Legislative Assembly of Alberta

3 p.m.

Tuesday, March 8, 2016

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

[The Acting Clerk read the Royal Proclamation dated February 19, 2016, summoning the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to convene on this date]

The Acting Clerk: Please be seated.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Order! Mr. Speaker.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Speaker, accompanied by the officers of the Assembly, entered the Chamber and took the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Welcome.

Please bow your heads, and let us reflect or pray each in our own way. As we gather in this place of we the commoners, let us learn from our past, appreciate our present, and dream and plan for our future. When we reflect upon our past, let us never forget the counsel of our elders, elders like the great Blackfoot Confederacy Chief Crowfoot, who said: I will be the first to sign Treaty 7, and I will be the last to break it. When we experience our present, let us seek to understand each other before trying to be understood. When we plan for our future, let us dream no little dreams for it is our children, indeed our infants, who represent hope. Let us remind each other that it is hope that has always bound we commoners together. Amen.

Ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite Mr. Robert Clark, accompanied by the Royal Canadian Artillery Band, to lead us in singing our national anthem. Please join in in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members and Guests:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Premier, the Acting Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

The Speaker: Hon. members, the brass section of the Royal Canadian Artillery Band, whom we're pleased to have with us today, will now play a brief musical interlude. The piece to be performed is entitled Another Cat: Kraken. It's composed by Mr. Chris Hazell. The RCA Band, Canada's oldest regular army band, was formed in Quebec City in 1879. It was subsequently stationed in Montreal and in Halifax. It has seen service in both world wars and in Korea, and it has travelled across our great country of Canada and beyond our boundaries. Reconstituted in 1997 in this city of Edmonton, the band is under the direction of Captain Patrice Arsenault, CD, who is in the Speaker's gallery.

We're very fortunate to have a band like that at an event like this. I think it warrants another applause from the entire Assembly.

As we await our protocol, let us enjoy this time together.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise, please.

Mr. Speaker, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[A fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, and Mr. Mitchell, their party, the Premier, and the Acting Clerk entered the Chamber. Her Honour took her place upon the throne]

Speech from the Throne

Her Honour: Please be seated.

Friends, today is the first day of a new session of this Legislature, and it is also International Women's Day. It is therefore right to begin this address by remembering the remarkable achievements of Alberta women. There is much to tell, like, for example, the story of Alberta's Famous Five, who are remembered in a display on the fifth floor of this House.

In 1927 Emily Murphy, Irene Parlby, Nellie McClung, Louise McKinney, and Henrietta Edwards went to court to ask the following question: "Does the word 'Persons' in section 24 of the British North America Act . . . include female persons?" Their fight was a fundamental one, the principle that no public office should be barred to women because of their gender. Courtesy of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in London women were indeed found to be persons, which was a good start.

I think you'll agree with me, looking at this House, at the ministerial bench, and at the seat from which I speak, that we are still making progress. The fact that my government's new Ministry of Status of Women is led by a new mother tells us that further barriers are beginning to come down.

As UN Women puts it well, International Women's Day is a time to reflect on the progress being made. It is a time to renew our call for change, and it is a time to celebrate acts of courage and determination by ordinary women who have played an extraordinary role in the history of their countries and communities.

Today, on International Women's Day, we recommit ourselves to carrying on this work. And today we return to this House to carry on our work for all the people of Alberta.

The Latest Energy Price Shock and Its Consequences

As I speak, we are facing another deep slump in the international price of oil. Let there be no doubt; Albertans are going to get through this together as we have done before. We will address the difficult choices that lie before us, in keeping with our deeply held values. Albertans are an optimistic, entrepreneurial, can-do people, and Albertans are community minded, caring, and neighbourly. Ours is a society of friends. In tough times we always pull together.

We have each other's backs. We support each other in these times instead of making a bad situation worse.

We don't need to put our short-term bottom line over the interests of long-term recovery. We do need to understand that this latest price bust is prolonged, deep, and driven by important and fundamental changes in the world market. And so we do need to act.

We are currently overdependent on a single commodity, a single price, and a single market. Alberta will address this in a number of ways.

First, we will diversify our energy markets. Second, we will pursue a coherent and effective economic development strategy at last. Third, we will invest in a greener, more sustainable economy. Fourth, we will pursue a responsible approach to public finance. And fifth, we will pursue ongoing democratic reform to ensure public accountability in all of this work.

Diversifying Our Markets

Canada's inability over the past 10 years to pursue a strategic energy policy supported by Canadians has made it impossible so far for our country to diversify our markets, and the result is that Canadian energy exports are heavily discounted even at these low prices. That must change.

Canada's energy industry, which is so important to the livelihoods and futures of Alberta families, must have safe and efficient pipeline access to tidewater so that the energy production that is permitted under our climate leadership plan can command the highest possible value on world markets.

Furthermore, Canada's energy industry needs access to the Canadian market itself. Canada currently imports almost a million barrels a day of oil from other countries. It makes no sense to finance the economies of other countries in this way, when it would be both more economically and more environmentally responsible for Canada to rely on its own abundant energy resources.

My government has been pursuing these issues since its first days in office and will continue to do so with focus and determination.

We will erase any doubts about Alberta's environmental reputation within Canada and around the world through our climate leadership plan, which places our energy economy in the ranks of the world's most progressive energy producers.

As I will detail in a few minutes, a key enabling bill giving effect to this plan will be presented in this session of the Legislature.

Alberta will also continue to strongly engage with the federal government and with all other provincial and territorial governments on these issues.

We are making progress.

The Canadian energy strategy adopted by the Council of the Federation last July provides Canada with a balanced framework both to protect the environment and to develop our country's energy industry.

At a meeting of first ministers in Vancouver last week every government in Canada committed to the view that these issues are urgent and must be dealt with in a timely fashion.

As a first step to that end, the government of Alberta welcomes a new interim federal assessment of the environmental and climate issues that arise from new pipelines, because the strength of our climate leadership plan places Alberta in the ranks of the world's most progressive energy producers.

We will continue to work towards a permanent regulatory regime that is effective and predictable and that has a beginning, a middle, and a timely end.

Action on Income Security, Diversification, and Job Creation

There is much that needs to be done here in Alberta in the face of the current economic shock. First, we must help the many Alberta families who are facing immediate financial hardship. Albertans are rightfully concerned about their livelihoods and their income security.

At times like these we must think of our children first.

Starting this summer, my government will implement an important new Alberta child benefit plan for low-income families, a $340 million investment in new direct help to the Alberta families who need help most. So, for example, a low-income single parent with two children will begin to receive just over $3,000 a year in benefits from enhancements to the Alberta child benefit and the family employment tax credit. In all, 380,000 Alberta children will benefit from this initiative, direct help now, to the most vulnerable and needy among us.

Alberta is also vigorously urging Canada's new federal government to reconsider federal employment insurance rules that exclude too many Albertans from benefits. These rules must be updated as quickly as possible to take account of the current economic shock affecting the resource industry and related industries in western Canada.

Measures will be introduced in Budget 2016 to expand access to workforce and skills training and retraining so that many people facing unemployment can upgrade their skills.

And we will protect Albertans who are experiencing economic distress from being preyed upon by unscrupulous lenders. In some cases these lenders are charging exploitative interest rates of up to 600 per cent a year to Albertans least able to afford such fees. This has been allowed to go on for too long. Albertans need a government that will stand up for them when they are most vulnerable. To end these abuses, my government will introduce an act to end predatory lending.

Second, we must do everything we responsibly can, as quickly as possible, to promote job creation and economic diversification.

Alberta is investing $34 billion into our provincial capital plan to help build the roads, transit, schools, and other facilities our province needs to support the economy and create jobs.

A province-wide slowdown in the construction industry has accompanied the drop in oil prices. Timely, worthy investments in infrastructure today will help keep thousands of tradespeople, equipment operators, engineers, and other professionals at work, giving them the means to support their families.

Our province is also making $1.5 billion available to Alberta Treasury Branches to support lending to small and medium-sized businesses and has directed AIMCo to earmark half a billion dollars for Alberta companies with growth potential.

In an economic slowdown businesses, whether large or small, new or established, often find their access to credit or investment capital restrained when they need it most to maintain or grow their operations. These programs will help give entrepreneurs the stability they need to weather this economic storm and create new opportunities for employment and growth.

The government of Alberta will do more to promote economic development in Budget 2016. Alberta will introduce further measures to promote access to capital for job creators. My government will set out plans to build on strengths in our economy, including in our agriculture and forestry industries, and to partner with communities and regions so they can act on their local economic strengths and opportunities. And my government will work with leaders in Alberta's $23 billion credit union system to ensure they have the business tools necessary for their work and to encourage them to support small and medium-sized businesses in their communities. After a careful consultation with the credit union system my government is aiming to modernize and strengthen Alberta's credit union legislation in the fall sitting of the Legislature.

My government will introduce the Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act to provide the minister of economic development with tools to pursue these initiatives and to report on results.

Third, we will build on our strategic partnership with Canada's new federal government. The government of Canada has committed to a significant new investment in Canada's infrastructure. Alberta will work closely with Ottawa to ensure that federal investment in Alberta infrastructure promotes diversification and job creation as quickly as possible.

Finally, we will work closely with our province's energy industry to ride out this storm and look for opportunities within it. My government recently completed a review of Alberta's royalty system and will now proceed to reform it. This modernization will promote innovation and efficiency. It will remove disincentives to develop different forms of hydrocarbons, and it will provide full transparency and accountability to the public in the operation of royalties. As prices improve and costs decline, the public return from our resources will also improve.

Alberta will work with focus and determination with partners to create new jobs and diversification in the energy industry. Our aim is to move the energy industry up the value chain, to process and add value to our resources, and to diversify the energy industry into new end products.

As a first step to this goal a few weeks ago my government introduced a $500 million Alberta petrochemicals diversification program. In further pursuit of these goals my government looks forward to the advice of a new, broadly representative energy diversification advisory committee to drive this priority forward and advise my government on additional steps Alberta can take to build a more diversified and resilient energy economy.

Investing in a Clean Energy Future

My government will introduce the Climate Leadership Implementation Act to give force and effect to key elements of Alberta's new climate plan. Every penny raised by this plan during this period of low energy prices will be reinvested back into the economy to create jobs and to promote diversification in our economy.

Key elements of Alberta's plan include a phase-out of emissions from coal power generation, reducing pollution and the harm it causes to the health of the very young and very old; a carbon levy to create a market-based incentive to build a more efficient and less emission-intensive economy; an investment plan that will fully recycle revenues from Alberta's carbon levy into renewable energy, innovation, public transit, and other measures that will reduce the carbon intensity of our economy; and an adjustment program to assist coal-dependent communities, indigenous communities, low-income families, and small business to adjust to and succeed in a diversified, lower carbon economy.

A new, lean agency called Energy Efficiency Alberta will help families, businesses, and entire communities reduce both their energy costs and their greenhouse gas emissions.

We will work with the energy industry and with civil society to implement Alberta's climate leadership plan, which is strongly supported by key industry leaders in the oil sands, to help Alberta's energy industry achieve the goal of being one of the most environmentally progressive in the world.

To that end, my government looks forward to the advice of a new, broadly representative oil sands advisory group to ensure measures are effective and widely supported.

Responsible Public Financial Management

The collapse of the price of oil and therefore of public resource revenues has gone directly to our province's bottom line. In these circumstances the government of Alberta cannot meet current deficit targets because the commodity price crash has proved to be deeper and of longer duration than projected. Alberta's fiscal plans must therefore be revisited as part of the prudent, balanced approach my government will set out in its budget later this spring.

We will protect health care and education services. In the circumstances we face, we will also ensure that all public spending, including on these services, is carefully and efficiently managed and that all possible economies are found.

Further to this goal, my government will introduce the Reform of Agencies, Boards and Commissions Act. Over the years compensation practices between the public service and our province's agencies, boards, and commissions have diverged, in some cases significantly so. This reform will address this issue by introducing a framework to narrow and rationalize this growing divergence.

This act will also improve public oversight and stewardship over these important public bodies, which will become more transparent and accountable and follow good governance practices.

My government will have a great deal more to say on all of these issues when its budget is put before the House.

Ongoing Democratic Reform

My government is looking forward to the report of this Legislature's all-party Special Committee on Ethics and Accountability. The new minister of democratic renewal will receive that report and lead early action on it. My government's aim is to present legislation on the key democratic reform issues addressed by the committee in the fall sitting of this Legislature, with a view to adoption before the end of this year.

Other Measures

My government will introduce a number of other measures this session.

At the request of most of Alberta's indigenous governments my government will repeal Bill 22 and will engage indigenous communities on how the Crown should fulfill its consultation duties and support the capacity of indigenous people.

My government will consult indigenous people on a new indigenous people's sacred ceremonial objects repatriation act, that would facilitate the return of sacred objects to the nations to whom they belong.

My government will introduce an act to implement a Supreme Court ruling governing essential services to comply with recent rulings by the Supreme Court of Canada and Alberta's Court of Queen's Bench, which invalidated existing provincial labour legislation.

My government will introduce draft legislation this spring modernizing the Municipal Government Act and will then invite comment by citizens and municipal governments with a view to adopting a final version of the legislation this fall.

An act to modernize the enforcement of provincial offences will help police and the judiciary to focus on major offences, by simplifying and streamlining how minor offences are managed.

And amendments to the Securities Act will permit the further modernization, national harmonization, and streamlining of securities legislation.

Conclusion

Friends, Albertans want to build an economy that is widely diversified and resilient to energy price swings, an economy that captures the full value of our resources, holds the promise of prosperous futures for our children, and shares its benefits widely and fairly among all Albertans; Albertans want to build a society that provides well-managed, efficiently financed, nimble, world-class health care, education, and other public services; and Albertans want to build a society that gives a hand up to people who need it, cares for the vulnerable, and opens doors for our children and our grandchildren. This is what we wish for ourselves and for all.

We have seen oil price drops before. We will get past this one, and we will draw the right lessons from it and act on them.

That is exactly what my government intends to do in the budget and legislative program it will put before this House this session.

Thank you, friends.

God bless Alberta.

God bless Canada.

And God save the Queen.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

The Speaker: Ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite Mr. Robert Clark, accompanied by the Royal Canadian Artillery Band, to lead us in the singing of God Save The Queen. Please remain standing at the conclusion.

Hon. Members and Guests:

God save our gracious Queen,
Long live our noble Queen,
God save The Queen!
Send her victorious,
Happy and glorious,
Long to reign over us;
God save The Queen!

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Their Honours, their party, and the Premier left the Chamber as a fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[The Mace was uncovered]

The Speaker: Ladies and gentlemen, it is truly an honour for me to stand here before you today as the Speaker of this Assembly and also on International Women's Day to relate to you events that I consider to be significant historical facts which occurred nearly 100 years ago. On April 19, 2016, Albertans will be celebrating the 100th anniversary of women's suffrage in this province. April 19 is a momentous date in our history.

The campaign for women's suffrage, or Votes for Women, as it was called, was a long struggle in Alberta, as it was elsewhere in Canada. From the time of Confederation to the First World War only men could vote in provincial and federal elections. The movement of equal suffrage, which began in the 19th century, was clearly motivated by the drive for equality in public life, a sense that women deserved to participate fully in the democratic process. It seems so strange to us that in this 21st century we ask why it took so long.

By the way, it was pointed out to me that we refer in Canada to suffragists, which are significantly different than suffragettes, which are our southern neighbours.

Suffragists such as Nellie McClung, Emily Murphy, and Alice Jamieson also believed that women could spearhead social reform if only they could access the levers of political power. The equal suffrage movement in Alberta was highlighted by the lobbying efforts of a number of dedicated suffragists. Alberta suffragists first brought their demands for the vote to this building to Premier Arthur Sifton, and the petition was rejected in their call for votes.

A campaign of protests and petitions continued the following year, in 1914, when suffragists returned to this Legislature. This time they had in hand a petition with some 12,200 signatures demanding that women be included in the Alberta Election Act. Although they were praised for their tenacity and their organization, Premier Sifton again rejected the suffragists' demand for the vote.

The most dramatic event of the Alberta women's suffrage campaign took place on February 27, 1915, when Premier Sifton and his cabinet agreed to meet with a small number of suffragists that afternoon. When the cabinet arrived in the Chamber – ladies and gentlemen, this very Chamber – for that meeting, we of my gender were shocked to see suffragists occupying the ministers' seats, and their supporters filled the gallery.

The government of the day was impressed by this show of solidarity and by the persistent campaign. Accordingly, in 1915 the Premier ordered the preparation of a statute placing men and women in Alberta on a basis of absolute equality. On April 19, 1916, the Equal Suffrage Statutory Law Amendment Act was granted royal assent. Alberta joined Manitoba and Saskatchewan, which had given women the right to vote earlier the same year, as the provinces where women could vote and hold public office.

It is of note that Roberta MacAdams and Louise McKinney, both elected in the provincial general election of June 7, 1917, were two of the first women to be elected to the Legislature anywhere in the British Empire, the forerunner to what we now call our Commonwealth.

However, it should be noted that the cause of women's equality in public life was not complete in 1916, as was demonstrated by the efforts of Nellie McClung, Emily Murphy, Henrietta Muir Edwards, Louise McKinney, and Irene Parlby, the so-called Famous Five, who fought for the inclusion of women as Senators in the Persons Case of the late 1920s. This Legislature, which represents all of our people, has a wonderful exhibit dedicated to the Famous Five on the fifth floor of this building in which you will note: we are persons.

In addition, Voices for the Vote is a special exhibit that the Legislature will be hosting commemorating the 100th anniversary of women's suffrage in Alberta. With a little bit of marketing on behalf of all of the Assembly members, I want you to invite your friends and neighbours to come and see this exhibit. The exhibit will run from early June to mid-August at the Borealis Gallery in the federal building, and I hope that all of you will plan to attend.

Hon. members and esteemed guests, it should be noted, in conclusion, that the injustices concerning the vote continued for other groups for a number of decades after 1916 and may well be continuing. It was only by the 1950s that in Canada electoral disqualifications on racial and religious grounds had been eliminated altogether. Only by 1960 were all status First Nations people finally granted the unconditional right to vote. We must again ask ourselves: why did it take so long?

Tablings

The Speaker: I have the honour to table a copy of the speech graciously given by Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 1

Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege to rise today to request leave to introduce the government's first bill, the Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act.

In the upcoming budget the government will continue to move forward with our economic diversification and job-creation plan. This bill gives government additional tools to carry out the plan we will lay out in the budget and the requirement to report on progress.

Mr. Speaker, there is no minimizing the impact the collapse in global oil prices is having on our families, workers, and businesses. But while Alberta's economy is experiencing a major setback, I know that this is something we can and will recover from, and we will do it by supporting each other, making prudent decisions, and taking action instead of making a bad situation worse. That's why our government's number one priority is on protecting and creating jobs for today and building on our strengths for a stronger and more diverse economy for tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans want an economy that is resilient to energy price swings, captures the full value of our resources, offers prosperous futures for our children, and shares its benefits widely and fairly among all Albertans. Bill 1 will provide the government with additional tools to do just that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a first time]

Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the speech of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to the Assembly be taken into consideration on Wednesday, March 9, 2016.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I consider this to be a very auspicious beginning of the session, so I am pleased to move that the Assembly adjourn until Wednesday, March 9, 2016, at 9 a.m.

The Speaker: For those of you who are watching, I've learned that when I stand up, the pages stop handing out the documents. So I've learned to sit.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:53 p.m.]

9 a.m.

Wednesday, March 9, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Please bow your heads as each of us in our own way contemplate the need for serenity to accept our responsibility to search for respectful solutions, courage to defend principles which may not be popular, and wisdom to understand the difference.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Election of a Deputy Chair of Committees

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to section 17(1) of the Legislative Assembly Act and Standing Order 58(2) nominations are invited for the office of Deputy Chair of Committees for the 29th Legislature. Do you wish to make any nominations? The Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Absolutely. Over the last few months I've had an opportunity to work with all of my colleagues in different capacities, in committees, and we've really seen people that have taken that leadership role, that have a clear understanding of the procedure and the context and show leadership for our members. Heather Sweet has really identified herself as one of those people, and I would like to nominate her to take this on and to continue showing that role and to be of assistance to you, Mr. Speaker, in your role as well. I believe she has all the great intentions and capacity in order to do such, and her experience has enabled her to do so.

The Speaker: Ms Sweet, are you prepared to accept the nomination?

Ms Sweet: I'll accept the nomination, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there other nominations? The oppositional House leader.

Mr. Cooper: Not oppositional, sir, just opposition.

Well, good morning, Mr. Speaker. It's an absolute pleasure to see you here this morning and all of the members of the Assembly. It's great to be back where I know we can put the needs of Albertans ahead of our own needs, and I think we have an opportunity to do that this morning. I appreciate the nomination from the government member. I just might briefly comment that the Member for Edmonton-Manning – some might address her by her first name, but in our case we'll stick to the rules – was recently appointed caucus chair of the NDP caucus, and this member plays a very important and partisan role inside the NDP caucus.

They have made a commitment to do things differently. In my opinion, appointing a caucus chair, who plays a very partisan role, to the very nonpartisan role in the Speaker's office is not doing things differently. In fact, I think you would find that many Albertans would say that this doesn't pass the smell test. While I have had the opportunity of working with the Member for Edmonton-Manning in a number of capacities and she is very capable and quite a lovely person, I'm not sure that her role as the caucus chair is an ideal fit to work inside the Speaker's office.

We can look at a number of things that they've said that they would do differently, but they're not, including by-election campaign-style announcements, finding ways to pay a caucus chair like the Deputy Chair of Committees, and other things where the government said they would do one thing and now appear to be doing it differently. But do not fret, Mr. Speaker. The Wildrose is here to help provide solutions, meaningful solutions that can communicate to Albertans that the Assembly is ready to do things differently.

So it's my absolute pleasure to rise in this place today and nominate my good friend and colleague the Member for Calgary-Foothills. The Member for Calgary-Foothills understands the importance of the role of the Deputy Chair of Committees and the need to ensure that it is done in as nonpartisan a way as possible. He has a long history, a long and proud history, of working in the private sector, where he has chaired hundreds and hundreds of meetings. As a professional engineer he understands the importance of process, the importance of following the rules that are set out by his colleagues in that sector to ensure that everyone is safe. That can easily be applied to serving in the role of Deputy Chair of Committees.

I think that we have a wonderful opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to do something unique, to do something powerful, to work across party lines, to invite a member of an opposition caucus into the inner workings of the Legislature, and I am confident that the Member for Calgary-Foothills could do just that for all members of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. Member Panda, are you prepared to accept the nomination for Deputy Chair?

Mr. Panda: I would be pleased to serve in your office, sir. I accept the nomination.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any other nominations?

Hearing none, I would therefore declare nominations closed. The nominees for the position of Deputy Chair of Committees are Ms Heather Sweet from Edmonton-Manning and Mr. Prasad Panda from Calgary-Foothills. Voting will commence after the list of nominees is posted in each voting booth. The table officers will proceed, and I think the Chamber doors will be secured after that.

[The lists of candidates were posted]

The Speaker: I understand that the members will have some instructions and a road map, but if you'll come forward, the voting will now begin.

[Members voted from 9:10 a.m. to 9:17 a.m.]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

I've been advised that there may have been some misunderstandings with respect to the voting process, as raised by several members. We will, therefore, based on what I hear, now secure the doors and have a revote.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, a number of members who were not in the Chamber when you initially said that the doors would be locked have now entered the Chamber and drastically changed the face of the results of the election. The honourable thing would be that the members who weren't in the Chamber at least remove themselves from the Chamber, and we can revote.

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I appreciate the opposition's comments; however, to my knowledge, the bells did not go off, and therefore the doors were not tiled. Correct me if I'm wrong, if I actually heard the bells or not. I didn't hear the bells. Therefore, the doors were not tiled. Obviously, we'll respect your decision.

I'll leave it at that. Thank you.

The Speaker: Table counsel, could you please come to the Speaker's chair?

Speaker's Ruling Rules and Practices of the Assembly

The Speaker: Welcome back, everyone. On the point raised by the minister of economic development, I've checked, and there does not appear to be in the election of officers procedure a ringing of the bells.

The Opposition House Leader has raised the suggestion, what I would understand to be a point of order, that the members who entered the Chamber after what should have been the securing of the doors exercise their option as to whether or not they choose to vote on this. I would urge the government members to consider that matter at some length.

Opposition House Leader, you raise a very good point. The dilemma with respect to raising it is that it is entirely based upon the good judgment of each individual member because I'm not sure that you could identify who actually came in, nor could I. So I would stand by the ruling. However, I would ask those members who in good conscience believe that they came later into this Chamber, after what, in fact, should have been secured doors, to consider that if you choose to exercise your vote.

I would rule that we revoke. And to those members who were not here, who entered the Chamber after the House was advised that the doors should be secured, I would urge you to consider not voting.

Could we please proceed with a revoke?

Hon. member, do you have a point?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I know it seems that there was some confusion this morning as far as members coming in or not coming in for this time. Normally and according to the standing orders, there is a bell before a vote, which gives members the opportunity to come into the Chamber and be present if they have business outside of the Chamber, and there wasn't any bell this morning.

So our government will do the right thing, and I will therefore be asking our members who were not present when the vote was called to take it upon themselves to make a decision of whether or not to stay in here for the revoke.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hearing that, could we please proceed with the vote? Are there any other comments?

Mr. Cooper: I have a comment, then, sir. It was our impression that the door had been locked. There was an opposition member who tried to enter the Chamber mere moments ago and was refused, in the form of the independent Member for Calgary-Elbow, the leader of the Alberta Party. Subsequently, we have seen additional members from the government side enter the Chamber. I don't think that this is the start that all of us were hoping for, sir.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the rule cited that members are not allowed to enter the Chamber when there has not been a standing vote called. There are no standing votes in the morning. Could someone please cite the rule?

The Speaker: Government House Leader, to the House, the point in question is in schedule A, subsection 8. "The doors of the Chamber will be secured during the voting process." Schedule A, under Election of Officers Procedure.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I might just add that point 9 is that "ballots will be provided to Members present in the Chamber by the Table Officers of the Assembly prior to voting."

Mr. Mason: Okay. Mr. Speaker, I see the rule. I will withdraw.

The Speaker: I notice that hon. members are departing the room. I would respectfully request that those who entered the room when they believe the doors would have been secured would exit. Hon. members, thank you. Thank you.

Could we please proceed with the vote now?

[Members voted from 9:28 a.m. to 9:35 a.m.]

The Speaker: Please take your seats. Have all who wished to do so voted?

Hearing none, I would ask the table officers to retire with the ballot box.

Could the doors please remain secure?

[Ballots were counted from 9:35 a.m. to 9:43 a.m.]

The Speaker: For the information of the House, in this very formal manner discussed, if you read the procedures that are on your desks, the reason that I determined that it would be better to keep the doors secure is the incidents that led us to this point, and I felt that that was a better decision to make. There may well be a second vote that takes place, and I choose not to jeopardize the securing of the doors. Thus, my reasoning.

The Acting Clerk: Mr. Speaker, the number of ballots cast for the position of Deputy Chair of Committees: 59. The number of spoiled ballots: zero. The number of votes required to achieve a 50 per cent plus one majority: 30. The member having received the majority of votes cast: Ms Heather Sweet.

Ms Heather Sweet is hereby the Deputy Chair of Committees of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for the 29th Legislature.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, would you like to say a few remarks to the Assembly?

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to be elected to this position by all members of the Assembly, and I look forward to working with everybody collaboratively.

Thank you.

Please be seated.

The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the 2015-16 supplementary supply estimates. When supplementary estimates are tabled, section 4(5) of the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act requires that an update to the consolidated fiscal plan be tabled.

Accordingly, I also wish to table the 2015-16 third-quarter fiscal update, which serves as the updated fiscal plan. The quarterly fiscal update provides a framework for additional spending authority for the Legislative Assembly and for the government. These supplementary supply estimates will provide additional spending to six government departments. When passed, the estimates will authorize an approximate increase of $106 million in expense funding for the government. These estimates will also authorize a transfer of $25 million of the previously approved capital investment vote to the expense vote within the Department of Environment and Parks.

Finally, I wish to table the 2016-17 interim supply estimates. These interim supply estimates will provide spending authority to the Legislative Assembly and the government for the period of April 1, 2016, to May 31, 2016, inclusive. This interim funding authority will ensure continuity in the business of the province while the Legislature takes the time necessary to discuss, debate, and enact the full funding required for government business for the 2016-17 fiscal year. When passed, these interim supply estimates will authorize approximate spending of $30 million for the Legislative Assembly, $7.1 billion for the expense funding, $864 million in capital investment funding, $164 million in financial transactions funding for the government, and $363 million for the transfer from the lottery fund to the general revenue fund.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Government Motions

7. Mr. Bilous moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2016-17 interim supply estimates, and all other matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

The Speaker: The House leader for the Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my displeasure to rise today and speak to the requirement for supply. While I appreciate that we need to ensure that our front-line services – nurses, doctors, teachers, paramedics – need to be able to continue to work and that this is the necessary process to make it happen, I just wanted to take a brief moment and highlight some of my concerns around the need for supply. This new government, as I've already mentioned once today, promised to do things differently. I remember some time that I spent around the precinct area and members of the current caucus standing in this place, much as I'm doing this morning, rallying against the government of the day because of their inability to plan on time.

Mr. Speaker, the end of March comes at the end of March every single year. The government of the day lays out the agenda for the government. They knew that the end of March was coming. In fact, we just passed a budget the end of November. They've had all of this time to be working towards having this done now. Now, they used to take a fair amount of time blaming the previous government for putting them in a bad spot, for having to have them rush things. But here we are now almost a full year into the mandate of this government, and they still aren't getting things done on time.

This problem could have been solved if we had come back to this Assembly, as Albertans right across the province would expect us to do, in early February, saw a budget in mid-February, and had all of the important tasks of passing that budget completed by the end of March. But today we see that that's not going to be the case. Not only that, Mr. Speaker; we've heard from the Minister of Finance that the budget isn't going to be tabled in the Assembly until the 14th of April, well past the end of the fiscal year. So it is more than a little disappointing to this side of the House that we haven't taken the necessary steps to ensure that the budget can be passed by the year-end. It's what we expect of all of the organizations that report to us, yet it's not what the government is delivering for Albertans.

So I will not be supporting this motion, and I would expect that many of my colleagues also will not be.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak to Motion 7?

The Deputy Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I just want to make it clear that this Committee of Supply motion only deals with six departments, extends by two months, and I encourage all members of the House to vote in favour so that government business may continue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Government Motion 7 carried]

8. Mr. Bilous moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(2) the Committee of Supply shall be called to consider the 2016-17 interim supply estimates for three hours on Thursday, March 10, 2016, beginning at 9 a.m.

[Government Motion 8 carried]

9. Mr. Bilous moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2015-16 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

[Government Motion 9 carried]

10. Mr. Bilous moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(2) the Committee of Supply shall be called to consider the 2015-16 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund for three hours on Monday, March 14, 2016, beginning at 7:30 p.m.

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member. There's no debate on this motion, as I understand it.

[Government Motion 10 carried]

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mrs. Littlewood moved, seconded by Mr. Westhead, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to open debate on the Speech from the Throne. I wish to thank Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor for her carefully intentioned words that laid the groundwork for this spring session.

I would also like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your continued efforts and the wisdom that you bring to the chair. It is not an easy task that you have, managing the dynamics and the volume of this House, yet the balance that you show and the encouragement that you give us to work together from both sides of the floor continue to set a standard for us all.

It is my great privilege to stand in this House and share the voice of my constituents from Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, who so generously gave me their vote and who entrusted me to speak for them on all matters before this House. It is with humility and dedication that I strive to continually earn that trust. The experience and perspective they give me are the only way I can hope to represent a vast diversity of people: dairy farmers, corrections officers, teachers, microbrewers, grandmothers, firefighters, people of all ages, all abilities, all income levels, all nationalities, all ethnicities, all faith communities, all genders, and, most importantly, all political stripes.

I wish to acknowledge my husband, Jeremy Johnston, for his long-suffering patience and endless support in allowing me to put the constituency and those that reside within it first.

Mr. Speaker, this has been a tough winter, not for its weather, which continues to get milder each year, but for the tough economic climate that has continued to impact Albertan families from every corner of this province. We have inherited a great responsibility, and we have been directed by the voters of this great province to tread down a path in search of stability: job creation supported by our government's investment in making capital available to small and medium-sized businesses; aggressive infrastructure investment to address the growing needs of a growing population in health care, education, and industry; diversifying our economy on the road to a more mature, resilient province that can weather world market prices and decrease our dependence on a single commodity price.

All of us in this Chamber in our role as Members of this Legislative Assembly hear and see the personal impact of sustained low oil prices on Alberta families. They have invited me to sit at their table while they tell me how they are afraid for their jobs or how the family has already experienced a loss. Executives share with me how they are working to examine every way to not lose any employees during this time of low market prices. Family farms are worried about the long-term viability of their homestead due to more and more families needing to rely on off-farm income and jobs to make ends meet. However, as difficult as these situations are, they reveal the tenacity that makes us Albertans.

This is a once-in-a-generation challenge, as the Minister of Finance rightly said. I have first-hand experience of it. Born in west Edmonton at the Misericordia hospital, my father worked hard as a journeyman painter. Going into the trades when my dad did, his future seemed fairly secure. A booming housing industry and a healthy, energy-based economy: it seemed like the right time to buy and build a house in Mill Woods in order to accommodate a growing family, that had become completely dominated by women. My poor dad. My mom had given her strong personality and her fierce individualism to three girls, all of which challenged my father in many ways. Then the worst happened. My dad, like many breadwinners, lost his job during the latest economic bust. We lost our house. My parents divorced, and like many families, the only thing we could do was to continue putting one foot in front of the other.

My parents being in separate households presented me with many challenges, two different lives that set me forever on a course towards compassion, empathy, and a thirst to see fairness for others. I have learned the phrase "social justice" as an adult, but to me what that means is that we need to examine what fairness means in this province. Is it fair that our seniors in rural Alberta live in poverty and without proper access to affordable transportation for appropriate medical care? Is it fair that we continue to move our grandparents away from their communities in pursuit of affordable housing? Is it fair that our small municipalities continue to struggle to pay for failing infrastructure? Is it fair that mothers continue to be left behind in workplace advancement due to a lack of both child care space and affordability?

Now, my father will never tell me that life is fair, but that, I believe, is where government has a responsibility to come in to help bridge the gap. If anyone has heard me talk about my constituency, they have heard me talk about the need for a bridge. My father did those things that he could to move us forward. He owned his own small painting business, and, as I've shared in this House before, he worked long hours. My dad found affordable child care. He watched every dime that went in and out of the house, but he did not do this on his own. I grew up in Edmonton housing. I attended public school. We had access to publicly funded health care. Yes, my dad did pull himself up by his bootstraps, but the ability to do that, to take care of his family, hinged on publicly funded services.

Our relatively new government has taken the role of working to address systematic inequality and extending an invitation to those in our communities that are passionate about looking for solutions that benefit all of Alberta. Leaders and advocates are not something that my constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville is in short supply of.

This past season I have had the amazing pleasure of introducing amazing people, people that work to improve their communities and continue to make these small, rural, and rural places – yes, it's a word; rural, urban, rural – great places to move to raise a family: Myron Hayduk, mayor of Vegreville and owner of The Garage, a classic car dealership; Taneen Rudyk, councillor of Vegreville, member of the Vegreville Region Physician Attraction and Retention Committee, board member of St. Joseph's hospital, Eskimos fan, and daughter of former Vegreville Viking NDP MLA Derek Fox, who served as agriculture critic under the leadership of Ray Martin; deputy reeve and councillor of Lamont county Daniel Warawa, proud Ukrainian, expert combine handler, and a true patriarch; Fort Saskatchewan Mayor Gale Katchur, vice-chair of Alberta's Industrial Heartland, proud grandmother, talented orator of 'Twas the Night Before Christmas; Heather Boonstra, executive director of Families First Society, Eskimos season ticket holder, best hugger on my side of the North Saskatchewan; Don Segberg, high school social studies teacher at JP II, proud new dad, Alberta politics junkie. These are just a few of the everyday people that do extraordinary things every day.

I have met groups of people brought together by cultural institutions created in Alberta, groups such as agricultural societies: Bruderheim Ag Society, Lamont and District Ag Society, Vegreville Ag Society, Josephburg Ag Society, Chipman Ag Society, Andrew Ag Society, Mundare & District Ag Society, and Tofield Ag Society. These societies were created to share farm and agricultural information and education. However, over the years, as you can see, these groups have forged their ways into the identity of the community. They not only host and organize rodeos; they have country and blues music festivals. They fund raise for necessities in schools, seniors' homes, hospitals, and community centres, and they do this with small armies of volunteers.

These people more often than not are on multiple boards. Your ag society member is also the library board member, is also your museum board member, is also your Lions Club member, is also the Legion member, and is also your chamber of commerce member.

Residents of these rural, rural, and remote areas of Alberta don't wait for help; they do. For that they deserve an enormous amount of respect, but we must do what we can to support the sustainability of these communities. This past fall AAMDC held its convention, and the tag line they used was Where It All Starts, because farming, oil and gas, and much of our tourism sectors reside in our most rural parts of Alberta. Our economy relies on these areas for jobs, tax dollars, Albertan culture, and the very food that we put on our table. Our future diversifying of the economy will depend on how we support these industries. My constituents have told me loud and clear that they want support now and for the future.

I am pleased to be able to stand and show my support for our government's new Alberta child benefit plan for low-income families. This $340 million investment in new and direct help will make a difference for families in Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville and countless other Albertan families who need help now; 380,000 Albertan children will benefit from this initiative.

We will also help those families with legislation to protect Albertans in economic distress from predatory lending, a bold move forward to protect some of our most vulnerable.

Expanded access to workforce and skills training and retraining is integral to the financial health of our families so that people facing unemployment can upgrade their skills. Our tradespeople want to put their workboots back on.

We will address growing infrastructure deficits with $34 billion of investment while retaining jobs: schools in Fort Saskatchewan bursting at the seams, kindergarten classes being moved into school gyms.

I'm also proud that our Premier and our ministers continue meaningful intergovernmental collaboration on pipelines. We cannot forget that we are a country made up of a federation of provinces that must work together towards the common good.

At the same time we can review how we practise consultation. Our government will repeal Bill 22 and will engage indigenous communities on how the Crown should fulfill its consultation duties and support the capacity of indigenous people. Together we can create a diversified future.

Our government announced a much-anticipated initiative in the new petrochemicals diversification program. Applauded by Alberta's Industrial Heartland Association, this program will help investors get over the initial hurdle of building such capital-intensive projects and help Albertans acquire greater value for products such as propane, that are market-exposed, and turn them into higher value products such as propylene and polypropylene. We will back that up with a broad-based representative group, the energy diversification advisory committee, that can not only look at diversification but help guide our government towards resiliency.

This government's royalty review has steps towards a plan to modernize royalties, to promote innovation, transparency, efficiency, and accountability. We now have a climate change strategy that focuses on a made-in-Alberta solution to how we can address both environmental impacts of industry and how we address market access issues, issues that thus far, no matter who you try to lay the blame on, have prevented Alberta from building a new pipeline to tidewater and add rail transportation costs onto an already price-disadvantaged product. But we rally on.

We heard from industry, First Nations, and nongovernmental organizations that now is the time to build a plan that will support our energy sector and also address the needs of future generations. In support of this our government plans to create a new, broadly representative oil sands advisory group.

Next year in Sturgeon county, Alberta, we will see the first refinery built in over 30 years, the North West refinery, a true marvel that is on the leading edge of technology, where they will not only refine bitumen but will also utilize the Alberta carbon line project, 240 kilometres of pipeline that will gather, compress, and store 14.6 million tonnes of carbon dioxide per year from the North West project and Agrium fertilizer. Stored carbon dioxide from this project can be injected into depleted oil reservoirs and result in one billion barrels of oil.

Budget 2016 will take a prudent and balanced approach to fiscal plans, ensuring the valuable front-line health care and education services are intact. We cannot build a viable future without taking care of Albertans now. We can do so carefully and judiciously. We know Albertans expect and demand that their government act in their best interests. That's why I'm so proud to highlight our government's ongoing program for democratic reform. I look forward to hearing and reading and now sharing as chair the report from the all-party special Committee on Ethics and Accountability.

Key democratic reform issues will also be presented in the fall, affirming our commitment to openness, transparency, and accountability. This means that we will not act alone. We want to ensure that we consult with our partners and the public to build an effective legislative environment. That's why we will invite public and municipal government comment on a modern Municipal Government Act. I know my constituents and municipal representatives who have talked to me over and over again about linear taxes – I'm sure that me and my colleagues have all learned more about linear taxes than they knew before – want to come and share because they are concerned about their areas. They want to come, and they want to contribute, and I look forward to hearing what their bold new ideas are.

Our tourism industry has grown to include new ways of interacting with rural Alberta. These include farm-to-table tours and dinners, historical church tours, rodeos, bull-a-ramas, country and blues festivals, vintage tractor pulls, and parades in every town for every season. These events are possible due to the long farming history that Alberta has, and it's that tie to history that makes us so special. Our agriculture sector is world class and has been the bedrock of this province for many generations. I choose to mention this sector last as it often gets overshadowed by our energy industry, and it is my hope that these thoughts will stand out.

Our province, built by French hands, German hands, and even including my father's Ukrainian hands – this province was built on agriculture. I have met resourceful people and visited their high-tech operations in farming and agriculture and have learned that we need to do a better job of trumpeting these successes. We have grain operations such as Alan Farms partnership, that farms 10,000 acres. We have award-winning black angus cattle breeders at Northline Angus, that ship beef genetics all over the world. Thiel's Greenhouses bring shoppers from hours away that count on Thiel's high quality of product bringing both beauty and sustenance.

Mr. Speaker, as I close I would like to share a Hansard quote from Derek Fox's maiden speech, which he gave on June 27, 1986.

Agriculture is certainly the most basic concern in rural Alberta, and I know all members recognize that. My concern . . . comes because of the value that I place on our rural life and the realization I have about how essential a healthy and strengthened agricultural industry is to [the] vital sort of growth that we want to provide. If I may be forgiven an analogy, if the roots are strong and healthy, I think the tree will grow tall, provide shade, and bear fruit.

I am proud of my family. I am proud of where I came from. I am proud of my government, and I am proud of my Premier, and I am very proud of my province. I am proud to call myself a heartland MLA.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and members of this Assembly, for this opportunity to respond to the Speech from the Throne in the Second Session of the 29th Legislature. It is an incredible honour for me to second the motion to accept Her Majesty's speech.

I'd like to thank my wife, my family, and all of those who have believed in me along the way to help me get where I am today. I'd also like to thank the voters of Banff-Cochrane for placing your trust in me. We know that Albertans in my constituency and across the province are looking to our government for action, and the time to act is now. I'm proud to be part of a government that is taking action in several key areas as outlined in the Speech from the Throne, specifically supports for families and children, job creation, and economic diversification. I support the government's spring agenda on the areas that need care and attention for the benefit of Albertans now and in the future. The legislative agenda is a bold and ambitious one, replete with important and overdue items. I'm pleased to take this opportunity to tell you about how our legislative goals align with the values of my outstanding constituency of Banff-Cochrane.

Banff-Cochrane is home to many diverse, vibrant communities. These range from ranching and agricultural lands on its eastern edge in Cochrane and Bragg Creek to the majestic foothills and the Rocky Mountains towards the west in Lake Louise and all points in between. My constituency contains much of the essence of what characterizes the best of Alberta, from cattle grazing and pastures to world-class recreational areas for outdoor pursuits. Banff-Cochrane offers something for everyone and has captured the attention and imagination of the world.

Banff-Cochrane is home to the Continental Divide, on the border of British Columbia and Alberta. The Continental Divide helps form the watersheds of our eastern slopes that supply water to millions of Albertans. This majestic landscape also provides critical wildlife habitat and wetlands. It is crucial that we take steps to ensure the integrity of our headwaters and wilderness areas so they remain intact for the enjoyment of future generations of Albertans.

During his maiden speech in 1975 the Member for Banff-Cochrane at the time identified land-use planning as a mounting concern due to growth pressures from neighbouring Calgary. Indeed, decisions respecting land use along the eastern slopes can have a major impact not only on the land itself but also on those downstream. We have begun to demonstrate our commitment to addressing these types of concerns by protecting the Castle wilderness area. The United Nations declared in 2010 that access to clean drinking water is essential to the realization of all human rights. Here in Alberta we must act as stewards of this land and especially the eastern slopes. We depend on our headwaters to produce the quantity and quality of water necessary to protect the fundamental rights of Albertans to water.

I'm proud of our government's climate leadership plan, which will take concrete steps to further protect these wild spaces. I'm pleased to report that there are many organizations within my constituency that are already acting on addressing climate change. They are implementing innovative solutions to a greener, more sustainable future and taking a leadership role in reducing our environmental impact.

Take the Biosphere Institute of the Bow Valley, for example. The Biosphere Institute is a nonprofit, charitable society dedicated to ensuring the ecological integrity of the Bow Valley for the well-being of the ecosystem through education, research, and outreach.

Yet another example of innovation is the Francis Cooke landfill, located near the community of Exshaw. The Francis Cooke landfill is considering technologies to use wood waste as an alternative heating source for buildings located on the site, thereby making them more carbon neutral. This is complementary to the Bow Valley Waste Management Commission's long-standing target of moving towards zero waste.

There are too many fine examples in Banff-Cochrane to elaborate on them all, but others include the towns of Canmore and Banff's successful Roam regional transit system and the Cochrane high school's sustainability committee, that has installed solar panels on the school roof.

We have a lot to be proud of here, and there are many success stories to look towards that can show us the way forward to a more sustainable future. The people of Banff-Cochrane are keen to work in partnership with our government as we implement these long overdue initiatives to help reduce energy costs and greenhouse gas emissions. Indeed, a sustainable future and the protection of our land, air, and water are vital to the tourism industry in Banff-Cochrane, that supports good local jobs. Visitors from around the world are attracted to the natural beauty that is found in our numerous provincial and wildland parks, not to mention Banff national park, a UNESCO world heritage site and Canada's first national park.

So, too, is the natural environment important to the visitors of William Watson Lodge, located in beautiful Peter Lougheed provincial park. William Watson Lodge was opened by Premier Lougheed and his wife in 1981 with a goal of providing barrier-free facilities to those with mobility challenges and seniors. Last summer I had the great pleasure to visit the lodge to celebrate the opening of the first of several comfort camping facilities.

The availability of seniors housing in general was identified as a priority in Banff-Cochrane as far back as 1979, when the MLA at the time commented on the topic in his response to the throne speech. I'm pleased that our government is working to address this issue by supporting construction of seniors' accommodations in Canmore and Cochrane. We have more work ahead of us to further honour the years of hard work that seniors have put into building this province we are so proud of. Every Albertan deserves to retire in dignity.

Affordable housing is not only a challenge for seniors in Banff-Cochrane; it is a pressing concern for employees and employers alike. Nowhere is this more evident than in the Bow Valley. Here a small population of local residents is pressured to supply labour for the very successful tourism industry. Tourism-based towns like Kananaskis Village, Banff, and Canmore welcome visitors from around the world to take in Alberta's natural beauty. These towns operate, build, and maintain tourism infrastructure with limited financial resources. Affordable housing to accommodate the employees who cater to visitors is a perennial challenge for these tourism-based municipalities.

Banff-Cochrane is home to many talented artists and is considered as an incubator for inspiring creativity. Nowhere is this more apparent than the Banff Centre. In 1979 during his maiden speech former MLA Stevens noted his pleasure that the Banff Centre was given approval to operate year-round. Nowadays the Banff Centre continues to play a unique and pivotal role among postsecondary institutions in Alberta and – dare I say it? – the world. The Banff Centre provides an unmatched experience to thousands of students, lecturers, artists, performers, and visitors in the area of fine arts, performing arts, leadership training, and conferences.

Another aspect that makes Banff-Cochrane unique is the Stoney-Nakoda First Nation, part of Treaty 7 lands. The nation is composed of three bands led by three chiefs and councils known as Bearspaw, Chiniki, and Wesley bands. I have had the honour of recently meeting chiefs Dixon, Young, and Wesley. I look forward to further conversations with the view to supporting the nations' interests in economic diversification and job creation.

Repealing Bill 22 and engaging indigenous communities in consultation is a strong sign of our commitment to reconciliation. Furthermore, consultations on a new indigenous peoples sacred ceremonial objects repatriation act demonstrates how much we value and respect First Nations across the province.

Job creators are abundant in Banff-Cochrane, and without exception they are optimistic and entrepreneurial. This is certainly the case in the technology sector in the bustling and charming town of Cochrane. Established in 1998 in Cochrane, the company Dynastream introduced its first accelerometer-based speed and distance wearable monitor in the year 2000 for shoe giant Nike. Only six years later Dynastream was purchased by Garmin, a world leader in the field of personal monitoring technology.

Economic diversification opportunities are also now presenting themselves like never before to my hometown of beautiful Bragg Creek. Communities across the constituency of Banff-Cochrane were hit hard by the floods of 2013, including Bragg Creek. Just like Albertans across the province, the people of Bragg Creek are incredibly resilient. In good times and bad they roll up their sleeves and get to work helping one another. Flood-affected Albertans got through those difficult moments by working together. They exemplified the strength, courage, and resolve that is common among all Albertans. Shortly after the 2013 flood the hamlet of Bragg Creek persevered by installing water and waste-water services to hamlet residences and businesses.

Recently, thanks to the hard work of the community, a hamlet revitalization plan has been created. Along with over $32 million for local flood mitigation work provided by our government, the revitalization plan has re-energized the community to look towards a vision for the future. On the doorstep to Kananaskis Country, Bragg Creek already has an internationally recognized four-season trail system thanks to the hard work of local volunteers.

The community is increasingly being seen as a destination for Albertans and international visitors alike. Local groups such as the Bragg Creek chamber of commerce and the community association have been working hard to harness the entrepreneurial energy of local business owners. They are working to draw visitors to the historic hamlet, that was home to Canada's first hostel, which is located just down the street from my house.

In closing, I'd like to thank the people of Banff-Cochrane for placing their trust in me to represent them as their MLA. I will continue to take every possible opportunity to connect with communities, individuals, and businesses across the riding. I'd also like to thank the numerous volunteers across the riding who give their own time to make our communities the vibrant places that they are.

Our legislative agenda is ambitious, but I support these initiatives to create a better, more prosperous, more diversified, and more caring Alberta, an Alberta that provides well-managed, efficiently financed, nimble, world-class health care, education, and other public services. The throne speech lays out a path forward for all Albertans, including my constituents in Banff-Cochrane, and brings hope in a time when it is needed most. It is by working together and building relationships that we can accomplish great things and make Alberta an even better place than when we found it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an absolute pleasure to rise here today. While it might not be the first time that I've had the chance to rise in the Assembly, it is the first time that I've really had a chance on behalf of the citizens of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills to speak briefly about the outstanding constituency that is Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Speaker, I arrive here thankful and gratified by the broad support of so many of my family, my friends, my neighbours. And speaking of my family, it's an absolute pleasure to have them here in the gallery today. You know, so little can be done in this life of public service without the support of those closest to you. Today my wife, Tanya, and my dad, Harold, and my mom, Mary, are all in the gallery, and in many ways they made this day possible, because if it wasn't for their support, encouragement, long hours, with Tanya parenting our three children in such a wonderful, caring way that she does, it wouldn't be possible for me to give some of myself to public service as well as trying to be the best family co-worker and labourer and dad and friend that I can. To them I say thank you.

I also come to the Chamber on behalf of not just my family but the friends and neighbours and the people in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that asked me to come to work towards implementing a principled, optimistic, and truly conservative vision for Alberta. I remain fully committed to representing our province, our family, our communities to the best of my abilities in the days, weeks, months, and years, hopefully, to come.

I also want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I come to this station fully cognizant of the responsibility with which I have been entrusted. I'm just the third MLA to represent the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills in its current configuration and one of just 902 people ever elected to this Legislature, and I don't take that lightly.

When I think of the strong and capable representatives of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that have come to this Assembly to serve, I think of people like Bob Clark, who served in many roles in this Assembly, on both sides of the House, and I will strive to serve in the manner that he did, always putting the needs of the people of Alberta ahead of his own political gain. I think of people like MLA Connie Osterman, who served the people of this province with a vision and a passion that were second to none. She often put aside political differences to assist Albertans, members of the Assembly, and in particular had a passion for protecting children while she was serving as the minister responsible for that area. That is also something that's near and dear to my heart, protecting the children right across this province, that are so important to the future of this province.

More recently there were men like Richard Marz and Bruce Rowe. I'd like to take a brief moment to particularly thank Mr. Rowe. I had the opportunity to work closely with him, and while we didn't always agree on all of the decisions that were made, I had the chance to learn a lot from him, a lot about this place. We learned a lot about public service together. Bruce and his wife, Carol, have been so wonderful to Tanya and our children over the last number of years, and I hope to serve in a way that would reflect well upon them as well.

Thanks to their passionate representation over the years, our Legislature has been home to many invigorating debates leading to monumental changes. Living up to this legacy that they have left for me will be daunting, but as Official Opposition House Leader this duty is a duty that I intend to seize with both hands. The fact is that this year, Mr. Speaker, is like none that we've seen in approximately half a century. The past election brought true change to the Assembly. The people of Alberta elected both a new government and a strengthened opposition that were and continue to be dedicated to the cause of renewal. It's in this spirit of renewal that I offer my hand in co-operation to all members of this Assembly who seek to reinvigorate the role of the Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, you are now well familiar with my passion for the Assembly, for its rules, for its customs, and for its traditions. A strengthened voice of the Legislature will mean a strengthened voice for all Albertans and will ensure that legislation receives full and thorough debate, much of which I have already had the opportunity to speak about in the Chamber. I look forward to continuing to champion these important causes for democratic renewal for all Albertans. Mr. Speaker, the people have spoken, and they deserve to be heard every day, not just on election day, and that's exactly what I intend to do during my time in the Assembly.

I'm proud, Mr. Speaker, to represent one of our province's leading agricultural regions. Looking back through the archives, I found a copy of former MLA Bob Clark's maiden speech, much like I'm giving today except that this one was given in the Assembly in 1961, in which he took time to encourage rural youth to take a longer, more serious look at agriculture before leaving for the city. Today that echo and that call remain true here in this Assembly and right across Alberta as I work to try and strengthen, do everything that I can to lay my voice to the importance of agriculture and rural Alberta right across this province.

Mr. Clark was one of the youngest members of any Canadian Legislature at that time, at the age of 23, and he became a leading voice for our region, calling the region the master farming constituency of our province. He also had the occasion while defending some of that farmland during debate – the debate was on whether or not the Red Deer River should be dammed – in this very Chamber to table a bag of that rich Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills soil right here in this very place. That bag of soil can still be viewed in the Legislature Library today, and that soil, Mr. Speaker, that was just as important in 1961, is important today.

Today across Kneehill and Mountain View counties hundreds of farm families remain on the land, harnessing the power of new technologies to continue the work that Alberta's pioneers started more than a century ago. While crop prices have fluctuated in recent years, beef and land prices remain high, providing strength for our economy and a key to our future. Mr. Speaker, let me be clear. Agriculture will remain a leading industry and a backbone to our economy, and it is the bedrock upon which many communities in this province have been built, and we all need to remember that long after the oil and gas are gone, our agriculture industry must remain strong, vibrant, and diverse so that the future of our province can continue to be as strong as we have enjoyed in the past.

Across the Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills region, Mr. Speaker, I can report that the people and the businesses are harnessing that power of innovation. In Linden we are the capital of Alberta for small rural industrial manufacturers. The innovation that is provided and delivered at Olds College is second to none, not only in this province but right around the country and, in fact, in North America. They are leading changes in industry and technology, and I encourage every member of this Assembly to visit the constituency and, in particular, to spend some time at Olds College and see the incredible work that is happening there.

In an era of global trade maintaining and building Alberta's competitive advantage helps create jobs and ensures economic growth. All regions of Alberta go through booms and busts, but I'm proud to represent a region where determination and vision continue to thrive in spite of present circumstances. They know that the government doesn't make Alberta strong, that the people of Alberta make this province strong, and that is exactly what they continue to press into even today.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills do have some serious concerns about some of the things that happen in this Chamber. They are deeply concerned about this government's risky economic policies, that continue to hurt jobs. They have seen lots of talk from this government but little action, particularly on jobs. Even in this recent throne speech we had the opportunity yesterday to have some significant talk on jobs, and when we saw Bill 1, what we saw was more of a glorified job description for the minister than it was a plan for jobs in this province. I can tell you that the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills are concerned about the direction of this government.

Another issue that is important to the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, not just those people but the people right across this province, is the issue of property rights. They were tampered with in many respects by previous administrations, and my predecessor, Mr. Bruce Rowe, was correct when he noted, and I quote: property rights are not optional; they are a basic human right, fundamental to the progress of free societies right around the world. You, Mr. Speaker, and many members of this Chamber were reminded of that when we had the absolute pleasure and honour of having the Magna Carta here just late last year. It's a reminder of the importance of these rights that all of us have. It is a cause that is important to all Albertans, not just rural Albertans, and it's a cause that we on this side of the House will continue to press forward for comprehensive reform when it comes to property rights.

While there are some significant differences between the current government and the opposition on a variety of issues, at times there has been lots of agreement around property rights. Now, unfortunately, in the last number of weeks we've seen the government vote against some concrete solutions provided by the opposition that would have moved us back in the direction of restoring these property rights. But I still have faith that a day will come when the government will do the right thing, restore the property rights that have been eroded in this province, and it will be done because of the continual pressure from the Official Opposition and the people of this province to ensure that that is taken into account and that it is an important issue not to the government but to all of Alberta. It's one that we will continue to champion.

In addition to the reinstatement of property rights, the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills also have significant concerns about the direction of this government with respect to rural health care, democratic reform, and the increase of taxes, particularly in the area of the carbon tax. Now, I look forward to working with all of my colleagues on this side of the House to provide concrete solutions that the government can adapt and adopt to ensure that we are putting the best foot forward for all of Alberta. In pursuing these policies, we must be cognizant of the fact that our province is now facing an economic downturn, that has left thousands and thousands of fellow Albertans looking for work. Moving forward, our top priority must be to take action to bolster the economy and avoid making the situation worse, which is exactly what, unfortunately, we have seen from this government.

We Albertans, Mr. Speaker, have experienced these storms before, and we know that it is Albertans that will get us back on track. We need to remember what makes Alberta different. We need to remember what made Alberta great. In recent years thousands of people and companies packed up their roots and chose to have a fresh start here in Alberta. They didn't come for government programs; they didn't come for corporate welfare. They came for jobs and for lower taxes. They came here for opportunity. And that's exactly what we need to do: ensure that we have an environment that continues to create opportunity so that Albertans can do what they do best, and that is drive our economy.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me first say congratulations to my good friend the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on his maiden speech in this Assembly.

While, as he said, it's certainly not the first time that he has spoken in this place, it is his maiden speech.

I have the pleasure of being the member's neighbour both here in the Assembly as well as back home. Great lengths of our ridings are attached; we share many counties and many school boards. We do travel to lots of events together, so much so, Mr. Speaker, that back home they've taken to calling us Penn and Teller, the famous magicians. Both the member and I are a little bit confused as to why, but that happens. We both share some of the most spectacular areas in this province that have a tremendous impact not only on our communities back home but, as well, on the province as a whole.

I would like it if the member could spend the remaining time that we have under Standing Order 29(2)(a) elaborating on what has happened and, with the things that have been presented in the throne speech recently, the impact that is happening back home in our ridings on the important areas that both of us share.

The Speaker: Just to clarify for the House, it's 29(2)(a) that we're dealing with right now.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I appreciate the opportunity to just briefly expand on a couple of the points that I was just wrapping up, and then I'm happy to address some of the significant concerns that I've heard over the last 24 hours from the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills with respect to the throne speech.

The people in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills have spoken about the need for opportunity in our province, not for these unnecessary interventionist sort of economic policies that we've seen from the current government but things like reducing unnecessary bureaucratic red tape, things like recognizing that strong families build strong communities and that strong communities support strong families, things like trusting Albertans to make the right choice for their family and for their community. They're talking to me about restoring the idea of putting Albertans first because the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, Mr. Speaker, have a vision for Alberta, one that's shared by people across this province. Their vision, our vision, is of an Alberta that's strong and free, where hard work and dedication are rewarded with new hope and new opportunity.

That's exactly what I and what we on this side of the House intend to do: find ways to enable Albertans to be strong and resilient and recognize that they are the solution, that a strong economy and strong jobs mean a strong Alberta and a strong Alberta means a strong Canada. That's exactly what at a time like this we need the government to do. That's exactly what we need our province to do – the people of Alberta, the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills – and together we can ensure that our province regains its place in Confederation, that the ideals of Albertans are once again lifted up, held high, and championed right across the world, those ideals of free enterprise, more personal freedoms, less government intrusion. These are the things that are important to the constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and as a result they're the things that are important to me.

The Speaker: Any other comments under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, I would recognize the Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in the House today filled with respect and humility to deliver my response to the Speech from the Throne. Let me first thank the voters of my fine riding of Edmonton-McClung for electing me to serve them as their member in this 29th Legislature. Most of those Edmonton-McClung electors knew that I had been a perennial candidate for the NDP. In fact, I ran four times before being elected last May, the fifth, and I'm still ecstatic at being given this opportunity to fulfill a dream of elected public service that I've had since boyhood.

Begging the forgiveness of Tommy Douglas, I must admit that my first memories of public discourse which attracted me to aspire to public office were the firebrand speeches of another well-known politician that I viewed on our family's black-box style, black-and-white Emerson TV in 1963. He actually presided over the opening in March 1958 of our federal building, a month after I was born. Provincial Legislative Assembly members and staff now occupy that newly renovated structure, located just north of our Legislature.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I refer, of course, to the passionate and often impassioned Rt. Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, the late former Progressive Conservative Prime Minister of Canada. Call me strange, but politics interested me even at age five. The deaths and televised funerals about that time of two other formidable statesmen from that era also made an impression upon me. They were of John F. Kennedy and Winston Churchill. They told me about how societies rely upon the dedication and commitment to service of their elected representatives. We are a privileged group, we legislators, with a massive responsibility placed upon our shoulders. Never must we take that lightly. We are being counted upon by this and future generations to govern well and with foresight.

I take some of this countenance from my late maternal grandmother, Winnifred Ada LaBelle, as well, who served numerous terms as councillor and deputy mayor of the village of Thorhild, located about an hour's drive northeast of Edmonton. Thorhild was my first home as well. We lived next door to what was known in Thorhild as the big house, the house my grandmother and her husband, Joseph Edouard Napoleon LaBelle, built in 1947 when my grandfather, Nap, as he was known, returned from overseas service after five years during World War II in the Canadian army. Part of the big house was leased to Canada Post. My grandparents were the postmasters in Thorhild, and the post office was built as part of the house. It was leased to the federal government. My grandmother, who was known as Winn, was an entrepreneur as well as a public servant. You can be both.

The late Michael Senych, who served two terms as a member of this Assembly with the Social Credit Party, lived in a basement suite of that house for a number of years. Mr. Senych was a pillar of community service to Thorhild throughout his life. As he could have told you after losing his seat along with most of his Socred colleagues, in a healthy, prosperous, functioning democracy governments change from time to time. His tenure at the Legislature ended in 1971, when the Progressive Conservative government led by Peter Lougheed was elected. Who knew then that it would be 44 years before Albertans finally elected new leadership to represent them in May of 2015? Yes, the fundamental rules of politics 101 apply even to Alberta. When the public loses trust in their government and there is a credible alternative party in the wings, a free electorate will vote out the stale government, and a new government will be asked to start afresh.

That is what has happened in Alberta. Our NDP government has been given a chance to effectively govern this province. We have been granted the public trust that the previous government forgot how to value. More than that, we've been asked to implement our vision for the future of this province and Alberta's place within the Canadian federation.

To turn our vision into action is something that we in the current Alberta New Democratic Party have been thirsting for since the early days of the precursor federal party, the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, and pioneers like M.J. Coldwell, J.S. Woodsworth, Tommy Douglas, and of course later, Grant Notley. We must honour that proud early legacy by governing with our eyes clearly focused on both the current serious issues Albertans face right now as well as on the long-term obstacles and opportunities we need to prepare for to protect future generations. As we all discovered last May, Albertans expect their government to focus on their interests, not on political expedience. Our government caucus recognizes and embraces this demand. We immensely value the trust that Albertans have placed in us.

Now, the constituency that I represent is named after Nellie McClung, one of the Famous Five Alberta women activists who won the Persons Case as adjudicated by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, or the JCPC, then the highest court of appeal available to Canadians. The JCPC ruled that women were indeed considered persons under section 24 of the British North America Act of 1867 and, therefore, could be appointed to the Senate. Nellie McClung was also instrumental in the suffrage movement in Manitoba and Alberta, and she became a member of this Assembly in 1921.

I have a special favour to ask of the members as well as the pages in the House. I would ask that if any current member or page finds the name of Nellie McClung inscribed into their desk drawer to please allow me to view it.

I'm inspired daily by the steadfast commitment to principle that Nellie McClung and the other Famous Five women activists displayed in unyielding fashion in the face of overwhelming odds during a time when women were not considered legally to be persons. Nellie McClung is a strong role model to me as I represent my constituents in this Assembly.

Now, I've lived for almost 30 years in the Edmonton-McClung riding. I bought my first house in the Jamieson Place neighbourhood in 1987, early in my career as a real estate agent.

Over the course of my career as a real estate agent I estimate that I sold about 800 properties either as listing agent or selling agent. Most of these were residential transactions. However, I did obtain my commercial designation in 2012 to shift my focus onto raw land and land development. My licence currently is deactivated to avoid any conflict of interest while I serve in this Chamber. However, being a real estate agent was very good preparation for my new role as an elected MLA. For 30 years I've been used to working long hours in the service of individuals and families who relied upon my expertise to protect their financial interest and satisfy their housing needs.

During my real estate career I served on the board of homeEd, the city of Edmonton's nonprofit housing corporation, for six years. HomeEd publicly owned and managed over 700 units of affordable housing. That board experience illustrated to me the need for an ongoing government commitment to provide safe, affordable housing to those in our society who are not served by market housing. I will continue to advocate for creative financing solutions and public ownership models that allow our government to properly maintain our current affordable housing stock and to build or acquire new units to address the current serious affordable housing shortfall.

I also have a continued interest in real estate industry matters and am working with industry members to bring pertinent issues to the government's attention.

Now, in Edmonton-McClung up to 30 per cent of some of the populations of the schools are First Nations. Teachers must be aware of and sensitive to the history, culture, and languages of their indigenous students. Soon after I was elected, I discovered that Phyllis Cardinal, one of the founders of the Amiskwaciy Academy in Edmonton, lived near me. Her daughter Neva introduced us, and within three weeks Phyllis had me in meetings with other educators to discuss a pilot project to teach teachers how to properly teach their indigenous student populations. Very sadly, Phyllis Cardinal died a few weeks ago. I have pledged to her family that I will continue to work with them and their project team to move forward with Phyllis's goal that no indigenous child shall be shortchanged in their education.

Now, there are a number of adult bungalow complexes and one major aging-in-place facility in Edmonton-McClung as well. All MLAs can relate to the delicate situation of seniors' housing. Almost all seniors wish to stay in their own home as long as possible. We also know that this is by far the most economical way to house our senior population. I'm committed to exploring solutions which provide supports that allow our seniors to safely reside in their own homes or apartments even when faced with increasing mobility or health challenges. This is a win-win investment, in my view.

Now, Alberta society is very diverse; Edmonton-McClung is no exception. About 70 per cent of Edmonton's 5,500-plus Jewish population lives in Edmonton-McClung, which is also home to Edmonton's largest synagogue, Beth Israel. The K to 9 Edmonton Talmud Torah School is also located in the riding. The MAC, Muslim Association of Canada, Rahma mosque operates in Edmonton-McClung as well. This thriving mosque has a thriving youth group that outreaches regularly with the community. I've worked with them and focused on efforts to deliver hampers at Christmas and engaged with another effort, that I'll talk about a little bit later, with that group and others in the riding. Six Christian churches also call Edmonton-McClung home.

Many people believe that west Edmonton has a uniformly wealthy population. While some of Edmonton's most affluent neighbourhoods are found along the North Saskatchewan River valley in Edmonton-McClung, about 20 per cent of the population in the constituency actually lives below the poverty line. Many newcomers to Canada live in rented apartments or townhouses in the centre of the riding.

Our lower income families need to be a priority for our government. Children supported well early in life have a much better chance of becoming self-sufficient adults. Therefore, the immigrant population in Edmonton-McClung as well as all the children in those families are a very big priority to me.

Now, I've always loved to travel. I hitchhiked across Canada for the first time when I was 16 years old. I've thumbed across large portions of our vast and beautiful country three other times, once in the wintertime on the way to Europe, when I flew from Gander, Newfoundland, to spend time in Europe riding the trains and hitchhiking around at age 20. I rode in the back of beer trucks, pickup trucks, and even got a ride once from Joey Smallwood's youngest brother in a dump truck that he was delivering from Port aux Basques, Newfoundland, to New Brunswick. He had no interest whatsoever in politics or much respect for his brother. Nonetheless, it was an interesting ride.

We need to encourage and support travel by young people both within Canada and abroad. There's no greater way to appreciate one's own home than to experience someone else's. Now, I've been to every continent on this Earth at least twice except for Antarctica, which I've only been to once, in 2012. I was lucky enough to get inside of Captain Scott's hut, built in 1910, at Cape Evans on Ross Island, which is located about 78 degrees south, nearly as far south as a ship can sail on the planet. Many places I've been to were functioning democracies; many were not. I wish democracy for the world. It ain't perfect, but it beats the alternatives by a country mile. Now, I could go on for some time, but I'll finish now by saying that there is no place on this planet I would rather be than right here, right now, representing the people of Edmonton-McClung in the Alberta Legislature.

Like all Albertans, I wish that our economic circumstances were better. However, we have endured numerous economic troughs in the past, caused in large part by our overreliance on energy royalties to fund our operational budget. We all know that this has to change. Our NDP government will approach this task in a responsible manner, in what I call the Hippocratic way, by taking great effort first of all to do no harm by maintaining our public services, like education, health care, and affordable housing initiatives, through this cyclical downturn while bending the cost curve over the longer term to keep these services sustainable. All the while we know how important it will be to keep Albertans informed about our objectives and the options we have to choose from to achieve them.

Now, Albertans can rely on our government to guide them through these stormy waters. We are completely focused on our service to them, and I promise you that we will be prepared to face their judgment come the next election based on a sound record of responsible economic management and innovative approaches to the chronic challenges we face today. Let's all get to work.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), hon. member?

Mr. Hinkley: Yes, please. Thank you, Madam Speaker. To my colleague from Edmonton-McClung, thank you very much. Thank you for your insight into our government's vision of a new Alberta filled with hope and change. I do appreciate your experience and passion that you bring to your job as MLA. I want to wish you all the best. What I would really like to ask you now is if you would take some time to elaborate on the engagement of youth in your riding of Edmonton-McClung.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dach: Thank you for the question. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I recently met with people in the riding who are going to help me in my effort to engage with groups that I've discovered, groups of young people who are really looking to assist their community, make it a better place, and engage themselves. My job, I believe, as an MLA is largely one of a facilitator, to identify groups of people and make connections between them, and this is one of the things that I'm going to do with the youth in the community.

I recently ran into a woman, named affectionately the Graffiti Granny, within the riding. She actually is Catherine Backewich, and along with Constable Trevor Henderson of the Edmonton Police Service she will engage to eliminate graffiti in the riding, which is really a nuisance as much as anything else. The students that have talked to me about it are quite excited about adopting this work.

Now, the Graffiti Granny has been doing this work all by herself, and it's a huge, huge effort. She and her husband will patrol the riding and actually erase and eliminate graffiti or paint over the graffiti that they've found using supplies given to them by the city of Edmonton under a program they have to accomplish this task. However, I do know that she needed help, so what we're doing is engaging the youth from mosques, churches, synagogues, schools to create the Graffiti Granny's army, to ensure that whole neighbourhood is freed of this pest of graffiti, which is commonly reoccurring.

That's one way that we're looking to allow the youth of the community to get together and help each other make the community a better place. That I'll use as a starting point to hopefully find other tasks along with their self-appointed missions to ensure that they feel that they're making a contribution to the riding and the neighbourhood. That's really what they want to be given, an opportunity to serve.

Now, one other thing that I feel strongly about in the community as a way of engaging youth and the community is to really support the Edmonton Federation of Community Leagues. I grew up in a community league in Edmonton called Wellington Park. They are a real gem that is quite unique to Edmonton. In most cities, if you talk about a community league and you ask them about it, they really don't know what you're talking about because Edmonton is quite unique in having this system of community leagues, which have actually functioned very well under trying circumstances for decades.

In a situation where families now will bus their students or drive their students across communities, they won't necessarily be going to the school that's in their own neighbourhood. Therefore, you don't have the same cohesiveness and attachment to that community league that you once had. But even in the face of that dispersion of the population the community leagues have still stayed together and, I believe, now are filling needs that are different from what they initially did. You would have family members taking tap dancing lessons or going to the local arena or having other courses that were taken through the community league. Now the community league members get together and provide tennis opportunities, wading pools, splash parks, green shack programs, any program where, really, if a group of concerned citizens wants to get together at the community league level, they can actually approach each other and put it together at the community league. They deserve our support.

That's one other way that I'm hoping to serve and pull people together in the community and also engage our youth, to really make sure that the community leagues are continuing to be a vital element of the fabric of the city of Edmonton and, hopefully, maybe exporting it to other cities and communities in the province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'd like to call on the Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my deepest honour to rise today and to deliver what is both my maiden speech and, in fact, the first maiden speech for the constituency of Calgary-Acadia. Members of this House may not realize that Calgary-Acadia was one of the new constituencies created in 2010, primarily from the former riding of Calgary-Egmont.

It is an honour and a privilege to serve in Alberta's first NDP government, with so many women and with Alberta's first openly LGBTQ MLAs. It's an honour for each of us to be here representing the people of our communities, and I know that we all take this responsibility seriously. As a mother who works outside of her home, it's also incredible to have the first sitting MLA to give birth while in office and to witness first-hand how our Legislature is becoming more family friendly, with members from both sides of the aisle supporting these efforts. Pregnant and employed mothers across Alberta can attest to the importance of a supportive work environment and supportive colleagues. With one new baby in our midst and my own on the way, I am pleased to see the ways that our workplace is adapting to support parents with small children, and I look forward to seeing the ripple effects in workplaces across our province.

I would also like to take a moment to thank my beautiful family – my husband, Scott, and my daughter Zoe – for their love and support throughout this process. I would especially thank Scott for his encouragement to put my name forward for election and for his words of support during the campaign and, particularly, the night before election night, when he said: “Work hard tomorrow. You just might win this thing.” His support in the months since my election has been invaluable, and I couldn’t do this without his love and the work he does to keep our household running. I would also like to thank my parents, Jean and Henry Zimmerman, for instilling in me the values of hard work, of caring for others, and of public service. It is because of their unfailing love and support that I am here today.

I would also like to thank the voters of Calgary-Acadia for putting their trust in me and for selecting me to represent them in this Assembly. In the months since I was elected, I’ve had the honour and the privilege of meeting many, many people who live and work in my riding. We’ve met at barbecues, pancake breakfasts, skating parties, teas at seniors’ centres, classrooms, constituency office open houses, and everywhere in between. Hearing their stories, their concerns, and their hopes for the future has been an incredible experience, and I look forward to continuing to hear from the residents of Calgary-Acadia and continuing to represent their views as their MLA.

Calgary-Acadia is a vibrant constituency in southeast Calgary with a population that ranges from young families such as mine to seniors, who were among the original homeowners who settled when our communities were developed in the 1960s, and to everyone in the spectrum between. Calgary-Acadia includes the residential communities of Acadia, Fairview, Manchester, Maple Ridge, Riverbend, Southwood, and my home community of Willow Park. It also includes the industrial community of Alyth-Bonnybrook-Manchester and one of Calgary’s busiest retail hubs in the Deerfoot Heritage area.

We’re lucky to have two major fitness centres and recreation facilities with the Acadia recreation complex and the Trico Centre, and we will soon be home to an indoor and outdoor tennis centre. We have active and involved community associations throughout the riding as well as the FLC Seniors Club, which offers social and wellness programs to seniors in our community and throughout the city. In fact, it’s one of the largest seniors’ clubs in Canada.

Calgary-Acadia is also home to many schools of all grade levels. The schools feature a mix of mainstream programming as well as French immersion programs at all grade levels and an arts-focused middle school. It’s easy to see why families would choose to move to Calgary-Acadia, and I am proud to call Calgary-Acadia my home. I’m also proud to be elected as the first New Democrat in the constituency as well as the first woman MLA for this riding.

While I was campaigning and in the months since my election, I’ve had the opportunity to speak with constituents from all walks of life. They’ve shared with me their concerns for their families’ future and indeed for our province’s future. Parents expressed concern for their children’s education. Would there be enough teachers to meet the demands and the needs of our growing student population? Would there be enough supports for children with special learning needs?

I spoke with mothers who opted to stay out of the workforce or who limited their working hours because they couldn’t afford child care or because the waiting lists for placement were too long. I spoke with home-care workers, working hard to support the members of our community, who are concerned about the level of supports available to our seniors. I spoke with people of all walks of life and all ages who are concerned about the future of our health care system and worried about cuts to front-line services. I spoke with people who’ve recently lost their jobs in our economic downturn or who are worried about losing their jobs and are worried about the future of our resource-based economy.

Each person I have spoken with was looking for change. They were looking for a government that represented them and was ready to listen to them, that was ready to work hard to make our province a better place to live. That is just what we will do as a government, work to implement the issues highlighted in the Speech from the Throne as well as the platform that I and my fellow MLAs on this side of the aisle ran on, promises such as working to get pipelines built to diversify our energy market, pursuing an economic development strategy to create jobs and diversify our economy, investing in a greener, more sustainable economy, taking a responsible approach to public spending, and pursuing democratic reform to ensure public accountability.

We will also continue to build on our platform commitments such as building a lifelong learning system that brings out the potential in us all, building a health system that is there when we need it, and restoring stable support for health and education through a fair and progressive tax system. We’re going to continue investing in stable and predictable funding for our schools and postsecondary education and in stable and predictable funding for our health system so that universal, accessible, and high-quality health care will be there when Alberta families need it, and that’s not just for emergency and urgent care but also long-term care and home care. In order to meet the many challenges facing our health system, we as a province must invest more in prevention and early intervention in both mental and physical health.

Mr. Speaker, these are the things that Albertans asked for. These are the things that I ran on. These are the things that matter to me and that I have fought for my entire adult life. In the months since the election I spoke with many hundreds of people in the riding who continue to echo those same wishes for our province’s future and who recognize that we face difficult times and that we must make wise choices with the resources we have. This is not the first time that we as a province have had these conversations, but it is the first time the government is taking a different approach.

When I was a high school student in the early 1990s, the government of the day began cutting spending for education, for health care, and for other essential services. I saw those cuts as damaging to our social programs, to the very fabric of our society, and I began speaking out against that plan. My very first political debate was at dinner with my father, who saw things a little differently than I did, and I’d like to take a moment to thank my dad for helping me hone my debate skills.

This is the debate that is currently happening at dinner tables, coffee shops, and workplaces across our province. How do we build an Alberta we can be proud of? How do we manage a financial downturn and a tough economy in a way where we support all Albertans to reach their fullest potential, in a way that supports Albertan families? How do we encourage our small and medium-sized businesses, and how does government support the job creators and innovators in our communities and in our industries? How do we ensure that Albertans have access to the workforce and skills training and retraining they need to build bright futures for themselves and their families?

Mr. Speaker, the road ahead is not an easy one. The ongoing low international price of oil has taken a huge toll on our province and on everyday Albertans. The decrease in royalty revenues have had an enormous impact on our provincial budget and on the business plans for our departments moving forward. There are difficult choices to be made in order to hold our departments to the growth targets that were outlined in Budget 2015.

However, as an Albertan and as someone concerned with social justice and the well-being of all Albertans I am grateful that it is this government that will be making these choices. I am grateful that these choices will be made by a government and a caucus that respects Albertans and respects our valuable social services. I am grateful that these choices will be made by representatives that believe in taking a measured and thoughtful response rather than mandating cuts without thought to the impact on Albertans and on the services we rely on. I am grateful that these choices will be made by representatives who will not sacrifice our long-term recovery for our short-term balance sheet. There are difficult choices coming, and I know that I and the rest of this team are absolutely up to the task.

In my career before this I worked as a reporter for a small community newspaper in Ontario, which gave me a strong sense of community and of the way that decisions made at all levels of government impact the lives of all people. I worked as a communications co-ordinator and campaign organizer at a students' union in British Columbia, working to reduce tuition fees so that all students could access a high-quality postsecondary education, to promote academic freedom and the rights of students to organize. I saw how education changes lives and how people from diverse socioeconomic backgrounds can benefit from access to higher education.

I've also worked in the oil and gas sector, both at an engineering firm and at a junior producer. I've seen boom-and-bust cycles in our energy sector, and I am confident that our communities can move through this current cycle, as we have the ones before it. I've also had the honour of managing someone else's small business and of starting my own. I know how hard small-business owners work and how much they care for the people who work for them and ensure that their people have a living wage.

I have spent my career working in small teams with common goals and a common sense of how to get there. While the size of our caucus is a little larger than the teams I'm used to working with, I am thrilled to say that we share common goals and a sense of how to get there.

Throughout my life I've advocated for our health care system, for our education system, for supports to families and supports to seniors. I have spoken out against cuts to social services. I have spoken out against measures that increase inequality in our province and that have hurt the most vulnerable members of our society. I am so grateful to be here in this Assembly, where I have the opportunity to vote in favour of and support all of those things that I have worked for and advocated for.

I believe that a great society is one that cares for all of its members and all members of our community. I believe that the best way to a prosperous province is to work for equality for all members of our society and to remove the systemic barriers that prevent members of our community from reaching their full potential. I am so proud to be a part of Alberta's first NDP government, a government that will work hard to support these vital programs and to support all Albertans.

I look forward to all of the positive changes that we will bring to our province and the ways that we will support Albertans through these trying times. It is an honour to be part of such a diverse caucus and one that is so representative of the people of Alberta and that works hard to support everyday Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to congratulate the previous speaker on her maiden speech, and also I'd like to congratulate her on her recent appointment to the Associate Minister of Health portfolio. As a former front-line health care worker myself I'm proud to have someone who's so dedicated to serving the public and who has spent, as she said, much of her adult life campaigning for these types of things that will support families here in Alberta.

She also mentioned how she's expecting an addition to her own family and the support that she's received from her family while she's gone through an adjustment, learning to be an MLA and now as Associate Minister of Health, travelling across the province, meeting with people all over the place and helping families to cope through these difficult times. She mentioned about making sure that teachers are in classrooms for the children and that we have health care workers in our hospitals that can take care of patients. I just wanted to see if she could elaborate a little bit on what the experience has been like for her as Associate Minister of Health over the last several weeks and on how her family has helped support her through that process.

Ms Payne: Thank you to the member for the question. In the weeks since my appointment I've had a lot of opportunity to journey to many of our communities and meet with health care providers, whether it be, you know, in a hospital environment in Calgary or visiting the town of Milk River and meeting with the town doctor there. Ultimately, what I've seen anywhere that I've been so far in our province – and there is still very much of it for me to visit – is that the folks who work in our health care system are deeply concerned about the well-being of their patients and care very deeply to make sure that they're able to provide the best care possible. I think that a big part of our role within the Ministry of Health is going to be finding ways to continue to support that.

We know that in the current economic situation we're not going to be able to throw money at problems to make them go away, so a big piece of the work we have going forward is going to be around an analysis of the programs that we provide and finding ways to do things better in our hospitals, drawing on the experience of our front-line health care providers – our nurses, our RNs, our physicians, and, really, everyone who is in the hospital environment as well as in our primary care networks – to learn from their experience about the things that are working, things we can do better.

Also, a long-term project – you know, any journey has to start somewhere – is beginning to move towards a larger focus on preventative care and moving towards a more wellness-based approach. We know that once we see someone in a hospital, there are many opportunities to help guide their health journey in a slightly different way if we were able to maybe intervene sooner in the case of a mental health illness or perhaps for someone who is a cancer patient or a cardiac patient. More focus and support for healthy living choices would have maybe made a difference in that person's life. So continuing to build upon that and supporting Albertans in their own health journeys is, really, a key piece of our role moving forward.

The Speaker: Any other questions under 29(2)(a)?

The chair would recognize the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and members of the Assembly. It's an honour for me to rise today to speak for the first time in this Assembly as the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek. I'd like to extend first of all my very belated sincere congratulations to you, Mr. Speaker, and to you, Madam Deputy Speaker, on your elections to your demanding positions. I've thought a lot about how much we all appreciate your encouragement to all members to remember that honesty, integrity, and decorum play such a major role in the MLA job description.

I'd also like to congratulate all the members elected to serve in this 29th Legislature, especially those who, like me, are here for the first time. I especially want to congratulate our Premier, Rachel Notley, for her vision and her leadership. As we begin the Second Session of the 29th Legislature, I'm hopeful that we'll all be able to weather the storm of the current economic and energy downturn. The Speech from the Throne outlines some very positive measures to help us persevere and prosper.

There are so many people in the NDP who have inspired and helped me in this journey to this place that I'm not able to mention them all, but I will state my heartfelt and genuine gratitude to all of my volunteers. I'd also like to express my high regard for the hard-working volunteers in Edmonton-Strathcona who served as wonderful examples of how to be politically effective. Also, I'd like to thank my predecessor, Mr. Gene Zwozdesky, for his 22 years of service to the people of Edmonton-Mill Creek. His graciousness, his generosity, and his warmth of spirit were inspiring. I'm honoured to know so many wonderful people.

I'm frequently surprised when I stop to realize that I'm here in this distinguished building, charged with representing the people who elected me, the citizens of Edmonton-Mill Creek. That realization leaves me grateful and determined to fulfill my duties to be an active and involved representative for my constituents. I'm only the second representative in this constituency as it was formed in 1997.

The constituency that I represent is a diverse one with a growing population, many of whom are newcomers to Alberta, and changing boundaries as development continues to move south and east. The oldest of the Edmonton-Mill Creek neighbourhoods is Kiniski Gardens, which began in the 1970s and moved on from there, while the neighbourhood of Bisset was developed in the 1980s. The neighbourhood of Jackson Heights was developed after 1990. What's interesting about Jackson Heights is that it was named after Annie May Jackson, who became the first female police officer in Canada when she was appointed to the Edmonton police department in 1912. This is pretty significant the day after International Women's Day. So we have Annie Jackson.

The largest residential part of the constituency is the area primarily developed after 1995 and known as the Meadows, which is made up of seven neighbourhoods: Larkspur, Wild Rose, Silver Berry, Laurel, Maple, Tamarack, and Meadows.

Edmonton-Mill Creek supports many active businesses. The oldest business or residence in Edmonton-Mill Creek is the Millcreek Nursery, which operates from a 100-year-old family farm within Edmonton city limits. In a country atmosphere complete with a big red barn it provides a great selection of trees, shrubs, and perennials as well as decorative gift and garden decor, a coffee bar, and a children's play area. Eighty acres of field production are being maintained, meaning that they also have a wide selection of large ornamental trees.

Mill Creek also supports several breweries, one of which, Labatt's brewery, is the fifth-largest brewery in Canada, and Alley Kat brewery, which is one of the new artisanal breweries.

Edmonton-Mill Creek is also the home of many light industrial businesses, ranging from plumbing material suppliers, building suppliers, and petrochemical analysis companies, where oil and gas samples from northern and central Alberta are analyzed. There are a myriad of other businesses and services within the constituency such as a television studio, which I toured, and several small radio stations, which I visited during the election.

In the not-for-profit sector one of the newest buildings in Edmonton-Mill Creek is the combined Meadows library and recreation centre, a facility which demonstrates the ability and willingness to collaborate to create something truly new.

The remaining part of the constituency is made up of large, light industrial parks with some scattered residences and mobile-home parks and acreages. Interspersed with the development in this area are a number of ponds and water flow collection sites, which are occupied by waterfowl, fish, and a variety of mammals in the surrounding grasslands and treed areas. What you see throughout the constituency is a variety of buildings and many open places and green spaces; what you don't see are high-rises and office towers.

Now, the question arises: how did I come to be the MLA of this growing and dynamic area of Edmonton? It all began many years ago. My family and I moved to Edmonton, just before I started school, to a small house near Hazeldean school. Our house at that time was on the block farthest south in Edmonton. Right across from us was a farm, complete with cows, which I found as a small child quite fascinating. We had no city utilities because it was too far south at that time, but there was so little affordable housing then that even a very basic, off-the-grid house was welcome as it allowed us to live and work in the city. Memories of living on the outskirts of a rapidly growing city came back to me when I drove around a new neighbourhood in my constituency and saw the houses being built on the eastern edge of the city with very few amenities in place yet. I felt that I had come full circle from my early years, and I felt again the sense of being on the edge of civilization.

I come from a long line of travellers and adventurers, with my knowledge of family journeys going back as far as the early 1800s, when one family branch came from Ireland, another came from Germany, and a third came from England. They all settled in Ontario, working in various occupations and providing their children with good educations. Many in the next generation headed west. My grandfather left Ontario in the late 1800s, first to take part in the gold rush in B.C. and later to take up ranching in southern Alberta where the village of Schuler is now, near the Saskatchewan border. He did well on the Drowning Ford Ranch raising a family, helping to support his brothers going through medical school, and serving as a justice of the peace. I still remember the pictures of him and his neighbouring ranchers taking their cattle, their Texas longhorn, through the dip after they'd been brought up to Canada on a cattle drive.

Another grandfather and grandmother came to Alberta from Manchester, England, settling in Medicine Hat to work for the Canadian Pacific Railway. They lived there, raised their family, contributed to their adopted community for the rest of their lives. All of these people left their settled lives looking for something better, knowing that they would probably never see their homes again but believing that they would find opportunities and eventual success in their new lives if they worked hard and never gave up.

I'm not that kind of adventurer, but my travels have taken me all over Alberta, where I've worked, lived, and raised my children. I come from Medicine Hat, in southern Alberta, near the Cypress Hills, moved to Edmonton at an early age, and as an adult lived and worked in Edmonton and throughout northern and central Alberta. I've stood on the edge of Lake Athabasca beside the cairn commemorating the fur traders and explorers who once lived in that area, watched the sunset over the frozen lake, saw snowmobiles hauling sleds coming off the lake in winter, followed trails marked with small trees across the lake up the Canadian Shield that flanks the lake and into the town of Fort Chipewyan. A long distance away, in southern Alberta, I've stood at the top of Horseshoe Canyon in Cypress Hills, looking over into the Montana hills.

In the Rocky Mountains I've seen mountain sheep who chose not to move off the trail to make way for hikers; bears, both black and grizzly, who, luckily, were reasonably shy of people; elk, lots of them; the occasional coyote and eagle; and even a marmot and a pika or two.

I've been fortunate enough to have flown from Fort McMurray to Fort Chipewyan and have been truly amazed by the amount of impact humans have had on the landscape. I've also heard stories from local people about the changes they have witnessed in the north and how they've been coping with the changing world. I feel very privileged to have travelled to the places I've been to and believe my travels have led me to learn about many different ways of living.

I was not particularly political as a young person, but I did believe that everyone should bear some responsibility for ensuring that our fellow Canadians are cared for, with the poor and the vulnerable being most in need of our care and protection. In the words of Martin Luther King Jr., "Our lives begin to end the day we become silent about things that matter." These words reflect what I believed, and these beliefs became the foundation for my social-democratic principles.

After I retired from teaching, which had taken up a good portion of my life, I was able to become involved in politics as a volunteer for NDP campaigns and as a member of a constituency association. I also joined the Canadian Federation of University Women, an organization that's been working since 1919 to improve the status of women and to promote human rights, public education, social justice, and peace. To support education, they raised money to fund bursaries and scholarships for female University of Alberta students. I've been involved in – this is CFUW, the Canadian Federation of University Women – their active environmental group as well, looking at environmental issues such as how the neonicotinoid class of pesticides affects our bees, with the resulting information and conclusions shared with other CFUW members. CFUW provided me with the opportunity to meet and talk with women doing research in many different fields such as the effect of climate change on the northern environment, the history of Chinese restaurants in Alberta, and the role played by fungi in the pine beetle devastation.

In addition to work and family, which are always my priorities, my preretirement life focused on academic achievement, involving doing graduate work, doing a master's degree, completing the work necessary to become a registered psychologist, while my postretirement life has focused on applying my learning and experiences to issues that affect people in a variety of ways. This transition helped me to make the move from teacher and psychologist to politician, with the skills of listening, learning, and understanding being constant throughout.

I was first invited to run as an NDP candidate in Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo in 2012, where I learned how to talk to the media, and I ran again as a candidate in Edmonton-Mill Creek in the 2015 provincial election. Meeting people in my constituency and listening to their concerns gave me the resolve to work hard to be elected so that I could represent them in the Legislature in Alberta. My fellow MLAs are stalwart, supportive, and compassionate people. I feel incredibly lucky to be one of such an Assembly.

When I was preparing to write this speech, I looked for inspiration and found some in the words of former MLA Marie Laing, who wrote: as a social democrat, a feminist, an academic, and a New Democrat I have a dream and a vision for a world founded in compassion.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to address the Assembly, and thank you, fellow members of this Assembly, for listening.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to congratulate and thank the MLA for Edmonton-Mill Creek for her maiden speech. I enjoyed it very much. I would like to ask the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek: in her new role as MLA what are some of the challenges and concerns that she is hearing from her constituents?

Ms Woollard: Thank you for the question. This is one that I've been hearing from a lot of people. With it being such a new constituency, all the services are basically growing with the development. As people come in, then they're provided with the services, so what we're seeing a need for is schools. A lot of the schools, even though they're very new, are showing signs of being overcrowded, and parents naturally are worrying about what they will be looking forward to in a few years. For instance, a parent with a preschooler was asking me: well, what will I be expecting in a few years when my child enters school? It's a good question. I visited one of the newest schools in the constituency a few days ago and had some good conversations with the teachers about the portable classrooms or manufactured classrooms, basically portables, which they're using already to be able to make their school adequate, to provide adequate space for the new students coming in.

Now, one of the things I'm pleased to say is that, visiting in the constituency and doing my work last year as a university facilitator, I was able to go to a lot of schools to supervise student teachers, and I saw some incredible work going on in the schools. That was a really positive part. The worrying part is getting enough schools up and running quickly enough to meet the needs of the people moving into the area.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, I would recognize the Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I'd like to begin by quite belatedly, perhaps, congratulating all the new members of this House along with those who are returning. It's truly a privilege and honour to join everybody in this Legislature. I wish to give special thanks to my friend and colleague the hon. Minister of Education because his encouragement has been exceptional and invaluable to me throughout my political career, and I'm sure it will continue.

I'm honoured and humbled to represent the constituents of Edmonton-South West. I was elected on a platform that promised change, promised new energy, and promised to do what is truly right for Albertans.

Edmonton-South West is a constituency located in the deep south and west in the city. This is an area that has seen much growth and prosperity over the last decade. We know that 5 out of the 10 fastest growing neighbourhoods in Edmonton are in my constituency. These people, the people of Edmonton-South West, are young, they're old, they're working families, they're men, women, and children. They are people who work hard every day and demanded better of their government, and those people made that decision in this past election.

Mr. Speaker, we enter a new chapter in Alberta history with this Legislature. Under a new Premier, under a new government this Legislature is committed to serving Albertans. This Legislature is committed to serving the people. It's committed to diversifying our economy and getting Albertans and my constituents back to work through these difficult economic times.

What the people expect – no; what the people deserve, Mr. Speaker – is a commitment to things like stable education funding. A K to 12 education requires that we spend the time and money with our students. It demands that we have enough teachers. It demands that we have enough educational assistants. It demands that we keep these class sizes down. Quality student education should never be sacrificed to save a couple of bucks, and that's what I'm committed to fighting for in this House. Good government recognizes this.

Good government recognizes that when there is an infrastructure debt, the solution is not to cut spending; the solution is to invest in a quality future. The solution is to invest in a quality future for our children. Investing in this future actually requires investing in ourselves as well. My constituents, Mr. Speaker, are working families. My constituents are people who work hard every day to provide the absolute best that they can.

How do we do this, and how can we help invest in ourselves? We can start by supporting our parents. We can start by providing an affordable child care program, and that's why I'm committed to protecting our children, our families, and our communities by fighting for a child care program that will work for our families. This affordable child care would allow parents to spend more time with their children, and Albertans simply deserve better than to be stretched thin just to meet basic child care needs. Mr. Speaker, that's what I commit to fighting for every day in this House. These small things, these ideas of investing in our children, investing in ourselves, and investing in our families are the ones that I was elected on.

Mr. Speaker, it's truly an honour and a privilege to be elected as the youngest member in the history of this great province, to bring this much-needed breath of fresh air to this Assembly. I am the youngest MLA in one of the youngest ridings with many of the youngest families, and it was truly the passion and the drive of these young people that first inspired me to become involved in politics.

I, when I first got involved in politics, spoke at a rally organized by high school students against budget cuts to education, and it was actually at that rally where I met the hon. Minister of Education. From that fateful day, Mr. Speaker, from that sunny afternoon I've committed to protecting the interests of our education system, meeting with and consulting teachers, administrators, and educational assistants because the needs of our students and the needs of our families are at the forefront of my concerns.

As someone who recognizes the needs of the young families in my constituency and was very recently a member of the postsecondary education programs in this province, Mr. Speaker, it is near and dear to me to commit to advocating for education, students, and teachers because when I see schools in Edmonton-South West at nearly 135 per cent enrolment, it becomes obvious to me that they deserve an advocate, that they deserve someone who will stand up for them in this House and fight for what they need.

I am proud, I am excited, and I am beyond thrilled to be a member of a party and a caucus that will allow me to bring about the positive change that this province so desperately deserves. As we heard in the throne speech, Mr. Speaker, we are facing a deep slump in the international price of oil, and we as Albertans must stand together. This government will be forced to make difficult decisions to protect Albertan families by keeping with our core values, that Albertans are optimistic people and that Albertans care for each other and their society. This is why I'm thrilled to be able to support a government that will stabilize services in a prudent and sustainable way, a government that will stimulate economic growth and diversification, a government that supports job creation, and a government that has a plan for sustainable spending through better decision-making.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to work with a government that recognizes the necessity for promoting job creation and diversification. Alberta's New Democrat government is focused on renewing hope, listening to Albertans, and leading change to create a fair and prosperous future for our province.

In the last several months that we've been on the job, I've been able to go back to my constituents time and time again with concrete achievements that continue to make things better for everybody in this province and especially my constituents. I hear time and time again as I'm out in the community and on the doorsteps that Albertans are excited about what we've been able to accomplish. They are proud of this government. I'm honoured for the opportunity to be part of the caucus that is able to make such a profound difference in the lives of Albertans everywhere and especially my constituents back home. Mr. Speaker, my constituents deserve nothing less than the best, and I aspire to meet their expectations every day in my capacity as their MLA.

Mr. Speaker, I became an MLA because I believe in Alberta, I believe in Albertans, and I believe in this government. It is the duty of an MLA to ensure that their constituents are represented both in this House and outside of it. It's with this province's historic and first New Democrat government that we are able to bring about all of this positive change, that I can represent my constituents and bring about for them what they have asked for and what they deserve. We can provide the schools my constituents desperately need, hire the teachers that our students desperately deserve, and deliver the services that Albertans expect.

Mr. Speaker, history was made on May 5. History was made by toppling a dynasty, and history is forged every day that this Assembly brings forward legislation that strives to support Albertans where they have been ignored before. No member of this caucus put their name on the ballot because they didn't believe in Alberta. No member of this caucus put their name forward for any other reason than that they wished they could make Alberta the best province it possibly could be. I am proud to represent my constituents. I am proud to have run because I truly believe in this government. I am proud to say that I will work as hard as I possibly can to change Alberta so that it can become the best Alberta it possibly can be.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any questions of the hon. member under section 29(2)(a)? The Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: You got it. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to congratulate the member on being the youngest member ever elected. As you can see by his speech, his political brain far surpasses his physical time on this Earth so far, though I do, you know, use pop culture references sometimes that he doesn't get, which makes me feel quite old, and I'm only 40. So thanks for that, Member for Edmonton-South West.

Your speech was quite impassioned. It's a pleasure to hear you expound on your constituents and what you want to do for them. To that, speaking to your constituents and what you want to accomplish, I was just wondering if you could, I guess, elaborate a bit on kind of, maybe, what your goals are or what you'd like to do out there. I'd appreciate hearing that.

Thanks.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the questions. We've definitely been doing a lot in my constituency. I've been door-knocking as often as I can. I've been meeting with constituents as often as I can because that's what matters. It's talking with the people in the communities. It's talking with the people and making sure that we can connect one-on-one, that I can bring their concerns back to this House, back to this government and represent them in a fulfilling manner.

We've been using things like MLA reports and sending notices of what we've been able to accomplish and when we will be having our town halls, Mr. Speaker, so that our constituents and my constituents can come and speak to me and say: these are the things I care about. We plan to do a lot more of these initiatives going forward, including things like MLA surgeries, where I will personally be going into communities and saying: come and see, and I will work with you one-on-one so that we can determine what we can do best to help you from our provincial government.

Mr. Speaker, we've spent a lot of time, I've spent a lot of time visiting things like seniors' centres, the schools in my riding, and when we receive the rest of them, I'll be visiting all of those as well because these are the things that matter as elected officials. These are the things that matter as MLAs. It is that we must be able to talk to the people. Hearing from constituents is what is most important to me in my job, and that's why I've done things like join constituents at community league meetings and community halls.

I will bring up one comment that a constituent made to me, the president of a community league, actually. He commented – their league has been established, I think, for 20, 30 years: Member, I think you may be the first elected official ever to stay for an entire community league meeting. That blew my mind because: why wouldn't you want to stay there for the entire time and spend time with your constituents and learn about what they care about and learn about what's going on every day in their lives? Mr. Speaker, this is why I was elected. I was elected to serve my constituents. I was elected to go out into the community and meet with them. It wasn't to sit behind my desk all day and ruminate; it was to make sure that I understood what was happening in the community so that I could best help them be represented to the government, best help them be represented in this House, and best be able to make the decisions that we must as legislators, make the decisions that we must as elected officials.

Mr. Speaker, it is truly an honour to have been able to go on and do all these things, and it is going to truly be my honour to continue to go on and continue to reach out into the communities, continue to meet with constituents and continue to have conversations frankly, one-on-one with as many people as I possibly can in my tenure here in this House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Westhead: I'd like to congratulate the Member for Edmonton-South West on his impassioned speech and getting out in the community and really embodying what it means to be an MLA and listening to people. I also wanted to commend him for being, like he mentioned, the youngest MLA ever elected here in Alberta. You know, he became part of a very diverse caucus, people from all walks of life, all age ranges. We have the first LGBTQ members ever to be elected in Alberta. I wonder if he can tell us a little bit from his perspective as the youngest member ever to be elected what it's like to be part of such a diverse caucus, that really reflects the face of Alberta.

The Speaker: In a very short time.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will just note that it is truly amazing because we have this opportunity today, this opportunity to be . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, I note the clock. Under Standing Order 4(2.1) the Assembly stands adjourned until 1:30 p.m. today. Thank you.

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, March 9, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Welcome. Normally there would be a prayer; as we move to the morning sessions, that has already taken place. One of the comments that I mentioned in the prayer, which we said together, our contemplations that we made this morning, was encouraging each and every one of us to show courage. To that theme, the morning's events that weren't as constructive as they might have been were based upon in part some learning that all of us made but most specifically myself, and I guess we become better and excellent by learning from our mistakes. So my respect to each of you for accepting those circumstances.

I would also, with the agreement of the House, because of some fairly significant guests and visitors and events that take place today, in anticipation that we may move past the 1:50 time period, ask in the event that we do for unanimous consent to move past 1:50 at this point if agreed.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, as is our custom, we pay tribute in this House to former members of the Assembly who have passed since we last met. Today we have the privilege of having the families of two of our former peers with us.

May 27, 1931, to January 18, 2016

The Speaker: Dr. Ian Reid served the Legislative Assembly of Alberta as the Member for Edson from 1979 until 1986 and then as the Member for West Yellowhead from 1986 until 1989. After graduating from the University of Aberdeen, Dr. Reid immigrated to Canada and began a long career in medicine. His community involvement led to his election in 1979. Dr. Reid served as Solicitor General from 1984 to 1986, Minister of Labour from 1986 to 1988, and minister of the environment from 1988 to 1989.

Hon. Donald Ross Getty, OC, AOE
August 30, 1933, to February 26, 2016

The Speaker: On May 23, 1967, the hon. Don Getty was first elected as a Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. During his tenure as a member he represented the constituency of Strathcona-West from 1967 to 1971, Edmonton Whitemud from 1971 to 1979 and again from 1985 to 1989, and Stettler from 1989 to 1993.

The hon. Mr. Getty served as minister of federal and intergovernmental relations from 1971 to 1975 and minister of energy and natural resources from 1975 to '79. On November 1, 1985, he was sworn in as Alberta's 11th Premier, serving as such until December 14, 1992. Throughout his service he made an impact on this Legislative Assembly and indeed on this wonderful province of Alberta, demonstrated by his 1969 motion to amend the standing orders to allow for radio and television coverage of session and by the establishment of Family Day in 1990. These were only some of his many accomplishments.

In a moment of silent contemplation and prayer I ask you to remember former of our members, Dr. Reid and the hon. Mr. Getty, as you may have known them. If we could have a moment of silence, please. Amen.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, with our admiration and our respect there is gratitude that needs to be shown to members of families. Each of us, let none of us ever forget that. For it's our families, the families that we have with us today, who have shared the burdens of public life and public office. Today I would like to welcome members of the Getty and the Reid families who are present in our Speaker's gallery. Please rise as I call your names and remain standing until all have been introduced.

From the Getty family: Mrs. Margaret Getty, wife of the hon. Don Getty; Darin Getty, son of Mr. Getty; Tanya Getty, daughter-in-law of Mr. Getty; and Samantha Getty, granddaughter of Mr. Getty.

From the Reid family: Neil Reid, son of Ian Reid; Andrea Reid, daughter-in-law of Dr. Reid; Kjell Reid, grandson of Dr. Reid.

Please let's show some emotion and respect for these families.

Ms McLean: Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly the 29 heads of mission, chargés d'affaires, and others who are participating in an economic diplomatic outreach mission. Among the delegation 26 distinct jurisdictions from five continents are represented. We are honoured by the presence of these representatives: ambassadors, High Commissioners, members of the diplomatic corps, and spouses. I would also like to acknowledge our federal partners from Global Affairs Canada, who were instrumental in arranging this mission.

Over the past few days our government has met with members of the international community and have told Alberta's story. We have also been able to exchange information like how Alberta has supported women entrepreneurship and how our best practices can be applied in the different regions represented here today. We also identified opportunities for international collaboration. As Alberta works towards greater economic diversification, we will need committed partners across the globe. Our province has always valued our relationship with our international partners, and as always we are equally dedicated to strengthening the links between us and to exploring new relationships as exciting opportunities present themselves.

Our honoured guests are seated in both the members' and public galleries. I would now like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: As is normally the case, we have some guests with us today. The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 18 grade 6 students from Parkallen elementary school, which is in the beautiful riding of Edmonton-Riverview, which I represent. They are accompanied by their teacher Ms Jennifer Kolskog and parent volunteers for their visit today. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I ask that they all rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted to welcome today the awesome grade 6 students from Velma E. Baker school accompanied by their teachers Ms Lynn Peacock and Mr. Philip Singh and their educational assistant Rose Miranda and parents Ms Nazreen Ali-Hefford, Ms Zineta Kulovac, and Ms Rose Petruk. If you'd stand up, please, we'll offer you the warm welcome of this House wherever you may be.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you 37 visitors from Lymburn elementary school from my Edmonton-McClung riding. They include teachers Ms Jeanne Commance and Mrs. Birgit Braid as well as parent helpers Mrs. Michelle Stead, Mrs. Kim Creighton, and Miss Debbie Diamond. I would ask that they now please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

I meant to say in our earlier introductions to our international guests that having children in this Assembly, in this Chamber, is one of the special events that all of us share. That you would be here as we honour two former members and particularly a Premier: you are at an historic event that's happened here today.

I would now recognize the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a friend and a mayor in my riding of Cardston-Taber-Warner, Mr. Henk De Vlieger. I'd like to have him rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you Peter Tindall and his granddaughter Emma Taylor. Peter Tindall works in my constituency office, and he is Chestermere-Rocky View's eyes and ears and is a gift to me and the people of those communities. He is a geologist and worked in the oil patch, and it's a background that's obviously instrumental to my portfolio. If you can't guess, I'm extremely grateful to have him on my team and consider him a part of my family. His granddaughter Emma is a resident of Okotoks and is 14. She's volunteered in my office in Chestermere and is hoping to one day intern there. Look out for this young lady; she's a real go-getter. I now ask you to rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to my friends in the Assembly a friend of mine, Robert Walker. Robert was a keen volunteer on my by-election campaign in the fall of 2014 and was so keen that he became my campaign manager in the general election this past May. I'm here in no small part because of Robert's efforts. It's also noteworthy that Mr. Walker was a law school classmate of the former Member for Calgary-Greenway and someone he considered a friend. I know we all did as well. Robert, if I could ask you to rise, please, and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud today to rise and introduce to you and through you several members of AUPE's Legislative Committee. AUPE's Legislative Committee is made up of representatives from across the province who meet regularly to review the policies and procedures of the AUPE constitution as well as to routinely review legislation tabled in the House to provide their feedback from a labour point of view. Joining us today are Karl Clauss, Emille Currie, Derek Heslinga, Allan Lyons, and Bobby-Joe Borodey. I would ask that they please rise to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and introduce to you and through you a friend of mine, Ryan Rollier. Ryan I've known for quite a few years. He actually served as best man at my wedding. Because of the recent election, Ryan has become more involved in politics and currently serves as the vice-president of the Calgary-Shaw EDA. Ryan also has a long history of working to help build the oil industry here in Alberta through his contributions to sustainable tailings pond development. I would ask that he please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who have guests to introduce today?

Ministerial Statements

Hon. Donald Ross Getty August 30, 1933, to February 26, 2016

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with heavy heart that I rise to speak today about the passing of former Premier Don Getty. Alberta has lost a strong and compassionate leader, a man whose natural leadership abilities shone whether he was on the football field, in the boardroom, in this Chamber, or around his family's dinner table. Premier Getty was an incredible champion for this province, a dedicated public servant in the truest sense of the word, who gave nearly 20 years of his life to this Legislature. Who can forget the iconic photograph of the original six, Don Getty among them, arms linked and grinning from ear to ear, storming their way up the Legislature front steps full of energy and enthusiasm for their new job?

Mr. Speaker, one's contribution to history is always described and measured by those who follow. As time passes and our perspectives change and, I would suggest, as they become less driven by the events of the day and more reliant on a fulsome inventory of achievements in light of the historical context, on this basis I believe Premier Getty's record stands the test of time. He was a visionary whose contributions to Alberta and Canada made Canada and Alberta stronger, and they include laying the groundwork for the petrochemical industry that now thrives in our province; helping to grow forestry, technology, nonconventional oil projects in Alberta; working first with Premier Lougheed as Energy minister and intergovernmental affairs minister to establish Albertans' constitutional rights as owners of our province's natural resources and then continuing that leadership role at the federal level in the role of Premier of Alberta; creating the Alberta heritage savings trust fund; establishing the MacEwan University campus in downtown Edmonton; introducing the notion of a land base and self-government for the Métis people in Alberta; and helping our province take a leadership position in the country overall.

One of the greatest legacies, Mr. Speaker, was his support of families and the introduction of Family Day, a holiday where Alberta families can spend time together, strengthen bonds, and reconnect. Several other provinces have followed suit, and Family Day is now celebrated in Saskatchewan, Ontario, and British Columbia.

That legacy, of course, points to perhaps the greatest loss of all, that we've lost a dedicated family man, a loving husband to Margaret Getty for 60 years, a man who always made time to support his kids and contribute to their successes and be present throughout their lives, a compassionate and fair man, a man who was always, always a gentleman who treated others with respect and decency.

My father, Grant Notley, served as an MLA at the same time as Don Getty. They may have had opposing views on politics and policy, but they also had a mutual respect and understanding for one another. When my father passed away, Don and Margaret Getty reached out to us. The compassion they showed my family in that difficult time has always stayed with me. They knew that family and kindness should always transcend politics.

Mr. Speaker, for his decades of leadership in government, in business, and in sport Premier Getty has been honoured by Albertans and Canadians alike. He was an officer of the Order of Canada and a member of the Alberta Order of Excellence. He was an honorary chief, Kinnosayoo, of the Whitefish Lake Cree band and was awarded the order of the sash by the Métis Nation of Alberta for his work with indigenous communities. He's also remembered for his football career on the Edmonton Eskimos' wall of honour.

Mr. Speaker, we've lost a true Albertan, someone who helped shape our province's future, one that we are living today and will live for many years to come, and someone whose legacy will live on. His family is here with us today, as you have already mentioned, in the Speaker's gallery, and I'd like to ask the Assembly to wish them the warmest possible welcome yet again at this sad time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great honour that I rise today to speak on the passing of our former Premier. We first came to know Donald Ross Getty as a football player. He was a star quarterback at the University of Western Ontario. Then, like so many others in Canada, he picked up his young family and moved to Alberta. He moved to Alberta to chase an opportunity, like so many people, in this case an opportunity which was, unlike many people that came to Alberta, an opportunity to chase a football.

We all know what happened next. In his remarkable 10-year career with the Edmonton Eskimos Don Getty passed for over 8,000 yards, threw 58 touchdowns, and won two Grey Cup championships. Don Getty's name hangs on the Edmonton Eskimos' wall of honour at Commonwealth Stadium. He will be remembered as one of the greatest leaders in Alberta and a trailblazer for Canadian quarterbacks in the CFL. Who will ever forget some of the great, perfect passes that he made? Any football fan will remember those for sure.

What you don't know is that while Don Getty was winning Grey Cups, he was working in the energy sector by night, helping to build the industry that would benefit and continues to benefit all Albertans for generations to come. Back then football players almost had to take a job because they couldn't afford not to. They had to do that in order to make ends meet, but just making ends meet wasn't enough for Don Getty. He became a lands and contracts manager and eventually an assistant general manager. Sooner or later – in fact, very soon – he founded his own company.

Then, as if football wasn't enough, he began here in the brutal sport of politics. He served as an MLA and continued to build our oil and gas industry as the Minister of Energy from 1975 to 1979. I was in Fort McMurray then, and he had a true impact on our community. In 1985 he was elected Premier. I remember that year because before he was elected, I met him and his wife, Margaret, in Fort McMurray at the Peter Pond Hotel. They influenced my own decision to join politics. I did actually vote to ensure that he became Premier. Don Getty will be remembered as a Premier who deeply respected Alberta and all its people. He was fiercely proud of our province and very proud of our resources. He made every decision with the intention of helping Alberta and not helping himself.

Don Getty said that his football experience played a key role in his political success. I'm sure it was probably some of those major hits that he took in football, but I think everybody in this room can relate to those words. Politics often feels like a contact sport. There's no doubt that in the throes of elections Don Getty took some of the hardest hits that he ever faced, but no matter how many times he got knocked down, Don Getty got up again.

Don Getty's life began in Alberta with just one single opportunity, and he took the ball and ran with it. He made the most of every opportunity he was ever given. He also fought for that extra yard every time. An officer of the Order of Canada, a member of the Alberta Order of Excellence, a winner of multiple Grey Cups, father, husband, and one of the greatest Premiers Alberta will ever have, Premier Don Getty lived his life as a champion. Let us all remember him as a champion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I seek unanimous consent of the House to permit the leader of the third party, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, and the Member for Calgary-Elbow to respond to the ministerial statement if they wish to do so.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Premier and the Leader of the Official Opposition for their kind and moving tributes. Much has rightly been said about former Premier Don Getty's prowess on the football field, leading the Edmonton Eskimos to two Grey Cup championships in 1955 and '56. Much has also rightly been said about his many accomplishments and contributions over his years in public life as an MLA, cabinet minister, businessperson, and Alberta's 11th Premier. I want to thank the Premier for mentioning that picture of the six MLAs with arms linked coming up. I would like the family to know that that hangs in the PC boardroom now and still serves as an inspiration to us every day.

We've heard how skilfully he raised Alberta's profile on the national stage, forged new and lasting relationships with indigenous people, celebrated the value of family through the creation of Family Day, and shepherded our province through some of the most difficult economic times this province has ever faced. But what stands out to me in all the tributes we've heard since Premier Getty's passing are his qualities as an ordinary man. Those who knew Premier Getty have spoken of his kindness, integrity, his steady yet understated leadership style. Premier Getty was a modest man. He didn't crave the limelight or overplay the drama and theatre that are so often inherent in politics. He was a man who came to work each day and simply got the job done. He did what needed doing with humility and to the best of his ability, and in so doing, he accomplished so much for Alberta. Despite having left politics some 23 years ago, we continue to reap the benefits of Premier Getty's work today in every corner of our province.

On Saturday as his family, friends, and loved ones laid the former Premier to rest, we heard of how much respect Don Getty had from his colleagues in this Legislature and, interestingly enough, especially from those across the floor. Mr. Speaker, as each of us in this Chamber knows, we all too often in politics get caught up in the emotions of the business. It's easy to get caught up in our profound and real differences, but Premier Getty taught us never to lose sight of the fact that our most important similarity is our mutual love for Alberta. And it is through this common thread that despite our disagreements on matters of policy we respect each other as people and as servants of the public, an example that Don Getty set. In our own way we are here to make life better for Albertans.

As Progressive Conservatives my colleagues and I can't help but remember Premier Getty as one of the architects of our party. He was drafted into politics by former Premier Peter Lougheed, and together they were first elected to the Legislature in 1967. Along with four other maverick Progressive Conservative MLAs, Lougheed and Getty spent four years as the Official Opposition, laying the foundation for the party's sweeping electoral victory in 1971. Over the next four decades successive Progressive Conservative governments would help shape Alberta into the extraordinary province that it is today.

In spite of the difficulties we are experiencing today, the Alberta built by Lougheed and Getty is resilient and strong. I have no doubt that there will be brighter days ahead for our province. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I are incredibly proud of all that Premier Don Getty accomplished during his time in public life and equally proud to carry on his legacy. Again, we extend our deepest and most heartfelt sympathies to his wife, Margaret, and to the entire Getty family as together with them we all grieve this terrible loss.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and speak to the legacy of former Premier Don Getty and to pay tribute to his family here gathered. Don Getty served Albertans with commitment and dedication for many years as an MLA, cabinet minister, and, of course, Premier.

Looking back at his leadership, it's almost eerie to see how many similarities there are to today. As one of the original Progressive Conservatives Don was part of a movement which changed the face of provincial politics. The PCs ended the reign of the Social Credit and ushered in an era of young, innovative, energetic MLAs. He assumed the premiership at a time when the oil industry was faltering, and government likewise had to make tough, not always popular choices.

I remember Don for his dedication to indigenous people. In 1990 Don was named a Cree chief of the Whitefish band, a deserved honour. Particularly in relation to the Lubicon, whom I visited afterwards, he was held in very high esteem along with the Métis. He fought for fair treatment and recognition of the rights of all First Nations.

Don was tasked with guiding the province of Alberta through very challenging times. I can only hope we will show the same courage and determination and constructive engagement in facing the adversity of today's economic climate.

On behalf of the Liberal caucus, our sincere gratitude to Don and his family.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to honour former Premier Don Getty, and it is a particular privilege to do so in the presence of his family in the place where he dedicated so many years in service to the people of Alberta.

Premier Getty was the embodiment of service, serving Albertans as an MLA, cabinet minister, and, of course, as Premier during very challenging times in our province. He distinguished himself as a leader in all that he accomplished, not only in the political realm but also within business, sports, and human rights, where he advocated for the Métis people.

He also made a tremendous contribution to national unity with his support of the Meech Lake and Charlottetown accords. I've been told he took national unity so seriously that he responded personally, including handwritten notes, to every single letter sent to him by Canadians from across the country. His belief in a strong, united Canada will perhaps be his greatest legacy.

As I've come to learn since his passing, Don Getty was also a dedicated family man who along with his wife, Margaret, raised four boys to be great citizens and who, in turn, have raised seven of their own children to be the same. It's in this spirit that I'll remember Premier Getty fondly for the creation of Family Day, where Albertans spend time together to enjoy the tremendous recreational opportunities available in our great province, many of which were created under Premier Getty's leadership.

As some of you may know, I'm honoured to have the very desk that Don Getty sat at in the years 1967 to 1979. As I chart my own course in the Assembly in service of Albertans, I hope to live up to the example set by Premier Getty, an example I think we would all be wise to follow.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Again, please accept the respect offered to both families that are here today. Thank you for being with us, and thank you for your public service.

I recognize the Government House Leader. I understand you may have a comment that you'd like to make.

Member's Apology

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much. This morning there was considerable confusion about the election of the Deputy Chair of Committees, and I want to take full responsibility personally for that confusion and apologize to the House for the situation that developed. I want to also apologize to you, Mr. Speaker, to the Sergeant-at-Arms, and to the pages for when I came into the Chamber. When the doors were barred, it was my understanding, which was incorrect, that our members were not being allowed to vote on a key matter. I misunderstood the situation, and I wish to apologize to everyone in the Assembly for that behaviour and for the confusion that took place. This was something that was entirely my responsibility.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation of Questions and Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed with Oral Question Period, I'd like to outline the rotation that will apply for Oral Question Period and Members' Statements. As noted in my March 3, 2016, procedural memo to all members, the Speaker's office received a document from the three House leaders confirming their agreement to the rotation of oral questions and members' statements. The projected rotation for Oral Question Period and a projected sitting days calendar, which outlines the Members' Statements rotation, were attached to that procedural memo.

With respect to Oral Question Period the new agreement stems from the House leaders' agreement agreed to in June 2015 and last used in the fall sitting. It continues to follow an eight-day rotation and provides for 20 questions each day. However, question 5 on days 4 and 8, which was assigned to the former independent member, is now allocated to a private member from the government caucus. Questions 7 through 20 from the rotation used in the fall have been moved up one spot, and question 20 is allocated to the Official Opposition. The current allocation of questions provides the Official Opposition a total of two more questions over the eight-day 20-question rotation. The remaining caucuses retain the same number of total questions.

I find the rotation on oral questions as proposed by the House leaders' agreement to be a fair allocation of questions amongst private members for this Assembly. With respect to the two one-member caucuses I am not of the view that continuing to have three questions over eight days is unjust or disproportionate. This averages out to 1.5 questions per week. In fact, when one looks at the previous Legislature, the pattern was to have one-member caucuses treated in the same way as independent members, with one question every four sitting days.

On the subject of asking and answering questions, I would ask, respectfully, that members keep their questions and responses concise and that they do not use preambles for supplementary questions after the first four sets of questions on days 4 and 8 and the first five sets of questions on all other days so that private members may ask as many questions as possible during the time allocated for Oral Question Period.

With respect to members' statements the House leaders' agreements continue to be based on a three-week rotation. According to Standing Order 7(4) each day up to six private members may make a statement of no more than two minutes in duration. The changes incorporated into the new Members' Statements rotation are as follows. The Official Opposition receives one more statement on Thursday for weeks 1 and 2 and on Wednesday in week 3. Private members from the government caucus are entitled to one additional statement on Thursday of week 3 of the rotation. The number and scheduling of members' statements for the third-party caucus, the Liberal member, and the Alberta Party member remain the same as during the first session of the 29th Legislature.

Thank you, hon. members. I will table a copy of the House leaders' agreement at the appropriate time in the daily Routine today.

I would take this final moment to say that I do not intend to give any lecturing to all of you. We have much to learn. I just would like to underline again to please respect each other, particularly with volume, and I speak to both sides of the House. On one side there seems to be a lot of desk thumping, which is very loud. On the other side there are often loud questions and voices. Please, I think I've been advised by all of you that you wish for this to be a part of the dynamic, so I urge you to practise respect for each other and listen.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Policies

Mr. Jean: Albertans are worried. They're frustrated. They're anxious. Since the NDP was elected, 80,000 jobs have been lost, including just in January alone 26,000 jobs. Small business confidence is at an all-time low, and after almost a year of waiting for the government's often promised jobs plan, all Albertans got yesterday was a flimsy bill that does nothing but give the minister a job description. When will the Premier provide hope to the thousands of Albertans that desperately need it and come up with a real plan to grow Alberta's economy and get Albertans back to work?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we said yesterday in the throne speech, we're very much aware that as a result of an unprecedented price shock with the price of oil and the impact on families across Alberta that people are worried, and they're worried about their jobs. So our government is doing everything it can. We're going to support Albertans by ensuring stability and services to Albertans, we're going to work very hard to diversify our economy and to create new jobs alongside job creators, and we are going to continue the very hard work we're doing to diversify our access to markets because this is the beginning formula of getting us through these difficult times.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Here are the facts of life under the NDP with low oil. They raised business and personal taxes, they took aim at farms and our energy sector, and now they're bringing in a $3 billion carbon tax that will hurt every single Albertan. And they're not done yet. When the economy is hurting, governments must do no harm. The NDP have ignored that principle on almost every front. The Wildrose has promised a single point tax cut for small businesses as a very first step to restoring business confidence. Why won't the Premier take even just that one small step and help businesses and all Albertans?

Ms Notley: Well, in fact, Mr. Speaker, up to this point we've been working very closely with business and with industry on efforts to promote diversification and to promote job creation. We've introduced programs that will increase access to capital. We've consulted with business on what that should look like. We also, through our climate leadership plan, are using it as a tool to diversify and to help open up new markets while at the same time promoting a cleaner, greener economy and environment for Albertans. So in difficult times we're actually moving forward together with businesses. I'm looking forward to reading the many endorsements of our plan from business leaders to the member opposite.

The Speaker: Thank you, Madam Premier.

Mr. Jean: I am also very much anticipating that opportunity.

Last month both the Premier and I found ourselves in Ontario. We were talking about Alberta's energy sector. The message delivered could not be more different, though. While Wildrose pitched national unity on pipelines, the Premier was headlining a $10,000-a-plate dinner for her friend the leader of the Ontario NDP. The leader of the NDP in Ontario calls our energy products toxic, campaigned against line 9, and she also attacked Northern Gateway. She is no friend of Energy East. We know that clearly. Why is the Premier secretly fundraising for opponents of Alberta?

The Speaker: Just one moment, please.

Speaker's Ruling Matters Referred to Ethics Commissioner

The Speaker: Members of the gallery, I've been advised that the matter which was addressed in the question is with respect to a matter that is currently being reviewed by the Ethics Commissioner. It is suggested that discussions of that matter would be inappropriate in the House when the matter is under review. So I would ask that we avoid that topic today.

The Speaker: Hon. Premier, any comment? If you'd like to, you've got 35 seconds.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to talk about things that have been done in and around Ontario and different comparisons of the same. Unfortunately, I think the hon. member over there has a slightly different version of history, because what I know is that while he was out there having taxpayer-funded meetings about navel-gazing amongst conservatives, I was actually out there talking to people about the value of Energy East, not only to energy industry people but to environmentalists, and making progress such that instead of exchanging childish tweets with people, I was able in Vancouver to get all Premiers and the Prime Minister . . .

Pipeline Construction

Mr. Jean: Last month the Premier claimed that Alberta has a partner in Ottawa in Prime Minister Trudeau. Colour me surprised, Mr. Speaker. One of the Prime Minister's first moves after his election was banning tankers on the west coast, obviously limiting Alberta's ability to get energy products to market. Our partner in Ottawa won't commit to approving Energy East even if it successfully follows his own new regulatory process, one that this Premier says she supports. Why won't the Premier admit that her pipeline approach is not working, won't work, and start advocating for Alberta's best interests?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I know is that the 10 years of what preceded what's going on right now hasn't worked. It hasn't worked at the federal level, and it hasn't worked at the provincial level. We're doing our homework on the environment. The federal government needs to establish a process that Canadians can trust, and then they will exercise their discretion. In the meantime I am making our case at every possible opportunity such that, as I said before, 13 Premiers and the Prime Minister signed onto a declaration agreeing about the urgency of getting our product to tidewater and getting a timely and predictable process in place, and that is progress.

Mr. Jean: When Ottawa announced further delays and regulations to our world-class pipeline review process, Alberta's environment minister said that she welcomed these new rules. Canadian producers lose up to $50 million a day without a new pipeline. Approving the three major pipeline projects would mean an immediate private-sector investment of $30 billion into the national economy. The next time the Premier goes to Ontario to stump for her friends, will she commit to telling this story, the truth, instead of allowing opponents of Alberta to tell our story for us?

Ms Notley: Well, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the member opposite ought to do better research because, in fact, that is exactly the story that has been told. And guess what? People are listening. They're listening because we have a credible record to show them and we have a credible plan to talk about with them. Those who are concerned about the environment have a right to be concerned about the environment, and now Alberta is doing its part so that those who are concerned about the environment can embrace the fact that Canada is a progressive producer of nonrenewable energy that deserves to have its product accepted in all markets.

Mr. Jean: The National Energy Board has already approved the Northern Gateway pipeline. This Premier opposes it. This pipeline would grow Canada's GDP by over $300 billion over the next 30 years, all of Canada. But instead of acting in the national interest, the federal government has announced a tanker ban on the B.C. coast, and the Prime Minister has said that he won't approve the pipeline. The Premier also campaigned against this project in the spring election. Does she stand by that position now, or will she advocate for Alberta's energy sector to her friends in Ottawa?

Ms Notley: The position that I've been taking over and over and over, not only in Ottawa but also in Toronto, also in Montreal, also in Vancouver, also in Winnipeg, is that for our country's economy to grow, not only in Alberta but across the whole country, we have to have a mature, comprehensive, sophisticated, integrated energy infrastructure so that we can get our product to the best market at the best time at the best price. That is the case that I've been making all across the board, and the way to get there is for us to be grown-up participants in a national conversation where we . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Government Spending

Mr. Jean: Almost every time we ask a question of this government about finances or, frankly, just about any other topic, they stand up in this place and make unfounded and baseless accusations about the opposition. It would be helpful for the government to take the state of our provincial finances seriously. We would appreciate it. Wildrose wants to protect the long-term viability of front-line services. Without responsible action now, the NDP puts everything at risk. Why won't the Premier commit to finding significant budget savings now so that front-line services that matter to Albertans will be protected over the long term?

Ms Notley: You know, it's really quite entertaining listening to this government – sorry. [interjections] It's very entertaining listening to this government. There's even something you have to do, which is listen to the opposition talk about restraint. They come to us and demand new hospitals, new school improvements, new roads, more flood protection, all in their own ridings. It seems that the only kind of restraint that they can demonstrate is in their tipping practices.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, I was pretty sure the government would revert to their usual nonsense about draconian cuts from the opposition, and they did. But here's a tip and the truth: while this government fearmongers about fantasy cuts from the opposition, it's actually putting the stability of front-line services at risk. Without action, Albertans risk losing police positions, nursing positions, seniors' beds, and much more. Why won't she look at cutting out the waste – duplication and bloated ranks of management – instead of putting front-line services at risk, that Albertans want and need?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that the deficit is an issue that we have to keep a very careful eye on, and we need to be prudent. Now, the folks over there would like us to start by blowing an extra $1.5 billion hole in that deficit by giving tax breaks to profitable corporations and the wealthiest of Albertans. That does not make sense when you're trying to make prudent decisions. So that's the first place they need to look at in their deficit management strategy, because it's not going to work.

Mr. Jean: Here's another tip: no Alberta corporations are making profits, so it's not a problem.

Mr. Speaker, this government acts as if our suggestions to make targeted cuts to the bloat in our government are extreme. No economist would support them, the Premier said, but economists have looked at our ideas and think that finding 2 per cent savings in the waste inside government is possible; it's even reasonable and moderate. Not every dollar the government spends serves front-line Albertans. Surely, this Premier can find two pennies of savings in every dollar that Canada's most expensive government spends without laying off nurses or closing long-term health beds.

Ms Notley: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, going back to the previous comment, it's a darn good thing that the Official Opposition leader is not selling Alberta as an investment place to people outside of Alberta because he needs to learn a little bit about promoting our province.

When it comes to reducing spending, we are taking a very careful look to ensure that we can reduce spending. But we need to understand that up until now the health care budget, for instance, which is 40 per cent of our budget, was increasing at 6 per cent a year. Simply by dropping that to zero, which is from these folks over there, or to 1 per cent would cause huge chaos if we did that in one year.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

The hon. leader of the third party.

Support for Municipalities

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning at the AUMA breakfast we had a chance to hear the Minister of Municipal Affairs answer questions, and to be honest, I'm troubled. We heard from municipalities that they're concerned that the government may delay the requisition for education tax, which would delay municipalities' ability to collect tax, administer a proper appeal process, and manage cash flow, and the minister didn't have any answers. Would the Premier like to clarify the government's intent, please?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to take this question. Certainly, this morning it was a bit of a challenge, in fact, because there was some misinformation and lack of clarity on behalf of the person asking the question. Given the fact that the person asking the question was a little unclear on that, it became very unclear to answer that. I'd be happy to tell you that we will be proceeding exactly as to normal procedure in terms of providing the education requisition information to the municipalities. We will continue as expected, and the municipalities can expect them at the regular time.

Thank you.

Mr. McIver: I'm glad that the minister acknowledged that there was some misinformation and a lack of clarification because the minister was the source of it.

While she was doing that, the other thing she didn't provide information on was when a member of a municipality asked: is the government going to honour their commitment to MSI, including the additional $400 million from last year? Once again the minister did not know her files, did not know the answer. I'm giving her a mulligan here, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister now tell the House what's going on?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I made it very clear that we continue to recognize the importance of MSI to communities across Alberta. Our government remains committed to providing municipalities with the tools and resources they need to serve Albertans. But Albertans do expect us to be responsible fiscal managers, and we are taking that responsibility seriously. We are working incredibly hard to work within the budget, that is not yet finalized, to provide the support and meet the needs of municipalities across this province.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure if that was the Charleston or the twist, but it was similar to the dance the minister did this morning.

I'm going to give the minister a third chance to answer questions that the minister was unable to answer about her own files this morning. A member of a municipality asked about the rural physician action plan and about their concern that if the government cuts it back, it will make it harder for rural Alberta to attract and retain doctors. This is very important, and the minister could not assure municipalities this morning that that was going to continue. A second mulligan. We failed in the first one. I now want the minister to have a chance to clarify, please.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, attracting and maintaining physicians as well as other health professionals throughout Alberta is a priority for this government. That's one of the reasons why instead of moving forward with a billion-dollar health care cut, which was proposed by the party opposite asking the very question, we invested $800 million immediately as soon as we were elected. We're continuing to work with RPAP and with Alberta Health Services to make sure we get the right professionals in the right communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Small-business Assistance

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the Finance minister. Streamlining and reducing costs of government are more important now than ever. That applies even more to new businesses and start-ups trying to survive in this economic climate. Small businesses in Alberta constitute 95 per cent of the businesses, and they need a break. The Edmonton Chamber of Commerce identified serious increases in 2016 alone, including property tax increases; business licence fees; construction fees for gas, plumbing, heating, electrical, and development permits; and waste management fee increases. To the Finance minister: how about giving them a sustained stimulus and reducing small-business tax?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you to the member opposite. I just want to take you back to Budget 2015. Our government gave small businesses a hand up there through the $2 billion in capital available through ATB, AIMCo, and the Alberta Enterprise Corporation. We're currently working on Budget 2016, as you know, and you'll see more information there. This summer we also instituted something the previous government had shut down, and that's STEP. That'll be available to small and medium-sized businesses throughout Alberta so they can hire young people to help them out in the summer.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that this government is offering small businesses the chance to go into greater debt, with the impending minimum wage increases, why not offset these impacts by a reduction in small-business tax? They only have so much money.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. As people in this House know, the small-business tax is kept at 3 per cent. That's in line with provinces all across this country. We are in the middle of all that. You know, we'll be bringing forward some initiatives in Budget 2016 which will assist small businesses, in fact all businesses in Alberta. The opportunity to go into debt, to get capital so that they can expand their businesses, is something we heard from businesses that they want to do.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that there's still significant red tape for small businesses, what are you doing to reduce red tape for small businesses?

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm quite honoured to respond to this question. Our government has been working quite closely with not only chambers of commerce but small businesses and entrepreneurs across this province, looking at ways that we can help. Part of the reason that my ministry was created was, quite frankly, so that businesses have a one-stop shop. They have one place to go to access government. Whether it's an entrepreneur who's come up with a great new idea related to the agriculture sector, the forestry sector, a new clean-tech idea, they have a one-stop shop through my ministry.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Job Creation and Retention

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The dramatic collapse of the global price of oil is having a serious negative impact on many of the constituents of Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill and, of course, people across Alberta. Will the Minister of Economic Development and Trade tell the House what he's doing to encourage job creation and economic growth?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to thank the hon. member for her question. I know that this is top of mind for all Albertans everywhere, in all corners of our province. First of all, I just want to acknowledge that we understand the impact that the global price of oil is having on not just our oil and gas sector but, quite frankly, on all sectors and the ripple effect that that's having. That's why yesterday we heard in our Speech from the Throne, which is our government's vision for how we're moving forward, how our government is going to partner with the job creators, the private sector, to ensure that the right conditions are in place so Alberta remains the best . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this protracted downturn is expected to continue and with the layoffs mounting, again to the same minister: I'd like to know what steps are being taken by the government to put people back to work, especially in the construction industry, which has been hit very hard in Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. Absolutely we recognize that the construction industry is one of the sectors that is hurting because of the global price of oil, but I can tell you that our government is taking action. We have a plan to address job losses, to encourage economic growth and diversification, and we're acting on it. Yesterday I introduced Bill 1, which gives concrete steps on how our government is working with the private sector to ensure that Albertans are working. I must say that the Infrastructure minister has announced $34 billion over five years . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms McPherson: Mr. Speaker, back to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: given the state of the economy why isn't the government looking at making further cuts to spending, especially in high-cost areas like health care and education?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. Quite frankly, we're not going to make a bad situation worse. Now, I recognize that the opposition would love to and believe that firing nurses, doctors, teachers, front-line staff is the way to help the economy rebound, but quite frankly it's clear that Albertans want an economy that's resilient to energy price swings, which is why we're focusing on building on our strengths in the agriculture and forestry sectors, in clean tech, partnering with tourism, and leveraging what we're already doing well. That is how we're going to help Albertans . . .

Chief Adviser on Labour Negotiations

Mr. Fildebrandt: I've got a big tip for the government. One of the top issues that the government will face in the next few years is bargaining with our government-sector unions, so I noted with interest that yesterday the Premier hired a new chief adviser on labour negotiations. He will advise the government on labour negotiations with government unions like AUPE. The problem is that as of this morning he is still listed on the AUPE's website as one of their chief negotiators. Please tell us, Madam Premier, that you didn't actually hire the fox to guard the henhouse.

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The member says that he's got a big tip. That's exciting, and I'm sure that the service industry will be very happy to hear that the next time he enters into a restaurant.

In terms of the question that's being raised, I think it makes good sense. When past governments struck deals that obviously weren't necessarily demonstrating restraint, I think it makes sense to look at who the best negotiators are in the province and make sure that they're on your side.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Admitting that their own AUPE friends are overpaid. Interesting.

Labour negotiations are governed by complicated laws and precedents. Hiring away one side's negotiator would be bargaining in bad faith unless, of course, the union agreed to it, in which case it would verge on insider trading. To the Deputy Premier: which is it? Did the government make the mother of all labour code violations, or are the government's negotiations with AUPE a sham?

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm excited to provide some answers on this question. Our government was very pleased to be able to hire one of the best negotiators available. This is someone who has experience on both sides, working for management as well as working for labour unions. He is known throughout the community as someone who is tough but fair, and we look forward to working with him through labour negotiations in the coming years.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Playing both sides against taxpayers is an interesting definition of good value.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans won't put up with sham bargaining given that the Premier's chief adviser on labour negotiations appears to be in a gross conflict of interest. Fewer issues are more important to the sound financial management of this province than having proper and effective negotiations with our government-sector unions. Will the Premier admit that this hiring was a serious mistake and dismiss Mr. Davediuk?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The chief negotiator who has been hired has over three decades of experience on the management side as well as the labour union side. He will be able to be tough but fair and make sure that our labour negotiations are properly done. My role as Minister of Labour, as a regulator is to make sure that that stays the case. We know that during these challenging times this labour negotiator will be able to work soundly with all parties.

Thank you.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, during the last provincial election the New Democrats ran a very successful campaign around the theme that our government was trying to scare Albertans by raising concerns about the effects of the declining price of oil. In spite of what the government said, our members are well aware that the government doesn't control the price of oil. However, they do decide the response and set the tone to inspire confidence in Alberta, and frankly that tone has been lacking. To the Premier: will you acknowledge that the platform your government ran on in the previous election isn't positioned to address the problems right now facing Alberta's economy?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the hon. member for her question. Quite frankly, we have addressed and acknowledged the current economic climate within the province, within Canada, and quite frankly world-wide, with the low price of oil and the effects that it's having on the international economy. Our government has a plan. We've taken action through Bill 1, which was tabled yesterday, looking at opportunities to partner with the private sector and the job creators to ensure that the government is acting in a supportive way, that we are laying the right foundations to encourage economic growth.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently spent a day at the doors in Calgary-North West and heard the fears and concerns and worries of Albertans. Now the NDP admits that their long-touted job-creation incentive program has not created a single job and needs to be reviewed after only five months since the budget was introduced. To the Premier: now that your job-creation program has sputtered, what have you learned from this failure?

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll remind the member that in Budget 2015 alone our government made more than $2 billion in capital available to entrepreneurs and small businesses through ATB, through AIMCo, and through the Alberta Enterprise Corporation, which funds a fund which then invests directly in Alberta companies. We're providing small businesses help in hiring talented young people through the STEP program, that we're excited to roll out. We have our 34 billion of new dollars that will be invested in infrastructure, which is going to help the economy as well as . . .

Second supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Yes. Mr. Speaker, let's talk about small business. The PCs called on the government to reduce small-business taxes as a step towards encouraging growth, something your government wasn't prepared to do. To the Premier once more: are you prepared to include a small-business tax cut in the upcoming budget?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do find it a tad rich that less than a year ago the member and her party were in power and did nothing of the kind when they were government, yet now in opposition they'll call on us.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that there are a number of initiatives and ways that our government is going to be helping entrepreneurs, small businesses within our province. Again, Bill 1 is the first way for us to enact some of our initiatives. The Finance minister will be tabling his budget early next month. I encourage members to look thoroughly at it, as there are . . .

Emergency Medical Dispatch Services in Calgary

Mr. Barnes: Last fall I asked the Health minister in this Assembly why the government is charging ahead with bringing Calgary's EMS dispatch services under the grip of AHS centralization. The government has dumped millions into a project that the city doesn't want, AHS doesn't need, and the taxpayers are on the hook for it.

To the Health minister: why don't you stop ignoring the people of Calgary and keep their EMS services under their control?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. He does acknowledge that there have been some reviews of the situation, including the Auditor General, who recommended a consolidation, including the Health Quality Council of Alberta, who recommended a consolidation. This is something that is being looked at globally, not just for one community or another, and it's something that we want to make sure we get right. So I'm not going to commit to making a wrong decision; I want to make the right one and take the time to do so.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, seeing as the minister promised to this Assembly that she would work with local leadership and given that the mayor of Calgary is once again imploring the government to kill this ill-begotten experiment, I have to ask yet again: will the minister listen to the mayor himself, respect the ability of Calgary to make its own decisions, and stop AHS from trapping the city in an inefficient and costly system?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The provision of health care is actually the provincial government's responsibility, not an individual municipality's responsibility. So I'm going to do my job, which is to review data and make sure that I'm working with our partners to provide stability and that the citizens of Calgary, Edmonton, Medicine Hat, and every other part of Alberta get the very best service for their EMS.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the city of Calgary deserves a real answer from this government. Given that local decision-makers don't want AHS to take over their EMS dispatch and given that quickly this is turning into a $10 million boondoggle and given the fact that 46 Calgary dispatchers could soon find themselves out of work, will the minister at least tell Calgarians why she refuses to commit right now to protecting them from an inefficient, wasteful Alberta Health Services hijacking?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member says a lot of things in his preamble that don't necessarily relate to the situation.

My number one driver is to make sure that the people of Alberta get the right health care service at the right time, and we also need to make sure that that's at the right investment. So I need to review the data, and I've done so with the mayor. We've had two opportunities to meet about this so far, and we're going to continue to until I make sure that I feel confident in the decision that I want to make for the citizens of Alberta. That's responsible governance.

Seniors' Care

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, every day in our province an average of 60 Albertans turn 65 years old, entering their senior years. There's a grey elephant in the room; in just 15 years there will be almost a million seniors in our province, meaning that roughly a quarter of Albertans will be over 65. Seniors helped our province to get where we are today, and we should be encouraging the development of senior supports which would allow them to live in dignity and to access the services that they require. Does the minister have a plan outside the highly controversial and centralized approach from AHS to deal with this growing segment of our population?

The Speaker: The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I can assure you that we do have a plan here in Alberta. We are very concerned about seniors. As the member said, we care very much about them and their contributions to our province. As we've said before, we're creating 2,000 long-term care spaces. We just announced the transportation tool kit to support them to age in their communities and to have access to many services.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, the minister is full of words about the importance of long-term care but not action that our seniors can see. Given that in many rural communities long-term care beds allow seniors to live in close proximity to family, friends, and communities that they helped build and given that the alternatives to long-term care beds in our communities are divorce by nursing home or sky-high costs due to placing seniors in acute-care beds when proper spaces are not available, will the minister explain why our caucus has received reports from across the province that long-term beds are now being closed?

The Speaker: Madam Minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the member for the question. I can assure the member and all Albertans, seniors especially, that our government is committed to investing in long-term care beds and making sure that seniors are aging in their communities surrounded by their family and friends and that we as a government are moving forward on that. I just commend to the member to see the budget when it comes out and see the investment that we're putting in.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that our seniors deserve better than the flippant behavior the NDP government has given to date for our seniors. Given the fact that our population is aging and we need a plan in place before it's too late and given the fact that this government seems to excel at vague promises rather than real results, if not for me but for the seniors who built this province will the minister commit to developing a results-based system that will ensure that the long-term care beds desperately needed across this province are not cut to save a quick buck by the NDP government?

The Speaker: Madam Minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the member for the question. This government is protecting the front-line health services that Alberta seniors rely on, not cancelling surgeries or throwing our hospitals into chaos, which is what the opposition would do with the cuts that they're proposing. They often think that the way through tough times is to deny seniors the care that they need. Our government is absolutely standing up to support seniors.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Fentanyl Use Prevention in Indigenous Communities

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fentanyl killed 272 Albertans last year, and the crisis was so shocking for the Blood reserve that they declared a state of emergency. Recently the chief stated: if someone dies from drugs that you have sold them, we will do everything in our power to hold you legally responsible for your actions. An Albertan who allegedly provided fentanyl to two parents who died, leaving their children orphaned, has been officially charged with manslaughter. To the Justice minister: what specific steps are you taking to work with the federal Crown to ensure that these types of offences are prosecuted as homicides?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Well, of course, our government is deeply concerned about the fentanyl crisis. We are working in concert with our partners in Health to ensure the supports that are necessary to help the vulnerable individuals who can fall into drug addiction and to ensure that we're making strides on the enforcement piece as well.

In terms of the specific case the member mentioned, obviously the federal Crown prosecutors exercise their own discretion, and I'm not able to intervene in that case. But we are absolutely committed as a province to doing our part in making sure we get these drugs off our streets.

Mr. Rodney: Albertans deserve really good answers to these questions, and I will now ask the Minister of Health. Given that the crisis underlines a serious opioid dependency issue, which the mental health review highlighted in its report, and given that you have identified that an opiate addictions plan for indigenous peoples is an immediate priority and given that you've had the mental health review for three months and that any delay in implementing this plan is literally a life-and-death issue, can you please tell us: what concrete steps have you taken in the last 100 days to fulfill this recommendation, which is guaranteed to save lives?

The Speaker: Madam Minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As was mentioned, the situation with fentanyl is tragic, and it's not just something that's happening in Alberta. This is something that many provinces are dealing with right now. One of the things I'm very proud of is that we've shown leadership in making sure that we get naloxone kits, the anecdote to this opioid, into the hands of communities and individuals as well as paramedics, EMTs, nurses, psychiatric nurses. We're increasing access so that a life-saving initiative can be taken here.

In terms of the indigenous advisory committee that's certainly a very high priority for us. My deputy minister has that on the top of his list, and I'll be happy to provide some further follow-up with the member opposite about success that we're having there.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Minister.

Finally, to the new Minister of Indigenous Relations: given that your government failed to mention anything in the throne speech about effectively dealing with the fentanyl crisis and how it affects indigenous Albertans and given that your government has chopped $13 million from addictions treatment and given that a number of reserves such as the Blood tribe have established successful frameworks for dealing with the fentanyl crisis, what real-life strategies are you adopting, adapting, and delivering for the safety of indigenous individuals and communities on and off reserves?

The Speaker: The minister of indigenous affairs.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We have been working very closely with the members of the Blood tribe and, of course, with indigenous communities across this province to work on significant issues with regard to addictions and, in this case, fentanyl. We have increased public awareness through a variety of programs. We have increased the availability of naloxone for treating people who have taken an overdose, and of course we are ensuring treatment is available and doing all of that in consultation with the indigenous community through our Fentanyl Response Team.

Thank you.

Women's Equality

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, yesterday was International Women's Day. I have been part of the struggle for equal rights for women for over 40 years, whether that was fighting for nontraditional jobs or advocating for pay equity in 1984, when I signed the complaint against the federal government demanding equal pay for work of equal value. To the Minister of Status of Women: what are you doing to address and settle the issue of pay equity for women in Alberta?

The Speaker: Madam Minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for my first question in the House. The member is right, and this is very simple. Women deserve to earn equal pay for work of equal value. We are committed to fair wages for women, and we're looking at different ways to close the wage gap. That is one of the reasons that we're phasing in the minimum wage increases. With the majority of minimum wage earners in Alberta being women – that's 62 per cent – our plan will make a real difference for them and their families. I'm so proud to be part of a government that has a real plan.

The Speaker: Thank you, Madam Minister.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that women in Alberta are still underrepresented in leadership roles in both our public and private sectors, to the same minister: what are you doing to support and encourage more women in leadership positions throughout this province?

Ms McLean: The strong women of Alberta have a place in corporate boardrooms, postsecondary administration, on public boards, and in elected office. We are reviewing agencies, boards, and commissions to ensure that new appointments reflect the diversity of Alberta. We're going to work with partners like AUMA's new status of women committee to get more women involved in politics and leadership. It's not enough to just talk about gender equality in 2016. That's why our government is walking the walk. We are leading by example, starting with the first gender-balanced government in Canadian history.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you.

Given that women have traditionally held the role for the daily care of their children, again to the same minister: what is your ministry doing to promote the sharing of this role and help increase women's participation in the workforce?

Ms McLean: Well, it's no secret that we have taken steps to make this Legislature more family friendly. But it's not about us in this House; it's about working to ensure that women across Alberta have the same opportunity. Our government will also help families by addressing the cost of child care in a fiscally responsible way. We're giving immediate support to families by expanding tax credits to parents. A single mom with two kids who qualifies will receive $3,000 more in her jeans each year. These are real, practical steps to help women in Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you, Madam Minister.
The Member for Little Bow.

Infrastructure Project Prioritization

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, Wildrose has been calling for a transparent and prioritized infrastructure list for years. A new session, and still it's missing. This doesn't sit right because nearly a year ago now the NDP promised Albertans they would implement a sunshine list to end the backroom politics in infrastructure. Minister, last year your department lapsed a billion dollars in capital spending. Is this going to be another case of one thing said in opposition and another in government, or will you release the list?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can assure the hon. member that the list will be released, and I'd ask him to wait for the budget and the capital plan that goes with that.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, the minister's actions and his words don't add up. Given that the NDP slammed the former government for putting, quote, political interests at the top of the infrastructure list, now he's doing the very same thing that he once condemned. Given that the government killed Bill 203, which would have limited government announcements during election campaigns, Minister, will you do the right thing and unless there's a nonpolitical emergency commit to making no more transportation or infrastructure announcements with taxpayer dollars in the middle of the Calgary by-election?

Mr. Mason: I think I can undertake to do that, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's much appreciated. Given that without an infrastructure priority list smaller communities are going to have to make some very hard planning decisions this year and given that Albertans are worried about aging and missing infrastructure in their communities and that they can't afford to pay a thousand dollars a head to talk to this government, Minister, if you aren't going to release a fully transparent sunshine list, will you at least commit to full transparency around what projects are being approved and what projects are being rejected under the small communities component of the building Canada fund?

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know that the Minister of Municipal Affairs will want to have some more comments on that particular program, which is administered from her department. I just want to point out that I've got the five-year plan of the Wildrose. In the absence of a budget the Wildrose wants to spend about $24.6 billion on infrastructure, which is a $9.4 billion cut over what this government wants. They can't have it both ways. They can't have roads and bridges in their ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Energy Policies

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The precipitous and prolonged drop in the price of oil has certainly had a profound effect on the economies of all oil-producing jurisdictions, but while this government continually blames lower prices alone for every lost job and every lost dollar of investment, neighbouring jurisdictions seem to be weathering this storm more successfully. To the Minister of Energy. You recently spent four days in Houston conferring with your counterparts on how to cope with the current economic challenges. Minister, Albertans, who paid for your trip, want to know: what lessons did you learn, and how will you apply them?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Indeed, we had a great opportunity in Houston to meet with two presidents, 12 ministers – not my kind of minister but country ministers – 300 president/CEOs, and over 3,000 participants from 53 countries. In addition to sessions from 7 in the morning until 9:30 at night, we had ministry side meetings. We met with the minister from Norway, the minister from Mexico, our federal minister, the assistant to the U.S. MIT.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm certainly interested in the guest list and the schedule, but it's not the answer to the question. I guess only time will tell if our $22,000 that the trip cost was well spent.

Now, given that Husky energy has just announced three SAGD projects in the heavy oil fields near Edam, east of Lloydminster – I'll point out that if you go east of Lloydminster, you're in Saskatchewan – and given that these projects will employ over 500 workers during construction and create 90 permanent jobs and given that the price of oil in Saskatchewan is the same as in Alberta, to the minister: what are they doing that we aren't?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: We're certainly working with our companies in a few ways. We're working on, as the Premier had mentioned, you know, pipeline projects to get our products to market. We're also working with the economic development minister. He and I announced a project recently, the petrochemical industry, that'll get people with similar skills to build those projects while we're waiting for the price to go up, to build other SAGD and in situ projects.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this minister has already told Alberta oil patch workers to leave the province to find work, perhaps they'll go to Saskatchewan. That's where Lex management recently announced that 80 per cent of their $142 million oil and gas investments will go, to the province of Saskatchewan. Minister, if low oil prices are the only reason that things are so slow here in Alberta, how do you explain Saskatchewan's ability to track investment? When will you pick up the phone and ask them for some neighbourly advice?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Well, certainly, we have different geology than Saskatchewan, so our projects are different. We have the SAGD, in situ, which are longer term projects, so to do the investment for that, we've got to wait for the prices to come up. But we are looking at through the royalty review the petrochemical diversification. We are also harmonizing the royalties going forward in 2017 so all liquids will be considered the same, and that'll make it a lot easier for investment decisions to be made going forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was a little confused about your request at the beginning of the session about this, so I apologize to the House. I would ask unanimous consent to revert to the Routine and to extend it past 3 o'clock.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Government Policies

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just in time for Christmas Albertans were left with a special gift from this government: hurt farms, tax increases, and more flawed economics. Three months later it looks like we are going to get more of the same. In January Alberta lost 26,000 jobs in the private sector. We now have the highest business taxes in western Canada, a $3 billion carbon tax, repeated serious miscalculations on resource revenue, and miscalculations on almost every cost projection possible. This is the NDP record.

