Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government has already agreed that a minimum wage won't keep people out of the food bank. Those are not living-wage jobs. That's a different thing.

In estimates the minister also could not tell us how the government is planning on addressing the brain drain of qualified workers leaving Alberta. Of course, a big part of that brain drain is people from the Fort McMurray area that work in technical fields, Mr. Speaker. To the Labour minister again: in case and when the day comes when Albertans are able to create jobs, what will the minister do to stop the brain drain and keep those people here, again including Fort McMurray, so that they can fill the jobs when they open up again?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are very aware of the challenging times that we are facing here in Alberta right now given the low global price of oil. We are supporting our workers by providing training opportunities as well as engagements to allow them to upgrade their skills so that they will be able to stay here in Alberta and contribute productively to our economy.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also in estimates last week the Labour minister, when asked about costs, said, and I quote: it is the Finance and Health ministers' goal to spend less, potentially. So in this time, again, when the economy is bad and people in Fort McMurray are feeling it more than anything else, I have to ask the Finance minister: what are your government's plans to spend less on labour? Which people will you not employ? Which ones will you pay less and in which departments?

Mr. Ceci: I think that I've stood up in this House before and I've talked about the different initiatives that are turning down the tap on expenditures for wages. All members of the Legislature have taken a freeze on their salaries; political staff have as well. Management has taken a two-year freeze and a grid movement freeze. We're also looking at – there'll be a bill coming in later that looks at the agencies, boards, and commissions and asks them to look at the compensations. We have negotiations that'll be taking place at the negotiation table with all of our unionized people, and we're looking for improvements there, recognizing the environment.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mental Health Services for Wildfire Evacuees and First Responders

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. All of us in this House are acutely aware of the skill, compassion, and courage of our emergency responders and of all the people in Fort McMurray throughout the hot, raging inferno. Also inspiring are the thousands of ordinary Albertans who've given time and money to support their neighbours. But mental health and supports for mental health are an ongoing concern. To the minister: how in a mental health system unable now to meet the needs of the population is the province planning to see the needs of these people . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, I appreciate his dedication and commitment to the mental health and wellness both of the evacuees as well as the first responders. Certainly, when I was at the Western Premiers' Conference just late last week, everyone wants to help us, not just the western Premiers, but Canadians want to help us. Finding ways that they might be able to provide some support in the days, weeks, and months ahead is certainly something that they're interested in supporting us with. It will be about triaging and making sure that we get the resources where they most need to be. Again, please register at redcross.ca.

Dr. Swann: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, we're talking about resources that are already insufficient. Where are we going to get new resources, and are we committed to new resources? Given that first responders in Fort McMurray have unique trauma associated with some of them leaving their families at the very time when their families need them the most, what new resources, including qualified trauma specialists, will be available?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, there have been discussions with Alberta Health Services about the resources that are available currently, what the response was in some of the other natural disasters that we've dealt with recently, how those might be able to apply as well as ways that we might be able to collaborate with the federal government as well to release some resources. For example, the trauma that some of our first responders are dealing with is unique in this situation, but it happens on a regular basis as well with the armed forces, so we're certainly in conversation about ways that we might be able to use their expertise as we move forward.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the concerns about the lack of trained trauma counsellors in the province for PTSD, including our WCB, the Workers' Compensation Board, and its capacity to deal with increased numbers of first responders, can the minister tell this House what new staff and resources will be provided for this extensive population of traumatized people?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, the chief medical officer of health is an instrumental part of making sure that we move forward with evidence-based decisions, looking at what the needs are here in Alberta and also the best practices in other jurisdictions. I appreciate the suggestions that have been offered by the member opposite, and I'll certainly have an open line of communication, but clearly we will be caring for the heroes who are caring for us today in the days ahead as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

