finance used language that was likely to create disorder, imputed false motives of the opposition, used abusive or insulting language likely to create disorder, imputed false motives of another member, and made allegations of another member. While I don't have the benefit of the Blues, I believe that the statement was something very similar to: well, that side of the House would have thrown children out in the street. I am certain that that sort of allegation is unlikely to create order.

It's very simple. The minister just needs to apologize and withdraw, and we can all move on to what I'm sure will be a number of other very important points of order today.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm very familiar with 23(h), (i), and (j), including having produced a how-to video with regard to that. I don't believe that in this case it's suitable.

3:00

The minister was using, perhaps, some hyperbole, which is not disallowed by the rules. He was talking about the policies of the Official Opposition, in that they were not prepared to support adequate funding for schools. You know, it maybe went a little bit beyond what actually would be the case, which would be massive increases in class sizes, should that side's policy be put in place. But it was not directed to any individual members; it was directed to the political approach of the other side. However, I would concede that the hyperbole used in this case may have contributed to a certain amount of disorder on the other side. Not the first time today, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's easier to do than one might think.

With regard to that, I would on behalf of the hon. Finance minister withdraw that particular remark.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. You are correct. It was the first, but it was not the last.

I believe – I'm going to look to the table – Calgary-Lougheed, there were two or three points of order.

Point of Order Anticipation

Mr. Rodney: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There were three. I'm happy to roll them all into one for the sake of the table officers and members of the House, yourself. Standing Order 23(e) reads: "A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member . . . anticipates, contrary to good parliamentary practice, any matter already on the Order Paper or on notice for consideration on that day." It says "or" in between.

Mr. Speaker, all three questions from the Member for Edmonton-Decore were clearly in violation. Bill 30 is on the Order Paper. All three questions had everything to do with that, so I think it's a prima facie example of a point of order. If something is sub judice, you would rule it out of order. The same thing applies here.

I do say that for the folks up in the galleries today – I mean, we've got to ratchet up a notch when it comes to the decorum. I can tell you that during opposition questions we saw a number of members cupping their mouths, yelling. Christmas is coming. Let's tone it down. I implore you, Mr. Speaker. This would be a great example, a good time to make sure that we increase decorum in this House, and I ask you to rule accordingly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Well, with respect, I fail to see the connection between lack of decorum, where the member may have a bit of a point today in particular, and whether or not anticipation was used when a member was asking a question about something, about a bill that's on the Order Paper. The member is quite correct. Section 23(e) does indeed say that something that "anticipates, contrary to good parliamentary practice, any matter already on the Order Paper or on notice for consideration on that day." It does say that. However, if you dig a little more deeply into the rules – and I'm looking at House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, 2009, at page 496 – it says:

In 1997, many questions and even points of order were raised on the issue of questions anticipating Orders of the Day. Previously, questions in anticipation of an Order of the Day were disallowed to prevent the time of the House from being taken up with business to be discussed later in the sitting. After one such point of order, the Standing Committee on Procedure and House Affairs recommended that questions no longer be ruled out of order on the sole basis that they anticipated Orders of the Day. Shortly after, although the House had not yet adopted the [practice], Speaker Parent stated that he would follow the Committee's advice. The practice of allowing questions anticipating Orders of the Day has been continued.

Mr. Speaker, you also ruled on this matter on May 26, 2016, and I will just quote from that ruling.

Hon. members should be aware that the rule against anticipation has been interpreted to apply when questions pertain to the specific content of a bill that is up for consideration later that same day. This rule is not violated when there is a question about government policy in relation to the bill.

I have ruled a number of times on this subject.

You go on to refer your members to a number of points in Hansard where you had so ruled, Mr. Speaker.

I would submit with the greatest of respect that the questions were in order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The House leader for the Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm almost hesitant to rise for what's about to happen. I think that my hon. colleague across the way is in fact correct in this point of order. The only real reason that I would rise today is to point out that should you rule on the question of anticipation today, it would put a number of real challenges for us going forward because then the government could basically put any bill on the Order Paper, leave them there for extended periods of time, make bills up, for Pete's sake, because they didn't want to answer a question about pipelines, although they might want to today. Perhaps that was a bad example.

In order for us to be able to continue to ask questions in question period that are robust, perhaps it would have been better if the member referred not specifically to the bill but to the content of the bill. That probably would have been a little more helpful. But in this case I side with my colleague and ask that you don't rule these questions out of order.

The Speaker: Any other members with additional information on the matter? The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't need to make recitations because the recitations have been made by the previous speakers, but I would say that it occurs to me, referring to those recitations, that the intention of anticipation is that if a member of the House wants to get clarification on a bill or some information, that's okay, but to use the speaking about a bill on the Order Paper in order to only have unopposed opposition is probably the reason why anticipation is there in the first place. That was clearly what the government was doing today. I mean, I will wait for your wisdom on this, but I would suggest to you that if you let the floodgates open on this, I think you're going to have a whole pile of anticipation coming forward and referring to today's decision should you rule this in order. I will leave it to your wisdom.

The Speaker: Hon. members, on this particular point I, too, remember the rulings that were made back in May of this year. Technically I agree with the point made also by the House leaders for the government and for the opposition that the matter must be scheduled for consideration on this afternoon. In fact, technically, under the point of order that bill is not on the Order Paper today, and I would concur with . . .

An Hon. Member: Not today. It's for consideration tomorrow.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I don't believe that what happened today was in contravention of the points of order. However, to the hon. member, your questions were getting quite specific. It's related to policy, I believe, rather than particular clauses, and I would ask that the government in future and particularly the hon. member frame your questions in a much more general nature and not to leave an impression that you want a specific matter and you are in fact addressing an issue that will be discussed tomorrow. I thank you for that.

Just to confirm, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, you had three into one, and I think there was one from the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. Is that correct?

Mr. Cooper: I think it was Calgary-Elbow.

The Speaker: Oh. Calgary-Elbow.

Point of Order

Referring to a Member by Name

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order. I will say that it's rare for me to rise on a point of order, but this is something I've observed in the House on too many occasions. I will reference House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, 2009, page 613, references to members. "During debate, Members do not refer to one another by their names but rather by title, position or constituency name in order to guard against the tendency to personalize debate." It goes on to say, "Other party leaders are identified as the leaders of their respective parties," which is a slightly different focus but something worth noting, I would say.

3:10

The Member for Stony Plain in her member's statement did refer to the Premier by name. I have to say that I've noticed this often from the government side, in particular in members' statements and in some questions as well from the backbench, although it certainly happens occasionally here as well. I think it's very important that we, whoever writes our questions or members' statements for us know our parliamentary procedure. Getting information, Mr. Speaker, on the record, I think, is important and okay – of course, that's our job here – but naming names in this House is not. I know often a member's statements – and I admit it's certainly often inadvertent.

Should it be something referenced in a written form, I just want to reference page 614. It's noted:

The Speaker will not allow a Member to refer to another Member by name even if the Member speaking is quoting from a document such as a newspaper article. As the Chair once noted, a Member "cannot do indirectly what cannot be done directly."

Again, Mr. Speaker, I think there's an opportunity here just to remind all members of the House not to refer to other members by name, only, please, to the ministerial position they hold or to the seat that they represent.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't know anything about people naming names in this House. I don't recall at all a situation last week where I needed to apologize for using the name of someone in the Chamber. I think my hon. colleague the independent Member for Calgary-Elbow, or perhaps more aptly the leader of the Alberta Party, according to House of Commons Procedure and Practice, has raised a very important point around the use of names.

However, just very briefly with respect to members' statements, obviously, we came into a little bit of a rocky patch there around members' statements. It's been a long-standing tradition in this House for members' statements to be uninterrupted, and I think we saw what happens when they can be interrupted. I would encourage both the member to withdraw and apologize and all members of this House to be reminded of what members' statements have been agreed to be for.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just to clarify, I think there is much being made of something that occurs fairly frequently in this House – and admittedly it shouldn't – which is the use of names. In this particular case the member was reading a direct quote from the Prime Minister in which he attributed their ability to approve the pipelines that were approved yesterday to the leadership of the Premier – and that included her name – and the climate leadership plan of the government of Alberta. He was giving credit to our Premier and to our government and to our climate leadership plan very specifically as something that allowed the government of Canada to approve the pipelines, including the Kinder Morgan pipeline, which will increase our access, potentially, to Asia and allow the government to get a higher price for the products that we produce. In doing so, the member inadvertently read the name, and people who had written the member's statement on her behalf ought to know that you can't use these names.

It's a good reminder, hardly the most serious transgression that has ever occurred in this House, even today, but on behalf of the hon. member I will withdraw that statement because clearly we are not supposed to use the proper names of members in the House even when reading a document. That much is clear. So, Mr. Speaker, with regard to this matter I will concede the point of order.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

To the principle that the Member for Calgary-Elbow raised, I think it's up to all of us to be conscious of that into the future.

I think the word "robust" would be an understatement with respect to this afternoon. I urge you all to consider your words and actions in this place and whether or not they are always consistently in the best interest of our public that we serve. So I want to remind you that good policy requires good debate.

Were there any other points of order?

Mr. Rodney: The Member for Calgary-Hays had a point of order today.

The Speaker: Okay. I thought he just spoke to one.

Mr. Rodney: No. He was speaking to a different one. He raised a different point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, do you have another point of order?

Mr. Rodney: Yeah. It was on behalf of my hon. colleague. Parliamentary practice dictates that members' statements are uninterrupted in this House, and I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for reiterating that. Unfortunately, you had to do it a number of times. Unfortunately, my hon. colleague from Calgary-Hays, the leader of the third party, was unable to finish his statement today, and he raised a point of order in the statement following. That being said, I'm happy to withdraw on his behalf.

An Hon. Member: And so you should.

Mr. Rodney: I just did.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 36

An Act to Enhance Off-highway Vehicle Safety

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Why, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's a real honour for me to rise today to move Bill 36, An Act to Enhance Off-highway Vehicle Safety, for second reading.

Mr. Speaker, this government has made a commitment to improving safety on Alberta's transportation network. By amending and updating the Traffic Safety Act, we are taking the next step in that commitment. For many years Albertans have been writing to their government asking for laws which would make the use of off-highway vehicles safer. We have heard from off-highway vehicle associations, from victims fortunate enough to survive, and, sadly, from families who have lost loved ones to head injuries from off-highway vehicle accidents.

There have been many media stories over many years, several within the last few months, calling on the government to require helmets for people who ride off-highway vehicles. Mr. Speaker, too many Albertans are suffering needlessly, and the government can take action. It is taking action. As a government its job is to regularly revisit and update legislation to ensure it encompasses the evolving needs of our changing society.

Some people may ask us, Mr. Speaker, if we believe that a change in the law will impact behaviour and old habits. To answer that question, I would point out Alberta's history with seat belts. In 1986 seat belts were not required in this province. That's not that long ago. At that time only 28 per cent of Albertans used a seat belt. The government of the day, under Premier Getty, introduced legislation in 1978 to improve safety for drivers and passengers alike. Today more than 95 per cent of Albertans buckle up, and the result is more parents making it home to their families and children arriving safely to soccer practice, music lessons, and dance recitals.

The proposed amendments that I will speak about today come from the latest phase of my ministry's review of the Traffic Safety Act. They are the result of consultation with many Albertans, with our stakeholders, and with our traffic safety partners, and they reflect the changing attitudes of off-highway vehicle users and the public.

In Alberta the authority to create laws regarding helmet use for OHVs has been the exclusive responsibility of municipalities. Some municipalities have created such bylaws and were taking steps to manage this issue, but the majority, Mr. Speaker, have not. This inconsistent approach has left uncertainty and inequality in the application of the law, and too many have moved away from safety as a result.

Our first amendment to the Traffic Safety Act today will remove the bylaw-making authority from municipalities and place it where it should be, with the provincial government. This will pave the way for a standard approach to helmets on public land province-wide.

Our second amendment to the Traffic Safety Act today will address the definition of a safety helmet. The off-highway vehicle regulation, or OHVR, will contain standards for safety helmets. This section will clarify that helmets required under the act will be the ones that comply with the standards to be set out in the off-highway vehicle regulation.

The next section will be the actual requirement for helmets to be used when driving, operating, riding in or on, or being towed by an OHV when it is on public land. Public land is any land owned by the public. This will entrench the requirement in provincial law and encourage helmet use province-wide.

3:20

The next section, Mr. Speaker, will address helmet requirements on private property and indigenous lands. The Traffic Safety Act contains an exemption to the requirements for registration and insurance for OHVs operated on private property, and the requirements for helmets will remain consistent with this approach. An individual who is using an OHV on private property that they own or who is doing so on the private property of someone who has granted them permission will not require a helmet. An individual operating an OHV on First Nation or Métis settlement lands will also be exempt from this requirement.

The next section addresses farming and ranching work, Mr. Speaker. Requirements for helmet use on OHVs will not apply to a person performing farming and ranching work in instances where the Occupational Health and Safety Act or regulations or codes of rules under that act do not require it. This ensures consistency under occupational health and safety law.

The next section grants the Minister of Transportation the authority to make regulations around the use of helmets more generally. For example, this will allow the minister to amend the off-highway vehicle regulation to prohibit people from allowing children to ride an OHV without a helmet. In this example, a parent or guardian who allows a person under 14 to drive or ride an OHV without a helmet would receive a separate charge for that offence. Amendments to the procedures regulations under the Provincial Offences Procedure Act will specify the fines for such offences.

Section 129(d) will grant ministerial authority to make regulations under the OHVR concerning the standards for safety helmets. The next section, 129(e), will grant ministerial authority to create exemptions to the helmet requirement for persons or groups of persons. This will allow regulations to be created, for example, which would exempt individuals using an OHV with both approved seat belts and rollover protection. Further consideration will take place with various groups of people to ensure that the exemptions listed ensure inclusivity. If considered, it would be allowed by this section. This section would also grant the Minister of Transportation the ability to create authority for the registrar of motor vehicle services to create exemptions on a case-by-case basis. If an individual, for example, is physically unable to wear a helmet, the registrar may consider granting an exemption.

Now, the final amendments, addressing regulation-making authority, include a section that would allow for ministerial authority to create regulations under the OHVR which would make the selling of helmets which do not comply with prescribed standards an offence. Amendments to the procedures regulation under the Provincial Offences Procedure Act will specify the fine for such an offence. In the final amendment section 157(1)(a) will give the necessary teeth to the other amendments. This will make the failure to comply with or contravention of the new OHV helmet requirement an offence under part 8 of the Traffic Safety Act.

Mr. Speaker, ATVs and other off-highway vehicles are a part of everyday life for many Albertans. The amendments proposed under Bill 36 will allow this recreational pastime to be enjoyed more safely and will remove ambiguity from safety requirements. We have taken an approach that has been greatly informed by the individuals and stakeholders who know the world of OHVs the best. Our future regulations will ensure that fairness and tradition are honoured. By standardizing the laws and requiring helmets on public land across the province, we are telling the families and loved ones of those affected that we hear their concerns and that we are working to make Albertans safer.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to debate, and I encourage members to support Bill 36.

The Speaker: The Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the minister for bringing this bill forward. I must say that it looks fairly familiar, but I'm glad you brought it forward. I and my caucus, I know, will be supporting this bill wholeheartedly. I hope it passes through the House smoothly and quickly.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I have some experience with this. I lost my son at 21 because of a brain injury from an OHV. He did have on the best helmet money could buy, so this bill does not guarantee that every life will be saved. But I definitely understand what it's about, and I support it all the way and hope all the members in the House support it.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak to the motion? The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 36, An Act to Enhance Off-highway Vehicle Safety. There are a lot of things that need to be improved in the Traffic Safety Act, some that would improve business and some that would improve safety. I'm not sure this is at the top of my list, but here we are. I always get a little reluctant around nanny-state laws because while they will perhaps reduce a few injuries, I am generally supportive of adults taking care of themselves and deciding for themselves the balance in how to keep themselves safe.

The vast majority of off-highway vehicle drivers are a responsible lot. Some already wear helmets; some do not. Others use them when they are going on aggressive rides but not for casual ones. But even the responsible drivers, like the reckless drivers, can have accidents. In Alberta alone, on average, 19 people are killed every year operating OHVs. Between 2002 and 2013 there were 185 people killed; 74 people, 40 per cent, died from head injuries. Nearly 80 per cent of those fatalities involved people not wearing helmets. Each year in Alberta there are close to 6,000 OHV-related emergency room visits, and in 2015 more than 1,000 children under 16 were injured while riding off-highway vehicles. The costs to Alberta Health Services are estimated up to $50 million annually, Mr. Speaker.

It's true that Alberta is the last Canadian province to legislate off-highway vehicle helmet laws, and this is now it. It is interesting to note that neighbouring American states, however, largely do have OHV laws like this.

Helmets are already mandatory for motorcycle and moped drivers in Alberta, and curiously enough off-highway vehicles can reach the same speeds as motorcycles and mopeds. Cyclists aged 18 and younger are required by law to wear an approved bicycle helmet.

Bill 36 is a compromise, giving a nod to rural Alberta, the family farm, and the freedom-loving enjoyment of our private-property rights. This is just common sense. Farmers and ranchers will be exempt from wearing helmets on their own land or land they lease, like the grazing leases, or lands they have implied consent to be on or even crossing a provincial highway to get to the other side. Bill 36 will only apply to Crown lands, but the moment a farmer takes his OHV to go riding on forestry trails, on Crown land, in the eastern slopes, or the great Athabasca sand dunes, helmets will apply. Even those involved in the operation of market gardens will get an exemption.

Bill 36 is really not much different from the OHV laws in Ontario, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia, that protect private-property rights. In Saskatchewan helmets are not required if the land is owned or occupied by the operator or the passenger or by a member of the immediate family of either of them. In British Columbia helmets are only needed on prescribed private land, and since there is no prescribed private land, helmets are not really required.

Manitoba is a bit odd all around. Helmets are mandatory. Helmets are not mandatory if the off-highway vehicle is being used in the course of farming, commercial fishing, hunting or trapping operations, or if the vehicle has a roll cage with seat belts. If you are in a remote community in Manitoba and are the owner or operator or a Manitoba Hydro employee working north of the 53rd parallel or an employee working under the Provincial Parks Act, you are also exempt. A driver's licence is required to operate an OHV in Manitoba unless in a remote community. Hunting and trapping operations are exempt in Manitoba. There might be an opportunity here to squeeze another exemption into Bill 36, and I'd like to hear from the minister what he thinks of that opportunity.

3:30

Up in the Northwest Territories municipal bylaws in Inuvik mandate that all persons involved with an OHV wear a helmet. Over in Yellowknife the municipal bylaw mandates helmets for children under age 18 and that they must be at least 14 years old to operate an OHV on the road. Now, wouldn't it be nice if we could legally drive our quads in Alberta on the shoulder of a provincial highway?

Going into the United States, in Montana helmets are encouraged, but there is no law. All riders who are under the age of 16 and over the age of 11 are required to complete an approved safety course, though, and carry the Montana safety certificate with them while riding on public roads open to full-sized vehicles. Over in Alaska municipal bylaws in various communities like Anchorage and Valdez mandate helmets. OHVs also cannot operate on private land unless they are registered.

North Dakota requires those under age 18 to wear a helmet. All riders who are under the age of 17 and over the age of 12 are required to complete an approved safety course and carry the North Dakota ATV safety certificate with them while riding on public lands. Idaho also mandates under-18s to wear helmets.

Washington state has no rules for those operating on their own land. There are also exemptions for an OHV used in production of agricultural and timber products on and across lands owned, leased, or managed by the owner or operator of the off-road vehicle or the operator's employer.

Oregon mandates that under-18s must wear a helmet. Exemptions to the law exist when the OHV is used exclusively in farming, agricultural, or forestry operations or for nurseries or Christmas tree growing operations, is being used on land owned or leased by the owner of the vehicle, or that has a roof or roll bar.

Mr. Speaker, I cite legislation from these neighbouring jurisdictions to help this House recognize that there are many differing pieces of legislation and different forms of OHV legislation used throughout Canada and in the northern states. I think we see common themes here across Canada and neighbouring American jurisdictions that have been incorporated into Bill 36. Under Bill 36 all ages, whether driving, riding as a passenger, or being towed while on Crown land, will need to have a helmet on. Under Bill 36 hunting and trapping operations will not be exempt.

Mr. Speaker, knowing Alberta Transportation, I know that stats are going to be kept, and I can only hope that the results of this bill will be a reduction in fatalities and injuries requiring hospital visits. To the Minister of Transportation: the safety requirement could be done a little better.

I look forward to debate in Committee of the Whole, but right now I am in support of Bill 36. Thank you.

The Speaker: Any members under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A brain injury happens in an instant, but it changes lives forever: that is a quote from ARBI, the Association for the Rehabilitation of the Brain Injured. They go on in that same quote to say that every day they see the survivors. "We see that every day, the incredible toll on both the individuals and on the family unit after an accident happens. ATV helmet legislation is such a great initiative, and it is my view that if it helps prevent even one person from serious brain injury, it will be worth while." That quote was from Mary Ellen Neilson of ARBI.

Another quote, Mr. Speaker: "I've dealt with dozens of traumatic brain injuries in my career, and I have seen first-hand the devastating effects that they have on individuals, their families, and their communities. Requiring ATV operators to wear helmets will not only save lives but will reduce the burden head injuries place on families and on our health care system. Any law that would prevent even one of these devastating injuries has my total support." That's from a constituent of mine as well, who is here, actually, watching the proceedings right now. Those quotes of support just show the devastation to come from an off-highway vehicle injury.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti has experienced that first-hand, and, you know, I feel sorry for his loss as well. That is why I am so proud, Mr. Speaker, to be cosponsoring this bill and so proud to have been able to work with the hon. Minister of Transportation as well as all my caucus colleagues on this particular bill. I believe that the bill in its current form has done a great job of balancing the needs for safety as well as having appropriate exemptions that Alberta has been used to in the past, as the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock had pointed out.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will mandate the use of helmets for all off-highway vehicles except that there are going to be a couple of notable exceptions. One of them would be for private land. As many members of the House would know, when you're on your own private land, it is impractical to enforce a helmet law in that particular case. There would also be an exemption for ranching. If you are using your ATV for ranching purposes, we would not explicitly put on any sort of mandatory helmet use. However, we would use it consistent with occupational health and safety. As well, First Nations and Métis land would also be exempt. That's to respect our aboriginal peoples. Just like with the private land before, that land is theirs, and we respect their ability to legislate on their land as well.

We also, Mr. Speaker, are going to have the ability to allow regulatory exemptions by the Ministry of Transportation into the future so that as technology moves forward with potential safety improvements to ATVs that we have not thought of yet, it would allow the minister of the day to take that into consideration and be able to make a quick change to perhaps not require helmets in those particular scenarios.

I'm sure that if any members of the House have any particular exemptions, the minister would open to looking at them. A perfect example of what that might be is if an ATV has a roll bar and seat belts. I could see making an exemption in that particular scenario. Of course, we will be further consulting with outdoorsmen as well as members of the off-highway vehicle community for other possible exemptions.

But do not let these practical exemptions take away from the seriousness of the issue. We would all like Albertans to wear a helmet. As was mentioned, 19 deaths a year, 768 hospitalizations, 5,885 ER visits: 220,000 people answered the survey. Those are all examples where, even if the helmet was able to help in some of those, it would have been of great benefit to our province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are some questions that I'm sure will come up, and I believe that the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock sort of alluded to them. I'm going to talk first, though, about the enforcement of this particular legislation, the practical bits. The RCMP, local police departments, conservation officers, and other agents of the office of the Solicitor General would be responsible for enforcing the use of helmets for ATV riders as they go about their business out in the wilderness. We don't expect that there will be any extra resources needed to enforce this legislation as those law enforcement agencies are already out protecting the public in rural areas and other areas where ATVs are used.

Also, we plan that if this bill were to pass the House, we would also put forward an advertising blitz to make sure that all Albertans who partake in using off-highway vehicles, whether it be ATVs or motorcycles, are aware of the new requirement and the exemptions as they may relate to them. The penalty, of course, for not wearing a helmet would still be $155, as it currently is.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it's fairly clear what public land is and what private land is. I just want to clarify, of course, that public land is all Crown land, and that includes areas that have been designated for public off-highway vehicle use: public roadways, highways, rights-of-way, and the like. I'd like to point out that certain municipalities have in fact already mandated that you have to have a helmet while using off-highway vehicles. Where it was left up to each individual municipality to mandate helmet use, this legislation would provide a blanket requirement across the province, which I think makes enforcement a lot easier and gets the message across that we do want users of ATVs to wear helmets.

One more clarification is that, of course, some of us like to go off-roading as well with vehicles such as your favourite, you know, four-by-four, be it an F-150, a Dodge Ram, or your other favourite super ultra mega cab-type pickup truck. In that particular case, Mr. Speaker, if it is a plated vehicle, the safety requirements as if the vehicle was an on-road vehicle would apply. So if you happen to be out in your Dodge, your Ford F-150, or your Chevy, whatever it may be, assuming that you are wearing your seat belt and that your vehicle otherwise meets the rest of the Traffic Safety Act, then you would of course not need to wear a helmet in that particular case.

However, Mr. Speaker, if you are a real four-by-four enthusiast and have built a homemade off-road rock crawler, for example, that you could not plate and insure, then you would most definitely need to wear a helmet, and having seen those in person, with the roll bars that are everywhere, you would probably really want to as well.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this bill is not about stopping the fun or about limiting activities of those Albertans who enjoy going out for an ATV ride, whether it be in the rural parts of Alberta or those of us who live in big cities who enjoy Alberta's outdoors with some motorized fun. This is not at all about stopping that. It is about making sure that we all go home to talk about the good times from a ride and not about the tragic injury that may happen during it.

With that, I look forward to hearing the rest of the debate. That is all.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions of the Member for Calgary-Currie under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, Government House Leader, do you wish to close debate?

Mr. Mason: To close debate, Mr. Speaker, yes. Thank you very much. I want to thank all of the hon. members for their contributions in talking about many of the aspects of safety, the impact on our health care system, the impact on families.

I want to extend my condolences to the member. That's a very sad thing, that I was not aware of. It really brings home, I think, for me, what we're trying to do with this bill.

I just left out one piece that I think is so important. It's not related directly to the bill, but it's the whole question of public education. That's something that's part of our program around this bill, Mr. Speaker. There's going to be an effort to educate people about the need to wear helmets even where we've not made it mandatory. We've taken a fairly conservative approach with respect to the application of this bill. [interjection] It's a small "c"; sometimes it's even a good thing.

What we wanted to do was use this bill to move towards public education, to move towards the situation where in almost every instance people choose to wear a helmet.

You know, it's a difficult philosophical piece that the hon. member has talked about, the people's choice. We're all part of a bigger community, Mr. Speaker. If a father doesn't wear a helmet but has children, is there a role, then, for the rest of the society to have some say, especially since the society as a whole has to bear the health care costs or the costs of supporting a family without a breadwinner?

These are complicated and difficult issues, Mr. Speaker, and I think we've struck the right balance. We've struck the right balance in this particular piece of legislation, and we recognize the important role of education, that has to go side by side with legislation as we move toward trying to make sure that people and families are protected as they enjoy Alberta's outdoors, as they go about the work that is the backbone of this province, whether it be in agriculture or ranching. All of those things are important.

I want to thank all members who've spoken from the different parties for their support of this bill. I'm looking forward to hearing some amendments when we get to Committee of the Whole because this is by no means the final answer, in my opinion, but I think it is the right balance for now for Alberta. I encourage all members to support this bill at second reading.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 36 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms. Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 21 Modernized Municipal Government Act

The Chair: We are at amendment A1. Are there any further amendments or questions or comments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I was cut off halfway through my speech the last time, so I thought that everybody would want to hear the rest of it.

An Hon. Member: It was a riveting speech.

Mr. Cyr: It is actually quite riveting. I will say that. I will have to reread a part of it so that I kind of catch you up to where I was.

An Hon. Member: It can't be a long part.

Mr. Cyr: It won't be a long part. I agree with the member there.

The Alberta Assessors' Association also provided comments I'd like to read into the record. Quote: the association has completed a careful analysis of this issue and does not support the creation of a central agency to prepare industrial assessments; we do recognize that stakeholders, including the association, have identified a number of problems that should be addressed. Unquote.

I believe that part of my responsibility as an elected member is to ensure that these positions from different stakeholders are a part of the government's considerations, especially on a bill that is as large and omnibus as Bill 21.

Based largely on the feedback from stakeholders I have compiled in conjunction with my colleagues a number of recommendations on centralizing industrial property assessment. Point 1: add clear language that exempts municipalities from paying the requisition to fund the centralized assessment body if an industrial property owner does not pay their property taxes. The next point: ensure that assessors are based throughout the province and are not centralized in Alberta's metropolitan centres. Point 3: allow municipalities the right to appeal assessments on industrial properties assessed by the province. The next point: create an independent third-party audit function so that the province is not auditing its own assessments. Next point: require annual updates to regulated assessment rates. Another point: allow municipalities to apply to opt out of the centralized assessment. The final point: the creation of an assessment commissioner with the mandate that includes training assessors and industry representatives.

Again, the MGA review and this discussion have been an enormous undertaking by the ministry, their staff, elected officials of all varieties, and many other stakeholders. I want to thank everyone who's been involved with this review and its broad implications on local government, everyone who has worked to put this extremely important act together.

Now I would like to go into the amendments a little further. The government has come back with serious amendments on the topic of centralized assessment. For the most part these seem pretty standard such as amending the act to correctly spell "modernized." It's ironic that they don't have spell-check. Nonetheless, we do need to review them.

Line 34 on the duty to provide information, section 27. This subsection stipulates that it's the taxpayer's obligation to provide assessors with information for assessing property and performing other duties under parts 9 to 12 of the act. The government has provided us with the rationale that this amendment broadens the assessor's access to information, ensuring that the assessor can get any information needed to perform the duties of assessors as per the act or regulations. We want to be sure that we are providing the provincial assessor with the appropriate power, and I think companies, municipalities, and Albertans as a whole are looking for assurances that we are not providing them with overreaching powers. Subsequently, item 35 is where the bulk of the details for these powers are going to be defined in the regulations. This is something that we will need more clarity on.

I do want to say that with the input that we have had from our municipalities, overall Bill 21 is something that I see as moving Alberta in the right direction, but we have had some concerns that our municipalities have brought forward, and not all of them have been addressed.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A1? The hon. member.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'll be fairly brief on this. I just wanted to get up and speak a little bit to municipally controlled corporations. We had a few discussions with the folks from AUMA and AAMD and C regarding this. I look at the new House amendments, and it looks like most of their concerns have been addressed.

I'd just like to urge a little bit of caution when it comes to municipal governments getting into corporations. That being said, municipalities have to be free to pursue other sources of reliable funding, especially in these times of economic decline and uncertainty, but at the same time we need to have adequate consultation with residents to make sure that we're not getting into a situation where we're putting taxpayers at risk and the municipality at risk.

Specifically, one action that we had was an article by a Herald reporter in the Elk Valley Herald that just came out last week. It's dated November 23. I'd be happy to table that if it's required.

Harvey Steblyk and Don Hughes representatives from Fortis met with council at a budget meeting on Thursday, Nov. 10.

On April 19, council passed a motion to proceed with the sale of the community owned electrical distribution system to FortisAlberta.

The motion ends the community engagement phase of the sale process and gives Fortis the signal to draft the terms and conditions of an agreement.

Mayor Blair Painter and council were unanimous in their decision.

"Our system is tired and it's time we passed it on to someone who knows how to run it," said Councillor Bill Kovach. "Especially with the shape it's in. So I'm in favour of this resolution."

"As a municipality, we don't have the capacity to run an electrical system," said Councillor Char Cartwright.

Council considered selling the municipally owned electrical distribution system after Fortis undertook a review of the municipal utility system, at council's request.

Now, one of the amendments that was made was the control of corporations, section 13. This section lays out the requirements for the establishment of a controlled corporation. This section is amended to indicate that a council must be satisfied that the legislated process of the MCC as outlined in this section has been met. The wording requires that the purpose of the MCC includes that "the profits and dividends of the controlled corporation will provide a direct benefit to the residents of the municipality or group of municipalities that controls it." Now, that's a very important statement. We don't want people getting into corporations just for the sake of raising funds. It should have some net benefit to the municipality.

The second one I'd like to talk about was item 6, control of corporations. The MGA includes a requirement for both due diligence study and business plan prior to the establishment of a controlled corporation. The proposal is to remove the requirement for due diligence study as well as the accompanying regulation-making authority for it in section 75.5(1)(c). The rationale given for that amendment is that stakeholders indicated that the requirement for a due diligence study in addition to a business plan was an overly onerous and unnecessary requirement. Any significant elements of the due diligence study that are not captured in the business plan can be made a requirement in the accompanying regulation. That puts us over to the control of corporations regulations. I agree. I think that if you do a proper business plan, you are going to cover most of the due diligence in that. Again I would caution that they have to make sure that they have the buy-in from the residents and ratepayers in their municipality.

As always, while we have to consider what's best for the municipal government in place – and those people are elected to make those decisions – we also have to be very cautious about the taxpayer. I would caution the minister and her department. While, like I say, municipalities need to be free to exercise what they think is best, I would caution getting involved in any corporation where the significant losses could bankrupt the municipality.

Now, we talk about for-profit corporations. There are a lot of for-profit corporations out there that during these downturns have become not-for-profit corporations, and they end up in liquidity and bankruptcy. It's a terrible thing for a municipality to go through. I would just exercise caution. Like I said, I support municipalities being able to pursue getting into corporations if it's something that's going to help them provide stable funding for their municipality, but at the same time we have to be very, very careful that we don't overextend ourselves, get into a situation like they did in the Crowsnest Pass, where you have a community that's in a corporation and just does not have what it takes to maintain that corporation and keep it profitable.

That being said, I will sit down and leave it to the next speaker. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: You got it. Appreciate that. Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm once again happy to have the opportunity to speak to Bill 21, the Modernized Municipal Government Act, today. For the last time, I think, I'll be speaking about municipal development plans and intermunicipal development plans. I'm sure everybody will be happy to hear that this may be the last kick at the cat.

Now, as a former councillor of a rural municipality I do have an opinion about the Modernized Municipal Government Act. I think it likely is time to update the document. This project started many years ago. The previous government determined that the act probably needed to be upgraded, and today's government has agreed that that should be so, and it has been continuing. It is a good thing.

There's certainly been a lot of information gathered in that amount of time. In fact, input toward the Municipal Government Act update has passed from one government to another, as I said, so it's been in the works for a while. Ideas by municipalities and by citizens about changes to the Municipal Government Act are probably the same no matter who's running the show. I would suggest that it's about municipalities and how they govern themselves and certainly not about any particular ideology.

At any rate, municipal governments have a profound effect on people's everyday lives. The government that has to live by this document is the government that is closest to the people. They make decisions that affect their municipalities and those that live within their borders, and of course it's important that municipal governments meet residents' needs.

It is also clear, I hope, Madam Chair, that the document that we have been debating here for the last few weeks is a very important piece of legislation. Municipalities across the province must live by the words written into this document. This particular legislation determines their day-to-day function, and I sincerely hope that everyone in the room thinks about that as they are making decisions on changes that are proposed within these walls. What we discuss here today is not governance for ourselves. The decisions made for this document are governances for our hometowns and communities that we like to visit during the summer months for farmers' markets and on and on. Those are the places that we make decisions for when we change the Municipal Government Act. Once again, this is important.