As a result of this government's flawed agenda communities like Hanna are now literally hanging on the edge of a cliff. Over 250 coal and plant workers, who pay taxes, provide for their families, support local stores and businesses, are now under serious stress as companies cancel power contracts directly due to the punishing effects of the carbon tax. Good, hard-working men and women are literally seeing their futures, their hopes and dreams for their children destroyed before their very eyes.

And while the Premier was busy letting other provinces disparage our energy sector, when the sewage-dumping mayor of Montreal attacked Energy East, all our Premier could muster in response was to attack the hon. Leader of the Opposition for speaking the facts on pipelines. But the Premier did find some free time in her schedule to fly off to Toronto and collect $10,000 cheques for an anti-Alberta, anti oil sands NDP leader that called our oil toxic. But somehow importing 600,000 barrels a day from despot regimes is not.

Albertans want leaders who defend Albertans, Mr. Speaker. Wildrose will provide that leadership by standing by and standing up for vulnerable Albertans suffering from NDP mismanagement, and we will stand up for all job-creating sectors of our economy.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

International Women's Day

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for allowing me to rise today in recognition of International Women's Day. Worldwide, women continue to contribute to social, economic, cultural, and political accomplishments. We have much reason to celebrate in Alberta today.

Our government is committed to ensuring better equality and equity for all Alberta women. Our first step to address this was creating Alberta's first-ever Ministry of Status of Women, and I am proud to say that this is Canada's only stand-alone ministry for the status of women. Our province is home to many strong and capable women, from the indigenous and the pioneers through to the Famous Five and right up to the present day.

In my community of Edmonton-Manning many of my constituents are working women: accomplished health professionals, teachers, veterans, and entrepreneurs. As an Alberta woman I am proud of my sisters who continue to stand up for their rights in workplaces and communities. However, the barriers continue. We have huge gender gaps, which force us to work longer hours and take up multiple jobs to provide for basic needs, and many of our sisters, as we witnessed in this House itself, continue to face domestic violence.

It is time for change, Mr. Speaker. It is time that all women feel that they have a safe place to call home for themselves and their children. It is time we encourage women to run for office, to believe that they, too, have the power to be executives and become leaders in their private and public lives. This will bring change for all of us.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's great to be back in the Legislature with my Progressive Conservative colleagues, working to find solutions to the issues that matter most to Albertans. One of those issues, no doubt, is the state of Alberta's finances. The low oil prices have done a number on the provincial treasury, and the Finance minister has only hinted that the deficit would be over $10 billion. He wouldn't say it out loud, but the Municipal Affairs minister did this morning, interestingly enough.

I've said it before, and I'll say it again: the NDP government is not to blame for the price of oil. They are, however, completely to blame for their own failed policies. These policies include an increase in personal and corporate taxes, royalty uncertainty, a $3 billion carbon tax, a $15 minimum wage, and absolutely no spending restraint. On top of that, they are racking up massive debt, with no plan to ever pay it back. These policies kill jobs, drive out investment, and lower our credit rating. NDP policies, Mr. Speaker, are making a bad situation much worse. Government needs to correct their course now to protect Alberta. Every day the NDP delays in reducing spending means bigger and more severe cuts later. We only need to remember Bob Rae's NDP government in Ontario to know that lesson.

Our Progressive Conservative caucus will bring forth pragmatic, common-sense solutions, something sorely lacking from both the government and the Official Opposition. Unlike parties to our left and to our right, PCs are focused on Albertans rather than on political ideology. Our PC caucus will promote job and economic growth with smart, fiscally conservative policies while having the courage to compassionately tackle complex social issues. The PC Party is Alberta's conservative party that believes all Albertans, no matter who they are, are equal. That, Mr. Speaker, is why this government would do well to take the PC caucus's advice.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Turning Point Overdose Prevention Initiative

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I want to talk about something that is too often overlooked in central Alberta. I'm talking about overdose prevention. As many of us have heard, Alberta is being ravaged by a wave of fentanyl and opioid overdoses. The overdoses and deaths that have occurred in Alberta represent a public health crisis requiring innovative, strategically planned responses. We must continue to expand our overdose prevention education and naloxone distribution programs.

Many community organizations are already doing tremendous work in central Alberta to address this issue. One such organization in my constituency of Red Deer-South is Turning Point. Turning Point serves as a hub for a variety of street outreach programs as well as health promotion and prevention programs focused on sexually transmitted and blood-borne infections. Turning Point also provides a nonjudgmental, open, helpful atmosphere where community members know that they will be respected by staff whom they can trust.

Through effective harm reduction initiatives Turning Point is a leader in overdose prevention in central Alberta. I'm pleased to share that, to date, Turning Point has distributed 266 naloxone kits and recorded 70 lives saved. Because of the high level of trust they share with community members, Turning Point is able to gain first-hand knowledge of lethal street drug trends in central Alberta while promoting life-saving overdose prevention options.

Mr. Speaker, organizations such as Turning Point provide an example to us all. I commend them for the invaluable contribution to health promotion and overdose prevention in central Alberta communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

St. Mary's University Humanities 101 Program

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to ask my colleagues in the Assembly to see themselves in someone else's shoes. Imagine if you were marginalized and had little hope of attending postsecondary education. Imagine you're recovering from substance abuse or experiencing homelessness. How would you get back on your feet? How could you go back to school without support?

During the election I learned about the humanities 101 program at St. Mary's University, in my constituency. Offered to marginalized and low-income individuals, this program offers students free tuition, hot meals, assistance with child care, individual tutoring, and also cultural experiences. Many of the funds raised for this program are done through the hard work of the faculty and students at St. Mary's.

St. Mary's University's humanities 101 program has become a benchmark for many colleges and universities in Canada. The program is designed to empower marginalized Albertans and help address barriers getting in the way of their capacities and skills. Humanities 101 enables students to develop their talents and unlock knowledge that leads to successful futures. I have heard numerous stories from students coming from terrible circumstances and health, often as a result of living in extreme poverty. After graduating from humanities 101, some of these individuals are thriving and contributing positively to society and to their communities.

Mr. Speaker, last December I had an opportunity to attend the humanities 101 graduation at St. Mary's University. It was one of the most moving experiences I've had since taking office, to see these graduates filled with hopes of making a difference in other people's lives.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud of the hard work of St. Mary's University, and I encourage all members to look at their example of how we can help lift people out of poverty in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Pipeline Construction

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to bring to light the stunning hypocrisy of this NDP government when it comes to the record on pipelines. I cannot help but laugh and shake my head when I hear the Premier spouting lines about the NDP government's support of access to tidewater since day one. We clearly have a very different interpretation of what support looks like. To date we have seen the Premier offering support for Keystone only after it was already rejected by the Obama administration. We saw the Premier offer the same strong support for the Trans Mountain expansion project by writing the National Energy Board only after the B.C. government said that they opposed the project.

But wait; there are more examples of this support. The Premier seems to think that strong support for Energy East includes flying to Ontario on a secret trip and selling access to herself for $10,000 a plate. Where does the money go? Into the coffers of the Premier's BFFs in the Ontario NDP, a party that has been shown to be against pipelines, pipelines that are crucial for the success of our energy industry.

Mr. Speaker, if it sounds like I'm frustrated, it's because I can't help but think of the serious damage that is being done to our province and, more importantly, to everyday Albertans because of this significant lack of leadership from this government on pipelines.

Wildrose has shown real leadership on this file, and our leader knows what real support looks like. In this caucus we know that pipelines continue to be the safest, most effective, and environmentally responsible way of transporting oil over long distances. We will continue to proudly voice that support and stand up for Alberta, not the beg-for-forgiveness approach after projects have been denied. The NDP government must show strong support through their actions on Energy East; otherwise, the rest of the country will continue to walk all over us. Albertans deserve much better.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: I recognize the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give oral notice – and I present the original; I believe the Clerk already has the requisite number of copies – that at an appropriate time I will be rising on a point of privilege concerning the fact that I believe that by providing a copy of Her Honour's Speech from the Throne to the members of the media without providing the same information to members of the opposition beforehand, the government has breached the rights of the members of the House, obstructed the performance of our duties, and thereby committed a contempt.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have three tablings today. I would like to table five copies of the House leaders' agreement, signed on March 4, 2016, respecting Oral Question Period rotation and Members' Statements, which I referred to in my statement earlier this afternoon.

In my capacity as chair and pursuant to section 39(3) of the Legislative Assembly Act I would like to table with the Assembly five copies of the following orders, three of which were approved at the February 9, 2016, meeting of the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services and one at the March 1, 2016, meeting: the Executive Council salaries amendment order 12, being order 01/16; the members' allowances amendment order 31, being order 02/16; the members' allowances amendment order 13, being order 03/16; the members' allowances amendment order 32, being order 04/16.

Lastly, I'm tabling five copies of a report produced by the Chief Electoral Officer re failure to eliminate a campaign deficit for the 2015 provincial general election, listing those candidates who failed to eliminate a campaign deficit pursuant to section 43.1 of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act.

The point of privilege that was raised: I think this would be an appropriate time to hear the discussion on that matter.

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 15(2) yesterday afternoon I provided written notice to the Speaker of my intention to raise a point of privilege here today. In fact, the breach of privilege that I'm raising feels a little bit like reverse déjà vu: the issue of media receiving technical briefings ahead of opposition members and staff.

Yesterday, March 8, at about 9 a.m. an exclusive technical briefing for the media on Her Honour's Speech from the Throne began. Now, in point of fact, one hour previous to that members of the media were provided with an embargoed copy of the speech. At 1 p.m. opposition members and staff attended a technical briefing on the Speech from the Throne at the federal building, at which time we similarly expected to be presented with an embargoed copy of the speech. But at the 1 p.m. technical briefing in the federal building opposition members and staff did not in fact receive a copy of the Speech from the Throne but instead were given an incomplete summary of the legislation that would be referred to in the speech. Members of the opposition parties first saw the text of the Speech from the Throne at approximately 3:15 p.m., when Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor began reading the speech, some seven hours after it had been shared with members of the media.

Now, this is the first opportunity to raise this matter as per section 115 in Beauchesne. We were aware of the media briefing that was occurring at 9 a.m. and assumed, incorrectly as it turns out, that the same information would be shared with members of the opposition at the 1 p.m. briefing. It is clear that members of the media were provided with the full text of the speech and therefore a greater opportunity to study and examine the speech well before the opposition did. We would therefore submit that our privileges as members of this Assembly and indeed the privileges of the Assembly as a whole were in fact breached.

Mr. Speaker, the concept of privilege as it applies to members of parliaments throughout the Commonwealth is one of the fundamental tenets of parliamentary democracy. Section 24 of Beauchesne's sixth edition on page 11 states:

Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals.

Section 24 goes on to quote Sir Erskine May, stating:

The privileges of Parliament are rights which are "absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers". They are enjoyed by individual Members, because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its Members; and by each House for the protection of its members and the vindication of its own authority and dignity.

I cite these references to drive home the critical nature of the concept of privilege. Indeed, it has been a consistent finding of Speakers past throughout the Commonwealth that breaches of privilege are among the most serious contraventions of our procedures and practices. Privilege is so important, in fact, that at the commencement of every parliament – and you will remember this, Mr. Speaker – the newly elected Speaker, in the name of and on behalf of the members, lays claim by humble petition to the members' ancient and undoubted rights and privileges. Now, some may consider this to be a mere ceremonial rite or a quaint, traditional formality, but in those few words, that have been uttered over the centuries, the gravitas of privilege is reinforced. It is a concept that cannot and should not be casually dismissed as an anachronistic relic of bygone days.

In this specific case, Mr. Speaker, the abilities of members of the opposition to conduct their duties were obstructed, and therefore I would submit that important democratic functions of the Assembly were impaired. I believe that the government has committed a contempt of the Assembly by providing information about the Speech from the Throne to members of the media prior to the speech being read in the House and without offering opposition members a similar opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, the breaches committed by the government yesterday extend beyond the realm of breach of privilege to the very serious issue of contempt. Chapter 15 on page 251 of Erskine May opens with the words:

Generally speaking, any act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of such House in the discharge of his duty, or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce such results, may be treated as a contempt even though there is no precedent of the offence.

Mr. Speaker, I submit to you that failing to provide a full text of the Speech from the Throne to the members of the opposition yet placing said speech into the hands of the media a full seven hours before has impeded members of this House in the discharge of our duties. Specifically, during a media conference in advance of yesterday's speech attended by the leader of our caucus, the Member for Calgary-Hays, and me, a member of the parliamentary press gallery asked us for our opinion on the proposed repeal of Bill 22, which is outlined on page 11 of the throne speech. Of course, neither of us had seen the throne speech, and the technical briefing we had received from the government at 1 p.m. made absolutely no mention of any intention to repeal Bill 22. The government's failure to provide us with the information directly impaired our ability to discharge our duties as members of the opposition.

In that moment what we experienced yesterday was virtually identical to the scenario described as unacceptable by House of Commons Speaker Peter Milliken on pages 1840 and 1841 of House of Commons Debates on March 19, 2001, when he said:

To deny to members information concerning business that is about to come before the House, while at the same time providing such information to media that will likely be questioning members about that business, is a situation that the Chair cannot condone.

Speaker Milliken further ruled on March 22, 2011, on page 9113 of House of Commons Debates:

The member . . . is certainly not misguided in his expectation that members of the House, individually and collectively, must receive from the government particular types of information required for the fulfillment of their parliamentary duties before it is shared elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, this issue has come up here in our Assembly as well. On March 4, 2003, the leader of the third party opposition, which I take some heart in noting happened to be the New Democratic Party at the time, raised a point of privilege under circumstances remarkably similar to the one we are dealing with today, except that in that case the briefing was on a bill, not the Speech from the Throne. Now, in his ruling Speaker Kowalski on page 304 of Hansard agreed with Speaker Milliken's conclusion and ruled that the disclosure of the contents of a bill to the media prior to the same information being shared with members of the opposition "constitutes a prima facie contempt of the Assembly [and] is treated in the same way as a breach of privilege."

Mr. Speaker, an excellent summary of these arguments can be found on page 299 of Hansard on December 2, 2014, in which the Member for Edmonton-Caldwell argued:

These findings further clarify that a member's duties are obstructed when they are provided with necessary information after other parties or if they are provided with sustainably less information than other parties. The Assembly should be the place where public debate about legislation begins, not at a press conference mere minutes after the opposition has seen the bill.

So I am arguing out of fairness to all members of the House.

Our privilege of being the first to see the details of legislation that is brought before this House must be maintained.

Well, I thought it would be hard to find additional compelling arguments to support my petition, but I was wrong. That's certainly not the case. On November 27, 2013, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was arguing a breach of privilege based on a media technical briefing on Bill 46 that had begun about 30 minutes before she had received a copy of the bill. Quoting from page 3167 of Hansard:

My understanding is that the media were invited to a technical, detailed briefing on the bill, which would have given them . . .

And at this point the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood interjects:

It's on now.

The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona continues:

It's on now, but it commenced at 2:45.

I made note of when I as a member of this Assembly received these bills, Mr. Speaker, and it was at 3:15. That is a profound breach of my privilege as a member of this Assembly. We should not be receiving bills and legislation after any member of the public but certainly not after the media has been provided access to it. There is precedent on that.

Now, I would point out that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was justifiably indignant over a delay of about 30 minutes. I would point out that in this case the interval was some 14 times longer.

Mr. Speaker, there is one other point to distinguish that must be considered in this particular situation. Whereas other breaches of privilege have involved improper disclosure of the information on proposed pieces of legislation, in this case the document in question is the Speech from the Throne. To my knowledge this situation is without precedent in Alberta and represents an even more serious breach of privilege and contempt for the Assembly because while the speech is prepared by the government and lays out the government's agenda, it is in fact Her Honour's Speech from the Throne. It is not just any document or any speech.

The Speech from the Throne is very different from the everyday Routine of the Assembly, and we saw evidence of that here yesterday. The galleries and, indeed, the floor space were filled with invited guests and dignitaries. We were graced by the presence of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor. Brass bands played O Canada and God Save the Queen. That's why it is considered improper and, indeed, a sign of disrespect to interrupt the speech by way of applause, comment, interjection, or desk thumping, a convention which I was pleased to see was followed yesterday but was ignored last June. My point is, Mr. Speaker, that the Speech from the Throne is not just any document, and the actions of the government taken yesterday represented contempt not only for hon. members on this side of the Assembly but indeed for Her Honour.

Mr. Speaker, the issue of sharing government information publicly or with the media before members of the opposition has come up before both in this Assembly and elsewhere. I view with a measure of sadness that members opposite, who only a year or two ago waxed poetic in high dudgeon regarding breaches of privilege that they had suffered, are now so amnesiac that they perpetrate the exact same contemptuous actions in government today. Albertans were promised better, and indeed many voted for that change, and they, too, must be sorely disappointed. It is clear that these breaches have happened before and will continue to happen if we do not take specific action. I am prepared to propose a motion in that regard pending your ruling. For now I believe I have provided compelling arguments that yesterday's events constitute a prima facie case of privilege, and I ask that you rule accordingly.

3:30

The Speaker: Hon. member, there were two statements attributed to the Speaker. If you have it easily accessible, could you just read that first one back to me?

Dr. Starke: The first of the Milliken quotes?

The Speaker: Yes.

Dr. Starke: Certainly. The first Milliken quote, Mr. Speaker, was from March 19, 2001, and I'll repeat the quote.

To deny to members information concerning business that is about to come before the House, while at the same time providing such information to media that will likely be questioning members about that business, is a situation that the Chair cannot condone.

The Speaker: Are there other members? The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'll say at the outset that I'm quite surprised that members from the third party would raise this issue. Here are some facts. When the PCs presented their last throne speech, they provided embargoed copies of the text to the media with no technical briefing whatsoever to members of the opposition. So if there is a person or a party in this room that's being amnesiac, I believe it is the third party. That was their standing operating procedure.

The other point I'll make is that numerous examples that the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster made were in reference to a bill, not in reference to a Speech from the Throne. These are two different topics, quite frankly.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday for the first time, in addition to the media briefing, the government did in fact offer and provide a technical briefing on legislation in the throne speech to the opposition. This was a positive step which offered more to opposition parties than had previously been the case, an increase in accountability and transparency. I'll also point out that as a member since 2012 I have never received a copy of the Speech from the Throne when we were in opposition and the member who has raised this point of privilege was in government.

Mr. Speaker, I understand that when the opposition was contacted and offered the technical briefing, their leader was more than happy with the terms, and I also understand that he was well aware of what was being offered to the media. When I heard about this point of privilege, I wondered whether the House leader had not only forgotten what the practice of his own government had been but also whether there had been a miscommunication between him and his leader.

On the specific matter of privilege, I would note that the member's letter to the Speaker does not indicate any information on how his rights and responsibilities have been infringed by the government action. When you look at the actual Standing Order 15(1), it states, "A breach of the rights of the Assembly or of the parliamentary rights of any Member constitutes a question of privilege." It's my submission there has been no breach based on that standard. This House has often debated matters of privilege related to governments providing media with copies of legislation prior to its introduction in the House and its distribution to members of this Chamber. However, this isn't a bill, so the same considerations around privilege do not apply. As I've said before, Mr. Speaker, this is historic practice, and it has never been found to be a breach in the past, nor should it today.

Lastly, the context under which this matter has often come to the House when it has been legislation has been because a member has been asked by media to comment on the contents of a bill that the media has seen but that the member hasn't. In this case, copies of the speech that were distributed were done so under embargo, which, again, has been the traditional practice of previous governments, until after the actual speech had been delivered in the House and that the situation couldn't and didn't arise.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I submit that this is not a breach of privilege. Our government is following the standards of previous governments, but the difference and where we've stepped up and made a positive step is that we've offered more to the opposition parties than has previously been the case or previously been the standard in our province in an effort to increase accountability and transparency.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to my colleague for his pointed remarks. Much of what my colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster raised in the House today clearly indicates that what we're dealing with here is a breach of privilege, and while the deputy House leader from the government side would like to stand up and say, "Oh, we're just doing what the third party did when they were in government," it is a bit shocking. For days and weeks and months and years the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona stood in this place and raised points that said that the standard that the then government was providing was not good enough. In fact, as the member has referenced, a number of points of privilege and prima facie cases have been found on this very issue. I speak specifically to the Speaker in the House of Commons on an issue just like this here in the Assembly when other points of privilege have been raised around the media receiving briefings prior to the opposition.

Now, let me be clear. If the government had provided the same information under embargo to the members of the opposition, what we wouldn't have is a breach of privilege, but that's not what happened. I heard the deputy House leader say that the opposition was more than happy with the terms, but let me be very clear that this side of the House was given the impression that we would receive a copy of the throne speech along with a technical briefing. What we received was exactly what the member has spoken about, a technical briefing. Some of the contents of the throne speech were not addressed in any capacity at the technical briefing, so while the interaction that took place between the media and the leaders of the opposition parties all took place in an embargoed environment, many of those leaders were asked to comment on information that the media had that the opposition didn't, and that is clearly a breach of privilege. There is a lot of history on precedent – I encourage you to spend some time going back through those steps – that this is a clear breach of privilege.

I will just close by saying that the Deputy Government House Leader and all members on that side of the Assembly have been passionate about doing things differently, about providing more information to the opposition, about working together, yet their actions are what we saw this morning. When something goes awry, their two excuses are "Well, it's what the government used to do" or "I'm sorry." Quite frankly, in this case I believe that our privileges have been breached and that we need to see steps taken by your office to ensure that these sorts of things don't continue. Albertans expect better of this government and the opposition expects better of this government because it's what they said they would do, and we expect that moving forward, you will find a breach of privilege and that this government will take the necessary steps to ensure that these sorts of things don't happen in the future.

The Speaker: To the House leader for the loyal opposition: could you advise me what you understand a technical meeting to be? Could you share that with me?

Mr. Cooper: Well, typically speaking, when we see a technical briefing on a piece of legislation, it's done around types of issues that are quite technical in nature. Now, the throne speech wasn't that. I appreciate the fact that they made an effort to provide some information, but what happened yesterday is that they actually made the situation worse because they provided to the media information that they didn't provide to us. So the actual definition of what a technical briefing may or may not be is six of one, half a dozen of the other and splitting hairs amongst the real problem.

The real problem is that they provided information to the media that they didn't provide to the opposition and now are making claims that they're actually the best possible government because it's never been done. Well, the throne speech is just as important as a piece of legislation, and in fact my hon. colleague made the case that it could be considered more important. They want to go down that path of providing information to the media so that the endeavour is for the government to get the information out that they want, not the information that the opposition wants out, which is why I believe our privileges were breached and us not provided with all the information.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I will just be very brief here. If, in fact, you do find that our privileges have been breached – and I will absolutely agree with my colleagues on this side of the House that, in fact, they absolutely have in this case – I just want to identify that this government has done some things somewhat differently than the previous government, which I think we on this side welcome. I've seen evidence that the government has shown a willingness to work with us, and to the degree that that has happened, I think that's a positive thing.

My simple submission to you, Mr. Speaker, is that if you do find that there has been a breach of privilege here – and I would argue that there has been – the simple rule be that if the media gets it, the opposition ought to get it as well. If the media gets access to the budget in the morning of budget day, the opposition ought to have access as well. If the media gets a full copy of the throne speech, the opposition ought to have it as well under the same rules, under the same agreement that we also will respect the embargo. We have made some progress with this new government, but I think that would go an awful long way.

What I would worry about if you do find, in fact, that there has been a breach of privilege is if the government says: "Fine. No one gets it until such time as that's released." I think that would not serve democracy well, not serve Albertans well, nor the media, nor the opposition.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other comments by other members of the House? Additional new information? Proceed.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I just will add one piece of information that just came to my attention, and I would be happy to table it once I get a hard copy if you are interested. It's come to my attention that the only reason the opposition were provided with that briefing was because they asked, because it came to the attention of our staff that this was going to the media in advance, and we contacted the government to make sure that we would be able to participate in that process. In fact, there was no intention, it appears, to allow us to participate in that process from the start.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Seeing and hearing no other members wishing to provide new information, clearly I appreciate the details that have been shared. I'd like to take that under advisement and consult with the table officers. I wish to indicate to the House, though, that I must be absent from the House because of some official responsibilities I have tomorrow, so it would be my hope that I would be able to make a ruling on the matter on Monday of next week if that's agreeable.

Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mrs. Littlewood moved, seconded by Mr. Westhead, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great honour and privilege today to rise and respond to the Speech from the Throne. I know that in doing so I have some rather large boots to fill. My father, Leo Piquette, represented a large part of my present riding of Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater from 1986 to 1989. He used the occasion of his response to lay claim his right to speak French at the Legislature due to it being enshrined in law in the North-West Territories Act. Later he asked a question in French during question period to prove that point and was ruled out of order by the Speaker of the day, and this is what set off the famous Piquette affair, as many of you today may still remember. His eventual vindication and the government's response to it has now led to not only French being allowed in the Legislature – and this is a right that many of my colleagues have availed themselves of – but all languages.

However, this also does mean that I'll have to come up with my own theme for my maiden speech. Now, by the way, once he had made his point concerning the French language, he actually winged the rest of his speech. What did he say? He said: I'm speaking straight from the heart. And so he did. Although I do admire my father's courage in winging his maiden speech, I'm not so certain I want to do quite the same thing. However, that does not mean that I'll be speaking any less from the heart than he.

I am also fortunate in that there is certainly no shortage of issues to discuss. Our Lieutenant Governor gave an excellent throne speech yesterday, and there is a lot to talk about. One thing I know that will really resonate with the talented and hard-working and fundamentally decent folk – okay, maybe I am winging it a little bit there, Mr. Speaker; I'm skipping around here – the fine folks of the four counties, one First Nations reserve, and the many municipalities, incorporated and unincorporated, that I have the great honour to represent, are the statements that she said in her closing remarks yesterday, which I quote.

Albertans want to build an economy that is widely diversified and resilient to energy price swings, an economy that captures the full value of our resources, holds the promise of prosperous futures for our children, and shares its benefits widely and fairly among all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, these are words well said, and they are also a very fair approximation of what my constituents have been telling me on doorsteps and in get-togethers and at meetings across the riding. It also speaks directly to the great sense of frustration that I felt myself as a lifelong resident of this province and in my various roles as teacher, businessperson, and parent. Indeed, it's one of the major motivations for my having put my own hat in the ring this spring.

Like so many of my friends and neighbours I'd gotten sick and tired of hearing the same old excuses for why we seemed to be so unsuccessful in not only capturing fair value for our common resources but also in preparing ourselves against the inevitable bust that follows. After all, how many oil booms do we need to let slip by before getting things right? How many knee-jerk and destructive reactions to the inevitable bust and decline in revenues did we have to suffer through? This is something that I was and am still convinced that we can get better at although I admit that this is not an easy nor a new problem. However, I'm very proud that I'm part of a government that is sincerely endeavouring to do its best to change that.

Now, I'm saying that this is not a new problem. In fact, this has been an issue that has been a problem for Alberta since there was an Alberta. Alberta has always had an overreliance on a few very cyclical commodity or resource-based industries. Energy is only the most current. We've had to navigate the centuries-old tension between concerted efforts to develop a few key resources necessary to help provide a prosperous future we want ourselves and for our children while at the same time not becoming so dependent on them so that when prices crash, all the good work wrought with their use does not come crashing down as well.

Now, although many today think of energy when they think of Alberta, it was not so many years ago that they would have thought of wheat instead. It was the lure of cheap land and high wheat prices that brought the waves of hopeful settlers from across Canada and indeed from around the world into Alberta. These would actually in fact include my own great-great-grandparents, who made the trek from Quebec and who were indeed the first settlers in Donatville, which is just a short drive away from where I presently live, in Boyle, Alberta. These are also the same people that populated the fine communities of Athabasca, Smoky Lake, Warspite, Waskatenau, Radway, Redwater, Gibbons, Bon Accord, Thorhild, and many others. Hopefully not too many of my constituents are listening today for this in case I forgot their community, but be sure that, you know, I know where they are.

In turn, these communities boomed, both the service centres for the rapidly arriving homesteaders but also borne on the railway-driven hope that each new village might become the great city of the future, a hope that unfortunately was dashed when drought and the collapse in wheat prices in 1914 caused a crash so spectacular that it took decades to recover from. For example, it took Athabasca, one of the older communities in my riding, a good 60 years to get back to the population level it had achieved in 1914. Some of the communities in my riding have never achieved those original levels, so it's never been an easy thing.

Just the same, however, many farmers did stay behind, and over time they learned how to survive the vagaries of the weather and of grain prices and even prosper despite the often poor commodity prices, the rapacity of the grain monopolies, the railways, and the eastern merchants. Having grown up on a mixed family farm myself, I have to say that I have the utmost respect for the kind of hard work that it took and, you know, the work and struggles they had to go through to come up with solutions to these problems.

Now, how did they come up with these solutions? They did this by working together, by organizing their own producer co-operatives and associations, by working together with their friends and neighbours to build corduroy roads over muskegs to market, and, finally, by forming their own government, a government of farmers for farmers. That government, the United Farmers of Alberta, is a government that I'm proud to say the NDP in Alberta is a direct descendant of. And I don't think it's any accident that as we find ourselves in similar times, we have a similar type of government.

Part of my riding also helped set off the next great boom. Redwater went from a sleepy farming hamlet of about 140 people to a boom town in just a few short years when oil was discovered there in 1948, only a year after the great find in Leduc. Thus began the next great phase in the Alberta boom-and-bust cycle, a cycle that dominates our economy and politics to this very day.

This cycle is obviously not an easy problem to solve. It is also definitely not the kind of problem that has only one solution. It needs many solutions, and I'm happy to say that many of these solutions can actually be found within my own riding.

An Hon. Member: Ask a farmer.

Mr. Piquette: Okay. Actually, it's not customary to talk during somebody's maiden speech.

All right. Thus, I'm happy to report that I represent the riding that, despite the very challenging times we're in today, is still holding its own. Now, what are these sectors that are holding their own? Well, first of all, we're fortunate to have a very strong and innovative agricultural sector with very progressive farmers using, you know, world-class techniques and sustainable farming methods to produce agricultural products and commodities that are second to none in the world.

We also are blessed with a very vibrant and innovative tourism sector. These would include community-driven initiatives such as Bon Accord's dark skies certification. Bon Accord is, in fact, the only community in Canada and one of the first in North America to be certified for having dark skies sufficient to see all the stars that we can see.

We also have great work in developing some of our heritage resources such as Métis Crossing, Victoria Trail, and the remarkable Iron Horse Trail, that starts up from Smoky Lake. It kind of connects east and west. We also have unique attractions such as Jurassic Forest, Prairie Gardens, a rapidly growing historic park in Gibbons, and we have great festivals and rodeos across the entire riding, including the famous Smoky Lake pumpkin festival, where I was pleased to give the opening remarks this year; Boyle Rodeo days; the Thorhild Stampede; the Athabasca Magnificent River Rats Festival; Redwater Discovery Days; Bon Accord Harvest Days; and, well, the list goes on. Needless to say that during the summer I get the opportunity to see a lot of different events and eat a lot of excellent pancakes.

Now, we also are very fortunate to have a strong forestry products sector. Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater is the home of Alberta-Pacific Forest products, which at conception was the largest craft pulp mill in the Americas and which today still remains a leader in sustainability and innovation. We are also quite recently home to a softwood lumber mill in my home community of Boyle, Alberta, and this is a mill that I'm hoping will be able to reopen soon.

We're also extremely fortunate to be the home of Athabasca University. Athabasca University is a world leader in distance education, and it is through their innovative approach that we're able to bring high-quality degree-granting postsecondary education to students in rural communities across the province and to nonconventional students from across the world. Through this approach we have been able to train the leaders and innovators that will be needed for tomorrow's diverse economy within their own communities. Athabasca University is not only an exemplar of distance education; it's also an exemplar of anchoring high-quality knowledge-sector jobs in the rural communities, showing that this is something that is possible and desirable to do, and for the community of Athabasca the university being there has been a real saving grace.

Now, finally, and especially relevant to the work going forward to diversify Alberta's economy, the riding is home to the North West Redwater Partnership refinery project, which at last count is providing over 8,500 direct jobs both on-site and in the surrounding communities. There are also other notable employers in that area, including Pembina Pipeline, Agrium fertilizers, M.G. Williams, and I'm very hopeful that with our royalty tax credit there will be many more enterprises setting up and helping to diversify our economy in that area.

Now, the success of this development is due to a very far-sighted and, I think, excellently conceived partnership between government and industry. The Industrial Heartland Association, which is a unique partnership between municipalities and industry leaders, provides a single point of contact to facilitate economic development and diversification in the area as well as the land base. I'm quite confident that our new economic development ministry, which is based on a very similar philosophy, is going to be successful in providing those types of jobs across the province.

Finally, I would be remiss, of course, not to mention Canadian Forces Base Edmonton, which is an essential feature of my constituency and serves to not only protect Canadians but is also a powerful centre of economic activity for our region.

It is by building our existing strengths by, as the Lieutenant Governor has stated, capturing the full value of our resources that will we succeed. But what resources are we talking about? I think that our greatest resource all along has been the hard-working, resourceful, and compassionate folk that I have the great privilege to represent. If we remember our history and respect the contributions of those who went before us while at the same time having the courage to make the kind of changes we need in order to secure that prosperous future we all want for ourselves and for our children, then I think that things will work out just fine for us, and I pledge to my constituents that I will do my absolute utmost to make this so.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:00

Mr. Nixon: Standing Order 29(2)(a), Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to ask a question through you to the hon. member. Actually, let me first congratulate the member on his maiden speech before the Assembly. I know the area of his riding well, particularly around Athabasca. I've done a lot of stuff with Athabasca University over the years, which the member knows. I am curious if he could elaborate a little bit on the importance of Athabasca University to his riding and to the communities that he represents and what his intentions are as the representative for that community to advocate for that important university in the months to come as the government faces tough decisions in the community of Athabasca and the university faces tough decisions on the future of that university, which serves, last time I checked, about 44,000 students across this country.

Thanks.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, hon. member, for the question. Athabasca University is responsible for, I think at last count, about 485 direct jobs within the Athabasca community, and beyond that, it enriches Athabasca and the surrounding community culturally and economically and all the other sort of synergistic effects of having a world-class institution in that community, including world-class research projects.

Now, as to the member's second question, about my intentions regarding Athabasca University, these are some things that I've made clear from the very first day that I, you know, was a nominated candidate, and they have not changed. I'm committed to seeing a vibrant and sustainable Athabasca University remaining in Athabasca, and I have done and will continue to do my utmost to make sure that it remains in Athabasca and that it remains the world-class facility that students get to enjoy today.

Mr. Malkinson: Yes, 29(2)(a). The hon. member was speaking of his background as he has a long history in this province, and I was wondering if he could elaborate on some of his own background before entering politics. Since it sounds like he has such a rich history in the Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater area, I was wondering if he could elaborate for us.

Mr. Piquette: Okay. Thank you, hon. member, for the question. That's a pretty open-ended question, hon. member. Well, I've done a lot of different things. I haven't spent my entire life within that riding. In fact, I grew up in a little community called Plamondon, which is just outside of that, literally, by about five kilometres. However, I have been proud to call Boyle my home for the past five years, and previously I spent a few years living in Athabasca.

I've been fortunate in having a variety of occupations that helped inform my present position. I worked for some years while I was going to school as a chemical operator at Celanese Canada here in Edmonton. That's how I kind of got through my graduate degree, and that's kind of where I got a taste of just how important previous efforts at economic diversification really were. I mean, Celanese Canada, unfortunately, is no longer with us, but while it was here, it provided hundreds of very high-quality jobs, and it was the result of government policy.

After that, I worked in business, where I did a regional publication for local chambers of commerce, where I had an opportunity to meet a lot of different small-business people from different areas and got to understand and hear their concerns. From there, jeez, I don't know where we'd go. Like I said, it's a pretty open-ended question. I've been at times, I guess going back, a farmhand. I've done mud jacking. You know, I've even chased cows on horseback, so I don't know if you'd call it cowboying or not, right? I've done that.

More applicable to this job, I had the great opportunity of teaching ethics in law education at the University of Alberta for several years. I think that gave me a great understanding of not only the critical importance that teachers and teaching ethical behaviour and open-mindedness have in the formation of, you know, well-rounded citizens but the general importance of education for our continued survival as a democratic country as well. So I feel quite honoured that way.

My last job just before becoming elected: I was a financial adviser and insurance agent for Co-op. Oh, I guess we're out of time.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, it is my great pleasure and honour as the MLA for Sherwood Park to respond to the throne speech. Thank you to the people of Sherwood Park for the trust that they placed in me last year when I became their MLA.

In the throne speech the Lieutenant Governor stated:

We are currently overdependent on . . . a single price, and a single market. Alberta will address this in a number of ways.

First, we will diversify our energy markets. Second, we will pursue a coherent and effective economic development strategy . . . [and] we will invest in a greener, more sustainable economy.

This is great news for my riding of Sherwood Park, which is home to many employed in the upstream, downstream, and midstream oil and gas industries. We already have industries that have been engaged in exploring diversification and value-added production and who have taken big steps to reduce gas emissions and use energy more efficiently.

The Alberta petroleum diversification program, the review of the royalty system, the proposed investment in small and medium-sized businesses are all great news for my riding. Bill 1, Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act, introduced right after the throne speech, will provide the tools that are needed to support industries, small businesses, and Albertans in my riding.

The throne speech commitment to helping Alberta families who are facing immediate financial hardship and the implementation of the Alberta child benefit plan will help low-income families in my riding and support those families whose breadwinners have lost their jobs due to the price of oil.

Mr. Speaker, Sherwood Park is the urban hamlet of Strathcona county, a specialized municipality which I share with the MLAs for Strathcona-Sherwood Park and Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. I was also happy to discover that Nellie McClung was the MLA for what is now Sherwood Park, and I understand that the MLA for Edmonton-McClung has already claimed her. I am pleased also to note that I followed four other female MLAs when I was first elected, including the hon. Iris Evans, that many of you know.

Strathcona county includes the urban area of Sherwood Park and a large rural area with eight hamlets. I am sometimes asked about Sherwood Park's status as a hamlet. In Alberta the term "hamlet" describes urban centres because of the way they are governed, not because of their population or geographical size. If an urban centre is governed by the county in which it is located, then it's deemed to be a hamlet. On January 1, 1996, the province granted Strathcona county the designation of a specialized municipality, and this is what it is known as.

Mr. Speaker, Sherwood Park is actually the creation of a developer's vision in the 1950s to build a community to serve the new petrochemical industries in the county. Today it is its largest hamlet. The developer, perhaps thinking of the area's forested background, combined Sherwood with park to name the new development Sherwood Park. By the end of 1956 Sherwood Park had 30 families and has continued to grow. In 1961 it had 2,900 persons, with a total number of residents in Strathcona county of 12,000, which meant that the rural area had three times as many residents as the urban area. However, in 2015 out of a total of 95,500 residents, two-thirds, or 69,000, live in Sherwood Park and one-third in the rural areas, so as you can imagine, Sherwood Park has grown a lot in the last little while.

There are many special things in Sherwood Park. It is home to Festival Place, a 500-seat theatre, at which I hope many of you have gone to see a show. This theatre accommodates world-class performers, community theatres, musical recitals, and trains young people in the circus arts each summer. Each summer a favourite of the residents, including myself, is the weekly summer patio series, an outdoor concert featuring local and international performers. Maria Dunn will be performing at Festival Place in April.

It is also home to the Strathcona county library. However, it is a place that I have less time to visit these days. The library has wonderful pieces of art, including murals by artist Alex Janvier. This year the library board has decided to provide free library memberships for all residents, making the library even more resident friendly than it has been.

The Strathcona County Art Gallery @ 501 opened and unveiled its first exhibition to the public in 2011. The art gallery offers art education programs to children, teens, adults, families, groups, and schools. Currently the art gallery is showing photographs by Ethan Russell, photographs of important musicians, actors, and other celebrities. I'm hoping that many of you here today will have the opportunity to go and visit this exhibit. I am fortunate to have on loan in my office two paintings from the artist's collection of the art gallery.

The Strathcona county museum has done an incredible job of preserving the history of the county and its pioneer families, offering a rotating special exhibit and educational programs. I'm especially pleased that the museum offers an ongoing special exhibit highlighting the indigenous heritage in this area of Alberta, which also includes a mural by Aaron Paquette.

Unlike Edmonton, which has many community leagues, Sherwood Park has only one, the Gilmore Park Community League, headed by Tammy Greidanus. The Common Ground Community Cafe, run by volunteers and featuring fair trade coffee, local artists, and space for community conversation, is now becoming the community's gathering place. Kudos to Eileen and Ian Edwards, who spearheaded this initiative.

I am particularly delighted to see more and more ethnic and culturally diverse families moving to Sherwood Park. While door-knocking, I began to see that a change was happening in the Park, and the development of a mosque confirms that, like other communities in Alberta, Sherwood Park is a welcoming community for new and old Albertans.

Sherwood Park is home to a high percentage of families with school-age children. As a former hockey and soccer mom myself I appreciate the important volunteer work that parents and other adults do to ensure that children can be involved in team sports. We are fortunate in Sherwood Park with generous corporate sponsorships of our sporting facilities and youth teams. Meyer's Insurance sponsorship of youth sporting teams is well worth noting. Millennium Place, in part funded by local industries, is a large complex with ice arenas, which is sometimes the home for the practice session by visiting NHL teams, youth lounge, pickle-ball and badminton courts, a running track, fitness equipment, competition-length swimming pool, and my favourite, a spin cycle studio.

Under the leadership of Mayor Roxanne Carr council is currently exploring options to ensure that there are more affordable housing options in the Park. Seniors, in particular, are concerned about their ability to stay in Sherwood Park. I would like to take this opportunity to compliment the mayor on this initiative, and I look forward to working with her and council.

Now, the riding of Sherwood Park contains a number of important industrial areas. One of the oldest Canadian refineries is located at the border between my riding and Capilano. This refinery, the Imperial Esso refinery, is the only refinery in Canada that includes a manufacturing plant. It produces oil for the retail market that is packaged on-site. This refinery, with its pipeline terminals, rail car terminals, storage facilities, and all the gas- and oil-related industries in the Strathcona industrial area, provides employment for many in my riding and in Edmonton. As midstream industries they have not been as affected by the downturn in the price of oil.

While the Industrial Heartland area is now located in Sherwood Park, its activities are integrated in many of my riding's businesses. Located in the riding is also Alpha Steel, a steel recycling plant which uses discarded steel to make vials and rods. It was one of the biggest thrills, I think, so far in my career as an MLA when I went to this plant and in protective clothing watched the high-intensity furnace melt the old steel. I want to thank the intervention of our government, which allowed this company and others throughout Canada to successfully defend the Canadian International Trade Tribunal ruling that China, Korea, and Turkey were dumping steel, therefore preserving the local jobs in my riding and other ridings.

Many of the residents in the riding are interested in renewable energy projects. Two schools are exploring installing solar panels. These projects have been spearheaded by teachers who view these projects as a way to engage their students on climate change activities and to equip them with the tools for employment in the renewable energy industries.

Madam Speaker, my path to this Legislative Assembly is probably not that different from many of those who were elected on May 5 as we represent the most diverse set of MLAs ever elected. My first influence was as the daughter of a French Jew who as a young man deserted the French air force after the Vichy agreement and made his way to England to fight in the Free French Air Forces, in the famous Lorraine air squadron. My family's Jewish roots and the courage of the many who resisted and risked their lives to help others so they could be safe have been at the core of my own work in human rights and social justice.

I also have to thank my father for the second major influence in my life. When I was nine, we left France for New York City as my father had joined the United Nations Secretariat. Growing up I attended the UN International School, where I was exposed to cultures, languages, and ideas from around the world. I also spent a number of years living in England and Thailand before obtaining the international baccalaureate and graduating from the UN International School. The highlight was receiving my high school diploma in the General Assembly from the then Secretary-General of the United Nations, U Thant. I then went on to attend McGill University in Montreal as this offered me the possibility of living in French while pursuing my studies in English. I have to be grateful to the then Prime Minister of Canada, Pierre Elliott Trudeau, for the amnesty program that granted draft dodgers and students like me permanent resident status.

J'ai ensuite travaillé avec des jeunes francophones pour les aider à conserver leur langue et leur culture en Colombie-Britannique. Cette expérience me fait une ardente défenseur de nos communautés francophones. Je comprends leurs besoins d'écoles francophones et l'importance des programmes qui favorisent le maintien de la langue et de la culture. Je suis fier de faire partie d'un gouvernement qui reconnaît le fait francophone, d'un caucus composé de 15 francophones et francophiles, et de pouvoir parler en français dans l'Assemblée.

[Translation] Moving to British Columbia, I worked with francophone youths, helping them to maintain their language and culture. This experience has made me a strong advocate for our francophone communities in Alberta, understanding their need for francophone schools and the importance of programs that encourage the retention of language and culture. I am proud of belonging to a government that recognizes the francophone presence in Alberta, of belonging to a caucus with 15 francophone and francophiles, and of my ability to speak French in the Legislative Assembly. [As submitted]

I want to thank my colleague from Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater for reminding the Assembly of the Piquette affair. I am thankful to Leo Piquette for his leadership in allowing me to speak French today. I am proud to belong to this government, that recognizes the francophone presence in Alberta.

The government's support for the resettlement of Syrian refugees is one I can well identify with as I worked in the early 1980s helping match refugees from Laos, Cambodia, and Vietnam with sponsors in Canada and initiating programs in refugee camps throughout southeast Asia. In Sherwood Park there are at least five different refugee-sponsoring groups. One of them, the ecumenical refugee group, under the leadership of Marion Bulmer and Stephen London, has sponsored a family of 15, including a disabled adult.

My third major influence on the path towards becoming a Member of this Legislative Assembly is my marriage to an Albertan. Since my husband had followed me to Thailand in the late '80s, where we worked with leprosy patients and on sustainable farming practices, I thought it was only fair for me to follow him back to Alberta. While we lived in Thailand, we adopted two boys from a government orphanage. Our sons were brought up in a household where Thai, French, and Canadian cultures were intermingled. I am proud of their success. One is a teacher in an elementary school in China, and the other is a finance manager for a car dealership.

I have lived in some of the world's biggest cities, but I have also been fortunate to work and live in rural communities such as the county of Newell in southern Alberta. This is important for me as the MLA for Sherwood Park because while my riding is in the urban part of Strathcona county, it is really difficult to separate urban issues from rural issues in this municipality or, I think, throughout Alberta.

As I look back on a career and a path to this Legislative Assembly, I could not have chosen a better time in the history of Alberta. As an ecologist I am part of a government that has drafted a forward-thinking climate change strategy. As someone who has worked towards eliminating discrimination, we have amended the human rights legislation to include transgendered individuals. As an advocate for those living in poverty and of fair employment practices, we have increased the minimum wage and given farm and ranch workers the same coverage as other workers. As a francophone I am delighted by the efforts that our government is making to support language and culture retention. As the MLA for Sherwood Park I am proud of the work our government is doing to ensure diversification of our petrochemical industries and the focus on job creation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Please, Member, I would love to hear more.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Ms McKittrick: I'm not sure if the hon. member would like to hear about some of my adventures as I lived in other countries, but maybe the Assembly might be interested in one of the things that I have done that probably was the most moving thing in my life. In 1980 I was sent to Cambodia, Kampuchea at the time. It was just after the fall of Pol Pot. The organization I worked with was one of the first aid organizations in this country. I remember that the first time I was there was just before Christmas. The country was devastated. There barely was running water in the place where we stayed. There was no food. It was a very, very difficult situation. There was garbage all over Phnom Penh.

I think that this experience of spending Christmas in this country has moved me profoundly to always think about what happens in a country that has been subjected to war, discrimination, and hatred. It's very hard for me to describe the experiences that I lived when I went to see the tombs, the devastation, the people around that had no limbs because they had stepped on mines, the devastated hospitals, just the beauty that had been Cambodia totally destroyed by war and hatred. Like many people who now visit Cambodia and go to Phnom Penh, I went to the museum, where there were pictures of all the people that had died in that thing.

The other experience you might be interested in, if you want to hear about my experience overseas, was that in 1997, around the same time, I went to Bosnia-Herzegovina to be an observer for the Canadian government in their election. Again, I was in a country that was devastated by war. I was a European. You cannot imagine what it's like to be in Europe, that looks like World War II because things have been bombed, farmyards had been burned, and people had died. People had been murdered. There were graves everywhere. Here I was as an international observer having to watch out because the countryside was totally mined. When I was there, we were shot at. I don't know if anybody has been shot at in a country at war, knowing that people hate you so much because we happened to be in a car with Serbian plates even though I was part of an international observing mission. There we were, and it was in the night, and people shot at us because they didn't want any Muslims there.

Again, this experience has stayed with me, to know how much hatred is causing division, is destroying the economy. Can you imagine this country, just like Cambodia, if the economy of this country had been totally destroyed?

Anyway, those are just two of the incidents in my life that I think have made me as passionate and why I'm so happy to be part of this government, that has those issues at the core of who we are.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to congratulate and thank the Member for Sherwood Park for her maiden speech. I would like to thank the member for not only the work she is doing in her constituency but for the work she is doing in other constituencies in our beautiful province. Because of her knowledge and passion for co-operatives, the member recently joined me at a co-operative meeting held in Red Deer. Also, because of the member's fluency in French, she has very graciously accepted an invitation to help with the 2019 Canada Winter Games, to be held in Red Deer. I would like to ask the Member for Sherwood Park how she feels her fluency in French has been or could be an asset to Albertans.

Thank you.

Ms McKittrick: Madam Speaker, I think fluency in another language is an asset for whomever, and because I've had the opportunity, the pleasure, and the experience of being exposed to an environment where everybody spoke more than one language and to the importance also of retaining your mother tongue, I am a promoter of anyone speaking another language and of programs in our school, be they French immersion, Spanish, Cantonese, Mandarin, or Ukrainian, the opportunity for young people to speak another language and to be proud of their cultural heritage.

The Deputy Speaker: Next on my list I have Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Today I am pleased to give my maiden speech to the House, and with it I'd like to tell a bit of my story, the story of where I came from and why I'm here. Some of the members of this House may know some of the story, the story of how I came to this province seeking a better life and how I found it in Alberta. I came to this province in 2011 after feeling the economic crunch of 2008 in very real ways. After bouncing from tech start-up to tech start-up in an environment where surviving was the new success, I left B.C. to find new opportunities, and I found them here in Alberta.

For generations the saying was: head west, young man. It was uttered to young men seeking opportunity. I found myself heading east from my home in B.C. over the Rockies to a land that I saw as full of opportunity. When I came east to Alberta, I found a place where I found not only a job but a career, a community, and a home. When I got here, I looked around for any kind of job, whatever was on offer. Madam Speaker, given the common knowledge of my love of automobiles, finding a job in a mechanical field, I think, was a stroke of serendipity. At the time the guy who was hiring me painted a picture of what Alberta was like at that time. He asked questions such as: "Can you show up on time? Can you do that most of the time? Could you show up sober?" And it was a bonus that I grasped the concept of lefty loosey, righty tighty as it applies to bolts.

At that time Alberta was bleeding for skilled labour, and I found a niche bolting bits of industrial generators together. From there I soon found myself on the way up the ladder, going from the shop floor to shipping manager to project manager, eventually settling into a sales position that I held before getting elected. In a few short years I had gone from making diesel generators to selling them to a wide variety of industrial oil and gas clients right across this province. I am proud that I have helped energize Alberta industry but also to recognize that Alberta is more than just a set of economic numbers. Alberta is the people that make it up. Whether you are one of the people who have been here all their lives or if you're a relative newcomer, it doesn't matter. We are all Albertans, and we are all a part of this great province.

In coming to Alberta, I found the career, the home, and the sense of community I was looking for when coming to this province. Here I found a diverse group of people: people to go skiing with, people to enjoy tinkering with cars with, you name it. Wherever I went, I found people in the midst of building strong communities.

Today I sit in the New Democratic caucus proudly representing the communities that make up Calgary-Currie. Calgary-Currie is a vibrant inner-city riding that has seen great transformation over the years, from its pre-World War II airstrip and barracks to lumber mills and factories in the postwar boom and now as a developing part of Calgary's new urban, commercial, and residential cores.

Things change over time, and Calgary-Currie has grown with the city. The constituency has matured and is host to a diversity and vibrancy that excites me. Why does it excite me, Mr. Speaker? Because diversity and vibrancy are at the core of quality communities, communities of people who through thick and thin have stood for their community, stood by their neighbours, not because their families came from the same place in the old country or because they are in the same income bracket. No. They stick together because they are part of a community. They share the streets, the grocery stores, coffee shops, and parks. It doesn't matter that on one side of the street there is subsidized government housing and on the other multimillion-dollar homes overlooking the beautiful Bow valley. It doesn't matter because they are a community, and that is the important thing.

This diversity extends from our streets and into our schools, where we see a great number of different types of learning environments: elementary, high school, traditional learning, various immersion and Montessori programs. The list goes on, from private schools like Clear Water Academy, based in the former Currie barracks, where I actually attended Remembrance Day ceremonies this past November, to Richmond elementary school, where I spent a morning with students talking about environmental issues and waste. I have to admit that that was one of my toughest crowds to date, as I've never seen a group of 10-year-olds so excited about garbage. And it doesn't matter what we do or where we are from or how much money we make; what matters is that we come together as fellow Albertans and fellow human beings.

As members of the community residents of Calgary-Currie know that it takes more than strong families to build strong communities. It takes people willing to look past their differences. It takes people looking at the ties that bring us together rather than hurling insults across the aisle at those we disagree with, which we are often prone to do in this House.

I am so proud to be a part of the communities of Calgary-Currie, community associations like Killarney, Glengarry, Sunalta, Bankview, Richmond, Knob Hill, Rosscarrock, just to name a few. All offer an assortment of programs and services, from youth soccer and outdoor skating rinks to consultations on road speeds and community gardens. Beyond community associations we can find seniors' groups and service-oriented groups like the Calgary Society for Persons with Disabilities, HIV Community Link, and even the Federation of Calgary Communities. All find a home nestled in Calgary-Currie. We also have groups that draw on their cultural and ancestral ties like the Ukrainian cultural centre and the Hellenic society, who certainly cater to a particular group but are always willing to open their doors to curious neighbours or MLAs.

From LGBT activism to seniors' care to immigrant supports, Calgary-Currie has communities of people working together to make the world around them a better place. Honestly, Madam Speaker, it warms my heart whenever I think of the good work being done by all sorts of people in my community and my constituency because that is why we are here, to make the world around us better. Sometimes we disagree with each other, but we are all here in this Chamber working to make our world better, and we are all here due to the hard work of others who have supported us all our lives.

In my life I have a number of people who have helped me get to where I am today. Without a doubt my parents, Stuart Malkinson and Denise Paluck, have been the largest contributors to the man I am today. They instilled in me a sense of duty and respect to all people, and I'd like to think that the caring and empathetic man I am today is because of my parents.

My grandparents Eugene and Verna Paluck also played a huge role in my development as a person. It was with them that I first explored this province, visiting them every summer for a month, camping, fishing, and hiking along with their ever-present family dachshund. In all, I enjoyed the wilderness that we have in this province and am privileged that here in Alberta we have all of those recreational activities at our fingertips.

On the other side of my family Gladis and John Malkinson truly earned the title of grandparents, and while they passed away some years ago, I know in my heart of hearts that they would be beaming at the knowledge of where I am today.

Madam Speaker, more than the family I was born to, the family I chose has also played a huge role in my life. Long-time friends like Issa Kamisky, Rob Mackenzie, Steven Davenson, and David Wildmen were my partners, my compatriots, and my comrades in arms. Even those like my dear friends David Hollywood and Martin Carr, who were unable to live to see this day: I'm sure I'd be doing them proud now as well.

Among all those people who've supported and mentored me, Barry Bell is the one who got me into politics. He was a man of integrity, a man who meant what he said even if he knew it wasn't what you wanted to hear. He was honest to a fault at times, sometimes having a crowd of allies around him and being clear that he disagreed with them on a particular point. He wasn't going to lie simply to appease the crowd, but he was never beyond listening, having his mind changed, listening to the evidence and facts in front of him.

It was in their honour that I stood for election with the Alberta NDP three times, and I've always aimed to conduct myself with the same level of integrity and honesty that these people I've previously mentioned have instilled in me throughout my life. It is these people who've made me the man I am today, the family I was born to and the family I chose. These are the people who've made up my community through my life.

Whether it's the schools, community organizations, or even just community gardens, the greatest thing about Calgary-Currie is the people. I've worked with parents who give days, weeks, and months of their lives to seeking solutions, to providing for their children the greatest opportunities possible. I've sat down with groups of seniors who were incredibly interested in a gamut of controversial topics. I've also met with business owners, both large and small. Even those who've come into my office in crisis situations, I feel, have come away with a greater sense of purpose and courage, not because me or my staff are able to solve their problems in that moment but because, before they came into my office, they felt alone, isolated, and in fear. No. They leave my office knowing that there are people out there who care, that there are communities of people out there willing and able to support them.

When I used to cast my ballot on election day in the past and now on a daily basis here as part of daily Routine, I looked beyond the policies, beyond the rhetoric and tried to find the people who we are trying to help in this Assembly. When we vote on farm safety, when we vote on job creation, when we vote on LGBTQ rights, I strive to find the people behind the policy. I think of the tradespeople who work often late at night, outside or in shops, fixing our infrastructure, keeping our utilities running and the literal gas and diesel engines of commerce running. I started my career in Alberta working with these people and understand their concerns, their hopes, and their dreams of making a life for themselves and their families. As a result, concerns of safety and fair taxation will always be close to my heart.

I think of the men and women who I marched with on February 14 at the murdered and missing indigenous women's march which took place in my riding, recognizing the abhorrent situation that faces too many of our First Nation, Métis, and Inuit friends. It is not okay that we have let so many of our sisters fall through the cracks, and it is not okay that for so many years we have been systematically ignoring their plight.

Policies, community, and politics: it all comes down to people. It all comes down to what people do. I am here because I was supported by people, and I want to support people. It takes more than individuals to build a strong province. Just like it takes a village to raise a child, it takes vibrant communities to build vibrant communities. Madam Speaker, I am so proud of where I have come from and what I have gone through, but I am even more proud of the work that I'm doing now supporting communities of people who form the backbone of what makes Alberta great.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, thank you so much for recognizing me this afternoon. Just very briefly, while the member and I may see the path to getting there significantly differently, I just wanted to point out that his passion for people and his words that he shared with the Assembly today are certainly heartfelt, and I myself will be taking them home, if you will, as I look at my own family and as I look at the constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. It is a wonderful reminder to us all why we're here, so I commend the hon. member for his remarks today.

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-Mill Creek, 29(2)(a).

Ms Woollard: Thank you very much. Member, I was wondering – I was really moved by your words as well – if you'd like to elaborate any more on some of your experiences, especially about some of the inspiration you derived especially from Mr. Bell and any possible examples you'd like to share of how he inspired you to develop those honourable qualities that you saw in him.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to also commend the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I think it's important that we think about the people that we represent.

You know, the story that comes to mind when speaking of Mr. Bell and sort of how he did politics: in 2006 Mr. Bell was running for the federal NDP, and at that time I was still in university, and I had decided that I wanted to get involved. You know, I didn't like what I saw of the government of the time, so I went out to an all-candidates debate that was hosted by a local church. In that election all the candidates were up there, including Mr. Bell, and at some point in the evening a member of the congregation asked the valid question about gay marriage, which at that time was a very controversial issue. The question was something to the effect of: would the people up there vote against their party if enough of their members wrote them or phoned them? Something to that effect.

Now, one of the things that struck me is that at that time all of the other candidates, you know, pandered to that particular audience. At the end to speak was Mr. Bell, who said something to the effect that for him on that issue it was a very deeply held personal belief and that for the party he was representing, it was also a deeply held belief. He also pointed out that for at least some of the other candidates that were up there, that particular point was a deeply held belief of those other parties. One of the things he suggested was that maybe those other members didn't quite get how party politics works when it's a core belief of the party, suggesting perhaps that they were willingly misleading that particular crowd. Of course, as you can imagine, that particular answer went over very well. I believe there were pieces of paper thrown and some boos. What I took away from that was sort of what I alluded to in my speech, which is that we need to be able as politicians to say what we mean.

Many people have come into my office who have suggestions that perhaps I don't agree with or I feel that they haven't given me enough evidence that I would want to take up that particular cause or a particular change to legislation. I feel it's important that when I have those constituents come into my office who, like I said, I feel haven't convinced me that that is something that I want to take on, that I don't want to have them leave my office feeling like I'm going to, you know, do that just because I want to make them feel happy leaving my office. I always tell them that, for whatever reasons I have at that moment, they haven't convinced me. If they have some new evidence or things change, they're welcome to come back into my office and meet again and attempt to change my mind. I feel it's important that I'm honest with whoever I deal with in the community about what my position is that I'm bringing forward on behalf of the community. I think that's something we can all strive to do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

If the Assembly would allow me, it's a privilege to represent our people, but I can tell you, as someone who has a little bit more grey hair than most of you in the House, that it's also a privilege to be serving here with people and to get an opportunity to learn so much about their lives and stories. It really is quite a unique opportunity that happens for very few, so we should consider ourselves extremely lucky.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my distinct honour to rise today as a representative of the good people of Edmonton-Centre to reply to the hon. Lieutenant Governor's delivery of the Speech from the Throne. When I received the nomination to run as my party's candidate in Edmonton-Centre just over one year ago, I couldn't have imagined that I would find myself standing here today in this Assembly among such a diverse representation of the people of Alberta, having the privilege and the responsibility of helping to lead our province.

Having been awarded that honour, I embrace it with all of the joy and gravity I learned from one of my early mentors, a woman named Yin Liu. I met Yin in the summer of 1995 when I was enrolled in the outdoor leadership training program at Crowsnest Lake Bible Camp. Now, Yin was not your average woman nor what one might expect from an instructor in wilderness survival. She stood about five foot six, weighed maybe 120 pounds. She wore large-framed glasses, and her daily uniform consisted of a white lab coat, T-shirt, khaki pants, hiking boots, and an ever-present camp baseball cap. She was, in fact, a doctoral student studying medieval English literature, but she was also one of the greatest examples of a leader that I've had the privilege of knowing. She was quiet and unassuming. I don't believe I ever heard her raise her voice. Yet Yin rarely ever had any trouble commanding respect, and that was because Yin led by example.

One of the first things Yin introduced us to as part of our training program was the concept of servant leadership. Yin believed that the role of a leader was to take on the jobs that no one else wanted to do. Not only that, she believed that you didn't just do them with a sigh of resignation. Yin believed in taking on the things that no one else wanted to deal with and doing them with joy. The jobs and the problems that leave everyone standing around, looking at their feet or quietly making for the exits, were the things that Yin would make her own.

She'd jump up after dinner, and she'd race to the dish pit for the privilege of scrubbing the burnt pots. After a four-day out-trip she'd be the first one to offer to stay behind and clean and hang the groundsheets to dry so that others could go and take a hot shower first. You know what? That kind of attitude is infectious. It didn't take long before our group of trainees began to adopt a similar attitude. It became a game to see who could outdo the others in taking on thankless tasks.

That, I believe, is the mark of a true leader. Leaders inspire. They bring out the best in those they lead, and they do it not just by standing in front and telling others what needs to be done. They do it by rolling up their sleeves, getting down in the dirt, and working alongside everyone else. They do it by taking on the jobs no one else wants to do and taking ownership of the problems no one else wants to tackle.

In the first months after my election as an MLA I took the opportunity to immerse myself in the rich diversity of Edmonton-Centre and connect with as many of the people, communities, and organizations who call it home as I could. Mr. Speaker, I daresay that Edmonton-Centre is one of the most diverse and dynamic constituencies in the province of Alberta. Between 2001 and 2014 the population of our downtown core more than doubled, from just over 6,000 to over 13,000 residents, and that growth continues with 140 new residential units in 2015, another 1,500 currently under construction, and another 2,000 planned. That population is incredibly diverse, including new Canadians, postsecondary students, professionals, public servants, families, and seniors. They span all income levels, social classes, ethnicities, ages, and gender and sexual identities, and I'm proud to have the honour of representing them all.

I've met with the Oliver and Downtown Edmonton community leagues, committed collectives of young leaders who have stepped up to build real community in our urban core through gardens, potlucks, community investment, local advocacy, and civic engagement, building a better city not only for themselves and their members but for us all. Oliver is also home to a significant portion of Edmonton's LGBTQ community, members from whom I've had the pleasure of learning of their deep, local history, working to build and support their community and advocate for their rights. I've also had the honour of accompanying them to meet with the Minister of Justice and celebrating with them as our government moved forward with adding gender identity and expression to the Alberta Human Rights Act and aided our schools in adopting policies to support full inclusion of trans, nonbinary, and two-spirited youth.

These neighbourhoods are also home to many buildings and facilities for seniors, many seniors' homes, and I've enjoyed the opportunity to visit with the residents at each, to hear their thoughts and perspectives and make note of their concerns. I look forward to building on these relationships and continuing to learn from their years of experience.

I've had the pleasure of supporting the work of community volunteers in Central McDougall, a community that is home to many new Canadians and many families, all of whom are working to reach out to their neighbours to provide programs and facilities that bring people together and offer much-needed support. I've spoken with the residents of Queen Mary Park, also home to many new Canadians, who are regularly invited to connect with the longer term residents, again to build community and work towards the revitalization of these historic family neighbourhoods. In the river valley I've connected with the residents of Rosedale and learned of their work to build stronger community and work with the city towards a new redevelopment plan.

It's important, Mr. Speaker, to recognize that Rosedale and indeed much of the land on which we are currently standing were historic meeting grounds for Alberta's indigenous peoples. I recognize that within my constituency there are many residents of indigenous descent. With them we are all treaty people, here by the grace of an agreement to share in the bounty and prosperity of this territory and to provide for the health, welfare, education, and infrastructure of Alberta's First Nations and their members. I am proud of our government's commitment to see this treaty truly and fully honoured.

I was moved by the Premier's heartfelt apology last June for the legacy of residential schools, the effects of which we still see rippling through the heart of our city. I've been pleased to see First Nations given increased prominence, their voices being heard in our consultations on the climate leadership plan and mental health review. I look forward to new opportunities for us to continue to rebuild trust that will come with the repeal of Bill 22 and repatriation of indigenous sacred objects.

Mr. Speaker, in my 10 months since being elected, I've had the opportunity to meet with countless community groups and organizations who embrace the philosophy I learned from Yin Liu and take on the challenging work of supporting many marginalized communities. In Edmonton-Centre there's no hiding from the fact that there are many in need. Every day our residents see people who are homeless or inadequately housed; who are struggling with mental health, addictions, or emotional trauma; or who are simply caught in the economic turmoil caused by the recent historic drop in the price of oil and our overdependence on a single commodity, a single price, and a single market.

I am constantly amazed at the number of dedicated men and women I meet every week who roll up their sleeves day after day to do whatever they can to help meet these needs. There are far too many for me to name, but I look forward to opportunities to introduce some of them in the future to this House. These organizations are out there fighting homelessness, promoting harm reduction. They're offering safe spaces, meals, bathroom and laundry facilities for homeless youth and adults; affordable, accessible health and dental care and mental health supports; assistance navigating government programs and services; and, most importantly, a chance to reclaim the dignity that should be afforded all human beings.

Mr. Speaker, I ran for this position in no small part to ensure that government would continue to support this important work while endeavouring to reinvest in key services as we are still recovering from the effects of poorly planned or considered cuts by previous governments. I'm pleased to have the honour to serve with a government that is holding that line.

I also have the honour of representing two strong postsecondary institutions. NorQuest College offers a wide range of ground-level programs and offers thousands of Albertans, including new Canadians, indigenous students, and students with disabilities, access to new and better careers. I'm excited to see that impact expand with their new Singhmar Centre for Learning.

Grant MacEwan University, which is my first alma mater, though it was a community college when I attended, is a university that now offers a wide range of degrees in a uniquely student-focused learning environment. I graduated from their internationally acclaimed music program in 1995, and I'm incredibly pleased that it and all of their arts programs will be coming to Edmonton-Centre in the fall of 2017.

Edmonton-Centre has long been one of the city's main hubs for the arts, being the home of the Edmonton Symphony Orchestra and the Winspear Centre, the Citadel Theatre, the Art Gallery of Alberta, the upcoming new Royal Alberta Museum, music venues like the newly launched Needle Vinyl Tavern, and a wide variety of galleries and artist spaces. It's been my pleasure to offer my vigorous support to all of these organizations, and it's amongst my highest priorities to continue to see them thrive and contribute to the vibrancy of our city's culture and economy.

I'm also thrilled with the growth of new independent businesses within our downtown core, particularly along its northern edge, and will continue to work with partners and local government and community to remove barriers to their success and help them access the many tools our government is making available to help them thrive.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to acknowledge that I have the honour of representing many public servants, men and women who spend every day working on behalf of the people of Alberta, including many who provide the essential supports that allow us to do our work in this House. I'm proud to stand with our government in our commitment to maintain secure and stable funding to our key services and a rational, evidence-based approach to improving the operations of our public service so that my constituents, from the front lines up to our ministries, are not needlessly vilified but, instead, are engaged as willing partners in offering the best service for value to the people of Alberta.

In conclusion, there's one more story, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to share about my time at Crowsnest. On the final full day of a six-day out-trip our training group was descending from a mountain ridge, and we began making our way towards our final campsite. This trip on a normal day would take about two to three hours. On that day it took nearly seven. That's because in the upper areas of the Rockies in late May it's not unusual to still have several feet of snow. That day was especially warm, and as at that time I weighed about 250 pounds plus the weight of a 50-pound pack, with every step I took my leg would plunge up to my hip in snow. A phenomenon known as postholing.

As a result I was forced to progress at a snail's pace. But as I did, Mr. Speaker, our leader, Yin, and all of my fellow members stayed with me every agonizing step of the way. They offered encouragement and handfuls of trail mix and ensured that I was never alone because true leadership, true citizenship, true community lies in not abandoning those in need and ensuring that no one gets left behind.

To quote the Lieutenant Governor's gracious speech: "In tough times we always pull together. We have each other's backs. We support each other in these times instead of making a bad situation worse." Most importantly, Mr. Speaker, we don't make short-sighted decisions for short-term gain that hurt the most vulnerable and see them left behind.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to coming alongside the people of Edmonton-Centre, hearing their voices, understanding their challenges, and supporting their work. I pledge to take on the difficult jobs, to make their issues my own, and to work with integrity with my colleagues on both sides of this aisle to ensure that the Alberta advantage extends to everyone.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you very much. Through you to the member I want to thank him for his maiden speech. It was phenomenal and inspiring. I have to say that I share this philosophy of servant leadership and leading by example. I'd like to know from the member what lessons learned he has had in the last eight months from implementing this style of leadership in his own constituency. Please expand on it.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, as I said, one of the incredible things that I've found is just the incredible spirit of Albertans and their willingness to pull together and help each other. Again, the number of volunteers or people that are working for nonprofits, for pay far lower than they could be making in other industries, because of their passion, because they care, because they want to help people in need is astounding for me, and it's incredibly inspiring. It's been amazing for me to see how much it means for them simply to have their representative from government come to see them, to encourage them, and to be willing to listen to them and hear what their concerns are.

Mr. Speaker, these are the people that know best what needs to be done. They're on the front lines every day. They see what the needs are. They see what the challenges are. They see the effects of the decisions that we make in this House. It's an incredible privilege that I have as a member of this Assembly and as a representative to be able to go out and see the work they do, to learn about it, to share in it, and to encourage them going forward. I've seen that being done by my colleagues in many instances as well, you know, and from what I've seen on social media, I've seen that from the members and my colleagues across the aisle. That's one of the most wonderful things, I think, about this new Legislature that we have. We have so many here who are just thrilled, who are so excited to have this opportunity to serve Albertans, to be able to go out into their communities and truly listen, represent their constituents, and bring a new voice to this House.

We have such a wonderful diversity of people representing every part of this province: the number of women we have here, the number of people from so many different ethnicities, the fact that we have the first LGBTQ members to ever sit in this House. Again and again when I go out to the community, I hear people who are so excited to see that their government, that their Legislature, that their representatives represent who they are.

These are some of the lessons that I've learned. These are some of the opportunities that I've had. Again, every day I get up and I just recognize what a privilege it is to have the honour to serve in this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was with great interest that I listened to the Member for Edmonton-Centre's speech, particularly the part where he said that he graduated from Grant MacEwan College with a degree in music. I know that in my time as Advanced Education minister it's been fascinating to find out all the interesting things that are going on with the training and investment in fine arts and music training across the province. I do have to say that I am disappointed that none of our postsecondary institutions offer any specific instruction in accordion, but I would like to ask the member to expand upon the value that he thinks a training in fine arts and music in particular adds to the quality of life and the standard of living for the people of Alberta.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I can honestly say that the skills I learned working as a musician and studio engineer I use every day in this work. You know, the ability to stand in front of an audience and hold a crowd: this job certainly involves a certain level of performance, and I've certainly got good training in that. But, of course, the creative abilities that I explored there, the ability to take a theme and expand on it, to be able to find new arrangements for new ideas, to be able to explore different directions, different ways to approach a particular piece: again, all those things, that creativity, those critical-thinking skills, I put to use every day.

Certainly, the opportunities I had to work with so many other people, to learn about collaboration: there is no greater collaboration, in some ways, than to get on a stage with a group of people, have a simple melody line, and from that create a whole new piece of music. To be able to improvise, to be able to work together, to be able to listen to the people you're working with: an incredible opportunity and another set of skills that I gained from music that, again, I have the opportunity to use every day, including in my work here in this House.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm deeply honoured to be able to rise today and address the Legislative Assembly for the first time in response to the Speech from the Throne, delivered by Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor. Before I begin, I would like to extend my sincerest thanks to the Honourable Lois Mitchell for her work as our Queen's representative in Alberta. This is clearly a new era for our province in more than one way. This is an exciting time, and I'm thrilled to play a part in it.

Now I would like to say a few words about why I'm here in the first place. Bonnyville-Cold Lake has been represented as its own distinct constituency since 1997, when it was originally established. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you today the constituents of Bonnyville-Cold Lake, who have graced me with the privilege of being their voice in this Assembly. The riding encompasses a geographical area of well over 7,000 kilometres, and we have a very large collection of communities who call this home, about 35,000 Albertans, and that means about 10,000 households. The communities are the MD of Bonnyville, the city of Cold Lake, the town of Bonnyville, the village of Glendon, the Elizabeth settlement, the Fishing Lake settlement, Cold Lake First Nation, Frog Lake First Nation, Kehewin Cree Nation.

I do not take the responsibility of representing my community members lightly, Mr. Speaker. In a number of ways Bonnyville-Cold Lake encompasses much that makes Alberta unique. As a largely rural community it retains the foundations of our province's initial success. The oil and gas industries are by far the largest employers in our communities, and they are a key component of the province's economic backbone. In fact, the oil and gas industry alone provides the livelihoods of over 17 per cent of Albertans in Bonnyville-Cold Lake, and it actually is one of the richest oil-producing regions in all of Canada. As such, it is an industry near and dear to our hearts as well as to all Albertans, who prosper as a result.

We are proud of the role the residents of our communities have played and will continue to play in the tradition of Alberta economic independence, and this tradition of hard work and community building goes back a long way, Mr. Speaker. Long before Bonnyville-Cold Lake came into its own as a presence in 1997, the people of this area were hard at work building the communities and contributing to Alberta's future. These people are proud and diverse groups. We have a significant francophone community as well, complete with two French-speaking schools as well as several French immersion schools, which, proudly, I will announce, my two daughters, Amelia and Charlotte, both attend.

Many hon. members may be aware of the strong Ukrainian presence in the Bonnyville-Cold Lake area as well. In fact, we boast the world's largest perogy, in the town of Glendon. I recommend going to see it. Throughout the riding we have a strong, proud indigenous and Métis presence. These communities have always made me feel welcome at any event that I've attended. This shows the compassion that flows through the indigenous communities, and I am very thankful for all of the outreach they have done to me to date. You also might know that we are the host to a major military base, which plays an integral part in our community. The base brings real stability to Bonnyville-Cold Lake through these hard economic times. It also puts our great constituency on the map as the ambassador of the province to the rest of the country and ultimately to the rest of the world.

I need to also recognize the veterans within my riding. We have the veterans volunteering, and through the community spirit that they bring – we have a stronger community because of it. Throughout my riding these veterans hold my greatest respect for the contributions that they have made to Canada and our province and the municipalities that are all within my riding.

We as residents also take a great deal of pride in our responsibility of representing the province and the contributions to Alberta's development. We aren't just oil and gas. When people hear Cold Lake, they hear oil and gas, and that is true. We do have a very large oil and gas base, but we also have an agriculture base. The agriculture base adds to our rich, diverse heritage. Cold Lake encompasses so much that makes Alberta unique and competitive. When you talk about my riding, though, to ignore our farms and ranches would be a mistake. These are the hard-working men, women, and children who feed us, and many Albertans and Canadians have forgotten that the food that is on their table isn't actually grown in the supermarket. I have dedicated local farmers and ranchers who take the time to go out to our local schools and teach our local children the value that farms have in Alberta, and that makes me proud.

We as constituents of Bonnyville-Cold Lake understand that diversity in our riding is paramount. Mr. Speaker, it is a truly humbling privilege to be entrusted to represent all of the communities within my riding. However, I do need to credit all of the retired MLAs from the Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituency, who have worked hard moving my constituency forward through the difficult times before. I'd like to name a few because I think it's important that we don't forget these important MLAs that have represented us in the past: retired member Genia Leskiw, who is known for her work within the Ukrainian community and with the senior citizens within our community; retired member Denis Ducharme, who is known for his work to create opportunity within the business community and who served as the minister of community development; retired member Leo Vasseur, who brought change to our community and brought a new direction, is a well-respected businessman still in the town of Bonnyville; retired member Ernie Isley served as the minister of manpower, the minister of public works and supply and services, the minister of agriculture, the minister of agriculture and rural development, and the minister of agriculture, food, and rural development.

It is an honour to be following such great men and women, and I would like to actually bring forward a statement that past member Ernie Isley had spoken in his original maiden speech on May 28, 1979, at page 39.

Mr. Speaker, over the years governments have probably earned the reputation of being reactors as opposed to actors. I think we're now in a situation where we can reverse that conception. This means that all departments of our provincial government must be prepared to play some real leadership in conjunction with the local governments in making the growth of the Cold Lake area a positive success story.

This government needs to consider the wisdom of retired members. They need to go through what has happened in the past and see what has gone wrong. The wisdom of retired member Ernie Isley is brought through by the fact that we need to stop acting and we need to start working towards bringing jobs to the Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituency. I wish I had more time to list all of the extensive successes of past members, but unfortunately we'd be here for the rest of the evening. We've had some really great MLAs in Bonnyville-Cold Lake that have shaped the future of Alberta, shaped the future of Bonnyville-Cold Lake. The responsibility the constituents have granted me I do not take lightly, and I can assure you that I have men and women before me who are good examples to strive towards.

We do have our own struggles that I am sure the past MLAs have navigated through. We have seen a large migration out of Bonnyville-Cold Lake, which has brought a very large inventory of houses on the market, which is starting to show in lower house prices. The fact is that people are moving away to feed their families. How do we prevent this? We are proud Albertans, and we've forgotten that we have gone through this before, but it's worse. It's worse than it's ever been. And we can blame the price of oil, but it's not solely the price of oil that is responsible for what we are going through right now; it is the instability that this government has brought through legislation in the past, well, almost year.

My conversations with local businessmen and -women across the riding have shown that we have about a 25 to 40 per cent job loss rate happening in Bonnyville-Cold Lake right now, and that is across all industries: restaurants, insurance. That is almost everything that is happening in my riding right now.

This is insane. I have people hurting. Their voices need to be heard. It hurts me to see people that have lived in the riding for 10, 20, and 30 years moving away to get more jobs in either B.C. or Saskatchewan. I understand their need to find work outside their riding. It is important to show that we are still able to provide. We can't. They're looking to us for direction as the MLAs, and we are showing repeatedly that there is no direction that we are going in to help my riding. We're also seeing this across, in my opinion, Alberta.

Now, we have seen the fact that the government has tried, and I will give them credit; they have brought out some legislation that is meant to be job friendly. Let's start with the fact that we have the job creation grant that came out. I have no businesses in Bonnyville-Cold Lake that are hiring new hires right now. It is a shame to see that these grants were never targeted to where the worst layoffs are happening.

We've also seen that the announcement of the carbon tax is affecting our local business community. The fact is that right now they can barely make ends meet. We heard our Premier today state that, really, businesses are rich. They're just holding on, trying to get through this, and to state that a 1 per cent decrease in the corporate tax rate is something that our government can't help our small-business community through is preposterous. The fact that we have more expenses coming on our local business community in this time frame through that carbon tax . . .

The Speaker: The Member for Drumheller-Stettler. Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Strankman: Yes, sir. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under 29(2)(a), to the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. It's an honour to rise and question the member. You know, he's talking about the passion of facing people who are out of their jobs. We heard the Member for Calgary-Currie comment about his humble beginnings as he came to Alberta from British Columbia. I was pleased to hear that. You are also facing those types of people. Can you elaborate a little bit on the numbers of people that you've had crossing the doors of your Legislature office or the people that have approached you on the streets or at public functions that you've been at? I think that people and the members in this Chamber need to know in many ways the absolute social cost to what's occurring in the economy in Alberta today.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What isn't widely known – and I thank the member for the question – is that a lot of the companies across Bonnyville-Cold Lake right now are holding on to their employees and rolling back their wages. They're cutting off the overtime. They're job-sharing. And that's very admirable. But what we're not hearing is the fact that there are a lot of contractors that also support the oil and gas industry, contractors that right now are asking: where can I go to find work and be able to bring food for my family? I've had several contractors go through my office, and they've been saying: "Scott, what do I do? Where are we going?" I say: "Well, we've got this job-creation credit. Job-creation credit. You need to hire people." "Well, I'm one man and a truck. How's that $5,000 that's going to be paid in 2017 going to help me?" You're right; it's not going to help you. You aren't qualifying for employment insurance because you are a contractor. You have no choice but to find work elsewhere. That's what the real flaw in all of this comes down to, that we have an industry that is saying: we need some stability from the Alberta government, and we aren't seeing it.

We had a royalty review that came back with no change; seven months, no change. This is crazy. The fact is that when we're looking at the royalty review, that has done so much damage to my riding, now we've got oil and gas companies saying: well, now we've got a carbon tax; where else are we going to go? The fact is that when we're looking for answers from the government, stability from the government, we are not finding it, and my riding – my riding – right now is hurting because of it.

We need to start looking to move forward in a direction that is best for all Albertans. The fact is that we are not seeing that right now. We have brought forward that that job-creation program that the government had put through wouldn't work, and the government just didn't listen. We continued to say: yeah, raise corporate taxes; you're going to hurt us. They didn't listen. If you raise minimum wage, it's going to hurt us. They didn't listen. You continue to raise taxes and – guess what? – you're going to put my businesses out of business, and that is where we are not going to have any taxes to collect. That means that we're not going to be able to supply money for our most vulnerable because there's not going to be any. How can we have any support for our most vulnerable when there's no tax base left because they've all gone to Saskatchewan or B.C.? This is a travesty.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to ask the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake a question about a comment that he made about the carbon tax. I know that a good portion of the oil and gas development that occurs in his riding is conducted by CNRL at their Primrose and Wolf Lake facilities. I'd like to remind the member that when we rolled out our climate leadership plan, it was, in fact, the CNRL chairman, Murray Edwards, who said: on behalf of Canadian Natural Resources Limited, my colleagues from Suncor, Cenovus, and Shell we applaud Premier Notley for providing us a position of leadership on climate policy. So I'm wondering how good a job the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake is doing in representing the concerns of his constituents when a major producer of oil and gas has specifically endorsed our climate leadership plan.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The oil and gas industry don't even know how to deal with the NDP government. They're jumping on ship just because they have no choice. The fact is that we are going to have a carbon tax that's going to cost my average resident and business a thousand dollars a year. A thousand dollars a year. When we're looking at carbon taxes, we're looking at a tax that is going to attack our most vulnerable. It is going to attack my residents. It's going to attack my small businesses, and the fact that we've got oil companies that are jumping on ship with the NDP government distresses me to no end, but it is what it is. You know what? I am still proud to say that CNRL is an active business in my community employing Albertans right now, and the fact that we've got Cenovus, we've got EnCana, we've got all of these other oil, gas, and pipeline companies that are still functioning in my riding – we need to say: "Good job. Let's keep moving. Let's get through this whole NDP government in three years."

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Any other questions?

Mr. Hinkley: I guess I just also want to check if the hon. member would like us to go back to the good old days to help his people, and I would remember the Alberta advantage if that's where he wants to go back to. I will refer back to the corporate tax rates and the small-business tax rates of Mr. Klein in 1994. It was 15.5 per cent for corporate tax. We now have it at 12 per cent. For the small-business tax rate it was 6 per cent. We now have it at 3 per cent. So, I guess, who ruined Alberta?

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to respond to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar regarding his question with the . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: I'm sorry. What was your question?

Mr. Yao: I wish to ask a question through Mr. Cyr.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Yao: All right. I'd like to ask you, sir: do these oil sands companies, especially these ones that have made these ...

The Speaker: Directly to the Speaker if you could.

Mr. Yao: ... agreements with the government, have any projects planned here in the near future?

Mr. Cyr: I could think of one example. We've got an oil company called Osum up in my riding right now. They actually have a full plant ready to go, and it's sitting there. They're not installing it. They're not putting it in. They're not going to build it. The whole plant is sitting on the site. That's in my riding right now. That is what the reality is of what is happening in Alberta right now. They've actually got plants here right now ready to go, and they're not building them, and it's because of the instability this government continues to show our economy. The fact that our economy is the backbone of Canada and we've got no pipeline access is insane. The fact that we've got a Premier that doesn't appear to be supporting the fact that we need pipelines going from Bonnyville-Cold Lake out to start getting our ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure if I can top that last performance, but I will certainly try. I'm here to respond to the Speech from the Throne this afternoon. I would like to thank, first of all, the Lieutenant Governor for her delivery of the speech. Certainly, it was a very important occasion, and the messages within the speech I think were both edifying and give us a sense of direction of where we'll be going in this legislative session and beyond.

Certainly, as the Minister of Education I'm always looking at each of our policies through the lens of how we can improve and build our K to 12 education system here in the province of Alberta. Mr. Speaker, really, so many of the policies that we do around the economy, around climate change, around building social services all serve, in my mind, to help to build the education for our children for their future.

When we look at ways to have a healthier society, to have long-term stability in our economy and other functions that help to build our society, I always look at it as a means by which we can strengthen our education system here in the province of Alberta. We know that we are in an economically unstable circumstance, but that doesn't mean by any means that we should compromise the more than 659,000 students that we have in our charge from kindergarten to grade 12 here in the province of Alberta's schools. Their need for different education at different stages in their lives does not change with the price of oil. We know that we're willing to make sacrifices, and significant sacrifices, to ensure that education is not just surviving here in the province of Alberta, but it's evolving, and it's thriving, and we have the best education in all corners of the province regardless of where our children live.

I'm proud of the commitment each of these caucus members here and our Premier have made to K to 12 education. From the beginning, when we first took office, when I first took this position, we restored funding for enrolment in the province of Alberta, and we are continuing to do so today. Now, nine months in, we've tabulated at least 740 new teaching positions, new hires, and more than 800 support service jobs that were saved and/or hired again to meet the growing enrolment. We know from each corner, each of the 87 constituencies that we represent, that enrolment in our schools is growing precipitously. We have to make sure that we plan ahead, long-term planning, to meet that growth over time. The biggest growth, Mr. Speaker, is for children between one and five years old, so you know that they will go right through our school system and need those facilities and need the top-notch teachers there in front of them every step of the way.

To that end, Mr. Speaker, we are embarking and/or are in the midst of – all of you know it, right? – the most ambitious infrastructure building projects in the history of this province: 232 schools across the province from K to 12 in every single constituency here in the province of Alberta. I enlist each and every one of you to make sure you keep a close eye on those projects to see where that progress is so that we have those schools being built for the kids when we need them and in a reasonable fashion.

I'm seeing some promising signs across the province. We've put in a very strong mechanism by which we can monitor the school capital projects as they're being built. I'm starting to see some promising signs in regard to schools being built on schedule or even ahead of schedule now in these last few months. We know that contractors are looking for work, and it's a great time to build public infrastructure here in the province of Alberta. I see some incredible progress.

I was speaking to Edmonton public schools, for example, in the last day or so. They had two schools on tender. The bids were coming in on average 19 per cent below what we were expecting them to, and they chose one bid, or one contractor, that was at 23 per cent below, saving more than $9 million dollars, Mr. Speaker, in building those two schools. It's great. I mean, it's a great time to build infrastructure.

We will continue on with that strong monitoring process. Each and every one of you must make sure that you're giving me the information – I've been getting it as we've come back here to the Legislature – of where your school projects are at. Bring it on. That's what we need. We need that information, and I need to make sure that we're keeping on top of these things. From October I built a much more transparent mechanism by which to know when those schools – what state they're in. When you're building more than 200 projects, of course, you run into all kinds of individual circumstances. We have schools that were sited on some wells and some methane gas, underground coal mines, but we will overcome those individual circumstances and make sure that these schools are being built.

As well, certainly, as I said, restoring funding is not an easy thing for our caucus to support because of the difficult economic circumstances that we're in, but now more than ever, Mr. Speaker, is the time for us to invest in education, to ensure that the fundamentals of education are there for our children when they need it. We know that education is always evolving, but we always go back to basic numeracy and literacy to ensure that kids have those basic building blocks – mathematics and language and critical thinking skills – that they can apply to all circumstances throughout their lives.

People often say: well, you know, we have our education to make sure that we get people to jobs. Yes, that's true, but it's also to make sure that we enrich each child's life and that each child has the tools as they grow up to have an enriching and meaningful life throughout their adulthood as well and to pass on the spirit of education to their children and so on and so on. It's a daunting task, Mr. Speaker, but certainly what other task do we have as a society than to ensure that our children are educated now and for the future?

It's not to say that we're not looking for innovative ways by which we can work to allow our children at various levels to see what the working world can provide for them. Certainly, we've had some very, very productive and promising dual credit programs with colleges and universities around the province that allow access for kids that maybe wouldn't normally go to postsecondary school to see that smooth transition from high school into that postsecondary institution. It helps to buttress, I think, our colleges around the province. You know, I think of Olds or Fairview or Keyano or Red Deer College and so forth with literally hundreds of these dual credit students moving through from high school to postsecondary.

Our intention as well is to extend the career and technology studies into grades 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9 so that kids have access and opportunities for career and technology studies in those lower grades as well. People are looking for ways to have hands-on experience – right? – to evolve the shop class and home economics class into a much wider sort of experience for children, employing all subject areas from mathematics to language arts to social studies to building that birdhouse, that I never was particularly good at building when I was in junior high school. These are some of the innovative programs that we will be talking more about here during this spring session.

We certainly see as well lots and lots of room to help to improve performance in our education system. Of course, as a teacher myself for 20 years I look, first and foremost, to the professionals that we have in the classrooms, that are best suited to make the judgments and to make the choices for students in their charge to ensure they get the best education that they possibly can.

We know, of course – we had party support for it, and I thank you for that – that we're entering into negotiations with those same teachers here across the province over these next few weeks and months. It's our firm commitment as the government of Alberta to make sure we get a fair deal for our teaching professionals but that we get an affordable deal as well for all Albertans to ensure that those scarce and difficult public dollars are spent in the best possible way: in the classroom for our children's education. Obviously, the negotiations will carry on. We are very proud to have the funder at the table for those negotiations, but of course every step of the way we're working with each of our school boards to make sure they're getting the deal and the regional variations that they require for those contracts as well. So it's an interesting process. It's an interesting time. Certainly, it's very important that we focus very carefully on the teachers' negotiations because, of course, it sets precedence for the rest of the public service in the subsequent negotiations that we must undertake here in the province.

Yes, indeed, this throne speech might not have a great deal of education announcements in it, but I say, Mr. Speaker, that all things, all announcements in here, whether they're in regard to the energy efficiency program, the Alberta petrochemical diversification, energy diversification committee, climate leadership implementation, focus back to our capacity to build stronger communities and to look after our children and give them the best education possible. So education does infuse this document. It will infuse each thing we do in the subsequent budget that we have coming up. Certainly, while we are in difficult times, we always have to take the long view to ensure that we are building a better society during good times and difficult times and looking ahead for more stability and a better future for our own children.

I know when I go to schools that there are wonderful things going on. I was in St. Catherine school right here in Edmonton-Centre a short time ago. I met a young kid, first day in school, first day in a Canadian school, from Africa. I thought to myself: you know, what an exciting time that we live in, where we have young children from so many different cultures not just learning reading and writing but learning about the Canadian experience and the Alberta sense of community, that we look after each other here in the province of Alberta. And what better place and what better way for us to exemplify how we look after each other than the investment and the lessons that we put into our public education system.

I know that if we measure all the things, the responsibilities we have in our constituencies, that education will take up a great deal of that time along the way, and I thank you each for the work that you do. Certainly, my ministry gets the job done, but we require all of your help along the way to just make sure that our education system is there when all students need it.

We are supporting all education across the province. I mean, there's a lot of misconception. I know people are talking about private schools, home-schooling, charter schools, public education, separate school systems. I need all the capacity that I can get my hands on, Mr. Speaker, to make sure that we educate those 659,000 students and the growing enrolment that I see coming across my desk every day. I need every mechanism and every form of schooling that I have, and I need to have it in the highest quality that's available and to ensure that I provide that regulation for that highest quality as well.

We have to make sure that our education system is working for all students and that we have school board policy that's in line with the legislation that we provide here in the province. So, of course, I've instructed each of my 61 school boards, all schools and teachers, really, to develop LGBTQ guidelines to ensure that human rights and basic equality for all students is extended to every one of our students in the province of Alberta regardless of their sexuality or their gender identity. It's been an educative process, Mr. Speaker, and an edifying one as well. It's generated a lot of discussion around the province, and I'm thankful for all of the input I have received thus far.

It's very important for us to clarify what we're trying to do and how we go about doing it. First and foremost, I recognize the responsibility of each of my school boards to create policy that works for them in their communities regardless of where they live.

The House leader for the opposition party.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the minister for his comments in the Chamber this evening. It's nice to have you join us.

Well, the throne speech didn't specifically speak to the relationship between the department and school boards at present. Given that you've spoken at some length about some of the things that are happening in education and how the throne speech might interact with those, I have heard from a number of school boards in and around central Alberta who are a little bit concerned about some of the new reporting mechanisms or requirements that they have. I have heard things like: is it the case that the ministry doesn't trust us in the way that we're expending our resources? I'm wondering if you could just provide a couple of comments on the current relationship that school boards and the ministry have as well as any other details of the requirements of the reporting. I know they would be appreciative.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, before you answer, I know I don't need to remind the Opposition House Leader to direct his comments through me next time.

Mr. Eggen: He was thinking about you. He was looking at me, but he was thinking about you.

Those are very valid comments. You know, it's very interesting, Mr. Speaker, to remind ourselves that 97 per cent of the monies – I mean, obviously, my ministry is considerable, the second largest in the government. So 97 per cent of that money I distribute to the individual school boards for their responsibility. I think that our school board governance system is very strong, and I am a firm believer in recognizing and empowering that level of elected government to get the job done. They are on the ground in their specific jurisdiction. They know what needs to be done, and probably that has efficiencies built right into it inherently just from that knowledge.

Perhaps I've been reminding each of the 61 school boards, for example – and they don't need much reminding. They live in the midst of economic difficulties, and they know that money is tight. You know, we are reminding them to make sure they spend that money efficiently, and that is job number one. But also I do recognize their right to make choices about spending in their schools, especially in different areas. There are different geographic circumstances that they have to deal with, varying distances, special programs that might be required for different areas. That's very important.

I think that I've had a fairly good relationship with our school boards so far. Every step of the way I remind them that I want to empower them to make sure that they're making the decisions and that they are empowered to make those decisions.

You know, a very good example – I always say: judge me on my actions – and a very important initiative that I'm starting on, Mr. Speaker, is to make sure that the Northland school board is reinstated as an elected school board in these next rounds of municipal elections, in 2017, and to respect the decisions of school boards in a wide variety of circumstances as they conform to law as well.

I mean, on the negotiations that we're entering into with the teachers, for example, people seem to accept the combination. We've built a negotiating team, the representative team, which is school board members and government, and they're working together as one single unit. It's not like, you know, government versus the school boards versus the teachers. Rather, it's working as a unified negotiating unit. I've been very pleased to see how that's been going so far. I also have a representative assembly of 61 school boards that are there. Relationship building is always something you must invest in every day, so I am endeavouring to do so.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister, for your statement today. It's been an honour to work with you for three of your terms, one more for me.

I have two topics. Since this is directly related to the speech – and that's what 29(2)(a) is all about – constituents in the communities of Evergreen and area are really eager to learn. It's Calgary-Lougheed based, obviously, in the southwest corner of Calgary...

The Speaker: Hon. member, I believe your time is up.

The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to be able to rise this afternoon to respond to the Speech from the Throne. I apologize that I've cut short the enthusiastic discussion brought forward by the Education minister, but I am going to take this opportunity to speak to how my constituents in Calgary-East can benefit from the initiatives outlined in the Speech from the Throne.

I do want to mention that my constituents are definitely concerned about their livelihoods during this economic downturn. They are concerned about finding work and about sons and daughters who have lost jobs. They're concerned about the cost of living and if they'll be able to continue to afford mortgages, child care, and transportation costs. The Speech from the Throne shows that we are listening to these concerns. It outlines initiatives that will make a direct, positive impact on the lives of the constituents of Calgary-East.

I want to take a moment today to just speak about how the direction outlined aligns with the goals and directions of the people in my constituency. First off, I'm very excited about upcoming legislation regarding payday lenders. We have a particularly high concentration of these establishments in my riding. There are 11 on 17th Avenue S.E. alone. The prevalence of payday lenders, unfortunately, distracts from the image of the area. International Avenue, as I have mentioned before in this House, is a wonderful, vibrant, and diverse commercial area in Calgary. It has amazing restaurants, corner stores, and ethnic markets, and there are also a wide variety of professional services: banks, financial advisers, lawyers, doctors, and dentists. However, payday lenders affect this vibrancy negatively. Their high interest rates contribute to a cycle of poverty. I've heard stories of individuals who have paid $2,400 worth of interest on a $600 loan. This is unacceptable and can't continue to happen.

This type of predatory lending affects people who can least afford to pay these rates. It affects them disproportionately. And $2,400 is a lot of money. That can be two months of rent or mortgage payments. I am so pleased, as I know my constituents are, that this government is doing something about this. The 17th Avenue BRZ has been fighting payday lenders for many years at city council and at the provincial level, so they're going to be very excited to hear that some work is being done in this area.

Sunrise Community Link and Momentum are organizations that work with low-income individuals and have programs that match the savings of folks enrolled. They allow people to save for down payments on homes or for RESPs for their children or for university tuition for young people, and they do financial education to make sure that people are aware of the options that they have. These organizations are helping to break the cycle of poverty that some people fall into.

Secondly, I am very excited also about the implementation of the Alberta child benefit plan because that is going to help a lot of families in Calgary-East. There are, unfortunately, a disproportionately high number of children who live in poverty in my riding. Families are working hard to make sure that their children have all of the opportunities to succeed that they themselves might not have had. However, there are continued barriers to the success of these children. Lack of access to quality child care is one of these things, and I was excited to hear from the Minister of Status of Women this morning that that's something that ministry is going to be working on.

Poverty itself is another one of those things because it's hard to concentrate in school if you're hungry. Research shows that low-income children are more likely to enter kindergarten unprepared for school. They often have vocabularies a third the size of their peers from wealthier homes. As a teacher, like many others in this House, I absolutely believe in the power of education to create equal opportunities for all children and that all children can succeed in school. That was why I was so excited to hear our Education minister just now speak of how this government has priorities for education.

What I'm really speaking to is the fact that the Alberta child tax benefit is going to help those low-income people. It's going to help them plan for the future. It can put up to $3,000 directly into the pocket of a single parent with two children, and that's going to help people in my riding. I have a lot of single parents in my riding and I have a lot of low-income families in my riding who are going to be able to benefit directly from that, and it's going to help them to provide a better education and a better future for their children.

The third thing that I was really excited about was the continued commitment to capital spending, and this is going to have a direct impact on my riding, too. I just want to take this opportunity to thank the Minister of Transportation, who is, unfortunately, not in the room, for the $65 million worth of GreenTRIP funding that's been allocated for the redesign and the addition of a bus/rapid-transit line to 17th Avenue S.E. This is a project that has been in the works for at least a decade, and it's going to help to make our neighbourhoods in east Calgary more walkable, more cycle friendly, and it's going to provide new opportunities for development and more reliable transit.

This commitment to capital investment will also help the many tradespeople in my riding who have been laid off due to the downturn in oil. Capital construction projects will help to put many of these people back to work and give them the means to continue to support their families. I have a deep respect for these Albertans, who work actively to build things, to create the homes, schools, roads, and bridges that we all rely on for our daily livelihoods. I'm excited that we have the vision during this economic downturn to actively build things for the future instead of tearing things down and leaving an infrastructure deficit for our children.

Lastly, the constituents of Calgary-East will be impressed with the creation of Energy Efficiency Alberta and an energy efficiency strategy. I've heard from many constituents – homeowners, entrepreneurs, small-business owners – and they're committed to improving their carbon footprint. Having help from government will mean a lot to them. There are also folks in my riding who will be more than happy to help government with their efforts on this front. I've talked to entrepreneurial young engineers who are starting their own residential solar business. I have talked to energy efficient window companies, and I've spoken with large businesses who are already working to excel in carbon reduction.

I was recently very excited to tour Executive Mat, which is a business in my riding that rents matting for businesses, cleans mechanical and printing cloths, and also helps to provide businesses with paper towels and food and beverage containers. The difference with this company is that they have an almost zero carbon footprint. They take back all of the coffee cups and paper towels that they lend out to companies, and they turn them into biofuel. They use that biofuel to run their boilers, and then they turn the carbon that comes out of those boilers into carbonic acid that they use to neutralize some of the water that they use to wash things. And that's just a little bit of what they do. It doesn't do nearly justice to the work that they're doing. They will be very excited to hear that the government wants to work on energy efficiency because that's something that they're really keen on and that they are doing amazing work in.

Mr. Speaker, I continue to be inspired daily by the residents of Calgary-East, by their resourcefulness, entrepreneurial spirit, and commitment to being engaged in their communities and with their government. Not everybody I talk to agrees with me, but they are unfailingly polite, respectful, and committed to making Calgary-East and Alberta better places to live. The Speech from the Throne speaks to the priorities that my constituents have for Alberta in these tough times: a focus on jobs, diversification, and encouraging high-quality services that Albertans rely on; caring for our most vulnerable; and increasing transparency and accountability in government. These are things that my constituents expect from government, and I was pleased to have the opportunity to speak to them today.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, we have two minutes left until the Assembly stands adjourned. I would suggest that what we do is that we leave 29(2)(a) to the next session.

I therefore would suggest that under Standing Order 4(2) the Assembly stands adjourned until tomorrow, March 10, at 9 a.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:59 p.m.]

9 a.m.

Thursday, March 10, 2016

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. Let us take time to understand and prioritize our duties so that we can properly fulfill the requests of our constituents and of all Albertans who are counting on our help.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Committee of Supply

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Interim Supply Estimates 2016-17 General Revenue Fund and Lottery Fund

The Chair: Before we commence the consideration of interim supply, I want to briefly review the standing orders governing the speaking rotation. As provided for in Standing Order 59.02, the rotation in Standing Order 59.01(6) is deemed to apply, which is as follows:

- (a) the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may make opening comments not to exceed 10 minutes,
- (b) for the hour that follows, members of the Official Opposition and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (c) for the next 20 minutes, the members of the third party, if any, and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak . . .
- (d.1) for the next 20 minutes, the members of any other party represented in the Assembly or any independent Members and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (e) for the next 20 minutes, private members of the Government caucus and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak, and
- (f) for the time remaining, to the extent possible, the rotation outlined in clauses (b) to (e) shall apply with the speaking times set at 5 minutes as provided in Standing Order 59.02(1)(c).

During the first rotation speaking times are limited to 10 minutes. Once the first rotation is complete, speaking times are reduced to five minutes. Provided that the chair has been notified, a minister and a private member may combine their speaking times, with both taking and yielding the floor during the combined period.

Finally, as provided for in Government Motion 8, approved by the Assembly yesterday, the time allotted for consideration is three hours.

So the Committee of Supply has under consideration the 2016-17 interim supply estimates, and I'll now recognize the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to move the estimates.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to move the 2016-17 interim supply estimates for the Legislative Assembly and government. This bill, consistent with previous interim supply bills, identifies the total amounts requested for each ministry for three types of spending: expenses, capital investment, and financial transactions. This is simply the legislation required to provide the spending authority to continue government operations beyond March 31 until Budget 2016 estimates are debated and approved.

As it notes in the preface of the estimates, expense amounts are cash disbursements for the purpose of salaries, supplies and services, operating grants, and capital grants to parties outside the consolidated government reporting entity. Madam Chair, what these estimates do is give government the spending authority to carry on day-to-day operations, including commitments to health care, education, social services, and all other programs and services Albertans rely on.

When passed, these interim supply estimates will authorize approximate spending of $29.6 million for the Legislative Assembly, $7.2 billion in expense funding, $864 million in capital investment funding, $164 million in financial transactions funding for the government, and $363 million for the transfer from the lottery fund to the general revenue fund. These interim supply estimates provide funding authorization that will allow the normal business of the province to continue until the full 2016-17 estimates are approved before the end of May. These estimates also follow through on specific commitments this government has made to the people of Alberta. These estimates will be included and fully debated when the budget documents are tabled next month.

Madam Chair, the budget we will introduce next month will elaborate on this government's priorities, and they are to put Albertans back to work through infrastructure expansion and economic development initiatives, to be a fiscally prudent and responsible government that is focused on minimizing our deficit without making a bad situation worse, and to maintain a high-quality and efficiently run education system and access to health care and social services throughout the province. Our budget will continue to elaborate on economic development initiatives designed to put Albertans back to work, and it will continue to show how our government is restraining spending in light of our significant revenue shortfalls.

Only weeks ago I was proud to share the government's third-quarter report with all Albertans. That report showed clearly how this government is reining in spending on nonessential programming and doing that while continuing to focus on our priorities, priorities like our announcement that this government was investing an extra $51 million in our children's schools to ensure we don't return to the days of overcrowded classrooms. That's nearly 400 new teachers in classrooms, educating our children and helping them shape this province's future leaders.

Madam Chair, approval of interim supply estimates pending the release and approval of the budget will allow the Assembly the time it needs to review and debate those plans in detail as we move forward in the interests of all Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: I'd like to call on the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks. Hon. member, before you speak, did you want to combine your time back and forth, or would you prefer the 10 minutes?

Mr. Fildebrandt: I have remarks that will last approximately 15 to 20 minutes.

The Chair: Okay. You have only 10 minutes at one time, so if you want to do your remarks for 10 minutes.

Mr. Fildebrandt: If I can take 10 minutes, I'll engage with the minister and then resume my closing remarks afterwards.

The Chair: I believe you could do it that way. You have 10 minutes – that’s your limit right now – and then we would go on to the next member, but you could speak again. Go ahead.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair, for the opportunity today to speak to the interim supply bill before this House. There is almost nothing that I enjoy better than debating budgets and how we spend the people’s money in this province. I’ve spent years debating budgets, both inside and outside of this House. I’ve found it quite enjoyable, my time with the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board and our back-and-forth conversations. As enjoyable as they have been, they have not always been productive, however.

We are here not debating a budget but interim supply once again. In March 2015 this House voted $12.6 billion in interim supply to get us over the unnecessary election period. Months later, in June 2015, this House voted $18.6 billion in interim supply to get us through the federal election period. The NDP refused to give Albertans a budget so that they could go out and campaign for Thomas Mulcair and the federal NDP. They refused to give Albertans a budget so as to not worry Canadians about what a federal NDP government might do. That didn’t work out so well for the NDP. It took until late October 2015 for the NDP to finally give Albertans a budget, and that budget gave Albertans a deficit over three years of at least $27 billion. That deficit will be significantly larger, as we pointed out at the time, but it took us until October 2015 before we finally got a budget.

We are now debating our fifth spending bill since this Legislature was elected, and we will be debating our sixth on Monday. Why are we debating another interim supply in this House? Where is the budget? Why is it late? Is it because the NDP doesn’t want the people of Calgary-Greenway to see what they’re doing? Some Calgarians are going to be voting their judgment on this government. Perhaps the NDP doesn’t want to alarm the folks there about just how well their so-called jobs plan is going.

Perhaps we don’t have a budget because the government caucus didn’t want to show up for work. They weren’t here. I’m not sure what they were doing. The Wildrose believes we should not only have a budget today; we believe we should have had a budget several weeks ago. The Wildrose Official Opposition called for the early return of the Legislature to debate jobs, the economy, the deficit, and out-of-control spending in this province. The NDP said no. They had better things to do than to debate the people’s work.

An Hon. Member: Like sleeping in.

Mr. Fildebrandt: They were sleeping in, Madam Chair.

After they refused to call back the Legislature, we called for a jobs summit. You know what they said? Nothing. They were sleeping, Madam Chair.

The NDP have not done their homework, and that is why we don’t have a budget before us today. They are instead proposing $8.7 billion in an interim supply minibudget to paper over things until the end of May. This is a payday loan from taxpayers. It is a predatory attack on the poor, beleaguered taxpayers of this province, asking for a blank cheque without any details about how they actually intend to spend the money. Instead of doing the work that needs to be done, the NDP are wasting the time of this Legislature with a dog-and-pony show. They are not doing their job. That is why we don’t have a budget in front of us. Instead, they’re asking for a blank cheque. They are asking us to give them $8.7 billion of taxpayers’ hard-earned money with no details whatsoever. The Wildrose does not believe in spending money without details first.

In the June interim supply debate the Finance minister and other ministers of the Crown were repeatedly asked how they were going to be spending the money. The Official Opposition asked pointed and pertinent questions about each and every single department in the government, about how money would be spent. You know what most of the ministers told the Official Opposition? “Wait and see. We don’t know. Wait for the budget.” Well, we have real questions to ask, and my colleagues in the Wildrose Official Opposition are going to have tough questions for the ministers here to try and get some answers about how the government intends to spend taxpayers’ money.

In comparison to the 2015 budget estimates this interim supply, for this short period of time until the end of May, has 85 per cent of the capital spend in the Advanced Education department for the entire fiscal year’s budget. Eighty-five per cent from now until the end of May will be spent relative to the entire fiscal year in Advanced Education on capital spending.

Seventy-five per cent of last year’s Economic Development and Trade spending is here at $209 million. The Minister of Economic Development and Trade is asking for 75 per cent of the entire fiscal year’s budget for his department for just a few short months – that’s $209 million – and so far the minister has only managed to create one job, his own.

Fully 25 per cent of last year’s capital spend on schools is here, $300 million, 25 per cent of the entire year’s capital spend for just a few months.

Infrastructure – capital expenses should be huge in this section to account for the construction season – is only 7 per cent, though, of the entire fiscal year’s budget, $73 million. It’s hard to connect the dots between where the government says that it’s going to spend money and where it’s actually spending money.

Municipal Affairs, where one would expect to see huge dollar amounts going out the door for MSI in the construction season, is only about 19 per cent of the expense vote.

Madam Chair, the Official Opposition was elected to hold the government accountable for its spending. The Wildrose was elected to stand up for taxpayers, and the Wildrose was elected to give a real voice for fiscal conservatism in this province, not to give the NDP a blank cheque.

The people of Alberta need a budget. They need certainty on taxes, economic development, and government services. Municipalities need to be able to plan for the year ahead. MSI, which is so critical to the sustainability of our municipal local governments, needs to be known in advance so that our municipalities can budget for their year. The unemployed in this province need a budget. Right now, Madam Chair, there is a population the size of Red Deer out of work. We haven’t seen unemployment levels like this in a generation, and we see nothing from the government but talk and bluster.

Last week I met with a group of unemployed oil field workers in Brooks, a group that calls itself Oil People Helping Oil People. They were organizing fundraisers to support other people out of work. These are real people helping other real people. I asked them what I as their MLA and their representative to the government could do to help. They said that they don’t want government handouts. They don’t need more government programs and intervention. What they said that they want is for us to stopping making it worse. They want us to get out of their way. They want us to stop killing jobs. They want the ideological experiments of the NDP to stop. They want the NDP to stop hurting people.

The Chair: The minister to respond.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You know, I just want to say to the hard-right, ideologically based people on that side that their demigod, someone like Joe Oliver, the former federal Finance minister, brought forward his budget last year – when did he bring it forward? He brought it forward on April 21. On April 21. What he said at the time was: I am bringing this budget forward now because of the price volatility. “I’m waiting on delivering the budget,” he said, “because of the price volatility,” that was once in a generation, that he was experiencing at the federal Finance level.

We are bringing our budget forward – we are doing him one better – a full week before his. We are beating their demigod, which is Joe Oliver. So from where I sit, we’re doing better than your demigod. We’re doing better, and we’re not kind of bringing forward an ideological, hard-right perspective. We’re saying to the people of Alberta: this is a once-in-a-generation experience regarding the drop in revenues, and we are taking the time to get it right. We will bring forward the budget when it is ready. It is ready on April 14 and not before. In the interim we need to provide a supply bill that’ll get us through the next two months, April and May. When that is done, when May is done, we will have a full budget debated in this House, where everybody will have that opportunity. So it’s not right and it’s not accurate in terms of many of the things that the far right is saying on that side.

We are taking the time, as I’ve said, to get it right. Ministers here will get up and defend and answer the questions with regard to why there are certain estimates put in their budgets. For instance, I can tell you that the Minister of Economic Development and Trade has said that he needs that kind of upfront money to be able to pass on to the many Innovates and others that are going to expect those monies so that they can continue to do the jobs to employ Albertans and get things working. So that’s why there are some estimates that seem from that side to be out of whack in terms of the full budget, but there is no truth to that. There is explanation for everything that is going to be brought forward.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, do you want to continue, just take the full 10 minutes, or would you rather go back and forth?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yes, Madam Chair. The Minister of Finance has said that the government is facing a once-in-a-lifetime challenge with the price of oil, but Albertans are facing a once-in-a-lifetime challenge by having an NDP government here right now.

The NDP might believe that the government of Alberta should take its cues from the federal government. I believe that Alberta’s government should take its cues from the best of our own traditions. I don’t believe that we should allow the federal government to dictate the way we do business here in Alberta.

In the last interim supply budget the minister couldn’t even tell this House what its effect would be on the deficit. He couldn’t tell us what the revenues would be, what the expenditures would be. Madam Chair, the Minister of Finance had one job, and he couldn’t do it. The Wildrose told the Minister of Finance that his revenue projections were unrealistic and that he had his head in the sand during the budget debates. Well, the Minister of Finance had the same kind of excuses as now: “Oh, shucks, what can I do? The price of oil and all. No government of Alberta has ever faced volatile oil prices before.”

Well, we said that their projections were rosy and unrealistic. They called it scaremongering from the Official Opposition. Well, it did turn out to be scary because we were right, Madam Chair. We projected a deficit that would exceed $9 billion. The deficit will now be north of $10 billion. For some historical context, this will be more than twice as large as the next-largest deficit that this province has run in our history, even adjusted for inflation. It is a shameful record of fiscal mismanagement. The NDP has no plan to deal with the deficit. This isn’t a budget; this is a brochure. The NDP government, instead of putting together a budget to deal with the jobs, unemployment, and financial crisis in this province, are lining the pockets of NDP ideological friends and allies.

The Premier went to Ontario to raise close to $200,000 for the Ontario NDP. Andrea Horwath is an enemy of Alberta, and her opposition to the reversal of line 9 and Energy East, which are critical to Alberta, speaks volumes to the priorities of this government. While the leader of the NDP was in Ontario raising money for the opponents of Alberta jobs and pipelines, the leader of the Wildrose Official Opposition was in Ontario at that same time selling Alberta. The Leader of the Opposition was speaking about the great story we have to tell of responsible economic development. The Wildrose did not raise a penny for the opponents of Alberta’s jobs, and that’s something I’m very proud to stand with in this caucus.

The NDP government is lining the pockets of AUPE union bosses. Just yesterday the Wildrose sounded the alarm on the appointment made 48 hours ago. Kevin Davediuk was hired by the NDP government from the AUPE to negotiate with the AUPE. Yesterday this guy still looked very much like an AUPE union boss. Think about it. An AUPE union negotiator negotiating with the AUPE. This is hiring the fox to guard the henhouse, Madam Chair.

A constituent of mine, you know, sent me a link to a National Car Rental commercial after this, and it had one guy talking about how great it was to negotiate with yourself. He said: “How about a 5 per cent raise? How about a 20 per cent raise? How about done? Isn’t it great to negotiate with yourself?” Well, that is the NDP’s relationship with the AUPE right now, Madam Chair. This is a gross conflict of interest that will be a rip-off to taxpayers. “Don’t worry; this guy will be tough,” the government is telling us, so tough, in fact, that his appointment was defended by none other than the Alberta Federation of Labour’s big union boss and failed NDP candidates. Government-sector union bosses are so terrified of the government’s new negotiator that they are singing his praises all day long in news releases. If the NDP had put half the effort into the budget that they do to appointing their union boss cronies, we would have had a budget before the end of this fiscal year. The NDP is distracted by the shiny objects of power.

I have a First Nations proverb to share with them. When you are hunting moose, don’t get distracted by the rabbit tracks. Many rabbit tracks they are following, Madam Chair. The NDP House leader said that the NDP, when they were in opposition, was like a dog chasing a car. If it caught the car, it wouldn’t know what to do with it. Well, the NDP have caught the car, and now the economy is reeling. Albertans are hurting. We have a record number of Albertans out of work, and all we have is one bill to write a job description for the minister responsible for jobs. We have a government with no plan whatsoever to control the expenditures of this province, which have been out of control for a decade. We have a Minister of Finance who has given us a brochure instead of a budget and a government that is more concerned with rewarding its friends with contracts, perks, and payouts than with standing up for the people of this province, who elected them to govern for all.

Madam Chair, the Wildrose Official Opposition was elected to hold this government to account. We were elected to stand up for taxpayers and for fiscal responsibility, and by any of those measures no member of the Official Opposition can in good faith vote for this bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'd like to just respond a little bit to some of the comments made by the hon. Finance critic for the Official Opposition. First of all, I want to say that he has become a past master at portraying the routine functions of government as some sort of scandal and taking advantage of people who may not be fully aware about the internal details of the operation of government. He has managed and his party attempts to fabricate issues where none actually exist. I'll just maybe give a few examples.

First of all, the question of the timing of the budget. I think the Finance minister has dealt with this. If you look at the history of budgets in this province, you will find that they have ranged from February until May, depending on the circumstances of the situation, and very, very rarely have the opposition, at least when we were on that side, made an issue. In one particular case, as I recall, under Mr. Klein's government, the budget was delayed very significantly, I think far more than normal, back into May, and we did make an issue of it at that time.

An April budget is not unusual. But for the Wildrose any excuse to try and generate some sort of public controversy and to vilify the government is good enough. They'll take advantage of the fact that maybe some people don't really keep track of when the budget comes down every year to try and create the impression on the part of the public that there's something unusual about the routine functioning of government. And this, I think, is a theme that we've seen played out again and again.

Again, with respect to the use of interim supply and the amount of detail contained in interim supply, I recollect that in almost every case that I've been in opposition criticizing the previous government, they have introduced interim supply because of the scheduling of the spring session, the time that it takes to put together a budget, and a number of other factors. Again, it is routine to have interim supply, but the Wildrose would like the public to believe that there's something unusual about this and that it is in some measure a failure on the part of this government that we're utilizing interim supply when every government across Canada, including the federal government and certainly historically here, has utilized interim supply. Again, the Wildrose is misleading the public by claiming that there's something, in fact, amiss or unusual about the use of interim supply.

Similarly, Madam Chair, the Finance critic has indicated that the interim supply estimates are nothing more than a pamphlet. Again he's trying to take advantage of the fact that people don't really have a detailed knowledge of how interim supply works in the parliamentary system, not just here but across the country, and takes advantage of the fact that most people don't understand that the interim supply has been prepared according to the standard format that has been utilized in this place for many, many years and many, many budgets. So there's nothing unusual. Everything that the Finance critic has said with respect to this matter is an attempt to throw dust in the face of voters and to try and create an impression that something is wrong when, in fact, everything is proceeding exactly according to the traditions, the norms of this place, and the history of this place and that our government is performing exactly as it should with respect to the budgetary process.

Now I'd like to deal with another matter in which the Official Opposition is attempting to misinform Albertans. Although it's a little bit off the track, I gave some thought to standing up on a point of order and interrupting the hon. member when he went into his rant about the chief negotiator for the province. But I suppose there's a budgetary implication because, obviously, the allegation there is that we will not be vigorously protecting the finances of the province when it comes to negotiations. So I think, you know, that there is a case to be made, that this may in fact be a budgetary matter.

Now, it turns out the individual in charge has worked for many years as a negotiator. Most of his career has been on the employer side. He is a trained negotiator, highly skilled, that was recruited by AUPE in order to negotiate on their behalf, and he has been recruited by the government to negotiate on our behalf, not because he's a union person and not because he is going to misrepresent the interests of this government. I think that's a scandalous assertion and a real insult to the integrity of this particular individual. In actual fact he's a highly professional trained negotiator and one of the best in the field, and we've retained him in order to make sure that the interests of the taxpayers and the public expenditures are carefully looked at. The Wildrose does not stop, Madam Chair, to consider or to ask questions; they shoot first. They didn't get their facts straight. They didn't look into this matter. They don't have an understanding of collective bargaining. I think many of them would just wish that unions would go away. If they were in government, they would probably legislate them away.

The fact of the matter is, Madam Chair, that we are implementing a Supreme Court decision with respect to the duty to negotiate collectively and the rights of workers to organize. That is now the law of the land. That is something that we need to change, and we will be bringing in legislation. The opposition and the public can judge that legislation when we do bring it forward for debate. But in the meantime we have a responsibility to negotiate with our employees fairly, and we are going to do so. We have retained what we believe is the best talent in order to accomplish the goals of the government.

The scurrilous suggestions on the part of the Official Opposition that this government is in some way hiring some union hack in order to sell out the public is just too much to be stomachied, Madam Chair. That is offensive. They do not get the facts straight. They do not wait for the facts. They just think: oh, this guy worked for a union; we can make an issue of this, and we can again throw dust in the eyes of the public. These are the tactics and approach that we've seen from the Wildrose. They claim that they want to debate substantive issues. They claim that they want to be talking about the budget. You know, the size of the deficit is a legitimate question that should be addressed. We are looking forward to the alternatives of our friends across the way in terms of dealing with the financial stresses. Let's be clear. In about a year the revenues of the province have declined by about 20 per cent. That is virtually unprecedented. That is a huge, huge hit.

Now, the Wildrose has a different philosophy than we do, and I wouldn't expect them to embrace the solutions that we've put forward. We want to protect front-line services. We don't want to cut. But it's important that the Wildrose also provide what their alternative is. Speaking of flimsy pamphlets, I had tabled yesterday the Wildrose financial plan from the election because they haven't produced an alternative since the election, Madam Chair. What they've got is a flimsy pamphlet from before the election, and that is about the size of their contribution.

There's no question that dealing with the province's finances at this time is a daunting challenge. It's a very daunting challenge. It's a huge issue, and there is no question about that, Madam Chair. But what is their answer? This is what we want to know.

The Chair: Next I have on my list the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Do you wish to do an exchange with your time with the minister?

Mr. Schneider: I'll just take my 10 minutes if that's possible.

I just have to preface by saying that it's always nice, Madam Chair, to get an education from the senior-most member that sits within these walls. His comments to the previous government are well documented and run along the same lines, so it's always nice to hear that history repeats itself.

I, like my colleagues, however, am somewhat aghast at what we are being asked to do here today. When we left the Legislature on December 10, we were all left with the understanding that we would be coming back to the dome to start the spring session on February 8. Now, that seemed like a normal time frame for the House to start sitting again and seemed like a good time frame for the government to produce an actual budget before the end of the fiscal year. The government introduced a budget only at the end of this past October, some 135 days ago, and now it appears that that budget wasn't quite right. It didn't have enough money allocated to it to get the government of Alberta's expenses covered until the end of the fiscal year, so instead we are here being asked to vote to let this government spend beyond their previous budget. It's kind of like a partial do over.

Now, the Infrastructure ministry is looking for an addition $115 million for expenses, $73 million for further capital expense money, and an additional $8.4 million for financial transactions. Well, that's great, but what does that all mean? What projects are being funded, for instance? What programs are supported? Is this all just administrative overhead, Madam Chair? You know, I have to wonder why the Legislature would authorize this government to spend this much more money and not just in Infrastructure, every ministry. Why would we authorize that much spending when there's no plan? It's hard to understand what you're intending to spend the money on. It seems like there's no accountability. There's no plan, and there are no answers on the pages that we were given here a day ago. So I'd like to ask what projects these funds are requested for. Along with that, I'd like to know how they were chosen.

You know, I asked about it yesterday in this place, but if Alberta had this promised sunshine list, we would all know exactly what Infrastructure funding was required for which project, how the project was chosen, and where each project appears on the list. I asked about it last session, I asked about it again yesterday, and I'll keep asking for it because municipalities deserve to have it.

As any Albertan knows, construction season is coming up, but the jobs created in the construction season certainly matter now more than ever. Is there any estimate at all available for how many jobs will be created with the extra Infrastructure spending dollars indicated here? Are the Infrastructure dollars here even going towards actual projects?

I talked about this yesterday, too, but last year Infrastructure lapsed a staggering $1 billion in capital. Based on this additional request for $115 million in expenses and $73 million in capital investment are we to assume that there was no lapse this previous year? Realistically, those are significant numbers that we are being asked to approve for a department that lapsed so heavily on projects last year. How was this number decided? Is it based on an annual figure? Is it loosely based on funding only specific projects? Are there determined project costs? Are we to assume that $115 million for two months is the forward-going rate for all Infrastructure spending? If that's the case, we are looking at $690 million per year for Infrastructure expenses. If that is not the case, then why this number? Where did the government come up with it?

Once again, $73 million in capital investment over two months equates to $438 million over 12 months if that is indeed the magic number going forward. Last year's lapse, that I just talked about, was more than twice that. Is this the kind of Infrastructure capital plan that Albertans can look forward to seeing while this government is in power?

I really need to ask this question again. Can the government confirm that none of these funds were rushed and put forward for projects to be announced during the ongoing by-election?

I have only one more thought. Deferred maintenance in this province is a rather large number. This is the maintenance that's needed on our public buildings: hospitals, schools. It's money that actually hasn't happened yet. For the two public schools boards in the largest cities in our province, they each cite about a billion dollars for maintenance that's been ongoing or not completed. Those are just the schools and only the schools in the two major cities, just Edmonton public and Calgary public schools. That doesn't even take into account the separate schools in those cities or any of the schools outside of those cities. Now, the government has a much different number estimate on deferred maintenance. It's much less, but that's not what's important here.

Here's what matters. There's needed maintenance on public buildings that Albertans rely on: our hospitals, our schools. If the government's province-wide number is half of what Calgary and Edmonton say the deferred maintenance bill for their schools is, that's still a billion dollars in needed maintenance. Is any of the interim supply allocation for Infrastructure being put towards that?

The final question would be: is any of the money that is being put forward in this proposition money that would be used to offset some of that potential $1 billion to $2 billion maintenance backlog?

So I think it's plain to see that asking me or my colleagues to approve the suggested spending begs more questions. Albertans are hurting in this economy. Many are struggling to make ends meet while looking for a new job. We here owe it to them to ensure that their tax dollars are spent wisely. With so few details how can we in good conscience vote in favour of interim supply? Where did the money go that was budgeted in the last interim supply in the fall budget? Why wasn't it enough?

Madam Chair, I think that's all I have to say for now. I appreciate the opportunity to speak.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. In terms of the questions from the hon. member I want to thank you very much, but I want to remind you that we're dealing with interim supply and not supplementary supply. We're requesting a total of $196.4 million through interim supply to support our day-to-day operations. The expense vote, as the member noted, was $115 million. The capital investment vote is $73 million, and the financial transaction vote is $8.4 million. Funding to support our operations covers items such as the day-to-day operations of about 1,600 government-owned buildings, including caretaking, utilities, property taxes, and security. It includes leasing costs, including rents, utilities, and property taxes. Capital construction costs are to support the delivery of major government capital projects such as the Royal Alberta Museum and the health and school projects and the development work at Parsons Creek in Fort McMurray.

The interim supply period is April 1 to May 31, or 17 per cent of the year. Alberta Infrastructure cash spending under the three supply votes includes expenses for items such as salaries, supplies and services, and capital grants for maintenance of government-owned buildings and capital planning. It includes capital investment for the acquisition and construction of government capital assets valued at $5,000 or more and financial transactions for the purchase of inventories and the payment of liabilities.

Infrastructure's 2016-17 estimated cash spending. In terms of the expense item the interim supply is estimated at 20 per cent of the estimated total cash spending, 10 per cent of the capital investment that's going to be required, and 17 per cent of the financial transactions.

The 2016-17 expense interim supply vote requested of $115 million includes funding for property management, day-to-day operations of about 1,600 government-owned buildings. These include caretaking, landscaping, utilities, property taxes, and security as well as the operation of the Swan Hills Treatment Centre. Realty services for leases include rent, utilities, and property taxes and for land management.

Ministry support services include the minister's office, the deputy minister's office, communications, human resources, and corporate strategies and services. Capital construction includes support for delivery of major capital projects such as the Royal Alberta Museum and major health and school projects. I might add that the Minister of Education has informed me that their payment schedule, rather than being done quarterly, is on an as-needed basis for the schools, which has already saved $15 million in terms of those things.

Asset management includes the continuous business improvement of the department; the asset analysis and portfolio planning; parking administration and maintenance of the asset data inventory; capital grants for maintenance of government-owned buildings and for planning, estimation, reporting, and monitoring of capital projects; the 2013 Alberta flood program for reconstruction and accommodation projects and administration of the floodway relocation program.

Capital investment. This is a question that the member raised. The 2016-17 capital investment interim supply vote request of $73 million includes funding for health facilities support, including health facilities infrastructure that will be owned by Alberta Health Services and Health capital maintenance and renewal, the capital construction program for the delivery of major capital projects like the new Royal Alberta Museum, which I've mentioned, as well as funding to accommodate the new building Canada fund program, the courthouse renewal, and other potential capital projects across the government of Alberta.

Property management includes government-owned facilities maintenance and renewal and accommodation projects and capital maintenance at the Swan Hills Treatment Centre.

Realty services includes land transactions for government initiatives.

Ministry support services includes information technology equipment and software development and, as well, as I mentioned, the 2013 Alberta flooding capital projects. I want to just indicate with respect to that that I know that the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow is interested in this project. We are proceeding with negotiations to gain access for an environmental impact assessment, and we expect that that is going to be done and concluded in a timely fashion so that we will not risk losing a season.

Financial transactions. This is an interim request for $8.4 million. It includes funding for realty services and property management, inventory purchases, and minor site remediation and reclamation work for Swan Hills and debt repayment for the Evan-Thomas water and waste-water treatment facility.

I want to also talk about our work to support the economy and to provide jobs for workers who may have lost their employment during the downturn. In Budget 2015 the government committed to invest $34 billion over five years through its capital plan to build needed public infrastructure across the province. During these tough economic times we will make use of the capacity in the construction industry to build infrastructure needed by the public at a lower cost than otherwise. Our investments will create jobs and build a strong economic foundation for our children and our grandchildren. The interim supply provides funding to continue building the important projects we have across the province.

Cities and towns across Alberta, Madam Chair, struggle with aging health care infrastructure, and we have funded $491 million for health facilities infrastructure spending, which is on page 163 of the government estimates. These projects are progressing and nearing completion.

The 2015-16 budget of $491.2 million for health facilities infrastructure supports delivery of health capital projects, and these facilities will of course be owned by Alberta Health Services once completed. These include the High Prairie health complex, where construction is under way and is expected to be completed by 2016; the Medicine Hat regional hospital, where construction is under way and expected to be completed this summer; the Edson health care centre, where construction is under way with the clinical and continuing care buildings and expected to be completed in spring 2016; the Grande Prairie regional hospital, where construction is under way and expected to be completed in 2019; the Lethbridge Chinook regional hospital, where construction was completed in October 2015 on the main project, with work on impacted departments expected to be completed by 2017; the Calgary cancer centre, where construction of the centre is planned to commence in 2017, with the new facility opening to the public in 2024.

Maybe, if I have a few minutes left, I'll talk about our work on flood mitigation. We're responsible for acquiring properties through the floodway relocation program. Under the program the government purchased residential properties located in designated floodways in affected southern Alberta communities with the intent to remove or demolish the structures in order to reduce the potential financial impact of future flood events. We've purchased a number of homes across the province in the communities of Calgary, High River, the county of Foothills, Turner Valley, Rocky View county, Mountain View county, and Red Deer county. A number of these properties have been demolished, with the remaining work expected to be completed in 2016-17. In Calgary we're working with the city to obtain the necessary demolition permits, with work expected to begin later this month. All work on these properties is expected to be completed by September 2016. Questions related to the disposition of the properties would probably be better referred to the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

The capital construction program includes funding for manpower and supplies and services to support capital project delivery. This is the government estimates of $17 million for the capital construction program. The program is responsible for the planning, design, and implementation of government-owned buildings as well as the provision of a wide variety of professional and technical support to other ministries for capital projects such as schools, postsecondary institutions, hospitals, and social housing. We're hoping that this ongoing program will support the delivery of capital projects which are approved in the capital plan.

We have a number of initiatives under way to make our public infrastructure more environmentally sustainable. [Mr. Mason's speaking time expired] If I get another question, I'll answer that, Madam Chair.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair. If I could, I'd like to go back and forth with the Health minister, please. Is that okay? Thank you.

To the House and to the minister. The amount requested for operational supply over the next two months is $3.44 billion. The total amount supplied last year was $18.6 billion. Annualized, the amount requested from the Assembly here today: that will work out to be $20.6 billion for the operations, of course, over the entire year. Now, you've spoken out quite a bit that you want to bend the cost curve from this 6 per cent annual growth to, I believe, approximately 2.5 per cent. But, Minister Hoffman, you're starting with an 11 per cent increase, making it much harder, you know, over the 10 next months to achieve that cost when you already are 40 or 45 per cent of our budget, when the government is slipping a further $10 billion into debt. The degree of difficulty in placing those bonds and paying back that interest is of great concern and, of course, is directly related to the value that Albertans get out of our health care system and to the cost of our health care system.

My first question – and I have six. Why does your ministry need such a large amount of money for the first two months? Is this a sign of continuation? Are you going to meet your goal?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair and the member for the question. As you've heard, government requires interim funding to continue to provide services to Albertans until the new budget has been passed. Health, of course, is the largest part that needed funding. I'm here to share information on the funding required by my department to make sure that Albertans can have access to the quality health care that they require in the coming weeks, 61 days, to be exact.

To begin, I'm asking for approval of $3.4 billion, as was mentioned by the member, in interim supply funding to cover Alberta Health expenses. This funding is needed for things like paying doctors so that they can continue to provide care that's required for Albertans. And given that we're still in the flu season, of course, it's better to err on the side of caution when you're asking for funding for 61 days because there could be higher need for physician billings during this first two-month period than there might be later in the summer and other portions of the year.

It's also needed for Alberta Health Services for the multiple services that they provide, and it's required to cover drugs and other supplementary health benefits for Albertans, particularly those who are low-income. There's nothing new. It's simply funding that we need to keep our health care system at the current level of operations.

We're also seeking $3.6 million for capital, which might be one of your further questions. Just to advance that, the capital needs are to support the work of the department and for Alberta Health Services, to maintain the current IT systems that we use. It would also cover eligible capital purchases so that AHS can continue to replace or upgrade machinery and equipment. Again, my experience is that it's better to err on the side of caution. If an expensive piece of equipment is to break down in these first 61 days, I'd rather we have a little bit of a cushion or room for a margin of error than to have to come back for further interim supply requests in the first 61 days. So, to be very open, I'm just asking for that little bit of insurance room in the first 61 days so that we can be able to operate prudently and not impact patient health and well-being.

Thank you.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you; $3.44 billion is a staggering amount of money.

I guess the heart of my question, Minister Hoffman, is – you're up 11 per cent on an annual basis. Are there any specific items in the first two months that are pushing this number higher? Where are you going to achieve the 4 per cent savings that you're talking about, especially now, when you have to make up the ground? How did you decide on this number? I mean, okay; you want to keep things flowing – yes, we want to make sure our good, front-line professionals are there and are paid, absolutely – but how did you decide on an 11 per cent increase instead of a 2 and a half per cent increase? What are the specifics, please?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair and to the member for the question. As we're well aware, this was a leap year, and in a leap year there are increased costs for that one extra day in terms of education budgets. We have a certain number of minutes per year of instruction.

In terms of health care, we provide health care to Albertans at all times, and having that extra day of operations costs about $55 million for health care. That's about the average cost of running health care for Albertans for one specific day. To be completely honest, we looked at about $55 million a day by 61 days, and we added room for a margin of error because if there are increased costs in these first 61 days, when we're still in the middle of flu season, while construction season is picking up, while there are opportunities where health costs could be higher in these two months as opposed to two months later in the year, it's important to have that room for a margin of error so we don't have to come back yet again asking for an additional interim supply bill. So we're looking at about $55 million a day with room for additional costs in these two months because health care costs are driven right now primarily based on need – right? – the need of the patient. If a patient shows up, we're going to find a way to make sure that we can continue to offer those services.

Right now we're also in the middle of negotiations with physicians. They've returned to the table with the AMA – this is two years prior to the last agreement, that was made by the previous government, being up – because they know and we know that the current model is not sustainable. Increasing at about 6 per cent a year has not been something that we can continue to do moving forward, so we're back at the table with the AMA. We're making sure that we can find ways to find efficiencies and sustainability for the system. And physicians, like all Albertans, are members of Alberta. They want to make sure that we have a system that's here long term for the benefit of us all.

We certainly have a lot of opportunities in this 61-day period to make sure that we're achieving our goal. The last budget that was passed: we had about a 4 and a half per cent increase last year, 4 per cent this year, 3, and then 2 after that. So we're certainly looking at bending the curve, getting from 6 per cent increases instead to a more sustainable increase model. This is simply money that we need for the 61 days to get us through this very initial stage.

Thank you.

Mr. Barnes: Thanks again, Minister.

The Chair: Hon. member, just a reminder: through the chair and, as well, avoid using personal names.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Thank you. Yeah. Sorry.

Alberta Health Services. Our number one cost in our entire budget, of course, does not include our payment to doctors and doctors' salaries. I was concerned – very, very concerned – in our budgeting discussions some time ago that Alberta Health Services wasn't even at our supply meeting that night. I'm very concerned, and I'm wondering now: in this number presented that you're asking for for the 61 days, what was the Alberta Health Services' role? It sounds like you're just, you know: steady, same course, worry about extra value and extra savings down the road. But is this what Alberta Health Services requested? Did you have them at the table at all? Do they get whatever they asked for?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Chair. Certainly, there is a dialogue, as there is with other orders of recipients of large grants. Alberta Health Services is a grant recipient. They, of course, provide the front-line health care that we all rely on, just like school boards, our front-line education providers. We, of course, don't call the school boards to come to estimates of the province. This is the province's budgeting process.

Certainly, Alberta Health Services does have a budget. Their budget, that is passed on to them, is passed on by the government of Alberta, and then they, of course, work to determine how they're going to achieve their needs within that allocated budget, just like the municipalities; when they receive funding from the provincial government, they aren't at our provincial debate or our provincial estimates. That's our budget, and then they, of course, make their budgets in turn. It's the same process with Alberta Health Services.

We have a dialogue about needs, just as I'm sure other ministers do, with those who help provide services on behalf of the government of Alberta. We are working with them to make sure that we're optimizing best practices, not just best practices from within Alberta, but looking at other jurisdictions, hospitals from across Canada to make sure that we're using the best practices. And it's been a very positive last few months. We're certainly making great progress, and I'll be happy to discuss this more with you in detail, I'm sure, at the full budget debate in just a few weeks.

Thank you.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Thank you again, Minister. I'm still not clear on why we need an 11 per cent increase compared to just the 2.5 or even the 6 per cent increase.

Laboratories have been in the news quite a bit the last while. In Medicine Hat I absolutely believe that moving the Medicine Hat Diagnostic Lab is going to provide tremendously inferior services for the citizens and cost the taxpayers of Medicine Hat and all the taxpayers of Alberta more money. I'm thinking of our north zone lab services, the situation between Sonic and DynaLife, that $300 million that was out there, and the situation as to how people in Edmonton and how people in northern Alberta are going to get the laboratory services that they need. Is any of that 11 per cent budgeted towards some of these changes, that we haven't seen the full numbers on and are going to have considerable cost increases? What is the plan for the north zone lab service, please?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. Certainly, we are having ongoing dialogue, and I understand your perspective on the Medicine Hat change, from having a private lab and a public lab to having one public lab. Certainly, the business case is there, and I've shared it publicly with you and with others in the area. There will be multiple pickup sites. The level of service is going to be comparable if not improved, but being able to maintain one lab as opposed to maintaining two labs – certainly, I think, just having two sets of infrastructure versus one set of infrastructure makes sound infrastructure sense. If you can achieve the needs of the regional area with one centralized lab, why wouldn't you do that? Why would you maintain two separate systems?

Certainly, there was an intention initially to try to maintain two separate systems, but given the fact that it was operating at significantly higher costs than other areas that are offering similar service, there just wasn't a business case there to be able to do it. I'm sure that members opposite like hearing me talk about the business case, right? I think it makes prudent sense to make sure that you're offering stable, predictable service in a way that is sustainable for the taxpayer and for the system. Certainly, I take your feedback into consideration and the feedback on all sides of that issue. I look forward to working through the next few months to offer sustainability to the people of Medicine Hat.

In terms of the latter question that was asked, about Edmonton and the north zone, we certainly are making great progress on our review of that. As I've mentioned in the past and will continue to in my days ahead, I really want to make decisions based on evidence and best practice, and I think it was demonstrated that there was not a consideration of either maintaining the current mix of private and public lab service in the Edmonton and north zone or expanding public service in the Edmonton and north zone.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: That brings us to the end of the first hour segment.

We will now move to the members of the third party if they wish to speak.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Chair. If we could, I'd like to go back and forth with the ministers and share also my time with my colleague the Member for Calgary-Hays.

The Chair: You'd like to go back and forth.

Dr. Starke: I want to start by just thanking, actually, the Government House Leader for bringing some explanation to the processes that occur within this House with regard to the timing of interim supply and supplementary estimates and those sorts of things. Actually, he took a lot of what I was going to say. What is going on here is nothing nefarious, nothing illegal, nothing that is a smoke-and-mirrors situation. You know, quite frankly, I get a little frustrated when this opposition, when we were over there, tried the strategy of obfuscation constantly, and they continue to do it now, trying to make the general public believe that something wrong is going on. Nothing wrong is going on.

I'd like to actually compliment the Finance minister when he says the words: we want to take the time to get it right. You know, I have full confidence that you're going to take the time; I have less confidence that you're going to get it right. But that's fine. April 14 to introduce the budget is two weeks into the fiscal year. The truth of the matter is that we do want to have the opportunity to have a good and fulsome discussion through the estimates process, and that shouldn't be rushed. So to have the interim supply go until the end of May: I have no issue with that whatsoever.

The other thing I actually have to find a little bit humorous is that, you know, on the one hand my Teutonic friend the Member for Strathmore-Brooks says that he likes nothing better than to discuss budgets, and then he complains that this is the sixth time we've had to do this since we've been elected. I mean, we know what's not in his top 100 list of things to debate, but I'm going to be relatively certain that discussing numbers and budgets is in the top 100 list somewhere, that and tipping practices and where to go for breakfast.

Moving on, Madam Chair, I do want to get to the substance of the matter today. A question to start, first of all, to the Finance minister. I do want to ask: we're looking at $8.7 billion in interim supply. If you pro-rate that out to the full year, that runs to about $52.2 billion, which would represent a 5 per cent increase. Now, I realize that it's a little bit dangerous to simply extend two months out to the full year, but can you assure this House that we're not going to be looking at a 5 per cent increase in the operational expenditures of this budget when it gets introduced in April?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, what I can assure the House is that the growth of the budget – the operating expenses of this budget will grow very close to population plus inflation.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. That number actually is going to be considerable, but we'll see, again, when the actual numbers come out.

Now, there was another comment made, I believe, by the Minister of Finance with regard to explaining why it would be a little bit dangerous to simply take the annual budget, divide by six, and say: well, that's what you need for the first two months. He was mentioning that specifically in relation to the Department of Economic Development and Trade and, you know, mentioning that additional monies were going to be sent out earlier and faster to get those jobs created and to get that economic diversification happening that, of course, all of us want to see. So I guess my question to that minister is: given that you've asked for additional monies at an accelerated pace early in the fiscal year, what measurements do you have in place or will you be developing within your department to let this House and Albertans, indeed, know what jobs have been created, what numbers, and what level of diversification you've achieved through your ministry?

Mr. Bilous: Yes, Madam Chair. I'll thank the member for the question, a very prudent question. One of the things that we're doing with my ministry is that we want to make sure that we are tracking, through performance measures, outcomes so that we can return to Albertans, return to this House to inform everyone on the progress that we're making and that dollars that are being spent are in fact going to help small businesses, entrepreneurs and that we're seeing real, tangible results. I think that at the end of the day Albertans want to see that the initiatives that we're undertaking are in fact helping to turn the economy around, which I do think is absolutely critical.

With the increase in the funding for interim supply – and I appreciate your comments, hon. member – first of all, the formula is not, you know: take the annual budget, divide it by 12, times two, and this is the number that we have. Quite frankly, especially with Economic Development and Trade – and I'm sure you'll know this, having been on this side of the House – costs like our international offices: the federal government requires that we pay for those up front. Many of our international offices, Alberta's international offices, are housed within our embassies throughout the world. That cost needs to be paid in the first two months. That's not something that we can divide up over the 12-month period. That's one of the significant costs that is driving this number in the interim supply bill.

The other is that, looking at our Innovates corporations and, again, the fact that we have four different Innovates corps. and much of the money is a flow through, they need the money up front. But the other aspect of our Innovates, especially when it comes to health solutions and tech futures, is the R and D component. Much of the R and D from Health comes out of the Innovates' budget.

We're talking about paying full-time professors, full-time researchers that are doing very critical research. Those monies need to be given up front, and, again, they can't be divided over the 12 months.

But what I can tell you, hon. member, is that we are developing not only performance measures but outcomes, metrics. We want to ensure that we have a way and I have a way of knowing that our programs are in fact achieving the goals that we are setting out. I can tell you – and I will make this commitment to this House – that if there are programs that are not achieving their outcomes, we will make changes, because at the end of the day my priority is doing everything that we can to set the right conditions to continue to make Alberta the best place to do business and to attract investment and support our entrepreneurs and businesses.

Dr. Starke: Well, I'd certainly like to thank the hon. minister for his answer.

I want to move on to two ministries, though. Although he's pointed out correctly, and certainly the Finance minister has as well, that there are foibles with the prorating, there are two ministries that certainly stand out in terms of where the expenditures for the next two months represent a very high percentage of the total expenditures for last year and one case where the expenditures for the next two months, if they're prorated out to a full year, represent a huge cut. As it turns out, it's the Ministry of Status of Women, that got a two-month allocation of $1.255 million, yet last year's entire budget was $1.447 million, and the Ministry of Indigenous Relations, where the budget for the full year would prorate out to $69.3 million, yet last year's budget for the previously named Aboriginal Relations was $204 million. For those two ministries, because there's such a variation in the prorated amount and the two-month amount, I'd just like to know what the explanation for that is. Is it the case that there's not much happening in these first two months and there's a lot happening later or vice versa?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. Yes. You've basically answered your own question as it comes down to it. A significant part of the Indigenous Relations budget is actually just flow-through money that comes from the casino budgets on First Nations reserves, and that money is not allocated until June every year. About $126 million or so is just excluded from our considerations right now. We haven't, as well, got any calculation of capital costs because there aren't any taking place in these particular two months because money has already been allocated. New expenses will come out in June in that case as well. So it's just simply a matter of: this is a period of time that money doesn't happen to flow. It will indeed flow when the appropriate time happens.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: I don't see the other minister here.

Dr. Starke: We'll move on.

Mr. Ceci: Okay.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. I will say that based on the estimates for last year that the government brought in in the ninth or 10th month or pretty late in the year, which we did criticize – and I stand by that because I did think that the government dragged it out too long. The fact that the government is out with these estimates before the end of the fiscal year for the next year – for me, anyway, I'll give the Minister of Finance the most improved award this year. Frankly, the people of Alberta need to have an idea before the year is mostly over how their money is being spent, and I think there's a chance of that happening. So credit where it's due and criticism where I thought it was also due before.

The Finance minister did talk about reining in spending and suggested there's evidence in these estimates of reining in spending. Could he briefly tell me where he reined in spending?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Holding the third-quarter fiscal update and economic statement, that I delivered a couple of weeks ago, it identifies places where there was a reduction in expenses as a result of I think it was $463 million. We were able to constrain spending in the areas of assisting – because the crops did much better than was planned, the insurance monies that were put in place, that were put forward to Agriculture and Forestry, weren't all needed. We then didn't have to spend that money. That was one of the main areas where we have constrained spending.

Going forward for Budget 2016, we have a number of constraints, restraints in terms of hiring that are identified. We are in the situation where if there are four vacancies or three vacancies in an area of a department, only two will be filled or one will be filled in an attempt to spend less on labour costs going down the road in these difficult times.

We, of course, have had a severe reduction in terms of the revenues. I think I identified $600 million less in revenues as a result of the oil and gas royalties not performing to the extent that we had hoped, what all Albertans had hoped. So we've had to tighten up our spending.

We've of course tightened it up in relation to Alberta public service workers, who have taken a two-year wage freeze. Starting this April 1, the 2.5 per cent wage increase that was anticipated or agreed to with those management, opted-out, and exempt employees will not be taking place, nor will grid movement as a result of their time in the public service. So we're constraining spending on the salary side, replacing fewer workers than the ministries have allotments for in terms of FTEs. I need to thank all the members here, too, because we led the way with taking a four-year wage freeze, during the length of this term, as well as our political staff. So on the salary side both the elected, management, opted-out, and exempt have taken these steps. Of course, Budget 2016 will provide the full information in a few short weeks around other initiatives that are going to take place.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, and I thank the minister for the answer. But you'll have to forgive me; I'm left a little wanting. While I accept what the minister said, I think that if you were to restate what the minister said, it wasn't so much restraint as that we got lucky that the insurance claims weren't so high in forestry and agriculture. And we're happy about that – don't misunderstand me – but that's not really what I would call reining in spending. I would say that it was a lack of hail and rain and things that destroy crops and forest fires. While we're happy about that, it definitely doesn't fall under the category of reining in spending.

Where the minister did actually make claims about things that you could call reining in spending is, of course, the wage freeze for some senior management and elected officials, which are good things. Good things. Compliments on all the good things. But the fact is that in relative terms to the rest of the budget, it's very much chewing on the edges and not getting to the heart of the matter at all when it comes to reining in spending. Although I will say that even with that, the minister did actually talk about reining in spending, and he talked about it without actually saying that we were laying off doctors, nurses, and teachers. Every time on this side of the House that we talk about reining in spending, the government says that the only way to do it is to lay off doctors, nurses, and teachers, and I think the minister just admitted that's not the case. There are other ways to rein in spending without laying off doctors, nurses, and teachers, and we'll hope to see some of that from this government as time goes on. Hopefully, we'll see them resist characterizing any reining in of spending as that being the only choice.

Now, there are lots of things in here. Let me also say that from my municipal background when people talked about tipping practices, I thought you were talking about tipping fees because, of course, that's what you pay when you go to the dump with a load of garbage. The fee is a tipping fee.

Here's something. Now, I appreciate these are estimates, but they are prebudget estimates, so my question is for every minister. I'll tell you why it's an every minister question. I want to know in detail – and I thank the Government House Leader, the Minister of Infrastructure as well as Transportation, for giving us some of those details, but not all, on the health care things – about capital. You should be able to tell us what every single capital dollar here is used for. I hope no minister will say, "Wait for the budget," because these are estimates for money before the budget. So if you want the money before the budget and you're asking permission today, every single minister on that front bench ought to be able to tell this House and every Albertan what every single dollar in every single capital budget that's being asked for here today is going to go to. I think it's a fair question. I hope the ministers are prepared for the answers, and I genuinely hope we get full, detailed answers.

I think people would be particularly interested in schools. While they're giving their answers, I hope that they will clarify how much the government was able to save in their capital expenditures, and I hope that there are some savings based on the difficult financial times right now and what I believe are opportunities to get lower bids and tenders in because of that. If they could expand on that, if they have more detail than they can give in the two or three minutes they have remaining, I would appreciate some written acknowledgement in answer to those questions since it's only right and reasonable that every single minister should already have those answers, or they should not have asked for the money in the first place.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you for those questions from the leader of the third party. My capital projects are considerable with 232 new schools on the books. It's very interesting to see the school building and modernization budget as we move forward. In fact, we've developed since October a pay-as-you-go system, a mechanism by which we can track through Infrastructure with the large boards, that are assuming the projects themselves, much more closely where they are and what instalments they require. As I mentioned to the Infrastructure minister just this morning, on an annualized basis, actually, we expect to save more than $15 million by paying as the projects require the money instead of paying in perhaps quarterly and/or in a larger time area. I think that's an innovation that should bear noting by the public. Certainly, you know, with the very large capital project list that we have on the go here, it's very important that we get the full value of each of those projects.

Another issue that I mentioned in my reply to the throne speech yesterday and that I'll say here again today is that we're seeing a lot of promise with projects and bids coming in under our estimated costs considerably. Edmonton public informed me a couple of days ago that two of their projects had come in 23 per cent lower than what the estimated cost was going to be. So good for them. You know, I think that bodes well. There are many more people bidding for the contracts as well, and again that reinforces, I think, the utility of building at this juncture. We get better savings for the schools that we're building, and we are getting more bidders. Quite frankly, we're providing considerable employment for contractors and tradespeople by having this unprecedented build.

With my estimates, we are moving forward $240.8 million of capital investment, and it's money well spent.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

We've moved into the next segment for the next 20 minutes with the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow. Did you wish to do a back and forth?