School Accommodation of Wildfire-affected Students

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fires in Fort McMurray have impacted thousands of students, including those nearing graduation from high school. These students were getting ready to move on to postsecondary institutions to further their studies or to begin their careers in the Alberta workforce. To the Minister of Education: what is being done to accommodate our grade 12 students specifically?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to the member for the question. These students and all other grades, for that matter, are now able to register with school boards in the area where they've relocated. We've also seen many students registering in classes in Edmonton, Calgary, St. Paul, Lac La Biche, and many other school boards across the province. For grade 12 we will be working with our school boards and postsecondary partners to ensure that they can finish up their classes, and we'll make provisions around grade 12 diplomas to make sure that they are accommodated as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you. To the same minister. You just mentioned the diploma exams. What are the specific arrangements that are being made when it comes to those tests?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are about 900 grade 11 and grade 12 students in the Fort McMurray area that signed up to write diploma exams. All of these students displaced by fire will be granted an exception to diploma exams if they choose to do so. Displaced students wishing to write the diplomas have the opportunity to do so at the school where they register or at testing centres in Calgary or Edmonton. Alberta Education will be there to administer as well tests outside the major centres. We will support our students and find solutions that will work for all of them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you. To the same minister: given the need to ensure stability for our high school students, will being exempted from the diploma exams have an impact on these students' applications to postsecondary?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you once again for the question. Students who opt to not write the diploma exams will take their grade awarded in the classroom and can use that to apply to postsecondary institutions. This makes sense for what has happened, Mr. Speaker. I'm communicating our plans to forward diploma exams to all our school boards and postsecondary partners today, and we will work in collaboration with them to ensure that our students are supported during this difficult time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Support for Wildfire-affected Albertans

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Alberta Works locations were already overwhelmed in the recent months by Albertans seeking assistance due to the economic downturn. In recent months there have already been media reports of long lineups and overwhelmed staff needing to turn Albertans away. What is the current government doing to make sure that Alberta Works locations are prepared to handle the influx of displaced Albertans that may be seeking assistance as a result of this wildfire?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Member, for the question. At Alberta Works centres we are trying our best to make sure that Albertans are supported in this time of need. Five Alberta Works sites in the north-central region were open on Saturday, May 7, to accommodate the influx of Albertans. We are increasing our capacity by adding more staff and by extending the hours to make sure that Albertans have the supports they need.

Thank you.

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, given that one of the responsibilities of Alberta Works is to provide front-line employment services and career resources to unemployed Albertans and given that many Albertans in Fort McMurray have lost long-time places of employment in addition to their homes, between Alberta Labour and Human Services what is the current government doing to increase the availability of employment services and career resources for those who have been displaced by this wildfire?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Member, for the question. At this time the government's priority remains the safety of Albertans and their immediate needs. Starting on Wednesday, hopefully, we will be providing $1,250 per head and $500 per dependant child for their immediate needs. And once circumstances get better, we will work with the evacuees to make sure that their other needs, their employment needs and their long-term needs, are met as well.

Thank you.

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, given that another responsibility of Alberta Works is to help Albertans with low incomes cover basic living costs and given that many low-income and elderly Albertans are entirely displaced from their homes as a result of this devastating wildfire, can the current government update the House on how they will be helping low-income Albertans from Fort McMurray that have been evacuated and what resources are being made available at this time?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, we are addressing the needs. One of the difficulties in being able to give a concrete response to the question is that still not everyone is registered. So we are encouraging everyone every day, no matter where you're living or what your needs are, to register so that we know that you're safe, so we can assess what your needs are today but also for the shorter term and longer term planning for the individual families, for the workers, and for the community so that it can continue to move forward in a way – we have Albertans' backs, and we will continue to do so as we move forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Public Safety in Fort McMurray

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The disaster in Fort McMurray involves many moving parts, and a critical one relates to public safety and security. The police and other first responders performed a superb evacuation under some of the most challenging circumstances in the history of our nation. However, the tens of thousands of Fort McMurray residents now hundreds of kilometres away from their homes are naturally apprehensive about the security of their property, especially when they hear rumours of looting. To the Solicitor General: has there been any looting in Fort McMurray, and what measures are being taken to ensure it will not occur?