Now, I've already talked to members of the House about intermunicipal collaborative frameworks, or ICFs, and I'm going to leave that one alone. Municipal development plans and intermunicipal development plans, with Bill 21 introduced, are now tied in with intermunicipal collaborative frameworks.

An Hon. Member: It's a mouthful.

Mr. Schneider: It's not a mouthful; it's just a matter of being able to keep it all straight.

A municipal development plan, or MDP, is something that was previously only required for municipalities with a population of 3,500 or more. The municipal development plan is a long-range statutory planning document that serves as a guide for the future growth and development of the community. Think of it as a document that relates to a municipality from its borders inward. The municipal development plan guides the community on its path forward towards greater sustainability by integrating the community's vision with municipal planning and decision-making. The municipal development plan sets the municipality's overall policy direction for community land-use decisions.

Aligned with the MDP are generally all planning documents such as area structure plans and land-use bylaws of the particular municipality. Now, the other thing about stat plans such as the municipal development plans is that at the end of the day they must align with the Alberta Land Stewardship Act's regional plans. In no way, shape, or form can the plans not be consistent with each other.

Okay. An intermunicipal development plan, or IDP, on the other hand, is a plan adopted by two or more municipalities to address land-use and development issues in an area of mutual concern. Think of it more as a municipality's fringes meeting with another municipality's fringes. Those municipalities now would have to think a little bit more outside of their borders in a thoughtful manner to determine what is best for that particular region as a whole. An IDP recognizes that the fringe area of an urban municipality is subject to different pressures, different problems, and different opportunities, more different than those of a strictly urban or strictly rural setting. With the passing of Bill 21, which I have no doubt will actually happen, all municipalities are now required to undertake the preparation of an intermunicipal development plan, which should help to avoid future land-use conflicts and create rational, sustainable land-use practices.

Now, as we continue to discuss this bill and municipal development plans and intermunicipal development plans in particular, I would ask us all to bear in mind the diverse municipalities within this province, especially in terms of size. Just for an example, we have the city of Calgary, with 1.2 million people, and the city of Edmonton, with about a million. We have other cities such as Red Deer and Lethbridge with around 100,000 residents. Then there are large counties like Parkland county with a population of 30,000, smaller counties like Vulcan county with around 4,000 residents. This province has more than 100 towns and around 100 villages, too, which might only have a couple of hundred people. Carmangay, for instance, in my riding, has 367 people. Milo, another village in my riding, has 122 people.

The reason I'm saying these numbers is because I want to point out that government tries to put legislation together that will treat all municipalities in the same way – "have the same outcome," I guess, would be a better way of putting it – but municipalities have vastly different levels of capacity. Small villages, obviously, don't have the same number of staff to deal with administration and planning the same way a larger municipality may. Small municipalities and communities have their place in Alberta just like the large ones, so we must always keep that thought in our minds when we make decisions that affect all municipalities in the province.

I think that is why the AUMA and AAMD and C, while they do support the requirement for all municipalities to have a municipal development plan, for example, wanted to see the municipalities given five years to complete them. They also were hoping that the province was on the cusp of offering them support of some kind to assist the municipalities with capacity challenges. Madam Chair, some villages often have one member, one person that does just about everything, from answering the phone to making up the agenda for council meetings, hiring the part-time help, and on and on. That one staff member is going to be pretty busy also taking on a municipal development plan, an intermunicipal development plan, and an intermunicipal collaborative framework. Some of these statutory planning documents require significant resources and co-ordination with other municipalities.

I took a look at the Internet last night, as I was making up this edge-of-your-seat speech, for municipal development plans for small communities like I've described. I also looked for inter-municipal development plans for small communities, and I couldn't find any. Now, I don't want to stand here and say that there's not such a thing in Alberta. I'm prepared to say that there may indeed be statutory plans for smaller municipalities somewhere. I would suggest that they're probably few and far between.

I guess my point is that I have found lots of municipal development plans and lots of intermunicipal development plans for towns all across Alberta, but these things are rather large documents. The town of Coaldale and Lethbridge county's intermunicipal development plan was put together by a consultant. Brazeau county and the town of Drayton Valley's intermunicipal development plan was put together by a consultant. The town of Cochrane's municipal development plan was also pieced together by a consultant. I'm sure everybody can see that there's a bit of a trend here.

I guess the point is that from what I can see, the government's discussions about municipal development plans being small, one-page documents and intermunicipal development plans being rather small as well aren't something that's happened very much before in Alberta. I can't find any of those small municipal statutory plans anywhere that I looked on the Internet. I'm not saying that they're not there, but I didn't come across any that had been made on behalf of a 300- or 400-person village.

There are a lot of consultants that have made these documents for larger municipalities. Not many have for smaller municipalities or communities, which leads, I guess, to the big concern: how will the Carmangays and the Milos and the Big Valleys of Alberta pay for these documents? I'm hoping that the government will soon come out and say how it is that they'll be helping smaller municipalities comply with these requirements. If each village has to hire consultants to help them put together an ICF, an MDP, and an IDP, where does that money come from? It's kind of clear that nobody has built their own stat docs yet. It sure looks like they are all done professionally from what I can find.

I think the minister said yesterday that the government is not planning to provide financial support to municipalities but will instead provide assistance by posting instructions and templates online. Something like that. Something somewhere along that line. "Will the government be setting up a helpline that municipal staff can call when they need support?" is another question. I have no doubt that these things would help, but I'm sure that municipalities are hoping for more. Another question, I guess: is the government going to offer some financial assistance along with the proposed templates and, hopefully, some support help in the offices as well? Madam Chair, municipalities need these details as soon as possible, of course, so that they can start making arrangements, especially since the government is giving municipalities only two years to get some of these documents, certainly, close to fruition.

I would say that the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties wants to know: will there be flexibility in how detailed a plan must be to account for different municipal sizes and capacities? To give you an idea, because municipalities with more than 3,500 people already have a municipal development plan, the city of Calgary's MDP is 182 pages long, a city with a population of 1.2 million. That's 6,500 residents per page. Vulcan county's MDP is 44 pages long. That's around 90 residents per page. Of course, I'm being a little bit tongue-in-cheek as I run those numbers by you, but I'm trying to illustrate how municipalities have varying capacities. You know, Milo, with 122 people: there are several villages like that, that continue to keep their charters. What's the minimum required length of these stat docs?

Big cities might pay more for their planning documents in absolute terms, but I'm talking about what proportion of their revenue municipalities will need to spend. This is concerning to the small municipalities that make up rural Alberta.

I guess another question is: will the provincial government reject inadequate planning documents? I believe that the government needs to properly express and manage expectations. Small towns and, certainly, small villages are concerned about these things.

Madam Chair, the AAMD and C consulted with its members – the Minister of Municipal Affairs certainly has the same documents that I have access to – and it says that while members recognize that benefits can result from collaboration, these new requirements for intercollaborative frameworks – IDPs and MDPs – may push smaller communities closer to dissolution. Don't get me wrong. I know everyone here would say that that is something that they certainly don't want to see.

If the government announces meaningful supports to help create these ICFs, MDPs, and IDPs, certainly for those municipalities that are small and are hanging on to their charters, I would think that would be a good start. Just as households should think ahead and plan for their future, it is important for municipalities to consider how they will grow and develop over the long term. I think a community or a municipality would agree with that.

Just one more thought from AAMD and C and AUMA. Both of those municipal associations are intricately involved with municipalities all across the province. They are constantly interacting with those that they support. They believe that they may very well be positioned better than anyone to offer the help required by municipalities as they transition into a time in their history where they need to have three statutory documents lined up within three years.

Those associations are prepared to help, and they believe that the province should allow them to continue their involvement with municipalities by being given the wherewithal to provide templates that are aligned with the Modernized Municipal Government Act requirements so that they can help their smaller communities that sorely lack capacity for something like this. That would of course take some funding but also may provide the government the ability to shift some funding from the Municipal Affairs office. I guess the point is that potentially it could happen with no new funding.

While I'm generally in favour of municipalities developing IDPs and MDPs, I do think that we need to recognize that these visioning exercises have limitations. I hope that this government will soon provide us and municipalities with more details and address the concerns that are consistently being expressed by those associations that represent those municipalities.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Mr. Westhead: Are you going to make an amendment or just keep yapping?

Mr. Cooper: Did you say: are you going to keep yapping? I'm not entirely . . .

The Chair: Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, did you wish to speak to the bill?

Mr. Cooper: Oh yeah. Sorry. I was just speaking to the member across the way who was making accusations of the opposition yapping. I'm not sure that that's very helpful to the conduct of the Assembly.

Mr. Hanson: A point of impoliteness.

Mr. Cooper: A point of impoliteness, yes.

You know what? I am going to speak to a couple of issues, and I hope to move an amendment. I will bring it to the House shortly. Specifically, I wanted to chat on the issue of council training. Bill 21 speaks specifically about council training and the need for that. I know that AAMD and C and AUMA both spoke about this particular issue in their feedback to the government.

There is a wide range of opinions around council training as to whether it should be mandatory or not. Now, I know that in this bill it isn't mandatory, but when we have reached out to a lot of municipalities, they have expressed some concern around the possibility of those who might be elected who would choose not to take that training. That certainly presents a concern for many municipalities, so I think that's certainly something that we should consider. The training that ought to be provided – and I know that municipalities have varying degrees of ability to provide training. I also know that there is some good work that's done by each of the associations with respect to training.

The one thing, though, that we do have the opportunity to do is try and assist municipalities in creating a similar training opportunity. The AUMA and AAMD and C also support training for folks. I certainly know as a former municipal councillor that in the early days of a term and particularly in that first term there is a significant amount of information to be received. That includes a wide swath around the operations of the municipality, the finances of the municipality, the different types of documents, planning documents that one needs to get up to speed on, the areas in which a municipal councillor has influence or ability, the areas in which a municipal councillor can act or vote, and the areas in which they ought not act or vote. A lot of these things, if a municipal councillor isn't appropriately trained, can present a lot of very significant concerns to both a municipality as well as to that councillor.

I think that it is imperative not just that we ensure that councillor training is available, which is what the bill does. It says that training should be offered and, as a result, that there would be the opportunity for a councillor to object and not get the training. I know that the government is trying to strike a balance here, and I appreciate that balance, but in the vast majority of municipalities that have reached out to us, they have asked that the provincial government ensure that the training would then be mandatory.

I will just briefly take a seat and then in a few moments propose an amendment to that. Then we will get back to this amendment that we'll be proposing in just a couple of minutes with respect to mandatory training. Then also I intend to provide some comments about the role of the ombudsman and a couple of other issues, and then I hope that we are able to move this piece of legislation forward.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Actually, Madam Chair, I was very interested in hearing what the hon. member from the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills was saying about this and would love to be able to have him carry on with his comments in due time, of course. [interjections] It's good to hear that the members opposite are now awake and listening with rapt attention to what we have to talk about today.

Anyways, again, I'd like to yield my time to the House leader.

Mr. Cooper: Oh. Thank you. Incredible job on behalf of my hon. colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner. I would like to move an amendment on behalf of the Member for Little Bow.

The Chair: This will be subamendment SA6.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I know that everyone is so keenly interested in the issue of mandatory training versus optional training. I think that the impassioned speech that I gave just moments ago should speak for itself, but I'll read the amendment. Mr. Schneider to move that amendment A1 to Bill 21, Modernized Municipal Government Act, be amended in clause (a) of part D, in the proposed section 201.1, by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) A councillor must attend orientation training that meets the requirements in the regulations within 90 days after taking the oath of office.

If I might just add a brief comment, it is that this amendment has been inspired by the vast number of municipalities who have reached out to us and said that they would prefer councillors that are elected to be required to receive training, not that training would be available. Training has been available over a long period of time. When I was first elected in 2010, the training was available but not mandatory. Subsequently, municipalities have said that they would much prefer to see that this would be mandatory as opposed to optional.

I have listened to members of the municipally elected community from across the province, and I simply ask that the members of the House do the same.

The Chair: Just a comment before we move on to the next speaker. I remind you that earlier today we already had the issue of using members' names in the House even when reading from a document. So just a reminder, please, hon. members, to respect that.

Are there any members wishing to speak to subamendment SA6? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and good afternoon, everyone. I appreciate your attention this afternoon to one of the more interesting topics, perhaps, that we deal with from time to time in the House. Councillor training is something that's near and dear to my heart. That's for sure.

In the early 2000s I was able to go to the association convention with the AAMD and C members and have the opportunity to take a lot of the courses and various sessions they had there. It was certainly extremely helpful for my new role. As well, we had an awful lot of sessions that our municipality sponsored and held within our premises from time to time, and we had various sessions of training that were provided by various solicitors and other counsel that came in to provide us with some very, very good background on how to do things, not only as a councillor but also as a member of an appeal board and on a committee, et cetera, et cetera. This is just the basic foundation of what a person really needs to do that job effectively.

I have to say that it is always amazing to me that in the past, prior to getting a lot of experience here, I looked back on that and wondered: how in the world did a lot of municipalities carry on without that benefit? How could they possibly judge what would happen to people? How could they deal with serious matters without some sort of training? It seemed just so ridiculous. I like to compare it, often as not, and sometimes I draw this analogy, and I'm thinking of the Justice minister, who's here in the House today, actually. When you look at the judicial system, you have to be someone that has passed the bar exams and everything to be a lawyer, and then they have to have those qualifications to be a judge. They are judging the lives of people, just like councillors are. What a contradiction that these people are not required to have this basic training.

I would urge the members in the House to please have a look at this amendment. I realize that the department had quite a good amount of discussion on it and consultation, I realize that a lot of people spoke their mind on it throughout the summer, and I realize that we did talk about it in the briefings, but I do believe that just having to offer it doesn't really meet the bar. It doesn't really get you where you need to go. I think we need to make it mandatory.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank the members for bringing up this issue because I certainly heard a lot of feedback as well about it over the summer. Certainly, Albertans across the province have expressed their keen support for the need for training for elected councillors after every election and by-election. Everyone values the important work of our elected representatives and wants them to be properly armed with knowledge and skills to carry out the responsibilities of running their municipalities. I would say that no one in this room is in doubt of that.

However, the provincial government believes strongly in the principle of local accountability and does not want to step in as big brother holding the stick to mandate councillors to take the training. These councillors were chosen by the people through the democratic vote, and we do not want to compromise that very important choice.

Instead, we want to ensure that decision lays at the proper level of governance on that, and we want to empower local councils and their citizens to hold their elected representatives to account through the new codes of conduct that will be required. These codes of conduct will reflect the needs of their communities and may include sanctions against councillors who choose not to take the training. The only thing a council may not do is dismiss a councillor.

We believe that all municipal councillors want to do the best work possible for their citizens and will be eager for more opportunities to learn about their vital role in Alberta. However, the choice as to whether to mandate them to attend the session: that decision does not rest in this House but in the decisions of the individual councils across this province.

With that, I will not be supporting this subamendment. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other speakers?

Mr. Hunter: I actually do have something to say about this, Madam Chair. I have to say that when we first took a look at this – and I understand the intent of this amendment – the first thought I had was that this will be an opportunity for the government to add more bureaucracy and more layers to the government, where municipalities would be responsible and forced to pay for this training. I have to say that at first I was not in favour of it. I'm quite surprised to hear that the government is not in favour of increasing the size of government. You know what? This is a very interesting day.

But I do have to say that I see the value to making sure that these councillors receive the necessary training and that they receive the proper training so that they can represent the people to the best of their ability. That's why I actually will be supporting this subamendment. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other speakers to subamendment SA6?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on subamendment SA6 lost]

The Chair: We are now back on amendment A1 to Bill 21. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this amendment?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question on the amendments?

[Motion on amendment A1C carried]

[Motion on amendment A1E carried]

[Motion on amendment A1K carried]

[Motion on amendment A1X carried]

[Motion on remaining parts of amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: We are now back on Bill 21. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise today to speak on one of the largest pieces of legislation this government has introduced, Bill 21, the Modernized Municipal Government Act. With regard to the overall consultation process my colleagues and I were pleased that it included multiple stakeholders that all had a wide variety of experience and expertise. The consultation process was robust and included a wide range of stakeholder engagement. The government didn't just leave the consultation process until after the bill was written. They engaged stakeholders throughout the development, and this was encouraging to see. We heard a variety of positive remarks about the consultation process from many of the stakeholders, and the government should be commended for their diligence in this regard.

Our team has been very thorough with this piece of legislation, and we have reached out to major industry groups, municipal advocates, taxpayer groups, think tanks, small-business owners, nonprofits, and every municipality in Alberta. We think that a piece of legislation this comprehensive and one that impacts so many people's lives should be given the proper time and consideration. Bill 21 affects the roads we drive on, where we live, what type of home to build or buy, and the taxes we pay. It is crucial that we get this legislation right the first time. After so many years of work it's easy to lose focus as we enter into the home stretch, but as elected officials we have a duty to our constituents and to Albertans to give this bill the proper scrutiny.

One concern of mine is that with all the hours that have been already poured into this bill, the good work that's already been completed will be unravelled by this government's attempt to meet its own narrow timeline to proclamation. I worry that in order to meet this self-imposed summer 2017 deadline, too many details are being left to regulations, continuing in the previous government's bad habit of backroom deals done around the cabinet table and out of earshot of those who will be affected by them most.

There are a number of issues that I do take some exception to, however. For starters, I was disappointed, albeit unsurprised, that the government is refusing to reconsider its misguided and ill-conceived carbon tax, which will be an increased burden to municipalities. This means that municipalities will have to increase taxes on their citizens just to keep up with costs. I have heard from many of the municipalities in my riding, and this has been by far the biggest complaint. Places like Provost, Forestburg, Hanna, Killam, Hardisty, and Wainwright are already suffering and will be in desperate need once this carbon tax comes into force. And I won't even get into how this government has not done an economic impact study and is, rather, leaving it after the fact for municipalities to deliver.

Furthermore, I am disheartened to see that the government is refusing to address the broken funding model, which so desperately needs updating and attention. Municipalities need a stable, predictable funding model. We need to ensure the success of all Alberta's municipalities. We know that without stable, predictable funding, these municipalities cannot budget properly. For many smaller communities their long-term viability is beginning to come into question.

To add to that if I may, while I feel that the preamble and the niceties are a good step in the correct direction, inaction from the government is really just a verbal political parade. This government needs to talk less and act more, say less and show more. Stop political grandstanding because great talking points followed by no action is the worst type of hypocrisy.

I'd like to switch focus, if I may, to another very important issue and one that affects nearly every municipality in Alberta, specifically brownfield properties. Section 57 of Bill 21 deals with brownfield property tax incentives. A brownfield is a site that is underutilized and where past activities on the site may have caused environmental soil and groundwater contamination. As a realtor and a broker I've had to work with properties or, as the case may be, not work with brownfields. You see, Madam Chair, I have often had clients come into my office and ask me if I can help them find some vacant land or land that they can redevelop. They'd often come in and say: hey, I noticed there was a piece of land over on the west side of town, and I wondered if that was for sale. I would have to tell them the facts and provide them full disclosure about the property. I had to let the client know about the environmental concerns.

Other times when selling commercial property, I'd ask the seller if they had done an environmental audit as this could hold up the sale and buyers would undoubtedly ask for it. The property owner would then have a phase 1 environmental study completed. This is essentially a historical study. It looks at what has been on the property as far back as the records go. If there was nothing on the environmental, there were no consequences there, then we could move on to listing it, essentially looking at selling the property.

If, however, a phase 1 study does find that there was, for instance, a gas station on that property at one time, then the process moves to phase 2, the testing, delineation, remediation, exposure-control planning phase. Basically, phase 2 is where field tests are conducted to see if there are any actual contaminants present. If none were found, great. We can move on to listing and eventually selling the property. But if contaminants are found to be present, we move to phase 3.

Phase 3 is remediation. This is the let's get this thing cleaned up phase. Phase 3 can take years to complete, and until the remediation is achieved, the land is effectively unusable. Brownfield properties regularly languish in phase 3 for years, often decades or more. I've seen it.

I'm glad that section 57 is being added to the MGA, which will hopefully provide some incentive for brownfields to be developed. Municipalities support the amendments that this government has put forth regarding developing the incentives for brownfield developments, providing them with a capability to be able to allow property tax cancellations, deferrals, or other reductions for multiple years to identify and promote redevelopment of brownfield properties. Municipalities have requested that the government consider exempting brownfield properties from paying education taxes during the redevelopment process. This would provide even more incentive for brownfield redevelopment and continue on with the good work the government has done here.

While the bill is far from perfect, I feel confident that it at least strikes the right balance and should be supported. For this reason I will be voting in favour of the bill, and I encourage all members from either side of the House to support it as well.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to Bill 21? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the main bill now. I'd like to take an opportunity to talk about something that's near to my heart and has been for probably 25 or 30 years, and that is the topics to do with planning. I spoke a little bit about this the other day, and I wanted to get into it a little bit deeper today on the main part of the bill to make sure it was properly covered.

The other day I think I spoke in second reading on a more global perspective of the bill overall, and today I'd like to get into one of the areas that is probably the most controversial aspect of this bill, and that is the confirmation of the amendment to the MGA that will legislate the creation of mandatory growth boards near the city of Calgary.

Just to explain, currently the Capital Region Board, as some of you may know in the House here tonight, is the only mandatory growth management board legislated by the MGA. Now Bill 21 proposes a mandatory growth management board for the greater Calgary urban and surrounding rural region, possibly comprised, although not yet confirmed, of 17 municipalities, which is made up of 14 urbans and three rurals.

Now, despite the fact that the municipalities in the greater Calgary region had already reached a reasonable solution to their future collaborative efforts in the spring of 2014, this new, sudden change in government policy mandating a growth board was actually unexpectedly announced without prior consultation with affected municipalities in September '15 by the former Municipal Affairs minister, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Since that time, although consultation was finally conducted, the most negatively impacted municipalities, being the municipal district of Foothills and Rocky View county, remain staunchly opposed to this legislation we're dealing with now.

While the details, including membership, mandate, and scope, have yet to be addressed, this presents a significant change in how municipalities around Calgary will interact and relate with one another, regardless of whether we have those details or not. In fact, it removes some of the flexibility and autonomy from those municipalities' ability to govern themselves.

As I have said many times – and this goes back for several years – as a former municipal councillor I do understand the importance of regional collaboration and I am a strong believer in regional co-operation. But I do have some serious concerns and questions regarding the growth management boards, including: which municipalities will be members; will any member municipality hold an actual de facto veto; what type of voting structure will be used; will member municipalities be able to abstain from voting; is there a dispute resolution process, and if not, why not; what is the mandate and scope of the growth boards?

Unfortunately, until these questions are answered and the rules around the growth management boards are established by the government, it's really impossible for me to remain anything except really skeptical and very concerned about this proposal. I had hoped – and I said this the other day, and I repeat myself a little bit here, but I think it's important – that the government's details would have been included in the bill. However, as one of my colleagues has said: so much is left in regulations, so much in the backroom talking between the department and cabinet.

All the stakeholders remain very confused on the change. For such a major policy proposal I would have hoped the government would have embraced transparency and included a little more detail in the legislation itself. When you go through the act – and I have it here on my desk today; it's a pretty thick document – there's lots of detail in other portions of the act, but this one does not include the detail that I'm seeking.

You know, Madam Chair, this type of forced regionalization was problematic in the '80s and '90s. I was there. I lived it. Unless the adverse effects are properly addressed, this form of centralized control will remain problematic. I would like to say that in those days they had regional planning commissions. They had taken a map and drawn a big circle around the major cities and said: those are your areas of control. Local municipalities had a very difficult time in having any kind of proper planning of growth and development during those times because a lot of times when they tried to get something going in the outlying areas, the regional planning commission would vote it down because there was not a fair voting system.

It was cancelled in '93 – thank goodness – and with the new MGA at the time they decided to have intermunicipal development plans and local municipal development plans, and they were encouraged to talk to each other. I think for the most part it has gone quite well, and we see these two major cities today. Even though I admit that in the last eight years there has been a capital board here in the Edmonton area, the major city of Calgary and surrounding areas have had all kinds of great growth, and there always has been a lot of co-operation between the various municipalities there. Sure; there's been some rough points. But for the most part now Calgary is over a million, almost a million and a half strong. They've been expanding in leaps and bounds, and it seems to have been working reasonably well.

Anyway, this is a situation which I think needs to be explored a little more here tonight. I mean, the situation they're now facing is something that has been called, and should be called, "forced regionalization." It's an unwanted attack on the independence of local municipalities, in my view. You know, the independence of local municipalities is guaranteed in the MGA. Local councils are elected to make decisions in the best interest of the municipality, and any artificial, any imposed governance model that supplants that obligation I think should be opposed and abandoned.

Madam Chair, this is a drastic step that's being attempted here. This is going to be a very big change, and I don't think there's any solid evidence for this to go ahead in this regard. It's difficult to see, really, any legitimate reason for the application of such a forced regionalization plan in the Calgary region by the province as the existence of one or more of the following conditions that I'm going to talk about are not necessarily, readily, or even remotely apparent very often.

There seems to be little evidence of frequent conflict or the potential for conflict among municipalities in that region. Constant reluctance is not there either to participate in regional solutions. As I said before, certainly there are some times that people have differences of opinion. There's little potential for outcomes that aren't going to be beneficial for regional services and regional service delivery, and there's little evidence that there isn't progress towards a solution. There always seems to be. If you're going to resort to such a huge change, you would think that you would expect to see an awful abundance of conflict, but that is not apparent, I don't believe.

Instead of this type of a forced regionalization tactic, I think it should be known that Wildrose believes in solid, bona fide planning principles involving local autonomy, regional co-operation, and collaboration, as I said before, that I believe in. I think it should be left as a voluntary membership system, not mandated as mandatory.

These principles would include voluntary participation. Municipalities could choose to join or resign from the partnership at their discretion.

I think that it also should be the case where the partners can define their region. Let the participating municipalities determine which municipalities will be part of the regional partnership.

I think there should always be political autonomy. Municipalities should be able to remain independent, and their ability to make decisions in the best interest of their municipality should remain intact.

I think there should be a nonhierarchical governance model. The regional structure should not create another level of government, that this proposes to do.

I think there should be voting equity, where each municipality has one equal vote.

I think that there should be a good consensus of decision-making, where major decisions that require a vote are approached on the basis of reaching a good overall consensus on every decision.

I think that there should be the user-pay cost-sharing model, where for the most part the cost of delivering a regional service is borne in proportion to the use of that service, not to try to help out the major population centre.

I think there should be transparency in the region, that the operation of the governance of the regional entity is essentially easily observable and understood.

I think there should be accountability of individual municipalities. When a municipality chooses to become a member of a regional service partnership, the individual municipality is accountable to its community for the value of that service.

I think there should be the allowance for opting of programs. When a municipality is a member of a regional service partnership and the partnership addresses more than one service, each partner should have the ability to opt out of one or more of the service delivery programs should they choose that to be in the best interest of their municipality and their people.

As one of the larger municipal associations has stated, conflict among neighbouring municipalities is neither new nor is it unusual, and it's naive to expect that simple solutions are available off the shelf to resolve differences. The current MGA already makes provisions for municipalities to address their differences through a variety of formal and informal mechanisms. Historically, municipalities have been able to effectively use these mechanisms to resolve their differences and to put a solution in place.

In contrast, though, forced regionalization in this province has a history, as I've said before, of creating as many problems as it solves. The potential good that results from the application of this approach to regional service delivery has to be balanced against the damage that results from the limiting of the ability of municipalities to satisfy the purpose of that municipality under the MGA.

To conclude, Madam Chair, to some degree here, I think I've tried to make some points where we've had a good discussion on the pros and cons of how forced regionalization could be better replaced by our policy of more local autonomy and a voluntary type of system.

I'd like to point out, too, before I do wrap up, that it should be noted that the AAMD and C, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, has had a lot to say about this particular subject over the years, and they have sent in some comments to us, when I talked to them here recently. The bottom line is that they, too, understand that there should be local collaboration. They understand that there should be regional co-operation. They agree with that.

They understand, though, that if the government decides that they have to go with this kind of a situation, the decision-making situation or the governance model should be addressed very carefully. They think that in the interests of trying to maintain some sort of fairness in that situation, any decisions should have a couple of criteria, one of them being the support of at least two-thirds of the municipalities for a decision to go ahead and, secondly, that the support of the member municipality whose land would be adversely affected by the proposed amendment is involved in that as well. That was their discussion, and those were their suggestions.

Lastly, I'd like to point out, too, that the AUMA did comment about that. They do support the growth board in general as well, and they do encourage that the alignment of IDPs and MDPs be carefully looked at where deemed appropriate.

At the end of the day, we don't have an amendment to this growth board situation, Madam Chairman, but we would like to strongly suggest that the government look at modifying the growth board model that they may be pursuing to set up in Calgary so that it is not mandatory, it is voluntary. We would also like to recommend that a more fair governance model be pursued than what exists in the capital region.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to Bill 21? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I had stood just a little while ago, talking specifically about centralized industrial assessment and my concerns and the concerns that were brought to me. I have got a lot of concerns, especially in my riding, specifically about that. But I'm going to move on to something else that, actually, was very alarming to me when I first read it and heard it within the town halls and the literature that the Alberta government had put out, and that's specifically about 5 to 1, the linking of nonresidential to residential tax rates.

Now, whenever you're hearing about the government putting caps on things, you always need to sit down and say: are we interfering in a place that maybe could cause more damage than helping? The best thing to do is to actually go to the people who are being, I guess, impacted by this. Myself, I went. I do have both the members of AAMD and C as well as the AUMA within my riding, and I got to get a little bit of feedback from them. Now, I do have a municipality within my riding that does have a higher than 5 to 1 ratio, and I was able to hear from them that they're comfortable with the grandfathering clause that has been put through. So I think that the government has found a compromise here that works, maybe not perfectly, with both my rural and urban municipalities.

But I do want to bring up some of the concerns that were brought forward, and maybe the government can have more consideration in this area because, in the end, what this is about is to make sure that we've brought forward all of the ideas, and it could be that an idea that was brought forward to myself may not have actually been brought forward to the government. Or maybe I've got a unique perspective on a particular subject that the government wouldn't have thought about and will reconsider or do an amendment on or, in our case, do an amendment ourselves to this.

I will say that something that surprised me on this specific one was that we have the AAMD and C that have put forward that they are comfortable with the 5 to 1 ratio. They have concerns, but they're comfortable with the ratio. If there was a group that was going to be uncomfortable, it would be the AAMD and C because this group is the one that has all the different tax rates that are involved and the assessment tools that we've got. If they were to bring forward concerns, this is the place that would most likely see it. When I heard the concerns being brought forward by the AAMD and C, they were more specifically about: maybe we need to be looking at a few exclusions.

The thing here is that the AUMA, who also came forward with this, is not supporting the linkage. So the group that I thought probably may look towards supporting it, which was the AUMA, has got a lot of concerns whereas the group that probably will have the greatest impact from all of this would be the AAMD and C, and they're more comfortable with this.

We start looking at both sets of reasoning behind their concerns, and maybe we can flesh some of these things out. The one thing that I see that both groups fully agree with is that maybe what we need to be looking at is that some of the subclasses need to be excluded from these calculations. This is something that the government may want to consider. Brownfields, affordable housing, vacant and nonresidential properties, just to list a few, are the things that they both brought forward saying: we need to address that maybe with the 5 to 1 ratio. Even though it appears that there is some comfort with one of the important groups, there are important things that maybe we need to ensure, that certain areas are reviewed to ensure that this isn't disproportionately hurting any one municipality. So that's the area that both of those groups would agree to.

Now, when we've got the grandfathering clause, in the case of the AAMD and C what we're looking for is a fair balance of making sure that our municipalities can continue running in the same direction that they're going. The question is always that when there's a grandfathering clause – and I'm not advocating for a grandfathering clause, but I am saying that this was a concern that was brought up – possibly this would be something that would be phased out over time. This is an idea that was brought forward, and I think that overall I do understand exactly where they're going with this because in the end we all need to be playing by the same rule book.

But when it comes to these rural municipalities that have incredibly large growth like in Bonnyville-Cold Lake, they have to still continue to be able to adapt to this growth, and this growth is something that we can all say is a big benefit to all of Alberta, not just my local riding. I would say that that same benefit would be up in Fort McMurray as well. There are other parts of the province where there's high growth, where there's exploration, and we need to take that into effect. At some point these ratios can impede the growth of the riding. It is never the intent of any government, I would hope, to impede the growth of a riding. This is an important fact that we need to consider, whether or not grandfathering clauses should be phased out or should be left alone. This is something that was brought up and that I do believe the government should have deep consideration on.

Now, when it comes to the 5 to 1 ratio, exactly how is it that the government came up with this ratio? This is a question that was asked to me in a couple of places. In the end, I'm sure that the government has a wonderful scientific approach to how they came up with the 5 to 1. Possibly they came up with a compromise between both of these large groups. So one of the questions I would like to ask is: exactly how did you come up with the 5 to 1, and where exactly do you see this 5 to 1? Do you see this as something that is going to stay consistent through time, or is this something that you will be adjusting through time? Now, it is in legislation; it's not through regulation. So it's probably not something that's going to be easily changed. But are we looking for stability here? Is this something that the government will address later on, or are they comfortable at 5 to 1 and just leaving it going forward?

What we've got here is that both groups have put a lot of effort and many stakeholders have put a lot of effort into helping improve the MGA review. It is encouraging that we are hearing and that we saw that the government did some town halls during the summer. I do know that at the town hall that I was at in Lac La Biche, this was also an important part that came up. They may not have come up with how they came up with the 5 to 1 ratio, but the big question was: exactly how will it be implemented? Is this something that the government will be going in and reviewing for the different municipalities to ensure that they are following this? Is this something that the government has got the ratio police, if you will, going out to enforce? Is this something that the government will be watching like a hawk? Because, obviously this is going to be an important piece that could mean thousands if not millions of dollars if a municipality makes a mistake with this 5 to 1 ratio.

The minister can correct me if I'm wrong, but is there somewhere in the legislation – and I have read it over, and if I missed it, I will apologize. If they go over this 5 to 1 ratio, is the government going to be requesting a return of that money to the property owner? Is this going to be something that's going to be put into trust? How exactly is it that the government is going to deal with a problem? Usually what happens is that these things get identified later on. So how exactly is it that they're going to enforce this if a municipality intentionally or unintentionally breaks this 5 to 1 ratio? Will the government work with them? Let's say, for instance, that it's a smaller municipality that makes this error. They may not have the resources that some of the larger municipalities have so that this could be a true hardship on that smaller municipality. We need to make sure that as we're going through this, we have good, clear answers to these questions.

I think that the government has done a good job with the town halls, again, and I will be voting for Bill 21. My job here is to help make this better. Some of these concerns that I've got, I've heard, and if the answers are there, I would appreciate it if the minister could bring that forward.

In conclusion, when it comes to 5 to 1, I would like to just say that a few more answers around 5 to 1 would be appreciated. Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak.

The Chair: Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise just to speak about a couple of issues of particular note, of interest, more so to just touch base on the record on a couple of issues that I've heard a lot of people reaching out to me on, a significant amount of public comment around. I'd just like to provide some remarks. With respect to those here at Committee of the Whole, you know, I would never want to presume what's happening in the House, but it's my sense that we're getting down to the short strokes, if you will, of Bill 21, in particular with respect to Committee of the Whole.