Mr. Clark: Yes, please. I will go back and forth with the minister.

One of the joys of going third, I suppose, is that a lot of the territory that I had hoped to cover has already been covered, so my apologies in advance should some of this be a repeat.

Also, I'm a little troubled and unsettled by the differences I have here with my good friend from Vermilion-Lloydminster. We tend to get along and see the world in a very similar way on most issues, but I do have to disagree on the timing here of interim supply and the fact of interim supply at all. Standing orders state that we are to be in the House on the second Tuesday of February. Had this government followed the standing orders, we would have been in in plenty of time to see and debate a budget in a fulsome way in time for the end of the fiscal year. It's equally unsettling, I have to say, that I am onboard with my friends in the Wildrose opposition on this issue as well.

You know, the government wants us to believe that it's not really a big deal to be debating interim supply here again, but it is. While, of course, it's not totally unheard of, there is a reason that the standing orders start us in February, when they do, and that is so that we have enough time to debate and pass a budget such that we don't have to be going through interim supply.

When we're talking about two full months, the $8.7 billion number we've talked about here annualized would take us to $52.18 billion, which is fully a billion dollars more, if we were to trend that out, over Budget 2015. Now, that's a worrisome trend. We've heard some explanation, and I'll dig a little deeper into some of the specific line items here when I do get to my questions. I know that there's some explanation, particularly in Health, as to why that is, and I can accept some of that. But the overall trend is worrisome insofar as it shows no indication of any interest in trying to bend not just the cost curve of health care but the cost curve of government.

It seems to indicate that this government is going to double down on all aspects of spending, including operational spending, and when we're borrowing for operations in the way we are, that's very troublesome. That is akin to carrying credit card debt as opposed to borrowing for capital, which is akin to having a mortgage on an asset, which is a good thing. When you're borrowing for operations to just keep the lights on, to buy pens and pencils, and to pay salaries, that's troublesome. That then creates a spiral that's very difficult to get out of. I know this government will say that they intend to be here beyond the next three years – they may not – but someone eventually is going to have to get us out of that significant debt spiral.

One of the other concerns I have is that we only debated Budget 2015 a scarce three months ago, four months ago, but a lot of the projections in that budget are already way off. We know that the revenue projections are already significantly off, off by $660 million, which is roughly 1.5 per cent, which would have been 2.1 per cent, or $910 million, had the federal government not ponied up with the fiscal stabilization program. Equally troubling, perhaps even more so because we know in Alberta that the history of energy prices has a big impact on our revenue forecasts – I acknowledge that this government, no government anywhere, perhaps with the exception Saudi Arabia, can determine the price of oil. We know that.

An Hon. Member: They have a huge deficit, too.

Mr. Clark: They do have a huge deficit. They've got a big problem.

We know that oil prices, energy prices are unpredictable. We know that. But Budget 2015 has undeployed capital of nearly a billion dollars; $948 million of capital is being rolled over, undeployed from Budget 2015. That really raises a bigger question here about this government's ability to actually deploy capital in an effective and timely way. If we're going to borrow to build capital assets, it's important not only that you borrow and put those numbers in a spreadsheet or in a financial statement; it's very important that we put that capital to work. That's been a question I've had and a concern I've had from the very beginning.

Although the $34 billion, if I'm not mistaken, capital plan – broadly speaking, I agree with the principle of borrowing to build, especially in a down time. Our Minister of Education has just told us that we're finding that we're getting better prices on certain projects. All of those are good things. But if we find that we can't deploy that capital, are we actually having the desired effect? I encourage the government to think of those things as they move forward and as we move into the budget.

We've already talked, of course, that interim supply ought to be the exception rather than the rule. It seems to be the rule from this government, and I would hope that come Budget 2017, we're in fact in the House early in February such that we can debate and pass the budget without the need for interim supply, which by its very nature is less detailed.

My overall concern is that our strong financial position, which has allowed us to borrow money at reasonably attractive rates, will continue to be eroded, that we have significant risk of further credit-rating downgrades. This is an issue that I've raised before in this House, but I have a significant concern that we face that further risk.

What is the plan to curb borrowing for operations? That's a big concern, which I've talked about earlier.

These are all questions that Albertans have asked me, questions that I have that ought to be answered in a budget, in the hundreds of pages of budget documents. While I know that we ultimately, eventually will receive that budget, I think it's important in this very difficult time that those questions are not only answered but that they're answered in a timely way. There was a way of doing that, but here we are: we find ourselves debating an interim supply bill.

I'm going to dive into some specific questions here as I look at the numbers. Interestingly, although certain line items have gone up in the interim supply bill or plan that we see before us, overall program expenditures are $156 million under the two-month expectation. Capital expenditures are $136 million underexpended, which means financial transactions and lottery fund transfers must be above expectations. In plain English for, I'm sure, the thousands of Albertans who are watching at home online, that means the government is spending more on debt servicing and increasingly relying on transfers from the lottery fund. I'll ask the Minister of Finance: please, can you quantify exactly how much we expect in terms of financial transactions and transfers from the lottery fund to help explain this discrepancy?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. Thank you very much to the member opposite.

I neglected to appreciate and thank the leader of the third party for the most improved award. I should have mentioned that. Thank you very much. There is a magazine, called Alberta Views, that did give me a B plus as well, and I wonder: when was the last time a Finance minister in this province got a B plus? We'll have to check that out.

A couple of things I want to address with regard to this interim – no. Budget 2015 first, I guess. The energy situation in this province: as many know, royalties have dropped significantly, about a 20 per cent drop, I think was mentioned, from 2014-15 to 2015-16, about $7 billion. The situation with regard to when the energy prices were put into this budget, I think, goes back to about the first part of June, July 2015. Of course, we brought this budget forward on October 27. In that interim our experts and experts around the world didn't see this coming in terms of the dramatic drop in energy prices, so we were out, like everybody else was, in terms of an estimation of where the revenues would come from.

The undeployed capital. I just want to identify that that $800 million that you talked about is happening because we pushed that forward and reprofiled it so it could be drawn down when it is needed. We are not reducing the capital amount. We are just putting it in the right time frame for when it's necessary and needed, and we did increase the capital expenditure over the previous government's $30 billion over five years, I think it was. We put 15 per cent more on top of that.

Budget 2015 – and it'll be carried through in Budget 2016 – will significantly maintain public services so that Albertans can be assisted through this challenging time in the sense that we're telling them that we're going to carry the operational costs. It's not ideal that we're borrowing to do that in some amount, but that's what we have to do to show Albertans and tell Albertans that the services they rely on will be there when they need them. We have their backs with regard to operational spending. We will carry a debt and a deficit as a result of that. We are bending the curve not only in health care, but you'll see in Budget 2016 where there's additional restraint in our spending going forward.

The amount from the transfer from the lottery fund of the $362 million exhibits the quarterly transfer from that fund that we can expect. We use those monies to address general revenue fund expenses. It's about 25 per cent. If you multiply that by four, you'll see what we anticipate coming in during the course of the year, and that's only 25 per cent. You wouldn't multiply that by six in this case; you would by four.

I think those are some of the answers I wanted to provide.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Minister. Your comments about borrowing for operations, I think, are exactly the point. Sorry; I have two points here. The reprofiling of the capital dollars from last year to this: that's exactly my point. If those dollars were in Budget 2015, one would expect that they would be deployed in 2015. That's the point of having those dollars in that budget. Reprofiling means that we didn't spend it last year, but we're going to spend it this year. So that implies delays; it implies an inability to actually put those dollars to work. That's the point.

I guess my request to this government would be: as you consider those capital expenditures, can you actually deploy the dollars? If not, let's figure out why that is. That's entirely the point because, frankly, that will prevent us from perhaps even borrowing more. It would make the deficit number smaller. Perhaps that's not advice I should be giving you because if you take it, it's actually going to look better on you. But ultimately that's what I'm here to do. I am really just here to help.

Some questions specifically about some of the line items. If we were to annualize the per-day expenditure, as has been done in health care, of Education, we would see that the operating expense for Education is actually substantially underspent. Same thing for Advanced Education. Now, I presume that has to do with the time of year that these expenditures are happening, but can I ask, please, the Minister of Education to just confirm that or exactly why those dollars are a relatively low expenditure here at this point?

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you for the question. It's very important to realize that in general as well we will always have interim supply for Education simply because the financial year for Education is from September to September while our financial year here is otherwise. So unless we sit in July and pass budgets in August, which we could do if you like, then we will always have interim supply at least for Education. So that's a very important lesson to remember if we try to suggest that we don't need interim supply. We will always need it for K to 12 education; such is the structure.

Specifically to your question around our operating expenses: yes, indeed it's just the cycle of how the money is required by the 61 school boards to which I distribute the money and so forth. It's very important as well to remember when we are analyzing K to 12 education that 97 per cent of the monies that pass through my ministry are distributed to the school boards. They are empowered through democratic election to make decisions around their school boards and their expenditures, so our operating disbursements reflect that reality.

Thank you for the question.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the minister for that answer.

I'd like to ask the Minister of Municipal Affairs – apologies if this is ground that's been covered previously by another minister. Program spending over the interim supply period is $216 million more than one would expect on a straight-line basis over the next two months. What is the plan for that extra spending? Does it have anything at all to do with changes coming either in this legislative sitting, perhaps in the MGA? Can the minister please speak specifically to why that might be?

Ms Larivee: Thank you for the question. Looking at what's requested for interim supply, it's kind of expected to be actually well within reason. Some pieces of it such as the federal gas tax fund are flow-through funding from the federal government, and we have to include that as an expense. It's also a revenue item. A hundred per cent of that will be received and disbursed during the first two months, so that portion is included within there. We're expecting to have to disburse a portion of grants in place of taxes, a portion of Alberta community partnership grants. Also, because of the requirements we have with previous agreements, we have to disburse 50 per cent of our library grants within the first couple of months with that.

Also, again, the 16.7 per cent, which is kind of the portion of two months, will continue to go to the programming that we deliver to Albertans on a regular basis, so the support we provide to the municipalities in terms of strengthening their accountability, their viability. I mean, as you know, we're currently reviewing the MGA and all the work entailed with that and working with Edmonton and Calgary in terms of charter development. There are a number of municipalities across this province that are looking for support in terms of help with determining viability and sustainability.

We continue to support the Alberta Emergency Management Agency and the work they do in protecting people, property, and the environment in terms of emergencies and prevention as well as responding to them in that situation. We continue to support the work of the MGB in terms of supporting that independent agency to provide the answers to Albertans and decisions they need regarding municipal matters; continuing to support the public safety division and the work in terms of supporting the code development, the standards development, and the enforcement of those; as well, supporting the office of the fire commissioner and the work they do in supporting our fire departments across the province; supporting our assessment division in terms of the work they do in developing standards, which includes auditing municipalities, dealing with complaints and appeals, the assessment of linear properties, setting and enforcing rates in terms of industrial property development. All that work will continue to happen, and I'm happy to continue to fund that.

In terms of financial transactions that's what we expect to disburse within a couple of months in terms of supporting the 2013 southern Alberta flood disbursements that we're expecting to make.

Mr. Clark: Thank you. Asking specifically on some of the capital spending, I notice that in Health there is a $140 million underexpenditure from what we would expect on a straight-line basis in the first two months. Could perhaps either the Minister of Infrastructure or the Minister of Health speak to that?

Mr. Mason: With respect to the hon. member's question about the lapsed amount, I just wanted to indicate first of all that 87.9 per cent of the capital budget in this year has been expended. According to Ernst & Young the benchmark for other jurisdictions is 85 per cent, so we are very much in the normal range. It's a little higher than we had hoped. There are a number of reasons for this.

The Chair: Hon. members, the time has elapsed for that segment, and we're now moving into the next 20 minutes, where private members of the government caucus may ask questions.

First on my list is the hon. Member for Red Deer-South. Did you want to do a back and forth?

Ms Miller: Please.

The Chair: Go ahead.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm interested to know about the STEP program, which was announced last fall. Our students need every possible opportunity to succeed. My understanding is that with STEP's reinstatement, doors will be open again for students to gain skills and on-the-job experience, and employers will in turn grow their businesses further. Hon. minister, how many students will be subsidized through STEP, when does the program start, and how much money are we committing to it?

Ms Gray: Thank you very much for the question. Madam Chair, I'm pleased to provide an update on the summer temporary employment program, or STEP. I'd like to take just a few minutes to share with all members the benefits of this program. As you know, our government committed to bringing this program back this summer, and the work to have that happen is well under way. The program benefits high school and postsecondary students who are looking for work experience that will help create a path towards their chosen career fields in the future.

STEP will help to open doors for students to gain the skills and on-the-job experience that they need to enter the workforce and be successful. For a student, having work experience is crucial for getting that very first job. We want to make sure we're giving that leg up to students so that they can take the first step up that ladder of their career to something rewarding and empowering that they can succeed at. Not only will the students be getting hands-on experience, but the work can inspire them to continue pursuing their chosen field. By investing in STEP, we are investing in students and supporting employers across the province so that they can grow and be successful.

Now, small businesses are the backbone of our economy, and it's important that we support them, especially through these challenging times. That's why this year we made STEP available to small businesses. With the government's commitment of $10 million for this program, STEP will provide employers who hire students a wage subsidy of $7 an hour for summer work from May to August. As part of the program we are working to make sure that the positions are distributed across sectors and across all of Alberta.

Over the past several weeks staff in my ministry have been working hard to make Alberta employers aware of this program. More than 70 information sessions were held in 41 communities across the province, and I'm really encouraged to see the number of employers who are taking advantage of this great opportunity and excited for this program to begin in the summer. Applications closed on February 29. We received 2,606 applications from employers, so I think it's safe to say that employers are just as excited about the program as I am. Selected employers will be notified in April, with some students starting work as soon as May. The $10 million allocated to this program will support approximately 2,500 to 3,000 student jobs all across Alberta. This program is a real win-win. It will benefit organizations and support our future of bright, new young Albertans.

I was able to connect with one specific applicant, a business called the Paint Spot here in Edmonton. It's a local artist-run visual arts centre and art supply store. They had put in an application for two STEP students because, as well as running a small business in Edmonton, they also run the very wildly successful Art Walk, an outdoor studio and gallery event showcasing hundreds of working artists every summer here in Edmonton. I believe it runs for two or three days.

A lot of work goes into setting up this Art Walk, and they were so excited that the STEP program was back because it was something that their team – the ownership and some of the staff – were having to do kind of around the business of the Paint Spot. Now they'll be able to have two students, hopefully, organizing, running, co-ordinating, learning about the business, and making invaluable business contacts through the summer, continuing the work of – perhaps they're in an art and design program in university. It also lets the owner of this store focus on business because, of course, with the downturn in the economy this owner wants to make sure that things are running smoothly. So it's very much a win-win here and a great program. I'm happy to provide an update.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Madam Chair. When we look at the many issues and concerns in my constituency of West Yellowhead, the question is this: with the support of Budget 2015, what initiatives has the minister undertaken to promote jobs and diversification in Alberta, and what is available in this interim supply to continue this important work?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair, and I'll thank the member for the very pertinent question. There are a number of initiatives that my ministry has been working on since it was first stood up in late October of last year. One of the initiatives I'm quite proud that we've rolled out is the petrochemical diversification program. You know, quite frankly, our government, long before we formed government, and the Premier talked often about value-added opportunities and ways that we can support the oil and gas sector in looking at adding more value, whether that's downstream or upstream.

This program that I jointly announced with the Minister of Energy is significant in the sense that within our province we have an abundance of natural gas. We have a fairly significant amount of cheap propane, cheap feedstock. Up until now, Madam Chair, in our country there was not one facility that takes propane and upgrades it, whether it's to propylene or polypropylene. So this project is the first of its kind. But what we wanted to do was basically level the playing field, quite frankly. Many facilities that upgrade propane are found on the Gulf coast, in Louisiana and Texas. They are heavily subsidized by governments in the south. As well, you know, there is a difference in costs. Alberta has a much colder climate, and we traditionally have a little bit higher building costs.

Our government has been approached by a number of companies interested in upgrading, whether its methane or propane. We're looking for some kind of project or some kind of partnership that could be struck between the government and themselves. This program was a $500 million announcement of royalty credits, forgoing future royalty credits, with no dollars coming out of our budget, nothing coming off our books. We project that up to three facilities will be constructed within our province and will create thousands of construction jobs and, after that, hundreds of long-term, high-paying, quality jobs.

The other significant part of this program is that there will be additional spinoffs that come from this. Again, once we move forward up the value chain in a new area, there will be businesses that will be attracted to our province and also those that will start within our province.

That leads me to one of the next things that we've done, which is through our voucher program wanting to support small to medium-sized businesses through their movement into the commercialization process. There are significant costs for start-ups when they're looking at testing their products, when they're looking at testing the market. Those cost a significant amount of money. We announced not long ago an additional $5 million to a voucher program, which is going to provide some assistance to them.

The other thing: just last week I signed on behalf of the government of Alberta a letter of intent with the Business Development Bank of Canada, which is our federal partner. It's a Crown corporation that provides assistance to businesses. The exciting part about this letter of intent: first of all, in no other province in our country is there a letter of intent signed. So this was really a historic signing between the government of Alberta, the province of Alberta, and the Business Development Bank of Canada, truly striking a partnership, one where we have a common goal, and that is to provide as much support as we can to our business community, to our sectors that are struggling but also to our entrepreneurs.

One of the things I love to brag about in our province is the fact that we are the youngest province, we are the fastest growing province in the country, and we are one of the most educated provinces in the country, so Alberta truly is the best place to start or grow a business. As well, you know, as the Finance minister often points out, we have the strongest balance sheet of all the provinces, and Albertans still pay the lowest taxes compared to other provinces. Something the opposition often fails to recollect is the fact that Alberta is one of the only provinces that does not have a PST, which means that we are a very competitive province. [interjections] Despite what others may think, it was our government that chose not to bring in a PST and to keep Alberta very, very competitive. As well, within our province there is a vast amount of opportunities for trade and investment, which I will maybe expound on the next time I stand up.

Thank you.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, hon. minister, for your answer. My second question, then. Because of the many exports that occur in the constituency, we know that expanding our market access is one of the most important things that this government can do to support Alberta industry and businesses. Our royalty review highlighted one of the best examples of this problem in that the American market, which was once our biggest energy products purchaser, has now become one of the biggest competitors. Can the minister speak to efforts that will be supported by this supply bill to increase market access and trade?

The Chair: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll thank the member for the question, again a very pertinent question. Many Albertans are wondering about market access, and I'd like to assure them that that is one of my top priorities as well as the Premier's top priority, gaining market access.

Now, our approach to this has been different from the opposition. They often think that jumping up and down and shouting is a way to get pipelines built. Quite frankly, it hasn't worked in the past, and I don't think it will work. Our approach has been one to take meaningful action for our province to do our part. Last fall the environment minister along with the Premier made a historic announcement, one in which – again, I was quite proud to be in the room to see leaders from the oil industry alongside indigenous leaders, alongside environmental NGOs, all saying that our climate leadership plan is the most robust that we've seen within our country. Quite frankly, we are now and will be a world leader on the environment, which other countries have already taken note of.

Madam Chair, I'll make this fairly quick. I had lunch with many of the high commissioners from the embassies that were here over the past couple of days, representatives from many, many different countries around the world, from all different continents. Their governments are aware of our climate leadership plan. They not only praised our government for taking action, but I can tell you that they are much more interested in trading with Alberta and strengthening our collaboration between our province and their countries. What I found the most fascinating, especially, was the fact that European Union countries have been waiting for the province to take meaningful action on the environment and are quite excited at future partnerships that we're going to have and opening up doors for expanding trade.

To the member's question. Market access and trade are absolutely critical for our province. As I've said before in this House, Alberta last year exported $120 billion worth of goods; $109 billion went to the U.S. alone. They are our number one trading partner. However, it is of the utmost importance that we expand our trade networks, that we access other countries, that we look at opportunities to do more business in Asia, in Europe, in South America and Africa, and that is exactly what we're doing.

Work through our international offices. Again, as I mentioned earlier, in our budget the growth in the interim supply for Economic Development and Trade: much of that is because our international offices are required to pay the bill up front for the year, so that's a significant reason that my budget has increased.

Madam Chair, I'll conclude by assuring the member that our government is doing everything that we can, working with our provincial counterparts across the country, working with the federal government to ensure that they understand the economic benefits of projects like Energy East and how much it benefits all Canadians, not just Albertans: tens of thousands of jobs, billions of dollars in GDP. Quite frankly, I think our approach has already produced results where previous governments, in their approach of doing nothing but hoping that we can just sell our product, have failed. So we will continue to work on that. That is a commitment that the Premier has made and that I've made, that the Minister of Energy has made, and I'm confident that we will achieve just that.

Thank you.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll yield my time. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Chair. This is to the Minister of Health. Minister, speaking with my constituents and my colleagues on the front lines in health care as well as Albertans across the province, a key message I've been hearing time and time again is that Albertans are really pleased with the increased health budget that we saw last year. I'm particularly impressed with the distribution of naloxone that happened recently, the expansion of midwifery, and the expansion of access to electronic medical records for all of us health care workers. There is a concern, though, about access to affordable medication. It's critical to Albertans' health and quality of life. I'm particularly concerned about our vulnerable populations' access to health. Could the minister speak to this, as to what she's doing with these estimates?

Ms Payne: First, I would say to the member that we've heard similar concerns in ridings across the province. With respect to the increase for drug and supplemental health benefits, that $146 million increase has benefited Albertans by allowing us to continue to add new therapies to our drug coverage plans, which includes 26 new products through the Pan-Canadian Pharmaceutical Alliance as at the end of Q3 of this fiscal year. With the shift by the pharmaceutical industry to focus more on high-cost but higher precision treatments such as Sovaldi and Harvoni for hepatitis C, our government anticipates higher expenditures for these types of products. However, these therapies have also been proven to increase the cure rate for treated patients. All drugs that are being added to the health program are ones that have evidence of similar and often increased clinical benefit to our patients.

Thank you.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Minister. I can attest to the benefits of that sort of approach to our cancer patients as well.

Minister, a highlight of Budget 2015 was a desire by your ministry to upgrade medical equipment. I say that this is significant because upgrading old equipment ensures that Albertans are receiving the services they require. Can the minister speak to some of the upgrades that have taken place? How does the interim budget help facilitate this ongoing need?

The Chair: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you. The medical equipment replacement and upgrade program was established to help ease the strain of replacing and upgrading aging and obsolete medical equipment and technology throughout our province. In Budget 2015 $23.5 million was committed to addressing these needs and to supplementing new clinical program technology requirements. We are continuing to work with Alberta Health Services to fund targeted high-priority technologies, including the replacement of medical equipment. There is an allocation in the interim supply to continue this important work until the upcoming budget is fully approved.

Thank you.

Dr. Turner: Thank you again.

Minister, on page 136 of the government estimates addictions and mental health were provided with an 11.2 per cent increase in funding compared to 2014-15. I've heard concerns from my constituents and elsewhere regarding the state of addictions...

The Chair: Hon. members, that concludes that segment of time.

We're beginning the rotation again, and we'll be moving over to the Official Opposition. Times now are shorter. We've got a combined 10 minutes per speaker.

Hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, did you wish to do a back and forth?

Mr. Stier: Yes, Madam Chair. Thank you. I would like to address my questions to the Minister of Municipal Affairs if I may. I'd appreciate, if it's okay, going back and forth, Minister.

Ms Larivee: Sure.

Mr. Stier: Okay. Thank you very much.

Good morning, all. A pleasure to be here at this moment to discuss the budget and, specifically, Municipal Affairs. Minister, it's been a while since we've spoken, and I just have a few things to get out because of the limited time.

Madam Chair, did you say that I have 10 minutes, one block of 10 minutes?

The Chair: Ten minutes in total if you're doing a back and forth.

Mr. Stier: Okay. Ten minutes. That's great. So now we know. Would you mind giving me the heads-up at nine minutes?

The Chair: Sure.

Mr. Stier: Thank you very much.

Ms Larivee: It has to be shared, 10 minutes.

Mr. Stier: I understand that, Minister. Thank you.

Minister Larivee, I was just looking over, as a start here – I have several questions. I hope we can have some brevity if possible. According to your interim supply estimates you're budgeting roughly $265 million for operating and capital expenses. For the same period last year it was around $233 million. It looks like about a 13 per cent increase in spending for this period. I'm just wondering if you could explain where that $31 million increase is. Is it spread out over a lot of things, or are there a couple of significant items that you can tell us about, please?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you very much. Salaries and supplies and services are anticipated to be just meeting our general expenses. I spoke already to the Member for Calgary-Elbow about all the amazing things that Municipal Affairs is doing to support the everyday work of the department, some flow-through in that, some general expectation around grants that need to go. In terms of our capital investment it's to do with the IT requirements of the department moving forward, and that's the allocation that we're expecting to need at this point. The financial transactions, in particular, are around the southern Alberta flood in 2013 and disbursements with that, so all well within expected and in line.

Mr. Stier: Okay. Thank you for that. That's interesting, and I appreciate your brevity in those answers.

The mayor's caucus is here in town this week, and they certainly are concerned about a lot of things. As always, MSI is one of the key things for our municipalities and how they work and how they get their funding to operate. There are a lot of small towns in every riding, including my own, of course, and possibly yours, where there are very few revenue streams to work from. Normally we see that delivered in June, roughly, and we have not had any inkling as to what's going on with MSI funding so far in any specific way. You know, the construction season is quite short already. We're not really necessarily being clear, I don't think, yet so that municipalities can look ahead and say, "Okay; the government said that there are X amount of dollars to work from," so that they can take their formulas, do their calculations, and they can present to their councils what they expect to do with their construction season coming up and other spending they need to do.

We're just wondering and I'm wondering: is it possible that we could have seen some more specific information here that would have told us how much was going to MSI in this interim supply, or would it have been possible – and I know the Finance minister is looking at me at the same time – to incorporate what was going to be in MSI at this early stage to provide the municipalities an earlier opportunity than what they're left with currently to get to work and get their budgeting under way and get their capital projects going?

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. Based on the fact that this is interim supply only and not the budget, payments for MSI and the basic municipal transportation grant and the small communities fund cannot take place under those programs until the budget is passed. This is not the place for them. They cannot be included in interim supply. I certainly look forward to your support as we move forward with passing the budget as quickly as possible so that those municipalities can get those funds as soon as possible and we can get that budget tabled.

I mean, moving forward, certainly, you know, the municipalities are incredible partners with us. We recognize the incredibly valuable support that they provide to Albertans right across this province, and it has been my greatest pleasure since becoming the Minister of Municipal Affairs to have the chance to interact with the leadership of the municipalities across this province, who are so committed to taking care of the Albertans we all are responsible for.

Certainly, as you know, there are significant budget challenges that we are looking at, that potential $10.4 billion budget, and Albertans do expect us to be fiscally responsible. So with that, we are taking the time to ensure that the budget we put forward is the very best budget that makes the most sense for Albertans, and the portion for MSI will be a part of that.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Minister. I think that's good on that. I appreciate your extended comments.

You know, last time around, prior to the last election, the previous government delivered an additional $400 million to the MSI package, and I'm just wondering if there are plans that you could share at this time with regard to that same amount coming up for this year. Obviously, it may not be a portion of this supply estimate – is it? – or is that something you're considering? Can you shed any light on that, please?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. As previously stated, MSI, because it has to be passed in the budget, cannot be a part of interim supply. There's no portion of this that includes MSI. Again, I look forward, when we have the opportunity to discuss the full budget as opposed to interim supply, to having your support for providing the municipalities with MSI funding as part of the various supports that we provide to municipalities. Again, we recognize the fact that municipalities depend on MSI for their capital funding in order to provide that support to municipalities, and we still value and support the MSI program.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Minister.

Operating grant, so on and so forth: $30 million in the last one. Will that be continuing to be funded moving forward? How much of the interim supply is allocated here towards operating, please?

Ms Larivee: Thank you so much. I will state for the third time that MSI cannot be disbursed, including the operating component, until the programs have been passed in the budget, so I look forward, again, to your support with providing that valuable funding to municipalities.

When we move forward in the future, there certainly are some other supports that we will be doing. The portion that Municipal Affairs provides for, grants in place of taxes: we will be providing some portion of that to municipalities within the first two months. Supporting the amazing hubs, that libraries' function, in municipalities: we will be providing them with their grants within the first couple of months. Also, we will be providing a certain amount of support to municipalities in terms of the regional collaboration program, projects through the Alberta community partnership grants. We will be delivering their share of federal gas tax funding to municipalities. MSI, however, cannot be addressed until after the budget is tabled and passed.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Minister. Sometimes getting on the record on certain subjects is as important as hearing your repeated answer, so I appreciate your patience here. Fair enough.

Then let's move on to something else. The MGA will be reviewed coming up. I'm just wondering: because that's an ongoing situation, are there some funding mechanisms, some monies in place going towards that work within this budget here that we're working on today, the interim supply, please?

Ms Larivee: Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak about the valuable work that my department does in terms of providing support to municipalities. We're very committed to strengthening the capacity and viability and sustainability of municipalities and proud of the work we do in supporting them. Part of that is the development of the Municipal Government Act, that we plan to table here in the spring. We really expect it to be about modernizing the MGA and supporting municipalities to be the very best that they can be moving forward. That is part of the ongoing work that my department does. Certainly, the salaries of the workers who are continuing to work on the MGA are included as part of the expenses within my budget.

Mr. Stier: Okay.

The Chair: You've got about 20 seconds left.

Mr. Stier: Oh, thank you. Well, thank you, Minister. It's been enjoyable.

Just one last thing, I guess. Growth boards are coming up. Is that part of the ongoing work that you just described a moment ago within this interim budget, too?

Ms Larivee: Yes.

The Chair: Moving along with the rotation, do we have a member of the third party wishing to speak? The hon. leader.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. We'll go back and forth, and I will share some of my time with our House leader, please.

Questions. The Finance minister – and I appreciated that, although we didn't agree completely – did say that they are reining in spending. That was his phrase. He did actually mention reducing FTE, full-time equivalent, people. I know there's been some talk about doctors, nurses, and teachers. To the Education minister: when you were reining in spending, how many full-time equivalents were you able to rein in, and did that include any teachers in your area, please?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Certainly, we've been instructed by both Treasury Board and the Finance minister working together to outline demonstrable ways by which we can contribute to very careful and prudent spending. You know, in Education this will be – you'll see this in the budget, right? Certainly, we've been looking very hard at our department. My department did take a 9 per cent, I believe, cut previously, so it's not easy to do that. Then, of course, I've been having very strong conversations with our 61 school boards, for them to be looking for ways to save money as well. As I said earlier this morning, I distribute 97 per cent of the total Education budget to the 61 school boards.

Perhaps the most interesting saving, that we saw just appearing in the last couple of weeks, is how we've been running our pay-as-you-go capital disbursements of funds. As I said earlier this morning, we found that this will continue on an annualized basis to save about 3.5 per cent in interest expenses, which would add up to about $15 million.

In regard to the disbursements of funds with the new budget – I never thought I'd say this – you'll have to wait and see on that one in the next couple of weeks. [interjections] Yeah. I learned that from elsewhere.

That's what we've been doing. Certainly, we've all been instructed and have looked at every dollar very carefully in K to 12 education.

Mr. McIver: Okay. Respectfully to the good minister: you didn't answer the question. But we'll come at this a little bit differently, of course, because I believe that Albertans, like people in the PC Party, think that we need to make sure that teachers are there for our kids. So let me go here: have you talked with the school boards about the percentage of funding for education that actually goes into the classroom, and are you contemplating increasing the percentage that goes into the classroom in order to have those classrooms well supported by teachers and aides and books and all those wonderful things that kids need and deserve while still controlling your budget? What have you done that way?

Mr. Eggen: Yes, Madam Chair. Thank you for the question. As part of our annualized funding for school boards we, of course, restored the funding for enrolment as soon as we began. The third-quarter instalment of that was just put forward. We've seen over the last year, by restoring funding and budgeting for funding, about 740 teaching positions and the retention and support of more than 800 support staff positions as well.

Certainly, we're talking with school boards very carefully so they recognize that we made a commitment to fund for enrolment. We're watching those numbers very carefully. We saw a 2.7 per cent increase in enrolment this last year. It's very interesting. I saw the ATB report on population this morning, which suggested that our population is holding steady and continuing to increase, in fact, and that probably will be reflected in my K to 12 enrolment increases as well.

It's very important, as I said before, and I'll say it again: we need to fund enrolment and provide a high quality of education regardless of what the price of oil is because we have children at every development level – I can see one at the end at the very first development level – and we have to make sure that those teachers and support staff are there in front of the kids at each stage along the way. We're prepared to make sacrifices in that regard. I know that the rest of this House is prepared to make sacrifices in that regard, too, because ultimately I believe that that is our purpose, to provide something better and high-quality for the next generation in regard to their education and quality of life.

Dr. Starke: Well, Madam Chair, I'm going to ask the minister to maybe be a little more specific in his responses because, you know, in the light of the old hockey players he's ragging the puck very well here.

I do want to look specifically at capital investment and capital builds. Minister, earlier you said that you're pleased to see that in the case of some school builds things are ahead of schedule. I mean, one thing that I think we've seen right across the province, from municipalities and right across – one of the, I guess, good things that comes out of our current economic situation is that construction projects are actually being completed at a lower construction cost. Labour costs are lower. I hear the Finance minister nodding his head. I think these are positive things, but what I do want to ask is: if there indeed is a 10 to 20 per cent saving or whatever the number is, does the number that's in the capital budget reflect a 10 to 20 per cent decrease in the capital budget, or does it reflect a 10 to 20 per cent increase in the number of schools that are being built?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair and to the hon. member for that question. It has not been adjusted for the new decrease in – this was anecdotal, that I saw from Edmonton public schools in the last 48 hours or so. With the more fluid system that we've developed, pay-as-you-go, disbursing the funds to each of the school boards across the province, we can make those adjustments much quicker in our budget. Disbursing those funds to the boards: we will see that on an ongoing basis. You can look at projects.alberta.ca. It has, I think, some good information on the state of each of the projects across the province, and I believe that we will be able to save money over time.

Like I said before, just by disbursing funds on a more fluid basis, we figure that we can save at least $15 million in interest this year on this new process. No. It is as it is right now, but we will be moving those monies and seeing the appropriate savings from borrowing on capital or another way. Of course, we have another round of schools that we will evaluate, and we will need to build some of those schools based on the very small number that EPSB gave me. You know, if you're building five at a 23 per cent discount, you get another school off that, potentially, or, of course, a 23 per cent savings. So that's good news, certainly.

Dr. Starke: Madam Chair, specifically, though – you know, the pay-you-as-go is actually a good initiative; I know the school boards like it – I would ask the minister: will he commit to the House today that once we're farther down this process and more school builds have been done he will give an indication as far as what the initial budgeted cost for a project was and what the actual cost was and indicate the savings? Either you build more schools for the same amount of money or you build the same amount of schools for less money, but if the construction costs are going down, Albertans want to know what those savings are.

Mr. Eggen: Madam Chair, yes. Absolutely. I will certainly be transparent and forthcoming in all those numbers. You know, I'm hoping that with very hard work from school boards, Infrastructure, and my department we'll have some good news in that regard.

Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Madam Chair, I'm going to actually address the same question to the Infrastructure and Transportation minister. Again, his area would also be affected by these lower construction costs. Will he commit to the House today that at the end of each fiscal year we will receive an accounting of what the projects were originally budgeted to cost and what the cost savings were and whether we see more projects for the same money or the same number of projects and what the cost saving would be?

The Chair: The rotation now goes to the independent member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll just pick up on that question from the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. Will we see the same number of projects at a lower cost or a greater number of projects at the same cost? [interjection] Thank you. I'll let you answer that question, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. It goes from a deep blue to a light blue. It's a spectrum. So to my sky-blue colleague over there I wanted to indicate that as savings are found in the capital budget, we don't automatically build new projects. We account for the money that's been saved, and we make a decision about what we're going to do with the money that has been saved. It's a conscious decision to use the money in one way or another, and it may well be to build, you know, additional projects, but we don't just automatically start adding schools because we found a 10 or 15 per cent savings in the cost.

If the member would like, I have a more fulsome answer for him on the question of the lapsed capital.

Mr. Clark: Certainly. That actually goes to the question I would like to ask. On your earlier comment about the shade of blue, the official Pantone colour is known as brilliant blue. Optimistic sky blue is the other one as well. Thank you very much. Yes, my work here is done. No. Madam Chair, thank you very much.

I will go down the path here of digging a little deeper into the ability of the government to actually deploy the capital, and I will give the minister the opportunity to answer that question. But I just want to make this point, that we're in a time here of borrowing substantial amounts of money to build capital, which, again, I broadly agree with. It looks like our friends in the federal government – if indications are correct, we should receive a substantial amount of money from our friends in Ottawa for capital spending in this province. We'll see if, in fact, they come up with that, how good as friends they actually are of this province. That remains to be seen, but I am ever optimistic that we will receive substantial support from the federal government. But in so doing, I have that ongoing concern about the ability of this government to actually deploy that capital efficiently, cost-efficiently, and deploy it effectively in a timely fashion. So when we see money rolling over from year to year, that's a big concern.

With that I'll ask an open-ended question to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation to try to address that concern. Thank you.

Mr. Mason: To the brilliant-blue member, I guess that means our PC friends are royal blue and our friends in the Wildrose are midnight blue.

I just want to talk a little bit about some of the reductions due to reprofiling and capital lapses identified by the ministries. This includes reprofiling of $130 million for schools into future years to reflect construction progress, $10 million of which is capital grant funding for the Peerless Lake and Trout Lake First Nations communities; reprofiling of $101 million of capital grants for carbon capture and storage initiatives to future years because the projects have not met the planned milestones that they were required to for grant payments; net capital investment lapse of $63.8 million for Transportation due to various project delays; net decrease in capital funds for Environment and Parks of $59 million; a lapse of $55 million from the climate change and emissions management fund; and a lapse of $4 million from the Alberta land trust grant program. The reduction of $948 million is comprised of $694 million required in future years to complete ongoing projects – this reprofiling will be reflected in the 2016-21 capital plan – $77 million in SUCH sector self-financed reductions, and the remaining $177 million is due to capital funding that will not be spent in the current fiscal year and is not required in future years to complete projects or is capital items that are offset by revenue.

Overall, capital spending will be reduced by 12.1 per cent for this fiscal year compared to Budget 2015. Our goal is to move this closer to 5 per cent in future years. Having said that, I want to just indicate that that reprofiling of cash flows is a normal part of the capital plan. It does not represent increases or decreases to projects but, rather, represents adjustments to the timing of cash flows to match projected needs and progress. Often delays due to weather, building permits, site access issues, and other unforeseen circumstances result in some funding going unspent in a given year and project cash flows needing to be adjusted to maintain the approved funding required to complete the project.

The Financial Administration Act recognizes that it is often difficult to forecast capital spending and has a provision to allow capital investment funds to be carried forward, in section 28.1. Ernst & Young has advised the government that other jurisdictions, including Ontario, B.C., Manitoba, and Saskatchewan, target to spend 85 per cent of the annual cash flows for each year. The city of Edmonton has also confirmed that 85 per cent is the spend goal, but it may vary from year to year depending on unforeseen circumstances. We are forecasting to spend 87.9 per cent of the capital budget in 2015, which is somewhat above the practice of other jurisdictions. Nevertheless, it's more than we expected.

Now, with respect to your question about: can we spend the money that we're borrowing going forward? There are two factors, I think, that need to be taken into account. First of all, a number of projects are in a planning phase, and they will be available and be moving towards construction as we move through the five-year capital plan, so there will be more projects that will be available that we'll need the money for. Secondly, a number of projects, of course, will be winding down that are currently under construction, major construction projects, particularly in Edmonton but in other parts of the province as well, that will then free up resources in order to make them available for the projects that we have in mind in the next several years of the capital plan.

For those two reasons, hon. member, I believe that we in fact will be able to spend money that is provided for in our capital plan and be able to put Albertans to work and get good infrastructure built for the people of Alberta at a lower cost than otherwise. I continue to believe that our plan is a good one.

Thank you.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Minister, and thank you, Madam Chair.

In my remaining brief, few minutes here I want to shift to operating costs. I know we've talked a lot about overall operating costs, and they're embedded here through the interim supply. My question to anyone on the front bench is: specifically, what are you doing to bend that operating cost curve? I've a significant concern here that in challenging times people all around this province, businesses all around this province are doing more with less in a meaningful and substantial way. That means efficiencies. That means hard conversations with people who work in your organizations. I'd like to just open that up and ask that question. What specifically are you doing, and can we expect a significant reduction in costs without significant reductions in front-line services?

Ms Hoffman: Since I've got the budget that needs the most curving, I thought I'd take the question, so thank you for the opportunity. We're certainly committed to carefully managing the costs that we have and ensuring that Alberta families get the best care for the best value. That's, I think, something that we should all share as a guiding value, and finding efficiencies to improve care and ensuring that our health care system is sustainable for Albertans over the long term are very high priorities.

For example, last session I made the announcement about RAPID, a new drug treatment for people who are experiencing macular degeneration at far lower cost to both the taxpayer and without a copay for the actual recipient. These are some of the decisions around drugs. The three biggest cost pressures in health care, increasing at the highest rates as well over the last number of years, are hospital operations, physician compensation, and drugs. That was one example about drugs.

Another is that this year by switching to generics over brand name, we're saving another $18 million. We're working with other provinces to come up with lower generic drug prices for all Canadians. As well, through FPT initiatives we're working on efforts around a common formulary, hopefully, so that we can have greater consistency in pricing and also service to Canadians around the cost of drugs. Right now about 1 in 5 families isn't actually fulfilling their prescriptions Canada-wide because they just can't afford the copay pieces.

We're also building 2,000 long-term care beds, which is an expense but is far more efficient to operate than having people living in acute-care hospital beds who should be living in long-term care.

Of course, another big piece is that operational best practice, working with counterparts in other provinces around efficiencies in operations, making sure that we have the right professional providing the health care services rather than always going to the highest educated or highest paid.

Thank you.

The Chair: We'll now go to the government private members again. Next on my list I have Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm going to ask some questions of our Minister of Energy in a back-and-forth manner if that's okay.

Minister of Energy, the market access and diversification were always key priorities for your ministry in Budget 2015. Can you provide an update on what is being done to increase global market access?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Chairman. Yeah. We're doing a few things to ensure that we get greater market access. Certainly, the first and foremost are our pipelines. We recognize that they're crucial to getting our oil to market, and they're a national energy infrastructure piece, and it's dire to our whole nation, not just Alberta. Alberta is an economic engine in Canada, and pipelines are a fundamental part of our economy. So just like the federal government led the construction of our national railway many years ago, we see the need for playing a role in getting these pipelines built in the 21st-century economy.

First of all, we're working continually with our federal counterparts and with our industry partners to assist them in getting market access, both east and west. We're working on market access with a clear approach. First, we're improving our environmental record, which we've done with our climate leadership plan, and I have to say that days after that was revealed, the conversation nationally really changed. Second, we're looking to our federal government to play a leadership role as well in helping us get our Alberta products to market. Lastly, we've changed the strategy, as previously Minister Bilous mentioned. We're taking the drama out of it and the emotion, and we want the pipeline projects to be considered for their merit, not as an emotional, political issue.

The second thing we're doing is petrochemical diversification. Alberta is an energy province, and we are always going to be an energy province, but we cannot underestimate the change and the shale gas revolution that take the United States from being our primary customer to our primary competitor. So we've revealed a petroleum diversification program that is a direct result from talking to industry. This program will attract investment and create jobs. We heard clearly from our petrochemical industry in Alberta that that sector is an attractive and competitive place to operate a value-added facility, but due to factors beyond our control, like the way winter drives up construction costs – and we are a tougher place to build than around the U.S. Gulf coast – we need to look at some incentives. The petrochemical diversification program is designed to help overcome some of these challenges for our industry and create a bit of a level playing field with places like Louisiana.

Since launching this program we have heard from many industry people that projects that were once being strongly considered for Louisiana are now being considered for Alberta. This program can and will generate up to 3,000 new jobs in construction. As well, we'll generate more than a thousand jobs when the new facilities begin construction. So this program will help leverage about 5 billion new dollars in investment in Alberta that would have otherwise gone to the U.S.

So those are two things that we're doing.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you for that fulsome response, Minister.

I have an additional question. Promoting Alberta's energy industry to oil and gas investors is of particular importance given the current economic situation. We must assure energy investors that we are open for business and encourage investment to stay here in Alberta. Can the minister please follow up with how Budget 2015 and the work for her ministry are promoting investment in Alberta's oil and gas sector?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Chairman, and thank you for the question. Certainly, as Minister of Energy I look for any opportunity to promote our energy industry to our country and, indeed, to the world, and I'm very proud to do that on behalf of Alberta.

I recently went to Houston to do just that. My focus while there was to get people to look at investing in Alberta and creating jobs. A lot has changed for the better, and I want the world to know that. Our new royalty framework is competitive like never before. We have replaced an out-of-date, risky framework with one that is modern, competitive, and gives investors the certainty that they need because the industry has changed significantly in even the last five years. Our climate leadership plan positions Alberta to be one of the most responsible energy producers. I was thrilled, in fact, when I was in Houston that Steve Williams of Suncor personally promoted our leadership plan as a reason to invest in Alberta during his address in Houston.

As I mentioned, we are working to change the conversation on pipelines. One of the intents of our climate leadership plan was to take the drama, as I said, out of the pipeline and work collaboratively with our counterparts and ask them to please consider the merits of the project rather than the emotion of the project. I was thrilled to read in the Globe and Mail recently that Murray Edwards, of CNRL, and Brian Ferguson, of Cenovus, have also endorsed this approach. They know that yelling and screaming hasn't worked in the past and that telling people they're stupid doesn't work, so we're looking to be collaborative and educate people.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to share my time with the ministers as well.

Obviously, we know there are a lot of eyes on the economy right now in the province. This is for the Minister of Culture and Tourism. Seeing that tourism is one of the major economic drivers here in Alberta and that over $8 billion is spent in Alberta by visitors that support over 127,000 jobs and more than 19,000 businesses, how are we using interim supply to support this sector to help with its continued growth?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am very happy to direct my comments to the Chamber today and talk about an industry that's actually doing remarkably well despite the economic downturn that we've seen around the globe. I think we can also think about tourism – I would like to think about tourism, actually, as an economic pipeline that brings people into this province with their money. It actually allows us the opportunity – you know, we've seen the challenges that a low dollar places, but it also gives us the opportunity again, like I said, to showcase the natural beauty of this province and, of course, to hopefully attract some of our friends from the south to come up here and spend some time.

I think I've had the opportunity now to talk to a lot of our friends from the opposite side, who are also very excited about the economic development that can take place by growing our current tourist destinations and perhaps expanding them as well and exploring new ones and actually finding ways – because when it comes to tourism, especially in the rural areas, we have a lot of potential. It's one of those things that I can tell you I'm truly excited about.

As I mentioned, we've talked about bringing people here, and one of the things that I did – I think it was the first day on the job – was to actually go down to my hometown of Calgary to announce the beginning of flights directly from Beijing to Calgary. It's going to be a fantastic opportunity, again, to grow our market share and, of course, give us the opportunity to then, hopefully, have them stay in the city a couple of extra days before they go off to their final destination. What it does do, actually, Madam Chair, is again open up our markets to new destinations and bring those people to this province, which, you know, all of us can very much agree is very desirable.

The other thing that our ministry does is that it provides funding for grants and programs. It supports places like the Royal Tyrrell Museum, which last year celebrated their 30th year of being around. What we've seen and what I've been told by my ministry staff is that we've seen attendance up by 14 per cent. So when we're looking at all of these different things, the destinations that we already have that are established, the attractions that are in this province that make this the desirable and diverse and very dynamic province that we know and very much love, we see that there's a lot of potential here, a lot of opportunities to keep growing and diversifying our economy, creating new jobs as well.

In terms of what this interim supply will do, it will allow me to continue funding those programs. There are many of the programs that we give funding to that have deadlines that have to be met by ... [A timer sounded] Sorry.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. Today I'm speaking specifically about Economic Development and Trade. I'll do a back and forth. I have comments and observations. Then I would like to share some of my time with my colleague the Transportation critic.

Four months ago, when we went through last year's estimates, I had an opportunity to discuss with the minister specific performance metrics and measures of his ministry, and we both agreed that we should measure the outcomes, too. For this year's review I'm hoping he'll bring back some of those reports.

But talking about this year's interim supply, this Legislature has no information on the spending details of this supply bill. There are no details regarding how much of this is for grant money or for operational costs, how much is for staffing, or how much is for travel and who knows what. We have no details. This interim supply is just for two months, and two months of the budget should be approximately 16 per cent of the total budget for the year. Knowing well that there could be other expenses at the beginning of the year, like the minister mentioned earlier, that may push the amount over 16 per cent, we have to watch out. The extra money should be justifiable. If the minister could tell the House why the budget is more than 16 per cent.

My other question to the minister is: why does this bill give the ministry 75 per cent of last year's total budget? Last year the total budget was $278 million, Madam Chair, and this interim supply alone is $209 million. That's nowhere near 16 per cent of the normal budget that is required for two months' worth of operations. Why does the minister need nine months' worth of supply for just two months, and why is the ministry spending 75 per cent of its total budget in just two months? The entire budget for Economic Development and Trade would be $1.25 billion if you prorate that. That's how much the budget would be if the $209 million was just 16 per cent of the budget.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and I thank the member for his questions. I'll go in the order that the member asked. Last year in estimates he did raise the point about performance measures and outcomes. I agree with the member that we need to have specific targets. They need to be measurable, and that way we can be accountable to Albertans for the dollars that we're spending and ensure that we're reaching the targets that we're setting. I will assure the member that when we go into estimates, there are specific, concrete, tangible performance measures in my budget that we will be able to discuss, and I think that the member and all members of the Assembly will be quite pleased to see the approach that we're taking on that. Absolutely.

As far as the question about 16 per cent, or two months, of the budget, as was mentioned earlier, we don't just prorate the budget. I'm not taking my yearly budget and dividing it by 12 and then adding two months together, and that's the total that we have. The $209 million, which is a significant increase from the past, is for a few different reasons. One, I mean, as with all of my cabinet colleagues, interim supply is meant to cover off the day-to-day operations of each of our ministries and to ensure that government doesn't grind to a halt or that suddenly services that we all depend on don't abruptly stop. Really, interim supply is a carry-over method.

I'm just going to add a couple of quick pieces, Member. We're looking at the international offices that we pay up front. There are significant research and developments costs, R and D costs, as well for our Innovates.

The Chair: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee will now rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions relating to the 2016-2017 interim supply estimates, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Those opposed, say no. That motion is carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:56 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, March 10, 2016

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 19 students from St. Angela elementary school. They're here to observe the proceedings today, so please act accordingly, everyone. They're with Mr. Richy Trinh, their teacher. St. Angela's is just a great school, and I'm so proud to have them here today. If they could stand and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly students from the grades 7 and 8 class of the Rosemary school from the beautiful village of Rosemary, Alberta, led by Mr. Blumell and Brent Meyer and accompanied by seven teachers. These students have joined us today, and they are actually the very first people I've introduced to this Assembly. Rosemary is a beautiful village about 30 kilometres northwest of the city of Brooks. I'm so pleased to be joined by them today. Please give the students and teachers and parents the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is my honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the students, teachers Ms Carla Samuelson and Ms Schmitz, and parents Mr. David Zebak, Mr. Jason Wax, and Mr. Jamie Marino from Nellie McClung elementary school. Nellie McClung elementary school is a highly reputable school, and the residents of Calgary-Glenmore are rightly proud of it. The teachers, staff, and parents work very hard to provide quality education to the students. I experienced this first-hand when I did a session on politics in the classroom. I'm very pleased that the same students are here today with us to learn about politics by actually experiencing it. I would like to request that the students, teachers, and parents from Nellie McClung elementary school rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other school groups to be introduced?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my delight to introduce today to you and through you Mr. Dan Balaban, who joins us here today in the Chamber. Mr. Balaban is a formidable wind energy entrepreneur. As company founder, president, and CEO of Greengate Power Corporation, he is responsible for over 1,500 megawatts of wind projects on 200,000 acres of private Alberta land. That's a greenhouse gas emission reduction of 3 million tonnes per year. Known as Canada's wind energy cowboy, Mr. Balaban is changing the way Canadian energy is produced, proving that innovative green energy technology is not only environmentally responsible but highly profitable. As Alberta continues to diversify our economy, Mr. Balaban is committed to working with our government to make Alberta North America's wind energy leader. I ask that Mr. Balaban rise to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Minister of Infrastructure, do you have a guest?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a proud, hard-working Albertan, Brent Morton. Mr. Morton hails from Rothesay, New Brunswick, originally but has called Alberta home for the last 10 years. He helps build our province as a welder with pipefitters local 488. I would ask Mr. Morton to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is indeed an honour and a privilege to introduce to you and through you two distinguished individuals to this House. These gentlemen work for and serve the people of Okotoks, which is one of the two major urban centres in my constituency. Rick Quail is the chief administrative officer for the town. He's a committed, prudent, and extremely valuable member of the town's team and someone I am proud to call a friend.

Here also today is Okotoks' mayor, Bill Robertson, or, as everybody calls him, Mayor Bill. Mayor Bill is a very popular teacher in Okotoks and is now a natural in his role as mayor. Mayor Bill was one of the first people to call me and congratulate me on my election last May. I remember because he told me: now go to work and get my water pipeline. Since then he has guided me through developing strategic relationships with his fellow council members and the inner workings of the town of Okotoks. This year, with the dedication and hard work of thousands of townsfolk, Okotoks has been nominated as one of the top nominees for Kraft Hockeyville. Voting is this Sunday, and I encourage everybody to vote for Okotoks.

I consider both Rick and Bill and the other members of the town council friends. I look forward to mutual, beneficial business and personal relationships. I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Today it certainly is an honour for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly some great councillors and a mayor in my area. Also, I'd like to make mention of the two folks that were just announced, because Okotoks is my hometown, and I'm so proud to have them here as well.

But to go on, I'm here to introduce and welcome Rick Everett, the mayor of the town of Nanton, and Jamie Cutler, a recent addition to my list here from Claresholm. Both Jamie and Rick bring a bright, fresh, and well-organized approach to operational aspects and lifestyle to the good folks in both of their towns. I've really thoroughly enjoyed working with both of their councils. It's a pleasure, really, to have them here today for their first time, and I'm sure they're enjoying this. I would now like to ask Mayor Rick Everett and Councillor Cutler to please stand and enjoy the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Minister of Health, you have some visitors you'd like to introduce?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to introduce to the Assembly, for those of you who haven't met them yet, four very important men in my life. The first that I want to mention is Reg Basken, who has been a long-time member of our party. He was party president during some of our difficult times, and when I said that I was running for school board, he immediately took a sign and helped me out. So it means a great deal. Of course, I wouldn't be here if I didn't have that great start. Thank you, Reg.

I also have three guests in the Speaker's gallery, Madam Speaker. Those are three former MLAs from our party. The first, Alex McEachern, represented an area very similar to the part of the city that I represent now. He was very recently the president of the riding association and has always been, through many decades, committed to volunteering, donating, and keeping the values of social democracy alive and well in Alberta. So thank you to Alex.

As well, Raj Pannu was the leader of the party when I first got involved. He was a professor at the university, and when I asked him for some life advice, he said: get involved in politics. He wished he would have started before 65, and he thought we needed a lot more women involved. I have to say that I think his vision has come to life in this Assembly today.

The third introduction is a very good friend, Ray Martin, who was a member of this House many times, a leader of our party, and who stepped up when we, of course, faced a tragedy, losing the current Premier's father. He did a great job for our party, and he also continues to do a great job representing Albertans on the Edmonton public school board. I had the honour of working for him and with him, and now I get to work for him again as a member of this Assembly.

Thank you very much to all four of you for your support over the years. Please rise.

The Deputy Speaker: It's always an honour to have former members of this Assembly with us here in the House.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly from the town of Two Hills His Worship Henry Neufeld, the mayor of Two Hills. As a business owner as well as the mayor of Two Hills I'm sure he could provide this Chamber with some insight into the economic situation that faces our province and businesses and individuals every day.

I'd also like to take this opportunity to make a plug for my hometown of St. Paul, which is also in the running for Kraft Hockeyville, so please vote on the 13th.

Mr. Neufeld is a very innovative man who has some great ideas for diversifying the economy in our area. We look forward to working with the various departments of this government to get some of those innovative projects off the ground as soon as possible. I'd like to ask him now to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Ms Ellen Campbell, a friend of mine, a fellow cyclist, and an instructor at the CCI-LEX Cultural Connections Institute.

With her today are some of her students: Maria Dumont, a student from Quebec who has work experience as a hairdresser and health care attendant; Felipe Ganz, a kinesiologist from Chile who is hoping to study physiotherapy at the University of Alberta; Diego Palma, a Chilean high school student who hopes to study medicine; and Gan Zhihui, an English tutor from Harbin, China, who is seeking work in Edmonton while her husband is pursuing his PhD. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a thrill today to be able to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a wonderful organization from my constituency, KARA Family Resource Centre. KARA is a nonprofit organization that was formed in 1984 by a collaborative of 16 community agencies and individuals who identified a need for services to low-income single mothers. Today KARA provides numerous programs and services to many families at no cost, and I'm very proud to have them in my riding of Edmonton-Decore. Visiting us today from KARA are Pam Doubleday, executive director, and Rick Thomas, director. I would now ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce three great Albertans, one of whom is Ron Brochu, who ran for the Liberal Party in Edmonton in the last election and is staying with us, strong. He's bringing with him Léo and Henriette Laverdière. They're former farmers from the francophone hamlet of Girouxville, located in the Smoky River-Peace region of Alberta. Always leaders in their community, their ability to work together as a team, not to mention Léo's tenacious work ethic, led them to be recognized in the 1960s as a model farm by the department of agriculture here in Alberta. Now in their retirement, Léo and Henriette live in Edmonton at the Saint-Thomas Health Centre in Bonnie Doon. Will the three of you please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured today to introduce to you and through you two members of the global education program at the University of Alberta, director Nancy Hannemann and global education co-ordinator Lisa Lozanski. Ms Hannemann has been a strong advocate for human rights in this province and in this country for her entire life, and I'm proud to call her a friend. Ms Hannemann and Ms Lozanski co-ordinate the well-known International Week at the U of A, which continues its 31-year-long quest for a better world, to understand global issues that define our era and to connect people who can and will make a positive difference. I ask the members of this House to provide them with the customary traditional warm welcome. Please stand.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature Ms Laila Goodridge. Laila was a candidate for Grande Prairie-Wapiti for the Wildrose. She's a hard worker on a campaign. In fact, her hard work on my campaign got me here. Of course, she didn't quite make it. She put a little more energy in my campaign than her own. Laila, if you could stand up and receive the warm welcome of this House.

Members' Statements

Watershed Management

Mr. Westhead: Madam Speaker, our government is committed to the protection of our headwaters and species at risk. Healthy watersheds, sustainable resource development, and responsible recreational activity are not mutually exclusive. Planning for watershed health must always be a primary consideration.

In making these complex decisions, we will take a thoughtful, measured, and respectful approach. We must also ensure that First Nations have access for traditional land use and preserve constitutional treaty rights. Our government's action to protect the Castle wildland and provincial park in southwestern Alberta embodies these goals.

Water security is a common denominator that we simply cannot ignore. As author and naturalist Kevin Van Tighem articulates: water does not come from the river; it comes to the river. He observes that a river is a product of its watershed. It is the landscape that produces the water, which in turn determines water quantity, quality, and its rate of discharge.

The constituency of Banff-Cochrane contains one of the most significant watersheds for western Canada. The water this landscape produces supports nearly 3 million people, including agricultural and industrial users. The landscape itself supports good local jobs through the tourism, television, and film industries.

Clearly, we must make prudent and responsible land-use decisions now to safeguard water security into the future. To accomplish this goal, we are designing a parks management and tourism strategy for southwestern Alberta. This will involve months of engagement with local communities, Albertans, land users, and First Nations. Broad consultation is necessary in order to get it right. I am proud to be part of a government that is taking its responsibility to the environment seriously.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Water Management in Okotoks

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. One of the most urgent issues facing the residents of Highwood and in particular Okotoks is access to a sufficient amount of water to accommodate the dramatic growth of this community. With the town's current water supply at full capacity immediate action is required to move critical infrastructure projects forward, including much-needed schools, to attract investment, and encourage and establish businesses to grow.

Okotoks' proactive approach to water conservation has been recognized by the Federation of Canadian Municipalities, which awarded Okotoks in 2015 the sustainable communities award for water conservation. The town of Okotoks and the residents have done all they can to use their water allocations wisely. Unfortunately, it is no longer enough. Further action is required.

Okotoks understands that provincial capital funds need to be considered in the context of co-ordinated regional priorities. As a member of the Calgary Regional Partnership Okotoks helped to develop CRP's 10-year capital investment plan. The first step of this comprehensive program is for the construction of a water pipeline from the city of Calgary to Okotoks. The proposed water pipeline was designed to extend and meet the needs of the MD of Foothills and the adjoining communities of Turner Valley and Black Diamond. The proposed water pipeline has the full support of the city of Calgary and will ensure that no additional withdrawals from the Sheep or Highwood rivers will be used, as a clean and secure water supply will be withdrawn upstream from Calgary's sewage effluent release.

This regional approach will ensure the protection of critical agricultural land while meeting the growth requirements of the region. The Okotoks water pipeline is shovel ready, and its construction will create jobs and economic development during this time of economic instability. This government has the opportunity to put its words into action and support the construction of this water pipeline. I'm sure that as this government reviews the town's application, it will see the value of this infrastructure project. I urge this government to act and act now. Build this pipeline.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Job Creation

Mr. Jean: With 80,000 full-time jobs lost under the NDP government thus far, Alberta families expected a plan from this government on how to get Albertans back to work. That plan was revealed on Tuesday, and now the experts are weighing in on the NDP's flagship economic initiative. One calls it, and I quote: an act to allow a minister to do ministerial stuff. End quote. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business calls it a skeleton of a job-creation framework. Can the Premier explain why, after a year of making so many promises to Albertans for some kind of jobs plan, she still has not delivered one?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. In fact, we have made quite a bit of progress with respect to the development of our jobs plan. Acting on the advice of David Dodge, we increased our investment in capital in order to create more jobs, and that's something which, in fact, is about a $9 billion larger investment than would have happened under the plan of the Official Opposition. So that's part one.

Part two was that we established a new ministry and we introduced programs last fall that involved introducing more access to capital as a result of consultations and requests from business leaders. But we have more.

Mr. Jean: Certainly, I think that a lot of businesses are really excited about this and that it will help: that was the jobs minister that said that last fall as she revealed a $180 million job subsidy program. A week ago the economic development minister's office said that the program was still going ahead. Well, it seems like the Premier's press secretary has a better handle on the government agenda than the front bench because she told a columnist just yesterday that after creating a grand total of zero jobs, the program has been cancelled. Can the Premier please explain who has the correct information, her minister or her press secretary?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As members of the Assembly know, over the course of the last 10 months the price of oil has dropped much more significantly, and the duration of that drop has been predicted to go on much, much longer, so we're dealing with a different economic situation. As a result, we thought it was prudent to carefully examine all of our programs to make sure that they are the best programs to deliver the most and the greatest number of jobs. As a result, we are reviewing that program because that's our job, to make sure that we get the best program out, and you will see more in the budget.

Mr. Jean: Albertans were told last fall that the job subsidy program would create 27,000 jobs. They were told that it would begin in January. When the Wildrose actually questioned the effectiveness of the program, the NDP told Albertans that the Wildrose was wrong. Six months later the job subsidy program has been scrapped by the NDP, but the layoffs have continued. We went from a bad plan to no plan. Can the Premier explain to the tens of thousands of unemployed Albertans why she spent time raising money in Ontario for opponents of Alberta's jobs instead of developing a plan to create jobs for Albertans right here in Alberta?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. As I've said, we have developed a plan. We are working on a plan. There are many elements of the plan that we've already rolled out. I was able to announce an excellent diversification opportunity earlier today, and the specific elements of that job plan will become clear when we introduce the budget. There are monetary items to it, and we can't talk about it before then, but we expect that members on that side will probably be saying good things about it when they see it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, second main question.

Energy Policies

Mr. Jean: Thank you. The Premier's carbon policies and other electrical grid experiments are putting people out of work and will lead to much higher power bills for every single Albertan. Instead of creating an environment favourable to job creation, the government's top priority is a policy that leads directly to the shut down of mines and power plants that sustain communities like Hanna all across the province. What does the Premier have to say to the community of Hanna and the families who live there whose futures are very much in doubt as a result of her ideological agenda?

Ms Notley: Well, Madam Speaker, I would begin by saying that fearmongering doesn't help anybody. When it comes to the announcement by TransCanada, let's be very clear. They are trying to work their way out of a power purchase agreement as a result of a loophole that's the size of seven different large trucks that was negotiated by the previous government. That being said, the price of coal has gone down a great deal, so that's the situation that we're dealing with now. But right now those coal plants will continue to run, those jobs will continue to be there, and reliability will continue. No one should suggest otherwise, and to do so is irresponsible.

Mr. Jean: After TransCanada cancelled the major power contracts because of NDP policy, the Energy minister said that it would have little impact on consumers. Well, the former head of Alberta's Balancing Pool said that those changes will put Alberta power consumers on the hook for an extra $500 million per year. That means higher power bills for every single Albertan, for seniors, the unemployed, struggling business owners. All will feel the pinch when they can least afford it. This is life under the NDP. What does the Premier have to say about this?

Ms Notley: Madam Speaker, blaming the fact that the price of coal is low on the NDP is almost as ridiculous as blaming the fact that the price of oil and gas is low on the NDP. This is a function of the oversupply of energy in the market. This is the free market that those folks over there love so much. That's what we are dealing with right now. This is a result of it not being profitable anymore to sell coal energy within this market. So we will manage it. That's exactly what we will do because that's our job. But as I say again, fearmongering helps nobody.

Mr. Jean: What we're not seeing is any plan to deal with the huge challenge faced by consumers when it comes to electricity costs: that was the now Premier in 2012. Four years later the situation for many Albertans is much, much worse. Thousands are unemployed, and this government is about to implement a policy that will lead to power bills that families just can't afford. Why won't the Premier step back and think about all the damage her ideological agenda is causing for those she used to advocate for just a few short years ago?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think the member opposite is referring to our climate leadership plan, which is an excellent opportunity for me to talk about the fact that today in Washington the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States are talking about implementing a plan which is in fact a complete and total replication of the plan developed here in Alberta by industry, by energy leaders, by environmental groups under this government's leadership. It is something of which this government and all Albertans should be very proud.

Government Caucus Calgary Office

Mr. Nixon: Madam Speaker, today we released information that shows that some time after the need for a by-election in Calgary-Greenway the government set up a secret outreach office in northeast Calgary. This office is staffed by taxpayer funded NDP campaigners and former Leadnow activists. Their actual roles are shady at best. In Ottawa the NDP got in big trouble for just this thing. Simple question for the Premier: was the Premier involved in setting up a secret satellite office in northeast Calgary in the lead-up to the by-election?

Ms Notley: You know, Madam Speaker, at a time of serious economic struggles for the people of Alberta throwing poorly researched, mudslinging tactics is a ridiculous use of this opposition's time. You know what? This office was so secret that it's on a government of Alberta website, right above the listing for your staff, who apparently are also secret to you.

Mr. Nixon: Orange is clearly the new blue, Madam Speaker.

In the Members' Services Committee a week ago I asked about this office. The answers we got made it seem like this office didn't exist. In committee the answers caused the Speaker to declare that this office didn't exist. The chief government whip looked mighty relieved. But this office does exist; we've been there. Will the Premier tell us what sort of public outreach can be done with such a secret office, and if nothing is wrong, why hide it?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As I've just noted, we haven't hid it. But, you know, I will say this. This is common practice. When the Liberal caucus was the Official Opposition, they actually had a caucus office in Calgary, which is a reasonable thing to do. But you know what? I would suggest that the Wittle Rose might want to think also about having a caucus office in Calgary since they're clearly not spending their money on either spell-check, proofreading, or research.

Mr. Nixon: Madam Speaker, when Albertans threw out the previous government, they knew we might get weird economic decisions with the NDP, but we all expected the government to be more honest and ethical than the last one. But what did we get? We got a Premier that is under two ethics investigations, that bans union and corporate donations but attends $10,000-a-plate union and corporate fundraisers. Now we have secret offices in the neighbourhood of a by-election. Was this what the Premier meant when she said that Albertans deserve a government they can trust?

Ms Notley: Madam Speaker, notwithstanding the indignant volume of the last question, I believe that I've answered this question. This issue's not secret. Caucus offices are often in different jurisdictions. I would suggest that it's a good way to reach out to communities where you don't have a whole lot of representation, and I suggest that maybe you consider it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Pipeline Construction

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yesterday at the AUMA breakfast in front of many municipal leaders the Premier boasted about getting some form of agreement with other Premiers on Energy East. While you were in Vancouver, did you manage to meet one-on-one with Premiers Clark and Wall, our closest neighbours and allies, and can you tell Albertans what progress you made with them on getting Alberta's energy to tidewater?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. In fact, meeting with Premier Wall is not really part of the need to get energy to tidewater because he's already onside of that, so that's good. I did have conversations with Premier Clark, and we are going to have additional conversations, as the member probably knows. Some of it was reported already in the media. I think there are some opportunities for us to work with them, and we will continue to do that because it's our view that while Energy East is an important project, I would love to see success and progress with respect to Kinder Morgan as well, and I think there may be some opportunities there.

Mr. McIver: Well, it wasn't in the throne speech, but it's interesting when another Premier gets told that they're not important.

Given that just a year ago you, Premier, were against Alberta's pipelines and took a strong position and now you seem to be selling yourself as the champion of pipelines, when you explain this complete turnabout position to other Premiers, how much of a hindrance will your previous position be in securing their co-operation now to access tidewater?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As the member opposite knows, my previous position was that the Keystone pipeline was simply going to be another mechanism to sell to the very market which is now our competitor, so it wasn't necessarily in our best interest. My position with respect to the Gateway pipeline was that with the many, many conditions applied to it, it was just not likely to happen in the near future. My position always had been that Kinder Morgan was an excellent opportunity and should be pursued, and that's always been my position, as with Energy East. Indeed, I believe we have made great progress, and I look forward to making more.

Mr. McIver: Well, it appears the Premier is on the road to Damascus.

Later today, Madam Speaker, I will table two media reports from before we had an NDP government. In those reports it indicates that Ontario's Premier gave unconditional support to Energy East. Since then, since we've had an NDP government, the Premier has added conditions. To our Premier: how do you explain to Albertans that you've actually gone backwards on this file since becoming Premier?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I suspect that those previous reports were not actually accurate because that's not the way Ontario had been previously, but they have moved forward. I've had, more importantly, very productive discussions with Premiers across Canada since that time, and the understanding of the need for that pipeline is growing, and it's becoming even more clear as everybody experiences the results of the drop in the price of oil and the results of Alberta struggling. Premiers in every other province are seeing it in their provinces as well, so they're starting to understand more and more the urgency of this issue.

The Deputy Speaker: My apologies, hon. members. I just need to confirm. Hon. Premier, you had a document. You will be tabling that in the House?

Ms Notley: Oh. Which one? This one?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes. Just a reminder that props are not appropriate, and anything that's brought against would need to be tabled. Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Government Policies

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Now, the budget is delayed again this year, and Albertans are wondering why in this very difficult time the government is waiting to release its plan. Maybe they don't want to hurt their chances in the Greenway by-election. Perhaps they're waiting for the federal budget, or maybe – maybe – it's because they don't want to embarrass their federal cousins at the national NDP convention to be held here in Edmonton the weekend of April 8. Given that last year's budget was delayed to boost the federal NDs' election chances, I think we know why this budget is delayed. To the Premier: will you commit to moving up the release of the budget so Albertans know how your government plans to address the fiscal crisis?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. No. My Minister of Finance has indicated that the budget will be introduced on April 14, and that's when it will be introduced. But I think it's really important to understand that eight of the last 14 years the budget has been introduced and passed after March 30, so that's quite common. It's not an uncommon timing for it to be done this way, particularly because the federal budget was put back by a week, so we need to get a sense of what's happening there before we finalize the numbers.

Mr. Clark: Thank you. Well, no budget means no solutions. Albertans are hurting and looking for solutions. I happen to have some solutions, and so do our neighbours in Saskatchewan. Premier Brad Wall suggested that tackling the orphaned well problem is a great way to get people back to work and very quickly while solving a big environmental problem. Now, currently Alberta has a backlog of orphan wells that no longer have an owner but still need to be reclaimed. To the Premier: will you add to the orphan well fund to get Albertans with oil field experience back to work while solving a big environmental problem for our province?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for that question. You know, it is interesting, and to be honest, I think there is some merit, personally, to the proposal that was put forward by Premier Wall on that issue. The first thing that, of course, we need to be very, very clear about is that we have a strict polluter-pay policy in Alberta, and we do not want to be subsidizing or somehow watering that down. That being said, we also know that there are a number of abandoned wells where there really is no polluter left, unfortunately, and it may well be the case that in terms of immediate infrastructure investment and immediate ability to get people back to work this is something worthy of consideration.

Mr. Clark: Thank you for that answer, Madam Premier. That's an encouraging answer, and I hope you follow through on that.

Now, you talked about industry's responsibility to reclaim wells, but the fees already charged burden many producers, especially smaller producers. There are about 705 orphan wells in Alberta, but the orphan well fund only has enough money to reclaim about 40 every year, which means it will take nearly 20 years to clear that backlog. Unfortunately, because of the downturn, the total number of orphan wells is likely to go up. To the Premier again: will you commit to a four-year plan to clear the backlog of orphan wells while service costs are low, fixing the problem and getting Albertans back to work?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. There's no question that this is a very important issue. It's a liability, quite frankly, that has accrued over decades and decades of neglect and inaction, and it's probably not something that can be cleaned up in four years specifically given the current fiscal restraints that we're operating under, but we're very aware that it's a critically important issue. The AER is working with oil and gas producers on this issue. We've asked for advice on it, and we hope to be able to make some important steps forward in the near future.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

2:10 Workplace Safety and Employment Standards

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In the past year we have seen tragic incidents happen with employees on the job in regard to gas station attendants and convenience store employees. To the Minister of Labour: what action is the government taking to prevent incidents like these happening again?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Speaker. These are indeed very tragic situations, and they should be preventable. My heart goes out to the families that have been impacted by injuries and deaths on the job. Workers should be able to go to work, do their job, and come home safely. On March 1 we announced a review of 200 work sites, gas stations, and convenience stores across Alberta by occupational health and safety inspectors, and this review will help inform our next steps.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Minister. Madam Speaker, I think I speak for everyone in the House when I say that the safety of Albertans, especially while at work, needs to be a top priority of this government. Given that every day that goes by without a concrete action from our government is another day we are leaving vulnerable Albertan workers at risk, will the minister commit to introducing worker safety legislation this spring?

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Protecting workers and preventing deaths is a top priority for this government. One concrete action that we will be taking immediately is through those 200 work-site inspections. The inspectors are empowered to write orders on the spot, including stop-use and/or stop-work orders or other orders as necessary. We are committed to working with our stakeholders to review the results of this survey and determine the next steps that way.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Minister. Madam Speaker, given that it's been quite some time since Alberta's labour laws have been reviewed and updated, will the minister consider including a thorough review of occupational health and safety and employment standards to reflect the needs of Alberta's most vulnerable workers?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We do want to make sure that Alberta is the best place to come to work in Canada and in the world. That means ensuring that there are good, modern standards in place that are fair for workers as well as for employers. Unfortunately, some of our labour legislation hasn't been reviewed in over a decade, so I am committed to reviewing these laws in a sure-footed way and bringing back to our partners and bringing them to the table so that when we do introduce changes, we can do it properly.

Chief Adviser on Labour Negotiations

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Speaker, yesterday I asked this government some questions about why they hired one of the AUPE's top negotiators to be their new chief adviser on labour negotiations. The government couldn't help but congratulate themselves on a job well done, to the disbelief of even some of their own supporters. I believe that this is a serious conflict of interest. Albertans believe that this is a serious conflict of interest. The Finance minister himself even hinted to the media that this might in fact be a conflict of interest. Will the Deputy Premier finally admit that this is a conflict of interest?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Speaker. A conflict of interest may arise if a person is able to use confidential information from their past employment. In these circumstances a conflict of interest will not arise because Mr. Davediuk will not be in a position to use that confidential information as he won't be at the table for anything that he was directly involved in before. As well, our government has a code of conduct that governs all of our employees, and we trust that the public service will continue to act impartially.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Given, Madam Speaker, that he's going to be at the same table sitting right across from his former comrades – I'm sure that Mr. Daveiuk is a wonderful person and great negotiator. He might have even served on both sides of the table over his career. But it is unheard of and totally unacceptable for a labour negotiator to move from one side of the same table while negotiations are currently under way one day to the next. Does the Premier . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we do not have lengthy preambles on the supplementals. Please get to your question.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Given that the Premier needs to recognize that her actions have severely damaged Albertans' confidence that this government will negotiate on the side of taxpayers and not their government-sector allies, will the Premier finally stand up and defend her actions to this House?

Ms Gray: As is common in the labour relations world, Mr. Daveiuk has experience on both sides of the table, over 28 years' experience in labour relations and contract negotiation. Those who know him know that he is fair and firm. He is an asset to our team as we go toward reaching fair bargaining with our public-sector employees.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Speaker, given the NDP's plan to have a big union negotiator negotiate big union contracts – he received a big union endorsement yesterday. The brass at the AFL are so terrified of the government's tough new negotiator that they even put out a press release praising the government's new hire. Premier, the big unions love this appointment; they couldn't be happier. The NDP are stacking the deck and laying the groundwork for sham negotiations.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I need to remind you again: no preambles, please.

Go ahead, hon. Minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Speaker. To bring some experience to this conversation, University of Alberta labour law professor Eric Adams said: it doesn't strike me as illogical to think that somebody who had been working at a high level for the AUPE might be extremely good at negotiating and bargaining with the AUPE, based on that knowledge; switching his orientation and his objectives at the bargaining table from one side to the other is not unheard of and, in fact, can be quite effective.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Job Creation Tax Credit Program

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just a few short months ago this government sang the praises of their job creation tax credit. According to their own website it was supposed to create 27,000 new jobs and be up and running "as soon as possible after the election to support immediate job creation." I guess 10 months and counting is considered "as soon as possible" on the government side, but I suggest that it is an eternity to unemployed Albertans. To the minister of economic development: how many jobs have directly been created by the job creation tax credit?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. In the last 10 months there's been a significant, continued drop in the global price of oil, which is affecting not only workers and businesses in our province but as well is having a profound impact on communities around the province. Our government is doing our due diligence to ensure that the program we roll out will in fact meet the objectives that we've stated. Unlike the opposition, who would prefer that we just throw things out the door, our government is going to take the time to get it right.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Minister, I hope that we're not waiting for the not quite ready for prime time Seinfeld bill to solve problems.

Again to the minister: given that this plan has created no jobs except yours, actually, and according to various reports the information for this program is not available and no one has applied – we all make mistakes – will you admit to this House and, more importantly, to the people of Alberta that this highly touted program has been an abject failure?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Our government has taken action since last fall in providing supports for, especially, our business communities. We've freed up over $2 billion in capital available through the Alberta Treasury Branches. We've increased their lending limit by $1.5 billion. As well, we've injected new money into the Alberta Enterprise Corporation, which invests directly in Alberta companies. We've also allocated money from the heritage savings account to be invested through AIMCo in our economy here in Alberta.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Minister. Unfortunately, the money that you've been putting out is nothing compared to the money you've scared away.

Given that this program was costed at $178 million and given that this program was supposed to be fully functional two months ago, one can assume that that money has been spent without any tangible outcomes. So the government either spent money on a program, with absolutely no results, or the government was being disingenuous when it stated that this program would get off the ground . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, that sounds like a preamble to me. Please get to the question.

Mr. Gotfried: I was giving it. Given that it has to be one of those, Minister, which is it? Disingenuousness or no results?

Mr. Bilous: Madam Speaker, once again, our government wants to ensure that every dollar that we spend is going toward the outcomes and objectives that we've laid out. We want to work with businesses, municipalities, and industry to ensure that our programs are supporting them and are in fact creating and supporting the job creators. Our government is taking the time to do our due diligence to ensure that every dollar spent is well spent and will achieve those outcomes.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Economic Development

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As those of us in this House know, the Minister of Economic Development is new. I'm also the new shadow minister for this portfolio, and I continue to learn what the duties and abilities of the minister are. My question today to the minister is: does he feel that his ministry has the ability to create partnerships that support entrepreneurship and help businesses to grow and succeed?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll thank the hon. member for his question. Absolutely. The purpose in creating my ministry was for a number of things when the Premier created my ministry last fall, not only to work with the private sector, those that are the job creators, entrepreneurs, and businesses, but to look at ways to set the right conditions in order to attract investment and to provide assistance, again, through the $2 billion that we've allocated over the fall through ATB, AEC, and AIMCo. As well, Madam Speaker, many of those in the business community have said that they not only need access to capital; they also need mentorship and support.

Mr. Panda: Excellent, minister. I'm glad to hear that those in the department have the ability to help Albertans.

Given that jobs are a key concern for tens of thousands of Albertans, does the minister also have the ability to help working people upgrade their skills, secure employment, and increase the development and production of Alberta innovations?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I don't think 35 seconds will be long enough to get into many of these. In addition to looking at ways to improve and enhance our innovation system in order to encourage start-ups, encourage Albertans to go and start a business, we're also looking at ways to help businesses grow, whether it's moving from small to medium size, those that are of medium size being export ready. Preparing them to help expand their markets is a critical part of my ministry. You know, quite frankly, I think there's incredible opportunity within our province. Training and apprenticeship is another avenue that . . .

Mr. Panda: Thank you, minister. I'm glad to hear that you feel you're empowered to create jobs.

Given the fact that I just read out phrases from the minister's Bill 1, that has as much information as the ingredients list on a box of Shredded Wheat, and our clients' criteria that he just acknowledged are part of his job, why doesn't the minister get to work and do what he was appointed to do instead of waiting for this useless legislation to be passed?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I think "useless legislation" is quite offensive, and I think the private sector will find that quite offensive where our government is taking action on partnering with the private sector to create jobs.

Quite frankly, Bill 1, again, provides a framework for jobs, investment, and diversification. Already Bill 1 is being praised province-wide. The fact is that not only municipal leaders but others as well want to see that the government is in a position to be nimble, to act quickly, to adapt, and to support the very sectors that create jobs.

Coal-fired Electric Power Plant Retirement

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, the NDP's ideological agenda is costing Albertans. Its $3 billion carbon tax will discourage investment and destabilize communities. This week TransCanada cancelled contracts with Alberta power plants because of the NDP's carbon taxes, and in my riding Enmax refused to renew the Battle River plant's contracts for the same reason. These cancellations kill job security in rural Alberta. This government promised an adjustment program. When will the minister take real action to help communities?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the question. You know, the fact of the matter is that 12 of the 18 coal-fired electricity plants that we have here in Alberta were scheduled for decommissioning under the federal coal regulations, and the reason for that was their health effects. Those were Stephen Harper's federal coal regulations. The only difference between the Harper federal coal regulation plan and the Notley provincial coal regulation plan post-2030 is that there will be adjustment in those communities, and no one will be left behind by this government, which was not the case when the Official Opposition leader was in government federally.

Mr. Taylor: Given that rural communities are looking for hope and a government that will stand up for them and given that these jobs are not just statistics, empty words won't help. Over 20 per cent of Forestburg works at the plant and the mine, and now these people face uncertain futures, which the NDP can't blame on low oil prices. Can the Minister of Energy explain: why didn't the NDP think of the human cost before deciding to forge ahead with their job-killing carbon tax?

Ms Phillips: Well, Madam Speaker, the plants at Forestburg and Hanna were scheduled for decommissioning under the previous federal government's coal regulations, which were passed for reasons of safeguarding health for the very young and the very old. The fact of the matter is that we have made a commitment to coal communities, which we will have more details about in and around the budget. Finally, I might just add a little bon mot from Mr. Preston Manning, who observed that the carbon tax involves less interference by governments in the marketplace than a cap-and-trade approach. I wonder if maybe that came out over breakfast meetings and some tips were given.

Mr. Taylor: I'll be looking forward to the details.

Given that coal-powered industries are the backbone of communities like Forestburg and given that by killing key industries, the government will kill whole communities like Forestburg and Hanna and that the cancellation of these contracts will cost Albertans an extra $500 million a year for power, can the minister explain: why does the NDP insist on pushing through risky, ideological policies that will drive up power costs, decimate rural Alberta, and turn our communities into ghost towns?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. First I might observe that this language around killing communities is quite overblown and does not befit the honour of this House. Having said that, we are committed to a thoughtful engagement with communities who are affected by these coal-fired shutdowns, whether it was under Stephen Harper's federal coal regulations or our post-2030 plan. If the hon. member is so concerned, then perhaps he should bring up the Stephen Harper coal-fired regulations, supported by his boss, that left those communities with nothing.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Public and Police Officer Safety

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Speaker. One year ago Shawn Rehn, a chronic offender who was out on bail, shot and killed Constable Wynn and injured Auxiliary Constable Bond. A report on this tragic fatality prompted a review of Alberta's bail hearing system. I was pleased to meet with the Justice minister to offer my input as a former Calgary police sergeant who had been involved with the 2009 task force that resulted in changes to the bail process. To the Justice minister: given that you expected to have the report by the end of February and it is now March, do you have the report, and if you do, will you commit to immediately releasing it?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the member for the absolutely critical question. Well, of course, this government committed to do a review of the bail process because we felt it was incredibly important to be sure to balance both officer safety, on one hand, and the rights of individuals brought into conflict with the justice system, on the other hand. As a result, we put in place a process that's taken some time to move forward, and we will be examining the recommendations that have come forward so that we can move forward in a careful and prudent way because these interests are so fundamental.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again to the Justice minister: given that the purpose of the bail hearing review was to offer recommendations for improving the system for the sake of public safety and given that the quicker you release the report and act on its recommendations, the more likely you are to protect the public and the police, when will you receive the report, and when you do, will you immediately implement its recommendations to ensure a tragedy like the one that occurred in St. Albert does not happen again? Why the delay, Minister?

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, of course, it is because these interests are so fundamental and so important and because the safety of our front-line workers and our public is so important to us that we're going to take the time we need to ensure that we understand what the recommendations are and what the best way to move forward is to implement those while safeguarding the rights of offenders.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Minister, and thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that a workplace investigation into the shooting found that the RCMP breached federal health and safety rules because the officers' radios could not transmit from inside the casino building and given that other Alberta police services also face radio transmission problems, which can put officers and members of the public at risk – communication is key in these situations, Minister – what measures have you taken to ensure that all police services in Alberta are able to fully rely on their radios?

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, of course, the safety of our front-line officers is of paramount importance to this government. All people should be able to go to work and return home safely. The government is in the process of moving forward on the Alberta first responder radio communications system, which is slated to start coming online later this year, and as services transition onto that radio communications service, those communications should be improved.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

PDD Service Consultation

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Members of my constituency in Calgary-Currie, particularly those who are members of or advocate for the disability community, are interested in what the government is doing to ensure that persons with developmental disabilities can live and thrive in their communities with dignity. I was pleased to see that the PDD standards committee recently held public consultations in Westlock; Grande Prairie; Edmonton; Calgary, which I attended and was well attended; Red Deer; Lethbridge; Brooks; and today in Fort McMurray. Through you, Madam Speaker, could the hon. Minister of Human Services please provide an update on the status of these consultations?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I share Albertans' concerns for the safety of persons with developmental disabilities in their homes and in our communities. I believe that the people are better judges of their problems, and that's why we established that committee and engagement process on these complex issues, to seek direction from the persons with disabilities, their families, and the agencies serving them. So far 700 Albertans have participated in those sessions.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the minister for that update. I'm glad to hear that the government is engaging in thoughtful consultation with the disability community. Given that persons with developmental disabilities may face mobility challenges, what is the government doing to ensure that these consultations are accessible to everyone who wishes to share their ideas and solutions?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you, Member, for raising this important concern. Our government is absolutely committed to ensuring that all members of the disability community who wish to participate have the opportunity to participate. Aside from these face-to-face forums, we have also set up an online portal where so far we have received around 700 submissions. I would encourage all Albertans to weigh in. The cut-off date for that is March 13.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that many Albertans, including the constituents who have brought this issue forward to my office, will be eager to hear the results of these consultations, could the minister please provide an update on what the next steps for this consultation will be?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Today is the last session. As we speak, it's going on in Fort McMurray, and then the online submission date, as I said previously, is March 13. Following that, I will be receiving a report from the committee, and that report, essentially, will determine the next step and inform our future direction.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. With the accelerated closure of coal-fired plants and the subsequent cancellation of power contracts this government's environmental policy is running the risk of turning communities like Hanna into an economic wasteland. It has already put hundreds out of work, and it will cost consumers millions of dollars, not including the human cost. Will this government do the right thing and reconsider its plan to accelerate the phase-out of coal?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I appreciate the hon. member's question. I actually had a conversation with AUMA earlier today, talking about communities that are affected by the phase-out of coal and that our government and my ministry are taking the lead on working with not only our municipal leaders but as well with workers and their families and looking for opportunities for them, whether it's through transition, identifying strengths in their communities and ways that our government can help support a transition.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Madam Speaker. Since the government is blaming the low oil prices for job losses when clearly their risky ideas are putting people out of work, the hundreds of job losses in the Hanna district will rest squarely on their shoulders. To the minister: what is your specific plan to ensure those who lose work because of your risky ideas land on their feet?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think, first of all, I need to clarify the fact that 12 out of our 18 coal-fired facilities would be phased out because of a federal regulation. It had nothing to do with our government. But I'll tell you one thing that differentiates us from the other side of the House. The previous government, the PC government, here in Alberta had no plan – had no plan – to support the communities where the existing facilities are to help them transition. Our government is looking at working with communities around all 18 of the facilities. We have committed to that. I have made that commitment not only to municipal leaders but to labour leaders and to those communities.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Madam Speaker. Minister, since your economic policies simply don't add up – they're hurting our communities and their economic potential – will the minister table the specific scientific research upon which these policies are based?

Ms Phillips: It's quite interesting that I'm going to have to rise in this House and explain the science of climate change to an opposition caucus, half a dozen of whom ran on a platform of rejecting the science. To further have to explain the science of NOx and SOx in addition to GHGs, nitrous oxide, and sulphur oxide, Madam Speaker, and then to have to explain the health effects of coal-fired electricity to this opposition caucus is a little bit rich when Albertans already understand the science of climate change. They already understand the health effects of coal-fired electricity.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Coal Strategy

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm encouraged to see the government follow through on the Progressive Conservative national energy strategy and our climate change framework. What's puzzling, though: the NDP climate action plan released in November spoke of the immediate need to phase out all coal-fired electricity in this province. However, the throne speech reads "a phase-out of emissions from coal power generation, reducing pollution," not a phase-out of coal-fired plants. An important distinction, one would think. To the environment minister: did the throne speech mistakenly avoid stating your government's position on coal, and/or are you stepping away from your NDP climate change plan?

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for his thoughtful interventions on this matter. I don't have to explain the science to his caucus. It's perhaps why they can't seem to get together.

First of all, I'm sorry, but it's not a PC plan. I have in front of me an op-ed written by Murray Edwards and Brian Ferguson of Cenovus and CNRL that says, "the plan reflects a fundamental shift, acknowledging that polarization and conflict is not constructive," which is, of course, the approach of the Official Opposition.

Now, on this matter of the coal-fired emissions, Madam Speaker, we have said that our quarrel is with the emissions and not the electrons. If there are ways to ensure that there are no emissions, we will look at them.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, that's encouraging because it is clear within the industry, including renewables, that there should be a healthy mix of our energy.

To the Energy minister: given that our coal is sold and exported for other purposes such as metallurgy, can you share with Albertans that you haven't completely vilified coal, its uses, and its importance to Alberta's finances?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Yeah, for sure. Thank you, Madam Speaker and the hon. member. Metallurgic coal is not included in the coal strategy. It is still being sold to any of our customers, so that one is not in. Metallurgic coal is still vital in the manufacturing industries. That is not included.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We've heard lots today about the TransCanada decision to abandon multiple power purchase agreements. Whatever the government's position is, perceived or real, it's important to understand. To the government, the question to the same minister: what specific incentives is this government planning to afford power providers, including those in the renewable sector, to ensure the stability of our electricity system, and how much will it cost Albertans if you can't provide that stability?

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you for the question. Of course, the climate leadership plan outlined a competitive bid process for renewable energy, and we'll have more to say about that through the budget and through consultations with industry through 2016, Madam Speaker, because of course the carbon levy does not take effect until 2017. So we've given ourselves some time to engage thoughtfully on this matter. I thank the hon. member for the question. I will be pleased to update the House on how we are structuring those, likely through budget and also through the fall.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, you had a quote there. Just a reminder that we would like that tabled; your soonest . . .

Ms Phillips: Oh, sure. It was in the newspaper.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Members' Statements (continued)

Mental Health Review Report

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. At some points in life every Albertan is touched by mental illness and addiction. Released last month, the Alberta report on addictions and mental health highlights the system changes which are critically needed to reduce wait times, improve quality care, and reduce the cost of our current systems of care. There are many concerns that the report does not focus on well-recognized underfunding for mental illness beds and the important role of psychiatrists. Child and adult psychiatrists do play a vital role with severe mental illness along with teams of supporting professionals. However, it's clear that the great majority of mental health and addictions issues could and should be handled by other professionals, including psychologists, family physicians, and their teams.

Furthermore, to improve patient outcomes, there must be a shift of resources upstream into prevention efforts with individuals, families, and communities at risk. Without a dramatic shift in the planning and allocation of resources to identify and reduce risk factors earlier and prevent breakdown, the human and financial toll will continue to rise in Alberta. Alberta Health and the new health board must take leadership and also provide a new planning partnership that includes education, human services, housing, and police.

Two questions must lead the transformation this report calls for. First, how do Alberta Health and Alberta Health Services lead a dramatic change within a massive and entrenched top-down culture let alone include other ministries in a new collaborative planning process? Moving across silos, including critical expertise from the front lines and shifting more resources to prevention, will take extraordinary and courageous leadership. Historic communications difficulties and distrust must be confronted if a new culture of respect is to develop both within Health and across the other ministries.

Second question: how do the primary care networks step up to a larger role as the mental health home for the 1 in 5 people who need ongoing treatment-based, team-based care to be well? Again, Health must take bold leadership with the doctors. The evidence is clear. We can prevent much suffering and death and save millions of dollars annually, but transformative leadership is essential to co-create the patient-centred, team-based preventive care that we urgently need.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

University of Alberta Human Rights Lectureship

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Every year the University of Alberta hosts the Visiting Lectureship in Human Rights. This event is envisioned as one of the pre-eminent annual events there at the university and is part of Equity Diversity Inclusion Week. Individuals and organizations that have made an outstanding contribution in the field of human rights and human rights protection are invited to share experiences with students and the public. I was honoured to be part of this team when I worked at the U of A.

Every year this program intends to offer the people of Alberta a good way of celebrating the commitments we undertook as signatories of the United Nations declaration of human rights and to support and nurture our continuing interest and involvement with human rights issues at home and abroad. The program helps us by providing a safe environment to discuss challenging human rights issues. Faculty and staff get an opportunity to learn, question, and participate in events, thereby shaping the world in which we live. The learnings from this program have helped me to design a human rights related project for young constituents in my beautiful constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie.

This year's Visiting Lectureship in Human Rights will take place on Monday, March 14, at 7 p.m. and will be delivered by Kwame Anthony Appiah, an author, lecturer, and professor of philosophy and law at New York University. His lecture is titled Culture, Identity, and Human Rights. Kwame Anthony Appiah is known for his work on multiculturalism, global citizenship, identity, honour, and religion. He was named as one of Foreign Policy's top 100 global thinkers and has taught at famous educational institutions: Princeton, Harvard, Yale, Cornell, Duke, and the University of Ghana. From 2009 to 2012 he served as president of the PEN American Center, the world's oldest human rights organization.

I invite you all to the Visiting Lectureship in Human Rights. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Syrian Refugee Resettlement

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Since we last met in this Assembly, Calgary has welcomed hundreds of Syrian refugees to our city, and many of them have settled in Calgary-East. I'm so proud of Calgarians and east Calgarians in particular for being so welcoming and for making a concerted effort to help our new neighbours feel comfortable and safe in their new homes.

Both the Calgary Immigrant Educational Society and the Centre for Newcomers in my riding have added additional English classes to help address new language challenges, and the Centre for Newcomers is also holding employment information sessions in Arabic.

The Syrian Refugee Support Group is a group of over 1,900 Calgarians who have come together to do what they can to welcome refugees to Calgary. They started out by collecting gently used household items in a warehouse to help in furnishing new homes for refugees, but it quickly became much more than that. People met new arrivals at the airport, found Arabic interpreters, helped with resumé writing, and even spent overnight shifts with a sick baby in the hospital while his mom was in surgery.

I was also pleased to attend an event, held by the Ethno-Cultural Council of Calgary, welcoming our new Syrian neighbours. It brought together community members and new Syrian families to tell their stories and to meet each other. Around a hundred people attended the event and listened to stories and mingled over food.

There has also been an outpouring of support from everyday people in the neighbourhood, people who have learned that refugee families have moved in next door and took the time to go say hello and ask what they needed. Sometimes this was done via broken sign language, but people went out of their way to take the time to welcome their new neighbours. While there certainly have been some negative incidents and there has been some racism, the events that I have described show that Calgarians are welcoming, friendly, resourceful, and kind. They know that during tough times we are most successful when we help each other.

There will continue to be challenges: housing is a big one; employment in this economy will also be a struggle; children fitting in at a new school. However, I am overwhelmingly encouraged by the work my constituents are doing to ensure that our new neighbours have the best possible start.

Medical Procedure Wait Times

Mr. Barnes: You may expect to wait in line for a table at your favourite restaurant or wait in line at a supermarket, but waiting months, even years to schedule your medical procedure is something nobody wants. Located just minutes from the Canadian border in northwestern Montana, Kalispell Regional Medical Center offers a wide range of medical and surgical services. Madam Speaker, you may recognize this as a quote, a snippet from one of southern Alberta's biggest radio advertisers.

People cannot access their own system here, and that is a true embarrassment to this government. The 90th percentile benchmark for hip replacement is 182 days. Alberta didn't hit that target even once last year. The south zone, including Medicine Hat, is among the worst in the province. My constituents are waiting close to a year. The benchmark for knee replacements is also 182 days. Province-wide we didn't hit that a single time either. Unfortunately, it won't surprise anyone to hear that we're missing on cataracts, too, while CT scans and MRIs continue to get worse.

Madam Speaker, these are shameful numbers, but please never forget that behind these numbers are people, people who are suffering, people that the system is failing. These are Albertans that can't go to work, costing the economy hundreds of millions in lost productivity. But, again, more importantly, you can't put a price on the lost quality of life and the pain.

Madam Speaker, this government loves to boast about how much borrowed money they're spending. They're noticeably more silent, though, when it comes to what they've actually accomplished for Alberta patients and their families. When will this government realize that efficiency and effectiveness in health care mean serving patients and not just bragging about dollars? Albertans expect results, not talking points. This is a system in crisis.

We will continue to stand for publicly funded health care that has the patient at the centre, a system that treats Albertans with respect.

Introduction of Bills

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Bill 201 Election Recall Act

Mr. Smith: Yes. Madam Speaker, it is my great pleasure today to request leave to introduce a bill, the Election Recall Act.

Democracy is an amazing system of government, and the idea that the people could rule, that the wishes of the majority through their elected representatives would guide the Legislature is breathtaking in its scope. That the people through their elected representatives would be responsible for creating the laws under which the citizens would live was at one time regarded as a radical proposition. While we live in a representative form of democracy, I believe that the system of democracy that we practise in Alberta can be made to be even more democratic. We need to increase the accountability of MLAs to their constituents and to reduce the power of party discipline. We need to increase citizen engagement in the democratic process.

So it is my pleasure to request leave to introduce a bill, the Election Recall Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a first time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Bill 202 Alberta Affordable Housing Review Committee Act

Ms Luff: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 202, the Alberta Affordable Housing Review Committee Act.

This is a crucial issue for folks in my riding of Calgary-East and, I believe, for folks all across Alberta, and I look forward to discussion and deliberation with my colleagues in the House.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have two tablings today. One is a copy of an article from December 3, 2014, where Premier Wynne supported Energy East without conditions when the PCs were in government.

Also, the required copies of the Alberta Energy Regulator's Report 2013-B: Pipeline Performance in Alberta, which indicates that there were nearly 300,000 pipeline sections approved in Alberta at December 31, 2012.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other tablings? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I have two tablings. First of all, I would like to table a flimsy document, a flimsy pamphlet, which is the last available information on what the Wildrose would do with respect to the budget and the capital plan. This document was from their platform before the election, and it shows that they would cut $9.4 billion out of the capital plan as currently proposed by the government.

Secondly, Madam Speaker, I have here a document showing that the secret government caucus office in Calgary was hiding in plain sight on a government website just above the bullet for the Wildrose members. This document clearly shows that the secret office was in fact not secret at all.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Minister of Environment and Parks, a tabling?

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of an opinion piece written on February 9 by Murray Edwards and Brian Ferguson – they wrote on behalf of BP Canada, Canadian Natural, Cenovus, Devon, Statoil, Suncor, and Total – in which they articulate that the Alberta climate plan benefited from consultation with a broad range of stakeholders and that it reflects a fundamental shift, acknowledging that polarization and conflict is in fact not constructive.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I just want to say that it was a true pleasure to have no points of order today. Thank you, all.

Orders of the Day

Committee of Supply

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Interim Supply Estimates 2016-17 General Revenue Fund and Lottery Fund

The Chair: We are at the point in the rotation where we have a question from the Official Opposition to the minister. You've got five minutes. We only have five minutes left.

Mr. van Dijken: Good. Thank you, Madam Chair. My question is: where is the budget? The Finance minister's excuse that other governments fail to get budgets prepared and delivered on time is not an acceptable excuse. Business best practice would have a properly planned and prepared budget in place before the fiscal year begins. The fact that this government has failed to deliver a budget on time is another example of this government's inability to properly plan, prepare, and deliver on what would be normal best practice in the private sector. I would suggest that the Minister of Finance would do well to encourage his department to focus on business best practice and not measure his success by the failures of others.

Madam Chair, a budget brings certainty to the municipalities and the construction companies that need the work in this construction season. Alberta Transportation is the only department in this interim supply where the capital dollars exceed the expense dollars. Roads and bridges are expensive, but without a transparent list of projects completed and projects ready to go, we don't know what this interim supply is going to be spent on. For me as well as for any other member in this House, a properly delivered budget would allow me to let my constituents know what they can expect to see get done during this construction season.

Madam Chair, the municipal transportation grant programs allow our municipalities to plan and complete critical infrastructure projects needed in their communities. We know that water and waste-water grants are a huge issue for municipalities, and of the $173 million in expense how much is directed to municipal water and waste water? As well, how much is directed to the Alberta municipal infrastructure program? How much is directed to the strategic transportation infrastructure program? How much is directed to the green transit incentives program, to municipal transit initiatives, to the municipal water infrastructure grant? How much to the municipal waste-water program? Any money for the water for life program?

Madam Chair, what do I tell my municipal leaders? Do I tell them that they can get ready to start their projects? They have a limited construction season available to them. Good government does not paper over their failures by comparing themselves to other government failures. They call it as it is, a failure of best practice, and they build plans to do better. The failure of not bringing a budget forward on time is not acceptable in the private sector and should not be acceptable here in the public sector. The failure of not bringing a budget forward on time impacts the ability of our stakeholders to properly prepare and plan.

Madam Chair, our taxpayers should not be expected to give the government a blank cheque to spend, a payday loan until a budget is passed. Let's see a real budget and not pass this Band-Aid solution. Let's call this what it is, a failure to bring forward a properly prepared budget on time.

Mr. Ceci: I thought I heard the Premier earlier today in question period say that in the last 14 years there have been 18 interim supply bills. [interjection] Eight. Oh, I'm sorry. Eight. You're right. Math is hard sometimes. Eight in the last 14 years. So, you know, the overblown statement of failure this, failure that, failure everything else is just what I said, overblown. There's no accuracy to it if we look at the last 14 years.

I would like to also point out that the Ministry of Finance in less than a year will produce three full budgets. They produced one for the previous government – in March of last year they produced an interim supply – they produced a full budget for the NDP government in October of last year, and they will produce, with our help, another full budget in just a few short weeks. So the men and women who are doing that work know that they have done extraordinary work to deliver on behalf of Albertans every single day. I also want to . . . [A timer sounded]

The Chair: The rotation now takes us to the third party. You've got about a minute and a half left.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I had on my watch that actually the time was going to expire, but I do have a question, actually, conveniently, for the Minister of Environment and Parks. I noticed that in the interim supply estimates there was some $51 million allocated for capital within that, and I'm just curious to know – as you know, Minister, I have a keen interest in Alberta parks and would like to know how that $51 million in these next two months is going to be allocated.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Yes. Thank you, and thank you for the question. There are some Parks initiatives that are moving forward now that we are in a building season. We are having a look at some of the campgrounds and other facilities through the South Saskatchewan regional plan, not necessarily this piece, not necessarily the Castle pieces – those are still yet to come – but some of the other pieces around the Kananaskis area. So that is part of it. There will also be some investments in flood recovery and those pieces even within the Parks budget because there's some riparian restoration and other pieces that need to happen. That's what that is about. You know, stay tuned in Budget '16 for further investments in Parks and in our environmental – certainly, watershed management is top priority for us.

Thank you for the question.

Dr. Starke: Does any of the anticipated spending, Madam Chair, include improvements to William Watson Lodge?

Ms Phillips: There are some William Watson Lodge improvements that are happening right now, hon. member. We'll have a little bit more to say about that fairly soon. I will be happy to extend an invitation to you when that happens.

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but the time allotted pursuant to Government Motion 8, as agreed to on March 9, 2016, has elapsed, so I now must put the following questions.

Introduction of Bills (reversion)

Bill 2 Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2016

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 2, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2016. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a first time]

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mrs. Littlewood moved, seconded by Mr. Westhead, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Debate adjourned March 9: Ms Luff speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-East, you still had a few minutes left. Did you wish to use the time?

Ms Luff: No. Thank you. I cede my time.

The Deputy Speaker: The next member I have on my list is the hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise in this House to speak in support of the Speech from the Throne, and I'd like to take this opportunity to tell you a little about the constituency I represent, my personal journey, why I'm so proud to be a part of this government caucus, and how our policies are going to help those who elected me.

I'd like to begin by recognizing the visitors that I introduced earlier and their stamina in still being here at this point to hear this speech. It means a great deal to me, so thank you. They certainly have played an important role in inspiring me to enter partisan politics and supporting me personally when I decided to do so, whether it be through contributions, door-knocking, helping put up hundreds of signs, all of the above. And, of course, they are Ray Martin, Raj Pannu, Alex McEachern, and Reg Basken. All of these men are my godfathers in the NDP as well as many others that I will mention down the road.

I also had asked Starr Curry to be here. Starr is the president of our women's caucus and has made it her primary volunteer duty to make sure that we get women to run for the NDP and has had that task as a key charge of hers since the early 1980s. Certainly, I really appreciate her support of myself and other women candidates in our party and making that a priority going forward.

I also want to express my heartfelt gratitude to the people of Edmonton-Glenora, who elected me last May. Edmonton-Glenora is a dynamic and diverse constituency which includes the neighbourhoods of Westmount, Inglewood – my home neighbourhood – Prince Charles, Sherbrooke, Dovercourt, Woodcroft, North Glenora, Glenora, Grovenor, McQueen, High Park, Canora, Britannia Youngstown, and Mayfield. We are home to people who rent and who own, those who are indigenous and multigenerational Canadians as well as many newcomers who have recently arrived as part of the Syrian refugee initiative.

We are employers and employees, students and teachers, pregnant and parenting teen moms who live in the Brentwood homes, who are supported by the Terra Centre, seniors who live in lodges like McQueen Place, operated by the Greater Edmonton Foundation, working families who are proud to send their children to well-supported schools. We also have three business revitalization zones – 124th Street, Inglewood, and Stony Plain Road – as individuals who are concerned about how the low price of oil is impacting our economy, their livelihoods, and the livelihoods of each other.

We also have many dynamic businesses and cultural and service centres, including the Telus World of Science; small businesses like the Remedy Cafe, Studio Bloom, and the Duchess Bake Shop; big businesses like Safeway and Home Depot; the Woodcroft public library; Jasper Place Health and Wellness; Government House; the Woodcroft public health centre; the Peter Hemingway Fitness and Leisure Centre; the amazing art gallery district along 124th Street; and many top-notch schools that work to help children reach their full potential each and every day.

I was overcome with gratitude by the support that Edmonton-Glenora showed me in May, and I am devoted to serving them to the absolute best of my ability. They told us in May that love is better than fear and that a welcoming and inclusive world is one that they want to continue to build. They told us to support jobs, to support families, to be a government that operates with the public and the citizens of Alberta always top of mind.

I'm proud of my Alberta roots, growing up in the rural communities of Altario, Castor, and Kinuso. My parents were faithful public servants, a teacher and a principal. They instilled a sense of service, a love of learning, and a pride of public education. You won't be surprised to hear that my father did not encourage me to follow his career pathway. As a principal during the deep cuts of the Klein era my dad had to make tough decisions that resulted in staff members being laid off, class sizes increasing, less one-on-one support for students who were falling behind, and he even went so far as to take every other light bulb out of our school.

So when I asked my dad for career advice, he discouraged me from entering teaching because both he and my mom felt incredibly disrespected by that government of the day, and their reward for making very tough decisions, as I just mentioned, was a 5 per cent pay cut to both of them. He told me that if we lived in another province, he might suggest teaching, but Alberta needed macro change before it would be a profession that he would want his daughter to work in. It may not surprise the hon. members in this Assembly that I'm stubborn, however, and that I did follow my own heart and chose to pursue education and a teaching career. I'm so proud that I chose to do so, having an undergraduate and a graduate degree, both from the University of Alberta.

While I was completing my M.Ed., I had the pleasure of getting to know the hon. Raj Pannu. My parents had always told me to work hard and ask people that I respect for advice, so I did just that. As I mentioned earlier, Dr. Pannu recommended that I get involved in politics as soon as possible. I took that as an endorsement for applying for a job and a reference. So I heeded his advice, and I applied for a researcher position at the NDP caucus. Madam Speaker, this was the beginning of my beginning. I had the honour of working for Raj Pannu, Ray Martin, the current Education minister, and our Government House Leader as well as our Premier. Every one of them has made a significant contribution to the people of Alberta through their public service and has supported me personally along my political path, and I am forever grateful.

I am in awe of the opportunity that the constituents of Edmonton-Glenora have provided by allowing me to participate in this Assembly as their representative in creating macro change, that my parents spoke of Alberta needing. Today I'm part of a team that is committed to making tomorrow better than yesterday.

We know that it is not an easy goal in a province that is very dependent on one industry. We are so fortunate to have a strong oil and gas base, but with price volatility and today's low oil prices, it has never been more important to diversify our economy and to stabilize our public sector so that families can count on the public health care system, that we are so proud of as Albertans, to be there when we need it, to count on our schools, to fund growth, to ensure that children get the very best start in life, to ensure that everyone here pays their fair share to support our province, our home, as we weather this economic downturn. Albertans are resilient, determined, and we have each other's backs. I have no illusions about how tough things are right now in Alberta. Alberta families know the challenges that lie ahead for themselves and for our government.

But while the choices government makes might be easy in the boom times, the choices government makes when Albertans are hurting are even more important. While government strives to diversify and strengthen our economy to ensure that future Albertans are less vulnerable to drops in the price of oil, while our government invests in job creation and protecting Albertans from exploitative payday lenders, while our government invests in cleaner and stronger energy futures, while our government improves public oversight and stewardship of services and encourages democratic renewal, there is one message that needs to be delivered to Albertans today. Know that I am here to work for you, that our government is here to work for you.

I will be working for you because I will be working for my friends: friends in Kinuso, who are working hard on the farm; friends that I worked with at the university, who continue to serve their students and are so relieved that we haven't seen drastic cuts in a volatile budget cycle like they've lived through so many times before; my friends on the school board like Ray Martin, who is here today, who have many times heard commitments to stable, predictable funding, but we haven't realized them yet. Well, not until last May, Madam Speaker.

Last May the people of Alberta spoke loudly. They had a choice. They had a choice between reliving the life that we lived two decades ago, the one that caused my family so much anxiety and so many other families in Alberta so much anxiety, the reality that we've continued to allow for deferred maintenance to increase throughout the province. We heard that from both sides of the House, how devastating it is that we've got buildings that aren't in the best condition, that our children deserve better, that our hospitals deserve better, and it's true. The only way to get through this is to continue to invest in each other and support each other.

So I'll be working for the kids, working for the teachers that they learn from every day, working for the nurses and doctors their moms and dads depend on to keep their families healthy. I'll be working for my mom, who first taught me what a privilege and responsibility it is to serve the public, a lesson I take to heart every day in this province, and for my dad's memory, who I think would be very proud of me today.

I want to say thank you, Madam Speaker, for allowing me to share my story today and so much gratitude to the people of Edmonton-Glenora for allowing me the honour to serve as their MLA.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Connolly: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you, Minister, for your very emotional speech. As some of you may know, my mother was also a teacher back in the '90s and before that, even, when there were drastic cuts. I remember being in elementary school, and I think I had a parent-teacher interview in grade 3 or 4, and I expressed my wish to also be a teacher. Both my teacher and my mother said: no, there's no money in that; you should do other things. I was still planning on being a teacher, but sometimes life gets ahead of you, and your plans change on a whim.

I would just like to ask the hon. minister what she – I'd like her to kind of explain a bit more about how the teaching profession has really influenced her life and her ministry and her job now.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. What a lovely opportunity. Certainly, I think that the skills that one acquires in an education degree serve you well whether you choose to pursue the classroom or not. I think that investing in postsecondary is always a worthwhile investment, and I have to say that the skills that you acquire even in something that's focused on a very specific job like teacher, I think, are transferable to lots of other sectors.

Actually, I remember on my first day of sociology of education class the professor saying, "Welcome to pre real estate," and that studies had shown that about 10 years into their career as many teachers would be selling real estate as would be practising teachers. I thought that was quite interesting. I think it speaks to the types of skills that you can acquire.

I also think it spoke to some of the realities of the classroom and the pressures that teachers are facing on a daily basis and how those first five years, in particular, can be a real struggle. That's one of the reasons why I'm so proud that we have a government that invested in growth, that invested in supporting front-line education and classroom services. It's hard enough when you're walking into a classroom for the first time with 30 students, but the idea of there being 40 students there was very scary, not just to those new teachers but to the parents of those children in those classrooms. That's one of the reasons why I'm very proud that we worked immediately to restore the funding to education to reverse the decision that had been made by the previous government.

So those are some of my experiences. I know we have many people in this Chamber who have been trained as teachers and as farmers and as lawyers and other professions, and I just think that investment in postsecondary is so fundamental to pursuing a variety of opportunities in life. I'm very grateful that my parents, you know, encouraged me to study and supported me even when I didn't follow my father's direct advice.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will call on the next speaker. The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to stand today in response to the Speech from the Throne by Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor and to take this opportunity to speak to the experiences and values that brought me to stand for election in the fine constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. I have heartfelt gratitude to the residents of Edmonton-Rutherford for their support of my candidacy and for setting the record in the election for the greatest improvement in percentage vote for any party in a single riding in the spring election. I intend to honour your faith in me through hard work and to ensure that the values and policies you supported will be reflected in the work of this New Democrat led government.

Thank you to all the members of this House for electing me to the position of Deputy Chair of Committees earlier in the year. I believe that my time in that position provided me with learnings that will assist me in my role as MLA for Edmonton-Rutherford. I would also like to thank the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker for all their support and kindness toward me during my time as Deputy Chair of Committees. I finally would like to congratulate the Member for Edmonton-Manning for her interesting election to the role. I know she will perform her duties to the best traditions of honour and impartiality in this House.

I come to this Legislature from a 34-year career as a social worker in the city of Edmonton. That work has inextricably led to my journey to this House. But before I speak to how the values of that profession and my experience with thousands of Albertans seeking to improve their lives has shaped the work I intend to pursue in my role in this House, I would like to tell you about the family that shaped me in my growing years and the family that has sustained me with love and affection for the last 56 years.

My parents came to this great city in 1954 from Saskatoon, where my father had earned both his bachelor of arts and his law degree and my mother had earned a bachelor of arts and subsequently a bachelor of social work from the University of Manitoba. Once they came to Alberta, they adopted their new province with a zeal that was breathtaking. They raised seven children, all of whom went on to university, earning 15 degrees among them.

My father served on the Edmonton Catholic school board and unsuccessfully ran for the provincial Liberal Party in 1967. He was appointed a judge of the district court of northern Alberta in 1973, the district court of Alberta in 1975, the Supreme Court of the Yukon in 1978, the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories in 1979, and from 1979 to 2003 was a justice of the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta.

My mother, who completed a master's of social work degree from the University of Calgary after raising all seven children, served as the chair of the MacEwan University department of social work and has received numerous awards, including the YWCA women of distinction and an honorary doctorate from St. Stephen's College at the University of Alberta for her work on more than 20 boards and commissions in the city of Edmonton.

From these two, my loving parents, I received many gifts. I have benefited from all of the bounty that Albertans all hope their children will enjoy, but perhaps more importantly they taught me that not everyone was as lucky as me to win the lottery of kind, generous, hard-working parents. Indeed, my father and mother bequeathed to me something much more important than the trappings of my education and career success. They taught me that nothing matters so much as who you are as a person, how you live your life, not acquiring but giving, not being solely concerned with success but finding a way to participate in the injunction to bring justice to this world.

It is said of my family that the children were served politics and Pabulum from the same spoon, much as the young man beside me today. The words and indeed the actions my parents lived by enabled me to see the need to embrace the world with both the open arms and the firm grip of social justice. Taking that lesson to heart, I entered my career of social work with the belief that all people were deserving of the opportunity to achieve, to contribute, and to love but knowing as well that there were many barriers that prevented people from achieving, from contributing, and from loving or being loved.

Fortunately for me, my early career as a child welfare worker for the province of Alberta led me to pursue a master's degree at Wilfrid Laurier University, where I met a wonderful person who would teach me and push me and love me into a deeper understanding of social justice, an understanding of the nature of equal relationships and the role of critical feminist analysis and transforming our exquisite humanness into personal and social transformation: my wife, Kathaleen, who is in the gallery. Together we have raised our children – Antoine, Kate, and Brenndan – and have endeavoured to build upon my parents' gifts of love and justice in our desire to be a part of the eternal historical movement toward a fair society. Without Kathaleen and my children I would not be here. I would not have the passion in my heart and, apparently, the tears in my eyes and the determination and soul to make this opportunity of being an MLA everything that it should be.

This brings me now to the throne speech, that reminds us that Albertans are an optimistic, entrepreneurial, can-do people and Albertans are community-minded, caring, and neighbourly. Ours is a society of friends. We have each other's backs. We support each other in these times instead of making a bad situation worse. We are people who dream no little dreams, who wish for ourselves only what we desire for all: freedom from poverty, freedom from violence, and freedom from discrimination. We seek reconciliation with our First Peoples, opportunity for our children, and a prosperous, entrepreneurial, diversified economy in which everyone will share. Our expectations are high, and our ability to achieve them is even higher. We have been blessed in this province with exceptional people, unmatched resources, and a political system dedicated to uplifting the whole people.

Reflect for a moment on those words, "uplifting the whole people," spoken by Henry Marshall Tory, the first president of the University of Alberta. He does not say: for the benefit of the fortunate few or for those with a genetic gift of intelligence or good looks or opportunity based on family or race or religion. He reminds us that the focus of whatever we do is the whole people. We have accomplished little if some of us can afford good homes in wonderful communities like Edmonton-Rutherford, but others cannot; if some of us can expect to live healthy lives well into our senior years while others cannot; if some of us reap the benefits of living in the best place in the world, but others cannot.

Now, I know that everyone in this House shares my belief, this belief that what we want for ourselves we also want for others. For the First Session I sat on the side of the House with the members of the opposition, and I've come to respect them for who they are as compassionate men and women, the common values we share, and the obvious fact that they are good people with good hearts, just as I strive to be.

But there is a place where our paths diverge, a place where my 34 years as a social worker have led me to believe some things differently than the members across the way. Simply wanting people to have a share in the benefits of society is not enough. The structures of society have to exist in a manner that invites and, whenever possible, ensures real opportunity and the strengths and resources to enable a true ability to utilize those opportunities. Believing that individuals succeed individually is inconsistent with the life experience of most of us. Every member of this Legislature arrived here not because of their individual effort but because of the contributions of hundreds of others: people who donated significant amounts of money, people who answered phones, people who put up signs, people who knocked on doors and delivered flyers.

Of course, our individual efforts were important, but the greatest MLA could not be an MLA unless the systems and structures of democracy were made available by a community of people with a common purpose. We can celebrate the fact that Alberta is a land rich with opportunity, but we need to understand that the opportunities are not evenly available. When we look at this House, we see only one party with gender parity in candidates and in elected officials. Throughout Canada we see that women represent only 25 to 30 per cent of most Legislatures.

We can choose to believe that women fail to have the individual qualities to get themselves elected, or, more correctly, we can realize that women face a number of barriers that men do not face. Women are met more frequently with behaviours and attitudes inconsistent with their own way of being. They are less frequently on the minds of decision-makers to be considered for leadership roles, and they face systematic devaluation of their achievements. In social work we call these structural barriers, not barriers intrinsic to the individual but barriers that are ingrained in the order of things around them. Because these barriers exist outside of the individual, they need to be eliminated at the structural level, not at the individual level.

We can achieve gender parity in this House not by hoping somehow that individual women will find the courage to face the odds but by changing those odds, making them even. We know that without government some individuals will do well, and then we can say: "See? The individual succeeds on their own merits." But any analysis will tell you that the success of those individuals isn't random. It isn't based simply on individual merits but on many structural invitations, those factors and the order of things that make success more likely, that invite some people to exceed more frequently than others. We know that you are more likely to attend university if your parents are university educated. We know that you are more likely to save adequately for your retirement if savings are deducted from your paycheque.

Unfortunately, we all know that these structural invitations can be negative ones. We know that if you were raised in poverty, you are more likely to experience periods of poverty in adulthood; if you are anything other than a white male, you are less likely to get elected to the Alberta Legislature. The response to structural problems is structural. We have a healthy nation when we have a systematic universally accessible health care. We have safe working environments when we have systematic worker protections and consistent external inspections. We have equal workforce participation by women when we have affordable, accessible daycare. All of these things are achievable not through isolated individual effort but through social co-operation, a belief in the value of all people, and the creation of societal structures that invite success for everyone.

While some others decry government as an imposition on the citizens of this province, I celebrate government as the fruit of collective community action. I know that I have not succeeded alone, and I know that most people cannot succeed as isolated individuals. I succeed in co-operation with my family, my community of Edmonton-Rutherford, and with the vision and values of the New Democratic government.

I look forward to a government that understands its role as the voice of common people, not a special-interest group; a government that actively seeks to remove barriers and to increase positive invitations for success; a government that I can believe in with all my heart and soul. To that end, I will dedicate my tenure in this House to those pieces of legislation that make possible the circumstances of success; a focus on a stable, dependable economy without devastating cycles of boom or bust; a focus on establishing a new industry of renewable energy that meets our needs for economic growth while preserving the integrity of our cherished lands, air, and waterways. I will focus on creating those structures that invite the success of our children, that ensure to every extent possible that each child receives the safety and security needed to move forward in the world, where they may find their success in a community among others doing the same thing.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I must thank the hon. minister for that. I was so excited that I just had to jump up. Thank you for sharing that little peek into the history and the journey coming to the Legislature and the motivation and passion that has brought you here.

I was hoping we might have gotten a little peek into what it's been like since taking over the Indigenous Relations ministry. I wonder if you could share that with us.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the question. I must say that I feel that having been given the opportunity to serve as the Minister of Indigenous Relations has been an extreme privilege. I'm not sure how else to say it. It is a privilege because I've had the opportunity to travel over this great province, to go to the Blood reserve on the very southern end of the province, to the very north in Paddle Prairie and many places in between. I've had the opportunity to meet the chairs of every one of the Métis settlements in this province. I've had the opportunity to meet perhaps almost two dozen chiefs and community members around the province. I visited almost a dozen communities – Enoch and Alexander and Montana, Samson band – all around this province.

There's something that consistently happens when I go to those places. I am received as an equal, trusted human being, with the expectation that I will respond to them in the same way, as equal, trusted human beings. It's a lesson that they give me every single time. It's a lesson that they invite me to remember. I might have the privilege of being here in this position, in this ministry, which truly, I must tell you, is an extreme privilege, and I am received as a representative of this government, but beyond that, they don't want to know that I have a position; they don't want to know that I'm there because I have these privileges. They want to know that I will understand who they are: human beings who have needs and desires to participate fully in this province.

I can't tell you the number of times that people have said to me: "We want to be fully Albertan. We know that we are treaty people; we know that we are members of the Piikani First Nation or the Cree Nation or the Métis Nation." What they also want me to know is: "We are fully members of the Alberta community, and we want to participate in that. We want to participate in that by raising healthy children who will participate in that. We want to participate in that by being members of the business community and help to grow the industry that we need in this province to ensure the future for our children. We want to participate in that by bringing the special gifts that we have, the understanding of ceremony and protocol and respecting our elders and bringing the values and the traditions that we have built up over the years in this province and sharing those values and traditions with the children who have been gifted to us by the Creator."

All of those lessons have continued to make me self-reflect and understand that I stand here as a representative of a government. I've been given the chance to fulfill a role, but it really isn't about me. What it's really about is every single individual in this province being given the opportunity to participate, being given the opportunity to share what gifts they bring, and to benefit fully and equally from the benefits, the glorious benefits, that we have in this province, one of the most fruitful and exciting and dramatic provinces in this country.

We are being invited by the world to pay attention to the issue of the indigenous people in a way that has not happened in the history of Canada up until this point. We have the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples inviting us to consider the truth that is being spoken around the world through the United Nations about indigenous people being neglected and oppressed, and it's time to invite them in fully as participants in our society.

We've had the round-table, and I had the privilege to go to Winnipeg to represent this province at the round-table on murdered and missing indigenous women and girls, where the stories are so dramatic and heartfelt and, frankly, just disgusting to have to hear. We're invited to hear a group of people who don't scold us and tell us that we are bad people but who say that their hearts are broken. They want those hearts to be healed, and they want us to be a part of that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I call on the hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today in response to the Speech from the Throne. Like many of my colleagues here, I was disappointed. I was really disappointed by the agenda that this government laid out on Tuesday. At a time when Albertans are looking for hope, the government promises nothing but more of the same, more risky policies that will hurt Albertans. They're hurting. There's more emphasis on ideology and a continued lack of practical, common-sense solutions, more of the government picking winners and losers, and more reasons for Albertans to fear that the government does not in fact have their back at all.

Albertans are worried, and it's no wonder. The Conference Board of Canada is forecasting that every other province in Canada will grow their economy this year while ours will shrink for the second year in a row. We haven't seen an economy like this since the 1980s, and it shows. The Conference Board is also reporting that consumer confidence hit a new low here just in February.

Our province is hurting, and while good governments recognize that in times of economic distress it must do no further harm, this government can't seem to help itself. It claims that it won't make things worse, but the agenda it has set certainly doesn't provide a road map for making things better. The looming threat of this economy is its effect on Alberta jobs. Since the NDP government was elected, 80,000 jobs have been lost – 80,000 people, Albertans – 26,000 of them just in January of this year alone. This government shirks responsibility for their part in this job hemorrhage and lays everything at the feet of low oil prices. Today we heard new messaging with low coal prices.

Well, of course, nobody blames the government for these low prices, but its response to those prices, its ideological policies and risky economic experiments, are indeed making the situation worse. The NDP climate policies, especially their $3 billion tax grab, are pushing investors away from our province. We have evidence of this from as recently as this week, when TransCanada announced it would cancel its contracts with three Alberta power plants. As a result, over 250 people will lose their jobs in the community of Hanna and face uncertain futures. The community will be devastated. This government has broken their trust and destroyed their job security.

In terms of electricity costs, the hon. Minister of Energy assured us that the impact of these cancelled contracts would be minimal, but today we heard from the former head of Alberta's electricity Balancing Pool that it could cost Alberta consumers an extra $500 million a year. I say this loudly so that you might hear it.

TransCanada isn't the only one on the run from Alberta. As my colleague from Battle River-Wainwright raised in this House earlier today, over 20 per cent of the town of Forestburg faces the same uncertain future because Enmax has refused to renew the Battle River power station's contract. Why? Because of the NDP job-killing carbon tax.

4:00

The cost to Albertans of the NDP government is clearly skyrocketing. These companies are being driven away as a direct result of the government's policies, and these jobs are at risk as a direct result of the risky, ideological agenda. And it's not just towns like Hanna and Forestburg that will be punished by this agenda. Families in my own riding of Airdrie and right across this province will feel the pain and not just in higher electricity costs because this tax won't only kill jobs; it will raise the price of consumer goods and cost the typical Alberta family an extra thousand dollars a year. This is before your additional power costs are factored in. This is at a time when people can least afford it, when tens of thousands of people are out of work. Shameful.

This government's approach to this jobs crisis, that it is helping to create, has only given Albertans more reason for concern. What's most shocking is that despite the fact that this jobs crisis is older than this 10-month-old government, they still haven't done a single thing to help Albertans. Not a single thing. You'd be fired. Its failed job subsidy program has created zero jobs. Not only that, but the government made a mistake even creating this program. With its $178 million price tag, it's just an example of government waste and ineffectiveness.

The Wildrose is listening to businesses. We've been talking to businesses right across this province. Businesses don't want the NDP's failed subsidy program. They want better business conditions. Alberta currently has the most expensive business tax in western Canada. This is a very simple Google search for you, very easy. We also have the lowest investor confidence right now. The Wildrose proposal to lower the small-business tax rate from 3 per cent down to 2 per cent would not only create a better climate for business investment and job creation, but it would send a message that this government is not the enemy of job creators, like you are now. But this government won't listen to common sense. Instead, they are being driven by their ideology and refusing to present viable solutions to Albertans.

This government would have us believe it is fighting for job creation with the first bill it introduced in this House. This bill is so vague. It proposes no concrete solutions, no specific programs, and no real path to job creation. In fact, it is a glorified three-page mandate letter telling the minister to do his existing job. This is just an insult to the tens of thousands of Albertans that are out of work right now. What's worse is that this minister has to tell us to wait five more weeks for any details because his government still can't put a budget together on time. Albertans are anxious, and they're frustrated, and this bill does nothing to reassure them. The government had a real chance to act in good faith for Albertans with this first bill of the session, a chance to regain some broken trust. Instead, it did make things worse by choosing their ideology over sound policy.

The Wildrose is ready to provide strong, common-sense leadership that stands up for Alberta. We are ready to stand in the gap left by this government's failure to put forward a real plan with a real solution for the job crisis situation. In the coming weeks the Wildrose will release a plan that does propose solutions such as reducing small-business taxes, getting out-of-work Albertans skills upgrades, giving some reasons for our energy sector to regain the confidence that the government is their partner, not their foe, specific solutions that will focus on helping Albertans get back to work.

The other thing Bill 1 intends to do is promote economic diversification. Without any details, this doesn't give anybody any confidence since usually this means the government is picking certain industries or businesses and gambling on them to be the next big thing. Governments who try this almost always fail, and we've seen it in this province before. Not only are the taxpayers left with the boondoggle, but the rest of the economy is discouraged because there's not a level playing field. Governments shouldn't be in the business of picking the economy's winners and losers. The loser almost always ends up being the taxpayer.

What about fighting for the economy we have already instead of trying to roll a boulder up the hill? This government talks about improving market access at home and abroad, but actions speak louder than words. To date this government has done nothing but act against the interests of our most important sector. Despite the Premier's claims that she wants pipelines, she's refused to support key projects like the Northern Gateway pipeline. Northern Gateway is currently being strangled by the federal government's plan to impose a tanker ban on B.C.'s north coast, a ban that will kill almost 1,500 jobs and the billions of dollars of revenue that the pipeline could have created for Alberta. What has the government done to stand up for these jobs? It has said and done nothing to oppose the tanker ban. Not only that, but when the B.C. government opposed the Trans Mountain expansion, this Premier shrugged it off.

Throughout the recent escalations in Energy East's struggle, the Premier seemed more interested in defending Quebec's decision than she did in standing up for Alberta. Energy East is a no-brainer for those who have eyes to see. Right now eastern Canada imports 86 per cent of its oil from foreign countries. More than 10 per cent of Quebec's oil comes from Saudi Arabia and more than 5 per cent of it comes from Nigeria. These are repressive regimes and no more climate friendly than you would think they were. But how is the NDP government making the case for Alberta pipelines? It tried to secure the social licence by announcing it will saddle our energy industry with a carbon tax that severely damages its competitiveness, but continuing opposition in B.C. and Quebec shows that that bid has clearly failed.

Now, the government is trying to convince Albertans that lip service to pipelines is enough, but we recently saw the Premier's real agenda last month when she secretly participated in a $10,000-a-plate fundraising event for an extreme antipipeline party. Cousins, I think. Instead of lobbying the federal government forcefully to kill the tanker ban and approve pipelines, she prefers to save her strength, asking the feds for handouts, and to focus her government on preparing to diversify the economy by picking winners and losers.

Well, I would note that Alberta's economy is more diversified today than it has ever been. Here's a history lesson. Pay attention. In 1985 the energy sector made up 36.1 per cent of Alberta's $66.8 billion GDP. By 2013 it made up only 24.6 per cent of our $331.9 billion GDP.

This diversity in our economy can be seen in other areas such as agriculture, to which this government's agenda barely gives a passing nod. After losing the trust of thousands of Albertans over the Bill 6 fiasco, this is unacceptable. It reveals just another area where the NDP government has failed to put forward a clear plan. Agriculture has been a way of life for many Albertans for over a hundred years, and it's currently sparing much of southern Alberta from feeling the pain of the economic downturn. Yet the farming and ranching families that have helped build our province are still receiving only begrudging concessions from this NDP government.

In fact, after we pushed this government relentlessly to amend its ill-conceived Bill 6, it is still trying to escape accountability to farmers by making consultation meetings extremely difficult to attend. It has scheduled these consultations right in the middle of one of the busiest seasons for farmers. The months of April and May are calving and planting months, when farmers work around the clock to invest in their livelihood for the year. Hardly an appropriate time to call them away from that important work. Hardly a good way to regain Albertans' trust.

This is not a good start to this session, and the NDP of past years would have recognized that. When he was in opposition, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood criticized the previous government for putting forward a throne speech that "would fail ordinary Albertans because it had no economic focus, no plan for real job creation." Well, things have come full circle. This NDP government's first basic throne speech makes the same mistakes it once despised in the previous government. Furthermore, this speech sends a message to Albertans that the NDP government would rather stick it's hand out to the federal government than do the actual work of producing solutions for Albertans.

I don't need to tell the House this: Albertans are proud, and Albertans are fiercely independent. But I will point out that yesterday's speech showed Albertans just how much this government betrays their deeply held values, refuses to stand up for Albertans. Have no fear; Wildrose is here. We will stand up for all Albertans. We are here.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Connolly: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'd like to thank the Member for Airdrie for her speech, but it has given me a number of questions. The member talks about social licence, homelessness, job losses, and a number of other things. However, her party has stated that they will not discuss social issues and that if – God help us – they ever become government, they will not legislate on social issues. So my question for the member is: if they will never legislate on social issues, how do they intend to deal with homelessness, jobs, ministries such as Human Services, Seniors and Housing, Culture and Tourism, every ministry that deals with social issues, including the Ministry of Finance, the Ministry of Health, the Ministry of Transportation? These are all social issues, and I have no idea how the Wildrose ever intends to govern if they will not legislate on social issues if they ever become government. So how will you legislate on these social issues when you've promised never to legislate on social issues?

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. Member for Airdrie wish to respond or make a comment?

Mrs. Pitt: No.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Go ahead.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It is certainly interesting to see the member across the way stand up and completely say many untrue statements.

What I would like to ask the member about today – and she touched on this a little bit in her response to the throne speech – is about how her constituents feel about the ethics and accountability of this government across from us. Now, why this applies to the throne speech is that the government has indicated in their throne speech that they will move forward to try to make things more democratic, to make things more ethical, and to do things better than the previous government. That's what they've said in their throne speech. The Member for Airdrie has discussed some of the concerns that she's hearing from her constituents in regard to this. Again – and this is a prime example – what we just saw was a government member step up and say stuff that is completely untrue, and that's disappointing.

But let's talk about some stuff that's going on with this government. Unfortunately, we have a government here that is under ethics investigations yet again for donation problems, and that is the same . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I need to remind you that we can't discuss a matter that's currently under investigation by the Ethics Commissioner.

Mr. Nixon: So can I get some clarification on that, Madam Speaker? I can't discuss the current ethics investigation that the government is under, but I can discuss the ones that were done. I'll go there, then, Madam Speaker.

We have a government that's already had to cancel previous fundraisers because they did the same actions, that they railed against, as the other government. We have a Premier – the ethics investigation aside – who's travelling to eastern Canada, raising money for a party that works . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Once again I will remind you that this is a matter under investigation by the Ethics Commissioner and cannot be dealt with.

Mr. Nixon: Okay. Thanks, Madam Speaker. How about this? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler brought forward a very reasonable bill in the last sitting, something that was very similar to what the NDP had asked for as well when they were in opposition. This government killed that bill instead of allowing it to go forward. So they stand here and they say, "Hey, we're going to do things different," and they do exactly what they did in the past.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation on a point of order.

Point of Order Question-and-comment Period

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. According to section 29(2)(a) in the standing orders it says:

Subject to clause (b), following each speech on the items in debate referred to in suborder (1), a period not exceeding 5 minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses to each Member's questions and comments.

So the questions or the comments must be relevant to the speech of the previous member, not to the response that was made under 29(2)(a) by another member.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, did you wish to respond to that point of order?

Mr. Hanson: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think that we're approaching the 4:30 hour, and I think that after the functions of this week, tempers are getting a little bit to the point where a member opposite actually flipped the bird over to our side. Thank you very much. We noticed that. [interjections] My eyes are pretty good.

I'll just end with that response. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I would urge all members to respect the traditions of this House and to treat each other with respect while we're in this Chamber.

Yes, I believe the point of order is valid. I was about to remind the hon. member that it needed to be in response to the Member for Airdrie's comments.

You still have a little bit of time if you want to continue.

Debate Continued

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In response, then, to the Member for Airdrie, who brought up very clearly in her speech concerns that she . . .

The Deputy Speaker: We have another point of order. The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Point of Order Gestures

Mr. Connolly: Sorry. I would just like to clarify that I did not flip the other side off. I made a gesture such as this because I was angry. However, I did not flip you off. If you did perceive it as that, I do apologize. That was not my intention. I was frustrated. I just tried to throw my hand up in the air as a signal of frustration, and I did not try to flip you off.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. To the Member for Airdrie, who did discuss her concerns about the specific comments about accountability and democratic performance in the throne speech: I'll just ask her how her constituents feel this government is doing so far on that file.

Mrs. Pitt: I would love to speak about and address to this House how my constituents are responding to the current climate in which they find themselves. I have people on a daily basis, when I'm in my constituency, that meet with me. They come in with their resumés, and these are extremely well-qualified people. These are pretty heavy taxpayers. They haven't worked in a year. They can't find work. Nobody will hire them. There's nobody that is willing to help.

Constituents in Airdrie, very few that voted for the NDP government, thought: "Oh, man. This is great. We might – we might – have an adequate health care system in our constituency." We don't see it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am honoured and humbled to be speaking to you today in response to the Speech from the Throne. I first ask your indulgence to thank some key individuals and groups for providing me with the support to be able to make this speech today. First and foremost, I must thank my family. My wife, Sarah, has endured two elections and many days of being a single parent to our beautiful and brilliant children, Mehna and Kieran. She is not only the Rock of Gibraltar; she is an amazing partner and mother who has taught me the value of looking beyond the status quo and outside of one's comfort zone for wisdom and knowledge. And she's willing to endure a third election.

I have a brief story about how I knew that I had met my life partner in Sarah. We were riding the C-Train home from work one evening when a young man wearing a turban was being verbally abused by another passenger. Yes, this still happens, Madam Speaker. Sarah confronted the abuser, delivering a lesson in ethnic diversity, tolerance, compassion, inclusion, and ultimately in humility. This is not the only time that Sarah has inserted herself into a situation such as this, but it was at this moment that I knew I had met the one.

I would like to thank my mother, Suzanne, who has always been there when we needed her and who taught us that strength is found in the family and about the value and importance of having a strong moral centre, which includes looking out for those less fortunate, not that we were of any financial status. I also want to congratulate my mother on her recent retirement from Canada Post. Now she lives in cottage country in Ontario.

My father, Thomas, who passed away far too early, was the epitome of hard work, and he taught me some amazing values that I hold today and will pass on to my children. I asked my mother how they were able to afford putting my brother and me through all the sports that we played growing up and into our late teens. You know, sometimes you don't know these stories until you ask. She said that they made many sacrifices and that there were times when my father had to work two jobs, unbeknownst to us. It's a shame that he was not able to see me graduate from university and see the important role I have as MLA for Calgary-Klein. He would have been very proud.

I also want to acknowledge my brother Chris, who has been my little brother all his life. While I can only hope I paved a good path for him growing up, I hope he knows that his friendship is immeasurable to me today. I'd also like to thank my in-laws, Cynthia and Chanta Somasundaram, who have been very supportive to me and my family. Cynthia is a teacher in Singapore, and Chanta was an oil and gas engineer in Calgary for many years. Sadly, we lost Chanta this past August, and he is greatly missed.

Of course, Madam Speaker, I want to offer an enduring thank you to the constituents of Calgary-Klein, who supported me and put their trust in me to represent them as their MLA. Calgary-Klein includes the dynamic communities of Thorncliffe, Greenview, North Haven, Highwood, Highland Park, Collingwood, Cambrian Heights, Rosemont, Mount Pleasant, Tuxedo Park, Winston Heights, and, of course, my own community of Capitol Hill.

I used to joke that after being impacted by the floods of 2013, when we lived in Erlton, we were looking to move to a community, any community, that had the name "hill" in it. While this is only partially a joke, we were very pleased to move to this amazing community of Capitol Hill. Capitol Hill has Campus Pre-school, which is the oldest co-operative preschool in Calgary. My daughter also attends there, and my son will attend there as well. This preschool was started by a group of female graduate students at the U of C 50 years ago this year, as a matter of fact, as a means of providing affordable daycare while they attended school. Campus Pre-school continues to operate much the same way that it did 50 years ago, where all the parents rotate volunteering to keep costs down. I will be volunteering there again this Friday myself.

Of course, in Calgary-Klein we have one of Calgary's largest inner-city parks, Confederation park, which my family can access right at the end of our street. It's quite wonderful.

These great communities have very active community associations from which I've learned a great deal about the strengths and challenges of these communities as well as what can be accomplished when people work together. One thing I can say about these communities is that I've never seen them resort to NIMBYism. When new projects are presented, they are thoughtful about what it means, good or bad, and they are always there to help with advice on these matters.

Calgary-Klein is a diverse constituency that starts in the south along 16th Avenue. It's very urban, with many young families in older communities and residential areas living in new infill side by side with one-room bungalows that have residents that have lived there for 50-plus years. It extends north to the more spread out suburban areas, and it also includes several industrial parks that employ many Calgarians without them having to travel to the outer industrial areas. There is a great diversity in income levels, ethnicity, and backgrounds, from long-time residents to new Canadians, but to attend an event in any of these communities is to witness the strength of the collective.

Madam Speaker, the constituency of Calgary-Klein has seen many changes to its electoral boundaries as the city of Calgary has grown. It is steeped in history, and it's had many significant representatives in its boundaries and significant changes in government representation. Some notable individuals include Ernest Manning, a Social Credit Premier who is still distinguished as being the longest serving Premier as well as the youngest Premier in Alberta's history, at the age of 34, not much older than several of this government's caucus. Perhaps we have a future Premier among some of our younger caucus members.

An Hon. Member: For sure.

Mr. Coolahan: For sure.

Liberal Leader of the Official Opposition and eventual Lieutenant Governor of Alberta Grant MacEwan also held this seat between 1955 and 1959. There has also been a Dominion Labour Party MLA, Fred White, between 1921 and 1935 and Aylmer Liesemer, who was a Co-operative Commonwealth Federation MLA from 1944 to 1952. Madam Speaker, there have also been a few Progressive Conservative MLAs in this riding since 1971. In fact, it was redistributed and renamed in 2012 after former Premier Klein, which provides me with great delight when I say that I am the first NDP MLA to represent the great constituency of Calgary-Klein.

While the constituents of Calgary-Klein are diverse and resilient and have seen an economic downturn before, what they haven't seen, Madam Speaker, and something I am proud to be a part of is a government that is working through this difficult downturn in the economy in a way that has the least amount of impact on Albertans in need of support right now. This means not cutting front-line services and not reducing jobs that cripple family incomes and reduce their spending capacity at our local businesses and restaurants. Rather, we ask corporations and the wealthy, who have had – and many acknowledge this – many years in which they haven't paid the same as their counterparts in other provinces.

At the same time, Madam Speaker, our government is working to strengthen Alberta's economy, which will help us weather future economic shocks due to sharp drops in oil prices. We are doing this by encouraging investment in Alberta, not only in the oil sector but in other areas that this province has a competitive advantage in such as agriculture, forestry, and tourism and in other areas where we can build new and dynamic industries.

The Alberta petrochemicals diversification program, that was introduced a few weeks ago, is a great initiative to what many have seen as a problem that perpetuates economic slumps in Alberta's oil sands, and that is that we rely too much on the raw materials for our source of revenue. Madam Speaker, the real money is always in the finished product. We only have to look to the west at British Columbia's forest industry and its many years of shipping raw materials and the incredible negative impact that this played on that industry. The Alberta petrochemicals diversification program will also help with employing those currently employed in the coal industry as the province begins to wean itself away from this form of energy.

Madam Speaker, I believe that we are looking down the road to a new and prosperous future in Alberta's most important sector. I believe that this government is taking Alberta in the direction to truly have the diversified economy that we've always talked about but have never seen come to fruition. I've had several companies in my office over the last year excited to become part of these new initiatives and part of the new energy sector, companies that are not now in the generation business but see the opportunity to diversify their own portfolios and increase the bottom line of their businesses.

Part of this diversity strategy and bolstering the oil sands through the building of future pipelines is to ensure that our products are seen by the rest of the world as produced in a responsible manner. To this end, Madam Speaker, our climate strategy will help put us back on the map as not only a resource-rich province but a leader in thoughtful energy resources that will not only protect the environment for future generations but also prolong the production capacity of the oil sands to keep Alberta as a world leader in resource extraction.

In addition, Madam Speaker, this government has committed to investing $34 billion into the capital plan to help build the roads, schools, and other infrastructure that this province needs. This will not only help alleviate the infrastructure deficit that we have, but it will also help to put Albertans back to work while we get on with getting the oil sands back on track with pipelines built and getting our oil to tidewater and new markets.

Madam Speaker, the risky economic experiments are over. The experiment that suggests tax breaks to wealthy corporations and individuals will somehow manifest in the creation of economic and social equality, that experiment has failed, and it's time to move on. There has been too much emphasis on this aspect over the last 30 years, which has created a vacuum for those not fortunate enough to work in these high-paying industries.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) the Assembly stands adjourned till Monday at 1:30.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, March 14, 2016

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us reflect. Hon. members, let us be reminded of the great privilege it is to be a servant of the public and the great responsibility that it places upon us. As you will hear in a few minutes, today is Commonwealth Day, and this year's theme is An Inclusive Commonwealth. Let us, each of us, in our own way reflect on this message and on our responsibility to search for ways to increase the inclusivity of our very own institution and indeed all persons across our wonderful province. Hon. members, let us continue to keep that thought in our minds.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark. I would invite all of you to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Commonwealth Day

The Speaker: Hon. members, today is in fact Commonwealth Day, and throughout the world our fellow Commonwealth nations will be celebrating with a special message given by Her Majesty the Queen. This year's theme is An Inclusive Commonwealth. Let us use this day to promote the values of tolerance, respect, and understanding amongst the Commonwealth's 2.1 billion citizens. Please note that this message from Her Majesty has been placed on each of your desks for review and for sharing with your constituents.

In honour of today I am pleased to have some members from the Royal Commonwealth Society seated in my gallery to recognize Commonwealth Day. I would ask that our guests rise as I call their names: Lieutenant Commander (Retired) Roy Busby, Dr. John Dugan, Miss Brittany Phillpotts, Mr. Gordon Smith, and Mr. Joe Zasada. Could we give our guests a welcome and appreciation.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly students from Holy Spirit school in my riding. I was delighted to go to the school and present them with a provincial flag and to learn of their original school song. The students are with teachers Kathy Knox, Jenna Bishop, Pat Stanbridge, Cathy Hopcraft, and also two student teachers. I'm delighted to see the student teachers learning their craft so they can become great teachers in the future. The student teachers are Mary Gillis and Baylee Frissell. Would you please stand up so that the Assembly can give you the customary welcome of the House.

The Speaker: I'd like to compliment the three or four ministers who have arrived late that they didn't walk between the Speaker and the person who was speaking from the floor. Let that serve as an example for everyone.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you the students from Muriel Martin school today. They're joined by Mrs. Jody Bialowas and Mrs. Susanne Ambrose as well as Mrs. Heather Kerschbaumer. If they would please rise and accept the warm legislative greeting.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three guests visiting from British Columbia: Norah Miner; her 12-year-old son, Andrew Lirag, and nine-year-old daughter, Isabella Lirag. They're here to learn about politics, to observe the political process, and hear something about the law. I would like to ask them to rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. It's my honour first to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two of the founders of SAFQEY, or Safe Accommodations for Queer Edmonton Youth, Carla Segura and Sam Leibel. Carla works with Homeward Trust and the Poundmaker's Lodge. Sam is a social worker with the Alberta government. Together they have partnered with Boyle Street Community Services to secure housing for SAFQEY that will be used to provide shelter and much-needed specialized supports for Edmonton's sexual and gender minority youth. I'll be honoured to speak more of this work in a member's statement later today.

Also here today are five students from the CCI-LEX, Cultural Connections Institute, which teaches English language classes to temporary and permanent residents of Canada. With us here today: Angel Vivas, a petroleum engineer from Venezuela; Weilan Wang, an electrical engineer from China; HaJung Kim, a business owner from South Korea; Praneet McCoy from Thailand, the owner of Ruamit Thai restaurant in Sherwood Park; and Sonal Modi from India. They join us here today with their instructor, Ellen Campbell.

I invite them as well as Carla and Sam to stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a wonderful organization from my riding of Edmonton-Decore, the CapitalCare Foundation. My riding of Edmonton-Decore is home to two CapitalCare centres, CapitalCare Dickinsfield and CapitalCare McConnell Place North. Dickinsfield centre has 275 long-term care beds and offers specialized programs for those suffering with dementia, and for young adults who require long-term care McConnell Place North provides 36 supportive living spaces for individuals with dementia. I visited both of these centres and look forward to spending more time with the wonderful residents in the near future. Visiting us today are Dave Jamieson, Sherry Schaefer, Francine Drisner, and Maureen Flynn. I would ask that they now please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and to the House the student group Alberta Students' Executive Council, here in Edmonton to advocate on behalf of fellow students. They've taken time from their busy lives as scholars and executives to speak with MLAs on issues affecting postsecondary students: ASEC Chair Kristen George; Vice-chair Joshua Bettle; Finance Officer Katie DeRuyck; Executive Director Teresa Currie; vice-president internal for Concordia Students' Association, Kelsea Gillespie; VP academic for SAIT Students' Association, Kimmi Nguyen; vice-president of operations for the students' association at Red Deer College, Luke Neilson; Advocacy Co-ordinator Cameron Dykstra; and from the mental health initiative project, which I've had some significant exposure to and been impressed by, Aala Abdullahi. They're standing. Please give them the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other members who have a guest that they would wish to introduce?

I see some more students here today. One of the privileges of being in this House, that I know we all share, is the opportunity to see people from literally around the world who join us here. It's really quite our privilege.

Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to rise to introduce to you and through you two guests who are sitting in the members' gallery. Jason Silvert has brought his father, who is visiting from Ontario, here to visit us and see the proceedings in this House. Jason is a constituent of mine, and it's great to see him along with his father, who've come to witness the proceedings today. I wish them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Victim Services

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the overwhelming aftermath of crime or tragedy in Alberta people can access support, information, and referral services through our network of victims' services societies. I am proud to say that the first RCMP victims' services society was formed in my constituency of Stony Plain to serve the entire region in 1986. Last year the local unit assisted over 2,600 people in our communities. Trained volunteers, called advocates, provide services for those in need by working with RCMP and various community agencies. They assist victims by helping them to lessen the effect of immediate crisis.

We often think of crime or tragedy as something that happens to other people, but in fact anyone can be a victim of crime. It is a daunting and traumatic event that can cause physical, emotional, and cognitive difficulties.

It is a fact that early intervention always reduces the long-term effects of trauma suffered. Victims' services intervention correlates to victims experiencing increased confidence when dealing with the RCMP.

There is much to be proud of in this made-in-Alberta solution; however, the needs and challenges are growing, and funding resources are limited. An incredible amount of valuable volunteer hours are contributed to make victims' services a success. While the number of crimes has risen from over 58,000 files in 2008-09 to a staggering 71,000 files in 2013-14, funding has been a continual challenge.

I am thankful to see how local communities have come together repeatedly to raise funds for this important issue. It requires dedication and a tremendous amount of time and resources.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In February Alberta's unemployment rate jumped to 7.9 per cent, the highest it's been in 20 years. Folks in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills fully understand what's required in these difficult times. When the statistics turn against us, we fight back, finding strength in our numbers. We rely on our friends, our family, our neighbours to help us weather the storm. Our province's greatest strength has always been Albertans. Our faith in one another is what gives us the stability to persevere through any crisis.

Over the past few months I've been gathering input from constituents, including seniors who have seen their fair share of economic downturns. Here's some advice they've shared with me. One says: times are tough, but we can't lose sight of the big picture; spending wildly is not the solution; we need to focus on upgrading skills and helping those who've lost their jobs and can't pay their mortgage; we can't spend ourselves rich. An elderly couple, aged 86 and 90, said this: we know what it is to live within our means, and we're not in favour of going into large debts. A third says: we can't afford tax increases; get us working, and we'll support the province. The last one has struck a chord with me personally because I think it illustrates a sentiment felt right across the province: given the freedoms to do what we do best, Albertans trust each other to overcome these hardships; we need a government to demonstrate some faith in us, put policies in place that allow us to succeed.

Mr. Speaker, it's time for this government to step back from their ideological policies and start showing some faith in Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

The Right People

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to share a little story right now that I like to call The Right People. It's a story of the pitfalls that one can face when they don't associate with the right people or have the benefit of the right ideas.