Ms Hoffman: The first thing I want to say is how important it is that people do honour the mandatory evacuation notice so that the first responders on the ground can focus on the duties that they need to do the most. Obviously, they don't want to have to turn people away, so if you stay where you're safe, the first responders on the ground can focus on keeping your belongings safe. Certainly, we'll continue to move forward, and I'm sure the Solicitor General will address other details around rumours around that situation. But please honour the mandatory evacuation order.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the city is deemed secure right now due to the limited number of people gaining access to it because of the hazardous situation and given that as the evacuation is lifted and thousands of residents flow home, others, including voyeurs and criminals of opportunity, may travel to Fort McMurray, again to the Solicitor General: how will police provide for a quick and orderly return for anxious Fort McMurray residents while also ensuring criminals of opportunity do not have free rein to roam in a partially empty city?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the critical question. We know the residents of Fort McMurray are under an enormous amount of stress right now. They're worried about their homes and what's going to be there when they go back. Currently it's the case that the entire city is under a mandatory evacuation, and we have to ask that people respect that. The RCMP are doing some fantastic work in ensuring that they keep that city safe. They're keeping things patrolled and looking for pets and ensuring that people aren't in there when they shouldn't be. As time moves forward, they will be working on an orderly return plan, but I think the most important thing is to ask people to make sure that they're not going back prior to when they're asked to.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the RCMP have informed us that some residents did not leave the city and that this kind of behaviour can pose unnecessary risks to first responders and given that it also is understandable why some residents may choose not to flee their homes in a public emergency, especially if they do not truly understand the severity of the danger, and given that a crisis provides an opportunity to learn, again to the same minister: what are your plans for reviewing the evacuation to potentially improve response in a future crisis?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Well, of course, the RCMP and all of us here in the province are always in the process of ensuring that we review an incident. We're not really at that stage yet. We're still at the stage where the fire is actively burning, but we certainly have learned a lot of lessons from things that have occurred in the past. I want to assure people, you know, that the RCMP continue to be within the city, and they continue to patrol the city to keep everything safe. We again would like to ask people to ensure, even though we know they're stressed and even though we know they want to go home, they wait until the first responders are telling them that it's safe to go back.

The Speaker: The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Wildfire Prevention and Control

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Decades ago, before fire suppression practices were followed, only a small percentage of our forests were older than 75 years because wildfire was common and widespread. The boreal forest is now older and consequently much drier as it ages and is not replaced. This is what firefighters are dealing with in northern Alberta. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: is there or will there be an updated strategy to the province's wildfire management practices to account for this new reality?

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The member might recall the Flat Top Complex, the Slave Lake fire in 2011. There was a large review done of that. I ordered and am accepting a report on a review of the fire season we had last year, which was a very large, bad season. We're expecting as well from this disaster an opportunity to do a review and, hopefully, learn something from it so we can prevent any such tragedy in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that in many instances these older and drier forests grow up and around many isolated urban centres and given that in the FireSmart strategy there are policies on the wildfire-urban interface that recommend such practices as construction of fuel- or firebreaks and the removal of volatile trees and the replanting of more fire-resistant species, again to the minister: are these recommendations and strategies being implemented in a timely fashion, and by whom?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. There were a lot of recommendations coming from various reviews, including the Flat Top Complex, that have been implemented over the years. We've had the opportunity over the past five years to implement many of them, to a cost of a hundred million dollars to implement a lot of those. It's important to note that Fort McMurray, even though they've gone through quite a disaster, had implemented a lot of that strategy from the FireSmart program. You know, it's too early to tell, but perhaps one of the reasons all people were able to evacuate was because of the FireSmart programs that were implemented. Again, we're looking forward to seeing what we can learn from this tragedy going forward.

Mr. Strankman: Given that on February 2 this government issued a tender for multiple aircraft, a water-skimming air tanker group, and on April 29 this government cancelled that same tender, will the hon. minister please provide an explanation and the supporting documents to Albertans why this tender, opened February 2 of this year, was cancelled less than three months later?