I'll just briefly chat a little bit about the issue of the Ombudsman, an issue that has been a topic of public debate. Bill 21, the Modernized Municipal Government Act, proposes to expand the authority of Alberta's Ombudsman to include municipalities. This change would allow for members of the public who feel that their municipality has acted inappropriately to write the Alberta Ombudsman asking them to undertake a nonbinding review of their municipality to ensure they practised procedural fairness.

Of course, Madam Chair, you'll know the current process. Individuals only have one real opportunity, and that is the petition process, which can be fairly confrontational and divisive. We also from time to time see a municipality get just about to that level, and the department winds up splitting hairs over whether or not they've reached the threshold, if the individual was a resident or they weren't, and it doesn't necessarily reflect the fact that the municipality may in fact have acted inappropriately.

The Ombudsman, though, comes with a certain amount of benefit and a certain amount of concern. Of course, the benefits include an additional avenue for concerned citizens to seek procedural fairness with their municipality. Another pro, if you will, would be that there is the likelihood that it will create more municipal accountability. The Ombudsman, being focused on procedural fairness – it's not a council decision – provides an independent avenue for review.

Now, there also are a number of concerns, and certainly we've heard concerns from AUMA, AAMD and C in terms of their local autonomy and their ability to address ratepayers' concerns or constituency concerns. It also has the risk of creating another layer of bureaucracy. The current Ombudsman has little or no experience when dealing with local government, so there is a new area that oftentimes a municipality, in fact, may be more experienced in than the Ombudsman. It will quite likely require the expansion of the Ombudsman's office. This, in many respects, is about striking that right balance.

I know that if you connect with some of the larger municipalities, in particular the cities of Calgary and Edmonton or areas where they already have an Ombudsman in place – perhaps the minister could have considered and perhaps they did consider an exemption for larger cities that already have an Ombudsman or a similar role in place, like they do in Calgary or Edmonton. I know that the mayor of Calgary has spoken at length with significant concern about how the provincial Ombudsman may in fact interact with their Ombudsman. Is there a risk that some of these decisions may in fact impact councils' ability to continue to govern or to continue to make a decision in a certain area? There's no doubt that it is a concern for municipalities, particularly the ones that have them.

Additionally, municipalities that don't have an Ombudsman: there is an inherent amount of concern around the loss of local autonomy. But the truth of the matter is that there have been a lot of members of the public that have reached out both to us, the Official Opposition, and, I'm certain, to the minister, expressing a lot of support, feeling that they don't have the same sort of avenues to hold councils accountable as they do in a larger city or in other areas. I know from personal experience, from people contacting my office that have contacted the Ombudsman, that are frustrated and concerned, that they haven't felt like their concern has been heard by someone independent.

I also think that there is a significant amount of education that could take place that would help people understand the different areas they do have available to them in terms of appeals and certain different types of appeal boards that they could engage prior to needing to go to the Ombudsman anyway. So I think that the Ombudsman is going to have a significant amount of work, and he's going to wind up doing a lot of that education. Certainly, there will be an expansion of that office, or he'll have an inability to actually deal with the influx of constituents who are concerned.

With that said, it is about striking a balance. It appears that the government is not going to provide exemptions for larger municipalities and that they are going to listen to the majority of Albertans who've spoken out in favour of having an Ombudsman and that they are unlikely to provide anything different.

I might just add, though, as we look at some of the other jurisdictions, that British Columbia's office of the Auditor General for Local Government conducts performance audits. The Saskatchewan Ombudsman had its authority extended to municipalities this year as well. Manitoba, in their Ombudsman Act:

- 15 The Ombudsman may, on a written complaint or on his own initiative, investigate
- (b) any decision or recommendation made, including any recommendation made to a council, or any act done or omitted.

So we do see that there are a number of different ombudsmen across the country.

If we look at some of what folks are saying, I'd just like to reiterate that AUMA and AAMD and C do not support the expanded oversight of the Alberta Ombudsman. The city of Edmonton recommends that Bill 21 apply only to municipalities that do not have another form of oversight such as the city auditor, as in the case of Edmonton. The Calgary mayor, Naheed Nenshi, isn't pleased with the government's move to give the Alberta Ombudsman the power to investigate municipalities. But, again, we see organizations like the Canadian Home Builders' Association saying, "We fully support the expansion of the Ombudsman to enforce the MGA," and, of course, other organizations like the Parkland Institute: "The biggest win for accountability, however, is the move to extend the authority of the Alberta Ombudsman to include municipalities."

I just wanted to make sure that we had some concerns voiced of some of those stakeholders and let them know that we were listening to their concerns, that we heard their concerns. It appears that the government is going to pursue this role of the Ombudsman.

I'd just like, as I see the hour, to briefly touch on a couple of quick issues with respect to inclusionary housing, that is also inside this particular piece of legislation. There are a number of pros with respect to inclusionary housing. There are also a number of concerns that have been highlighted around inclusionary housing and ensuring that the cost of the inclusionary housing isn't passed on in such a manner that creates less affordable housing, generally speaking.

Certainly, increased volumes of affordable housing for more Albertans to have safe and affordable access to housing is of critical importance to all. The Alberta government's housing first strategy calls for various levels of nonmarket housing to be provided in all geographic regions and municipalities, not only in the inner city. These are positives for our province. Affordable housing has the opportunity to increase the effectiveness of other social organizations. We all know that having a home is one of the most critical steps in the upward mobility of all, and of course affordable housing is so critically important for our key fundamentals when it comes to people's most basic needs.

The decision, the efforts to have some inclusionary housing, of course, are a positive. It does come with some potential risks. AAMD and C highlighted a few of those when they supported the amendments to improve inclusionary zoning, but they have sought some clarification. I'm certain that the minister is aware of these, but I think it's important that we voice some of their concerns. I know, on behalf of the minister, not that I would speak for her, that the regulations will be posted online for 60 days, where all Albertans, individuals or AAMD and C, will be able to review and provide feedback on those regulations. She would encourage everyone to do that.

With that said, AAMD and C and AUMA are looking for a definition around affordable housing. These are AUMA's comments.

Developers and the province should contribute towards the offsets [of] the cost of affordable housing . . .

As affordable housing is a provincial responsibility, the costs should not be downloaded on municipalities and should [in fact] be borne by the province and the developers who are earning profits.

It will be important for the regulations to outline how [to require the] offsets for developers [to] be determined so that the possible benefits derived from this tool can better enable the provision of affordable housing in [communities].

The Capital Region Board will advocate for the changes to the provincial legislation.

- Changes to the MGA . . . would give municipalities explicit authority to adopt inclusionary zoning for both Market Affordable Housing and Non-Market [affordable] Housing, including the authority to accept . . . contributions in lieu of housing units.

The Edmonton health trust fund – now, there are areas of concern for some individuals. The Urban Development Institute: inclusionary housing remains a potential area of concern for our industry – depending on the method of implementation, the additional tools and supports that will be acquired to address the provision of affordable housing. The UDI supports the principle of inclusionary and diverse communities. However, the concern is with costs and how those may get allocated to other homes and the lack of practical offsets providing the development.

There's certainly a wide range of opinion on inclusionary housing. I think that's a little unfair, to say "a wide range of opinion on inclusionary housing"; it's more that there are many pros and certainly some cons that I think need to be addressed. I know that in regulations people will be able to provide their feedback.

I'd like to thank members for their attention. I know they've been riveted this afternoon by the amendments and the inspiring comments that have been made by so many on this side of the House, and I look forward to third reading of Bill 21.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'd like to move that the committee rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

5:30

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinstaub: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 21. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, say no. So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 32

Credit Union Amendment Act, 2016

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Deputy Speaker. I rise today to move second reading of Bill 32, the Credit Union Amendment Act, 2016.

Alberta's credit unions are a vital part of the economy, with more than 620,000 members and $24 billion in assets under management. As stated in the Speech from the Throne earlier this year, our government is committed to making sure Alberta's credit unions "have the business tools necessary for their work and to encourage them to support small and medium-sized businesses in their communities." The proposed changes in this bill will modernize aspects of the legislation, provide additional business powers to credit unions, and clarify membership rules to make it easier for credit unions to lend to small and medium-sized businesses. The amendments before you would improve consumer choice, encourage economic growth, and strengthen governance and accountability to the credit union system.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

On improving consumer choice, this legislation would give credit unions the ability to apply to establish subsidiaries separate from the credit union itself, the building, to act as a broker for all types of insurance. Consumer choice would be expanded for regular Albertans while maintaining a level playing field for existing insurance providers and brokers.

With regard to economic growth, as part of our plan to encourage economic growth and support job creators, we are clarifying membership rules to create more opportunity for small and medium-sized businesses to access loans. Allowing small and medium-sized businesses to become credit union members will increase their access to borrowing opportunities to help grow their businesses.

With regard to governance and accountability, governance and accountability in the credit union system have been enhanced through the introduction of compensation disclosure requirements for the highest paid executives of the largest credit unions to improve accountability to shareholders and stronger governance measures to ensure that the interests of smaller credit unions continue to be represented on the board of Credit Union Central Alberta. Also, increasing transparency, facilitating access to information, and enabling all shareholders to better influence the direction of these entities will enhance the governance and accountability of credit unions and Credit Union Central Alberta.

Finally, some technical changes are being proposed to update provisions and promote the flexibility necessary to keep the framework current. Generally speaking, these changes are consistent with best practices as well as with what other jurisdictions are doing. Some differences will exist because of the differences in the needs of Albertans, Alberta's marketplace, the government's policy goals, risk appetite, and financial capacity.

In closing, credit unions are an important part of Alberta's financial industry and our communities. The proposed bill covers amendments that will modernize and strengthen the credit union legislation to facilitate their ability to continue to be a viable alternative for Albertans well into the future.

I would like to ask all members of this House to support this bill. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today I rise to speak on Bill 32, the Credit Union Amendment Act, 2016. I'm always excited when I see a bill that will not spend more money come forward from this government. I know that, at the very least, this bill will not put Alberta further into debt. Thumbs up.

While this bill does deal with banks, I'm glad to see that it encourages transparency, strengthens governance, and creates competition for Albertans. It's also nice to see the government keep a promise that they had made in the past. In March in the Speech from the Throne the Lieutenant Governor told Albertans that this government would work with leaders in Alberta's $23 billion credit union system to ensure they have the business tools necessary for their work and to encourage them to support small and medium-sized businesses in their communities.

It's good to see that this government has worked with credit unions to craft this bill. The stakeholders that we reached out to were almost unanimously in favour of this bill. In fact, Central, the governing body for credit unions, had this to say about the consultations:

The Alberta government undertook consultation with the Alberta credit union system to determine amendments to the Credit Union Act that would best support credit union competitiveness, Albertans, and Alberta small and medium-sized businesses.

This is a far cry from the infamous Bill 6, where, really, no consultation was done, similar to Bill 25, Bill 203, Bill 207, Bill 22, Bill 27, and Bill 202 from last session. But we are glad this bill was consulted on, so good on you. We're glad that this government is learning, albeit slowly, that to govern the province, they must listen to the people and consult with them.

I would like to talk about some of my favourite parts of the bill, namely the transparency aspect. I'm glad that a sunshine list for the larger banks is being published. Now, I'd like to clarify that statement. Normally I would not be happy that the government is forcing a private organization to publish details, but since Central is happy with the change, then I'm happy as well, as they are directly affected by this bill.

One thing that I'm concerned about, though, is the implementation part of the sunshine list. At the end of the bill, page 11, it says that section 9 does not come into effect until January 1, 2018. Perhaps there is a good reason for this to be put off, but I cannot see why this would be necessary. I would appreciate it if in further speeches or in Committee of the Whole the minister would be able to address why this is included in the bill and, additionally, if he could explain why other parts are not coming into effect right away. That would be helpful, too. We have an understanding as to why the other two will be put off, but we would like to hear from the minister the reasons he has put them there.

Another aspect I'm happy with is the competition aspect of the bill. This bill allows credit unions to sell home and auto insurance in the same manner as other financial institutions. This is great for Albertans. More competition generally means lower prices, better service, and increased access. There are many Albertans, especially rural Albertans, who deal solely with a credit union. They know their bank very well – sometimes the bank manager, their financial adviser, the teller that happens to be their neighbour – in these small rural towns, and they want to deal with their neighbours and their friends because they trust them.

Now, with this legislation small rural towns can get their home and auto insurance from their local credit unions. There are even towns that do not even have a local insurance broker in the town. That means additional costs for travel for those products. This is going to help with that. This will create, you know, a lot of convenience for many people in these rural parts of Alberta. Unlike Bill 6, that reduced competition for insurance for farms and ranches, this bill increases competition for insurance. Sometimes I don't understand the government. Some days it's more competition, some days less competition. This time it's more competition.

On one hand, they tell us that the insurance company knows best, being the WCB, and that they will do the best and provide the best and that no one else can give the quality of that insurance. Then almost a year later to the day they extend the insurance sales for home and auto to more retailers, to the credit unions. I really hope that we can get some good quotes from the government side saying that competition is good. It would be entertaining if they said that competition would be bad while putting forward legislation that increases competition.

Now, if I was a betting man, you know, I'd have no clue which way to bet on this one. Which way? Competition is good? Competition is bad? Our caucus strongly supports competition. We are for competition, whether it's for homeowners, vehicle owners, farmers, ranchers, for, frankly, all Albertans. I'm pleased that the government some of the time is for competition, once in a while.

I would like to encourage this government to ensure that as credit unions take on the new role of selling home and auto insurance, they provide the necessary oversight. There are many new rules that credit unions will have to follow, and we do not want Albertans to be hurt by a credit union unintentionally or intentionally not following the rules set out for insurance. We don't want to see any Albertans subjected to tied selling or unethical sales techniques. I see you're in agreement, too. Excellent.

We want to ensure that private information is stored and used in a proper, safe, and ethical manner. I encourage this government to provide as much oversight and assistance as required to ensure that the legislation is implemented in the best manner possible.

Again, I'm glad that this government has put forward a bill that we, hopefully, can all agree upon. I'm glad that this government is in favour of competition. I'm happy that this government is learning how to properly consult with stakeholders, and I hope this trend continues.

I will be voting in favour of this bill in second reading. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Ms McKittrick: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of Bill 32, the Credit Union Amendment Act, 2016. I am a proud member of a credit union and have been so for many years. I have seen the power of credit unions supporting communities and economic development in various provinces of Canada, in Europe, and in Asia.

Credit unions are financial co-operatives that provide deposit, chequing, and lending services to their member owners. They are not banks. Owned locally and operated under provincial jurisdiction, they jointly own provincial central organizations. In Alberta it is Credit Union Central Alberta.

Credit unions are part of the co-operative movement, that has a long history. Robert Owen began a consumer co-operative among unemployed weavers in Rochdale, England, in 1844, and co-operative principles of buying and selling were applied to borrowing and lending in an experiment in Germany. The original credit unions were not only mutual self-help societies but a strong moral and spiritual force in communities.

The first successful credit union in Canada was the caisse populaire, started in Lévis, Quebec, in 1900 by Alphonse Desjardins. In the 1930s the organizers of the Antigonish Movement in Nova Scotia, two Catholic priests, Moses Coady and Jim Tompkins, began study circles to help farmers and fishers to organize credit unions and co-operatives to have greater economic control. They associated themselves with the American Credit Union National Association and established a credit union in Broad Cove in Nova Scotia in 1932. Credit unions grew rapidly in Atlantic Canada during the Great Depression, and by the early 1940s they were being established across English Canada.

I think it's important to understand the history of credit unions and why they have been so important in our communities in terms of economic development and as job providers.

To facilitate the exchange of savings and to help local credit unions become more efficient, credit union leadership in all the English-speaking provinces organized provincial centrals. During the 1950s and 1960s credit unions, which are generally smaller than caisses populaires, grew rapidly, largely through using members' savings to provide mortgages and short-term loans. They were able to compete effectively with banks because of low administrative costs, inexpensive premises, and convenient service hours. In the same period they gradually acquired the legal right to offer most of the financial services provided by banks such as chequing.

I just wanted to point out that credit unions are owned by members and are for members. They are very different from the bank system, which is owned by shareholders. In many areas, particularly on the prairies and in B.C., anyone in the geographic area can join, not just members of a specific group or a specific community.

Now the Alberta credit unions. The Alberta credit union system consists of 23 credit unions, with combined assets exceeding $23 billion, that serve over 625,000 Albertans. Credit unions operate in 208 branches in 129 communities throughout Alberta. One example of a credit union is Vision Credit Union. Over the past 66 years Vision Credit Union has evolved from one branch in Camrose, with assets of $178, serving 21 members, to 11 branches serving the Battle River region, with over 17,000 members and $579 million in assets.

Another credit union, Connect First, a Calgary-based credit union, has worked with the government to provide alternatives to payday loans. All the credit unions such as Servus will also be offering alternatives to high-interest loans. Approximately 80 per cent of the Alberta credit union system has committed to offering small-dollar credit products by the end of 2016. Credit unions are real assets in our communities.

Credit unions also employ 3,400 full-time Albertans and contribute significantly to local communities and to the broader provincial economies. There's an average of about $5 million in donations, gifts in kind, sponsorships, scholarships, and bursaries each year. I'm sure that in each of our ridings we have seen the power of credit unions in helping our communities.

The Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation is a Crown corporation of the government of Alberta and provides strong credential and regulatory oversight of Alberta credit unions. This regulatory oversight in conjunction with nearly $2 billion in credit union system capital and deposit insurance funds in excess of $258 million and a hundred per cent guarantee on deposits positions Alberta credit unions as one of the safest financial institutions to do financial business with.

Credit unions are provincially regulated financial co-operatives. This means that every credit union customer is also a member and owner. Credit union members elect a board of directors from among their membership in a one-member, one-vote system. They are democratically controlled. Unlike banks, credit unions work for their individual members, not corporate investors or institutional shareholders. This is why credit unions are so powerful in our communities. After expenses are paid and reserves set aside, credit unions' surplus earnings are returned to members in the form of profit-sharing. In the last five years alone Alberta's credit unions have returned more than $34 million in patronage dividends to members.

The Alberta credit union system was very pleased with the Alberta government's throne speech commitment to modernize credit union legislation. It was something they had been asking for for a long time, but it never happened under the former government. In support of modernizing credit union legislation, the Alberta credit union system provided the Alberta government with a comprehensive legislative submission with recommendations to enhance the competitiveness and sustainability of credit unions.

I am pleased to be speaking in support of Bill 32, the Credit Union Amendment Act, 2016. This act will reinforce credit unions' support of communities and will help to reinforce the credit union advantage. As a credit union member, Madam Speaker, I thank the Minister of Finance for introducing this bill, which will be supporting my local credit union to be better equipped to serve my needs and that of local businesses.

I would like to read from a letter that was sent to all Members of the Legislative Assembly on November 24 by Credit Union Central Alberta. This is what the letters says, and I'll be tabling it tomorrow.

On behalf of the Alberta credit union system, I would like to take this opportunity to express our industry's support for Bill 32: Credit Union Amendment Act, which was introduced in the Alberta Legislative Assembly [this week].

Alberta Central is the industry association and central liquidity provider for the Alberta credit union system . . .

The Alberta credit union system believes that Bill 32, in its present form, will serve to enhance the competitiveness and sustainability of Alberta credit unions, which in turn will provide further benefits to Albertans and the provincial economy . . .

Subsequent to this commitment, [made in the throne speech], the Alberta government [entered into] consultation with the Alberta credit union system to determine amendments for the Credit Union Act that would best support credit union competitiveness, Albertans, and Alberta's small and medium-sized businesses.

In response to the Alberta government's credit union system consultation, Alberta Central collaborated with credit unions to develop a comprehensive submission with legislative recommendations for the consideration of the Minister of Finance. This industry submission was submitted to the Alberta government . . . in April, 2016 . . .

A key component of the credit union difference is our strong commitment to ensuring consumer protection rights for Albertans. I would like to take this opportunity to assure you that with the legislative changes proposed in Bill 32, ensuring consumer protection will continue to be a fundamental aspect of how credit unions serve Albertans . . .

In closing, the Alberta credit union system would like to express its appreciation to the Alberta government for fulfilling its commitment to enhance credit union legislation. Credit unions are confident that the legislative amendments proposed in Bill 32 will assist credit unions in continuing to effectively serve Albertans and the Alberta communities in which we operate.

In closing, I would like to urge all members of the Assembly to support this bill and especially to be proud of the credit unions that you have in your communities and to ensure that your credit union can best serve you and the other members through these amendments.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak on the bill? The Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Earlier this year, on March 8, our government revealed an ambitious visionary plan. It was the 2016 Speech from the Throne. Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor said in the speech that the government of Alberta will do more to promote economic development in Budget 2016 . . . [and our] government will work with leaders in Alberta's $23 billion credit union system to ensure they have the business tools necessary for their work and to encourage them to support small and medium-sized businesses in their communities. After a careful consultation with the credit union system my government is aiming to modernize and strengthen Alberta's credit union legislation in the fall sitting of the Legislature.

Here we are, Madam Speaker, the fall sitting of the Legislature, and our government, true to our commitment, has introduced Bill 32, the Credit Union Amendment Act, 2016.

The bill proposes changes that will affect three main areas of the legislation. First, changes will allow credit unions to broker insurance. The credit unions that pursue this option will apply to establish subsidiaries and act as brokers for all types of insurance. Through this change our government is giving the public more product options while maintaining a level playing field for existing insurance brokers. I think many members of this Legislature would agree that additional customer choice is a good thing.

Second, this bill will allow credit unions to remain strong as they move forward and should encourage them to support small and medium-sized businesses. Since being elected, this government has made it a priority to help grow and diversify Alberta's economy. We believe that improving access to financing for small and medium-sized businesses through access to loans and membership in credit unions should help accomplish these goals.

Madam Speaker, the final changes to this bill relate to improving governance, accountability, and transparency. These amendments would require compensation disclosure for the highest paid executives of the largest credit unions. In addition, we are proposing stronger governance measures to ensure that the interests of smaller credit unions continue to be represented on the board of Credit Union Central Alberta, CUCA. There would be a requirement that CUCA include at least two unaffiliated directors. CUCA would also need to implement a dispute resolution process should one credit union obtain a majority representation on the board. Also, with regard to governance general meeting quorum requirements would be updated based on the size of individual credit unions. This is because many credit unions have grown significantly since the legislation was last updated.

Our government believes that these amendments will put stakeholders in a better position to influence the direction of their credit unions while ensuring that smaller credit union interests are still being represented on the board of Credit Union Central Alberta. Madam Speaker, I have no doubt that modernizing this legislation will encourage economic growth, entrepreneurs, and help build a more vibrant Alberta. As Graham Wetter, the president and CEO of Alberta Central, said in a statement:

Bill 32, if passed, will serve to further enhance the competitiveness and sustainability of Alberta credit unions, which in turn will provide further benefits to Albertans, Alberta small and medium-sized businesses, and the provincial economy.

This is why I support this legislation, and I encourage others to do the same.

With that, I wish to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's been a pleasure doing business with you today, and I move that we adjourn the House until 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:57 p.m.]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect on the power of our words. Our words can build hope, encourage, inspire, motivate, and comfort. Our words can also tear down, incite fear, destroy hope, and damage relationships. We've been entrusted by Albertans to speak on their behalf. Let us always use our words responsibly and in a way that benefits and encourages the constituents we serve.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 30

Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak to Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. We understand that this bill is about tax credits and trying to spur investment in Alberta. We understand that this is going to be a discussion that revolves around how we can perhaps level the playing field and allow business in Alberta to progress and diversify. Of course, in the economic times that we face today, that's always a very important discussion to have.

Madam Chair, we understand that history is littered with failed government programs that were designed to diversify and grow the economy. I don't think we have to look too far to realize that we've got all sorts of examples that we could point to in Alberta in the past. Perhaps we could remember that 30 years ago in Alberta we had a government that provided loan guarantees to Gainers and that the province still has an unsatisfied judgment of approximately $13 million against Gainers and Mr. Pocklington for a program that really was not very effective. Sometimes the funds from these loan guarantees help businesses in question to maybe pad their bottom line but don't actually create more investment and more jobs in the economy.

Now, I understand that this bill is not about loan guarantees, that it's about tax credits, but I bring that forward just to say that we need to discuss this issue with an understanding that there are failed attempts that we should remember and that we should consider before we go down a path where we take taxpayers' dollars and abuse them, with no real benefit to the Alberta people. We need to remember that government is not there primarily to do business. There's a role for government at times, and this bill addresses that. We must be careful.

To its credit, I believe that this bill does not provide loans or grants or guarantees, but it provides tax credits, so that's worthy of having discussions, Madam Chair. When we take a look at a tax credit, it's a deduction. It's a deduction from tax owing. Provided the credit can be used, the same tax relief occurs with the tax credit regardless of the company's tax bracket or his or her particular tax bracket.

Bill 30 has received some support from some of the major stakeholders in Alberta. We do see that Adam Legge, president and CEO of the Calgary Chamber of commerce, supports this, the first investor tax credit program to help try to get equity and capital flowing to small businesses in our province. We see that British Columbia and Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and Manitoba and some of the U.S. states have investor tax credit programs. This is a discussion that, to a degree, is about levelling the playing field and trying to make sure that Alberta businesses don't lose business and that Alberta doesn't lose new business to provinces like British Columbia and other provinces that have an investor tax credit program.

Well, according to Alberta Economic Development and Trade over the last 10 years Alberta has consistently lagged behind British Columbia and Ontario and Quebec in terms of venture capital dollars, so this may be an acceptable way of addressing this issue. You know, that might have been acceptable in the hyper economy that Alberta had a few years back, where the energy sector encouraged large amounts of capital to be invested in Alberta, but in today's economy we need to consider how we can actually attract capital into Alberta. This is perhaps one way of doing that. Now, I would suggest, though, that we do need to be careful with any of the programs that we provide through the Alberta government.

I just look at my own constituency and see how the entrepreneurs of Drayton Valley are addressing this dire economic situation that we find ourselves in, where they are actually pursuing venture capital outside of government's help. I look at a company in Drayton Valley that just the other day was able to sign a contract for $25 million worth of investment in a company in Drayton Valley. So we see that venture capital can come in through private sources and through the private sector, but that doesn't necessarily mean that in the context of the economy that we have today this bill doesn't need support or shouldn't be supported.

There is merit in taking a look at how we can induce and encourage venture capital into this province. We know that that's important because a lack of venture capital actually limits the growth of businesses in Alberta. Businesses, small businesses and start-up businesses, need that commercialization capital in order to be able to grow and provide jobs and encourage the economy in this province. Venture capital is a very important thing, and an investor tax credit may be the incentive that we need to consider to build a market and to build a community of enterprise for venture capital in Alberta.

Well, the government is going to provide, it's my understanding, about $165 million in tax credits over a three-year period, and it's going to be distributed through two programs, one called the capital investment tax credit and then a second one, the Alberta investor tax credit. It's my understanding with this bill – and I'm new at this, so I'm learning lots as we go through the various bills that we bring before this House – that the capital investment tax credit is meant for large capital investment by companies that are deemed by the minister to be able to diversify the Alberta economy.

It's hoped that this capital investment tax credit, or CITC, will encourage up to somewhere around $700 million in new investment in Alberta. I believe that that's going to be broken down. In this capital investment tax credit there's going to be about $70 million for capital investment tax credits over two years, and it's going to be targeted. It's going to be targeted towards manufacturing and processing and tourism. Then I understand that there's going to be another $5 million of capital investment tax credits for culture and tourism above that. We're looking at about a 10 per cent nonrefundable tax credit of up to about $5 million for Alberta companies involved in manufacturing and processing and tourism infrastructure.

These tax credits will be provided on a competitive basis to companies that make eligible capital investments of $1 million or more. So we're looking at a situation where these tax credits are going to be provided through the government and through the minister on a competitive basis. In other words, we'll look at the merits of the companies and the merits of the programs that are being done, and those tax credits, that money, will be applied to the various companies based on the merits of their business ventures.

The second program that's going to be brought forward is the Alberta investor tax credit. This is designed to attract and to bring investors and small businesses together in Alberta to be able to produce more jobs and a wider tax base for municipal and provincial governments. You know, that's one of the things that we do have to look at, I believe, in this province. We do need to look at diversifying our economy, and we do need to look at attracting new businesses into this economy in Alberta.

This Alberta investor tax credit is going to have about a $90 million budget cap over three years. It's going to be available for investments in companies that are engaged substantially in things like proprietary technology research, development, or commercialization; interactive digital media development; video postproduction; digital animation; or tourism. Now an investor in a small business venture in one of these areas will have an opportunity to deduct up to $60,000 per year.

You know, I think many of the members in this House were at a digital BioWare event last night, and for an old dog like me – yeah, I know; I'm not really into the digital animation and video games – it was an education, being able to see not only that Edmonton has one of the premier digital animation video game companies in the world but that we're looking also at a series of new companies, that were highlighted last night, that are trying to do a start-up. This might be an example of the kinds of businesses that we would be bringing forward or that could apply through this Alberta investor tax credit and could then see some capital placed their way to begin to develop and increase and grow their business and to provide jobs with their business.

Now, having said that and understanding that there's a role to be played here and that this has got some potential, there are some concerns. There are some concerns here that we need to consider in Committee of the Whole and as we go forward on this bill. Specific requirements about eligible investors and companies and the limits to the amount of the investment credits that may be awarded and are being developed: we need to have some discussion on that. You know, the programs: will they be offered on a first-come, first-served basis? How are we going to decide how these credits are being handed out to various businesses through the two programs?

The application processes for the CITC and the AITC programs, you know, are going to be announced pending the passage of this legislation, and that does lead to some concerns because we probably need to have some discussion about: what is that application process going to look like, and is it going to be fair and equitable? How are we going to make this a situation where we are actually helping to diversify the economy and that doesn't just become a pet project of a particular bureaucrat or minister? Is this going to lead to the minister picking favourites?

You know, the money that we're handing out is taxpayers' dollars. It's tax credits that are being given, tax monies that would not necessarily be collected by the Alberta government, so we need to make sure that this isn't being done on an ad hoc basis but that it's looking at the merits of the investments and the merits of the companies and the diversification of the economy and the jobs that are being provided. This can't just simply lead to ministerial oversight of the program. I suppose we could argue that that's what it's going to be, but we have to make sure that it's not going to lead to ministerial interference in the give-and-take of the economy and the ebb and flow of free enterprise.

We can see that there is the potential for tax credits to increase capital investment in Alberta, but this program is not a replacement for strengthening economic opportunity by keeping taxes low across the board. That is what will really bring investors into this province. That's what really will bring venture capital into this province. At the end of the day, when we're trying to increase investor confidence, when we're trying to bring in venture capital and we're trying to diversify our economy, it has to make economic sense. Companies have to be able to see that they're coming to a province where, because they have a low tax regime, because they see that the government is business friendly, they have the ability not only to just provide jobs but to make a profit. That's going to be very important. That is the best long-term strategy. That is better than any tax investment program that we could put out there.

This is not theory. We can point to many examples and to many jurisdictions, even to our recent past in the 1990s, where keeping taxes low and having a government by its actions send out a message to business that the province is open for business does attract huge amounts of venture capital. We can see that that is not just something that is an opinion; it is something that can be borne out in fact. We can see that there are case study examples of where keeping a low tax regime does help the economy to grow and to diversify.

This modest program is not going to jump-start the entire Alberta economy. It will not offset the general chill on investment of some of the decisions that this government has made in the past year and a half. But it's a program that does merit consideration, so I thank you for allowing me to share some thoughts on it today.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to speak with you today about Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. I'd like to begin with a brief overview of the legislation.

Bill 30 would establish two tax credits that promote innovation and economic diversity and help create new jobs. The Alberta investor tax credit, or AITC, would offer a 30 per cent tax credit for investments in small Alberta businesses made between April 14, 2016, and December 31, 2019. With a budget of $90 million over three years the AITC would be provided on a first-come, first-served basis starting in January 2017. The AITC is expected to support up to 4,400 new jobs over three years and contribute up to $500 million to the province's GDP.

The capital investment tax credit, or CITC, would focus on encouraging large-scale capital investment in the province. With a budget of $70 million it would offer Alberta companies a 10 per cent nonrefundable tax credit, up to $5 million. The CITC is expected to support $700 million worth of investment and create up to 4,600 direct and indirect jobs in Alberta.

Second reading of Bill 30 was held last week, and I'd like to thank all of the hon. members for their support and for sharing their questions on the legislation. During debate several opposition members asked if the current form of the legislation allows too much interference by the overseeing minister for the AITC and the CITC. Let me assure you that under the legislation the government will not be endorsing any particular investment or company. Instead, investors are required to do their own due diligence to determine which businesses to invest in.

Eligibility requirements for the AITC are clearly set out in the act and the AITC regulation to prevent political interference. The approval process is transparent and ensures that venture capital corporations, or VCCs, and eligible business corporations, or EBCs, meet the requirements of the act and the AITC regulations. Only VCCs and EBCs that meet the eligibility requirements will be approved for the program, and the program requirements ensure that eligible entities support the diversification of Alberta's economy.

For the CITC publicly available competitive criteria based on government economic development and diversification objectives will be used to evaluate and rank applications. Applications for the CITC are accepted based on how well they meet the competitive criteria, demonstrating the greatest economic return to the province. The budget for the AITC will be made publicly available online and will be updated on a regular basis to ensure that applicants are aware of the status of the remaining budget.

In addition, several members wanted more information about what would happen if either the AITC or the CITC were oversubscribed, because they are great. In the event that the AITC is oversubscribed for a particular year, investors who invested before the program was oversubscribed will receive the tax credit, but no further investors will be queued or tax credits issued. This is in line with the first-come, first-served principle of the tax credit. On the other hand, if the AITC is undersubscribed for a particular year, the surplus amount may be transferred over to the following budget year.

The CITC uses publicly available competitive criteria based on government economic development and diversification objectives. Applications for the CITC are accepted based on how well they meet the competitive criteria. There are four application intake windows planned over the two years of the program. If the CITC is oversubscribed in a particular intake window, unsuccessful applicants would then be able to apply in future windows. We will also be evaluating both programs to assess their effectiveness.

The scope of the tax credits was another area where members wanted more information. To help determine the criteria for both the AITC and the CITC, we reached out to other ministries such as Culture and Tourism, Agriculture and Forestry, and business and investment leaders in the province. From these discussions we have developed criteria for both tax credits that I truly believe will help us achieve our shared goals.

First, I'd like to provide some additional clarity on the scope of the AITC. The AITC is very broad. It would offer a 30 per cent tax credit to investors who provide capital to Alberta companies doing research, development, or commercialization of new technologies, new products, or new processes in sectors like, but not limited to, renewable energy; manufacturing or processing; agriculture, agribusiness, and agri-food; transportation and logistics; financial services technologies; and creative industries. Eligible activities and sectors were selected in consultation with internal and external stakeholders with an aim to encourage investment in nontraditional sectors as part of our efforts to diversify the economy. These nontraditional activities have more difficulty gaining access to capital than traditional activities in Alberta such as oil and gas extraction.