Now we're beginning to get an idea of who the right people are. They raise a ruckus at the idea of coming in to work at 9 a.m., not because they're lazy but because they have no computer and support staff. The right people know that the best way to help an abused woman get out of a lease is to add the swearing of a statutory declaration to their burdens. They have a limitless energy for outrage, pointing out all manner of tax dollars wasted, yet they filibuster with glee.

When their bills and motions are rejected, they bring them back over and over. Now we see that the right people are prepared to introduce Bill 201, likely to be uniquely known as Yet Another Recall Act, and they're doing it for the third time in a row. So while Alberta is dealing with a serious economic crisis, low commodity prices, increasing debt, and unemployment, the right people are intent on making us relive a political issue that was dealt with in the 1930s by the Social Credit Party.

The right people can help you decide who to talk to and who not to talk to, like: for heaven's sake, do not talk to B-list reporters; and for heaven's sake, do not articulate your position on social issues. In fact, push them way, way down the list, past 100, so the public cannot absorb just how unpalatable they actually are. We are so lucky in this House to know the right people, who proudly state that they wouldn't legislate on social issues because the right people don't need to protect the vulnerable; they don't need to stand up for parents or start their workday at a reasonable hour. What kind of province would we be, Mr. Speaker, if we did things like that?

The Speaker: Government House Leader, I understand that you have a point of order.

Point of Order Interrupting Members' Statements

Mr. Mason: I do have a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It is very clear in the rules of this place that members' statements are supposed to be delivered without interruption by other members. The prolonged clapping from the right people over there was a clear violation of that rule, and in future I would ask that people be allowed to give their members' statements without being interrupted by other members.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to speak to the point of order. I think you're likely to find that there's a fairly long tradition of not calling points of order during members' statements as well, but since we're here, whether it was the clapping or the laughing, I'm not really sure which one it was that was interrupting the member's statement. But here we are at a matter of debate – at a matter of debate – and this is exactly the challenge with calling points of order during members' statements.

The Speaker: Both sides' points are well taken. I'll deal with this matter later. I have a feeling that there may not be a simple answer. The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Alberta Sports Teams Accomplishments

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to join all Albertans in marking the remarkable achievement of three Alberta sports teams.

The 2016 Scotties Tournament of Hearts was a very successful event hosted by the city of Grande Prairie, and it energized the entire province and all of Canada. On February 28, at Revolution Place in Grande Prairie, Chelsea Carey used her final stone to draw to the four-foot to win the Canadian women's curling championship. Chelsea was joined by Amy Nixon, Jocelyn Peterman, and Laine Peters. They train at the curling centre of excellence here at the Saville centre at the University of Alberta. They will be representing Canada at the world women's curling championship from March 19 to 27 in Swift Current.

Yesterday, by winning the 2016 Canadian men's curling championship, the Brier, Alberta won its 27th title, tying Manitoba for the most by any province. It was also the third championship for Kevin Koe, who won in 2010 and 2014. Joining Koe were Marc Kennedy, Brent Laing, and Ben Hebert. This is a new team, but it gelled at the right time, with coolness, consistency, and tremendous shot-making. They will now represent Canada at the world championship in Switzerland in early April.

Thirdly, in a major victory by the underdog, the Calgary Inferno overwhelmed Les Canadiennes de Montreal to become champions of the Canadian Women's Hockey League. Led by five-time Olympian Hayley Wickenheiser, the Inferno captured their first-ever Clarkson Cup. Many of its players will now go on to represent Canada at the world championships.

All of Alberta is extremely proud of the accomplishments of these teams and will be intently following their progress at the world championships.

Another Canadian curling championship is happening this coming weekend in Canmore and Banff. The Canadian Medical Bonspiel is attended by curling doctors from across Canada, including my team. You're all welcome to attend and wish us good luck as we follow in the footsteps of Carey and Koe.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Policies

Mr. Jean: For months the Wildrose has been pleading with the NDP to do no further harm. At a time of economic uncertainty that should be any government's top guiding principle. Today 15 employer organizations representing thousands of job creators in Alberta wrote to the Premier warning her of the effects of her policies. "The rapid deployment of... ambitious government policies... have further undermined business confidence and competitiveness." These job creators are simply asking for a moratorium on further job-killing policies from this government. Will the Premier heed this warning?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms. Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin by saying that there will not be a moratorium on governance in this province. What we will do, however, is to work with stakeholders and Albertans across the province. Now, when we were elected, we asked the companies that benefited the most from economic growth who continue to be profitable to pay just a little bit more and the same in the case of wealthy Albertans. Most Albertans still support that. Going forward, we have a number of different plans to work with business leaders, to grow the economy, and to create jobs, and we look forward to meeting with the folks just mentioned to talk about that.

Mr. Jean: Home and road builders, restaurateurs, small-business owners, steelworkers, landscapers, and oil well contractors: all are asking the Premier to please just stop, stop with the ideological agenda and economic experiments, stop with the tax hikes. Now is simply not the time for more red tape and regulation, and it's not the time for a $3 billion slush fund under the guise of a carbon tax. This advice is not just coming from Wildrose now; it's coming from thousands of businesses who want to create jobs and grow the economy for the benefit of all Albertans. Why won't the Premier just take their advice and stop with bad, ideological policies?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, we're exceptionally proud of our climate change leadership plan, and we are looking forward to moving forward with it because not only does it reflect the growing concern of all Canadians about our need to act on climate change and to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, but it will actually serve to be an incredible stimulus for economic diversification in Alberta. So I'm looking forward to moving forward on it. I think it's actually good governance, and I know there are many, many people in the business world who agree with me.

Mr. Jean: I haven't met any.

What this letter makes quite clear is that while the Premier has spent precious time fund raising for the anti-Alberta Ontario NDP, she isn't meeting with groups that employ hundreds of thousands of Albertans. Wildrose has called for a job summit to bring leaders from business, nonprofit, and charitable sectors to the table with legislators and government to share ideas on how to get Albertans working again. All that this would cost the Premier is some of her precious time. Will the Premier spare just a few hours to meet with Alberta's job creators and launch a job summit today to actually listen to what Albertans have to say?

Ms Notley: Well, let me just begin, Mr. Speaker. I need to take issue with one point made by the Leader of the Official Opposition. I am absolutely sure that he has met with business leaders that support our climate leadership plan because I know who they are and I know they talk to him, too. So that's simply not true.

As far as meeting with people about where we're going forward and consulting with them in terms of our job-creation plan, that's absolutely what we will be doing. The Minister of Finance and I will be consulting with Albertans over the next few weeks, and I look forward to meeting with these folks to hear about their ideas.

Public Service Compensation

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, for months Wildrose has been recommending that the Premier negotiate a wage freeze with public-sector workers. The media has asked the Premier about such a freeze. She always responds that there are contracts in place, so she can't freeze wages unilaterally. That's true, but there are also new contracts that are currently under negotiation. We have learned that AHS has been offering raises to its employees for 2016 and 2017. Premier, is it the NDP's policy to offer raises for this year and next year on all new public-sector labour contracts?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I think the member opposite is a little bit confused. The agreement that they are referring to is the continuation of negotiations that were begun by the previous government, so we are somewhat bound by those. But let me be very clear. Going forward, that set of negotiations will not form the pattern for new negotiations. Beyond that, as I've said before, I will not negotiate, respectfully, with our employees in public or in the media. I will save that for the bargaining table.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, a little over three weeks ago AHS went into arbitration with local 58 of AUPE. AHS is actually offering three years of raises. Since the government is offering raises, the arbitrator can't very well come back with a wage freeze offer. Meanwhile across the private sector in Alberta pay cuts of 10 and 20 per cent are not unheard of. Can the Premier explain why her government is actually offering up raises when private-sector workers are taking massive pay cuts if they're lucky enough to keep their jobs?

Ms Notley: As I said previously, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite doesn't quite understand what he's talking about. This is the continuation of negotiations that began well over a year ago, probably more than a year and a half ago, and it's, hopefully, the completion of those negotiations. We are bound by the positions that were taken, to some extent, at that point. Beyond that, I'm not going to bargain in this House with our employees because that's not respectful. We will, however, take an exceptionally prudent approach going forward. These negotiations do not in any way, shape, or form form the pattern for future negotiations going forward.

Mr. Jean: In Edmonton CapitalCare nurses just got a 3 per cent raise while the government gave provincial judges a raise of over 2 per cent. For the first time in a generation Alberta is paying its bills on a credit card, yet the government is offering raises in labour negotiations. Thousands of Albertans are without work, worried about their EI running out. Those who still have a job have offered to take a pay cut to keep that job. Meanwhile this government is actually offering raises. What Albertans want to know is: how can this Premier be so out of touch with Albertans?

Ms Notley: Again, Mr. Speaker, the member across the way is not super well informed on this issue. First of all, this government will not break contracts that are already in place.

The second thing. With respect to the judges let's be very clear. Those recommendations came from a judicial committee over which this government has no discretion. We followed those recommendations, and that's what governments do.

Thirdly, going forward, it is not our view that we create jobs by firing people. It is not our view that we create jobs by publicly beating up on our old employees. It is not our view that we're going to raise the price of oil by . . .

Rural Health Care

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, every day this government fearmongers about opposition plans for public services. In fact, listen; just a few days ago the NDP used this fear-and-smear campaign in a fundraising e-mail. The facts are that the only people here who are laying off nurses is this NDP government. They just laid off as many as three dozen nurses in Sundre. To the Premier: why is her government shutting down long-term care beds and laying off nurses in Sundre?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The opposition continues to struggle with the facts. They're still trying to scare people about what we're doing. The government has actually looked at the 15 beds that were in Sundre, and we're replacing them with 40 new beds and a brand new facility. So for the benefit of the opposition Finance critic and the Leader of the Official Opposition, 40 beds is 266 per cent of 15 beds.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, this government is bloated; AHS is even worse. It has managers managing managers managing other managers. So what is the NDP's solution? Do they target the waste? No, they don't. They cut long-term care beds and replace them with lesser levels of care, and then they say that they are full levels of care, and then they lay off nurses. So on one side this government is offering raises to union, and on the other side they're laying off front-line nurses. Is the Premier closing long-term care beds and laying off nurses so that she can afford to give all the other public-sector workers raises?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm really proud of the fact that we're working to make sure that we get the right care in the right place by the right provider. Certainly, when we're looking at some of the demographics that are in the community, we want to make sure that we have dementia beds, we want to make sure that we have the right levels of support, and I think that that's responsible from a level of government.

The opposition still wants to have it both ways by making empty promises to seniors and midwives while boasting about massive cuts in the first set of questions, reckless cuts that would make our public health care system very – that we would not be able to recover from. So the opposition can indulge in fact-free attacks, but the truth is that more beds are going to be in Sundre, and we're moving forward on more beds across Alberta as well.

The Speaker: Could I again underline to both sides of the House: please direct your comments through the Speaker.

I believe we're at the second supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, it actually gets much worse. When AHS told Sundre that they were shutting down half the beds in the hospital and laying off up to three dozen nurses, they wouldn't actually confirm that the Sundre hospital would even stay open. They didn't want to talk about it. Well, Albertans expect this government to actually tell them about their plans. Will the Premier assure Albertans today that this government isn't planning to lay off nurses and shut down hospitals right across rural Alberta?

The Speaker: Hon. member, again I would ask both sides of the House: please, through the Speaker.

The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and for the opportunity to talk about health care, which, of course, is one of the big reasons why the Official Opposition wasn't elected in the last election. Albertans want a government that can make sure that they have the right care in the right place at the right time by the right provider. Of course, in some communities that's a hospital, and we're really proud to have those hospitals. In other communities we want to make sure that we've got midwives and nurse practitioners and family care centres, so that's exactly what we're doing. We'll continue to have these conversations very publicly with Albertans and with members of the Official Opposition as well.

The Speaker: Fourth major question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you. I'd love another question.

The Speaker: My apologies. The leader of the third party.

Linear Property Assessment and Taxation

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have heard that changes to the linear assessment may be coming as part of the MGA review. Both the AAMD and C and the AUMA have provided recommendations to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. To the minister: given that the minister has told the AAMD and C she will share information on the linear assessment review this week, will the minister tell Albertans now in this House what exactly she plans to change with linear assessment?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, being from rural Alberta myself, I understand the challenges that rural communities face. As this province grows, it is very important to recognize that our communities transcend municipal boundaries. I know that many districts and counties rely on linear tax as a significant source of revenue, so we are approaching this issue with one question in mind, how best to ensure that rural Albertans receive the support that they need.

Mr. McIver: Well, it sounds like we're still going to be short information, so I'll try again, Mr. Speaker. Given that the AAMD and C and the AUMA have both said what they want done or not done with linear assessment, is the minister aware of which municipalities benefit most and least from linear assessment, how much they're receiving, and will you help municipalities that are negatively affected by your decisions?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, this is a complex question, and we've been doing a thorough analysis, including looking at the information that both the AUMA and the AAMD and C have provided as we see them as incredibly valuable partners. I have stated very publicly that we will not be funnelling linear assessment dollars to Calgary, Edmonton, or any other city. We certainly are examining what the best assessment structure is that will work the very best for rural Albertans.

Mr. McIver: I didn't get my question answered, but I got a little bit of actual information, and for this I'm grateful. I have with me the AAMD and C recommendations and the AUMA recommendations on linear assessment, which I will table later today, Mr. Speaker. To the minister: when considering how you will resolve this difference in opinion, will you (a) disappoint the AUMA, (b) disappoint the AAMD and C, or (c) disappoint both, and how?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I value the well-being of our rural residents here in this province. Like other rural Albertans, I am concerned about the sustainability of our municipalities. The decision that we make will ensure the health and well-being of the various rural regions in this province, and I look forward to sharing that information relatively soon with the members of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. Again, would you direct your comments through the Speaker.

Dr. Swann: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

Income Support Program Access

Dr. Swann: Unemployment in Alberta is the highest in 20 years. In response this government has made repeated requests to the federal Liberal government to make changes to EI so Albertans can make ends meet. Here in Alberta the responsibility for helping those with income needs falls to Alberta Works. Unfortunately, those needing access to this vital service are being turned away in droves, not because they don't qualify but because of apparent understaffing. To the minister: why is it that increasing numbers of Albertans needing income support can't get the help they need?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. We have seen an unprecedented increase in the demand for Alberta Works services in the past six to eight months, and we are absolutely committed to making sure that when Albertans fall on tough times, we are there and we provide the necessary services. We are taking immediate steps to deal with this situation.

Dr. Swann: So what exactly are you doing to improve access?

Mr. Sabir: That was the question I was waiting for. We have taken three, four steps that have helped us improve the situation. The situation was particularly concerning in Calgary and Edmonton, so what we have done is that we have made our helpline available 24 hours a day, we have reassigned staff from other regions where we have capacity to the Calgary and Edmonton regions to deal with the lineups and capacity issues, and we have also increased the timing of Alberta Works offices so the staff has more time to clock.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, is this government looking at the earned income and allowing more earned income because of the straitened circumstances that people are in before you get cutbacks in EI? Have you examined that question, that earned income can be left in the hands of those who need it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to EI we are pursuing that with our federal government, and the Premier has talked about it with the federal government. On that note, I want to mention here that there was a motion moved by the federal NDP in the House of Commons that was watered down by the Liberal government and their Conservative fellows in the federal government. We are still pursuing EI, and we will make sure that we provide Albertans all needed support when they need it and where they need it.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Royalty Framework

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many in my area of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville are reliant on the oil and gas sector for their livelihoods, both in Alberta's Industrial Heartland and further in the province, and the economic downturn has them worried about their futures and their families. I heard from countless folks involved in the industry who are nervous about the royalty review and how this would impact their jobs. To the Energy minister: what has been the reaction from Albertans to the royalty review report?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. So far I'm very pleased with the reaction from all Albertans, including industry and Albertans themselves. They see our new framework as a means to ensure transparency, certainty, competitiveness for our industry as we move forward. On Friday we got a big vote of confidence with the announcement of $2 billion worth of investments from Imperial Oil in Cold Lake. This announcement certainly is a sign that our government is creating the certainty that industry needs to make these investment decisions.

The Speaker: I'll underline again that, particularly, I had difficulty hearing it with the clapping.

First supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that at the end of the day Albertans are the resource owners of our oil and gas and given that many expected a larger overhaul of our royalty system, to the Energy minister: what new benefits can Albertans expect to see from the new royalty system?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, our new royalty framework responds to the pain and uncertainty that workers and families are feeling across this province. The opposition would have us believe that the sky is falling if we even dare to look at the royalties on these important resources. The do-nothing approach has kept royalties stuck in the past, and we need to be ready for the future as we move forward. Albertans can count on this government to take a hands-on approach to modernizing our royalty framework and to bring in investment for jobs and create new projects.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the sharp decline in the price of oil and given that many companies in the oil and gas sector were worried about how changes to the royalty system would affect their bottom line, again to the same minister: what are the benefits to industry with the new royalty system?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, our new royalty framework recognizes the realities of today's economy. The framework is designed to encourage more investment such as we saw last Friday from Imperial Oil, $2 billion. We will incent better management of costs, and the industry will remain efficient and competitive moving forward. We'll extend drilling incentives that were scheduled to expire into the new process, and we will act on opportunities to diversify our energy industry.

Long-term Care in Sundre

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, it has taken less than a year for the NDP government to turn its back on front-line services. In my constituency of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre locals received the worst possible news when AHS dropped the hammer on closing down half of the Sundre hospital. This closure will result in as many as 36 front-line health care workers losing their jobs and residents being forced out of their community in the later years of their life or when they are most vulnerable. To the Minister of Health: how can you campaign on not laying off front-line workers and then sign off on closing half of the Sundre hospital?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member, for directing your comments through the Speaker.

The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said in a previous answer, we're actually looking at the 15 beds that were auxiliary hospital beds in the hospital and increasing them to 40 beds. It will be a slightly different level of care, but it will be the right level of care for the citizens who are living in them. We're working to make sure that we've got the right care in the right place at the right time for the citizens who need it. Of course, we're going to make sure that there are opportunities for all 15 individuals to stay in the community should they choose to because we know that's really important to them and it's important to us as a government.

Mr. Nixon: Perhaps it's time to brief the minister on her own department. Given the fact that the long-term care beds in the Sundre hospital require RNs and given that the lodge in Sundre's highest available level of care is nowhere close to long-term, the numbers don't add up, and seniors that are most vulnerable will be displaced, and given the fact that the lodge is already full and there is a waiting list, how can the Minister of Health say with a straight face that she is not displacing our seniors as well as our most vulnerable and putting our front-line nurses out of work?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question and for the opportunity to inform the member a little bit more about the project in his own riding, which is not about the lodge. It's about a brand new facility that will have 40 beds. We're looking at a brand new facility that will have the right level of care for the individuals who are living there. It will be a higher level of care. It won't necessarily be long-term care because we don't think that that's necessary for the community. We're looking at the demographics of the region and making sure we have the right beds in the right place for the right members of the community.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I find it more than a little disappointing that the NDP government has turned their backs on the most vulnerable in our rural communities. Given that those in Sundre are now waiting for the other shoe to drop and for the NDP government to shut down their entire hospital and given that this hospital saved my own life in 2007 and since it is crucial to all the residents and visitors of Mountain View county, will the minister commit right here and right now that the NDP government will not shut Sundre's hospital?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Glad to hear that the health care system has served him and many others well, as all of us have experienced in this Assembly. In terms of the specific beds, the people who are living in them are living in the hospital, and they are long-term care beds. Obviously, we all know that nobody wants to stay in the hospital more than necessary. You want to be in a home-like environment if that's possible at all. We're certainly working with the individuals to make sure that they land in the right place and have the very best place to live. We're going to continue to have conversations in a respectful environment with the members opposite about health care throughout Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Farm and Ranch Worker Regulation Consultation

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As this government moves forward with consultation planning to draft the regulations on Bill 6, I hope they're planning to include the newly formed ag coalition. This group has formed an industry leadership advisory committee that will engage with farmers and ranchers to represent their interests. They are the ideal group to include in the Bill 6 consultation process. To the minister of agriculture: will you commit to having at least one, preferably more, members of this ag coalition on the technical working group for the Bill 6 consultation?

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I can guarantee that there will be some members from the ag coalition on the technical working groups. I very much welcome their input. I thought it was quite interesting that they met on January 29 in Red Deer to get together. I think any opportunity that we have to expand our consultation process, even if it's arm's length, is a welcome opportunity, and I welcome the opportunity to work with them in the future as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the minister has not made an effort so far to work with the ag coalition, which includes 29 important agricultural groups such as the Alberta Barley Commission, Alberta Beef Producers, Alberta Canola Producers Commission, Alberta Cattle Feeders' Association, Alberta Chicken, Alberta Milk, Alberta Pork – I could go on – and given that you recognize the importance of this coalition, can the minister explain how he plans to actively involve the coalition in the Bill 6 regulation process?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I want to correct him on just one small point. We have been working with the ag coalition. I've met with them once in person, several times via the phone. I've talked individually with the chairs of the ag coalition as well. I'm very much looking forward to working with them and working with all other people in the agriculture industry as well across the province as we move forward on the consultation process.

Thank you.

2:20

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was different information than I was given.

Given that the ag coalition is holding consultation meetings all across Alberta to hear feedback from Alberta's producers, not just a select few, and given that it seems to me that they're doing your job, will the minister commit to giving them a bigger seat at the table?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member asked if they can get a bigger seat at the table; I'm not sure if that means physical size or number of members at the table. Agriculture will be, of course, very well represented on the technical working groups. It's important to have very good representation not just from the ag coalition but from others as well that perhaps don't have a voice at the ag coalition, making sure that we have all of that represented. Agriculture, as you've probably realized, is very diverse in this province. We need to have all of those voices at the table.

Thank you.

Athabasca University

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, Athabasca University is a success story. It serves over 10,000 Albertan students and provides much-needed learning alternatives. It's also a major employer. But rumours are circulating that Athabasca University may close its doors and leave. These rumours are creating uncertainty in a region that's been devastated by low oil prices and risky policies. Will the minister put the rumours to bed and assure the people of Athabasca that this university will remain open and operating in its current structure in Athabasca?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question and for giving me the opportunity to address this issue here in the House. It just so happens that I had a meeting with the president, the board chair, as well as faculty association representatives last Thursday to discuss the future of Athabasca University. I was quite direct in my guidance, and I was quite clear that the number one priority for any path forward for that university is to make sure that Athabasca University stays in Athabasca.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you. Given the fact, then, Minister, that you sat down recently with the president of Athabasca University and considering the hundreds of Albertans that would face job losses as a result of potential closure or relocation, was relocation discussed at this meeting with the president, and does the minister retain confidence in its current governing board?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for that supplementary question. I believe I answered the question the first time that I answered, but I'm happy to state again that our government's number one priority with respect to Athabasca University is to make sure that that university stays in Athabasca. We know that it's a valuable institution not just to the students of Alberta and around the world but to the community that it's in, so Athabasca University will stay in Athabasca.

Mr. Taylor: Out-of-work Albertans are flooding back to school to further their education, and this minister is playing coy with the future of hundreds throughout various schools. The NDP bases their decisions on ideology over common sense. Has the NDP government examined the impact that a closure like this in the future, if it happened, would have on Alberta postsecondary students and the economy, or is the government simply planning on leaving another community high and dry?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would recommend to the hon. member across the way that he actually listen to the answers when he stands up and asks the minister responsible so that he doesn't look ridiculous in his supplementary questions. I'm quite pleased to be able to give a clear and direct answer, that Athabasca University will stay in Athabasca. I could write it down on a piece of paper if the member would like it because he can't understand what I am saying. I don't believe I can be any more clear than that.

Municipal Infrastructure Funding

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, last week the Municipal Affairs minister had the opportunity to provide clarity to Alberta's Mayors' Caucus and come clean on this government's plan for MSI funding but failed to do so. Sadly, again later here that day and today, too, all we hear are more platitudes and misdirection on the subject. Minister, MSI is critical for planning and building strong and resilient communities. For the record, again, will the minister do the right thing and clarify MSI funding intentions for our municipal partners that are here in Edmonton today?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I have great respect for all of the municipal leaders and the work they do in working with us to ensure that Albertans have the services they need, which is why we consider them a valuable partner and understand the importance of MSI to their communities. Given the extreme fiscal challenges of the province we are having conversations around that; however, we remain committed to providing the support to municipalities that they need to take care of the Albertans they serve.

Mr. Stier: Well, Mr. Speaker, once again, I don't know if we heard any facts here.

Given that the construction season is short, by not presenting a budget this past February, this government has cost our municipal partners some of their most critical building months. To the same minister again: for what mysterious reason did this NDP government delay session, delay the budget, and delay this vital information when there is so much important work to do in our communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are working incredibly hard to work within the budget as we present that budget well within normal timelines. However, it's not formalized, and I expect to have amazing support for that whole section from the member across from me. We are investing $34 billion in necessary roads, schools, transit, and other public infrastructure to provide communities with the facilities they need to get Albertans back to work, and we are committed to supporting municipalities, again, in providing for their members.

Mr. Stier: Well, Mr. Speaker, thanks to the minister for some detail there.

Given that the Premier herself said that a significant portion of the carbon tax revenue would be cycled back to municipalities for, quote, green initiatives but municipalities, though, really need bridges, roads, and water-treatment facilities among other core infrastructure projects, and while solar panels and green-roofing systems are nice to have, can the Minister of Municipal Affairs say if any of the carbon tax revenue collected will be allocated to those priority infrastructure projects instead?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a couple of quick points. You know, it's quite correct that municipalities require and rely a great deal on infrastructure funding. Let me just be very clear that infrastructure funding is a key part of our jobs plan, and that's why I'm proud that we have invested $9 billion more into our plan than would have been invested under the Official Opposition's plan. So that's the first point.

The second point is this. When we make significant changes, we're going to talk to people first; we're going to consult. Now, there are rumours out there. There are always rumours out there, but let me be clear that if municipal leaders haven't met with us and haven't advised anything, then I think they should be pretty comfortable.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Northwest.

Bill 1

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government promised change and, boy, are they delivering. They promised a more open government and did a bait-and-switch briefing for the opposition parties on the throne speech. They promised a jobs program worth 27,000 new jobs and had to cancel it because it failed to create more than one job. The response to this was Bill 1, which was literally the first time in my memory that we had to pass a law to tell the minister what his job should be. To the Premier: given that Bill 1 is the job description for the minister, what will he be doing until Bill 1 is passed and proclaimed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll clarify for the member that Bill 1 provides the legislative tools and framework for government to be able to respond and act very nimbly. Now, the global price of oil and the continued drop in the global price of oil have had significant impact on Albertans, on their families and communities. Now, unlike the opposition who governed for many decades and failed to adequately diversify the economy and move us off one resource and unlike the opposition who would rather we sit on our hands and do nothing, our government is taking action and showing leadership through Bill 1. Thank you.

Ms Jansen: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister may be nimble, but he's not very quick.

Given that the minister should already have been doing the work mandated in Bill 1, is the Premier ready to acknowledge that Bill 1 is completely pointless as a job-creation plan?

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will thank the hon. member for the question and for giving me the opportunity to speak of the initiatives that our government has rolled out since last fall, since the creation of this ministry, which are exactly what businesses and industry have been asking for: a one-stop shop in the government, to have a ministry that focuses exclusively on the economy, on diversifying the economy and supporting our sectors and building on our strengths. In addition, Bill 1 is going to give us the legislative tools that we need to be able to respond to our current economic climate in a very concise and straightforward way. [interjections]

Thank you.

The Speaker: It's getting a little noisy, folks.
Second supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Albertans' unemployment rate is climbing at a startling rate and given that they are abandoning their first flagship job-creation plan faster than the House leader rushed his way into the House last Tuesday, to the Premier: are you actually planning to listen to and accept amendments and constructive solutions from the opposition to make Bill 1 better and turn it into a plan that can actually be executed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're still waiting for some constructive suggestions from any of the opposition parties, quite frankly. But let me again be clear that our government is taking action. You know, I want to take a second to talk about that. While the Official Opposition and the opposition run down the province and are actually fearmongering, we have some great news. There are great examples of how Alberta is a great place to invest and to do jobs. Just on Friday Imperial Oil announced a $2 billion investment here in Alberta. We welcome that news, and we'll continue to work with . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Edmonton-South West.

Tourism Promotion

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the government's throne speech there was a commitment made to diversify the economy, and given Alberta's diverse landscape, increasing tourism is one of the ways we can do this. Given today's economic climate, promoting Alberta as a destination of choice would create more jobs and move Alberta towards long-term diversification. To the Minister of Culture and Tourism: what is being done to grow the tourism industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for my first question during question period. Tourism remains the one shining star in our economy right now, contributing over $8 billion to our economy and 127,000 jobs to our province. I have had the opportunity to meet with stakeholders. I will continue to do that and look for opportunities to grow this great economy.

Thank you.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that our tourism industry will grow more quickly if visitors can more easily travel to Alberta, again to the same minister: what is he doing to increase air access to this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. During my first week on the job, actually, I got to go to my hometown, Calgary, and announce the beginning of three-times-a-week flights directly from Beijing to Calgary. We are going to continue working on that. We will continue to do that, talking to our members from across the way and talking to people from our government as well. We're going to continue talking to our partners and look for new ways to increase travel to Alberta.

Thank you.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there are great tourism opportunities in all corners of our province, not just in our major cities, to the same minister again: what is he doing to promote tourism across rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. A tourism and entrepreneurship program started in late September of last year, attracting approximately 200 participants. We also had Open Farm Days last year, which is another program that we continue to encourage. We're looking forward to it again this year. [interjections]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Could we keep the volume down, please?

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Student Learning Assessments

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to an ATA survey nearly three-quarters of grade 3 teachers think that the pilot student learning assessment is of little benefit to the students. This pilot has cost the government millions of dollars, and for two years Albertan parents have not received information about their child's achievements relative to expected outcomes, yet the government is committed to this pilot again for another school year. This is no longer a pilot but a commitment to failure. To the Minister of Education: will you listen to teachers and cancel this failed experiment?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question as well. Certainly, I've been looking very carefully at all of our assessment tools, from diploma exams to PATs and, of course, the SLAs. From the time that I assumed the ministry, I decided to make them optional for the school boards this year. I had 59 out of the 61 take up that option. Certainly, I'm open to looking for ways to more effectively use the student learning assessment tool so that it is diagnostic and it helps our kids to learn and parents to understand what they are learning.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always nice to hear that the Minister of Education will listen.

Given that teachers voted at the ATA's annual assembly to put this test on pause until the issues surrounding it were resolved and given that parents have also expressed deep concern about the effectiveness of the SLAs, Minister, these tests have not proven to exhibit any real, positive impact on student learning. Will you agree to reinstate the provincial achievement tests until the issues surrounding their learning assessments are rectified?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you for the question. Certainly, I'm assessing many different options, but let's remember what we are using these SLAs for at this time, which is our grade 3 students. I don't know if you've seen grade 3 students: they're seven years old, and they're so wonderful, but they're very, very young. So it's very important that we design diagnostic tools that will help the teachers be able to build a program for kids but not make it onerous on seven-year-olds, putting in PATs.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Alberta Education website states that the government will, quote, co-ordinate with education partners and given that the Alberta Education website states that the learning assessments will remain in the pilot phase "until we are certain we have it right," can the minister explain why he's ignoring front-line teachers, parents, and education experts who are telling him that the pilots are a waste of time and money that do little to improve student learning?

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly, it's important to be objective and to weigh all the different options around testing and assessment in general. I'm listening very carefully to teachers. I know as a teacher myself that the best tool that we have to determine the outcomes for students is to maintain the professionalism of teachers and the integrity of their capacity to analyze where their kids should go. We will give them any assistance along the way to do so, diagnostic tools such as SLAs, other ways to make sure that kids learn and they get the best education possible.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-West.

Naloxone Kit Availability

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I give this government credit for making the fentanyl antidote naloxone widely available. However, many Albertans view naloxone as a cure for overdosing on fentanyl when it is not; it simply buys time for a victim to receive life-saving medical care. With that critical piece of knowledge lacking in the general public, Albertans will continue to die needlessly. To the Health minister: given that the grave misunderstanding that naloxone is a cure can result in death, how are you ensuring that Albertans are aware that it is critical for someone who has received naloxone to obtain medical attention as soon as possible?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for asking a question of such importance to Albertans and members on both sides of this House. Certainly, fentanyl is a deadly threat, and we're working through public awareness around making sure that the awareness of the risks is available; also, harm reduction, which was mentioned. Naloxone: every one of our distributing centres is working with citizens who are getting these kits to explain to them how to use them and to follow up with proper interventions afterwards. Certainly, there are lots of community groups helping to distribute these kits to those who most need them, and they're providing the education on the ground.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that most addicts are in denial and will not proactively obtain a naloxone kit from a doctor or a pharmacist and given that family and friends who desperately want to help their loved ones cannot obtain a kit and training unless the addict is with them and given that this government's naïveté of addictive behaviour is failing to ensure that everyone who wishes to save the addict's life has the opportunity to do so, why are you not allowing family and friends to obtain naloxone kits upon request?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're working with evidence to make the best decisions on behalf of citizens. Certainly, the evidence has shown that those who self-identify as using, so anyone who self-identifies as having a history of use or having used in the past or currently, have access to one of these kits. We're making them available through a variety of means, including pharmacies, but where we started, actually, was with the service agencies that are working most closely with the addicts; for example, here in Edmonton at Streetworks, a needle exchange program. They are the ones being trained on how to distribute and share the information, and they're doing a great job of getting it into the hands of those who most need it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that addicts are solely focused on their next fix and act defensively if someone offers them help and given that placing the onus on addicts to obtain naloxone reflects a common misconception about a drug addict's typical behaviour, will you commit today to let family and friends obtain naloxone kits if their loved one is resistant to taking that proactive measure?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. Certainly, any citizen who has a history of use has access to these kits if they express that they've self-identified as being a user having a history of use. We would encourage people who have that history to disclose that to either a pharmacist, to EMS – RNs are now able to prescribe the kits as well – or to any of these on-site programs that work with populations who are at risk typically. We're very proud of that, and we're continuing to work with the fentanyl response team as well as developing an opioid reduction strategy that will consider expansions to other demographics, potentially. But we certainly want to make sure that we're using evidence to derive . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Safe Accommodations for Queer Edmonton Youth

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past September I had the opportunity to view a powerful documentary, For Want of a Home. The film shares the stories behind a troubling statistic, that although only 5 to 10 per cent of our population identifies as lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer, or questioning, they make up over 25 per cent of homeless youth. These youth are often reluctant to turn to shelters, where they may face discrimination from other residents, inflexible gender binaries, or a lack of understanding from staff and volunteers.

In 2014 SAFQEY, or Safe Accommodations for Queer Edmonton Youth, was formed to try and address this need. Currently Toronto is the only city in Canada that offers dedicated beds for LGBTQ2S youth; SAFQEY is working to make Edmonton the second. Through Boyle Street Community Services they've secured access to a housing facility, and they're now working to raise the funds needed to operate it as a shelter for trans, nonbinary, and two-spirited youth.

Mr. Speaker, it's heartbreaking to see the challenges faced by these young Albertans who are left homeless, often due to a lack of understanding of their identities, and rejected by their families, an unfortunate truth that confirms for me the importance of supporting the right of LGBTQ2S youth to feel safe and protected in other social spaces, like their schools.

To the board and members of SAFQEY I would like to say thank you for the incredible progress that you've made in two short years. This government and, I dare say, the majority of this House stand with and support you.

Thank you for your commitment and dedication.

Cold Lake Air Show

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to stand before you today and represent my home constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake. In our constituency we have various events throughout the year, including the Glendon Pyrogy Festival, cabane à sucre, and Cold Lake First Nations Treaty Days, to list a few.

One of the most anticipated events this year is the Cold Lake Air Show. This year it is being hosted by 4 Wing and the Canadian Forces base Cold Lake in conjunction with the city of Cold Lake. The Cold Lake Air Show itself has a very special significance for myself as my daughter Charlotte was born during the 2009 air show, and that year especially I was floating in the clouds, up there with the Snowbirds. The air show is always an exciting weekend for families in and around Cold Lake, with something for everyone. It attracts performers from across North America. We're proud to showcase our Royal Canadian Air Force and to welcome a number of celebrated performers to our skies. Mr. Speaker, we have the CF-18 Demo Team, Snowbirds, F-16 Demonstration Team, SkyHawks, Firefly Aviation, Ace Maker, Pemberton Aerosports, Indy Boys, and AV8FX pyrotechnics coming to the Air Show this year.

This year Cold Lake is proud to announce that it has solved a problem that plagues many local air shows: parking. With an all-new, professionally developed plan there will be room for everyone who wants to come out and enjoy the show and no more long waits to get in or out, so this weekend will be hassle-free.

Whether you're an aviation enthusiast or a family looking to fill a weekend, the air show is an exciting, jet-blasted spectacle that's guaranteed to please. Just make sure that any young ears are equipped with hearing protection. I would like to take this opportunity to invite everyone to come out and witness the thrill of the Cold Lake Air Show on July 16 and 17.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship and in accordance with section 5(5) of the Property Rights Advocate Act I am pleased to table five copies of the committee's report on the 2014 annual report of the Alberta Property Rights Advocate. Copies of the report are available through the committee office and online.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund it's my pleasure to table the report covering the committee's activities during the 28th Legislature, September 2014 to March 2015.

I would also like to table the committee's report covering activities from the 29th Legislature, June 2015 to November 2015.

These reports fulfill the requirements of Standing Order 55 and section 6(4)(c) of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act. These reports are posted on the Assembly website, and copies are also available at the committee's office.

I would like to take this opportunity to quickly thank the officials from Alberta Treasury Board and Finance and AIMCo and the staff of the Legislative Assembly Office for the continued support of this committee.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I have two reports to table this afternoon. I'd like to table five copies of the report of the committee recommending the reappointment of Mr. Merwan Saher as the Auditor General for a two-year term.

I'm also pleased to table the report of the committee recommending the reappointment of Mr. Glen Resler as Chief Electoral Officer.

Copies of these reports are available online or through the committees branch. Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and the minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have an introduction of a bill. I would like to give oral notice of a bill to be introduced tomorrow, that bill being Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. member, go ahead.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today, two that I promised in question period, advice for the Minister of Municipal Affairs on linear assessment, one from AAMD and C and one from AUMA.

Also, I rise to table the required number of copies of an open letter from the highly regarded Alberta Enterprise Group to the Premier, with advice on government policy.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I rise today pursuant to section 25(16) of the Conflicts of Interest Act to table the report of the Ethics Commissioner dated March 14, 2016, regarding the allegations involving the Premier of Alberta, the MLA for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Point of Order

Interrupting Members' Statements

The Speaker: There was a point of order raised during Members' Statements by the Government House Leader with respect to the interruption of the Member for Calgary-North West. While the desk-thumping was somewhat – my word, it seems to be robust of late. It did not in fact deter the member from proceeding and making her statement. She was able to complete her statement.

I would note, as Speaker Kowalski did on April 5, 2006, at page 733 of Alberta Hansard for that day, the principle that members should have the opportunity to speak on any subject they wish without being interrupted. He seems to have been also at the same time referring to points of order. So while there may not have been a point of order, the chair, as you may have noted today, wishes to underline again to all members that we need and I need to be vigilant, particularly around the volume of both comments as well as noises.

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

The Speaker: At the same time, while I have the floor, I would speak to the matter with respect to a point of privilege that was raised about an early release of the throne speech on March 8, a purported question of privilege raised by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. Hon. members, the chair is prepared to rule on the purported question of privilege raised by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster on Wednesday, March 9, 2016.

The discussion on this matter can be found on pages 38 through 42 of Alberta Hansard for that day. To state the purported question of privilege in the proverbial nutshell, the issue is whether the dissemination of copies of the Speech from the Throne on an embargoed basis to media but not members prior to its delivery in the Chamber that afternoon constitutes a contempt of the Assembly.

The notice provided by the hon. member complied with the procedural requirements found in Standing Order 15(2). The Speaker's office received notice of the purported question of privilege on Tuesday, March 8, at 4:51, which far exceeded the requirement for notice to be provided two hours before the opening of the afternoon sitting. I would like to thank the member for proceeding by way of notice instead of raising the matter during the proceedings, during the Speech from the Throne, which would have disrupted this proceeding. It would not have been dealt with until the following day in any event. Thank you for that.

As I understood the hon. member's argument, it is that the distribution of the Speech from the Throne and the briefing impeded members in the performance of their duties and constituted a contempt of the Assembly. There did not seem to be a dispute as to the facts surrounding this purported question of privilege. As the Deputy Government House Leader confirmed, it seemed that there was an embargoed media briefing at which copies of the Speech from the Throne were distributed.

In terms of providing a basis for his claim, the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster was good enough to provide a definition of contempt from page 251 of Erskine May, 24th edition. In this Speaker's ruling on November 2, 2015, found at pages 400 to 401 of Alberta Hansard for that day, I relied upon the distinction between contempt and privilege at page 82 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition. To quote in part from that longer excerpt, a contempt is any action which, though not a breach of a specific privilege, tends to obstruct or impede the House in the performance of its functions; obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of the House in the discharge of their duties; or is an offence against the authority or dignity of the House, such as disobedience of its legitimate commands or libels upon itself, its Members, or its officers.

The member also acknowledged that there was no precedent, by which I mean a Speaker's ruling on the dissemination of the Speech from the Throne prior to the delivery. Without a precedent the arguments proceeded on the basis of an analogy, with the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster claiming that this situation is the same as when copies of a bill are distributed prior to its introduction in the Assembly. To be clear, a possible contempt could occur in the circumstances where a bill is on notice on the Order Paper and before it is introduced, the bill is distributed to persons other than members and the specific contents of the bill are revealed. This was the essence of Mr. Kowalski's March 5, 2003, ruling, where he did find a prima facie question of privilege when the contents of a bill on notice were revealed at a media briefing. His ruling relied upon the March 19, 2001, ruling of then House of Commons Speaker Milliken on the same issue, which the member quoted in his presentation last Wednesday.

Although not raised in the discussion of this purported question of privilege, there is a subsequent ruling by Speaker Milliken on whether disclosure to the media of the Speech from the Throne prior to its delivery by the Governor General constituted a breach of privilege. In his ruling, found at pages 282 to 283 of House of Commons Debates for October 23, 2007, Speaker Milliken ruled that there was no breach of privilege. He stated at page 283, "The Chair can find no procedural authority for the claim that the premature disclosure of the Speech from the Throne constitutes a breach of the privileges of the members of this House."

I find this argument to be persuasive and applicable to this situation. As did Speaker Milliken, the chair finds that the situation surrounding the disclosure of the Speech from the Throne is analogous to budget secrecy, which is a matter of parliamentary convention rather than of privilege. I would refer members to paragraph 31(5) of Beauchesne's, 6th edition, and page 894 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, which state this proposition.

Accordingly, for the reasons I have provided, I find there is no prima facie question of privilege. The matter is now concluded.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 201 Election Recall Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today in the Legislature to move second reading of Bill 201, the Election Recall Act.

This bill is intended to strengthen Alberta's democracy by putting the power of our system further into Albertans' hands and giving them the ability to recall an elected official should the need arise. The premise of this legislation is simple, to ensure that any Member of the Legislative Assembly stays truly accountable to their constituents.

Mr. Speaker, it wasn't so long ago that many of us here in this Legislature were elected for the first time. For me personally, it was an honour and a privilege – and I'm sure it was for everyone – to be chosen by their constituents to represent their interests in this Legislature. It's an honour that I do not take lightly.

Mr. Speaker, our representative form of democracy is not perfect. There are some inherent flaws in it that have existed as long as Alberta has been a province. Indeed, Sir Frederick Haultain, the first Premier of the Northwest Territories, from 1897 to 1905, which then included Alberta and Saskatchewan, envisioned a very different western Canada. He wanted a single province called Buffalo, that would be governed on a nonpartisan basis; in other words, a democratic government where elected representatives did not represent political parties and where party politics did not dominate the Legislature. Sir Frederick Haultain did not get his way, and today we have a representative form of democracy that is dominated by party politics. Indeed, Albertans have experienced the great harm that can occur when we elect an MP to Ottawa or an MLA to this Legislature. We can see what happens when they believe that they can consistently ignore or not represent the wishes of the people that elected them.

My first introduction to this idea of recall began when I met Preston Manning and helped build at a local level the Reform Party in my constituency. The slogan The West Wants In resonated with western Canadians and with Albertans, and it spoke to our dissatisfaction with a government that could rule over us without representing our interests in this Confederation. Recall along with other democratic measures were proposed by the Reform Party, and I personally believe these bills and the actions of the Reform Party allowed western Canadians to channel their dissatisfaction back into the political process in a positive fashion rather than to support the more radical notions of separatism that appeared at the time to be raising their heads and which perhaps today could be raising their heads again in Alberta.

Recall should not be easy. It should be hard to recall an MLA or a Member of Parliament. But allowing for recall brings the benefits of accountability. It provides a positive path of action for an electorate that realizes that the representative they have chosen is not enhancing democracy but perverting it by their personal actions or by placing emphasis on party politics rather than their constituents' desires. Our party's system brings many advantages to our system of democracy. For MLAs and constituents alike it also creates an uneasy dynamic where the MLA must sometimes choose between supporting the wishes of their constituents and the desires of the political party to which they belong. This issue of "How should your MLA vote when caught in the middle?" is difficult. It's difficult when two divergent forces are clearly seen to trap the MLA or the Member of Parliament. We saw that, I believe, during the Bill 6 debate prior to Christmas, and it's not a nice place to be. As we clearly saw these government MLAs caught in the middle, it was hard to see that they had to make a choice between their party and their constituents.

Bill 201 is an attempt to rebalance our democracy so that the people of Alberta will be able to hold their MLA accountable for their voting record and their public actions so that we really will have a system of democracy where the people rule rather than the party. The elected representative may happen to be in any political party, but they must be representative of their constituents. Let me make it clear to all that are in this House that I do not believe that this is a partisan bill. This bill is not left wing, it's not right wing, and it really shouldn't matter whether you're on the government or the opposition side. This bill speaks to Haultain's vision of a less partisan House, a House where the elected representatives are better able to balance their constituents' desires with those of their party.

Bill 201 does not speak to the wider issue of when an MLA should be able to speak and to vote against a party or an electorate that is asking them to vote against their personal conscience or to pass legislation that does not respect the rights of minorities and would therefore be tyrannical. I will always seek to serve, at least to the best of my ability, my constituents and to make sure that the voices of those in my constituency are heard loud and clear. The discussion surrounding this issue, about when an MLA should follow their conscience or defend minority rights, I will leave for another day and for another bill. I do believe that we should have those discussions in this House.

If passed, this bill would provide a mechanism where when 66 per cent of the electorate's signatures from the previous general election are collected in a constituency in 60 days on a sanctioned petition, an electorate would have the ability to recall their local MLA. A threshold of 66 per cent is not so impossibly high, Mr. Speaker, that it could never be reached, but it is also not so low as to ensure that the law is frivolously used. Indeed, this percentage is an attempt to address some of the NDP's concerns regarding Bill 206 from last session. They said that setting a percentage of 20 per cent of the electorate was just way too low.

Any canvassers pushing for a recall of their MLA cannot be paid in any way, Mr. Speaker. This would prevent wealthy groups from having undue influence, ensuring that a campaign is truly grassroots. A canvasser could not be paid and would also have to be a registered voter who's been a resident of Alberta for at least six months. This would prevent influence from outside jurisdictions or an attempt at manipulating the recall system.

Finally, a payment of $5,000, payable to Elections Alberta, would ensure that the petitions would not be paid for by taxpayers and that an individual is serious before initiating a recall petition.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to have introduced this legislation, that has been adopted again and again as a party policy by the Wildrose.

3:10

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and speak early this afternoon to Bill 201. You know, we have recall in this province. It happens once every four years. I know there are many people in this province who are deeply frustrated by the political situation we find ourselves in that perhaps didn't expect the government we have now to win election, and I know there are members opposite who also didn't expect to be elected to this House and certainly didn't expect to be sitting in government, but there they are. They're making the best of the situation and, I believe, doing the best they can.

But here we are. We have three years and perhaps two months until the next election, and that's when the people of Alberta have the opportunity to once again pass judgment on this government and to elect, I think very likely, a new government.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I have a lot of concerns about this bill. There seems to be the intended or perhaps unintended consequence of creating loopholes which seem to go far beyond what this bill's stated goals are. It is not simply, I think, about recall. But what I worry is that it's perhaps a stalking horse for something else, perhaps an opportunity to subvert important rules we have in this Assembly and in this province around campaign finance. I'll get into that specifically as I go through this bill.

First, I think I'm going to just point to the example of the only other province in this country that has recall, and that's our friends to the west in British Columbia. They have recall. It's been used 26 times. It has been unsuccessful 25 times. And the one time it was successful, the MLA in question resigned before the petition actually went through, which raises the question of: what's the purpose of recall? If in the one jurisdiction of this country that has it it has never been used successfully, why would we want to pass that here in this province?

Let's talk a bit about the thresholds and some of the details of this particular bill. The $5,000 fee may sound like a lot of money, but it really isn't. It really isn't. When you have a bill that says that although you need to wait 18 months past an election to then try to institute a recall petition – but if we look at section 2(5), if that petition fails, you can try again and you can try again and you try again and try again. So what we're going to do, if we observe our friends to the south, the frankly chaotic process of constant campaigning that we've got in our friends in the U.S. – there's a big risk that we fall into exactly the same situation here in this province, a situation I am sure none of us want to find ourselves in.

Now, we've talked about the 66 per cent threshold as well as if that is a significant number. My staff and I did some simple calculations earlier this afternoon. We've determined that in the constituency of Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, based on the number of votes cast in the last election, it would only be about 6,300 signatures needed. That's not a very significant number. In Lesser Slave Lake it would be even less than that, 5,978 signatures required. In Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo: 6,323 signatures. These are not significant numbers; these are not large numbers.

Now, my hon. friend from Calgary-Mountain View issued a news release earlier today and talked about perhaps 40 per cent of all electors as an option. That difference in some cases – in Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley it is as little as 218 votes difference between the 40 per cent threshold and the 66 per cent threshold. Again, I think what we're talking about here is a fundamental principle of the way that our democratic system operates and is intended to operate.

The cost of holding a by-election is in excess of $200,000. That is a significant cost, which I think we need to be very mindful of should we be in a situation. The other is: who can actually organize and advocate on behalf of the recall petition? Although the bill says that a person in the constituency must officially be the one to raise the petition, anyone from around the province could flood into that constituency to then work on behalf of organizing that recall petition.

What I want to spend most of my time talking about, though, Madam Speaker, are the financing provisions of this bill and what I see as being significant loopholes. Nowhere in this bill is the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act referenced. By the literal and strict reading of this bill, monies could be raised under the auspices of a recall petition. Let's say that we have a union that wants to raise $100,000 and donate all of that to a petition to perhaps remove a member of this Assembly. Now, that petition fails, that money is put in trust, and that union says: you know, I'd like to see that money flow directly to the New Democratic Party. According to this bill, that's exactly what can happen.

Let's say that a wealthy individual wants to organize a recall petition and donate that money to a registered political party, any registered political party. More troubling, we turn to the very last page of this bill, section 16(1), penalties. If any of the rules in this bill are contravened, particularly the sections that relate to chief financial officers and other areas, if they're found to be guilty of that offence, they're fined a maximum of $10,000. Well, let's say that we have this wealthy individual who puts in $100,000 – by the way, no disclosure of who that wealthy individual or that corporation or that union is, which contravenes the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. They put $100,000 into a campaign which they know is going to fail because that wasn't the purpose. The purpose wasn't really to recall the MLA; the purpose was to find a way around the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. But they do none of the things that they're required to do under this bill. They're fined $10,000, they've put in $100,000, which are now directed into a political party or a constituency association, and they're $90,000 ahead.

There are significant, significant problems with this bill. Section 10(2) says that all expenses must be recorded by the campaign and that the chief financial officer must incur recall petition expenses, but section 10(3) says: "with respect to the personal recall expenses of an authorized participant." What's a personal recall expense versus a campaign expense? That's unclear. That's terminology I've never seen before and that I don't believe exists in the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. I'd be happy to stand corrected if, in fact, that's the case.

There are significant problems with the form and structure of the bill, and while I think it may be tempting on democratic principles to want to have recall in Alberta, I know of no other jurisdiction except British Columbia in the entire Commonwealth that has recall. Now, I could be corrected on that. If some hon. members want to correct me on that, I'm certainly happy to be corrected.

I have significant concerns with the concept of recall in principle. It's not the way our democracy works. There are opportunities for Albertans to have their say, and that opportunity occurs once every four years, frankly, whether we like the current situation or not. I can assure you that there were plenty of times in my lifetime when I haven't liked the situation very much, to the point where I chose to stand for election, as each and every one of us has done. That is the way the system works. In fact, I think, Madam Speaker, what I like about our system is the fact that there is that stability. In a majority government situation we're not in constant campaign mode, and I think that what we would have should this bill pass is exactly that.

I think I've made all the points that I wanted to make. With that, I will sit and say that I cannot support Bill 201.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

3:20

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak in favour of Bill 201. I think that this is an important piece of legislation when it comes to ensuring that people have access to democracy, and I'd like to just spend a little bit of time chatting. You know, our critics will say: "Oh, you don't like the current government. This is a case of sour grapes."

[The Speaker in the chair]

Well, Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. This is not about recalling the Member for Banff-Cochrane. This is not about recalling any particular member in the Assembly. This is about providing access to democracy. This has been a long-standing policy of the members of the Wildrose. In fact, one of our founding principles was just this, finding ways to ensure that politicians are significantly more accountable between elections to their constituents.

While my good friend the independent Member for Calgary-Elbow, my good friend at the end of this side of the House, would like to make statements like "We'll be in constant campaign mode," I think that if we look at other jurisdictions that have recall, it's just not true. British Columbia, for example, isn't in constant campaign mode, and I can tell you that there are a lot of people in British Columbia that aren't happy with the current government. But the point is that the very presence of recall requires politicians and elected officials to be more accountable to their constituents. That is exactly why members of this Assembly should be supporting it, because if they believe in being more accountable, more transparent, then they ought to believe in recall.

I would also just like to mention that in conversations that I've had with colleagues on this side of the Assembly – and I would hesitate to speak for them all – I know that it was the intention of the mover to try and get this bill right. So if the threshold is the big hang-up, I would suggest that we and he would be open to amendments. If there are loopholes in the financing of petitions and recalls, I would suggest that we and he are open to amendments. This isn't about the opposition passing a piece of legislation. This isn't about us trying to score political points. This is a long-held belief of many folks that we represent, that MLA recall is a positive way to ensure accountability and transparency to the constituents and to the people of Alberta.

I might just add further to the comments from my colleague that when it comes to the threshold, 66 per cent of all those who cast ballots in the previous election is in response to some of the concerns when the previous Bill 206 had been tabled and, unfortunately, was unable to be debated here in the Assembly. Now, while members who, I might suggest, might not be the right people would like to say that we're just rehashing ideas, things that have already come before the Assembly, in fact this recall legislation has never been debated in the House in the last number of years. So this gives a good opportunity to talk about some important issues when it comes to democracy and accountability with Albertans, and here we have a change from the initial bill because we're listening to Albertans, and the threshold was a concern to some.

We've heard that in some constituencies the threshold would only be 5,000 or 6,000 petitioners, but in others we see a significant amount of requirement when it comes to petitioners. For example, in Edmonton-Gold Bar, one of the highest voter turnouts in the whole province, with over 22,000 voters, it would take 14,000 petitioners to initiate recall. In Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, with just over 20,000, it would take more than 13,000. To get those 13,000 signatures in just 60 days works out to be over 200 people a day signing the petition. This is a significant effort. For Edmonton-Strathcona it would be over 10,000, and for Calgary-Hays, the leader of the third party, it would be over 11,000 signatures. The point is that there is a significant effort that would be required.

The other important factor that this threshold would provide that just a percentage of the voters list doesn't is that it places importance on every vote and would encourage, in my opinion, voter turnout in the general election. Politicians and elected officials who have done a good job would be more inclined to do a number of tasks that would increase voter turnout that, in turn, should a recall petition ever be launched, then would require even more work. So there is a dual benefit of requirement on petitioners in that the voter turnout is likely going to be higher because for all elected folks or those running for office, it's of benefit to ensure that voter turnout is high.

So it would be my hope that in some of the other constituencies that have been highlighted this afternoon, the turnout would actually be increased, and as a result a recall would be more difficult or the threshold would be higher than the numbers pointed out by the independent member.

There are a vast number of good reasons for recall, many of which we've laid out. I just want to reiterate as I wrap up here that this isn't about recalling a particular member or the government. It's about a long-standing belief held by the Wildrose Official Opposition of being more accountable, more transparent, and giving the people of Alberta more of a voice to hold their members accountable. Certainly, we've seen in just the previous government that there would have likely been a significant change in behaviour of many of those members who certainly made some poor decisions, and as a result recall in place may have stemmed some of that. The long-standing belief on behalf of many of our members: this is a great way to provide more access to democracy.

I would just end with: if members of the Assembly haven't been involved in activity that is scandalous, if they have been busy meeting the needs of their constituents, if they are listening to the people of Alberta, there is no reason to be concerned about recall, and it's exactly what I'll be working on in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, ensuring that the good people there are represented well. I consider it an honour to come into the Chamber every day and represent them, and I will do my best to ensure that they would never have a need to enact such legislation. But I also believe, Mr. Speaker, that they should have the ability to fire me if I'm doing the exact opposite of that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity today to rise and speak to Bill 201, the Election Recall Act. I think we should maybe consider calling this the Election Redo Act, but I'll speak to that in a few minutes.

Mr. Speaker, during the election in 2015 Albertans were presented with a number of different platforms by various parties, and on May 5, 2015, everyone had the same opportunity to vote in support of the platform that they felt best represented their beliefs or where they felt the direction of the province should go. It's a democratic process that repeats itself every four years. Obviously, it needs to be repeated here yet again, that Albertans chose a government that will make decisions in a responsible way and one that is not willing to leave people behind. They chose an NDP government. Yet here we are again debating how to change the democratic process into something that – well, if we don't like the results, then let's come up with something else to just simply hijack the process.

3:30

Mr. Smith: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: There's a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, it would be nice if the opposition would actually speak to the point of recall. This is not a bill that is talking about a general election or how the results of a general election come together. This side and the person that brought forward this bill completely agree with the fact that general elections choose MLAs, choose governments. This bill is about recalling those members that have not been doing their job, that have not been speaking for their people. So it would be nice if he would address those issues, please.

The Speaker: Any comments on the point of order raised by the member?

Mr. Carlier: Yeah, Mr. Speaker, on the point of order. I believe that the member is speaking on the bill. It's in relation to the entire democratic process that we enjoy as a parliamentary system in Canada, and he should continue on with his line.

The Speaker: Hon. member, your point is well taken.

I would ask the member, however, to get to the point. I believe that's where you were intending to go. I would urge you to get there sooner.

Mr. Nielsen: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

Debate Continued

Mr. Nielsen: As has already been pointed out by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, it's the third time in six years that we have seen the Wildrose opposition bringing forward this type of distracting legislation. You might be asking, Mr. Speaker, why I call this distracting legislation. Well, instead of working on how to navigate through this economic downturn and concentrating on things that matter to Albertans, like diversification and job creation, we're getting ready to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars of taxpayers' money on unnecessary by-elections because they're not happy that they didn't win. Overturning election results will not get Albertans back to work. For an opposition that does claim to be such fiscal hawks, rather than working collaboratively to propose solutions, they are solely intent on overturning these election results and spending hundreds of thousands of dollars on these costly by-elections.

Mr. Speaker, this government has already taken steps to specifically address democratic accountability with the passing of Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta, banning the corporate and union donations. But it didn't end there, which is why the all-party ethics and accountability committee was formed. Contrary to the transparency and accountability shown by this government, Bill 201 is an attempt by the members opposite to put corporate money back into politics: the $5,000 process; the petition can come from anywhere; and the campaign to get those signatures can be corporately financed. They are trying to find a way around no corporate, no union donations, and this would be the first step in that plan to do it. This bill proves that the Official Opposition thinks corporate money belongs in politics, and they obviously can't be trusted to do what they say they will.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's time for the Official Opposition to stop taking its orders from the Kudatah folks. Rather than trying to find ways to have a do-over of the last election, maybe they should be spending their time presenting constructive alternatives and contributions that work with government to ensure that the needs of all Albertans are taken care of. Mind you, this, of course, would mean having to address some of the social issues in this province.

Mr. Speaker, I don't see how Bill 201, the Election Recall Act, does anything to support democracy and political engagement. Rather than being a tool to hold MLAs accountable during election periods, this legislation will pave the way for special-interest groups to hijack the political process and create even more political discourse in this province.

The all-party Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, Mr. Speaker, has a mandate to discuss this exact type of legislative proposal. They are currently engaging with Albertans on changes to our democratic institutions, and we should let this committee do its work. Quite frankly, this bill distracts from that mandate and the work that is already being done.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's no secret that voter turnout has been in decline for the last several years, and we need to do better to engage voters. But this bill will set a floor of only 66 per cent of previous votes cast rather than a majority of the electorate. It feels like one of the intentions of this bill is to exclude people simply because they didn't vote the last time. Given that it's Commonwealth Day, with a message of inclusiveness, this bill falls a little bit short on that point.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, this bill would allow in some cases fewer than 6,000 signatures to overturn the results of an election. Great news if you're trying to exclude people. If I may use the example of Lesser Slave Lake, in the May 5 election there were 20,227 eligible voters. Unfortunately, only 9,057 ballots were cast. This means that under the proposed legislation only 5,977 signatures – I'll say that again: 5,977 signatures – would be required to overturn that election result and create a $250,000 by-election. A minority of people allowed to make decisions for the majority: again, great news if you're looking to exclude people.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are expecting much more from this Assembly than useless discussions on how we can get election do-overs because the Official Opposition didn't win. I cannot support this bill in any way, and I urge everyone else to do so as well. I think there are much bigger things that we should be spending our time on and are expected to be spending our time on.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in favour of Bill 201, the Election Recall Act. Recall of elected members has been a core western Canadian, small "c" conservative principle for over a generation now. Every once in a while, in spite of nomination contests, party vetting, and elections the electorate will elect a dud to office. Finding out that your MLA is a dud can be very disappointing. It is particularly galling when the elected MLA won't do the right thing and resign. It is a privilege to be an MLA. Some are reluctant to do what's right in spite of whatever scandal, investigation, criminal act, or dishonourable action is conducted. Winning an election shouldn't give an MLA immunity from a performance review for four years. Four years is a long period, and there are not too many jobs where employers have no recourse for improper actions of their employees, like sitting MLAs enjoy.

Albertans are their bosses and should be afforded the ability for corrective actions.

The only province currently to implement recall is British Columbia, and it was the B.C. NDP under Mike Harcourt in 1995 who brought in recall, feeling duty bound by a referendum on the topic initiated by the Social Credit Party. Although recall can be considered a small “c” conservative principle, it was Harcourt’s NDP government that also supported this principle. British Columbia has lived with recall for 20 years and has had the distinction of having 26 recall petitions launched. Only five ever made it back to Elections BC for verification. Four petitions did not have enough valid signatures.

Around 1998 the Liberal MLA for Parksville-Qualicum was accused of writing letters to newspapers under assumed names, praising himself and attacking political opponents. A Parksville newspaper had asked a former RCMP handwriting expert to compare a sample of the MLA’s handwriting to that of letters to the editor submitted by a Warren Betanko. The newspaper then ran a story entitled MLA . . . Is a Liar, and We Can Prove It. The MLA was ejected from the B.C. Liberal caucus although he chose to remain as a Member of the B.C. Legislative Assembly. He resigned his legislative seat on June 23, 1998, when a recall petition led by Mark Allan Robinson had enough signatures from the electorate and was about to be certified. Can you imagine having a situation like that in Alberta and having no recourse?

A long time ago Alberta had recall legislation. It was during the time of the Social Credit government of William Aberhart. As soon as the legislation was used directly against the sitting Premier, however, the legislation was retroactively repealed from the books lest the Social Credit lose their leader. With the third party’s past issues with leaders it’s no surprise that one of their MLAs spoke against recall earlier. With the possibility of recall it makes government more accountable and ensures that MLAs have the freedom to stand up for their communities’ best interests.

Some Canadian elites have mocked recall. Perhaps scandal provides fodder for newspapers and content for social media, but – make no mistake, Mr. Speaker – elected officials deal in serious matters, and recall is a serious matter, not to be taken lightly. That is why Wildrose has placed some hurdles in the proposed legislation to ensure that a recall drive is not a frivolous, vexatious, or nuisance act. A petition could not be started until 18 months into the term, and an MLA could only be subject to recall one time in a term, so the NDP MLAs, that have just been elected 10 months ago, wouldn’t have anything to worry about for at least eight months.

Again, a $5,000 application fee to the Chief Electoral Officer being required to start a petition is a hurdle that many will think twice about before launching a recall drive. Most people do not have $5,000 lying around to launch a recall drive. It will take time to raise the money. In contrast, B.C. only has a $50 requirement, making our proposal much more challenging.

Then there is the requirement to obtain physical signatures of electors from that constituency within a 60-day period. It will not be an easy feat to obtain physical signatures of eligible voters in a constituency equalling 66 per cent of ballots cast in the previous election. For a petition drive to succeed, the petitioners would have to be well organized and the MLA’s offence would have to be quite serious.

In addition, no canvassers can be paid in any way, preventing wealthy groups and special-interest groups from having undue influence and ensuring that the campaign is truly grassroots. Canvassers must be Albertans, ensuring that groups from other provinces don’t meddle in provincial affairs. As you see, Mr.

Speaker, these are good hurdles to disallow any frivolous, vexatious, or nuisance recall drives.

If an MLA is doing their job and they respect the office that they have been elected to, they have nothing to fear from recall. Recall is an emergency valve in democracy in order to restore dignity and honour to the elected offices. An MLA need not fear recall if he stands for the values, ideals, and people that elected them to represent their constituents. Recall would also make backbench MLAs less inclined to quietly toe the party line when unpopular, dishonest, or irresponsible policies are being implemented by leadership.

Former MLA Paul Hinman summed it up nicely when speaking in the House on the version of the Recall Act, Bill 208, that he presented in 2010.

In conclusion, this bill is about ensuring that the people of Alberta are the ones holding the power and that when elected representatives no longer represent the people, they have a process that allows them to remove politicians with hidden agendas who are not putting the interests of the people first. Recall is the only 24/7 way to hold elected people accountable and in check. If we want people to be engaged in politics, then they must be empowered.

I trust that my colleagues in the opposition and the benches of the governing majority will support this honourable piece of legislation. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood : Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak against Bill 201 and the intentions of the bill. For an opposition party that claims to be fiscally responsible, rather than working collaboratively to produce solutions, they seem solely intent on overturning democratic elections instead of getting Alberta back to work. If this bill were passed, progress would not happen. This legislation is intended just to bog down the Legislature in democratic process. This bill has been tabled by an opposition party that can’t move past May 5 of last year, which sometimes seems like a huge leap forward in time given recent statements by some members.

When this government was elected, it ran on a solid platform that spoke to the will of the people. We committed to creating a mature, resilient, diversified 21st-century economy. We committed to working to restore honest and open government. We committed to protect vital public services like health care and education. We committed to restoring a progressive income tax structure. The government you see here today was chosen by the people of Alberta because they knew the issues, and the government was elected democratically. This government works to do things that would move our province ahead.

Instead of working together on the issues that really matter to Albertans like economic diversification and job creation, this bill and the members opposite are distracting from the issues that Albertan families expect a government to focus on. The members opposite would prevent this government from diversifying Alberta’s markets through supporting value-added markets with our new petrochemical diversification program, a program that will spur billions in investment.

They would prevent us from doing anything about climate change. NASA has all of the evidence a person would need to show that climate change is real and that we do contribute to it. This opposition would continue to risk the health of children and seniors due to the burning of coal, which puts NOx and SOx, nitrous oxide and sulfur dioxide, into the air and have no plan on how to transition towards clean and renewable energy. That research, if the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler would like to look at it for himself, can be googled. I am sure that the LAO has supplied the hon. member with a smart phone.

They would have this government reverse the reinstatement of funding that saw to the needs of a growing student population, that needs teachers to go along with them, and would work to remove a government that has committed to stable funding for our hard-fought health care system.

Mr. Speaker, this government ran on a platform of honest and open governance, and the first act of this government was the passing of Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta, banning all corporate and union donations. Prior to these changes our political system had been far, far too dependent on funds from a narrow range of donors with deep pockets and far too removed from the interests of ordinary people. Now, for a second time, the members opposite present a bill that puts corporate money back into politics. The $5,000 can come from anywhere, and the campaign to get the signatures can be corporately financed. They are trying to get a way around corporate and union donations, and this would be the first step in their plan to do it. This bill proves the Official Opposition thinks corporate money belongs in politics. Our government under leadership of the Premier created the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, whose mandate is to review the legislation governing democratic processes in Alberta and is currently engaging Albertans on these exact issues.

Mr. Speaker, the members opposite could not connect with enough voters to form government, and they're trying to get a do-over. The matters they spoke about did not resonate with voters. As the economy started to take a hit last winter and spring, all the opposition could talk about was lowering taxes. They had no plan to create jobs. They had no commitment to protect all of the work that had been done by teachers, nurses, and the previous government to undo the Klein cuts of the '90s. At the time we had a government that had fallen out of favour and out of touch with voters and an Official Opposition with no clear plan on how to improve the economy or how to protect the services that Albertans rely on.

What people did pick was a government that had a clear plan, laid out in our platform, that clearly reverberated through the whole election. Me standing here in this House is proof positive of that. I intend like everyone else here to run during the next election on a four-year record.

Mr. Speaker, there will be legislation that is popular with some and unpopular with others, but we do so with accountability, knowing that we will be judged according to what we hoped to do versus what we accomplished. I stand proud in this House that I supported farm worker safety legislation. I can go to work knowing that as of January 1 of this year farm workers can expect workers' compensation if they are injured or, God forbid, if someone is killed. Their family will have something to help them pay the bills. I can hold my head high knowing that occupational health and safety for the first time has the ability to investigate a serious accident like someone breaking their back, losing their arm, or losing their life. We can take that information, and we can actually use it to inform policy that will ultimately help everyone. I can be proud that for the first time in history farm workers will not have to worry about having no legal recourse if there are bad employment and labour practices.

As a province collaborating between producers, commissions, and experts in the field, we will create a floor that provides a minimum set of standards that farm workers can count on to protect them. This is how we create social change, when someone has the courage to stick their neck out and take the heat to fight for the rights of others. If we were judged on a recall basis, task to task, we would never have the ability to fight for those bold changes that, while controversial, are necessary to create a fair and just society.

Mr. Speaker, one of the most important pieces of legislation we have is the institution of publicly funded health care. Powerful interests fought against this bold and, at the time, provocative move from Tommy Douglas. Ninety per cent of doctors went on strike, private insurance providers spoke out against it, and $114,000 in 1962 money was spent to spread propaganda, making threats of doctors leaving the province and threats of having out-of-country doctors come here to practise. This is exactly the type of chaos that Bill 201 would create. I will tell you that without out-of-country doctors choosing to move to Alberta and choosing our rural communities as their home that we wouldn't have access to proper medical care. Out-of-country doctors were once upon a time some sort of terrible threat, a threat that shows that with time social attitudes change, as evidenced by the support for Bill 7, which enshrined the rights of gender identity and gender expression as rights no one can discriminate against.

Attitudes progress over time but only with the work of those prepared to stand up for what is right. That work can't be done when the person prepared to argue is under the threat of powerful interests that would take a person's democratically elected seat away, these recall attempts and public smearing through paid advertisement and personal abuse by those empowered through the new double-edged sword of social media. Mr. Speaker, this opposition continues in its attempts to sow fear and dissension within Alberta instead of finding constructive solutions that would bring hope to those same people.

Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting that included in this bill are details pertaining to fundraising. Under section 13 it includes that a report must be made to the Chief Electoral Officer of what the amounts of donations and contributions are and that after the recall campaign any leftover funds are put into trust. But then this person who has initiated the campaign may direct that same Chief Electoral Officer to transfer these funds to a registered political party, a registered constituency association, or a candidate, or all of them. What this would suggest to any thinking person is that this legislation is not intended to hold an elected member of this Assembly to account but is intended to be used as a campaign fundraising tool for opposition parties to help build their war chest for the next election.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I have to think about small communities, that hinge on very intricate social relationships and economic relationships. What would I do if I had someone come to my door, that I know has status and power in the community, and they asked for my signature to help vacate the seat of my local MLA? If I sign it, I could potentially feel that I am undermining someone I support, that I may have voted for. But if I don't sign it, then this person at the door may use that information as ammunition against me at my parents' group at the school or they could discourage patronage at my business. Every voter has the right to privacy when it comes to who they choose on the ballot, and I fear that this puts that fundamental aspect of democracy at risk.

And if we were to adopt this, why stop at one recall? Why not just use public funds to recall each . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak about one of my favourite things. That is democracy. I'm one of the unique examples of democracy. I'm a new Canadian, and since I immigrated, I have had amazing opportunities in Alberta, one of which was to pursue a political career. Even though I was not born a Canadian citizen, I was granted the ability to run for political office. The reason I was able to run for this office is because of democracy.

I came here from the largest democracy in the world, but there democracy works differently. You need lots of money and muscle power to be appointed as a candidate in an election. Here in Alberta democracy actually works, and sometimes it works differently here, too. So I'm not an accidental MLA. My life was put on display for all of Calgary-Foothills. I ran three times to get here. My record as a professional engineer working in the energy sector was examined and compared to my competitors. The knowledge that I was born in a different country was well known. My work and participation in the community was another determining factor in voters' minds. With all of this information, it was decided that I would be the best person to represent the people of Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Speaker, you may be wondering why I am telling you all this. I'm coming to the point. I'm going to talk about just this bill. I'm not going to talk about – circling about all other things like Bill 201 and all and which has no details. That's some of the reason, you know, so that people have an option to recall their legislators when they bring in the wrong bills and they are doing a disservice to Albertans.

Because I have led the people of Calgary-Foothills to believe that I would be the best choice as a representative of their concerns, I have led them to believe that I represent their values, both social and economic, the best out of all the candidates. If I start to show the people of Calgary-Foothills that I lied, then what recourse do they really have? Do they have to wait for four years, for three and a half years to un-elect me, or should we empower them with options? That's what I'm talking about. If I went back on my promises to the voters, then the voters have no recourse under the current laws. The people of Calgary-Foothills are stuck with me until another election is called or I vacate that position. They should be able to give me a job performance review more than once every four years.

The people of Calgary-Foothills could protest on the steps of this Legislature and demand my resignation, or they could sign petition after petition to stop me from passing legislation they never agreed to, or they could write letter after letter asking me to reconsider bills, legislation, or suggestions that they do not want me to pass. We have seen, Mr. Speaker, what happened on Bill 6, how much people had to struggle to come here, driving hours and hours to come to this Legislature and to make their voice heard. We can make it easier for people, but with the way Alberta's electoral system works, none of that would matter. Once I am elected, I could do whatever I wanted, propose any legislation I wanted, and if my constituents did not agree with me, there is nothing they could do to stop me other than wait till the next election.

Of course, I would never go back on my word or pass legislation that would cause my constituents to protest against my decisions. I won't do that, but just for argument's sake – just for argument's sake – if I really screw it up and my constituents are really so unhappy with me that they drive three hours from Calgary to protest on the front steps of the Legislature, they should have some way of channelling that anger, that frustration, that unhappiness into real action. Of course, it should always be peacefully.

One of the reasons I ran under the Wildrose banner, Mr. Speaker, was because of the option to have free votes in the Legislature. These free votes are designed to give an MLA the ability to represent their constituency in the most accurate way possible. In the same way, voters should be given the option to recall someone who does not vote in the Legislature the way their constituents desire. That is what this legislation is about. Bill 201 puts the power of democracy back in the hands of the people.

I as an elected official should not be able to run rampant with the government's abilities, especially if it goes against people's wishes. Democracy should not only work once in every four years. The people should have the ability to recall an elected official prior to the election if they feel that the MLA they elected has misled them. The legislation is not a threat to the government, as some of the members opposite mentioned. I mean, they made it sound like a coup, that the opposition is trying to destroy the government. It's not true. This legislation is not a threat to the MLAs who represent the people as they want to be represented. When the people elected me, they were given a picture of who I am, where I am from, what I believe, and where I stand on voter issues. If after the election it is discovered that this picture of who I am was photoshopped beyond all recognition, then the people of Calgary-Foothills should have the right to recall me.

I'm not afraid of this legislation. I'm not afraid of being recalled. I gave my constituents the most accurate representation of who I am and what I believe. My constituents know exactly what I will and will not do. There will be no surprises for them in the months and years ahead. I encourage every single MLA in this House who believes that your constituents elected you because of your values, because of your beliefs, and where you stand on voter issues to vote for this bill. If this bill is passed and you are right, that you are doing exactly what your constituents wanted from you, then this bill will never affect any one of us here. But if you are afraid that you turned out to be someone completely different than who your constituents voted for, then vote against this bill. If you know that you're not doing what your constituents elected you to do, then vote against this bill. If you are a photoshopped version of the picture you painted for your constituents, then vote against this bill. If you are everything that your riding voted for, are now doing everything they wanted you to do, then vote for this bill because this bill will only affect those who misrepresented themselves to their constituents.

Mr. Speaker, I ask everyone in this House to vote in favour of this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm standing today to speak against Bill 201, Election Recall Act. I'm proud that some of the first actions our government took were the passing of Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta, and the establishment of the all-party Select Special Committee on Ethics and Accountability, of which I am the deputy chair. These two actions are just a few of the steps this government has taken to increase not only accountability but democratic participation as well.

Mr. Speaker, our committee is already hard at work reviewing legislation and recommendations to strengthen our democratic institutions, and we need to let that work continue. This bill before us today is a distraction from those efforts.

Bill 1 banned all union and corporate donations, finally removing big money from Alberta politics and giving all Albertans a stronger voice in their democracy, a voice that for too long had been drowned out. However, this bill before us today strikes me as an attempt to undo that work and, instead, put corporate money back into politics. This bill proves that the Official Opposition thinks that corporate money belongs in politics and that they can't be trusted to do what they say they will.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to point out the irony of this bill. This is an opposition party that, rather than working in collaboration, seems totally intent on overturning the results of a democratic election and, in turn, spending hundreds of thousands of dollars on by-elections instead. Each by-election carries a price tag of around $250,000. Wouldn't this money be better spent on infrastructure and front-line workers, keeping Albertans working in these tough economic times?

Mr. Speaker, we've all heard some of the dangerous rhetoric going around right now, and this bill seems to me just another attempt to stoke the fear and anger of Albertans. The people of Alberta expect that the opposition should be proposing more constructive solutions to Alberta's economic climate rather than suggesting that we fire teachers and nurses and attempting to overturn the results of an election.

This is not a game where you can have a do-over if you don't like the results, Mr. Speaker. An election is a fair, democratic process, and the Official Opposition should be using their time to put forth constructive alternatives and contributions, working with the government to ensure the needs of all Albertans are met in these tough economic times. The Official Opposition may not like the results of the last election, but like I said, you cannot have continuous do-overs till the candidate you prefer has been elected.

Albertans voted for change last election, and it is a change for the better. During the election our government promised to introduce reforms to our democracy, and we are following through with our promise. This bill does nothing to support democracy and political engagement. During this period of prolonged economic slowdown our government is focused on issues that matter to Albertans, including economic diversification and job creation.

Rather than being a tool to hold MLAs accountable between elections, recall legislation paves the way for special-interest groups to hijack the political process and the political discourse in the province instead. I will not be voting in favour of this bill, and I encourage everyone else in the House to do the same.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A pleasure to rise on Bill 201, Election Recall Act, which is fraught with problems, as we've been hearing. Let me reiterate some of what has been said before, but for the record the Liberals put a recall bill before this House three times in the last 20 years, and we can only support this if it was amended substantially.

Most importantly, the caucus should insist that the required signature threshold would be 40 per cent of all electors in a constituency at the time of the last general election. Democratically elected people sometimes don't do the job, so there has to be a mechanism for checks and balances on somebody who simply is not doing the job and may be harming the constituency. But there have to be very strict and well-managed controls on that.

Additionally, the rules around who may contribute to a recall campaign initiative and in what amount need to be tightened up and brought in line with new and impending political donation rules, which we supported when this government was elected last year. Long before the Wildrose the Alberta Liberals had a lengthy history of championing an accountability mechanism such as this, but we appreciate that there should be a high level of respect for the democratic process and election outcomes. Any system of MLA recall should not be an easy one to achieve. Striking the right balance is key.

Under Bill 201 the number of signatures required will vary from constituency to constituency. In some of the most remote constituencies or some of those constituencies where very low voter turnout is a concern, it doesn't seem reasonable to have such a low bar. For the Liberals, we accept 40 per cent of electors in a constituency at the time of the last general election, the same figures we proposed in 1993 and '96 and which B.C. adopted in 1995.

In the present form Bill 201 could be used to circumvent the new pending political donation rules pursuant to the work now being undertaken by the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee by not placing any limits on donors and donations and allowing excess funds to be transferred to a registered political party or a constituency association or candidate.

At $5,000 this bill chooses to make the cost of applying for a recall petition the more challenging part of the process. We think the challenging part of the process should be collecting the signatures, not so much the financial barrier. In fact, neither of our two recall bills even proposed a processing fee to be able to apply for a recall petition. In B.C. the recall fee is $50.

Wildrose has had three different bills, including this one, in the last year, with different rules. I guess I would ask them to think deeply about what it is they're trying to achieve. What Bill 201 effectively means is that it is going to favour certain constituencies, perhaps more rural than urban. It looks somewhat self-serving in that respect. It could be used to circumvent the new spending rules, and the bill is too open ended in terms of its finance suggestions. As written, one could raise unlimited funds from unlimited parties and transfer what remains to a political party.

I can't support the bill as written and will be recommending substantial amendments. I hope the party will be open to those.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always an honour to have the opportunity to stand in this House and provide my insight into the ongoing debate. Today I rise against this bill. Our government is committed to further strengthening our democratic institutions and ensuring that all Albertans are reflected in our decision-making processes.

I happen to be one of several members of this House that currently sit on the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, which has been mandated to discuss these exact types of legislative proposals. We are currently engaging with Albertans on changes to our democratic institutions, and it's important that we permit the committee to continue doing their work. I would simply state that Bill 201 distracts from the mandate and work that is already being done.

Mr. Speaker, let's talk a little bit more about the bill in front of us today. It's well known that voter turnout has been on the decline world-wide for the last several years. Despite this fact, this bill sets a floor of only 66 per cent of the previous votes cast rather than a majority of the electorate. In constituencies where turnout is lower than 50 per cent, this creates a serious problem, allowing even fewer people to have a say in who their representative is. We do not believe that a minority of voters should be allowed to make a decision on behalf of the majority of constituents and overturn the results of our democratic process.

Another aspect of this bill for you and the other members of this House to consider, Mr. Speaker, is that this bill is an attempt to put corporate money back into politics, as many of my colleagues have already stated. They're trying to find a way to get around no corporate and union donations, and this is the first step in their plan to do it. This bill proves that the Official Opposition thinks that corporate money belongs in politics, and they can't be trusted to do what they say they will do.

Mr. Speaker, the passing of Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta, which banned all union and corporate donations and finally removed big money from Alberta politics, was one of the first steps towards ensuring all Albertans a stronger voice in their democracy. Bill 201 now wants us to take a step backwards. Starting a petition requires a $5,000 processing fee to the Chief Electoral Officer, and there's nothing that stops corporations and special-interest groups from contributing to that campaign. Instead of strengthening democracy, as the Official Opposition claims, this recall bill would put these same narrow interests back in charge of our political process.

Recall legislation is a distraction from the issues that Alberta families expect their government to be focusing on. Rather than being a tool to hold MLAs accountable in between elections, recall legislation instead paves the way for special-interest groups to hijack the political process and the political discourse in this province. Rather than finding ways to work with government and other constructive criticisms and ideas, recall legislation instead offers an avenue for well-organized, well-funded parties to try and eliminate MLAs they disagree with or even just find irritating to their own particular causes.

During this period of prolonged economic slowdown our government is focused on the issues that matter to Albertans, including economic diversification and job creation. Attempting to overturn the results of an election will not put Albertans back to work. It will instead create more instability in a period of time when Alberta businesses and families need their government to be stabilizing our economy. Our government has a concrete plan to weather this economic downturn that involves putting Albertans back to work through investing in infrastructure projects and diversifying our economy.

One week ago we brought forward a throne speech that lists a lot of very important matters that will help Albertans get through these difficult times. Instead of wanting to debate those matters, the opposition is more interested in navel gazing.

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

Loyola: Instead, they seem to be interested in spending their time talking about uniting the right and coming up with systems to undo . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, there's a point of order.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, just on sections 23(h), (i), and (j), language likely to create disorder. The hon. member continually has been referring to this piece of legislation as an opposition piece of legislation. I find it quite insulting to the hon. member. This is not an opposition piece of legislation. This is a private member's bill, who was duly elected by his constituents and is doing his very best to represent those constituents. If the member across the aisle would like to refer to the legislation as private members' business, as it is, I'm sure that this could just be a matter of debate.

The Speaker: Any other perspectives with respect to this item? The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's just, you know, a matter of wording. I'm sure the member would be okay with adding the opposition "member's" bill.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. member, I think there is some point being made here. I would prefer that you refer to it as a private member's bill because this is private members' business, and it should be, I think, most appropriately referred to in that manner.

If you would proceed.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I retract the statement although I believe on several . . . [interjections] Okay. I retract the statement. I retract the statement.

An Hon. Member: Great apology.

Loyola: Okay. Well, I am truly and sincerely sorry.

Debate Continued

Loyola: Mr. Speaker, each by-election costs about $250,000. This would be better used and invested in supporting our front-line workers or contributing to infrastructure projects that keep Albertans working during these tough economic times.

With that being said, Mr. Speaker, I encourage all members of this House to vote against this bill.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been interesting to listen to the spinmeisters today. They've been very busy. I wasn't exactly sure how they were going to spin this, other than the fact that the best way to convince the electorate that this is something that's not for them is to make it seem like there is some big conspiracy by the Official Opposition. I find that rich. The interesting thing about this is that as I've listened to the arguments here today, it seems to be that everybody got these speaking notes, especially the people of the third party. Yet we didn't get those same speaking notes. So it's interesting that they had an interesting way of approaching this.

What I'd like to do is I'd like to be able to stand in favour of this bill. The person who actually first introduced me to this concept is from my riding, and we've had many conversations about this issue. He said that one of the things you can do to be able to help people – if you become government, the first thing you should do is that you should introduce a recall bill because what that will do is it will help people understand that you are not there to rule from the top down but that you are there to rule for the people.

Yet I think what's interesting is that if we were on that side of the House, I really question if we were to have introduced this bill in the first days of our governance whether or not the House members on that side, if they were on this side, would vote for it, whether they would support it. Would they say that, no, this is not something that's acceptable? I really doubt that they would be opposed to it. I really doubt it. I would ask the members from the opposite side to think about that and to remember that four years will be up and at some point you could be on this side. If that was the case, what would you do in that situation? Would you support it or not?

I am grateful to the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon for presenting this bill. When it was first introduced, last session, we heard a lot that it was not presented in a way that would be palatable to the members here, so there was great work done to be able to make it more palatable.

Each of us in this place today is here as a result of the ballots cast by our constituents. The decisions we make here affect Albertans greatly. Their jobs, their finances, their schools, their livelihoods, and their property rights are all potentially impacted by what is done and decided here. Yet there is something profoundly wrong, Mr.

Speaker, with the fact that anyone in Alberta can return and exchange an appliance that doesn't perform to expectations, but they can't do so with something so important as an MLA.

We have an obligation to respect the wishes of our constituents not just on election day but every day that we sit in this House, Mr. Speaker. That's what this legislation is about, and that's why I support it. At a time of worry and uncertainty like this, when the unemployment rate in this province is now at its highest level in 20 years, it's particularly important that we always stand for our communities' best interests. I believe that this is in the communities' best interests. Simply put, our constituents are our employers.

This shouldn't be news to anyone. We were willing to put our names forward on election day, and we should be willing to put our names forward every day that we sit in this House. We should never be ashamed of the fact that we are doing what we're supposed to be doing in this House, and if our record is true to what we campaigned on, then we should never have any problems with this bill. The ballots cast in elections should not be a carte blanche to do as we please over the course of four years. We were elected based upon the promises we made in our campaigns. Winning an election shouldn't make politicians immune from job performance reviews for four years.

The possibility for recall makes governments more accountable to Albertans and ensures that we have the motivation to stand up for our communities' best interests. Nobody in this place should be insulated from the needs of their constituents – never – and if election promises are broken or the person engages in inappropriate conduct, those who voted should be able to say: this is not what we voted for.

We have seen over the last 10 months where many people throughout this province have said: we are not happy with what's going on. They have tried every way they can, Mr. Speaker. They have tried to write letters. They have tried to sign petitions. They have tried to come to the Legislature, to speak through blow horns. They have tried everything they can to help this legislative body know their will, yet those things seem to have fallen on deaf ears. Now they have asked us, the elected representatives for their constituencies, to represent them once again, to bring forward a bill so that they can have the opportunity to be able to say what they think so that these legislators will listen. I don't think that it's a difficult thing to ask for.

Now, of course, as we also know, there is a cost to taxpayers that comes from having a by-election and there is a cost that constituents face when they don't have an MLA for a period of time and, thus, have nobody standing in this place on their behalf such as when a member resigns or, should this bill pass, if an MLA is recalled. That's why I'm pleased to see that my colleague's bill has important safeguards in place to ensure that electoral recall does not become a right that is open to abuse and various distracting measures.

A successful petition would require the physical signatures of eligible voters in a riding equalling 66 per cent of ballots cast in the last election. It's pretty hard to get 66 per cent of people to agree on much, never mind get them to physically sign off on a petition for it. This is a substantial threshold – we realize that that threshold was not met the last time and that it needed to be increased – and it helps ensure that a recall represents the will of constituencies.

A recall petition could not begin until 18 months after an election. This discourages postelection knee-jerk reactions that are not based on the actual job performance of an elected member. Petition signatures can only be acquired within a 60-day period. This, too, is a barrier but ensures that MLAs won't have a petition hanging over their heads for too long. Starting a petition requires a $5,000 processing fee for the Chief Electoral Officer. This discourages frivolous nuisance attempts at recall.

If successful, a recall petition would force a by-election where the unseated MLA would be eligible to run. This negates the government's comments that minorities should not be able to rule what the majority do. They would still be able to run in an election, and if this was not the will of the electorate, then they would get in again. And an MLA could only be recalled once in a term. Many U.S. states have recall provisions, but British Columbia is the only province with recall legislation here in Canada. It is used very sparingly, not commonly as those opposed to this bill may believe.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that time and again in our history we have seen the interests of Albertans take a back seat to the political class. We saw it once when a one-time cabinet minister awarded a $400,000 consulting contract to his recently departed staffer, for which there was no physical work produced, paid for by the taxpayers. And let's not forget the misuse of government aircraft or the lavish Premier's suite constructed on top of the provincial government's federal building beside this place, a sky palace, a shrine to excesses of the political class, paid for by the taxpayers.

Voters had clearly had enough of that type of government by the time of this last election, and the continual contempt they felt led to a new government. Perhaps, had recall been in place over the last decade, voters could have kept that last government from getting so out of touch with Albertans. We will never know. But my point is that the MLAs in this House should not look at recall as a threat but as a tool which can keep MLAs and, in particular, their caucus leadership in touch with what our constituents want.

I've heard the argument once today – and I would like to state it again – that backbenchers on the opposite side would not vote for some of these bills coming forward if in their ridings they would pay for it. So I believe that's something that would definitely empower backbencher MLAs. If we are the place that we proclaim to be, an Assembly that represents the people of this great province from the top to the bottom and everywhere in between and beyond, then we cannot have a political class that rules as it sees fit without consequences between elections.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is so important to make sure that every person in this House, every elected legislator has the ability to represent their constituents, their ridings, and their ridings' interests. The interest of . . . [Mr. Hunter's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:30

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I think it was quite interesting to hear from the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, who talked about this being a Wildrose policy that they campaigned on and earlier said in a member's statement – and I apologize if this is not verbatim as I've not had the chance to see the Hansard Blues yet – to put policies in place that make us succeed that are not based on an ideology. It seems almost contradictory on my impression, anyway.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this bill, and I don't need to remind the House of the cost that's associated with running a by-election. We've thrown around the number of up to $250,000. Need I remind the members of this House that the members to my left, which sounds weird, who are supporting this bill, campaigned in the last election against the previous government's calling an early election due to the costs associated with that election? Now we're here in this position, where they're talking about spending extra money on by-elections.

Now, I'm also very concerned about the requirements for collecting the signatures under this proposed law. Under this proposed law this will have the Chief Electoral Officer potentially contacting every single person and confirming that they did in fact consent and sign this petition, not to mention that the Chief Electoral Officer will be responsible for cross-referencing these individuals to ensure that they voted in that specific riding in the last election. If Elections Alberta did not confirm with these people, I'd be very concerned about the potential issue of fraud occurring in these by-elections.

In Calgary, Mr. Speaker, we have seen in the past few years issues related to fraud in regard to the democratic process. When I lived in ward 10, I saw fraud first-hand as allegations were made about an individual requesting ballots on someone else's behalf. This led to a court battle, where the city ended up picking up some of the costs, a councillor resigning, and a new election being called, having extensive costs to the taxpayers in Calgary. We have also been hearing new allegations about people misleading individuals to sign petitions in Calgary opposing the southwest transitway.

It is important for the sake of transparency that we remove any opportunity people have to extort our electoral system. This also puts our elected officials into a position where they could be subject to blackmail if a trade union during a contract negotiation, a businessman who's putting a contract to tender, or an unhappy fringe group who can't manage spell-check properly could all try to force an elected official's hand by threatening to recall them.

I am troubled that this may be the hon. member's way to get around Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta, that we all passed unanimously through the House, which is supported by all members. I suspect that this is indicated by the fact that a $5,000 price tag is required for this process, which would prevent everyday Albertans from participating in this electoral process. In Bill 1 corporate and union donations are banned from the political process, and this bill before us today is an attempt to reverse this decision. Instead of strengthening our democracy, as the members to my left claim, this recall bill would put the same narrow interests that we worked so hard to remove back in the political process. Our government is committed to further strengthening our democratic institutions, and we're ensuring that all Albertans are reflected in our decision-making.

Now, I also must remind us, Mr. Speaker, that last week we had the Speech from the Throne, and it reminds us that we are all members of the Crown. With that being said, I am extremely concerned that this may contradict our Westminster model, which outlines that the Queen, who is the head of the state through the Lieutenant Governor, has the power to dissolve the Legislature. This was reinforced in the verdict of Engel versus Prentice last March, when Tom Engel attempted to prevent an early election from occurring due to fixed election dates that were proposed and passed through this House. The judge ruled against Engel, stating, "Nothing in this section affects the powers of the Lieutenant Governor, including the power to dissolve the Legislature, in Her Majesty's name, when the Lieutenant Governor sees fit."

While B.C. has recall legislation, with 26 attempts there has never been a successful recall application, and some of these applications have dealt with heavy irregularities. I feel that if one of them ever became successful in B.C., it would be tied up in lengthy court proceedings and that the rule would be overturned, with a similar verdict to that which we saw in the Engel versus Prentice case.

I'm also a little unsettled that the members who sit in the Official Opposition continue to bring this concept forward when we need to work towards finding ways to diversify our economy, create jobs, and work on challenging social issues. The members next to me say that they have a plan, but I consistently see the subject avoided when they have an opportunity to bring it forward.

We as a Legislative Assembly have already started working towards creating more accountability with the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, which I am excited to now sit on. This select special committee has a mandate to discuss these types of legislative proposals. The committee is currently engaged with Albertans on changing our democratic institutions, and we need to let this committee continue to do this work. This bill distracts from the mandate of work that is already being done.

Like the Member for Calgary-Elbow said, we already have a system in place for recall, and it's called a general election. It is why I'm the Member for Calgary-Shaw and not the member before me. I am very concerned that this practice could tie up important work that needs to be done with battles over recalls and by-elections, and that is why I'm urging all Members of this Legislative Assembly to vote against this bill.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand today and speak on Bill 201, especially, I think, from the point of view of someone who's been very interested in parliamentary democracy for most of his life. I will tell you that there are a number of things about the bill that trouble me, and there are also a number of things about the proposal, about the discussion in general, which I have to say has gotten a little off the track on a number of issues.

I want to state from the outset, though, that I understand the concept that our electors are our bosses. I want to make that very clear to members on both sides of the House, because I think we all know this. The question really becomes: exactly how do they exercise that influence? It really comes down to a debate between the delegate versus the trustee form of representation. I am an ardent supporter of the trustee form of representation. I know that the delegate form of representation is the form that is more commonly used in the United States, but in my view and certainly in the view of most parliamentary democracies around the British Commonwealth it is the trustee form of representation that has won out.

I'm concerned that this bill will drive us towards even more short-term thinking when we consider things, and the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville made a good point, in that sometimes there is a requirement to take a stand on things, and those stands can sometimes be unpopular. Sometimes it takes great courage to take those stands because it is those stands that move the social progress of our societies forward. I would personally be very concerned that there might be less likelihood to take courageous but unpopular stands if there was a possibility of being recalled at such a low threshold, as low as 27 per cent of the electors in some ridings if you apply the 66 per cent to the actual turnout in some of the ridings.

You know, there's a quote from James Freeman Clarke that really resonates with me, and it goes like this: politicians think about the next election; statesmen think about the next generation. Our job in this Chamber, ladies and gentlemen, is not to just think about the next election, and it's certainly not to think about what will avoid getting us recalled in the middle of a term. Our job is to build this province, not for the next five years or 10 years but the next 50 years or 100 years, like the people whose portraits hang on the walls outside did consistently. That's our job. We have to understand that our time here may be very finite, but indeed our job is to think about that next generation. I'm concerned that this legislation will in fact promote short-term rather than long-term thinking.

I'm also concerned about the mechanics of this. Now, Mr. Speaker, recall is something – and we'll talk a little bit about our neighbouring province, British Columbia, that has recall – that is primarily an American construct. Nineteen of the states in the U.S. have recall. Six of 26 Swiss cantons have recall. It was put in place somewhere between 1846 and 1892, the thresholds are vastly different, and it has never once successfully recalled a state or a cantonal representative within the canton system in Switzerland.

Now, in the United States the experience has been a little bit different. I give the example – and this is, to me, a strong argument against recall – of the city of Covina, California. In Covina they had recall legislation for their municipal council. Now, the municipal council brought in a 6 per cent tax increase in order to keep essential services going. There was a recall of those municipal councillors. They were all recalled and replaced by a new council, led in large part by the folks that ran the recall legislation. When those folks actually got into a position of government and found out what the books actually were and found out what the cost of the essential services actually was and that there would be 43 layoffs if they, in fact, went ahead and didn't go ahead with the tax increase, they went ahead and increased the taxes, not this time by 6 per cent but by 8.25 per cent because of the loss of intervening time. So you tell me how recall served the people of Covina in that situation. To me, it didn't serve them at all.

You know, the mechanics of recall really run contrary to our British parliamentary system. In fact, in British Columbia in 2003 – and I'm actually surprised that the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon didn't sort of do some more research on this because there's an excellent review of the British Columbia recall. It's in a 71-page report that he published in 2003. I'll table the document tomorrow. He says on page 13:

The Select Standing Committee noted that recall is "alien to our parliamentary system of government and posed special problems if it was to be integrated effectively into our legislative system."

It found that the concept of recall was highly complex and required careful consideration to the practical challenges of implementing recall in British Columbia.

There are some other problems with recall that this report found, and I want to go into them now. The Official Opposition espouses itself as a party of fiscal responsibility. Well, I can tell you that while it is perhaps a dangerous thing to put a price tag on democracy, recall is not cheap, and $5,000 per recall petition doesn't even come close to covering the cost of recall. In this same report, for the first nine petitions, that were covered in the 2002-2003 and 2003-2004 fiscal years the Chief Electoral Officer came up with an estimate of $553,954 required to administer those nine petitions, an average of over $60,000 per petition. So – I'm sorry – the $5,000 figure is hardly cost recovery. As a fiscal conservative you should be promoting cost recovery. This is scarcely cost recovery.

Now, the other thing is that they say: well, if there are no petitions, there are no costs. Well, actually not. According to the Chief Electoral Officer of British Columbia it should be noted that although the number of recall petitions actually issued and returned affects the costs of administering the Recall and Initiative Act, Elections BC must incur recall-related costs even if no applications for recall petitions are received. The infrastructure necessary to administer the recall process must be in place at all times to ensure that Elections BC can meet the requirements of the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, we have in our democratic system in this province a system of recall. As the Member for Calgary-Elbow says, it's called a general election.

You know, the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills said that if recall were in place, it would have changed the behaviour of those past Legislatures, those legislators from past governments.

Well, recall wasn't in place, but I can tell you that when I meet with constituents and they specifically tell me that they have an issue – and specifically, one of the most difficult issues I dealt with in the last Legislature had to do with pension reform. When I met with a group of people who were part of the pension plan of government and they told me how it would affect their lives, I did change my mind, and I went to our government and I said: we have to pull this bill because it's just not fair to people who are in the middle, who have been counting on a certain set of rules, that we change the rules in the middle of the game. I was very grateful that our Minister of Finance decided to withdraw those changes that were proposed to the pension system. I'm not pretending that I had a lot to do with that. I'm sure I had a lot of colleagues that said the same thing. But recall wasn't going to change how I approached that problem.

Now, I do want to say, Mr. Speaker, however, that I'm a little bit frustrated with some of the speakers who have spoken against this, who have tried to drag in things like backdoor financing through corporations, who have tried to state that this is some attempt to do a do-over. I don't honestly think that that's the case here. This has long been part of the policy of the party that's in the Official Opposition and its forerunner, the Reform Party of Canada, and the Social Credit Party, for that matter, going back to the '30s.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I'm a big believer in the trustee system. I believe that the trustee system of representation serves us well. But, above all, I'm a big believer in long-term thinking, and I don't believe that recall legislation serves us. I don't believe that an American style, an American construct, serves us. Just look at what's going on in the United States right now. That's all the proof you need. We are a British parliamentary system – today is Commonwealth Day – and this is not the time to bring in an American construct to make us more American in this country. Indeed, we should be proud of our heritage and stay where we are.

Therefore, I reject Bill 201.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of Labour and democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 201. As the minister responsible for democratic renewal I, in particular, welcome suggestions and ideas for how we can reinvigorate our democratic system, how we can improve things, make things more transparent.

I'm very proud of our government, which created a facility for this discussion to take place through the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, and I'm proud of the work that that committee has already done, which includes having some very open discussions amongst all parties about things we would like to see changed within our democratic system, ideas we would like to get more research on to help support our discussions. We've had briefings from the electoral officers involved with all four pieces of legislation that we are reviewing, including the Election Act, election finances act, Conflicts of Interest Act, and whistle-blower act. We have created a space where not only the ideas brought forward from the parties but also ideas from the public as well as special stakeholder groups will be able to be discussed and really debated so that we can prepare a report that I as the minister will be happy to receive and work on from there.

The public was invited to provide feedback on all four acts, and that feedback window just closed on February 26. We received quite a few submissions, I'm pleased to say, not only from impacted stakeholder groups but from private citizens who took the time to fill out their thoughts on any one of those four acts and submit them to the committee. Committee members are reviewing that. Committee supports is preparing a compilation of those suggestions so that these things can be discussed. Because we have such a strong forum for collaboration among all parties, it seems interesting to me that this bill has come here for discussion rather than to the committee, particularly when we have such large issues in the state of our current economic climate, when we have so many major things to discuss.

This is the second time in a single session that this bill has come forward from a group of individuals who tell us that they have many, many great ideas, which I'm sure is true, but here we have the same idea twice in a single session when there is another forum for these ideas to be brought forward to. So I find that interesting.

I would like to echo the members for Edmonton-Decore, Red Deer-South, and others about the concerns around cost when it comes to by-elections, the increased frequency of by-elections, potentially at $250,000 per by-election. I agree with the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster in his concerns about wanting to keep things more long-term planning as well as the potential influence of special-interest groups. I very much appreciated his phrase "courageous but unpopular stands" becoming more difficult under a framework where recall legislation is in place.

So those are some initial concerns, potentially the financial loopholes. The Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee I anticipate will be having in-depth discussions around the remaining donation limits and third-party advertising and its impacts on our elections, those types of ideas. Similar to that, here in the recall legislation there seems to be some ambiguity and some concern raised by, again, many members of this House around the impact of those donations and how they could be improperly used by special-interest groups.

For some of those reasons, concerns around the legislation and the suggestion that the committee is likely the best place to have this discussion, I will not be supporting Bill 201. I will be very interested to see if recall legislation is something that has come forward from our public members in their submissions. I think that might be an interesting discussion. For now I do not support Bill 201, but I look forward to talking more about democratic reform and democratic renewal as we go forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour today to stand before everybody again. I've listened to this debate for the last two hours, and I guess what distresses me when I've gone through this debate is to hear several of the MLAs saying that this is a waste of time. I don't believe any debate is a waste of time. I have to say that the hon. colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster brings up some very good points, and it is only through debate that we can bring these points forward. The fact is that by limiting debate or saying that debate shouldn't happen is where we have a real flaw.

The fact that this is a long-standing Wildrose policy, Bill 201, should say that we don't have an intent to actually displace this government because our intent was to form government. That means that we were looking to put a bill in that held Wildrose MLAs to account. If we didn't do our job, we would have been removed. We had a process in place, and this process could always use discussion, debate.

Now, I hear the other side talking about Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta. They use this as a reason for corporate and union donations and how we have some sort of nefarious reason for wanting this recall legislation through. But I will point out that it was through debate of Bill 1, through debate of An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta, that the Wildrose put forward an amendment and changed what that bill was going to look like. To further that, we had the government amend our amendment through more debate. This isn't a waste of time. This is important.

I would like to say how exactly this, for me, is very important. Four years ago we had a candidate go forward in our constituency. I supported this candidate, thinking that he was the man that was going to win our constituency. Now, the fact is that I didn't do anything. It's my failure. I'll admit it. My candidate, Roy Doonanco, a man that I very much respect, lost by a few hundred votes. Had I been out there door-knocking, putting signs up, getting donations for Roy, he might have been that MLA. He worked hard, but he wasn't successful.

Does that mean that I held the MLA responsible that had won? No. Do I think that the MLA, the member that had won, should have been recalled? The answer is no. The fact is that when we're looking at the different legislation that comes through, it comes down to debate. It comes down to actually saying: what is the intent of this bill? The intent of this bill isn't to displace government; it is to promote accountability.

Now, I do hear the comments that the independent member and the third party make that the general election does dictate who gets elected, and that is the primary reason for that election. But sometimes – sometimes – during that four years something goes very bad. Sometimes we actually need to say that a specific MLA needs to be held to account.

A member from the third party while on government business was caught in a prostitution sting. That member was thrown out to be an independent. That member soon went back to the government, eventually. Was that appropriate? No. Did that member get another three years? Absolutely. Was that right? No. That member should have been thrown out. But that's not my call; that's his constituents' call. If they put the work into moving the recall legislation forward, to sign those petitions, then absolutely he should be held to account and removed in a by-election.

We've heard repeatedly that this is not something that happens all the time. This isn't something that is going to happen every day. I know for a fact from talking to government MLAs that they work hard at their jobs, too. Do we see eye to eye on everything? No. Do I think that everybody on the other side should be recalled? Absolutely not. Do I believe that you are the government that Alberta has brought forward? Absolutely. Do I believe that we need to move forward with recall legislation? Absolutely. We need this to bring accountability back to Alberta. Now... [Mr. Cyr's speaking time expired]

Thank you.

5:00

The Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 8(7)(a)(i) it provides up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's bill to close debate. I would invite the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon to close debate on Bill 201.

I'm advised that in actual fact we go immediately to 5 o'clock. Therefore, I would ask the Clerk to outline the motion.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

The Speaker: Yes. Go ahead.

Point of Order Closing Debate

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, I'll find the citation here fairly quickly, but my concern is that I do believe it is quite correct that the hon. mover of this piece of legislation should be afforded the opportunity to close debate on this piece of legislation but that we have now used the two hours fully elapsed to discuss it in second reading. I believe that one way or the other we're either going to have to add an additional five minutes of debate time in two weeks' time, or, alternatively, I would actually prefer that we conclude the matter today and allow him to finish debate and then move into the 5 o'clock matter. But that, of course, sir, is up to you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. There was time consumed at the beginning by the points of order that were dealt with, and the 5 o'clock time has come into effect. However, if you or another member would like to get unanimous consent to grant the five minutes in a vote, I would be prepared to accept that.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, I would so beg leave of the House to ask for unanimous consent to allow the mover of the bill five minutes to close debate.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Housing for Vulnerable Albertans

501. Ms Drever moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to review current policies and strategies with a view to increasing community capacity to deliver transitional and low-barrier housing for vulnerable Albertans suffering from complex mental and physical health needs.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to rise today to bring forward this important motion regarding the delivery of transitional and low-barrier housing for vulnerable Albertans. And may I say that it's so nice to be on this side of the House speaking.

Mr. Speaker, I'm here today on behalf of my constituents of Calgary-Bow and the many Albertans that have spoken during my time as an MLA to speak on this urgent issue. Access to safe, secure, appropriate, and affordable shelter is a fundamental human right, but in recent years it has become an ever-increasing challenge for Albertans with complex mental and physical health needs.

Decent housing has several requirements. It must be safe, free of dangers. It must be secure, without the threat of eviction hanging over one's head all the time. It must be appropriate and meet the social and physical requirements of the person's life circumstances, and it must be affordable. Typically, 30 per cent of income is considered the maximum a person should be paying.

Research and observation tell us that when people have decent housing with the related services they may require, they will be much more likely to successfully manage all aspects of their own lives: to find and keep appropriate employment, to stay healthy, to develop relationships, and to contribute to community life. They will be positive members of the community and will not be in need of emergency services to address crises and problems.

Without proper support systems in place, many vulnerable Albertans with mental and physical needs are at increased risk of becoming homeless. It is imperative that government in collaboration with ministries, departments, the housing industry, community organizations, and Albertans work together to increase community capacity to ensure that all vulnerable Albertans can receive the powerful benefits of having decent housing and access to housing. Mr. Speaker, I'm extremely proud to be a part of a government that is continuing to protect the most vulnerable even in these challenging times.

Mr. Speaker, the 2014 Alberta Point-in-time Homeless Count identified that 6,663 Albertans were homeless. In my hometown of Calgary alone 3,555 Albertans identified themselves as homeless. Members, more than 50 per cent – 53 per cent, to be exact – of homeless Albertans live in Calgary.

Now, the correlation between mental and physical needs issues and homelessness is not a new link. Countless studies focusing on the link between health and homelessness have resulted in the same conclusion. Those experiencing mental and physical needs issues are at increased risk of falling into the traps of poverty and homelessness. In 2014, for example, the Library of Parliament released a study titled Current Issues in Mental Health in Canada: Homelessness and Access to Housing. This study concluded that mental illness, often undiagnosed in vulnerable populations, is a significant barrier to obtaining housing and may cause unstable employment and lead to high levels of stress, substance abuse, low self-esteem, hopelessness, and depression. People who are homeless or living in inadequate housing experience a wide range of physical health challenges and are more likely to die younger.

As you are all aware, Alberta's homelessness plan takes a housing first approach that provides people with wraparound supports, including mental health counselling, addiction treatment, and other services they may require. The Mental Health Commission of Canada's landmark research project on homelessness and mental health indicated that housing first resulted in lower costs associated with other services. For every $10 invested in the housing first model, $8.27 was saved in public dollars as having a home reduced the services utilized in health care, shelters, police services, and the judicial system for high-needs participants; $7.19 was saved from moderate-needs participants.

In Alberta between April 2009 and June 2014 43.5 per cent of housing first clients had mental health issues. During the same time frame 44.7 per cent of housing first clients had physical health issues. It is clear that individuals with developmental disabilities have complex mental and physical health needs and require access to a continuum of integrated, specialized housing options that are available across the province, both in rural and urban settings.

In addition to having access to a range of housing supports, these individuals require access to other personal supports to live in the community. Access to a range of community-based housing options is an outstanding need for Albertans. As Albertans endure this tough economic climate, it is critical to be reminded of the fact that getting people into stable, accessible, and affordable homes reduces the strain on other services. People successfully housed through housing first programs are spending 83 per cent fewer days incarcerated, making 51 per cent fewer emergency room visits, and spending 67 per cent less time hospitalized.

Many of the people who struggle with homelessness have a need for permanent supportive housing, not only for assistance during a temporary period. Permanent supportive housing, when combined with a range of housing first wraparound supports and an increased supply of low-income affordable housing, is demonstrated to be a cost-effective method of addressing homelessness by assisting formerly homeless individuals to remain housed rather than just accessing more costly interventions in the health and justice systems. For example, the province may spend up to $100,000 annually to support a homeless person in the health and justice systems versus perhaps $40,000 to serve them through good supportive housing facilities and services. Not only is affordable housing a basic human right, but for a province in an economic downturn it makes fiscal sense. I have no doubt that the members opposite will agree with me on that point.

I would also like to take a moment to acknowledge the tremendous work already being done by the provincial government and Albertan communities. I've spoken about the housing first program, through which 12,250 homeless Albertans have been housed. More than 4,200 have graduated from the housing first program since 2009. Out of 3,631 women housed through housing first from April 2011 to September 2015, 49.9 per cent have self-reported being exposed to or fleeing from a family violence situation. The Ministry of Seniors and Housing works closely with the ministries of Health and Human Services to ensure that those receiving housing supports have access to the additional resources and supports they need.

Many excellent community-based organizations work closely with Alberta Health Services to ensure access to addiction and mental health services. In addition, AHS, or Alberta Health Services, has contracts with operators for supportive living beds, targeting individuals with chronic mental illness. Special-needs housing through the Ministry of Health provides operating subsidies to nonprofit organizations, municipalities, and housing management bodies that provide subsidized housing to approximately 1,300 Albertan households.

Finally, I would like to acknowledge the great work that is being done by the Student Run Clinic, an organization founded by medical students from the University of Calgary, which provides health care services to Calgary's vulnerable population. I believe the government in collaboration with local community organizations has the opportunity to reduce the increased barriers for vulnerable Albertans, especially those with mental and physical issues.

This motion reaffirms my commitment and this government's commitment to the most vulnerable Albertans in these challenging economic times. Albertans living on the streets or in unsafe housing such as couch surfing or emergency shelters represent an insufficient use of public spending. As such, affordable housing for vulnerable Albertans reduces stress on public services. Moreover, affordable housing increases the overall well-being of individuals, families, and communities by reducing the risk of violence, sexual and economic exploitation of vulnerable Albertans.

Thank you so much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Motion 501, to "urge the government to review current policies and strategies with a view to increasing community capacity to deliver transitional and low-barrier housing for vulnerable Albertans suffering from complex mental and physical health needs."

Before I begin, let me state for the record that the Wildrose is one hundred per cent committed to protecting Alberta's most vulnerable, especially when it comes to providing real housing solutions for those with complex mental and physical needs. Recently my colleague the Wildrose shadow minister for Health released our mental health strategy, which maintains our strong commitment to improving mental health services. Part of this is assessing access to shelter and how difficulties accessing shelter are compounded when combined with other health factors.

Mr. Speaker, this is just one type of the common-sense ideas that Wildrose is putting forward. Given our common-sense, best-practices approach we support this motion to review the current policies. The review proposed in this motion is absolutely needed. I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow for joining us in calling this government to account in this area. These are systemic problems which need to be addressed, and it is up to this Legislature to bring them forward when cabinet will not.

So let's talk about some of these problems. This motion is targeted toward Albertans with complex needs. This means multiple issues, which can include mental health and/or addictions, developmental issues, involvement in the criminal justice system, problems finding and maintaining housing, and so on. As a province Alberta needs to be innovative and flexible and co-ordinate between many different programs and services in order to help vulnerable Albertans with these needs. One of the most important things we need to do is to ensure that persons with disabilities and with complex service needs have access to a safe and appropriate range of appropriate housing options. This starts with community capacity, with ensuring that appropriately skilled human resources and other community supports are in place to serve this unique group of clients.

To provide some background to this Assembly, in February 2013 Edmonton hosted the AHS-PDD Best Practices Symposium. This conference drew on the expertise of service providers and respected researchers to create balanced policies on living and housing for those with complex needs. Mr. Speaker, I'm concerned that this government is not reading legacy best practices, so let me read a passage from theme 2 of the AHS-PDD best practices statement.

There is compelling evidence that persons with developmental disabilities and complex service needs achieve better outcomes and higher quality of life when they reside in appropriately supported independent living homes in the community.

I appreciate that this government was just elected in May, but let me take this chance to remind them that there was an institutional government that was there before this government, and it will be there after it. Reviews often tie up the functions of the government that should be focused on helping the most vulnerable. We all understand the importance of social services and supporting the most vulnerable members of our communities, but we are concerned that this government is getting caught up in endless reviews. We cannot stress enough that viable, substantial, actionable improvement must be the end goal of all policy reviews. Protecting the most vulnerable is something that we all need to be concerned about.

Wildrose supports this motion as it shares the spirit of our own recommendations. I hope it renews Alberta's commitment to build community capacity to deliver transitional, low-barrier housing for vulnerable Albertans suffering from complex mental and physical health needs. I also encourage all members to support this motion in helping set up this cabinet's agenda for them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and speak in support of this thoughtful and important motion. I stand both as a nurse and as the proud co-chair of the mental health review that was so recently completed. One of the first actions Premier Notley took as Premier . . .

Some Hon. Members: Name.

Ms Larivee: Yes, I know. Sorry.

. . . was to establish the Alberta Mental Health Review Committee to comprehensively review addiction services, mental health services, and the mental health system. At that time the Premier appointed both myself and the Member for Calgary-Mountain View as co-chairs, a truly nonpartisan effort. Together we travelled the province to hold engagement sessions with individuals, including those living with addiction and mental illness and their families, NGOs, professionals, First Nations and Métis people and communities, front-line workers, community groups and associations, government ministries, and service providers.

We received during that time nearly 2,900 responses to an online questionnaire and over 100 written submissions and presentations. Throughout that process we resoundingly heard everywhere we went in Alberta the significant concerns with the lack of this type of housing, that has existed in this province for so long. Inherently, all those who came to share their thoughts on the review understood that access to safe, secure, appropriate, and affordable shelter is a fundamental human right. Mr. Speaker, they understood that people with complex mental health needs have greater difficulty than others in accessing housing and other supports. They understood that when these individuals cannot access housing, there is both a personal cost for those individuals and their families and an economic cost for all of us. These individuals are overrepresented in Alberta's homeless, which is incredibly unfortunate. Homelessness both complicates and amplifies the symptoms of addiction and mental health problems and also makes it more difficult for those individuals to get needed services.

Our conversations across this province made it very clear that this long-term lack of adequate housing has greatly increased the personal suffering for these individuals and for their families. Not only is there that clear personal cost, but as the member pointed out, Mr. Speaker, there is great economic cost to the province as a lack of adequate housing for these vulnerable Albertans leads to far more costly interventions. Obviously, this is a lose-lose situation for all of us, and it makes both ethical and fiscal sense to start working across all jurisdictions to begin to address the marked deficit of adequate housing for these vulnerable Albertans, that has lasted for so long, as was requested by so many during that extensive consultation.

Mr. Speaker, the review team compiled all that we heard during the review and put forward the recommendations in our report entitled Valuing Mental Health. Upon reviewing those recommendations, our government accepted the recommendations from the report and committed to progressively implementing them over time, including committing to collaborating across jurisdictions and departments as well as with NGOs to increase the availability of permanent supportive housing for those Albertans with addiction and mental health issues, who have difficulty accessing other forms of housing and supports. Together we can improve current use and future planning of housing and prevent homelessness due to addiction and mental health.

I welcome this motion as complementary to our committee's recommendation and look forward to the support of those in this Assembly to better address the needs of our vulnerable Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today very much in support of this motion. I'd like to just start off by thanking the Member for Calgary-Bow for bringing it forward. My experience around housing is primarily around homelessness in our province. I spent many years of my career working with the poorest of the poor in our province, as did my father and most of my family. While some of what I'm going to talk about focusses a lot on addictions, I do want to be clear that housing is needed for more than people with addictions. It's just that my primary experience, of course, has been around people suffering from addiction issues, that are usually primarily related to mental health issues.

I do want to start by telling one of my favourite success stories of my career about a young lady. I won't name her. If she's watching, she'll know who I'm talking about, though. I was running one of the Mustard Seed facilities, and I got a call from a gentleman who said: "I have a niece who's arrived at my house. She's suffering from methamphetamine addiction. Her parents have kicked her out, have cut her off, are not providing any more resources to her because of the frustrations associated with that addiction." He didn't know what to do, as most people wouldn't. I think most of us here would appreciate that. If your niece arrived suffering from a methamphetamine addiction, which is a very serious addiction, what would you do?

I had to tell him, Mr. Speaker, that all my beds were full. "I can't take her; try calling here; try calling there; try calling there." He hung up. He tried to call all those places. They were all full, too. Not enough housing, not enough facilities that could deal with somebody suffering from this. So I gave him another list, and he called them, and he called that, and he called that. He called back; he still had nothing. So finally I went out to my staff, and I said: "What are we going to do? This guy sounds so scared and so frustrated. He doesn't know what to do." So we agreed to put this individual up in a motel until a bed came open. They brought her to our facility. I'll never forget her. She was probably weighing in at 80 to 85 pounds, looking terribly ill. We put her up in a motel, helped her detox, to go through that. Then she was able to make it into one of our beds and was able to go through our programs. She ultimately would be sober for a year, would move on to become my executive assistant while I was the executive director there, and then ultimately went to Mount Royal College and just this year graduated with a degree in accounting and has her CPA.

The reason I bring that up is because without housing or resources, this person couldn't succeed. It is the first and most important step to being able to help somebody in that situation to be able to move forward. If we can't even provide basic shelter, food, and the basic needs for somebody like that, they can never move forward. In this case this person was able to move forward and become a very productive member of society, which is excellent.

When my father started the Mustard Seed in Calgary, there was only the Booth Centre that had housing. There was nowhere to go. It was almost always full. He would often, I remember, try to call local churches and stuff to try to get individuals who needed help to be able to sleep there, particularly when it was cold because of the concern about people freezing to death. I can remember that sometimes, particularly when it was cold, Mr. Speaker, he would bring home individuals from the Calgary streets to sleep at our house. My dad always worked late at the Mustard Seed, and he would often, mostly on Fridays, bring home people. Now, I have five brothers, and we would often on a Saturday morning race down, all six of us, to see who dad had brought home. Sometimes my mom would be very upset because he didn't use sheets on the couch, different things like that, but they would always welcome them into our home, and we would feed them. Often, I think, we had a tremendous impact, but we could not have the impact that we did later, once we had housing units. So dad and his team and the volunteers and all the donors worked very hard and began to build housing all through Calgary, and now, last I checked, they're able to house over a thousand people a day through the Mustard Seed programs. It is absolutely critical that we are able to provide housing. That's why I support this motion.

I will also echo my colleague from Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo's comments that the time for discussion on this issue is done. We know that this is important. This motion, I hope, will help move this issue forward. It's time for action, and I strongly encourage this government to stand up for what they say they believe in and to make sure that we're able to provide the most adequate housing for all the areas that people need in our province, to make sure that we can have more success stories like my former executive assistant, to make sure that single moms and kids can get into homes, to make sure that people suffering from alcoholism can get the help that they need. As a province, Mr. Speaker, I strongly believe that we will be judged by how we treat the least fortunate amongst us.

So I challenge you to do that, and again I ask all of my colleagues to very much support this motion. I thank the Member for Calgary-Bow for bringing it forward.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I've seen your other brothers, and I can only imagine you coming down the stairs together.

The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak in support of this motion. Ultimately, everyone deserves to be housed. Everyone deserves to be supported in moments when they find themselves in need. Not only is this the compassionate answer, but it's ultimately more financially responsible. Jail isn't the right place for people who've been unfortunate enough to fall into poverty as this results in increased interactions with the law going forward for these individuals.

As was pointed out by the Member for Calgary-Bow, housing for supports costs considerably less. The average annual cost for housing for supports is $40,000 for an individual compared to an estimated annual cost of about a hundred thousand dollars a year for emergency room costs, hospitalization, jail, and other expenses. People who are successfully housed have 83 per cent fewer days incarcerated. They have 51 per cent fewer emergency room visits and 67 per cent less time in hospital. I feel that these statistics bear repeating because this isn't an issue just about the individuals; it's about government as a whole and how we want to respond to things going forward.

Mr. Speaker, I've heard from multiple groups in my constituency on this issue, including community service advocates as well as a number of municipal leaders in other areas. It's also an issue I was very familiar with in my work at Student Legal Assistance. We would often see people who would come into conflict with the justice system, and in many cases these people had just gone down an unfortunate path. They had lost their housing for whatever reason, often as a result of a medical emergency in the family that imposed additional costs on them, sometimes as a result of losing jobs, and sometimes just as a result of the incredibly high cost of housing, that has sort of begun to become the case in Calgary and in other places throughout the province. These people would lose their homes, and then they would come into conflict with the justice system. That would result in criminal charges, which further marginalized them and pushed them further to the outside because once they had been convicted on criminal charges, they then had difficulty finding employment, which made it difficult for them to afford housing.

This issue was also recently raised by a group of doctors working with an organization in my riding, about the cost of discharging people from a hospital into homelessness, which is interesting because similar costs can be seen when we discharge people from a correctional institution into homelessness. They often come back very quickly and not for reasons of being people that need to be locked up but for reasons of just being marginalized.

This issue was also raised in one of my very first meetings with the chief of police right here in Edmonton. Mr. Speaker, it's often the case that, unfortunately, individuals who suffer from mental health and addictions and who have been rendered homeless as a result of this wind up turning to the police because they are essentially the emergency room of society, and those are the only people they have left. This is not only incredibly costly personally for the individual who is homeless, but it's incredibly costly for the system generally.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to point out that homelessness disproportionately affects indigenous persons, and this homelessness can often result in poorer health outcomes and increased interactions with the justice system. As we know, indigenous people are often overrepresented in our justice system, and as we move forward in my ministry to try to address this particular issue, I think it's critical that we be able to address the underlying drivers of this problem, one of which is this issue of a lack of affordable housing.

I thank the member very, very much for her incredibly helpful motion. In summary, I suppose I will simply sum up by saying that ultimately this is about giving people back their dignity, but it's also about saving on costs to the system as a whole.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise on the motion before the House and speak to this. In my view, this is of utmost importance. During my time on city council in Calgary – a lot of members probably don't know this – I chaired the Calgary Housing Company for three years, which at the time was and probably still is today the largest landlord in the city of Calgary, at that time about 10,000 units and about 25,000 people living in those units. While it was a good thing to do, what's sad is that it's probably still the largest landlord in the city of Calgary today, and probably the same thing is true for Edmonton and every other city in Alberta that has a public housing corporation.

What I think I learned during that time, Mr. Speaker, is that having this transitional housing and the services to help people get into a home and have the wraparound services that they need is not only the right thing to do – and it's clearly the right thing to do – but it's actually also good business. It's both, interestingly enough.

Mr. Speaker, I heard the hon. Justice minister talking about some of the things that happen in the justice system, and there was a word for it or a phrase for it when I was on city council. It was called the catch-and-release program. If you have someone that needs care – you know, some people are just low income, and they need support, but other people need more than one support. Some people have mental health supports that they need, some have addiction issues, and if you don't give the wraparound services, then they end up on the street again. They end up in the hospital, they end up in the court system, and they end up in the health care system again and again and again. It's no good for the health care system, it's no good for the courts, it's no good for anything, and it's surely – surely – no good for the citizens of this province.

That's why I'm going to support the motion. It's the right thing to do. It's something that, frankly, while it's a good motion and I'll support it, probably should be done every three to five years anyway. It's not that it can't be done right; it's just that societal changes happen on a regular basis. Sometimes it's a matter of what drug is on the street. It sometimes is a matter of what country immigrants are coming from, because different countries have different backgrounds, different political backgrounds that affect the supports that people need when they get here, different languages that they need. Somebody from a war zone obviously needs different care than somebody from a western European country when this happens. There are just people that are born and live their whole lives here that need help, too, and they all need to do that.

Mr. Speaker, I have to say that I congratulate the member for bringing this forward. Vulnerable Albertans need, deserve, and ought to get the care that their individual circumstances require, and it will never happen by accident. It will only happen if we in this House agree to do it. It will only work if the government – the government is in control; let's be clear on that – commits to working with municipalities who are dealing with the issue, if the government commits to working with NGOs, if the government commits to working with charities, other organizations that care for people that need supports and really gets behind it and digs in and does it together.

Mr. Speaker, if there was ever an issue where we're in it together, I think this is it. As the saying goes, there but by the grace of God go I. Every one of us in a different circumstance could lose our job, could suffer from mental health, could fall into addiction.

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to stand up and speak in favour, and at some point later I will sit down and vote in favour.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to rise and speak in support of this motion. As a long-time advocate for affordable and supportive housing it is a pleasure to see how much time we are devoting to this issue in the 29th Legislature. Thank you to the Member for Calgary-Bow for recognizing the need for housing for persons who are the most vulnerable in our communities.

I am wondering if any member of this Assembly has been involved in building transitional or low-barrier housing for vulnerable persons in their communities. I have, and I think that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and possibly the Member for Calgary-Hays also have. If so, they will know the challenges faced by organizations who do so: finding the capital funding, then finding the operating funding to provide the needed support, then the NIMBY campaigns by local residents – these are usually very ugly, and they attack those most in need of housing – and then you have to navigate between government ministries to create the right kind of housing and so on. So kudos to the organizations who have successfully navigated the current barriers to creating the needed housing for Albertans with complex mental and physical health needs.

Given the current challenges to creating and sustaining the right kind of housing, I would like to highlight one organization in my riding that is providing housing units to these Albertans. Brittany Lane Housing Co-operative in my riding has set aside six units for persons who are part of community living and two units for persons with mental health challenges. These residents are part of the housing co-operative that by its nature provides support and opportunities to volunteer and take an active part in community life.

There are now a number of academic and community-based research results that have demonstrated that a housing first approach for vulnerable persons is cost-efficient and reduces demands on hospital emergency rooms, emergency responders, police, the justice system. But, more importantly, it's a path to wellness, community integration, and community contribution by these people.

All communities struggle with this issue. The Alberta Rural Development Network recently released a study on rural homelessness. In it they note that some rural communities have a greater need of housing for those with complex mental and physical health needs than those in the major urban centres.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge all members of this Assembly to support this motion. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. House leader for the Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to also rise and speak in support of the motion. I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Bow for bringing the motion forward. I would also like to perhaps see if she might be able to give me some advice in the future as to how one could be so successful at the private members' draw. That streak that she's been on in getting these wonderful numbers is both impressive and something to long for at a future date.

So much has been said, and so much I support. I know there are lots of other speakers, so I'll keep my remarks very brief. I agree with the Member for Calgary-Hays, who spoke about the need to be reviewing these sorts of projects on a quite regular basis. The need to assist is so great, particularly as pointed out in the motion, for those with "complex mental and physical health needs."

I just want to spend a very brief moment urging the government as it certainly seems the motion is going to pass with overwhelming support. As the government, you know, moves quickly to act upon this motion, which I'm sure that they will be doing, inside the motion it speaks to "strategies with a view to increasing community capacity." Only because I've had a number of folks in the Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills constituency contacting my office about underutilized existing capacity, I just want to urge the government, when the review is conducted, that they will look not just to shiny, new announcements, as sometimes can be so attractive in politics but, you know, look at the great capacity that we're increasing. I know that there are a number of units in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that are currently set aside for low-income housing and those with housing needs that are currently not being utilized for a wide variety of reasons. I just think it's so critically important that we maximize the capacity we have and then move to try and expand that capacity.

So in the vein of co-operation and knowing that my full support is already behind the motion and some of the things that have been said, I'll be happy to continue to listen to the debate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to a motion that speaks to an issue that deeply affects the communities I represent. It's an issue that I'm pleased to hear we have much support for in this House.

You know, in the many meetings I've had with residents and stakeholders in Edmonton-Centre, there's been one request that I've heard from pretty much every group, whether it's local community leagues, business associations, seniors' groups, nonprofits, my municipal colleagues, or at our consultation with the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce and the Finance minister in the fall. They've all asked for one thing, and that's increased government investment in affordable, accessible, and supportive housing.

Mr. Speaker, we're seeing an unprecedented level of growth in Edmonton's downtown right now. It's fantastic. The construction of the new arena is sparking a new era of investment, some real excitement, some genuine revitalization, but with that is also coming an increased awareness of the challenges that we face in a lot of our core neighbourhoods for individuals who are homeless or precariously housed.

The Member for Calgary-Bow brought forward some statistics, you know: Edmonton is currently home to as many as 600 men and women who are considered chronically homeless. Those are individuals who've been continuously homeless for a year or more or have a disabling condition that's led them to experience at least four episodes of homelessness in the past three years. The majority of these individuals, Mr. Speaker, live in our central neighbourhoods.

Now, as the Member for Calgary-Bow noted, these individuals face some complex challenges with their mental or physical health, and it often involves addictions or substance abuse. As she noted, the research clearly shows that these challenges are most effectively addressed when these individuals are first provided with a stable, safe, and secure place to live. In the case of the chronically homeless it's essential, as has been mentioned by some of the other members, that the housing incorporates wraparound support services that help them address their complex physical, mental, and emotional health needs.

A great example here in Edmonton: a facility called Ambrose Place, which provides a home to 42 aboriginal men and women who are challenged by disabilities and substance abuse, some of whom were homeless for as long as 40 years. Ambrose Place is a wet facility. It operates on a harm reduction model that aims to help the residents moderate and reduce the harms that come with the use of drugs and alcohol while also providing supports to address their underlying physical and mental health issues. This is a model that's been proven to improve the physical and mental health of the individuals it serves while dramatically reducing costs for the communities that they live in. However, in February of last year Ambrose Place had over 100 people on their waiting list waiting to secure a space there.

Mr. Speaker, if we're going to make serious gains in the area of poverty reduction and the elimination of homelessness, all orders of government must come together at the table to co-ordinate our efforts, to increase and improve our stock of transitional and low-barrier housing for the most vulnerable and needy among us.

As the Justice minister mentioned, just this past Saturday I had the opportunity to also speak with Edmonton's deputy chief of police, who echoed conversations I've had with many community groups, that being that when we take people off the streets and we give them the dignity of a safe, secure place to live, we cut costs to our system. It reduces the need for police officers to act as mental health and social workers, which reduces our municipal costs.

It frees up hospital emergency rooms and beds and reduces the need for expensive urgent care and treatment of the effects of untreated, chronic conditions.

Mr. Speaker, the residents of Edmonton-Centre have made it clear to me that they stand with government in the commitment to look out for our most vulnerable during these challenging economic times. I'm pleased to hear that's true for members on both sides of this aisle. They are in favour of our government taking all possible steps to invest in and encourage the construction of the affordable, accessible, and supportive housing that we so desperately need.

I thank the Member for Calgary-Bow for bringing this motion forward, and I look forward to working with colleagues on both sides of the aisle to see this initiative realized. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I feel like I'd be remiss if I didn't acknowledge the comment made previously by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills about the member having a bill last session and a motion this session. It's true that that is amazingly good luck in the draw.

The other thing that is true is that there was a very intense campaign right after the member was elected to have the member thrown out of this House and to have the member recalled. I have to say how proud I am today to hear all members of this House speak in support of the motion and how proud I was last session when we unanimously supported the bill that was being proposed by the member as well. I think it goes to show that the potential that individuals have in this House is immense, and no matter how you ended up here, you have an opportunity to make great change for Alberta.

I have to say that the piece around complex mental and physical health needs I think is really timely. I think this is important if we continue to – we have massive deferred maintenance when it comes to our social and affordable housing in this province, so a number of them will have to be taken off stock and replaced or will experience major modernizations. I think thinking about those two barriers is certainly a priority as well as, of course, looking at community capacity and how we can increase that. Times are tough financially in this province. But as members have mentioned, if we don't make an investment in affordable housing, certainly, times will be tougher not just for those individuals but for our society down the way.

Thank you so much for the comments that have been made by members on all sides and, most importantly, to the member for bringing up this important topic for debate today.

The Speaker: Seeing no other speakers, I would invite the member to bring closure to the discussion.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the members who stood up and spoke to my motion. I'm so incredibly happy that every member here again is in agreement. It seems so. Thank you for that.

I also wanted to echo what the minister just said, that with me being almost recalled, I wouldn't have had this opportunity to present this motion and I wouldn't have had the opportunity to present my private member's bill that would help victims of domestic violence be safe. I just want to say how proud I am to be the MLA for Calgary-Bow.

Well, it's no secret that there is a housing crisis here in Alberta. With my private member's bill passing in the Legislature last session, we gave people hope for ending violence here in Alberta. It was a small step forward to end violence against women and girls and domestic violence in this province; however, we still have a lot of work to do. I would like to add that although this motion is specific to persons with complex mental and physical health needs, this motion is also to help all vulnerable Albertans, which also includes people who are affected by domestic violence.

Housing is a key factor in addressing the problem. Homelessness and domestic violence often go hand in hand. Frequently, domestic violence is a combination of physical, sexual, or emotional abuse. Due to this, many vulnerable people, especially women, are leaving their partners to seek safety for either themselves or their children. Women that flee violence are forced to deal with many significant barriers such as inadequate employment opportunities, lack of accessible and affordable housing, and too often are discriminated against by landlords when they're just trying to find a safe home. Because of this, women and children are often homeless.

As I stated before, access to safe, secure, appropriate, and affordable shelter is a fundamental human right, and every Albertan deserves a warm and safe place to call home. We as legislators owe this to the people here in this province.

Again, thank you so much.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 501 carried unanimously]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we've done a lot of very good work this afternoon, and I thank all members for their input into these important decisions and for their participation in these debates. As such, I'd like to move that the Assembly stand adjourned until 7:30 this evening.

7:30 p.m.

Monday, March 14, 2016

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Good evening. Please be seated.

Committee of Supply

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order, but before we proceed with the business of the evening, we have a new person at the table. I just would like to take a moment to introduce him. We have Trafton Koenig. Trafton was born and raised in Edmonton and obtained his undergraduate degree from the University of Alberta in 2005. He also holds a law degree from the University of Ottawa and a master's degree in international law and international relations from the University of Kent in the U.K. Outside of work he likes to run and travel, and he's combined them by completing long-distance road races on three different continents. A lot more energy than I've got. Trafton works as a lawyer in the Parliamentary Counsel office and has been with the Legislative Assembly since April 2013. So please join me in welcoming Trafton to the table.

Supplementary Supply Estimates 2015-16 General Revenue Fund

The Chair: Hon. members, before we commence the consideration of supplementary supply, I would like to review briefly the Standing Orders governing the speaking rotation. As provided for in Standing Order 59.02, the rotation in Standing Order 59.01(6) is deemed to apply, which is as follows:

- (a) the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may make opening comments not to exceed 10 minutes,
- (b) for the hour that follows, members of the Official Opposition and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (c) for the next 20 minutes, the members of the third party, if any, and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak . . .
- (d.1) for the next 20 minutes, the members of any other party represented in the Assembly or any independent Members and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (e) for the next 20 minutes, private members of the Government caucus and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak, and
- (f) for the time remaining, to the extent possible, the rotation outlined in clauses (b) to (e) shall apply with the speaking times set at 5 minutes as provided in Standing Order 59.02(1)(c).

During the first rotation speaking times are limited to 10 minutes. Once the first rotation is complete, speaking times are reduced to five minutes, and provided that the chair has been notified, a minister and a private member may combine their speaking times, with both taking and yielding the floor during the combined period.

Finally, as provided for in Government Motion 10, approved by the Assembly March 9, 2016, the time allotted for consideration is three hours.

The Committee of Supply has under consideration the 2015-16 supplementary supply estimates, and I will now recognize the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to move the estimates.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's great to have another runner here. Just don't run near me because I'm quite poky.

I'd like to move the 2015-16 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund. When passed, these estimates will authorize an approximate total increase of $106 million in expense funding for the departments of Education, Justice and Solicitor General, Labour, Municipal Affairs, Seniors and Housing, and Treasury Board and Finance. These estimates will ensure, for example, that enrolment in our schools is fully funded and that the affordable supportive living initiative has the capital grants it needs to develop long-term care and affordable supportive living spaces across the province. These estimates will also authorize the transfer of $25 million of the previously approved capital investment vote to the expense vote within the Department of Environment and Parks to provide funding to the town of High River for building flood mitigation berms.

Let me add that estimates are consistent with the fiscal plan as presented in the 2015-16 third-quarter fiscal update, which has been tabled in the Legislature.

While the government will have more to say on the specifics of our plan moving forward when we deliver Budget 2016 on April 14, since we are here to debate the supplementary estimates, I believe it's worth while to recap some of the information I presented during the third-quarter update. Right now we are experiencing the steepest and most prolonged slide in oil prices in recent history. Oil prices have dropped more than 70 per cent in the last year and a half, and projections for a quick recovery have proven wrong. There is no minimizing the impact that low oil prices are having on people's jobs, on our economy, and on the government's fiscal situation. This is a once-in-a-generation challenge.

The decline in oil prices has resulted in a 20 per cent drop in government revenue, in part from decades of inaction on diversification. This represents a one-year drop of $6.4 billion in government revenue. It is now crystal clear that we cannot continue the same old way of doing things. The same old way of doing things includes knee-jerk reactions that we know won't help, like laying off teachers and nurses.

Our government won't do that. We won't make a bad situation worse. We will continue to partner with job creators to promote economic growth, and we will offer support and opportunity to those who have fallen into hardship during these tough times. Simply put, we'll continue to put the best interests of Albertans and their families first. We'll also continue to make fiscally prudent decisions, as these supplementary estimates infer.

As this Legislature knows, we have put a freeze on political and management salaries. We are also reviewing the number of agencies, boards, and commissions, and we are freezing or limiting operating budget increases so that we can focus available resources where they are needed most. Madam Chair, these supplementary estimates make clear where our government believes those resources are needed most.

We committed in the election that we would fund school enrolment, and with these estimates we are delivering on that. We are providing schools with $51 million for high-quality K to 12 education. That's nearly 400 more teachers in the classrooms all across Alberta.

Madam Chair, these estimates also make clear that the government remains committed to deploying the tools at our disposal to focus squarely on growth. Our capital infrastructure spending is one tool that we are employing which will provide much-needed jobs and lay the groundwork for continued success into the future.

Our economic development initiatives are another tool to support jobs and business development. Specific actions taken thus far include a new petrochemical diversification program worth up to $500 million, supporting access to capital for growing businesses through ATB, using the heritage fund to invest in Albertans and their jobs, and supporting a growing venture capital industry.

Madam Chair, as I wrap up these remarks, let me remind members that when passed, these estimates will authorize an approximate total increase of $106 million in expense funding for the departments of Education, Justice and Solicitor General, Labour, Municipal Affairs, Seniors and Housing, and Treasury Board and Finance. The ministers and I, that are responsible for these departments, will be pleased to answer any questions from members of the House.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, did you want to combine your time with the minister back and forth?

Mr. Fildebrandt: I will take 10 and then allow the minister a chance to answer some questions if that's all right, Madam Chair.

I want to begin by thanking the minister for joining us this evening to debate and discuss the supplementary supply before us today, but it is seriously concerning that this government has failed to budget properly for these worthy initiatives in the first place. To budget properly means not coming forward in the same year, just months later, asking for more money. If a government does need to bring a supplementary supply forward, it should also bring forward a budget impact statement. We should know what the impact of this new spending will be on total levels of expenditures and the deficit and our balance sheet.

The fact is that the 2015 budget was passed at the end of November, just three and a half months ago. This Assembly and all Albertans deserve more information about what new spending will be contained here. Nothing in this supplementary supply is an emergency. Asking for supplementary supply isn't necessarily an uncommon or unreasonable thing to do. However, is it possible that this new spending could have waited for the budget itself in just a month? The private sector knows when to tighten its belt. It wants to avoid insolvency, so it cuts costs when necessary. But our government seems incapable of doing the same.

The government's bill here will ask for an $11 million transfer to Horse Racing Alberta. Now, this isn't tax dollars we're talking about; it's gambling revenue from the lottery fund. It's an agreement for a portion of slot machine revenue at race tracks. That's largely because revenues are up from the new facility at Balzac. I want to know if the hon. minister could give this Assembly some more information about the urgency of this transfer, why this transfer will not wait for the budget.

After years of unchecked government bloat, why is it that the government cannot find $106 million in savings to cover the costs that we are being asked to provide to the government here? We'll go through a few ministries.

Education. Now, the Wildrose supports our teachers, some of the best in the world, some of which are in my family, and we believe that every Alberta child should receive a world-class education. But could the government please specify how many new teaching positions the $33.8 million will create when the department already has an existing budget of $4.3 billion?

The Department of Labour. This young government already has an appalling record of job creation. One of its budgeted expenses, $178 million over two years, has already been committed, and it has failed to create a single job. A program has already been cancelled, yet somehow this department is here today asking for another $3 million in unbudgeted funds. I must say, Madam Chair, that I am skeptical that the department is being responsible with the funds already provided to it. I would like to know if the minister can explain what programs this money will fund and how many jobs it will create.

Seniors and Housing. How many spaces for seniors will the $50.5 million create? The lack of detail here is extremely concerning. This government cut $50 million from the 2015-16 budget for infrastructure support for the affordable supportive living initiative, the ASLI grant. To give credit where credit is due, even when the former government's budget of March 2015 was going to increase this funding from $50 million to $91.5 million, the new government undid that. So you gave the green light to long-term care and dementia spaces without putting the money in the budget that they rolled out first. Now the government wants to put the $50 million back in when it was already there just a few months ago. We support Alberta seniors, but why was the money not there to begin with? Why was it removed from the budget that they already had? The money was in, then it was out, and now it's back in again. I'm happy it's there, but we need to know why this was. We would like to know if the minister can explain why this wasn't in the fall 2015 budget to begin with.

One project that I have advocated for in my constituency is in urgent need of funding and is covered in this bill. The Newell Foundation's Bassano continuing care centre: this is a critical, critical project to the constituents of Strathmore-Brooks and many people around southern rural Alberta. The intent of the program is to integrate independent living, supportive living, long-term care, primary care, and acute care into a fully functional design that supports a variety of community amenities. The integration of these resources will enhance the financial and building design efficiencies of the centre.

In 2015 the Newell Foundation received the approval of a $3.4 million grant from ASLI for 34 affordable supportive living spaces at the Bassano continuing care centre. As well, the governments of Canada and Alberta jointly approved $9.6 million under the investment in affordable housing agreement 2014-19 for the project. This was all put on hold without any good reason given when the NDP came to power and decided to review these projects despite having all-party agreement among the candidates in my own constituency: PC, Wildrose, NDP, and even the Green Party.

Madam Chair, with NDP financial tactics like this Albertans have real cause for concern about the political games being played here. The NDP are hurting Albertans where it matters most: in their pocketbooks, in their seniors' care, in their health care, and in their education. The New Democrats will say that this is only a single decimal point on a $10 billion deficit, but, you see, that's the point. It is a deficit. It is a massive deficit. It is a record deficit, that we haven't even come close to in this province, and the gap must be closed. We should be spending less, not more. This is not how we're going to move the ball towards a balanced budget.

Madam Chair, this government needs to learn to budget prudently. The ministers have an obligation to answer real questions about new spending in their ministries. We understand they have talking points, and that's okay, but when our questions veer from your own talking points, I ask you in all honesty to give us real, substantive answers. We are willing to support this if you will work with us. The Minister of Finance has an obligation to tell us how this new spending, much of it positive, will impact the deficit. What level will the deficit be once we approve this spending? What will our total expenditures be? We should not have to wait for the budget for that.

I look forward to hearing from the ministers with their answers to our questions. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. Just to recap a little bit, supplementary estimates are part of the normal legislative approval process to ensure that planned government initiatives receive the necessary funding to move forward. Supplementary assessments seek approval from the Legislature for spending requirements that were not expected during Budget 2015 and for changes, including urgent, unforeseen expenditures like floods.

The amount of money that Horse Racing Alberta – I can see it on pages 37 and 36 of Treasury Board and Finance, the reason supplementary supply estimates requested. It says there:

$11,083,000 to address the higher than anticipated flow-through portion of net revenue generated by slot machines at Racing Entertainment Centres which funds the Horse Racing and Breeding Renewal Program in accordance with an agreement with Horse Racing Alberta.

You can see what we had estimated; $28 million was going to flow through. As was indicated, with the opening of a new track partway through the year, that amount of money now is $39,083,000. So we are remitting the flow-through amount of $11,083,000 to HRA for that additional amount of money.

There is a reduction in expenses as a result of our pension fund expenses being less by $9,083,000, so we have a supplementary amount of $2 million that we're requesting. That's how this department is coming forward with supplementary estimates.

This is amongst the lowest supplementary supply estimates in the last 15 years. These minor increases we're talking about should come as no surprise as they were reported in our recent third-quarter fiscal update, which was released on February 24. As has been noted, the government is seeking supplementary estimates in a number of areas, adding up to $106 million. They're based on the government's third-quarter fiscal update, as I said, that we released on February 24.

I think I don't need to get into talking about how HRA will use these funds. This agreement with them works out to their benefit, obviously, this year, in 2015-16, and we're certainly hopeful that they will see a benefit in going forward with regard to a renewed agreement with them in future years.

Thank you.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you to the minister for responding; however, I don't think the substance of most of my questions was answered. We're talking about a very substantial sum of money here.

Now, the minister is correct when he says that we've done supplementary supply before in this province and that it's not unprecedented. What we're asking for, though, is that you exceed the standard of the previous government. You can do better than the previous government. Albertans expect you to do better than the previous government.

Now, the minister is quite correct when he says that this is, compared to historical examples, a relatively low supplemental supply of just over $100 million, but that is only because we're three and half months into the budget. Normally when you want supplemental supply, you're at the end of a long fiscal year. Well, we've had two budgets already this year. We're going to have a third soon. We just finished passing a budget in November, and we're being asked for more money. We're being asked to approve more money. Some of these are very good funds that we would otherwise support, but you've only been three and a half months into the fiscal year, and you've already blown your budget.

So, Madam Chair, the substance of my questions has not been answered. I appreciate the minister trying. I'm going to give him another chance here to explain why only three months since the budget was passed – three and a half months since the budget was passed – they have to come back here and ask for more money.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. The final thing that I'd like to say, I guess, is that since the budget was passed toward the end of November, the forecast deficit now – I've been clear about that – is significant, obviously. It's $6.315 billion. We know that, going forward, the deficit will grow much larger. We have looked carefully at oil prices and have a number of things that we'll bring forward with the 2016 budget that will mitigate the challenges in predicting oil prices going forward. The unprecedented drop in oil prices has made budgeting extremely difficult. There is no doubt about it. Like the rest of the world who are involved with revenues from oil production, we all hope to see stabilization occur in the years coming up so that we can do a more rigorous, accurate job of predicting where that's going to be, but it has been challenging. So the deficit is identified here, as forecast in the third-quarter update. That's what the deficit is.

Going forward, we will be bringing forward Budget 2016 in a very few short weeks, and then all members of this House will have an opportunity to debate that. We're here to debate supplementary estimates today, and I know members of the front bench who are here to explain their supplementary estimates will do a wonderful job at that. Mine are identified on page 36 and page 37, and I've explained those.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. To the minister: I appreciate the talking points, but I'm asking questions, very specific questions, that perhaps were not anticipated in the briefing binder. I'm asking for answers to those questions, very specific questions, and I'd appreciate specific answers. Now, you've given us a figure for the deficit from the third-quarter update, but we're being asked to approve new spending here above and beyond authority to spend money that the government already had. Surely what we are doing here will have some impact on the deficit. Now, I'm asking you to tell this House, even if it's just an estimate. Give us your best guess, Minister. What will the deficit be following the supplementary supply?

Now, you have referred correctly to the significant shortfall in revenues that the government is facing here, but we warned you about this in budget debates, and you warned us of fearmongering. We stood here and debated into the late hours of the night, telling the minister that their revenue projections were not just rosy but they were fantastically rosy. Everybody knew. Every member of this House not on the government side knew that their revenue projections would not even be close. We projected – we projected – that the deficit would be $9 billion. It turns out I was too optimistic, Madam Chair. We're now staring down a deficit that will exceed $10 billion. But during that debate the minister just said that we're scaremongering, we're fearmongering; trust the government. Well, we can't trust the government anymore. We've proven that their numbers cannot be relied upon, and that's why we're asking for real answers and real numbers.

Now, I asked some very specific questions that the minister's talking points I don't even think touched. I asked: could the government please specify how many new teaching positions the $33.8 million will create when the department already has a budget of $4.3 billion? That is a very straightforward question that I would hope either the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Education could answer.

Mr. Eggen: Ask me.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Okay. The Minister of Education seems very eager. I hope he's got very good notes, Madam Chair.

We asked very specifically why the ASLI grant was taken out of the last budget and is being put in now. It was taken out of the March 2015 budget in the October 2015 budget, and now they're proposing to put it back in. We're glad it's back in, but could the minister responsible for Seniors and Housing please tell us why it was taken out of the last budget and is being put back in now as unbudgeted money to begin with?

These are very simple questions. I'm hoping that the ministers can answer them. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Madam Chair. It's so great to see some new table officer action over there as well. Congratulations on your position. You had all of those hobbies that you mentioned before. You won't need those hobbies anymore because you'll be here for the rest – until the end of June for sure.

The hon. member was asking about Education. First, in general, around Education our sup supply is to reflect the increase in enrolment growth from our original estimates. So we saw the actual enrolment growth to 2.7 per cent for the 2015-16 year. It certainly was healthier than we had anticipated, which is great. I mean, it speaks to the high-quality education that we provide in the province and that families with children are more likely to stay where they are once they've rooted themselves into a school and into a neighbourhood. So the sup supply for us is that number, primarily.

Now, in regard to the $33.8 million that we've put in for that, that covers off, I would say, about 240 teachers' positions, FTEs. That's based on sort of all of the materials and extra money that are associated with those FTEs. So it's not just their wages, but it's the whole deal. I mean, that's great. We saw on an annualized basis, because we restored funding to Education based on the increased enrolment, more than 740 teaching positions across the province. That's what we need. We need high-quality teachers, especially those new, young teachers, getting into the system. Mission accomplished, Madam Chair. We did very well in that regard. Then on an annualized basis as well probably more than 800 support staff positions were spared by our restoration of funding. It's a good-news thing.

It's certainly very common, making those adjustments. Of course, the school budgets are always from September to September, and ours are from March to March, so you always see those K to 12 adjustments anyway. Then when we get the enrolment numbers – they don't come until later in the fall. That explains that.

The only other two adjustments I had in Education were actually two decreases based on the Alberta flooding numbers that we didn't require and then a delay in the Peerless Lake school project partnership that we have in northern Alberta. That was a $10 million thing there.

Yeah. I mean, it's very straightforward, and certainly it's interesting to make those calculations. I'm always happy to do so for the service of the public and transparency and the fine members on the opposite bench.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you to the minister for the answer. I think we got a little bit closer there, but I would specifically ask: of those teaching spaces you noted, is that how much it would create if you had $33.8 million going towards creating spaces, or is this $33.8 million specifically geared towards only teaching spaces? If it is towards other things as well, how much of that is towards new teaching spaces?