The small businesses supported by the AITC often represent high-risk investment and lack the ability to attract capital through traditional means. While traditional sectors like agriculture, oil and gas are already well established and supported, it's important to note that the oil and gas sector investment would be eligible under the AITC as long as it supports activities by a small business substantially engaged in research, development, and commercialization of proprietary technologies, products, or processes. Investment in nontraditional agriculture activities such as specialized small crops, livestock, poultry production, and high technology enterprises are also eligible under the program.

When it comes to the CITC, a tax credit that supports capital investment in manufacturing and processing is very common in other jurisdictions. The CITC supports the value-added activities of manufacturing and processing which occur across many sectors, including agriculture, manufacturing, and the energy services and supply sector. The CITC lets us support industries that have the potential to grow in the near future in spite of the low oil price environment and a weak Canadian dollar while building on our strengths in natural resources and encouraging investment in nontraditional sectors.

I also believe that including tourism infrastructure allows the province to build on our international and domestic tourism, a sector that's often countercyclical to the rest of the economy. Tourism often increases for both domestic and international tourists when oil prices and the Canadian dollar are low.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. Like I said in my last speech on this bill, we understand the spirit of this bill. That's why in general we are supportive of the bill although the Wildrose believes in bringing an economic environment that's good for all businesses so that businesses can thrive in Alberta and grow the economy and create jobs.

Of late we have seen so many other government policies that were very difficult to send a message that Alberta is open for business. In fact, many businesses were closing. After all this bad news people were looking for some good news, and recently we started seeing some good news like the pipeline approval yesterday. We all should be celebrating that.

Also in this bill we see these investment tax credits. In fact, I consulted a lot of stakeholders like the chambers of commerce, economic development, postproduction companies, manufacturing associations and whatnot. We consulted all chambers of commerce, including the Lethbridge Chamber of Commerce and whatnot.

A few things my stakeholders told me were that while the intent is good, you know, they still prefer the government bringing in policies that will remove red tape and create an economic environment where every business can compete with other businesses out of Alberta, within Canada, and overseas. Having said that, I also heard that, you know, other provinces like British Columbia and others have tax credits that are not helpful for Alberta businesses.

That's why in spirit we agree. But in the bill, Madam Chair, the minister did not specify who will be the recipients of this funding both under the CITC and the AITC when it is started. It's not in the bill, but then the minister did some press releases, and now we are hearing government members clarifying in the House what the scope of this bill is. It would be nice if all that information was in the bill, which is missing.

That's why we're trying to bring in a series of amendments to make this bill better. We just want to clarify: which businesses can actually apply for funding? What's the criteria? Another thing is: how do we measure the success of this bill? You know, it shouldn't be another boondoggle. Otherwise, people will think that the government is picking winners and losers. So we should also make that clear in this bill through our amendments.

One of those amendments I'm bringing here this morning. With your permission, I have a number of copies and I can circulate them. If you permit, I can actually read it.

The Chair: If you will just wait until I get a copy.

Mr. Panda: Okay.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A1.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Panda: Yeah. Madam Chair, like I said before, this amendment will clarify that, at a minimum, businesses that meet the qualifications of these enumerated sectors will be eligible. Also, to be clear, this list excludes no one. When I consulted the chambers of commerce, they said: well, we don't know who are all included. They also said that it's not universal. Why are only certain sectors targeted in this bill? To bring more clarification to that, we are proposing that we should include – I'll read the amendment here.

I move that Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, be amended in section 35(1) by striking out clause (c) and substituting the following:

- (c) the small business is or will be substantially engaged in Alberta, as determined in the prescribed manner, in at least one of the following business activities:
  - (i) manufacturing or processing;
  - (ii) research, development and commercialization of proprietary technology, products and processes;
  - (iii) agriculture, agri-food or agri-business;
  - (iv) transportation and logistics;
  - (v) financial services;
  - (vi) interactive digital media development;
  - (vii) video post-production;
  - (viii) digital animation;
  - (ix) tourism;
  - (x) any other prescribed business activity.

9:30

With that, we're trying to bring in some clarity. We're not trying to exclude anyone, but at least it establishes the minimum set, and the minister can add from there in regulations if he considers it necessary. If he gets representation from businesses, then he can hear them and, based on the merit, he can expand the list. But, at the same time, we should also make sure that eligibility is based on the effectiveness of the program in terms of growing the economy and creating jobs. There should be a way to measure that effectiveness. I'm sure that not only me but other opposition parties will also bring those amendments. I mean, people may still say that it's a somewhat limited list, but there is also something to be said that the minister is not picking any industries. That's why we need to clarify this.

Also, the minister made some nice points during the press releases about who will qualify for the tax credits, but when we talk to the stakeholders, we hear a different story. There is nothing in the existing bill that will actually clarify who is eligible for this funding. Also, we just don't want to let the minister pick the winners and losers on an ad hoc basis. That's why more clarity is requested by the business community. Like I said, I consulted the manufacturers' association. They have 9,000 manufacturers in their association, and they were a little bit disappointed that they may not be eligible for some of these tax credits.

Madam Chair, another good thing happening is that the Legislature's Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future is doing a study on growing and diversifying the agrifood and agribusiness sectors in Alberta. There may be some more recommendations coming out of that standing committee later on. But, you know, we saw that government members wanted to champion the diversification in the agrifood and agribusiness sectors, and then some of those businesses contacted us asking how come they are not included in this bill to be eligible for these tax credits. Particularly, the Lethbridge Chamber of Commerce said that agrifood processors are interested in these investments and that they want to benefit from these tax credits.

As you know, Calgary is an inland distribution hub in the logistics sector, and they want to help expand that cluster to develop businesses in Calgary and to participate in this economic activity. Edmonton's Port Alberta would also benefit from having the logistics sector be eligible for this tax credit. Also, Alberta is a hotbed for creative financial services, particularly for our niche industries, so by including them, we could actually help them to bring in more business. That's why we support expanding this and including the financial sectors if they prefer to take advantage of these tax credits. Also, the commercial real estate vacancies in Calgary would help them move their head offices to Calgary if we extend these tax credits to them as well.

But the minister was also very clear about the eligibility for interactive digital media development, video postproduction, and digital animation, and when I spoke to them, they were very happy that they were consulted and included in this.

Also, obviously, tourism has more potential in a province like Alberta, which has natural beauty, and it's also stable, both politically and somewhat economically. Another industry is the hotel industry. We actually look forward to having the hotel industry refurbish their tired and worn-out facilities and attracting world-class tourism.

Based on that, I think it's a good amendment to be considered by all parties in the House to make this bill better. As I said, you know, when we had all the bad news, we started hearing some good news, so let's work together and make this bill better and work it for all businesses.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in enthusiastic support of this amendment, brought by the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills. You know, he's done a lot of work in this area, as have, I know, many members on this side of the House here. In fact, I know that the minister has as well and I think deserves credit for a couple of things.

The first is that this tax credit, in and of itself, is a change in direction from this government and a change in direction from what the campaign promise was in the NDP platform. I want to just be on the record and clear that I very much appreciate and respect the fact that the government has looked at the evidence, looked at the data, and said: "You know, a job-creation tax credit may sound good in an election platform, but in practice, now that we sit on the government side, maybe that doesn't make sense. We've heard from stakeholders that a tax credit makes more sense, so that's the direction we're going to go."

I want to be very clear and on the record for all to hear that I do have a great deal of respect for the government in making that choice and would sincerely encourage the government to continue on down that path of taking good evidence when it is presented, looking at the data, and making solid, evidence-based decisions and not relying purely on just exactly what was said in an election platform or based on ideology. The minimum wage comes to mind as one good example of that, but we're not here to talk about minimum wage. We are here to talk about tax credits and Bill 30.

I'm in favour of this amendment, and I really do hope that the government will seriously consider accepting this amendment because the spirit in which it is brought is a very positive and helpful one. It is one that is based on consultations with key stakeholders, particularly in the business community, particularly in the small-business community, small and medium enterprise, chambers of commerce around the province, and that's where this comes from. In fact, it's such a brilliant amendment that I have a very similar version to this. The Member for Calgary-Foothills was able to get to his feet before I was, and had I beaten him to it, I think I'd be presenting an amendment very similar to this one.

That is one of the reasons that I rise to speak so passionately in favour of it, but most importantly I think this is good for Alberta. I think that we in this House ought to remember that our primary objective, our goal number one, ought to always be to do the right thing for Alberta.

What I like about this list is that it broadens the definition of what an eligible organization is. It also simultaneously, to some degree, restricts the minister's ability to pick winners and losers. But the reason I think the government really ought to consider including this amendment is that, rather generously, I think, the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills has included subsection (c), clause (x), which is "any other prescribed business activity." That actually allows the minister a tremendous amount of latitude, and that actually is something that you'll often see from this side of the House. We're trying to restrict what the government can do.

I think it's actually quite generous and allows the government flexibility to continue to choose or, I suppose, again taking a positive view of this, allows the minister to say: "Well, gosh. You know what? Here's a list. It's prescriptive to a degree in that it's in the legislation, and we send now a signal to investors saying that these are the sorts of things that this tax credit is eligible for. But you know what? Maybe we missed something, or maybe there's a misinterpretation, or maybe we found that the administration has interpreted a certain term in a certain way to exclude certain business that, on reflection, you know, ought to be included."

So instead of coming back to the Legislature, the minister can prescribe another business activity. That is actually, I think, a tremendous flexibility, which I would hope the minister would appreciate and would realize allows him and his ministry and any subsequent ministers to administer this legislation as they see fit.

If there are concerns specifically with any of the items – I wonder about perhaps something like "manufacturing or processing." Is that too broad? Maybe. Maybe it is, and if the minister feels that way or if the minister has a concern with any other of these individual items, again, I'd love to hear the minister's perspective on this or from anyone on the government side. I certainly don't presume to speak on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Foothills, but perhaps if there are specific aspects of this you have concerns with that you feel would make it better and something that you could pass, I do wonder if a subamendment may be in order if there are certain aspects of this that you don't like.

When we talk about "research, development and commercialization of proprietary technology, products and processes," that absolutely ought to be a prescribed area. Agriculture, agrifood, agribusiness I think is perhaps one of the greatest untapped potentials in this province. If there's anything we have in Alberta, it's tremendous arable land and the opportunity for us to diversify our economy and to meet the world's growing demand for foodstuffs, processed foods, and beyond simply raw product, and agriculture, agrifood, agribusiness absolutely is it.

I think of lentils. There's a tremendous market for lentils emerging amongst the growing middle class in India in particular. Saskatchewan and Manitoba are far ahead of Alberta in lentil production. Now, there are probably a lot of reasons for that, but I'd really like to see Alberta start to move in that direction. There's a great opportunity here for farmers and ranchers, farmers in particular. If there's any better definition of a small-business person in Alberta than a farmer, I don't know what it is. Also, people perhaps don't realize the level of technical skill required to operate a modern farm business. This ought to absolutely explicitly include that.

Transportation and logistics: that's something that Alberta has emerged as a leader in. It's something where we can pivot off what we already do very well in oil and gas. We have a tremendous trucking fleet and experience, but also we have the land, and geographically we're in a good spot to lead in transportation logistics.

Financial services: the same thing. Clearly, Calgary in particular but Alberta generally has probably the second-largest hub of financial services in Canada, behind our good friends in Toronto.

Interactive media development, video postproduction, digital animation, or what is often referred to as creative industries: we saw from BioWare yesterday the amazing work that's already gone on. That's not only an area that is growing, but it's an area that Alberta can lead in if we have the appropriate tax treatment.

Tourism: there are very few places in the world better to come visit than Alberta. That includes the mountain parks, but it certainly expands beyond that. There are a lot of opportunities in things like guest ranches. That's something that we have an opportunity to really grow.

Again I come back to the other prescribed business activities. Those are things that the minister can decide that perhaps have not been captured here. Again, I would really love to hear from the minister, from the government side, as to their feelings on this. I would hope that they would be willing to entertain this amendment. I think it improves the bill. I think it provides clarity for investors. Most importantly, Madam Chair, it is good for Alberta.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'll thank both the previous speakers, the Member for Calgary-Foothills for moving this amendment and the previous speaker, for their enthusiasm for this bill, and I appreciate their intention and where they're coming from as far as wanting more details or more specifics when it comes to eligible sectors.

However, having said that, a couple of different points. First of all, throughout the whole process of this bill we've been consulting very closely with different chambers of commerce around the province and especially working with the Calgary Chamber of commerce on the investor tax credit. They recently sent me an e-mail that – well, first of all, they wrote to me last week seeking assurance that the tax credit would be applied as broadly as possible to provide the greatest possible benefit to the most industries possible. My office immediately contacted the chamber and worked with them to ensure that the bill and the tax credit would work for not only their members but all Albertans.

Now, last week the MLA for Edmonton-Centre, who is a cosponsor of this bill, made a couple of statements clarifying this exact topic, that it's kept as broad as possible because this is what industry and businesses have asked for. Putting out a specific list very much constrains the ability, one, to be nimble, but also, for sectors that fall outside of this list, that means they're ineligible, and that's not what we want to do. That's not what chambers have asked for. They want it as broad as possible.

You know, our tax credit will offer a 30 per cent tax credit to investors to provide capital to Alberta companies doing research, development, or commercialization of new technology or new processes in any economic sector, so sectors like, well, manufacturing and processing, which, again, is extremely broad. That applies to agriculture, agrifood. That applies to our forestry sector. That applies to tourism, to energy. That applies to our oil and gas sector as well. It applies to the list; I mean, whether it's transportation, logistics, financial services, et cetera.

The reason that I cannot accept this amendment is that we want the legislation to be as broad as possible to provide the greatest benefit to investors, to job creators, and their employees. The legislation as it's written will keep the eligibility criteria as broad as possible and allow investment and business leaders to make the best decisions to help diversify our economy and create good jobs for Alberta families.

Again, I thank the member for this amendment and for his intention on it, but I will not be supporting this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: I'll recognize Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to rise to respond to the minister's comments just for a second here. Let's start by looking at the things that we can agree on here. I would speak in favour of this amendment. I think that it's important that we do have as broad a spectrum of businesses and industries across the board in the sectors of the economy of Alberta. It's important for us to incentivize and to allow the Alberta investor tax credit to be able to speak to the entirety of Alberta. I'm not sure that I truly understand the minister's argument that by expanding the list, we are creating a problem of limiting. That doesn't make sense to this individual here.

You know, I would draw the minister's attention to the very last bullet point there, (x), "any other prescribed business activity." This would be something that the minister would have control over, so I would argue that this amendment truly does lead to an expanded ability for us to be able to speak through this Alberta investor tax credit to all the areas of the Alberta economy when the minister can, under this amendment, prescribe any business activity as being applicable to this particular tax credit.

But I think we can agree and speak to this portion of the bill, that it's important to be able to speak to the various sectors in the economy of Alberta. You know, I take a look at one that is bringing a huge amount of excitement in and around the Drayton Valley area. I think we've talked about this before with the minister. We have an opportunity to grow and to diversify an agricultural sector in this province through hemp. It's an absolutely exciting opportunity that we have in this province to diversify, and this program could really speak to the ability to diversify and to create jobs and to create wealth for Alberta farmers, for processors, and for manufacturers with regard to hemp.

We know that there is a company in Drayton Valley that's called BioComposites Group, that has started to produce out of hemp and flax the very first auto parts in the history of Alberta. They're going to be making the inside door panels for various automotive companies and one in particular. We can see that that's going to start to spur the demand for hemp, so we have to start thinking as a province about how we're going to be able to create the venture capital that's going to be necessary and that's going to be important in diversifying this part of the agriculture and manufacturing sectors of the economy in Alberta.

You know, something that people perhaps don't understand is that hemp is one of the most versatile products. It's the strongest natural fibre in the world, and its versatility is just immense. We can use hemp to create makeup, it's a part of the pharmaceutical industries, and it's involved in textiles and the production of cloth. We can have automotive parts.

The processing of hemp is going to create jobs in this province. We're going to have to have decortication plants. There's only one decortication plant in all of North America, and that's found in Vegreville, and that was, again, started by the Alberta government. We need to have more decortication plants if we're going to grow this industry in Alberta.

We're going to need to have producers and farmers. I was talking to a farmer here just this past fall down in southern Alberta, and he grows hemp. We grow 30,000 acres of hemp in this province, and he's one of the farmers that grows hemp. I asked him: "Well, what did you get from your hemp crop? Like, how much did you make per acre?" He goes, "I made $1,300 an acre just off the seed from the hemp plant."

The stalk is a waste product. It's burned in Manitoba. We can take that waste product and we can add, people are telling me, another $700 an acre to a farmer's profit margin if we start to encourage this industry in Alberta. That's $2,000 an acre for a farmer in Alberta. Those are rural jobs where they're needed in Alberta. This is important, and I think this bill speaks to this, and this program can speak to trying to get the investment capital that we need in this particular agricultural investment.

I know that the town of Drayton Valley and the CETC and BioComposites Group are going to be meeting with the minister's office a little later this month, and we're going to be having these kinds of conversations. With a bill like this, if it's passed and if it's broad and we have the list that's out there that's broad, Madam Chair, we can do some good for businesses in Alberta.

I know that when I get looking at this, I can see in this particular sector of the economy that we're going to need farm equipment that can be used to harvest the hemp crop. We're going to need businesses that will be investing in the processing and the decortication plants. For every plant that we have, a facility that can use the hemp product, we're going to be producing and needing at least one to two decortication plants.

It's not just textiles. One of the things, the erosion control matting that they're producing from the plant in Drayton Valley, is only one product.

If we take that hemp stalk and we process it, it's going to create two kinds of fibres. The long fibre will be used by the plant in Drayton Valley, but the shorter fibre, the woody fibre, what they call the hurd, is going to be used down in Calgary. There's a plant down in Calgary and there are others around the province that can use this product to produce cement blocks. It takes a traditional cement block from 25 pounds down to about 15 to 18 pounds, which saves on the transportation costs. It's stronger. It's fire resistant. It's got a two-hour fire rating. It's got better sound qualities, deadening the sound better.

You know, we can use this kind of a bill to be able to help. I'm showing you just one little industry, one sector. That little industry, that little sector of the economy: if we play our cards right and if we create the investment capital and the desire in this province to move forward in this industry, within the next 10 years it could be between an $800 million and $1 billion industry in this province. That's why we need to make sure that this list is as broad as possible.

I would speak to this amendment. I believe that it's a good amendment. I believe that it allows the minister to be able to not limit but to expand. As it says in point (x), the minister can be able to address "any other prescribed business activity." I would encourage the minister and the members on the opposite side of the House to consider this amendment. It's a good amendment. It will help Albertans. It will help business in Alberta, and it will help drive Alberta's economy by allowing investment in this province through this tax credit system.

To be clear, this list excludes no one. It merely establishes a minimum set, and we can see that by the addition of point (x). We would just encourage that this amendment be supported because I believe it does allow us to speak to as wide and as broad a set of sectors in the economy, and we can then encourage investment into this province and the jobs and the tax dollars that go along with that.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other hon. members to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll be very brief. I just want to address one of the specific concerns raised by the minister in his comments. He had talked about the objective of it being as broad as possible – and I think that's a good objective – but said, you know, that by enumerating a list, perhaps that somehow makes it overly restrictive. Again, I remind the member that the last item, item (x), is "any other prescribed business activity." That allows the minister to prescribe an additional business activity, which is the definition of breadth. The minister could choose to do anything.

Again, I just remind the minister and the House how rare a thing that is, that this side of the House would suggest that we allow the government to prescribe something later. Again, I would say that a statistically significant portion of our amendments on this side of the House are about constraining what the government can do. We had some robust, thoughtful discussions last night about exactly that. I would remind the minister that the Member for Calgary-Foothills has done precisely that, and that is to leave that in. It's broad, but at the same time, in listing these specific areas, it's not overly broad.

I think the objective, clearly, is diversifying Alberta's economy. Why, it's the very title of the bill, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. Now, while this unicorn of diversification seems to be something that Alberta has pursued for many, many years and by many measures, if we read Trevor Tombe of the University of Calgary's School of Public Policy, in fact, Alberta's economy by employment is the most diversified in Canada, so I think we need to be mindful of what we're defining as diversification. Perhaps what the government seeks is more diversified revenue as opposed to the actual economy of Alberta being diversified. A different topic for another day.

You know, the objective here is to essentially, really, by my reading of it, explicitly say: we'd like folks to invest in things that aren't directly oil and gas. It's remarkable that it takes nearly a hundred pages to say that. I guess that's the way legislation works.

Again, I understand the minister doesn't like this amendment, and I think that's unfortunate. I would encourage the minister to perhaps reconsider. It would be a surprise if he did, a happy surprise, but I think that it really does improve the bill. It addresses a pressing public policy issue and also, I think equally important, addresses the direct concerns of stakeholders. I don't suggest for one second that the minister has not consulted with stakeholders. In fact, I think other ministers perhaps could take some example from this minister in his work with stakeholders. He does very good work. I know that he's out in communities often. I know that he's just come back from overseas. So I'm not questioning in the slightest the minister's commitment, but again this is what I've heard loud and clear from stakeholders. I know that the mover of the amendment has done the same. I just wanted to address the specific issues raised by the minister and would hope that perhaps – there's a faint hope – he would reconsider.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake on the amendment.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am very discouraged by the comments that the minister has made. I would like to discuss the minister's opening speech on Bill 30. It's in Hansard, page 1774, on November 8, 2016, specifically the second paragraph.

This bill will enable government to establish two tax credits that, taken together, will drive innovation, diversify our economy, and create jobs. One credit will bring Alberta investors and small businesses together while the other will help ensure that Alberta is attractive and competitive for larger capital investments. By encouraging investment in new products and services and capital projects, the tax credits will offer increased opportunities for more economic activity, diversification, and employment growth. Introducing these measures at a time when businesses are facing challenges will make Alberta more competitive in attracting and retaining investments while creating much-needed jobs. Together these tax credits provide significant support to Alberta businesses when they need it most.

I will mention right off the bat that it doesn't say all of that and then: dictated by the minister who will be chosen or blessed with the tax credit.

Now, I would like to be clear here that in section 35(1)(c) it says: the small business, if required by a condition of the Minister, is or will be substantially engaged, as determined in the prescribed manner, in Alberta in a prescribed business activity that is specified by the Minister in the condition.

I wanted to know exactly what prescribed means. The definition on page 4 says, "prescribed" means prescribed by regulation."

In the end, we're going to see a specific bill go through the House. We are going to see – is that $100 million in tax credits? I can't remember the exact number. You know, when it first came through – I will state for the record that I've been very critical of the direction this ministry has been going. My riding has been having large, large losses of jobs, and I was hoping to see that our Ministry of Economic Development and Trade would start to actually see some growth in my riding. We haven't seen that so far. We have seen failed programs go through.

The big concern that I have with this bill going through is that it's tax credits, which means that you actually have to have taxable income. Now, when I pull up the forecast for this last quarter, we're seeing that corporate tax income is going to be going down by approximately $900 million. I do believe that we're going to continue to see that revenue starting to slide because in my riding right now we've got people bidding on jobs just to keep work going, to keep cash flow going.

I will tell you that when I had talked with my local chamber, they were encouraged by this, and I thought: "Well, you know what? This is a move in the right direction." I will commend the minister that this is actually a piece of legislation that I will support, but I will say that we should never be giving a minister the discretion on exactly what is a part of a small business, and that's what we've done here.

Now, the minister got up and said: well, gee, Wildrose wants to limit what you can put into this tax credit. Let's be very clear that the amendment that we are moving forward does have a list of industries that we would like to see there. It's specific to make sure that they're included and not left out intentionally or unintentionally.

Now, to go to the final clause, (x), "any other prescribed business activity," we still have got the ability for the minister to go in through regulation to be able to add businesses. We still have the ability. So the minister using, "Well, we're going to limit exactly what it is that businesses are able to continue to be able to put forward in their claim for this tax credit" has no validity, in my opinion, and to state that we're trying to leave people out I think is unfortunate.

I will say that it's good to hear that he's out consulting with chambers. Did the minister actually tell the chambers, specifically ask the question: do you want a tax credit that only I have discretion over who's going to be in and out? I would say that the chambers, whether it's the Calgary chamber, Edmonton chamber, or any chamber across Alberta, will say: "Well, this seems to be a little disproportionate. What about all these industries? We've got manufacturing and processing, research. Like, we've got a lot of different things here to make sure that we capture a broader range, not just the pet projects that are being put forward by this government."

We need to ensure that all industries are getting the ability to be able to grow, and that means that there are businesses within my riding that will be able to qualify. That's where I'm tying it back to jobs in my riding because we've had so many job losses and so many failed actions by this ministry. We have seen that there's been no movement forward. I am actually now hoping that this will diversify something within my riding, and to have, possibly, parts of my riding not allowed to get into this tax credit because of regulation, which we don't know, is discouraging for me. I will tell you that agriculture, agrifood, agribusiness: that is my riding. Oil and gas businesses are my riding. We need to ensure that we stimulate these businesses to grow, and it is really hard right now. Jobs right now are the biggest concern in my riding.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. Yes. I really do have to also chime in on my complete misunderstanding of what the minister seems to think this amendment is all about. I mean, the point of this amendment, actually, is to bring clarity to their bill. People may not realize, actually, that they qualify in these various kinds of industries for the investment tax credits. This is intended to expand awareness. Now, either the minister doesn't understand what "any other prescribed business activity" means, that it in fact leaves it wide open, or he's playing games here, political games.

Part of this amendment might also serve, as the previous member has hinted at, to protect industries from being arbitrarily excluded. Is it the intent that the minister may in fact restrict certain industries by arbitrary choice just by leaving it vague and not being clear? The actual adding of specific sectors allows the opportunity for these sectors to say, "Hey, I do qualify; I do fit into this," and the minister can't just arbitrarily say, "Oh, well, I don't think you qualify; we're looking for something else." This really is about clarity. It's not about playing political games. I would like the minister just to explain how he thinks that any other prescribed business activity in any way limits this, please.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Yeah. Madam Chair, like my colleagues on this side said, you know, the minister keeps saying that it's broad enough, but in 35(1)(c) he's saying that he wants to prescribe. It's contradicting what he's saying. He should remove that clause to keep it broad enough so that he won't be picking and choosing the winners in this.

The other reason we brought this amendment is to give that certainty to businesses. Now nobody knows because there isn't enough money for everybody, but at the same time nobody knows who can apply. Madam Chair, I listed all the schemes so far announced by this hon. minister, and I would like to sit with him at his convenience and give him feedback. Even in your riding, when I travelled a month ago or so, people were asking – first of all, they don't know all these schemes like this. Second, they don't know who can apply, and by the time they figure out and they try to apply, they say: well, it's already oversubscribed. Nobody knows.

At the same time, it's not our intent, like the Member for Calgary-Elbow tried to explain, to limit the ability of the minister to approve these tax credits. We said: at least let's pick the sectors which he and his colleagues announced, which was not in the original bill. They are making it up as they go.

The minister said that he consulted the Calgary Chamber of commerce. The Calgary Chamber of commerce told us that they clearly asked the minister to be prescriptive up front, which was missing. That's why we brought this. So when the minister says, "It's broad enough," what if tomorrow, you know, somebody comes and says, "Oh, I'm opening a Subway" or "I'm opening another small business"? We don't know whether it will create enough jobs or whether it will be effective or not. Nobody knows, so now if you leave that confusion in the bill, it's not going to be effective. His intent is to help businesses. At least businesses should know whether they're eligible to apply or not.

So I would request that the minister reconsider and support this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment?

Mr. Bilous: Once again, Madam Chair, I'll thank the members for raising certain points. You know, with this amendment the last line saying "any other prescribed business activity" then nullifies or makes listing each specific one – there's no purpose in listing them if it's: and everything else. I appreciate the intention of this amendment. It is not necessary.

Later on today I will table an e-mail that I received this morning from the Calgary Chamber of commerce in which they are completely supportive of the bill in its current form because it is broad and wide ranging and isn't restrictive as far as which sectors. It is very, very broad, which is exactly what the chamber was asking for.

For those reasons, I will not be supporting this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to speak to the amendment that was introduced by my colleague from Calgary-Foothills. I'm prompted to speak largely because of what I view as being some mixed messaging that comes from this government. I just want to make sure that the minister in his very fair commentary on the amendment is aware of this.

You know, I read what it says in section 35 as well. I guess it depends on how you interpret the discretion that is being applied by the minister to the eligible corporations that would apply for the investment tax credits, that I'm very much in favour of. I guess my concern is what I call the mixed messaging. I hate to keep on reminding the government of some of the mixed messaging that we've received from their communications people, but it really reminds me very much of some of the mixed messaging that went out to farmers and ranchers with regard to Bill 6, and that is that some of what was communicated to Albertans in the course of the press releases and other information with regard to this bill was not a match with what actually appeared in the bill.

I'll share with the minister that earlier this month I attended a seminar that was sponsored by Athabasca University that talked about venture capital, and it talked about the small capital markets in Alberta, the investment capital markets. Two people that I think are, you know, certainly very knowledgeable about those areas, Dave Mowat, the CEO of ATB, and Leo de Bever, the former chair of AIMCo, were both talking about the investment tax credit program. They both praised it. They both said that this was a good idea because what it would do is that it would move money that currently is sitting in savings accounts and is, I wouldn't call it "trapped," but let's just say "inactive" as far as being part of the investment world in Alberta. It would move money out of those accounts. Certainly, we know that investment dollars are very much necessary to create jobs and to create economic activity.

They were praising the idea of an investment tax credit, but their criticism was that the program was too restrictive. Their criticism was that based on the information that had been put out by the government, the program was too restrictive in terms of what qualified for those investment tax credits. Now, I'll think you'll agree that both of these gentlemen are very knowledgeable with regard to the investment world in Alberta, yet the information and communication from the government has led them to believe that the program is simply too restrictive.

Now, I would to a certain extent agree with the minister's interpretation that under section 35(1)(c) it does appear to be very broad, you know, really saying, "the small business, if required by a condition of the Minister, is or will be substantially engaged, as determined in the prescribed manner, in Alberta in a prescribed business activity that is specified by the Minister in the condition." I would agree with what he says as long as the minister is applying a broad range of criteria, and as long as the minister of the day – and we know that from time to time ministers do change – is prepared to prescribe a very broad range of industries and corporations and business activities that would qualify, then certainly it is true, what the minister says, that it is very broad.

But it could also be very narrow. This is, I think, the issue here. I mean, I agree with what the minister says about it being broad and that, you know, the Chamber of commerce would be in agreement with that. Of course the Chamber of commerce would be in agreement with that. But it all depends on the discretion of the minister, and if the minister changes, if the direction of the government changes, if the decision is made that some industries are perhaps subscribing to this program more than the government would like to see at the time, then the minister can suddenly become more restrictive. This bill gives tremendous discretionary power to the minister.

I mean, to a certain extent I kind of agree with what the minister says with regard to the amendment. The amendment also gives tremendous discretionary powers to the minister, so I think that's the level of nervousness. I guess, you know, what I'm concerned about and what I want to make sure that I drive at and that the minister understands is that the communications that have been put out regarding this program to the general public, including prominent members of the investment community in our province, are such that they believe that this bill will be very restrictive in terms of the activities.

Now, clearly, the minister has been able to communicate to the Calgary Chamber of commerce that that's not the case, but, Minister, you have to broaden that communication because Albertans in general, including prominent members of our investment community, don't believe that that's the case. If that is the situation across our province and if that is what people believe, perception, unfortunately, in some cases is reality. I think, Minister, that while I understand your concerns with regard to the amendment, I actually rather like the amendment because it does make it very clear that there are a number of different business activities that could be included. I think you're right in saying that the final subclause of the amendment kind of throws it wide open all over again.

I am, you know, concerned that under the current legislation there are no specified areas of business activity, yet the communication from your government, the communication that your department has put out very clearly specifies a very restrictive list of business activities. There are mixed messages here. Clarity is something that I think we have to strive for as legislators, and if we're writing and crafting good legislation, I think that's something that we need to look for. So I'm in favour of the amendment. I think the amendment does try to provide a broadened basket of business activities that would be eligible, and I think that to a certain extent that is what the investment community is looking for.

Certainly, from the seminar that I attended earlier this month, that was the main criticism. The entire idea of an investment tax credit, both for business activity as well as for capital, is one that the investment community supports. It is patterned after what has been done in other provinces and has been very successful, you know, specifically in British Columbia. This has been a very successful program in British Columbia, but the British Columbia situation has not been restrictive. The British Columbia situation has not specified certain areas, so it's a little bit confusing to me – and I'm sure it's confusing to the investment community – why this government on the one hand says that it's wide open, it's very broad, yet on the other hand they've communicated a very short and restrictive list of business activities that would be eligible under the investment tax credit.

I support the amendment, and I would ask, actually, the minister to provide some clarity as to what seems to be a disparity between what his department and his government have communicated about this bill and what is written in section 35(c).

Mr. Clark: Again, Madam Chair, I just want to rise briefly in response to the – frankly, the only word that comes to mind is "disingenuous" – comments by the minister, who claims that listing the prescribed areas and then saying "any other prescribed business activity" somehow negates the purpose of the prescribed list. The current bill itself, under 35(1)(c), says:

The small business, if required by a condition of the Minister, is or will be substantially engaged, as determined in the prescribed manner, in Alberta in a prescribed business activity that is specified by the Minister . . .

That's what the bill already says. Again, this amendment is being quite generous to the minister by including that, allowing him and his ministry the flexibility they need to administer this program, but it also sets out in the bill itself, not just in a government news release, what those prescribed areas are.

The other question I would have to the minister – and I know he’s paying rapt attention to what I’m talking about here – is: if these are not the areas in which you will allow the investment tax credit to be eligible, as you’ve said in your news release or you’ve said in your public comments, what are the areas that will be eligible? How will you define those things? They’ll come out in regulation at some point, so clearly this is, I would hope, something you’ve given some thought to. You’ve said some nice words in public which, frankly, are broadly consistent with this list here.

What I can’t understand is what the hesitation is to enumerate these things in the bill as opposed to creating them in regulation, because what are we going to see in regulation if not a list not dissimilar to this? These are things that the minister has talked about in public as a result of his extensive consultations with industry and with stakeholders. You know, I suppose it’s maybe a he said, she said. Maybe stakeholders are telling us one thing and telling the minister another, or perhaps the minister is hearing different things.

The stakeholders I’ve talked with – and I’ve had extensive consultations and discussion particularly with chambers of commerce but with business owners and investors themselves, those that seek to actually take advantage of this program; one company here in Edmonton that I know in particular has great interest in taking advantage of this – have been very clear that they would like a very specific set of prescribed areas where it will be eligible; otherwise, how will we know what is eligible?

I can assure you that very few people actually read bills.

Mr. Cooper: What?

Mr. Clark: Look, no one is more shocked than me.

I for one read every bill that’s come out of this Assembly cover to cover. Most people – I can assure you that very, very few, even fewer people than read bills, read regulations.

Again, there’s some dissonance here. There’s some disconnect between the minister’s words and his actions. It appears that he wants the ability to just prescribe these things. That’s what the bill currently says, but again that’s what the amendment says as well. This amendment doesn’t take anything away from the minister. It adds clarity.

With that, I again would really encourage the minister to reconsider this amendment and support the thoughtful amendment from the Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Yeah, Madam Chair. I’d just like to clarify to the minister that I actually met with the Chamber of commerce. I have a letter from them, and I met them together with our finance critic, the MLA for Strathmore-Brooks. This letter was copied to the members for Calgary-Elbow and Calgary-Fish Creek as well. It was addressed to the minister.