I also will repeat some of my other questions, which no one has even attempted to answer.

To the Minister of Labour... [interjections] We'll give the minister his chances. To the Minister of Labour. We need to know. Since you've been given $178 million over two years for the job-creation program, which has not created any jobs except for the minister's job, I must always add, and you're asking for another $3 million, how many new jobs will the new $3 million add?

As well, specifically we asked questions around ASLI. How many new seniors' care spaces will the ASLI funding provide? More importantly, why was the money removed from the March 2015 budget, in the October 2015 budget, and is now being budgeted again? We'd really like to know why the money keeps moving in and out and in again.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd be very pleased to answer the questions about the affordable supportive living initiative, otherwise known as ASLI. Of course, the supplementary amount of $50.5 million is requested to provide funding for this program. This actually was already in Budget 2015, but it was in the Ministry of Infrastructure's $4.4 billion that was set aside. The supplementary supply moves the funding to my ministry, just so that's clear. It's moving it over here.

I'm pleased to say that 22 of the 25 project proponents have received their grant approval letters. We're working with the remaining three proponents on their proposals. They're securing their land titles, development permits, and master service agreements with Alberta Health Services. Once these are secured, they will enter into an ASLI grant funding agreement, and the initial payment of 50 per cent will be issued to them.

ASLI capital funds were targeted to dementia and long-term care spaces as the need for these care spaces is urgent. Of these 25 approved projects approximately 2,200 units total have been created, but these have been started by the previous government also, and of course I've already said that we've targeted long-term care spaces as well as dementia units. The member opposite did talk about the Newell Foundation, and specifically there are 34 units that will be created through the ASLI program for them.

So I believe I've given the member some specific answers. Thank you.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you. Madam Chair, I think that was actually a very helpful answer. Thank you, Minister. I would ask for a point of clarification later. [interjections] Yeah, don't get used to it. A point of clarification from the minister, if she could nod one way or another, just on the ASLI grant: the money is simply being moved from one ministry to another; it's not being put back in? Well, that is just fantastic, Minister. Thank you very much.

I'll now give the Minister of Labour an opportunity to answer the question as to how many jobs the new $3 million will actually create. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you very much for the question. The Ministry of Labour requested a supplementary estimate for just over $3 million. This is to provide Alberta's employers with funding for skills training and development for their employees. This is dedicated revenue, fully offset. It essentially is money that we are getting from the federal government as part of the Canada-Alberta job fund agreement, and it must be used for the specific task of training. There's a very specific program set up with requirements for that.

The fact that we are asking for the supplementary estimate is happening because as part of the annual program the federal government adjusts its allocations to provinces and territories based on changes in their population and the availability of funds being carried forward from the previous fiscal year. The federal government confirmed our fund allocation in November 2015; therefore, this amount could not be part of Budget 2015, which was released in October. So we are receiving this just over $3 million specifically for training and supporting Alberta's employers and training their employees.

I'm happy to answer any further questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would actually like to ask the Minister of Labour a few questions. The first question I would like to ask is talking about the Canada-Alberta job fund. Nearly $3 million was transferred into this fiscal year from the previous year because of the slow uptake of the Canada job grant. This provincial government has an obligation to promote that job grant, so why is there excess funding? Also, what is being done to actually promote it?

The Chair: Sorry, hon. member. I should have clarified: did you want to do back and forth?

Mr. Hunter: Yes, please.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much for that question. Our intention is for the full $3 million or just over to be provided to Alberta's employers through this program. We are looking at an increase from $17 million to $20 million. This is an employer-driven program, which means the employer decides who gets the training, what type of training may be needed for new and existing employees. These are challenging economic times right now, so we understand that Alberta employers may not have the ability to spend on training and developing their employees. However, the federal government has made these funds available to us, and we are making sure that they are available for our employers in Alberta to use them and have that opportunity to continue to do so.

You asked me the question of how we are advertising this to our employers. I'm afraid I don't have a direct answer for you here, so what I will do is to find out more about that and return to you with an answer.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you to the minister.

The government claimed that their jobs program would cost about $178 million over two years. Last week a government spokesperson hinted that the plan was being reconsidered. I'd like to ask the minister: why are these funds not being used to offset this increase?

8:10

Ms Gray: Thank you very much for the question. On February 2 there were several changes in government, and one of these changes included an order in council which transferred the job-creation incentive program from the Labour ministry to the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade. That was effective immediately, so these funds are not available to my ministry to offset in this case.

Thank you.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you to the minister for that answer.

I would like to know, actually, though, from the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: is that money, that $178 million, still allocated for this year? Is this going to be rolled over to the next fiscal year? How much has been used? If you could just answer that, please.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair, and I'll thank the member for the question. Unfortunately, I'm limited as to how I can answer this question because it doesn't deal with supply, but I can tell you that we're continuing to evaluate the best programs moving forward that will provide the most support for our private sector. It's being reviewed, and I'll be happy to talk about it in great detail as of April 14.

Thank you.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. Now, the last provincial budget, introduced only this past October, allocated close to $100 million for workforce strategies. Before we approve further unbudgeted spending, it's important that we know the following: number one, how many Albertans were connected to available jobs with those funds? Number two, how many Albertans were provided with skills training so they qualify for new, in-demand jobs? Number three, how many Albertans benefited from employment services with those funds?

Ms Gray: Thank you very much for those questions. Those are all very good and important questions, but they're outside of the scope of this supplementary estimate process, because my $3 million that I'm here prepared to discuss has to do exclusively with the Canada-Alberta job grant program. These funds are all being used for the support of Alberta employers and making sure that they're able to train their employees, so I'm not able to answer your broader questions within the scope of supplementary estimates.

Mr. Hunter: Unemployment in Alberta is now at 7.9 per cent, Madam Chair, the highest in 20 years. What labour market programming and what specific results is this government anticipating from this supplementary supply, then?

Ms Gray: Through this supplementary supply we will continue to support the training under the Canada-Alberta job grant. To be eligible, Alberta employers must have current or potential employees who need training to fill current or future positions. It is expected that the individuals will be hired upon completion of the training. The program is available to increase the skills and competencies of current and future employees.

There are some requirements in order to receive this funding. Eligible trainees must be Canadian citizens or permanent residents.

The training providers must be eligible third-party training providers who are separate and distinct from the employer. The duration of training must be a 25-hour minimum within 52 weeks from the application approval. The type of training must be incremental, meaning that the training is in addition to the employer's invested training and would not have otherwise taken place without the grant. The training format is quite flexible. It can be e-learning, part-time, full-time, on-site, or in a classroom and must result in a form of credential.

Thank you.

Mr. Hunter: Madam Chair. I'm sorry. I'm not sure whether I heard what the answer was for the specific results that this government is looking for, anticipates from the supplementary supply. I'm looking for specific results.

Ms Gray: The specific results as a result of this supplementary supply are that the just over $3 million that the federal government has made available to our government and to our employers here in Alberta will be made available and can be used to provide training and support Alberta employers in these tough economic times.

The requirements for the use of the Canada-Alberta job grant have been negotiated with the federal government. They're very specific, and we must use the funds in this way. We do not have any latitude because it is considered dedicated revenue, so we must use it to fund this program and to provide training.

Thank you.

Mr. Hunter: Madam Chair, specifically what existing job training programs are benefiting from this increase? Does the government have any evidence to support that these programs are actually working here today?

Ms Gray: The requirements for the use of the Canada-Alberta job grants are actually fairly open. As I was reading the requirements: 25 hours minimum, must be Canadian citizens, and so on. This allows Alberta employers maximum flexibility in being able to apply for and receive this. We do need to use the frame that the federal government has provided for us, but outside of that it is a fairly open program, allowing employers to apply and to participate.

It does need to engage training on top of the training that the employer is already providing. I do think it's of note that you do need to use a third-party training provider, so this isn't to supplement in-house training but, rather, sending someone to a course or having them take a course online.

Thank you.

Mr. Hunter: I'd like to thank the minister for that answer.

I'd like to find out: how many employer-related stakeholder groups has the government met with regarding job-creation and skills-training initiatives recently, and how many were consulted on how these funds are best used?

Ms Gray: Thank you very much for the question. This additional $3 million comes about because the federal government adjusts its allocations based on changes in population. So this is money that was made available to us because of Alberta's population.

Consulting with employers about how to use these funds we cannot do because it's provided under a dedicated frame. We need to use it for training; we need to use it for training that meets the guidelines as I've read out. We can't take the money and use it for something else or change our minds about how we might implement it. We're in a very narrow box when it comes to using this Canada-Alberta job grant. That being said, the additional $3 million I think is a good thing right now, during the tough economic times, and supporting our employers in providing training for employees right now makes a lot of sense.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Minister.

Madam Chair, I actually have one last question, and then I'd like to turn the time over to my colleague from Drayton Valley-Devon. I'd like to ask the minister: specifically how many Albertans will undergo skills training as a result of these funds that are being allocated?

Ms Gray: Thank you very much for the question. I'm afraid that I can't give you a direct number because, of course, the training cost, depending on job type or what type of training, whether it's an in-person classroom for a week or whether it's an online course, varies greatly. So I don't know how to translate the $3 million into exactly how many hours of training or how many numbers are training. I will ask my department, and if we can pin down a quantitative answer for you, I'll follow up with you on that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. If it's okay with the minister, I'd like to go back and forth. Okay. Good. By the way, congratulations on your first day on the job here. You know, I think that there's an awful lot of us that can remember what it was like to be here the first day. You're doing a much better job than I think I ever did.

Here we go. I don't know if you have kids, but I just recently had my kids leave teenagehood and go into the university life. If I could take a minute or two just to brag, my eldest graduated this year from Grant MacEwan and has just been accepted at Concordia University in Montreal for a master's program in philosophy. So there you go. He's doing his dad's heart a lot of good here.

Now, when my kids were teenagers, like many of you, I think, in this Legislature, they would often come to Dad and say: Dad, can I have some money? Anybody here who didn't have their teenage kids do that? I don't know about you, but in the best parenting tradition of my parents – I learned a little bit from my parents. The first thing whenever I went to my parents and asked for money was: well, what do you need the twenty bucks for, son?

Mr. Barnes: Twenty? You only asked for $20?

Mr. Smith: Yeah. Shows you how old I am, okay?

So whenever my kids would come home and ask for money, I would say: well, what do you need the money for? They'd roll their eyes, and they'd look at me like I was stupid, and maybe I was, in their teenage eyes. I'd say: "Well, what are you going to spend it on? You know, what are you going to do with it?" Perhaps even more importantly: "Why don't you use your own money? Why are you coming to me? What is it that says that you don't have your own money and that you've got to come to me and ask for more money?" Finally, perhaps this is when you'd walk over with a bit of fear and trembling because you're not sure about the response you're going to get: "Okay, son. I'm going to give you this twenty bucks for tonight. When am I going to get it back? When am I going to get it back?"

I don't know about you, but this supplementary supply bill reminds me a little bit of these conversations. Okay? This government just passed a budget four months ago, and now you're coming back – and I get to be Dad – and you're asking me: can I have some money? I know some of you are going to roll your eyes at me, and you're going to pretend that I'm just really being unreasonable here. I know. But I think it's time that we had the old money conversation here in this House.

So I would ask the Minister of Education a few questions tonight, and I hope he takes it with the spirit that it's meant, an attempt from the father to the son to get him to consider just a little bit how he's spending his money. I want to thank the minister for his earlier answer because it sort of speaks to the first question, so maybe the first question can go a little quicker here. Why do you want this money? Well, you said earlier that it's about $33 million, a little bit more, that's needed to probably meet some contractual obligations. I think you said that it was 240 teacher positions that were coming out of this $33.8 million, at least a portion of that. If we could just start there, then we could move on. Did I understand you correctly when you said that that's where a portion at least of this money is coming from?

Thank you, Mr. Minister.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Madam Chair, thank you. Yes, in fact, my supplementary supply for K to 12 education is a total of $51 million for enrolment growth spending for the quarter. As I said, we can probably calculate that using a wider estimate of 240 FTEs of teachers.

Also, part of my sup supply is a $10 million decrease for the Peerless Lake project and a $7.2 million decrease from the flood fund, so the net is actually less than that. As I said before to the Finance critic from your party, it's a reflection of enrolment growth. We have made that commitment to funding enrolment, and it's very important because, of course, it allows school boards to make plans much more carefully and in a more realistic sort of way, and it also allows more surety around teacher positions, those teachers themselves and then having more consistency of the teachers in front of the kids. So I think it's quite a good investment, and I think that it's in keeping with the supplementary supply function, which is to make adjustments.

You noticed that I made adjustments up based on enrolment increase, and then I also made adjustments down based on projects that we deemed to be further down the road and/or money that was not required for the Alberta flooding. In sum, I think, you know, that we've done a pretty good job, my ministry, and we're working really hard to ensure that we have a good budget that will come forward for Education here in the next few weeks.

Mr. Smith: Madam Chair, you know, I can remember at one point in time one of my kids coming to me, having done some miscalculations in their own budget halfway through their university year and saying: Dad, I think I might need some money. Being one of those hard-working teachers that the minister is finding money to fund, while I worked very hard, sometimes the money at the end of my month didn't stretch far enough. So it was a pretty big deal for one of my kids to come to me and say: Dad, I have to have more money. I know that we had to have a very serious conversation because the money came hard for me. I guess the question I've got for the minister here is that I think the money is coming very hard from the taxpayers of this province. Many are struggling. So to miscalculate your budget for this year after only four months, and while you may have found some savings in other areas, which you should be lauded for – I thank you, and the taxpayers thank you – you're still asking for more money. Yeah, you're still asking for more money. Could you explain: why the miscalculation?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Once again, the reason that we need supplementary supply is that we have more students enrolled. The numbers come from the beginning of the school year, and then we calculate them from the end of September and then the end of October or November. That pretty much falls on the number of months between now and then, so once we had the increased numbers – we'll see this on an annual basis. It's quite common, right? We will hit the number of how many students are in our schools sometimes above, sometimes below, and sometimes closer to the money. This year, based on the numbers coming out from the end of September and then us calculating the end of October into November, we found that there was an increase, a 2.7 per cent growth. So this is the difference. I think that we would be hard-pressed to find people who would not be willing to make sure that we fund for enrolment growth in our schools across the province. We know that it's a very top priority for Albertans, and it's a top priority for this government, too.

I think that this is a fair choice to make, I think it's a prudent choice to make, and certainly I believe that I have the support of the public in doing so. In fact, as you did point out as well, I am also bringing $17.2 million in reductions to my same budget, based on calculations that we had made. You know, honestly, this is how it works with the supplementary figures, and we've actually hit pretty close to where we should be.

It's going to be difficult. The member and myself had a discussion just previous to the Legislature opening about enrolment and about the population of our province in general and then our school population specifically. It's not easy to do that, to make that calculation. We calculated lower, and it stayed high, which is good. I think it's a good-news story. I think that the same day that the hon. member and myself had that conversation in my office, ATB came out with figures demonstrating that our overall population was remaining strong and growing as well in the last 12 months.

We're always monitoring it. We always monitor based on the schools and their numbers when they come back to us. Those numbers always do change over time. I expect to see an increase in enrolment over this next school year as well, and we will probably be here around the same time seeing whether we came close or high or low or right on the money on that calculation next school year.

Thank you.

8:30

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Minister. I remember that conversation, and it's why I guess I'm a little confused and wondering about some of the figures. You said that one of the reasons for the increase in capital projects, the increase in, obviously, your supplemental bill here, has been an increased growth, yet when I look at the third-quarter update, it states pretty clearly that population growth is levelling off. The chart that's there on Alberta population and growth rate shows a steady decline starting around 2013. I guess I'm having a hard time. I'm a little confused. Maybe you could explain why the statistics that come from Alberta Treasury Board and Finance, which seem to state that there's a declining population growth rate annually in this province, are different from the ones that you're stating. If you could explain that for me, please.

Mr. Eggen: Once again, we can supply that information to the hon. member. Our numbers are from Treasury Board and Finance, and they made an estimation of that 1.5 per cent. We ended up with 2.7 per cent, so this is the difference to cover off that discrepancy in numbers. Yeah.

That's what we heard from the schools as well, who had the school kids in their classrooms. You know, they give us that information every fall as well, so it's pretty accurate.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I don't doubt that you're trying to use the best figures that you can lay your hands on. I guess it's just that if we want to use anecdotal comments and what we're hearing from schools, I know that the school that I was in up until last year is actually down in students. [interjection] Yeah. Actually, they are. I've talked to the principal, and I know that they are. I know that that goes up and it goes down across the province and that sometimes it's a very difficult thing to do, but I guess I would encourage the minister to make sure that not only are we looking at exactly what the student population is now but what the projections are because we do budgets based on projections at times.

Okay. Well, let's move on. Let's talk about what you're going to do with this money. In item 2.1 we have the operational funding. It says that it's going to be an increase of about $37 million. Could you, Mr. Minister, please tell me what is included in the operational funding, and what exactly will those dollars be used for just in a general sense?

Thanks.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Sure. Thanks to the hon. member and to Madam Chair. I mean, the vast majority of those funds in a school are directed to the teachers and support staff that make the school function. As I calculated for your Finance critic just earlier this evening, we could say that there's about 240 teachers' worth of funding in there if you wanted to use that as your base measurement, and that would include all of the materials and operational costs and supports that each of those teacher units do require. So that is one way of looking at it.

I mean, obviously, schools and school boards make their decisions about the funding that they need on the ground to make sure that their kids get the education that they deserve and need. That structure, I think, is quite successful in the province of Alberta. We fund our boards. The money passes through my ministry with direction and is 97 per cent distributed to the 61 school boards and other charter schools and so forth around the province. They make those education choices, and I think they do a good job. They make good choices based on putting teachers in front of kids and so forth.

We watch carefully over time, and certainly I've directed all of my school boards to be very, very careful with the funds because, of course, now more than ever these public funds are very difficult to get. Overall, I would tip my hat to how school boards work with their teachers, work with their principals and so forth to ensure that the money is spent in the classroom.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. Let's start digging down just a little bit, see if we can drill down. This would be sort of akin to when my children gave me vague answers for how they were going to spend money, and then we just had to drill down a little bit deeper. Item 2.2., the regional collaborative services delivery. It says that there's going to be an increase of $800,000 there. I guess my first question is this. Is the $800,000 for regional collaborative services delivery matched by funding from Health and Human Services?

Mr. Eggen: I have no idea.

Mr. Smith: Pardon me?

Mr. Eggen: I have no idea.

Mr. Smith: You don't have that knowledge? Sorry. Madam Chair, thank you. Would you be able to get that for us, please?

Mr. Eggen: Probably.

Mr. Smith: Probably or yes?

The Chair: Hon. member, if I can remind you that it needs to be on the supplementary estimates.

Mr. Eggen: Could you repeat the question, please?

Mr. Smith: Okay. Sure. Absolutely. I'm sorry. If you didn't hear the question, I'd be glad to give it to you again. Item 2.2, regional collaborative services delivery. Is the $800,000 for regional collaborative services delivery matched by funding from Health and Human Services? In other words, is it $800,000 from Education that is then matched by Health and then matched by Human Services so that it's a larger figure altogether, or is it just the $800,000?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Certainly, there are times where there are matching funds. In this allocation we're simply asking that the money be released to Education so that they can continue to fund their programs. Any Health funding that would have been required previously or Human Services funding that would have been required previously has already been budgeted for and, therefore, is not relevant to this discussion.

Mr. Smith: Madam Chair, thank you. Sometimes I can be a little slow, but I'm not sure. We have $800,000 budgeted for regional collaborative services. Was the answer telling me that you are not going to be matching that from Health and Human Services, that it's just simply a stand-alone figure of $800,000 and that when it comes to regional collaborative services, it's solely funded by the education system? If you can help me with that.

Ms Hoffman: I'm trying to say that there is no money – I'm not coming with any supplementary supply requests as Minister of Health. I'm not asking for any funds to be able to match in terms of this specific line item that you're referring to. So there is no Health component that we're asking for approval for today.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

Mr. Smith: Thank you for clarifying that for me because my understanding is that during a full budget, not the supplementary supply estimates, there would be matching funds, usually, for the regional collaborative services delivery. I just wanted to find out if it was one way or the other. Okay. You've given me an answer, so thank you. So the total funding for RCSD, the supplementary supply, is just going to be totally from the $800,000. [A timer sounded] Okay. Well, we can get back to this later.

Thank you.

The Chair: You still have one minute left in this first hour if you have another.

Mr. Smith: Do you want me to continue for the last minute?

Mr. Hunter: We'll cede our time.

The Chair: All right. We will continue in the rotation, then. The next 20 minutes will belong to the members of the third party.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. If it would be possible, we're going to take the first 10 minutes and then turn the final 10 minutes over to the members of the government. The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays and I are going to share the time.

Well, this process is sometimes called the Oliver Twist bill because it's, of course: please, sir, I want some more. You know, as much as I enjoy Dickens, I am concerned about a number of aspects of this, so I'm going to ask a number of questions. I'm going to just ask the ministers to sort of keep track of the questions, and then we'll hope that they can sort of take their time as far as the 10 minutes that they have to reply.

First of all, to the Finance minister. The Finance minister stated in his opening remarks, which I kept very close track of, that this is consistent with a third-quarter fiscal update. But I do have some concerns because there are a number of things that don't show up in supplementary estimates that were in the third-quarter fiscal update. For example, Minister, an additional $147 million in spending for the Department of Health. There is no supplemental estimate for the Department of Health. I'll ask you or the Health minister to perhaps give us some explanation as to that.

The next thing that I wanted to just mention was that I'm personally very gratified to see, for example, the Minister of Education finding the $17 million in his budget, which is from other areas, and also the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance and the $9 million balanced from the expense loan. Trust me; that does not go unnoticed. I think that demonstrates, at least to me, that you're looking for restraint in other areas of your budget.

I guess what I'm concerned about is: what about all the rest? What about the other departments that are asking for additional funds? Can they not find funds in their budgets similar to what the Minister of Education has done and what the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance has done? The Minister of Environment and Parks: that's a transfer from capital to expense, so we're not going to worry about that. But, for example, the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General: an additional $8 million for correctional services expenses. I can understand that. Obviously, we need to pay those staff. But $8 million represents .6 per cent of your total budget. Could you not find $8 million somewhere else in the budget to offset that $8 million as your colleagues have done?

The Minister of Municipal Affairs: an additional allocation of $9 million for Chestermere for some flood DRP programming. Hey, you know, that's fine. That's an understandable request under supplementary estimates. But $9 million, again, represents a mere .6 per cent of your total budget. Do you mean to tell me that you could not find .6 per cent of your total budget in savings elsewhere as your colleagues the Minister of Education and the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance have done?

Finally, you know, moving on to the Minister of Labour. I agree that the program that is present in the Ministry of Labour and the $3 million for the labour market programs is good, but once again this is 1.6 per cent of your total budget. It seems to me that the first attempt should have been made to find savings elsewhere, and other ministers have proven that that is possible. Indeed, the third-quarter fiscal update shows that some ministries have lower than expected expenditures for a number of reasons. I would have hoped that rather than asking the taxpayers of Alberta for an additional 100-plus million dollars, some of that should have been found by being more diligent and being more, shall we say, prudent in terms of the spending.

Finally, Minister of Treasury Board and Finance, I do have to take issue with – and since you brought it up, I think this is entirely within order – the quote of “decades of inaction on diversification.”

Sir, I will tell you that if you want to continue to perpetuate that myth to Albertans, I guess you are welcome to do so as an attack on past government. But when you do so, you in fact attack the very Albertans who have been diversifying our economy: people in the construction industry, that has grown by nine times in the last 30 years while our economy has grown by five and a half times; people in biotechnology, who have built that industry to a $1 billion industry that employs 4,600 people; people who produce canola, the production of which has gone from 30,000 tonnes to 20 billion tonnes in the last 45 years, worth $6 billion; and your favourite, the ethane-based petrochemical industry, which – indeed, I'm glad you have a program, but it is hardly a new program, sir; it is a continuation of an existing program – has grown to $15.5 billion and employs 7,700 Albertans.

So, Minister, if you want to continue trashing past government, that's fine because from time to time we do the same back to you, and that's okay. But I would ask you, sir, that at least you should acknowledge the efforts and the accomplishments of those Albertans who have in fact diversified our economy, rather than simply trashing them at the same time.

Those are my questions. I'll turn it over to the Member for Calgary-Hays.

The Chair: Hon. member, do we want to give this side a chance to respond? Then we can come back to you. That's a 20-minute segment in all.

Mr. McIver: No. We're going to take our 10, and then we're going to listen intently if that's okay, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Okay. If you prefer to do it that way.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. We'll carry on here. I'm going to start off on a little bit of a different tack. Now, it says in the fiscal plan highlights in the third-quarter update that the unfunded liability for the teachers' pension plan is unchanged at $18.9 billion. I guess my question would be about the other unfunded pension liabilities. Are they up, down, or not changed? I would like to know what that is because those are big numbers when you talk about pensions, and of course it's a big number for the taxpayers. But equally or more important is the fact that the people that toil for this government night and day and do great work for the citizens of Alberta have earned those pension payments. They need to know that they will be there when they are retired and that they have them coming, so knowing what's happening there.

Along with that, I would like to know from the Finance minister or whoever might have the answer: what effect will it have on the unfunded liabilities should our credit rating slide further... [interjection] Yes. Thank you for that. I'm glad you're trying to listen, Minister. I'm grateful for that. What effect will it have on our unfunded pension liabilities if Alberta's credit rating slides further and we end up paying, say, a percentage more on all the borrowing we're doing?

Of course, with the government's projected $10.4 billion deficit – and, respectfully, the Finance minister hasn't said that out loud publicly that I've heard, but the Municipal Affairs minister managed to say that out loud in front of the municipal meeting, the AUMA breakfast the other day, in part of her remarks, so I'll take from that that the two ministers are in agreement. So, again, how will that change it?

Now, moving along a little bit here – and I'm trying to go a little bit fast – in personal income tax revenue it said that it decreased $762 million from budget. To the Finance minister. My concern for both this year and for the future is: how many people prepaid their taxes at the end of last year for several years ahead? I've heard from several people that actually are fairly well off that they prepaid their taxes as much as four years in advance in order to catch the lower tax rates before the government increased tax rates. One fellow told me that he prepaid $10 million worth of tax, and his accountant said that he'll be $800,000 ahead four years from now because he did that.

My concern, obviously, for the government's revenue and for paying for services that Albertans need is that if it's already decreased by $762 million and some people have prepaid their taxes, then of course I wonder how much less the government is going to have in the next few years. Particularly, I'd like to know how many people prepaid and how many dollars were prepaid because that might give a sense of how much less revenue the government will have in upcoming years.

Also, does the government have any idea of how many high earners have left Alberta because of the higher personal and corporate taxes that the government has put in place? If those people have left, then of course we can't look forward to their taxes in future years. I keep hearing – again, the plural of anecdote is not data, but some of the anecdotes are that for some people their holiday home in B.C. is now their permanent home because, unbelievably, now it's cheaper to pay taxes in B.C. in some cases than it is in Alberta. So the Alberta advantage has sailed across the border since this government has been here. As a result of that, I am asking these questions.

Now, I'll just revisit in the last 40 seconds – and these are questions that I asked the other day and that I didn't get an answer for. For each of the supplementaries, on capital I'd like each of the ministers to say exactly what that money is being spent on, which schools, which hospitals, which roads, which seniors' housing, whatever it happens to be. It's not a budget issue, so the ministers should know. If they didn't actually know what the money is being spent on, they obviously should not have asked for it in the supplementary benefit. Because they did, they obviously should have a very full and detailed answer for every single ministry on where each of those capital dollars is going.

In the last six seconds I will say that I would love to hear those answers. Thank you.

Mr. Ceci: Madam Chair, I'll start off for the government side and then pass off to other people to address specific questions that we have.

To the member opposite, around me saying about the decades of inaction on diversification, I mean that very narrowly around the other side but in particular around the significant drop in revenues from nonrenewable resource revenues. They are significant, and they have made the job of budgeting quite difficult. The whole world is experiencing that, too.

One of the first things we did when we came in was put a more stable income tax situation in place with regard to a 2 per cent change on corporate and a marginal tax raise for the rest of the population. That has helped our situation as a government and the ability to be able to pay for necessary programs and services that this government provides across many different platforms for Albertans.

There has been, as was indicated, a drop in personal income taxes; corporate taxes, not so much.

We do not know the exact number of people that are prepaying in advance, as was being requested, but I will see if that information is available.

I want to point out that when we bring forward the full tabling of the results of the 2015-16 budget, what you will see is that not only this ministry and the one to my right, Education, but most ministers have found savings in their departments as a result of being asked to look closely for savings, recognizing that we're in a tough financial situation. Over $250 million has been found. Going forward, we may need to do more each and every year.

The situation with regard to the credit slide: as you know, one bond-rating agency has identified that we're now AA plus as opposed to triple-A, and the other two agencies are saying that we're triple-A. This is something that all companies and governments are experiencing in terms of re-evaluations by those credit-rating agencies. I've said before in this House, and I'll say it again, that when we borrow as a result of the bond-rating agencies' information, the people lending money have already factored in – they can read balance sheets just as well as anybody else, and they know the challenges that we're experiencing going forward with revenues – that change, and we're accounting for that. We will show that in our future budget as well.

I think I'll turn it over to the Health minister with regard to any sup changes on the Health side.

Ms Hoffman: I'll speak to both Health and Energy. Neither ministry, Health nor Energy, has any supplementary supply requests that are being debated this evening, so zero.

There are other ministers who can answer, of course, as well.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much. I appreciate the opportunity to respond to the question because, of course, I think it's important for all Albertans to understand sort of what we're doing here and what we're dealing with. In terms of Justice and Solicitor General the primary cost drivers for my ministry are population and inflation. In fact, I was somewhat surprised to discover that the incarceration rate is actually increasing at a slightly faster rate than the population. We're still trying to pin down the exact reasons for that. So those are the main drivers.

When I came in, the projected overage in my ministry was significantly higher than this $8 million. It was closer to the $30 million range. We were looking for a significant amount of funds originally, and we projected to try to bring down corrections. We found a lot of that money by transferring $13 million from other divisions. We also have been running significant vacancies. We're tending to run at about a 7 to 8 per cent vacancy rate with the exception of corrections. A lot of the overage in corrections comes as a result of overtime because there were vacancies. So the opposite problem, I suppose, would be the answer there. We looked for a significant amount of that money. We found a significant amount of that money. We didn't quite get there, and that's what this $8 million is.

I think the other important thing to note is that in my $1.3 billion budget for Justice and Solicitor General about half a billion dollars, so $500 million of that, just over two-thirds, is in fact funding for police. That's obviously something that is also driven by the same costs, population and inflation, and we didn't feel that this was a moment that was wise, I think, to sort of cut down on the funding flowing to our police partners. So we were unable to find money there, but we did find a significant amount of money elsewhere in other places.

This $8 million was just sort of the piece that we couldn't quite get to. Actually, the ministry found a significant amount of funds internally. The $8 million is just the piece we weren't quite able to do. Going forward, we intend to do a number of things to address that. But that wasn't the question in this case, so I won't answer it now.

Thanks.

The Chair: The hon. minister of seniors.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll talk specifically about Seniors and Housing and the $50.5 million that is identified here. It is for the ASLI program, which is the affordable supportive living initiative. This was actually in Budget 2015, but it was in the $4.4 billion that was set aside in the 2015 capital plan which showed up in the Ministry of Infrastructure. So it's just actually a transfer to this program.

We have 25 projects that have been approved and are going ahead, and they're working on providing seniors' long-term care, dementia care in 15 communities across Alberta. It's approximately 2,200 spaces at this point that will be created for people, and we know that there is a great need in these communities. I don't have the detailed list with me right now, but I could make that available to the member if he so wishes.

Thank you.

The Chair: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. Certainly, we understand that Albertans do expect the government to be good stewards of the public purse and to be strategic about business plans and wherever possible plan ahead for funding pressures, and I can say that my ministry has been tremendously diligent in that responsibility. However, there are circumstances at times that require adjustments, and a responsive DRP program, or disaster recovery program, is part of that. It is essential to keep Alberta's communities strong.

Disasters are not predictable in number or magnitude, so ministry-based funding does not include funds for specific disaster response and recovery efforts. So from that perspective, not having been addressed in the budget, we do need to move forward and request the funds in terms of the 2015 south-central Alberta DRP in order to help the residents of Chestermere and Rocky View county who suffered damage to their homes after severe weather last July. It also will provide support to the municipalities that were affected in terms of ensuring that their municipal infrastructure that may have sustained storm damage is repaired as well.

Ensuring that our municipal partners are supported in times of need, ensuring that Albertans are supported in times of disaster is a commitment we do not take lightly. Our focus is on safe, resilient communities, which is why we are asking for the supplementary funding.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other ministers wishing to comment?

That takes us to the next segment, the next 20 minutes. I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: All right. Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I don't think that I'll take my full 20 minutes. I will take the opportunity, however. I know you're all very disappointed. [interjection] Maybe I will; maybe I will. We'll see how this goes; we'll see how this goes. I will go back and forth with a variety of ministers.

I'll make just a brief opening general comment. I'm curious as to why we're here at all and why we're doing supplementary supply. I mean, I know technically why it needs to happen. But with the House sitting a full month later than standing orders would have had us come in, there was ample time. The reason standing orders have us go in the first Tuesday in February is so the government has the opportunity to introduce and for all of us to fully, thoroughly, and robustly, if that's a word, and, I would hope, respectfully debate a budget in time for the end of the fiscal year so that we don't have this process of either interim or supplementary supply.

You know, I share a lot of the concerns that I've heard here tonight. There seems to be very little effort in a meaningful way to address costs, and I have a worry that I carry over from the interim supply process, that there seems to be at the very least a gradual increase in costs, certainly not a flattening or even a decrease. That's a significant concern at a time when revenues are more than just tight; they're plummeting. So every process, every bill, every interim supply, supplementary supply sends a signal to the people of Alberta, and I'm afraid the signal that we're being sent here is not a positive one. I worry what we're actually going to see on April 14, when we finally do see the full budget.

I will start with the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. You'd been asked earlier by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster or by Calgary-Hays about the $8 million supplementary supply estimate. You've indicated it's for overtime expenses. I'm wondering if you could elaborate a little bit on any of the work that's been done by you or your department to evaluate staffing level requirements, to hire if there are vacancies, to avoid costs for overtime, or if these are the sorts of things that are embedded in a contract, if as contracts come due, you will find ways of reducing the overtime allocation.

One thing I guess I want to be very clear about. When we're talking about correctional workers in any context, that's a thankless job. It is a difficult and dangerous, thankless job, and I think nowhere is that more true than in the remand system. I want to be very clear that I have a tremendous amount of respect for the work that they do, but at the same time, when we see overtime expenses causing us here in this House to allocate extra dollars, I always wonder if there's an opportunity perhaps to find regular full-time employment as an alternative to that. I'll let the minister answer that question.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair and to the member for the question. I actually have some very exciting answers to that question. Actually, just to be perfectly clear, certainly I saw my colleagues and myself I know I certainly struggled significantly to find internal reallocations, so I think that to say that we didn't look is a little bit unfair.

In terms of going forward, as I've mentioned, the sort of cost driver in my ministry generally and the cost driver specifically in terms of incarceration is the people who are incarcerated and the cost of the staff who are guarding them. Obviously, there is a contract signed that's in place, so there is an increased cost associated with that, and we will be honouring that contract going forward. But, as the member points out, I think he is correct that we maybe need to start doing a better job – and we are working to do a better job – of ensuring that we aren't sort of incurring these additional overtime costs, and part of that starts with ensuring that we're properly staffed up.

The cost of running a correctional institute can be a little bit unpredictable because it depends on sort of who's coming in and when. It can be difficult to predict, so the result of that is that we have introduced what are called float pools within adult correctional facilities to backfill vacant positions so people that are coming in and are already trained up can start taking on shifts right away and can be there if someone falls ill or if someone is unable to come in for whatever reason or if we have a higher capacity than anticipated. This is obviously important because the challenge has been that, you know, when we see an increase in the remand population, we can't just grab someone off the street to fill in. They have to be trained. Correctional workers are extremely well trained, and they have to be well trained because their position is dangerous and they do some very important work.

Another thing we're doing is that we've procured some new shift scheduling software, so we're hoping that that will help to achieve more efficient staffing in adult correctional centres. The combination of those float pools and the software should help us to optimize manpower so that we can reduce overtime so that at least with respect to the hours we're paying for, we're paying at straight time rather than paying at overtime rates. Those are some of the things we're moving forward with.

A lot of our other initiatives are going to relate to ensuring that we are using correctional institutes for the right people, if you will. Often correctional institutes are used to incarcerate people who have basically been criminalized due to homelessness, who have addictions problems, who are suffering from mental health. Moving forward, we will be working on multiple solutions to address those problems and ensuring that people who are sort of coming into and out of correctional facilities in very few days, only two or three days, who are obviously not presenting a danger to the public but are in there for whatever reason, are maybe being directed to more appropriate places.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you, Minister, for that thoughtful response, especially about trying to reduce the incarceration rates for at-risk populations. I know we've had one particular case I'm aware of that was a real tragedy, and I know obviously you're aware of that as well. So, yes, anything we can do to reduce incarceration rates, obviously without jeopardizing public safety, is absolutely welcome.

I'm going to ask the Minister of Municipal Affairs about one of my topics that she and I have talked about in the past and one that I'm sure all of us wish we'd have less need to talk about. That's the disaster recovery program. The $9.045 million: I know we've talked about that being related to the flooding in Chestermere. My questions are: what exactly is that very specific number based on? How much confidence do we have that that is, in fact, the right number?

I know the event was last summer, so I wonder if perhaps enough time has passed. Given that it's relatively recent that the province has indicated that we as a province will be funding DRP, especially for residents, if in fact we've received all of the applications, if there's a deadline, and in fact if we know that that number is what likely it's going to be, is there a risk that it goes up or an opportunity for it to go down?

I also assume, with the rest of that program, that it is, in fact, eligible for federal reimbursement as well. If so, what percentage? I suspect you know that answer. I believe it's 90 or may only be 80 per cent now. That's why I'm asking. I believe there may be some changes there. If you could speak to that.

The ongoing challenges, I know, that we've had with the expediency with which claims have been processed in the past: is any of this money going to be used to help improve that process, or are there other areas where that's happening?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, DRP is enough of a passion for me. One of the very first things I did was tackle the concern, talking to them in High River about the challenges, so absolutely moving forward. Having implemented the case manager tool, the Chestermere DRP is our first chance to use that, and I'm really looking forward to getting feedback on that moving forward.

In terms of DRP, like a lot of other items, there's something to be said for the fact that there's some estimate based on what the municipality presented to us in terms of the homeowners they felt were affected who had let them know. We hope the majority of the claims are in. However, it's not completely closed yet, so there is the opportunity still that it may be changing. We do, however, build into that estimate a certain contingency fund, so there is actually the opportunity to come under. I would think it would be highly unlikely we would go over.

With a budget that is 97 per cent grants based that we provide to the municipalities, obviously at this point in the game, with no budget for disasters because we don't anticipate what they are in any year, we did have to bring it back for approval by the members of this Assembly. There being no consistent line item for disaster recovery in the budget, it is something that we need to ask for your permission to go forward on.

In terms of the federal funding, the federal government essentially asked us to pay the deductible, for lack of any better term, on any disaster that happens. We will not have reached that, so this will be all on Alberta taxpayers. None of it will be reimbursable from the federal government.

I do believe I have addressed all your questions, so thank you very much for sharing them.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Minister, and thank you, Madam Chair. That's interesting. I didn't realize there was a deductible. Can the minister please tell me what that deductible is? Given that there was a significant time lag from the event itself till now, is there anything that we could have done to combine it? I just am very curious. I've never heard that there was, in fact, a deductible for federal reimbursement.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. Certainly, recently the federal government raised the amount that was required to be paid, which is part of the challenge going forward with disaster recovery and why we certainly need to have ongoing conversations about choices we want to make as a province. However, at this point what it sits at is $3 per Albertan, which adds up to a substantial number, so you have to have a fairly substantial disaster before federal funding kicks in.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Minister.

Madam Chair, I'll pose my final questions to the Minister of Finance. You talked earlier about credit rating, and that's obviously a big concern that we've discussed in this House. We've discussed it in person. We know that one agency has downgraded Alberta. There are two that have yet to downgrade Alberta, but I'm worried, frankly, that once the budget is released and they can see those numbers, we face further risk of credit-rating downgrades. I'll ask again: have you calculated the cost of further credit-rating downgrades, either by the other two agencies that have yet to downgrade Alberta or perhaps by even further downgrades from the agency that already has downgraded Alberta? What do you feel is the risk that the other two agencies who have not yet downgraded Alberta will downgrade once the budget is released or at any other time?

Thank you.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question. I can tell you now that we're planning to go out and visit, of course, the three bond-rating agencies and talk with them directly about the upcoming Budget 2016 and our efforts in Budget 2015. I think that as a group government has taken significant effort to ensure that our expense growth in Budget 2015 stays under population plus inflation. We will probably be putting a chart in Budget 2016 that shows where that is tracking, both for Budget 2015 and Budget 2016, what we project, and previous years' budgets and where it projected with regard to population plus inflation and where the government's growth on expenses year over year was. We're concerned, of course, with regard to the revenues that are coming into the province and how we're going to address all of the programmatic needs that Albertans still require.

I'll be going out to see the three bond-rating agencies and talking to them, as I said, about the results for 2015 and where we're planning to go in 2016. While the three different agencies have made changes to the province's credit rating, they all link that decision to the drop in global oil prices, commodity prices, so Alberta is not any different than any other jurisdiction in that regard. In fact, many companies are feeling the same downgrades to their ratings with regard to those agencies. Oil prices are beyond our control but not our response. Our response: as I said, we're trying to find efficiencies. We're working very hard to ensure that we stay at a reasonable rate of growth, around 2, 2 and a half per cent on our expense side, and we're trying to bend that even further.

The borrowing we do already recognizes the challenges on our balance sheet. We still have a really good balance sheet, but the borrowing we do is already priced to reflect the changes that we know are coming with regard to – let me just back up. It already reflects the challenges that we're experiencing. People, like the agencies, look at different things. Some look at debt to GDP, and we know that as of this third-quarter report, that was 5.7 per cent for 2015-16. Others look at revenue to GDP, and we know that that is going to be a challenge for us.

I just want to say that I feel like we're already paying the price. When we do borrowing, they understand the difficulties we are in in terms of the situation and the diversification, that is not as robust as it needs to be to ensure that we have revenue lines that don't take the significant hits that this one has taken. Going forward, we're going to be talking to them and explaining our situation fully, and they will do what they do.

I do want to say that Standard & Poor's already has complimented Alberta. They say that we have exceptional liquidity, very strong financial management, and we have some budgetary flexibility. I know that's code for different things, but we have said that we're not going to bring in additional, significant taxes. That's what Standard & Poor's is kind of pointing to, but that's not what they're going to hear from us when I go and see them in approximately a month and a half.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. This seems to be taking more of my time than I thought. This is a very enjoyable exchange but I also think important. There are a couple of things the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board has said here that I just want to pick up on quickly. Yes, the price of oil has gone down, but you know, it's very clear that the bond-rating agencies link Alberta's credit rating not just with the price of oil but with our overall fiscal performance. You've alluded to something here that I really do want to pick up on. One is, of course, those spending choices that this government makes. The other is the revenue side. When you talk about fiscal flexibility, you've just said that you will not bring in significant tax changes. Will you bring in insignificant tax changes? What is an insignificant tax change? Are you going to do anything at all on the revenue side? I'm very curious, and I know Albertans are very interested in that as well. That's one question. Will Budget '16 raise any taxes or fees or levies of any kind?

The second question is: have you calculated the cost of any potential future credit-rating downgrade and what that will cost Albertans as we go deeper and deeper into debt and borrow more and more?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Chair. Let me be clear. We have already talked about the changes to revenue going forward. People here have heard several times that we have a significant challenge getting acceptance for pipelines across this country. One of the things that we believe is necessary to create that greater social licence is a levy on carbon pricing across the economy, and we are doing that. We have said that we are bringing that in. That is going to be revenue neutral, back into the economy one hundred per cent. I am going to only say that that's the change that will happen. There will be no insignificant changes. There will be no changes to any of that.

The Chair: Hon. members, we move into the next section, and we will call on Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you also to all of the members in this Assembly for the important . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, do you want to share your time?

Mr. Carson: Oh, excuse me. I just have one question, and then it will go to the minister. Thank you. Sorry about that.

Thank you, Madam Chair as well as all members of the Assembly for the important and insightful questions that they have asked so far tonight. As I said, I only have one question for the Education minister. Now, we know that a priority for this government has been supporting our vulnerable students; namely, those who are English language learners as well as First Nations, Métis, and Inuit students. To the minister: what does this funding do to ensure that those students continue to receive the necessary supports that they need?

Thank you.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you for the question from the member. Madam Chair, certainly, it's very important for us to maintain and to strengthen our funding for English language learners as well as for First Nations, Métis, and Inuit students. We have been working hard to do so, and certainly the supplementary money we put in here is a continuation of our commitment to fund enrolment.

Perhaps the Chamber and the public hear me talking about funding enrolment over and over again, but the depth and the breadth of that responsible choice is significant in every corner of our public education system. The supplementary supply is a reflection of our supporting the ELL and FNMI students. As you probably know, we take a significant number of students from abroad, from different nations around the world. We know that a new Canadian student's degree of success is directly dependent on their success in learning to speak English here in Alberta, so we put a great emphasis on that. We've developed plenty of expertise around the province in accommodating the needs of new Canadian students in our classrooms.

I'm just so proud of the programs that have been set up, that I've visited in Calgary and Edmonton and other centres, that are not just teaching the three Rs to our new Canadian students but are helping to accommodate them in the broadest possible way into Canadian culture and the welcoming sense of community that we provide here in the province of Alberta. It's one of the hallmarks. So often education is the front line for so many services that we disburse to our population. Certainly, we want to use our school outreach to extend to all students but especially to students that have special needs.

Another area that we're working on very diligently – you might have seen some of that in the paper this morning – is around the restoration of the elected ward for Northland school division in 2017. That preparation work is already beginning and is bearing a lot of fruit.

I think that working together with my colleagues in Health and Human Services and fortifying each of those school sites as a contact point for all provincial services is a very good strategy. Already some preliminary work that we have done has provided some modest gains in measurements around attendance and so forth. I know there are high expectations across Northland school division, but I believe that that is an investment that will reap considerable rewards.

I know our commitment to FNMI funding is significant, and certainly the supplementary estimate that we have here today is a direct reflection of that, putting our money where one's intentions are and where the priorities are for our government.

I'm so proud of our caucus and cabinet, that they again and again reinforce the importance of making sacrifice in other areas for us to make sure that we fund education properly from K to 12, be it for ELL students, for First Nations, Métis, and Inuit students, for any number of our 659,000 students for which we are responsible for education here in the province. I'm just so proud every day to see that our government is supporting those students and their education regardless of the economic circumstances that we find ourselves in.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other government members wishing to ask questions?

If not, we'll move on to the final segment. The rotation now allows for speaking times to a maximum of five minutes. We will begin again with the members of the Official Opposition.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Airdrie, did you wish to combine your time back and forth?

Mrs. Pitt: Please, yes. I should be brief. I'm really just looking for a clarification. I'm going to bring up ASLI again. Minister, you mentioned that the $50 million for ASLI was coming from Infrastructure. We don't see that in Infrastructure as a reduction. Can you explain how that works?

The Chair: The hon. minister of seniors.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the question. The $50.5 million that is being transferred from the Infrastructure budget to my ministry was in the capital plan 2015. My understanding and what I've been briefed on is that it has been transferred, so there should be a reduction. I can follow up with the hon. member about that, but certainly there's not new money. It's just the same amount of money. I can follow up further. I'm not sure why that wasn't – it certainly is a transfer from one ministry to another.

Mrs. Pitt: Okay. Thank you. Yes, I'd be interested to know where that reduction comes from. If not Infrastructure, where do we see that reduction?

I did see a list of projects that you were funding. How did you come to those conclusions? Did you honour all of the existing ASLI contracts moving forward, or were there some decisions that you made in there?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the question. There were 31 projects, that were approved by the previous government, that we did a rigorous assessment of in the fall of this year. Of those projects, 25 of them are going ahead. There were six that we found didn't sort of match that rigour of what we wanted. It fulfilled on, certainly, providing long-term care and the dementia care spaces that we need. So after the thorough review that we had in the fall, we did agree upon 25. Twenty-two of those 25 have already, you know, had the approval letters. Three we're still working with the proponents of to make sure that everything is in place.

We're certainly doing our due diligence to make sure that these projects are solid and that they're going to be serving the communities that they need. That is the current situation for the ASLI program.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mrs. Pitt: Well, thank you. You answered some questions down my list. The delay in the funding for the groups: do you know what impact that had on these groups? How much longer do we expect to wait for the other three that are waiting for funding?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Yeah. Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, there was a delay in the funding – the member is quite right – but we felt that as a new government we needed to look at these. We are responsible for these projects moving forward, so we needed to do our due diligence to make sure that these were solid projects that were serving, certainly, the needs of the communities. So there was a delay. We know that more needs to be done to support long-term care spaces and dementia spaces in the province, but we didn't think it was wise for us to go ahead on projects that we weren't solidly behind. It did take some time. We know that the proponents were, you know, respectful of our decision and were patient with us, and we appreciate that.

Now 22 of the 25 are going ahead. They're going ahead and they're getting their land titles, development permits, master service agreements with Alberta Health Services. The other three we're working on diligently to make sure that they have everything in place so that we can go ahead with their grant agreements. So despite the delay – it was a wise one – we have now almost completed that process.

Thank you.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Minister.

Can you explain to me what the process was for your decision and what role you played in that decision-making process?

9:30

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Thank you to the member for the question. Well, I was appointed to be the Minister of Seniors and Housing on February 2, 2016, so when the program proposals were reviewed, I was not the minister responsible. Quite honestly, I wasn't involved in that process, but I know that the minister at the time was very involved in the process and made sure that it was fulfilling on our commitment. I mean, one of the commitments that we made in our campaign was for 2,000 long-term care spaces, so we made sure that these ASLI grants were fulfilling that. They were making sure that these projects made sense for the communities in which they were being proposed, that they were fiscally prudent, and that they were needed in their communities.

There are many other indicators that were gone through, and certainly we did our due diligence to make sure that these projects made sense and fulfilled our promise of 2,000 long-term care spaces.

Thank you.

Mrs. Pitt: All right. Lastly here, just performance measures. I'll be really quick. What are your priorities? What are your performance measures? How will you report these? Why haven't you included these?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the question. Well, certainly, what we want to fulfill is our commitment to make sure that seniors have the accommodations that they need at whatever level, and we know that here in Alberta we don't have enough long-term care, dementia care spaces. That was our commitment during the election, to create 2,000 new long-term care spaces, and that's what we're fulfilling on. When we were assessing the ASLI grant proposals, we were looking at how they would be able to give us those kinds of outcomes to make sure that the communities that needed these facilities would have them. We certainly did take our due diligence, and we are very proud of that.

I've just been informed, too, that performance measures are not really in the supplementary supply, but they'll be in our budget on April 14, so at that time the member will see the specifics of that.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. My questions are to the Minister of Justice. Have there been any new hires for this supplementary? You spoke of float pools, shift scheduling software, and possibly new assessment people for transitioning between the prisons or the correction facilities.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair and to the member for the question. Just to be very clear with respect to Justice and Solicitor General as a whole, we're exercising hiring restraints, so we're running a fairly high vacancy rate to stay within our targets.

With respect to corrections in specific, they're exempt from that hiring restraint, so we have been hiring people in corrections. The intention there is to ensure that we have people available to cover off shifts so that we're not paying overtime because it's not only costly for the government but it's actually – being a correctional officer is very hard work, and it's not good for our officers to have to be on shift for long periods of time, sometimes being held over or coming in for shifts that they didn't expect. So it's good on several fronts. We have hired. We're introducing float pools. Essentially, what that means is that we'll have employees available and already trained to cover sort of temporary or permanent vacancies if someone else decides they want to move on to a different career.

Then what we've procured is new shift scheduling software. We're hoping to use that to ensure that we have the right number of people in the right places because obviously it's sort of a large, complex system. We'll also be looking to conduct an audit to optimize manpower and reduce overtime. I guess that with respect to corrections specifically, yes, we have been hiring some employees to ensure that we're not going into overtime.

Mr. Cyr: Sorry. I meant to go back and forth.

The Chair: That's all right. You only have six seconds left.

Mr. Cyr: Okay. Was there more than one facility that this went to?

The Chair: We'll now move to the third party if you have some questions. The hon. leader.

Mr. McIver: Thank you.

The Chair: Do you want to go back and forth?

Mr. McIver: You know what? We'll go back and forth because I've just got a few little things to cover off here.

The money that was talked about towards ASLI: I know that the government actually criticized the program in the past and now is putting money into it. Has something changed about the way you're spending money? Are you doing something different, or is this just money towards the program as it was before you were in government?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the question. There were 31 projects that were approved by the previous government, which was represented by the member asking the question, of course, and of those projects, 25 we reviewed and felt that they should go ahead. Many of them were far enough along that it was important for us to respect the process that had gone on. Some of them were changed somewhat to fit with, you know, our request for 2,000 more long-term care spaces. So we made the program work that had been existing and that many had been working hard on to make those beds available. We did continue with that program.

Moving forward, we're looking at other ways of, you know, setting out proposals and doing that, but we decided that it was in the best interests to get the beds that we needed very much to care for seniors in this province, to go ahead with what the previous government had started. Of course, we did do the review, as I mentioned earlier, and did shift it somewhat, but we thought it was the most prudent decision at the time.

Thank you.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. That leads me to another question. On the delay that the minister just talked about, I'm just curious how much that added to the cost of the projects?

Ms Sigurdson: I don't have those figures right now. I mean, I can follow up with them. This is supplementary supply. This is about money being transferred for infrastructure to my ministry for the ASLI grants. I think the communities are working with us the best they can to keep the costs low. I can ask my ministry to see if we can find a more specific number for that, but I don't have that number right now.

Mr. McIver: With the supplementary estimates now, Madam Chair, there's a temptation always within governments, within administrations, for March madness, which, of course, is people spending their budgets before the end of the year before they don't need it. Since the government is coming forward with supplementary estimates, what efforts has the government made to control March madness? Since you're asking for more money, what direction, what efforts, what has the government done to control unnecessary year-end expenditures that might happen just because certain departments may have money left in their budgets?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. As I said, when we table the results of Budget 2015, we'll be showing the efforts by all ministers and ministries to control operational spending. We identified that we needed to look at over $200 million in 2015-16, and I'm going to be showing you where we exceeded that amount. In the third-quarter update here you'll see where there's a reduction of $463 million in expenses. Some of that was as a result of the crop insurance not being needed as much as we thought it would be needed, the crop doing better. The ministries have all been asked to contribute to that over $200 million reduction. I don't have the exact numbers that each of them was able to deliver, but we have good results in that regard, and I'll be able to show you.

As everybody knows, there will be no increases to legislators' salaries for the entire term. Political staff in our government are taking the same wage freeze. For the management, opted out, and exempt people that starts April 1, so that's not this budget year, but the others have occurred. So we have salaries that we've frozen for some people here. We have asked all ministers and ministries to contribute to program reallocations, and I'll be tabling the full results of those when we table the full budget finalization.

Mr. McIver: My friend the Finance minister keeps saying this. Just because you were lucky and it didn't hail so much, that's not really cost control. You keep selling it as cost control, a reduction in crop insurance. So while we're all happy that it hailed less and less crop needed insurance, I would prefer that the Finance minister would stand up and agree that that does not qualify as tightening the belt or cost control on the government's part but, rather, good fortune that the weather smiled upon our agricultural people.

I will ask one question. I said it before, but it would be nice to hear it pass the Finance minister's lips. Does the Finance minister agree with the Municipal Affairs minister that the deficit this year is now projected to be $10.4 billion?

Mr. Ceci: No, the Finance minister wouldn't agree to that. The deficit is identified here for Budget 2015-16, and it is $6.315 billion, but if you're talking about next year's budget, that's a different thing. Next year's budget is not going to be $6.315 billion.

Mr. McIver: In fairness to the Municipal Affairs minister, I believe she was referring to next year's budget. I would not want to misrepresent unfairly what I heard her say. I was curious to see if the Finance minister agreed with that in that correct context. I don't mind picking on the government when they have it coming, but this is the case that the Municipal Affairs minister was referring to next year, not this year. I didn't want to be unfair to the minister with my comments.

Mr. Ceci: You know, we're talking about supplementary estimates and, I guess, rightly, the third-quarter fiscal update and economic statement. When I talked about this I think on February 27, I did say that the deficit projections for Budget 2016-17 would be $5 billion larger than we anticipated. Add them together – I know you can – and it's $5.4 billion and $5 billion. So the Minister of Municipal Affairs is correct in her statement that the deficit projected for Budget 2016-17 is way larger than we forecast back in Budget 2015, and it's $10.4 billion.

Mr. McIver: Well, Madam Chair, that will be the end of my questions. I just wanted to express my extreme satisfaction from being the first one to pry those words out of the lips of my friend the Finance minister. I want to thank the Finance minister for giving that straight answer.

The Chair: Moving on to the next part of the rotation, are there any members on this side?

To the Official Opposition, then. The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Did you want to combine your time?

Mr. Cyr: Back and forth, please. Yes.

This is again to the Justice minister. All right. Let's go to: how much of the $8 million is going to be overtime? Do we know that number, Minister?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair and to the member for the question. I don't think we have right now – I certainly don't – which part of it is overtime and which part of it is sort of additional staffing that we had to provide. I can undertake to get back to the member with the best information we can provide. I'm not actually sure if our software will allow us to break it down that way because, of course, the $8 million isn't the only part; it's $8 million in addition to, you know, the large number previously. So I will get back to you with the best number we can provide, but I can't guarantee that we'll be able to break it out that way.

Thanks.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. Thank you, Minister.

Are the corrections staff working in a safe environment, with the additional overtime?

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair and to the member for the question. I mean, our corrections staff are highly trained professionals. I am not of the view that it's the best-case scenario that we have them working additional, and I don't think that they would be either. But I'm confident that we are absolutely committed to ensuring that they are safe, and they are absolutely committed to working really hard to make sure that each other and all of their co-workers and the people they're guarding are all safe as well.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. The changes you were talking about before, the float pools, the shift-scheduling software, and the new positions: was the decision to go in this direction done by the previous government or once you took over and formed government?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair and to the member for the question. I can't honestly speak to what the previous government was doing about it. When I came in, projections were running in the sort of $30 millionish range in terms of overage in terms of corrections, so we started to sort of move immediately to address that. These were the measures that were sort of brought forward to me, the scheduling software and the float pools.

The measures with respect to ensuring that fewer people are incarcerated: I mean, certainly, we think that that's an important way to move forward, but I honestly can't speak to what decisions would have been made had the election gone differently.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Minister.

Now, these changes that you had implemented: is this a pilot project in one or two of the facilities, or are all of the facilities involved in this decision?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair and to the member for the question. The overage represents a series of facilities, obviously. The new shift-scheduling software will be available. It's software, so we'll make it available to everybody.

With respect to the sort of staffing requirement, trying to audit to ensure that we're not having too much staffing, and in terms of the float pools, I mean, obviously, auditing to ensure that we're doing our best job not to have overtime will apply to all facilities. As I understand it, the float pools are going to exist at all facilities, but if I am incorrect, I will get back to you with that information.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. Were there any new contracts or amended contracts during this last year that created a part of this $8 million for the salaries and wages?

Ms Ganley: Thanks very much, Madam Chair and to the member for the question. As I understand it, the correctional officers' contract was negotiated previously, and I'm actually not even sure what year we're in in terms of that particular contract. This money was specifically because we had to sort of schedule additional people and have overtime for people that sort of exceeded what our initial expectations were. I don't believe that that was a contributing factor in this case, but the contract with the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, I believe, has been in existence for a couple of years already.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have no more questions. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any further questions from this side?

It appears that all the members who wish to speak have spoken, so I shall now put the following questions.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

10 a.m.

Tuesday, March 15, 2016

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us bow our heads and reflect each in our own way. Hon. members, as we contemplate the matters before us today, let us be reminded of the importance of the impact of our decisions on all Albertans. Let us remember the children and families of our province, some of whom fear for their financial security.

Thank you. Please be seated.

The chair would recognize the minister of agriculture. I believe we have a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm asking for unanimous and clear consent of the House to introduce a guest.

The Speaker: Thank you.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, it is my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly an energetic youth leader and her family. This young woman is in her ninth year as a 4-H member in the Irricana 4-H Beef and Multi Club and has been chosen as the recipient of the 4-H 2015 Premier's award. She has held numerous positions in her club, has attended numerous camps and programs, and has represented 4-H Alberta in various competitions. This fall she plans to attend the University of Alberta and is enrolled in the pre-vet program. I would like to ask Brennan Munro, her family, and friends to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you. Nine years is a long time. I still reminisce on why I had to sell Blackie, my 4-H calf.

The chair would recognize the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Member's Apology

Mr. Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before the House deals with government business, I'd like to rise and make a brief statement regarding my actions on Thursday during debate on the Speech from the Throne. I want to make it clear to this Chamber that on Thursday I made an inappropriate gesture to members opposite, which I regret and for which I apologize. My actions were not befitting of this Chamber and the dignity herein. When this matter was raised at the time, I sought to minimize the matter instead of taking full responsibility. To be clear, my actions were not acceptable, and my apology and explanation were not good enough.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The member of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, thank you for recognizing me this morning. I'd just like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood. We accept the apology fully and consider the matter dealt with.

The Speaker: Thank you to all members.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 3

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and members of the House. It's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 3, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2016.

The supplementary amounts provided by this bill reflect the fiscal picture outlined in the third-quarter fiscal update, released on February 24. These amounts are necessary for the government to conduct business and fulfill its commitments for the current fiscal year. The additional amounts mainly relate to: first, support for the affordable supportive living initiative, ASLI; second, to support increased student enrolment for public and separate schools, private schools, and early childhood service operations; third, to support flooding mitigation in Chestermere, Langdon, and Rocky View county; next, to support salaries, particularly overtime for adult remand centre operations; next, to support labour market programs; and, finally, to support the horse-racing and breeding renewal grants program.

I respectfully urge my colleagues in this House to support this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: I'll recognize another member with respect to this. The Member for . . .

Mr. Smith: Drayton Valley-Devon.

The Speaker: . . . Drayton Valley-Devon. My apologies yet again. My apologies.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I guess I will start off by saying that if I had to pay a nickel for every student's name that I had not remembered over the years, Mr. Ceci wouldn't be having a deficit. I'm sorry. I apologize for using his name.

The Speaker: I'm pleased to see that one time, with humour, you call yourself a student.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I know that today we're addressing the issue of the supplementary supply bill. I'll start off by saying that as the opposition, obviously, our job is to hold the government accountable for its spending and for the actions of this government. To that effect, there are some concerns that I have with this bill. We see and we believe that a government should not get into a habit, that it's not a good practice for a government to be asking for a hundred million more over and above the approved budget that they've received. This is especially problematic for me given that this government just passed the budget a little over or around four months ago. So there have obviously been some issues, miscalculations perhaps, perhaps some issues that have arisen that have had to be dealt with within this supplementary supply bill, but it's a concern.

On the other hand, as legislators and as a part of the opposition while we strive to hold the government accountable, we don't strive to simply oppose for the sake of opposing. We would believe on this side of the House and in this party that the services that the government provides for our citizens are of importance, of great importance. While I have concerns and while this sometimes places me in an awkward position of having to decide just where we should go on this supplementary supply bill and while I do not support poor fiscal management, I do recognize that the government needs this increase in funding to provide services, especially in areas like health or education.

I suppose I should start this off by saying to the government – and I'm sure it will bring them a great deal of comfort – that I will be supporting this bill. Now, having said that, I do think that there are questions that we have to ask about the expenditures in this supply bill. It is a concern, I think, not only to this party but to Albertans with regard to the detail that is provided in this supplementary supply bill.

It's important to ask the questions. What's going to be funded, and what will the impact be on the lives of Albertans? More importantly, how are we going to know that these funds are actually going to make a difference? I think these questions, Mr. Speaker, need to be asked and the government be allowed to answer these questions.

In my area as shadow minister of Education: are there indeed fewer numbers of students in our classrooms as a result of this increase in funding? Are we going to see a benefit for the students? Do we have the evidence and does the minister have the evidence to be able to provide that? Are there enough aides in the classroom to ensure that we will have a truly inclusive classroom?

There are teachers in this Assembly. It's nice to have a fraternity of teachers here. We've been in that classroom, and we've seen the kinds of challenges that each of our students has had, Mr. Speaker, many of them unique. I know that in my 30 years I could name student after student that have had some very unique challenges. I have had students that have had no arms, and I have watched that student come into my classroom, shrug off his backpack, open it with his teeth, pull out his books, put a pen in his mouth, and write for 60 minutes with the pen in his mouth. I've seen students that have been blind who have brought their Seeing Eye dog into my classroom. I've had students that have had issues with temper and have sometimes had to have an aide there simply to guide them through the issues and the questions of the day that they sometimes felt frustrated over.

So I think it's important to ask the questions, Mr. Speaker. Is the money that's going forward into Education from the supplementary supply bill actually going to be spent on providing the aides and the resources that are necessary to help the students in the classroom? Are our schools being maintained properly? Is that plant operations and maintenance funding actually going towards helping schools maintain an environment for our students to be able to actually learn in?

Transportation: we know that that's come up in the news in the last 10 months that I've been in this House, busing. Are we providing reasonable distances for our students in the cities for them to walk to the bus, or are we asking five- and six-year-old students to walk many kilometres, crossing busy streets? Is the funding going towards helping that issue?

There are lots of questions that we could ask, and we need to make sure that this government is providing us with reasonable answers to those questions. More importantly, Mr. Speaker, if these are such priority issues to rate an increase of funding after less than four months after the budget has been passed, why did the original budget just not include adequate funding in the first place?

I guess, therefore, that on behalf of Albertans I'd like to ask some questions. Can we afford these increases? Is there no way that the government could have found some efficiencies in programming to reduce the increase in expenditures? Out of an incredibly large budget, a hundred million dollars, couldn't we have found the efficiencies somewhere?

You know, we had an example I think last night in some of the questioning that I asked the minister with regard to the RCSD funding. We find that Education is asking for $800,000 more, but the Health budget and the Human Services budget – at least the Health budget for sure – don't appear to be matching those funds. If Health could find the efficiencies in their budget to not have to ask for $800,000 in RCSD funding, then why does Education have to? It's a question that I think Albertans have a right to hear and to understand and then to judge. Were there no places in the original $4.3 billion Education budget where the government could have reduced spending to offset the increased costs?

That's an important question to ask, I believe, because the government is actually paying for the services that it provides for the people of Alberta using credit. At some point that credit is going to have to be repaid, and as with all credit it's going to have to be repaid with interest. I can remember having the conversation with my kids about the student loans that they've had to accrue as they've gone through university. No, dad's pockets couldn't necessarily pay for all of the university education that my kids have received. Yes, they worked very hard in the summers to try to save money and be able to afford that university education. Yet to the best of their ability, in all three of my kids' lives they've had to, to one degree or another, have several tens of thousands of dollars worth of student loans.

I can remember the conversation that I had: "Oh, dad, everybody takes out student loans." "Yeah, I know. Some kids do." "Dad, it actually makes financial sense because, you see, the government will actually pay down some of it. When I go to pay it back, they'll cut it down, so I'm actually getting some free money." "Yeah. Son, is that the way you really want to live your life? You know, if you borrow money, don't you think you should pay it back, all of it, with interest? You know, son, it's certainly a whole lot easier to borrow than it is to pay back." Is there anybody in this Legislature that doesn't understand the truth of that?

An Hon. Member: Just those guys.

Mr. Smith: Oh, I think they understand.

I guess the question that I've got that I'd like this government to consider is: when we are paying for government services on credit, how at some point in time are you going to pay it back? Is this increase in funding intended to meet the needs of Education until the end of this fiscal or until the end of the school year? In other words, will these increases see us through until June? A reasonable question that we wouldn't mind the government being able to answer.

I don't expect that we will get complete answers to these questions. Part of that will probably come as we begin to move through the next year or two, the budget estimates and the new budget, and we get to see some of these answers about how you're going to deal with debt and deficit, where that money has been spent and where you're planning on spending it again in this coming budget. But Albertans do have the right to have their concerns addressed.

I guess my major issue with this supplementary bill is not that the money will be used to provide for a solid educational foundation. I know that the teachers are going to work hard and that school boards are going to work hard and that they're going to try to make sure that that money is spent wisely and that it provides for a solid educational foundation. But I think that given the little detail as to what we know from the supplementary supply bill, we don't know how it will be spent.

For instance, nobody argues that we need plant operations and maintenance budgets. You're asking for more money for that. Well, it would be nice to know where or on what that particular budget line is actually going to be spent. Mr. Speaker, is there an updated list of the maintenance projects that will be completed through this infusion of cash? Have the allocation criteria been changed? Has the applicable per-student rate changed? How will this additional funding impact the coming budget estimates? It would be nice, before we had the chance to vote on this bill, if we had some of these questions answered.

The Minister of Education has said that the number of students is growing, but there seemed to be a little confusion yesterday when other figures within the government showed that the population isn't growing. We've got some confusion there. But even if we set that aside, Mr. Speaker, $3.2 million is going towards class size initiatives. It would have been helpful for Albertans if they knew how that money was going to be spent. How did the government underestimate the funds required for ensuring that class sizes stay reasonably within the parameters set by the government when this budget was passed? Will this increase in funding mean that current class sizes are actually maintained? I'm hoping so, but I don't have the figures to be able to show Albertans that.

Although the class size funding is allocated based on a specific grade level or for specific CTS courses, school jurisdictions do have the flexibility to use this funding to hire or retain teachers at any grade level, based on local needs. That's one of the reasons why we have school boards, to make local decisions. Is this increase of over $3 million intended to keep K through 3 classrooms within parameters? Has he had conversations with the school boards to decide just where that's going to go, or has he given them carte blanche to make those decisions?

Item 2.6 in this supplementary supply is equity of opportunity, and it includes a $1.3 million ask. Well, are the per-student or density-and-distance allocations staying the same with this increase? How is it going to be split up? How will this increase impact students in the classroom? What additional supports will the school authorities expect as a result of this increase? See, we're asking questions that allow us to make an informed decision when it comes to this budget and to this supplementary supply bill.

Mr. Speaker, Wildrose has always supported the things that we hope this supplemental supply bill will provide for education. We've always supported the concept of small class sizes and reasonable and safe transportation for rural and urban students. We've supported small schools to ensure that their students enjoy the same opportunities as larger schools. We believe that secure funding is needed for independent schools and for private ECS operators.

Wildrose also believes, however, that even this NDP government should be able to find hundreds of millions in ineffective spending after a 44-year dynasty has left the government benches. This bill would be much easier to swallow, Mr. Speaker, if the government could show us that they had bothered to find some of that waste, if you'd eliminated a lot more than this hundred million or so that you're asking for above and beyond in this supplemental supply bill. The concerns of Wildrose that we've raised over the fiscal management of this government – they continue to raise red flags. But while we hope that these funds are used effectively for their intended purpose, it does not abrogate the need for this government to begin developing sound fiscal management policies. That would be our advice to this government as the Official Opposition.

While I said at the beginning that we will support this bill, we would encourage this government to ensure that when it comes to the finances of this province and the taxpayers of this province, they are fiscally responsible and accountable for the decisions that they make.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. I will try and address some of the issues that were brought up. I do want to point out that on October . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I thought you were speaking to 29(2)(a). Is that correct?

Mr. Ceci: Yes.

The Speaker: You're on 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Ceci: In terms of responding . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister, my apologies. We need another speaker.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to address the supplementary supply estimates. We had an interesting discussion with considerable question-and-answer back and forth last evening. You know, I will say that I will pick up on the threads of some of that discussion from last night. Some of those same themes were developed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

My primary concern: I think or I hope, at least, that the Finance minister in his concluding remarks on this bill will take fuller opportunity to answer it because, you know, quite frankly, I found some of the answers from the ministers when I asked this question to be lacking. I was very pleased to see the efforts made by both the Minister of Finance and also the Minister of Education to find your savings and other parts of their budget that, in fact, balanced off some of the requirement for an additional ask: the $17 million in the Education budget and, sir, I believe it's somewhere in the neighbourhood of $9 million in your own budget. My disappointment, quite frankly, is that the other ministers were either not similarly diligent or not similarly able to find those types of savings. Quite frankly, I found the answers that they provided to be lacking and wanting.

You know, there are a wide number of reasons in business why you don't end up spending as much money as you had budgeted for. Sometimes certain initiatives that you'd planned on doing simply do not go ahead at that same pace. As has been noted in a couple of responses, sometimes you don't end up having as many staff members, or you have a larger number of vacancies and you don't fill those vacancies quite as quickly. There are a large number of reasons where cost savings can be found.

Sometimes they can be found not so much as a matter of good fortune but rather as a matter of good luck. Exactly. The Finance minister knows that saying that having to pay out less in agricultural insurance claims is somehow belt-tightening is almost akin to someone on a city council saying: we were careful stewards of the taxpayers' dollars because we made it snow less and our snow removal budget was lower than we expected. So let's not kid ourselves. Some of these savings are, in fact, more a matter of good fortune than good management.

I did want to mention one thing because this is something that the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon pointed out and I had this question as well, and that was with regard to the Education requisition for the $33 million. Health made no supplementary estimate requisition, and that means that Health must have done a very careful job in terms of managing resources. Well, it's a little bit of a nuanced thing, but, in fact, the Health department is needing more money – it's stated in the third-quarter fiscal update – an additional requisition or an additional amount budgeted of some $147 million, roughly one and a half times the total amount of all the supplementary estimates. But it does not appear in supplementary estimates because it is additional funding for AHS. That's a subtlety. The Health minister was good enough to point that out to me in an exchange that we had.

Nonetheless, it shouldn't be construed that somehow the Education department did less work than Health or that the Health department was able to get right back down to budgeted levels because, in fact, the Health department, specifically AHS, will have higher expenditures than what was anticipated.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, my primary concern with this is the failure of the various ministries that asked for additional funds to find savings within their department so that that additional ask would be unnecessary, and I pointed out last night the small percentage that we're talking about. In a couple of the departments it's less than 1 per cent of the overall annual budget, some .6 per cent in the case of both the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General and, I believe, the Ministry of Labour and 1.6 per cent in the case of the Ministry of Municipal Affairs.

You know, in business when you have an unanticipated expense come up during the course of a fiscal year, something that you hadn't really expected to come up, and if it comes up partway through the year, which is going to cost you more, you look for other savings that you can apply, other things that you can do to save that money so you don't have that additional ask. In a scenario, as the Minister of Finance has pointed out on more than one occasion, where we've had this precipitous drop in government revenues – and we'll leave the debate as to exactly why that's happening to another day – when you've had that situation come up, I think it's incumbent upon all of the ministers of the Crown to do a better job, a more diligent job of finding where those savings are.

Now, clearly, some of the ministers have done that. We only have roughly seven ministries that are asking for additional funds. For the remaining ministries, you know, I'm sure that some of their programs have gone over budget, but they found other programs that, in fact, are under budget or they've exercised the necessary restraint so that a supplementary supply request was not needed.

To me, the message that needed to be sent to Albertans was that we will not have a supplementary supply estimate request at all, that we don't need to ask Albertans, who are already suffering significant financial hardships, for yet another hundred million dollars. The fact that this government is finding itself in need of doing that and that the departments in question were unable to find the necessary savings is, to me, a great disappointment. I'm hoping that the same level of diligence is in fact not applied going forward in the preparation of the April 14 budget but that a much higher level of diligence is applied because, as the Finance minister was finally able to articulate late last night, we are looking at a $10 billion plus deficit. That is a number that should cause grave concerns to all Canadians when one considers that the federal budgetary deficit, the budgetary deficit of the federal government in Ottawa, a budget that is many times greater in size than our provincial budget, is only going to be marginally larger than that $10 billion. Well, I guess we'll never know. We won't know until March 22. It could, in fact, be considerably larger. I guess we'll see what happens.

Mr. Speaker, to me, successful stewardship of taxpayers' dollars could have been demonstrated by this government by stating: we have found internal economies and internal savings that make supplementary estimate requests unnecessary. As we see now, that in fact was not the case. We have seven departments that are requesting extra funds. As the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon stated, you know, we support a lot of the initiatives that are included within that. Certainly, the ASLI grants were something that we are absolutely in favour of.

In fact, our disappointment there was that there was a delay, and that delay will have not only cost additional funds but will have caused significant anxiety in the communities that had approved projects. I know that in Lloydminster with our Pioneer home project, which was an excellent project and was finally approved – and we're certainly grateful for that – we lost the better part of a summer construction season because of the delay. Really, that's not helpful at a time when we need to be as prudent with taxpayers' dollars as we possibly can. Now, we've been blessed. We've been very fortunate. It has been a relatively mild construction season this past winter, and there's been tremendous progress on that project, and I'm looking forward to the opening of the project perhaps later this year or early next.

So we're not against those, and because of that, like the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon, we too will be voting in favour of supplementary estimates because these dollars are necessary. I understand that. But I guess I did want to make sure that we have on the record what I stated last night in Committee of Supply and that we have it on record today that as a caucus – and certainly I as an individual member – we are disappointed in the fact that we even have to have supplementary supply estimates and that we have to ask the taxpayers for an additional $106 million. In my view, those are efficiencies that should have been able to be found. There's demonstrated evidence that some of the ministries were able to find those, and I applaud those ministers for their efforts, but quite frankly I think it should have been across the board.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise – sorry. I was chasing children in the new family-friendly environment. I'll catch my breath here.

An Hon. Member: Whose kids?

Mr. Cooper: My kids. Sorry. I wasn't chasing school groups, sir. I was chasing my children, and I might just add that it's a pleasure to see them. I know it's hard to believe, sir, but on days when the Assembly sits, I even beat the toddler out of bed. That means you have to get up pretty early in the morning to beat a three-year-old to work.

Anyway, let me get to the meat of the matter. It's my pleasure to rise to speak to the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2016. Like my colleague, I just wanted to highlight a couple of quick things. We in the Wildrose caucus believe that we need to have world-class education facilities for our students to learn in. Our education system is building the future of our province, so it's important that we are ensuring that the resources are in the right places at the right times for the right reasons.

My colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster mentioned the ASLI grants, another good, positive step forward for the province at a time when housing is desperately needed right across the province, including in Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. Essentially, in every constituency there is a need that outweighs our dollars, but we do need to be taking some proactive steps, so I look forward to supporting some of the measures in this legislation. Having said that, I do have some significant concerns about why and how we got here today.

Just over a hundred days ago – I know it might feel like an eternity – we were here, and the government's budget was passed. I know that the current NDP caucus has some track record of blaming the former PC government for putting them in a bad spot, and I seem to recall some blame on the former government for the budget being delayed. At that time they didn't want to rush it. They wanted to make sure that they'd made the appropriate choices. Just a little over a hundred days later here we are back in the House to require supplementary supply. I'm not sure if that's because they rushed it or they didn't get the decisions right in the first place or exactly what transpired, but I know, Mr. Speaker, that this is the exact type of thing that the NDP caucus, when they were the fourth party, used to stand in this House and express such displeasure about having to do.

Mr. Speaker, I will acknowledge that it's possible that someday members in the Wildrose caucus may be there, and I will live to regret this particular statement in expressing my complete displeasure with the inability of the government to deliver a budget on time, to call the House back when the standing orders say and for whatever reason to continually delay the proceedings of the Assembly, not necessarily once we get here but certainly prior to arriving. The standing orders are very clear that the House should be reconvened in early February, and as you know, good sir, the House only reconvened last Tuesday, which is in March, which is not February.

It's disappointing to see these patterns of behaviour emerging from the government caucus. This government was elected on a commitment to change, and so far we are seeing more of the same. We've seen that in delaying the budget now till April 14, and as a result of the government not finding efficiencies inside the existing budget and the delay in the upcoming budget, we're here to debate this supplementary supply.

Now, the government of the day likes to rise in their place and say that these are within normal timelines. Yesterday in Hansard the Minister of Municipal Affairs said: "We are working incredibly hard . . . within the budget as we [will] present [the] budget . . . within normal timelines." I'd like to just take a moment to talk briefly about what normal timelines look like.

Since 2000 only on three occasions in this Assembly was the budget presented after April 14, and on two of those three occasions, Mr. Speaker, there was an election that year. Well, this government has been in office for 315 days, and they continually try to blame the former government for our position. Listen, the former government was not very good, and now we see the Minister of Municipal Affairs making statements like: these are within normal timelines. We saw the Minister of Economic Trade and Development rise in this House just last week and say on a point of privilege that in comparing what they're doing, it is basically what the last government did except maybe slightly better. Well, let me be clear. The last days of the former PC government are not the standard that we should be reaching for. We should be reaching for much better than that. That government ran on being better than the former PC government, but so far what we've seen is a lot more of what we saw.

Frankly, as an Albertan I'm disappointed. I know that many people in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills are also disappointed. They wanted to give the government a chance, and they've had 315 days. That's a fair shake. Unfortunately, we continually see the blaming of the former government or by saying, "We're basically as good as they were" or by saying that these are normal timelines. Since 2000 this is the fourth-latest presentation of a budget that this Assembly has seen.

Mr. Speaker, this government has made some significant commitments on democratic reform, but just like we're seeing here in supplementary supply estimates, with them doing exactly what they said that they wouldn't do, we are seeing that in the area of democratic reform as well.

The Minister of Labour likes to talk about how awesome the Special Ethics and Accountability Committee is, but as I mentioned, we have now been elected for 315 days, and that committee, sir, that supercommittee that's going to solve all of the ethics and accountability problems of this Assembly, has met a whopping five times. That's approximately once every 63 days. Mr. Speaker, the former PC government had some significant ethical challenges and lapses of judgment, and meeting to try and correct 44 years of the pendulum swinging in the wrong direction takes more work than once every 63 days.

Just recently we heard the Premier speak about wanting the work of this committee to be done in the next 90 days, or by June. Well, Mr. Speaker, they've met five times in the last 300 days. To the best of my knowledge, there's no scheduled meeting of that committee, as I stand in my place today. They've only met five times, and much of those five times, sir, were about the details around the next meeting. Not one thing has been heard from the public, just reporting from the legislative officers. Just like we're disappointed about being here to debate supplementary supply, albeit some positive things in that, we are disappointed that this government is continuing to say one thing and doing another.

Mr. Speaker, the Wildrose believes in providing solutions, and we've been doing that. [interjection] While the government might think it's funny, good sir, just today this side of the House presented a 12-point jobs action plan. So far on that side of the House what we've seen is a massive program that's created one job and then was cancelled. We've seen the introduction of Bill 1, where the preamble is two-thirds of the total bill. If we learned anything yesterday from the Ethics Commissioner investigating this Premier, it's that the preamble of a bill does not give any credit to the rest of the bill because if the preamble of the bill did, then she would have been able to use some significantly stronger language about the current ethics of this government.

So I think it speaks to a much larger narrative. What we're seeing here in supplementary supply we've now seen in their lack of commitment to democratic reform. We've seen it in their ethics and accountability lapses. I mean, this former NDP caucus proposed amendments to legislation that would prevent announcements during by-elections, and then, Mr. Speaker, much to my disappointment and the disappointment of many Albertans who were expecting more from this government, we saw two weeks ago in Calgary-Greenway two separate funding announcements that took place in Calgary. This government used to criticize these very sorts of actions. They used to criticize the former PC government for selling access, for using government resources for partisan purposes.

Now, I will agree that the Ethics Commissioner has cleared the Premier, but the Ethics Commissioner also cleared former Premier Redford, using the exact same language in her ruling about how these types of behaviour are likely to raise questions of the general public. While she did not break the actual law, a case may be made that she broke the spirit of the law. The Health minister yesterday in a press conference said: we've been exonerated by the Ethics Commissioner.

I remember on many occasions from just down the aisle the current Premier, when she was the leader of the NDP fourth party caucus, rising in this place and saying that just because the Ethics Commissioner said it was right, it doesn't mean you did the right thing. Again, Mr. Speaker, I see the same sort of issue around supplementary supply. Exactly why this conversation relates directly to supplementary supply is because this is a pattern of behaviour that we're seeing from that side of the government. Albertans deserve better.

The last thing that I'll leave you with when it comes to this continual departure of saying one thing and doing another, in particular around supplementary supply, is that we're likely to see later this week the introduction of the essential services legislation, but we're also likely to see debate on second reading later this week. This is just another example of the type of things that this NDP caucus used to rail against.

Speaker's Ruling Referring to a Legislative Officer

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would like to remind you to keep in mind in your comments that when implying criticism of a legislative officer – it's certainly not in the standing orders, but it has been a matter that has been discussed and addressed in other Assemblies, and we all collectively need to be responsible and recognize that point.

Do you have another question?

Mr. Cooper: No. I just am happy to withdraw those comments if they were perceived as criticism of the legislative officer.

The Speaker: Thank you. Noted.
The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Debate Continued

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move adjournment of debate on Bill 3.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 2 Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: We are on Bill 2, did you say? Thank you.

Thank you very much. It's my pleasure to open debate to briefly talk about the additional bill that we have before us now and to say that this one takes us further, of course, down the road with regard to second reading of Bill 2, the interim supply act.

The Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2016, will provide funding authority for the offices of the Legislative Assembly and to the government for the period of April 1, 2016, to May 31, 2016, inclusive. The approval of this act will provide the funds needed to continue the business of the province while the Assembly takes the time necessary to present, prepare, review, and debate the government's 2016-17 budget plans, which are further under work and discussion and development with respect to its presentation in this Legislature on April 14.

I would urge my colleagues in the House to support this bill. We are of course taking into account many of the views from groups, individuals, associations, and business in the development of this Budget 2016, but to get there, we need the time. The interim supply act will allow us that time to ensure that all the important programs, services, and partnerships that can be funded through this Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act continue to happen.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to talk about this NDP government's lack of a financial plan, to talk about Bill 2, the interim supply bill, which asks this Assembly to approve $8.7 billion of unbudgeted funds. This bill asks us to give this government free rein to do whatever they want instead of being held accountable to the people with a budget. Bill 2 includes no details explaining where these funds will be spent.

Wildrose reluctantly supported Bill 3, the supplementary supply act. While we were skeptical, we believe in the importance of the initiatives that the bill will fund. If this bill's $8.7 billion has no specific funding direction, this government is looking for the authority to spend with impunity. With the looming deficit for the next year, the government needs to come clean about how much of this money will have to be borrowed.

You know, I also can't help but wonder if the real reason for this interim supply bill is because of the Calgary-Greenway by-election. Is this government trying to avoid being held accountable for their reckless spending? Is the NDP afraid that voters in Calgary would think twice if they were reminded of this government's true colours?

Spending like this isn't really news. It's just perpetuating the spending problem this government seems to have. How can it justify asking Albertans for their hard-earned money without providing a plan for how it will be spent? Albertans want to know they can trust their government, and reckless, unbudgeted spending is no way to build trust.

This government has a real problem that needs to be addressed right here and right now. Alberta already has the highest per capita spending of the largest provinces of Canada, and its spending is growing faster than inflation and population growth. This NDP government is out of control and is proving once again to Albertans that they cannot be trusted. With its economic experiments and reckless spending the NDP government will only further increase the risk for mistakes with this $8.7 billion in interim supply.

The government has provided zero-detail plans to bolster their claims to be focused on job creation and to care about Albertans. Its lack of a plan betrays this government. It has clearly given no serious thought to the more than 80,000 Albertans who are out of work, no serious thought to the elderly who struggle to survive, just partisan thoughts on how to push an ideological agenda through on the strength of empty words.

The NDP claims to support job creation, but its $178 million failed job-subsidy plan created zero jobs – sorry, one job – and its Bill 1 is void of any actual plan to help Albertans. The government needs to stop saying that Albertans must wait for its beleaguered and long-awaited budget for a jobs plan. Our economy is in a deep nosedive. Albertans need hope now, today. The longer you take to produce a plan, the longer Albertans are left scrimping and saving, trying to make ends meet while they look for work, wait in line at the food bank.

So why is the government so light on details? This interim supply has none. Albertans are worried about everything that is happening to our economy, and this NDP government can't take the time to create a real jobs program or outline savings to counter bloated spending. How much of this money that you have asked the Assembly to approve will be borrowed money? Can you answer that one question?

11:00

You ask us to support a bill that provides very limited details. Wildrose will stand up for Albertans here today and oppose this bill. We and all Albertans know that you had plenty of time to bring forward a budget. The NDP government is hurting the economy, hurting jobs, hurting Albertans, destroying our province with its inefficiency, and it doesn't want to show Albertans its plan. It doesn't even know what it's doing. Who asks for an interim supply of this size without any explanation or accountability? Only a government full of a sense of its own entitlement would do such a thing, one that doesn't think about or truly care about anxious and worried Albertans.

An $8.7 billion interim supply bill, advanced funds, with no detail of how much will be borrowed or details of what it will be used for: with this government's previous track record Albertans have every right to be anxious and afraid, and – believe me – they are. The Wildrose caucus is very concerned, concerned enough to ask questions and to oppose the right-to-spend bill. Wildrose will stand up for Albertans. We will stand up for the unemployed, for low-income seniors, and we'll offer them strong leadership, the leadership they so desperately need. We will stand up for them in this Legislature because no one else will.

The PCs won't. They've decided that instead of doing what is right for Albertans by uniting and parting with their pride, they would rather cause a further divide by attacking us in the House instead of rallying together to fight this untrustworthy NDP government. I sure hope they oppose you today. I sure hope they take a stand for Albertans, especially during a time of economic uncertainty, and show that they have changed their ways when it comes to spending.

How are we supposed to support this without a plan, without a budget? Of course, you know that even without our support, you'll ram this piece of legislation through without any thought of the repercussions to Albertans. How shallow, how thoughtless, and how needless, because didn't you just do this a few months ago? How is it that you have been in government for 10 months and still don't have a plan? Instead of the Premier going to spend time raising money for antipipeline NDP parties in other provinces, maybe she should stay home and figure out how to help her own people, maybe help put a budget together.

Just a few short months ago an additional $5.9 million had to be added to the 2015-16 operating budget for the Ministry of Indigenous Relations, which, as you know, is a special interest of mine. Now, only a few months later you would like for us to give you free rein to run this ministry for two whole months without a budget or a plan. It's a small amount when you consider the other ministries but still too large of a cheque, in the amount of $11.5 million, without a breakdown or a plan.

In a few short months this government has become arrogant and entitled to the point that it doesn't feel the need to explain itself. Where is the $8.2 million that you have termed "financial transactions" coming from? From which account are you transferring these funds?

Albertans deserve real leadership, leadership that brings hope to a hurting people. This is something Wildrose will offer. Wildrose will continue to stand up for Albertans, to stand up and fight for jobs, fight for pipelines, for an efficient government, fight for strong communities, strong democracy and lead Alberta back to the prosperity it used to enjoy. This government hasn't been providing that leadership, and this interim supply gives no indication that they intend to.

Albertans have no interest in kowtowing to Quebec, yet our Premier seems to be more interested in defending Quebec's Premier than the interests of Albertans. Quebec's government doesn't have Alberta's best interests at heart. Shouldn't Albertans be making decisions that drive the province?

What this government is offering is not leadership. Do your job, the job you were voted in to do, that you claim to have been voted in to do. You were not voted in to produce bills like this, that reek of directionless entitlement. Please prove me wrong. Do your job. Explain the details of your plan to this Assembly. Doing so would be one step toward countering the fact that there is no accountability for this spending spree.

Wildrose cannot and will not support handing you a blank cheque so that you can further hurt Albertans with increased taxes to pay off the loan you are really asking for here. I implore all of you to do the job you were elected to do. This is not the time to be playing politics. This is the time when you are called to act responsibly and act like a government. Produce a budget and a responsible plan for this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, thank you. I'd just make an observation that in the speeches where the phrase "you" is used, since you are speaking to the Speaker, you ought to speak in the third person, and I would remind all members of that.

I would recognize the Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for granting me the opportunity to speak on Bill 2, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2016. Of course, it needs to be said how disappointing it is that we have to be here discussing this very slim document. One of the most important duties of a government is to present and pass a budget annually. By all accounts, we won't be seeing the full scope of this government's plan until well after the end of the fiscal year. Whether this is for political reasons or simply due to a lack of preparation, it is very distressing that we cannot get this budget so much as presented before March 31. Albertans deserve to see exactly what they're being asked to pay for.

On both sides of the House we've talked about the importance of stable and predictable funding. I see nothing stable or predictable in what we're being asked to accept in this interim appropriation bill. Now, I know that government members will claim that this isn't all that unusual and fall back on the line that the previous government did it, too, but as I look back over previous years, I see that there was some interim supply that was not necessary. The entirety of the budget was passed on time. In many other cases, the House was asked to vote on interim supply, but they had also been presented a full budget for context. In those cases, the interim supply amount was pro-rated based on the fully costed budget. Even then I don't think that that was in line with the best practices, but at least it was something.

In any case, I find it a little rich that the government is now falling back on practices of the previous, now unseated government, especially since they never miss a chance to speak about the unique circumstances we're facing today. The severity of the times calls for action. At the very least it calls for transparency and clarity. When I look at this interim supply document, I don't see a steady hand on the wheel; I see a hastily drawn-up plan that comes up empty on specifics. Albertans are facing tremendous challenges right now. The government, which has grown completely unrestrained by even population growth plus inflation for years, is headed for a record-breaking spending spree, and is this interim document to be trusted? I don't think so.

Of course, I've heard the government's reply to this as well, that this is not just a straight appropriation. But if it's not simply prorated, then that implies a level of complexity that I think necessitates a full budget even more. There still is some confusion around these numbers, and that stems from not having a fully costed and transparent process. In the Health interim estimates, for instance, we heard that the number $55 million was used, the per-day cost, which was then multiplied by 61 days to be covered. But last year's supply worked out to be less than $51 million per day, so where is the difference coming from? The minister in that instance mentioned needing a bit extra as a cushion, but now that cushion is undecided. The Health minister mentioned that she didn't want to have to come back again and ask for more interim money. I have to question why that's a fear of theirs. Do they not see that this budget is getting passed by May 31 now? I should hope they do.

It doesn't sit right with me to allocate billions of dollars based on vague fudge factors. This is an imprecise way of conducting business. This is truly a blank cheque. The government has provided long-range budget estimates that the current interim supply estimates do not seem to jibe with. I believe it's only proper that we be provided with more information for these ministries than we can fit on a business card. We see that there's a ministry like Economic Development and Trade that has been created from a whole cloth. It's so new, in fact, that the minister apparently doesn't even have the mandate to do the job yet. Despite the lack of clarity, they ask for over $200 million to do this role until a budget is passed.

Of course, we've heard a lot about the strain that this puts on municipalities and other local decision-makers. They must have their budgets drafted and projects planned well in advance of the construction season. This method of allocating funds leaves them uncertain and unclear about what the provincial government has committed to funding for the year. It's somewhat unfair that they should have to budget for their constraints and constituents and residents in a timely manner while this government cannot do the same for them.

This is just a sampling of ministry numbers, of course, but they demonstrate that this interim supply process is fundamentally flawed. The numbers are incomplete, vague, ill defined, and unjustified. That's not to say that the sum of the money is not well spent or needed, but no justification has been given for its use. The detailed line items that we typically expect to see in a budget process are absent here, and those line items provide justification to the Assembly. Out of respect for this House and the Albertans we all represent, I expect the government to present more detail or better explanations of its actions, especially when it requests $8.7 billion from the public coffers.

In addition to basic respect for the House and for the process, we need a more thorough budget to ensure that good governance is there. During these economic challenges it's more important than ever for every single dollar to be scrutinized and well spent. We want to see an efficient, lean, well-managed operation, but that becomes so much more difficult when we have absolutely no metrics, targets, measures, or measurables to hold this government machinery accountable.

In the private sector when times are tight, it causes a renewed focus on deliverables. When there is no room for waste, one has no choice but to focus on clear, measurable outputs from the system. Right now businesses and households across this province are poring over their internal budget line items line by line, and they're measuring the usefulness of spending based on quantifiable deliverables. They have no choice but to streamline their process through careful consideration. That consideration is noticeably absent from this bill at a time when we need it most. When I hear things like "a little bit extra," I can't help but think that now is not the time for being fast and loose with the province's finances.

In closing, I cannot support a bill that speaks so much in broad hypotheticals and undefined terms. I encourage the government to go back to work crafting a full, complete budget that outlines the money it intends to spend and the results it expects to achieve with our hard-earned tax dollars.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: No.

The Speaker: I'm sorry. Under 29(2)(a), were there any questions? Were there any comments with respect to 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Ceci: I wanted to share with the member the information behind the Treasury Board and Finance interim supply amounts that he was wondering about. The Treasury Board and Finance specific voted interim supply amounts allow my department to continue working on Budget 2016 as it co-ordinates program budgeting and fiscal planning across government. You're probably wondering about that. That's what the amount of money will assist with. It will allow my department to continue to manage the treasury, the borrowing – you asked about borrowing – issuing and collection of payments, and to ensure that payments are secure to protect Albertans, financial institutions, and the government. It will also allow us to provide the needed policy and regulatory oversight for the financial, insurance, and pension sectors, which serves to protect the economic security of all Albertans.

With regard to the total amount there are also flow-through amounts for the lottery fund in the amount of $362 million, that end up providing a great deal of support to volunteer and community-based initiatives across this province.

Again, it's important to note that these are just interim amounts until the full appropriation bill can be tabled in Budget 2016, which is going to be on April 14. You know, that is after, of course, the fiscal year – you were asking about that – but I just want to point out that last April Joe Oliver brought in the federal budget on the 21st. We're beating that by a week. And the reason is the same for the delay. His delay was because of the significant drop in oil prices and the challenge that that posed to fiscal planning. That's the same reason we're bringing ours in on April 14, though we are beating his by a week.

In April this Assembly will have the opportunity to debate the full budget, where we will fully present our plan to responsibly manage public finances, invest in a greener and more sustainable economy, drive economic development and diversification, and continue to invest in jobs and 21st-century infrastructure for all Albertans.

Those were some of the points, I guess, that I wanted to clarify and provide you as you were wondering about the Treasury Board and Finance interim supply request. Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think this will be any surprise to my colleagues across the way, but I rise most definitely to declare that I will be voting on behalf of the people, the good people, of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre against this bill, and I encourage all my colleagues in the Assembly to do the same. There are several reasons, but a couple of the main reasons are that, first, it's a blank cheque, and that concerns me very much. There also is clearly still no effort by this government to find spending efficiencies, which is something I'm hearing from my constituents as one of the most important issues that they see with this current government and the current financial situation that we're facing as a province. I'm also concerned about the Alberta advantage.

First, let's start, Mr. Speaker, with discussing this blank cheque issue. This government is essentially bringing forward what I would call a blank cheque supply bill. They're asking us on this side of the Assembly to vote with them to approve $8.7 billion – $8.7 billion – without any adequate details of what it's for or what it'll do. After we debated Bill 6 in the last sitting and we went back to our ridings, I know I heard loud and clear lots of concerns about blank bills. I have to say as the elected representative for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre that I find it offensive that this government will continuously bring forward stuff that has no details and expect us to vote on it and support them. That's a blank cheque, and I don't think that's good management, and I know that the people that I represent are deeply concerned about it.

As far as spending efficiencies, Mr. Speaker, our province has the highest per capita spending among Canada's largest provinces. Last year we spent $8 billion more on operations than B.C. did; $8 billion more. I don't think the government could stand up here today and attempt to justify $8 billion more and try to look Albertans in the eyes with a straight face and say that we receive $8 billion more in services than B.C. We repeatedly come to this Assembly and we say: "Hey, we spend more than every other province. We have a spending problem in this province. We did when we had $100-a-barrel oil. The old government had a spending problem."

Now, the response that we get from the government, Mr. Speaker, is, "Hey, you want to cut front-line services; you want to cut front-line jobs" when we talk about efficiency. Well, I'll tell you that the people in Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre know that that's not what we're talking about. In fact, the government across the way, as you know, in my own riding just this last week ambushed the town of Sundre and laid off front-line health workers and shut front-line health care service beds, so I think they should probably look at themselves if they're concerned about who's going to be shutting front-line services or front-line health care or front-line workers.

Again, we spend more than all the other provinces, Mr. Speaker. As you travel around Alberta – and if this government would leave the Legislature a little more often and come and see some of the people throughout Alberta, they'd probably hear what I'm hearing, which is that the concern is about the bloated bureaucracy in our system, not about nurses, not about teachers. Nobody wants to fire nurses or teachers, but we have to get our spending under control, or it's going to continue to escalate. We're going to continue to have to borrow more and more, and in the end we're going to lose services because we can no longer afford to pay for them, and that's wrong. I can tell you that right now in Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre that is the biggest concern. The number one thing that you hear is: "Go back and tell that government to get their spending under control. Go back there and tell them to deal with the bureaucracy. Go back there and tell them to spend our money better."

That's something that's also important, Mr. Speaker. This is not our money. We're the stewards of Albertans' money, hard-working Albertans, hard-working farmers, hard-working tradespeople, businesspeople, teachers, nurses. We're stewards of that, and what this government does with this bill is that it brings forward a blank cheque and says: "Here. Just vote for that." I can't do that. I have to respect taxpayer dollars, and I expect everybody in this Chamber should do the same.

When we're looking at reckless, unbudgeted spending at the same time that a government has done tax hikes for businesses and families and has created instability in our energy sector through many ways, we have to discuss what happens if we continue to spend money in this way. Now, Alberta businesses have also asked for a moratorium on risky NDP policies. Again, I would suggest that coming forward with a blank cheque bill seems extremely risky over and over and over and disappointing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will say in closing that I hope that – I look at the government members across the way as I talk about what people are saying in my riding, and they seem to not agree. That's disappointing. Again, I just want to close with that I encourage the government members, I encourage the Premier, I encourage her cabinet to leave the Legislature. Come to Sundre. Come to Rocky Mountain House. Come anywhere in this province and talk to the people that are being affected by this and who do not find this acceptable behaviour, and I am sure that you will find what I have found, that the people of Alberta expect much better than blank cheque bills from this government, which is why I'll be voting against this bill, and I encourage everybody in the Assembly to do so.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions under 29(2)(a) with respect to the last speaker?

The chair recognizes the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to the House. I will, by the way, do my best to recall the third-person approach to language. It is a bit of a challenge.

I have to say that while I desire to see the government function and I recognize the importance of ongoing supply and the importance of continuing the services that are so essential to our Alberta people, I guess my biggest difficulty with this question of interim supply is just, more than anything else, I guess, a disappointment that the government has not been able to provide for Alberta a budget that is in place on time. The practices of the previous government and other governments that don't attain that level: well, just frankly, they're not a good measuring standard. They're not a best practices standard. In this province the previous government was severely punished in the polls for some of their practices, and I really do believe that we should be reaching for and attaining a new and a better way, a much more professional way.

I guess my disappointment hinges on the fact that the budget was just done three months ago. It's not like it's something that has to start completely from scratch. I do recognize the realities of changing income with the oil industry would have impacts on that, but budgets are living documents. They're not started completely from scratch every time they're created. In fact, the reality is that many of the ABC agencies in this province that must report to the government on a regular basis are required in their legislation that governs them to actually provide multiyear – I'm quoting from legislation there – budgets, which contribute to the validity of living budgets and ongoing. Multiyear budgets: part of the point of them is to make it easier to produce the budget for the upcoming year. The reality is that most business plans build multiple-year budgets, and many of the NGOs in our province function on multiyear budgets.

I guess my plea to the government would be to try and raise the standard, raise the standard to best financial practices that are, in fact, required by legislation of the agencies in this province. I think that as the parent agency of all of our province we should have no lesser standard for the government itself. Multiyear budgets and the ability to adjust them then and have budgets on time would be extremely valuable and something that I would encourage the government to consider doing. I just don't think that it's acceptable for the people of Alberta to have late, missed-due-date budgets.

When I was in high school – and I know times have changed; we have a much softer attitude toward accountability and responsibility these days – when I missed an assignment, it was not accepted. Now, today, I know, we're afraid we might hurt somebody's feelings and that it might wound them eternally. The reality is that at some point in life we have to learn accountability and reliability, and that's acceptable, for high school students to wrestle with that. But I don't think that it's acceptable for business, for nongovernment agencies, or the government itself to miss important due dates because they do have profound effects upon our province, particularly upon our municipal governments.

Our municipal governments need to know what's going to happen. Can they plan? What can they plan on? They don't even know when they can start to plan because the budget, which is essential to their ability to function and to represent their people and to serve their people well, is withheld from them when it should be given to them. So the municipal governments are extremely frustrated. I think we saw that just this last week in meeting with them, some of the frustration which, quite frankly, actually, is mitigating over to the side of anger. They need to know what the rules of the game are this coming year. So there are profound effects for municipal governments.

I would also suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there are profound effects, ongoing profound effects, for business and industry in our province. It just perpetuates and continues the uncertainty of them knowing what's going on. I've had three if not four – I don't quite remember – business members from my riding in the last week phone me and ask me, "When are we going to get a budget? We need to know what's happening, where we're going, what we can count on, what we can't count on," and this ongoing uncertainty continues to create the loss of confidence, the loss of investment, and ultimately the loss of jobs in our province because the businesses in my riding are not going ahead with many of their plans when they don't know what the regulatory regime and the processes and all the implications are going to be for them.

So there are profound effects that do affect the people in this province and their jobs and their livelihoods, and I just would plead with the government: if not this year then next year let's try and have it on time. The fact that there are no details – as a representative of my constituents I find it extremely hard to assure them that, yes, I voted for effective and well-managed spending. Therefore, I can't vote for this. I just can't do that and then go to my constituents and say: yes, I supported that. There is just too much left unexplained, unclear, and I would appreciate it – and the hon. Minister of Finance has made a bit of an effort at that, but even in more detail I would be interested to know: what are the process issues that prevent the preparation of an on-time budget, especially after almost a year knowing that this is coming? When did the budget process begin? It takes time and human resources and money to crunch the numbers and create an interim budget. Wouldn't it be more effective just to apply that time and money and resources to creating the actual budget and having it on time?

I think, Mr. Speaker, which is why I'm going to cut this short right now, that in a way we're wasting our time. We're wasting resources. We should stop doing stopgap budgets, and we should just do the real thing.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane. A question under 29(2)(a). Please proceed.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question to the hon. member who just spoke there. He spoke about having uncertainty, the process being unclear about when the budget was going to be released. I know the Finance minister has been extraordinarily clear about when that process will happen, and he said April 14. I'm not certain why the member feels that there's some uncertainty, so I wonder if he might be able to address that.

He also talked a little bit about ambiguity, and he was wondering what the process is for the issue that caused the budget to, in his words, be delayed. I'd like to ask the member what the issue is from the Official Opposition, what the process problem is that they can't come up with a plan to show Albertans what a potential alternative is. We've been asking them to propose alternatives. They've even recognized that the role of an Official Opposition . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Westhead: The members opposite have talked about the fact that the role of an Official Opposition is to propose solutions and alternatives, and frankly, Mr. Speaker, we haven't really seen any of that.

I know that the hon. House leader a few days ago tabled what he termed a flimsy document from the Official Opposition's campaign platform, that showed that they were going to cut over $9 billion in infrastructure spending. You know, these are the kinds of things that we're seeing from the opposition. It doesn't really present Albertans with an alternative. Clearly, on our side we're the ones that have the plan, and they don't. So I wonder if the member can go on and explain why it's taken them so long and they haven't even produced an alternative.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane to respond.

Mr. Cooper: Yeah, under 29(2)(a), questions and comments, I'm more than happy to continue adding some comments through you to the member with respect to – perhaps if there's time remaining, he can share some of his thoughts.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that when it comes to delaying the budget: in the year 2000, February 24; in 2001, April 24, an election year. Basically, this is the fourth-latest budget since the year 2000, so when it comes to delaying the budget, this current government is an expert. They passed a budget in December, and now they're going to pass a budget in May-ish. That's exactly what we've seen from the government.

With respect to the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka and some of his concerns, through you to him and around the House, I think it's critically important. When we look at a number of the things that the opposition has done, whether it's an actual jobs plan, that was released today, that is full and robust, 12 points, these are the types of solutions that we're happy to provide. The other thing I might add is that in all of the years . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I've seen the clock tick by, and I just was reading 29(2)(a) a little. It does say in closing, "to allow . . . each Member's questions and comments."

I'm wondering if Banff-Cochrane could address both questions or points raised. [interjections] The question was asked over here, as I understand it, and I was simply allowing for that member to answer, and there have been additional ones.

Proceed.

Mr. Cooper: Yes. I think that the definition of “briefly” included in 29(2)(a) presents a bit of a challenge. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I from time to time rise in this House, and brief to me is about 15 minutes, and here we have five minutes of questions and comments. I would like to be able to provide my comments in addition to the comments from the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, but in a spirit of co-operation, good sir, I will finish . . . [A timer sounded]

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to this matter? The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m proud to rise today to support this bill, that the Finance minister and his team have worked so hard to put together. It’s something that is not unusual in the course of business in the parliamentary system, to have these types of interim supply bills come before the House. As I said, it’s consistent with previous interim supply bills, that this House sees on a yearly basis. It’s not unusual whatsoever, and it seems as though the opposition is making some inferences that the interim supply bill is out of the ordinary, in their opinion.

On the other hand, this legislation simply provides the spending authority to continue government operations beyond March 31, until Budget 2016 estimates are debated and approved. I’m sure, Mr. Speaker, that once the budget is tabled by the Minister of Finance on April 14, in the days and weeks that will follow the budget, the opposition shall take plenty of time to fully debate the main estimates when they come before the House.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the interim supply estimates speak for themselves. I’d just like to reiterate that we are being asked to allocate $29.6 million for the Legislative Assembly, $7.2 billion in expense funding, $864 million in capital investment funding, $164 million in financial transactions funding for the government, and $363 million for the transfer from the lottery fund to the general revenue fund. In reality, Mr. Speaker, these amounts that I’ve just read will keep our teachers in the classrooms and will keep nurses in our hospitals, unlike the opposition, who would rather see those people let go.

These monies will continue to fund the government services that Albertans rely on as we all deal with the unprecedented decline in oil prices and its impact on government revenue and all Albertans. I ask everyone to support this interim supply bill until we have the opportunity to debate the full budget in just under one month’s time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think I may have been confused on the last point. I used the phrase “Banff-Cochrane.” I see that the Government House Leader has left. It was my intention to speak to the question there, but we have moved past that.

Now, is there 29(2)(a) for the Member for Banff-Cochrane?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to close debate. I don’t believe there are any other members.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. Just with regard to the interim supply estimates before us, you know, there were a number of questions with regard to: what will these additional monies for the two months actually do? What will they achieve? I would just point people back to the business plans and targets that were submitted to this House for Budget 2015 on October 27. If you follow those business plans for each of the ministries through, you’ll see that they identify what the minister and ministries have undertaken to do with the monies available, and that’s not changed, Mr. Speaker. They still have to achieve those targets that they laid out to achieve.

The other things that were brought up that needed some clarification, I think, were with respect to – now, it was on the previous supplementary supply estimates. But, you know, many of the ministers have found in-year savings, and we will be talking about those when we bring forward the full review of Budget 2015. We’ll show how they have done yeoman’s work, in my estimation, in reining in spending.

I just wanted to correct one thing that I heard during some of the debate. We will be bringing in expense spending that will be lower than population plus inflation. Somebody over on that side said that it was not, and that’s not accurate. We are ensuring that we follow through with the goals and objectives set out in the targets. We have reined in spending – and you can look at the Q3 update for some of those – in a situation where revenue has fallen dramatically. So we have done, we believe, good work on this side.

We have brought forward the interim supply estimates. As my colleague behind me says, this is a fairly regular action to continue the expenditures on important programs and services and to work with our partners all across this province while we look at the budget, take the time to get it right, bring it in, and have a fulsome debate with each other on all of that in the next few weeks.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance has moved second reading of Bill 2, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2016.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 15, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: I'll recognize the Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the Member of Parliament for Edmonton Centre and parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Canadian Heritage, Randy Boissonnault. If you would rise while I continue the introduction. Mr. Boissonnault was elected in the 2015 federal election, and he's a passionate Albertan who has a long history of giving back to the community as a Rotarian and as cofounder of Literacy Without Borders. A francophone, our guest has worked as a lecturer at the University of Alberta's Campus Saint-Jean and served as chair of the board of directors for the francophone economic council of Alberta, the francophone sport federation of Alberta, and the Canadian Francophone Games.

Every member of this House knows the challenges and responsibilities and the rewards which come with representing our communities, and I'm sure that Randy can count on each of us to wish him all the best in his new role as Member of Parliament and for him to be a good partner to us as well when it comes to the many areas where our province and the federal government need to work together.

I ask that we give an official round of welcome to our honoured guest. Thank you.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Steve Clark, Ontario Progressive Conservative MPP, and his son Mitch, who lives here in Edmonton and is a member of the Edmonton Police Service. Steve Clark was first elected to the constituency of Leeds-Grenville in a landslide by-election in March 2010. He is the deputy Leader of the Official Opposition, a member of the Standing Committee on the Legislative Assembly, and the critic for tourism, culture, and sport. Steve and Mitch Clark are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I'd ask all members to join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, have your visitors arrived now? Please proceed.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly Martin Shields. Martin Shields is the former mayor of Brooks, in my constituency, and is now our proud Member of Parliament for the constituency of Bow River. I might add that in my neck of the woods federal Conservatives get north of 80 per cent of the vote. We're very proud to have him here.

I will also add my thanks to the deputy leader of the Progressive Conservative Party of Ontario for joining fellow Conservatives here today.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: We have school groups first. The Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I proudly stand in this House to help represent Fort Saskatchewan Christian school. They are led by Miss Natalie McIntyre, their teacher, along with helpers Mrs. Linda de Koning, Mrs. Mary Rietveld, and Mrs. Jill Burns. They came to the House today and brought me a wonderful picture that says Bright Through Nobility. Of course, because I did not clear it through the Speaker's office, I won't show it to you at this time, but I will proudly display it on my desk. I just want to quickly say that I really appreciate the letters that they brought with it. I'll just mention a couple of names: Avery, Ethan, Carter, Aliya. Thank you for your letters, and I look forward to continuing to, you know, earn their . . .

An Hon. Member: Trust.

Mrs. Littlewood: . . . everything. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you today two classes from Muriel Martin school in St. Albert. Teachers Mr. Pawsey and Mrs. Surmon are joined by Mrs. Kennett, Miss – I'm scared I'm going to mispronounce it – Amyotte, and Mrs. Clarke as well as their students. If they would please rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?

The Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three groups of introductions today. First, it is my delight to introduce to you and through you well-respected labour lawyer Andy Sims. Andy was instrumental in leading the government's consultations on our essential services legislation, which I will rise to introduce in the Assembly later today. Andy is an experienced arbitrator and mediator, practising throughout western Canada. Based in Edmonton, he served nine years as the chair of the Alberta Labour Relations Board plus 21 years as a vice-chair. Andy worked hard to ensure that our government found an essential services model that works for employers, employees, and for all Albertans.

Also here today are Liane Lawford and Justine Hetsler, who have worked on essential services for years. Mr. Speaker, they've exhibited the highest level of dedication and professionalism in their work, and I'm proud to have them working in my department.

I would also like to introduce to you some members of Alberta's labour community who will no doubt be interested in the legislation I'm introducing today. From the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees I would like to introduce Guy Smith and Carl Soderstrom, and from the Alberta Federation of Labour I would like to introduce Gil McGowan, Siobhán Vipond and Gwen Feeny.

I ask them all to stand and receive the warm welcome from the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some constituents from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. There are several of them, so I'll ask that they rise as I say their names. Sarah Gander and Diana Kleinloog are nurses whose colleagues are facing cuts at the Sundre hospital, and they're here to see the proceedings of the House today and hear the minister's thoughts on the matter. They're accompanied by Dr. Robert Warren, who also works at the hospital and is an active leader in our medical community; as well as Mr. Terry Leslie, the mayor of Sundre; Councillor Verna McFadden, whose offices are being flooded by distressed residents worried about the long-term care of their parents and loved ones; also, Mr. Gerald Ingeveld and Mrs. Shelley Ingeveld, who are concerned citizens who took the time out of their week to come and join us today; as well as Ms Heidi Overguard, a member of the Sundre chamber of commerce.

These are the faces of my community, Mr. Speaker, these are my neighbours, and these are the fine folks that stand to lose from the closure of half the hospital in Sundre. I ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm thrilled to be able to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a couple of my constituents from Edmonton-Decore, Nicholas and Kathy Fonseca. Nicholas and Kathy have lived in Edmonton for over 30 years and are a devoted couple focused on giving back to the community. After a trip to the Legislature, they contacted my office and asked if they could come view a session of question period. I sincerely hope that you enjoy your time today here at the Legislature, and I thank you for your interest in the political process. I would now ask that Nicholas and Kathy please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two councillors from the greatest city in Alberta, Grande Prairie, Kevin O'Toole and Kevin McLean, as well as a constituent of mine and a member of NADC, Andre Harpe. Please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other guests or visitors that we have today?

Then on behalf of the Assembly welcome, all, to our event today.

1:40

Members' Statements

Women's Equality

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, last week we acknowledged International Women's Day with some celebrating. For my entire life, whether consciously or unconsciously, I along with many sisters, mothers, daughters, aunts, grandmothers, and some brothers fought to gain equality for women. The Famous Five right here in Alberta fought to have us acknowledged as persons and won, and that is part of the reason that there are so many women here in the Legislature. But why did they even have to fight that battle?

I became a public activist for equity in 1984 when I signed a pay equity complaint against the federal government. Equity does not necessarily mean equal. Equity means the levelling of the playing field, and it is a step towards equality. The question is: how do we level that playing field?

Mr. Speaker, one organization in my community provides an example. Since 1993 the Womanspace Resource Centre has focused on community education, advocacy, referrals, and programming for individual women. Womanspace also conducts research on women's issues and serves as a recognized source for media on issues surrounding domestic violence. Womanspace has undertaken numerous large-scale projects and programs in our community, including women and AIDS, women and nonstandard work, and the good food club. In 2007 Womanspace began providing financial literacy training and workshops for local women, which continue to be a focus of the organization today.

When we reach a point in our society where attitudes have changed and women are treated with real respect . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Long-term Care in Sundre

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week Alberta Health Services announced the impending closure of 15 long-term care beds at the Sundre hospital and care centre. Over the next three months patients face a choice between leaving the community in hopes of finding comparable care elsewhere or trying to secure a bed at a lower level of care at a new housing facility in Sundre which is set to open this summer.

While Sundre certainly welcomes this new facility, it does not cover the full range of community care needs. Let's be clear. This facility isn't open yet, and it's already full. Worse, it does not actually have any long-term care beds or any beds near the level of the long-term care beds that are being closed at the Sundre hospital. While the hon. minister deflects questions about the closure of these beds, she fundamentally misunderstands the needs of our community. It's not about the numbers she throws around; it's about the level of care these people need.

Now, our community fought for 12 years to reach our goal of having a holistic community of care for our seniors. In 2013 we were finally able to take a real step towards this goal, and now the new facility will be operational in June. Yes, this new facility will accommodate levels of care from independent living to SL 4 care, and we're proud of that. However, it does not provide long-term care beds. We need the hospital for those, and those are exactly the beds this government is closing in Sundre.

Not only will these closures affect our ability to take care of our seniors within our own community, but we recently learned that they will also trigger layoffs for up to three dozen front-line workers. The announcements of these front-line cuts came with no warning and no public consultation. Mr. Speaker, the AHS central bureaucracy is building quite a reputation for disregarding the will of rural communities. At the very least the people of Sundre deserve a public meeting where their questions could be answered.

As it stands now, AHS stands ready to pull the plug out from under the people of Sundre, and we want to know if this government intends to do anything about it. If the government cared to listen to our communities, they would realize that Sundre needs these long-term care beds. As such, I urge the government to reconsider the closure of these beds and to come to grips with what communities like Sundre really need.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Agriculture

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Life in rural Alberta is far different than anywhere else in Canada. The days are different, the work is different, and the lifestyle is also very different. I feel honoured to be a rural Albertan and to be able to raise my family on a farm outside of Grovedale.

The Alberta agricultural community has long been one of the driving forces behind Alberta's economic success and behind the Alberta advantage. In communities from Manning to Milk River the farms and ranches are the lifeblood of the local economy. Across Canada Alberta's agricultural industry is the envy of every other agricultural community. Around the world Alberta's agricultural products are held in the highest esteem. Alberta's agrifood exports account for almost $10 billion annually and employ over 80,000 people. As Alberta is one of the lowest cost regions to feed livestock, we remain the largest cattle-producing province in Canada. The majority of Canadian beef processing also occurs in Alberta. Alberta's agricultural producers are among the best in the world, and agriculture is the largest renewable industry in the province.

I hope that even though there was little attention paid to our ag industry in both of the government's throne speeches, they'll see our ag industry as an essential part of Alberta's economy. Our farming industry is brimming with talented entrepreneurs who are proud Alberta businesspeople. Alberta families can find a huge selection of high-quality local agriproducts at their neighbourhood grocery store and thriving farmers' markets.

I will continue to advocate for good policy and expanded market access for ag producers. With 50 million acres used for crop and livestock production, Alberta is one of the world's most productive agricultural economies. Canada remains one of the few countries in the world to produce more food than we consume. The growing world population is an abundant market of mouths to feed for Alberta-produced foods. The question is: will this government allow the ag sector to keep up?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Pink Shirt Day

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 24 I had the honour of taking part in Pink Shirt Day. Pink Shirt Day was started when two Nova Scotia high school students united youth and teachers in their school to wear pink shirts in support of a classmate who had been bullied for wearing a pink shirt at school.

I was approached by the Kinsmen Boys & Girls Club in my riding as one of their children had asked if they could hand out free hot chocolate in front of my constituency office as a random act of kindness. Well, of course, I said yes. My constituency office was full of happy children who spent their evening giving out hot chocolate to anyone interested. It was cold that night, but not a single person complained. The children wore their pink shirts with pride, and it was a wonderful evening filled with joy, laughter, and love for everyone.

Mr. Speaker, my staff and I strive to ensure that my constituency office is a safe place for our constituents, one that is welcoming, caring, and respectful for everyone in my riding. As the MLA for Edmonton-Decore I strongly support a safe and inclusive society, whether it be in schools, at work, or in the home. I'm very proud of the children from the Kinsmen Boys & Girls Club. We can work towards a society free of bullying, discrimination, and intimidation in any form.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Canadian Agricultural Safety Week

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize Canadian Agricultural Safety Week, celebrated from March 13 to 19. I'm proud to see that each year this week is dedicated for producers and their families to reflect on the importance of farm safety in their lives. This year's theme is Keeping Kids Safe.

My constituency, the beautiful riding of Leduc-Beaumont, is ranked the second-largest in the county and the region for farm receipts. We grow barley, oats, hay, alfalfa and raise livestock, poultry, cattle, and calves.

Education and awareness are important in preventing hazardous incidents while working on the farm, especially when machineries are involved. I'm proud of my government, which continues to work closely with producers and industry stakeholders to promote children's farm safety and on-farm risk management for caregivers and supervisors. Our farm safety co-ordinators distribute safety resources and co-ordinate education and awareness programs for children, teens, and producers. They also developed the farm safe Alberta program, which is now available to producers. I must stress that these interactive educational resources are available free of charge to producers, and we will make the best of these in Leduc county.

Last fall the government introduced new enhanced legislative protection for waged farm workers. I'm happy to see that the government is in the process of consulting stakeholders in the ag industry to help develop recommendations and regulations. It is a priority for the government to ensure that farm workers come home safely at the end of the day to be with their family and their children. I and our government know that the safety of their children is paramount to farmers, and we will continue to work with them to promote safety awareness.

Mr. Speaker, I know that producers keep farm safety for the whole family top of mind throughout the year, and I know they will continue to do so, and I commend that.

Thank you very much.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Job Creation

Mr. Jean: Albertans are worried. They're watching businesses close down, friends lose work, or they themselves are out of a job. What they're looking for is hope, leadership that understands Albertans aren't looking for a handout but a hand up. That's why Wildrose today released our 12-point jobs action plan to get Albertans working again. Our plan would help restore confidence and bring stability back to Alberta's economy. Will this Premier tell Albertans when they can expect a real jobs plan from this government instead of more ideological experiments?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms. Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've had a chance to review the opposition's jobs plan, and I will say that I'm pleased. It's very clear they've been listening to a great deal of what's been said by our minister of economic development as well as myself because there is a lot within it with which we agree. There are, however, some things with which we don't agree. For instance, we believe that Alberta's energy future includes phasing out health-attacking coal emissions, but they think we should keep right on polluting. That's not the way forward. That's not going to create jobs, and that's not going to create a bright future for Alberta.

Mr. Jean: This week job creators asked for a moratorium from this government on further red tape and tax increases. Wildrose's action plan for jobs is exactly the type of leadership and policies that Albertans are asking and looking for. Policies like a small-business tax cut, cutting red tape by 20 per cent, and stimulus through a WCB premium holiday for new hires make sense. These policies would stimulate the economy and restore business confidence in Alberta. Will this Premier implement any of these Wildrose policies to get Albertans working again, and which ones?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting because when asked at his press conference about this very issue, reducing red tape, the Leader of the Official Opposition couldn't come up with one example of what he would do. When we talk about red tape and regulations, let's be clear what some of those are: minimum wage, environmental protection, health and safety, speed limits. These are not the kinds of things that Alberta needs to arbitrarily reduce. What we need is thoughtful governance working together with job creators to help diversify the economy and create new jobs going forward.

Mr. Jean: The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the only job-creation plan the NDP put forward created zero jobs, not one single job in all of Alberta except for the minister. To date the NDP has rejected an emergency debate on the economy, they rejected a jobs summit, and they rejected several reasonable proposals from Wildrose that would help all Albertans. It's evidence that this government is keen to follow its risky ideological agenda on the economy instead of doing what's right for all Albertans. Why can't this Premier just accept good ideas instead of putting forward an economic agenda that continues to hurt all Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One thing I can say that I definitely disagree with the Leader of the Official Opposition on is that in his press conference today he said specifically: I don't think right now that diversifying the economy is the number one job. Well, you know what? I think Albertans disagree. You're not going to be able to create new jobs from businesses that have closed. We have to move forward. We cannot do more of the same. It's time to abandon the dinosaur approach that some of our science friends over there are still embracing, and we need to move forward to move all of Alberta forward.

The Speaker: Second major question.

Pipeline Construction

Mr. Jean: Since May I have been saying that pipelines are the first step to Alberta's future prosperity. I've pressed the Premier continuously to fight for pipelines right across the country. She hasn't. She tells us that she prefers quiet diplomacy. Well, it's so quiet that you'd be forgiven if you didn't hear it. Since she was elected, B.C., Manitoba, Quebec, and Ottawa have all thrown new roadblocks at pipeline projects. Can the Premier give us one single example of a pipeline – any pipeline – that is closer to construction or approval as a result of her quiet diplomacy?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've had eight months, and the government that that member was part of had eight years, and they didn't get a pipeline built, so I really think it is time for them to rethink their talking points. Tweeting adolescent name-calling at mayors in Quebec is not the strategy to build the nation. We will engage in negotiations, we will engage in respectful conversations, and that will bring about a change.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, Prime Minister Trudeau isn't supportive of our pipelines. He doesn't even like to say the word "pipelines." Premier Clark of B.C. is opposed to both of our pipeline projects in her own province. Trudeau announced a tanker ban on the B.C. north coast, but B.C. will need federal approvals for LNG tankers for its liquefied natural gas terminal at Kitimat. It seems like B.C. might just need the tanker ban lifted as well. Will this Premier remind Premier Clark that it is in both our interests to have the federal government lift the B.C. tanker ban?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said, I've been working very hard on the issue of improving everybody's understanding of why getting access to tidewater is so important for Albertans and, quite frankly, for all Canadians. I make that case at every possible opportunity. I also made that case with Premier Clark, who is very keen to talk with us about selling hydroelectricity. I indicated to her that that was a wonderful conversation for us to have and that we'd be happy to do that when she was interested in talking about us getting our pipeline and our energy to tidewater.

Mr. Jean: The Premier has an opportunity right now to get B.C. onside with pipelines. Both Alberta's and B.C.'s energy products are ridiculously called dangerous by some of the NDP's radical friends, and both Alberta and British Columbia need Prime Minister Trudeau to lift the tanker ban. We have a chance to form a common front on an issue that is of mutual concern. If Ottawa treats us differently, then we have a very different issue. Will the Premier make it clear to the Prime Minister that the B.C. north coast tanker ban has to be lifted if only for the sake of national unity?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as I've said a number of times already, I've been having ongoing conversations with both representatives of the federal government, including the Prime Minister, as well as other Premiers, and that's what I will continue to do. I won't do it on Twitter. I won't do it by grandstanding. I won't do it by calling people names. What I will do is that I will engage in constructive dialogue, and I will also remind all those folks about our climate change leadership plan, which has very much changed the conversation and changed the willingness of people to consider that Alberta has a progressive, modernized energy product to offer to the world.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, today we released our 12-point jobs action plan to get Albertans working again. One of our key points was to fight for pipelines. Every day Canada loses up to $50 million because of lack of market access for our oil. The throne speech said that this government would work towards solid timelines for approvals for pipelines. What, if any, progress has the Premier made in getting the federal government to set predictable timelines for pipeline approvals?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, two weeks ago in Vancouver, when we were discussing primarily climate change at the request of the Prime Minister, I made it very clear that we also had to talk about market access and pipelines. As a result of that, we got all of the Premiers and the Prime Minister to sign onto a declaration that specifically said that they understood the urgency and the importance of timely, predictable, stable decision-making with respect to pipeline approvals across the country. That was language that we put in there, and now we're going to keep pushing them on it. I welcome the constructive effort . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

2:00

Mr. Panda: Jobs matter. In Calgary and all over Alberta people are losing their jobs or taking pay cuts to keep their jobs. Maybe this isn't important to the NDP, but in Calgary and across our province it's a big deal. The fastest way to improve job prospects is to get the pipelines built. There is no better shovel-ready infrastructure project than a pipeline, and it won't cost the taxpayers any money. Why won't the Premier be a strong supporter of market access and get these pipelines built?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. I think the member needs to listen more closely to what the Premier has already said, that we are strong advocates of market access. The Premier as well as myself and the Minister of Energy have been working with our counterparts both west of us and east of us as well as our federal counterparts, looking at having a constructive dialogue. The end goal is to get our product to market. It's not about jumping up and down and screaming in the media. That approach clearly has failed. It's failed for 10 years when the Leader of the Opposition was a federal MP, and it's also failed the previous PC government in Alberta.

Mr. Panda: Believe me, people in Calgary want to get back to work. They want their NDP government to have an actual jobs plan. This government had one – just one – job-creating idea, and it was a bad idea. And then the NDP went from a bad plan to no plan. This Premier could actually show Albertans that she's serious about jobs by wholeheartedly – wholeheartedly – taking up the fight to get pipelines built. Will the Premier do so, or can we expect more silent diplomacy from her?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that on the issue of pipeline advocacy I've answered the question several times.

But I would like to speak to the other issue. You know, all last fall the opposition over there said that a plan with rules that gave a $5,000 grant to employers to create jobs wouldn't work, and now they're introducing a $6,000 grant to employers with no strings attached at the cost of billions of dollars, which, suddenly, they think will work. Which side are these guys on? I can't figure out if they're coming or going. It just doesn't make any sense at all.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Carbon Pricing

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last November this government announced a climate change policy that will push out coal and bring in a carbon tax. We've heard that the carbon tax will be revenue neutral, but the details don't support this. One key partner has been completely left out of the conversations on how this carbon tax will affect them, and that partner is Alberta's municipalities. To the Municipal Affairs minister: please tell your municipal partners what assistance they will receive to deal with escalating costs caused by your NDP carbon tax.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we're very proud of with respect to our revenue-neutral carbon levy is that we will be reinvesting money back into the economy and that, quite frankly, municipalities will be very generous beneficiaries of this plan, so we are moving forward with it. When we introduce the budget, the details of the overall amounts of money will be demonstrated, and then we will engage in very active consultations with our municipal partners on how best to work with them, and we look forward to that.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. More revenue-neutral double-talk.

Mr. Speaker, we know that this government will allow large emitters in the oil sands to offset the carbon tax through a royalty reduction and incentives for large producers to reach lower thresholds. What we don't know is how small and medium-sized oil and gas companies and oil field service companies will be able to weather this government's policy storm. To the Minister of Energy: what specific programs have you implemented that will help small drilling and supply companies and operations, prevent them from shifting their business east to places that are more business friendly, starting with Saskatchewan?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, let's be clear; 79 per cent of Canadian oil and gas is in Alberta. We were working through the royalty plan. We have status quo for oil sands. They go the same. We've harmonized liquids for the smaller companies. And the cost of carbon will be calculated as expenses moving forward.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you. Mr. Speaker, given that this government's approach to energy development in rural areas will mean that many people will lose their jobs – some have already lost their jobs – and some will need to change industries or learn new skills, to the Premier or one of her ministers: what changes to your climate change plan will you make to have explicit long-term provisions that could stimulate local skills development in green tech or some other industry so people can continue to be employed as they were before you became government?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think the first thing, to be clear, is that the loss of jobs in the oil and gas sector is because the price of oil has dropped by over 75 per cent. Let's not forget that. The carbon levy has not even been introduced, so that's scaremongering, and it has nothing to do with the very serious job loss problems that our whole province is facing and we are very, very aware of. That being said, the carbon levy will actually provide us with an opportunity to incent and to generate green infrastructure and additional work that will provide job opportunities for people who've lost their jobs in the energy industry.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The Member for Red Deer-North.

Physician-assisted Dying

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As someone who has worked in end-of-life care for many years I feel very honoured to rise and ask these questions today. Since the Supreme Court of Canada's ruling in the Carter versus Canada case last January the issue of physician-assisted dying has become a matter of open public discussion. While I am heartened to see that both the federal government and the government of Alberta are finally acting to ensure that there will be laws put in place to uphold this recognized Charter right as of June 6, what is the ministry . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much to the member for the important question and for her service to Albertans. Certainly, following the Supreme Court of Canada's decision, the federal government needs to bring changes to the Criminal Code, and we also need to make sure that we move forward in a way that respects people's values, that brings about compassion, and that supports families in what is clearly a very difficult time of their lives. We know and agree that it's a profoundly difficult and touching situation for many individuals. That's why I'm really proud that I have an associate minister and an MLA panel that are receiving feedback and hearing presentations from individuals on this perspective as we continue to move forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for outlining the consultations under way.

Knowing that many Albertans are concerned about the issue of conscience rights related to physician-assisted dying, can the Minister of Health please address what will be done to ensure that the rights of physicians who may object to participating in this procedure are protected?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I'm happy to assure the member and all Albertans that the conscience rights of physicians and any other health care professional will be without question protected. Just as physician-assisted dying is a Charter right, the moral beliefs of any individual are equally protected by the Charter. Physicians who object to the procedure will see their rights respected. Our work going forward will be to balance these rights with a commitment to providing informed and compassionate care for patients and ensuring that their rights are respected as well.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for her response. I have been directing my constituents of Red Deer-North to the online survey to share their views on physician-assisted dying. After speaking with many of my constituents, I'm finding that their number one concern is regarding the vulnerable populations. What safeguards will be in place to ensure that vulnerable people are protected?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We need to ensure that no one ever feels coerced in making a significant decision, especially this one, and we also need to be certain that any patient assessing physician-assisted dying is fully competent and aware of all of the options that they have. These are questions that we are asking about in our consultation, and they are questions that are familiar to the medical professionals in all aspects of the care that they provide. As we prepare social policies around this issue, I believe that we will arrive at a solution that will reflect the values and compassion of Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would remind you again about the standing order with respect to preambles.

2:10 Rural Physician Action Plan

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker, one of the most pressing health issues that we face in rural Alberta is access to primary care and doctors. The rural physician action plan receives funding to place medical students and residents in underserved communities. Through these initiatives and others RPAP promotes physician recruitment and retention in our towns and small cities, but there are questions swirling around whether the NDP supports this program at all. Our communities are already hurting. Let's end this uncertainty. Can the minister commit right now to leaving this vitally important program in place?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, RPAP is one of the programs that we're very proud of and has brought about many great outcomes for Albertans, just as the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary, being physician-training universities, have also brought about great outcomes. So I think the responsible thing for a government to do at the end of a funding cycle is to review the objectives and review the outcomes. Certainly, RPAP will continue to exist, and we have continued their funding at the current level until the fall while we continue to figure out how best to use the resources we have to make sure that physicians and all health care professionals are available throughout Alberta.

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker, given how important this program is to families across the province, it's a shame that we can't get a real answer out of the minister. Seeing as she talks a great deal about giving Albertans access to the right health provider at the right place at the right time, will the minister take this chance to reassure rural Albertans and guarantee that our smaller communities will have the local access to doctors that they need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me be very, crystal clear. RPAP will continue to exist as we move forward. I've said that in my first answer; I'll say it in a second and a third if you need to hear it. I think the responsible thing for us to do at this point is to look at all the health professionals and how we make sure that we can attract and retain them in communities throughout Alberta. Physicians are certainly an important component, but so are nurse practitioners; so are midwives. We're working on those instead of threatening to cut billions of dollars from the public's treasury.

Mr. Loewen: Well, at least she's actually committed to it, too. It wasn't what she said in the first answer. She said that she was reviewing it.

This government spends a lot of time boasting about reviews, but it finds itself paralyzed with fear when it comes to taking real action. Why can't the minister bring herself to make a firm commitment to rural Alberta, promise families in our towns and small cities that she will not gut their access to doctors, and promise to leave this plan in place and other plans to make sure that we have access to doctors in rural communities?

Ms Hoffman: I've answered the question. We're absolutely committed to making sure that we have a stable health care system. That's why when we were first elected, we restored $800 million that was proposed to be cut from health care. That doesn't make sense. Members opposite keep proposing more cuts. They keep talking about how important it is for us to make sure that we don't run deficits. I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. The only way that's going to be happening is if we were to cut every nurse, every doctor. That's not going to be happening. The people of Alberta elected a government that stands up for public health care, and that's what they've got.

Coal-fired Electric Power Plant Retirement

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, the coal industry has been a steady source of gainful employment for thousands of Albertans for generations. In any economic climate holding onto these jobs would be very important to the affected communities but critical to their survival in the current economic and policy environment. Many of these affected communities are here with us this week for the AAMD and C conference. To the minister of environment: with mayors and reeves from across Alberta expressing significant concerns from fallout from your plan to rapidly phase out coal, will you consider taking a more balanced, job-protecting, and taxpayer-conscious approach on this issue?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. It's very clear that over the next 15 years there will be some coal-fired electricity retirements. Those are under the federal coal regulations that were brought in by the Stephen Harper government, that were supported by the Leader of the Official Opposition. The only difference between the 2016 and 2030 plan – that is, the federal coal retirements – and the post-2030 provincial NDP plan is that for everyone there will now be investments in those communities for transitioning those communities. The Leader of the Official Opposition, when he was in federal government, would have left those communities with nothing.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It seems that we're saving Albertans while killing their jobs. Given that a number of the municipalities who signed the open letter to the Premier expressing concerns around economic fallout, high electricity rates, and lower tax revenues are from NDP-held ridings and given that this makes them constituents of your own MLAs, one would hope that these concerns are taken seriously. To the minister of the environment: given that community leaders have publicly called for caution in the government's approach, will you heed their concerns and take what could be characterized as rash actions back to the drawing board?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, if rash actions are Stephen Harper's coal regulations, then I don't quite – I'm just not getting the connection here. The fact of the matter is that our government has made commitments to those communities for transition plans, including all of those areas that were covered under the federal coal regulations. Now, what is avoided by those Harper coal regulations? Let's see what was gazetted by the federal government in 2012 when they passed those regs. Over the next 20 years it is estimated that 590 premature deaths could be avoided in Alberta, 530 emergency room visits in hospitals . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gotfried: It's nice to see that the Phillips plan is now the Harper plan.

Given that the PC caucus has been advocating for an innovative approach combining industry research and their commitments with government objectives and given that 30 municipalities signed the open letter to the Premier advocating for a common-sense, dialed-down, dialed-up strategy as advanced by TransAlta, ATCO, Maxim, and others, again to the minister: given that a balanced strategy could achieve positive emission outcomes while maintaining jobs and grid stability, why are you rejecting this approach brought forward by conscientious leaders of both community and industry?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, the climate leadership plan, which was praised by many of the electricity generators . . . [interjections] Well, it was; that's a stone cold fact.

It was clear that we needed to do something about the remaining six plants after 2030. Now, the commitment that we have made to Albertans is that we will assist all of the communities, not just those who are affected by the post-2030 closures, with economic development. We have made those commitments clear to them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Employment Training

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People across Alberta are worried. They're frustrated that they can't get back to work and upgrade their skills. I hear about it in Airdrie, people coming into my office dejected and confused about why the NDP doesn't understand the importance of growing our economy. Many Albertans are finding that they do not qualify for existing government programs because they must already have a job offer in their hands in order to receive funds for training. To the minister: how many people are applying for learner income support, and how many are being turned away?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Member, for the question. Let me begin by saying that we are committed to ensuring that Albertans falling on these tough times have the needed and necessary supports, and that's why we have increased funding in our last budget for the Alberta income support program, and we have been providing those supports to Albertans. I can provide the specific numbers in terms of caseloads. The overall increase in the program is 50-plus per cent.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that many workers have suddenly found themselves without a job and want to upgrade their skills, and NDP policies are not working. Seeing as the Wildrose job action plan calls for investing in Alberta's knowledge infrastructure and increasing apprenticeship usage on government projects and maximizing the use of existing training programs and given that employers are receiving hundreds of applications a day for a single job, what plan does the government actually have to keep workers in Alberta and get them the skills they need to get back to work?

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. As the Premier outlined initially, there are a couple of points in the Wildrose plan – actually, they've been listening to our Speech from the Throne and to many speeches that I've been giving as far as investing in Alberta. When the Finance minister tables the budget on April 14, there are a number of initiatives that our government is rolling out, partnering with the private sector, the job creators, in order to get Albertans back to work. To the member: as well, I'm working very closely with the Minister of Labour, and we are looking at opportunities and ways to support workers through retraining programs.

Thank you.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, what Albertans want is a hand up, not a handout. Considering that education and training has proved to be one of the best methods to combat unemployment and that the average Alberta Supports centres are seeing increases in demands between 50 to 70 per cent over the last year and given that the NDP has failed to maximize the use of existing skills training programs that could make a difference here today, will the NDP adopt the Wildrose's 12-point action plan on jobs, that will get these workers the skills that they need?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of issues that we fundamentally disagree with the opposition on. As far as their 12-point plan, first of all, we believe that phasing out cancer-causing emissions and protecting the health of our children and our families is very, very important. We've seen the lack of new pipelines being built over the last decade, and we've seen who is in power and why they couldn't get them built. Jumping up and down and screaming, cursing at people, and tweeting at them is not the way to get a pipeline approved and built. [interjections] We are having very constructive dialogue with our counterparts across the country, including the federal government, and we believe that this is the approach to take.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, tone it down.

Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Water and Waste-water Infrastructure

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Towns, villages, and counties across Alberta are worried about their water and waste-water infrastructure. Raw sewage will flow into the Crowsnest River if Blairmore's waste-water treatment plant is not fixed now. The systems in Blackfalds and Lacombe can't currently meet environmental standards, which is unacceptable under a government that claims to care for Alberta's environment. To the Minister of Transportation: when will these critical projects receive funding so municipalities will not have to sink to Montreal's level and pollute a major waterway with raw sewage?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. This government has committed significant new funding for the water for life and water/waste-water treatment plants. That's about $107 million over the next couple of years. Those applications have been received and are being considered. We expect that sometime in June we'll be able to start making some announcements about what those projects that have been funded are.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a regional water line is needed for consistent water supply to the town of Okotoks and given that towns like Westlock, in my riding, act as central hubs for regional water supply and the Westlock concrete water tower is literally crumbling, putting the entire region's water supply at risk, Minister, what is your government's plan to support regional collaboration when it comes to water/waste-water infrastructure, and will the town of Westlock receive funding this year for its water reservoir project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member. I've been meeting with mayors, reeves, and councils. I met with four of them today at AAMD and C to hear their concerns. I will indicate that we're very sympathetic to some of these requirements. I met with the mayor of Okotoks just a week and a half ago as well. We're considering all of these things. We've put significantly increased resources into these projects, and they will be evaluated on the basis of their merits. Clearly, there are far more requests than money available to pay for them.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Second supplemental.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wildrose would protect waterways and supply water by providing consistent funding to municipalities instead of keeping them in limbo.

Given that 56 projects were approved under the small communities fund and that 49 of those were for water, waste water, or storm water and given that we have a duty to manage our natural resources and protect them from raw sewage dumps, would the minister agree that there is a crisis in water/waste-water infrastructure in Alberta and that this government has a responsibility to help address the crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Well, you know, it's a good question, an interesting question. Yes, we would say that there is a serious problem. Infrastructure spending, of course, was reduced under the previous government, particularly during the Klein period, and we're struggling to catch up. We've put additional resources. But it's a bit rich coming from a member of a party that would cut $9 billion out of our capital spending. Nothing would get done, Mr. Speaker. He wouldn't get his water tower. He wouldn't get his waterline. Unless the NDP government is here, nothing will happen.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-South East.

Climate Change Strategy

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I applaud this government for following through with the Progressive Conservative climate change framework. The new investment of $10 million to SBI BioEnergy from the climate change and emissions management fund shows just how much this government appreciates this funding framework. However, in the past trends from biofuel projects have shown that it's difficult to create a business plan that will provide the energy at a cost-effective price and generate a profit. To the minister of environment: what is different about this business plan with SBI BioEnergy, and can you assure Albertans that this isn't just a cash handout with a feel-good story to it?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that question. It is true that the previous government's bioenergy initiatives and investments did attract some raised eyebrows from the office of the Auditor General, and that's why we're endeavouring to fix them. Now, this piece, though, was funded through the Climate Change and Emissions Management Corporation, which is leveraging funding from the private sector as well in a number of different investments. Those decisions are made at arm's length from government. They are made possible through the specified gas emitters regulation, and that's how the corporation is funded.

Mr. Fraser: Given that this bioenergy project is said to have the potential to take the equivalent of 23,000 cars off the road annually, that's welcome news.

You mentioned in your throne speech that you'll be funding mass transit through your carbon tax. The Calgary green line has the potential to prevent 52,000 tonnes of CO<sub>2</sub> emissions from being released into our atmosphere. That's pretty significant. Minister, will you commit to the green line project in Calgary as it clearly falls within the climate change plan and is a significant benefit for Calgarians and future Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for speaking out on behalf of his constituents on important public infrastructure projects, particularly with such important green ramifications to them. We are in the middle of a budget-making process and a capital-planning process, and we'll have more to say about these important priorities at that time.

Mr. Fraser: Given that this government is continuing to use the existing specified gas emitters regulation framework and continuing to fund projects from the climate change and emissions management fund, Minister, what will become of the climate change and emissions management fund when the new carbon tax framework is in place? Will you expand the mandate of the fund, or will the fund cease to exist?

Ms Phillips: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, some thoughtful questions from the hon. member. What I can say at this point in the budget-making process is that we will be making significant investments in green infrastructure and in innovation and clean technology, which is, of course, the mandate of the climate change emissions management fund, the latter with respect to ensuring that we get good ideas out into the market, whether it's reducing our per barrel emissions or whether it's investing in new and innovative solutions like SBI.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Agricultural Assistance for Drought Recovery

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Farmers and producers in my constituency were hit hard last year. In some cases states of agricultural emergency were declared, and now low precipitation levels and warm temperatures over the winter have left many of these same farmers worried about a repeat of last year's conditions and wondering if they'll be able to cope. To the minister of agriculture: what are you doing to prepare for potential dry conditions our farmers and producers are facing again this year?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The year 2015 was a challenging year for many Alberta producers who were concerned about dry growing conditions and feed supplies. Snowpacks in many agricultural areas are below normal this year due to a number of factors such as a late start to winter, below-normal precipitation, and above-average temperatures. However, at this point it is difficult to speculate on what the long-term impact on this year's growing season will be. Nevertheless, department staff continue to monitor conditions and will ensure that our robust suite of existing programs and services such as crop insurance, AgriStability, and AgriInvest continue to be available to help producers during difficult times.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplementary.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we are already facing dry conditions and the growing season hasn't even started yet, again to the minister of agriculture: what are you doing to ensure that our farmers and producers can be confident now as they're planning what they'll have to grow and the supports that they'll need for this growing season?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member. There are also a number of important resources available to support producers in their decision-making during dry conditions. Alberta Agriculture and Forestry posts regular crop reports and soil moisture condition updates on its website to ensure producers have current information about growing conditions in their area. Alberta Agriculture and Forestry offers business risk management programs that are designed to assist producers facing challenging growing conditions. Agri-insurance products provided through Agriculture Financial Services Corporation include protection insurance. Producers are insured for 50, 60, 70, or 80 per cent of their individual normal yield history.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that producer uptake of insurance for hay and pasture continues to be below average, to the same minister: should we have another repeat of the challenging growing conditions, will farmers and producers, including ranchers and livestock operators, have access to appropriate levels of insurance?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, the government heard from producers and is working with AFSC to improve the system. AFSC has engaged producer groups such as the Alberta Beef Producers to help improve this coverage. We've added more weather stations to more accurately assess conditions. The AFSC is considering numerous changes, including simplifying the options offered, changing the pricing mechanisms, reviewing the payment function, reviewing the hay normal yields, especially with respect to the age of the stand. These changes should be ready for the 2017 growing season.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Long-term Care in Sundre

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked the Health minister about the closing of half the hospital in Sundre. Alberta Health Services, with the minister's blessing, blindsided Sundre by announcing the closure of 15 long-term care beds. This will directly result in front-line job losses. In the gallery today are front-line workers from Sundre whose colleagues' jobs will disappear because of this. How can the minister justify to these doctors and nurses the breaking of NDP promises by not only shutting down front-line services but also laying off front-line workers?

Ms Hoffman: Clearly, it's another day in the land of make-believe for the Official Opposition, Mr. Speaker. Let me make the record crystal clear. One, the hospital in Sundre will remain open. Two, all of the residents will be able to transition to a new facility, and we'll make sure that they get the right level of care. I think it might be long-term care for a couple of the members, and we'll make sure that that level of care is available at the new facility. Three, all staff will have a landing place consistent with the collective agreement. I'd be happy to meet with the members in the gallery afterwards to offer them that assurance in person.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'll take the minister up on that.

The minister is trying to downplay her decision to shut down 15 long-term care beds in Sundre by pointing to 40 lower level care beds that are being created at the new lodge. Given that the NDP used to know that long-term care beds are the same as supportive living 1, 3, and 4 and given that the NDP promised more long-term care spaces across the province in the last election, can the minister explain how cutting all of Sundre's long-term care beds moves us towards that goal?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me again make the clarity around making sure that we get the right care in the right place by the right professional. For the individuals that are currently living in the long-term care facility: that's not the right care. Just like if I was waiting to live somewhere where I needed to have some support with my meals and with my daily hygiene, I shouldn't be stuck living in a hospital. I should have the right facility. The new facility will have 40 bright, brand new, welcoming beds, and I'm sure that the hon. member will be happy to be there with me when we open the facility.

In terms of the transition, for the couple of people that do need the higher level of care, we're going to make sure that we have the right supports for them in the new facility so that they can receive long-term care.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, yesterday in question period I asked the minister point-blank if she would commit to not closing the Sundre hospital, but she would not in question period. She has now; I thank her for that. Given that hospitals in NDP-held ridings like the hospitals in Tofield, Lamont, Manning, and Grande Cache are statistically used less often than Sundre's, can these communities expect to see their beds cut, or is the Sundre hospital the only hospital in the minister's sights?

Ms Hoffman: I said it in the first question; I'll say it again. The Sundre hospital is staying open, and I'm proud of that. I'm proud that the people of Alberta elected a government that actually believes in public health care. Instead of pushing for queue-jumping and for people to be able to go over the border, we're investing in public infrastructure. We're looking at facilities that have 45-year-old beds, that aren't up to today's best standards, that aren't as welcoming as the new facilities, and we're finding ways to replace those 15 beds with 40 appropriate-level care beds. This is very good news not just for Sundre but for rural Alberta, and we'll continue to look at ways that we can move forward to make sure that people get the right care in their communities throughout Alberta, Mr. Speaker.

Bioenergy Initiatives

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, last week the Premier and the environment minister announced a $10 million government grant to SBI BioEnergy for the construction of a new biofuel production facility. Now, the announcement actually reminded me of mating elephants. It was done at a high level, there was a lot of trumpeting and stamping of feet, and it will take two years to see if we get any results. But it got me to thinking: producing 240 million litres of biofuel is going to take a lot of canola. To the environment minister: what is the total annual volume of canola feedstock that will be required to provide input for this venture, and how many seeded hectares of canola does this represent?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, as I understand the matter, the feedstock for this particular bioenergy refinery can be very varied. The fact is that they are using off-grade canola for which there is currently no market, providing a market to farmers for that product.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's good to know that the minister knows that it will use off-grade canola as the feedstock, but, you see, our farmers don't set out to grow off-grade canola. Our farmers set out to grow feed-grade canola, that can be sold at higher prices, and the amount of off-grade canola depends on weather and environmental conditions. Can the environment minister inform the Assembly: if growing conditions are good and farmers are fortunate to grow enough food-grade canola, how and where will SBI BioEnergy source enough feedstock to run their operation?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, this is a very innovative technology that can use a number of different feedstock inputs for its bioenergy refining, and that's why the technology itself was so interesting and so worthy of support from the CCME and a variety of private-sector partners. I will add that Dr. Inder Singh, who is the head of SBI, is a leader in this field.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're certainly proud of Dr. Singh as well, and that's why our previous government actually provided some of the original funding for this project.

The production of biofuels presents us with many challenging moral and ethical questions. Given that many Albertans are asking whether it's more important to feed the hungry or feed Humvees, to the minister of agriculture: would you please comment on the moral and ethical implications of diverting agricultural products out of the global food supply?

The Speaker: The minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Those concerns are valid, and that is why this particular technology takes other kinds of feedstock not used in the agricultural food chain supply. There are a number of different waste products that it can use, and that is why this technology is so important for one of the pieces of our journey towards sustainability in this province.

Indigenous Peoples' Economic Development

Mr. Hinkley: Mr. Speaker, all Albertans are aware of the current economic challenges our province is facing. My constituents in Wetaskiwin-Camrose, which has a large indigenous population, are not immune to the downturn and have shared their stories about job losses with me. In 2015 the unemployment rate for Alberta's indigenous population was 11.7 per cent. That's double the 5.8 per cent for nonaboriginal Albertans. To the Minister of Indigenous Relations: what are you doing to ensure First Nations and Métis Albertans are supported when it comes to employment opportunities?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I am very proud of our government's role in working with indigenous Albertans to help them to be included in the business community in this province and to benefit from Alberta's economy. Our Alberta economic partnership program provides about $2.4 million in funding to 44 different projects to help the indigenous communities to build their feasibility studies, their business plans, and economic development. We'll see that spreading throughout the province over the next year.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we need to ensure that our indigenous communities have access to the same economic, social, and community development opportunities that all Albertans have, again to the same minister: what supports are in place to ensure our province's indigenous communities have the same chance to survive right now?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. You know, as a social worker in this province for the last 34 years the socioeconomic well-being of the indigenous community has been very close to my heart, and it's central to how I'm going to practise in this ministry that I've been granted the privilege of leading. This year the First Nations development fund provided $128 million for more than 300 economic, social, and community developments, and we are helping to move the indigenous community to have greater quality of life for themselves and their children.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Again thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we need to ensure that our government's words are being backed up by our actions, how specifically will the First Nations development fund make a positive impact on specific Alberta communities?