The Calgary Chamber actually told us, you know, that they will withdraw their support for this bill unless the minister clarifies who all is going to be eligible for this funding. Like the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster said, there seems to be some mixed messages. Also, I mean, if the minister says that it’s broad enough and then he goes to the media and he says, “Oh, I’m going to select a certain number of sectors” and names them and the Member for Edmonton-Centre gets up in this House and he gives another four, five sectors that are eligible, that creates a lot of uncertainty for the investors.

Everybody’s in a holding pattern. They started looking at Alberta now, thinking, “Okay; maybe this government is opening Alberta for business,” but by rejecting reasonable amendments like this common-sense announcement, they are not helping the certainty for businesses. If the minister thinks that it’s prescriptive enough, then he shouldn’t be doing these media conferences, or his colleagues should not be telling the businesses. I would ask him: either he deletes section 35(1)(c), or he should tell us from our amendment which sectors he doesn’t like. If you don’t like certain sectors, you tell that now and clarify. That will help the businesses.

Our amendment says that these are the minimum list of sectors that we are recommending based on the stakeholder consultation. I said that I consulted a variety of stakeholders in all sectors, and based on their input, I put forward this amendment. If the minister doesn’t agree with any of them, he should clarify that. I would ask him to either clarify that and then delete 35(1)(c) or support our amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A1?

Seeing none, I’ll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: We are back on the main bill. Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is my pleasure to rise in support of Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. There were some concerns or, I would say, some questions raised in regard to certain aspects of the bill which I would like to highlight points about. I would like to begin, first, with economic impact analysis. The members opposite have asked multiple times if economic impact analyses were completed for both tax credits. Economists in the ministry completed comprehensive economic analyses for both tax credits.

In the case of the AITC the program is anticipated to increase economic activity in the sectors involved in the activities of research, development, and commercialization of proprietary technology, products, and processes; development of interactive digital media and game products; video postproduction, visual effects, digital animation; and tourism. The activities would not occur at the same level without the support of this program. Over the three-year period AITC will support a total of 2,200 to 4,400 new jobs. Our analysis forecasts that more than half of those jobs come from the businesses directly supported by AITC. The remaining jobs are created in the sectors that support these industries. The increased investment and job-creation support by the AITC would result in a $200 million to $500 million increase in GDP over the program period. The model used in the assessment uses data from Statistics Canada.

The CITC is expected to increase economic activity in the sectors related to manufacturing, such as value-added agriculture and energy, as well as tourism. They anticipate that the activities would not occur with the same timeliness without the support of this program as the CITC encourages businesses to make their investment within the program time frame. Manufacturing and processing business exports are projected to increase by $10 million to $40 million. Over the two-year period CITC will support a total of 2,200 to 4,600 new jobs. Our analysis forecasts that roughly half of those jobs come from the businesses directly supported by CITC. The remaining jobs are created in sectors that support these business activities, and this increased investment and job creation would result in a $300 million to $700 million increase in GDP over the program period.

The relationship between the company and investor is important. What would happen if the relationship between company and investor does not work or a business becomes ineligible? That was something also brought to our attention, so I would like to talk about this as well. Several members also wanted to know what would happen in the case of the AITC if the partnership between the investor and the small business did not work. They also asked if there are provisions in place if a business becomes ineligible for the AITC.

In designing the program, we have taken this possibility into account and included provisions in the legislation to address this issue. For example, the act enables eligible businesses to request to cancel their registration with the program. The eligible business would be required to pay back the total tax credit or a portion of the tax credit. Additionally, should a business become ineligible for the AITC, the act enables their registration to be suspended or revoked. Depending on the nature of their ineligibility or noncompliance, the business may be suspended until they meet the requirements or their registration may be revoked outright.

The other thing I would like to highlight is the case of when a VCC has a controlling stake in a company under the AITC. A very important question that was asked last week was: why can't a venture capital corporation have a controlling stake in a company under the AITC? The intent of the legislation is to ensure that the program is not used to allow a venture capital corporation to acquire a company and receive a tax credit for that acquisition at the same time. The legislation ensures that the program is not being abused or manipulated.

Another question posed by the opposition was: what would happen if a small business grew beyond the 100 full-time employees outlined in the AITC program? Larger businesses often have more capacity to raise funds through traditional financing methods such as loans based on collateral or business track records. The main purpose of the AITC is to support the growth of small businesses. Industry Canada defines a small business as having no more than 100 full-time equivalents. Because small businesses that develop relationships with venture capital corporations often receive mentorship that helps the business to expand, grow, and become more successful, investment in an eligible small business that grows beyond 100 employees is allowed if the VCC made the original investment when the small business had 100 or fewer employees. This is in line with similar tax credit programs in other jurisdictions.

Some members in the Chamber have expressed concern about the administrative burden of the AITC and CITC. Rest assured that the administrative steps proposed are there so that we can ensure the program is not being abused and that it is doing what it was designed to do: create jobs and diversify the economy.

Opposition members wanted to know if government could change the rules around the tax credits. The CITC and AITC are structured as two- and three-year programs respectively to meet this government's objectives. There is no reason to revoke tax credit certificates from businesses or investors unless there is fraud, misrepresentation, or other violations of the program as described in sections 27, 42, and 64 of this bill.

It was asked if we looked to other jurisdictions when designing the tax credits. Let me assure you that the AITC includes many of the proven aspects used in other jurisdictions, including British Columbia and Nova Scotia. For example, British Columbia's venture capital tax credit program has seen a positive impact on the increase in equity available to small businesses, job creation, and economic return. For every dollar spent under British Columbia's tax credit program, $1.98 is received back in taxes.

That said, it's important to note that not everything that works in other jurisdictions is appropriate in the Alberta context. Various jurisdictions support venture capital in different formats, which has allowed them to maximize the effectiveness of their approach. Manufacturing or processing investment tax credits are common in many jurisdictions around the world and within Canada. You can look to Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Quebec, the Atlantic provinces, and Nova Scotia for similar programs. The tax credit value ranges depending on the jurisdiction. The most common credit rate is 10 per cent, but in some cases the credit is worth as little as 5 per cent and as much as 25 per cent of the investment value.

In developing the CITC, we had to take into consideration our limited budget for the program. This drove some program features that are unique to Alberta, namely the competitive process. I must emphasize, however, that these decisions were supported and even suggested by industry stakeholders. In many case scenarios chambers of commerce, multinational corporations, local business owners were all consulted throughout this process.

Talking about the jurisdictions, I can highlight more details and some specific information related to certain jurisdictions when it comes to investment tax credits. For example, our neighbouring jurisdictions offer a variety of tax credits to specific industries, including a preferential tax rate for manufacturing and processing and an investment tax credit.

A good international example would be the United Kingdom, that has two investor tax credits, the seed enterprise investment scheme and the enterprise investment scheme. The seed enterprise investment scheme is a 50 per cent tax credit with a maximum annual tax credit of 50,000 pounds. It also provides capital gains tax relief if all or part of the capital gains were reinvested. The SEIS is only eligible for investments made in companies with fewer than 25 employees. On the other hand, the EIS is a 30 per cent tax credit with a maximum tax credit of 300,000 pounds. It is only eligible for investments in companies with fewer than 250 FTEs and fewer than $15 million in gross assets. Similar to B.C. and Manitoba, the U.K.'s schemes exclude activities in developed industries such as coal and steel production, farming or market gardening, and shipbuilding.

That was an example of something that's happening on the international level, as I mentioned about the U.K., and locally we have other provinces, as I mentioned, other jurisdictions that have some incentives to diversify and promote the economy.

Madam Chair, interestingly, I was able to write a poem to describe how this particular bill is going to be helpful to the province of Alberta, so I would like to have the pleasure of reading the poem.

The economy of Alberta has been like rolling hills,
Raising concerns for Albertans to pay their bills.
Reliance on one market and industry is full of risks,
Diversifying and investing locally are the tricks.
Alberta investor tax credit will help drive innovation,
Be it technology, research development, and commercialization.
Supporting small and medium-sized business expansion,
Be it tourism, digital media, video postproduction, and animation.
The capital investment tax credit will advance big enhancements,
Facilitating companies' large-scale investments.
Be it manufacturing, processing, tourism, and infrastructure,
AITC and CITC are great for our future.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: This is to speak on the bill, right?

The Chair: Yes.

Mr. Taylor: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chair. I don't have a poem, but that was a good poem. Very interesting. You captivated me.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak to Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. Alberta is truly facing a crisis when it comes to the economy, and, yes, the province needs to find new and innovative ways to attract new businesses to the province. Attracting investors to Alberta is something that the Wildrose has campaigned on and still rallies on. However, Madam Chair, the ways and means that Wildrose would work to get to this goal, I must say, are different from this government.

Simply put, the path that this government has taken is taking us further away from a balanced, sustainable approach, never mind restoring the Alberta advantage. When this government took over on May 5, 2015, from the previous government, Albertans were in debt approximately $12 billion if you don't take into account the Alberta heritage savings trust fund.

11:00

We finally did get to see the government's budget. That was not to be seen until late November of 2015. That's when we finally got to see the first budget, a stunning six months after being elected. The government wanted to borrow up to 15 per cent of GDP. That's somewhere in the neighbourhood of about $48 billion. At the same time they promised that they would never need to borrow that much, that that capacity was far more than enough, that they would never have to go beyond that borrowing. But they needed to in order to weather the storm because the oil prices were low. Predictably, you should be looking at the forecast to be able to tell how long oil prices would be low. That was for the downturn in oil.

At the same time, the government promised that they wouldn't be coming back to borrow any more, but just four months later: a new budget. In this budget what did we find? Lo and behold, a new bill, Bill 10, the Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016. This act, against the government's word, is far from responsible. Some might say: as far as the moon is from the Earth. It's true. Those descriptions cannot even capture what the bill entailed or its repercussions in its entirety. Because there is no limit to how much they can borrow – to infinity and beyond – they would have to have a better name for the bill, like the unlimited debt ceiling. As a result of Bill 10, we are now looking at a situation where we will be in debt to the tune of $60 billion, and at the current rate of interest we'll have to pay about $2 billion every year just to service that debt.

What does this all mean, and what kind of investment will we be missing out on because of the debt and the deficit? When I looked on paystub.com to see what the average teacher in Alberta made, it said that the average teacher made around $70,000 a year. Well, if you take the $2 billion that we're going to be in debt and divide it by $70,000, you're somewhere in the neighbourhood of a little over 28,000 teachers that could be hired from those interest payments alone. The schools that are being built or have been built in the past couple of years in Paradise Valley and Bashaw, for example: they cost around $10 million. You could have 200 schools built each and every year – each and every year – for that $2 billion.

That's a lot of industry. That's a lot of economics that we could have in this province, a lot of jobs. Instead, this government would like to create more profit for the banks. They like the big banks, and they will have to hire more people to count all the cash. I guess that's where this is going. Why is the government so interested in paying all kinds of interest to big banks?

Think of how many jobs could be created just from those payments. Those payments are 28,000-plus teachers. My goodness. This government could repave 3,000 kilometres of highway – think of all the jobs on 3,000 kilometres of highway – that we desperately need across this province. They are in poor and decrepit condition. This could save lives, create tons of jobs. The point I'm trying to make is that you're looking at ways to diversify the economy, but with the loss of billions of dollars already this year and then $2 billion under this government's plan before voters get a say, you know, it sure is tough to be hopeful about the economic recovery with the jobs.

I've listened to the government, and they said that the oil prices are not their fault. In fact, the Deputy Premier just recently said, to be exact, on Thursday, November 24, at about 13:55, "The market we inherited was broken." She said that the market is broken. I agree that these current oil prices are not their fault, but how they've dealt with the economy is their fault. Putting a Band-Aid on the situation is not going to fix it.

Now, the key to economic diversification is having an overall investment advantage over competing jurisdictions. How do we know this? Alberta's economy diversified a lot more under Klein than it did under his predecessors. Before him governments were backing loans and picking the next big thing for investments. That's what this government seems to be doing, trying to pick the next big thing, and we're looking at them trying to pick the next big thing.

We had a reasoned amendment that came from the Member for Calgary-Foothills, and it was a good amendment, not just reasonable. It was a very good amendment, and it specified many of the areas that could be included. Well, this got shot down by this government. Shame on them. You know, we could be looking at something that adds some clarity and gives assurance to Alberta companies on this bill that we're bringing forward.

However, I do think that Bill 30 is certainly better than the previous job diversification bill they introduced last year, Bill 1. That didn't do anything. It's hopeful to see that 18 months after this NDP government came into power, they have now come to the realization that Alberta is facing an economic crisis and that steps must be taken to fix it. They're finally coming to that realization.

On a positive note, this is a nonrefundable tax credit, not a borrowed handout, loan, or grant. Unfortunately, this bill does extremely little to cancel out all the other bad ideological policies that they have put in place, policies like the carbon tax, increases in taxes to businesses and individuals, the dramatic minimum wage increase, shutting down coal, suing Alberta-owned companies, and record deficits and borrowing. This bill will hardly fix this, Madam Chair. Hopefully, this will somewhat increase competitiveness with other jurisdictions and help Alberta's 9,000 manufacturers compete with foreign businesses. Hopefully. Taxes and regulatory costs are hurting and killing businesses, and we all know that introducing a carbon tax is not helping the problem, but maybe this bill will fix some of that.

I'm almost certain – and it was alluded to – that the minister has done an economic study on the ramifications of the bill, but what's going to happen with the ramifications? I would like to actually see the economic study, not just hear some of the highlights. I'm not sure that I like the sound of giving the minister the discretion to refund the excess amount of the tax credit over Alberta tax. It sounds too much like the previous government's cronyism. I think we should add an amendment to the bill to mandate an independent review of some kind to ensure that there is no cronyism and that the program is actually creating investment in the province and not just lowering revenues.

It's bad policy that has gotten us to where we are today, and if we look closely to our neighbour to the east, we can clearly see that they're not suffering to the same degree that we are, with job stats and drilling stats.

An Hon. Member: Are you talking about Saskatchewan?

Mr. Taylor: Right next door, in Saskatchewan. Thank you.

Saskatchewan is not trying to spend their way to prosperity. Rather, they put policies in place that are clearly more attractive than Alberta's. Saskatchewan has been paying off most of its debt, and its budget has a projected deficit of about half a billion dollars – $427 million is what I read – in 2016-2017. But when you look at Alberta's deficit forecast, we just heard that it was $10.8 billion. That's almost $11 billion. You know, that's about 20 times the deficit that they have in Saskatchewan.

We have the same oil, the same farms, the same forestry industry. Hey, we even have the Rockies for tourism. That's something Saskatchewan doesn't have. We have tourism. You would assume that when we have the same oil, the same farms, the same industries, virtually, and we have tourism, we should be doing way better than Saskatchewan. Unfortunately, we're not. A deficit of $427 million is what they've projected. Unfortunately, we had to borrow and go into a deficit of $10.8 billion.

Listen, folks. Despite this Bill 30, for the most part this government's plan is all wrong. We need to lower taxes and regulatory costs, lower costs for consumables like electricity and gas. That's how you can signal to investors that this is a place to invest. When you want to bring people to the province, you've got to have signals to bring people in. Jobs will follow when companies and businesses invest in our economy. That's what happens. If they want to come to our province, jobs follow.

Next, work with different levels of government and postsecondary institutions to help steer the ship towards a diversified economy, one that actually works, one that has an Alberta advantage.

Alberta plans to bring in over the next two years higher carbon taxes than any other jurisdiction in Canada bar none. [interjection] Yeah, in the world. Carbon taxes don't work. Just ask Australia. Ask Australia how the carbon tax worked for them between 2011 and 2014. Rather, work with research and industry to develop innovative solutions to create even more sound techniques to extract oil in a cleaner manner. We have the ability here. Why not work with what we've got, what we know? We know oil, and we know agriculture. Then sell these innovations across the world, thereby creating jobs, attracting the best here to Alberta, and creating the cleanest environment in the world. If your action plan is so sound, can you please show me the economic study on how this works?

Why does this program only target certain industries? We are known around the world for our oil and our agriculture, yet why was there originally no plan or clear plan for the agrifood sector, as was brought up in this amendment, to get tax credits for them? We are either punishing our oil sector or we've forgotten our agriculture sector. The government is out of touch and needs to begin to work with what we've got and learn how to expand it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am honoured and quite excited to speak as a cosponsor in support of Bill 30, the Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. Establishing the Alberta investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit will encourage innovation, further diversify the Alberta economy, and create new jobs. Many provinces in Canada have similar programs, as my colleague was alluding to earlier, including British Columbia. The B.C. investment tax credit program is a well-established program and has been very successful in British Columbia, with a return of $1.98 for every tax dollar invested. I would invest in that.

Last summer I spoke to the A100. Madam Chair, they are an Alberta organization comprising entrepreneurs, founders, and C-level executives that are dedicated to lasting diversification of Alberta's economy, and they do this by supporting up-and-coming tech entrepreneurs by sharing their networks and their experience. A number of technology companies have been founded in Alberta. We've recently seen a 48 per cent jump in the number of technology companies with headquarters in the province according to a recently released survey, the Alberta Enterprise Corporation 2016 deal flow study. We don't currently have the strength of the B.C. tech industry, which is very successful, so successful that there have been efforts to recruit Alberta tech workers to B.C. Three days ago the Globe and Mail reported how B.C.'s tech sector is growing so fast that it's hard to measure.

The possibilities of the new economy are really exciting, and it's equally exciting that the AITC will enable our tech sector to take advantage of the myriad opportunities. So how would investors be able to take advantage of this initiative? Well, the program will give investors a 30 per cent tax credit on investment in new ventures, up to $30 million from 2017 to 2019, and it covers investments made in Alberta companies from April 14, 2016, to the end of December 2019. The AITC would be provided on a first-come, first-served basis for individual investors, which for start-ups are often family and friends. The maximum tax credit would be $60,000 a year. This translates into a maximum $200,000 investment. The tax credit is refundable for individual investors and could be carried forward up to four years if it isn't required in the tax year of the investment. That allows investors to create a long-term strategy for their investment dollars. For corporate investors there would not be a maximum tax credit. It would also be carried forward and is nonrefundable.

I spoke to an A100 member earlier this month. The organization is very excited about Bill 30, and they're actively working on multiple initiatives to support the bill and encourage deal flow in the province.

The start-up culture in Calgary and Alberta is strong. There are a number of incubators in Calgary and Edmonton, with environments that help connect founders with mentors. They offer networking opportunities, and they encourage collaboration among the start-up community. Investment that would be encouraged by the AITC will strengthen this culture, providing more opportunity for innovation by people who are passionate about technology. I find this really exciting.

The capital investment tax credit gives Alberta companies a unique opportunity to further benefit from investing in the tangible assets, like machinery and buildings, that make their businesses more competitive. The CITC will make a 10 per cent nonrefundable tax credit available for capital investments up to $5 million.

I recently visited a company in my riding that's looking to invest in equipment. This is a CNC machine shop, and they manufacture components for customers from a number of industries like aerospace, oil and gas, and remote-controlled vehicles. They have a pretty diverse client base. In talking to the owner, I learned that he's planning to invest in new equipment for his business. Madam Chair, high-end CNC machines that manufacture precision parts are worth hundreds of thousands of dollars, and investing in this equipment will allow this company to grow and take advantage of opportunities they wouldn't be able to access otherwise.

The new business generated by this capital investment will also generate new jobs for skilled workers and have a positive effect on Alberta's employment rate.

For these reasons, Madam Chair, I encourage all of my colleagues to vote in support of Bill 30. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to move that Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, be amended, and I have the requisite copies here for the desk. The original is on top of those, just for your information.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A2.

Go ahead, hon. member.

11:20

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to move that Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, be amended as follows. In part A section 3(3) is amended by striking out "may" and substituting "shall." In part B section 34(3) is amended by striking out "may" and substituting "shall."

Madam Chair, this amendment seeks to clarify the approval process for registration to be eligible for these two programs. It is important to note here that these amendments deal with the entity being approved to be eligible for these programs. It does not mean that an individual or corporation would automatically receive tax credits from the government, so purely a clarification. They would simply be eligible for those programs as deemed appropriate by the minister.

By making a slight wording change in two sections of the legislation, I feel the approval process would be much more transparent and understandable to the public. It has been noted earlier that some of the press releases that have gone out have been somewhat prescriptive in their nature, and I know that the minister's intention is actually for it to be much more broadly accepted and that those opportunities for businesses to subscribe to it are much more broadly written. This is because with the legislation as currently written, an applicant investor or corporation could meet all of the designated criteria, and the minister "may" approve this individual or entity. We would like this to be "shall" approve if they meet all the conditions. So if the individual investor or company, depending on the program, meets all of the criteria as laid out by the minister, the individual investor or company would automatically be approved as eligible, again, meeting all those criteria as outlined.

Our caucus feels that this removes headaches for the minister. I know that he's going to have his hands full – we hope he's going to have his hands full – with many applicants for the program. The day the person will actually automatically approve investors and companies who are eligible I think is a better way for them to know, as they meet all the criteria, that they will need to go through the process, but there is a high likelihood and, in fact, a guarantee that they will be moved through the program if all conditions are met.

If it is left the way it is, it opens the door for a company which checks all the boxes and is, for whatever reason, not approved to claim after that the minister was somehow biased against them. I'm sure the minister would not want to have any further opportunities for people to say that there was a bias for or against any sectors or individual companies, again not picking any winners or losers, particularly within the criteria prescribed. By changing one word in two sections, we can remove this potential headache and administrative burden for the minister, and I would ask that the House accept this and support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. As I've expressed in the past to members of this Chamber, amendments that are reasonable, that strive to improve the bill: I'm completely open to and our government is open to accepting them. This is one such amendment. It's a very reasonable amendment, moving the word "may" to "shall." For those reasons, I will be voting in favour of this amendment.

The Chair: Any others wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: I just have a technical question for the minister. By moving "may" to "shall," does this mean that you're going to be overshooting the limits that you've set for the tax credit?

Mr. Bilous: Madam Chair, the short answer is no. Should a corporation meet all the other requirements and be eligible, then it means that they will be registered once they satisfy all of the others as opposed to: they possibly would be registered.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2?

Mr. Gotfried: Madam Chair, I would just like to rise to thank the minister for accepting this. It's a very small change, but I think it could be a meaningful one. I think that, in the spirit of co-operation on the legislation, again I'd like to extend my thanks for being open to improving the legislation albeit in a small measure at this point in time – there are other amendments to come – and I'd like to thank him for that.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 carried]

The Chair: Are there any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to Bill 30? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair.

Dr. Starke: You're on a roll.

Mr. Gotfried: Well, now that we're on a roll here, we'll try this again.

Thank you again to the minister.

Madam Chair, I'd like to rise again to move an amendment to Bill 30. I have the requisite copies here. The original should be on top.

The Chair: This will be amendment A3.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to move today an amendment to Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, that it be amended in section 65(3) by striking out "as soon as is reasonably practicable after making the decision" and substituting "within 30 days after making the decision to rescind, vary or confirm under subsection 2."

Again, I'd like to thank the minister. This is a very detailed and very involved bill, and these are just some small opportunities we see for some clarification. This amendment seeks to clarify the approval timeline for the capital investment tax credit program. By changing the language that's currently in place, which may be considered to be somewhat vague or not as clear as we would like to see, and replacing it with a 30-day timeline, we feel the decision-making process becomes somewhat more definitive for applicant companies who may need to either move on or find other forms of financing which may be affected by the decision.

The 30-day timeline is consistent with portions of this legislation which deal with an applicant company's ability to appeal a decision made by the minister. Again, a clarification of some of the terms within it. While we all have faith in the minister and his staff and their ability to respond as quickly and efficiently as possible to all applications – and we know that that will be the case. Obviously, they want to move the applicants through as quickly as they possibly can to find those that are eligible. We simply want to formalize those timelines within the legislation in order to give potential investment companies greater clarity in their ability to take advantage of this opportunity hopefully to invest, to support the economy, and to create jobs.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Madam Chair. In addition to looking at other jurisdictions, I think this is a reasonable amendment that, you know, I would encourage people in our House to support.

Mr. Cooper: Two in a row.

Ms Babcock: I know.

I think that we should all work together to accept this one because in addition to looking at other jurisdictions which we have lagged behind for much too long, both in terms of venture capital dollar invested and deal flow, members opposite have asked about measures to evaluate these tax credits. There are checks and balances in place to evaluate the success of both programs. For the AITC, a venture capital corporation, any eligible business corporation, must prepare and file a report to the minister within six months after its fiscal year-end. This report must include their most recent financial statements, and for venture capital corporations this report must also include information on the investments their VCC has made. For the CITC, before the tax credit certificate is granted, conditionally approved applicants must show that the investment has been made and describe the economic, social, environmental, and employment impacts of the investment.

The transition away from coal-fired electricity generation has caused concern for many, and members have asked if the tax credits will help with the transition. We understand that this transition will affect communities and workers surrounding coal-fired generation facilities and associated mining operations such as in Stony Plain. That's why we've established a strong panel of experts that will meet with workers and stakeholders in the new year and provide government with advice and options for supporting community transition.

The members opposite wanted to know how much diversification has happened since the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade was created in October 2015. The economy is the ministry's top priority, and our government is working to ensure that the province sees sustainable job creation and diversification long into the future.

In August, three months after the introduction of the Alberta jobs plan in Budget 2016, the provincial economy began adding jobs, a trend that has continued. Between August 1 and October 31, 2016, the provincial economy added 25,000 jobs. The programs implemented through the Alberta jobs plan are building infrastructure, diversifying the economy, driving business growth, and increasing investment in Alberta companies. By encouraging local investors to invest in Alberta, we will see Albertan companies expand, innovate, create jobs, and show small-business success during our current tough economic situation. In this way, Madam Chair, the AITC is a de-risking tool that makes investing in Alberta more attractive and encourages the private sector to see the benefits of investing in nontraditional sectors, resulting in a more diversified economy.

Our small and medium-sized businesses are one of the pillars in our communities. Having programs that are designed to benefit them will support our rural communities as they supplement existing programs and address existing gaps. I encourage you to learn more about the actions we have been taking, all of which have been outlined in the document that was released earlier this month on alberta.ca, and I would like to thank all the members for their comments during the debate that we've had so far this morning.

The Alberta investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit are important components of the Alberta jobs plan. Introducing these tax credits at a time when businesses are facing challenges will make us more competitive in attracting and retaining investments while creating these much-needed jobs. Moving forward with this legislation will ensure the government has the right tools in place to promote economic diversification, support employers and entrepreneurs in creating jobs, and encourage investment in the province.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3?

Mr. Bilous: I'll just make my comment very brief, Madam Chair. I want to thank the member for introducing this amendment. I appreciate where he's coming from. I think 30 days is reasonable. It puts it a little more clearly for companies. For those reasons – we are on a roll – I am pleased to accept this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any others wishing to speak to the amendment?

Mr. Gotfried: I'd be remiss in not thanking the minister again for accepting this very modest amendment. It does put some onus on his department, but I know that they will try to meet those types of turnaround in any case. It does hold them a little more accountable to the people that are applying, and I think that any respect that we can give those businesspeople who have the interest in investing in this province is, I think, well positioned.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 carried]

The Chair: We're back on the bill. Are there any further amendments, questions, or comments with respect to this bill?

Mr. Panda: Madam Speaker, in the spirit of give-and-take from the minister, I'm trying my luck now. I have a reasonable amendment which I hope the minister will consider. I have the requisite copies, and I'll give them to you for distribution.

The Chair: This will be amendment A4.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Panda: Madam Chair, the Official Opposition is on the record as saying that we support the intent of the bill and that we just want to make it better and that we want to understand the effectiveness of this program. It's one thing to say that we want to bring in investment tax credits and help the businesses to grow in Alberta, but we have seen many such programs before. They may not be exactly the same but with similar intention, and the results were not up to satisfaction.

That's why we have to measure the effectiveness of this program to see that it is delivering the intended results. Otherwise, if we don't measure and track, you know, it's like giving away free money without any accountability. That's why we need to make sure that the tax credits are exactly delivering the results like encouraging investment and increasing jobs beyond the status quo that we are in now. That's why I'm asking the Auditor General. Anyway, he will be involved one way or another.

I'll read this amendment, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, be amended by adding the following after section 80:

Review by Auditor General

80.1(1) One year after the coming into force of this Act, the Auditor General shall prepare a report [to the Assembly] on the total costs associated with the administration, distribution and tracking of the tax credits provided for in this Act . . .

(2) A report prepared under subsection (1) shall be presented by the Auditor General to the Speaker who shall lay a copy of the report before the Assembly if it is then sitting or, if it is not sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.

Madam Chair, by the time the Auditor General's report is in, it will be the middle of the second year, so not too late to improve the AITC for its last year. Hopefully, we'll be the government by then, anyway, but we want to help this government to put in some checks and balances and to have some ways to measure the success or failure of this program and make it more efficient. Also, we want everyone here to make sure to give a shot in the arm to investment, particularly when we need those investments in the current economic environment.

That's why I think it's a good idea to get the Auditor General to measure and give his report on whether this program is on track, whether it is delivering the results or not, or if it is wasting the money. In that way, we can course-correct and make sure this program is successful.

I ask all members to support this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just in speaking to this amendment, I'm not going to support it. It's already under the Auditor General's purview to evaluate the expenditures of all ministries, so for that reason this amendment is redundant. As well, the act is going to be evaluated by the ministry on an ongoing basis, so there really is no reason to amend the act in order to ensure that this happens.

I would encourage all members to vote against this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd just like to speak in support of the amendment and address a couple of the comments. Of course, all expenditures that the government makes are under the Auditor General's purview. However, the Auditor General isn't required to report on certain sections of spending on an annual basis. You know, the Auditor General only has so much time and resources, and this is a new program, and it would be very beneficial if we could be assured that the AG would be reporting on it.

Certainly, we have proposed a number of amendments that would require accountability around this minister's office. I'm sure you'll remember Bill 1, where the minister voted against reporting back to the Assembly. He assured us that we would have regular updates on the successes of that bill and that those would be in the House. I continue to wait for those.

All that the member is suggesting is that we provide a certain level of accountability and transparency, and one of the great ways to do that is a tool that's already at our disposal in the form of the Auditor General. I'm a little disappointed to see the government continually voting against accountability to the Assembly. It's a track record that they are establishing for themselves that is similar to the previous government's track record with respect to reporting to the Assembly and things being done behind closed doors. Now, it's my hope that the Auditor General will undertake this on his own initiative, but we certainly had the ability to pass this piece of legislation, that would have required him to do that.

I hope that the members across will reconsider. We could have had three positive amendments moved and then three positive amendments passed. I look forward to the ongoing debate.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A4? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, you know, when it comes to spending large sums of money, we need to make sure that taxpayers are always at the centre of every dollar that we're responsible for. Now, by adding this amendment, we will ensure that there is transparency and accountability and ensure that some things that may have happened in the past don't happen in our future.

Now, the problem here and the danger is that unless we have somebody just take a quick look at exactly what is happening and how the tax credit is functioning, there is a potential – and I know that no member here would take advantage of this – that we could end up with a tax break or cronyism for those who are either good at navigating or are friends. I am concerned that whenever we open up one of these tax credits, we need to be very sensitive to the fact that we just voted down a Wildrose amendment trying to broaden and ensure the fact that all of the areas are included within this bill and opening it up so that it's not just at the minister's discretion. When we start bringing stuff forward like this, I believe we try to work with the minister by saying: let's put in some definition of exactly who's going to be here, but we still will allow you the opportunity to add different industries should you need it. Well, the government voted that down, so this is our second step to try to add accountability to where this bill is going. Somebody needs to make sure that this goes.

Again, it comes to jobs at this point. I do believe the minister is looking to create jobs with this bill, which is why I plan on supporting this bill when it goes to vote. But it's the checks and balances, the transparency and accountability that bring the government awareness that there's somebody that's going to be checking to make sure that it is doing what it's intended to do. We have heard repeatedly from the government that they are open to transparency and accountability, yet in this case we're trying to bring that to the government, and it sounds like they're going to deny us on that. That is very tragic.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A4?

Seeing none, I'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I would like to bring an amendment which also seeks to compel the minister to bring a report but not to include the Auditor General. I will hand this to a page and await your response.

Thank you.

The Chair: This will be amendment A5.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. Mr. Clark to move that Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, be amended to add after section 80:

Annual Report

80.1(1) The Minister must annually prepare a report by December 31 that includes the following:

- (a) the total costs associated with the administration, distribution and tracking of the tax credits provided for in this Act; and
  - (b) the economic impact associated with the tax credits provided for in this Act.
- (2) When the report is complete, the Minister must make it available to the public and shall lay a copy of it before the Legislative Assembly if it is sitting and if it is not, within 15 days after the commencement of the next session.

The rationale for this amendment, of course, is similar to the one previously brought by the Member for Calgary-Foothills, the difference being that it is the minister, in fact, who must prepare the report, not the Auditor General. In fact, I agree with the minister that it is not appropriate, I think, to ask the Auditor General to prepare this report. I don't believe that is the role of that office. Ultimately, everything the government does will at some point be audited by the Auditor General.

A program as important as this one – I think that good data makes good decisions. I'm sure you've heard me say that many times in this Assembly. I believe that compelling the minister to prepare an annual report on the efficacy of this program will allow Albertans to know whether or not the program is, in fact, effective. That reporting will happen, not at the political whim of the government, whether it is to their benefit or not, but it will in fact compel the minister to do so annually.

The principles of transparency, of openness, of good data making good decisions I think ought to be paramount for any legislation that we pass in this Assembly. For something that could potentially be as beneficial as this is to Albertans, this could be a good-news story for the government. They get to prepare an annual report and let Albertans know whether or not it's being effective. Frankly, if it is not effective, I think we should know that as well. I would imagine the government would like to know that as well and also what the costs are of this program. While there may be benefits, I think it's also important to know what the costs are.

That's why this amendment is balanced in that it both seeks to compel the minister to provide a report associated with the costs of administration, distribution, and tracking but also the economic impact and to let all Albertans know that in a systematic, structured, predictable, and regular manner. I believe that is most appropriate to be done from the minister's office, not necessarily from the Auditor General.

With that, I look forward to hearing the minister's response, and I would encourage all members to support this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Madam Chair. I'll be brief. One of the big questions about this government's policies has been accountability. There's a lot of spending, a lot of borrowing, and a lot of investments that need transparency and need accountability. Given what I've seen from this minister so far, I'm very encouraged that he will indeed want to both say that he stands for transparency and accountability and demonstrate that he stands for transparency and accountability.

It's one of the constant bugbears of governments everywhere that there's a difficulty in showing us the books and demonstrating both the costs and the benefits to Albertans and, in this case, small businesses, employment, diversification. Show us the impacts of these what look to be, on the surface, excellent incentives, excellent investment stimuli.

I'll certainly be supporting this, and I'm hoping to see a positive response on the other side as well. Thanks, Madam Chair.

Mr. Panda: Madam Chair, I am rising in support of this amendment for the reasons explained by both members from Calgary, Calgary-Elbow and Calgary-Mountain View. I mean, like the previous speaker said, the devils are in the details. Most of the time, you know, it's all great on paper – it all looks great – but the effectiveness of these programs is hard to measure unless we have thorough checks and balances. We should have periodic reporting by the minister. I know he didn't want the Auditor General – he didn't support that – but at least this is reasonable. The minister's department should be able to support him with this report every year, with the results of this, whether we are spending taxpayers' dollars wisely or are wasting the money.

I hope the minister will consider it. It's a rare occasion today, actually. The member for Calgary-Mountain View, in fact, supported my reasonable amendment earlier this morning to bring clarity to this program, but the minister said no. I hope he will listen to all concerns raised by the opposition and consider this one. It doesn't cost him anything.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?
The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will thank the member for this amendment. I appreciate, you know, the intention of this amendment, although I can assure this House that it is my job to on a regular basis update Albertans as far as how our programs are doing, the number of jobs that are being created, investment that's being attracted into the province. I will continue to do that on a regular basis and, therefore, will not be supporting this amendment.

Again, this is something that Albertans are very interested in knowing. We will be doing an ongoing review of both tax credits to ensure that not only are we getting maximum value but, also, that there is a decent amount of uptake and that it is in fact supporting our small to medium-sized businesses, helping them grow. Of course, they then increase their number of employees, hire more Albertans, which is exactly what we're looking to do.

For those reason, I will not be supporting this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I think it's more than a little bit disappointing that the government members are about to vote against accountability, vote against providing information to this Chamber that is vitally important. A significant, substantial report is different than the minister just coming and saying: "Don't worry. The sky is blue, and everything is perfect." It's more than about disappointing, but I do look forward to the government continuing down this path of a lack of accountability and a lack of respect for the Assembly.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A5?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A5 lost]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 30, 2016

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Good evening. Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 32

Credit Union Amendment Act, 2016

[Adjourned debate November 30: Mr. Kleinstuber]

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. members wishing to speak to Bill 32? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise and speak on Bill 32, the Credit Union Amendment Act, 2016, but I must say that I probably have more questions than I do comments, so I'll begin.

There are many themes that I'm interested in addressing. I guess in one way I'm interested in the motive for Bill 32 and how that relates to stakeholder feedback and consultation. I'm looking, hopefully after I speak, to get some assurance from somebody on the government side that they spent enough time with the credit unions in Alberta to know that they're in favour of what the government is about to do.

We're not opposed to making sensible changes to the way credit unions operate, but I think the government ought to clarify their rationale for the act. In saying this, I'd urge the minister responsible to ensure that the bases have been covered with consultation. I'm looking for some assurance that there will be no unintended ill effects on the hard-working Albertans and, of course, the credit unions and their employees, who are indeed amongst the hard-working Albertans. Of course, with consultation comes the assurance that other stakeholders that do business with the credit unions won't get any unpleasant or unexpected consequences either as a result of the legislation. Again, I'm hoping that the government will give the House some assurance that adequate back-and-forth consultations have taken place. Albertans deserve no less. The credit unions are an important part of the financial framework that makes our province work.

It looks like the government is attempting to expand the role and exposure of credit unions throughout Alberta, and in recognition I'd like to turn my attention for a minute to section 5 of the legislation, which repeals section 48 of the original act. Section 48 mandates that a credit union shall report

- (a) the establishment of a branch of its business,
- (b) the relocation of any of its branches, or
- (c) the establishment of an automated banking machine.

I think most members of the House would probably agree with me that that's a fairly rudimentary and unsophisticated list of things to report on, particularly in the realm of financial management and financial legislation.

By repealing the section, we are decreasing reporting of what I've already said is a fairly rudimentary piece of the credit union legislation, so I guess I'm looking for assurance also that the government is going to require adequate reporting on the more sophisticated and more risky pieces of financial reporting. It just seems logical to me that the information for the public should be published, that, you know, those financial pieces, like having adequate financial reserves and the other basics, are there. Hopefully, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort will have an opportunity to stand up to talk about how that consultation was done and what some of the rationale is for the legislation that's before us.

Now, on the expanded scope of authority and ability given to credit unions through Bill 32, it's my understanding that the legislation will give small and medium-sized businesses greater access to lending. On the face of it, that's a good idea, and ensuring the stability of a lending institution that's doing that is paramount to providing that healthy, vibrant economy and is the cornerstone of a market economy. I'm hopeful that the sponsor of the bill will talk a little bit about that because, obviously, maintaining that stability means that the credit unions will be around to serve Albertans for a long, long time. I hope all members of the House will agree with me that that could only be a good thing.

We know that the purposes of a credit union are to provide financial services on a co-operative basis . . .

- (a) for its members, and
- (b) for non-members, with loans to and deposits from non-members being restricted to what is prescribed as allowed, and its principal purposes are to receive deposits from, and to make loans to, its members.

Madam Speaker, while I think that expanding the ability for the credit unions to provide services and to offer financial services to Albertans is a good thing, in an attempt to be brief I will just say and hope that the sponsor of the bill will stand up and talk to it. If I could get some assurance that the credit unions were adequately consulted, that some of the credit union's major stakeholders have been adequately consulted, and that the basic financial building blocks have been talked about in terms of having adequate reserves and the ability to carry on providing those services on a long-term basis.

There it is. I don't think I've really challenged the legislation. I hope I've asked some reasonable questions, and I finish hopeful that the sponsor of the bill will stand up and make some attempt to answer those questions.

Thanks, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) comes into effect should anybody have comments or questions. The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Deputy Speaker. It's my pleasure to address some of the questions posed by my friend across the aisle and current colleague in this Legislature and also the questions that were posed by a member of the opposition party who is not here. Sorry. [interjections] I didn't say who it was. All right. I didn't say who it was, and I apologize to him in absentia.

Maybe I'll start this way. In answer to some of the questions that were posed, the introduction of one part – I think it was section 9 – is being delayed until January 1, 2018. It's with regard to the disclosure of the five highest paid people who are in credit unions that have more than 2.5 per cent of the total percentage of the amount of money that collectively all the credit unions have. The amount of time that's being asked for them to put that in order is really because they need to look at their policies. If they don't have disclosure policies in place, they need to put those in place, and then they need to have the membership review them.

As was said earlier by a cosponsor, you know, there are 620,000 Albertans who are a part of the 23 credit unions that exist in Alberta. The members of those credit unions that have the five highest paid people who have to be asked to disclose have to put those policies in place, and they have to vote on them. So we're ensuring they make those policies and giving them some time to put them in place. That's why there's a bit of a delay between now and the passage of this bill and when it comes into force on January 1, 2018, with respect to that one piece only.

Other questions that were asked – and I apologize that I didn't hear all of them personally, but I got a little bit of a sense of what I was being asked to rise and speak to. You know, I want you to know that the amendment act that we're bringing in was something that the credit union system, CUCA, has been pushing for for a while. For whatever reasons, the act didn't get amended by the previous government, and they reached out to this government early on and said that they would really appreciate a lot of the things that they've been pushing for for a number of years to get addressed in an amendment brought before this House.

The president and CEO of Alberta's largest credit union, Servus Credit Union, Garth Warner, I introduced here in the House last week when we were introducing the bill. He has been engaged in the discussions around all of this for a great long time, and I've met with him personally a couple of times myself. He's met with members of Treasury Board and Finance that deal with credit unions.

Steve Friend, the CEO of Vision Credit Union, was also introduced here, as was a gentleman that I was on the Calgary library board at one time with, Graham Wetter. Graham and I go back a ways, and he is the CEO of the CUCA. They have brought forward through their members, both the 23 credit unions and the association of credit unions, a number of recommendations for us to address here as a government. We looked at a substantial number of those. Not all of them could be addressed. One of them, frankly, was a challenge for us. They were looking for half a billion dollars to go out and be able to loan, you know, capital liquidity to Albertans to help get them through this downturn. Because the province of Alberta 100 per cent guarantees the deposits on credit unions, we felt that that was not possible, so we didn't do it, but we did a number of other things, Madam Deputy Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there hon. members wishing to speak? Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the minister for his comments. I didn't hear anyone concerned about whether there were questions or comments in 29(2)(a) and how much time he was taking, but I thought he did a great job of answering some of the concerns of the member.

I'd just like to very briefly rise and speak in favour of the bill. I had the opportunity to spend some time with – I can't remember his exact title – Bob Marshall at the Mountain View Credit Union this summer in support of a charity event that they run down there in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. At that time they had heard rumblings of the bill coming and certainly had some reservations just in terms of whether or not the government would be responsive to the needs of the credit union system, raised some concerns about some of the issues in that marketplace that create some unlevel playing fields, if you will, and just highlighted some of the successes of the credit union systems generally and the great work that Mountain View Credit Union does in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and I know also in the constituency of Rimbe- Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and also in the constituency of Drumheller-Stettler. They really do understand the unique and important role that rural Alberta has to play. They understand the unique and important role that the banking industry and the credit unions play in ensuring that our rural Alberta friends can have access to capital, build relationships with their banks, and really be local solutions to local concerns and problems.

So I was pleased when Mr. Marshall reached out to me and expressed his support for the legislation and expressed that the government had been able to check a number of the boxes on behalf of the credit union system. I also had the opportunity to hear from Alberta Central and some of their comments and points around, really, this bill doing a number of things that will continue the ongoing success of the credit union system, which does play such an important role not in just rural Alberta, but certainly the context that I know it in is in rural Alberta. I look forward to being able to support this piece of legislation on behalf of the thousands and thousands of members of the Mountain View Credit Union and the others who benefit from the credit union system.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other speakers to the bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

The hon. Minister of Finance to close debate.

Mr. Ceci: Vote.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 30

Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Sure. Okay. Thank you, Chair. Actually, this is a really great day for me because I get to talk about one of my favourite subjects in the Legislative Assembly, and that is the power of community investment. Earlier on we discussed the powers of the co-operative sector, especially around the credit unions, as to the achievements that they have had in terms of the economy, especially in small communities, and the power that they have had in providing farmers and others with the needed credit and financial services.

What I would like to do this evening is to put my support towards Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. But I especially want to talk about a part of the bill that we haven't discussed in the Assembly yet, and that is the part that talks about enabling the government to establish community economic development corporations, or CEDCs. I know that many of my colleagues in the Assembly are probably wondering what a CEDC is. CEDCs are for-profit investment funds that invest equity in locally owned businesses recognized for their positive social, economic, and environmental returns to communities.

The minister is engaged currently in consultation with targeted stakeholders to ensure that the program that is built into the bill will be successful. The proposal in this bill is that the CEDC portion of the program will be implemented in the summer of 2017. If you're wondering why the minister decided to incorporate this into this bill, it's because this is something which is very prominent in other parts of Canada. For example, there are precedents for enabling local investing in Nova Scotia, Manitoba, Prince Edward Island, and New Brunswick. Actually, Nova Scotia led the way in 1999 with the creation of CEDIF as an investment tax credit. Since its launch 70 CEDCs have been established, mobilizing 7,500 investors, and more than $70 million in assets contributed.

Can you imagine, as I have often done, how I can use my RRSPs and the money that I have to benefit communities? This is what CEDCs are. CEDCs mobilize local capital for local entrepreneurs to help local businesses in Alberta, thereby growing and diversifying our economy, creating jobs, and growing businesses, with positive social and environmental returns as well as economic.

Locally owned businesses, including social enterprise and co-operatives, are critical job creators, and they are also very wise in terms of their environmental impact on business decisions and are more likely to employ vulnerable Albertans, more likely to pay a living wage, and more likely to invest in community. Those locally owned businesses are often recognized for their positive social, economic, and environmental returns to communities.

I'm sure you're wondering if this has happened already in Alberta. I'm going to have the pleasure of telling you about what already exists here in Alberta. In Alberta we already have a number of such places to invest your money, your RRSPs and any money that you might want to invest. One of these investments is in a little town called Sangudo, where the community has gotten together to ensure that the local abattoir would remain. Instead of the abattoir leaving the community, the community invested over $200,000 to make sure that the abattoir stays in the community and provides a place for local ranchers and farmers to have their chickens, their pork, their beef, and so on killed and prepared for the community market.

This kind of investment vehicle is really going to strengthen our rural communities. It's going to enable our RRSP money and our other investment dollars to remain in the community and to remain in Alberta and to grow it.

I'm also wondering if anybody has ever had the opportunity to be part of such an investment vehicle. One of the wonderful things about putting your money into such a locally owned and locally invested enterprise is that you're basically putting your money to work to support local people and the local economy. Basically, your RRSP money and your savings are going to help local businesses grow and prosper and to offer jobs in your communities. This is why I was so pleased when I found out that the minister had built this as a possibility in Bill 30 so that instead of having the investments of Albertans go away from Alberta, they would remain and build their communities. I have a lot of examples of how this is already happening in Alberta.

I would like to also encourage you to see the real story of what happened in Atlantic Canada when this kind of instrument was part of the government program. It has really provided for new enterprise all through the Maritimes.

You may also be wondering why this is different from the other investment and capital credit that the minister has introduced in the bill. This is very different because this is aimed at small investors. This is saying that for people like you and I, that may have some RRSP money but don't have the millions to invest in a new oil refinery or new pipelines, this is for you to invest in the abattoir in your local community. It has been very successful in places in the Maritimes.

You can invest in your grocery store. So instead of your grocery store going away because the current owners want to retire – they're old or something – you can invest in your local grocery store and maintain the grocery store in your community with your money, and because you have invested your money in the grocery store, you are more likely to shop there and use it. It's your community resource.

I think this is going to be a huge benefit for our rural communities. It's going to enable grocery stores. It's going to enable things like, as I just mentioned, the abattoir. I know a huge concern in rural Alberta is: how do you maintain the abattoirs for farmers who want to have their animals killed in small factories rather than sending them to the big factories? I have a lot of examples. For example, the Westlock Co-op, that maintains the grain terminal there in Westlock, was started by this kind of investment by local people wanting to maintain the grain terminal in their community.

I'm going to end by encouraging all of you to do some reading on the possibility of this investment vehicle, that the minister has built into Bill 30, and to encourage stakeholders that you might know to participate in the discussions that the minister will be having so that by the spring of 2017 the proper procedures and regulations can be put in place so that we can all start investing locally the money that we have in our savings to build local communities and make sure that in rural and urban areas we don't see the small businesses leave and communities being without grocery stores, abattoirs, and whatever communities need.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to present an amendment to Bill 30. I have the requisite number of copies here. I will ensure that it reaches you before I start speaking.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A6.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I will read the amendment for the record. I move that Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, be amended as follows.

- A. Section 2 is amended
  - (a) in subsection (1) by striking out clause (o) and substituting the following:
    - (o) "small business" means a corporation that has no more than 100 employees calculated in the prescribed manner;
  - (b) by striking out subsection (9) and substituting the following:
    - (9) For the purposes of the holding of an investment referred to in sections 13 to 15, a small business does not cease to be a small business by reason only that, while the investment is held, the number of employees of the small business and its affiliates is more than 100 employees calculated in the prescribed manner.
- B. Section 12 is amended
  - (a) in subsection (1) by striking out clause (a) and substituting the following:
    - (a) subject to subsection (2), the small business, together with its affiliates, has no more than 100 employees calculated in the prescribed manner;
  - (b) by striking out subsection (2) and substituting the following:
    - (2) Subsection (1)(a) does not apply in respect of a small business in which a venture capital corporation previously invested at a time when the small business had fewer than 100 employees calculated in the prescribed manner.
- C. Section 35(1) is amended by striking out clause (a) and substituting the following:
  - (a) the small business, together with its affiliates, must have no more than 100 employees calculated in the prescribed manner.

I don't know if much more needs to be said than that, Madam Chair, but I will just provide some rationale for this amendment. As I'm sure you can all understand by hearing that amendment – hopefully, now it's on your desks – the current bill reads in the various sections that the business may have “no more than the prescribed number of employees calculated in the prescribed manner.” I read that and was intrigued to know how we would prescribe the number of employees and the manner in which they would be prescribed. The intent here is to seek to define small business.

Now, I’ve had many, many conversations back and forth with the hon. minister on this topic today, and I do want to make sure that it’s stated loud and clear how much I appreciate the minister’s willingness to entertain this amendment, his flexibility in including this in the bill. Of course, also, thank you to the minister’s staff for their very quick response to my staff’s request for feedback and collaboration on this amendment earlier this afternoon and to the table officers as well for their quick work. I suppose I should wait until this amendment is actually accepted before I heap too much praise on everyone, but I live forever in hope.

In all sincerity, I think it’s important that we define the number of employees that is considered a small business, and the reason that I think 100 makes a lot of sense is that when we’re talking about investor tax credits, a small business may want to grow to be a medium-sized business. Often small business is defined as fewer than 50 employees. One of the biggest challenges for business in Alberta and elsewhere is growing from small to medium. A lot of companies, while they may have been successful as a small company, have challenges taking that next step and breaking through the small business to medium-sized business threshold. If this investor tax credit can enable the creation of numerous successful companies that can grow quickly, of course, we’re going to create employment for Albertans, we’re going to create opportunity, and that’s a very good thing. I think 100 is a reasonable number.

Companies larger than that have means, have infrastructure, and also have different requirements for financing, have access to different pools of capital. A company larger than 100, generally speaking – it depends, of course, on the operation – will quite often have access to bank financing or venture capital financing in a way that smaller businesses don’t.

So I think it’s appropriate and in keeping with the intent of this legislation to restrict it to fewer than 100 employees, but at the same time that then gives much greater clarity to any prospective applicant for this tax credit. I understand from the minister that this was the intention in the regulations to begin with, which is why we, I believe, have some agreement here in the House that we’ll move ahead with this amendment.

Again, thanks to the minister for collaborating and for your work on this. I look forward to further debate and discussion. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair, and I’ll thank the member for putting forward this amendment. He’s quite right; the intention was to frame this or to define this within the regulations. There is a formula that’s used to ensure that there’s no way to overstate or change the number of employees that a business has. That’s where “the prescribed manner” comes from. I appreciate the member’s interest in getting this clarification within the legislation.

I, too, echo his thoughts and want to give a big thank you and a shout-out to my ministry staff for working very diligently on this back and forth with the member throughout today in order to get this amendment prepared.

Again, I’m always in favour of providing more clarity where clarity is possible. So having this stated at 100 or fewer employees does just that. It makes it black and white for all of our businesses throughout the province and ensures that businesses that we are targeting, which are, you know, small and medium-sized enterprises, recognize that this is for those who have 100 or fewer FTEs.

I will thank the member for this amendment, and I’m happy to support this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I’ll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A6 carried]

The Chair: We’re back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you, everyone. Good evening to all. I also am going to move a further amendment. With the indulgence and support of the minister, I’m shooting for a hat trick today to follow my esteemed colleague from Calgary-Elbow. I have the original here, which I’ll send to you as well.

The Chair: This will be amendment A7.

Go ahead, hon. member. The page can pick up the original.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I’m pleased to move an amendment, that Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, be amended as follows: (a) section 21(7) is amended by striking out “promptly give notice of the refusal” and substituting “give notice within 30 days of that refusal,” and (b) section 39(4) is also amended by striking out “promptly give notice of that refusal” and substituting “give notice within 30 days of that refusal.”

Thanks to the minister’s office we have been able to ensure that this amendment was comprehensive, and we thank him and his staff for ensuring that we covered all the bases with the appropriate language.

Madam Chair, this amendment seeks to clarify the approval timeline for the Alberta investor tax credit. By slightly altering the language which is currently in place and replacing it with a formal 30-day timeline, we feel that the decision-making process becomes, again, more definitive for applicant investors. The 30-day timeline is consistent with portions of this legislation which deal with an applicant investor’s ability to appeal a decision by the minister. This allows now also for a timeline for them to have certainty with respect to responses. Our caucus feels that by introducing a firm timeline on notice of refusal, we are simply asking the minister of the day and their staff to follow the same timeline set forth for investors applying to this program, which I think is a fair and reciprocal arrangement.

I hope everyone in the Chamber this evening will consider supporting this amendment. Thank you, all, for your indulgence.

The Chair: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair, and I’ll thank the member for his work on this amendment. Again, I’m happy to speak in favour of amendments that provide a little more clarity. I appreciate the member flagging that. The bill in its current form talks about how the minister will “promptly give notice.” The member flagged that and said: you know, maybe we should look at framing it out with a little more clarity. I think that 30 days is a reasonable amount.

I, too, again want to echo the appreciation for the staff in my ministry, the staff in my office, Katie most notably, who have worked diligently with the member and his team to ensure that this amendment does exactly what it's intended to do.

For those reasons I am more than happy to speak in favour of this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A7?

Mr. Gotfried: Madam Chair, I don't think you can say thank you enough, so I'd like to thank the minister for his co-operation in doing these little minor tweaks to improve the bill as it stands, with hopes that it will meet the needs of Albertans in achieving its desired results.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A7 carried]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. Today I rise to speak on Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. You know, going over the debate up until this point, I've not heard a lot of comments regarding – sorry. I'll back up here. This is the opportunity for all of us to work together, which we've seen with the last two amendments, to move forward better legislation. How exactly it is that we have been able to move all of these amendments forward is just another example of government working with opposition, and that's very admirable at this point. We do have some additional amendments that the Official Opposition will be moving forward, and I hope that the government is just as open to working with the third party and the fifth party as they are, hopefully, to working with us.

Now, for decades Alberta was a leader in almost all respects of our economy: resources, retail, the service industries. Business was booming across the country. Essentially, the entire world was moving to Alberta because of the wonderful opportunities that we have here in Alberta. Some of the former advantages were because of our respect for the economy and innovation, that was reflected in the tax rates that didn't seek to punish success and policies that encouraged investment across the board. We need to question if this is the same direction that we are going now, but I will tell you that when you start looking at bills like this that encourage businesses to move forward, it is good to see that the government is backtracking on some of its policy, and it may be that government itself believes that the direction it's going in seems to be the route that Albertans want to see our government go.

I would say that when it comes to Alberta, we need to start looking toward consultation and actually moving that stakeholder information forward, and we haven't seen much of that with this NDP government. Now, having said that, I will say that it is encouraging to see that today, for instance, we had the credit union act go through, move forward. That does seem to have had some consultation with stakeholders, and it does appear that the Minister of Economic Development and Trade has spoken with at least some stakeholders.

Right now we are trying to find favourable economic conditions for certain companies, causing barriers to entry and, in essence, picking winners or losers. Wildrose did try to correct this with one of the past amendments, and unfortunately that amendment was voted down by the government because they felt that it was prescriptive even though it says the same thing. It just defines the industries that we feel, that Albertans, especially the Calgary Chamber, feel are important and then moves those forward to ensure that each one of those industries gets a place within these tax credits.

Now, the problem here isn't with the idea of offering financial incentives to encourage certain types of economic activity. Every government does it. Alberta has many tax breaks, deductions, subsidies, and incentives in place. As a former worker in the accounting industry I was encouraging my clients to take advantage of all the credits and incentives that were available to them through their personal taxes and corporate taxes, and by working with my clients through tax planning, we were able to identify these credits and move them forward. I'm sure that we've got accountants across Alberta that will be looking towards taking advantage of these coming credits on a go-forward basis. I am hoping that my past accounting colleagues are watching this with interest, trying to figure out exactly what industries will be moved forward.

However, it is a quarter after 8.

Now, the problem within the legislation – and this is becoming typical for bills presented in the House – is that there is little information or context, and what happens is that we are planning on moving stuff forward through the regulations that the Alberta government feels best fits what they're looking to do.

Now, it's unfortunately very sad that this is not transparent, that this is not something that Albertans are looking to move forward, and I'm hoping that it's not surprising to all of the chambers across Alberta exactly how limited the scope is that could be placed by the minister.

I am hoping that we can get some answers to questions that have been asked tonight. When we start looking at the fact that the minister is – and I've already mentioned part of this – specifically able to direct a specific industry but leave others out, that is a concern. Whenever we've got the ability to be able to pick winners or losers, that always seems to end up where the taxpayer ends up paying, and then we end up hearing of a scandal. That is why we actually moved forward the amendment that stated that it is important that we have somebody look further than the minister to ensure that this program is fulfilling a mandate and that it is actually moving forward, which is why we are asking for the Auditor General to be looking into this program after a year. Again, the government decided that that amendment wasn't for it.

Now, from a first glance at the bill, it looks like the minister will have substantial say in things like registration, approval to change share structure, approval to raise – well, let's back up. Approval to change share structure: that one there is definitely something that's shocking. I did read the bill, and whenever we start looking at going into private entities and structuring them the way we want them, we end up with problems.

Approval to raise capital and that the minister may impose conditions: "We will give you money if you do this" rarely ends well for the business community. I would argue that when it comes to any direction the government puts on private industry, it always needs to be with the understanding that private industry needs to be looking towards creating profit, which in turn will recycle into creating more jobs, which will create more profit. It's a cycle that we are hoping to continue forward.

If it is – and I'm hoping that the minister can answer that question specifically – is the government able to impose conditions that could potentially be a detriment to a company? Is the government able to change the share structure or force a change in the share structure of a company? This is a question that I've got. Are we able to put restrictions on who a company can hire or how the company hires or how many people the company hires? These are important things because, again, we're looking for stability in business. We're also responsibly looking to make sure that taxpayers' money is being used wisely.

Again, when it looks like the fact is that this is a tax credit, that means profit needs to be accumulated before the credit can be paid out. This seems to be something that would be a concern for me, and I would hope that we get further clarification on that.

There is something else I'd like to see where this will help. The AITC could allow studios to be built for postproduction of films that are being made in Alberta right now. Digital animation focus will help spur more growth in Edmonton's video gaming industry.

Productivity is a big problem with manufacturing. The CITC will help Alberta's 9,000 manufacturers compete with foreign businesses, especially now that we've got a carbon tax coming into place and we will have carbon leakage as a real problem for our local business community. This is a huge concern, and we need to make sure that our businesses can now compete at a different level because we've put more burden on them. Alberta investors need some kind of good news given with all the bad news they're getting from this government and the economy. The lack of access to foreign capital and investment capital limits the growth and commercialization potential of local small and medium-sized businesses in Alberta.

I will say that the Member for Calgary-Elbow putting a definition on what exactly is a small business does help because when we start leaving these terms very loose, what ends up happening is that we end up defining it after the fact, and we find that we are actually putting money into businesses that we never intended to. By saying that, at least these businesses that are going to be getting the tax credits in this case are meant to be the ones that are getting them.

We also have the fact that with the past two PC amendments they're adding accountability on the filing times and the answering times. It's good to see that the PCs are putting amendments forward.

Again, I hope that my colleague from Calgary-Foothills, who is putting amendments forward, is going to be considered by the minister. I'll tell you that Wildrose has good ideas as well as the third party and the independents.

There should be solutions other than just handing out money for corporations. This is something that we need to work on. I believe that this is a step in the right direction. Right now, when we're starting to see that Alberta is hemorrhaging jobs – and this is a concern for my riding – this is a step that will help. As I said in a previous speech, that I was giving when I went to my local businesses and asked them, "Is a tax credit something that will help you?" with them having no profits, it's unlikely that this is going to be something that's going to help them directly at this moment.

But it is important to say that when we start looking at job-creation programs that the government put forward and that have failed in the past, that is why the regulations are so important and why I myself am hoping that the minister gets this right even though the minister has shown that he will not add more definition to the industries that are available.

Now, when we start hearing exactly what we're looking for – I'm hoping that the minister has answers. I am hoping that the minister isn't going to start to tailor our private businesses or corporations into kind of a project that will move Alberta in a different direction than private businesses are already going in. Obviously, losing money is a direction that we want to change for our businesses, our local private businesses. We want them making money. We want them employing people. We want a healthy Alberta, and that is something that I do believe the government is trying to work towards. I, unfortunately, feel that we may not agree on exactly how to end up at that destination.

At this point what we need to be looking towards is: exactly how do we move Alberta forward? When we look at Bill 30, tax credits do seem to be the area that is something we can work with. This is the first piece that I've seen come out of the Minister of Economic Development and Trade's office so far that is something that I think could potentially help my constituents, maybe not today, but hopefully we will get something additional to this.

Madam Chair, I thank you for your indulgence, and I will end there. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I also rise with a further amendment to Bill 30 for today, and I have the requisite copies here to pass to you, the original on top this time.

The Chair: This will be amendment A8.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you to the House again for your indulgence. I'd like to move that Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, be amended as follows:

- A. Section 35 is amended
  - (a) in subsection (1) by striking out clause (c);
  - (b) in subsection (2) by striking out "or (c)".
- B. Section 42(1)(e) is amended by striking out "or (c)".
- C. Section 48 is amended
  - (a) in clause (c) by striking out " , referred to in section 35(1)(c).";
  - (b) in clause (d) by striking out "to (c)" and substituting "and (b)".

Madam Chair, this amendment seeks to expand the scope of the Alberta investor tax credit program in order to increase the opportunities for the success of this program. We're in support of this program and its intent to stimulate economic activity and investment, thereby creating jobs. In developing this program, it appears that the minister has looked to British Columbia, where they have a very similar program, which has shown some marked success in recent times. That program has been successful, and of course we'd like nothing better than to see that success replicated here in Alberta. If I recall correctly, the statistics were that in British Columbia for every dollar invested, there was $1.98 in tax revenues created by that program, a fairly good return on investment, I think all in the House would agree.

My concern is that by limiting the scope of the AITC, the minister is limiting the potential success of this program as well. Minister, I think that, really, what I'm talking about here is that it costs us nothing unless it's successful, and if it's successful, then we'll have achieved the objectives of this. Quite frankly, if it is successful and we create the kind of return on investment we've seen in British Columbia, I don't think we'd have any problem supporting further investment in a program like this.

While we all support diversifying the economy, the government needs to set the right conditions for diversification and let the market decide what diversification initiatives will succeed and what will fail. Ultimately, Madam Chair, it's the market that decides how to allocate rare, in a shortfall, investment dollars. These programs are meant to incentivize that in some small way, but the economics still do need to be in place.

By limiting which industries and businesses can access this program, the minister, in essence, certainly could be or may be choosing winners and losers before the program even begins, and we recognize that the scope of the program is directed towards some of those sectors which they feel need some special attention. However, in this economy let's just say that all sectors actually need some special attention.

Justin Smith, the director of policy, research, and government relations for the Calgary Chamber, noted in his letter to the minister:

The evidence suggests, however, that investor tax credits work best when the government adopts a hands-off approach, and instead places the onus on private investors to make the final decision on risk, efficiency, and ultimately where to deploy their capital even with the incentives thereby offered. I couldn't agree more, and that is exactly what this amendment seeks to do, to broaden the scope, to make it accessible to all Alberta businesses and investors, and to ensure that we attract investment across all industries to create the jobs we so dearly need.

I encourage all members to support this amendment, and I thank you for your indulgence.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A8 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Mr. Panda: Madam Chair, I have another amendment to be moved, so I'll pass along the requisite copies to you.

8:30

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A9.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Panda: Thank you. I move that Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, be amended in section 78 by striking out "2 years" and substituting with "3 years."

Madam Chair, the reason I'm moving this amendment is that, you know, if the beneficiary of this funding in the future is found to be fraudulent, the government of the day should have the ability to prosecute tax cheaters. Instead of two years, it gives us an additional year. That gives us the flexibility to go after the tax cheaters, so I hope the minister will consider that and accept the amendment.

Thank you in advance for consideration.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A9?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[Motion on amendment A9 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Mr. Gotfried: Of course, there are, Madam Chair, but a few short and brief ones.

Madam Chair, I have the requisite copies of an amendment to move.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A10.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to move that Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, be amended in section 56(1)(e) as follows: by striking out "primarily for" and by striking out subclauses (i) and (ii).

Madam Chair, this amendment is similar in nature to my last amendment in that it seeks to expand the scope this time of the capital investment tax credit program. Again, by expanding this program outside of an extremely narrow scope of industries, recognizing that there is some ability for the minister to expand that at his own discretion – our caucus feels this program would be better positioned for success with a very broad scope of applicability.

As we know, capital investment is a key component of any successful economy. We should be doing so – really, anywhere and everywhere in our power to attract any and all kinds of capital investment to the province, especially given our current fiscal climate. As I often say: it's very hard to create any job until a dollar of capital is invested, and we need to encourage those at every turn. Of course, we've seen this government investing billions and billions of dollars into infrastructure spending for that very reason, to stimulate the economy, to create jobs, both short term and long term, and we believe that this principle carries through with the expansion of the scope of the capital investor tax credit program.

Again, if you truly believe that stimulus is something that actually works by investing that capital, it would make sense to improve Alberta's attractiveness for any type of capital investment as a way to stimulate the economy through the private sector. There are many people sitting on the sidelines or cautiously waiting for something to happen, and maybe such an opportunity as this capital investor tax credit might be what will take some of the money off the sidelines and put it to work for those companies and, more importantly, for Albertans.

Madam Chair, I applaud the minister for bringing forward this program. I do wish, however, that he had not limited the potential success, which we've heard may not be as limited as it is, but it has been positioned that way, and perception is reality. So let's take this opportunity to expand that program, not only here in the words of the legislation but in terms of spreading that word out to Albertans so that it's not viewed as being a few hand-picked industries and that it is accessible to all Albertans who wish to invest, again, those dollars that may be sitting on the sidelines or which may be in the hands of people looking to invest, catching the bottom of the market and helping us to climb out of it.

Madam Chair, by expanding the scope of this program, I think we would be able to expand that success, and I would encourage the minister and all the members on that side to consider that this is an opportunity to take a really good, solid piece of legislation and expand the scope. The worst that can happen is that people actually react to it, they invest, and we create some jobs in this province.

I therefore encourage all members to vote for this amendment in support of creating jobs for Albertans. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister for economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll thank the member for the amendment and the spirit of his amendment.

I will state a couple of things. Number one, not only did we do robust consultations over the summer, speaking with businesses and industry, looking at how we can frame this capital investment tax credit to spur investment now, today, to encourage companies to pull the trigger, to invest today as opposed to waiting for some time; we came up with a collective solution – that companies had asked to have set criteria for the capital investment tax credit to know in advance if they are going to get conditional approval, to then start building.

That's exactly what we did, and I'll direct the member, actually, to page 49 of the bill. There is a list of the different categories on how companies are going to be scored, so to speak, so that they know exactly what the criteria are and they know what we're looking for. As you can see, it's a number of things, from timeliness to employment impacts. We want to ensure that all Albertans have access to benefit and we have inclusion of underrepresented groups, we have supply chain impacts, we have community impacts, environmental performance. There's a list of different categories on how companies will be evaluated. For those successful – this is something that industry has applauded us for, and for that reason the member's amendment, although I appreciate the work put into it, is unnecessary. For that reason I will not be supporting it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise in support of the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek's amendment. I guess I would appeal to the government minister to reconsider the position he just took and only for reasons that I think the amendment actually supports what the government's intention is. I haven't tried to invent the government's intention but rather to discern it. I've actually read the title of the bill, and the title of the bill is: Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act.

What the amendment before us intends to do is actually widen the scope of the bill, or make the diversification more diverse as opposed to less diverse, and since I think the government's stated intention is to make the economy more diverse and this amendment indeed widens the diversification of what could fall under the scope of the legislation, it just seems perfectly logical and natural and something that the government should probably embrace in making their diversification bill more diverse.

I would respectfully ask all members of the House to support this and for the minister in charge of it to think about the government's stated goal of creating diversification and how this might happen to that, and indeed I guess I'm appealing for the minister on the government side to make the diversification bill more diverse.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A10?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A10 lost]

The Chair: Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

8:40

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. At the risk of diluting my success rate today, I'm going to champion on here. I have one additional – no; I have two more, but here's one amendment here, the requisite copies with the original on top for the table.