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the member for the question. I've really had the wonderful opportunity of going around this province, all the way from the very south, the Blood Tribe community, to the very north, the Paddle Prairie community, and I've seen the wonderful economic development that's going on in many of our indigenous communities. In the last year, for example, the First Nations development fund has supported the Bigstone Cree Nation Women's Emergency Shelter, the Cold Lake First Nations hotel construction, and the Tsuu T'ina Nation fire department. In total, the ministry provides about $165 million.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Lac La Biche Apartment Fire

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the very early hours of Saturday, March 12, the Lac La Biche fire department responded to a fire at an apartment building in Lac La Biche. In spite of the early hour the response was almost immediate. The firefighters worked very bravely to evacuate all 91 residents of the building safely, with zero injuries to the residents and only two minor injuries to the firefighters. The blaze caused approximately $1.2 million in damage and was found to have been started by a cigarette butt in a flowerpot.

The Red Cross funded the first 72 hours of temporary housing for the displaced residents, and the owners of the Parkland Motel are still accommodating residents who have no place else to go at their cost. BCM Inns also donated accommodations for some of the residents for up to a month. The people and businesses in Lac La Biche have stepped up to help the many displaced residents. There have been donations of everything from towing services and lock services to those who lost their keys in the scramble to free taxi services, gift certificates, and cash. Big Dog radio held a radiothon on Monday to help out, and my Wildrose caucus MLAs stepped up and donated cash to help as well. Cash donations continue to pour in from the members of the community, to the tune of over $16,000 so far. I would like to commend the people of Alberta for helping those in need, especially in these economic times. I also commend His Honour Mayor Omer Moghrabi and the county council for their immediate action in supporting their community.

I was not surprised at all to hear that this wonderful community and people from around Alberta stepped forward to help out their fellow men and women in crisis. I was, unfortunately, very surprised and dismayed to hear that Alberta Human Services chose this time to seek cost savings by ignoring the temporary foreign workers who also lived in the building. These people are now displaced because it is apparently not the provincial government's problem. What a terrible message this sends to those dedicated workers already removed from their families and homelands and who are trying to build a life here in Alberta. Luckily, Albertans' compassion and sense of responsibility for each other is stronger and more forthcoming than this government's bureaucrats.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Bill 4 An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise and introduce Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services.

This bill acknowledges many unionized public-sector workers' right to strike while also protecting Albertans' access to essential public services. The legislation modernizes Alberta's labour laws to reflect decisions by the Supreme Court of Canada and the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta. Both courts ruled last year that public-sector workers have the right to strike. As a result, Alberta's Public Service Employee Relations Act and the Labour Relations Code must be changed to lift the prohibition on strikes and lockouts. If passed, Mr. Speaker, Alberta's essential services legislation would be similar to the laws in other provinces. This legislation is fair to unionized employees, employers, and the general public, ensuring access to essential services in the event of a labour dispute.

As a final note, thank you to all in the gallery who contributed to this legislation.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of a report entitled Report of the Chief Electoral Officer on the Recall Process in British Columbia, dated November 2003, which I referenced during the course of debate on Bill 201 yesterday.

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, I rise with two tablings this afternoon. One is the Canada Gazette from August 30, 2012, and the other is clippings from Capital Power and AltaLink, both of which make the case for the phase-out of coal-fired electricity undertaken between 2016, now, and 2030.

Orders of the Day

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mrs. Littlewood moved, seconded by Mr. Westhead, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Debate adjourned March 10: Mr. Coolahan speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to continue my response to the throne speech. This government is taking an approach to the economy that encourages investment not only through incentives but through the fact that we are working to ensure that we have the best standards; the best workforce; the best infrastructure such as roads, hospitals, and schools; great access to capital; and, yes, competitive tax and royalty structures. We will ensure that those who are struggling do have access to the services they need, services that can help to raise standards rather than services that keep people in the same place.

In addition to this government's pragmatic management of the budget during these lean times, I am proud, Mr. Speaker, that this government does not find social issues stale and understands that this province's legislation needs to move forward on making Alberta equal for all. Last session's Bill 7 immediately comes to mind, legislation that added gender identity and gender expression to Alberta's Human Rights Act.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also extremely pleased and proud that we will introduce the Alberta child benefit, that will see Alberta's low-income families with two children receive an additional $3,000 a year. This is the type of policy that not only helps families on a day-to-day basis, but it helps to level the playing field. This is also the type of policy that anticipates changes to the energy sector that may impact the price of utilities in the short term.

I'm also proud that this government has moved to ensure that the LGBTQ children will feel safe in their schools and that the school boards are moving to ensure the same.

Mr. Speaker, as noted in the throne speech, this government is moving towards ending the poverty-inducing cycle of payday loans in this province, and we'll be looking at ways to ensure that small loans can be given out without families going into further debt.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, Albertans need a government that puts the interests of all Albertans at the forefront of its policies and its responsibilities. We need a government that removes the tunnel vision and sees the diversity of people that live in our great communities and the diversity of challenges that we all have. The Lieutenant Governor has reinforced that this government is, in fact, the government that understands Alberta's current and future economic needs. It is also the government that understands the need to ensure that the economy works for everyone.

Thank you.

2:50

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other members who'd like to speak to this matter under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to say thank you very much to the Member for Calgary-Klein for his insightful and informative response to the throne speech. I was wondering if he could tell us more about the importance of government putting money into infrastructure in his area.

Mr. Coolahan: Sure.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member for the question. Well, infrastructure dollars are very important to the province and people in my constituency. Firstly, we simply have an infrastructure deficit in this province. We have crumbling roads, crumbling bridges. We need to update schools. We need new schools. We need to update hospitals. We need to ensure that people move through our communities, communities like mine, in an efficient manner as a means to get to work every day.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Not only that, Madam Speaker, but the infrastructure projects and the money that we're putting forward will help put Albertans back to work while we work on getting pipelines built and getting our oil to tidewater and to new sources. Last but not least – and I think this is what we need to remember – is that when we have first-class infrastructure in our province, that helps attract investment. It helps attract head offices for corporations. These businesses want to know that when they move here, their employees can get to work on time and their children will go to safe schools and they will have the hospitals that they can send their children to.

That's all. Thank you so much for the question.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other comments or questions under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, do I have another speaker on this? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is truly my pleasure to speak today in response to the Speech from the Throne delivered by Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, Lois Mitchell. It is a privilege to congratulate her on her appointment as our Queen's representative in Alberta. As I watched the installation of Her Majesty's Lieutenant Governor last year, I couldn't help but reflect upon the traditions that have shaped not only Alberta and Canada but also the Commonwealth nations and much of the world's responsible democratic governments, traditions that go back 800 years to the Magna Carta, that today define us and give us a shared purpose in governing this great province of Alberta with pride, the use of the Westminster parliamentary style of government.

I am blessed to be part of this Legislature, these halls that have now seen many great men and women that have preceded us, people like Alexander Rutherford, Alberta's first Premier; or the Famous Five women – Emily Murphy, Irene Parlby, Nellie McClung, Louise McKinney, and Henrietta Muir Edwards – who asked the question: does the word “persons” in section 24 of the BNA Act include women? Thereby, these five women ensured that all women had the legal – the word “legal” meant that women were indeed persons and had the right to vote. By looking at how many female representatives we have in the House, we sure have come a long way since that question was first asked.

One other person of interest to me that I want to talk about is Anthony Henday. Everybody here seems to know Anthony Henday as the drive that goes around Edmonton, and that's the name of the drive that they understand. But Henday is actually credited as the first European to enter Alberta, arriving in the area that was to become the town of Chauvin in my riding of Battle River-Wainwright. So, Madam Speaker, I am very honoured that the constituents of Battle River-Wainwright graced me with one of the greatest privileges and chose me to be their representative to bring the issues and problems to the Legislature. I would like to thank the constituents of Battle River-Wainwright for supporting me and giving me the honour to serve them.

Since the provincial election on May 5 I've been very, very busy throughout my constituency and have had the pleasure of meeting many of the constituents first-hand and hearing their concerns and taking comfort in their triumphs. But I've also despaired with their challenges. I promise I will do my very best for the constituents of Battle River-Wainwright.

I'm a proud Albertan and have called Battle River-Wainwright my home for over 35 years. I have deep roots in the riding, both personal and through business ventures, and I have raised my family of five here. We consider ourselves blessed to be part of the community, replete with good people and abundant resources.

I believe that this riding and its people have played a significant role in the economic and the historical prosperity of our province. Battle River-Wainwright is a large rural riding, almost 17,500 square kilometres in size. There are 24 municipalities, nine hamlets, four counties, and two municipal districts. Its population is approximately 38,000 people, predominantly involved in Alberta's two biggest economic drivers, agriculture and oil. Agriculture occupies about 16 per cent of the workforce while a further 11 per cent operate in the energy industry.

At Hardisty there's a large petroleum tank farm that is the nexus of pipelines. I had the privilege over this summer to visit both Gibson's and Enbridge, and I have to say that I was most impressed with the cleanliness and the organization and care that they have for the work and the environment. It was truly impressive.

Another interesting town for me in my constituency is Forestburg. It is a strong, vibrant town of approximately 880 people which has a vital agricultural and coal mining background. Westmoreland Coal and ATCO Power are the main employers there. Unfortunately, this government wants to accelerate the phasing out of coal-fired electrical generation without a clear plan to help with that transition. This town and towns like Forestburg are afraid for their economy. Consequently, I fear for this town's future, too, but I will continue to work for the municipality to find ways and means to keep this town vibrant.

At the AUMA convention this fall I was able to meet with many of the town councils, and in my riding a common theme came from them. They wanted to see stable, predictable, transparent funding for the municipalities through the MSI grant. Now they've been concerned about any changes to the linear taxation structure. They, however, particularly liked the Wildrose's 10-10 MSI plan. They told me that funding of this nature would help them to remain strong and viable.

Towns in my riding include Alliance, Amisk, Bashaw, Bawlf, Chauvin, Czar, Daysland, Edberg, Edgerton, Ferintosh, Forestburg, Hardisty, Hay Lakes, Heisler, Holden, Hughenden, Irma, Killam, Loughheed, Provost, Rosalind, Ryley, Sedgewick, and Wainwright, my home.

There are two other towns in my constituency that I want to talk about, Strome and Galahad. They have chosen dissolution and have ceded their governance to the county of Flagstaff. There are other towns that are considering this option at this time, too. I believe that we as legislators need to tread carefully and look closely at programs that support rural towns as the heart of Alberta is still in rural Alberta.

Madam Speaker, I have a unique community within my constituency, Denwood. This is a Canadian Forces base in Wainwright. Last year they celebrated the 75th anniversary of the base. Denwood is home to approximately 500 full-time service personnel and their families, who bring a welcome boost to the local economy both as customers and as workers. During training exercises this population can expand up to 10,000 personnel, and there are many services provided both on and off the base to support these families. These military families bring a wonderful richness of national and international experience to the Wainwright region and have helped make Wainwright a vibrant community.

CFB Wainwright, Madam Speaker, is one of the busiest training bases in all of Canada, being home to two major training organizations, the 3rd Canadian Division Training Centre and the Canadian Manoeuvre Training Centre, or CMTC. Training exercises for both the Canadian and multinational forces take place in the area, adding a touch of colour and excitement. Of course, these exercises are not without dangers. During recent exercises 17 personnel were injured in a live training exercise over a weekend.

Madam Speaker, there are issues that pose challenges to all communities in my riding. Infrastructure is a concern, particularly the roads, the Wainwright hospital, the school in Irma, and facilities for seniors. Roads are not being maintained to an acceptable level in many places. Highway 14 east of Wainwright has seen better days and is now starting to break apart in many places. The hospital in Wainwright is in desperate need of replacement. In fact, there have been many studies that have shown major deficiencies in the hospital such as size and crumbling infrastructure. In fact, the previous government had placed the Wainwright hospital at number two on the priority list. The hospital is widely overused, and there is no weekend medical coverage on the base. In the event of an emergency the Wainwright hospital is often the only available option for base personnel and the residents of Denwood and the surrounding Wainwright area.

Facilities for seniors are, in too many instances, substandard and failing. With our aging population it would be responsible for us to ensure that there are proper facilities for our seniors.

The school in Irma has been a great school for many years, but now it's 65 years old, and I'd say that it's time to look for retirement of the school and have a new, fully functional school that meets the needs of the town now and for many years to come.

I hope to continue to provide a strong voice for our constituency this session to address these and other concerns.

Madam Speaker, I would be remiss in telling you about this great part of Alberta that makes up Battle River-Wainwright without specifically thanking two beautiful ladies in my life, my wife, Eileen, and my daughter Ashley. Ashley is working on her fifth year of university for a bachelor of education degree, and she'll be finished in about three weeks. Eileen is tireless in her support for me in my new career as an MLA. These two women helped, and they worked tirelessly throughout the campaign, helping me to knock on doors, driving me from town to town, putting up signs, setting up the campaign office. The list goes on. They continue to support me as we go into this session.

I'd also like to thank my son Matthew and his wife, Rebecca; my oldest daughter, Chantel; and her husband, Nathan. They have been an inspiration in my life and mean everything to me.

I've been truly blessed with a family and would like to leave them with a government and an Alberta that will make Alberta prosperous for generations to come. On that personal note, I will close with the same words that Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor used in her Speech from the Throne: God bless Alberta, God bless Canada, and God save the Queen.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. To the member. In my own riding we have the Cold Lake air force base, which brings a ton of stability during this economic hard times. I would like to know: does he have the same kind of stability within his riding with the base that he has?

Mr. Taylor: Thank you for that question. Yes. I'd be happy to address that question. Wainwright is absolutely one of the strong economic drivers in our town. It's there. The people are being posted in and out, but there's a large contingency of people. Denwood had 500 people in it, but we have at least that many, if not more, that live right in the town itself. The people that are hired as a result of the base: that's numerous people here, too. Towns such as Irma, Edgerton: people from the base go to those towns as well. The riding is well supported by the military base. They're a blessing to have.

Sometimes it's a challenge when they're doing their exercises. You can certainly tell when they're going on because the walls and the doors and the windows can literally shake when the bombs are being dropped. It sounds like somebody is actually pounding on your door, so you go up to the door and you try to open up the door to see who's there. Nobody is there. But if you listen outside, you can hear the base going boom, boom, boom. Often you can see the light in the sky where the bombs are being dropped. It's quite an exciting town, and it's really a boost to our economy.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments?

Seeing none, I will call on the hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to deliver my maiden speech as the Member for Lethbridge-West. I want to use the occasion to pay tribute to my community, and I hope to do them justice both in this speech and in the discharge of my duties as their elected representative.

Lethbridge-West sits in the heart of Treaty 7, a treaty between the Blackfoot and the Crown signed by Chief Crowfoot in 1877. The descendants of the people who signed Treaty 7 live in my city just as they do throughout the Canadian and American plains and foothills as members of the Piikani and Kainai mainly, of the Blackfoot Confederacy.

My city is bordered by Canada's largest reserve lands, the lands given to the Kainai people and the Piikani reserve, home to some of the most beautiful riparian landscapes in the Oldman River valley. Blackfoot people tell us stories of the abundance of the foothills and plains, the great herds of buffalo now disappeared from the landscape, their presence still held in the ecosystem by the flattened earth, the medicinal shrubs, the rich native prairie and soil.

Madam Speaker, the worst of Canada's colonial history was played out in Treaty 7 territory. Smallpox and the extirpation of the bison herds robbed the people of their economy. Residential schools stole from parents the right to time and teaching of their children, stole dignity from the children and subsequent generations, and robbed the whole people of their language, spirituality, foods, medicines, and stories.

The last great battle between Canadian indigenous peoples took place in the middle of Lethbridge-West, literally in the heart of my community. Its very centre is the spot in the Oldman River valley where the Blackfoot and Cree clashed for the last time, in 1870. It is called the Battle of Belly River in the history books because the white settlers renamed the river the Oldman some years later. The term "Belly River," as the story goes, was too risqué for Victorian sensibilities. The battle was about the Cree's view that the Blackfoot had been sufficiently decimated by smallpox to lose an invasion. The river ran red with the blood of the Cree, as the stories go, and while the Blackfoot elders now smile wryly at the recollection of that battle or its stories, this is still a gentle reminder for all of us that the people are fierce, they are tough, and there are lines one does not cross.

Madam Speaker, the sun dance has never stopped in southern Alberta, the ceremonies, the centre of spiritual life for the Blackfoot people. Sun dance had to go underground during the most vicious generations of white settler colonialism, but today it thrives in Kainai and now Siksika.

Time is an enormous, long river, and I stand in it just as my indigenous sisters and brothers stand in it. Our work is now, after a great, destructive flood of historical events, to move the stones back into place, to remove the deadfall of history but set it aside and, in its place, as a reminder of what we have done and seen, repair the river together. We are all treaty people.

On the west bank of the Oldman River, a short jog up a steep coulee from the scene of the last great battle, sits one of North America's finest art collections, tucked away in vaults at the University of Lethbridge. This is something that not everyone knows or appreciates. In the middle of my riding there are Picassos, Matisse, Group of Seven, Warhol, de Grandmaison. One of North America's most impressive collections of art was built in the 1980s by the art department at the University of Lethbridge, where Billy McCarroll and others cleverly leveraged a Lougheed-era arts policy to build one of the best collections anywhere. Those province-building initiatives, deployed through the heritage fund and an activist government in the early 1980s, reverberate until this day. It is my hope that we can as a government get back to this ethic of building a common heritage via an inclusive and proactive approach to the arts.

The Lethbridge arts community is not just locked up in a vault. It spills out to one of the best things about our city and is a major contributor to artistic inquiry and endeavour for the province. In my small city you will find musicians like Leeroy Stagger and Dave McCann, queer theatre and cabaret at Theatre Outré, a symphony, the New West Theatre, a pride festival and parade, independent artist studios, spoken word, zines, and a comic book, Eric Dyck's Slaughterhouse Slough, dedicated to the history and the present of the city. The Allied Arts Council, admirably steered by Suzanne Lint, supports many of these initiatives and ensures that the whole community has access to the arts via Casa, the community arts centre that anchors the downtown of my riding.

The city of Lethbridge has also been home to generations of immigrants. We have been at the centre of some of the defining moments of the 20th century. In World War II, after forcible confiscation of their property, Japanese-Canadians were relocated to southern Alberta to forced work on the sugar beet plantations just outside my city. After the war many of those families ended up staying. This is why, Madam Speaker, Lethbridge is home to a Japanese-Canadian population that owns businesses, has become judges and elected officials, and has contributed to all of Canada's understanding of displacement, racism, and the value of immigration.

Joy Kogawa, who grew up in Lethbridge, is one of Canada's most recognized authors. In Obasan, her award-winning novel, she says:

Where do any of us come from in this cold country? Oh Canada, whether you admitted it or not, we come from you . . . We grow where we are not seen, we flourish where we are not heard . . . We come from cemeteries full of skeletons with wild roses in their grinning teeth. We come from our untold tales that wait for their telling.

Madam Speaker, my city has also become a national leader in welcoming Syrian refugees just as we have welcomed immigrants from all around the world – from Italy, Hungary, the Americas, Asia, and the Arab world – for a century. Lethbridge was even featured in international news coverage. We have contributed very significantly through public and private sponsorship of Syrian refugees. To those refugees I say: [Remarks in Arabic] Welcome to Lethbridge.

Lethbridge is also home to a vibrant Franco-Albertan community. The community centre, la Cité des prairies, is the cultural hub that celebrates the fact that we are a bilingual society. I am proud that my own children attend the francophone school La Verendrye, and I commend the school and the staff at la Cité as well as their board for building a community where all francophone heritage in all its global diversity is celebrated and woven into how we understand what it means to be at home in Canada.

Madam Speaker, Lethbridge-West encompasses the downtown. It encompasses the north end, with established communities, and, of course, the west side. The west side is growing, with new housing starts among the leaders in the province. The growth of the city of Lethbridge is an object lesson in diversification of the economy. The community is home to value-added and agricultural processing. It is home to manufacturing: steel, aerospace, oil and gas components. We have a tremendous renewable energy potential. Lethbridge is home to a growing technology centre – the tecconnect centre is a project of Economic Development Lethbridge – geospatial mapping, and new physics endeavours.

The riding also acts as a public services hub, Madam Speaker, for the region. This is important as our government's approach to stable funding for public services has ensured that our small-business sector continues to thrive. This is why you see collaboration between the public and private sectors in Lethbridge in ways that you may not see in other regions. In all this, Economic Development Lethbridge plays a key role, and Trevor Lewington and his whole team deserve recognition for their creative problem solving and commitment to diversification.

On that topic, I would like to pay tribute to some of the most progressive and forward-looking small businesses in Lethbridge-West. My friends Erica Joose at Plum restaurant, Lorelee and Paul Edwards at Drunken Sailor clothing shop, and Kyle Baynes at Andrew Hilton fine liquor all merit a shout-out for how they support our community, how they embrace paying a living wage to their workers, and how they have faith in our city as a place where diversity can take root and grow. All of the downtown businesses in Lethbridge are supported by the Downtown Lethbridge Business Revitalization Zone, which is ably and progressively steered by Ted Stilson and his wonderful staff, including my Deathbridge Derby Dames teammate and friend Melissa Johnson.

We have a history of strong women in southern Alberta, Madam Speaker. I am only the fifth or fourth woman, depending on when Maria Fitzpatrick was declared the winner, to ever be elected south of Calgary. The first was Louise McKinney in Claresholm in 1914, one of the Famous Five. The second was Edith Thurston in 1944. The third was Bridget Pastoor in 2008. Numbers four and five did not come until 2015. There has still never been an indigenous person, a new Canadian, a person of colour, or an LGBTQ person represented in our Legislature from south of Calgary. There is much work left to be done.

Lethbridge is home also to a significant labour history. It was the epicentre of the coal mining communities which were, of course, the first boom that powered this province. Lethbridge was the place where the first industrial disputes resolution act was written by Mackenzie King before he was Prime Minister and was the place where the first occupational health and safety rules were developed in response to the Hillcrest mine disaster in 1914, which killed 166 people. That project of occupational health and safety finally saw its full implementation in Alberta in December 2015, Madam Speaker, when OHS was extended to all paid workers in the province. The Alberta Federation of Labour was founded in Lethbridge in 1913. I was proud to assist with the centennial celebrations when I worked for the AFL with the leadership of Nancy Furlong, Gil McGowan, and Siobhán Vipond.

Madam Speaker, a few words on what brought me here and what sustains us all. I am a mom to two boys. Finn is seven; Hudson is five. They are beautiful and smart and hilarious. They don't always love mom's new job. I don't blame them. I'm away a lot, and that's why I carefully guard the time that I do have. But many Alberta kids grow up with a parent who works out of town. I know I did.

My dad was an electrician, who worked on oil rigs. He was gone a lot. But in the early 1980s, in economic conditions not unlike these ones, with a prolonged drop in the price of oil, my dad lost his job. My mom went back to work as a teacher. If Peter Lougheed had pursued policies of dramatically cutting health care and education in response, my family would have been left with nothing. I think about that a lot.

My dad taught my sister and me that we could do anything we want. He used to say: you can be an electrician if you want. That was a radical thing to say in the 1970s to a little girl. My mom is a strong woman in and of herself and will never ever leave you wondering where she stands. But my mom is still here to speak for herself, and my dad is not, so let me share a little bit about him.

My dad had an inborn intellectual curiosity that did not come from a university; it came from who he was. He was monumentally impatient with inequality. He loathed overt displays of wealth or opulence. He loved to fix anything he could and reuse it and think creatively about all the stuff that piled up in his Quonset. He used to say that you can learn anything you like in a school, but you must also learn, above all, how to work.

My dad did not live long enough to see me get elected, though I think he would not have been surprised. Sometimes I look up in the gallery and wish he was sitting there. I think about how he would have been here to watch this speech, to watch question period. I think of him also in his market gardening role. After my dad retired from the oil patch, he ran himself a little strawberry and vegetable market garden along with a million other things my parents were doing. Dad used to talk to me all the time about how the weather was changing, how the availability of water was changing. Ross Phillips, you were ahead of your time. You knew things in your bones that the rest of us need a book to learn.

Madam Speaker, I found the compassion and empathy that I learned from my parents in my party as an adult. I found it in those I worked for, Raj Pannu, who officiated my wedding, and Brian Mason, who, when I delivered my father's eulogy and looked out, there he was. I found it in the incessant hard work of Jack Layton, who was an early inspiration. I found the impatience with inequality in my friend Niki Ashton.

Madam Speaker, when I and a small group of dedicated New Democrats began knocking on doors in 2011, I did not expect to sit in government; I expected to serve the people of Lethbridge-West. I would like to thank Dave McCaffrey and Melanie Decillia for going out with me on that first day in September 2011 after I won the nomination and for so many days since. My entire riding association makes sure I have the right supports to do this job, but none more so than my good friend Keith McLaughlin, who once pledged to me that he would knock on every door between 13th Street and Copperwood, and he's made good on his word.

I'd also like to recognize the hard work of New Democrats over the years in this area. Over the years Gordon and Sylvia Campbell kept this ship moving and founded the Southern Alberta Council on Public Affairs. Others – Marshall and Angie Jaremco, Tad Mitsui, Mark Sandilands, Leona Jacobs, and Muriel Mellow – are giants on whose shoulders I stand.

Madam Speaker, it is my honour to stand in this House and enjoy the privileges of service in the public interest and the trust afforded to me as a parliamentarian. It is indeed the culmination of my adult life's work, and I think that you will agree that the community that sent me here deserves all of my effort to ensure careful and thoughtful consideration of the pressing matters before us. The people of Lethbridge-West have asked for a legislative program that is inclusive, that works toward equality, where justice is our guide, where everyone has access to personal liberty and expression, to a responsible relationship with the planet and our place in natural ecosystems.

With that, Madam Speaker, I will take my share of the work for the people of Lethbridge-West.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Ms Fitzpatrick: First of all, Minister, thank you. You said one time that I was way more effusive than you were in describing our community. You've learned, and I'm very happy that you did. I've just received an e-mail a few minutes ago from GREENSENCE about a meeting this week. So I'd like you to tell me a little more about the environmental ethic and activism in Lethbridge because I know you're part of it.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, there are, of course, a number of organizations and initiatives under way in southern Alberta with respect to renewable energy and also broader sustainability initiatives within the city. We have Environment Lethbridge, which has just begun its storefront operations along with the Oldman Watershed Council to work with citizens on matters related to distributed generation, on matters related to composting, recycling, and general environmental outreach within the city. I commend those efforts, and I congratulate them on the opening of their storefront facility with the Oldman Watershed Council.

On that topic the OWC has also been a leader in the community on headwaters protection and putting that question front and centre for all of the citizens of southern Alberta, protecting habitat and protecting the headwaters for the Oldman River. That was one of the reasons, Madam Speaker, that there was a community-wide consensus that we needed to do more to protect the headwaters of the Oldman River, because it does feed the entire city of Lethbridge and is our drinking water source, and that is why we followed the lead and the call of those in the community throughout southwest Alberta, but in particular in Lethbridge, in establishing the parks in the Castle southwest Alberta region.

So you will find a great deal of engagement on environmental matters. There are environmental days in June as well, a celebration in Galt Gardens, and a number of other initiatives that our city undertakes.

I would be remiss if I didn't discuss as well, Madam Speaker, the wind turbine tech program at Lethbridge College. Some years ago Lethbridge College took leadership with respect to apprenticeship and training programs for those who were looking for employment in the expanding wind energy sector in southern Alberta. They have a very sophisticated program in which one obtains their first-year electrician certificate as well as a turbine tech certificate. We look forward to working with them on expanding those efforts as we welcome the billions of dollars of investment that are going to be coming to Alberta with respect to renewable energy, not just in southern Alberta, which, I may add, is the best solar resource and one of the best wind resources in North America, but also across the province.

There are a number of ways in which renewables has become a business in southern Alberta, Madam Speaker, and we're very proud of that. It's just another in a long list of stories that we can tell out of Lethbridge-West about diversification and making for a resilient, sustainable economy.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to commend the member for her speech. In her speech she mentioned her father fixing things and putting his mind to, you know, putting things together and making things better. I think the member herself has exemplified those qualities that she mentioned in her father in doing things like fixing the environment, fixing our watersheds, making sure that we have clean air and water for our future generations with the climate change leadership plan that she has created along with a strong team that she has assembled. I wonder if the member might want to speak a little bit more about how important it is to her to have run and put in all the strong work that she has done, and now one of the first things that she has done is created this excellent climate leadership plan.

Ms Phillips: Well, Madam Speaker, I don't have long, so what I will say is that, you know, the approach that we took for the climate leadership plan was one of broad consultation and involvement of all industrial sectors in the province, looking at where our strengths are and looking at what we can build on and what we can improve, and that's exactly what we did. That's why so many groups have endorsed the plan, from the environmental organizations to industry. And it's not just the oil sands industry, although they do support the plan, but the cement industry, petrochemicals, and others have concluded that it is a balanced approach.

The Deputy Speaker: The next speaker on my list that I'll call on is the hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today so that I may share my maiden speech in response to the Speech from the Throne. I begin by acknowledging the indigenous people of this land, specifically the people of Treaty 7, on whose land my constituency of Calgary-Cross now stands. I want to give the most earnest and heartfelt thanks to the people of Calgary-Cross, who trusted me to be their voice in the Legislature. I strive hard every day to continue to deserve the faith that they have placed in me.

It is with sincere gratitude that I thank the residents of Calgary-Cross for turning what was supposed to be a safe seat into an election. My constituents continue to tell me that health care, education, job creation, and the overall economy are of major concern in Calgary-Cross and to Albertans across the province. I am proud to say that these are issues that the government is focused on, and I am happy to be the voice of Calgary-Cross on these matters.

I would like to take this opportunity to tell you a little bit about myself and my journey here, my early life as an Albertan as well as my hopes and aspirations for the future. I am going to touch on a variety of issues such as immigration, women's issues, diversity, and equality. Alberta is a large, vast, and diverse province. The people of this province come from different beginnings and backgrounds. They speak different languages and have unique customs. I believe I share a lot of these traits, and I believe all of them should be shared with you today.

Madam Speaker, I came to this country in 1988 as a refugee from Nicaragua. Like so many other Albertans who started their journey elsewhere, I made my home in this beautiful province for the last 28 years. The majority of my family left Nicaragua when the civil war tore apart our country. Ultimately, our search for a better life led us here. We were looking for a better home, a safer home, a welcoming home. We found it in Alberta, Canada, in northeast Calgary, to be precise.

Northeast Calgary has been my haven ever since. Even as work took me away for short periods of time, northeast Calgary has always and will always be my home. My love for my home, for Calgary-Cross, and for Alberta runs very deep. As a flight attendant I travelled the world. I went to many countries, visited many, many places, yet always I longed for home. At the end of the trip home was Calgary-Cross.

As I mentioned, upon my family's arrival in Calgary we moved all over the northeast. In fact, I have managed now to have lived in every single community that makes up Calgary-Cross: Pineridge, Whitehorn, Rundle, Temple, and Vista Heights. The majority of my experiences in the province were extremely positive. My family was welcomed and treated well. I made a lot of friends growing up, attending high school and graduating from Father Lacombe. I enjoyed many things I would not have had the opportunity to experience had my family not moved to Canada.

That being said, like many visible minorities, I fought through some adversity. When I was 17, about to graduate from high school, I was offered a full-time job at a local business I had been working at. I was advised to take the job; otherwise, I was told that I would likely end up in a gang and then prison. I did not take the job, and given where I stand today, I think it turned out to be okay. Instead of taking that job, I pursued my education. I graduated with a bachelor of arts in the humanities from the University of Calgary. I am proud of the education I received in this province, and I am proud of the opportunities it afforded me.

During my time as a flight attendant I became a union president and then a national union representative. It was my time with the union that cemented my drive and my passion for representing the collective. Giving a voice to the people is a wonderful job and not something that I take lightly. I eventually realized I wanted to keep representing my fellow Albertans but on a larger scale. The NDP is the party that I felt best gave me an opportunity to speak and support the people of this province.

I am a visible minority, I am an immigrant, I am a member of the LGBTQ community, and I am the Minister of Culture and Tourism. What a truly beautiful indication of the change in diversity that Alberta is currently undergoing. Last week we saw International Women's Day being recognized here at the Legislature. During the proceedings that day we celebrated with a female Premier and a mother and her baby. In last year's election four generations of women in my family voted for me: my grandmother, my mother, my sister, and my daughter. It is a miraculous thing. I would also like to thank my daughter who, upon turning 18, voted for the first time and was my campaign manager.

This province has made giant strides. We are witnesses to the true progress that has been made and continues to be made in Alberta. However, we still have a long way to go. Whether it is with gender equality, racial equality, or acceptance and inclusion of the LGBTQ community, we have barely scratched the surface of what we are actually capable of.

In closing, this province is a reflection of a collective, a large group of hard-working, innovative, and hopeful individuals living and thriving together. Given that we are the sum of all of our parts, I am genuinely excited for the future of this province. Thank you again, Calgary-Cross, for trusting me. Thank you to all Albertans for trusting this government.

We have many ethnic groups. We embrace many different cultures, traditions, and languages. Alberta is a richly linguistic province, and I want each and every Albertan to know that I am proud to serve you.

[Remarks in Spanish] I am proud to address this Chamber in the Castilian language. [As submitted]

J'ai aussi le plaisir de me diriger vers vous en français, me donnant l'occasion de parler aux Franco-Albertains dans notre province. [Translation] I also have the pleasure of speaking to you in French and speak to the Franco-Albertans in this province. [As submitted]

[Remarks in Portuguese] Also, to give you thanks to all the Portuguese speakers in Calgary. [As submitted]

[Remarks in Italian] Including, as well, the Italian speakers. [As submitted]

Gracias. Merci. Muito obrigado. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to thank the hon. member for his insightful story and speech. I would remind all of us that in 1988 we were enjoying the Calgary Winter Olympics and the hon. minister was going through a rather different time and stage in his life, coming to this country as a refugee from civil war torn Nicaragua with his family to establish themselves in another part of the world, another climate, another language, many of which he has mastered better than most of us, becoming a graduate of the University of Calgary with a bachelor of arts, a union president, a member of a visible minority, an immigrant, a member of the LGBTQ community, a father of a daughter. What a story.

I'd like to hear a little bit more, though, about the experience of coming from another country to Canada, to Alberta to engage in this fantastic journey that you've just hit the high spot in telling us about. I've got nothing but the highest degree of respect and admiration for people who do make the decision to immigrate or flee to immigrate to another part of the world to better their lives for themselves and their families. I'd like to hear a bit more about what it was like and at what age you came. I think about seven?

Thank you.

Miranda: Thank you, hon. member. I was a little bit older than that, but there was pretty much nothing that would have allowed somebody to ever forget what it's like to have bombs dropped around you or have people shooting at you, trying to kill you for no reason. But even though all those things happened in my life, I remember how grateful and how much at peace we were when we finally reached this place.

In a small turn of events, I guess you can say, upon landing at the Calgary airport – we came very late at night, and there was no place for us to go because the immigration officers were not ready – they put us in an office at the Calgary airport, the same office which many, many years later became my union office when I was elected as president. You know, it tells you that people come to this province, people come to this country with lots of hope and with lots of things that have happened in the past but with a desire to contribute to society and be part of our society and do things that are positive for our fellow citizens.

I have had the opportunity on many occasions to continue that tradition in my family, who have always been very much empowered by a sense of community and a sense of obligation to our fellow citizens, to give back to this beautiful country, that has given us so much. Now being an elected official and to be able to do it in a different capacity has been truly, well, the most amazing experience of my life until now. I don't think there's anything that will ever top that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Under 29(2)(a)?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Dr. Starke: Madam Speaker, I'd like to certainly thank the Member for Calgary-Cross, the Minister of Culture and Tourism, for his comments. It is an incredible story and one that is constantly inspiring to me as a native Albertan, to hear the stories of people who have come to this province for greater opportunity. I'm very impressed with this, a little disappointed that there's no German. But, hey, it's all good. We can swap. You can teach me some Spanish.

I would like to ask one question. In your role as the minister of tourism, specifically, linguistic ability is a huge asset, a massive asset in terms of reaching out to key tourism markets that, you know, visit Alberta. Specifically, I would say our Latin American market and our market in Brazil, Argentina, and especially Mexico now that visa requirements have been relaxed. I just am curious to know: have you had opportunity yet in your early days in this ministry to, shall we say, parlay your linguistic abilities into something that will increase visitation from those markets to Alberta?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. [Remarks in German]

Yes, I've had the opportunity to speak. We actually had the corps of diplomats. We had the opportunity to actually meet with some of them and talk to them, especially the ones from Brazil, specifically. Absolutely, there's so much opportunity.

One of the reasons why we've learned that . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I'll call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As one of several new members in this House it is an honour for me to rise and address the other members of this Chamber and the people of Alberta by way of my maiden speech. Before I begin, though, I would like to extend my congratulations, although considerably belated, to all the members of this House for being elected to represent the people of their electoral districts.

Madam Speaker, I would like to begin by sharing a little bit about my family's history as it's quite unique compared to most in the House, with the exception of the Member for Calgary-Cross. My family came to Canada from Chile, fleeing violence, as many other Chileans, after the September 11, 1973, military coup. My father came to Canada in March of 1976, and my mother, older brother, and I joined him, arriving on Canada Day, July 1, of that same year.

When we first arrived in Edmonton, we lived in the Westmount neighbourhood. From the beginning of my parents' stay in Canada they worked extremely hard to provide for my brother and I as they worked diligently in positions in which they were underemployed. Their credentials and qualifications were not recognized here in Canada, a challenge that many new Canadians continue to face here in our province to this day.

My parents eventually decided that they wanted to stay in Canada and were determined to purchase a property of their own that we could call home. We packed our limited belongings and headed to the newly developed area of Mill Woods and moved close to a Chilean housing co-operative named after Salvador Allende, Chile's first democratically elected socialist president. It was there in Mill Woods that we felt supported by other diasporic Chileans, Canadians, and other new Canadians to this province.

As many other new Canadians, my parents worked multiple jobs. They worked 9 to 5 during the day and then did a number of janitorial contracts during the evening. For 17 years my parents worked day and night to make ends meet and make sure that my brothers and I would go without need. Some evenings they would come home tired around 11 p.m. only to prepare for their job the next day. When old enough, I began to join them so that I might also do my part to support the family. It is these humble beginnings from which I came, an experience I share with many other new Canadians from the electoral district of Edmonton-Ellerslie.

As some may know, southeast Edmonton has a high demographic of new Canadians. Many immigrants and permanent residents continue to move into the district to build their homes for them and their loved ones. The area truly is a cultural mosaic of many different ethnicities, predominantly South Asians, those from the Caribbean, Latin Americans, the Philippines, and the more recent from the Middle East and northern Africa, specifically Somalia and Eritrea. Indeed, we must have people from all over the world that call the electoral district of Edmonton-Ellerslie their home.

As we all recognize, all Canadians immigrated to this land. Before it was settled, Edmonton-Ellerslie was part of Indian reserve No. 136, now recognized as Papaschase territory. I'm happy to say that Chief Calvin Bruneau, chief of the Papaschase, and I have become brothers through our common work in the community, which was solidified by our participation in the Idle No More cultural movement focused on engaging all treaty people to learn about our common history and to find a path forward in the traditions of the First Nations people. This occurred at the same time that as a nation we engaged in the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, which identified for us calls to action to correct the injustices of the past committed against our indigenous sisters and brothers.

For this reason, I'm excited that this government and specifically Premier Notley offered an apology for the residential schools and advocated that there be a national inquiry into the more than 1,200 missing and murdered indigenous women in this nation. I'm excited that she also called on each ministry to implement how they may implement the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples as well as the calls to action of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission.

This session the Alberta NDP government will be repealing Bill 22 as well as consulting with indigenous communities regarding sacred ceremonial objects and how they may be repatriated to the Nations to whom they belong. It is important that new Canadians learn about the First Nations, Métis, and Inuit peoples of this land and the obligations of treaties 6, 7, and 8 as we move forward to build a stronger province which celebrates diversity, pluralism, and inclusion.

Now, I've spoken at great length about new Canadians. However, it should not be misconstrued. I am here to serve each and every constituent of Edmonton-Ellerslie, no matter their race, colour, sexual orientation, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth, or any other status. This is a principle upon which I will never falter as it is my duty to do so as part of our free and democratic society.

Edmonton-Ellerslie is home to many young families. It is common to see children accompanied by their parents playing in the many playgrounds throughout the constituency. Whether when I was door-knocking in 2012 as a candidate or when I continue to door-knock in the constituency to this day, child care continues to be a top priority for the people of Edmonton-Ellerslie. I'm eager to help usher in change through the new Ministry of Status of Women, providing Albertans with access to quality and affordable child care in a financially responsible way.

I also hear from constituents that education is an important priority for them. Edmonton-Ellerslie currently has two K to 9 schools south of the Anthony Henday that are considerably overcrowded. The good news is that three new schools are slated to open in that area of the district in September of 2017. Parents, however, are also concerned with regard to assessments for their children with special needs and how their children may be better served within the education system. There are challenges, but I'm sure that by working together with the Minister of Education, we will find the appropriate solutions.

My constituency is also home to many seniors, and I'm eager to identify and work towards reducing the burden for our seniors as we move forward. They passionately express their desire to age in place. They don't want to lose their connection to their loved ones and to their community.

Madam Speaker, one of my passions as a community organizer before becoming an MLA was mentoring and guiding youth and young adults interested in creating social change. I'm happy to announce that I'm continuing to do just that. This past month along with my constituency staff I launched the end domestic violence Edmonton-Ellerslie youth mentorship program. The program kicked off with nine participants between the ages of 12 and 24.

The program consists of four full-day workshops dedicated to educating the participants on the issues surrounding domestic violence and how they may be addressed. The learning includes equipping the youth and young adults with the skills to be effective leaders and community organizers. Utilizing Stephen Covey's The 7 Habits of Highly Effective People, the training aims to empower and encourage young men and women to be more active in their communities and to use their knowledge and skills to generate positive change. I also designed the mentorship program to further discover details on gender equity and social justice as well as providing opportunity for young leaders to develop crucial life and career-building skills, all this while establishing a working relationship with their MLA.

In Canada women are three times more likely than men to be killed or to be sexually assaulted, choked, beaten, or threatened with a weapon by their partner. The majority of women who experience violence report that their perpetrators were male. These appalling facts urge us to mobilize our communities to finally end violence against women once and for all. The first workshop of the series provided an opportunity for the participants to reflect on their own values and how they have internalized them. They also embarked upon the process of discovering how gender stereotypes are socialized constructs put on us by society and how those stereotypes are not biological in nature. We engaged the participants in processes where we dispelled the myths of the causes of men's violence against women, and together we identified how we may all build healthy and strong relationships.

Madam Speaker, I'm eternally grateful to the constituents of Edmonton-Ellerslie. I owe them an immense debt of gratitude for putting their faith and hope into Alberta's NDP, our leader, Rachel Notley, and myself to represent them in this Legislature. Due to each and every constituent that cast their ballot for our party, politics in Alberta have started to transform and bring hope to Albertans regardless of whom they voted for. We have implemented several of the policy changes highlighted in our party's platform, and this government is determined to follow through with its vision, a vision that Albertans overwhelmingly voted for on May 5.

One such piece of legislation that I'm proud to have supported was the banning of corporate and union donations to political parties. The time has come for democratic renewal in this province and in this country. I'm also incredibly proud to have served with the now Minister of Labour on the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, focused on renewing our approach to democracy in this province. I'm excited to continue working on this committee and bringing forward the many recommendations we will have on the four pieces of legislation we are reviewing.

This is an important time for Alberta, and I'm excited to be a part of it. A great opportunity lies before us as representatives to engage in meaningful dialogue with our constituents and focus on overcoming the challenges we are currently experiencing while at the same time recognizing what parts of the system already work for Albertans. It cannot be stated enough: I'm here to serve the constituents of Edmonton-Ellerslie. I'm here to listen to them, to help identify solutions to the issues that they are facing, and to implement those changes in the best interests of all of our communities.

Last week my colleague from Edmonton-Centre talked about the virtues of leadership and service and leading by example. Since day one as an elected official I've approached my role in that spirit through building genuine relationships focused on strengthening our communities. I'm eager to continue building unity among the members of Edmonton-Ellerslie so that together we may increase engagement and participation in our democracy.

It is with a humble heart that I again take this opportunity to thank the people of Edmonton-Ellerslie for the confidence that they have placed in me by electing me to be their representative. They voted for change, and Rachel Notley, the hon. ministers of this government, and I along with the many other great MLAs in this House plan on delivering that change.

Madam Speaker, I am and always will be a proud democratic socialist. However, I must be clear. I have never been dogmatic. I am one of the worst kinds of idealists, the kind that dreams with my feet firmly planted on the ground and who becomes excited at the challenge of finding solutions that will benefit the most humble, hard-working individuals that make up society. As I stated prior, it's those humble beginnings from which I come.

One of my passions is debunking the public versus private myths, to share with others the important role that the province can play not only regarding the important social human rights of providing access to education, health care, and housing but also in working to stimulate economic growth. It's not about picking winners or losers; it's about investing in research and development when the risk is too great for individuals, firms, or groups of the private sector to do so. It's proper that the provincial agencies and postsecondary educational institutions play their role by innovating and introducing new technologies that explicitly fit into the new course that the government may envision.

For this reason I'm incredibly proud that the current government will introduce the climate leadership implementation act, focused on investing in a clean energy future. This investment plan will fully recycle revenues from Alberta's carbon levy into renewable energy, innovation, public transit, and other measures that will reduce the carbon intensity of our economy. This coupled with the work of the energy diversification advisory committee, focused on promoting innovation and efficiency, will strengthen the oil and gas industry, which has and will continue to be for years to come the backbone of the Alberta economy.

As any scientist or inventor will express, it is important to ask one simple question: what if? What if begs that we change our perspective, that we look at the problem in a different way so that we may find the solution that has been staring us in the face all along but we were just too figuratively blind to see it. This government has asked that simple question and is now moving forward with the solutions that it deems necessary to serve the people of Alberta now and in the future generations to come, and I along with many of my colleagues are incredibly proud of what this government will implement in this legislative session and the following years.

Madam Speaker, I welcome all in this House to work together in finding solutions to the challenges that Albertans are facing. After all, that is the important role of government. We are an extension of the communities that we represent. This government is not here to govern for Albertans; it is here to govern with them. By bringing the most gifted and talented front-line workers together with researchers, academics, and industry experts, we will find solutions. I know we are making the people of Alberta proud now, and they will continue to be in three years' time.

In conclusion, I would like to leave you all with an alarm bell of great importance shared with me by many representatives and especially elders of First Nations communities. It is our duty to protect the sacred waters of this land. If we do not, we put at risk the very future of all our children and the generations to come. Responding proactively to climate change is not only needed; it is absolutely essential.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, before we go on to 29(2)(a), I did not want to interrupt your extremely passionate speech, but you did use the Premier's name a number of times. You're not the only one to have done this this afternoon, using colleagues' proper names, so I would caution all members that when you're preparing these maiden speeches, to keep that in mind and take note of that. Thank you.

Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would just encourage the member to expound upon his faithfulness to the principles of democratic socialism.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. You know, as I stated in my maiden speech, I've never been dogmatic, but it's also very important to look for solutions. For me, as is well known, I come from Latin America, where over the past 15 years we've had many experiments in democratic socialism. Yes, some things have been failures, but there's also some amazing, positive work that is being done. I basically make reference to research that's been done, where the government is involved in helping the private sector in order to bring about economic change.

So it's these things that we shouldn't just automatically close the door to. We've got to look at what's happening, what is possible. That's what I'm here to do, to be able to, from my perspective, just look at all the opportunities that we have in front of us and be able to, like I said, ask the question "What if?" so that we can take a different perspective and take a different look at something. Maybe it's something that hasn't been tried before, but it's always important to ask and always look at things from a different perspective.

Thank you for your question.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments?
Seeing none, the next on my list is Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my honour to rise today in the Assembly to respond to the Speech from the Throne as the member for the wonderful constituency of Calgary-Glenmore. Calgary-Glenmore is a multifaceted riding. There are eight strong community associations, that serve the needs of 52,000 residents in the riding. In addition, we have Rockyview hospital, highly reputable schools, beautiful parks, and the Glenmore reservoir. These facilities are used and enjoyed by not only the constituents of Calgary-Glenmore but by people all over Calgary.

The constituents of Calgary-Glenmore believe in living an active lifestyle, as you can probably tell if you have ever taken a walk through our neighbourhoods. My constituency is also an excellent example of the community coming together to ensure that our land, air, and water are protected for generations to enjoy. The residents of Calgary-Glenmore are devoted, dedicated, and responsible stewards, which is why this riding is known for its history.

In the Speech from the Throne Her Honour talked about all the work that's ahead of this government, and I'm pleased to be able to play a part in this. One of the biggest focuses of this session will be the implementation of the climate leadership plan and the diversification of our economy. I'm proud to step up today to work with the government in the diversification of our economy and to support the climate leadership plan because it is a key step to creating a balance between the economy and the environment.

I can extensively contribute to this plan. I am a chemical engineer with a master's degree in environmental engineering. My thesis was on devising the methodology for carbon dioxide sequestration, that can be used to help various industries reduce greenhouse gas emissions. I think it's fitting that last week, when we honoured Don Getty in this Chamber, I noted his connections to the University of Western Ontario, now known as Western University. I say with pride that I also went to Western University to study engineering. I always aspire to make a difference and strive for the sustainability of communities. In my previous life I was offering my services in volunteering through NGOs, finding solutions to problems using my engineering skills, and offering my help in various forms to the residents of our society.

Madam Speaker, when there is balance, there is fairness, and when there is fairness, there is success. Calgary-Glenmore is a perfect example of this balance, and I'm honoured that I have the opportunity to bring my constituents' voices to this Assembly every day. Fairness is also at the heart of our government, and the Speech from the Throne highlighted this commitment.

During this time of economic difficulty we must be committed to making things better for all Albertans and ensuring that the front-line services our constituents rely on are protected and strengthened. My constituents can be confident that this government has a plan to get Albertans through this difficult time. This plan will help put Albertans back to work and help our communities recover from the trauma of job loss. Our government has created a dedicated Ministry of Economic Development and Trade to put this plan into place, and I'm confident that the minister and our Premier have the tools and the vision to get our province back on track.

One of the key planks of our government's plan is an investment in infrastructure. The throne speech mentioned that our government will be investing $34 billion into infrastructure projects. This investment in infrastructure during an economic downturn will not only help put my constituents back to work but also help reduce our province's infrastructure deficit and finally build the much-needed school modernizations and hospitals many Albertans are waiting for.

Calgary-Glenmore is lucky in that we have fantastic schools and facilities, and investments in these schools now will ensure that for generations to come they'll continue to provide the excellent standards that they have become known for. These investments will help secure the future of our children and improve our health care services.

Madam Speaker, families and children are the centre of Calgary-Glenmore, and I'm proud that our government has made the well-being of children and families the centre for our government as well. In the Speech from the Throne Her Honour talked about the fact that our government will be investing in the Alberta child benefit and the family employment tax credit. This investment will benefit not only my constituents but all Alberta families.

Calgary-Glenmore is a very diversified constituency, but like any community in Alberta my constituents have been affected by the economic downturn. My constituents are highly educated, and many of them are choosing to go back to school during this time of economic difficulty to retrain and diversify their skills. I'm sure that my constituents will be pleased to hear that our government has plans to support this retraining and skill development.

Madam Speaker, even in these tough economic times Calgary-Glenmore has a vibrant and active business community. I'm proud to say that the entrepreneurial spirit is alive and well in my constituency. During this economic downturn many Albertans are taking the chance and striking out on their own by starting their own businesses. Small-business owners are some of the biggest contributors to job creation and economic growth in the province, and my constituency is an excellent example of the benefits that these small local businesses can have in our communities. Our government values their contributions and therefore is taking measures to support them. The Speech from the Throne last week highlighted that our government is taking steps to support these businesses by making $1.5 billion available to Alberta Treasury Branches in order to support lending to small and medium-sized businesses. This is in addition to directing AIMCo to earmark half a billion dollars for Alberta-based companies with growth potential. I'm confident that some of these companies may come from the innovative entrepreneurs we have right now in Calgary-Glenmore.

The Speech from the Throne also emphasized our government's commitment to economic diversification and the need to move away from relying on a single commodity with a single price in a single market. I'm proud to say that my constituents are already stepping up to this challenge, and many are in the process of starting new businesses and creating new technologies in the green energy sector. These businesses will not only help support the vision of our climate leadership plan but will create good, diversified jobs for my constituents and Albertans as well.

I'm very proud to say that I'm the voice of the residents who work day and night for the success and sustainability of the communities in Calgary-Glenmore. As a resident of Calgary-Glenmore I want the best for my neighbours. I want to ensure that my constituents are employed with good jobs that can support their families and enjoy the quality of life that makes Alberta the best place to live. Madam Speaker, in conclusion, community building is my passion, and I will continue working hard to strengthen communities in Calgary-Glenmore. I will ensure that my constituents are continuously engaged and involved in this process to build the best vision for our constituency.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you. I really appreciated the speech of my fellow MLA, Madam Speaker, and I was just intrigued. Being a chemical engineer, what was your path towards seeking political office? We don't often get engineers in this House. I'm not sure if you're the first one or if you're one of the first. It may be something interesting to find out. I was wondering: what was your path to political office?

Ms Kazim: Thank you very much for the question. I'm happy to share a little bit of the story here. The reason I joined engineering in the first place was basically to make a difference and to provide solutions to problems and help society in different ways. After I finished my engineering and acquired some work experience, over time I realized: why not consider something that has a philanthropic side to it as well as a technical side to it?

Politics is something that allows us to look at things with a holistic approach and look at every aspect of an issue. If I'm looking at something from an engineering perspective, that would be most likely technical whereas there are legal, social, and various perspectives that could be taken into account when looking at a problem or a situation. That's why I decided that if I want to make a difference and really contribute to society in multiple ways, then politics will be the path that will allow me to do so. That's why I chose to get into this field. I felt that I would be able to bring a lot to the table and represent the people of my constituency, particularly, in a very good manner.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was really pleased to hear about the member's approach to politics and the unique perspective that she brings. I also know that she has another unique story to tell us about democracy. Oftentimes people complain about democracy, saying: my vote doesn't count. In this member's instance, if I recall correctly, she won by six votes, so that tells us all that every single vote really does count. I wonder if the member could maybe tell us a little bit about what it was like while she was waiting to hear the results of the different recounts that were undertaken and how enthusiastic she was when she finally had the final results and was declared elected.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you very much, Member, for the question. That was indeed an exciting moment, when I felt that actually every vote counts. Being in a situation, especially on election night, I would say, when people were either winning or losing, when I had a tie, I was, like: "What is that? Can that even happen?" So I was not sure how to actually react, either to be happy or to be sad. It was an interesting experience, for sure, because through that process I learned a lot about how the policies of Elections Alberta work and how a judicial recount happens.

I was just actually laughing about the fact that I started my political career by stepping into court. That was something interesting. It was a rich experience, and it gave me confidence. Life is full of ups and downs, and this career, particularly, is also full of ups and downs. So that was a good experience for me to get ready for what to expect once I entered into this role.

At the same time, in my riding people have learned the lesson of what can happen if they don't vote. After the results were finalized and even now, we have people in our constituency who come and share their story: oh, I'm so sorry; I could not vote because I was out of town or out of country. Then people would share stories of how much effort they put in to make sure that their vote was counted. They contacted Elections Alberta from different islands where there was no access to the Internet. They wanted to vote; they did not want to miss the opportunity to vote. Through that experience I learned a lot about the importance of democracy and how much our participation matters towards our society.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It is an honour to rise today to respond to the Speech from the Throne. I would like to start by acknowledging that we stand here today on Treaty 6 territory and that my constituency is also on Treaty 6 territory. This government recognizes the importance of a strong relationship with our indigenous communities, which is why we will repeal Bill 22 and find a better way to carry out consultations in the future.

I feel it is quite fitting that the throne speech took place on International Women's Day, delivered by a female Lieutenant Governor on behalf of our female Premier. Look to our caucus and you'll see near gender parity. Look further to our ministerial bench, including the newly created Ministry of Status of Women, and you will see the importance that we place on balanced representation.

It is something this province can take great pride in. The diversity that Albertans see in the Legislature is a reflection of the diversity that makes up Alberta. There are more young MLAs than ever before in our province. This is something that I am reminded of daily as I spend time in my constituency visiting with residents. I don't think I've ever visited a constituent who wasn't curious about my age. What is interesting, though, is that when I reveal that I am only 24 and there are actually MLAs still younger than myself, I am met with excitement. People are happy to see such diversity, with new energy and new ideas, in the Legislature.

I hope that through the example that my young colleagues set, there will be more young leaders willing to put their names forward. That is, in fact, one of the main reasons I got involved with politics from a young age. I realized that the youth voice was not at the table. Thankfully, we have seen the landscape changing at all levels of government. It is an important step because the decisions we make as legislators have lasting effects on the broader community, and these effects are felt differently based on a number of circumstances, including but of course not limited to age.

When I think back to the career opportunities that I've had that led me to this point, I realize that they have all been in the Meadowlark community: first, working in retail at West Edmonton Mall; then in radio at K-97, once again in West Edmonton Mall; and eventually as an electrician at two local businesses within the constituency. It is quite fitting to be able to come full circle and represent these same businesses that gave me the incredible opportunities that led me to this very Legislature.

I've lived in the Meadowlark community for the better half of my life, moving here from Saskatchewan around 2003. I attended Britannia junior high in the constituency of Glenora but completed my diploma at Jasper Place in the Meadowlark community. I have built lasting relationships both with the teachers and students that accompanied me on my journey through the public school system, and I think about how our legislation will affect them any time we make decisions in this Chamber.

Through the many years that I have lived in the community, I've had the opportunity to meet with many leaders and organizations, including most, if not all, of the community leagues. These leagues are truly the grassroots of our communities. The volunteers spend countless hours organizing sports leagues and fundraisers to create the sense of community, which we all cherish. It is an incredibly selfless and sometimes thankless job, but I know that the community as a whole appreciates the work that these volunteers put into our neighbourhoods.

Meadowlark is an incredibly diverse community. There are families who have called the area their home long before West Edmonton Mall was a destination and also new Canadians, including newly arrived Syrian refugees, who have come to this great province after years of struggle. Our job as representatives of our community is to ensure that we are doing what we can to help these families, regardless of socioeconomic circumstances, to realize their potential as members of our community. It is our duty to ensure that the public services, of which we are so proud in this province, are efficient and accessible to those who need them most. It is also imperative that we create an economic environment that encourages growth and creates opportunity for every citizen in this province.

One of the most rewarding opportunities we get as elected officials is to visit with the remarkable people who make up our communities. Since my election to this Assembly, I've had the chance to visit with many seniors in my community. They're often politically and socially active, and the residents have some of the most insightful questions, ranging from fracking to the heritage trust fund and everything in between. The wealth of knowledge our seniors hold is invaluable, and the contributions they have made to our province are enormous. There are a lot of lessons in history that can so easily be lost if we don't learn from them. This has become clear to me when I have talked with the people in my community who have been through economic downturns before and have seen what can happen when we don't diversify our economy.

Madam Speaker, the throne speech outlines many of the key challenges and opportunities our province will have moving forward. Alberta has suffered from not diversifying our economy, and governments past have not been able to achieve the market access our province needs for the full value of our products as well as a royalty system that did not have the full support of Albertans based on a perceived lack of transparency and accountability.

I believe that the initiatives this government has undertaken, as presented in the throne speech, are important issues and will help move this province forward. I can tell you that my community has been hit hard by the falling commodity prices. The industrial park in the Meadowlark community is one of the largest service providers to the oil and gas industry, and when this industry struggles, so do the many businesses and families in my community. While West Edmonton Mall is still an incredible economic driver in the Meadowlark community and in this province, especially with the low dollar, we are still seeing a slowdown in local purchasing power.

As I mentioned earlier, before getting elected to this Assembly, I was an apprentice electrician, building and servicing sleeping quarters that are utilized by oil field workers while they are in camp. Many of the companies I worked for, as I said, are in my community, and I've seen these companies slow down because of the slump in global oil prices. It is not going to be an easy road forward, but I know that these businesses are run by passionate families and entrepreneurs constantly adapting to changes in the market and finding efficiencies. As we realize increased market access and plan for recovery, these companies will continue to thrive within our province just like they have for so many years before.

For those who are looking to retrain, our government will support you because we recognize that a diversified workforce is a strong workforce. It is increasingly important as we move to diversification that we offer our communities the opportunity to grow with us. Through access to capital and measures introduced by the Economic Development and Trade ministry like Bill 1, the Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act, and the petrochemicals diversification program, we will support the creation of new jobs in emerging markets. Countercyclical investments will keep this province moving. While we can't control the price of oil, we can put people back to work, and we will, by investing $34 billion in capital projects. We have seen the devastating effects of deferred maintenance in the past, and investing the money now means we can keep people working while reducing the laundry list of maintenance and construction that needs to happen throughout this province.

My community has been waiting on a valley line LRT for many years now. I think we all recognize the importance of having effective modes of transportation within our cities and, of course, across this province. It is, in fact, the lowest income communities who need these services most, and we're doing a great disservice to them every time we put these projects off.

This is a difficult time, like I've said, for Alberta, brought on by circumstances that we cannot change, but it is also a great opportunity. We are a province of ambitious, determined, hard-working people who will forge ahead even if it means treading new ground. We know what hasn't worked in the past, and we know what has to change now. We have taken steps toward a better future, and we will continue on that path to innovation, accountability, and responsibility to Albertans.

As Albertans we are proud of our natural resources, that have built this province and created many good-paying jobs, yet past practice has been to import almost 1 million barrels of oil per day from other countries. This has been a point of confusion and frustration for Albertans for many years, and I believe it is important that we transition to a made-in-Alberta approach. This will not only benefit our economy, but we as Albertans also recognize that our product is produced in one of the most environmentally sound jurisdictions around the world, and it is something that we can all be very proud of.

As a member of the West Edmonton Business Association I've had the opportunity to meet with many of the businesses in the Meadowlark community. They are an incredibly resilient group of people who collaborate to support the local economy and not-for-profits. The association consists of everything from small IT companies to the Fantasyland Hotel, in West Edmonton Mall, the perfect example of how we can work together for the betterment of our community.

Edmonton-Meadowlark is also home to the Misericordia hospital, a hospital that people across this province depend on and a place that employs many families in my constituency. I will add that I have both gained and lost family members at this hospital, but the staff have always been accommodating and professional, though their work environment is often high stress and the staff increasingly overworked. We know that cutting funding to essential public services only worsens these problems, increases costs in the long run, and downloads responsibility to our communities.

I would also like to acknowledge the incredible number of not-for-profit organizations in the community, that have growing clientele while facing budget restrictions. Portions of many not-for-profit agencies' budgets come directly or indirectly from government, and many of these important service providers are working at capacity. To reduce funding or to add to the growing number of service users through downloading would put additional strain on our communities and add to the daily struggle of many families. We need to support our communities now more than ever. I recognize the reality that so many of the constituents of Edmonton-Meadowlark are facing, and I will do everything that I can to support them through these tough times every step of the way.

Every child in this province deserves a bright future. Those futures will be realized because of the investments we make in education. In a time of much talk of austerity measures our government committed to supporting this province's front-line workers, including restored funding to education, which resulted in the hiring of 740 new teachers across this province. That means we're able to offer more programs to the families and students as well as, hopefully, reducing class size, which is so important.

Though there are many initiatives within the throne speech that I am proud to support, among the most important to my community is our government's move to protect Albertans from high-interest loans. There are many lenders within the Meadowlark area, something the local associations have been trying to deal with for several years. This overaccumulation of lenders in our low-income communities has created a troubling situation, which I have seen first-hand. This commitment to protect Alberta families is especially important now as many families are juggling their daily expenses and often consider these high-interest loans, that can put them in unfavourable situations.

For those Albertans struggling to find work in these tough times, our government has committed to working with the federal government to reconsider employment insurance rules as the program has often been hard to access. I have had these struggles myself in the past.

This throne speech, I believe, reflects the needs and expectations of my community. The fallen commodity prices have affected my community, my friends, my family, but we must work together to create new streams of revenue while finding efficiencies within our government departments. We must not, however, make broad cuts or expect our already stretched public services to somehow make do with less. I am proud to stand here today with an alternative way forward. While this year has been tough on our province, I am still proud to stand here as an Albertan, and I know that Alberta is still the best place to invest your money.

In closing, having the honour to represent the constituents of Edmonton-Meadowlark here in the Assembly is, no doubt, one of the greatest accomplishments of my life. I'm sure many of the other members within this Chamber would say the same thing about their own journey. I do not think any of us take this responsibility lightly. To the citizens of Edmonton-Meadowlark who put their trust in me to represent them and to my friends and family who helped me along this journey both before and during the election: I owe you everything. Thank you to my parents for letting me use their home as a campaign office and a hotel during the election. Thank you to my partner of eight years for believing in me from the very beginning and to my little sister for being the light of my life.

It is also important that I mention Raj Sherman and the incredible work that he did both while in government and in opposition representing the Edmonton-Meadowlark community. Your ability to advocate on behalf of your constituents is something I hear of often in my community, and it inspires me to be a better representative every day.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark for his remarkable speech about his constituency. I noticed that he mentioned a lot of his stakeholders. I was wondering if he could elaborate on those and how he was engaging with them.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for the important question. As elected members of this Assembly I think it is imperative that we do our best to reach out to our entire community, really, and get feedback on the decisions that we have before us. Personally, I've held budget consultations, open houses, and I actually have a town hall telephone conference coming up very soon, which I'm excited to take part in.

Other examples. My office does advertise in community league newspapers, explaining the services that we offer, including, you know, help getting through some of the hurdles that a lot of constituents have when they're trying to access government services. I think that we're well equipped to do that considering that I have a social worker in my office. I know many of our New Democrat colleagues do have the same services as well.

You know, I made it very clear at the door and any time I have a chance to speak with constituents that my door is always open. Like I said, I have met a number of people who have had to jump through these hoops, and it's really frustrating. I mean, even up to last week I had somebody that was having trouble getting services for their brother, and it's been a process of many, many years. They sit down and, really, it's all put in front of you, and they won't hold back, by any means. To really understand where they're coming from, I think, is a learning experience for all of us.

As I mentioned before, I think the most valuable asset that we have when forming policy decisions is to be able to talk to our constituents. They know how it's going to affect them better than I think any of us might, so it's important that we carry out these consultations.

Going back to the stakeholder relations, you know, though I'm very proud of the work my office has done, I do recognize that we're always working to do a better job. I think that's something that we work on every single day.

I'll just wrap it up by saying that the biggest habit that I've taken forward is visiting with the seniors in my community, as I did mention in the throne speech response. They have some incredible stories, even dating back to the amalgamation. Well, actually, Jasper Place was its own town. The east side of the Edmonton-Meadowlark constituency was the town of Jasper Place until the amalgamation in 1964. So there is some incredible history that we can learn from the seniors in our community and from everyone.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark for his comments. I appreciate the story. I was quite encouraged to hear the mature and measured response to the Alberta oil industry and our oil. I was wondering if you could just confirm to us that it's actually the position of your caucus or just your own personal position that maybe we don't need to talk about dirty oil in this province anymore. I'm also interested to know how it is that you don't have that visceral reaction to the oil industry that says that it's somehow the evil enemy of our province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you very much for the interesting question. Personally, I myself have never heard anyone in my caucus, at least in the time that I've spent with them, ever call the industry "dirty." But with that being said, you know, I've spent as much time as I have been able to so far – and I plan on continuing these conversations – with these organizations in my community and just talking about some of the innovations that they have moving forward. We do recognize that moving forward, the technology can only get better. So that's something that we will watch as we develop policy, and I'm excited to see some of the innovations that industry will have in the coming years.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and I certainly thank the member for that statement, especially the fact of being a fellow graduate of Jasper Place composite myself. I always enjoy hearing about the high school.

I was curious, if the member wouldn't mind sharing, if he's identified any goals that he's specifically looking at accomplishing in terms of serving his constituents and how he's going to be accomplishing those.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, you have five seconds.

Mr. Carson: Five seconds. Thank you very much. Well, we have a lot in the works, I can say that. But I mentioned some of the things in my throne speech response.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured today for the opportunity to rise and respond to the Speech from the Throne. First, I would like to thank my husband, Doug, for his unwavering love and support and belief that I can do anything I put my mind to. Without this support, I wouldn't have this amazing opportunity. I would also like to thank my children – Ashley, Kimberly, Matthew, and Kyle – and my two grandchildren, Austin and Payton. You are all part of the reason I ran for office, and I hope my contributions here to our government and this Assembly will ensure that Alberta is an even better place for you and your generation than it is today.

I have to acknowledge my parents, Gerry and Iris, for raising me to have values, humility, and a willingness to help others. One of the lessons my parents taught me while growing up was that if you don't like something, it is up to you to step up, to put in the work needed to make the change. I see this same attitude every day throughout my constituency, Madam Speaker.

Last but not least, I need to thank my team – Stephen Merredew, Karen Reay, and the rest – who work so hard to bring change to Red Deer-South, and my constituents in Red Deer-South, who place their trust in me and our government's vision for Alberta. Their trust has allowed me to be their voice in government.

I believe that things happen for a reason. People come into your life at the right time and place to help you to evolve into the person you are supposed to be. Some people call it luck, fate, serendipity. I have four such people who help guide me: Mrs. Betty Ryan, my friend and confidante – the world is not the same without you in it – Mr. Don Crissal, friend and mentor, whose gentle nudging helped guide my path; Ms Elisabeth Ballermann, a woman who inspired me to be the best at whatever I do; and Ms Marle Roberts. We are true sisters of the heart. Without these people, I would not be the person I am today.

I work with an amazing team of people led by an equally amazing woman, our Premier. Thanks go out to all of you for your help and support. On May 5, 2015, history was made in Alberta. We formed Alberta's first NDP government. Since that day I have been working nonstop for my constituents. I have met with countless people and have met with over 200 not-for-profits and organizations.

I would like to tell you about a few of these particular organizations in my constituency of Red Deer-South. Turning Point, formerly known as CAANS, works in harm reduction. Their team is an amazing group of people. Not only do they do needle exchanges, distribute condoms and naloxone kits; they are also a team that the people who are their clients trust. Some of the staff have been known to take in and foster the pets of their clients when they have been unable to care for them themselves. One such pet is Bella, whose humans are struggling right now. Bella is in a safe and happy home, waiting for her humans. Turning Point, because they are trusted, gets info from the people on the street when a new substance hits the street. The staff of Turning Point are more than just a not-for-profit; they're an integral part of the community.

Another amazing organization is the Golden Circle. It is a seniors' drop-in centre and more. It is a hub where seniors can meet and enjoy the company of their peers. The centre has provided programs, activities, outreach, and resources for older adults and their families since 1977. The team at the Circle is led by a dynamic woman, Monica Morrison. She is very forward thinking. On August 18, 2015, the team hosted a rainbow tea, complete with a drag show. It sold out quickly. As Monica wrote in their newsletter: I never thought I would see the day that our local seniors' centre would be part of pride, let alone host a drag show in the middle of the afternoon.

Some of the weekly activities at the centre include Zumba, tai chi, square dancing, dancercise, and various card games. They also offer computer classes. There is a very active travel club. New York was the last big trip, with 43 participants. The centre is a one-stop shop for programs like home maintenance help, grocery delivery in partnership with the Co-op store, program referrals, support groups, transportation to and from medical appointments, and they spearhead the elder abuse program. I am very proud to be working with these wonderful people.

Another hard-working group of people is the staff of Women's Outreach. The programs they provide are invaluable to the community, programs like domestic violence support and safe visitation, which is a neutral-based program that allows children to continue visiting noncustodial parents in a supportive environment in situations when families are dealing with the impact of domestic violence. They support the premise that children grow up to be more healthy and adaptive individuals and contribute to the community while knowing both parents love and support them. They also do monitored exchange, where a safe transition of children from one parent to another is done to eliminate the children from witnessing a negative interaction between the parents. This group plays a key role in the struggle with domestic violence.

Madam Speaker, in Her Honour's speech last week she highlighted a variety of issues that will continue to put Alberta back on track. We know that we are in a period of prolonged economic decline, and I know my constituents are pleased to see that their government has a plan to put Albertans back to work and to finally get our province off the resource royalty roller coaster. Like all Albertans, my constituents are affected by the declining price of oil, and I know my constituents are assured by our government's commitment to do everything we responsibly can as quickly as we can to ensure that we are promoting economic growth and diversification and job creation.

Red Deer-South is not only home to a great many nonprofits, as I mentioned earlier, but we're home to a considerable number of small, locally run businesses as well. I know our government's commitment to making $1.5 billion available to ATB to support lending to these small and medium-sized businesses in combination with AIMCo's earmarked half a billion dollars for investment in companies with growth potential has these local businesses excited. Small businesses are often the driving force behind local economics and job growth. I know that these companies in our constituency are ready to lead the way.

Madam Speaker, while Red Deer-South is home to great schools, a hospital, and other facilities, like many other cities across the province we're still facing a crunch when it comes to infrastructure. That's why I was so pleased to hear that our government will be investing $34 billion into the provincial capital plan to help build roads, transit, schools, and other infrastructure projects across the province. Not only will the projects help address our infrastructure deficit; they will keep Albertans working during this period of economic decline.

My constituents of Red Deer-South know that when times are tough, we need to have each others' backs. I see this attitude every day in my constituency, and I'm pleased to see our government is taking the same approach. We need to work together to support one another in this current economic climate. Now is the time to invest in our front-line services and staff. Now is not the time to be making things worse by laying off nurses or teachers in the short term.

Part of taking care of each other means ensuring that vulnerable Albertans have the protections they need to succeed. That's why I'm pleased that the throne speech announced that our government will be introducing an act to end predatory lending. Madam Speaker, I've heard from constituents that use these payday loans, and I've heard the horror stories of up to 600 per cent interest rates over the course of the year. As Her Honour mentioned, this practice has been allowed to go on for too long, and it's especially important that we take action now, when times are tough, to make sure Albertans who use these services are not taken advantage of.

Madam Speaker, I'm honoured for the opportunity to represent the constituency of Red Deer-South, and I'm thankful to everyone that has placed their trust in me to ensure that the voices of our community are heard loud and clear through these halls and in this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: The beautiful riding of Edmonton-Whitemud. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Red Deer-South for an excellent presentation about her history. I was particularly impressed with the many mentors and role models that you had. I can share that I see the member as a role model for me in the way that she leads the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund. I noticed that she had mentioned the work that AIMCo is doing for the benefit of the province, and I wonder if she would maybe expand on that and talk about the advantages, the sort of investments that AIMCo can make in Alberta businesses that might benefit this province.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Member, for the question. Chairing the heritage savings trust fund, we've – the whole committee has learned a lot more about how our nest egg is being invested, and this half a billion dollars is over and above what they already invest in Alberta companies. What they're looking for are companies that have a potential to grow but that just need that little bit extra, something that will also grow our fund. It's not just the Alberta government that's involved in AIMCo's investments. There is the teachers' pension fund and a lot more, so they're not just focusing on the Alberta government's portion but on what makes the best sense for everyone. Of the government's portion, the $500 million is strictly for small and medium businesses that have the potential to become big businesses.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I guess I'm at a bit of an advantage as I do know the member's history and everything that she brings to the table, but I was wondering if you could share with other members, who are maybe not as familiar with your work in the labour world, how you used to interact with your members and how that relates to what you bring to the table in serving your constituents.

Ms Miller: Thank you. I walked my first picket line when I was nine years old, and I'm very proud of it. My parents had no problem with it. I've always thought that you have to stick up for the underdog, and I've carried that through my life. When I worked in the school system, I was on bargaining committees. When I started working at Safeway, I joined, of course, the union and became a shop steward. Then I was elected to the executive. I was the president of the local labour council, part of the AFL, part of the Canadian Labour Congress. In every organization I've been part of, I've gathered a little bit more of an idea of what other people are going through, so I've been able to use that knowledge to help constituents when they've come into the office. It could be job related; it could be health related. I've been able to pick up information from all different facets of my varied career to help the constituents of Red Deer-South.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments?

I will recognize the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to begin by recognizing the indigenous peoples of Alberta. My constituency includes the Alexander First Nation as well as the historic land of the Michel people, both of whom signed Treaty 6. I am proud to see the continued efforts to implement the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples and the recommendations of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, some of which are present in the throne speech.

[The Speaker in the chair]

As a member of the Métis nation I would also like to recognize that both Spruce Grove and St. Albert have a long history with the Métis, including the founding of St. Albert and the habitation of the Lac Ste. Anne Métis in the western portion of their lands.

I am proud to rise today to respond to the Speech from the Throne as the Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

I was quite thrilled to hear the Famous Five recognized in Her Honour's address. The right to vote, indeed the duty to vote, is one of our most important rights, and I am proud to say that my family has long been committed to human rights and public service, a tradition I am honoured to continue in this Assembly. There are two members of my family tree I would like to take a moment to discuss a bit, but I would be remiss if I did not acknowledge some others.

On my father's side we signed the Magna Carta, starting the long road of human rights. On my mother's side we have James McKay, who served as a judge on the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal; Gladys Bigg, my 99-year-old great-grandmother, who served as deputy mayor of Westlock and is a member of the Athabasca University board; and, in addition, we had countless factors from the days when Alberta was dominated by the fur trade.

The first person I would like to discuss fits nicely into the throne speech. A few members have laid claim to Nellie McClung, and I'm sure they are all pleased to know that I am not about to do the same. According to family mythology I am related to Edith MacTavish Rogers, the first woman elected in Manitoba. As a result of her work with veterans, she was committed to working for labour rights against her Liberal Party lines. She represented Canada at the Geneva Convention, defining the rights of prisoners of war and civilians in a war zone. In sum, she fought for rights that are now fundamental both in Canada and internationally, and this is a tradition I wish to emulate.

The second person I would like to discuss a bit is my great-grandfather, Jack Bigg. He was a veteran of World War II, having previously served in the RCMP, and he played a season with the Saskatchewan Roughriders although we won't hold that against him. He was personally asked to run by John Diefenbaker, and as a veteran and in recognition of both his constituents and his Métis roots he committed his life to fighting for indigenous and veterans' rights. In recognition of his work he was named Chief Almighty Voice. Last I heard, his headdress is still on display in the Westlock museum. As a signatory to the Canadian Bill of Rights, I find his commitment to fighting for the rights of Canadians inspiring though I am sure we would not agree on much policy beyond that.

Mr. Speaker, as one of the youngest members in this Legislature I am honoured to represent the people of Spruce Grove-St. Albert. The two cities I represent are routinely named among the best cities in Canada to raise a family. Both Spruce Grove and St. Albert are served by wonderful teachers, school boards, and they both offer a wide variety of services. This has brought recognition, but it has also brought a lot of growth. Spruce Grove in particular has exploded in population, especially in the past 10 years. This growth has brought with it new challenges, some related to the median age of the constituency and some to growing population.

The first big issue my constituency faces is that of an infrastructure deficit. Years of cuts and delayed projects have left us with a pressing deficit. One road in particular has been discussed and re-examined and rediscussed since the Social Credit was on this side of the aisle. Another project, a school in St. Albert, had originally been promised a renovation by Premier Getty, and they are just now receiving that renovation. Neither of my communities has seen a new school since Premier Getty although we have seen replacements. Having said that, we are seeing three new school builds, so I'm optimistic on that now.

Certainly, being recognized as some of the best creates a certain level of demand. This leads us to the other issue in my constituency, that the recognition for being a great place to raise young families has brought a young population. Like many young Albertans, my constituents are faced with the fact that tuition rates and school fees are climbing faster than incomes, making it that much harder to access postsecondary education. This is forcing many parents to take out a second or even a third mortgage to provide their children with a chance of an education just while mom and dad are trying to save for retirement.

On top of that, many students – I dare say most of the ones I have met – are forced to take out student loans. Textbooks are becoming increasingly expensive, and those students from out of town, whether they're from a rural setting or simply a different urban one or who don't live with their family, have to find housing and cover the cost of living. With an eye on that, I'm not going to get into the impact of finding employment around class times and studying on top of that, Mr. Speaker, but I will say that it has left many of the younger MLAs well equipped to deal with the long hours of debate we experienced a few months ago.

So now our students have an education. They have the marketable skills they need to find employment, but they now face a market where most positions are asking for experience, where the positions they are qualified for are often taken by people a few generations older. This is for a position that used to be an entry-level job. Faced with a cycle of debt, compounded with a difficult market to make use of the education that started it – I completely lost that.

Mr. Speaker, Spruce Grove-St. Albert is noteworthy for finding grassroots solutions to problems that face our whole province. Our citizens have developed some especially amazing programs supporting mental health as well as young mothers. Compassionate Connections is committed to helping young mothers with accessing food, clothing, and household supplies, efforts that I'm sure that the Famous Five would have appreciated.

Now, both Spruce Grove and St. Albert are suburbs, and there's a lot of research proving that suburbs can be a lonely place, leading to mental health issues, but we have many organizations working to address that. The Spruce Grove and area friendship connection is an online support network helping people face feelings of isolation and loneliness. We also have Auggie's Café, a group who meets every Tuesday just a short walk from my office and endeavours to provide individuals who feel isolated a place to socialize and enjoy a nutritionally balanced meal. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the spirit of the community-minded, caring, and neighbourly Albertan is alive and well in Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

I am proud to note that my constituency has led on environmental causes. It's no mistake that the minister of environment is a graduate of the Spruce Grove education system. The city recently opened a new public works that makes use of passive lighting, geothermal, and water conservation to strive to be as environmentally friendly as possible. Also in Spruce Grove we have Greenbury, a neighbourhood using wind turbines to power their street lights in a push towards carbon neutrality, and these are but some of the initiatives in my constituency. I look forward to many more.

In Her Honour's speech there was a commitment to help the many Albertans facing tough economic times. While the current environment makes that much more important than ever, we need to work towards this through boom or bust. My constituency along with the rest of the province is faced with a lack of affordable housing. This is true in both rural and urban settings, as I'm sure all members in this Assembly are aware. While there are many great organizations working to address this gap both in my constituency and throughout the province, I cannot stress enough that we have fallen short. From our younger Albertans trying to start a life on their own to families working multiple jobs to our seniors and our most vulnerable, the challenge in finding affordable housing is daunting and something that all Albertans should be concerned about.

Now, it's not as simple as just finding any old house. Many groups are faced with additional restrictions. One group in particular, our Albertan families, especially single parents or those working irregular hours, are faced with the added challenge of finding housing that allows children and that has reasonable access to schools and child care.

It's not all gloom and doom on this file, Mr. Speaker. I was pleased to see that affordable housing will be a priority for the new Minister of Seniors and Housing, and I look forward to following the results of their work going forward.

Mr. Speaker, the throne speech notes that we need to diversify our energy markets, and I couldn't agree more. For too long we have relied on a subset of energy products and on a narrow selection of customers. I'm sure all members in this Assembly can appreciate the impact hydraulic fracturing has had on the market to the south of us, especially as our best customer has now found a cheaper product. Now we have to change how we act. While in the past it was sufficient to focus on our southern neighbours, we now need to look for new markets, whether that's to tidewater or to our eastern Canadian partners, who are currently importing oil from the Middle East more than they are from us. We need new markets.

As Her Honour mentioned in the throne speech last week, Canada's inability over the last 10 years to pursue a strategic energy policy supported by Canadians has made it impossible so far for our country to diversify our markets. I'm proud to see that our Premier and our government are taking significant strides to promote a drama-free and collaborative approach to pipeline construction.

The implementation of the climate leadership plan will further improve Alberta's reputation, allowing us to access new markets and protecting jobs in our largest industry. Mr. Speaker, the politics of division, the politics used and promoted by the opposition, have failed. It is my opinion that if a project passes through six Premiers without shovels in the ground, we should probably readdress how we are approaching it. If our partners in every direction are calling for action on climate change, the answer is not to ignore these calls but to work toward them. I am proud to say that this government is working towards that. We need to look at a variety of energy sources – solar, wind, natural gas, and, dare I say, geothermal – alongside continued efforts to make sure that we continue to have the cleanest oil on the market.

Now, many are concerned that an increase in renewable energy would be an overnight change, and I would have to agree that such an approach would only shock the system. What we need to do is create a blend of products, and I am proud to say that I am seeing this approach from our government. The beginnings of this are the access to supports that municipalities and farmers have when they're looking at solar power.

We have a long way to go, Mr. Speaker, but Albertans are hard-working and entrepreneurial people, and I believe that with a little support from this Assembly we will all enjoy a stronger, resilient, and diverse economy.

The Speaker: The chair recognizes Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to congratulate the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert on a fantastic speech, and I think I join in celebrating with pride no more so than the two individuals who sit in our gallery to watch that speech, the member's parents, who are probably bursting at the seams right now. I have to agree with the hon. member that the cities of Spruce Grove and St. Albert are great places to raise a family for I began to raise my young family in Spruce Grove over 20 years ago, when I first moved there after being married and adopting three children who were then seven, nine, and 11. We lived for a year in Spruce Grove before moving to an acreage nearby in Parkland county.

However, I'd like to know what the special challenges are for a member who serves a constituency that does have that split of rural and urban components to it because I am sure that there are different things that you would look at on a daily basis in terms of serving those constituents compared to what I would in a more urban setting, and I'd be interested to hear what you, as one of those MLAs who serve a split riding with urban and rural components, might be able to tell us about that experience.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for the question. There is certainly a bit of a challenge in making sure you're juggling your time. It's very easy to get caught up, as I'm sure many members on both sides of the House can appreciate, in just agricultural issues or just housing issues or indeed almost any issue you can lose all of your time in, so making sure I maintain that balance is certainly important and something I strive for on a daily basis. There are also a lot of different points of view that come forward with having such a, well, rural riding, including a lot more concern on the loss of ag land. Both of my cities are growing in every direction they can. As well, a lot of the counties right around the capital region are starting to move towards some acreages, so there are a lot of farmers who are concerned about the loss of their land and a lot of the land of their colleagues. That's certainly a concern that I've been hearing a lot about and that I'm trying to keep an eye on.

In addition, there are challenges that are unique to both, even within the same file, like affordable housing, for instance. In a rural setting it tends to be a bit more – a lot of people will describe it as invisible, although I don't think that that's entirely accurate. There are a lot more people living in a trailer or out of the back of their truck, where in a city setting it can be what most people think of, living around the downtown core. So trying to address both of those different situations is an ever-present challenge.

Ms Fitzpatrick: First of all, I'd like to congratulate my seatmate here on a wonderful speech. I was quite intrigued by your history of political activism. I'd like to ask you a little bit about your own steps towards this position because I know that there's a little something there that we're all quite interested in as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. Well, when I first graduated high school, I went to NAIT and took a program that wasn't the right fit for me, and then I decided to go back, originally thinking, like many members of this House, that I might go into education. Then I ended up taking a political science course and somehow ended up majoring in it, attending many political functions, and door-knocking out in Beverly-Clareview with the minister. And from there I started to become more and more active with the youth branch of the NDP, starting to protest many of the actions of the former government. From there I just continued being more and more active, setting up the association in St. Albert, and starting to grow both the federal and provincial levels as well as continuing . . . [A timer sounded]

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I wonder if your parents still speak to the member from Beverly now that you ended up in this place.

I would recognize the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to reply to the Speech from the Throne and to speak about my constituency of Wetaskiwin-Camrose. I actually have to divert for two things right now thanks to the Edmonton-Meadowlark speaker – he's brought up something that I wanted to mention – and also to Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

My wife, unfortunately, is not in the gallery today, so I want to publicly and online apologize to her but not for miscommunication. I'm speaking today and not later, so it was not that I communicated incorrectly. It's really important in a relationship, a marriage relationship between husband and wife, that there's good communication. So I have to clear that with her right away. It's important in a good relationship that you have communication. In a marriage longer than possibly both of these colleagues have existed, again, not to re-emphasize it too long, communication is important.

The other thing is that when I go to schools, much like my Edmonton-Meadowlark colleague, I will give my spiel. I'll talk about all of these issues, all of these things that go on, and the very first question will be: how old are you? We have the very young and the very enthusiastic and energetic, and they've actually revived my interest in politics. I had been retired for four years, and coming back today, I'm excited that I'm going to be serving for eight years or more. It comes from their enthusiasm, and I'm really proud of that.

I would like to compliment all of the previous speakers for their eloquence and passion. I am proud of the commitment and dedication they have shown to social justice and humanitarianism, and I'm honoured to be part of their team and join together with them in this House.

The constituency of Wetaskiwin-Camrose includes two progressive cities but is also the home of the town of Millet and the village of Bittern Lake, which, if you haven't been there, is a cozy little village that is near a wildlife preserve and has many walking trails. Bittern Lake is known for its beauty. Our constituency also includes the hamlet of Gwynne, which has its own ski hill, and some day you might want to come and ski there. We are also privileged to encompass two of the four Cree Nations, Samson and Montana, at Maskwacis. Now, Wetaskiwin-Camrose has two county councils and is part of four school districts: Wetaskiwin regional, Battle River, Elk Island Catholic, and St. Thomas Aquinas Catholic.

Mr. Speaker, I may be a little biased, but I think Wetaskiwin-Camrose is one of the best and most diverse places in our entire province. We are a dynamic community, and it would take me days to list all of the fantastic features of our constituency, so here are just a few of those highlights.

We have the University of Alberta Augustana campus in Camrose offering a fine liberal arts program under the guidance of Dean Allen Berger.

Recently we have a very modern, up-to-date Peter & Jean Loughheed Performing Arts Centre.

Likewise, the Camrose city centre has the Bailey Theatre, which is a beautiful heritage building, and one of the festivals that they held just in February is called the Nordlys film festival. It was actually started by the previous MLA and his wife, and I compliment them on that. It features a number of international films but also some Canadian ones from Alberta as well. Hans Olson, the son of the previous MLA, produced a movie that was shown at this film festival. It's called Figurine and was filmed in Edmonton. You just don't get to see that at commercial theatres, but you may want to watch that sometime.

The dramatic pride of Wetaskiwin is the Manluk performing arts centre, located in another historical building, the waterworks building.

A fairly famous Camrose event is the Big Valley Jamboree of country and western music under the present direction of Tom Gerling, his board, and a tremendous number of volunteers. I'd venture to guess that at least some of you have been to the Jamboree, and if you haven't, you're welcome to come this year because we're going to feature Blake Shelton, Carrie Underwood, and Autumn Hill.

Jaywalker's Jamboree is a June extravaganza of food, fashions, and fun that you may also want to attend.

Mr. Speaker, as many of you who are from rural constituencies will know, our communities can be as close as family, with everyone having at least one connection to another. For example, one of Camrose's councillors, Kevin Hycha, is a former student of mine. Max Lindstrand, is a former baseball teammate. Wetaskiwin's mayor, Bill Elliot, is another retired teacher. Actually, Bill and I coached volleyball but often on the other side of the court. Also on council in Wetaskiwin is Wayne Neilson, like me a retired school principal, and Wayne and I shared basketball coaching duties for a few seasons. It is these connections that are the lifeblood of rural communities, and these connections run deep throughout my constituency.

Mr. Speaker, in my home of Wetaskiwin, which means, appropriately, hills of peace, there are countless things to keep you very busy. If you are a history buff like myself, you can go any time of the year to see the Reynolds-Alberta Museum. In fact, some 10,000-plus people do so yearly. In Her Honour's speech last week she mentioned that our government is taking steps to diversify and grow our economy. Despite the current economic downturn, tourism is one of the fastest growing sectors in our economy, and the number of visitors we see through the Reynolds museum perfectly highlights the potential of this industry in our province.

The Reynolds-Alberta Museum has something for everyone. If you appreciate – and I know many of you do – or would like to explore our rural heritage and historical artifacts, you can explore some amazing farm machinery and buildings. If you are a car enthusiast like our colleague from Calgary-Currie, some of the restored vehicles are incredible, and you can see restoration happening in their shops.

As a side note, just outside of Wetaskiwin is the Edmonton international speedway – Edmonton is too small; they had to bring it to Wetaskiwin – for those that like fast cars and racing.

Reynolds is also the home of Canada's Aviation Hall of Fame, where you can get up close, sit in some of the airplanes, and touch those exhibits. Wetaskiwin also has an air show. Due to very generous donations from the Reynolds family – the artifacts are now beyond the space. There's a space crunch to display more, so they are looking at further expansion.

As many of you know, in my previous life, before being elected to this House, I was a teacher. I was delighted to hear in the Speech from the Throne last week our government's commitment to protecting and strengthening our public services such as health care and education. Education plays a major role in our constituency, with Wetaskiwin-Camrose, as I said, having Augustana university, part of the U of A, but also NorQuest College. I know many of my former students have gone on to continue their studies in these institutions and are continuing to make contributions to their community.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to briefly mention one of our local businesses; that is, Parkland Fertilizers. In a period of prolonged economic decline our government is committed to doing everything that we reasonably can as quickly as possible to promote job creation and economic diversification. Businesses like Parkland Fertilizers are a perfect example of the potential that local businesses can bring to the diversification of our economy. Parkland is also currently building new, expanded facilities in Wetaskiwin's southeast industrial park, and since we know that small and medium businesses can help drive job creation in this current economic climate, I am hopeful for the future.

One of their buildings, I'm also proud to share, has 350 solar panels on its south side. By their numbers they tell me that the life expectancy of those panels is 30 years. They expect the cost to be recovered in 10 years, and that leaves 20 years of free electricity and cost savings, not to mention the contributions to the environment and the goals of the climate leadership plan.

Mr. Speaker, Millet is one of Alberta's prettiest towns, as evidenced by the fact that they have won the cities in bloom championships for many years. I'd like to congratulate the recently elected new mayor of Millet, Tony Wadsworth. Tony attended the Speech from the Throne and, with his English background, really appreciated the significance of the ceremony and traditions in this House. I am sure that like many other municipal leaders in our province, Tony appreciated our government's commitment in Her Honour's speech to investing $34 billion to help build roads, schools, transit, and other facilities in our communities, that need and will help support the economy and local jobs.

To the south of Wetaskiwin are the four Cree nations of Samson, Montana, Ermineskin, and Louis Bull. While all citizens of Alberta are welcome to Maskwacis, which means “Bear Hills,” you will find a very rich cultural heritage by attending either or both powwows in July and August. I would like to thank the MLAs, my colleagues, that were there this last summer. You would not believe how amazed they were that MLAs would actually come to Maskwacis. When we had so many there, they really, truly appreciated that.

With the growing population amongst First Nations it is important to see how Maskwacis Cultural College is helping to provide postsecondary opportunities. I want to compliment their president, Patricia Littlechild, because today is her birthday. Patricia, if you are watching, happy birthday.

I was incredibly proud to hear in the Speech from the Throne last week of the government’s commitment to respect the request of most of Alberta’s indigenous governments and to not only repeal Bill 22 but also start consultations on a new indigenous people’s sacred ceremonial objects repatriation act, which will facilitate the return of sacred objects to the nations to which they rightfully belong. I look forward to these discussions, and I know my constituents do as well.

In addition to the three chiefs – Kurt Buffalo, Darrell Strongman, and Randy Ermineskin – I would like to pay tribute to the late Rusty Three Fingers, chief of Louis Bull. Maskwacis also has Chief Craig Makinaw as the Alberta First Nations grand chief. Craig and councillors Marvin Yellowbird and Kirk Buffalo were also former students of mine. Something must have gone right to get so many of those students in social studies into politics. Councillor Vernon Saddleback is one of my former cross-country runners. Chief Randy Ermineskin and I shared the coaching bench of the junior B Hawks hockey club.

Speaking of hawks, I would also like to inform everyone that Maskwacis has Hawk Radio 89.1 FM and promotes all things First Nations: music, singers, drummers, and events. Sometime please have a listen. Actually, I wanted to mention some of the other radio stations that we have in Wetaskiwin. Wetaskiwin has two, and Camrose has one, CFCW.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne last week contained numerous initiatives that my constituents are excited for. Our investment in front-line services, workers, and infrastructure is greatly welcome. Everyone is quite aware of the stresses of the present economic situation, which one year ago during the election campaign was rarely a topic of discussion. They are reassured, however, that our government has a plan to put Albertans back to work and will focus on diversifying our economy. My constituents are excited about the reinstatement of the STEP program and the introduction of the Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act and the $340 million investment in new direct help to Alberta’s families who need help, including the enhancement to the Alberta child benefit and the family employment tax credit.

I am proud to have supported last fall the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act. My office has had numerous inquiries about how people could participate on the technical rules, and I was informed today by the agriculture minister that there have been hundreds of applications. I’m very impressed with that because I think this not only shows that the people of Alberta are ready for safety and ready for compensation to include all workers, but they are excited to get on with forming the best of the best policies unique to Alberta’s farms.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to end today by thanking all my constituents who placed their faith in me as their MLA – it has been an amazing experience – and especially thanks to all my team of volunteers and supporters. We will go into history as one of Alberta’s best reformative provincial governments: gender balance, gender rights, reforming Alberta health care, human rights, environmental stewardship, the sunshine list, building schools and moving forward with badly needed infrastructure, and rectifying many treaty wrongs for our First Nations.

Thank you for this opportunity to speak.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Again, I want to thank the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose for his insightful maiden speech. I’d like to ask him: eight years, and what do you plan on doing after that?

Mr. Hinkley: Well, I have an amusing story. After that, I’m going to write the book about my experiences in this House, and I’m going to call it My Bargain with the Wildrose Party. If they promise not to tell any more lies about us, I won’t tell the truth about them.

The Speaker: I would caution the members about certain adjectives that might be directed at other members of the House.

The Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Yeah. I wanted to thank the member for his speech. I didn’t realize how diverse his riding was and how many interesting cities and places are there. I just wanted to ask him about the importance of the REAs in his riding. I know that you have a couple in your riding.

5:20

Mr. Hinkley: First of all, I guess I need to apologize for using an inappropriate word in my last comments. At that time I will not be a member of the House.

With regard to the REAs I do want to mention a bigger part of that. I have been the co-chair of the rural caucus and advocating on many issues, one of which is co-operatives and the rural electrification associations. As part of the rural caucus we are also talking about food security, surface rights, and property rights. Early in the year, last June, we had Motion 501 about fair compensation and the right to appeal for property rights. Also, our rural caucus is concerned about the electrical rates and consumer protection, environmental stewardship, rural hospitals and schools, and rural economic diversification and sustainability. We also have lots of concerns about urban sprawl. So there are many, many topics that we would like to look at.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Yes, under 29(2)(a). I’d like to thank the member for the fine speech. I just wanted to mention that I’d met the member in Camrose a few years ago as he had organized a rural contact event. As a retired teacher I was wondering what got him involved in these activities and if he could expand on his current outreach activities and if he has any such events maybe lined up for the future.

Thanks.

Mr. Hinkley: Okay. How I got started. I guess that being a social studies teacher, I’ve talked about politics in many, many classes and, of course, always tried to be neutral. It became very obvious from the students and their passion for politics that they actually guided me into looking at our political issues and deciding to take some action, because in school we always talked. I always encouraged them: "Well, if that's what you believe, why don't you do something about it?" They bounced the question back and said: "Well, why aren't you in politics?" And I did become so involved and very active with that.

I do continue being quite concerned about education and do want to be a voice and advocate for Augustana University College. They do need a new facility, as does Maskwacis Cultural College in Maskwacis. They have been working out of temporary trailers for many, many years. If we do believe that education is one of the tools to get out of poverty, to help people go to work, to do many positive things, I think we have to continue to support the infrastructure that builds schools.

I continue to attend many schools. I continue to support students getting involved. Of course, in grade 6 they study the Alberta Legislature, and it's amazing how many students come up and will want to shake my hand and say: I'm going to become an MLA, just like you. I really appreciate that.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Any questions under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, I would recognize the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and speak to the Assembly about the fantastic constituency that is Edmonton-Castle Downs. I am proud to represent the community that I have called home for over 20 years and wanted to take this opportunity to say thank you for believing in me and for choosing me to be your representative. I adore Edmonton-Castle Downs as this is where I chose to raise my family, nurture my friendships, and pursue my career as a social worker.

Immediately prior to being elected by the incredible people of Edmonton-Castle Downs, I worked for almost a decade with children's services. In this role I worked with Alberta's most vulnerable children and families, facing what could have been seen as one of the worst times in their lives. I worked hard to ensure that these children and families were always treated with the utmost dignity and respect by both myself and all the other professionals that they interacted with. It is with these values and beliefs that I will continue to advocate for and represent our community to the best of my ability.

Mr. Speaker, Edmonton-Castle Downs is filled with community leagues, associations, and societies that work to support all residents in this constituency. I would like to highlight a few of the many leading organizations that play a role in the engagement of the individuals and the families in our community, one of which is the Castle Downs Recreation Society, that was formed in 1983 with representatives of the community leagues in Castle Downs and several other members.

The society has many successful accomplishments and has invested over $900,000 in the Castle Downs area. Examples of these contributions to the community are the Castle Downs Recreation Centre, sports fields and parking, the creation of the Castle Downs YMCA, the playground and spray park, the skateboard park, and the Castle Downs district park development. These accomplishments were successful due to the collaborative work with the city of Edmonton, the YMCA, and both federal and provincial grants. Their efforts are celebrated within the community and are an important part of Castle Downs.

The CDRS are also well known for their amazing Canada Day celebration, that has had an increased turnout year after year. I highly recommend that you and your families come and participate in the festivities. The work of all the individual community leagues cannot be emphasized enough as they co-ordinate organized sports, playschools, and many other opportunities for our families to participate in the development of their community. Edmonton-Castle Downs is an inclusive and cohesive constituency that is celebrated for its diversity.

Another strong community organization is the Castle Downs YMCA. They provide a wide variety of social programs and community events such as the BMO NBA All-Star KidsFest, the healthy kids event, a weekly youth drop-in, child care services, and the alternative day program for youth suspended from school, to name a few. I recently was a guest of the Castle Downs YMCA for the YMCA northern Alberta Strong Kids campaign, which was a fundraiser to support programs in our community. They are an invaluable community centre within Castle Downs for our youth, families, and individuals.

I would also like to mention two of our sports organizations that are housed in our community. The Edmonton Seahawks football organization finished the season with the peewee team as the tier 3 champions and the midgets as tier 4 champions. My son Dre and the Member for Edmonton-Centre's nephew were players on this peewee team, and my husband, Shane, was their coach. The Edmonton Hawks Athletic Club had a great year in the 2016 minor hockey week. They had 14 hockey teams in the tournament, and nine of those teams won gold and silver medals. My son's peewee team just won the gold in the city championship this last Sunday, and my husband coaches this team as well. I would like to extend a huge thank you to all of the players, coaches, and families for participating in children and youth sports.

We had a busy season in my constituency office and hosted an open house in December. We had an excellent turnout, with constituents supporting both the Food Bank and Santas Anonymous. We received an overwhelming donation of over 100 toys for Santas Anonymous that evening, and I would like to again thank the families and individuals for their generosity. Our community demonstrates time and again that we support each other in tough times, and as mentioned in the throne speech, in tough times we always pull together.

As many of you know, we recently celebrated Chinese New Year in February, and I was invited to participate at the Chin Yin Buddhist temple to ring in the new year of the monkey. It was amazing to see the community come together and celebrate a time of new beginnings. The children and youth drummers and lion dancers entertained the room filled with people of all ages. I also had the privilege to participate in the Chinese New Year celebration at the Golden Age Manor, where the singers, dancers, and drummers were of all ages, performing for the residents and their loved ones.

This January I was able to celebrate with Baturyn elementary school on reaching a milestone of 15 years participation in the Heart and Stroke Foundation's Jump Rope for Heart campaign. Congratulations to all the students, staff, and families who supported this campaign.

In the summer the St. Charles Catholic church held an incredible dialogue around Christianity and Islam, and I was honoured to be part of that. This was the third city-wide event organized by the collaborative Edmonton-based group. It was a powerful discussion where Christians and Muslims together grew in their understanding and appreciation of each other's faiths and traditions.

This winter I participated in the Edmonton Islamic Academy's Syrian refugee fundraiser. This was put on in collaboration with the Al-Rashid mosque, which spearheaded the launch of a new centre aiming at addressing the needs of the refugees and complementing the government's efforts simultaneously. All proceeds went to the new Edmonton Islamic Relief centre. The outpouring of funds and supplies for the Syrian refugees was immense. Thank you to the Islamic community for once again showing that Edmonton-Castle Downs steps up to the plate for their community when in need.

5:30

I have also been fortunate to be appointed to the role of the Alberta government liaison to the Canadian Forces. I have met and maintain an ongoing relationship with Brigadier General W.D. Eyre, who commands the 3rd Canadian Division of Edmonton and the Joint Task Force West; and Colonel Eric Kenny, who commands 4 Wing of CFB Cold Lake. While meeting with the 3rd Canadian Division, I've been able to speak with officers and tour the facilities available to both the military and their families. This summer I had the incredible experience to ride in a tank that crushed a car, and I did it in heels.

This fall I was able to emcee the Helmets to Hardhats event and the launch of the new Support Our Troops licence plate at CFB Edmonton along with the Minister of Transportation and the former minister of jobs, skills, training, and labour. This was an opportunity to highlight Alberta's support of veterans' transitions to new jobs. The Helmets to Hardhats agreement was made with this government to now allow current and retired Canadian Forces members to operate commercial vehicles without additional testing, which was not an option under the previous government.

I was honoured to attend the 100th anniversary celebration of the 3rd Canadian Division in December. This highlighted the efforts that the 3rd Canadian Division has made in both international and domestic matters. I would like to take this opportunity to thank Brigadier General W.D. Eyre for all his hard work and collaboration to support and lead the 3rd Canadian Division. We wish him all the best in his new role and congratulations on his new appointment in Ottawa. I would also like to extend a warm welcome to the new commander of the 3rd Canadian Division, Brigadier General Simon Hetherington, who will begin in July of 2016.

In September I had an opportunity to speak at the Royal Canadian Air Force commemorative park dedication ceremony. The date of the commemoration coincided with the 75th anniversary of the Battle of Britain, in which the RCAF played a vital role and helped turn the tide during the Second World War. Edmonton has a rich history with military aviation, and this was showcased at this event.

I was also honoured to attend the unveiling of the Flanders fields park within the village of Griesbach. The park was created by the Castle Downs Recreational Society and commemorated the 100th anniversary of Lieutenant John McCrae's iconic poem In Flanders Fields. The park is a great symbol to honour the strong ties between Edmonton and the Canadian military.

I have been fortunate to have the opportunity to tour 4 Wing of CFB Cold Lake, hosted by Colonel Eric Kenny, 4 Wing commander. The base was able to showcase how 4 Wing effectively protects the Canadian west through aviation. I met with the 4 Wing commander and fellow officers, who took the time to showcase all of the positive work that the base is doing to support those stationed, and their families, at 4 Wing as well as those deployed with Operation Impact. I would like to take this opportunity to welcome and thank all the men and women who played a role in Operation Impact as they now return home.

This fall I travelled to Penhold to participate along with Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor, Lois Mitchell, at the commemoration of the Penhold cenotaph, which honours those from the town and surrounding rural community who served in the Great War, of 1914 to 1918, and the Second World War, of 1939 of 1945. The cenotaph was commissioned with private donor funds and was completed in time for the Remembrance Day celebrations at the Penhold Regional Multiplex. To honour our veterans, I participated with Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor at the celebration of the 90th anniversary at the Kingsway Legion here in Edmonton. As a democratic, independent, and member-based organization the Royal Canadian Legion has improved the lives of thousands of veterans and their families, including serving military and RCMP members. It was a powerful moment that showcased the importance of supporting our veterans through the Legions. I look forward to maintaining and building new relationships while touring the impressive military facilities across our beautiful province in my role as the Alberta government liaison to the Canadian Forces.

Now to an issue that is near and dear to my heart. It's incredible to think that over 100 years ago women were having to fight for their right to vote and that now, today, we govern. It's an exciting time to be a part of history, with women represented in all levels of government. Mr. Speaker, as I stand beside my peers, I am inspired by their accomplishments. Our caucus is roughly 45 per cent female, where our cabinet is fully gender balanced, the first time in Canadian history. Under the leadership of the Premier and the Minister of Status of Women, a new mother, we are working towards more diversity and inclusive measures. It's important to continue to nurture and support women from all backgrounds to step into leadership roles and community engagement with the goal of representation and equality in all aspects of policy and programs. I have chosen to do this in my life's work and in the Edmonton-Castle Downs constituency office. As a social work practicum student supervisor I encourage the social work students who are in our office to feel empowered and supported in leadership roles.

Mr. Speaker, education is so important. I've had the wonderful and insightful opportunity to visit our local schools. I'm inspired to see so many young people asking insightful questions about government, my role as an MLA, my role as a mother, my role as a woman, and about how they, too, can one day run and become leaders of our community.

When I attended the Daughters Day celebration with my own daughter, Adrien, it was overwhelming to see so many young, engaged women who look at us here in the Legislature as role models and see how we can participate in standing up for equality.

Now, having mentioned my daughter, I want to close with acknowledging the love and support of my family. To my children, Allan, Adrien, and Dre: you have been a constant source of comic relief, which is always a breath of fresh air. To my mom, Lorraine: you're an incredible woman, and I appreciate all that you have done to encourage me to strive for my goals and to hold a high standard in all of my pursuits. To my husband, who has remained a steadfast partner, supporter, and who is always ready to step in when I need you most: I want to thank you for all that you do and want you to know that I appreciate how much you do for our family. To my family: you inspire and motivate me every day to be the best that I can be as a mother, a wife, a daughter, a friend, and an MLA. I could not do this without all of your support.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, if your children need some comic relief, you might advise them to watch this place sometimes.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I have to thank the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs for a fantastic maiden speech. I'm very grateful that I share borders with you between our two constituencies.

You, of course, had mentioned that in your former life you were a social worker. I was wondering what kinds of skills and experience have come from that area that contribute to serving as an MLA for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you very much, Member, for the question. I see my role as a social worker as being what I do. I believe that in this role as an MLA, I am doing social work. I'm advocating. I'm standing up for and looking out for Alberta's most vulnerable, for the people that come to my office, for the people that don't come to my office but send me an e-mail or a phone call. I'm advocating. I'm reaching out. I'm being their voice. I see my role as being an MLA doing social work. I think all of us here in this Assembly are here because we truly want to see a better place for Alberta, and I believe as a social worker I'm able to do that. I'm so grateful for the experience that I have had.

I want to just acknowledge that today is international Social Work Day. It's such a privilege to be able to stand in this House today as a social worker with all of my fellow social workers, doing what we do.

Thank you.

5:40

The Speaker: No others under 29(2)(a)?

I would recognize the Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. It's truly an honour. I rise in the Chamber today to deliver my maiden speech, as we've heard ladies and gentlemen across the floor and on this side do very good jobs as such. It's truly an honour to have been elected to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. The spring election of 2015 was an election that was not expected. As such, a couple of the parties were not quite ready for the event. A poor showing was expected by many, but as per the outcome it became clear on May 5 that those that were not expected to be able to put forth a strong showing indeed were able to demonstrate to this province that hard work really does pay off. I mean that sincerely as a reflection of both sides of the House.

I don't remember what the name of the girl in the back row's riding was, but she had a very close race. In my own there were less than a dozen votes, actually eight, that separated me from the incumbent. When I arrived in Edmonton to my first caucus meeting, I was promptly given the nickname "Landslide" by our House leader. What the outcome really did confirm for me, as for my fellow MLAs, is that every vote counts.

Mr. Speaker, I have congratulated you on your position and your election to that position personally, but I did want to say publicly that I congratulate you. Many well-respected folks have accepted the job of Speaker, several from my riding, and I'm sure you will be as fair and impartial as any of those that came before you.

Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor in her throne speech of June 15, 2015, neglected to mention agriculture in that speech. The March 8 throne speech this year mentioned the word "agriculture" once, and that was a general comment about the government setting out plans to build on strengths in our economy, including the agriculture industry. I look forward to seeing what those plans will be to build on the strengths of this industry, that has provided so much to Alberta.

I just want to be real clear, Mr. Speaker. With respect, agriculture has been a key industry in what would become Alberta since the 1870s. Short of the fur trade, as Canada opened up the west, agriculture was for decades in this province the number one export industry, those exports being wheat and beef. It's an industry that I hold dear and an industry that has contributed to the gross domestic product of Alberta in a huge way over the years.

My maiden speech today will focus on an area in this province that is special to me. I was born and raised in the southern portion of Alberta, and I'm proud to speak about that area in the House today. I think it's fair to say that Alberta is a province that was built, shall we say, by wave after wave of pioneers and settlers. As a member of the Little Bow riding I can attest to that fact. As the railway came westward, these pioneers and settlers founded the communities inside my rural constituency.

As a matter of fact, my grandfather sailed across an ocean from Scotland to come to this new land. He arrived in eastern Canada in 1904. He promptly got himself a job on the Canadian Pacific Railway and worked his way across Canada in that capacity. In 1908 he arrived in a very new province called Alberta, and he settled on a quarter section of land two miles away from a very small community called Armada, about 30 miles east of the town of Vulcan. He paid $10 to the province of Alberta for that quarter section, and he homesteaded it, which meant breaking 20 acres, fencing the quarter, and building a shelter, no small feat while using horses and what would be considered today ancient, primitive pieces of equipment and sheer manpower. He proved up and received the adjoining quarter section for his efforts two years later.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate, particularly since it is your maiden speech, to interrupt; however, I am required under the standing orders to interrupt.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 3

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2016

The Speaker: In accordance with Standing Order 64(3) the chair is required to put the question to the House on the appropriation bill on the Order Paper for second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a second time]

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy for the hon. member to continue with his response to the Speech from the Throne until the clock adjourns us for dinner.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Much appreciated, I think. Please proceed, hon. Member for Little-Bow.

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Schneider: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member that has given me another chance here.

In every corner of my riding, Mr. Speaker, similar stories can be told, like the one that I just reiterated. Those settlers broke the ground, tilled it, and turned my constituency into a picturesque agricultural Garden of Eden, a landscape that today produces all manner of foodstuffs, those being wheat, canola, barley, oats, sugar beets, potatoes, beef, pork, chicken, eggs, and dairy. Those same producers, their offspring, and their offspring were charged with setting up secondary processes for the very commodities that they were creating. As a result, the Little Bow riding relies on a good highway and railway network, good rural roads and bridges in order to move those commodities to markets around the globe. Without that criss-crossing grid of infrastructure the residents of my constituency that are charged with feeding the world would be hard pressed to produce the products that they do and get them to market.

Right now I would be remiss if I didn't acknowledge a well-known area of southern Alberta which resides within the Little Bow riding which has been given the nickname of Feedlot Alley. This area, because of naturally occurring chinook winds, which produce milder winters than other areas of the province and allow for a better feed-conversion rate, is home to over 2.3 million cattle. Sixty per cent of all of Canada's beef is finished in this area. This industry creates its own economy. It requires grains and roughages and supplements and manpower to finish those cattle for market to be shipped not only to Canadians but to markets all over the world.

Little Bow was also blessed with energy resources early on. Coal was discovered upon the arrival of the pioneers, and this combustible black sedimentary rock, which revealed itself in seams and beds and veins and eventually became the largest source of energy for the generation of electricity in this young province, was being discovered and excavated throughout many areas of my riding. The names of communities were closely tied to the discoveries of vast stores of the mineral, communities like Coaldale and Coalhurst. Just south of where I live there is a 10- or 12-mile stretch of road named the Coalmine Road for obvious reasons. Along that stretch are several small coal reserves that pioneers of the area mined many years ago. The product was sold to folks that travelled by horse and wagon for a load of the precious heating fuel from areas a day's ride away.

Coal Banks, today's Lethbridge, which does not make up part of but is surrounded by the Little Bow constituency, has been home to generations of those that pioneered the land around her and home to the services required by those that live within her and home to the services required by many that still occupy the same lands of those that came so long ago. Drift mining of coal led to the development of Lethbridge. Nicholas Sheran and Sir Alexander Galt were early entrepreneurs for the market of coal from that area.

Along with coal other energy resources were discovered. Oil and natural gas became a large industry in my riding in the early '60s. After the discovery at Leduc No. 1 in 1947 an eruption of exploration around the province made our home a true success story. Like many rural ridings in Alberta, Little Bow is home to the two top industries within our provincial boundaries, energy and agriculture.

The villages and towns that grew up within the areas that were settled as a result of rail running west in my riding are vast. They include Coaldale, Coalhurst, Picture Butte, Nobleford, Barons, Vauxhall, Carmangay, Champion, Lomond, Vulcan, Milo, and Arrowwood. These are all places where pioneers of all types gathered to do business. This in turn gave opportunity for more businesses to begin. General stores, implement sales, blacksmiths, poolrooms and dance halls, barbershops, taxi services, restaurants, doctors, lawyers, banks, and schools all began the century-long growth of Alberta.

There have certainly been tough times, the weather on the farming and ranching side and the economy on the town and village side, but residents of Little Bow, no matter their chosen vocation, have persevered and stayed on to proudly build a portion of this great province, a testament to the values passed on by those original pioneers. But that testament also applies to the new settlers and Canadian citizens, who can also be considered pioneers in Alberta. These are the citizens that continue to add to the rich tapestry and diversity of this province in their own right.

Quoting from Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's throne speech, we are "an optimistic, entrepreneurial, can-do people [that] are community-minded, caring and neighbourly." Those words describe the people of the riding of Little Bow very well and honour the people that came before us.

While talking about my riding, I need to mention the politics of the past. Little Bow is proud of the people that it has sent to the Legislative Assembly. In 1913 James McNaughton as a Liberal candidate. In 1921 Oran McPherson as a United Farmers of Alberta candidate; Mr. McPherson was the Speaker from 1922 to 1926. In 1935 Peter Dawson for the Social Credit; Mr. Dawson is still the longest serving Speaker in Alberta history, from 1937 to 1963. In 1963 Mr. Raymond Speaker for the Social Credit Party; Mr. Speaker also was elected as an independent, a Representative, and finally a Progressive Conservative in his 29-year tenure. In 1992 Barry McFarland for the Progressive Conservatives; Barry served until 2012. Little Bow chose Ian Donovan, a Wildrose candidate, in 2012, and the results of the 2015 election are fresh in our minds.

As I wind down my maiden speech to this Assembly, I wish to recognize the Siksika Nation constituents, located on the northern edge of my riding. The people of this proud area are descendants of the first known inhabitants. The present population of the Siksika Nation is near 7,000. The community has facilities such as the Deerfoot Sportsplex, the Old Sun Community College, a provincial courthouse, police station and emergency services, elementary and high schools, and the Blackfoot Crossing historic park, where Treaty 7 was signed on September 22, 1877. As a matter of fact — my colleague isn't here — but my colleague from Strathmore-Brooks and I are working at setting up a visit with the elders of the Siksika Nation this summer and, for me, a highly anticipated personalized visit to Blackfoot Crossing, where the respected Chief Crowfoot, who was instrumental in the signing of Treaty 7, is buried.

Just a few hundred feet to the west of my home, Mr. Speaker, on the edge of a coulee which is a tributary of the West Arrowwood Creek, are five teepee rings. This small piece of land has never been broken and looks as it would have hundreds of years ago. Before there were fences and farms and towns and railroads, the nomadic Blackfoot people travelled all directions of this area for major tribal ceremonies. These rocks in circular formation, that were touched by the hands of those that came before us, will not be disturbed in my lifetime. I'm proud to have a part of history that is so close to my home and will protect it.

So, Mr. Speaker, with all of the history of the Little Bow riding and, indeed, of every riding within our glorious province we have now begun the Second Session of the 29th Legislature of Alberta. Eighty-seven people have been sent to this hallowed Chamber to conduct the business of the people. They've been sent here as representatives. We are charged with debating the issues that are put before us on behalf of those people. We are charged with making laws that the people of Alberta must live by. We are charged with taking the ideas and concerns of those that sent us here and bringing them forth within these walls for strong discussion and resolution.

I can't express how much it means to me and my family to be a part of the 29th Legislature, how much it means to be the 895th Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to be sworn and the seventh MLA of the great riding of Little Bow. I am positive, Mr. Speaker, that every elected soul within this room, no matter what political stripe, garners those same feelings. Ladies and gentlemen of the Assembly, I respect each of you and those that sent you here. Let us begin this session we have begun — I wrote this a few days ago — with healthy debate in a process of good and honest government, the kind of government that the people of Alberta can be proud of.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Jabbour: I just want to make a general comment that in the many years I worked for Hansard, I always said that I had the dubious privilege of being able to listen to every word spoken in this House. It wasn't always enjoyable, but my absolute favourite part was always the maiden speeches, and this afternoon my colleagues have not disappointed. It's been an absolute joy. Thank you for the wonderful stories.

To the Member for Little Bow: this summer I had the privilege of travelling in southern Alberta and visiting areas in your constituency. Of course, as a Trekkie I had to go to Vulcan. I wonder if you could just share with the House a little bit more about Vulcan and the Star Trek connection and what that's all about.

Mr. Schneider: Well, thank you for the question. Yes. I remember – dear, I would have to say 30 years ago – when the discussion to relate Vulcan to the member of the Star Trek Enterprise that came from – his hometown was Vulcan. I remember the discussions and people saying to those that thought it was a great idea: “What are you talking about? This can't work.” People persevered, and the county and the town became involved and thought: you know, this is a great idea; this will put Vulcan on the map. It really did. Whether you like Star Trek or not, when you say Vulcan, you understand what's going on there.

They've gone a long ways. They've built a centre. It looks like a church, kind of a synagogue looking thing, but it serves a purpose. It has lots of memorabilia for sale inside, has lots of unique little things with every portion of Star Trek. If you happen to get inside there, it starts with Star Trek, like Captain Kirk and Spock himself, and moves on through every series of Star Trek that was on television. They're all represented within there.

It has certainly put Vulcan on the map, and it is a phenomenon that every town kind of looks for to make itself known across at least Alberta. I think that Vulcan has made it further than that.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I absolutely cannot help myself. I have to ask the question. Being a Star Trek fan here as well, I have to ask the member: which captain is it?

Mr. Schneider: Well, it was Captain Kirk, of course. Mr. Speaker, my hair is getting grey too, but I remember watching Captain Kirk and Spock and all of it for three years in the '60s, so of course I'm a fan.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we know that we have at least two Trekkies in the Assembly.

The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I think that on that note I will move to adjourn until tomorrow morning at 9 a.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:59 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

9 a.m.

Wednesday, March 16, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning.

Please bow your heads. Let us reflect, each in our own way. Let us be thankful for the privilege we have to hear each other's stories, stories from our rural communities, stories from our urban cities. These stories are the threads that tie us together. When we stop listening to stories, we weaken those threads.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mrs. Littlewood moved, seconded by Mr. Westhead, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Debate adjourned March 15]

The Speaker: The Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great humility and integrity that I respond to the well-intentioned words of the Lieutenant Governor in her Speech from the Throne. I wish to acknowledge appreciation for the mandate that is ours as a new government.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to express to my friends present today that we are on the cusp of change. The words of task that our Honourable Lieutenant Governor expressed represent our great opportunity for change, for it is change that allows us to bridge the gaps in perception and representation of the true essence of democracy. It is with personal pride and humility that I wish to thank today the trustful Albertans who elected me as their representative within their House. Their voices echo in my words as I stand here as their vehicle to change. Friends, we represent the community-mindedness that is our Alberta. In these current difficult times we are presented the opportunity to place emphasis on the family values that are the cornerstone of our great province.

Mr. Speaker, we come together in this House to represent the collective thoughts and needs of those who make Alberta the province of opportunity. Our collective communities may vary in political representation, but together we sit in their House, seeking resolution and stability for our constituents, their families' futures, and the future of our Alberta.

From our diversity within the House of Alberta stems my personal conviction that together we will champion this economic challenge. To echo our Honourable Lieutenant Governor's inspiring words: "Albertans are community minded, caring, and neighbourly. Ours is a society of friends. In tough times we always pull together." And as a government we must "have each other's backs."

I have called the community of Red Deer-North home for over 30 years. I have chosen this wonderful community as the home for my family. I have participated in and belonged to this community, which has allowed me to care for its Albertans, a responsibility never taken lightly. I engage the health care vocation with the heart and dedication that my fellow Red Deerians deserve. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that I have been fortunate to listen to my constituents for over 30 years now, and I am proud to belong to a government that finally listens to them as well.

Our decisions to invest in our infrastructure respond to the common desire for Albertans to have full access to the resources they need, their aspirations to maintain their pride and fervent belief that ours is a great province. We can be their bridge builders.

I am an elected representative within the third-largest city in Alberta. The growth has put us over 100,000 strong, and I value their needs. Friends, I also value that the resources within this great city respond to the community needs of many surrounding municipalities. Red Deer is an important part of central Alberta as a community. Our government has responded to our growth and invested in aspects that reinforce our core values. The Red Deer Airport expansion is an example of bridge building. We are fostering the support for infrastructure that engages economic development, recognizes potential, and builds economic stability and job growth. Mr. Speaker, we are building our bridges with fundamental components: sustainability, fiscal responsibility, opportunity, and community-mindedness.

In appreciation of our 2019 Canada Winter Games this expansion proactively meets the needs to inspire success within Red Deer and central Alberta. We recognize that rural Alberta borders every city regardless of population. Our rural partners are very much our enterprising partners. Our rural communities support the agriculture, forestry, energy, and wildlife aspects, and I am proud to hear that our government is committed to building on these strengths in our economy. These are the great resources that underpin our Alberta.

Farmers provide our sustenance, and I wish to thank them for their hard work and dedication. I happily stood in support of the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act last fall and support the fundamental rights that are inherent in our occupational health and safety diligence. They are now part of the inclusion that echoes the importance of everyone's safety.

Thirty-one years ago I began my investment in Red Deer-North. As a constituent I exhibited the community-mindedness that is ingrained and engaged. I was submersed in the health care field by occupation, but I embraced the educational aspects from the lens of a mother. I participated to encourage the equity and opportunities that our children, our future, deserve. Lunch programs that satisfy the essentials of our being: our children need to eat, to grow, to learn, and to lead.

In these tough economic times we need to be supporting one another instead of making things worse. As Her Honour noted in the throne speech last week, "We don't need to put our short-term bottom line over the interests of long-term recovery." Cuts in education are a detriment to our future, and true democracy does not cap potential. It enhances the belief that education is a resource that is available and merited.

Mr. Speaker, as the member representing Red Deer-North, I am constantly presented with bridge-building opportunities that represent our inherited challenges, infrastructure needs that echo our responsibility for stronger foundations as well as foresight, our shared vision of Albertans having sustainable services that are prepared for growth and its required resilience. With our inherited responsibility is the opportunity, I believe, we can evolve from. Resilience is truly the belief that momentum is the most difficult to initiate but the easiest to sustain. It is easy to impart mandate during the feast cycle, but how we execute sustainable measures during the famine cycle is our opportunity for momentum.

Mr. Speaker, May 5, 2015, was a benchmark. It was the day Alberta voted for change. A great testament to integrity is what vehicle we choose for change. We choose to deep-dive into our inherited responsibilities in an attempt to leverage the impact of less than sound policies and practices. We choose to invest in our province so that Albertans and their legacies benefit. We choose to impart accountability and gain efficiencies as well as value-added. We choose to be respectful and aware of our surroundings as well as those who are impacted. Collectively we choose the vehicles that we will drive over our bridges.

I am a strong supporter of our government's plans to diversify our economy. I believe that Albertans deserve options for opportunities. I believe that our economic development ministry is a bridge that fosters opportunities for our constituents. I believe that strong relationships between government and industry can be a catalyst to the changes that are sustainable for generations to come.

I am proud that our government recognizes that the Status of Women is an integral part of growth and equity. This ministry represents the importance of our entrepreneurial potential and how our contributions further our economic climate and expansion.

I believe that our Indigenous Relations minister will provide a bridge to rekindle the relationships between our First People and our government. I am proud to say that in Red Deer-North the groundbreaking of our Assoahum Crossing is the building block of engaging our First People locally. I want to thank you for recognizing the unforeseen challenges and circumstances that stalled this project and initiated the momentum to its realization. It is a great ministry and government that reunites people and their ways.

I am proud to belong to a family-friendly subcommittee that encompasses all political representation in order to ensure family-friendly policies and practices are recognized. These strides represent momentum. As we look around, we represent a government that is indicative of our Alberta demography. The diversity provides for more inclusionary measures and empowers a stronger recognition of the countless needs of our constituents.

It is great to be part of a government that recognizes that our current economic model has increased the vulnerabilities of the vulnerable. I applaud recognition that predatory lending as a business has a negative impact and that we cannot effect responsibility without building a bridge. Vulnerability requires backbone, and we are in a position to better support the structure so that we impart resilience to the cycle of poverty that is a result of current antiquated policies.

Mr. Speaker, I wish now to speak to our most vulnerable, the homeless. This is not their choice but the response to policies that are not cognizant of how many circumstances can impact an individual's well-being, how mental illness and addictions severely impede someone's ability to make sense of the systems, how decentralizing resources makes systems difficult to navigate through successfully. I have visited Medicine Hat in an effort to gain understanding of how they ended homelessness. Friends, I am happy to say that it is a result of strong relationships, which, in turn, are bridges on their own. Results are achieved when goals are common and relationships are transparent. We need to meet the vulnerable where they are at and listen actively to help them help themselves.

I am proud to say that our government responds financially to these needs and recognizes that strong investment in our programs for the vulnerable is essential and value-added. Decreasing the incidents of our emergency services, law enforcers, and judicial systems flourishes into a stronger Alberta for everyone. It is a solution that represents social and financial responsibility as well as standardizes the fundamental rights to shelter, food, and comfort.

Mr. Speaker, it is with pride that I respond to the Speech from the Throne with actions that support the necessary steps to implement our current mandate. I am proud to stand here as a Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta with these members, my friends, and the conviction that our most resilient commonality is the best interests of our collective constituents, our Albertans. We are their collective shield and, as we brave a future of sustainability, economic change, and unification, share the confidence and restoration of a stronger, more resilient province. Let us realize that challenges are the backbone of growth and strength. Our economic tests have opened our eyes to what stark reality results when we continue to execute the same standards without contingency. We have chosen to diversify in order to mitigate impact.

Mr. Speaker, may I reiterate that we are on the cusp of change. We have all found ourselves in situations that test our boundaries, and I applaud and commend that through our individual adaptability we are still standing here together today, cumulatively effecting change. Our challenges are our opportunities, and I am proud that we did not shy from our calling because of the difficulty our province is under.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I would remind all the members on both sides of the House that there have been extended conversations going on, and I would appreciate and remind you that – hon. members, I was reminding the House that I would ask each of you to contain long discussions with each other inside the Chamber. If you need longer conversations – I've noticed it on both sides of the House, so please be conscious of that.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East under 29(2)(a).

Ms Fitzpatrick: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the member for a really well-thought-out maiden speech. I'd like to just go into a little bit about Red Deer. I lived in Red Deer myself for about eight years in the late '80s and early '90s. Last night we were at a presentation by the resources diversification council, and I happened to be there when you had a conversation with somebody. When they talked about Red Deer, they talked about Gasoline Alley, and I know that that's not all of Red Deer. Would you expound a little on that, please?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Before I do that, I would just like to finish off. I have a couple sentences I didn't say. Our challenges are our opportunities, and I am proud that we did not shy from our calling because of the difficulty our province is under. We chose to become instruments of change.

To answer that question, yes, I hear that from time to time. I hear Red Deer being referred to as Gasoline Alley. Red Deer is so much more than that. Once upon a time, when people were travelling from Edmonton to Calgary or Calgary to Edmonton, they would stop by Gasoline Alley, looking for the big teapot to go and have a cup of coffee, maybe stop off at Glenn's Family Restaurant for a bite to eat and to fill their gas tanks, but there is so much more to Red Deer.

Red Deer has 100,000 in population. It encompasses 320,000 in population. Red Deer has a regional hospital, and it is the fourth-largest hospital in Alberta. It's the fourth-busiest hospital in Alberta. An interesting fact is that the STARS ambulance touches down at Red Deer hospital more than any other hospital in Alberta. I'm very proud of our hospital. I know that right now they're looking to expand two operating theatres, and they're looking to expand with a cath lab to service central Albertans. Red Deerians are known for their volunteerism and their giving nature. Jack and Joan Donald of Red Deer have committed to donating $10 million towards the cath lab at the Red Deer regional hospital.

Red Deer was very, very proud to win the bid for the 2019 Canada Winter Games. I am so excited for this, and I would like to invite everyone here today to please come to the 2019 Winter Games. It's going to be an awesome time. I can't wait to show you around my city.

With that, there is a health and wellness centre that we are going to be having the groundbreaking for right away. This health and wellness centre: Gary W. Harris and family have donated $5 million towards the health and wellness centre, and I wish to thank Gary Harris and family for that contribution. As well, I'd like to thank Mr. and Mrs. Donald and family for their contribution to the cath lab when that happens.

Red Deer has a college, Red Deer College, and it services Red Deer and surrounding area. It has trades, and Red Deerians are looking for a polytechnic university so that we can keep Albertans in their communities so that they are able to go to college.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, again I remind you that conversations are continuing. If you want to have extended conversations, please leave the House.

The Member for Lethbridge-East. Hon. member, is this with respect to 29(2)(a)?

Ms Fitzpatrick: No. This is . . .

The Speaker: No, it's done. My apologies, hon. member.

I think it's time for me to go to Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It appears your hearing is very good this morning.

Mr. Speaker, in response to the throne speech I would like to present my maiden speech. I have many concerns with the approach this government is taking to the latest energy price shock and its consequences. This government is proposing that Albertans should try and spend their way to prosperity with deficit and debt, keep spending beyond our means, all while they experiment with an economic development strategy of a greener, more sustainable economy. This greener, more sustainable economy has proven to fail in many other jurisdictions of the world. A move to a greener energy economy, while laudable, is not going to fill the revenue shortfall that we are currently experiencing. We must begin to address the large gap in our current cash flows. We currently spend far beyond our means.

Mr. Speaker, I am fortunate to have lived my entire life in and to now represent what I consider to be the best constituency, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, in the best province, Alberta, which is in the best country in the world, Canada. May we always be thankful for this wonderful place that we have the privilege to call our home.

My constituency covers a very large geographical area. There are over 200 kilometres from one end of my riding to the other. I am very thankful for the highway system we are able to enjoy. These highways allow me to travel with relative ease to all areas of my riding.

The town of Morinville is one of the oldest communities in my constituency and is found in the southeast end of my riding. It was founded in the late 1800s, when Father Morin brought many French settlers to the area. They were followed by several German pioneers, who together helped establish the agricultural industry in those early years. Today Morinville also serves as home for many commuters working in Edmonton and also home for many members serving with our Canadian armed forces at CFB Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, travel 200 kilometres to the northwest and you will find one of the youngest communities of my constituency, Swan Hills. Although considered to be in northern Alberta, it is the nearest settlement to the geographical centre of Alberta. Following the discovery of oil in September 1956, Swan Hills became the first township incorporated in Canada's centennial year, 1967.

There are many other towns, villages, and hamlets that I represent, some of them being Cardiff, Legal, Rivière Qui Barre, Alcomdale, Busby, Pickardville, Dunstable, Vimy, Clyde, Tawatinaw, Westlock, Manola, Barrhead, Neerlandia, Vega, Pibroch, Dapp, Jarvie, Fawcett, Flatbush, Meadowview, Thunder Lake, Tiger Lily, Fort Assiniboine, Goose Lake, and more, Mr. Speaker. All of these communities have a unique story of their own. All of them were established through the hard work and vision of individuals that came to this country in search of opportunity and the freedom to pursue their dreams.

Most of my riding was established thanks to the renewable industries of agriculture and forestry. During the early years many families worked their small farms through the summer, and the father would spend the winter months in the bush harvesting logs for sawmills located throughout the area while mothers and children stayed at home tending to the livestock.

Today we have modern large-, medium-, and small-scale farms growing diverse crops and livestock. Large farm equipment is common on many farms, but we also have smaller operations with the equipment to match. For anyone with a dream to farm, it is still possible with a little ingenuity and a good business plan.

The forestry industry, Mr. Speaker, has also evolved into a very well-organized operation, with large equipment doing most of the work. I went out to witness an operation harvesting logs north of Fort Assiniboine last winter. Seldom is there a need for a chainsaw anymore as the large machines fall, skid, trim, pile, and load the logs. A very impressive operation.

Like so many constituencies in Alberta, the energy industry has played a significant role in helping to advance the well-being of our communities over the last 60 years. The high standard of living that we enjoy today in this province and, indeed, in this country can largely be attributed to the discovery and sale of our natural resources. I believe that we have been very fortunate in this province to have been blessed with this nonrenewable resource.

Mr. Speaker, the people that settled in my constituency did not have an easy time. In fact, many joked that the government bet the $10 filing fee that you would not last the three-times-six months required to get the title of your homestead. Times were very difficult, but many people did survive through tough winters and hard slogging.

The area of Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock as we know it today has seen many changes over the last century, a relatively short time frame. Much of what was once undifferentiated forest is now farmland criss-crossed with many roads. We have highways that have been built, giving us the ability to safely move products and people throughout my riding.

I'll take you on a little drive through the riding. I'll start in the town of Swan Hills, in the northwest corner of my riding. The Swan Hills town: the province decided in the early '50s that it was prudent to build a highway into the Swan Hills. The discovery of oil happened shortly after that. It was not necessarily much of a highway. It was more like a mud road. I have an uncle that delivered a lot of the supplies up into the Swan Hills work camps in the '60s and tells many stories of being towed through the Swan Hills gumbo by Cat at that time. It currently enjoys a highway, and the foresight of the leaders at that time gave the possibility for Swan Hills to be developed as a very strong economy.

If you travel southeast to Fort Assiniboine, you'll find a small town that was developed through the fur trade along the Athabasca River. The Hudson's Bay Company established it as a post, and to this day there are many traplines to the north of Fort Assiniboine.

Travelling west and a little bit north, you get to enjoy going on the Klondyke ferry. The Klondyke ferry is one of the few ferries left in Alberta currently operating. It goes across the Athabasca River into the Vega-Neerlandia area, which has some of the best farmland in my constituency. Neerlandia was settled as a Dutch farming community. That's the area in the province where I was born and raised. I'll get the pleasure of opening a new grocery store in a community that has less than a hundred residents. They have a grocery store, a co-operative, that will probably be one of the largest grocery stores in my riding.

Travelling south to the town of Barrhead, Barrhead is well known for its golf course, and people travel from all across the province to play the golf course in Barrhead. They also have a large business there, Northplex modular homes, developing and building modular homes to deliver throughout much of the northern part of the province.

To the east we come to the town of Westlock. Westlock this current year is celebrating their 100th anniversary. They have many events planned for this year. This weekend I get to enjoy one of the events by a charitable organization there, Rainbow for the Future, that is raising funds to build schools and help with literacy in Ethiopia. They have done this over many years and have several volunteers that continue to go to Ethiopia and help establish the economy there and help to bring education to the people of Ethiopia. Westlock is home to the Canadian Tractor Museum, a museum with well over 100 tractors, some dating over a hundred years old, and is well worth the visit for anyone interested in taking a look at some of the history of the farming in that area. Westlock also is home to a new generation co-op that exports grain all around the world. Westlock Terminals, I believe, is the largest new generation co-operative in Alberta at this time and is proudly owned by many residents in both the town of Westlock and the counties of Westlock, Barrhead, and Athabasca.

If we go a little farther east, we come to Clyde, a small village where we have the large North Central Livestock Exchange, that handles many of the cattle from the northern area of the province and sends cattle all over the province for finishing and trade.

When we head south from Clyde, we come to Legal and the start of a very francophone part of my riding. Legal is a small town. If you go to the café there, you can be pleasantly greeted in the French language or the English language. They're very proudly a francophone community, as is the town of Morinville.

Morinville, like I said earlier, in the very southern part of my riding, is home to close to 10,000 people. I was pleased to participate in the grand opening of one business's new lab and kitchen for their pet foods, Champion Petfoods. They are a company that develops pet food in their kitchen and delivers it to over 40 countries in the world. They're very proud to be exporting all over the world.

Mr. Speaker, the constituents of Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock are very resourceful people. The people of Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock know what it takes to get through hard times. These people realize that sometimes hard decisions are necessary to get through difficult times. The renewable and nonrenewable commodities we harvest, add value to, and sell around the world will create the wealth necessary to provide jobs and to provide the services all Albertans need. If we manage our resources well, we will be able to supply the services Albertans need as well as set a solid foundation for the generations that follow us. We can set the stage for our children and grandchildren to be able to thrive with as much opportunity and vision as our forefathers came to this country with. If we fail to manage those resources well and continue to spend beyond our means, we will saddle the generations to come with a lifetime of debt and lost opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, commodity cycles will always be with us. We are currently experiencing a low point in the price of our number one commodity, oil. What the previous government failed to recognize and what this government needs to recognize is that we must manage our spending based on the bottom of cycles. We can no longer spend as if oil is at the top of the roller coaster. It is a recipe for disaster. If this government truly wants to get off the roller coaster of oil, they would begin to manage their spending accordingly. It will take this government many years to develop their dreams of diversifying our economy. By the time we see any significant payback from those dreams, we may well be broke if we do not get our spending in line with our revenues. This is not rocket science. We need action now.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne seems to promise that we will spend our way to prosperity. This is not a plan. This is an experiment, a gamble on the backs of hard-working Albertans. This government needs to get serious, get their fiscal house in order, present the road map for success, and get us off the road to just more deficit and debt.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a). The Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you very much. Thank you very much for that speech, colleague from Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. You mentioned a project that your community is supporting in Ethiopia. I was wondering if you could tell us a little bit more about that project and what specifically you're doing to help this organization in your community.

Mr. van Dijken: Certainly. I'd be pleased to. Rainbow for the Future was started by a few individuals within our community that recognized the need to help beyond the boundaries of our local economy and recognized the need in the African area of Ethiopia. They focused on three main things: bringing literacy, education for the children there, so they built schools; bringing water to help with the sustainability of these communities so that they can have clean, fresh drinking water to help with their health; also, helping with some of the challenges with the AIDS epidemic, the single-mother families and the orphan children.

This weekend they're having a sports weekend where participants will participate in curling, hockey, or a walkathon, and I'm being challenged to participate in the hockey tournament. It's a tournament with hockey games going 24 hours a day. So I will be participating in that and raising funds to send to Ethiopia. Ethiopia is currently experiencing a drought. Not many in the mainstream media have been carrying the story of Ethiopia. They are in a serious time of starvation, so a lot of this money will be going towards the care of orphans in that country.

Thank you for the question.

The Speaker: Any other questions under 29(2)(a)?

Loyola: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock for his maiden speech. I really enjoyed it. I enjoyed the tour through your constituency. You talked a lot about, you know, the settler communities that were established, but I wanted to know a little bit about any experiences you may have had in reaching out to indigenous communities and what you believe as a member are your treaty obligations.

Thank you.

9:40

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you for the question. I tried to figure out a way to include the whole discussion with the indigenous people that lived in my area, largely Cree, and some of the negotiations that happened on the sale of the lands and that type of thing. One of the stories I will relate is that as a young man growing up in the Neerlandia area, we had farmland around Shoal Lake, and I got an early education on how the indigenous people were established in our area. During the time of clearing land, picking a lot of roots and picking a lot of stones, we would quite often stumble upon the odd arrowhead, the odd spearhead, and some stones that were used for peeling hides. So I recognized that the indigenous people came and were established here before the rest of us also arrived. How that's evolved over time is that we continue to work with indigenous affairs to recognize the obligations that we have to those communities and to those people and try to work together in a way that can move our province forward in a co-operative manner.

The Speaker: The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for an excellent maiden speech. Your predecessor in your constituency was one of the key Wildrose organizers on the idea of strengthening property rights against what the earlier government had put in for, you know, taking away some of our property rights and the covenants that are attached to property. I'm wondering how important it is to your constituents that property rights are key, that property rights are better protected, and I'm wondering if they're surprised at the inaction of this current government. [A timer sounded]

The Speaker: The Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today to deliver my maiden speech and respond to the Speech from the Throne. Thank you to the Lieutenant Governor for delivering such a forward-thinking speech, looking to the future of Alberta. Now, even though this is my maiden speech, I've actually spoken many times in this Legislature about my community, and yesterday the MLA for Lethbridge-West expounded on more of the reasons we feel the way we do about our home. I love Lethbridge. Words can't accurately express the depth and breadth of the diversity of my community. To help you understand why I feel this way, I will give you just a few details about my constituency, which may give you a glimpse of the diversity in the place I call home.

My riding is home to 25 schools; 26 church organizations; 15 senior and care facilities; the Nord-Brige Senior Citizens Association, of which I am a member; the exhibition grounds, where, among many other things, Family Fest is celebrated on New Year's Eve; Spitz Stadium, home of the Lethbridge Bulls; Henderson Lake, probably one of the most walked pathways in all of southern Alberta, lays alongside Henderson golf course; Chinook regional hospital; and Lethbridge College.

There's a variety of businesses, large and small. They are evidence of the entrepreneurial spirit within my community. There are parks and community associations, the Sik-Ooh-Kotoki friendship centre. There is the Polish-Canadian club, the German-Canadian club, the Italian-Canadian club, the Nikka Yuko gardens, the Southern Alberta Ethnic Association, Outreach, the Bhutanese community, and now the Syrian refugee community.

My constituents are my neighbours. They sing with me in the church choir at McKillop. They volunteer with me at the Labour Day barbecue or weed the vegetables for the food bank with me in the community garden or be part of the team for the dragon boat festival or attend SACPA to keep abreast on what is happening in public affairs. We are a diverse group of people who work together to make our community better. This, my dream job, is to do the best I can to represent all of my constituents.

I spent some time thinking about how to incorporate what I want to share with you and how to do that while providing a reasoned response to the throne speech, so here goes. I will begin my story by telling you how I came to be here today. I grew up in a home in St. John's, Newfoundland, where political discussion occurred on a pretty regular basis at the kitchen table. It was there where I learned about the purpose of a government and a little about debate. There were six of us. I learned that the world of politics did not appear to be open to women and that in Newfoundland the church exerted considerable influence. This left me quite ill at ease.

I attended Memorial University in the late '60s and early '70s in the faculty of education and physical education. I played on the junior and then senior varsity basketball teams and was the only member of the university's women's track team. I saw the lack of funding for women's teams. In fact, for me to attend the university track and field championships in Winnipeg, my track club paid for my student flight pass because the university did not have money assigned in their budget for me to participate. I was a nationally ranked sprinter, so some pressure was raised, but money was not. Eventually, I believe, things changed, but not necessarily equal funding for male and female teams. The lesson I kept seeing over and over again was that things were not always equal for men and women, and that just seemed to be a matter of course. I believed and still believe this is wrong.

Throughout my life I have seen this inequality raise its ugly head over and over again. I have shared my story about my violent marriage and how inequality played a role in that situation, so now I will move forward to my career in the public service. Almost immediately after being hired within the federal public service in 1982 I became part of the fight for pay equity, which for the women of the public service lasted for 15 years. For the women working at the post office it was a 30-year battle.

During my time in the federal public service I was elected as local president for two different locals in which I was a member. I chaired three different regional women's committees and was elected to the senior executive of my national union, representing 60,000 members in the NCR. These experiences honed my skills to recognize what little changes can actually mean in the broader picture for good or bad, and that was certainly noted once the federal government settled its pay equity complaint. Changes began to happen within classification, and I would say that they were not positive changes but rather supported the status quo. Most of the clerical regulatory classifications became administrative services classifications, and those were top-loaded in the hierarchal classifications with males and the lower with women but now more difficult to prove disparity. Needless to say, I began searching for ways to stop this gender disparity. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the tone of my presentation so far is about inequity and the ongoing struggle for gender parity.

The Lieutenant Governor's speech was given on International Women's Day, and as she said, we reflect on past accomplishments and renew our call for change. I have identified many areas where societal acceptance of gender disparity perpetuates this situation. I have committed myself to changing this behaviour by changing societal acceptance of the status quo. I challenge women to accept nothing less than being fully respected and to be fully valued for all of their skills and abilities. Their worth is no less or no more than a male counterpart. Equality lies in mutual respect and acceptance.

I challenge the men of Alberta to do a little self-reflection and decide what they can do to be part of that mutual respect and learn what it is to truly value the women in their lives. I hope that during my tenure as MLA for Lethbridge-East this change will be forthcoming for the betterment of all Albertans. I believe this was the first reason why I came to be here today.

Now, Mr. Speaker, for the second reason why I'm here. During the 32 and a half years that I worked for the federal government I saw first-hand the steps that were being taken which began to erode services for the public, where the bottom line became more important than the required services to be provided. I saw the federal government change hands several times and the erosion grow. In the last 10 years I watched the destruction of so much of the incredible progress my own department had made towards protection of the public, reduction of the crime rate, and reduction of the cost to the public coffers, all of which was done by front-line staff, working with offenders, assessing their issues, identifying their needs to address those issues, and finally assisting them in changing their behaviour to become pro-social, law-abiding citizens.

I saw, Mr. Speaker, an incredible addictions research centre shut down, 30 years of research on addictions, much-needed research, when working with a population struggling with all kinds of addictions. I saw farming projects shut down, projects that not only provided much-needed job skills, pro-social activities but also which provided food for institutions. I saw similar cuts happening in almost every other department of the federal government. Service counters in CRA closed. I saw Canadians' individual income tax records being archived outside of our country with no way to protect the data included in those records, your personal records.

Mr. Speaker, I returned to Alberta for the last three years of my career in corrections and realized very quickly that things had not gotten any better since I left Alberta nine years earlier. The same kind of damage was happening here in Alberta with provincial departments under a previous government, with cuts to front-line staff and programs. For example, you no longer see work crews from the jails doing cleanup on the highways and secondary roads as you did in the past. There is no longer a work crew program, where inmates were hired as a crew to work on local farms. As time moved forward, things continued to get worse: cuts to front-line staff in hospitals and schools.

Despite the drastic cuts that were made, it was actually costing more. Nurses were being forced to work overtime on a regular basis to cover shifts despite not having sufficient rest between shifts. No time for oneself or family. Had these positions not been cut, the stress of working constant overtime, the possibility of mistakes because staff were exhausted would not have occurred. Patients would not be at risk because of the exhaustion that was created by being forced to work so much overtime.

Mr. Speaker, whether I was in the supermarket, walking in my neighbourhood, at the doctor's office, or even on the golf course, conversations all around me were about how bad things were with the ongoing cuts to services and how the government must change.

A number of people asked me if I would consider running as I had a good understanding of the issues and could certainly represent their concerns and perhaps make change happen. I made the decision that I would run, and I retired from my position with the Correctional Service of Canada so that I could work full-time on a campaign. For 14 weeks prior to the May 5th election I went door to door, attended many events, and listened to Albertans. I continue to listen to Albertans and share their concerns with my colleagues in caucus and the ministries related to their issues.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to the specifics of the throne speech. With the current status of the economy being drastically affected by the price of oil, this throne speech lays out a plan for not just surviving the downturn in oil prices but thriving. It is a time to be encouraging businesses to grow. Not only is this a role that our government will be promoting, but this is a role that could easily be taken on by chambers of commerce in every single community. They could be encouraging local businesses to utilize the job incentive monies, to take advantage of the expanded access to workforce and skills training and retraining people facing unemployment so that they can upgrade their skills. We are all in this together, and we all need to be promoting job creation and economic diversification if we are to take advantage of this opportunity in our province.

In my community, as in every other community in Alberta, there is potential for growth. Growth does not happen unless we move on that potential. For example, in Lethbridge the thebaine poppy seed project has the potential of a $5 billion industry. Our mayor has sought support from both provincial and federal governments. Our provincial government continues to liaise with the federal government for the required federal approval of the project before April 1 so that the project will be ready to go in time for this year's growing season.

There are projects at both university and college to provide more diverse opportunities, including a joint project in agriculture and growth in science programs, an example of which is the work done by Dr. David Naylor and his team on the Herschel SPIRE space program.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park; 29(2)(a)?

Ms McKittrick: Yes, please. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the MLA for Lethbridge-East about more of how the throne speech is helping her community of Lethbridge.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you to the member for the question. Mr. Speaker, since I didn't actually finish, I'm going to finish, and then I'll get to your question.

Dr. Naylor was the Canadian lead through the Canadian Space Agency on this world project. This kind of exposure to the world stage brings the university's programs and attracts incredible minds into these programs. This also helps to grow our local and provincial economy.

Mr. Speaker, there are groups in my constituency like Farming Smarter, the agricultural research centre who does the on-the-ground research to make the way we farm and our crops better. There are entrepreneurs in the city pursuing alternate energy: the biogas plant on the east side of Lethbridge. Wind, solar, thermal are being pursued by individuals and at the university. And, of course, there is the destination project at the university. All of these projects and forward-thinking people recognize that we need to invest in a greener, more sustainable economy. We recognize the need to diversify our energy markets. We need to supply the green energy for our own use as well as expanding market access. In Lethbridge we know that, living in the Palliser Triangle, water is a precious commodity.

10:00

We know we have been successful in the agricultural industry because of the utilization of irrigation and protection of our water supply. We also know that this is the second year of very little moisture, either on the ground or in the mountains, which feeds our reservoirs. We know the importance of protecting this resource. This is why a group called No Drilling Lethbridge grew very quickly to stop a proposed project which had planned to frac within our city limits and under the Oldman River. The company pulled out because of the outcry of over 75 per cent of the population. My government understands the need for protection of our climate; hence, this is why our government introduced the climate leadership plan.

Mr. Speaker, there are vulnerable populations in my community as well: seniors, children, the homeless. This speech outlines that our government will not make things worse. We recognize that trying to survive on a single commodity whose price is controlled outside our borders is not a wise course of action. We will maintain excellent services for Albertans to protect our most vulnerable. Now is not the time to make things worse by cutting essential front-line services and staff.

Lethbridge sits on Treaty 7, Blackfoot territory, the edge of the largest reserve in Canada. Many of our indigenous brothers and sisters live in our community and deserve equal support. The vulnerabilities in our community are also their vulnerabilities; hence, the same supports are needed. Albertans are community minded, caring, and neighbourly. In tough times we always pull together. I can go on to each point, but I know I'll run out of time.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I was elected to represent my constituents and to make the best decisions I can given the circumstances which we are facing. I believe we can make the most of this situation by working together. We have an unlimited resource, and that is the people of this province. We can work through these tough times and thrive, and we will.

Now, I must acknowledge the support I have always received from my kids and grandkids, without which I could not go forward every day. It is also because of each of them and every constituent that I continue to fight for a better Alberta. I have also received and continue to receive support from my incredible staff and EDA. Sherry, Arie, Esther, Mary, Terry, Judy, Bob, Patti, Doreen, Johanna, Nick, Bev, Henning, Mark, Leona, Tom, and Anna: thank you from the bottom of my heart for helping me to be the best MLA I could possibly be.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Let me just draw to all members' attention that 29(2)(a) is really intended to be used as a response to specific questions from another member or additional information, so I want to remind everyone, when we're addressing that issue, to respond accordingly. Thank you very much.

The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to respond to Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech from the Throne. While this is the second throne speech delivered under this government, it is the first time that I've had the opportunity to respond since May of last year.

In the last 10 months we've started to see how this government intends to operate and the direction they would like to take us. Since last May I've spoken to thousands of Albertans both in my riding and the province at large. I've used these conversations to get a sense of what Albertans feel about where we're headed under this government, as I hope my colleagues across the floor have as well.

With a year of trial and error under this government's belt the reviews are not good. The only guiding philosophy the NDP has seemed to display so far has been relentlessly extracting more money from the productive sector and Alberta's households. There has been an unrelenting focus on revenue, but on spending and the value all Albertans receive from spending we haven't seen any commitment to improvement. There's plenty to say about Alberta's spending problem, that has been created over several years of unrestrained, runaway budgets, but I'd like to touch on something that has been quite distressing to me about this government's attitude on the revenue side. There seems to be a pervasive view of the economy as nothing but a source for the government to tap. Through the raising of taxes on income, to taxes on consumption and the inputs of consumer goods, to increased fees on certain services and transactions, we've been told that Albertans are not doing enough for their government.

Albertans are having more of the burden of inefficiency and government bloat shifted onto their backs, and all the while the government has expressed an attitude that almost borders on entitlement when it comes to our hard-earned contributions. If they need more, they simply demand it from the people. The economy cannot bear these constant money grabs. The people of this province cannot be leaned on ever more heavily as they face the challenges within their own businesses, their own communities, and their own households.

The citizen of Alberta has a personal obligation to manage his or her finances prudently, cautiously, and carefully. The money left in Alberta households and businesses must be well spent because, frankly, there is no other alternative. There is no option but for families in this province to use what they have earned wisely, to scrutinize, to assess value returned on their own expenditures.

So I ask the NDP: why the lack of trust in the people of this province? Why the reluctance to unleash the human potential of Alberta? Why does this government feel that it knows better than the earners, job creators, and taxpayers that it is supposed to serve? We've seen the NDP government engage in a number of tactics and practices that it once spoke out loudly against. We've seen a further erosion of trustworthiness. Perhaps even more troubling than the loss of trust Albertans have in the government these days is the loss of trust the government has in Albertans.

As a province we find ourselves facing great hurdles in bureaucracy and taxation. We find it harder to thrive and grow at precisely the time when things need to be made simpler. The price of oil poses a challenge, yes. But these hurdles were not put up by the price of oil; they were put up by deliberate government actions. In all corners of this province I found one thing to be universally true: the people of Alberta are humble and determined. Albertans do not ask for more than a fair shake and equal chance. We've never shied away from hard work or a challenge.

We need a government that shows us the fundamental respect that leads to restraint. A government that respects its people is a government that knows its limits and stays within them. In my wide experience discussing these things with Albertans, it's clear that they are not asking for more than just an opportunity to show this famous resiliency. They want a government that acknowledges that they are and always have been the true drivers of the economy. The economic engine of this province is, thankfully, not determined by the government's coffers, which have been in a state of disarray for some time now. Albertan industry and commerce has managed to thrive in spite of flawed government fiscal management.

The throne speech promises more of the same erroneous thinking, that we can tax and spend our way to prosperity. Despite some misguided and failed experiments already, they seem undeterred in their quest to throw money around at risky and unfounded projects and programs. Mr. Speaker, this government has doubled down on its hubris, thinking itself far more wise and efficient than the people who make up this province. The NDP government has committed to picking winners and losers. They trumpet their ability to diversify the economy while displaying no particular joy or pride for what already exists. In fact, recent economic policy has done nothing but put the squeeze on productive, competitive, innovative enterprise. To borrow a famous line, the government's view of the economy could be summed up by three short phrases: if it moves, tax it; if it keeps moving, regulate it; and if it stops moving, subsidize it.

After creating barrier after barrier to economic growth in this province, methodically stripping away our competitive advantage, the NDP now sees fit to try to kick-start things the only way they know how: more intrusion, more spending. Having no sense of restraint themselves, they instead restrain the economic potential of Alberta. But, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that I know this province well, and I know that there are no people more capable of building a strong, resilient economy than Albertans. I implore this government to turn away from the temptation to intrude more and, instead, to give the people of the province the economic freedom to get to work, to build, to grow, and to prosper as Albertans always have.

Perhaps it's tempting when getting into this building to think that we have total power to solve every problem that arises. As nicely as the word "diversification" might tickle your ears, when governments dabble in the world of diversification by subsidy, they tend to create bad investment, skewed market incentives, and rent sinking. I have heard big dreams, but these are hardly backed up by any serious economic rationale. Precious little consideration has been given to value. When the NDP spends our money and that of future generations, are they doing it for just the sake of spending? Have they considered fiscal multipliers and whether they justify any public investment in their pet projects? Have they considered what measurable performance targets will be? In short, are they looking at this from the perspective of real, firm deliverables and value or just throwing around flashy numbers and unfounded hopes?

When Albertans are facing punishing increases in costs from the NDP's carbon tax – the PST in disguise – rising utility rates, increased prices of goods and services, and diminishing employment prospects, Albertans deserve better than vague assurances from the NDP government. They deserve a government that takes the stewardship of their dollar seriously and aims to return value for what they take and collect. And if the government relentlessly pursues its flawed economic strategies, refusing to show restraint and confront economic realities within its own finances, future generations – future generations – will ask why we did not give proper consideration to value. They will wonder why we were so committed to throwing good money after bad instead of thoughtfully asking if such priorities were actually well placed and well founded. Most of all, they will ask why we left them to pick up the tab for such folly.

This province could achieve great things now and for the future, Mr. Speaker, but it all hinges on putting the trust back in Albertans, where it belongs. If we wish to support the families, communities, and businesses of this province, we can begin by offering a level playing field and allowing the innate strength of our economy and exceptional ability of our residents to rise up and be in control.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, thank you for allowing me the opportunity to offer my response to the government's direction as outlined in their throne speech. I am honoured to once again represent Cypress-Medicine Hat in this House, and I promise that I will do all that I can to ensure that their voices are heard here every day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Loewen: Yes. I want to thank the member for the statement. We heard lots of talk about government finances. In particular, I enjoyed the discussion about Albertans and their strengths and how they're so hard-working and entrepreneurial and how they can really help us in this tough economy if they're given the chance.

Now, we have a government that brought forward Bill 1. This government talks about other bills being a waste of time, but when we look at Bill 1, we see that that's a real waste of time, so I want to get the member's opinion about that. You know, my thoughts on Bill 1, just in short, are that I guess that maybe this is described as a job description for the minister in charge of creating jobs, and since he's done nothing since he was appointed as minister, I would suggest that taxpayers are not getting their money's worth. This minister gets an extra $60,000 or so a year to do his job, and of course he brought forward a failed jobs plan, so I would like to hear this member's opinion on that.

Also, I'd like to hear his discussion on the previous government, which, when we had a $100 barrel of oil and all sorts of revenue, still spent more than they took in. This government now is spending even more than that. I'm wondering how they can ever expect to balance the budget when they're spending more than what the government did at $100 a barrel. Carry on.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you for that question. Yeah, diversifying the economy: rules and regulations and the onerous, you know, costs that the extra government spending has caused have been exactly the wrong approach to what we need to do to diversify the economy, and more rules and regulations, more picking winners and losers are going to lead to the wrong way. The two questions are related.

The hon. member talked about the previous government's tendency to spend. You know, two things, to me, are important on that. There's a lot of information out there that shows Alberta on a per capita basis spends almost 20 per cent more than any other province. That 20 per cent more has led to many levels of bureaucracy, many levels of inefficiency. It's been very inflationary. We look at the almost 4.2 million Albertans at $2,000 per year per person: that is $8 billion in extra spending that could have been placed in the heritage trust fund. It could have been used to build necessary infrastructure to grow our economy or, best yet, left with Albertans to grow their businesses, to grow their communities.

You know, I've said it in the House before: we can debate whether we should have a heritage trust fund; we should have a trillion in the heritage trust fund. There are pros and cons on both sides, but the one thing that this exact situation has shown is the previous government's folly in not saving at least $100 billion in the heritage trust fund. The interest annually on that $100 billion would have gone a long way to offset the loss in oil and gas royalties right now and the loss in lease sales. I understand that the last time this government tried to sell some oil and gas leases, the net sales were zero, partly because of the uncertainty, partly because of the confidence that has been destroyed.

It would have been easy for the previous government to have saved that amount of money, I think, because they had over $275 billion in royalties flow through their coffers since they were elected. With just the original $16 billion, that was put aside in the late '70s, if they had just let the interest compound rather than directing this spending to bureaucracy, to picking winners and losers, it could have grown to well past $200 billion.

Now we have a government that is doing exactly the same thing, a government that is not looking for the value when they spend, a government that is not recognizing the effort, the ingenuity, the creativity that wealth builders have put into building the wealth before they tax it and spend it without value top of mind.

10:20

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege and honour to rise here today to deliver to you and the other Members of this 29th Legislative Assembly my maiden speech as the Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank you for the impartiality that you bring to the chair. I believe that you represent the position with honour and distinction, and I wish you the best as we continue on this legislative journey together.

To the residents, neighbours, colleagues, and friends of Calgary-Northern Hills, thank you for giving me the opportunity to represent you in this Assembly. During the election campaign I met many of the constituency's teachers, health care workers, construction workers, oil and gas sector workers, postal employees, parents and grandparents, community advocates, and the others that were ready for change and who expressed that desire at the ballot box last May. I was honoured when the constituents of Calgary-Northern Hills placed their trust in me, and I have continued to work every day to represent the constituency to the best of my abilities.

Calgary-Northern Hills is an electoral district on the northern edge of the city and comprises the neighbourhoods of Panorama Hills, Coventry Hills, Country Hills, Country Hills Village, and Harvest Hills. Also among the hills there is the community of Hanson Ranch in Hidden Valley, which happens to be the neighbourhood where I live. Calgary-Northern Hills is one of the newest areas of the city and has grown rapidly in the last two decades.

The 2011 Canadian census indicates that the area is exceptionally diverse, with only 42 per cent of residents born in Alberta. Take a walk along the streets of Northern Hills and you might hear Cantonese, Mandarin, Punjabi, Spanish, or one of many languages spoken by Canada's indigenous peoples. You'll find restaurants serving cuisine from around the world: Vietnamese, Chinese, East Indian, Korean, Thai, Japanese, and the two delicious shawarma shops from the Middle East. I've come to rely on these restaurants more and more since being elected as I'm finding it increasingly difficult to keep fresh food in my refrigerator. However, this does provide the perfect opportunity to sample the fine cuisine in Northern Hills.

Like many of my constituents in Calgary-Northern Hills, I came from a different region of the country to make Alberta my home, moving here for the unparalleled opportunities that Alberta has to offer when it comes to employment, lifestyle, and outdoor recreation. Not long after I transferred to work at Calgary's airport, I moved to a newly built neighbourhood in Cochrane. Shortfalls in service to newer neighbourhoods motivated me to get involved in local politics. During my run for a position on Cochrane's town council I learned much from others wrestling with how to best provide public services, maintain quality of life, and manage tax rates amid a rapid population growth and nonstop urban development and infrastructure debt.

In the 2012 provincial election, as the NDP candidate in the riding of Banff-Cochrane, I was able to speak to the issues of the day and gain experience with which to serve the community in the years that followed, as my friend the Member for Banff-Cochrane can likely attest to today.

One aspect of greatest concern to rural residents was land-use planning, particularly in the Ghost valley, where the community has always advocated strongly for watershed health, wildlife habitat, and wetland protection. I know that the hon. member is a strong advocate for these issues as well, and I'm glad to work with him in the House on these issues, particularly relevant to our community as we are downstream from these resources and watersheds.

In 2014 my Cochrane neighbours and I founded a community association to advocate for path systems, road networks, and neighbourhood safety. We attempted to hold land developers responsible for fulfilling their commitments when building communities. This experience taught me that neighbourhoods must be good for people who live in them, not just for those that build them. Ideally, ways can be found to create win-win solutions for everybody, but good planning and follow-through are required.

Eventually I moved to Calgary-Northern Hills to be closer to my place of employment and airline colleagues. Shortly after the provincial election was announced for the spring of 2015, I again put my name forward as the NDP candidate. Between door-knocking and meeting with those active in the Northern Hills Community Association, one of the biggest in the city, I learned of the community's priorities.

At the door and at the community forums residents repeatedly told me that the area lacked school facilities even though 15 years earlier a public high school had been promised, with land already designated by the city for that purpose. Yet schoolchildren continued to endure long bus rides to other high schools in distant neighbourhoods. As a result, youth find it a challenge to participate in extracurricular activities with their school peers, potentially leading to feelings of social isolation. While it has been a long-time concern, I was encouraged to see that the Calgary board of education has recently designated a north-central high school for year 1 of its most recent three-year capital plan, 2017-2020, for capital priorities in new school construction.

In the constituency of Calgary-Northern Hills empty grass fields mark our infrastructure debt, the legacy of a previous government's neglect. With our government's commitment to invest in our provincial capital plan, these empty fields now give me hope.

One particular grassy field is designated for a north Calgary health centre. A decade of inaction means that over 50,000 residents travel to other neighbourhoods for health care, often to community clinics and sometimes to emergency rooms at the Peter Lougheed Centre and the Foothills medical centre. A significant number of residents from northern Calgary report travelling to Airdrie regional health centre for their health care needs as well. The residents of Calgary-Northern Hills would be better served by a community health centre on a designated site in Northern Hills. Such a health centre would take the pressure off facilities in the city and allow the system to run much more economically and provide needed care in a timely manner.

Calgary-Northern Hills is playing catch-up after two decades of rapid growth and shortfalls in capital investment. Fortunately, the community possesses a wealth of talented and engaged community members focused on bringing health, transportation, and educational services to the community. Those who volunteer with the Northern Hills Community Association and the Hidden Valley Community Association demonstrate dedicated hard work and time commitment that are nothing short of inspiring. The future of Calgary-Northern Hills is bright with these passionate residents advocating for their community.

The Nose Creek Sports and Recreation Association is a living example of this community spirit. This not-for-profit organization was founded to spearhead the development of a community recreation facility. The organization has since evolved into a self-sustaining charity, Vivo for Healthier Generations, whose mandate is to help individuals and families in north-central Calgary live their best, healthiest lives, and is committed to pioneering solutions to get all Calgarians more physically active. The employees, play ambassadors, and volunteers that operate the organization have made it the hub for our diverse community in Calgary-Northern Hills, hosting events such as Vivo Culture Fest and making space available to other organizations who in turn host different events such as Chinese New Year Riddle Guessing Festival and an event called One Nation, which is a meet-and-greet to increase understanding of Muslim culture, food, and traditions.

During the Calgary Stampede as MLA for Calgary-Northern Hills I carry on the tradition of partnering with Vivo to host one of the biggest Stampede breakfasts in the city, feeding over 2,000 people while providing entertainment, bouncy castles, and fun for all.

I'm grateful to the many Calgary-Northern Hills residents who have worked so hard to establish and maintain our community's recreational facilities and after school programs, language courses, and seniors' programming in Calgary-Northern Hills. As an MLA I will continue to work with these outstanding community members to advocate for more schools, a much-needed community health centre, and the construction of the LRT green line, which will connect our communities to the core of the city.

Mr. Speaker, I'd now like to take a moment to respond to the Speech from the Throne. I believe it lays out a bold vision for the province as we begin the Second Session of the 29th Legislature. The throne speech references to income security, diversification, and job creation indicate that the government will take meaningful action to address concerns voiced by my constituents. The throne speech promises to invest $34 billion into our provincial capital plan in order to build the roads, transit, schools, and other facilities we need to support the quality of life of a growing population. Not only could these capital projects address many of the infrastructure shortfalls in Calgary-Northern Hills; they will promote job creation and economic diversification.

Just as many Albertans are, my constituents are struggling with job losses and underemployment. It is reassuring to hear in the Speech from the Throne that our government will vigorously urge the new federal government to reconsider federal employment insurance rules that exclude too many Albertans from benefits. A successful outcome would provide much-needed relief to residents of Calgary-Northern Hills and the many other Albertans affected by the downturn in the oil and gas sector.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to conclude by taking a moment to mention a political role model from my youth, someone who inspired me to join the New Democrats. During trying economic times the people of Saskatchewan elected an NDP government. The words of Premier Roy Romanow's 1991 victory speech made deep impressions on me. He said then: "It will take a lot of hard work, a lot of tough decisions, and a little bit of luck, but I'm confident that we the people of Saskatchewan can do it. We shall do it. We shall overcome our obstacles and rebuild." Following that victory speech the NDP in the province of Saskatchewan left a series of surpluses nearly a decade long and formed government for over 15 years.

It's true that Alberta has elected an NDP government for the first time ever, but like the people of Saskatchewan, we the people of Alberta can build an economy that is widely diversified and resilient to the energy price swings, just as the Speech from the Throne describes. We can build an economy that captures the full value of our resources, holds the promise of prosperous futures for our children, and shares the benefits widely and fairly among all Albertans. I will work to help make this vision a reality.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the time to speak.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Yes, please. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to my seatmate. A superb speech, I think one that's invigorated at least this side of the House.

I want to follow up on what you were talking about towards the end of your talk. It can be argued that the prosperity that Saskatchewan enjoyed from 2007 until recently was the product of the wisdom of the Romanow and Calvert NDP governments in Saskatchewan. They balanced the budget and helped Saskatchewan reap the benefit of natural resources revenue from potash and oil and gas. To my seatmate: do you think that our royalty review and the diversification plans that are well under way will lead to future prosperity similar to that that was seen in Saskatchewan with the Romanow government?

Mr. Kleinstaub: Well, thank you to my colleague here and fellow seatmate and member. Being a student at the time, back in the '90s, I think the Romanow government was a particularly inspiring government to learn from as a political and economics student, particularly also with some of the constitutional issues that were widely discussed at the time with the '95 referendum. He was a particularly strong advocate for Canada. Being a resident from Ottawa U at the time, it left a particular impression on me.

I think the Saskatchewan government had a bit of a rough start in the sense that they inherited a pretty rough financial picture, similar to what we've seen in this place. I think that with a lot of hard work and determination, we can definitely learn from that government and the experiences and the positive impression it left on that province, and hopefully we also can share a similar success story here in this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I also want to congratulate my colleague. He mentioned my riding and the work that he had done in my riding in the 2012 election, and I'd like to thank him for sort of laying some of the groundwork, for going out and meeting people in the community and establishing those kinds of connections.

He also talked a little bit about watersheds and the importance of protecting our natural landscape, and I wonder if the member can talk a little bit more about the work that he did while he was in the community.

Mr. Kleinstaub: Thank you again to another colleague and member here in the Legislature. Yes, during my time in Cochrane it was a good chance to gain a lot of political experience and work with some of the organizations and groups out there, particularly learning how to advocate for organizations and communities that hold sort of special relationships to the town and community. But I think that, more importantly, now that I'm living downstream in Calgary, some of the experiences from that time, concerns about watershed health and environment, definitely hold true as much then as now on the water quality that the city of Calgary and all of the residents there definitely need. Yeah, I think that these experiences are well placed and have helped me along in my experience and career so far.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the Member for Calgary-Northern Hills. I really appreciated your maiden speech and want to congratulate you on it. I wanted to ask you a little bit about maybe some of the experiences that you've had with constituents that you've met with. Perhaps you could share a few anecdotes of those experiences with us.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kleinstaubert: Yes. Thank you also to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. Definitely, since the campaign I've met with a lot of constituents and as well in the office worked with a lot of people that have had a lot of concerns with some of the resources available.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. Member for West Yellowhead, please proceed.

Mr. Rosendahl: Is it okay if I remain sitting?

The Speaker: Yes. Hon. members, the member has recently had surgery. I passed a note, and I agree. Please proceed from your seat.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I have to congratulate you on being elected as Speaker of this great House. I would like to also recognize and congratulate the Deputy Speaker. You both have been doing a fantastic job keeping order and decorum in this Assembly and have shown great impartiality.

I rise with great pride today to give my maiden speech on behalf of the citizens of West Yellowhead. Eighteen individuals have represented this geographical area before me, and I'm honoured to be number 19. I believe that West Yellowhead is one of the most diverse and complex constituencies in Alberta. The constituency is large, covering an area of 37,331 square kilometres. Starting in the east, the constituency begins at range road 160, which is near Wolf Lake, and then goes all the way to the B.C. border. The southern boundary is the Brazeau River and ends north of Grande Cache at the Smoky River.

Mr. Speaker, my constituency is made up of the following major municipalities – Edson, Hinton, Grande Cache, and Jasper – as well as a few smaller communities, including Cadomin, Robb, Brûle, Carldale, and Millers Lake. All of these areas, big and small, consist of Albertans who work and play right here in our great province. Like the rest of Alberta, the prolonged economic slowdown our province currently finds itself in has not left our constituency untouched, but my constituents have all seen a drop in the price of oil before and know that we'll get past this one as well.

Mr. Speaker, when I tell you that my West Yellowhead constituency represents a snapshot of all aspects of our province's economy, I'm not kidding. My constituents work in industries and businesses that include forestry, coal mining, oil and gas, tourism, and recreation, all the while playing in the beautiful and world-renowned Jasper national park, in many wildland parks such as Willmore and Whitehorse, in provincial parks that are scattered throughout the constituency, and also in their own backyards.

Specifically, Mr. Speaker, as you approach the constituency from the east, you enter the prominent town of Edson, a town that is home to Weyerhaeuser, a strandboard mill that utilizes poplar trees in the constituency; a West Fraser dimensional sawmill and furniture product manufacturer that also supplies wood chips to the Hinton pulp mill; Coal Valley coal, a mine located south of Edson that produces lower grade coal that is primarily shipped overseas to China for the production of power and steel. The Duvernay gas field is also within this area. All of this industrial activity employs and provides spinoff jobs to the community in and around Edson.

Also, Mr. Speaker, approximately 975 farms and ranches surround this section of West Yellowhead and add to the agricultural industry of this great province.

Edson is also a recreational community that has prominent sales in all-terrain and recreational vehicles. It also features the upcoming completion of the Edson hospital this spring, Mr. Speaker, and has a plan to replace the pre-existing Dakin elementary school infrastructure. It is our hope that the province addresses this town's dire need for additional seniors' housing and works together with the Evergreens society at expanding current facilities such as the Parkland Seniors' Lodge.

Hinton, west of Edson, is also in need of additional seniors' housing as the Pine Valley Seniors' Lodge is in dire need of expansion while the Good Samaritan Society requires improved measures for providing its residents with consistent, quality care. Hinton, which I'm proud to call home, provided Alberta with its first pulp mill in 1956. It continues to strive as a resource-based town consisting of the West Fraser pulp mill and sawmill; West Fraser forestry and silviculture division; Teck coal, which is metallurgical coal; and it has many gas fields. It is home to the original forestry centre, a facility that has world-renowned training for forest firefighters and for their pilots, using the centre's flight-simulation technology, a facility that is looking to expand.

Nestled in the foothills, Hinton has a unique community of partners making up the forestry research institute, an institute that aims to drive Alberta towards sustainable land and resource management through increased research on the mountain pine beetle, grizzly bear study, caribou study, to name a few. Industry and government funding continues to be needed to pursue further research that will directly affect and impact our province as well as the rest of Canada.

Forest recreation, Mr. Speaker, is also key to the local economy within the foothills. Hunting, fishing, recreational activities, and annual events such as the Wild Mountain Music Festival attract hamlets of people to the region. The government of Alberta needs to actively continue to address the environmental impact and damage of random camping, ATV use, as well as the increased risk of forest fires.

Heading north up scenic highway 40 leads to Grande Cache. Mr. Speaker, with the recent shutdown of Grande Cache Coal in December the town has increased reliance on its production of dimensional lumber and pellets through Foothills Forest Products and its possible investment into a shakes mill, oil and gas, the Grande Cache Institution, the Maxim Power plant, and the spinoff industries within the surrounding area.

With the airport closure the town of Grande Cache has an ever-growing need to attract tourism and thus holds events such as the Canadian Death Race on an annual basis. West Yellowhead already has a strong tourism base, and we know that in this period of economic decline and with the low Canadian dollar tourism is an industry that is going to continue to grow faster than ever before.

The government of Alberta needs to continue to work with the town council and local citizens to address the closure of the coal mine and airport, and as the representative I'll continue to fight for the success here in the Assembly every day. Despite these minor setbacks I'm confident that our government's plan to promote job creation and economic diversification will help the people of West Yellowhead to get back on their feet. Our government's commitment to build on our strength in agriculture and forestry will be of particular importance to my constituents as we go forward. Mr. Speaker, I'm looking forward to the introduction of Budget 2016 and promises, mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, to expand access to workforce skills training and retraining. I expect many of my constituents will be interested in taking advantage of these measures.

Lying in the heart of Jasper national park, Mr. Speaker, is the picturesque community of Jasper. As an international tourism destination Jasper national park boasts some of the most photographed sites in the world, from Maligne Lake and Spirit Island to the local wildlife, Marmot Basin, Jasper in January. Jasper has a small-town infrastructure that attempts to host thousands of tourists. I'm confident that our government's investment of $34 billion into the provincial capital plan will finally start to address the pressures on our local infrastructure and help us to build the roads, transit, and other facilities that are so badly needed.

As I've stated, Mr. Speaker, the West Yellowhead constituency is diverse, and a large aspect of the diversity is the First Nations peoples. Alberta contains eight Métis settlements; however, none are within West Yellowhead. There are, however, many indigenous peoples that live in the many communities and smaller hamlets throughout. When Jasper national park was created, a few of the First Nations indigenous people that were living and operating in the park were evicted to the area in and around Grande Cache. This relocation has left some of the people very bitter and has left an overall distrust of both the provincial and federal governments, and thus some are not very co-operative when meeting with government officials. Who could blame them?

There are also two larger settlements located within the constituency, one being southwest of Robb, and it's called the Alexis Cardinal River 234, and the other settlement is Alexis Elk River 233. These settlements rely on the hunting and trapping pursuits in their respective areas. The Aseniwuche group is a small group of indigenous people within the constituency that represents its members. This group receives money from the province and uses the funding for its members. I'm currently setting up meetings with the Aseniwuche group to better understand their function in relationship to the many other First Nations in the constituency.

Another issue, Mr. Speaker, in West Yellowhead is the issue of the co-ops. In most cases they lack the ability to raise funding to pay taxes and barely exist on the hunting and trapping that is practised. In some instances they have sold gravel to different companies to raise money. In some situations the money was never paid, and they were left to now deal with the large open pits that they cannot afford to remediate.

There's also a huge mistrust in the hunting community between the First Nations peoples, whose right to subsistence hunting and fishing is constitutionally protected, and other citizens who recreationally hunt. We need to ensure that we're all being effective stewards of the land, air, and water, and ensuring that our wildlife is properly managed as well is part of this equation.

Some groups of people, including poachers, Mr. Speaker, are disregarding the important role that our wildlife plays and have gone into certain areas and have taken all wildlife they could, in amounts to fill a reefer truck. Thus the opposing points of view and different regulations have created many issues regarding big-game bag limits and the number of tags issued to Alberta hunters. Also adding to this situation is the number of guides and their allotted tag limits, which are issued to non-Canadian hunters. Many non-Canadian hunters support the local economy of West Yellowhead as they spend large amounts of money on purchasing tags, gas, food, and lodging.

Another area of mistrust, Mr. Speaker, involves the many confrontations on the application of the floods, forest land-use zones, and the many PLUZs, public land-use zones, that were created, and many of the wildlife management units.

So, Mr. Speaker, there has to be negotiation between these groups of individuals. Fairness needs to be applied to ensure that there's enough big game to be shared and the wildlife in the area is managed to sustain their respective populations. It has been my intent to meet with all these indigenous peoples and try to gain a better understanding of their needs. Better rapport and trust needs to be established so we can effectively work with them, try to find solutions regarding these and future problems.

Mr. Speaker, my journey into politics has been long. I believe it originated back in Saskatchewan when I was growing up on the family mixed farm. My father was a CCF supporter because my parents were raising a large family and issues of health care were always front and centre. When the party was changed to the NDP, I can still remember my father telling us that we need to vote NDP. As a result, there were many prominent NDP people that enjoyed the fruits of the family farm over the many years.

I graduated high school in Turtleford, Saskatchewan, went to college at Vermilion. It was called Vermilion agricultural and vocational college. Growing up on the family farm fostered a commitment and work ethic. There was no question. If you wanted to eat, you'd better do as you were told, no argument. That's the way it was. The success of the family farm was dependent on that philosophy.

It was this experience growing up on the family farm that was one of the major driving forces for my support for the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act last year. All workers deserve basic protection on the job, and I'm proud that our government was able to pass this important legislation.

At the college I entered the renewable resources and wildlife management technology program. The goal was to become a fish and wildlife officer. During the spring and summer of '72 I ended up, however, going to a forestry company in B.C. as they wanted farm people with an excellent work ethic and were not afraid of the bush. I received training as a timber cruiser and had to try out for the different positions. During the first week of training I was going with this long-legged forester who could literally run through the bush, leaving me behind in most cases. I thought I was going to die trying to keep up with him. I persevered and became the head compass man of one of the crews, and later that fall I returned to college after I stayed over in Quesnel for a longer period because they wanted me to finish up some work there. I graduated in the spring of '73. During my two years of college it was one thing that stood out. You had to be successful and basically never give up.

During my college years I put my name in the farm labour pools to work throughout the area . . . [Mr. Rosendahl's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just very interested in what the member is saying about his history in this province in a very important area of forestry and in the rural communities, and I'd really love to hear a little bit more. I wonder if you might have something more you could add to it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you. Well, I eventually ended up working for provincial parks for a short time frame, and I eventually ended up working at the Hinton pulp mill for 32 years, where I got my third-class steam engineering certificate. During that time frame I worked for the union, covering many positions. Throughout my time there I was shop steward, chief shop steward, vice-president, covered the president position, presented grievances with the rep to arbitration, chairperson of the grievance committee, health and safety committee, chairperson of the environment committee, chairperson of the advisory committee on the environment, union chair on forest resource advisory committee, and sat on many negotiations.

I also worked with the AFL during that time frame. I was one of the main members that formed the AFL environment committee. I also worked on the AFL healthy and safety committee. I was also chair of the water caucus committee representing workers in this province. I was also the chair of the forestry caucus committee that represented workers in this province. Through that time I was also president of the Yellowhead labour council and sat on many functions for the Alberta Federation of Labour and the Canadian Labour Congress.

Through all of my union involvement I ended up becoming the president of the NDP federally and provincially in the riding. I was very busy, needless to say. A lot of friends and family called me Mr. Meeting. I was either at a meeting, coming home from a meeting, or organizing more of them.

So, basically, that's what I've done over the years. Also, I was president of Hinton Fish and Game for many years, and I'm a lifetime member of AHEIA, which is the Alberta Hunter Education Instructors Association. Through that organization we train new hunters and fisherpeople in the province, and through that organization I've been on many committees and organized things on behalf of those committees. I've also sat on many other organizations in the community, Hinton Search and Rescue, and so on and so forth. The list goes on forever. We also sat on many negotiations with the government on many things: Whitehorse wildland park, negotiating and discussion on other parks, provincial parks, and all those kind of things. So it's been forever since I've been involved.

I hope that answers the question.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, it's great to hear about the member's constituency. I think we can all agree it's a very beautiful part of Alberta. I do enjoy going there myself and enjoying mountains and the fresh air and the scenery there, too. It's beautiful.

I was interested to hear about the forestry background. Of course, I have a great amount of respect for timber cruisers because of the work that they do, and it's hard physical labour. You mentioned about the pine beetle and the concern that it has been. I'd like to hear the member's opinion about the pine beetle and how the past federal and past provincial governments had worked with this issue and if he had any ideas on solving this.

Mr. Rosendahl: The pine beetle is of huge concern. It's basically damaged the forestry in B.C., and it is spreading into the province of Alberta. We have a large amount of money that's being spent by the provincial government in the battle of the beetle. We had a meeting this spring that was organized through myself and the mayor of Hinton to get everybody together so that we had a better understanding as to exactly what's going on. In some areas we are winning the battle. In some areas, however, we are not, and that is a huge concern. The thing is that it's an issue that we're working on with the federal park, Jasper national park. They need to address some of the concerns there as it is spreading over into . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I just wanted to reflect again on 29(2)(a). I'll just read you the last part of it: "to allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses to each Member's questions and comments."

I would recognize the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

11:00

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am privileged to represent the wonderful people of the riding of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. The area is home to families who came here because Alberta had a climate of opportunity that was attractive to hard-working people. Along the eastern boundary of my riding you'll find the communities of Delburne, Lousana, Elnora, surrounded by rolling prairie and farms and ranches. It might be of interest that in little, tiny Delburne there is a factory named Noise Solutions that builds equipment for NASA space flights, right here in Alberta. These communities were settled in the early 1900s by immigrants seeking a new life and the freedom to own land, freedom and a climate of opportunity that was unavailable to them in Europe, where feudalism and socialism barred any rights people had to their own land.

Moving westward, we come to Pine Lake. It is a small but vibrant retirement and resort community known for great fishing in summer and winter.

In the southern part of my riding is the village of Bowden. The Bowden Daze rodeo is important to the area, and local cowboy Ky Marshall placed first in the Canadian professional association bareback challenge in Bowden this summer. Around Bowden we have long-time farming families, the Marshall and the Anderson families and many others, that are known for helping out whenever there's a community event or a community need. Bowden folks are very excited this year to be building their first-ever home with Habitat for Humanity.

Northward we come to Innisfail. It is the service hub to central Alberta ranchers and farmers, and here you're going to find some of the oldest Alberta family farms in the province still in operation, farms that have survived drought, depression, hail, BSE, and so far a socialist government. Antler Valley Farm, established by the McAllisters, was started before Alberta was even a province, and it is still owned by the McAllisters and still producing grain to this day.

The Daines family settled in 1911. It's famous for the Daines rodeo, the Daines auction market. We have the Edgar family. Founded in 1907, they host the famous asparagus festival right here in Alberta in the early spring of each year. You didn't know that, did you?

The area is also home to members of the Amish community, and we have the Rainbow and Pine Hill Hutterite colonies, integral partners in our farming community.

In the industrial sector of the town Johns Manville Canada employs a great many people making fibreglass insulation, and northwest pipe is a large supplier to the oil field sector.

Northward we come to Penhold and Springbrook, two of Alberta's fastest growing communities. It's attractive there to young families just starting out in life. It's also home to Sky Wings Aviation and the Red Deer regional airport. What you may not know is that the Red Deer regional airport employs 225 people and contributes about a hundred million dollars annually to the local economy. As part of its mandate to be the aviation gateway for central Alberta, this airport is scheduled for a runway extension that will permit Boeing 737 service daily to Red Deer.

The western boundary is formed by the Red Deer River, where one can enjoy canoeing and fishing and the vista of the majestic Rocky Mountains. You would really enjoy a country drive in the summer to the hamlet of Markerville. It was settled in 1888 by industrious pioneers from Iceland. We have Vikings in Alberta. They were drawn here by our climate of opportunity. You have to pay a visit to the historic Stephansson House and enjoy the many flavours of ice cream sold at the creamery, which ran continuously from 1901 to 1972, and it is still a café today.

At beautiful Gleniffer Lake resort and Dickson dam you can find recreation fun all summer long. It is home to the award-winning Danish-Canadian National Museum and gardens. Dickson was originally settled in 1903 by Vikings, 17 Danish families, and in the following 10 years more Viking families were drawn here by the climate of opportunity.

Next we come to Spruce View, settled by – you guessed it – more Vikings. It is the service hub for surrounding farms and ranches, and it is home to the wild rose women's institute. No connection. Well, not exactly a connection. Long-time farm families, the Hillmans and the Thompson seed farm, and many skilled artisans actually live in the Spruce View area. It was also home to the Spruce View bachelors of paradise, which was founded during the Depression years of the 1930s because men in the area were too poor to get married. They're thinking of resurrecting it once again given the economic climate.

It's also home to the Tivoli Garden Cafe, famous for its Friday night authentic Mediterranean dishes. It's owned and operated by Lina and Samir Bou Saleh, who came here from Lebanon because Alberta offered a climate of opportunity to make a new life for their family. They just celebrated their 10th anniversary. My congratulations to Lina and Samir.

On the northern boundary is beautiful Sylvan Lake, and on its shores are the Nornglenwold, Birchcliff, Jarvis Bay provincial park, and the town of Sylvan Lake. Sylvan Lake is a young community, with 30 per cent of the population under the age of 19. The median age of our population is only 32. It is rated as the fastest growing rural community in Canada, and our growth averages about 4.5 per cent per year over year, with projections to reach 20,000 people by 2022, just a few short years away. Frankly, our needs for expanded drinking water, waste water, and 24-hour urgent care have not been properly addressed by the provincial government even during our boom times.

Now, tourism was strangely absent in the throne speech, yet it is a significant economic driver in Sylvan Lake. Our lake is arguably Alberta's most popular water playground, attracting 900,000 tourists annually during summer and winter for ice fishing and snowmobiling. Did I say that this town still lacks an urgent care facility?

Sylvan Lake is home to Alberta's most enthusiastic mayor, Sean McIntyre. Yes, we're related, but about 200 years ago. He may have been seen jumping into the icy waters with his fellow councillors during last year's polar bear dip to raise money for charity. In our area we also have the famous hockey family, the Sutters. They're well known around the town of Sylvan Lake. Sylvan Lake actually won last year's Kraft Hockeyville competition, and now we're busy building a new multiplex recreation centre. We are also home to two of the world's most famous ice cream stores, Big Moo and More Moo. How many people have been to Big Moo and More Moo, right? Everybody. Did I say that this town still lacks an urgent care facility?

This riding is home to farmers, ranchers, oil and gas workers, teachers, health care workers, manufacturing workers employed in many industrial parks along Burnt Lake trail and highway 2 corridor. These are hard-working people, Mr. Speaker, who've invested their lives in this province because once upon a time it offered a climate of opportunity. They are struggling beneath the challenges of this current economy, aggravated by political instability and the pollution of that climate of opportunity that once epitomized our province. But these are hard-core Albertans, Vikings many of them, tough people, common-sense people that hold to the historical values of family and faith that made this province great. They will not give up, and I am privileged to be their voice in this place.

Now, in addition, I'm also responsible for the shadow portfolio of electricity and renewable technologies. Prior to politics I worked at NAIT in the alternative energy technology program. Based on the research we conducted in building that excellent program, I recommend that as this government forges ahead in its green revolution, it must take the time to accurately calculate the adverse economic impact to our already struggling economy. Any successful businessman knows that you have to perform a thorough SWOT analysis to really understand your risks, opportunities, and potentials for success.

I have asked various ministers repeatedly over the last number of months for their economic research, to table their cost-benefit analysis on the human cost of their energy policies and the economic cost of their economic policies and energy policies. To date this government has refused to provide that research, and now we know why. It was never conducted. Worse, this government refuses to accept that without such thorough analysis they are blind. They neither see the pitfalls, but they also do not see the opportunities right in front of them.

The incompetence of this government is profound, and the mounting devastation upon the hard-working people of my riding is equally profound. Fifteen organizations, comprised of thousands of businesspeople who grasp the value of research, have recently pleaded with this government to open its eyes. Will this government listen to the real job creators or continue to listen to so-called experts who told them last November to trust that oil would be $50 today? Hello. Wake up.

In addition to economic analysis it is also absolutely necessary to take the time to accurately assess the human cost in moving forward with economic and green energy policies that can and will destabilize our people and threaten their personal investments in homes, businesses, and even their children's future. The primary responsibility of government in a democracy is to care for the well-being of its people. The overarching focus and litmus test of any energy management plan, including our own, must consider the well-being of all our people.

If I may, I'd like to give this House just a sample of what you could learn if you attended NAIT's program in the area of energy management planning. Alberta's electricity system is a complex blend of regulated and deregulated services. Its blended design was intended to provide Albertans and our business sector with stable, reliable electricity, priced at a level that was affordable for homeowners and also priced to keep our industries' goods and services competitively priced in a global marketplace. In addition, the system had to keep pace with our growing population and our growing industrial load without the need for the government of Alberta to accumulate debt in building generation and transmission infrastructure.

In all of these criteria our electricity sector has proven successful, and the competitive nature of the Balancing Pool forced the players to constantly upgrade and improve their efficiencies. That, Mr. Speaker, is the beauty of open competition in a capitalist free market. By its very design the players always challenge each other to do better to remain in business.

I should add here that over time the practitioners of energy management have found some nonnegotiable principles which, if followed, can almost guarantee the sustainable success of an energy management plan. Conversely, if even one of these principles is not followed, the plan will not be sustainable for long, and it will fail.

Now, time doesn't permit me to go into detail here, but please consider at least a few proven principles. One, begin by using less. That is the beginning point of any energy management plan. A sustainable reduction in energy consumption through energy efficiency measures throughout an economy has proven to provide more jobs and sustain more economic activity, more innovation, more new small local businesses, and reduce pollution and energy waste more than any other component of a green economy plan. Begin by using less.

Two, create a competitive power market that results in affordable and stable energy costs. We already had this. It was in place, and it was working mostly fine until this government began meddling in it. Recent statements by the Premier regarding the power purchase agreements cancelled by Enmax and TransCanada provide proof positive that this government does not understand PPAs or our electricity system and is systematically engineering the demise of thousands of jobs and entire communities when we can least afford it.

Three, improve energy productivity and energy product quality. What does this mean? Well, there are proven market-ready technologies available to us today whose efficiencies far outperform conventional centralized generation. I'm talking about microgeneration, existing resource wells to generate power, run-of-the-river microhydro, microgeneration using modularized combined heat and power for new and existing developments. These eliminate the need for large transmission infrastructure at efficiencies that are more than double the current generation methods. These are significant.

These three proven principles that I've talked about – and there are more – are also couched beneath two overarching nonnegotiable principles, requiring that (a) the implementation process must do no harm; in other words, the process of transition must not adversely disrupt the economics, workflow, or quality of the region being transitioned; (b) the plan must achieve universal buy-in. This step is the most difficult of all yet also the most important, and unless everyone in the region takes voluntary ownership of the goals of the plan and everyone contributes to the thousands of small and large changes required to reach these goals, the plan will be destined for failure. Forcing a top-down plan fails every time. Ontario is one of the many places where that's being proven.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I and my Wildrose colleagues believe we can responsibly take Alberta forward in a manner that capitalizes on our current strengths, our current economic drivers and job creators, and works with them to gently move Alberta to an energy-efficient economy, doing no harm, substantially less reliant on carbon-based fuels, substantially more reliant on sustainable renewable energy sources, substantially more diversified in our energy portfolio, and strengthened by the wealth creation.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Loewen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's good to hear about your constituency, fellow colleague. It's probably never happened that the word "Viking" has been used so many times in one speech here in this House, but I did enjoy hearing about your experience and your ideas on energy efficiencies, and I would hope that the government maybe will lean on you for some advice with the experience that you have. I would like to hear maybe a little bit of your background, your career and that sort of thing in this regard, and then maybe some additional comments you may have on energy efficiencies that could be used.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, and thank you to the hon. member. My background is in renewable technologies. I was sort of pulled into it by accident. I suffered an accident and couldn't work very well. I went and took some training and fell in love with renewable technologies and just started out down that pathway and ended up overseas as a consultant and then advising both the Israeli government and other jurisdictions around that area. I've done work in Jordan, Egypt, Malta, places in the States, and across Canada here within that technology field.

Then when NAIT was building their alternative energy program, they asked me to come onboard to help them develop that program and then eventually teach it. Then I got elected, and here I am. [interjection] And now I'm trying to teach here, right?

I honestly believe that renewable technologies have a very vital place at play in any energy market, but I also believe that the industries that surround renewable technologies must not be artificially propped up by subsidies or other burdens placed upon the taxpayers or the ratepayers. If they can compete head-to-head, then that is actually going to develop the strongest renewable industries that we have. I believe, like I said in my speech, that energy efficiency is the place to really start. We don't start by piling on high-technology generation to an inefficient system, where we are basically wasting energy.

Energy savings is actually the most valuable energy that there is. It's referred to in the industry as negawatts. You may have never heard the term before, but instead of megawatts it's negawatts, and it is the most valuable form of electricity that's out there. It's the power you don't use. This is where this government I hope would begin, rather than subsidizing all kinds of alternative energy technologies when we haven't fully maximized or optimized the energy we currently use. So to these ends, I'm going to continue to fiercely stand up for the best interests of the people of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and the best interests of the ratepayers for energy in this province.

I'll just bring one more thing to note here. Did you know – I don't know if the House knows this – that back in November industry volunteered to dial down coal-fired generation, that it was somewhere around, I believe, 20 per cent across the entire coal fleet, without compensation, without job loss, and without impacting power prices, and was flatly refused by this government? They offered to dial down. It just boggles my mind that this government hasn't got a clue about business or economics or our electricity sector or the impact of taxation on creating jobs. They had an opportunity to immediately reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Had they followed through, they would have been reducing greenhouse gas emissions immediately, starting last November, by .75 megatonnes per month. Since November.

Unfortunately, this government seems to never miss an opportunity to miss an opportunity, and that's precisely what happened. They failed to take up industry. It would have been the effect of closing down two to three coal-fired plants without the loss of any jobs, and this government refused to do that. Industry had a solution, and this government refused the solution. That to me is a shameful thing to do. Now here we are, faced with whole towns that are closing as a result of this government's actions. This government is putting forward what they refer to as a climate action plan – I see it as an energy management master plan because that's, you know, where I come from – and this government's climate action plan fails every one of those principles that I just laid out. In that discipline, in that field, if you fail even one of those nonnegotiable options, that plan fails.

11:20

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy for the opportunity to respond to the second Speech from the Throne. I would just like to thank the Hon. Lois Mitchell for her hard work since becoming Lieutenant Governor. She happens to be the first Lieutenant Governor that my grandma and grandpa had the opportunity to meet when she was presiding over the seniors' Olympics in their apartment complex.

Kind of to refer to a reflection that was made by some comments from the Member for Edmonton-McClung last week, who spoke about a great Progressive Conservative Prime Minister, John Diefenbaker, who was an inspiration to him, I want to open up about another great Progressive Conservative Prime Minister that I was very fond of, Joe Clark, a young politician with a drive for positive social change much like many of the members of this House. I first saw Joe Clark when I was in junior high in the early 2000s – sorry to date myself – and despite the challenges that the LGBTQ community in Calgary had faced and the fact that this very Legislature threatened to use the notwithstanding clause to prevent same-sex marriage, I saw him become the first Prime Minister in Canada to march in a gay pride parade. I think him taking a stand on social change was what inspired me to follow politics in Alberta more closely.

I also found the Speech from the Throne quite fitting in that it was on International Women's Day. As many of my colleagues have noted in their speeches, I am proud of the work our government and our Ministry of Status of Women is doing. Alberta still has a long way to go when it comes to gender equality, but I'm confident that our government will continue to make significant strides. It is amazing to see how far we have come with women's issues. Back in the '70s my mother chose not to change her last name when she got married. She dealt with countless amounts of discrimination, from government departments to people who challenged the strength of her marriage. Now, 40 years later, she is still in a strong, happy marriage. I am fortunate to have a mother so strong, who spoke up against the cuts to public service pensions to a committee that I am now honoured to chair myself.

Calgary-Shaw is home to a great number of fantastic schools, businesses, and organizations. One institution I feel most lucky to have is St. Mary's University. Members here are probably getting sick of me talking about the great things that St. Mary's University does. St. Mary's University's basketball team just left for nationals this week after a victory over the undefeated Lakeland College. Now, I feel it unfortunate that the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster is not here as I would take a jab at his college losing, but that's for another day.

I have enjoyed watching their games all season. They are only three years old right now, so it's quite an accomplishment to go this far, and I wish them all the best in the finals. These women have a lot of heart and passion. I'd like to recognize their star player, Montana Romeril. This season broke the ACAC record for the most three-point shots scored, and that happened during mid-season. I am also inspired by Kassandra Harkema, who joined the team after being out for nearly 10 years after facing an injury from a car accident while she still played for SAIT. Not only have I enjoyed watching them play, but their professionalism and work ethic is something that I am proud to be able to share with my son, who enjoys coming to games with me. This is one of the many reasons I am proud of St. Mary's University, in my constituency of Calgary-Shaw.

Another inspiring woman, that I had the honour of hosting last week at the Speech from the Throne, is Catholic's Trustee Mary Martin. I must say that Mary is by far one of the most inspirational politicians that I've had the opportunity to work with. Mary sits on the Calgary Catholic board and is also vice-chair of ASBA. She is one of the most sincere people I have had the pleasure to know, and it's a joy working with her in my constituency. Her passion for caring for others is seen by the fact that she is still a practising nurse.

Mr. Speaker, family is very important to me, as I know it is for all my constituents. The other day I had a tear in my eye when I saw the Member for Calgary-Varsity in the Chamber with her son. I think it sets a great opportunity for young people to get into politics. There is nothing harder than going from being a father on parental leave to one who has to commute to Edmonton every week. The second week I came to Edmonton, my wife texted me, informing me that my son cried himself to sleep because of my absence. It is heartbreaking, but I know that the work we are doing in this House is not only making the lives of our constituents better but is making a significant impact on the lives of all people in Alberta. Leaving my family is the hardest part of this job, and I am happy that both sides of this House have committed to working towards making this Legislature more family friendly.

Being a stay-at-home father who was taking care of an eight-month-old daughter on election day, I can say that a stand-alone Status of Women ministry will not only bring equality to women but will even open up doors for men, too. A huge fear I faced as a father going on parental leave was what impact it would have on my career. The stigma hitting stay-at-home fathers still exists. I have seen it first-hand from my brother-in-law, Olaf Bakker, who has stayed at home to support my sister's career.

I have been inspired by my sister Melanie, who is the first Sucha in the family to receive a master's degree. She was given a wealth of knowledge and has given me a wealth of knowledge about the oil sector and the challenges that it faces. Many of my constituents rely on oil and gas for their livelihoods, and they can be confident that our government is doing everything it can to put Albertans back to work and to promote economic growth and diversification.

As the throne speech also outlined, Canada's energy industry must have safe, efficient pipeline access to tidewater so that energy production can command the highest possible value on the world market. As I see it, we have two choices. We can pound our chest or work collaboratively to get pipelines to tidewater. As we have learned from what has happened over the last 15 years, what we were doing did not get the job done. Canada's inability over the past few years to pursue strategic energy policies supported by Canadians has made it impossible so far for our country to diversify our markets. It is time to change our strategy, and our climate change leadership plan is just the start. And that's not coming from me; that's coming from industry leaders.

As a resident on Treaty 7 land I want to thank Métis Calgary Family Services, which has its office in my constituency, who have helped educate me on the many challenges that off-reserve aboriginal people face. I think it is important that we move forward with meaningful dialogue with all aboriginal people, and that is why I'm happy we are moving forward with the repeal of Bill 22.

Before taking office, I used to lose sleep over the world we were going to leave our children due to the implications we are seeing with climate change. I am happy we are working with industry leaders to find solutions that will allow us to invest here in Alberta while supporting those who are low income and small businesses during the transition. I am happy to say that Alberta is now doing its part in conjunction with industry leaders to help provide a more appealing product to market.

As we move forward with our climate change strategy, it is important that we balance our economy with our social responsibilities. This will be a great way for us to diversify our economy and create jobs. As much as we spoke highly of how we paid off our debt, it came at a cost. At the time the previous government took tactics of massive slash-and-burns, and many Albertans lost jobs. I am proud that our government instead committed to not only maintaining our front-line services and staff but to strengthening our health care and education systems. We don't need to put our short-term bottom line over the interests of long-term recovery.

Because of these slash-and-burn tactics we have seen huge infrastructure deficits. Now with a lot of people out of work and delays in projects and deferred maintenance, I am pleased that our government has committed to invest $34 billion in infrastructure. This investment will not only help put Albertans back to work, but it will help us build infrastructure projects that our province desperately needs. Investments like these are seen in my home constituency with Fish Creek park. This was not natural parkland space; it was natural farmland. But in the '70s Peter Lougheed had a vision to reclaim that land, and now it is something that I enjoyed as a child and that I get to share with my children, too.

Growing up in Marlborough Park, I have seen the struggles that working families face day in and day out. The current system in place with payday loan companies in Alberta only fans the fires of poverty. We need a system in place that does not hurt those who are most vulnerable. Both my constituents and I look forward to the introduction of an act to end predatory lending in Alberta.

One thing I heard on the doorsteps that is a challenge that small businesses face is access to capital. This in some cases leads to investment being made in large players that are from out of province. By promoting access to capital, we allow our small businesses to continue being the grassroots job creators they are today here in Alberta. Our government invested $1.5 billion for ATB to invest in small businesses. It's something that will help our small-business owners in my constituency immediately.

Mr. Speaker, I think Her Honour put it best in her speech last week. "Albertans are community minded, caring, and neighbourly. Ours is a society of friends. In tough times we always pull together. We have each other's backs. We support each other in these times instead of making a bad situation worse."

As I move forward, being a business leader, someone who had an opportunity to run a business, and as we move forward through these hard economic times, I want to recognize a very key person, who really helped build me, in the foresight that I see as an MLA who's been here for 10 months, and that is my old general manager, Aaron Haynes, while I was a manager at Milestones. He put a lot of faith and trust in me. He challenged me and pushed me to my brink, taught me how to work hard, and also challenged me to make sure that we made our business the most profitable possible. As we move forward during these hard times, I will always reflect on the knowledge that he taught me during those times as well.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank all members of this House for the hard work that they have put in day in and day out for Alberta. I have enjoyed getting to know you all, and I look forward to getting to know you all even better.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the member's comments and his words today. You know, I have a young family as well. Fortunately for me, I'm not too far away in Beaumont, so when I hear stories like the member's son crying himself to sleep, it touches my heart. Luckily, I get to go home and at least see my kid sleeping in their bed when I get home. I live in the best riding in Alberta bar none, so I get to raise my kids in a pretty fantastic place.

You spoke about the park that Premier Lougheed had put in there and kind of what you grew up knowing. I don't know Calgary-Shaw really very well, so I was kind of curious about what it's like raising your family in that area, what it is that you like about that area to raise your family.

Mr. Sucha: Well, thank you very much, desk mate and hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont. Being, I guess, the second-best constituency in Alberta, Calgary-Shaw is a very unique, diverse community, and we're very fortunate because we have a lot of great parks, not only the provincial park but parks where people have banded together, worked hard to fund raise, and put together. One thing that I've enjoyed, having grown up or raised my kids there when we may not have had as much money, is that there are a lot of amenities that you can utilize that come at no cost, that we need to make sure that we protect, whether it is Sikome Lake at Fish Creek park or even the Somerset Waterpark. I have to show pride in the people in the community of Somerset because they were levied an extra tax to maintain that park. They could make it private, but they opened it up to all people in Calgary, in south Calgary. Right now I hope that as their infrastructure ages, we can work together to really try to restore that area as well.

We face some challenges in Calgary-Shaw as well. I'm probably one of the few MLAs who will say it with pride when a school is not being built in my constituency. It's because a lot of the students in south Calgary, which is growing at a very fast rate, filter into the schools in my areas, and we're starting to really be at the brink right now. I'm happy that our government is moving forward to really ensure that we build all these new schools in south Calgary. I've had an opportunity to attend quite a few sod-turnings in the last little while, and it gives me a lot of excitement because they face a lot of pressures right now, and it will have a major impact in the next two, three years for students in that area as well.

One thing I love about the area, too, is that there are a lot of small and independent businesses. Even the strip mall where my constituency office is has some great Vietnamese sub places, and there are also great sushi places. There are also a lot of independent businesses, that are going to be those job creators during these hard times as well.

I always enjoy Calgary-Shaw because it has that small-town feel to it. It has the old township of Midnapore, it has the university in it, it has basically everything you need, and it's all within walking distance. It's something that I'm so happy that my children can experience, just as many other constituents can as they grow up as well.

The Speaker: Any other questions under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to take this opportunity to really thank the Member for Calgary-Shaw. His youngest daughter is the same age as my youngest daughter. We campaigned with our daughters together, and it was awesome. I just also wanted to thank him for lending his parents to my constituency association. I just wanted to ask him – he's been a wonderful advocate for east Calgary; that's my constituency but also the constituency where he grew up – if he could touch a little bit more on growing up in Calgary-East.

Mr. Sucha: The second- or third-greatest constituency in Alberta, Calgary-East. It was really great growing up there. It's a very diverse community. I got to learn so much, and it was not just from, you know, attending school but from learning from neighbours as well. People from all over the world live in Calgary-East, and that's one of the greatest things that I see about it. One thing that I loved is that everyone took care of each other, so you knew everyone on your street corner. Whenever there was something up in the neighbourhood, you knew that someone would have your back. Sometimes, you know, as we live in sort of this Internet age, where everyone is watching Netflix and is on their computer and never goes to play at a park, it's great to have that reassurance that that still exists. My parents still speak fondly of that. I think that how great that area is is really a testament to the fact that my parents after 30 years still live up in Calgary-East as well. After Calgary-Shaw you have a great constituency in Calgary-East.

The Speaker: The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I apologize if my voice cracks today.

On March 8, 2016, Alberta's Lieutenant Governor took the opportunity to remind us all that in returning to this House, we are doing so to carry out the work of all the people of Alberta. As the days have passed, though, it's become increasingly clear that a number of Albertans will fall through the cracks.

This government continually commits itself to market-distorting policies that see our tax dollars directed toward a chosen few. The facts are undeniable. This government hasn't chosen broad-based policies based on macroeconomic principles to diversify the economy like the low taxes that once made Alberta the most competitive jurisdiction in Canada, a tax advantage that saw Alberta attract significant human and financial capital. This government hasn't chosen to listen to the pleas of Alberta's businesses as they call for a moratorium on policies hurting jobs. This government hasn't chosen to manage the province's expenses, ignoring the opposition's moderate recommendations to look inward and identify the rampant inefficiencies in a bloated public service.

Instead, this government finished dismantling the Alberta advantage. Instead, our debt grows and, with it, concerns about further tax increases. Instead, Albertans continue to face uncertainty about a carbon tax that fails to be truly revenue neutral. Instead, we see numerous financial incentive programs designed to help the few and not the many. If Alberta is no longer an attractive place to invest, it's not the high construction costs that have been a constant feature of our economy, and it's not that petrochemical investment is innately risky; it's because this government dismantled all of the pieces that made Alberta a place where business wanted to invest capital.

In the days since the throne speech, Mr. Speaker, all of the members of this House have been subjected to a series of hollow talking points on government-driven economic diversification. Government-driven economic diversification seems to be something that the government misguidedly believes to have been an implicitly successful policy over the years. They probably say that Klein was wrong to move away entirely from this strategy, but in reality conservative estimates place the costs of these failed policies in Alberta at $2.2 billion in 1990s' dollars.

Through what is colloquially referred to as their Dirty Dozen, Alberta has lost billions of dollars chasing the siren song of taxpayer-funded diversification projects, and I'm going to give you some examples of some of these projects: Alberta-Pacific Forest Industries, where the province was forced by falling pulp prices to write off $155 million in interest owed in order to receive back the initial $250 million it had loaned the mill; projects like the Canadian Commercial Bank, the largest bank failure in Canadian history, estimated to have cost Alberta taxpayers $56 million; projects like Chembiomed, that saw government losses of nearly $44 million. Gainers, after defaulting on a $135 million loan, surrendered the meat-packing plant to the government, only to see the business operating at a loss, costing Albertans $209 million in total; projects like General Systems Research, specializing in industrial laser technology, whose failure lost the government $30.6 million.

Projects like the Lloydminster biprovincial upgrader. We know that the government is particularly interested in upgrading, but there are risks. Alberta made a $423 million investment in this project, and from this multimillion-dollar project Alberta received $32 million when it cut its losses. Projects like the magnesium company of Canada, which after construction saw world magnesium prices plunge, saddling Albertans with a debt of $164 million. Millar Western Pulp Ltd.: what would come to be a $272 million loan, initially intended to aid with construction costs, saw the province receive only a one-time payment of $27.8 million from a company that consistently failed to turn a profit. Northern Lite Canola, a co-operative canola crushing plant, saw both losses of farmers' initial investments and $50 million in government losses. Finally, NovAtel, a cellphone manufacturer: the extent of the financial hit to Albertans was estimated by Alberta's then Auditor General to be between $544 million and $614 million.

The province has experienced a handful of qualified successes, too, but most of these successes were based in the hydrocarbon energy sector. It did little to lower the province's dependency on the oil and gas sector.

We are stewards of the taxes Albertans pay, stewards of the resource rents that Albertans are entitled to, and we are stewards of the revenue received from the corporate taxes that belong to all Albertans. Subjecting Albertans to risk and liability has consistently proven to be a dangerous course, and Albertans are worried. This government won't even admit that targeted incentive programs with limited funding will consistently lead to choosing winners and losers. The government needs to recognize that this creates undue risk for Alberta's taxpayers.

The government needs to recognize that in this fragile economy you've already asked Albertans to pay more. When you increase the liability to Albertans with financially risky projects and when you fail to properly manage the province's expenditure, Albertans fear that further tax increases, which impact the businesses' bottom line, are pending. Even the $500 million in grant money for petrochemical diversification is intended to help propane and methane projects and not, for example, ethanol developments or decarbonization projects whereas lower taxes, red tape reduction, further regulatory streamlining, or a commitment to reviewing policies like the minimum wage increases are all broad-based policies that would help any industry with an idea supported by the free market and economics that enter this game. The government is choosing policies to help a select few, and the government is leaving Albertans behind. Governments are terrible at choosing winners – I'm sure you've heard this before – and losers are great at choosing governments. In choosing these winners and losers, this government will leave more and more Albertans behind. Governments face a terrible . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'd like to emphasize again: could you speak through the chair?

Mrs. Aheer: Absolutely. I'm sorry, sir. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, governments face a terrible and ultimately costly asymmetry of information when negotiating deals for government investments in highly technical areas. This is the fear we hold while the government pursues ambitious economic diversification projects that have not in the past proven to be a safe and prosperous economic course.

Mr. Speaker, there is an opportunity for moderation and caution here, and there is an opportunity to begin to restore the Alberta advantage, which was about making Alberta the best place to invest regardless of your industry and regardless of whether any bureaucrats liked your business idea. I truly believe that Albertans are going to get through this together.

We've seen the government recently take some well-thought-out ideas and policies from the Wildrose opposition and start to acknowledge that we may have some wisdom to impart. We've seen small changes in the government like moderate outcomes from the royalty review, but as an Albertan I still long to see the government show the same passion and conviction for the people of Alberta, their jobs, and the economy that they do for other matters close to the hearts of Albertans like schools, roads, and safe environments for all of our children. The government certainly has not held back from these issues, nor would we want them to. We simply demand the same time and energy and deep-seated convictions in their actions and words when it comes to the livelihoods of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I'm still waiting for a government that is actually willing to stand up for our resources and our talent, not to mention the diversity that already exists in this vast, beautiful, and resource-rich province of ours. This means understanding the industry that helped build the province that we all love. It means fighting for pipelines, not talking about them. It means being the front-runner in a world where we are now in competition with those who would once seek out our resources. Please do not turn your back on Albertans in their time of greatest need. Stand up for their jobs and for their livelihoods. The prosperity and respect you garner will come to you full circle as you implement the social programs that are sustainable and improve the quality of life for so many Albertans that you wish to help. You cannot do this if you attack the very prosperity that helped you get to where you yourselves are today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie under 29(2)(a).

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you very much, and thank you to my colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View. What a beautifully crafted lesson you delivered here today. I'm really curious, more specifically, as to in your home riding what a lot of these people are saying about the direction that this government is going or has laid out in the throne speech. What are some of the reactions from the people of Chestermere-Rocky View?

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you for the question. In Chestermere-Rocky View, as I'd pointed out in my speech, there are a lot of issues with the things that are close to our hearts like infrastructure, schools, with all of the things that all of us have challenges with in our constituencies, Mr. Speaker. But I think that probably the thing that I hear about the most is the lack of action towards market access for our resources and the lack of action by the government nationally to stand up for the resources that are in our province and for the job creators and for the people who have helped build this province. There seems to be an innate lack of respect and understanding as to how this province got to the prosperity that we have. It's not an intentional lack of respect or anything like that – I would never assume that – but I think that there's a definite misunderstanding of how we've gotten from point A to point B.

I think that if the government can show that direction and show the initiative and show strength not only at a provincial level but at a national level, this would do so much to improve the failings of the province but also to encourage the people of the province, especially Chestermere-Rocky View, to understand that the government has their backs, has their best interests, that there's not only an agenda to one direction, that the agenda that the government has is one or two of the legs of the same stool.

But there are other pieces that need to be implemented in order to make succinct policy and to make sure that we're covering a broad spectrum of issues and things that need to happen. Mostly, again – and I repeat – it's market access and pipelines and making sure that within the projects of diversification, that are so highly touted, what we are hoping to see one of these days from across the way actually builds on our strengths. We have so many here. It's really important that within this space we don't forget what we've already accomplished. You can't know where to go if you don't know where you came from.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just rise briefly to thank the hon. member for her comments this morning in the House. I think that she's done a great job of bringing an important perspective to the House. There are so many issues that are before the government and that each and every one in this Assembly deals with on a regular basis, and balancing a lot of those issues is of critical importance to the province. I think it's a wonderful reminder about some of the risks that come when it comes to picking winners and losers. I'd just like to thank the member for her comments around just a refresher in some of the past history, both in this province and in other provinces, of the challenges that come when the government takes a position of believing that it knows better than the market, when the government takes a position that it knows better than business.

I think that we need to ensure that we keep these core principles at the front of our discussion. The process that we're going through: not only does it cost today, but it also costs tomorrow. When we invest in diversification and venture down these very risky investments, oftentimes there are significant losers, and generally speaking it's the taxpayer. What that prevents us from doing is helping the vulnerable. When we don't have the resources we need, it prevents us from being able to help the vulnerable, and I know that that's important to every member in this Chamber.

I just might be a little bit curious to know from the hon. member some assurances that when she spoke about losers picking governments, surely she wasn't referring to voters but to businesses.

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been a tremendously entertaining and informative morning of responses to Her Majesty's Speech from the Throne, but given that it's five minutes to noon and I'm feeling a rumbling in my tumbling, I ask for unanimous consent of the House to adjourn.

The Speaker: I'm advised, hon. member, that you should adjourn discussion.

Mr. Schmidt: I move that we adjourn debate on the Speech from the Throne.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, in light of the spirit of co-operation amongst all members of the Assembly and given that it's almost noon and we've made some very productive work here this morning, I might move that we adjourn the House until 1:30.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:55 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, March 16, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: I recognize the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly three grade 6 classes from High Prairie elementary school. There are the students; their principal, Mitch Hammond; their teachers Andrea Pollock, Nicole Pratt, Joanne Murphy, Ashley Savoie; and a few of their parents as well. There's Mr. Josh Killoran, Ms Teters – I apologize if I butcher your names a little bit – Mrs. Thompson, Mrs. Lorraine Cunningham, Mrs. Candace Barber, Mrs. Kristylonn Barton, Mrs. Karen Lauck, Mrs. Teresa Glanville, Mrs. Jennifer Anderson, Mrs. Abbie Zelman, Mrs. Marion Peacock, and Mr. Michael Strebchuk. I ask the students, principal, teachers, and parents of the grade 6 classes to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Larivee: Mr. Speaker, I beg to apologize. I also have some other introductions. Would you like me to do those now as well?

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As well, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a few of my friends and family members who are here today in anticipation of me doing my maiden speech. We have Christopher W. Brown, who was my campaign manager during my campaign; Shaun and Sandra Woodard, long-time family friends and supporters; my parents, Marilyn and Gerry Larivee; and my partner, Marcel Desjarlais, is here as well.

Chris Brown came to a sign-building party I had at my home several days already after the writ was dropped. He'd never met me before. After a few moments' conversation he drove his life into the next few weeks. I will forever be grateful for him doing that. Of course, Shaun Woodard, despite living in Leduc, chose to drive to Slave Lake to drive me around my massive constituency, including making the trip twice in a 24-hour period. Last but not least, my parents, who are my greatest fans. They've supported me in all my endeavours to date and continue to support me and express their pride in me. Love you, Mom and Dad. I ask these friends and family members to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you another class from Muriel Martin school. Today we have Ms Danielle Jean's class, and they're joined by Jodi McKay, Lauri Morrison, and Nicole Toshack. I would be honoured if they could rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this House members of Bow Cliff Seniors. This amazing organization plays a key role in the lives of the many people it serves, and I'm excited to have a number of board members here today. I would ask that my guests remain standing as I call their names: Mrs. Doreen Dyer, Mrs. Jean Langdon, Mrs. Gail Martin, Mr. John Yannitsos, Mr. Wayne Naylor, Mrs. Janet Lymer. Let us welcome them to this House with the traditional greeting.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce to you and all members of the Assembly the vice-president of corporate services for FortisAlberta, Mr. Karl Bomhof, based out of Calgary. Before becoming vice-president, Karl served as general counsel and secretary as part of the legal team at Fortis. For many Albertans FortisAlberta is the distributor of electricity to their homes and businesses from Lac La Biche to Hinton to Waterton to Medicine Hat to Battle River and in my constituency of Strathmore-Brooks. I ask that he rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two special guests from the world-renowned Banff Centre in my riding. The Banff Centre president, Janice Price, and the associate director of external and community relations, Jung-Suk Ryu, are generously hosting a reception for invited guests this evening to showcase the unique role that the Banff Centre plays in Alberta. Performing at tonight's reception will be Banff Centre alumni Don McIntyre and the T. Buckley Trio. I'm looking forward to enjoying the reception this evening and the opportunity for my colleagues to learn more about the unique role the Banff Centre plays in Alberta's postsecondary world. I'd now like to ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my absolute pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very faithful community servant in the form of Her Worship Mayor Vanessa Van der Meer, the illustrious mayor of the industrial manufacturing capital of Alberta, Linden, which is obviously in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I invite her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other guests or visitors today? The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two guests from the outstanding constituency of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. The first is Mr. Patrick Alexander, who is the reeve of Clearwater county, and Mr. Fred Nash, who is the mayor of Rocky Mountain House. Both these gentlemen have the great privilege of representing one of the greatest and most beautiful areas in all of this province and also an area that has some of the most exceptional people in this province, and it is my pleasure to work with them every day to do that. I'd ask that they stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Energy Policies

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few weeks ago the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors launched Oil Respect, a campaign to provide regular Canadians an opportunity to stand up and demand respect for Canada's oil and gas industry. Alberta's energy sector has been unfairly targeted and pushed around for years. The message from Oil Respect is simple: stop smearing an industry that is unmatched in providing good jobs and economic prosperity to all of Canada.

The campaign's website, oilrespect.ca, highlights the personal stories of so many families who are hurting during these difficult times. People are losing their jobs, Mr. Speaker, by the thousands, businesses are going bankrupt, and families are losing their homes and savings. The Canadian oil and gas industry meets the toughest environmental standards in the world, employs 500,000 Canadians, is the largest private-sector investor in Canada, and contributes $17 billion per year to government revenues. The fact is that Alberta can't just rely on oil prices bouncing back for our industry to thrive. The U.S. is now our number one competitor and consumer. Eastern Canadian politicians seem more intent on blocking Canadian oil in order to accept tankers from unenvironmental and unethical regimes like Saudi Arabia and Nigeria.

Oil workers are rightly demanding all levels of government defend and promote their industry and champion pipelines and stop treating them as second-class workers in Canada's most important and profitable industry. They demand that their government demonstrate that they value oil and gas, oil and gas jobs, and expect them to fight as tenaciously for pipelines as they fight for carbon taxes. They expect their leaders to stop working against them with more royalty reviews and higher taxes. They expect all political leaders to speak out against unnecessary delays in approving new pipelines, including Ottawa's challenges to the National Energy Board, that bring further uncertainty to an industry that is already suffering. If any government cares at all about Canadian jobs and the Canadian economy, it should fight for this industry and show it the respect it deserves.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Bow Cliff Seniors

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to have a wonderful community of seniors in my riding of Calgary-Currie. Let me tell you about Bow Cliff Seniors. Bow Cliff Seniors is celebrating their 40th anniversary. Founded in 1975, Bow Cliff Seniors has been an anchor in the community where seniors socialize, support one another, and learn new things. Bow Cliff cleverly uses their resources in partnerships with other nearby groups such as the Hellenic society, which hosts Greek fest; the Calgary lawn bowlers, which also teaches the young among us; and Spruce Cliff community centre, which hosts community events for local immigrant youth. All of these events are must-attend social events for both young and old. When not hosting large events, Bow Cliff members participate in arts and craft classes, music, games, and weekly luncheons. The renowned band the Rhythm Katz practises here and performs all across southern Alberta.

On May 27 Bow Cliff will celebrate the grand opening of their new building along with the new seniors-friendly parking lot and other grounds revitalizations. I look forward to attending this exciting event with local city councillors and with a few of my colleagues from the ministries.

We know there is a need to help seniors remain in their homes as long as they are able, and Bow Cliff has helped seniors navigate the many layers of services offered in the community. I am happy to have members of Bow Cliff with us here today in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. Through Bow Cliff Seniors members form lasting friendships that provide support for one another through various stages of aging. I couldn't be more proud of having such a vibrant organization in my constituency.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Rural Issues

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, or AAMD and C, is meeting here in Edmonton. It's been a pleasure to reconnect with these hard-working mayors, reeves, and councillors, that truly have the pulse of the people.

But I must say that I've never seen this group of otherwise optimistic and hopeful people so discouraged, anxious, and angry. Why? It's because they feel that this government isn't listening to them or simply doesn't care. They see a government that has forged ahead with farm safety legislation without consulting farmers. They see a government that promised a robust consultation process to develop workable safety regulations and then scheduled the meetings during calving, seeding, and harvest. They see a government that rejected a plan to improve local input into health care in their communities. They see a government that has rejected a strategic plan to promote rural economic development. They see a government that won't give them a straight answer on linear assessment. They see a government that refuses to acknowledge that a carbon tax disproportionately penalizes rural Albertans. And to make matters worse, they know that electoral boundary redistribution is coming and that this government will in all likelihood reduce the number of rural constituencies.

Now, last year the AAMD and C adopted the motto Where It All Starts: Rural Alberta. This government would do well to remember that motto. It would do well to remember that rural Alberta is the source of much of Alberta's prosperity. Farming, ranching, mining, oil and gas production, forestry, and tourism all occur in rural Alberta. It would do well to remember that rural Albertans deserve fair treatment and respect from this government and that they don't appreciate being treated like second-class citizens. And it would do well to remember that it was the election of 12 rural MLAs that gave them their majority.

Rural Alberta is truly where it all starts. The AAMD and C municipal leaders will continue to put the needs of rural Alberta in front of this government. It's high time that you paid them some respect and paid them some attention.

Delaney Veterinary Services

Cortes-Vargas: Mr. Speaker, I recently toured an outstanding veterinary facility in my constituency. It was my pleasure to recognize Delaney Veterinary Services. The passion that their staff has for equine care is evident from the moment you walk in. I was greeted by a caring staff, who shared with me how it all started.

Dr. Lana Delaney grew up on a farm outside of Grande Prairie, Alberta. She grew up around horses. Her family has always been active in thoroughbred horse racing, and in 2008 Dr. Delaney opened up Delaney Veterinary Services, which works exclusively with horses, donkeys, and mules. It started by offering ambulatory services to the equine community but now has become a state-of-the-art, full-service medical, reproductive, and surgical referral centre of western Canada. Delaney specializes in acupuncture, performance, dentistry, and reproduction and is the only hospital providing multiple-board-certified specialists 24 hours a day. They provide extensive emergency care for all types of conditions, including wounds, fractures, eye injuries, and acute lameness and infection.

I'm very proud to have Delaney Veterinary Services, central and north Alberta's premier equine veterinary facility, in my constituency, and I look forward to continuing to support their work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Sexual Assault Centre of Edmonton

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and a privilege to rise today to highlight the important work that the Sexual Assault Centre of Edmonton is doing in my constituency of Edmonton-Meadowlark and across this province. As representatives for our community we have an opportunity to learn about the important initiatives that nonprofits do to support the vulnerable people in our communities. SACE is a feminist-based charitable organization that supports children, adolescents, and adults who have experienced sexual abuse, assault, and violence.

On February 10 many of my colleagues and I had the opportunity to join SACE for their We Believe fundraiser. It was an incredibly well-attended event. Survivors such as the inspirational Sheldon Kennedy shared their stories while raising money to support this important cause. We Believe is SACE's most recent campaign to support and celebrate survivors for their strength and resiliency. The campaign was hugely successful. It raised awareness across the province while demonstrating our commitment to standing up against sexual violence, which affects people in all of our communities.

Nonprofits such as SACE are an incredible asset for our communities as they work with some of the most vulnerable people in our society. Recently they have come out in support of gender inclusivity within our schools by denying the harmful myth that the creation of trans-inclusive washrooms will lead to an increase in sexual violence. These harmful stereotypes are counterproductive. They often lead to violence and abuse against the trans individuals that we are trying to support.

I'm proud that our government is standing up for their rights. SACE's dream is to have a world without sexual violence, a vision our government fully supports. I would like to thank the Sexual Assault Centre of Edmonton for their ongoing commitment to creating a more caring and inclusive province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Waste-water Treatment in Taber

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to speak about an issue that is affecting the town of Taber, in my constituency. The town's industrial sewage lagoon system is long past the end of its life. There was a waste-water overflow on January 14, another waste-water overflow on February 11, each of which was properly reported, thankfully.

Luckily, these weren't the worst of it. If the system fails, it puts the community of Taber at risk, and to make a bad situation worse, the town could be penalized and fined by Environment up to $500,000 if it is not remedied. Their funding application under the Alberta municipal waste-water and water partnership was declined by Alberta Transportation. In fact, there are no present programs that will effectively and specifically help to rectify this problem. The town alone simply cannot afford to pay for this massive upgrade. If this government is looking for a shovel-ready project, this would be it.

My staff have been asking the minister of environment to meet with Taber's mayor for close to a month so that this problem can be addressed head on. Residents of Taber need and deserve at least a response. If the government has an internal assessment of this situation which is different from Taber's, we hope that they will share it. It is my sincere hope that this government can commit to working with Taber for an actual solution. Actions speak louder than words, but we would take at least a response on this issue.

Thanks.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Job Creation

Mr. Jean: The double impact of the NDP's risky economic agenda and low oil prices is being felt all over Alberta. According to Edmonton's chief economist over 1 in 10 jobs have been lost in Red Deer just over the last 12 months. In Calgary the unemployment rate is now higher than Windsor's and Halifax's, and for the first time in three decades unemployment is higher in Alberta than in Quebec. These aren't just statistics; these are people, Albertans, in need of hope. This Premier has done nothing for these Albertans in the last 10 months. Why?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I completely and entirely reject the premise of the Official Opposition leader's question. The fact of the matter is that while we have lost a number of jobs – and we understand that Albertans are suffering and worried and concerned, and we share that with them – that is the result of the price of oil dropping, and Albertans know that.

Secondly, it is not the case that we've done nothing. We are working very hard. We've already moved forward on several elements of our plan, which I am happy to talk about in answer to the next question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jean: Here's what this Premier has accomplished in the last 10 months: put our energy sector on pins and needles with a six-month royalty review; raised business taxes, raised personal taxes, and raised gas taxes as oil was plummeting; introduced a $3 billion carbon tax that every Albertan will pay; and as the job situation became worse, the NDP sat on their hands. Wildrose wants to give people hope. Our 12-point action plan for jobs delivers for Albertans. Will the Premier accept more than just one of our proposals?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, our government is focused on diversifying the economy and creating jobs, which I know is something that the member opposite is not a fan of. He doesn't think diversification is something that we should focus on. Nonetheless, you know, there's one element of his plan that really raises a lot of questions, this issue of getting rid of red tape. I'm curious: is the member opposite seeking to get rid of red tape in order to help his candidate in Calgary-Greenway, who apparently is not a fan of ensuring that minors are not sold alcohol?

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

Mr. Jean: Shameful.

The Premier knows that red tape cost businesses in Alberta, just in the last 10 years, a billion dollars. Now, if we could reduce red tape alone in this province, we could do wonderful things for the people of Alberta. We could get rid of every single regulation when we introduce a new one, for instance. That would be a very simple thing. We could have a single business licensing system right across Alberta in the municipalities. We could actually help Albertans with red tape, not fearmonger and make up stories as the Premier is doing. Frankly, it's unbecoming.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that red tape is the right-wing version of regulations. Here are a couple of examples of regulations. When one runs a liquor store, one ought not to sell alcohol to someone they suspect might be a minor, so one should question whether someone is or isn't. Also, one should take a program in order to make sure that they don't sell alcohol to someone who is clearly inebriated. Yet these folks are supporting somebody who thinks that not following those rules is, apparently, a way to create jobs.

The Speaker: Second question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Oil Tanker Transportation on the West Coast

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked the Premier about building a common front with the Premier of B.C. on lifting the federal tanker ban on B.C.'s north coast. The Premier didn't really answer the question. The tanker ban ends all hopes of ever getting a pipeline to Kitimat or Prince Rupert. I know that the Premier campaigned against the Northern Gateway pipeline, but surely she agrees that a sweeping tanker ban is a very bad idea for Alberta. Does the Premier agree that the Prime Minister's ban on tankers is harmful to Alberta, harmful to Canada, and that the ban needs to be lifted immediately?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad that the Leader of the Official Opposition is so concerned about B.C.'s LNG industry. However, the fact of the matter is that our government is focused on developing and establishing consensus across the country through reasonable negotiations for a pipeline either east or west, and that involves evaluating the options that are realistic in both cases and having respectful conversations with people, not tweeting at them, not calling them names, but having respectful conversations, which is what we will continue to do.

Mr. Jean: Thank you for the non answer. Mr. Speaker, this issue is important, very important. B.C. will very soon need federal approval for tankers for its planned liquid natural gas terminals and export strategy. Alberta will also need the same tanker approval to get our oil products to market. Will the Premier write to the Prime Minister and make the official request that the tanker ban can be lifted so both Alberta and British Columbia can get our products to market?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I will do and what I have been doing and what I will continue to do is to work with the federal government to promote the need for them to ensure that there is a process in place that is reasonable and meaningful, with a beginning, a middle, and an end, to ensure that the necessary pipelines that we require are put in place. That is what we will continue to do. I've had conversations about this issue with the Prime Minister as well. He knows where we stand on it. But the key is that we need to work with them collaboratively, not grandstand, not position, to find a solution.

Mr. Jean: Like I said yesterday, the Premier has an opportunity to get British Columbia onside with pipelines. Media reports say that the Pacific NorthWest LNG project is now before the federal cabinet for approval. For it to be approved by the Prime Minister, we need to lift the tanker ban and not let federal GHG policies kill this project. Alberta is in the same boat with our pipelines projects as British Columbia. Now is the time for this Premier to take advantage of this important opportunity to make common cause with British Columbia on these issues that matter to both of our provinces. Why does she refuse to do so?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I've answered this question several times now. I don't refuse to do so. I've been speaking with our colleagues in B.C., speaking with our colleagues to the east, speaking with the Prime Minister, speaking with their officials, doing everything we can to look at all the options that are available to get our product to tidewater, and I'll continue to do that.

Emergency Medical Dispatch Services in Calgary

Mr. Barnes: The mayor of Calgary has publicly stated that centralizing ambulance services in Calgary will increase response times, lower patient outcomes, and cost more money, and Wildrose has the data to prove it. Last year Calgary experienced 39 red alerts. In Edmonton, where the dispatch system is operated by AHS, they had nearly a thousand. That's over 27 hours when Alberta's capital was left without a single available ambulance. Why is the Health minister making centralization a priority for Calgary when they clearly don't want or need it?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. Mr. Speaker, certainly, red alerts were something that we were concerned about during the election, and we knew that it would only get worse if we went forward with the proposed plan from the last government, which was to cut $800 million from public health care. That's why we restored that funding. I wish members opposite would have voted in support of it.

Obviously, we want to make sure that we have access to timely response times, and that's why we're continuing to work with both municipalities. Good news: in the city of Edmonton the red alert instances have gone down by half this year, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Barnes: While Calgarians expect quality services and their local decision-makers need clarity, the minister dithers. The minister's indecision is costing more than $60,000 per month to run an unnecessary AHS dispatch centre. AHS has sunk $10 million and growing into an experiment that Calgary does not want, with the mayor asking: why are we even having this discussion? The current holding pattern is expensive and unfair to Calgarians. Will the minister focus her efforts and resources on real problems with EMS instead of looking for fixes in all the wrong places?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When somebody calls 911, the closest ambulance needs to be sent to provide medical care, and we want to make sure that we do provide a timely response to everyone, obviously. In rare cases – we have about 500,000 calls every year. Decades of mismanagement by the previous government undermined the hard work of dedicated staff. The Official Opposition plan to cut billions of dollars from public health care would only lead to longer wait times. In terms of getting it right for Calgary, I'm going to take the time to make the right decision; I'm not going to rush to make the wrong one.

2:00

Mr. Barnes: There are very real and significant problems with AHS's bungling of centralization, and once upon a time the NDP used to acknowledge this, too. With an EMS system in crisis and communities struggling to keep adequate ambulance coverage, it is inexcusable that AHS continues to obsess over ways to centralize Calgary's dispatch. This government has enough problems with Alberta Health Services to solve as it is. Will the minister listen to Calgarians and cancel what the mayor of Calgary has called, quote, a plan that is just not credible?

Ms Hoffman: I'll tell you what's not credible, Mr. Speaker: making allegations that you're somehow going to improve health care when you're proposing to cut billions of dollars from the provincial treasury. That's ludicrous. [interjections]

In terms of moving forward, we're certainly working with Alberta Health Services, the Health Quality Council of Alberta, with regions throughout the province, and with local leaders. That's why I'm taking the time to meet with the mayor, go through the data. I want to make sure that we get this right for the people of Alberta. [interjections] We owe it to them to make sure that when they call 911, no matter what, the fastest response time is available. So we're working on that, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Will you keep down the volume, please?
The leader of the third party.

Government Policies

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today at the AAMD and C ministerial forum I heard a few interesting answers that I think Albertans will want to know more about. Let's talk about paying back borrowed money. Today the Minister of Transportation said – and I thank him for that – that borrowed money must be repaid. Well, I could not agree more. To the Premier: with an upcoming $10.4 billion deficit and no balanced budget on the government's schedule, other than selling pot in liquor stores, as the Finance minister suggested, when and how does your NDP government plan to pay back all the money that you are going to borrow on the backs of Albertans?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. There is no question that the fiscal challenges that we find ourselves in are huge right now. We've lost roughly $8 billion of revenue. So there are different choices that we can make, and indeed this was something that the people of Alberta were asked to weigh in on last May. They did weigh in, and they said that they did not want dramatic slashing and burning in order to balance the budget over the interests of long-term recovery or community supports, which support all of Albertans. So we chose to follow that line, and that's what we will continue to do.

Mr. McIver: Well, that's billions borrowed and no plan.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs, in front of hundreds of municipal leaders, today announced that the big-city charter is, quote, only a pilot project. I can't help but wonder if the mayors of Edmonton and Calgary have been told that. If they have been told that, that their big-city charter is only a pilot project, I wonder how long they are expecting the pilot to last and under what conditions. If the minister has not told them, will the minister now do so, or is it time to reconsider this morning's remarks?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Absolutely, we're going to develop substantial regulations, and we are tremendously committed to the city charter process, to build a new, enhanced relationship with Alberta's two largest cities. Our largest cities have both unique challenges and unique capacities that we look to deal with and address and harness as we move forward. In terms of those discussions we're having amazing conversations with the leadership of those two cities from right across the government, and we look forward to having very substantial things to bring forward that will make ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: After laying this morning's egg ...

The Speaker: One moment, please. I heard someone whistling in the House just now. I'm not sure where that came from. Would you please desist from it in the future.

Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. After laying this morning's egg, I'm sure the conversations will be very interesting.

Mr. Speaker, the Seniors and Housing minister, when asked about affordable housing, spoke not of funding but rather of changes to the Municipal Government Act. I could not help but wonder and will now ask if the minister was hinting broadly to the introduction of inclusionary zoning, and if not, what mechanism in the MGA will the government use to encourage affordable housing across Alberta, and how will it work?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The process of developing the MGA, as the member knows, involved extensive communication and consultation from right across the whole province, and there were many, many individuals who brought forward concerns that affordable housing could possibly be addressed through that. There were a variety of concerns that came from a number of stakeholders, and moving forward, we will find the right balance between all of them to support Albertans and move forward with the best options for a sustainable province and municipalities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Flood Recovery and Mitigation

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today marks exactly 1,000 days since the 2013 flood, and 1,000 days later there's still no certainty on flood mitigation. The DRP system is still broken, and the misguided floodway buyout program has created gaps in our neighbourhoods. Nearly 100,000 people live or make a living in downtown Calgary. Those people, the businesses they work for, and the residents in river communities are waiting for confirmation of the timeline for meaningful upstream flood mitigation. A simple question to the Premier: will the Springbank dry dam be completed as planned in time for the 2019 flood season?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, hon. member, for the question. We're committed to keeping this project on time and on track, and I can assure the hon. member – I know many of his constituents are concerned about this – that we are moving forward with our negotiations with landowners, and we do believe that we will be able to get our environmental impact assessment completed this year. That will keep the project on time and on track.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I sincerely hope that's the case.

Moving on to the disaster recovery program, the DRP continues to let Albertans down, and the very same people who made the mess are being asked to fix it. Now, several reports have been written by outside experts and by end-users of the system, most notably a report written by the High River DRP action committee. The problems are clear, and now it's time for real change. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: will you make fundamental changes in your department and put new people in charge of the DRP to make sure the system works for Albertans, not for bureaucrats?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to stand in tremendous support of the staff who work on my DRP program for the incredible advances they have made recently. We have heard from the people of High River what changes needed to happen, and we have moved forward with them very aggressively to make the changes that they suggested, and we continue to respect and engage with them. The Auditor General questioned the previous government's decision in terms of advancing this program but very much supported and had confidence in the actions we're taking now, that will make a real difference for Albertans. We're already on the way there.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect, Minister, I've spoken and worked with many constituents who still wrestle with DRP, and I can assure you that some of the leadership within the DRP system has not met their expectations.

Another big issue still outstanding from the flood is the properties purchased in that ill-advised floodway relocation program. I'll again ask the Minister of Municipal Affairs: will you commit here and now to reselling those properties once flood mitigation is in place to recover at least some of the money wasted on that program and make our communities whole again?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree 100 per cent that that buyout program completed by the previous government was a disaster in many ways, that came after a disaster that they already had to deal with. However, we made the best of it and are dealing with the situation. I have very clearly in the past committed that as soon as we have mitigation in place, we will seek to resettle that community as has been advised, and I look forward to being able to do that in the moment, once mitigation is in place, to make that community full of houses once again.

Coal-fired Electric Power Plant Retirement

Mr. Rosendahl: Mr. Speaker, my constituents of West Yellowhead are concerned about the government's decision to phase out coal-fired generation facilities. They're worried about this and what this is going to mean for them. Can the Minister of Economic Development and Trade tell the House why the government decided to phase out coal?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. Pollution from coal-burning power plants is bad for our health, bad for the environment, and quite frankly it's economically unsustainable. People who are most at risk are children, seniors, and people who are playing sports outside. The fact of the matter is that 12 of the 18 remaining coal-fired plants were already slated for closure under federal legislation, with the remaining plants to be phased out under provincial regulation by 2030. Transitioning from coal to cleaner sources of energy is going to protect our health, our economy, and our environment.

2:10

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you for the answer.

Mr. Speaker, given that my constituents have been asking me for clarity on the process, again to the same minister: can the minister explain the role of the coal facilitator and why it is that he has been engaged to deal only with the companies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question. Earlier today I announced that Mr. Boston will be responsible for working with coal-fired electricity companies, again, particularly with a focus on those that were scheduled to be online post 2030. Mr. Boston is tasked with providing recommendations to government to ensure, firstly, that transition to cleaner sources of power is as seamless as possible; secondly, that we maintain a reliable electricity system and stability and stable prices for Albertans; and, thirdly, that this process doesn't unnecessarily strand capital.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many constituents currently rely on the coal industry for their jobs, back to the minister of economic development: what support will this government provide for the affected communities, workers, and companies during this transition?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for this very important question. Our plan is based on three key principles: supporting communities and workers, protecting Alberta consumers and taxpayers, and fairness to companies and investors. I've already met with community leaders and labour groups who represent the workers in the affected community and will continue to do so. Our transition plan is going to work with all affected workers and communities to ensure their economic success and sustainability throughout this transition.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Red Deer Regional Hospital

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Health on behalf of all central Albertans. At the beginning of March the Red Deer hospital was flooded. Today five of nine operating rooms are still closed, and the hospital is only able to operate at 37 per cent capacity. Critical surgeries are being cancelled. The chief of orthopaedic surgery has called the resulting delayed closure a disaster, chaos, just unbelievable misfortune for the patients of central Alberta. Now the wait time for repairs to these operating rooms is getting longer. Don't Albertans deserve better?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, the flood at the Red Deer hospital has impacted a number of individuals. It was on March 1 as a result of a sprinkler system being activated during construction work. We're investing in that hospital. The flood affected five operating rooms. Unfortunately, a number of elective surgeries have been delayed, but people who need important, essential, life-saving surgeries still are going to be expedited to the top of the list. We don't want anyone to wait, but it's elective surgeries, to correct the record.

Mr. Orr: Thank you to the minister for the answer.

Given that we have heard that while AHS said on March 2 that the five destroyed operating rooms will be torn apart and rebuilt starting this week, in fact there were delays not to the cleanup but to the start of rebuilding due to arguments over insurance coverage and who's going to pay for the damage. Can the minister not put the full force of her ministry behind getting the hospital functioning and expedite construction while insurance issues are sorted out?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. There certainly is repair work going on literally around the clock, 24 hours a day, seven days a week, to get these surgeries rescheduled as soon as possible and the space back online. We're hopeful that three of the ORs will be back up in the second week of April, with the remaining two in the following week. The 12 in-patient beds will be available around the same time. We're working to make sure that we bring the space back online. This certainly was an unfortunate incident that happened at the hospital, but we're doing everything we can to get the space back up and available to meet patient needs.

Mr. Orr: Thank you for the timeline. That helps because AHS had stated that two of the ORs would be up and running probably within a week, and of course they're not. They were expecting to have full function again within four to six weeks, and now possibly because of mould they'd be required to completely gut the spaces and increase the repair time to many months while the medical equipment actually is in Sea-Can. How is the minister going to provide OR services in one of Alberta's essential OR centres for almost 500,000 Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The operating rooms have increased hours, including 4 p.m. to midnight operations as well, which allows for 20 to 25 additional cases per week, so that's certainly helping us move through some of the backlog. Two operating rooms remain open for emergencies that are happening right now in the evenings as well because we want to make sure that emergencies have opportunities to be life saving. We, of course, want to make sure that the ORs are absolutely safe and clean, which is why the timeline is taking slightly longer, because there's nothing worse than acquiring an additional illness or an infection because you weren't in a safe operating space.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Farm and Ranch Worker Regulation Consultation

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the previous session of the Legislature we provided sound advice to the government on Bill 6. My colleagues from Grande Prairie, Vermilion, and Calgary-South East suggested numerous amendments to improve Bill 6 to make sure that the mistakes they made before weren't made again. In spite of the help offered, it appears the government wasn't actually listening. To the agriculture minister. Rural Albertans are still concerned about how Bill 6 is going to affect their families. What was the rationale behind holding the consultation meetings only in Calgary and Edmonton as opposed to, say, actual rural communities?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Initially, we're still working on the number of members and the names of the members who will be at these consultation tables, the technical working groups. Once we have that, we're going to remain somewhat flexible if it's looking like some of those tables would have a better location to meet. We're going to remain flexible. For now those initial meetings will be in Calgary and Edmonton, but we'll remain somewhat flexible to look around the province to see if there's another area that would make more sense.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Jansen: Well, Mr. Speaker, the time to be flexible was when you started the consultation.

It's no wonder rural Albertans are suspicious of this government. Holding consultations in urban centres, holding consultation meetings during seeding and harvest: it seems that they're doing everything in their power to keep farmers and ranchers from showing up. To the minister of agriculture. Everyone supports making farms and ranches safer working places. Will you agree to make a more fulsome consultation process so that all the voices are heard?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. It was always the plan to be as flexible as possible to ensure that we have as many voices as possible. At the second stage of consultation, once we have the recommendations of the technical working groups, we'll be able to then have the government write draft regulations. Those draft regulations would be available as well, to hear from as many Albertans, farming and ranching communities, everybody interested in agriculture, all Albertans, to have their input at that time. I'm looking forward to continuing this process.

Ms Jansen: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've got a lot of folks here who can tell you where the rural areas are.

I recall the former jobs minister telling this House that consultations last fall highlighted democracy in action. Given that it's now clear that the government has decided that limited involvement from both rural Albertans and stakeholders is superior to actual feedback, to the Premier: will you hold back on drafting any new regulations until proper consultation is done?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There's absolutely no question that we will do that, and that is the message that we have delivered consistently throughout this. To be clear, the people who have already been talked to about participating in the working groups are rural Albertans, are farmers, are chicken producers, are canola producers. Those are the people that are being talked to, so it's absolutely ridiculous to suggest that we are not talking to rural Albertans because that's exactly who we will be talking to.

Coal-fired Electric Power Plant Retirement (continued)

Mr. MacIntyre: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Premier recently said that she intended to review Enmax's transfer of unprofitable power contracts back to the Balancing Pool, claiming that it's due to the low price of coal. FYI, Enmax's move was pursuant to 4.3(j), a standard clause within power purchase agreements, that says that when a change in law could reasonably be expected to render continued performance unprofitable, a buyer may terminate the arrangement and shall not be liable for any termination payment, and these rights were confirmed by the Balancing Pool. Did this government create a climate plan without analyzing its contractual liabilities with the power companies?

2:20

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To be clear, the contracts that were negotiated by the previous government with these power companies allow for them to rely on the contract when the prices are high and they get to charge consumers lots, but when the prices go low and the market would save consumers, they have a great big loophole that they can use to get out of the contract. Now, we didn't negotiate that contract. That just is what the previous government saddled us with. That being said, it's really very important to understand that we need to move forward on this issue in the interests of all Albertans.

Mr. MacIntyre: The reason for the return of the contract had nothing to do with the price of power in the Balancing Pool; it had to do with the change in the law under 4.3(j). After an answer like that, I wonder what else this government doesn't know.

Given that the hon. minister of environment has consistently demonstrated some ignorance of the actual economics of the federal coal phase-out and that this plan allowed Alberta investors sufficient returns and cost the taxpayer nothing and provided sufficient warning for retaining and redeployment of workers in communities like Hanna and Forestburg, can the minister explain how her plan has resulted in Sheerness, for example, facing closure in the next six months and how somehow that's better than the former 2034 timeline?

Ms Phillips: I'll just, Mr. Speaker, by way of response, I guess, read out the federal end-of-life dates: Battle River 3, 2019; Sundance 1, 2019; HR Milner, 2019; Sundance 2, 2019; Battle River 4, 2025; Sundance 3, 2026; and Sheerness is 2036. So that is one of the remaining six, which is why we have said that we are going to be accelerating some of those down to 2030. That one will have a short amount of time . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In November of 2015 the industry voluntarily offered to dial down 20 per cent of our coal fleet without compensation, without job loss, without impacting power prices. Not wanting to miss an opportunity to miss an opportunity, this government flatly refused the offer. Given that this government had an opportunity to immediately reduce greenhouse gas in November at a rate of .75 megatonnes per month, how can the minister of environment stand now in this House and claim that she's some kind of saviour to our planet?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, the science is clear despite what the Official Opposition may claim. The health effects of coal-fired electricity are also clear. I know that the Official Opposition would like to throw shade on the science, throw shade on the health effects, but the evidence is clear. Now, this dial down, dial up business: we didn't find that to be particularly in the public interest, which is why we accepted the recommendation from the climate leadership plan to end coal-fired electricity in 2030.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, Calgarians deserve to know that ambulances will come when they call, but the fact is that this government's plan to centralize EMS could increase the number of times ambulances won't be there for Calgarians by over 2,000 per cent. This is not fearmongering; it's fact. Not only is this plan not needed, but it's not wanted. Calgary's decision-makers know it will hurt our community. The minister knows the facts. How can Calgarians trust a government that robs them of locally managed, reliable emergency services?

Ms Hoffman: I beg to differ with the reference to facts because, of course, you need to have apples and apples to be able to draw an inference. I think it's important that we actually do look at the science, we actually do talk to the chief paramedic and all the other paramedics who are working throughout the province to make sure we get the right model moving forward, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely, we're going to make sure that that model is in place and that I have an opportunity to meet with the mayor on an ongoing basis. I've been working with him already for the last 10 months and will continue to work with him as we move forward.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Minister.

Seeing as Calgary is already hurting enough without this needless bureaucratic plan and given that Calgary now has a higher unemployment rate than Atlantic cities like Halifax and St. John's and given that the Wildrose has introduced a common-sense 12-point jobs action plan to get Calgarians working again, will the government commit to implementing the low-cost, high-reward Wildrose plan?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's good to see that there are a couple of points in the plan where the Wildrose has been listening to our Speech from the Throne and the many speeches that I've given as far as a real plan to work with industry, with businesses province-wide to look at creating jobs. What I find quite interesting is that the Wildrose is claiming that now is not the time to diversify. Well, quite frankly, part of the reason that Alberta is facing and feeling the impacts of the low price of oil more significantly than any other region is because of our overreliance on one sector.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Panda: Well, we will not apologize that our jobs plan isn't just a job description. Considering that our plan would cost very little to get Albertans working and given that there are hours-long lineups at Calgary's Alberta Works and that hundreds of people who want to get back to work are being turned away, to the minister: besides the failed jobs subsidy and an empty jobs bill, what specifically is the government doing to help Calgarians get back to work?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'll tell the member what we are doing. We've made a number of announcements, including freeing up $2 billion worth of capital through ATB, through AIMCo, through the AEC as well. The opposition and the House will be happy to hear, when we announce our budget, the number of initiatives that we'll be rolling out. What I find quite interesting is that within their plan the Wildrose talks about infrastructure investment. Yet they can't have it both ways. They would cut $9 billion from our infrastructure budget, yet claim in their plan that they want to help build infrastructure. I don't know if they're coming or going.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

AIMCo Investments

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has touted a few initiatives it claims are creating jobs. One plan, as outlined in Budget 2015, directs AIMCo to invest 3 per cent of the heritage trust fund, approximately $540 million, in Alberta-based companies. That direction came four and a half months ago, and to date AIMCo has only invested $46 million, less than 10 per cent, yet the economic development minister continues to boast about it. To the Finance minister: when you announced this new mandate, how many new jobs did you expect the $540 million to create?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question, member opposite. When we worked to put together our economic stimulation plan for Budget 2015, we went to AIMCo and we talked to them about the amount of capital that they could invest in Alberta. We are not taking the approach that we're picking the winners and losers. We're letting the professionals do that. AIMCo is finding the best places to invest capital, and that's happening as we speak.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this new direction from your government needs to dovetail with AIMCo's legislative mandate and given that AIMCo has received guiding principles from Treasury Board and Finance to help fulfill the direction of Budget 2015 and given that on March 2 at the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund meeting I asked for a copy of the guiding principles, which we have yet to receive, again to the Finance minister: will you immediately make these principles public to all Albertans?

Mr. Ceci: If the guiding principles are there and they are not subject to protection in some way, I will make them public.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act requires AIMCo to maximize long-term financial returns when investing the fund's assets and given that the government's new investment direction may conflict with the fund's legislative mandate to ensure that its investment always achieves the best possible returns for Albertans, again to the Finance minister: is this government inadvertently restricting AIMCo's latitude to invest globally, or is it considering creating amendments to legislation to give your ministry more ability to direct AIMCo's investments?

2:30

Mr. Ceci: Nothing could be further from the truth, I guess – well, I know nothing could be further from the truth. What we are doing is working with AIMCo. They are the people who assisted us and Finance officials to say that the investment would work. Only 3 per cent of the heritage trust fund is being invested in this fashion. We are still getting the best return for the investments AIMCo is making on behalf of the heritage trust fund. There has not been a change in that regard.

School Construction Schedule

Ms Drever: Mr. Speaker, last October my constituents, like many Albertans, were shocked to learn that schools being built in their communities would be open later than expected. In Calgary-Bow we're still waiting for the modernization of Bowness high school. It's clear these delays came as a result of poor planning and electioneering by the previous government. Well, thankfully, there's a new government in place. To the Minister of Education: what is being done to ensure schools are being built in a timely manner?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. Yes. We are in the midst of the very largest infrastructure school building project in the history of this province. Bowness is back on track, and so is Cougar Ridge middle school. We're working very hard through some new systems to make sure we track these projects, which affect not just, of course, your constituency but right across the entire province. The next time someone talks about borrowing money and being so far in debt, just remember that you're getting a school in your area, that your kids need and your community needs, too.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that these schools have already been delayed and given that the schools are needed now, to the same minister: is the funding required for these schools being advanced in a timely manner to keep projects on track?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we've done an analysis of tracking each of the projects, and it's already paid quite a few dividends. We've introduced a pay-as-you-go sort of model that moves the money when they need it for the next contractual development of the project. We believe that on an annualized basis this new system is going to save more than $15 million for this calendar year. It's important that we build these schools efficiently and we get the job done and that every dollar is being used properly.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that schools can provide valuable supports to our communities outside of education, back to the same minister: can you detail for Albertans some of the vulnerable student groups that will benefit from these new and modernized schools?

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, for example, in Calgary we've got a modernization of the aboriginal community school to support First Nations, Métis, and Inuit students. We have a replacement for Christine Meikle school to benefit students with severe special needs. We have, as I said before, 232 projects across the province during this economic downturn. This is a great time to make sure that we are getting these projects done. It helps with employment, and it helps to put kids in classrooms that have been modernized and built brand new.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

School Fees

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This House has seen minister after minister make and break campaign promises, and the members opposite are no exception. Many Albertans are still waiting for action on some key campaign promises that they made during the last election. After listening to the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow deliver a puffball question, I thought: let's start today off with an NDP-style puffball question. Will the Minister of Education please remind this House what the NDP campaign promise was regarding school fees? Hopefully he can answer that.

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we can see that our collaborative and close work with school boards across the province is starting to pay some dividends. We had Calgary Catholic last night say that they are going to reduce instructional fees. We have Lethbridge, I believe, debating to reduce instructional fees and St. Albert as well. We're working very closely during these tough economic times to make sure that we fund enrolment, make sacrifices in other areas to put money into our schools to make sure the kids have the learning that they need and that we can make reductions where we can possibly manage.

The Speaker: First supplemental question.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess the minister has forgotten his own campaign promises.

Since the Wildrose policy regarding school fees was to find efficiencies in education, which would actually allow us to eliminate school fees across the province without raising taxes, and given that in the fall the minister had province-wide discussions with school boards to come up with a provincial guideline regarding fees, will the minister tell the House not only what his new policy on school fees will be but actually when it will be in place?

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, you can't have it both ways. You want to make massive cuts in public services with education and so forth and then eliminate school fees as well. I mean, it's living in a fantasy world. We live in the real world here. We're making sure that we're making plans with school boards every step of the way. We're working to find ways to reduce school fees. We will do so, and we will do it under these difficult circumstances because – you know what? – we make it a priority for education in this province within our caucus. I'm very proud of my caucus and my cabinet.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Edmonton Catholic school board informed parents in a letter yesterday that they would step out in faith and in support of their families who were struggling through the downturn in our economy, that they would eliminate school fees this year, and since that sounds very much like the Wildrose policy, on which we campaigned, to eliminate school fees without raising taxes, is this minister prepared to implement the Wildrose policy on school fees province-wide?

Mr. Eggen: Well, certainly, what I am committed to doing is to make sure that we fund public education based on enrolment. During tough economic times, Mr. Speaker, that is an extraordinary achievement that I'm very, very proud of. We know that there's a whole different fee structure around there. It's been a bit like the Wild West over the last dozen years or so. We're rounding up those school fees to make sure that we make rational decisions and make sure that we have an equitable system in place and that we're funding every student according to enrolment and according to their needs.

Thank you.

Pipeline Construction

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, last week the Premier advised this House that the United States is now our biggest competitor in exporting oil. This isn't news to the Progressive Conservatives. We were well aware that in 2013 the United States produced more oil than Saudi Arabia. Last week the Premier said – I'm quoting from Hansard – that her position was that “the Keystone pipeline was simply going to be another mechanism to sell to the very market which is now our competitor, so [this] wasn't necessarily in our best interest.” That couldn't be further from the truth. To the Energy minister: isn't it even more important to make sure that we get as many pipelines to tidewater so that we can make sure that the United States doesn't take up our market share?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. It's absolutely imperative that we get pipelines both east and west to get our products to market, and we also need to go beyond our competitor, who is the U.S., and develop markets in all parts of the world and continue to move our product to anywhere that will buy it.

Mr. Fraser: Given that the previous government laid the foundation for pipelines to tidewater in all directions and given that this government is now expressing a desire to have a pipeline or two, which is, by the way, in contradiction to your election platform, to the same minister: is your department actively exploring the proposal to build a pipeline through northern Canada to access the Trans-Alaska pipeline to reach port on the Pacific?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, the premise of that question is absurd. The previous government for decades was unable to get a pipeline built in any direction. Quite frankly, where our government has already made much progress is primarily, first and foremost, through the climate leadership plan, where I can tell you that Alberta is taking real action on the climate, as opposed to the opposition parties, that would prefer that we just talk about doing things yet fail to implement any meaningful steps. Our climate leadership plan is giving us the social licence to get pipelines built in all directions.

Mr. Fraser: Interesting, since your counterparts all over the country, NDP, blocked everything we tried to put forward.

Given that in opposition the NDP vilified Alberta corporations as corporate welfare recipients not paying their fair share and not diversifying the economy and given that the PC government had strong partnerships with companies such as NOVA, Agrium, North West upgrader, and more, today's announcement on the Resource Diversification Council is fantastic news, and it shows the quality of these corporations. To the Minister of Energy: how can these companies trust that you'll have their back when that hasn't always been politically convenient for you?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, and thank you for acknowledging that important group that made their announcement today. I am spending lots of time developing relationships and working with industry, as we've committed, to see how we can work with them to best create policy, best create messaging that will work together to create all that important business and keep some of the resources in Alberta and diversify our economy here rather than always shipping raw product out.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I advise that I hold the requisite number of copies of a report prepared by the High River Disaster Recovery Program Advocacy Committee called Finish the Job; Fix the System.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there was a point of order, but it was withdrawn by the hon. member.

Orders of the Day

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mrs. Littlewood moved, seconded by Mr. Westhead, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 16: Mr. Schmidt]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am tremendously honoured to be standing here with you today. With great respect to the indigenous people of this province I especially want to recognize the people of Treaty 8, on whose traditional territory my riding of Lesser Slave Lake exists. [Remarks in Cree] Hello; it is a fine day. Our Father, the Creator, I am thankful for all. [As submitted]

To the people of Lesser Slave Lake I give my deepest and most heartfelt thanks for choosing me to represent them in this honourable Assembly. It is my greatest honour to work hard for them every day to ensure that their best interests and the best interests of all Albertans are reflected in the decisions this government makes.

I would like to take a moment to share with you a little bit about where I come from and how I came to be brought here to this great place. From the time I was a young child growing up in Slave Lake, my parents, who are here in the gallery, made it very clear to me that not everyone was as blessed as we were. I have loving parents who made sure I had food to eat. I had a safe home to sleep in. I had clean and, quite frankly, nice clothes to wear. They had faith in me. They supported me. They encouraged me to pursue my education and to become whatever I wanted to be.

Let it be clear that I always knew that that was special and that not everybody had that and that that was an opportunity which I could never take for granted. I was raised to know that not everyone was as lucky as we were and that it was our obligation to take care of those in need. I was also taught that if you see something that needs doing, you just do it yourself, not expecting others to take care of it for you. I watched my parents live this and then followed suit myself as they quietly provided support to those in poverty, to the homeless in our community, to the elderly who lived in our community and in our neighbourhood as well.

Not only did my family personally help those vulnerable people locally and beyond, but never did I fail to recognize the role our government had to take care of them as well. We understood it to be a shared responsibility, and, Madam Speaker, in my home paying taxes was a privilege and not a four-letter word.

In my later years of high school and throughout my time in university I had several other great influences as well. I participated in the TUXIS youth parliament, which the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster did as well. I fell in love with the parliamentary process while there, and I revelled in the chance to discuss key social issues – and I have to say that I even had one year as Premier in which I got to sit in this great room as well – and spend time with young Albertans from across the province with varied perspectives. Many are amazing friends to this day, and they helped me to grow as an individual.

My career as a nurse furthered my vision and understanding of what caring for our vulnerable means. My understanding of population health made it clear to me that factors such as education, income, discrimination, housing, and the environment often have a much greater impact on health than our health care system actually does. I began to see the systemic issues that needed to be challenged.

One organization that I saw strongly advocating for improvement of our health care system and improved health outcomes for Albertans was the United Nurses of Alberta. I then became president of UNA local 315 and became actively engaged in the work within the labour movement to improve the equality of all Albertans. Being a part of UNA was very empowering and eye-opening, and I am still very proud to call those men and women sisters and brothers.

Over my first 17 years as a nurse I became more and more disturbed by the systemic issues I saw, especially by the failure of our society to take care of our elders, for whom I have been given great respect. The straw that pushed me over and led me to this place here was listening to my colleagues who worked as nurses cry in moral distress over their inability to work in the system to take care of the needs of the people they were responsible for. Madam Speaker, that is why I chose to run for Alberta's NDP in the 2015 election.

I owe a huge thanks to those who helped me get here today. Several are here with us. Again, I mentioned in my introductions Chris Brown, who worked so hard as my campaign manager, tirelessly pulling it all together so I could focus on being a candidate; Shaun Woodard, who, again, travelled many times to help me around and has always been a great friend, along with his wife, Sandra. There were so many that helped out. I cannot name them all, but a quick shout-out to Nicola, Len, Gail, and Phil and others and, of course, always my greatest fans, my parents. Then, of course, there are the more passive supporters, who are my children, aged 16, 13, and 6, who always and forevermore deserve my thanks for their patience as they share their mother's time with the people of this great province.

Now, on that note, I want to take some time to talk about the amazing constituency of Lesser Slave Lake. I have to say that Lesser Slave Lake was an amazing place to grow up, as I'm sure the hon. Minister of Health can agree, and continues to be an amazing place to live, work, and raise my children. Covering a vast portion of central northern Alberta, it is incredibly diverse in its landscape, in its industry, and in its people. I am proud to share the territory with 12 different Treaty 8 First Nations and three Métis settlements, communities that are rich with culture, face significant challenges, many due, of course, to the legacy of residential schools, but that are filled with strong, resilient, welcoming people. I have been humbled by their faith in our government to form a new relationship and to deal with the substantial concerns that exist, and I look forward to making continuous progress on this as a government.

Lesser Slave Lake's communities are home to so many strong and resilient people, from Banana Belt to Smith, from Faust to Red Earth Creek, and the generous, caring people that I serve successfully deal with the challenges that living in northern Alberta presents for isolated communities and, of course, deal with fires and floods and droughts. They have tirelessly worked to make our northern area grow and prosper. They took on the challenge to settle in the north and have developed thriving agriculture, forestry, and oil and gas industries. Never afraid to take on new challenges, the amazing people in my riding continue to innovate and develop new and better ways of doing things. For example, we are home to the Friends of Historical Northern Alberta Society, the innovative not-for-profit group that is creating an online, self-guided tour of northern Alberta to preserve history and to promote tourism.

The forestry industry, that has such a strong presence in my riding, is focused on always doing things in new and better ways. For example, Slave Lake Pulp is in the final stages of their biomethanization project, a unique project in the world which converts pulp mill effluent into electrical power through anaerobic digestion. This on-budget project uses Canadian technology and is only one small piece of the renewable energy projects happening throughout the forestry industry in our province.

We also are home to Northern Lakes College – it's centred in my riding – which has taken on the challenge of offering innovative postsecondary education programs to meet the needs of the northern community it serves. A model very different from other colleges, it addresses the isolation of many northern communities for whom leaving the community is not an option and has taken distance education to a new level in many ways. I'm very proud of that organization, and I'm happy to support the Minister of Advanced Education with ongoing support.

I'm also proud of the innovative health care solutions being developed for rural Alberta and piloted in Lesser Slave Lake. Our primary care centre in Slave Lake offers truly collaborative care with physicians, nurse practitioners, nurses, social workers, chronic disease management specialists, physiotherapists, and a whole host of other health practitioners co-located to offer comprehensive care, truly modelling the right provider in the right place at the right time. This model has not only allowed for same-day access to primary care but has also greatly facilitated staff recruitment, such a huge issue in rural Alberta to which we are tremendously responsive, and has resulted in cost savings for Albertans.

Then oil and gas, you know, absolutely, is such a core part of our riding. Obviously, we've been impacted by that, but they are ready to take on the challenges. For example, CNRL's Pelican Lake field hosts a leading-edge polymer flood, one of the largest in the world. This advanced, enhanced oil recovery technique has garnered them international attention as it dramatically increased the life of the field so that it will continue to generate both jobs and revenue for Albertans for the long term. I'm so proud of the Albertans that live in my riding for bringing this amazing project forward.

Lesser Slave Lake obviously is threaded through with many beautiful lakes and rivers, fishing, camping, and glorious beaches close to home. While residents and guests can take advantage of the modern conveniences of our communities, they are always only about five minutes away from the rivers and trails that are amazing. Rich in culture, we have live music, powwows, rodeos, theatre productions, round dances, and a rich history that we share in our museums.

Madam Speaker, there is so much to offer in Lesser Slave Lake. It is my greatest wish that all of you come to discover at some point this unexplored diamond in northern Alberta, and I look forward to hosting all of you there at some point. Thanks again for allowing me this opportunity to share about the amazing riches that Lesser Slave Lake has to offer. Hai, hai.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: The most beautiful riding in the province, another unexplored diamond.

I really enjoyed the presentation by the minister. I have actually begged her on several occasions to be invited up to Slave Lake, so she knows that I'm looking forward to the big tour. I wonder if the minister could expand on her discussion of the family care clinic in Slave Lake. I know it was created at a time of crisis. You were responding to what was probably one of this province's worst disasters. I personally have been very impressed with the way that that community pulled together, both in dealing with the crisis but also in helping to facilitate the creation of that family care clinic.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I definitely see that clinic as a model for where we need to go in the future with primary care. It certainly was a response to the fire. After the fire of 2011 in Slave Lake we actually lost a number of physicians, which left us tremendously stretched, and the ability to move forward with this clinic was an amazing thing for the community. Within it the nurse practitioners in combination with the physicians work as partners, which has now enabled same-day service and access to primary care.

I would say that a number of you here in this Assembly understand how tremendous that is, that you can get in the same day. If you are sick and you need to see somebody because you have a cold or because you need a prescription renewal, you can see someone that very same day. I find that a wonderful thing, and it's certainly been responsive to the community's needs. I look forward to talking to you more about it in the future, but it certainly is an example of where we can go. I look forward to seeing that model roll out even in High Prairie, which has a new hospital coming shortly.

Ms Fitzpatrick: I, too, enjoyed the minister's maiden speech. I know that when I was a union member, I got to have a much deeper insight into the problems that occurred. Could you just expound a little on your position with the union and how you could see a little differently the problems that were going on in health care?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have to say that when I was in university, I didn't necessarily understand what unions were about. I bought into the idea, you know, that they were, I guess, selfish per se. There's this idea out there that's completely a myth. Once I became involved with the union, it became very clear to me that for every single nurse in that room their highest priority was the very best care for the people that they took care of. We fought way harder on issues such as ensuring appropriate ratios of care and ensuring the right provider be there at the right time and the appropriate decision-making than we did on any issue that affected us directly. I'm very proud to be involved with that. I'm very proud to have listened to the stories of so many of those women and men in that room for years, and I look forward to using that information to help move forward and support the Minister of Health in improving our health care system here in Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Yes, Madam Speaker, I too would like to ask the member a question under 29(2)(a). She mentioned in her statement regarding biomethane or bioenergy, I believe, that was developed in her area. I've been fortunate enough to travel to that constituency and am impressed about the idea of job creation. I'm also going to extend a reverse invitation to the member to come to the diverse constituency of Drumheller-Stettler and actually visit the town of Hanna, which is the headquarters of her government agency known as the Special Areas Board. I wanted to ask the member if she could expound on exactly how many jobs are created by that type of diversification.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, you have 15 seconds.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think during the construction phase there were over 200 jobs and there are actually an additional, I believe, approximately 25 . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to acknowledge that I am on Treaty 6 territory and that my riding of Calgary-Bow is on Treaty 7 territory.

I'm honoured today to rise and give my maiden speech. I cannot adequately express the privilege and delight I feel standing in this Assembly amongst my colleagues. I would also like to express my gratitude to the constituents of Calgary-Bow for putting their trust in me, and I promise every day to continue listening, learning, and working hard on their behalf. They are, after all, the reason I am here, Madam Speaker.

I was elected on a platform that promised change. When I went door to door to speak with the residents of my riding, I heard their concerns around health care, education, jobs, and the care of seniors. As I campaigned, I told them that I would hold true to my strong progressive values and the values of my party, and I promise to not let them down.

I thank you for the opportunity to respond to the throne speech and would like to first take note of the celebration of International Women's Day and the struggle for personhood. The government's recognition of the struggle for human rights for all genders is something I'm very proud of.

The throne speech addressed key priorities that will benefit Albertan families in a real way. The new Alberta child benefit plan will invest $340 million, and that investment will directly help 380,000 Albertan children.

Another important priority laid out in the throne speech was the act to end predatory lending. This industry hurts vulnerable Albertans, and I'm glad this government is standing up to end predatory lending.

I am also proud of the investment of $34 billion to build roads, transit, schools, and other facilities in our province that we need to support the economy and create jobs. I hear about the need for these infrastructure projects in my riding, and I look forward to seeing the West Springs/Cougar Ridge school open in early 2017.

I would also take this opportunity to thank my family for the support they have given in all of my endeavours. Many members of my family worked tirelessly throughout my campaign. The support I receive from my family is what keeps me strong, and I can always count on my immediate family of strong, stubborn women to let me know when I am wrong. I hope my nieces Gwen and Mara will inherit that strength.

Outside of family supports, my campaign was also organized by an amazing group of volunteers. People from all over the riding came to help, and it was the hard work of these dedicated folks that made sure the signs were ordered and the phones were answered. My campaign manager worked day and night to support me and the NDP, and I am so grateful for all he has done.

The campaign was an interesting experience, and balancing my university classes, part-time work, and an active door-knocking schedule in April and May was challenging. I knocked on doors, put up signs, met face to face with as many people as possible. I wanted to hear their concerns directly and began to understand the issues that faced the residents of my riding. However, it was something I would do all over again, and I will, Madam Speaker, in 2019.

Of course, the months that followed my election on May 5 were more difficult than I can express. My first few days after being elected as part of the NDP government were a quick and painful learning curve of what it meant to be a young woman in politics.

This is a story you might have likely heard, perhaps in the Sun or any other current print publication. Through it all, my family and supporters stood strong with me. I experienced online harassment, yes, but more accurately I experienced gender-based violence. Unfortunately, my situation isn't unique, and I recognize my privilege as I know that for many other women it would have been a lot worse. Gender-based harassment has become normalized within our society. Online or offline, it shouldn't be acceptable. Madam Speaker, I am dedicated to speaking out and standing up against harassment, and I expect my colleagues to do the same. We must set an example, and we must work together to end the culture around gender-based violence.

After I was elected, there was no shortage of discussion in the news and no lack of speculation on who I am and what I believe in. My work in Calgary-Bow and my work with social justice legislation are clear examples of some of what I stand for. Before being elected, I was a student at Mount Royal University working towards my degree in sociology. For a number of years I've been a committed activist on women's rights. Through that work I have met with many strong and inspiring women whom I call role models, role models like Ruth Ellen Brosseau, Niki Ashton, and my sister Jenn. They kept me focused on the work that I was elected to do and the importance of my role. Elected leaders are the voice of their constituents, and that responsibility is the most important part of my job.

Madam Speaker, I am proud of my roots in the riding of Calgary-Bow. I was born in 1988 in Calgary, where I was raised. That year we hosted the Olympic Winter Games, and people around the world were glued to their televisions watching hockey stars, figure skaters, bobsled teams, and other athletes compete. I'm proud to say that Canada Olympic Park is in my riding of Calgary-Bow, and I am proud to be an Olympic baby.

Calgary-Bow is located in the northwest and southwest quadrants of the city. It includes the communities of Crestmont, Coach Hill, Patterson Heights, Greenwood Village, Cougar Ridge, West Springs, Valley Ridge, and in the heart of Calgary-Bow is Bowness.

The 2013 flood greatly impacted my riding, causing serious damage, particularly in the community of Bowness. Many of my constituents were evacuated and returned home to damaged property. I have spoken to so many of those who were affected, and flood mitigation remains a major concern. I am proud that this government has taken serious action on this. The Alberta community resilience program is a necessary fund from the province that will build flood barriers and manage infrastructure. It is important that we do not forget the devastation that occurred in 2013 and that we continue to look at why the flood had the impact it did so that we are not faced with the same problems in the future.

Today there are so many active organizations within my constituency. The following are a few of the organizations that I have had the pleasure of visiting with: Pathways CSA, where I had the honour to participate in their 10th annual round dance, and, may I add, the first-ever MLA to attend that round dance; Simon House recovery centre, where I celebrated their paths to sobriety at the end of every month; Bowness Seniors' Centre, where I recently celebrated their 50th anniversary; Bowwest Community Resource Centre, that links individuals or families with appropriate services that will support them in their daily lives; the Boys & Girls Club, that works to provide a safe, supportive place where children and youth can experience new opportunities, overcome barriers, build positive relationships, and develop confidence and skills for life; the Irish cultural centre, where I had the pleasure of attending their 30th anniversary this month. As a child I took Irish dancing at this centre, and going back as an adult gave me an opportunity to reflect on where I came from.

One of the things I love doing the most is visiting schools and talking to students about my role as an MLA. I'm very proud of the educational opportunities in my riding. Education is a priority for our government. In Calgary-Bow the government has recently funded a modernization project of Bowness high school. Construction is already under way as well as construction of the West Springs/Cougar Ridge middle school. By reversing funding cuts to education, the government is prioritizing the needs of students in our province.

I am so proud that alongside my work in my riding I have also had the opportunity to pass both my private member's bill and my private member's motion. Bill 204, the Residential Tenancies (Safer Spaces for Victims of Domestic Violence) Amendment Act, 2015, was a step forward in ending domestic violence here in Alberta. I'm so proud every single member in this Legislature voted for this bill. It's because of you that survivors of domestic violence can escape from their perpetrators by breaking their lease without financial penalty. It was a truly historic moment in this province.

Housing insecurity is one of the major barriers for women attempting to leave violence. Without safe houses, women and their children often end up living on the streets or returning to dangerous situations, where the cycle of violence can continue indefinitely. My motion to increase community capacity to deliver transitional, low-barrier housing for vulnerable Albertans suffering with complex mental and physical health needs is a step forward to end homelessness here in the province. This motion speaks to the need to provide wraparound services for vulnerable people living in poverty. This is an important commitment for our Legislature, and I'm proud of the unanimous support it received.

3:10

Before I conclude, I would like to say that I am proud to be part of a government that is prioritizing the hard-working people of Alberta and is focused on improving labour conditions. It is important that workers, who are the backbone of our economy, are protected. It is important that we do everything we can to help them return safely and uninjured to their families after a long day of work. As a member of this Legislature I take the responsibility seriously. My job is to fight for the rights of my constituents, many of whom sometimes work in dangerous conditions. I'm pleased to see that labour legislation will be reviewed and amended.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I would like to return to the personal. I would like to recognize the important role of my grandmother Dale in my life. She raised me, and like so many women, she has raised generations of Albertan women. Her active volunteerism and community involvement are reflected in the strong work ethic I hold today. My great-grandmother Frances was also a strong role model for me. She and her family came to Canada, leaving East Germany, seeking out a better life. I am so fortunate to have the resilience and humour passed down to me from my family matriarchs.

Finally, Madam Speaker, I would like to say that I am so grateful to the many women, young people, and progressive activists that supported me in my campaign and throughout my term thus far. I am here because of their beliefs and our shared values. Thank you so much.

Madam Speaker, I would move that we adjourn debate on the Speech from the Throne now. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 2 Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2016

The Chair: I'll call on the hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. [some applause] I don't know if that's for you or me.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 2 with members of this Assembly, to say a few words about the nature of interim supply, and then to recap some of its contents here. This bill is consistent with previous interim supply bills that have come before the Legislature. It identifies the total amounts requested for each ministry for spending expenses, capital investment, and financial transactions. This legislation is required to provide the spending authority to continue government operations beyond March 31 until the Budget 2016 estimates are debated and approved.

Simply put, what these estimates do is give government the spending authority to carry on day-to-day operations for critically important items like health care in our communities, education, and social services. These are programs and services that Albertans rely on and expect their government to continue to provide. To be clear, when passed, these interim supply estimates will authorize approximate spending of $29.6 million for the Legislative Assembly and $7.2 billion in expense funding, $864 million in capital investment funding, $164 million in financial transaction funding for the government, and, finally, $363 million for the transfer from the lottery fund to the general revenue fund.

I'd also like to take this opportunity to briefly respond to some of the discussions that occurred earlier during Committee of Supply. During that discussion there were some inferences that interim supply acts are uncommon in Alberta. For the record, Madam Chair, if you look at the past 15 years, this Legislature has debated interim supply acts in 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007, 2008, 2009, 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014, and 2015. Therefore, it should be clear that these acts are commonplace in Alberta.

More importantly, Madam Chair, I should emphasize that the estimates we are discussing today will be included and fully debated when the main budget documents are tabled next month. On that note, let me add that the budget we will introduce on April 14 will elaborate on this government's priorities, and they are putting Albertans back to work through infrastructure expansion throughout the province; being a fiscally prudent and responsible government that is focused on minimizing our deficit without making a bad situation even worse; maintaining high-quality and efficiently run education programs for our students, access to health care for our citizens, and an effective social services system when it's needed most. Our budget will also continue to elaborate on economic development initiatives designed to put Albertans back to work, and it will continue to show how our government is restraining spending in light of our significant revenue shortfall.

In summary, Madam Chair, approval of the interim supply estimates, pending the release and approval of the budget, will allow the Assembly the time it needs to review and debate those plans in detail as we move forward in the interests of all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak against Bill 2, interim supply. Wildrose cannot support a blank cheque, that this government says that it needs just because they choose to delay the introduction of their budget. Reckless, unplanned, and unbudgeted spending is no way to get Alberta back on track. Without details as to how this money will be used, we cannot vote in favour of this $8.7 billion blank cheque.

The minister is right that there is nothing unusual about interim supply, but he can do better than the previous Tory government, Madam Chair. We and Albertans expect them to do better; they said that they would do better. Now, this isn't to say that reasonable governments would not engage in the practice of interim supply, but a reasonable government would provide a budget impact statement with their interim supply. They would provide at least an estimate of what their interim supply will do to the bottom line of the government, what it will mean for the balance sheet, what it will mean for the deficit, for expenditure levels on the capital and the operational sides. So when the minister stands and says, "We're not doing anything different than the government that came before us," he's correct. I don't think that's good enough.

There was nothing in this bill to tell us where the money is actually going. I am asking what specific programs this money will finance. Can the government pinpoint any specific deliverables that they expect to see from this $8.7 billion supply? Without these, Wildrose cannot in good conscience support this bill, Madam Chair. And what about where the money came from? We would like to see the government specify what, if any, savings it has found in last year's budget to make up for spending in this bill. This $8.7 billion bill is almost as much as the Finance minister projects the deficit will be in his upcoming budget. Before we vote for this bill, can the government tell this Assembly how much of this money will be borrowed? I have a sneaking suspicion that the answer is all of it. Relying on massive top-ups to keep the government running without a budget is unacceptable and fiscally irresponsible.

It is unacceptable when Alberta has the highest per capita spending of Canada's largest provinces. In fiscal year 2013-14 Alberta was spending $10,964 per person on government programs alone. That is $2,002 more per capita than in fiscal year 2004-05. Had the province increased program spending after fiscal year 2004-05 within the prudent limitations of population growth plus inflation, it would have spent $295 billion between 2005 and 2013. Instead, it spent $345 billion on programs. That, Madam Chair, is a $49 billion spread, a $49 billion overreach and overspend. With that $49 billion, we would still be debt free. We would have more than doubled the heritage fund. Besides a $10 billion annual fiscal hole, which is now nine years running, what do we have to show for this irresponsible, rather liberal spending increase?

Now, some members that got us into this mess are trying to elect another Justin Trudeau Liberal supporter to this House, this while the Trudeau Liberals are blocking Alberta's market access by holding up pipelines and banning tanker traffic crucial to Alberta on our west coast. Alberta needs more conservatives standing up for the province and market access, not another voice for the federal Liberal government in this Chamber. More of the same spending and tax increases of the last decade will not restore the Alberta advantage, that those in the Official Opposition are determined to rebuild.

Meanwhile our government still spends $2,000 more per capita on operations alone every year than British Columbia. Last year that meant that Alberta spent about $8 billion more on operations than B.C. That's right. Despite the price of oil we would have virtually no deficit in this province if our government had restrained spending to just the level of British Columbia.

Madam Chair, reckless spending and experimental policies of the NDP government are getting noticed. Alberta's businesses and job creators have asked for a moratorium on risky NDP policies, and we couldn't agree more. We want to see a moratorium on reckless spending as well. It seems that the government can't get enough money bills passed by this Assembly. Since last March we have had supplementary supply, an interim supply, a budget that was not passed, an interim supply, then another budget, and now another interim supply and a supplementary supply. Why can't this government just produce a good plan and stick to it?

The government's total lack of a plan is becoming increasingly clear, Madam Chair. Just the other day we debated the supplementary supply bill before this Assembly, and we saw a fine example of budget bungling. The NDP cut $50 million of critical ASLI funding for seniors' homes in its October 27, 2015, budget. Then just two days later for some reason these projects were given the green light, on October 29. Now these projects are showing up again as supplementary supply. Now we're finding out that the NDP buried the money for ASLI not in the estimates but in the $4.4 billion, five-year mystery project line in the capital plan, just when Albertans need hope the most. They want to see their government taking strong leadership in this province, but they're seeing yo-yoing like this, that shows the NDP just isn't up to the job of responsibly managing Alberta's finances. You know, it's a common problem for ND governments across Canada. Many of my colleagues will remember the B.C. NDP in 1995 and 1996 claiming to run balanced budgets and then getting caught running secret hundred million dollar deficits. It is a tried-and-true NDP playbook to keep the good times rolling while our finances crumble into a shambles. I worry that last October's budget wasn't much better than 1995 and 1996 in B.C.

At the end of the day, we just need one real budget that outlines one plan with Albertans' priorities, a budget that should have been tabled a month ago and one that reassures Albertans that this government cares more about jobs and the sound financial management of this province than their ideology, not in the form of an interim supply from a government that we cannot trust that is hurting Albertans during an economic downturn. At the very least, we need a budget impact statement from spending provisions in this bill, that will tell Albertans what effect the interim supply will have on the bottom line of the provincial government's finances.

I trust my colleagues to vote against Bill 2 and to stand up against unexamined, unexplained, carte blanche spending bills like this. This Assembly needs to be demanding a real budget with a real plan to implement common-sense, fiscally conservative policies, ideas like what the Wildrose put forward yesterday in our jobs action plan, ideas that will get Albertans working again and provide clear direction for our province, ideas that I hope this NDP government will take under consideration when they finally decide to give us a budget.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is an honour today to rise before you to speak on Bill 2, the interim supply bill. I would like to address the House today and urge all of my colleagues to take a long, hard look at this government and how it has been shirking its responsibility to transparently present the state of our province's finances.

Now, I know that there may be some members of the House who like to rise and speak about how, when they were in government, passing interim supply bills was commonplace. That's all well and good, Madam Chair, but I hardly think that the past government is an appropriate standard to hold ourselves to, especially when we're talking about accountability. I know Albertans certainly don't think so. After years of government bloat and scandalous spending Albertans are looking for a government that they can trust to manage our finances responsibly. Instead, this government just keeps giving them more reasons to worry. I ask that the members of this Assembly raise the bar.

Last session we saw that the NDP government felt that it was appropriate to ignore the rules and simply avoid giving a quarterly update on the government's finances, a decision that sinks below even the previous lower standard that I spoke of. And now what do we see? We see that this same government thinks that it is both prudent and reasonable to float almost $9 billion in spending through this Assembly just four months after passing its first budget. Its first budget. Worse, it wants to do so while providing little to no detail on how these billions of taxpayer dollars will be spent. This is inexcusable. This is what we came to expect in the past. This is not what we expect from our government.

Wildrose understands that the price of oil has not recovered to levels that we or any other Albertan would like to see. This is no one's fault. We recognize that. Albertans recognize that. No one could have predicted with a hundred per cent certainty what the price of oil was going to be, just as we can't predict what it's going to be going forward. We recognize that as well. But we must take a hard look at the commodity forecasting practices that this government used to build their last budget and ask ourselves: is this acting responsibly? Should they have used more logical numbers? Everybody had been telling them that this is not okay. Is $8.7 billion in unbudgeted spending a reflection of inexperience or total inability to responsibly manage Alberta's finances? Is Bill 2 being used as a Band-Aid to cover miscalculations made last fall in the government's last budget?

Let me be clear. Wildrose is not blaming the NDP for low oil prices. That would be unfair. But we can expect more from them. They campaigned on change, and we're not seeing that. Now, it is fair to raise an eyebrow of scrutiny to the budgeting practices that predicted oil prices to be well above the parliamentary budget office's forecast and well above almost all private industry forecasts. Not only did this government choose to forecast lofty oil prices to mask even more serious problems and present a very misleading budget, but now it has doubled down and is hiding behind current prices, calling them a government revenue problem. A government revenue problem.

Madam Chair, this doesn't live up to the standard that Albertans expect either. For too long our province has had a spending problem, not a revenue problem. A spending problem. Our province spends $2,000 more per capita than our neighbours to the west every year. That's $8 billion more on operations last year. It is very troubling that this government does not show any indication of future restraint. Members of the government are happy to toe the party line and allow the Premier to keep spending her way into prosperity.

Madam Chair, I am truly in awe of this government's inability to find any – any – spending efficiencies. We hear every day in question period and in the media that the NDP is looking for efficiencies. They also tell us that they are conducting reviews for cost savings. When is the rubber going to actually hit the road and start to produce these savings? Albertans want to see results. My constituency needs to see results. The people of Alberta are tired of waiting on empty promises that have just become another way for the government to dodge and deflect real questions about the habits of their governance.

How can this government sit in the Assembly and reasonably argue that an $8.7 billion blank cheque is acceptable? We need to know where the money is going, and we need to know what the results are going to be. Point blank, Bill 2 is the problem. The nonbudgeted asks are hollow, and there is little to no substance in this document. There are also requests for a couple of billion dollars here and a couple of billion dollars there, yet more evidence that this government doesn't have a plan. Bill 1 is a good example. Their jobs plan is a job description. We have a bill before us that actually doesn't do anything other than tell the minister what he can already do. That's a monstrous waste of time.

The government is asking this Assembly to blindly trust them with a significant amount of taxpayers' money when they have given us absolutely no reason to trust them. I use the word "us" because it is all of us in this Assembly that are reflected by this interim budget. They're withholding detailed information on where the money will go because they are either choosing to hide the facts or because they don't know where it's going to be spent. Either is unacceptable. Or maybe the NDP is just using Bill 2 to hide something of an even greater concern, their spring budget. When we hear the Finance minister refuse to say that $5 billion plus $5.4 billion is equal to $10.4 billion, that's a problem. They know it's a problem. They're deferring the problem, and they're waiting for Albertans to forget about it going into the summer.

Why would the hon. government do such a thing? It's a pretty simple fact, actually. The question is really: are they misusing their position in an attempt to give themselves an advantage in the upcoming by-election? Would the government really use stall tactics for partisan purposes, knowing the inaction of government leadership could stall or even paralyze investment in this province? The royalty review is a great example of how stalling a review for so long can impact my riding. Look no further than that private industry was forced to freeze any future spending as they waited for an ideology-driven cabinet to announce a whole lot of nothing. Promises of jobs, promises of stability, and what did we get? Bill 1, their first bill, which really does nothing for our province.

It matters very much to Albertans and to politicians who serve them that major milestones like budgets happen regularly. When Members of the Legislative Assembly are being asked to sign on $8.7 billion in spending, they need to be given appropriate amounts of time and sufficient access to information to allow them to consider the decision. We need to see more details on the massive ask from the government.

Albertans are looking for a steady hand, one that they can depend on for reliable management of public funds. When they see large overspends, huge deficits, and a government operating in secretive and self-serving ways, it does nothing to stabilize the confidence in our marketplace. To the contrary, it adds to the anxiety, which we see with the credit downgrades.

I know that members opposite say that this is fearmongering, but that's not true. People are fearful. When I speak with my constituents, I hear their concerns and their worries. If you would take the time to listen to people who put you into office, you would hear the same thing. You would hear that people are leery about what is happening within this government.

I hear small and mid-size business owners saying that they aren't willing to take business-benefiting risks because they're worried that the other shoe will drop and that this government, which is making things up as they go, will tax them more or price them out of the market. I try my best to calm their fears, but the truth is that I truly share their concern. When we have a government that sits with their hand out to Albertans for $8.7 billion of unknown, unbudgeted spending, it's hard to not be worried. Where is that money going to come from? We all know the answer to that question. It's coming from Albertans' families and businesses, money that our families and businesses need to get through these hard times.

Madam Chair, when the hon. Finance minister comes to this Assembly with his pockets turned out and his hand out, saying, "Trust me; I'll spend the money wisely; just fork over the cash," we should all be highly skeptical. Even in the past when other interim supply bills came through this Assembly, at least there was a prorated budget that could also be released with the interim budget to be compared to. This isn't the case now. Now we have no idea how this money will tie into the greater context of the government's spending plan.

I cannot in good conscience vote in support of Bill 2 on behalf of my constituents in Bonnyville-Cold Lake. I also highly encourage all the members of the Assembly to think about their constituents, not their party affiliations or party ideology, and ask themselves if their own conscience will allow them to vote in favour of the $8.7 billion blank cheque that our Finance minister is asking from us.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you so much, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak specifically to Bill 2, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act. We have heard much in this House over the past couple of days and, I guess, since early last week about this particular piece of legislation: "Don't worry. There's nothing to be concerned or worried about. It's totally normal."

While I can accept that we have certainly used this process in the past, I do find it a bit disingenuous on two counts: one, folks that used to sit on this side of the House in the NDP caucus on numerous occasions would stand, just as I am today, saying, "If the government would call the House back to session when the standing orders say, we could get the budget passed on time, we could communicate to municipalities on time, and we could provide all of the details on time, but since they've failed to do that, here we are debating interim supply."

I will accept that it's possible that someday I, too, may sit on that side of the House and understand some of the pressures that they face that prevent them from coming back to the Assembly and being accountable to Albertans or that would allow them to get to this position. In conversations that I've had with members on that side of the House – you know, you don't know what you don't know from time to time. It's quite possible that someday I may regret railing against interim supply and the "Why can't we get it done on time?"

But until I have that opportunity, I will remain steadfast in my position that there is no good reason that the House couldn't have been called back to session in early February. That would have allowed for a budget to be introduced on time, not a budget that we're going to see introduced in the Assembly on the 14th of April, the fourth-latest introduction of a budget – the fourth-latest – since the year 2000, and on three of those four occasions they were in an election year, Madam Chair. As we all know, there wasn't an election this year, and we only passed a budget a mere 108 days ago. So for us to have to come to the Assembly to ask for not just a hundred million dollars, like we see in the supplementary supply bill, but $8.9 billion, I believe it is, here in the interim supply bill, that is more than a little disappointing.

Now, one of the other things that we have heard not just today but over recent days from the Finance minister is that this is a process that has been used 15 times in recent years. While I fully accept that this process has been used 15 times over the last few years, on a number of occasions – I believe that that number is five or six, but I will confirm, and I'll be happy to report back to the House, likely tomorrow – interim and supplementary supply were debated in conjunction or at the exact same time that the budget had already been presented. The wonderful thing about that is that it gave the opposition the opportunity to have a much better grasp and fuller scope of knowledge when it comes to exactly what the resources were intended to do.

While I'll also be the first to say that much of the resources that the government is going to be spending through the interim supply process and the supplementary supply process will be spent on positive things, the challenge, Madam Chair, is that the Official Opposition's role is to hold the government to account, and when we're provided with such little information, it is very, very difficult for us to be effective at being a part of the process, a very important part, that represents large numbers of Albertans. In some ways, just like they are the government to all Albertans, we are the opposition for all Albertans as well, and both of us play a very important role in that process. For the government to choose to pass the interim supply legislation without any of the additional information that is so desperately needed, without doing it by presenting the budget and then having interim supply and supplementary supply being debated in conjunction with it, lots of questions are raised about the effectiveness of the process, about the effectiveness of the dollars that are spent.

Let me be clear that the Wildrose Official Opposition believes in ensuring that we have a world-class education system here in our province. We believe in funding health care and ensuring that front-line health care workers aren't laid off, that their jobs aren't cut, even though there are those on the other side of the House who would like to have you believe differently. We recognize that there are portions of these resources that the government is coming back to the Assembly for that are important, but the process of how we get to those answers is sometimes just as important as the bill.

By not providing the information, it does present a significant risk. I know that some of my colleagues have spoken about it being a blank cheque, that the accountability that is in play when we have a full line-by-line budget is different than the government's ability to move money from one area to another without very much accountability to the Albertan public. We've seen the NDP make some wrong choices in the past. We've seen the NDP say one thing and do another, and it's the exact sort of thing that, when the NDP was on this side of the House, they used to join in the chorus against when it came to the former PC government, exactly as I spoke to earlier, this chorus against using interim and supplementary supply processes, not ensuring accountability in the House. We're seeing this real narrative of wrong choices that the government is making. We've seen reckless and unplanned spending, and this isn't the path forward for Alberta.

Now, I would be remiss if I didn't just mention that we have seen in the supplementary supply process some ministers talking about a little bit of restraint and some savings in terms of moving resources around, so if that is going to happen, I look forward to the budget. The path forward, as I mentioned yesterday in the House in corresponding with constituents, isn't spending wildly. While I appreciate that we need to spend money on capital investments in the province, just as the Wildrose plan laid out, this belief that every government dollar that's spent is spent well: nothing could be further from the truth.

We need to make sure that we are looking at ourselves. I would hesitate to make comment about looking in the mirror because these sorts of comments have gotten people in some significant challenges in the past. However, it wasn't a comment that I had made.

Mr. McIver: Through the chair.

Mr. Cooper: Through the chair, Madam Chair.

We do as legislators need to look in the mirror, not blaming others but looking at ourselves and the ways that we can ensure that the dollars that government is spending are the most effective dollars possible. When the government chooses to come to the House with virtually no information, no accountability, just asking for $8.6 billion, we should all pause, look inside ourselves, and ask important questions like: what exactly is this blank cheque going to be used for? While I have mentioned that we believe in ensuring that the government can continue to operate, I continue to return to this constant frustration that Albertans have, that the good people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills have, Madam Chair, about the delay in the budget, because we wouldn't be in this spot if that wasn't the direction that the government had taken us down.

It seems that there are a number of challenges around this spending when it comes to the government not being able to point to specific programs that these resources will finance. It's light on pinpointing deliverables, which makes it a challenge for us to support. We want to ensure that the government can continue to operate, but the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills believe in providing deliverables, believe in providing information so that they can be assured that the government is going to be spending their money wisely.

You know, every dollar that the government takes in is a dollar that's been hard earned, so we need to make sure that we remember whose resources we're spending. At the end of the day, we're spending Albertans' resources, whether it's in the form of personal income tax, whether it's in the form of the taxes that are paid by the job creators in this province, or whether it's in the form of the taxes that are paid by the selling of our resources. All of these resources in one way, shape, form, or another are Albertans', so we need to do our very best in ensuring that those dollars are spent wisely and that the government can point exactly, Madam Chair, to how they're going to be spent.

Albertans are worried about their finances. They're struggling just to make ends meet, but when they do that, they are looking at their own books first to tighten their belts. They want this government to do the exact same. You know, I don't run into any constituents in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills or anyone here amongst my caucus colleagues that think we don't have a role to play in taking care of the vulnerable. I don't run into constituents that think we should be abandoning the people of Alberta, but I do run into constituents who question the vast amount of overspending, of government bloat, of mismanagement that this government, being in office for 316 days, is now a part of and that former governments failed to rein in all at the same time.

We are going to see an incredibly high deficit, and in fact the Finance minister just yesterday in the House finally had the courage of his convictions, Madam Chair, to utter the words of the size of that deficit, whether it was $5.2 billion more than what was previously mentioned, or I think that he made some other statements that may be unparliamentary about – it's a significant amount of money. Finally, yesterday we heard him talk about it being $10.2 billion. The challenge with interim supply and supplementary supply is that we don't know exactly how these dollars are going to affect those numbers, not just the number for next year but the number for this year, whether that's going to be $5 billion, $6 billion, $7 billion of deficit for this fiscal year that we're currently in.

4:00

The challenge, Madam Chair, is that while Albertans are looking to tighten their personal finances because they know that it's critically important to the success of their family and their family's future, we have a government that is doing the opposite, passing a budget in the dying days of November, whether it was the 29th or 30th I can't quite recall, and a mere 108 days later coming to the Assembly asking for significant resources. I on behalf of the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills certainly will not be supporting this particular interim supply budget, not because I believe in shutting down the government but because we don't have the information that is necessary to make a good-quality decision.

I spent some significant time at the Leg. Offices meeting not that very long ago, when members of the government were not prepared to move on a decision because they didn't feel like they had the appropriate information, and I don't begrudge them for that. But here we are, with significantly less information than was provided at that particular committee, with a significantly larger dollar number, and being asked to support a decision such as this.

So on behalf of the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills I won't be supporting the interim supply bill. I will look forward to some continued debate around these important issues, around government accountability, around a late budget introduction. I might remind the government that it was the fourth-latest introduction of a budget since the year 2000. While this government likes to blame the last government for the predicament that they're in, they have been the government now for almost a year, exactly 316 days.

An Hon. Member: Who's counting?

Mr. Cooper: I did. It's been a long 316 days, Madam Chair.

But I can tell you that the people of Alberta expected a budget on time. They expected that a government that's been in power now for 316 days could put that together, and while I perhaps should have been more sympathetic the last time we were at this process... [Mr. Cooper's speaking time expired]

The Chair: I'll call on the hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Madam Chair. I've been listening with interest to members opposite as they've been talking about this blank cheque that comes so late that it's just – my goodness. Until the actual budget comes forward, I guess they have to come up with some reason to be against this interim supply act.

But let's take a look at some of the things that they're talking about, Madam Chair. This political party over here, the Wildrose Official Opposition, complains, for example, that we are bringing forward this supplementary supply just 108 days after passing the budget in November, but at the same time they can't seem to understand why we couldn't have brought a budget about sooner. So let's go back and remind people about the history.

Just before the last election, when oil prices started to head south, the Premier of the day, Mr. Prentice, announced that he was going to be tabling a budget, which he did, which involved very significant cuts to health, education, and so on, and was clearly planning future cuts going forward, including a major tax on health care, a health care premium tax, and a number of other measures that were unpopular. Then instead of letting the Legislature debate and vote upon that budget, he called an election, and he fought the election on that budget, which was a mistake, clearly, because he didn't win, but it also created very serious problems for the financial administration of the province because it meant that we spent the time we should have been debating the Conservative budget in an election.

Then you had a brand new government that had to come up with something that was not what Mr. Prentice had proposed because obviously it had been rejected by the people of Alberta. He wanted to fight the election on the budget, and people rejected the budget. Then a brand new government had to come up with some sort of financial plan, so we brought forward interim supply to keep the government working while we learned our portfolios, learned our jobs, investigated the situation facing the province, and looked at the uncertainty in all of the factors in a very, very complex exercise to create a new budget. Of course, the Wildrose opposition opposed having interim supply. They thought we should have been able to just whip up a budget out of nothing in no time at all in order to move forward.

So we passed the interim supply bill. Then in November we brought forward the budget. Well, that wasn't good enough for the Wildrose either. They claimed we were delaying that and that we'd been in office for six whole months and should have been able to come up with a budget sooner than that. They accused us of delaying the budget deliberately in order to wait out the federal election, which was pure speculation on their part. Political spin, frankly, is all it was because on this side ministers and, particularly, the Finance minister were working very, very hard and diligently to actually get the budget done in time. Of course, the Wildrose, having never been in government and unlikely ever to be in government, is completely unaware of the amount of work and the complexities that go into developing a budget.

Now, our friends on the PC side have some experience with government, 40-odd years of it, so they've learned a thing or two. They have to learn some other things, but they certainly know what it is to develop a budget. So their criticism was somewhat more muted than the inexperienced Wildrose opposition, who keep generating ideas. They seem to be very much focused on the timeliness of budgets without understanding what actually has to go into budgets.

So then we had the budget in November, what the Opposition House Leader called the dying days of November. You know, it was a dark and stormy night, and the government brought forward its evil and mysterious budget. But that was, actually, to be clear and to set the record straight, the first budget of this government. Because of the decision of Mr. Prentice and his government in the timing of the budget and the election, that was the first actual budget that was brought forward by this government, and it only covered the remaining five months of the year.

As the Official Opposition House Leader has accurately said, that was 108 days, and now he's saying that we should have been able to come up with a new budget, a second budget, in that short period of time. But, again, he doesn't recognize the realities of governing and that you can't just generate a budget in a very short period of time. It requires work not only at the political level but at the departmental levels. All of the departments have to review their budgets. They have to look at all of their programs. They have to estimate their costs and so on.

Now, why might we want to bring in a budget in April? By the way, just because it's the fourth latest in the last 15 years, that's not an impressive argument in any way. It's quite within the normal range of time for a budget. But at a time when oil prices are falling farther than anyone expected, including all of the most respected people in the oil industry who estimate and project these things, and because we're staying down much longer, there's a great deal of uncertainty that this government has to deal with in terms of dealing with the revenues. I might just say that the revenues from oil royalties have fallen about 70 per cent, and that accounts for about 20 per cent of our revenues in about a year. It's an enormous drop in the revenues of this government, and the fact that the government might want to take a few more weeks to finalize a budget is perfectly normal. In fact, it's absolutely prudent to do so.

There's also the question of the federal budget, which will have a significant impact on the province, especially in the area of infrastructure spending. Wanting to have some sense of where the federal government is going is also a very legitimate factor to take into account when we're developing a budget, but the Official Opposition doesn't recognize that. They're not adopting a responsible position with respect to the budget of this province. They just want a budget, any budget, yesterday, and they don't care whether or not that budget is actually going to be able, as accurately as possible in very difficult circumstances, to project the revenues and the expenditures of the government. But this government is prepared to do that because we're prepared and, in fact, we are committed to governing responsibly, and that's what we're going to do.