Thank you.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A11.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to move that Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, be amended by adding the following after section 80:

Annual report

80.1(1) The Minister must annually prepare a report by December 31 that includes the following:

- (a) the total number of eligible business corporations and venture capital corporations registered in the previous calendar year under this Act; and
- (b) the total number of tax credit certificates and their total dollar value issued under sections 21 and 39 in the previous calendar year.

(2) When the report is complete, the Minister must make it available to the public and shall lay a copy of it before the Legislative Assembly if it is then sitting and if it is not, within 15 days after the commencement of the next session.

Madam Chair, this amendment seeks to formally instill a reporting mechanism into the legislation for both the Alberta investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit. This report would be prepared by the end of the calendar year and would include the total number of businesses and venture capital corporations which were registered under this act. To be clear, this would simply be the companies which were registered as being eligible for each respective program. It would not list the businesses and venture capital corporations with the amount of tax credits that each respective entity received. This would assuage any fears that these entities would be required to provide intimate financial details which would constitute business secrets.

The second element of the annual report would require the report to list the number of total tax credit certificates and their total dollar value issued for both the AITC and the CITC. I feel that this is important because it would show the uptake in the program, the success of the program, and allow for adjustments as we go forward with respect to how much money is allocated not only in the initial years but in subsequent years. It would also show if the opposite were happening and most of the money had not been allocated, which would allow the minister of the day to adjust not only the approval process but possibly some of the qualifications and the scope of the program.

Once this report is complete, the minister must make it available to the public and present the report to the Legislative Assembly. Again, accountability and transparency, Madam Chair. Public reporting is important whenever tax money is being spent and allows all members of this Assembly to see the report as well as presenting it to the public ensures the highest level of transparency and commitment to the proper use of the tax dollars.

Madam Chair, I would encourage all members of the House to support this amendment. It is, again, meant just to tweak and improve what is a good bill and what is meant to bring capital and investment to the table, to create jobs in Alberta, and to ensure that we do all possible to address some of the challenges within our current economy.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any others? The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll thank the member for this amendment. I appreciate the spirit of this amendment. I can assure the House that there will be an ongoing conversation or dialogue between myself and the people of Alberta giving them regular updates on the successes of this program. We will be monitoring it very, very closely, in fact, both tax credits, to ensure that we are getting the uptake that we need.

At the moment, again, pending passage of this legislation, first and foremost, we will be trying to educate businesses in all corners of the province that, again, should this pass successfully, these tax credits are available to businesses. But I can assure the member and the House that these are two programs that have been very thoughtfully constructed and designed based on a significant amount of feedback from companies and industry in all corners of the province. We are absolutely accountable to them and will ensure that they are receiving the appropriate amount of feedback, and we'll continue to be engaged with them on this program.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A11? Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment, which I will be speaking in support of.

The hon. minister will know that I have the utmost respect for the member. I know I've said that on more than one occasion in this House, about the respect that I have for this member. I seem to remember telling a very nice story, in fact, that used this member in an analogy before he had an opportunity to travel to Asia. So he knows that I'm genuine in my respect for him.

But, you know, there's a famous politician who once said, "Trust, but verify." And while I appreciate the member rising in his place, saying, "Honest, we're going to be accountable. We're going to tell you everything you want to know. We're not going to hide anything," you know, I think that some level of requirement of accountability is important even though we've heard from the minister, who's promised that everything would be okay.

I know that this minister proposed a piece of legislation that he spoke at length about, about how awesome everything was going to be, how incredible this revolutionary plan to create jobs was going to be. He said: don't worry; I'll reassure the House. Well, that plan never came to be. In fact, the initial tax credit was cancelled, and now we see version 2.0. Hey, listen: a speech that I made not that long ago spoke specifically about this, about a swing and a miss, and now here we are. Like, listen, I believe that this program is better than the last. I believe that, you know, we've heard from a lot of stakeholders who are looking forward to the passage of this bill. Frankly, the opposition will be pleased to provide safe passage of this bill.

But what we would love to see is just a small level of accountability, an annual report. It happens regularly in this place, that the House will receive reports; in fact, it happens so often that in the daily Routine it's included, Tabling Returns and Reports. This is a reasonable compromise. We've seen other opportunities for accountability today in the form of, you know, asking the Auditor General, requiring the Auditor General to provide some accountability. This government voted that down. We saw another amendment that also would have provided just a small amount of accountability, and the government's position, this minister's position is: I promise to be accountable. Well, this government has a track record of promising one thing and doing another.

So what my hon. colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek is proposing is reasonable. It's not extremely onerous. It literally costs very, very little in terms of staff time. This is all information that the department surely will have. They can keep a little sheet on the wall and just keep all the information right close together so that they can report to the Assembly.

I don't see any reason why the minister is avoiding being open and transparent and accountable because what will likely be the next step is that the opposition will either have to FOIP this information or the opposition will have to provide a written question, and then quite likely they will dodge answering those questions. We saw on Monday, Madam Chair, a significant amount of ducking and weaving by this government, and there's no reason why they ought not just deliver what the House deserves, requires, and should be eligible to receive.

While I heard the minister promise, I hope that he will provide some verification – trust and verify – and I hope that all members of this House will vote in favour after an impassioned plea for accountability, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any further speakers to amendment A11?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A11 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 8:52 p.m.]

[Motion on amendment A11 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the bill. Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to have the opportunity to rise tonight to speak to Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. This is a bill that is good news for business and investment in Alberta.

An Hon. Member: As are these pipelines.

Mr. Shepherd: Yes, as are the two pipelines. Absolutely.

Madam Chair, I had the opportunity to rise and speak to this bill last week, and at that time I shared a little bit of the story of how I attended the Startup Canada awards recently and had the opportunity to speak with many people there regarding the start-up community here in Alberta. I shared how I spoke with Dr. Randy Yatscoff of TEC Edmonton and how highly he praised the Minister of Economic Development and Trade for the work that he's done on behalf of the start-up community and investors in the province of Alberta. In fact, the phrase he used specifically was: this is a minister who gets it.

I was very pleased to hear that and very pleased to have the opportunity to sponsor this bill and be able to speak to the benefits that I believe this is going to bring to many constituents and businesses in my community. In fact, Edmonton-Centre, of course, is home to much of our local start-up community, including Startup Edmonton, an organization that supports entrepreneurs and product builders by providing community networking, training, and workspace in the historic Mercer building on the 104th Street promenade.

Just one block over from there, in Enterprise Square, is TEC Edmonton itself, which provides people, networks, and facilities that are dedicated to developing our region's reputation for innovation. They help with commercializing technology from private university and public spaces, they help build successful innovation-based companies here in our province, and they foster and promote innovation and new enterprise development.

It's wonderful to see this bill coming forward, a bill that I think is really going to help with putting Alberta's technology sector on a level playing field at last by providing the same sorts of investment credits that we've seen be so successful in other jurisdictions. We've seen the boost that it's given to economies in B.C. and other provinces where these credits exist. They provide a boost to the innovators and entrepreneurs who are working to diversify our economy by capitalizing on the creative energy that Edmonton and Alberta are so rich in.

Madam Chair, I've been very happy to see how responsive the minister has been in designing these credits and bringing them forward. In fact, shortly after these were first promised in our budget this past spring, I received a message from the chair of the A100, the A100 being a respected local community of seasoned technology founders. They expressed very strong support for the credits and indicated the importance of making sure that these credits be retroactive to ensure that they would be able to incent investment as quickly as possible. I was happy to pass that feedback on to the minister, and I'm very happy to say that he heard and he ensured that this legislation provides that credits for any eligible investments made after April 14 of this year will be included. So thank you to the minister again for his consultation with that.

I was also very happy to see the inclusion of digital media companies in this bill. In January of this year I had the opportunity to meet with representatives from GameCamp Edmonton, some folks who have been working very hard with the local gaming community and app developers. They came to see me because they saw that our government was looking to invest in diversification. They came to see me because they recognized that there are many jurisdictions across Canada that offer credits that are very helpful to game development and game companies. Some of these are employment credits. Some of these are tax-based credits. But they recognized that Alberta did not have these sorts of incentives.

Now, Edmonton is home to some fantastic game developers, of course, BioWare being the most famous. I know many of our members had the opportunity to attend an event with them just the other night and see the great work that this company is doing. This is a company that has provided work for software developers here in our city, for many people that I know in the music industry who have gone on to work for them as recording engineers, as music producers. Many people from our theatre community work for them and have the opportunity to get work there as voice actors. This is something that has genuinely created diversification and jobs in our city.

It's wonderful now that this tax credit, the Alberta investor tax credit, will allow for growth in that industry here in our city. I know that the folks at GameCamp Edmonton and many of the other local development companies are very excited for this opportunity now and that step towards diversifying our economy and providing greater opportunity.

I'm also very excited about, as the Member for Sherwood-Park talked about earlier, the community economic development corporation provisions that are in this bill. I know that over the last year and a half I've had the opportunity to meet with many people in the local African communities and with many other cultural communities here in our city. One of the biggest concerns that they've mentioned to me is that they are looking for opportunities to build economic capital and opportunity for the members of their community. They're looking for opportunities to create new jobs and to be able to support those in their community when they first come to Canada and as they are establishing their lives here.

I'll tell you that they are excited for the possibilities that are available through these community economic development corporations. They are looking forward to having the opportunity for those who have been successful and who have built good businesses here in our province, who have contributed to our provincial economy, to now take the profits they have made and be able to invest that back into their local community, to be able to create jobs and opportunity for the members of their community, to be able to help provide for some of the social needs that are there in their community. That's another wonderful aspect of this bill, which I greatly thank the minister for bringing forward.

Also, I've had the opportunity when I met with some of these folks, with some of their business associations, and recently again when the minister joined me for a business town hall with over a hundred leaders, a hundred business people from the African and Caribbean community here in Edmonton – he had the opportunity to share with them about these credits and many of the other wonderful programs that are available to support small businesses here in our province. There was great excitement for the capital investment tax credit and the opportunity that's going to give for many of these individuals who have companies to be able to upgrade their equipment, upgrade their facilities, and again be able to continue to do work that is supporting our economy, that is supporting jobs in our province, and continue to support the members of their community.

I've appreciated the feedback that we've heard from the members. I appreciate the amendments that have been brought forward tonight that we've had a chance to incorporate to make this a better bill. I think that this is very good news for the province. It's something that's finally coming into place after years of this being requested. It's finally being brought forward by this minister, by this government. I think this is going to do good things for the province. I look forward to supporting Bill 30.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. One last amendment to present on Bill 30.

The Chair: This amendment will be known as A12.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Gotfried: Great. Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to move that Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, be amended by adding the following after section 82:

Review of the Act

82.1 Within three years of this act coming into force, a special committee established by the Legislative Assembly shall begin a comprehensive review of this act and shall submit to the Legislative Assembly within one year after beginning the review a report that includes any amendments recommended by the committee.

Madam Chair, this amendment would ensure that programs presented within this legislation are reviewed after they are scheduled to expire. The CITC as it is currently presented is a two-year program, and the AITC as it is currently presented is a three-year program. We would, of course subject to success, like to see these programs extended beyond their initial lifespan if they are working. To determine if they are working and being utilized by Albertans to both invest capital and to invest in the growth of our economy, a special committee would be established by the Legislative Assembly to review these programs.

Madam Chair, it's important when we have programs in place from various levels of government – the experience I've had is that sometimes they sound good, but if they're not being utilized and if they're not actually achieving the desired results, there's usually a reason behind it; hence, the opportunity for a comprehensive review.

This committee would have a maximum of one year to deliver a report in which they would make recommendations on the future of the program. This committee would be able to determine what worked, what didn't work, and what needs to be either scrapped or amended or what changes can be done to enhance or improve the program and its efficacy with Albertans. It could also recommend that the programs not be brought back in their current form if it is determined that they do not produce the expected results. Again, the legislation is only as good as the results that it achieves.

However, without this formal review mechanism we may not get a fulsome picture of the success or lack thereof with respect to these programs. Again, with all due respect, I know that the minister has spent a lot of time consulting with industry so that, I'm hoping, we will come out of the gate with this program with a lot of uptake and a lot of success and a lot of uptake from industry, creating jobs and investing in our industrial capacity and other capacities. Not having this evidence would mean that making a decision on the potential extension or the collapse of these programs would be simply done in-house without the fulsome review of this Assembly.

Madam Chair, we simply hope that all members of this Assembly would be able to come together at the end of these programs to review it in support of the minister and his team, to work collaboratively, and to openly determine whether or not these programs are working effectively for this House and for Albertans.

I'd like to thank the members of this House for their consideration this evening of this amendment, of this opportunity for us again to not only put in place a solid piece of legislation but to review it and to ensure that we take every opportunity to improve it. I thank them for their consideration, and of course I'm hoping that the minister that gets it gets this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak? The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and I'll thank the member for his work on this amendment. Again, I agree with him on the spirit of this amendment, but I can assure the member and all members of this House that we will be in regular dialogue with Albertans. As far as not only the uptake but the success of this program, we will be monitoring it very, very closely month by month, not even year by year, to ensure that we get the proper uptake but as well to monitor very closely the injection of new capital into our economy, working with companies that will provide them with the dollars they need to grow, to increase in size to hire more Albertans.

I am excited to get these programs out of the gate and hopeful that we'll have a unanimous passage of this piece of legislation, but regarding this amendment, I will not be supporting it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to Amendment A12?

[Motion on amendment A12 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to Bill 30? Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. I have one very quick question for the minister. I heard him speak glowingly about the amount of work that he's going to do to let businesses know across the province. I'm just curious to know if he'd be willing to share the costs of that work and if there was a significant advertising project planned for this particular legislation once it is passed, if that would be coming out of the total amount of the grants or if that would be paid for through other means.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and I'll thank the member for the question, a very good question. Thus far we've been working with local business associations and organizations, from chambers of commerce to economic development associations, to help spread the word. As well, you know, the companies that joined me on my trade mission to Asia: there were over 80 companies, over 150 Alberta participants whom I spoke to about these two different tax credits, pending passage of the legislation, of course.

At the moment we've been using a variety of different means, through social media and other ways, to get the word out through our REDAs as well as NADC. We will continue to work with organizations. Frankly, Madam Chair, this is part of the reason why we initially introduced our intention back in the spring: in order to give time to get the word out to all companies in all corners of the province. We didn't want to just introduce this, you know, late fall, pass the bill, and then hope for uptake.

As far as the member's question that if there will be dollars spent, will they come out of the two tax credit buckets, I can tell the member that the answer is no. If there is some advertising, that would come from my ministry, again pending passage of this legislation.

Mr. Cooper: Okay. Thank you. Appreciate the answer to the question.

It sounds to me like there has been significant interest already. Quite likely, given the extensive work that you've done with stakeholders already through REDA economic developers, the 80-some members in the largest trade mission that has ever happened in the history of the universe, it sounds like there are lots of people who are interested. Will the minister commit that no advertising dollars will be spent because, clearly, the people who need to know already know?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, there are, obviously, some administrative fees in order to administer these two programs that will be coming out of the allocated funds. Again, we are wanting to ensure that as many dollars as possible go toward these programs and toward the outcomes of these programs, so we will continue to work through all of our channels to ensure that word gets out.

I can tell you, Madam Chair, that part of the reason that we – in this bill the investor tax credit is for three years. It was initially proposed for two years, but upon consultation with business and industry over the summer and to ensure that all businesses get the word and understand and know about this program and then have an opportunity and time to apply for this program, we decided to extend it to three years.

As far as the capital investment tax credit there are four windows over two years when companies can apply. As I mentioned earlier today, if a company is unsuccessful – well, first of all, they will see the criteria upon which they will be scored, and if they're unsuccessful, my ministry will be working with them. They will be encouraged to apply for the next window. Again, the purpose of this is to try to support as many businesses as we can, as many different capital projects as we can, but at the same time we want to make sure that we are getting full value for every tax dollar that is being spent and that there is a return to Albertans through job creation and supporting our businesses to help them grow.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question on Bill 30?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 30 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: That's carried.

Bill 21 Modernized Municipal Government Act

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. On Bill 21, the Modernized Municipal Government Act, I have an amendment, and with your concurrence I will send it over so that we can begin.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. This amendment will be referred to as A2.

Mr. McIver: May I continue?

The Deputy Chair: Please go ahead.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Fellow members, I move that Bill 21, the Modernized Municipal Government Act, be amended, part A, in section 13, in the proposed section 75.5, by adding the following after subsection (2):

- (3) Before the Minister makes a regulation under this section, the Minister must ensure that appropriate consultation has been carried out with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, and consider the input acquired from the consultation.

And part B, in section 131, in the proposed section 708.52, by renumbering it as section 708.52(1) and by adding the following after subsection (1):

- (2) Before the Lieutenant Governor in Council makes a regulation under this section, the Minister must ensure that appropriate consultation has been carried out with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, and reports on the results of the consultation to the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Now, folks, I think this is fairly straightforward. This just really says that in the future, when regulations are going to be made, we talk to the main municipal groups in the province of Alberta. I believe it's a common-sense amendment, and I hope that members of the House will be supportive.

9:30

Madam Chair, the intention of the amendment, of course, is to reinforce the notion that the government should consult with stakeholders before changes to regulations occur. There has been an unfortunate trend in many cases with a lack of stakeholder consultation related to legislation, a pattern that I believe is an opportunity for the government to improve. This has been evident through a number of bills: 6, 20, 25, and 27. This amendment seeks to ensure that municipalities through their chosen associations, AUMA and AAMD and C, are consulted appropriately before any regulatory changes, haphazard or otherwise or carefully considered, are made by the NDP government and, of course, especially pertaining to municipally controlled corporations and ICFs.

Madam Chair, I'm sure that the minister may consider saying: well, of course I'll consult. But I would ask the minister to consider that legislation is a long-term endeavour, and in the future there may be a different minister in that chair, perhaps one less willing and able to consult with people than today's minister, and for that reason I think this is a good prompt, a good requirement for future governments and future ministers and this government and this minister, but we need to consider this and future governments and ministers to make sure that they talk to the main partners, which indeed are the municipalities in Alberta.

With that, I will listen to the debate. I sincerely hope that the government and all members of this House can see the wisdom in this commitment to consult and, in fact, will consider just how happy it will make the municipal organizations to know that the government has stood up in this Legislature and said: we commit to consult. What a positive message that would be and one that I hope the minister and the government will embrace.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, I'd love to speak on this because it is about consultation. I'm going to tell everyone a little bit of a story about a little place up north called Fort McMurray. First, let me clarify. The MGA here: there are a lot of changes being made to that. It is impacting different municipalities in different ways because Alberta and its municipalities have evolved in such different ways because we do have a diverse province. Some areas are industry, some areas are white collar, some areas are government, and they all have to deal with a lack of attention by the previous government.

Let's talk about the previous government and how they treated Fort McMurray, shall we? Back in the '80s and '90s they were giving all these leases out to all of the oil companies. They were putting out hectares and hectares of these leases and really promoting the oil industry, and God bless Ralph Klein for that. But they forgot a little bit of something. They forgot the support that these industries need. Fort McMurray is a landlocked community, just so everyone understands. They're landlocked by Crown land.

They're not surrounded by a bunch of farms that a developer can just buy and turn into a housing division. It is literally locked by provincial land, and it had no space to grow.

As the oil companies grew and grew and they invested more and more, they realized that they didn't have enough housing, so they started giving these little subsidies to all the people that were working up there: 800 bucks, right off the top, on top of your paycheck every month, just so you could find a place to live in Fort McMurray. People literally started renting out bedrooms for 800 bucks. That's a substantial chunk of change anywhere. Before you knew it, everyone's yards and houses were just filled with vehicles. Everyone was renting out, everyone was paying off their mortgages, but again because of that lack of housing and lack of ability to grow, that's when house prices started to escalate.

If I might say, at one point you could buy a house lot in Fort McMurray for $35,000. In this day and age it's $400,000 for a lot. It was a really tough situation to be in, and that is what drove house prices up in Fort McMurray. It took many, many years before the previous government finally – finally – figured out that: oh, maybe we should give the city some land to grow.

I remember talking to a girl who worked in forestry for the government here about 15 years ago. I remember asking her: how come you don't release any land to Fort McMurray? She talked about how they had to protect the boreal forest, which I found to be really ironic or even hypocritical because they were offering up so much land to these leases for these oil companies, but they weren't allowing the community, which only required a small area, to grow.

Anyways, it was that poor decision-making that drove the house prices up and made it a very difficult place to live. When housing goes up, then the impacts are enormous everywhere else. Salaries have to go up to compensate. The oil companies started flying people in. Our fire department: we started to lose our members to the oil companies because they had the opportunity to make over a hundred thousand dollars a year as a firefighter, and the municipality could not keep up with this. The impacts of a lot of these things were pretty bad.

Also, the municipality had outgrown its facilities, so we didn't have enough facilities, whether it was a recreational facility, whether it was schools or anything to even address the current population there. As that community grew, we had no place to go.

It's little things like these, where the province was literally not supporting a community, that the municipality had to make some hard decisions on, and that is about the time when they went from the city of Fort McMurray to the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo. They took a page out of the county of Strathcona, Sherwood Park, if I might add, when they became the county, and they were able to absorb all the industry and use that taxation money to help them.

Cortes-Vargas: A specialized municipality.

Mr. Yao: Yeah. Anyways, the point is, though, that that's when they became the municipality of Wood Buffalo, and that's how they were able to get the taxes they needed to build our community.

It's important to understand with each jurisdiction across our province why they have these different tax rates, as an example, and that's about consultation. This amendment is about consultation. I can appreciate that coming from somebody in the third party because that means they've learned their lessons, that they also know to consult and look around.

With that, I do agree with this amendment. I think it's a fair amendment to make, that they do consult, that this government does consult, and that we can learn from all the communities, understand their individual issues, and work with them as we move forward.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you for providing the opportunity to speak about this amendment. I have to say that we are very proud of the relationship that we have built with the AUMA, AAMD and C, and municipalities across Alberta. I firmly believe that growing our province is a collaborative venture, and as government one of our most valuable connections is the partnerships we have with Alberta's municipalities and their associations. Now, as a matter of fact, AUMA and AAMDC are already at the regulatory development table because I believe in robust consultation with our municipal stakeholders.

It was interesting to hear the member speak about a history of a lack of open and transparent consultation with the municipal associations when it came to legislation that directly affected them although I have to say that we have changed the course and moved away from those days. My ministry has been steadfast in holding consultations with all stakeholders, including AUMA and AAMDC, and I believe that our record on this issue is beyond refute.

I've talked with representatives of both AUMA and AAMDC. We've heard this. We've had conversations about it. And there are many reasons why there are unintended consequences and many reasons why it's not practical. But I think the simple message out of this is that you cannot legislate relationships. Good governance is about respecting all of the people that are affected by your legislation. There's no way that every piece of legislation can ever incorporate and assume that we meet with all the stakeholders who are affected by it. So it's important that in terms of doing good governance we know who the people are that are affected by it, that we deliberately reach out to them. You don't build relationships with regulations; you build them by working together collaboratively and working hard on those relationships.

So, Madam Chair, for those reasons I will not be supporting this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Any hon. members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. I appreciate the remarks from the Municipal Affairs minister, but I might remind of her some very recent history, particularly in light of the fact that she said that her relationship is without refute. I hope she's not right about that because if it's without refute, I think the minister is in big trouble because the last time that there was a big municipal meeting of the AAMD and C – and the minister was right there, so I know she knows that I'm right about this – when her ministers were talking to the group, they were booed . . . [interjection] No. More than one time by, essentially, the whole room. Hundreds of municipalities booed this government's ministers.

So when the Municipal Affairs minister says that their reputation is without refute and the most recent evidence is a mass booing and someone coming to the microphones when we opposition leaders were there and asking each of the opposition leaders to explain to the room what each of us was going to do to move the NDP government out so that they could get a better government and all of the answers were warmly received, yes, maybe the relationship is without refute, and that unrefuted relationship indicates that you need to do more consultation, Minister.

There's very solid evidence, very recently delivered not by me but by hundreds of municipalities at the same time sending a very clear message that they're not happy with the consultation. This amendment, frankly, should be very helpful to the government. [interjections] Now, Madam Chair, I understand that the government members are embarrassed that their ministers were booed, which is why I think I'm hearing from them now. I think this would be a good time for them to acknowledge that there's a shortcoming in the consultation and probably a very good time also for them to agree that it would be wise for this ... [interjections] I can hardly hear myself talk because the government can't stand the truth.

Again, I'm only stating what these members heard first-hand at the AAMD and C: hundreds of Alberta municipalities booing the NDP ministers, hundreds of NDP members actually asking the opposition leaders what we were going to do to move the NDP along and receiving our remarks warmly. Now, that indicates a consultation gap, and this amendment would go a long way towards indicating that the government was prepared to work to repair that relationship, which is why this is very helpful, which is why I'm very hopeful that the government will see the wisdom in saying: "Yeah. We got a clear message. We've fallen short, and this is a real opportunity to send a positive message to Alberta municipalities that we're prepared to move forward and repair those relationships."

I hope the government and all members of this House will see their way clear to supporting it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just had to take a moment to clarify for the House the misrepresentation of the events at AAMDC by the member across the floor. Certainly, when it comes to the carbon levy, I understand that there are a lot of misunderstandings with many Albertans in terms of what our climate leadership plan was about although I think the announcements of two pipelines yesterday helped them understand a little bit more about what it was about.

However, what I had stated and somehow you missed is that my ministry and myself have been steadfast in holding consultations with all stakeholders, including AUMA and AAMDC. I believe that our record was not refuted. Without doubt, I have heard from many of you that the consultation in this particular case was excellent. I have to say that during the opening ceremonies of AAMDC or shortly after, when I was doing my speech, Al Kemmere chose to introduce me and made a point of stating what a great relationship they had with their minister and how I was just a text message away at any moment in time and how responsive I was and that I took great pride in the relationships that we've built there.

Also, at the recent AUMA convention I took great pride in the fact that Lisa Holmes introduced me as the minister that we all know and love. I've worked very hard to cultivate those relationships, to have incredibly close consultation. I'm seeing the fruit of that in many ways. So while certainly we have some work in terms of clarifying some information regarding the carbon levy – and that's exactly what you're referring to at the AAMDC – certainly I stand by the work that my department has done. I have amazing staff in Municipal Affairs. I could not do what I do without them. They worked together with myself and my staff to create an amazing consultation plan that worked right through the legislation and will continue to work through the regulations and to be open and transparent consistently. I stand on that record and continue to say that we will not be supporting this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. Seeing as this is full disclosure that we're looking for here – and I've often heard the government say that they are looking for feedback and that they want to know what Albertans are thinking – I want to make sure that the members opposite know what I'm hearing. The people from my riding, the municipal leaders from my riding are telling me that they have a very difficult time getting a hold of ministers, that they have a very difficult time when they come up to these events up here. Both AUMA and AAMD and C members are telling me that they have had a very difficult time being able to get in front of ministers, and they are frustrated with the lack of consultation that they're able to get with these ministers.

Now, you can take that and you can say: well, we need to make sure that we're going to do better. I hope you do. But this motion here is about addressing these issues so that consultation will happen. There should never be a question of whether or not we should do better at that, whoever it is. We're about representing the people of Alberta, and we need to make sure that we don't ever, ever say that we're above that. This is what I just heard, and to tell you the truth, it shocked me to hear that.

So I think, Madam Chair, that if the government is truly interested in listening, I will tell you that I have heard it over and over and over again from the leaders in my riding that they are struggling to be able to build a relationship with you. They want to build a relationship with you, and they have very little opportunity to be able to get a hold of you, first of all, and they have very little opportunity of being able to get hold of you especially at these events.

So if you are willing to take it, I give you that advice. I know we're talking about this amendment, but what I just heard there was almost sticking your head in the sand and saying: we are doing perfectly out here. It's just ridiculous that you would say something like that. I hope that you would consider what you said and, second of all, that this would be able to help this bill be better. This is why I will be supporting it.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

9:50

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Just a couple of very quick points here. The first one will echo some of the comments of my colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner in that in discussions with municipalities, not specific to the Member for Lesser Slave Lake, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, but just more generally and broadly, many municipal leaders have contacted my office and me about a general frustration about getting meetings with ministers right across the board. I don't have a barometer to judge that, but they certainly have expressed some significant concern. I will say "right across the board" because I'm not intending to pick out certain ministers although I have heard larger complaints about some departments than other departments. I just highlight that as a general concern that comes to my office from municipal leaders with respect to the relationship they have with the government.

The last thing I will add is that I heard the Municipal Affairs minister say that you can't legislate relationship, and while I agree with that statement, the contrary is true, or at least that's what they effort to do when they are creating situations of forced collaboration through legislation. So those terms don't jibe one hundred per cent where on one hand they're saying that you can't force relationship, yet the legislation clearly does effort to force relationship in a number of different circumstances.

I just leave those for comments and look forward to voting in favour of the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. I guess I want to address a couple of things. The first thing is: thank you for your comments. While, certainly, I really do believe you can't legislate relationships, what you can do is ensure that people work together to do land-use planning, to do service planning in the interests of individuals. If relationships happen to come out of that, that's wonderful, but certainly it is expected that people work together in the interest of the people that they represent.

You know, I did briefly state that there are many reasons it's not practical and that there are unintended consequences with pursuing this, and I have talked to both AUMA and AAMD and C on this. But the truth is that it's just not practical. If we had to bring every regulation before them, for every regional service commission a change in membership would have to be consulted on with them. I mean, those are done by regulation. The updates on the Canmore undermining regulation, the ability to be responsive quickly in terms of issues: if we had to do consultation, what does consultation mean?

We also would open ourselves up to potential legal challenges if there was any kind of implication that we hadn't consulted appropriately on any decision if it was embedded in legislation. I mean, we already consult. No responsible government would do this. We have to govern, and we already consult fully. Good governance means talking to the people that you need to talk to about it, but putting it in there and binding it in specific legal language would create many unintended consequences.

I do not reject consulting with AUMA and AAMD and C. I consider them very valuable partners, and I do not move forward any policy without talking with them, which is the reason that both Lisa and Al are very happy with it and know that I'm very accessible and willing to talk with them. We've worked very hard to build up relationships in that way. However, this particular approach to embedding it in legislation would really embroil the government in a number of challenges in terms of being able to move forward and to govern properly.

So we will consult. We will always consult. We value our partners. We just can't put the wording in the legislation.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you. I wouldn't want the hon. Municipal Affairs minister to think that I doubted the nice words that she said she heard. I'm sure she's telling the truth about that. So let me be clear. I don't think I doubted it before. Nonetheless, what I said was also true, that the hundreds of municipalities made it clear there's a problem with the relationship. How those things coexist I guess I can't fully explain. All the more reason why the government should spend time and commit to consulting with the municipalities.

To be fair, the government is forcing the municipalities to consult with each other on intermunicipal development plans and ICFs, so this would really be saying to them: we are not going to ask you to do something that we won't do ourselves. That's what this would be saying to the municipalities: we're not better than you; we're the same as you; we're forcing you through legislation to make a bunch of arrangements with each other, and as part of that we'll commit to talking to you before we change regulations.

I would just only ask, I hope politely, the minister to reconsider her words just now when she said: I can't talk to the municipalities every time I make a change that affects them. Madam Chair, one of the reasons there is a Ministry of Municipal Affairs is to be a conduit from municipalities to the government. If the minister in charge of being that conduit doesn't have time to talk to them – and I don't think that's her intent, but that's kind of what she said: I don't have time to discuss every change. So I would say that this would be a very good way to say to the municipalities: we won't make changes without talking to you; we commit to that. I would think that would be accepted quite warmly by the municipalities and may actually make that relationship more favourable, more positive, more productive in the future. The amendment is my way of helping.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now on the original bill. Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. This evening I wish to move an amendment. I'll ask the pages to come by to pick up the amendment. I'll wait until they've had an opportunity to distribute it, but I will talk very briefly. I'll preface my remarks before the amendment is distributed to talk a little bit about the subject matter of the amendment. The subject matter has to deal with something that actually has been on the books of the Municipal Government Act since it was last rewritten, in 1995. It is under section 357, and it is under the subject of a minimum tax.

What, essentially, is given purview to municipalities, something that they are empowered with that was not in place prior to 1995, is the ability of a municipality to set a specific dollar figure as a minimum tax on a piece of property regardless of the assessed value of the property. That has created a problem. That has created a distortion in our system.

Madam Chair, you have the amendment now, and I can read it into the record?

The Deputy Chair: Yes. Please go ahead. Thank you very much.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Chair, at this time I would like to read the following into the record. I move that Bill 21, Modernized Municipal Government Act, be amended in section 53 by striking out proposed section 357.1 and substituting the following:

Tax Rates

357.1(1) The tax rate to be imposed by a municipality on residential property or on any sub-class of residential property must be greater than zero.

(2) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in this Division, a tax rate imposed by a municipality pursuant to section 357 must not result in a property tax on an assessable property which exceeds 2.5 per cent of the assessed value of that property.

Madam Chair, what does all that mean? What is the purpose of this amendment? Well, in Alberta we have a fairly significant number of municipalities, that are mostly small municipalities, that have exercised the power that is given to them within section 357 to allow for the levying of a minimum tax; in other words, a departure from the normal methodology for calculating taxation on property.

10:00

Now, I'm going to quote from the Guide to Property Assessment and Taxation in Alberta. On page 29 it states:

Under the Municipal Government Act, municipalities are responsible for collecting taxes for municipal and educational purposes. Property taxes are levied based on the value of the property as determined from the property assessment process. Property taxes are not a fee for service, but a way of distributing the cost for local government services and programs fairly throughout a municipality.

Madam Chair, that word "fairly" is the word that is at the crux of this. Currently a large number of municipalities charge a minimum tax on property. In some cases that minimum tax is a relatively nominal $50 or $100, but in some cases the minimum tax that is charged is considerably higher. In over 60 Alberta municipalities there is a minimum tax, and the amount charged sometimes ranges to $800, $900, $1,000, and in some cases the minimum tax, in fact, is more than the actual assessed value of the property.

Now, this creates a significant distortion. It creates a distortion, really, in two directions. The first distortion it creates is, obviously, that the people that own these relatively lower assessed value properties have a situation where they're paying a tax bill, in fact, that is greater than the assessed value of the property. Well, you can imagine that those properties then become very difficult to keep, you know, if you're having to pay more than the assessed value year after year after year.

Furthermore, it becomes difficult in small rural villages for there to be economic development and housing to be developed because in many cases more-modest homes that would stand on these properties, more-modest homes that would be taxed at a rate that should be considerably lower, are in fact subject to minimum tax. The minimum tax is used by the municipality to raise a certain amount of funds. By doing so, they are allowed to lower the overall mill rate, and that benefits properties of greater assessed value. In a way, it's a little bit of what I call a reverse Robin Hood: you're actually taking from the poor and providing a benefit to the rich.

Now, that certainly is contrary to most NDP philosophies, I believe. For the last 20 years, while there's been a different government in place, this was on the books. Certainly, I would have expected that now that there's an NDP government that is committed to wealth redistribution in many different forms, this would be a very logical place where an NDP government could step in and correct an inequity within our property taxation system, whereby under section 357 municipalities are permitted to charge a minimum tax.