Madam Chair, I just want to indicate to members opposite that there will be some significant issues when the budget is brought forward on April 14 that are worth discussing. It's worth discussing our dependency on oil and gas royalty revenue, something that was raised repeatedly with the previous government. The previous government over the years – and I was here for some of that – had made commitments to diversify the economy and to attempt to diversify the sources of revenue for the government. They did that when the price of oil went down, as it regularly does in this province. We all know that these drops in resource prices happen. They're not predictable. They're like the weather, but we know that overall in the winter it's going to snow, and we also know that over a period of 10 years or so there are probably going to be some drops in the oil and gas prices.

What they did is that they would make those commitments at the time when oil prices were down, but as soon as they went back up again and everything was good and the money was flowing again, they kind of forgot about that commitment, so it never got done. Now we are going to have to do that to get us off the roller coaster of oil and gas royalties at a time that is much tougher, when we have much less money to deal with in this province than we did at a time when the previous government was in office and oil prices or gas prices were quite a bit higher. Those are the difficulties that we're facing. We have to diversify the economy – Albertans expect that – and we have to diversify the revenue sources of this government.

I can go back to the Emerson report under Premier Stelmach, 2007. I was there for the release of the report, and it made a key recommendation that we have to get off royalty revenues, which at that time were accounting for 30 per cent of our program expenditures. But the government didn't do it, and that is why we're in this position. Everyone knows that sooner or later the price of oil and gas will go down, but we have to prepare for it. It's a little bit about the story of the ant and the grasshopper, and unfortunately the previous government was much like the grasshopper and didn't prepare for winter. Now we are in winter, and we are going to have to find a way to do that, and it's difficult. You know, I reject the arguments of the Wildrose opposition in terms of the timing and the blank cheque. All of those arguments are false, spurious. We need to get on with this.

Madam Chair, with that, I'm going to move that we adjourn debate in Committee of the Whole on Bill 2.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 3

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2016

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you very much, hon. Government House Leader, for that wonderful soliloquy. I want to say that I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak, of course, on the supplementary supply estimates for 2016. To recap, when passed, these estimates will authorize an approximate total increase of $106 million in expense funding for the departments of Education, Justice and Solicitor General, Labour, Municipal Affairs, Seniors and Housing, and my own, Treasury Board and Finance.

As we have discussed previously in this Chamber, these estimates will ensure, for example, that enrolment in our schools is fully funded, Madam Chair, and that the affordable supportive living initiative has the capital grants it needs to develop long-term care and affordable supportive living spaces for our seniors and others across the province. These estimates will also authorize the transfer of $25 million of the previously approved capital investment vote to the expense vote within the department of Environment and Parks to provide funding to the town of High River for building flood mitigation berms, which they will own.

Let me add that these estimates are consistent with the fiscal plan that was presented in the 2015-16 third-quarter fiscal update, which was tabled in the Legislature towards the end of February.

During Committee of Supply members of this Legislature had the opportunity to ask detailed questions of the ministers responsible for these supplementary estimates. I'd like to thank the members opposite for their questions. I'd also like to thank my colleagues for their detailed responses. I think we had good debate, and I look forward to this Chamber's support of these supplementary estimates so that we can deliver on our commitments like fully funding school enrolment, as I mentioned earlier.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. We are here to debate Bill 3, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2016.

Mr. Rodney: Correct.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Very astute.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you.

Mr. Fildebrandt: At the last stage of Bill 3 I went through a laundry list of savings in each department in the bill that have not been found to cover the $106 million being asked for here. While some of these initiatives are worthy, I am skeptical that the government could not find the funds in monies already allocated in the budget passed just three and a half months ago. The NDP sound a bit like Oliver Twist here, saying: please, sir, can I have some more? But they've already taken more. In their June interim supply, in their June tax hike bill, and then in their October budget they have taken much more from Albertans.

They've already increased taxes and spending beyond the increases proposed in the former government's budget. Alberta's GDP is shrinking; we're making less money. When Albertan families have less coming in, they know that it's time for belt-tightening. They expect their government to tighten its belt as well, looking for cost savings during the downturn, not coming back and picking their pockets.

Now, there are some important initiatives in this bill, that we certainly do support, Madam Chair. The transfer of $25 million of the previously approved capital investment vote to the expense vote within the Department of Environment and Parks to provide funding to the town of High River for building flood mitigation berms is very important, and it has our support. No one wants to see High River face the kind of destruction it faced ever again. This is a straight transfer of previously budgeted money from capital to expense for distribution, and it's quite reasonable, but I question why this had not been done in the 2015 budget presented at the end of October.

I'll also applaud the Department of Treasury Board and Finance – and don't get too used to it, Minister – for finding $9 million in savings in their budget to fund their emerging contract commitment. This is an example that other departments need to follow and take note of. A pity that they need to devote $2 million more to close the gap, though.

In my questioning of the Minister of Seniors and Housing we managed to find out something about the mystery surrounding the $4.4 billion over five years, that was in the capital plan, set aside for new projects and programs. It turns out that $50.5 million of the $148 million for this year of the five-year mystery fund is for the affordable supportive living initiative, ASLI. This is important funding that will support seniors across Alberta, including in my constituency of Strathmore-Brooks, where it will support the Bassano project, which I have long been a champion of. This is a worthy project. Alberta's seniors built this province. Providing seniors with predictable, sustainable, top-quality care that allows them to be close to their families and loved ones in their communities is a priority for the Wildrose opposition. But I still cannot understand why the NDP would play games and take this money out of the estimates and the budget process and hide it as a mystery line in the capital plan.

What really frustrates me is the government's inability to get education right in the budget. Teachers are crucial to our education system, and we need to ensure that they have the proper supports in the classroom and aren't overwhelmed by ballooning class sizes. Wildrose believes that every child in Alberta should receive a world-class education. Smaller class sizes benefit learners as well as teachers. But we have a request for $33.8 million here, on top of a budget of $4.3 billion for the department, and the Education minister cannot find half a per cent in his department to help cover those costs.

There is much that is worth while in this bill and well intended, but it is unfortunate that we need this bill at all. Reshuffling funding for ASLI that was previously allocated, departmental increases with little to no detail as to what specific monies are actually intended for, asking for new funding because departments have exceeded their budgets: just three and a half months after they passed the budget.

Now, I know that the Government House Leader and Minister of Finance have pleaded for the mercy of this House in understanding why their revenue projections were so far off. Well, if the opposition had not raised questions about their revenue projections to begin with when they were presented to this House, then perhaps they would have a point. But we spent countless hours here debating and warning the government that their revenue projections were not anywhere close. In fact, their revenue projections didn't even provide details beyond year 3 of their budget. Years 4 and 5 were a pure mystery. In years 1, 2, and 3 of their budget their revenue projections were positively insane. Nobody – nobody – believed that they would meet those projections. The opposition regularly told them that they were unrealistic.

Between the time that the budget was introduced and the time the budget was passed, the price of oil was already off – I'll recall it off the top of my mind here – almost $10 from their projections. When the budget was passed, the price of oil was significantly lower than their oil projections. I remember that we stood here and said to the Finance minister: Minister, will you not at least amend your revenue projections? And he stood up and said: trust us. Well, Madam Chair, I didn't get elected because I trust politicians. We can do better.

This government has been in office nearly a year, and it's time for them to start acting like the government. They know better. They criticized the former government for these kinds of actions when they were in opposition. During interim supply, the interim supply introduced right before the previous government's last budget, I remember the Government House Leader arguing against it, using the very same arguments that the Official Opposition is using today. But now he stands and up, and he's seen the light on the road to Damascus and thinks that the process of the budget has been fine for the last decade. Well, I know that is not in keeping with the Government House Leader's long contribution to this House. Regardless of our significant philosophical differences on policy and the role of government, he's always believed that we need to improve the processes in this House, particularly around budgeting. He believed it as recently as this time last year, when he argued against the former government's interim supply because it didn't provide enough detail. Well, my; how things have changed.

Madam Chair, it is time for the government to start acting like a grown-up government. It is time for them to take responsibility for their actions, to take responsibility for their own government.

This supplementary supply does have significant differences, however, from interim supply and should be treated differently. There are good spending measures within this bill that are worthy of support. However, the government should provide us with a budget impact statement before we vote on it.

Madam Chair, Albertans expect us to do better, and you're going to hear from my colleagues in the Wildrose Official Opposition about how we can do better. Thank you.

The Chair: I'll call on the hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Earlier this session I had the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 2, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2016. That bill was needed because this government was unable to provide a budget on time. Now, there are no penalties for that – I know – and I'm not aware of any government having penalties for that, but I'm sure if I didn't pay my taxes on time, they wouldn't be happy.

I rise to speak to Bill 3, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2016. I would like to take a moment to note that I'll be supporting this bill, not because I support the government's lack of ability to stick to a budget. That budget, I might add, is being paid for by the taxpayers of Alberta at a time when these Albertans are facing real, daily budgeting issues themselves. Many of the Albertans that this Chamber represents are facing unemployment, mounting bills, and unfortunately there's no supplementary Hail Mary for them.

The people of Alberta elected us to put their trust in us that we would responsibly manage their money, and that includes making realistic budgets that do not need to be topped up on a regular basis.

If our expectation during these trying economic times is that our constituents tighten their belts financially, cut expenses, and budget realistically, then we should be leading by example.

This bill is necessary to keep the government operating, and it does support some important issues such as ensuring the jobs of front-line workers, providing affordable long-term care for seniors. However, with issues as important as these, why weren't these budgeted for in the 2015 budget? Why are they being tacked on now as if they're an afterthought? Albertans spend $8 billion more than British Columbia in operations per capita, yet even with all this extra money, essential projects and services are still not being covered. It is beyond my comprehension how our basic operating costs and essential spending priorities were not included in the 2015 budget and now need to be supplemented.

While I am supporting this bill, I do have a number of questions, and I hope to have them answered as I have many reservations. My questions focus specifically on the proposed change in Environment and Parks. I see in the supplementary supply estimates that Environment and Parks is asking for an approval of a proposed transfer of $25 million to the town of High River for the construction of flood mitigation berms. According to the government's supplementary supply this request "reflects the government's decision to provide funding to the Town of High River and surrounding communities to design and build local flood mitigation projects rather than to build a government-owned diversion channel."

I would like to commend the minister for finally listening to the residents and the town council of High River, who for a long time have been calling upon the province to scrap their ill-conceived diversion channel in favour of this berm project. As a long-time resident of and now the member representing Highwood, I understand how critical this project is to the mitigation effort and how crucial these funds are to the project.

Putting all that aside for a moment, I still have a number of unanswered questions, and I'd like to read them into the record if I may, Madam Chair. The decision by the minister to forgo the channel in favour of the berms was announced in early November, literally days before the fall budget was introduced. I'm wondering how the minister didn't know that the department would be changing its mind on this flood mitigation project a couple of days before and include this funding in the fall budget. When the department announced the funding in November, they said that it included funding for two berms and one bridge, yet the supplementary supply makes no mention of the funding for the bridge. The final phase of flood mitigation in High River – and this is important – is the raising of the Centre Street Bridge, a project that this government committed to but has not yet funded. When can we expect to see these funds?

The March 2015 Auditor General report, which reviewed Environment and Parks' flood mitigation, noted that "the department does not have the capacity to do flood . . . assessments." One of the Auditor General's recommendations included the department conducting risk assessments to support flood mitigation decisions. My question: has Environment and Parks satisfied the AG's recommendation in this case? Was a risk assessment conducted?

I noticed this transfer within the department of $25 million from capital investment to capital grants. Was this $25 million originally budgeted for the diversion channel? How much did the department originally budget for the diversion channel? I'm hoping that the minister will provide some clarity on these questions and, moving forward, will take the time to properly budget for these sorts of important projects so that in the future they do not need to be added after the fact and this situation can be avoided.

This situation is a perfect example of how the government is breaking the trust of its constituents. Four months ago the budget for the year was proposed, and now what has happened? Now there are significant changes being made here. They're already asking for additional funds. A government's financial role is to comprehensively budget for a full year and, after that budget has been passed, to stick to it. In a few weeks this government will drop the next budget. This next budget will not need to last four months. No, it needs to last three times that long.

Now, I understand that there's a learning curve, and that comes with being a new government and having so many initiatives that you want to push through. If this budget was off a tenth or even a quarter of this amount, I might be more understanding, but this is the second time that this government has badly miscalculated the budget. They do not seem to be learning from their past mistakes. During last year's election their platform proposed a budget. It was off by a billion dollars. It was off by so much money that they were forced to delay their balanced budget promise by a year. While the discrepancy on their initial budget and their spending has decreased, they were off from their platform.

Ideally, there should never have to be this kind of supplementary bill because the government should set out realistic, fiscally responsible expectations and follow through with their promises. At least that's how it's supposed to work. I'm not going to be holding my breath.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak on the Seniors portion of this government's supplementary bill. This week the NDP government introduced two money bills. One is a supplementary supply bill to add money to, or supplement, the 2015 budget. The other is an interim supply bill to keep spending going after March 31 since the 2016 budget won't even be presented yet, let alone passed. As with all their bills, information is lacking. There was no consultation, no committee, just: trust them. I have questions I wish that they could answer.

Yesterday the minister stated that the $50.5 million for Seniors wasn't actually a supplemental; it was a transfer from the Infrastructure budget, Madam Chair. I would ask if the minister could provide the line item which contains where they budgeted for these ASLI grants. What infrastructure project or projects were cancelled for this to happen, or were the efficiencies found somewhere else?

Another question. It seems that this funding was cut, and then it was reinstated, as we discovered last year in the estimates. Why did this happen, and what were the factors that led to this decision?

In May 2015 this government stopped services, spending, and commitments and placed many different sectors of our economy at risk. They started with the oil sector with their royalty review, eroding investor confidence and causing regulatory uncertainty. After nine months of uncertainty and pressure the NDP, thankfully, adopted restraint on royalties. Unfortunately, Madam Chair, it was too late to undo the severe damage to Alberta's economy.

Here we are in the same boat with the seniors' ASLI grants. For those folks out there, this is the affordable supportive living initiative, that was an Alberta government capital grant program that provides funding to develop long-term care and affordable supportive living spaces in the province. I had some more questions to this as well, Madam Chair, which I was hoping the minister could answer. I was hoping that they could give us more details about these ASLI beds in particular. What is the intended use of these beds being created? We heard last night from the hon. minister that the funding commitments were reaffirmed, and only six of the 31 were deemed not to be suitable for the conditions. If the minister could ever explain to me why the funding for the six projects was not reinstated, the details would be important for us to move forward on. Going forward, under the grant process the government can contribute up to 50 per cent of the capital costs with the other monies coming from the organization.

In March 2015 the previous government committed $180 million of funding to create some much-needed care beds for dementia patients. After the election this government cancelled these funds, cutting the ASLI grants to over 31 community organizations from the November budget. Madam Chair, this government has made it very clear that they were going to cancel the ASLI. Given that there was no new announcement of a plan going forward, I have even more questions about that. Exactly how many spaces will this create for patients with dementia?

The delay also put the AHS service contracts on hold. What is the minister doing to ensure that AHS processes their contracts promptly? Are there other interim mechanisms for seniors' facilities that require the capital to apply for? When can seniors' service providers expect to see a plan for stable funding for our seniors?

Madam Chair, seniors are going to be the hugest issue that this government will ever face in the years to come. They are going to be a quarter of our population by 2030 – it is an issue that we have to address – and with those seniors come all the health issues. It's a dire situation that we will be in. The longer the NDP delays money for these projects, the more expensive we can expect them to become and, more importantly, the longer Alberta's most vulnerable seniors go without appropriate accommodation. Reviewing oil royalties and negatively affecting jobs during an economic recession lacks understanding, but delaying dementia care spaces means delays and uncertainties for our vulnerable population, for the people who built this province. God help us all, but let them know that the Wildrose is here to stand up for them and their rights. The previous government recognizes this, and as of today it is clear now that so does this NDP government.

Going forward, this government must recognize the harm of stalling projects, especially when we are dealing with the quality of life for our seniors. Supporting our front-line workers, teachers, seniors, and those in need of supportive living as well as those affected by natural disasters and those who wish to train for work is a priority for the Wildrose despite the fearmongering by this NDP government.

The government's consistent use of supplementary and interim supply budgets highlights their reactive, ideological nature, which contains little consideration of individual dignity and no common sense. Yesterday, Madam Chair, this House learned that the government will actually be cutting front-line staff from the Sundre nursing facility. This is not the path that Alberta should be following. Alberta's gross domestic product is shrinking, and as a province we simply have to do things better.

When Alberta families are struggling, they will be looking to the government for leadership. This government needs to get past its ideologies and make some good, logical decisions. They expect the government to tighten its belt by looking for cost efficiencies in this downturn, and they also expect excellent planning by the government so that we can make the most of the limited public resources that we do have available to us. Households in Alberta cannot run a $10 billion deficit, and the Wildrose is committed to supporting our front-line services while finding ways to deliver those services with creativity and efficiency. These projects are critical for seniors in our province.

Consequently, I will be supporting this supplementary supply bill, but I hope the minister will take the opportunity to provide a little more clarity around some of the details and answer some of the questions that I have asked this afternoon.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

4:40

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 3. I was about to say "briefly," but I'm not sure how brief it will be, so I would hesitate to bring false hope to the House. I just want to expand on a couple of quick comments that I had made during the debate around interim supply as, you know, much about supplementary supply and the process that it takes to get there is similar. We've seen in the House a pretty consistent message from the Official Opposition about the disappointments around being here, and it's a disappointment that many people on this side of the House shared and do share.

I just briefly would like to refer to Hansard from March 18, 2015, just prior to the election last year, just prior to the introduction of the demise of the former government with the budget that was the Prentice plan. The debate in the House on that particular day, March 18, 2015, was just as it is today, around supplementary and interim supply, and the then Member for Edmonton-Centre said:

This is a mockery of this entire Assembly. It's a mockery of every financial officer that works for the public service. It's a mockery of every Albertan out there that expects there to be accountability and integrity in the way this government goes about producing a budget.

The current Government House Leader interjected and said: "Oh, I don't think there are many left." And the Member for Edmonton-Centre continued: "Well, my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood believes there aren't many left, and nobody is meeting my eyes." They were referring to government members and the way that they had introduced interim supply and supplementary supply and the process that they were using to get there.

Earlier today we saw the Finance minister speak directly – correction, Madam Chair. It may not have been today. But we have seen earlier in debate the Finance Minister speak specifically to the amount of detail that this government provided to the Assembly when it comes to making decisions around interim and supplementary supply. They were saying that it's exactly the same detail that the former government supplied, as if that was some sort of standard that we should all achieve or reach towards.

Mr. Fildebrandt: It's the gold standard.

Mr. Cooper: In fact, it is the gold standard. It was according to themselves.

The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on that day, March 18, 2015, spoke directly to the amount of information provided when he said: "The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is absolutely correct. This is a very, very minuscule amount of information that is provided to the House, to the Assembly, in order to make the decision that is required." This speaks directly to the narrative that I spoke about earlier of the government saying one thing in opposition and another thing once they were in fact chosen by the people of Alberta as the government.

I think it's concerning. The people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills are concerned about it. Often members of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills would speak to me about the former leader of the NDP and member of the caucus, about what a great legislator he was. There are many things that he did and that he does that we can all aspire to, but today he and the government have provided the opposition the same very minuscule amount of information, and to say that I'm a bit disappointed is probably an understatement. It's really too bad that we have to make this sort of decision.

Now, I want to speak just very briefly to the actual Bill 3, supplementary supply, and reiterate the fact that Wildrose believes in ensuring that the people who built this province have spaces to live in in the form of seniors' care. We believe in world-class education. We would have preferred to see additional efficiencies found to offset the current hundred million that we are currently debating, but ensuring that the ASLI grants are funded is an important initiative. So for that reason, among a number of other reasons, when it comes specifically to the supplementary supply bill, I am able or willing to support this piece of legislation.

I certainly don't support the process of how we got here. I certainly don't support the fact that the government used to complain about minuscule amounts of information provided to the House and to the opposition and now they do the very same thing that they used to hate.

It's with those comments in mind that I will rest my case today and look forward to when all of the answers come in April. And while I'm disappointed that we don't have more information today, I look forward to a very full and robust debate in April.

The Chair: Are there any further speakers to this bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. This is to do with the Ministry of Justice. For myself, being an accountant for a number of years, I haven't been familiar with how government does the budgeting process. So I started to look into exactly what all these supplementary and interim budgets mean to the province of Alberta. I started thinking: well, how is this different from what I did as a living? What we've got in my normal day's work would be that we would get a company that would come in – and I have to use companies. I did do municipal audits in my past, but companies are the ones that I best reflect to. Now, what we've got is: a company will do a budget, and in that budget they will have more or less funding, but overall they try to keep their budget spending within the amount that they have for a total budget. When we look at the government, what we've got is a budget up until March 31.

Now, you would expect that you would try to stay within the budget. But what happens is that if something comes up throughout the year that is unanticipated, you would bring in a supplementary supply estimate. It is to address things that were unforeseen, and it goes to March 31 as well. So that's the supplementary part of it. Now, what happens is that when we see supplementaries like this one go through, the question is: could we have anticipated these expenses during the year when we did the last budget? For a lot of them I would say that the answer is yes. They could have been foreseen and added to the budget.

This is where we go into the second part of all of this, the interim supply budget, and that is from April 1, so the day after the March 31 year-end, going to May 31. That is when the government says: we need time to work on our budget or to complete our budget so that we are prepared for the next year. I guess the question always needs to be: when is the appropriate time for our Treasury Board to be working on their budget? Is it appropriate that they're working on our budget after the year-end date? I would argue that that's inappropriate. So when we're looking at the interim supply, I fully would say that that is something that needs to be addressed and needs to be stopped because in the end these budgets should be done well ahead of time. I hear the government saying: well, we need extra time to be able to prepare these budgets; we wouldn't have foreseen oil being the lowest ever. To the argument that the government makes on that: why not release next year's budget on March 31, 2017, after the whole year has been done?

In the end what we're looking back to is the supplementary one, though. I'll vote against the interim because I don't believe there's a real value, but for supplementary – things do happen in the year. That I can understand. You have a drought. You have something that comes up. It's something substantive that you can actually say: this happened; we couldn't have predicted it, and this is why we need to do it. It should be something that is out of the norm, not something that has become the norm.

Unfortunately, I am going to get a little bit more technical on the Justice side. I am going to go to the past government's budget. On March 26, 2015, the then Minister of Justice predicted that he would have $250 million of needed spending for my department, which is corrections, that we're adjusting today.

Mr. Rodney: Expenditures.

Mr. Cyr: Expenditures. Thank you.

The government came out with – oh, sorry. I'll go back. This is an important point. The past government predicted three years of flat spending in that budget, so $251 million in that budget. Now, the current government created a budget on October 15, 2015. Their budget was $267 million, $269 million, and $269 million. So what we're looking at is a $17 million difference for 2015-16, $19 million for '16-17, and $19 million for 2017-2018, and you're asking: why is this important, Scott? How could this be important? We're talking such big numbers here; $17 million is not a lot. So let's go to this government's third quarter.

We were in the third quarter – this is nine months. The estimate was $165 million, and the actual was – sorry. Let's go to Justice's spending; let's go to full on Justice, not just my corrections. Justice is $1.065 billion, but the actual spent was $1.46 billion. That means that Justice in the third quarter was $19 million under budget – under budget – in the third quarter. Now, if we're looking at the past government's wonderful estimates that they brought forward, it shows that the government was actually spending according to what was previously budgeted for.

Now, how can we be over? Third quarter: we're at $19 million underspent. Fourth quarter: we're expecting to be $8 million overspent. That's $27 million difference, not just $8 million, that the government is asking for. This is important because in the fourth quarter we're seeing that the estimate was $218 million, that the government had estimated, but it actually spent $245 million. Madam Chair, $245 million is an amazing amount of money. Now, the question is: what brought on that fourth-quarter extra spending? Is there something that happened in this last quarter that we're expecting, from January to March, to today, that brought on an extra $27 million?

Now, we heard from the Justice minister that we brought in new float pools and scheduling software. I went back to the business plan that the minister had provided in the last set of estimates. Nowhere did the business plan say that corrections was going to be bringing in a new float pool or scheduling software or even address that in the estimates or in the budget. What we do have in the business plan is to formalize . . . information sharing practices between Correctional Services and other enforcement agencies so that intelligence gathered within correctional facilities is shared appropriately to prevent and detect criminal offences.

That is the only thing that is being mentioned when we talk about corrections services. So how exactly did we suddenly put forward an emergency, $27 million worth of emergency, that says that we need to spend this money unbudgeted?

I asked the minister: were we unsafe? I understand that safety for our corrections officers needs to be a priority. These men and women work hard for Alberta, and they also protect the inmates that they have in their facilities. I asked that question, and the answer was that she didn't feel that it was an unsafe environment. So this isn't an emergency, then.

Now, I understand that things change, but in the end it appears that we've got a government that did March madness in Justice, spent more money just to spend out the wonderful rest of their budget. When we look at this, it actually is that after the third quarter we have an overspending of over 12 per cent. Twelve per cent. That's a lot of money that is being brought out now. I understand. This is dictated in here, saying: salaries and wages. Salaries and wages make up this. So if this overage was going to be there from salaries and wages, it would have been consistent throughout the four quarters, not just the final quarter, where it balloons. That's where we need to be addressing the fact that this doesn't appear to be emergency funding that the government needs.

Now, I will be supporting this bill. I will be making sure that our corrections officers have the funding they need, but it distresses me to no end that we have a float pool and scheduling software that looks like it was actually moved forward on our corrections staff without consultation. This is something that we have heard consistently, over and over, with this government. They consistently push things through without consulting the people that they're involving in the decision.

Now, I myself haven't ever been involved with a float pool. Last night I thought: "You know what? It's not a bad idea for us to look at what exactly a float pool does and the advantages and disadvantages." The fact is that float pools are positions where the government puts temporary or casual or part-time workers in place. The fact is that if there had been good consultation – and I'm not saying that there was none, because I am not in the ministry, but it does seem to be rushed through – these guards that are there would be bringing forward some of the concerns, saying: "These float pools haven't worked in some areas. Will they be working for us? How will the government work this through? How will the shift-scheduling software work? Are you spending a lot of money unnecessarily for Alberta if safety is not a concern?" The fact is that when we've seen this brought into other jurisdictions, it has created some confusion.

Now, I don't want to get stuck on float pools because in the end, if this is a concern, I'm sure the guards will bring that up, but I will reiterate that it doesn't appear that the Justice spending in the supplemental is an emergency. It doesn't appear that our government should be putting forward this $8 million. However, I still believe that this supplementary does have some things that we need, so I will be supporting this.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

9 a.m.

Thursday, March 17, 2016

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

I'd like to begin with a traditional Irish prayer.

May the road rise up to meet you.

May the wind be always at your back.

May the sun shine warm upon your face; and rains fall soft upon your fields and until we meet again, may God hold you in the hollow of His hand.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 2

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2016

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Again, it's my privilege to rise today and move third reading of Bill 2, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2016.

When passed, these interim supply estimates will authorize approximate spending of $29.6 million for the Legislative Assembly, $7.2 billion in expense funding, $864 million in capital investment funding, $164 million in financial transactions funding for the government, and $363 million for the transfer from the lottery fund to the general revenue fund.

These interim supply estimates provide funding authorization that will allow the normal business of the province to continue until the full 2016-17 estimates are approved before the end of May. These estimates also follow through on specific commitments this government has made to the people of Alberta.

Madam Speaker, once again I would like to emphasize that the estimates we are debating today will be included and fully debated again when the main budget documents are tabled in under a month.

Madam Speaker, I should also add that this bill is consistent with previous interim supply bills that have come before this Legislature time and again. As members know well from the discussion yesterday, interim supply bills are commonplace in Alberta. Over the past 15 years this Legislature has debated and passed interim supply bills in 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004, 2005 – Alberta's centennial – 2006, 2007, 2008, 2009, 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014, and 2015.

In summary, Madam Speaker, approval of this bill pending the release and approval of the budget will allow the Chamber the time it needs to review and debate those plans in detail. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Once again I rise to speak against Bill 2, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2016. It may come as a great surprise to the members opposite, but the Wildrose Official Opposition cannot support this bill. As has already been said, this is an $8.7 billion blank cheque for a government to do whatever it wants with for the next two months. The bill, unlike the budget that will be out in a month, contains no specific spending details on programs or capital.

Now, this is not to say that a future Wildrose government would never introduce an interim or supplementary supply, but this is to say that we would attach a budget impact statement. We would ensure in the event of interim or supplementary supply that the members of this Legislature, elected to represent all Albertans and protect taxpayers, would have the information in front of them to know what the impact will be on total expenditures for both operations and capital and to know what the impact will be on total expenditures and the deficit. This is basic information that members of this House should have in front of them before we responsibly vote on a piece of legislation empowering the government to spend another $8.7 billion.

We don't know how much of this will be borrowed, debt taken on, and if that debt is for capital, operating, or both. We don't know how much is borrowed. I suspect that the entire amount is borrowed, considering the deficit we are expected to run this year. Alberta needs to get our spending under control. Spending has been out of control for a decade, Madam Speaker. The current government can blame the previous government as much as it likes – and there is lots of blame to go around – but it is their problem to fix now.

The problem is not revenue, because they'll never have enough revenue to satisfy their spending hunger, Madam Speaker. They will never have enough revenue to meet the NDP's ideological goals for the expanded role of government. We have had a spending problem in this province for a decade. We spend more than any other large province in this country. We spend $8 billion a year more on operations alone than British Columbia, a province significantly larger than us, and British Columbia is no right-wing, neoconservative, feudal kingdom with no government. British Columbia has a well-functioning, rather large government, but somehow they manage to spend $8 billion a year less than Alberta with an even larger population. This is a well-entrenched problem that we must get a grip on.

We heard just this week at the Public Accounts Committee, representing all members of this House, how government is losing money on its cash management. Hundreds of bank accounts all over the government are costing taxpayers money for no good reason whatsoever. Bureaucrats are forced to endure hundreds of hours of reconciliation using Excel spreadsheets in multiple departments. Can we imagine having separate bank accounts for travel, a separate bank account for telecommunications? We wouldn't pay our bills at home like this. I don't have a separate bank account for every single activity I engage in, but for some reason our government does, and they're using Excel spreadsheets to keep track of it. It's absolute madness, and it's costing taxpayers in this province hundreds of millions of dollars a year. It is money that we may as well put on a bonfire and light up. Meanwhile their colleagues in Service Alberta have a superautomated system that saves money, time, and manpower, an example to be followed.

Every time we run a deficit in this province – and we're going to be going on nine deficits in a row now, Madam Speaker – and take on more debt, we are taking money away from teachers, nurses, and doctors that could be hired to work. We are taking money away from critical infrastructure projects: roads, bridges, schools, hospitals, cancer centres. This might mean we spend more money right upfront, but in the long term we will spend less money on the critical infrastructure and programs in this province as debt interest payments begin to crowd out regular program and capital spending. Deficits and debt prevent schools and hospitals from being built, for no good reason. We will be paying billions of dollars a year in interest payments, and there will be no reason for it.

This is not akin to a mortgage, Madam Speaker. Most members in this House probably have a mortgage. I have a mortgage. A mortgage is a reasonable financial program for you to take on debt to purchase an asset which can be sold at another time. You pay down the principal, and hopefully before you retire, you own your house at some point. On a mortgage we pay the principal. It is honest debt. We are obtaining an asset which can be sold.

This is not akin to the debt our government has taken on over the last decade. This is akin to buying yachts and airplanes for the people who loaned you the money. We have not paid a penny of principal on our debt since Alberta began going back into debt. We have been merely refinancing the loans. We take out more debt every year. This is akin to us not taking out a mortgage but taking out a new car loan every single year without paying any interest on it. The debt only gets bigger whereas our mortgages get smaller, and the asset we're obtaining at the end we'd generally expect to be able to sell at a reasonable price.

The vast majority of government assets that we purchase cannot be resold on the market at a reasonable market value compared to what we paid to build or purchase them. If we build a fire station, the fire station is critical and important, but I don't know many people in Strathmore who are interested in buying a fire station, Madam Speaker. Most government assets cannot be sold like a house or even a car, which would depreciate. Schools are important, but I don't know many people interested in buying a school. They might want the property to redevelop for some reason, but we are not going to be able to sell these assets anywhere close to the cost it took us to purchase the land and build it.

Comparing our deficit financing to mortgages is dishonest, and now we've gone beyond dishonest capital debt to dishonest operational debt. We are now borrowing on the credit card to pay for the groceries in this province, something we have not done since the early 1990s. In fact, our debt before the next provincial election, using the very rosy revenue projections in the budget, which they won't even come close to meeting – based on those rosy revenue projections, our debt before the next provincial election will be more than twice as large as the next-highest peak of our debt in 1992, our next-highest deficit. Our debt will be more than twice as large, Madam Speaker, and for no good reason whatsoever. They might tout the temporary benefits of all the money we can spend on different things, many of which are very positive right now, but in the long term we will spend less on programs and we will spend less on capital.

Now, to some members of the Assembly who style themselves progressive, debt is hope. No, Madam Speaker, debt is not hope. Debt is a ball and chain, and it is a burden that we place on future generations. It is an unethical thing for us to do to vote today to bind future generations with the taxes of tomorrow for the spending of today. But this is what we can expect from an ideological government that cannot be trusted to responsibly manage the finances of this province or to create the right economic conditions for growth and jobs.

I would hope that this government reads the Wildrose jobs action plan and implements the ideas that will get Albertans working again. I trust that my colleagues will vote against Bill 2 and stand up against unexamined, carte blanche spending bills like this. We wonder how we got here, where so many self-described progressives in this House consider debt to be hope. Well, we have a lot of hope right now, Madam Speaker. We're going to have about $50 billion of hope before the next election.

How is it, though, that so many people who hold views so close to members of the government can even call themselves a conservative by any measure? Well, there's a bit of history in it. In 1942 the Conservative Party of Canada elected a man named John Bracken, the leader of the Progressive Party of Manitoba, as their leader. Mr. Bracken had a condition for the leadership, and that was that the party had to change its name to Progressive Conservative. Given that party delegates had adopted some left-wing policies, this sounded reasonable at the time. Progressive Party members were generally disenchanted former Liberals with a populist flair. They supported things like free trade, marginal income taxes, and prohibition on alcohol. There was no party merger, just a party name change. In Alberta the local party followed suit with a change of name in 1943.

Fast-forward to 1991, when federal Conservatives were fighting in the PC-Reform battle. The PC Party of Alberta divorced itself from their federal cousins to distance itself from the federal civil war. Ken Kowalski said at the time: individuals in the province should be able to participate at a provincial level of politics that they want, and they should be able to participate in federal politics with the party they want. This sounds like comments to reconcile two factions on the surface, but in fact it was a welcome mat to federal disenchanted Liberals to join the PC Party of the day.

Who were some of those Liberals? Stan Woloshyn, Bridget Pastoor, and Gene Zwozdesky crossed the floor from the Liberals to join the PC caucus and cabinet. PC cabinet ministers Thomas Lukaszuk and Dennis Anderson openly supported federal Liberals like Anne McLellan and continue to do so today. What became clear is that the PC Party of Alberta was no longer a place for conservatives like myself and my Wildrose colleagues. It was no longer a conservative party any more.

An Hon. Member: Relevance?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Speaker, the relevance is to the conversation around debt and how we got here today.

"I'm a Progressive Conservative," party members like the Member for Calgary-North West would say when they endorse federal Liberals in Calgary to help them defeat federal Conservatives, who will actually stand up for Alberta. In fact, it's happening today as we speak in Calgary-Greenway. All this means is: I'm a PC, but I'm no Conservative. Now, I've got some federal Liberal friends like Kent Hehr who are great people, but I would never think of trying to get the guy elected. There is nothing wrong with being a Liberal, but there is something definitely wrong with being a Liberal and running as a so-called Conservative just to get elected in Alberta. Political realignment is taking place right now in our province, Madam Speaker.

Point of Order Relevance

Dr. Starke: Madam Speaker, point of order. Leaving completely aside whether this is even relevant to the debate – and I would suggest that the relevance is a stretch, shall we say – citing Standing Order 23(h), the hon. member has just made allegations against another member, specifically the Member for Calgary-North West. While I can understand a certain level of sensitivity this day, I would suggest that perhaps the hon. member would do well to confine his comments today to the matter at hand. Although this little trip down memory lane is certainly instructive and interesting to all of us, I would suggest that in terms of the consideration of Bill 2 this particular narrative that he has entered into, including the criticism of a member of this Legislature, is not in order and should be ruled out of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, you want to comment on the point of order?

Mr. Hanson: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I really didn't hear any severe allegations against the member that would constitute a point of order in this case. As for the matter of relevance, I believe we're only 10 minutes into the member's speech, and I'm sure that the relevance will be shown toward the end of it. I believe he's right, that this is showing a pattern of debt and, as was delivered by the Finance minister over the years, the delays in delivery of a budget. That doesn't justify this government or any government using that as an excuse to prolong or delay a budget, especially when a lot of the municipalities at this time of year are counting on those funds to deliver their own budgets. So on those grounds I don't believe that this constitutes a point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I know that the House leader for the third party does not enjoy trips down memory lane when we're talking about the record of the previous government. This is entirely relevant. We need to know how we got here if we're going to fix the problem. We have had a centre-left government in this province for the last three Premiers. We have had a government that has increased spending practically every year. We've had a government that tried to increase taxes on Albertans, and it's very relevant to how we got here. It's very relevant to the process of interim supply and interim budget measures, supplementary budget measures. It is entirely relevant to how we got here. We're discussing the process by which Alberta got to its current financial state.

Madam Speaker, it's a bit rich for a member of the third party to say that we are not allowed to point out an open statement and position held by the Member for Calgary-North West when the Member for Calgary-North West went on a vicious tirade against members of the Official Opposition just the other day. Members like to give it, but they don't like to take it.

The Deputy Speaker: Do any others wish to speak to the point of order? The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: For the sake of efficiency I will keep my comments very short. The hon. member is referring to governments of other jurisdictions. He's referring to governments of previous generations of other parties, not this one here and now. We're not here to grill them; we're here to take a look at Bill 2. If all of us narrow the focus on Bill 2, not things like by-elections that are occurring right now, as an example, because, let's face it, that's what this is about, then we would all be serving Albertans better. Let's keep the focus on Bill 2. Let's get on with the show.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Madam Speaker, I think members of the third party have made a good argument around the point of order. I wanted to stress that, you know, a member from the opposition is not debating the matter in question, and the arguments that they are making saying that he is flimsy at best, and I would very much like to move on with the business of the day.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further comments on the point of order?

Seeing none, I'm prepared to rule. We actually have two matters here. I would say that we don't have a point of order; however, I would caution the member that you need to stay on topic. You're straying into other areas that really are not relevant to the bill. You'll want to stay on the bill.

The other matter: we do have a long-standing tradition in this House that we don't make comments about another member who is not present to defend themselves. So keep that in mind as well.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would then ask that you would echo those very same comments to the member noted here regarding her comments towards members of this Legislature when we are not here.

Debate Continued

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Speaker, it's been a long road to where we are today. Many Albertans remember proudly when Ralph Klein, one of the greatest Premiers this province has ever had, stood on the steps of the McDougall Centre and held a paid-in-full sign over his head. How proud Albertans were to be the only debt-free jurisdiction in Canada, a distinction which we held until a party that many of us were either members of or held a lot of affinity for went off the rails.

First, we began by drawing down the sustainability fund, which hit over $17 billion in circa 2007. It was a massive fund designed for a rainy day, but we drew it down. We were promised that it would be temporary, it would not be permanent, and we would certainly never actually have to take on debt to finance the government. But the sustainability fund was drawn down year after year after year, and year after year Conservatives had to find a new voice in which to place their trust.

We are where we are today. We now have a debt that exceeds $15 billion. The sustainability fund has virtually run out. Our debt will exceed $50 billion, and we have no plan to get back even to a balance, let alone to pay off the debt. Madam Speaker, what we're dealing with today, an $8.7 billion interim supply bill, is no trifling matter, as the members opposite would have us believe. We are staring down a financial crisis in this province. We are running the largest deficit in our history. We soon will have the largest debt in our history, and we have no plan whatsoever to even turn in the right direction. Our deficit is getting larger, not smaller.

Right now we have already run eight deficits in this province consecutively. We are staring down a ninth, and we will almost certainly run a 12th unless oil hits $150 a barrel. That is no plan. In fact, it's been the plan of the government for about the last eight years to wait for the price of oil to continually go up and up and up to bail out the government. Well, guess what, Madam Speaker? It's not going to happen. A government that is responsible with the money that the people have entrusted to them in their tax dollars and their royalties would have a serious plan to get back to balance. We need to do it.

Madam Speaker, you will see from the Official Opposition a plan to reduce our expenditures in a realistic and timely manner to get back to balance in short order. We need to reasonably reduce our expenditures, focus on core, important front-line services. Things like the government's pitiful cash management program, corporate welfare schemes that are getting bigger, not smaller, overspending on the bureaucracy like appointing an AUPE union hack to negotiate with AUPE: those things will not bring down expenditures. The Wildrose Official Opposition will present a realistic plan to reduce our expenditures. We will produce a realistic plan to get us back on track and rebuild the Alberta advantage, that members of the conservative Wildrose Official Opposition believe we must rebuild.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to rise and to speak to Bill 2, the interim supply bill, on third reading. Yesterday the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort gave this Assembly an interesting lesson on dates the interim supply had been used in the past, and he did this morning as well. The minister stated, "For the record . . . if you look at the past 15 years, this Legislature has debated interim supply acts in 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007, 2008, 2009, 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014, and 2015." While we all appreciate this history lesson, I would like to take this opportunity to remind the government that it came into power saying that they would do things differently, and rattling off these numbers to make the case for unbudgeted spending does not look like things are being done differently. It looks a lot to me like this government wants to use interim supply just as much if not more than the previous government.

In fact, financially I don't see a lot of difference between this government and the last one. We still have the same reckless spending and mismanagement, the same empty promises. Now, to be fair, I do suppose they are differentiating themselves by spending the majority of the time that they're governing using interim supply rather than budgets. I guess that's different.

Madam Speaker, I think this Assembly can tell that I'm against passing this interim supply bill, and I'll give you a few reasons why. I've never made it a position of mine to write cheques without knowing who the cheque is going to and for what purpose. When I used to broker deals in real estate, I was required to have a complete accounting of all the monies. I had to account for the asking price. In this case, I suppose, we do have that, and it's a whopping $8.7 billion. Possession date or a date of transfer: well, I guess we know when they want this money for, which happens to be April 1. We have a couple of comparisons that are equal to that part of the contract, so I'll allow the government credit for that, too. It has told us how long they're asking for this money for, which happens to be one-sixth of the year, or two months.

How about the parties to the contract? Yeah, I'd say we're fine with that, too. This government requests permission to spend taxpayers' dollars, so the parties of the contract are going to be the government and the people of Alberta. What concerns me is that this difference from a normal contract is the bill's total lack of details to point out what Albertans will get in exchange for that $8.7 billion. You know, I would like to ask this government: what are Albertans specifically getting for this deal? Your interim supply bill has left this area blank.

Imagine if I tried to sell a house and I told the buyer what street it was on but not the house number: "Well, you know, ladies and gentlemen, after you sign here, we'll tell you which house you bought." I don't think that's a good way to do a contract. I think that would get me into trouble. That important part that talks about what's included, you know, the chattels – a fridge, a stove, a washer, a dryer, anything that would go as part of the deal: all those specifics, those little details are important parts of the contract as well. Not only would my buyers tell me to take a hike if I tried to do that, but if by some miracle I did manage to make that sale but my books were later audited, there'd be heavy fines, and I'd likely be out of a job or perhaps serving jail time for that. Proper accounting is absolutely super important when we're talking about other people's money, and in this case Albertans' money is other people's money. We are accounting for $8.7 billion, and we're asked to be done with that in a very short order of time and with very little detail.

But this is government, and as you can surmise from the Member for Calgary-Fort's laundry list of interim supply years, this is just the way it's done. They want to carry on the PC legacy of having interim supply. In fact, we've already seen two. So this government is asking for $8.7 billion – that's a staggering amount of dollars – to cover one-sixth of the year, and it's given us no details about how this money will be spent and what the results will be from it.

I believe that my constituents would share my concerns and would tell me not to hand out money willy-nilly. I've heard it before, and I would expect them to say: make sure that whatever money you're spending is being spent in the best interests of Albertans. You know, they elected me to stand up in defence of their hard-earned tax dollars, and they expect me to fight for the right to see that those dollars are not going to fund, say, NDP pet projects. Frankly, we don't know if it's going to pet projects, if it's going specifically to that or bad ideological policies or, as is really the case now, toward unknown, unbudgeted projects. That's what we're getting. We don't know what projects are budgeted for.

We don't want to have debt, as the Member for Strathmore-Brooks was talking about. Debt is a problem. It takes away the government's ability to run programs, extra programs. I know this government would love to have those extra programs, but the more that we're in debt, the fewer options we have for running other programs that are out there, programs that would be near and dear to your hearts. There are programs here that are near and dear to my heart, but every time we take on more debt, we have to finance that debt, and we have to pay that debt back. Every time we take on more debt, we shrink our ability to have extra programs. That, frankly, scares me.

You know, throughout my life I've tried to save money. Every month I tried to save a little bit more money and set money aside so that when the inevitable day comes when you want to retire, you have that extra money; you don't have to worry about it. In fact, I was able to go into a semiretired state about four years ago because I saved a little bit more money each month.

In this case, the government of Alberta has the same case in point. What they were doing, the previous PC government – and it was instituted by Lougheed, the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. If we had extra money, we would set it aside in the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. Ralph Klein, in fact, had the debt paid in full in 2004, and in 2004 we were able to save money in the Alberta heritage savings trust fund.

It's very necessary to have our debt looked after so we can be able to have programs that Albertans want and need and have it in a sustainable, predictable fashion that is able to carry on from year to year. Madam Speaker, I would like to know what, if any, initiatives the government is putting in place to curtail spending. Or is this just going to be another spending spree, with no program parameters, no deliverables? In Advanced Education, the portfolio that I have, I'd like to know what exactly is being funded. Does any of this interim supply go towards operating grants? Does any of this funding go to universities to support their operating expenses?

I think that it was irresponsible to not be here in February, frankly, six weeks ago, to debate this budget, to go through estimates and generally get on with running this province. Frankly, this budget affects Albertans, all Albertans. Again, if you have debt, it's going to affect the programs that we are able to fund. Not having a budget done in a timely manner has put many of our municipalities behind on their infrastructure projects. Towns like Provost, who need to have their water and their sewer upgraded, are now going to be at least two months behind on their project because things just don't happen all at once. The town still needs to follow proper procedures to work and to complete their project.

Let's not forget that this is Canada. We have a small window of time during which we can count on good weather. Typically, you know, it can be June before the frost is out of the ground properly, and then around June we can see the rains come. That is around the time that we get the majority of our rain in this province, so that puts us back a little bit more on the time for projects for towns like Provost that need to get into the ground, dig up the soil to be able to do this. If we had been here in February – the government knows full well that it's part of our orders, that this is when we should be looking at it – we wouldn't be two months behind on the budget negotiations and needing interim supply. But now we are needing interim supply because we weren't here in February debating this budget.

My riding is in central Alberta. You know, winter stays a bit longer there and comes a bit earlier than it does for our southern Alberta counterparts. This two-month delay will make a difference. Believe me. How can Albertans trust this government when it delays such important legislation as a budget for so long and then withholds information on how the money they need for interim supply will be spent? For instance, can the government give this Assembly any details about funding for capital projects for postsecondary institutions? Will this interim supply cover any of these projects? If it doesn't, then the consequence will be that the government will put capital projects, which postsecondary institutions desperately need, two months behind. Just like my analogy with Provost, we have a short window of opportunity to work in the ground to be able to do these projects. And you pay more to have projects done in the winter because there's just that extra cost to do work, to heat concrete, for example, for people to work outside. They can't physically work outside when it's 30, 40 below for as long as they could if they were working in the spring, summer, or fall, when the weather is predictably somewhere between 10 and, say, 25 degrees Celsius.

This government says that it needs to make room for more students in the province as a result of this economic downturn, which is an excellent point, but their actions have made it increasingly difficult to have more spaces open as we will now be two months behind in the construction of these schools. Postsecondary institutions need specific funding, and they need predictable funding, so even if there are token dollars for these projects here, these institutions can't know that because the details just, frankly, aren't in interim supply. At the end of the day, bringing in a late budget is not a stable, predictable approach to financing that these institutions need. They need predictable, stable financing.

So where are the details? If the government gives us simply no information . . . [Mr. Taylor's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would just like to ask the Member for Battle River-Wainwright – we heard very clearly at the AAMDC meetings over the previous couple of days how they'll be affected by the delays in this budget. Can you just expand? You talked about Provost and how delays in the budget would affect their budget and their infrastructure projects. I was just wondering if you could expand a little bit more on how the delays in the delivery of this budget will affect the urban and rural municipalities in your area. Specifically, how will they be able to plan ahead, get their projects off the ground, get the bids out in time to take advantage of our very, very short season?

Mr. Taylor: Well, thank you for that question. You know, the people from areas like Provost and throughout my riding have all come to me. They were very concerned about this budget. They were concerned about, frankly, the last budget, that was delivered in the latter part of November. Now they are saying to me: when is this budget going to be coming down? At the time I had no answer for them. I can tell them now with reasonable certainty when this budget will be delivered and debated. For them, they need to have that money. They need to make sure of what they're operating with. They have so many different parameters in their town to have things done. They have projects that are going on and that go on every year. Again, they need the monies, and they need to make sure that there's an accounting for that money. They need to know how much they're getting and when it's going to be there for them.

Frankly, they are concerned. They keep asking me: when is this going to happen? And time and time again I have to say that I'm not sure because we're not the government, so we don't dictate the time that the budget gets to be brought down. The government, as it stands, has that option to be able to say when the budget gets to be brought down. It seems to me like we've run with interim supply, not the budget, for the majority of this past year, since the election, and that has made it very difficult for all the towns within my riding to be able to operate. I implore them to get their budgets in on time so we can debate them in a timely manner and help out all of the towns in my riding. They want a sustainable, predictable approach to finance in all of these towns.

Thank you for that question.

The Deputy Speaker: Any others under 29(2)(a)? Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Madam Speaker. I enjoyed the presentation by the member. One question I have – and I heard him elaborate a little on it, and I'm hoping he could expand a little bit – is on the difference in how much we spend compared to the province to the west of us, which is considerably bigger and spends about $8 billion less.

The second thing, if the member could expand on, is what his constituents feel about the budgeting practices of the government compared to what they need to do within their own households. I know I hear from my constituents all the time a lot of frustration about the inefficiency that we see within the government of Alberta when it comes to budgeting. You know, I know in my household and in the businesses that are in my riding that if we followed those practices, we would be out of business. So I'd like to hear from the member a little bit more on that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The first question was: how much more do we spend here in Alberta than the province to the west of us, referring to the province of British Columbia? Frankly, we spend $2,000 more per person than the province of B.C. does. That province is able to get this money and be able to do it for that much less than we do, and if they can do it for that much money, why can't we? Why can't we find efficiencies in this government in our interim supply budgets, in the budget itself to be able to operate at $2,000 less?

The Deputy Speaker: Next on my list is the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'll echo my comments from second reading and ask the question: why are we here? Why are we here debating interim supply? The Member for Battle River-Wainwright, I think, has covered a lot of the same question that I have, which is: just because it was done in the past, it doesn't mean it should be done now. In fact, I would have thought that with a new government we would have the opportunity for a breath of fresh air, for a new approach, for a different way of doing things. I think that's what Albertans at least thought they were voting for on May 5, but apparently not. And it's not just a simple technical matter. As I asked the other day in the House, I wonder why it is that we're here.

There is a by-election going on, and there is, I suppose, a natural political instinct to try to defer what's likely to be not a good-news budget beyond that by-election. I understand that, and I can actually appreciate why this government would want to wait until after the federal budget to propose their budget . . .

Mr. Rodney: Will you have a candidate in the by-election?

Mr. Clark: Yeah, it's a fair question, a fair question. You just wait. You just wait. [interjections] That's right. It's all part of a bigger plan. Trust me.

. . . to find out exactly what the federal budget is going to offer to Alberta, and I sincerely hope it is a substantial amount of money, far beyond what our population is. But I really worry that the budget is coming down in the middle of April, on April 14, and not in the very first week of April, when we're back after this upcoming two-week break. When I asked myself why that is, I discovered, of course, that the federal NDP convention is the weekend of April 8, 9, and 10 here in Edmonton. And that's curious, Madam Speaker, that the party across the way here would defer the important business of this House, would delay letting Albertans know exactly how they're going to address the incredible challenges facing our province, for simple political reasons. It should always be province above party and not the other way around.

When I look at the interim supply bill itself, I see the continuation of an upward trend in spending that started in Budget 2015 and, without question, started in previous budgets as well. But we see our revenues falling off a cliff. Our revenues have gone down substantially. While the Finance minister may have mused yesterday at AAMD and C that certain new revenue streams may be an opportunity for the province, even then I don't think that Albertans will be able to smoke their way to prosperity.

What I want to see out of this government and what I want to see out of this next budget is more than just simple spending restraint. I want to see more than just nibbling around the edges. I want to see a government committed to innovation in the public service, not to massive salary cuts, not to massive service cuts, not to uncreative ways that these budget challenges have been handled in the past. What I want to see is a government committed to true innovation in the public service. I want to see the entrepreneurial spirit that exists in our province to exist in our public service and in our public services.

I want to see our health care system be truly innovative in its service delivery, truly focused on patients and end-users and not focused on empire building, on bureaucracy, on clipboards and checklists. I want to see it focused on people. I want to see a system that listens to those on the front lines. It's not just about the next incremental dollar in the system; it's about delivering proper health outcomes to Albertans. In education, the same thing. In the public service, the same thing. We have that opportunity because that's who we are as Albertans. We have the opportunity to build an entrepreneurial culture, but I see absolutely no effort or interest or instinct from this government to do that. That results in the continuation of an upward trend in costs even at a time when we are facing significant – significant – pressures on the revenue side.

What living within our means means is that we have to be realistic about the cost of delivering services and we have to be realistic about our revenue and our ability to actually carry that cost. We've heard that the province of British Columbia, to our west, has substantially lower costs and a substantially higher population. This government needs to be truthful with Albertans to either reduce the cost of providing services to Albertans, to reduce the level of service it provides to Albertans, or to increase the revenues to pay for the services provided to Albertans.

None of those things is happening in this budget, in interim supply. Maybe it's going to happen in the budget. We don't know – we have to wait another month to find out – but none of the indications so far are positive. I worry that this government is going to simply drop back and punt for another year, borrow tremendous amounts of money with no real plan to get Alberta back to balance, and it's not easy. It's not easy, and I don't deny that it's not easy because it isn't.

We've put out a plan. The Alberta Party caucus, mighty MLA of one so far, has put out a plan, and we'll put out another one. I'll tell you here and now that we will put out another detailed shadow budget to tell Albertans exactly how we would address the challenges facing our province. I challenge again each of my opposition colleagues to do the same thing, to tell Albertans in precise detail how exactly you would make the tough choices required to get Alberta back to balance without impacting our entrepreneurial spirit, without unduly impacting the business community or Albertans as individuals.

These are very, very challenging times that we face in this province. What I want is a public service that has a clear strategic plan. I want to see a clear strategic plan from this government. In Bill 2 I don't see a plan. That's what interim supply is, just simply a continuation of the line that we had before. I want to see priorities from this government attached to that plan, real priorities, and I want to see those priorities flow down to each and every department.

I want to see this government, the front bench in particular, to rethink how the public service operates, to think creatively about that, to challenge some of the things that you're being told, to make personnel changes where required, and to truly innovate, to transform the culture of Alberta's public service to better fit who we are as Albertans; and that is, builders and innovators and doers. We do more with less in this province, at least we do in the private sector, at least we do in the not-for-profit sector in this province.

The only place that I don't see an effort to do more with less is the provincial government, and that, my friends, is on you. In this interim supply bill I see exactly the continuation of that model. I see a government with its head buried in the sand, and I see a continued spiral of debt with absolutely no plan to get out of it.

With that, my friends, I will cede the remaining time and indicate that I simply cannot support the interim supply bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll call on the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to speak. I consider it a privilege to be able to participate in this debate. Of course, funding the government and all of the services that we provide in care for people is an extremely important issue, something that we never need to lose sight of. But this really is a very big request with very little detail, and that really is, I guess, the thing that challenges us.

We have to be able to go back to our ridings and say to people: "Yes, we voted for 8 point whatever billion dollars, almost $9 billion, worth of spending by the government. But, well, sorry; we really don't know quite where it's all going, and we definitely don't know where it's going to come from." That's the one question we get all too often: where are they getting that money from? It makes it extremely difficult for us to vote with confidence that we can actually answer those questions. That, quite frankly, is a very clear part of the reason why we will find it extremely difficult and will not vote in support of the principle of interim supply, not necessarily the fact that the government needs money to operate. We just question how it's being handled, and the fact that there aren't enough answers involved. As I said, it's an extremely large amount.

I've had the opportunity in the past, actually, to do a little bit of work in the area of credit and credit counselling with people and their family spending. One of the challenges in our modern society is the fact that as the cashless society comes upon us, there's a principle in which the awareness of spending becomes more and more difficult for people to realize. You know, it's credit cards, and now you don't even have to hardly use your credit card anymore. There are Flash payments. It goes out so quickly and so easily that people don't have a realization of how much money they actually are spending. As a result, we're seeing increases in the need for nonprofit credit agencies and debt assistance agencies and all those kinds of things. Quite frankly, I think that principle is a little bit at work here in our government.

First of all, this isn't our own money, which always, with all trusteeship, seems to make it a little bit less urgent for us to be careful with it. Secondly, because it's just numbers on a page that somebody else planned and it goes somewhere else and we never see it, we never feel it, we never touch it, we don't have a sense of how much money we're actually talking about here even for the interim supply.

I tried to do a little bit of research on how much $8.7 billion in interim supply actually looks like. It's quite a staggering realization, actually. I'd encourage members to google it. So $8.7 billion – well, make it simple: start with $1 billion, and visualize the equivalent of 10 fork-load pallets neatly, tightly stacked four feet high, and they are approximately four feet each side, not quite, usually 42 inches on a pallet. We're talking about 10 pallets stacked four feet high with $100 bills. There are 16 desks across that row there. I think it's 16. I did a really quick count. If we were to take $8.7 billion, we're looking at 87 pallets stacked on the floor here. They would be over five rows deep, the full length. They would not fit in the aisle.

It's a massive amount of money that we're talking about, with very little accounting for, very little detail for, and the people are not likely to trust us that literally by the semi load full of hundred-dollar bills we just casually pass it and move on. I think that as trustees here we really do need to wrestle with: how much money is this? The numbers have become so big these days that very few of us – I find it a hard time conceptualizing and even imagining how much money we're talking about. As a result, we end up in our world with increasing numbers in credit counselling and increasing need for credit counselling in our society, and it is a problem.

10:00

I went back to my credit counselling days, and I just would like to remind us as a people – I'm not trying to take shots here or be partisan; I just am cautious – of warning signs of debt for an individual, for a family. There's a direct application to us here as trustees for our people. A warning sign of debt when you're getting in trouble with debt is living on overdraft, lines of credit. When we have to rely on that for our funding, we're in trouble. Spending more than your income: we are doing that with this interim supply, and as the Minister of Finance pointed out to us, it's just the precursor of what the actual budget will bring to us, so it's the same thing in a way. Not paying credit in full every month: we're going to be paying on this for decades. Impulsive spending due to money worries: a sign of credit problems. When we just throw money into our economy because we're afraid of what's happening, it's actually a sign of debt problems. Declined by your financial institution: we've already had one downgrade in credit. There are others. I could go on.

There are warning signs here about the amount of money we're spending, and that is our concern, not just the interim supply and the fact that we need money to keep the government running. Yes. But the reality is that this is the precursor, as we have been told, of the budget that we're going to be having. There are warning signs all over the place here. At least, there would be for individual Albertans and families, and I don't see how it should be any different for us at the provincial level.

I just think we need to really, really take a look at our spending issues, our spending problems. I mean, it's been spoken of over and over, and I'm not going to repeat the aspects that have already been said, but we are spending significantly more than the others around us and spending too much. Because of that, when regular Albertans have to live in reality and the province doesn't seem to, it really, really impacts the hope of the people around us. They look at the fact that we're going to be under debt load for decades, and their hope is declining. As we've listened to both industry and business and the municipal governments in our province, the sense of hope is leaving them.

I'm reminded of a famous quote, that I often revert to in my own mind, from Oliver Wendell Holmes, who says, "Beware how you take away hope from another human being." You know, I understand that the goal here is to give hope to people who are in need, to people who are struggling, to try and keep the economy going, but we need to be aware that the countereffects or the side effects take away other kinds of hope. Too much spending has that profound effect on our entire province, so I would just challenge you to be careful about that.

In that regard, there was a recent submission just presented to a couple of your ministers. The initial letter was sent out March 8 from the Alberta Chambers of Commerce. These are the people that seek to actually create businesses and create employment and give jobs. Their most recent survey, which was taken just in February, is a bit of a report card on some of the current financial practices and principles that have been taken in the last few months. For them to measure the results of some of that intended spending – the employment outcomes in much of Alberta for minimum-wage earners have actually been decreasing. There's been a tremendous setback for businesses, and they detailed that. I'm not going to go into all those details, but what I do want to point out is that they detail in their letter that the issues in the province in the last little while have cost on average $21,456 to each business in our province since the election. These are tremendous barriers to business, to their profit lines.

I did some quick research with Stats Canada on the number of small businesses in Alberta. In 2014 they report 158,000 small businesses in this province. If you multiply that by their reported $21,456 cost due to recent legislation and decisions at the provincial level, Madam Speaker, that adds up to $3.39 billion. It's a lot of money. That's a business hurdle, a hurdle or barrier to the survival of business in this province. It's small businesses that create jobs. It's businesses that allow people to be employed. If we had businesses and principles that were actually creating jobs and providing work for people, we maybe wouldn't need to be spending as much as we're spending at a provincial government level.

There's a real impediment to the survival of business in our province. As a result, the small businesses of Alberta – this is from a news release from March 14, so it's pretty current – simply say: what job creators most need right now is not to deal with further burdens preventing them from doing what they do best, which is to create small jobs; a general policy of do no harm by government right now could be the best approach to help improve the labour market and the business market for all Albertans.

I just caution the government to be very careful about how they spend money, how they panic-react to spending money. The size of the interim supply is huge. It's a foreshadowing of a budget that's going to be huge, of debt that's going to continue to pile on and continue to hamper our province in massive ways. Recently a $3.3 billion barrier to business, that they have to earn before they can even survive, is a huge impediment to business in this province.

Now, I'll change gears slightly and speak specifically about the interim supply for Culture and Tourism. The best place to start for future budgets is to look at past expenditure reports, comparing the expenditures that have been with the budget forecasts that are in the interim supply. Taking that as two-twelfths of the total amount, I see that there is a significant jump, a 40 per cent increase, in the Culture and Tourism budget. That concerns me. Is that reflective of the budget that's coming? I mean, it's almost a quarter of the budget for the year, now to be expended, supposedly, within a two-month period. I trust that this does not foreshadow the actual increase in the budget that might happen.

I do credit the government for having been able to save. Again, I'm looking back to the third-quarter report. There are some areas where some money has been saved – kudos to you for that, a good try, a good effort – but I'm quite concerned about what's coming forward, and the fact that I don't have the details makes it impossible for me to vote for this in principle. I could not defend myself before my constituents if I did.

Madam Speaker, I cannot vote for this measure. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will call on the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Good morning, and thank you for the opportunity to speak to this bill. I understand the need for the interim supply. The province needs to fulfill commitments until a budget is approved. I get that – we all get that – but what I don't get is why it is so difficult for the government to produce this budget on time. I would expect that there will be very little change in the coming budget from the one this government passed less than four months ago, other than another $10 billion added to the deficit column.

Last year we waited, Albertans waited, only to hear: be patient; we're working on it. Madam Speaker, after waiting for six months, six months of uncertainty and a growing economic crisis, we received a budget very, very much like the spring budget that was delivered by the previous government. Why the six-month delay? Now, again, the budget is not ready on time, and again, like the last time, this budget will probably read just like the last one.

While we wait, we get not only the interim supply bill, which will keep the government functioning until the new budget comes out, but we will also get the supplementary supply budget, which asks for more money on top of the existing budget. Part of my concern with this whole process is that Bill 2 gives no details, simply amounts of money.

Transportation and Infrastructure show a total of $288,715,000 in expenses for a two-month period, with, again, no details. The same two ministries have a combined capital investment supply of $285,628,000. Can't we get some detail about what will be funded with these amounts of money? That's a lot of money. What are the costs? Where will this money go? Who will benefit from these expenditures? How will Albertans know if the expenditures make a difference to their communities and to their lives?

Yesterday at the AAMDC the minister announced that the government would be cutting two major highway maintenance budgets, crack filling and weed control. Crack filling and weed control. That was very concerning to me and, obviously, to a lot of the other people present. The response was a lot of groans from municipal leaders. There was absolutely no applause for that answer. As a matter of fact, I didn't hear much applause for any of the responses to any of the questions from the ministers present.

The reason the delegates were so unhappy with that particular announcement is not hard to understand. Municipalities know the value of maintenance to infrastructure. Just as an example, there are sections of highway 28 that I have seen and, indeed, there are probably many other highways across the province, I'm sure, that are in dire need of repairs. I've seen cracks and potholes on the shoulders of highway 28 that are over 20 feet long, over six inches wide, and up to six inches deep. Just imagine swerving to avoid an obstacle and hitting something like that with a small car. How we haven't seen a major wreck on this highway as a result of these poor conditions of the road is beyond me. I only hope that drivers that drive these roads often enough to know that there are issues there continue to be extra cautious.

The problem with neglecting this type of repair is that the longer you wait, the more the water infiltrates the road base. With the freeze and thaw that we experience here in Alberta, the destruction to the road base is severe. By neglecting crack repair or the actual resurfacing to keep the highways viable, the weathering necessitates tearing up the highway and rebuilding the base. This is so much more costly than following a regular maintenance schedule, and it is extremely expensive and terribly disruptive to the very high volume of traffic we see, especially on that highway.

It doesn't make sense to me to neglect highway maintenance now in the interest of cost savings, that will lead to much higher costs later. This is not the place to be saving money. But the more important point is that we do not know in this interim supply bill what the funds are for. If I hadn't heard the announcement at AAMDC yesterday, I still would have no idea that this government is going to defund crack repairs. Why did I have to get that information from a Q and A session at AAMDC? Why is that information not included in the interim supply? It was obviously on the minister's mind.

Municipalities are very concerned about the delay in the release of this budget. They have infrastructure projects that need to be tendered for bid so that they can take advantage of our very, very short construction season, which was alluded to by my fellow member from Battle River-Wainwright. They're facing reduced revenue from defaults on linear taxes. They're very concerned about the uncertainty they continue to deal with under this budget process. They need stable, predictable funding, much like the Wildrose's 10-10 MSI plan would provide. They need funding that will allow them to plan and deliver services to the residents of communities in their areas. The lack of a budget does not allow them to do so.

Madam Speaker, the government delayed the spring session, and now we are delaying the budget again. This all adds up to uncertainty at the municipal level and all over the province. Many people have asked me: why are they delaying the budget? The only answer I can come up with is the possibility that it has something to do with the upcoming by-election in Calgary. I realize this is only speculation, but based on the delays last fall until after the federal election, people seem to be making this assumption on their own.

Albertans, municipal governments, both rural and urban, are very concerned about the direction or, actually, the lack of direction from this government. Generally and with respect to this interim supply bill specifically, Albertans are worried.

Madam Speaker, for all the delays, for all the lack of information, for the lack of accountability, for the lack of uncertainty, and for the pattern of political game playing with budgets I cannot and will not support this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Bill 3

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2016

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today and move third reading of Bill 3, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2016.

When passed, these supplementary supply estimates will authorize an approximate total increase of $106 million in expense funding for the departments of Education, Justice and Solicitor General, Labour, Municipal Affairs, Seniors and Housing, and Treasury Board and Finance. As we have discussed previously during the debates, these estimates will ensure that enrolment in our schools is fully funded and that the affordable supportive living initiative has the capital grants it needs to develop long-term care and affordable spaces across our province. These supplementary supply estimates will also transfer $25 million of the previously approved capital investment vote to the expense vote within the Department of Environment and Parks to provide funding to the town of High River for important flood mitigation work that they will own.

Madam Speaker, in conclusion, I look forward to this Chamber's support of these supplementary estimates so that we can deliver on our promises like fully funded school enrolment and other things. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Little-Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to have the opportunity to rise in the House today and speak to the government's Bill 3 on supplementary supply. I with many of my colleagues am here to say that, yes, I too am disappointed that we have to vote to spend more money for the 2015-2016 fiscal year, that's about to end, given that this government passed a budget less than four months ago. But there are some good initiatives here that require funding.

Now, it should not come as a surprise to anyone here if I were to suggest that I and my colleagues don't always see eye to eye with the government here, but I think that we can both agree that there was no shortage of waste or inefficiencies left behind by the previous government. That's why I find it odd that the new government somehow needs new, unbudgeted spending approved. Just last week I stood here and was critical of Bill 2 and the interim supply. Those criticisms of unbudgeted spending are just as valid in regard to this bill as they were to that one.

These are important initiatives in the supplementary supply – I have no doubt about that – but it was only a few months ago that we stood here and approved the last provincial budget. It's not readily clear to me why these important initiatives were not designated priorities by the NDP government in that budget.

I just want to talk about Seniors and Housing and Infrastructure. Why are these listed in supplementary supply, only afterthoughts set to receive unbudgeted funding that was not being offset by efficiencies in other areas? For instance, there's a sudden $50 million transfer from the capital plan to Seniors and Housing. Just last week I stood here and noted that Infrastructure had lapsed, the massive $1 billion last year, even though there's no shortage of much-needed infrastructure in Alberta. Despite that lapse there was a request in the interim supply, and suddenly, as noted here in supplementary supply, they found a $50 million efficiency in Infrastructure to transfer to Seniors and Housing. That one I have a little trouble with. I would hope that there's a fair explanation for that forthcoming. Perhaps it's an accounting error.

Now, the more important questions are these. How many spaces for seniors will be created with this $50 million? Let's not forget that Alberta seniors built this province. The government needs to ensure that it's not just throwing unbudgeted money around with no clear goals, no clear indication of how outcomes will be measured. That's important. It seems to be lacking.

That said, I'll admit that I'm glad to see here in the supplementary estimates that the government is taking action to protect Albertans in High River by transferring funds already budgeted to make sure that a berm is built. But I do have to say that I am perplexed as to why this is happening now and not several months ago.

As far as the debt is concerned, again, I want to preface these next comments by saying that we recognize that there are important items in supplementary supply appropriation, but this remains unbudgeted spending. Supplementary estimates are, of course, not uncommon for any government at any level. This wouldn't be as unusual if the budget and subsequent main estimates had appeared in the spring, but that only came in November. I would add that we are discussing and voting on this in mid-March, at a time when we should be discussing an actual proposed budget.

Again, I have to ask: why didn't the government just take the time and effort and finally just release a budget? Look at all the departments that had to work and how much untold work went into interim supply and supplementary supply budgets. How many untold hours were spent creating those two documents? These same departments are now converged and working on the budget for this spring, that's going to be put out on April 14. Again I ask: why didn't the government just take the time and effort to just release a proper budget?

Now, I gather from the government's responses in recent days that there is a reasonable explanation for why some of these items could not be included in the previous budget. But even the government should recognize that it's somewhat ridiculous to need both a supplementary and interim supply appropriation only four short months after a proper budget was introduced in November. It's my sincere hope that in the next fiscal year the government will do a better job of trying to get their fiscal house in order.

My colleague made a good point about the difference between a million and a billion, and I had one that I remembered that was brought to my attention 30 years ago, and it always stuck with me. A million minutes ago it was 2014; a billion minutes ago Christ walked on the Earth. The difference between a million and a billion is so staggering that it becomes hard to remember and recognize what those numbers really are. My colleague also made a good point about the situation Albertans find themselves in with their own households. They have to make difficult decisions. In their businesses they have to make difficult decisions on those. They're now asking: why isn't my government being more responsible with my money and my children's future?

I'll just touch on jobs and labour. In fact, what's most disappointing about discussing a supply bill instead of an actual budget is that it means it's much longer before Albertans actually know what the answers will be that they've been asking for. Take jobs, for instance. This government seems to have diverted any substantial detail, any initiative that can actually help Albertans facing hardship in the economic downturn, with mere quips about waiting for the budget, which comes out on April 14.

That's a whole calendar month away, Madam Speaker. For Albertans unemployed that's one more month of trying to make ends meet, hoping that their savings can last at least that much longer. It's one more month for municipalities in my riding and ridings around this province to understand where the MSI funding is at so they can have some rock-solid decisions made here that they can build their budgets on. They rely on that money. While I'm talking about that, I would congratulate the former government. I wasn't a councillor at that time, but I became a councillor shortly after that program was brought in. I'm glad to see that this government is continuing with MSI. That is very important to those that require it in municipalities.

The supplementary estimates allocate $3 million to labour. Allegedly, these are for labour market development goals, but they're not specific at all. What programs are they going to? There's no detail. How many Albertans can expect training? No detail. What is the cost per Albertan helped? No details there. In fact, it's not readily clear that this allocation will help Albertans based on the lack of information. Skills training and labour market development are important now more than ever. That's why it's important that the government speak to actual numbers, actual assessments that anything they're doing is helping.

I know that my colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner asked the Minister of Labour a series of questions earlier this week inquiring about the surprising explanatory note on the labour increase. There didn't seem to be a ready answer. Specifically, the government claimed that the $3 million would be offset by a federal transfer from the Canada-Alberta job fund for labour market development. Well, that's an existing agreement. It's been on the books since 2014. There's no reason the government wouldn't have known about it. So, really, if it's an offsetting supplementary increase, doesn't that really just mean that existing skills training and transfer wasn't being used? I think that's problematic because in this economy skills training is more important, more now than ever, with Albertans out of work.

Madam Speaker, the facts of this request for $3 million tell Albertans nothing about how the money will be used to create jobs, provide skills training, or support apprentices. Alberta's unemployment rate is continuing to go up. Now it's 7.9 per cent at the end of last month. The government's failed job subsidy program has already cost Albertans $178 million and created no jobs. The government has so far been shockingly vague on its further plans for supporting job creation. You know, Bill 1 is just a shell that proposes no concrete solutions, no specific programs, and no real path to job creation. So, yes, while we support labour market programming, there's some skepticism on this side of the House about what results this government is getting.

The government needs to outline which programs it will direct this funding toward and how it will be reporting on the successes of the programs. That's the part that's so important, how we report to Albertans on the success of each and every one of these programs. Success in this instance needs to be measured in jobs created, not just money spent. This doesn't mean we won't support this bill in principle, but I do hope for the sake of unemployed Albertans, good hard-working people around this province, that they have some specific goals and targets that they can share with all of us.

Just a comment on protecting front lines. You know, what strikes me as the most bizarre is that this government somehow has the audacity to accuse us of wanting to cut front-line workers, as if any level of constructive criticism about their massive overspending is interpreted as being a call to cut from front lines. No. Finding efficiencies is profoundly different from cutting front lines.

This accusation comes from a government that itself is cutting front-line workers. Last week it was announced that long-term care beds in Sundre hospital would close. My colleague at the front took exception to that, made everyone aware that that closure could result in anywhere from 18 to 36 long-term beds closing. Front-line workers would be losing their jobs. Vulnerable individuals would be moving away from their community, the community that they know. This government is at least $10 billion in debt – yes, that's billion, with a “b,” the difference between an “m” and a “b” – and is still requesting more unbudgeted spending. Yet they find the time to cut front-line workers. That speaks volumes about the government's ability to manage our provincial finances and set priorities.

Madam Speaker, again, my colleagues and I recognize that there are worthwhile initiatives in the supplementary estimates, but my colleagues and I are strongly skeptical that this particular government was unable to find efficiencies in the last budget to cover the costs of these worthy initiatives. More problematic is that these important initiatives were not designated priorities by the government in their budget, which was only four short months ago.

Albertans are already hurting in this economy. Many are struggling to make ends meet while looking for a new job. We here owe it to them to ensure that their tax dollars are spent wisely. For example, once again, I don't think anyone here is opposed to investing in labour market programming in a time like this, but in their last budget that department committed to spending nearly a hundred million dollars in workforce strategies, and Albertans should know what they have to show for it. Unless this government is capable of answering how many jobs they specifically anticipate creating and can fully defend those programs in working to the fullness of their ability in the current situation, then all they're really doing is racking up more spending.

I know some of my colleagues have already asked the same question, but, you know, there hasn't been a consistent answer, so we continue to ask. Regrettably, the government's request for the supplementary estimates looking to increase labour market spending somehow offset by a federal transfer via the Canada-Alberta job fund just raises more questions than it answers. Why isn't that transfer already being used for skills funding and skills training? Are these skills training and labour market programs actually working?

I think I speak not just for the constituents of Little Bow but for many across Alberta, Madam Speaker, when I say that I do hope this government has an actual answer for what they're doing here with this supply bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

10:50

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Happy St. Patrick's Day to everyone who's in the House. Before I dive in, I'd like to read an Irish quote that may be very relevant to what we're speaking about today. "A handful of skill is better than a bagful of gold." To that, I'd like to address some issues of supplementary supply.

Madam Speaker, like my colleagues, it's with dismay – and I can't help but remain skeptical about the government's inability to find any financial efficiencies within the bloated budget of the previous session. Albertans, quite simply, deserve better. Albertans deserve to have a detailed breakdown of exactly where their hard-earned tax dollars are going. That is their right.

Throughout the supplementary supply debate the government did identify many important sources of expenses that led to . . . [An electronic device sounded] Wow. Isn't that nice? My phone is talking to me. Sorry. There's a ghost in the House, too.

An Hon. Member: It's the Irish.

Mrs. Aheer: It's the luck of the Irish.

An Hon. Member: There's a wee leprechaun under your desk.

Mrs. Aheer: Yeah. I don't know. Well, at least she told me that I said it nicely. That's good, hey?

Sorry about that. I'll continue on. Sorry, Madam Speaker. I apologize for my phone.

Albertans deserve to have a detailed breakdown. Like I said, that's their right. Throughout the supplementary supply debate the NDP did identify many important sources of expenses that led to a qualified need for some additional funds, and we support that because these funds will go towards front-line workers. We, however, remain skeptical because the government outlined things that all parties can agree are priority for Albertans, yet strangely enough, Madam Speaker, the government didn't prioritize these things. I would have to think that if you deem something a priority, if you deem it important, you would also prioritize this. You would make it known to Albertans, to the opposition, to everybody who's involved what that priority list is and how you're going to allocate those funds.

The fact is that supplementary supply allows the government to ignore the base cost. Madam Speaker, in any business we start out with that base cost, and it's really important as a business owner that we allow people to know what that's going to cost. If we're nickelling and diming them along the way, it becomes very apparent that we as businesspeople don't understand the function of our business, that we don't understand the costs involved, that we don't understand how it is to bring together a plan to make sure that that person is receiving the service that they asked for based on a cost that we actually understand as a business owner.

When running the ministries, we want to see them focusing their attentions on the members of this House and the policies and the measures that require those additional funds. We need to understand that, and so does the government. All Albertans deserve that transparency to understand what those base costs are going to be. It's a simple, simple request. For any businessperson this artificial separation of cost is difficult to swallow.

One of the issues, Madam Speaker, with supplementary supply is that it fails to produce a holistic look at a department. What that will do is that it will clarify for Albertans what the possible trade-offs are. Within a full budget it makes it clear that there may be more money on one item and relatively, maybe, less money on another item, and it becomes clear that more money for a specialized program means less money for another. By using supplementary supply, you've prevented the opposition members from conducting a complete assessment of where the potential efficiency gains can be made.

Having pored over the budget from the previous session, Madam Speaker, and being acutely aware of the significant number of expenditures included within it, I find it alarming that the government was unable to find efficiencies: efficiencies that Albertans deserve, efficiencies that are demanded by the opposition, and efficiencies that would just make the running of the government better. It would bode well to the people of Alberta to see that the government has their best interests, that they're watching out for the purse, that they are seeing that these things can be done with an overview of understanding where they can also save and then, potentially, have that money for any other special projects that may come up or put it away or whatever the government sees fit to do with that. Albertans are left wondering if this government has any intention of prioritizing these expenses. There continues to be very little regard on the government side of the House for the value of a dollar.

Madam Speaker, it's very hard not to look around right now and see what's happening in Alberta, what's happening to our friends. My best friend just lost her job yesterday, and she's one of hundreds of people that I can state that, quite honestly, are losing their jobs hand over fist. They're suffering from depression. They can't put their kids into hockey or into music.

An Hon. Member: Aw.

Mrs. Aheer: And those kinds of comments are exactly why I'm asking about this, the fact that somebody across the way would actually have a comment and actually behave in such a manner towards people that we all love and know in this province, that are suffering. I'm sorry if extracurricular activities aren't important to the members across the way, but it's actually what defines people and their families and what keeps families growing and happy. Quite frankly, I'm appalled by the sounds that are coming from across the way, but that's maybe just not a priority for our government at this time.

To continue on, Madam Speaker, Alberta families are struggling, and every additional dollar counts to a family – for example, when a layoff has occurred – and we still don't see respect for the difficulties of Albertans, as has just been proven. We still have MLAs that laugh and heckle when faced with the fact that Alberta's government is simply unsustainably expensive. The government needs to look at these programs, not only to get them started but to have some longevity, to create something that will actually last and stand the test of time far beyond any of our time here, and to think to the future of how that program will look in 10 years. Or are we just going to expect somebody else to pay that off?

Albertans spend $2,000 more per capita than British Columbia for health care – and I know we've said this a thousand times, but repetition is key – and on far too many public services Albertans face a higher bill than our fellow Canadian provinces. Wildrose laid out its priorities for the province of Alberta to much acclaim. Again, if I could say it, Madam Speaker, programs start with a vision and an idea, but they have to have follow-through, and we have to understand how we're going to sustain them. There are some great ideas for programs – all of us can agree on that – but we'd actually like them to be more than a one-hit wonder. We'd like to see those be able to be sustained and carried through so that future generations are also able to benefit from programs that are close to all of our hearts.

We support worker training for individuals, Madam Speaker, that want to acquire new skills. We have been emphatically clear in this House that Wildrose itself would make only a modest cut of two pennies for every dollar. I'll say it again just in case you haven't heard it before: two pennies for every dollar. In doing so, we will protect our front-line workers, our teachers, our nurses.

Seniors' protection and support is of the utmost importance. We continue to advocate for victims of natural disasters in Alberta and the constituency of Chestermere-Rocky View.

We are supportive of a handful of policies that would see protection and relief brought to those impacted by the 2013 flood. Madam Speaker, I was there. Like many people in this House, we volunteered to help out during that flood. We saw the devastation. We know what occurred in many, many areas. It's absolutely a priority for this side of the House and, I'm sure, for the government side of the House as well. We will continue to fight for appropriate mitigation that will protect the most communities. The difference is that Wildrose would find support for these programs by properly identifying priority initiatives, something that this government up to this point has failed to do.

Madam Speaker, we need to identify what is most important. Then what we would do is find the money to make that budget work. That's the whole point of identifying their priorities. Then you have a base to go on, and you can find where that money is going to go and make that work out. Like Albertan families and businesses, we know that when we have fewer dollars that are coming in, we need to be more careful about what's going out. Every Albertan right now is tightening their belt. Everyone. The government has to be the first one to show that they're capable of doing that as well and to find ways of efficiency, especially in these hard times.

This isn't going to change overnight, Madam Speaker. This path that we're on right now: we're in this for a little while. We really, really need to show to Albertans that we have their backs when it comes to this and show them that not only do we care about the programs that we want to put forward but that we have a vision and a plan for how that's going to happen and that it's not going to be something that gets pushed down to another budget or other supplies or deficits that come down the road. We need to actually show them how we're capable of handling that right now. The simple fact is that not everything that this government spends is done with a mindset of efficiency or an attempt to obtain the most value for our dollars. There is waste, and there are trade-offs to be made. Wildrose knows that Albertans want as many of our province's dollars directed to the front-line services as possible. That is a priority of Albertans, and we will continue to defend that in this House.

11:00

Where the skepticism arrives, Madam Speaker, however, is when the government is asking us to support a supplemental funding request for more front-line workers while firing nurses in places like Sundre hospital, as we've heard in previous days. This move seems entirely political, and I know that there have been some issues with speaking about the by-election in Calgary-Greenway, but it makes you wonder what the agenda is of those kinds of things. Albertans are left not fully understanding the extent to which this government struggles. They're blocked from understanding these budgetary matters, and I think that's disrespectful to Albertans, and they deserve to have that transparency.

I will support this request but with the hope that now, having done multiple budgets, the government has a sense of how long it takes to put a budget together and will plan appropriately in the future. I know that I can speak on behalf of the Wildrose Party, that we are very, very frustrated and dismayed by the lack of transparency in the budget. The interim and supplementary supply must not become a fixture in the future.

Thank you so much, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to speak.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?
Seeing none, I'll recognize the leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll be brief, but in the spirit of St. Patrick's Day, to my colleagues I will say: may the sun shine gently on your face, may the rain fall gently on your fields, and at the end of your trip here may you be in the Lord's vest pocket half an hour before the Devil knows you're dead.

Now on to the business of the day. Madam Speaker, it's regrettable, in my opinion, that the government has not made their case to ask for more money from the taxpayers. We've had quite a bit of debate in the House, and – you know what? – it's unfortunate, because the government has had lots of time on this particular bill to actually defend it, and they just haven't done it, at least not effectively. They've talked about how they've made efforts to have savings. I think the number was $463 million in savings, where they have gone to the wall to save the taxpayers money, but it turns out that it hailed less and the insurance claims were lower, so that doesn't at all reflect the government saving any money.

I stood twice in this House previously during the debate, and I focused on capital. All the dollars, capital and operating, are important. Every dollar is just as important as the other dollar, but the reason I focused on the capital, Madam Speaker, is because I wanted to give the government a chance to defend what they're asking for. What I mean by that is that operating is not always quite so straightforward because its biggest part is paying people's salaries and wages, and sometimes people get shifted between doing different things in the department and one thing and another. So that can be, in fairness to the government, a little bit harder sometimes to explain although I didn't think that the explanations that they tried to make were as fulsome as what the taxpayers deserve.

But on capital: the reason that I focused on that – and I'll mention it again this morning, Madam Speaker – is because when you're asking for more money for capital that's to build things, to buy things, you should actually be able to tell the taxpayers what you're building and what you're buying. You should be able to name every school. You should be able to name every section of road you're paving. You should be able to name every hospital you're building. You should talk about what the computer program is you're doing in each department. I asked twice for the ministers to do that, and we got very thin explanations or no explanation at all. In several cases ministers who were right there in front of me when I asked chose not to get on their feet at all and give any explanation.

Now, it's okay for the government to not answer my questions although, you know, I and my colleagues in the PC Party are here to hold the government to account. What's more troubling is that it's disrespectful to the taxpayers, Madam Speaker, because it's the taxpayers that they're getting the dollars from. As I pointed out before, and I'll do it again now, the excuse, "The budget isn't out yet, so we can't say," doesn't hold because this is funding outside the budget. This is funding that the government is asking for right now from the taxpayers. Well, if they're asking for the government right now from the taxpayers, they ought to show the taxpayers the dignity, the decency, the respect to tell them what they need money for, and they have been asked repeatedly.

Again, I'm giving the government as much credit as I can. I'm saying that operating is a little bit harder to get right down to the penny on explaining it although they should give a good explanation on that, too, but on capital there is no excuse not to get right down to the penny. If you can't tell the taxpayers which school, which road, which hospital, which IT system, which desks, which chairs, which buildings you're going to buy, then you shouldn't ask for the money. They have chosen to ask for the money, and they have chosen not to give any explanation, so that level of contempt and disrespect for the taxpayers does not deserve support, and it won't get mine.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?
Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. We've already debated interim supply, and we know, obviously, that we're going into this next year. I have several questions about the six areas for which the government is asking for supplementary supply. If we're going to go to interim supply, which we've done, we obviously need to fund priority areas, and certainly some of the areas under debate here fall into that category.

Educational growth: there's no question that we need to ensure that our students have appropriate resources, have classrooms to go to, have teachers to teach them. I am curious about whether or not these numbers will in fact be what the final tally looks like given recent reports of net out-migration from Alberta for the first time in a very long time. I very much worry that that trend will continue. It's not a positive trend for this province.

I continue my concerns that I raised previously about an inability or an unwillingness by this government to truly transform the public service, to truly transform service delivery, to find efficiencies. Finding efficiencies is easy to say and hard to do. I don't suggest for one minute that it's an easy thing to do. It's tremendously challenging, but you know what makes it even harder? When you don't even try, when you don't even try to transform the public service, you don't even try to transform service delivery. You don't ask the question: if we didn't do anything at all right now, how would we do it? Take it back to fundamental principles, and stop nibbling around the edges, and actually look at fundamentally transforming how the government of Alberta operates. It's long overdue, it's badly needed, and I worry very much that this government is not up to that task.

Having said that, given the trajectory that we're on, funding educational growth make sense.

On the Justice and Solicitor General file, the remand centre correctional workers that we're being asked to fund: their work is very important and often forgotten by Albertans. If they do their job, we never hear about it. Their work is thankless, and it's dangerous, especially in the remand centre, so I have no quarrel at all with the folks who work in corrections. In fact, I have a tremendous amount of respect for them. I do however have concerns when what we're funding is overtime. That's a simple managerial question: do we have the human resources that we need to do the job? We need to make sure that we hire sufficient people, that we train them appropriately, ensure that they're safe and well-trained, and that we're not having to rely on overtime.

That, I know, has been a tremendous challenge in health care as well, not just in Justice. In health care I know that that's also a challenge in terms of staffing. The set-up seems to reward those who find a way to work overtime as opposed to working regular shifts. Those are challenging managerial conversations that are important to have, especially in this time of significant impact to our revenues, so I would certainly press the government to have those conversations and do that hard work to ensure that the money we're spending is on regular-time salary as opposed to overtime.

On Labour: the relatively small amount we're being asked to approve here, I understand, matches a federal program. There is a bigger discussion here around workforce training. Again, with our delayed budget that we're dealing with here, we won't know what this government's plan is for workforce training. They seem to bounce around. They had one idea, around the $5,000 job-creation grant, that seems to be going by the wayside. I don't know if I've heard that it's officially cancelled. It seems like it's all but cancelled, as well it should be. As well it should be; it was not a very effective program. Many business owners and chambers of commerce, economists around the province have commented that that was not going to be a very effective program, and I absolutely agree with them.

My strong preference is not only for a small-business tax cut but an investor tax credit. The Calgary Chamber of commerce has called it a growth credit. I think that that would be much more effective. It would allow businesses to decide exactly how best to deploy that capital. It would be deployed perhaps in hiring, perhaps in buying property, plants, and equipment, perhaps in acquiring another business. That would create growth, and that growth will create jobs. Alberta entrepreneurs, I think, should be the cornerstone and always will be the cornerstone of economic growth in this province, something that the government would do well to remember.

On Municipal Affairs, the DRP: the $9 million allocated for the flooding in Chestermere absolutely should be allocated to the people and the municipality in Chestermere to address the flooding that happened last summer. I have absolutely no problem with that. I reiterate my concerns with the DRP administration itself. I continue to help my constituents wrestle with this system, a system which is still broken and will not be fixed simply by hiring a few project managers and rolling out a computer program. There are fundamental problems within the senior leadership of the disaster recovery program. I do look for fundamental and significant change, which echoes my call for an overall rethink of how we deploy public services in this province.

I fully support the $50 million ASLI grant for seniors' housing. In fact, I think it's something that we need to do more of. If we're going to be funding infrastructure projects and we're going to be borrowing capital dollars to do so, I think that funding seniors' facilities of all types, allowing people to age in place as best we can, and then stepping up that scale of acuity for people who need that supportive living or long-term care are very important. It's very important for the quality of life of Albertans. It's an area where, unfortunately, we've fallen behind, and it's an area where we will not only find an increase in quality of life, but of course we will find a decrease in our health care costs. People will not be stuck in hospital anymore. So I certainly will speak favourably of those sorts of investments, and I sincerely hope that as this next budget eventually rolls out, we see more of that.

On the Treasury Board side, I'll take this opportunity again to express my concern about further credit-rating downgrades and the risk of that to our province. I express my concern again that this government doesn't seem to want to do its homework on what the cost of those downgrades would be although we've calculated that to be in the neighbourhood of $600 million or $700 million over the life of the dollars that you're borrowing. Even a few points of interest, even a few hundredths of a point of interest will add up over time and will compound over time, and if you don't have a clear plan to ensure that that borrowing doesn't get out of control, the costs for debt service end up taking a greater and greater portion of your budget. It creates that debt spiral that I don't think any of us want to be in. But, again, I see very little in the way of a plan from this government to address that.

I will predict here and now on the record that the remaining two credit agencies that have not yet downgraded Alberta will downgrade Alberta. That's my prediction, and it's a real concern that I have based on the lack of action here on the fundamental cost structure of government and the fact that this government seems to have no plan to get out of it in any meaningful way any time soon.

With that, Madam Speaker, I thank you for the time and will retake my place. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments? The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you to the member for his comments. Something that I am working with – and it is a fluid thing, but what I've seen through the 61 school boards that I work with and then the Alberta Treasury Branches as well: the statistics on population would suggest that we're still seeing population growth. While it's perhaps uneven in some places and some boards see flat or some diminished school populations, my overall numbers from most all school boards and then the recent numbers from the Alberta Treasury Branches would suggest growth, so I'm just curious to know from the hon. member where he was getting that information showing a net population decrease here in the province.

The other question and comment that I had were in relation to, you know, funding for enrolment and the extension of that to school capital and building and so forth. I appreciate your comments around the necessity to fund for enrolment. It's something that we believe in very strongly. Of course, on the capital side – it's perhaps the leader of the third party that had this in his comments – we were not asking for supplementary supply for capital. I've built together with Infrastructure and our team a sort of pay-as-you-go system that reflects the needs of each project as they need more money to move forward on their projects. That has given us a great deal more efficiency, that precludes us from having to ask for any supplementary supply whatsoever for capital projects in Education, for building the schools, I should say.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much. My source for that is Stats Canada CANSIM 051-0017, which shows that in the fourth quarter of 2015 net interprovincial migration to Alberta dropped to negative for the first time since the first quarter of 2010. I'd be happy to table that, Madam Speaker, at the appropriate time. Now, the overall population is still growing, and of course that's because people continue to have children. Those children go to school. I acknowledge that. But this trend – and, again, I'll happily table this chart – drops off a cliff starting in about the second quarter of 2015. It's obviously a troubling trend. Again, I'm more than happy to table that at the appropriate time. Again, I guess it just speaks to the need for, you know, the Minister of Education and others to be aware of that as you plan for this next budget and be mindful of the impacts of that net population growth or not.

Of course, I think that all of us here, just to be very clear, are certainly not cheering for population declines. You know, we're not cheering for negative growth. We're cheering for – I'll tell you what. In this part of the House I'm certainly cheering for Alberta. I want people to come to this province and help us build as they have for generations, and I want there to be opportunity for those already here. That's, I think, what we all ought to be striving for.

I'll happily print out the appropriate number of copies and table them at the appropriate time. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Happy to rise and speak to supplementary supply. I preface my remarks with the comment that these are difficult times. I think that most of us, if not with family, have friends, connections that are suffering through these times. I would acknowledge that everyone on the front bench is doing their utmost to look at ways and means to reduce costs and improve effectiveness, efficiency and get the services and the infrastructure that this province desperately needs to provide for our short-term and, perhaps, longer term future.

Also, there's no question that we all want the best for Alberta. At the same time, we're challenged by a situation in which we have not had, as I have heard, independent reviews of these ministries. That, to me, should have been the first order of business with a new government coming in, an independent review of each ministry to identify strengths and weaknesses, opportunities and threats, spending and management issues and to look for significant strategic weaknesses in the ministries.

The second thing that I haven't heard the recognition of is that every public service has opportunities for efficiencies. I'm most aware of health care, where I hear from colleagues regularly about lost efficiencies and waste, frustration, duplication, lack of communication, silo practice and silo thinking, and a failure to take advantage of opportunities.

So, I mean, if we heard more from the government on those two things, independent reviews of your ministries and independent assessment in each of these services around where there could be efficiencies, I think we'd feel a lot better about these supplementary supply numbers.

Delaying the budget, of course, means drawing down additional debt for operational budgets, and it does send a troubling message about the commitment to prudence and the debt servicing that will go well into the future. I would certainly like to see more indications of how this government plans to deal with it, whether it's in relation to bonds, in relation to the various diversification plans that they have or printing more money with the federal government. I don't know how that's going to work.

I am pleased to see that federally there is a more positive relationship between federal and provincial governments and more common values between these two governments around issues that I care a lot about: First Nations, health, environment. These are encouraging.

The areas that I am aware that I can support some changes. Environment and Parks got an extra million dollars, which is largely flood mitigation. Unfortunately, it ignores some of the critical deficiencies in our environment department today: their lack of technical expertise, their lack of resources to do proper monitoring, their lack of enforcement capacity, and certainly their lack of any clear commitment to the Castle-Crown parks area. How are they budgeting for the kinds of changes that are coming to that park, with roads, with campgrounds, for any serious commitment to really bringing tourism, the tremendous opportunities of tourism, and attracting our own people to this wonderful new park that they have identified?

The second area that I can obviously support is Education. We are way behind in schools. There's no question that we need more teachers, and I applaud the government for stepping up with the needed teachers this year. Early childhood services: clearly a deficit. We are creating problems for the future if we don't identify children with learning needs, emotional needs, behavioural needs early, get them the supports they need, the families the supports they need, and gear them up for success.

The third area that, with reservations, I can support is the ASLI grants, the affordable supportive living initiative. Unfortunately, the conundrum there is that this government has repeatedly said that they do not support private long-term care, and here they are continuing the grant program to private alternate seniors' care, which has been shown to be of less quality and have standards that are not consistently met in terms of staffing – I mean standards of training for their staff – and quality of care. There are, obviously, some questions I have about a government that says in opposition that they don't support private alternatives to seniors' care, and here they are continuing the ASLI grants. So I think that needs to be looked at.

Overall, I feel the same as I do about interim, that there has been a lack of evidence that we've done the homework that we need to do, that we've limited, especially in operational budgets – it's something that's been raised again and again, but it needs to be said. If we're not prepared to do some of the tough work of limiting operational budgets and living within our means, then we're sending a very difficult message, I think, to our ratepayers, our taxpayers, and I can't support that at this time.

Thanks very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments?

Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and good morning, all. It's great to see you here this morning. I have a few comments put together here regarding the supplementary supply bill. It's a fairly important document that we have to be looking over once again. I think that it must be looked at in some detail. It requires, therefore, I think, a full debate to reveal exactly what the line items are going to be used for, as many people have said today. I certainly agree with that. Like any other budget, it requires a lot of diligence and scrutiny to ensure that proper use is being made of public funds.

While I understand the need for supplementary supply, you'll have to forgive me for being a little skeptical, really, as to why the government needs the extra money when they could have simply budgeted better in the fall or at the very least have found some minimal efficiencies in some part of their operations. I hope that this does not develop a precedent of the government of continually looking for supplementary funding at the end of intended budget cycles.

Instead, I think that we would all like to see a government that is capable of creating a budget, sticking to it, and steadfastly working on finding ways to save money within each respective department. I'd like to emphasize that any organization, especially government, should always be working towards finding and eliminating waste in all parts of its operations, but when we look at Bill 3, it's obvious that the NDP government does not share that sentiment. It's unfathomable that the government couldn't find $106 million in efficiencies to cover these costs. It begs the question: has the government done anything at all to find efficiencies? For the record I will support, reluctantly though, Bill 3 and only do so out of necessity. I want to make clear a delineation between agreeing to setting precedent for governments blowing their budgets and agreeing to a short-term budget.

Now, I see some of the members on the opposite side rolling their eyes and laughing some of this off, I suppose, but this really is something we need to be cautious of.

An Hon. Member: You must be hallucinating that.

Mr. Stier: I'm not always hallucinating, hon. member. I have seen some people questioning what I'm saying.

As an Assembly we have to decide on the habits that we choose to adopt in order to prudently manage public dollars. Overspending and taking on more debt is not a habit that the people of Alberta want us to develop. Believe me when I say that spending practices and this kind of spending practice become a habit.

Madam Speaker, I want to emphasize something. Supporting our community's seniors, our teachers, our front-line workers as well as those who have been unfortunate enough to suffer from natural disaster and from the economic times we're experiencing these days is a big priority for Wildrose. It always has been. That is why, again, I've decided to support, reluctantly though, this bill.

I'm concerned, though, that this government has also made a habit of breaking its promises, as we've spoken of many times. Can we be certain that Bill 3 will be used for our front-line workers, or will it be used to feed the bloat that has been growing for decades in the province's bureaucracy? Even the members that I served with, as I got to know them, and my colleagues from the past term spoke of the same thing: the province's bureaucracies and the bloat that is there. I strongly urge the government and its ministers, therefore, to prioritize this money for front-line service delivery and not use it to hire more people in the already overloaded areas like communications or in special pet projects that do little to support our hard-working front-line employees.

When we put the resources directly into our front lines, it allows for public service to have deeper and more meaningful impact. When a teacher has a smaller class size, it benefits both the teacher and the student alike, for example. Alberta is the envy of the world for its thinkers, and to ensure that this tradition is upheld, we need to make sure that Alberta teachers and teachers' aides are getting the support that they deserve. Funnelling money into already overgrown bureaucracies, though, where managers are managing managers, does not accomplish that goal. This, too, is a habit that I hope this government can kick.

We need to push the government towards developing better performance measures so that the people of our province can see that their hard-earned tax dollars are actually going towards teaching their kids, healing their loved ones, and providing world-class care to Alberta's seniors. I can't emphasize that enough. Seniors are the vulnerable, and we need to ensure that we're looking after that file, most importantly.

We've seen the government fail, though, to deliver on its first jobs plan, and now we have Bill 1, which seems more like a listing in the classified section of the newspaper for my friend and colleague across the way, the new minister of economic development, rather than a bill that's going to actually get Albertans back to work.

Included in Bill 3 is a request for an extra $3 million in a labour-related fund. When we are looking at multibillion-dollar budgets, it may seem simple for this government to overlook this money, but $3 million can do a lot to help skilled tradespeople across the province. Is this money going into developing more training spaces for apprentices across the province, as an example? Is it going to raise awareness about the RAP program or to bolster the program completely? Does this government even have a plan for getting more Albertans into high-skilled, high-paying jobs? These are the jobs that we should be fighting for, ladies and gentlemen.

It's important that the government realizes that the success of a jobs plan is measured by how many Albertans it puts to work, not by how much the government spent on the program. The $178 million flop of a jobs plan from last session is far from any measure of success. It is also important to consider, Madam Speaker, how this money will impact the lives of Alberta seniors, as I've mentioned before, the people who turned this province into the place it is today.

As I look around the Chamber most days, I can assume some of you may have parents and grandparents that have needed the top-quality care that our province could provide. During the later stages of people's lives it is important that they are able to stay in the community, where their families and loved ones are. I'm wondering how much of the 50 and a half million dollars will actually go towards making sure that seniors can stay close to home and that they're not moved to communities that make it difficult to keep families united and allow for seniors to get the much-needed support of their families.

Madam Speaker, as I've said previously, I believe that much of this debate boils down to what kinds of habits we want to set for ourselves. Do we want to make a habit of passing budgets only to go over them at the end of the cycle once again? Do we want to make a habit of spending hundreds of millions of dollars on jobs and programs that fail to create? Do we want to keep feeding the bloating bureaucracy we have, that has been developing in this province, or do we want to put meaningful resources into our front-line services? Do we want to help families stay close together when they have an aged loved one? These are all questions that we need to decide on very quickly.

To conclude, Madam Speaker, while I will be reluctantly supporting Bill 3, I hope that this government can go back and have some reflection on some of the questions that I've asked here today and choose what kind of habit it wants to have for the next three years.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, does anyone from the government side wish to close debate?

If not, I'll call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you to everyone in this Chamber for the hard work that was done this morning. With that, I'd like to move that we adjourn until 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:35 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, March 17, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Happy St. Patrick's Day. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a number of guests with us today, and we welcome all of you to this Chamber, starting with some school groups.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly visitors from the Dewberry school. Now, Dewberry is a village in the constituency of Vermilion-Lloydminster that boasts that it is the home of the two-time reigning Rangeland Derby champion of the Calgary Stampede, none other than Kurt Bensmiller. And not only that: tomorrow night they're hosting the final family skate. I'll be on the ice, and to find me, you just have to look for the tall guy who's going to where the puck was. Ladies and gentlemen, my colleagues, I'd like to ask that you all offer a warm Assembly greeting to the visitors from Dewberry school, who are in the members' gallery today.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you 24 visitors from George P. Nicholson school in the greatest constituency, Edmonton-South West, along with their teacher Mrs. Maxine Sprague, who are situated in the public gallery today. If the Assembly would please give them the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: I must tell the guests and the Assembly that we know why we have such a great province and the best province. Every time one of the MLAs stand, they come from the best part of the province.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a group from Woodbridge Farms elementary school. There are, I think, 24 students that are there, and they have as teachers Antonia Triska and Garth Baker and as parent helpers Heather Whittaker, Rebecca Campbell, and Celina Mysyka. I'm delighted that some of them have chosen to wear the dress code of the Assembly as they tour the Assembly. Would the students stand up and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

I would now recognize the Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pride that I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly nine members of the family of the late Edward John Polanski. The family members are here to hear me commemorate the accomplishments of Mr. Polanski later today, which include bringing proceedings of this Assembly to live television broadcast. The family members include – and I'll ask them to rise and remain standing – his widow, Phyllis Polanski; daughter Michelle Belland; daughter Kelly Polanski; son James Polanski; grandchildren

Drayton Trumble, Makayla Polanski, Lauren Polanski, Zach Belland, and Barrett Belland. I'd ask that they remain standing as they receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you a group of fourth-year journalism students from Grant MacEwan University. Led by their instructor Peter Ryan, the group is here to meet with the LAO manager of corporate communications and broadcast services, Rhonda Sorensen, to observe Oral Question Period, and then later to meet with the Globe and Mail's Justin Giovannetti, a member of the press gallery, for a Q and A on what it's like to work in this type of environment. I know they're going to have a great time.

Each year the fourth-year student journalists research and craft three news reports and one full-length feature, which can then be submitted to the volunteer editors of the Capital Report, so if any of these students contact you, I'd encourage you to treat them as you would any other reporter, and you just might find yourself as one of the subjects on the online annual political magazine capitalreport.ca, which is published May 1 and reaches over 50,000 readers.

As I read their names, I'd invite them to stand. Anthony Bacchus, Taryn Brandell, Paul Gazzola, Jennifer Henderson, Nicholas Hobson, Zach Howe, Jasmine Pushak, Pierre Royal, Sahar Saifee, and Jibril Yassin, please accept the warm, traditional welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly representatives from the SAIT Students' Association: the president, Brigitte Matheson; the executive director, Blair McCormick; and SAIT's director of external relations, Mr. Glenn Shepherd. As you may know, the student's association not only provides many services on campus, but they're a strong advocate for SAIT students across Alberta and the entire country. I know that SAIT students are well represented by Brigitte and Blair, so I'd ask all members to give a warm welcome to our honoured guests.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister and Environment and Parks and the minister responsible for the climate change office.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you Miss Ashlea Golding. Ashlea is graduating with her B.S.W. from the University of Calgary Faculty of Social Work in April and has been completing her senior practicum at my constituency office in Lethbridge-West. Ashlea has been a wonderful addition to my office and has significantly contributed to a number of important case files. My staff have told me that they are dreading the end of her practicum and will miss her contribution to the office. I thank her for her hard work and congratulate her on completing her degree. Ashlea is joined by my constituency manager, Lisa Lambert, who keeps the office moving at all times. I ask the House to join me in a warm welcome for Ashlea Golding and Lisa Lambert.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Keeping on that theme of constituency staff, I am honoured and privileged to be joined today by my constituency staff. We all know that the work we do here in this House and in our constituencies is a team effort, and I am truly fortunate to have remarkable people on my team, as I know all of you are. I feel especially fortunate, though, to have the two folks on my team that I do. Jodi Christensen: she's been with me from the very start. Not only does Jodi help me keep on track, but far more importantly, she does remarkable work on behalf of and for the people of Calgary-Elbow. A new addition to the team, Miranda Martin, has a background in palliative home care and social work and has taken on a tremendous amount of work already as a caseworker in my constituency office. I'd ask that Jodi and Miranda please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two wonderful people from my constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, Kevin Moore and Yolanda Pickett. If you could please stand. Kevin is a veteran with over 24 years of service in the Canadian military, and he'll be receiving the Queen's Diamond Jubilee medal. His wife, Yolanda, is an operating room tech for the Canadian Forces. They are also owners of Fort Saskatchewan's Two Sergeants Brewing, and I will be talking about them more later this afternoon. Of course, Kevin is joined here by his wife, his Rock of Gibraltar, and I invite everyone, please, to extend our warm traditional greeting to them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three individuals from the group RiverWatch: Cal Kullman, Andrea Myers, and Chris O'Brien. Cal is the RiverWatch founder and executive director, and his efforts to make the real world a valued teaching resource were recognized with the first-ever Alberta excellence in teaching award in 1989. Andrea is the group's business manager, and Chris is the director and was formerly the governmental relations specialist with EPCOR. RiverWatch is also involved in preparation for World Water Day, which will be celebrated on March 22. I'll ask all of my guests today to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly three grade 6 students and their parents from Aurora elementary school in Drayton Valley. Earlier this year I hosted an essay contest for the schools in my constituency around the theme of the Magna Carta, and Rylee Rogers, Jeremy Carefoot, and Jenna Harrison were the winners of the contest. They are accompanied by their parents: Heather Rogers, a former student of mine; Murray Carefoot, a former colleague of mine; and Benita Harrison, who I'm just starting to get to know. They've toured the Legislature today. They've collected MLA autographs on posters of the Magna Carta. They've had a meeting with Minister Eggen. Thank you, Minister. Could Rylee and Jeremy and Jenna please stand and rise with their parents and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Top of the afternoon to you, Mr. Speaker. It's my absolute pleasure to rise in the Assembly today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a great Albertan. He's one of Alberta's top stand-up bass players and has represented Alberta well all across this great country of ours with the T. Buckley Trio. I understand that a number of you had the opportunity to meet him last night. You can see him all around our province playing with other great, wonderful Alberta acts in every corner, including folk festivals and community events. More importantly than all of that, sir, he's my brother-in-law, a great husband, and a superhero dad. Now, he does have one small fault. In this past election he voted for the NDP and his good friend the Finance minister, but I love him anyway, my brother-in-law, that is. Anyway, if you'll all join and welcome Mr. Derek Pulliam to the Assembly this afternoon.

The Speaker: Someone overheard the Finance minister in the hall saying that he loved you, too.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The luck of the Irish would have it that I have to follow that act.

I rise to introduce to you and all members of the Assembly members of the Alberta Students' Executive Council who have been here all week advocating on behalf of postsecondary students across Alberta. I would ask that they rise as I call their names: Joshua Bettel, SAIT Students' Association, vice-president external; Kimmi Nguyen, SAIT Students' Association, vice-president academic; and Kristen George, ASEC chair from Grande Prairie Regional College. Please join me in welcoming ASEC to the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise here today to introduce to you and through you Ms Janine Giles. If you could please rise. Janine has been active in politics for several years now. She has run as a candidate in the federal riding of Macleod and has volunteered on many campaigns in the past. Janine is about to submit her PhD dissertation to the University of Calgary and is a teaching assistant at the University of Calgary as well. She not only brings a wealth of academic training to her position but has also had international community development experience. Janine recently started as a part-time assistant to my constituency office, and she'll be joining Shannon Martel in providing a variety of services to the many constituents of Calgary-Northern Hills. I request that my colleagues now extend the fine traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Do any other hon. members have guests to introduce today? Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three wonderful pharmacist associate-owners of Shoppers Drug Mart stores in the absolutely amazing riding of Edmonton-Decore: Beverley Rushton, Londonderry Mall; Lynn Gilmour, Namao Centre; and Joanne Mostowich from Namao. The focus of my outreach in my constituency office in 2016 is to visit numerous businesses in my riding throughout the year. As such, I did spend a wonderful morning learning about Shoppers Drug Mart and about the pharmacy services in my riding. I want to thank Lynn and Joanne and Beverley for their continued hard work and dedication to assisting the constituents in my riding with all of their needs. I would now ask Beverley, Joanne, and Lynn to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Leilani O'Malley Muir

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to commemorate the life of Leilani O'Malley, who was victimized by those who were supposed to protect her but who emerged as a hero for thousands of Albertans sterilized between 1928 and 1972 under the authority of the government of Alberta. During a dark era in Alberta's history she experienced first-hand the horror of eugenics at the age of 14 and the thinking that some people have less value than others.

Leilani O'Malley died earlier this week, but her legacy is a reminder to us in this House of our obligations to uphold the fundamental rights of all Albertans. She never had an easy life. Born into poverty, she was neglected by her family. By age 10 she was sent to Michener Centre. Based on the belief that people with developmental disabilities were of, quote, inferior genetic stock, unquote, Leilani was among thousands of Albertans sterilized against their will and often without their knowledge. It was only years later, after failed attempts to conceive a child, that she learned the truth.

She sued the government of Alberta for wrongful sterilization and in early 1996 won her legal battle, paving the way for a class-action lawsuit for other Albertans who were forcefully sterilized. Her advocacy forced an about-face from the government of the day, an apology from Premier Klein. In part due to the advocacy of former NDP leader Pam Barrett, the government withdrew planned legislation that would have limited compensation to victims of forced sterilization.

Today the Michener Centre is no longer a place that people are forced into against their will. Though it remains open, decisions regarding its future rest in the hands of those who call it home and their families.

Mr. Speaker, Leilani O'Malley was a survivor who spoke up for so many who couldn't. While we mourn her loss, may Leilani rest in peace knowing that Alberta is a better place because of her advocacy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: I would recognize the Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great sadness that I rise today to pay respect to the late Leilani O'Malley Muir, who passed away last weekend. Leilani was a strong advocate for persons with intellectual disabilities and dedicated her life to exposing the institutional mistreatment of our most vulnerable Albertans. In 1928 this Legislature enacted the disgraceful Sexual Sterilization Act. It was a policy on eugenics and forced sterilization that targeted people with disabilities, mental illness, and undesirable social traits, and by doing so, it showed complete disregard for the inherent dignity of each human person.

Leilani was a victim of this act. At just 11 years old, after being abandoned to the care of a government institution, she was subjected to an impromptu intelligence test. She scored only 64. Based on this result, the Eugenics Board sentenced her to sterilization for the crime of being mentally defective. In 1965 she was released from the institution but did not fully understand what the government had done to her until a year later.

Mr. Speaker, despite this tragedy Leilani persevered and became a strong voice in this province. She led the charge in protecting Albertans from the government's flagrant violation of human rights. Her story is moving, powerful, and should serve as a reminder to all members of this Assembly of the effects that policies made here in this Chamber have on Albertans. We must remember Leilani and never enact legislation that could cause such immeasurable harm to the Albertans we should be protecting, lessons which must be extended to all marginalized groups.

In the mid-90s Leilani became the first victim of forced sterilization to successfully sue the Alberta government, setting a precedent for thousands of other victims to receive financial compensation. Mr. Speaker, Leilani never gave up fighting for the 3,000 people who fell victim to the act, and for that, we should thank her. After being in place for a shocking 40 years, forced sterilization in Alberta ended in 1972. It is a disgraceful part of our history, and we must learn the lesson it has to teach us about the importance of respecting human dignity, the lesson Leilani fought so hard to teach us.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would request the unanimous consent of the House for a representative of the third party as well as independent members from Calgary-Mountain View and Calgary-Elbow to participate in a response if they so choose.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister and the member from the Official Opposition for their recognition of notable Albertan Leilani O'Malley. Ms O'Malley's legal victory in 1996 asserted that her most fundamental human rights and integrity as a person were violated. It also set a higher standard for government, Albertans, and Canadians not to stigmatize others we don't understand or judge for the appearance of mental illness. There are no spare people.

Every human being deserves to be treated with dignity and humanity. This case is an example of where that did not happen. The fact that we're talking about it today is due to Leilani O'Malley's courage, and it highlights the importance. It means that all Albertans know this must never be allowed to happen again. Ms O'Malley's willingness to publicize her tragedy and tell her story was an inspiration for others who are wrongfully judged and thereafter violated.

Although the harm done cannot be reversed, it is because of Leilani O'Malley's courage and the fight that she underwent that her tragedy and the tragedy of thousands of others cannot and must not happen again. We must do our best to honour that legacy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's truly right and proper for us here in this House to reflect on the passing of Leilani O'Malley. Ms O'Malley came from a dreadful home. Abused and ignored, she was eventually taken into care and entered the Provincial Training School for Mental Defectives. A more Orwellian name could be hard to imagine. Shortly after admittance she failed a trivial IQ test and was deemed mentally defective, a diagnosis with tragic consequences. Leilani was taken into surgery and sterilized as a result of the Sexual Sterilization Act of Alberta, 1928, a law passed right here in this room.

A ward of the province for 11 years, she was eventually released and attempted to live a normal life, only for her world to be shattered again upon realizing the misdiagnosis and the consequences. None here can imagine the pain in overcoming such hardship, yet Leilani O'Malley did not crumble, nor did she simply accept what was done to her in silence. Instead, she decided to fight for all those who could not speak for themselves. Her courage and determination brought a light to one of the darkest chapters in Alberta's history.

During the trial that opened our eyes to this horrific practice, Leilani stood fast in the face of immense pressure to quietly accept a financial settlement. She was resolute in her belief that money mattered far less than revealing the injustice done to her and to many others. Because of her strength, thousands of Albertans received a long-overdue apology and some recompense for their suffering. After her court victory Leilani continued as an activist for the rights of others. I quote: people don't know what goes on behind closed doors. End of quote. But she did, and she was determined that others would know, too.

In 2001 Leilani O'Malley made an unsuccessful bid for a seat in the Legislature here in Alberta. The irony of standing here, where the Sexual Sterilization Act of 1928 was passed, would not have been lost on her or on the rest of Albertans. In remembering Leilani O'Malley, I want to recognize her remarkable achievements and express condolences to her loved ones. I also wish to remind myself and my colleagues that we must be vigilant during our time here in the Assembly. The actions we take while seated in this Chamber can have consequences far beyond what we could ever imagine. To quote Leilani: nobody has the right to play God with people's lives. End quote.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak of a tragedy, the horrifying law that existed in Alberta's past as the Sexual Sterilization Act, but, more importantly, to speak of the life of one of its most fearless opponents. Leilani O'Malley Muir and nearly 3,000 other Albertans were sterilized in a devastating program meant to prevent those in the province referred to as, quote, mental defectives, unquote, from passing on their genes, something referred to as unlawful, offensive, and outrageous by the judge presiding over her case. I'm sure that all those present today can agree that that is absolutely the truth.

Leilani was a remarkable person, one who had the courage to step up and say: this was done to me, and it was wrong. She took the government and its vast resources to court and won. Her courage led to many other suits being filed across the province as Albertans fought against this tragic program. She fought a battle that laid her personal life and her most personal tragedies out to the public, but it didn't matter. She wouldn't agree to a nondisclosure clause as she believed that Albertans had to be made aware of the legacy of sterilization in this province. She was an advocate her whole life. Working with the living archives on eugenics in western Canada project, she wanted to ensure that Albertans who were affected by eugenic sterilization had their stories heard so that terrible tragedies like this could never be repeated.

Many people sterilized were, in fact, members of marginalized groups: single mothers, First Nations and Métis people, eastern Europeans, and those living in poverty. She made it her life's mission that this would never happen again. Leilani O'Malley Muir is a role model for never giving up the fight, for always doing what's right. Her perseverance and strength are a testament to what Alberta is. Her memory will live on, her work will live on, and the legacy she left us will continue forever. May she rest in peace.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Government Policies

Mr. Jean: Another day gone by with more jobs lost under the NDP government. This time it's in Medicine Hat. Trican Well Service announced that 100 jobs would vanish, and Calfrac services announced that it is closing shop and laying off 200 workers. These are families out of work, desperate, and looking for hope, and what's the NDP's response? To raise taxes and bring in a $3 billion carbon tax grab that hits every single Albertan and these industries very hard. What does the Premier have to say to these 300 Albertans who are now out of work?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, our hearts go out to anyone who's been impacted by the current state of the global economy. The international price of oil has had devastating impacts on families here in Alberta as well as in other parts of the country, including Newfoundland. That's one of the reasons why we believe the people of Alberta elected a government that actually had a job-creation strategy in the platform of their campaign last year. We continue to move forward. We're very proud of the fact that we're working to diversify the economy instead of doing what the members opposite propose, which is to sit on our hands and continue to rely on a single resource.

Mr. Jean: Here's what the mayor of Medicine Hat has to say about the NDP government record, quote: I don't see our provincial government doing anything; I don't see job creation; I see increased taxes at a time when I don't think the economy can bear it. End quote. Ouch. They're the same concerns that business leaders gave just earlier this last week, and it's why Wildrose released solutions through our Wildrose jobs action plan. Will the Premier listen to the mayor's advice, do no further harm, or will she stick to her government's ideological agenda?

Ms Hoffman: If you want to talk ideology, Mr. Speaker, the members opposite are proposing to cut billions of dollars from the public treasury. They think that firing teachers and nurses because of cutbacks in the private sector is a way to find a pot of gold at the end of the rainbow. They're delusional. What we're doing is that we're continuing to work on a job-creation strategy and ways to make sure that we continue to put Albertans back to work. Members opposite should be well aware of our climate change strategy. We're very proud of it, and Albertans are going to see the impacts very soon.

Mr. Jean: The Premier doesn't just have a problem with Medicine Hat. Municipalities right across Alberta made it quite clear how they feel about the NDP's economic agenda. Parkland county pointed out that NDP policies will lead to $224 million in lost tax revenue. The mayor of Rocky Mountain House said that the Premier's policies have, quote, taken their toll. Business groups, mayors, employers: they all agree with one thing. NDP policies are hurting Albertans. When will the Premier back down from her risky policies and start helping Albertans instead?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we're very proud of the fact that we are actually working to make sure that we stabilize public services while at the same time supporting industry and supporting small businesses and investing in other areas of the economy. This is very important for us. We take our responsibilities very seriously. Albertans are resilient, and they have elected a government that believes in them and is going to continue to work to make sure that our plan to create jobs results in a net increase for families. We're very proud of the fact that our energy future includes phasing out cancer-causing coal emissions, and we think that we should keep right on track. Members opposite want to keep polluting.

Oil Tanker Transportation on the West Coast

Mr. Jean: Speaking of jobs, Albertans deserve a Premier that will stand up for our interests. One of our key interests is getting access to tidewater for our energy. The Premier has been quiet and vague on this issue, to say the least. Even if you favour quiet diplomacy, you can still make it clear where you stand. The Premier needs to be clear to Albertans. Will the Premier stand up for Alberta and clearly state that she opposes the federal government's tanker ban on the Pacific north coast?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we absolutely know that pipelines are the safest way to get our product to tidewater. We've been working hard on making sure that's communicated clearly. The Premier has said that over and over again. I'll keep saying it. We'll all keep saying it. We're very proud of the fact that we are actually making progress. Our climate change leadership strategy made its way to Washington, essentially. They're talking about the work that we're doing here in Alberta, a made-in-Alberta solution that's not only going to benefit us but, we think, has the potential to expand, and even our members to the west seem to agree.

Mr. Jean: Well, that was not the right answer. The government of Alberta should be clearly against the tanker ban. You either like the tanker ban and are against Alberta's energy industry, or you are a serious person who knows that this tanker ban is bad policy, and you oppose it. Is the Premier opposed to the tanker ban or not?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to talk a little bit about diplomacy and how important it is to make sure that we respect each other's opportunities and our responsibilities. Certainly, the Leader of the Official Opposition's plan to address the difficulties that we're facing is kind of like a four-leaf clover, shrouded in mythology and hard to find. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, could we keep it a little quieter with the volume, please.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, this is not a laughing matter for Albertans. That wasn't an answer to the question. It's a very simple question. I know that this topic makes the Premier's NDP friends in British Columbia very uncomfortable, but the Premier represents Albertans, not the B.C. NDP. Is the Premier opposed to the tanker ban in B.C. or not?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I have a responsibility to the people of Alberta and our government has a responsibility to the people of Alberta – and I would hope that the Official Opposition would as well – to make sure that we have good working relationships, to make sure that people understand why our product is important to not just Alberta's economy but Canada's economy and the world's global well-being. We're making sure that we have an environmentally responsible reputation here in Alberta. Instead of acting like dinosaurs from Drumheller, we're actually moving forward.

The Speaker: Third major question.

Coal-fired Electric Power Plant Retirement

Mr. Jean: Yesterday the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake asked some detailed questions about the government's plan for phasing out coal. The government front bench could not answer the questions. Three different ministers are mishandling the file. The environment minister doesn't get it, the Energy minister really, truly doesn't get it, and now the economic diversification minister doesn't get it. Was anyone in the government aware that their coal plan would result in the Alberta ratepayers getting stuck with half a billion dollars in costs for the PPAs?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I think it's really important for us to acknowledge that science shows that the pollution from coal-burning power plants is bad for our health, it's bad for our environment, and it's economically unsustainable. It causes 100 premature deaths, 700 emergency room visits, and 80 hospital admissions annually. We are ensuring that we have a successful transition plan. We are moving forward on protecting our health and protecting our economy, and we're very proud of the moves that we've made in ensuring that we have Mr. Boston to help navigate those waters with us.

Mr. Jean: The government also had a hard time explaining how and what the coal facilitator was going to do. For $100,000 a month I hope that Mr. Boston works some very long hours, but I doubt that anyone can develop a plan to shut down coal plants and get replacement electricity in just six short months. It seems that the government set a policy and is only now trying to figure out if it's possible or even advisable to implement it. Did anyone over there ever consider that their climate policy might lead to big problems in Alberta's electricity system?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've certainly hired one of the best businesspeople in the world to go to bat for Albertans as we support the transition, as we continue to move forward with the companies that will be impacted. Terry Boston has experience helping to guide the transition of one of the largest grids in North America away from coal while preserving reliability, and we're confident that we have the best man for the job. The opposition doesn't believe in science, so they want to keep on polluting.

Mr. Jean: So the answer is: no, they didn't.

It's becoming clearer that this government's coal plan was ideological rather than researched. Taxpayers could be stuck with some huge costs from cancelled coal PPAs just when we can least afford them. Recently coal-powered generators offered to voluntarily dial down 20 per cent of our coal fleet without asking for any compensation and without impacting Alberta's power bills. What was the answer? The answer was no. This would have immediately reduced greenhouse gases by eight megatonnes a year. Why did this government refuse this free offer and instead saddle taxpayers?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we're working in partnership to protect the environment, taking a plan that was proposed at the national level, and we're actually working to support communities in the transition. We're going to have clean air, we're going to have long-term jobs, and we're going to support communities in the transition. I am very proud of the fact that we've hired one of the best experts in the world to help us with that process, and I think that taxpayers will see that it's a wise investment on the return. Certainly, we are a responsible government, and we take our responsibilities both to the economy and to the environment seriously.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday at AAMD and C the Health minister talked about some important issues, and I believe that Albertans will be interested in what the minister is thinking. I thank the minister for saying that the rural physician action plan is staying. She did however say that funding will only be extended until fall because they're not getting maximum bang for the buck. That sounds like change. To the minister: how are we not getting best bang for the buck with RPAP, and what changes to the program are you planning in the fall?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question and for the opportunity to make sure that I clearly communicate to the member opposite what seems to be a little misconstrued. Certainly, at the end of every grant cycle I think the responsible thing for any government to do – for our government, I am sure, for other governments, at the municipal level and so on – is to make sure that you look at the desired outcomes for that grant and the actual outcomes achieved. While that grant in its current structure is set to expire this spring, we've extended the current level of funding through to the fall so that we make sure that we have an opportunity to consider carefully how we're going to continue to move forward. RPAP will continue to be there. We need to figure out how to best use the resources.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Health minister was asked yesterday about funding for a helicopter ambulance service, called HALO, in Medicine Hat and another service in Fort McMurray. AHS pays for 25 per cent of STARS' mission costs, and the PC Party supports that. The minister told a municipal leader that she had no good news today and that an evidence-based decision would be made by AHS after a fair process takes place. To the minister. I know you believe that rural lives are as valuable as urban lives. Will you ask AHS to support air ambulance services in Medicine Hat and Fort McMurray?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Communities around this province have different ways of making sure that we can safely evacuate individuals in a time of crisis. Some municipalities do use STARS, some use HALO, some used fixed-wing, and some use ground transportation. The appropriate thing to do, I think, is to make sure that we have a budget that's reasonable and sustainable – I'm really proud that we are working to get through interim supply and supplementary supply in this House – and to make sure that money is given to AHS and that they most correctly work with communities to make sure that they have a safe evacuation plan.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, yesterday at AAMD and C our environment minister actually complimented Peter Lougheed. She said that his government's support for accelerated oil sands development was a good example of government leadership. Many of us are familiar with the environment minister's vilification of the energy industry in general and the oil sands in particular. My question for the environment minister is simple. After all the conflicting messages, please now make it clear for all of Alberta: do you now support Alberta's oil sands industry? Yes or no?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I made very clear in my response to the Speech from the Throne, I grew up in an oil patch community. My dad was an electrician who worked on oil rigs, and he was one of the people who lost his job in 1982, when the national energy program came into play. So I don't actually think I need to explain my history.

What I will do, Mr. Speaker, is draw attention to all of those folks who stood on a stage with me on November 22 and said things like the following: "I believe [this plan] will lead to Albertans and Canadians receiving full value for their oil and natural gas resources." Brian Ferguson, Cenovus. Brian Ferguson again: "I'm not sure that I would use the word 'radical' to describe being a leader. I would describe it as being bold."

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Emergency Medical Services

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The long-standing difficulties in managing emergency medical services in the province continue today. They risk not only public health; they risk the very people, the paramedics themselves. These professionals put their lives on the line when we are in crisis, yet a recent survey reveals that 25 per cent report an unsupportive culture of intimidation and bullying. Despite large increases in urban populations, there has been little increase in ambulances and staff, and with long wait times in emergencies and red alerts increasing, there's distress. What is the minister . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the hon. member for the question. Certainly, we continue to work with Alberta Health Services and with ambulance employers to make sure that we get EMS back on the roads as quickly as possible. I think that when I've talked to paramedics and other front-line first responders – certainly, frustration around having to wait for people to be admitted is a high frustration for some of the citizens who are transporting our most vulnerable. Of course, building the 2,000 needed long-term care beds in this province to ensure that the people who are currently waiting in acute-care hospital beds have somewhere to transition to will certainly go a long way. We will continue to work with the labour groups that represent the workers and the employers.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister: we haven't addressed the question of low morale, bullying, and intimidation. How is that going to be addressed?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. Certainly, conversations with both of the labour groups that represent the workers as well as with the employers are a priority for us. In terms of morale, there are lots of complex factors that contribute to it. Having an open dialogue, investing in public health care, front-line health care, when people aren't worried about the future of their jobs: that certainly goes a long way to people having a greater sense of satisfaction. If the member opposite has some feedback and advice, we'd be very happy to receive it.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, over the last year and a half the department has been examining effective approaches to PTSD, posttraumatic stress disorder. It provided some supports, but they are not comprehensive, and they are not seen to be reliable and valid. Will the minister look into the PTSD program?

The Speaker: The associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We are very encouraged that Alberta Health Services has a variety of programs in place, including the employee and family assistance program, the critical incident stress management and peer support program as well as the mental health line. Clearly, there's more work to do, and I look forward to working with Alberta Health Services and the Health Sciences Association of Alberta to make sure that our front-line responders have all the supports that they need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Athabasca University

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recent report has caused significant worry in my riding of Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater. Many of my constituents are concerned that IT services at Athabasca University could be moving out of the community as it would mean many jobs leaving Athabasca. Can the Minister of Advanced Education tell the House: is Athabasca University moving its IT services to Edmonton?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to my friend for asking the question and giving me the opportunity to clear the air around Athabasca University. I understand that this issue of IT is a sensitive one, and I want everyone to know that we are committed to working with Athabasca University to meet the needs of the students in the communities. I can say that the space strategy working group recommended consolidating two existing IT satellite offices in the Edmonton area into one location and that there are no plans or recommendations to move Athabasca University IT staff out of Athabasca.

Mr. Piquette: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister stated earlier this week that Athabasca University won't be moved or closed, can the minister tell me what work is being done to ensure the university remains in Athabasca?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to my friend for the question. Last week I met with the chair of the board, the president as well as members of the Athabasca University Faculty Association. At that meeting I provided some direction to them for moving forward with the sustainability plan for Athabasca University, which included direction to work directly with students, faculty, staff, and community as they develop the sustainability plan. We're also working to fill vacancies on the board to ensure good, stable governance of this institution. Our government is committed to working with the board, faculty, staff and students, and the community of Athabasca to ensure the long-term sustainability of Athabasca University in Athabasca.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know my constituents will be very happy with this news.

Mr. Speaker, given that this government is committed to engaging with Albertans, what can the minister say is being done to properly engage the Athabasca University community?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to my friend for the excellent supplemental question. I've heard from many community members, staff, faculty, and students about how important Athabasca University is to the broader Athabasca community. In the direction that I provided last week to the board and the chair, I emphasized the importance of developing a consultation plan that includes the community of Athabasca as part of the process. Conversations with the board and the faculty are ongoing, and we remain committed to working with university officials to help find ways for Athabasca University to thrive. I've personally spoken to the mayor and the reeve in this community on this issue.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now that TransCanada and Enmax have turned their power purchase agreements back to the Balancing Pool, who reports directly to the Minister of Energy, the pool is the largest coal-fired generator in the entire electricity market, and it appears that this NDP government is now also the largest generator of greenhouse gases. To the Minister of Energy: who is ultimately on the hook for the carbon tax associated with those emissions, and when can they expect to see the bill?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Well, certainly, we're looking at the PPA structure, the structure that was given to us several governments ago, and it has a huge loophole in it that we are looking into at the moment. We're encouraging the Balancing Pool to work with the companies involved. It is a process. There are no closures involved with this, and there are no job losses involved with this process.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you for the answer to a question that wasn't asked.

To date we have not seen a single report tabled in this House from the Minister of Energy showing Albertans the actual economic and social costs to ratepayers and taxpayers of this accelerated coal phase-out. If the hon. Minister of Energy has that research, will she please table that research?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's clear that the member wasn't paying attention the other day when the minister of environment tabled an article talking about all of the health impacts to coal particulates, to NOx and SOx, the impact that it's having and the number of deaths that can be averted by phasing out coal. We're doing this in a very orderly and structured way. This is why we've gone and found the best person in the business to go to bat for Albertans, to ensure that we're protecting our consumers and ratepayers.

The Speaker: House leader for the Official Opposition, could you ensure that the voice is down a little bit, please?

Second supplemental.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did say, "economic" research – economic research. Okay?

Today we have not seen a single economic report tabled in this House from the Minister of Energy. Will the Minister of Energy please agree that a significant amount of economic research should have been done before drafting any policy that impacts our electricity sector? Millions of Albertans who depend on it are looking for that research and proof for your economic – economic – policies.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for his question. I'll throw a few numbers at him, and maybe that will satisfy him: the fact that we spend and will save our health care system more than $300 million, as far as transitioning off coal, from the detrimental health effects that it has not only on our children and on our seniors but on our population as a whole. Transitioning and phasing out coal is not only the right thing to do; our government has a plan in place that we will have an orderly transition. We are moving toward renewable electricity along with the rest of the world.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Postsecondary Education and Employment Training

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's escalating unemployment rate of almost 8 per cent is one of the highest in the country, and it's the highest it's been in many decades. Over 100,000 job losses create huge ramifications, including increased enrolment as Albertans upgrade their skills for the new labour force or are staying in school longer because jobs they're seeking simply don't exist or have vanished. To the Minister of Advanced Education: as our economy is being shifted, how is your ministry specifically adapting to provide greater access for those seeking further educational opportunities?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Our government has already done quite a bit to assist students. We've reinvested in postsecondary institutions by providing predictable, stable funding over the last year, and we expect to do so again this year. As well, we've provided a two-year tuition freeze, which will make education a lot more accessible and affordable for students who seek spaces in our postsecondary institutions.

Mr. Rodney: Given that close to 40 per cent of those who earn bachelor degrees or graduate from college do not find a job in their chosen field and given that 30 per cent of those students pursue additional education, which means more debt burden for them and taxpayers who help fund our postsecondary educational system, to the same minister: what concrete actions are you taking to ensure that postsecondary education programs align with real job prospects?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. We've already done a lot to make sure that education is more affordable. We've followed through on our promise of a tuition freeze, as I said. We've also introduced new awards for indigenous students, we doubled the low-income grant, and we made apprentices eligible for student aid. What we're not going to do is cut the budget to postsecondary institutions, as the opposition would have us do, and we're not going to hike tuition.

Mr. Rodney: I appreciate the review of what has been done. I am looking for things that are being done to meet the current needs, so we'll try this a different way. Given that the innovation portion of this ministry was moved to the new Economic Development and Trade portfolio last fall and given that innovation has naturally aligning and important ties with Advanced Education, can the minister please tell us: what specific processes has your department put in place to ensure that innovation maintains a critical connection with the Economic Development and Trade ministry to ensure collaboration between the two ministries, that are now separate?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. A very good question. My ministry works very closely with the Ministry of Advanced Education. In moving innovation over to economic development, we are doing two things. We are going to preserve and ensure that we continue to invest in R and D, research and development, in our fields, as we've been doing. We're also going to ensure that there are supports for would-be entrepreneurs and businesses to get their ideas and commercialize it and get it into the market.

Thank you.

Dental Care Costs

Mr. Barnes: With the economic uncertainty in this province we know that money is tight for many Albertans and their families. That's why Wildrose has offered this government constructive solutions for rising dental costs. We've seen a lot of talk about reviews from the Health minister but no real actions that would bring improvement or relief. If the minister needs a hand, will she accept our recommendations on reducing the restrictions on advertising, increasing price transparency, and improving governance practices at the Dental Association and College?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, making sure that Albertans get fair value for their dollar when they're going to the dentist is a priority for this party and for this government. This is an issue right across Alberta, but I know that it's felt particularly in some of the smaller communities where there is less opportunity to maybe consider other options. We need to make sure that we're doing a thorough review in collaboration with the college and with our partners. We've been working on that, and I'll be happy to update the House in a timely fashion.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, no answers; just more indecision and foot-dragging.

Given that about a hundred dentists are now alleging anticompetitive practices regarding advertising restrictions and given that this is a dental market that has been identified as crying out for price transparency for consumers, why won't you just adopt our common-sense proposals to drive prices down and help Albertans get the best value possible for their hard-earned money?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question, Mr. Speaker. It seems that for the members opposite the only possible solution for any problem could be more privatization, more competition. Certainly, we know that some of the other provinces that have got greater control around some of the fees and are getting better return for their taxpayers have a fee schedule. That's one of the things that I think a responsible government can consider and look into and see if it would be a way to help prevent some of the price gouging that's happening right across Alberta. Certainly, we are working in partnership with the dentistry industry to make sure that we have a thoughtful plan as we move forward, not making rash, ideological judgments like the members opposite.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Barnes: Albertans need real solutions, not more evasive answers and dithering. Given that the minister has received advice from the Official Opposition as well as many other sources like Calgary-Mountain View on reducing red tape in the dental market and seeing as price transparency is key to kick-starting competition and innovation in market economies, does the minister recognize these basic principles, and will she make a commitment to reducing onerous restrictions on dental providers?

2:30

Ms Hoffman: Depending on the procedure, Mr. Speaker, Albertans can pay substantially more than our neighbours in B.C. or Saskatchewan do. We take that seriously. We are certainly taking time to look at the evidence – evidence – to make sure that we come up with the right decision as we move forward. I think that rushing to rash decisions is what certainly has not been helpful for us, and I don't think it's been helpful for their party either. We're going to move forward in a thoughtful way.

Waste-water Treatment in Taber

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, municipalities all across Alberta face no shortage of worries. Taber, in my constituency, is indeed one of those communities. They're facing major industrial sewage lagoon problems. Most of the infrastructure of the lagoon is on its last legs. If it fails, it puts the community at risk, and the town could be fined by Environment. Taber can't carry the cost of upgrades alone, so now they are stuck between a rock and a hard place. Will this government commit to working with Taber for a reasonable solution?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Taber has made a couple of applications under our water/waste-water program. One of them is under consideration for the municipal section. Those decisions will be made shortly, and they should be hearing some time this spring. With respect to the other one he's referring to, it's an industrial type of situation, which is not covered by the current program and cannot be funded.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I guess that's why they call it stuck between a rock and a hard place. We're in a situation here where they need to have this infrastructure fixed, or else it will cause problems, with them being charged by Environment. So what do they do about this? They don't have the money to be able to pay for it. It's going to cost them $6 million to do it. All that they are asking, all the Taber mayor is asking, is to have them talk to him. This is what we're asking for. This is what the mayor is asking for. I'll ask again: will you meet with the mayor to discuss this issue?

Mr. Mason: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I am excited to hear that answer. I would like to know: exactly when will the minister meet with the mayor?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, next week I'm taking the opportunity to travel to southern Alberta to discuss with the mayors a number of issues, including our consultation around transit, rural bus service as well as to hear their concerns about the development of highway 3 through the region and important economic matters. If the mayor of Taber is there, I will certainly take the time to chat with him. Otherwise, we'll schedule it as soon as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Agricultural and Forest Product Exports

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In recent months we've seen the United States Senate repeal the mandatory country of origin labelling legislation, that was having a multibillion-dollar impact on Alberta and Canadian farmers. However, we have yet to see any progress made on the signing of a new softwood lumber agreement, and we've heard little to nothing from Alberta's representative in Washington or this government about how they're helping Alberta's forestry producers. So while this government continues to give lip service to the diversification of our agriculture and forestry sectors, can the minister explain specifically how they have advocated for increased market access for our forest industry?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the very timely question, and 35 seconds is not going to be enough to respond to him. The softwood lumber agreement, as the member knows, ran out last October. There have been numerous conversations going on between my ministry, the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry, our counterparts across the province, and also with our counterparts in Ottawa. We recognize that we want a resolution that is going to be in the best interests of Alberta producers. We have spoken with and worked and are working with our forestry sector very closely to put forward a position that will benefit our producers moving forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member. First supplemental.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the answer. Given that the agriculture minister is busy hosting Bill 6 technical meetings in major cities during calving season and given that the only support to farmers that we've seen so far is a solar microgeneration project, which actually the previous government established, specifically what initiatives has this government launched over the last 10 months that will increase the value of agricultural and agrifood products in Alberta and once again make this province a destination of agribusiness investment?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. We recognize that agriculture is a very, very important business to Alberta. This is part of the reason – and the member will have to wait as we unroll our budget – that we are continuing to work with our agricultural producers not just in primary production but in secondary agriculture as well. There are real opportunities to expand on our value-added opportunities as well as looking at opportunities to expand our exports. As the members may know, I will be heading to Asia, and that is one of the things that I will be talking to our friends there . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps when the minister is in Asia, he won't have to answer questions for other ministers on the front bench.

Given that global food demand is expected to double over the next 35 years, what specific supports to the agrifood sector has this government and, specifically, this minister provided that will look to increase the value of local products and allow Alberta and Canada to increase their export capacity and quantity?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Agriculture and forestry remain two of our most exciting industries in the province. While we see other industries taking a hit because of the price of oil and gas, I'm very optimistic that we can extend and broaden our markets world-wide, including here at home, with the value-added that we can do. There are some very exciting projects, and I'm very hopeful that we'll be able to announce them. The member over there and everyone else will have to wait until the budget.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Public Transit

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents have told me how important public transit is to the future of our community and the province. Increasing availability and access to public transit not only has massive benefits to the environment, but increasing public transit also has been shown to have a massive economic benefit as well. Construction of the green line in Calgary, for example, is a project that will create thousands of new jobs. To the Minister of Transportation: what are you doing to support public transit in Alberta and making sure that shovels get in the ground as soon as possible?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Our government remains committed to expanding affordable, accessible transportation across the province. On February 25 I announced the third call for GreenTRIP funding applications, making $415 million available to support sustainable, affordable, and environmentally sustainable projects. The GreenTRIP capital spending will create much-needed jobs, employing construction workers to build transit projects and transit operators and maintenance operators to keep it running.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that increased transportation options are not only important to the constituents of Calgary-Northern Hills but it is something that will greatly benefit all communities in Alberta, to the same minister: what are you doing to increase the availability of public transit in our rural communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to the member for the question. Unlike the opposition, we like to remain green year-round, not just on St. Patrick's Day. Now, we're providing $285 million in GreenTRIP funding for municipalities outside the Edmonton and Calgary regions. From hearing from municipalities, we've extended the deadline for those applications to August because some of them wanted more time. We're engaging with the public and the municipalities on public transportation to hear what they think the criteria should be for grant programs going forward. Improved rural bus service will provide Albertans living in smaller communities with reliable access to essential services like health care in larger centres.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the changing needs of transit throughout our province, be it to reduce congestion in major cities or to provide adequate public transportation in rural areas, again to the same minister: what is the government doing to engage with our municipalities and Albertans to ensure that future investments meet these needs?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for the question, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we're doing a great deal to consult with communities. We're consulting on the criteria to be used for future grant programs related to municipal transportation. We're consulting with them in terms of other programs as well. We want to talk to municipal leaders across the province about what these programs should look like, what can help those communities, what the criteria should be, what sort of programs or projects we should be supporting. We're consulting like crazy.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Premier's Calgary Office Employee Expenses

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The previous government did lots of things wrong, but one of the things they did right was to create an online database of government expenses. Now, they might have been working on the theory of hiding things in big piles in plain sight. However, we went looking into those big piles, and from that database we learned that Marcella Munro, the Premier's point person in Calgary, submitted 14 sets of expense claims in June and July of last year. The only problem is that it seems she only became an employee in August. How can someone who isn't an employee submit and get paid for employee expenses?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question, Mr. Speaker. I'll certainly be happy to look into the matter and get back to the House and make sure that any expenses that were incurred were appropriate. If they weren't, we'll make sure that they're paid back.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that government policy makes it absolutely mandatory that employees have to submit receipts for travel, accommodation, and ground transportation in order to get paid, why is it that the Premier's point person in Calgary got her expenses paid when she wasn't an employee and didn't have to submit receipts?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I've committed that I'll look into the matter. I need to make sure that we know whether or not we're talking about an employee or a contractor and what was involved. I'll certainly look into that. I'll look into the terms of either an employment agreement or a contract and will be happy to follow up with the member opposite.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, there are so many questions on this file that I could go on at length, but here is just another one that is curious to me. Given that the publicly posted contract for Ms Munro, the Premier's point person in Calgary, makes it clear that she started on the government payroll on August 10, why is it that her expenses and her online postings make it clear that she didn't actually start work until August 17? Did she get paid for a week that she didn't work?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, as is often the case with transitions or when individuals are being hired, sometimes they start on contract, sometimes they start as employees, and sometimes I think there's a combination. As I said previously, I'll be happy to look into the details of whether or not it was a contract or an employment agreement at that date and time and continue to follow up with the hon. member directly after we have a chance to look into the matter.

The Speaker: Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

National Bee Diagnostic Centre

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Grande Prairie Regional College National Bee Diagnostic Centre is an unqualified success. Since 2013 the number of diagnostic services provided has risen from 1,800 to 20,000 annually. This work provides beekeepers and researchers essential information about the health of honeybee populations and their contributing to the global food security as well as excellent research opportunities for students in northwest Alberta. To the minister of agriculture: how will Alberta Agriculture continue to support this important work?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Last October I had the opportunity to visit the National Bee Diagnostic Centre. It's important to know that that is the only bee diagnostic centre in Canada. Actually, before that, all samples had to go to the United States for testing. So it's important that it's here in Alberta. It's important to this government. It's important to me personally. I have many friends in the honeybee industry. It's important to keep supporting it as we can. Even though the price of honey has taken a drop in the past few years, it still remains a very important industry in Alberta.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the National Bee Diagnostic Centre has the support of the national advisory committee to deliver diagnostic services and given that the National Bee Diagnostic Centre has also demonstrated that national level research can and is being done in rural Alberta, to the minister: what specific plans does the government have to invest in rural Alberta to continue to grow and build these opportunities for rural Albertans?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and for the member's follow-up question. Another important thing to note is that Alberta remains one of the top 10 honey producers in the world. Even though the price of honey has taken a drop like oil and gas – as a matter of fact, it dropped about 35 per cent – we've still had a very robust industry. We should continue to support that world-wide. It's important. As people, you know, often view honey as a healthier version of sugar, it's an important commodity and is important not only for honey, obviously, but also for the pollination of crops.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that diversifying the economy is important to all Albertans and given that Alberta produces 44 per cent of Canadian honey and the Peace Country region in northwestern Alberta leads the province in honey production and given that the centre is an important piece of rural economic development attracting Canadian researchers to Alberta, to the minister: will investments in the diversification of the economy be made to support GPRC as well as our Alberta and Canadian honey producers?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I'm quite excited about when the Finance minister rolls out the budget. There are a number of initiatives that my ministry is working on directly with the Minister of Energy, the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry, the minister of environment, and the Minister of Culture and Tourism, looking at a number of initiatives that we're going to be working on with all regions of the province and working with existing regional economic development agencies. As well, we will be working with municipalities throughout the province. I ask the member to wait until the budget has been dropped by the Finance minister, and we'll see that we are working throughout the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Online Registry Services

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been hearing from my constituents about the recently announced decision that we will be phasing out paper reminders for registration, licence, and identification card renewals. To the Minister of Service Alberta: what was the reason behind this decision being made now?

The Speaker: The minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. You know, it's evident to this House that Alberta is facing tough economic times. As such, this government is looking for efficiencies in our own house just as any Albertan is in theirs. This is an initiative that will save Albertans $3 million annually. It also helps us move into the 21st century as we'll be putting these renewal reminders online. This is just a smart way to save money for Albertans and also to move us into the future.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I've heard from some constituents, particularly seniors who do not have access to a computer at home and are concerned about no longer receiving their paper notice and potentially missing their renewal, again to the same minister: what supports are available to ensure that people can renew on time?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is absolutely important to our government to ensure that folks are renewing on time. It's important to Albertans as well that they're renewing on time. As such, seniors in particular will be receiving an extra renewal notice by paper that will let them know that they can contact their registry agents and let them know about this going online. So they will be notified, but additionally registry agents will be able to assist them with the reminder, and they can always check the back of their licence plates. As well, we're going to be ensuring that they continue to renew every . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many Albertans will be wanting greater access to online registry services as a whole, again to the same minister: what steps are you taking to make registry services more available to all Albertans?

Ms McLean: Thank you to the member for the question. I'm actually very excited about this initiative going under way with Service Alberta. We're looking at additional efficiencies and ways to ensure that Albertans are able to receive services from registries at their fingertips online into the future.

Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Edward John Polanski

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and indeed a great privilege to rise today to speak about some of the many accomplishments of the late Edward John Polanski, Alberta's communications pioneer. Mr. Polanski died earlier, in October 2015. Many of his family members are sitting in your gallery to help commemorate his achievements today.

Known as Ed to his family and friends, he is remembered as an exemplary entrepreneur who connected Alberta's communities through cable television. He was attracted to the world of electronics and telecommunications from a very young age, when he repaired radios at the rear of his father's hardware store after school in Thorhild. He was attracted to that world of electronics and telecommunications because of strong curiosity, and after graduating from Thorhild high school, he went to study electronic communications at Ryerson, in Toronto.

His mission in life was to bring private television viewing into every Albertan home. In the early 1950s he set up the first-ever cable television system in Thorhild. In the early 1960s advanced systems followed in Athabasca and St. Paul. During his time TV transmission was being broadcast simply to the borders of Edmonton and not beyond.

In 1970 Mr. Polanski incorporated Quality Cable Television, otherwise known as QCTV, which was licensed to provide half of the city of Edmonton with international television viewing. He campaigned to broadcast daily sittings of the Alberta Legislature and encouraged other provincial cable systems to do the same. Mr. Polanski is responsible for originating television broadcasting of proceedings of this Alberta Legislative Assembly and the House of Commons that we now watch today.

Like Ed I also am from Thorhild originally, and I'm proud to say that I had an opportunity to work as an intern at QCTV in the early 1980s as a master control operator. Mr. Polanski was a great mentor. He would walk through the television station and offices to inquire as to how things were going. He was always engaging, and he really deserves the accolades of this House and all Albertans for his accomplishments.

Thank you.

Government and Official Opposition Policies

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No one wants to hear "I told you so," but sometimes there's just no better way to make the point. Time after time Wildrose has put good ideas on the table, and time after time this NDP government has ignored them out of spite, spite for our party and spite for our province.

We told them to make realistic oil projections. They didn't listen. Now we're facing a $10 billion budget deficit. We told them to rein in spending or face a credit downgrade, that will cost Alberta taxpayers. They didn't listen. Now we've already seen one major credit downgrade and several major warnings. No doubt more downgrades are on the way. We asked them to hit the brakes on their royalty review or risk losing investment. They didn't listen. We've now lost billions of dollars in investment to our neighbours with stable royalty regimes east and west.

We recommended they support every possible pipeline project to get our oil to tidewater. They didn't listen. Instead, they put all their eggs in one basket and sat quietly on a fence while federal and provincial governments threw up roadblocks, that could cost us jobs and market access. We suggested that Bill 6 should start with consultation. They didn't listen. Instead, they made hasty amendments which didn't satisfy producers and forced farmers to protest on the steps of the Legislature month after month and even as recently as last week. We proposed a jobs action plan with good, solid ideas that all parties can get behind to kick-start the economy and get Albertans working again. Still nothing from the members opposite.

Albertans are worried. They're losing their jobs. Work is scarce. But if there is one message I could leave the government, it is this. When we in opposition come up with ideas and suggestions, it is out of a love for this province. So don't worry about the source; listen to the good ideas and work for Albertans. I don't want to say "I told you so" again.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

End-of-life Decision-making

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recent Supreme Court ruling means that medical assistance in dying, often called assisted suicide, will be legal in Alberta this June. I agree with the ruling. Legally competent Albertans who suffer from grievous, irremediable illnesses should be able to choose when and how they die. Medical aid in dying should be legal, but it should also be rare.

Maintaining quality of life to the end of life is the goal of palliative care, a service provided by a dedicated few in our province and one that we should look to expand. Palliative care is about ensuring that patients and their families feel valued and cared for not only in their last days but in the weeks, months, and even years leading up to death.

Death is a part of life, something we will all experience, and when we do, we want to be treated with dignity and we want to be as comfortable as possible. We all want to maintain control of our medical care even when we cannot speak for ourselves. It's important to know that even where medical assistance in dying is available, choice in dying means allowing natural death to occur in comfort and on our own terms.