Minimum tax is punitive. Minimum tax is fundamentally unfair, and it is fundamentally unfair to the most vulnerable within our communities. When I look at the list of communities that charge a minimum tax, minimum tax is charged in some of our smaller communities that are already perhaps struggling with being able to remain viable, yet they're not charging the taxation that should be charged on some of the higher value properties. The mill rate is in fact being subsidized by lower valued properties.

In one village in particular in my constituency some 47 per cent of the properties within that village are actually charged the minimum tax. If you multiply the assessed value by the mill rate that should be getting charged, they should have a much lower tax bill, but in fact they are charged a much higher rate because they are charged a minimum tax that is higher than what they should be paying. What it effectively does is subsidize those owners of properties of greater value.

This is an inequity. This is a fundamentally unfair situation, and it is a fundamentally unfair departure from what I just read from the guide to municipal taxation and assessment in the taxation guide. Taxation is supposed to be based on the value of the property, and in most Alberta municipalities that indeed is what happens. But in a percentage of Alberta municipalities that is not what happens, and section 357 of the current Municipal Government Act allows for this. This is, in my view, an unfair distortion of our taxation system, and it is unfair, as I've said before, for Albertans that are disadvantaged, for Albertans that are vulnerable. It creates a distortion that, in my view, also affects the ability of small rural communities to develop because there is this anchor on development, especially an anchor on development of lower value properties.

Madam Chair, while I know it's not habit for the government to approve opposition amendments, we did see it happen this afternoon, and we were very encouraged by that. This is an amendment that, in my view, brings a measure of fairness to a taxation system, and it corrects an inequity that has been present in the Municipal Government Act for the last 20 years. I think that it's a measure of fairness, and I think it's something where this government can demonstrate that it understands the need for fairness.

Now, I would have liked to have been able to completely eliminate minimum tax entirely. On advice from Parliamentary Counsel it was found that we couldn't do that, so that's why I have suggested – and it is somewhat arbitrary – the 2.5 per cent cap on the minimum tax. That means that at that level it would take 40 years of paying that minimum tax until you have paid the assessed value of the property, unlike the current situation, where in some situations you actually pay more than the assessed value of the property in minimum tax. You can imagine that that creates significant distortions in the real estate market in those communities.

Madam Chair, I would encourage all members of the Assembly to take a look at this amendment. I would ask for their support in voting for this amendment because I do think it corrects a very basic inequity in the current legislation.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Chair. I'll keep my remarks short. I'd just like to rise and speak in favour of the amendment. My hon. colleague has done an incredible job of putting a lot of time, thought, and attention into this particular amendment. It's important for small rural communities, and I think . . . [interjections] I don't see what's so funny. I'm not sure it's becoming of you to laugh at a member. I think he's done a very good job of putting together some comprehensive reasons why this amendment is so important. It respects small communities. It respects property owners who own a property. The minimum tax is clearly an unfair taxation policy, and I would strongly recommend that the minister heed the advice of the member, and we can move forward this evening.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to thank the third party for sharing this amendment. I did work with my staff and look at it very seriously. We looked at it and realized that the amendment does not actually fit within this section. Section 357(1) was intended to ensure that a tax rate ratio can be calculated and has nothing to do with the minimum tax. Having said that, I appreciate the intent of the amendment and have looked into this particular issue before.

The proposed amendment would cause, unfortunately, viability concerns for some small municipalities with large numbers of low-value properties. The MGA authorizes minimum taxes to recognize the basic cost of service to all ratepayers in a municipality regardless of their assessed value. In fact, Madam Chair, almost 20 per cent of Alberta's towns and villages have a minimum tax in place, all but one of those at $1,000 or less, which for someone who can afford to own property is actually a reasonable cost.

So I'm not prepared to support this amendment tonight out of concern for the viability of Alberta's small communities. I've committed to helping them be sustainable and viable, and I'm certainly not prepared to support an amendment that would do the opposite.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

10:10

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and I thank the minister for her comments. Certainly, I understand her concern about viability for small communities, and that indeed is the challenge here with minimum tax.

I think the issue that I have and the difficulty that I have in allowing these 20 per cent of Alberta communities to charge minimum tax, especially to the degrees that they are, in some cases $800, $900, $1,000, is that it bears no relation whatsoever to the value of the property. You know, it's interesting. The minister says that anybody who can afford to own property should be able to afford to pay a minimum tax of $800 or $900 or $1,000. I submit to you that in many cases this causes a hardship, especially when the property itself is not valued at that high a level. I mean, if the value of the property – and in some cases we're talking about properties that are unimproved – is scarcely higher than the minimum tax that's being levied, why would the property owner even hang on to the property?

Minimum tax is something, again, that was brought in – and I understand it. In fact, if we look under the fundamentals of the property taxation system – and this is from the AUMA website – it states here on page 4 of 15, under Minimum Property Tax:

A municipality may levy, by bylaw, a minimum amount of tax on each property. The minimum property tax is not a fixed surcharge; it is a tax floor amount. The minimum tax only applies to a property if the calculated tax rate multiplied by the assessed value of the property is lower than the amount set as the minimum tax.

The problem that this creates – you know, again, I acknowledge and I recognize and I agree with the minister when she talks about viability of smaller communities in our province. I think that is something we all need to be concerned about. But to prop up those municipalities by charging an inordinate sum of taxation to the people in the municipality that own the lowest value properties is completely counterintuitive. Taxation works based on the value of the property, and in every village, in every town there will be people who have higher value properties. They have properties and homes that are of higher value. Their property taxes are being subsidized by people who own lower value properties.

Once again, this is a complete reverse Robin Hood, and it runs completely contrary to NDP philosophy. It just, you know, strikes me as stunning that the NDP would defend a policy that essentially takes dollars out of the hands of the poor and the vulnerable and subsidizes those who are wealthier. Think about that for a second. That's not what you believe in. I mean, it's not what I believe in either, but it's certainly not what you believe in.

You know, to suggest that this has to be in place in order to keep these municipalities viable, I think it is becoming for many municipalities, in fact, a crutch. It is becoming something that they have come to depend on, and it has become something that has allowed them to tax at a higher and higher rate and certainly a rate that has no bearing on the property value, lower value properties within a community and, in fact – once again I say it – subsidize those properties that have a higher value. It's fundamentally unfair.

So while the minister can say, you know, that they're doing this for the sake of the viability of communities, these communities could be viable if they simply applied a tax rate as a tax rate is intended to be applied and that if there is a greater requirement for revenue, they apply a mill rate appropriate and that that mill rate be applied on the properties of higher value according to their assessment. That's a fair system. That's how our assessment system is supposed to work, and that's how it works in roughly 80 per cent of the municipalities in this province.

I do once again state that I think the minimum tax provision within the current Municipal Government Act is unfair. It is not something that we should continue to have in place, and given that we don't amend the Municipal Government Act very often, we should take this opportunity to remove what is an unfair provision within the current act and restore some sense of fairness to taxation and assessment within all of our communities in Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Are there any members wishing to speak to Bill 21?

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to move an amendment, and I will wait for the pages to distribute said amendment before speaking to it. Now, in terms of the general topic of this amendment, which I'll address while the pages are distributing the amendment to my colleagues, this amendment has to do with the issue of centralized assessment, which has come up in debate before. I have some significant concerns about the movement towards centralized assessment. We have certainly heard from a number of people in the profession of assessment, but we've also heard from a number of municipalities, and I've heard from the counties that are in my constituency and I've heard from some of the towns and villages and cities in my constituency that they're concerned about the move towards centralized assessment. While its goals are laudable in terms of creating some degree of standardization, the movement in that direction will actually create a lot of problems in terms of service to local ratepayers.

Now, Madam Chair, that you have the amendment, I'll read it into the record. I move that Bill 21, the Modernized Municipal Government Act, be amended in section 25(c) in the proposed section 292(2.1) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (a) and by adding the following after clause (a):

(a.1) the most recent municipal assessor's assessment of the designated industrial property, if available, and

Madam Chair, this amendment is reflective of what stakeholders have told us that have come forth with concerns regarding the centralization of industrial assessment into Municipal Affairs. Now, the concerns are based on the premise that centralized assessment will decrease local autonomy and local knowledge of the properties being assessed. The local autonomy extends as well to local responsiveness to issues.

Just a couple of weeks ago I was in a meeting along with my colleague the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville with members from Minburn county council, and they indicated to us why they're concerned about this. In their case their assessments are done by a contracted assessor. They do not have an assessor on staff, but that contracted assessor provides the county with excellent service. If there are appeals to an assessment or questions about an assessment, they have found that that contracted assessor can provide the ratepayer with very prompt service. That is something that comes forward, and they're very satisfied with the service that they receive from the assessor. They're concerned that if that is centralized, if that service is pulled into the central government, they have lost control over it and they have lost the ability to monitor, for the sake of the ratepayers, whether any appeals or any questions about the assessment are being answered and dealt with in a clear and rapid manner.

The other problem with centralized assessment, or the reason, I should say, that's often given with regard to centralized assessment is because of inconsistencies within assessment from county to county. You know, some would argue that, for example, an installation, a specific industrial installation in one county that is largely similar to one in another county, should be assessed exactly the same. Well, there are variations from county to county, and those variations have to be taken into account, but some of that variation, if it's excessive, could easily be brought closer together simply by applying assessment guidelines that are present within the current guide to assessment in the province of Alberta. This is not a reason. This variability, which could easily be corrected by applying the assessment guidelines as they exist currently, is not a reason to remove local authority over assessment and centralize it into government.

In my view, Madam Chair, this reflects a disturbing trend on behalf of this government, once again, to centralize a great deal of what goes on in government into a larger and larger centralized government bureaucracy rather than allowing local councils, that are accountable to their own ratepayers, to their own electors, to deal with these issues on the ground in the communities where they live. Certainly, I've heard consistently from many of the municipalities that I represent that they would prefer to maintain the current system of either using an on-staff assessor or a contracted assessor rather than having a centralized assessor over which they would have no influence and no control. If there were problems with the service that was provided by that centralized assessor, they're not confident that those problems would be addressed or dealt with in a prompt manner. Currently, if they have any problems with the assessment services that they're receiving from either the contracted or staff assessor, they can deal with it in a short period of time.

Madam Chair, this particular amendment deals with that. It deals with the need to provide for municipal assessments that are consistent but, in fact, still have local control or local autonomy. I would ask all members of the Assembly to support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The amendment will be referred to as A4. Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back on the original bill. Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 21?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 21 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 25 Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to what I'm sure will continue to be an issue of robust debate here in the Chamber over the next number of days around what really amounts to capping the future of our province. I know that the government will point to all sorts of reasons why this is a good idea. I understand that there may or may not have been a pipeline expansion approved in the last couple of days, and I'm certain that there will be some discussion from them on that. But the fact remains that on Bill 25, an act that will ultimately cap our ability to expand our future growth in this province, this is not a step in the right direction. We have some significant problems around capping our oil sands production, and the problem that we're going to face is a significant inability on a go-forward to ensure that we are providing the strong, stable economy that our province deserves.

I look forward to hearing from my colleagues. I know that there are a number of amendments that I think can provide some very, very good changes to this bill although ultimately the bill is not ideal. I know that I've said in this House prior that the best thing about this particular legislation is that it's a cap, and that cap can easily and quickly be removed. I look forward to doing that in the future, but in the meantime I look forward to being able to provide some very reasonable amendments that I hope the government will accept.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 25? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise today to move an amendment that seeks to strike out everything after "upgrading emissions" from section 2(2)(b) . . .

The Deputy Chair: Member, before you read it into the record, if you could just wait till I have a copy, please.

It is amendment A2.

Go ahead.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. This amendment will remove the 10-megatonne cap constraining upgrading. Limiting emissions from upgrading is not going to help Alberta in achieving what we would think is our shared goal of increasing the amount of value-added production in Alberta. Now, we've had many, many discussions in the past over the 100-megatonne cap, and this is another cap that is going to cap prosperity.

Madam Chair, I would like to use a bit of the time today just to speak to my colleagues about what upgrading actually means for our oil sands industry and what this 10-megatonne cap will actually mean once it actually hits. [interjections] It's important for the members in this House today . . .

The Deputy Chair: Members. Thank you.

Go ahead.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair.

. . . to recognize what is actually accomplished by the upgrading process in our oil sands and the technology. I mean, this is brilliant technology. Everybody in the government always talks about made-in-Alberta solutions. Well, here is one of the best ones that I can even think of and imagine, that has been created by Albertans for Albertans in Alberta. Upgrading technology is actually used to increase the quality of our oil sands so that it's able to flow. Ultimately, by putting a cap on upgrading, you're actually stopping the flow of our products. Upgrading processes are extremely energy intensive in nature because you're decreasing the viscosity of our raw oil sands, and the product requires a system that breaks down the larger oil molecules into small molecules through the application of pressure and heat.

The actual difficulty in processing bitumen comes from its composition as bitumen is composed of very, very long, large molecules, and the long molecules have to be broken before the product is usable for conversion into diesel, gasoline, or other products. So in order to get the product into the line and to flow down, we absolutely have to make sure that this process is happening. With that application of heat and pressure our oil sands products are improved and become synthetic crude oil.

The reality is – and I don't know if anybody here has actually ever held bitumen. It's an extremely heavy product and will not flow without intervention. It's impossible. So it actually needs this process to happen to flow through pipelines, which are very important.

Mr. Nixon: You remember pipelines.

Mrs. Aheer: I know. If you're pro pipeline, you're going to be pro upgrading.

The problem is that the cap on this becomes quickly an issue of market access. If we can't upgrade and if you're capping upgrading, we will not be able to get our product to market, especially in these very, very important pipelines, that seem to be very important to this government. Well, the pipelines aren't going to be useful if we have nothing to put into them, so we want to make sure, as we've said many, many times in the past, that we are producing here and that we are able to make sure that our bitumen is upgraded to be able to get it into the pipeline.

You are putting a cap on this production. It doesn't make a whole lot of sense considering that the government has spent all day talking about how important pipelines are to them, and now all of a sudden you're going to put a 10-megatonne cap on the product that is actually going to flow through that pipeline. It doesn't make a whole lot of sense, does it?

10:30

If you're looking at the bitumen flowing through it, what we normally use to upgrade bitumen is costly diluent. It significantly reduces the energy density of the product so that it can flow. The alternative to upgrading is to ship the bitumen mixed with condensate, but that adds volume – right? – which means, actually, that less product gets to go through the pipeline, and you're losing value-added.

The flip side of that is that the diluent that is in that condensate – we have a shortage of that in western Canada, and the oil sands companies actually use approximately 350,000 barrels per day in upgrading. One barrel of dilbit, or diluted bitumen, is made up of three parts bitumen and one part condensate. So in terms of capacity and utilization this is low on the side of utilization of our pipeline capacity. The whole point of this discussion is to understand why it is important to upgrade here, why it is important that this government is not putting a cap on our ability to create capacity within our pipelines. Actually, the government has acknowledged in the past that relying on condensate also means that upgrading jobs are moved elsewhere. I'm assuming that that is not what this government wants, because once it's sold – right? – it will get upgraded in one place or another.

What the government is proposing is that regardless of economics in the future we should increase emissions, which I think is contrary to what I've been hearing here over and over again. But you're actually going to push to increase emissions by forcing companies to transport raw product and create upgrader jobs at the other end of the pipeline or the rail line instead of it being done in Alberta. I'm pretty sure that that's counterintuitive to what it is that this government wants to do because – guess what? Why would you cap that process? It's a good question, isn't it? Why would you cap that process? You're actually sending it down the line to other places that may create way more emissions than we do by capping our ability to do it in this province, where we do it better. It makes zero sense, especially for people who supposedly care about pipelines.

Given that the significant bottlenecking of pipelines is resulting – we already have massive congestion in our pipelines. The fact that this is a secondary cap – so let's recap. We have a 100-megatonne cap on our oil sands emissions. Then, on top of that, you put another cap on upgrading, which supposedly was important to this government, but now you're going to cap that. Then what it actually does, too, is cap jobs. It caps jobs. You're actually sending jobs to another jurisdiction because if you're not going to upgrade it here, it's going to happen somewhere. I'd much rather do it in our jurisdiction, where we have control over our environmentally responsible processes here in this province. It doesn't make a lot of sense. You're going to cap jobs and then create more global emissions. It makes no sense.

You need to remove the cap. The cap is going to move it elsewhere. Somebody else is going to do it. I don't quite understand it. I'd love to have this explained to me. Again, 10 is another interesting number that seems to be pulled out of thin air, so it would be lovely if somebody on the government side could explain that to me, too.

Alberta is already in the position where we do not even have enough pipeline capacity, not even close. The cap will not only prevent – oddly enough, that pipeline is not going to be ready tomorrow. I know it's there. I know. But right now, as we stand right now, we do not have pipeline capacity. We don't have even close to enough, and the cap itself, even without changing capacity, will prevent bitumen from entering the pipelines. Also, the upgrading jobs, that could increase energy density and improve pipeline use across the industry: why would you cap that? You're capping jobs, capping production, capping prosperity into a pipeline that supposedly is important to you and stopping the flow of prosperity to other jurisdictions, that are going to finish off the product. It makes no sense at all, absolutely no sense.

The bill exempts and potentially experiments with not-proven techniques. Not even proven techniques, while maybe energy intensive, that greatly increase the energy density of the products shipped and reduce overall emissions will be allowed. Why would the bill exempt that? We're not sure. We would love an explanation as to why you would do that. Ultimately, if in this province we are responsible for upgrading, there are innovations and incredible technology here that will allow changes in how we create bitumen.

The conversion of bitumen to synthetic crude oil is a process that allows for transportation of our oil sands product. But, then again, let me recap. They're capping the emissions from oil sands. The 10-megatonne cap is talking about capping that process that allows for transportation of bitumen through pipelines, that, evidently, at least this morning were important to this government. So it doesn't make any sense. The 10-megatonne cap on upgrading could put Alberta into a position where we are unable to effectively transport our products to market. Why would you do that? Why would you cap prosperity? It doesn't make any sense.

Syncrude Canada has processes that fully upgrade mined bitumen and actually eliminate impurities – the impurities we're talking about are nitrogen, sulphur – and that happens through a process called coking. The end result of this process is refinery-ready synthetic crude oil shipped without diluent. This synthetic crude can be distilled into other products with little or no additional treatment. But if you're capping that, we're not going to be able to do some of these processes. The upgrading is so much more than just upgrading. It's jobs. It's about actually being able to get our bitumen into the space that it needs to be in to flow through pipelines.

When upgrading occurs in a jurisdiction that takes the utmost care, like we do, to mitigate its impact on the environment, like we do, it doesn't seem to make any sense that you would cap a jurisdiction with as high regulatory processes as we have. Less upgrading means fewer jobs and – guess what? – a hundred per cent carbon leakage. What does that mean? That means somebody else is going to do it. Why wouldn't you want to produce it here, right? I think that's a reasonable question.

The government is saying that it's wanting to create jobs, right? The government is saying that it cares about making sure that we have diversification. The government is always talking about how they want to make sure that they're getting Albertans back to work. Yet you're going to put a 10 per cent cap on something that is actually a job creator. You're going to put a 10 per cent cap on something that actually creates prosperity for us. And, actually, a hundred per cent of that goes to some other jurisdiction, right? It doesn't make a lot of sense. I mean, this is a real opportunity for you guys to stop this. You can end this. You can take off this 10-megatonne cap.

Again, just to reiterate, we have to upgrade in order to get our product into the pipeline, so why don't we talk about legitimately taking this cap off so that we can do that, do it to our full capacity and in a way that we're in control of being able to do that? I think the government would have to admit that they would much rather be in control of the environmental aspects of being able to make sure that what we're doing is putting that bitumen into the pipeline the way it should be, right? I mean, we're the most environmentally regulated petrochemical jurisdiction in the world. Madam Chair, we should be producing more here and not allowing other, less regulated jurisdictions to take business away from Alberta and Canada. So why would you cap that? Why would you cap our ability to do that?

I think the facts are fairly simple. Other jurisdictions do not take the same care to produce with less or to protect their air quality or to protect their workers' safety. Those are things we take a tremendous amount of pride in here in Alberta. In fact, I've heard the government say that, right? So I would assume that the government would think that this would be a good thing to make sure that we are producing more here.

I mean, we in our caucus, in the Wildrose, have always stated that upgrading needs to be led by the market and private investment. It's a core belief that we hold on this side. But we're already restricted by the economics of our ability to upgrade, so it makes no sense that you would cap that further. It makes absolutely no sense that a government would hamstring the viability of the upgrading that is already taking place unless it's purely for PR. It doesn't make any sense.

The government can keep talking about value-added, but that is a complete contradiction of your very own statements, especially during the royalty review. As I understand it, the royalty review kept touting value-added, value-added. Well, now you're capping your ability to do that. It makes absolutely no sense. How is that value-added to be achieved if you're going to limit production where it's actually economically viable? I mean, we're all talking today about having access to tidewater, pipelines, right? Yeah. We want to make sure we actually have the capacity and the products to be able to put in those pipelines, so don't cap it. Don't cap it. We're just asking you to make this legislation a little bit better by taking off that 10-megatonne cap. It's good for everybody here.

If the private sector doesn't see that there's availability to create upgrading opportunities, how are you going to bring investment in, especially if we move beyond the cap, right? What are you going to do then? How are you going to bring investment in if you're capping something that might have opportunities for the private sector to be involved in? Not a very good idea, not a good business idea.

Now we have even more severely hampered the ability of the private sector to become involved in responsible production. I mean, I would assume that we'd want the private sector coming into this and investing in something that we create here in Alberta, that we're able to put into the global market, but you're actually stopping production. You're stopping the flow of our products. The government has been preaching on and on and on about value-added and now seems to think it's in the best interest of Alberta and investor confidence and global competitiveness to slow down the economically viable, value-added upgrading that actually already exists. It doesn't make any sense.

I'm left with the question of the exact reasons why you added a separate 10-megatonne cap over and above the 100-megatonne cap for upgrading. Why does this legislation seek to cap upgrading at all? Why? I mean, I don't see anything written anywhere within the climate action plan about what that would do, how that helps, what the purpose is, especially when we're the most environmentally responsible people here. I would assume that the government would want to make sure we're producing here more.

The energy sector and its ability to innovate and create new and more efficient ways to produce and upgrade creates markets, and those are going to be further undermined by this 10-megatonne cap on upgrading emissions. I mean, don't we want to reward good behaviour? If they're doing a good job, let the market decide. Let innovation happen. Let's, you know, court this private sector to come back in and work with us to produce the most environmentally responsible products that we can. Don't put a cap on prosperity.

The government is also not taking into consideration that this industry is constantly looking to improve its footprint. Again – and I'll say it at least a thousand more times, I'm sure, while I speak to this bill – we should be producing more, not less. We should be producing more. Our competitors are going to be jumping for joy as our government leads in ways to keep our resources in the ground. I'm sure they're just scratching their heads and just laughing, just ecstatic about the fact that somebody else is going to be able to produce this when we should be producing here. They're going to be jumping at every chance to grab our part of the market, to take that production, and the government is destroying any opportunities for the industry to get ahead. You're destroying production.

And it's not just one thing. I mean, the cumulative aspects of all of these caps are massive to the industry, and you seem to be joyfully watching as the sector falls to its knees and watching as other countries blast past us in innovation. And forget even about the environmental standards elsewhere. Forget about workers. Forget about ethical development. We should be producing here. For a government that stands up . . .

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak in support of the amendment brought in by my hon. colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View. I'm actually surprised because in the past, when the Government House Leader was the leader of the NDP, they used to blame the Progressive Conservatives, that they're shipping jobs south of the border because they're not upgrading enough here. Now they're trying to cap upgrading, so I don't understand what they're trying to do here. They're very inconsistent on that.

It's not only that. You know, I can also bring up other contradictions. The NDP this time campaigned on this, saying that they'll bring more jobs by upgrading in Alberta, but they didn't campaign on bringing in a carbon tax. They do what they didn't say, and they don't do what they did say that they will do, so I'm really confused.

Also, you know, I want to make it clear. We're not saying here, Wildrose is not saying that the government should make investments into upgrading. We are saying that if private investors take the risk, if they come forward to invest in Alberta in upgrading, then that's good. They're going to take the risk, and they're going to create the jobs. So why are you capping the investments? Why are you capping the jobs? Why are you capping the tax revenue for Alberta?

If we don't do it here, if there are economic reasons on the Gulf coast of Mexico, they will upgrade it there, but we are not taking the risk. If the market demands the product shipped to the south, it gives them better returns on their investment. That's up to them.

In Alberta now most of the mining leases were already taken, so for most of the resource, mostly in Athabasca, it's all, you know, surface mining along the Athabasca River. So all those leases were already taken, Madam Chair. All those companies like Suncor, Syncrude, Shell, CNRL already have their mining leases, they're producing, and they have upgraders on their sites, so it's unlikely that they will add more upgrading capacity there.

But 90 per cent of the resource that the governing party wants to leave in the ground can only be extracted using SAGD technology or other thermal projects because it's deeper. So there is an opportunity there for investors to put upgraders on-site to make that an integrated facility. It's also called backward integration.

Some of this is already happening, like Suncor's Firebag, if you take that. They have added a sulphur-recovery unit at the Firebag site. They also have diluent recovery. Like my colleague tried to explain here, you need to make it viscous to flow in the pipeline. That's why you add dilbit. But by adding dilbit, it's taking up pipeline capacity. We already have a shortage of pipeline capacity, and then we are using it up for shipping diluent. We are paying more transportation costs, and then we have to ship that back. It doesn't make sense. If private investors want to take the risk and then they want to build upgraders here, we should encourage that. All these companies we talked about here actually create jobs. They support charities. They support communities. So this government, by bringing in the cap, are capping the investments, and they are also discouraging the investors. They want to punish these industries who are supporting the communities and creating the jobs here. That doesn't make sense to me.

That's why I'm speaking in support of this amendment. If you guys don't know, you can ask somebody and get to know how this process works. I'm sure, if you look at your previous manifestos, you supported upgrading in Alberta. I strongly encourage you to support this amendment. You can boast yourself about the two pipelines, but it's a different subject. Here we are talking about upgrading the bitumen to make it refinery ready so you can free up your pipeline capacity. The logic tells you to support this amendment. It has nothing to do with pipelines, what you're talking about. Those pipelines could still be filled with the product if you allow extraction. You're trying to cap production here. You're trying to cap job creation. You're trying to cap economic development, which doesn't make sense.

Also, the minister of economic development has been talking about diversification. This is another opportunity for diversification. You can produce a value-added product here, and that fits in your philosophy of diversification. I don't understand why you still want to cap that. There are many reasons I can give if you are willing to hear and actually want to create jobs here. We know we lost a hundred thousand jobs here, and the minister of economic development keeps talking about the job action plan. This is a slam dunk. This is an easy one. Remove the cap on upgrading, and if the investors come forward and invest in Alberta, it will ultimately create jobs. But don't put restrictions on them for job creation.

I would urge all members of this House to support this amendment for the reasons I gave. If you want to go back and consult your constituents on the weekend, they'll tell you the same thing. They'll remind you that your party was supporting upgrading projects before, and you'll have to explain to them what changed from then to now. You haven't told us any reason why you changed your mind. You still have time. We are giving you an avenue to fix this bill. This is one of the good amendments. We'll bring in many more amendments, but you have the opportunity to make this bill better by removing the cap on upgrading.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I'm very pleased to rise in support of this amendment tonight. First of all, something that I think ought to be noted here is that on January 17 of this year, 2016, our hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade was quoted in the Calgary Herald as saying, "The value-added (sector) really does mean high-paying, quality jobs that stay here in the province. If we have a choice between shipping raw resources or shipping a more upgraded or value-added product, we'll take the latter." "We'll take the latter," he said.

That was back in January of this year. It wasn't all that terribly long ago, so you can imagine, Madam Chair, my surprise when Bill 25 lands on our desks and we see a cap on upgrading. It seemed to me that someone did not talk to the hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade when they were drafting Bill 25 because I'm quite sure, had they done so, the hon. minister would have said: "Well, just hold your horses. The value-added sector does mean high-paying, quality jobs that stay in this province. If we have a choice between shipping raw resources or shipping a more upgraded or value-added product, I'll take the latter." I'm quite sure the hon. minister would have told them that.

That leaves me to suspect that this amendment is going to receive support from the hon. minister. I'm quite sure he's going to be supportive of this amendment because it is entirely and exactly – I will say even: exactly – in keeping with the hon. minister's previous statement made in January and as quoted by the Calgary Herald.

To remove that 10-megatonne cap means that we will not be constraining upgrading, and let's be really clear about what constraining upgrading does. It constrains jobs. It constrains jobs, it constrains development, it constrains revenue for our province, it actually constrains innovation, and it constrains diversification. It constrains all of the things that the Minister of Economic Development and Trade stands for. All of his efforts are constrained by having a 10-megatonne cap on upgrading.

Let's be really clear about upgrading. That product being pumped down that pipeline is going to be upgraded by somebody before it hits the refinery. It must be upgraded. It's not an option. That upgrading can take place in the province of Alberta, providing Albertans good-paying jobs, providing revenue for our economy, providing taxation revenue for the government. That upgrading will either take place here, or it will take place somewhere else. This is, again, the very same situation, the very same concept as carbon leakage. This is exactly the same thing. We're sending something of value someplace else, and they're going to do that work on that product. It's not going to be Albertans doing that work. It's not going to be Albertans making those paycheques. It will be somebody else, some other families that will be getting that revenue and some other government getting the taxation stream from that.

Now, there's another concept here, and that is that we already have in place a 100-megatonne cap on extraction. That's what that really is. That 100-megatonne cap is a cap on extraction. It only makes logical sense. My esteemed colleague from Calgary-Foothills, who happens to come from the resource sector, who has a long history of experience working for one of the largest oil sands developers in our province, knows what he's talking about when he says that it's only logical – it's only logical – that if we're going to have a 100-megatonne cap on extraction, then, for goodness' sakes, maximize all of the value-add that you possibly can from the product that you extract under that 100-megatonne umbrella.

11:00

It makes no sense whatsoever to take all of that bitumen that is going to be extracted under the 100-megatonne cap and then not do anything with it but, instead, cap even what we could do with that. That is not providing a value-add opportunity. In fact, what you're doing by capping it is that you're capping innovation, you're capping an expansion of diversified industry, you're capping jobs, you're capping revenue, you're capping GDP, you're capping taxation revenue. You've already got a 100-megatonne cap on the extraction. All right. Maximize everything that comes out of the ground under that cap. That is logical, and I'm sure my esteemed colleague would agree with me. That makes perfect sense.

Now, I'm not in favour even of the 100-megatonne cap, but since you're insisting on having it, for goodness' sake, don't then hamstring the industry by saying to the industry: well, you can extract all kinds of stuff up to a 100-megatonne cap, but don't you go upgrading it beyond 10 megatonnes. That just makes no sense whatsoever. This is an excellent amendment, an excellent amendment to remove the cap on upgrading, because the actual extraction has already got a cap on it. So there you've achieved your 100-megatonne cap. You can wave your orange flag over that, but now let's not go and cap all of the value-added that we could possibly be getting from what we extract under that cap.

Part two. As I said earlier, if those oil sands products are not upgraded in this province, they're going to be upgraded someplace else in the supply chain. Now, I want to talk a little bit about those companies that are involved currently in the upgrading industry within our province. I think we should be very proud of the environmental record of the upgraders that we have, the partial and complete upgraders that we've got. They are the most environmentally conscious bunch of upgrading specialists in the world. You can go to a lot of places on this planet – and I've been very blessed to be able to travel to different places. Some of them are resource-based economies. Madam Chair, I will tell you what: we've got nothing to be ashamed of about our environmental record here. You go to places in the Middle East, you go to places in Africa, and you look at those resource-based economies and the stuff that's going on over there. We are not embarrassed about our oil sands industries or our upgrading industries. They're doing a very good job on the environmental and on the safety side of things.

We have an industry that is absolutely full of innovative people, men and women who have taken something from earth – I mean, just think about this. This is sand that is surrounded by an oil product, and they have taken this stuff, and it's like the oil sands is the largest environmental cleanup project in the world. Really. It really is. It's just miraculous what innovators have done up there. They have taken this sandy product and turned it into a crude that any refinery can utilize. This is amazing. It is, in my estimation, just as amazing as that turkey processing plant down in the United States that takes all of the by-product of turkey slaughter and turns it into crude oil. Like, that's miraculous. It's just amazing. I think it may be owned by Cargill, something like eight million turkeys a month or some crazy number. It's just massive.

The things that man can do through innovation. We should not be capping the innovative and creative power of the people involved in the upgrading industry. You know, we're aware of things that that industry is doing such as water recycling. They have so significantly reduced water consumption in that process over the last 15 years. It is amazing. That is an environmentally conscious industry.

Trash reduction. I don't know of a company up there that hasn't got some kind of trash reduction strategy, and not just trash from the guys, you know. It's not like our trash at all but just the waste from construction, the waste from processing, the waste that is just a fact of an industry. They've done massive amounts of work on trash reduction strategies up there, especially on the remote sites because, obviously, anything that you create on a site that's waste has to be trucked out. That means money. It costs money. It takes time. It takes people. It takes resources to deal with it. So they've done everything they can to try to minimize that.

These are just a couple of the very responsible environmental measures taken by that industry.

Workers. I don't think you're going to find anywhere in any resource sector economy a place where workers are treated more like partners than right here in Alberta, in our oil sector. Most of the companies that I've had anything to do with – and granted, I haven't had dealings with all of them – have a process a by which every employee is encouraged to contribute creative ideas to doing things better, to doing things more efficiently, creating new processes. It's an amazing group of people. We have hundreds of thousands of men and women in this province, and these companies are taking that massive amount of creative power and talent inherent in every human being and maximizing it. They're treating these employees as though they are partners in the development of these resources for the betterment of our society, for the betterment of their families, for the betterment of our GDP, for an increased and improved quality of life. We should applaud these people for the good work that they have done and applaud the management of these companies who treat their workers that well and pay their workers an appropriate wage.

Those are good-paying jobs with excellent benefit packages, tremendous support packages for their families. I'm familiar with some of the families whose breadwinners work for CNRL. They have an amazing health package, absolutely amazing health package for families, for the children. Good on them. They're treating their workers so excellently.

You talk about safety standards, the workplace environment from a safety point of view. Again, during the Fort Mac fire we saw those kinds of safety measures and training that the companies provide their employees. That training saved lives during the Fort Mac fire. It saved lives. Those workers did not panic. They were trained in safe evacuation techniques and methods from work sites. All that same training kicked in during the Fort Mac fire, and as the fire encroached on the city and actually went through the city, you weren't seeing panicking people, not at all. These were professional people from the patch, from the oil sands. They knew exactly what to do. And this is a direct result of the kind of care – the kind of care – that our companies show to their employees and have for the environment those employees have to work in.

When we take a sum total look at the enormous amount of innovation and creativity that is available to us as a province, I will encourage each and every member in this Assembly to vote in favour of this amendment to remove the cap on these upgrading emissions simply for the fact that the enormous number of jobs that can be created here and the enormous amount of economic activity that comes with this are well worth it.

Thank you very much.

11:10

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I would like to move that the committee rise and report with respect to Bill 21, Modernized Municipal Government Act, and Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, and report progress with respect to Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act.

[Motion carried]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills with some amendments: Bill 30, Bill 21. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 25. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur with the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to move that the House adjourn until 9 tomorrow morning.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:13 p.m.]