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. It's really important to note that we have a full complement of firefighters, air tankers, equipment on the wildfire fight that's happening in Fort McMurray as well as other places across the province. First and foremost, our number one, most important concern, of course, is the safety of Albertans and also the safety of their communities. Rest assured that we'll continue to do so whatever this season might have for us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Calgary Ring Road Completion

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgarians, especially in the constituency of Calgary-West, are getting anxious that recent comments from the Minister of Transportation stopping just short of a P3 moratorium may derail the southwest Calgary ring road. With three international consortiums having bid on the work, can the minister assure Calgary-West that the southwest ring road P3 is still a go, and please tell the House: when will the contract be awarded?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation and Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. I announced very early on that we would be proceeding with the southwest Calgary ring road in the form that was established, and we're expecting the bids from the consortium. It will be conducted as a P3. I should remind members that there is a seven-year time frame in which we have to complete that road, or the land reverts to the Tsuu T'ina Nation as per the agreement, so it's important that we waste no time whatsoever to make sure that that road is completed on . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that some NDP-supporting Calgary city councillors, not from Calgary-West, oppose the southwest Calgary ring road and given that some of these councillors have been vocal about redirecting the southwest Calgary ring road money to some other pet projects, can the minister assure the House that there was never ever a serious consideration that the funds for the southwest Calgary ring road be diverted?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given the minister's comments regarding P3s and whereas the west Calgary ring road has still not been put out to tender, P3 or otherwise, can Alberta's construction industry anticipate that the west Calgary ring road will be delivered by the traditional design/bid/build procurement method, and when does the minister anticipate the first of those tenders to hit the market?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to assure the hon. member that I have made no decision with respect to the form of the contracts that will be let with respect to the west ring road. I advise him to look in the capital plan because he will see that the west ring road is in the capital plan.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Job Creation

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Creating the environment for private investment and, hence, jobs is an integral part of good policy. The minister has confirmed that the private sector, not government, creates jobs. However, it is understood you can't instantly create 100,000 jobs. This happens one job at a time, as will undoubtedly be the case in Fort McMurray as well. To the minister of economic development: as no clear answers were received during estimates, could you outline for the House one specific initiative from your ministry that will help to create just 100 jobs, 1.1 per cent of your government's ambitious new jobs plan, as we diversify our economy?

Mr. Ceci: As the hon. member knows, our budget this year is focused on supporting families and communities. We're investing in infrastructure. That will create hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of jobs, obviously. We're diversifying the energy industry through the petrochemical diversification program. Again, once the tax credits start rolling there, hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of jobs will be created, and we're supporting Alberta businesses by reducing their taxes in January 2017, so they will have more money to be able to create more jobs.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, if I can't get a hundred, I'm not sure I'm going to get a thousand more of those.

Given that jobs are created one initiative, one partnership, and one project at a time and given that all of these need to be initiated in a timely manner, built upon, and replicated to create results, to the Minister of Infrastructure: can you give us just one specific infrastructure project now being built anywhere in Alberta under the jobs plan, when it will be completed, and, more specifically, how many jobs it will create?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the southwest Calgary ring road is a project. We are now clearing the land. We have employed companies that are operated by the Tsuu T'ina Nation on some of that work. There is ordinance clearing. There is clearing of all the undergrowth and so on. I can assure the hon. member that hundreds of construction jobs are going to be created by that project in his own city.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for an initiative that was initiated by the Member for Calgary-Hays.

Given that increased export promotion and export growth are a clear path to job creation and given that trade and investment attraction is one of the few flat areas in the budget over the next three years despite an almost guaranteed return on investment for agriculture, forestry, and tourism, to the minister of economic development: how will you continue to compete in an ever-changing, highly competitive global marketplace without adequate financial resources allocated to export growth?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. I don't agree with: not adequate monies for export growth. Our government is committed to responsibly enhancing trade across provincial and national borders. We know that trade of our world-class products and services means good mortgage-paying jobs in every corner of our province, and we'll always support trade that serves the interests of all Albertans.

The Speaker: The Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Culture and Tourism Support for Wildfire Evacuees

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past week has been very difficult for Albertans, especially for Fort McMurray families who have evacuated their homes with little to no belongings. Albertans have rallied together to support the affected communities. Given that additional supports are required, can the Minister of Culture and Tourism explain what the ministry is doing to help Fort McMurray families who were forced to flee their homes because of the devastating wildfires?

The Speaker: The Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. The Ministry of Culture and Tourism is doing our part by waiving fees to provincial historic sites and museums for those displaced by the wildfires, effective immediately. I'd also like to say that ministry staff have been part of the emergency task force and that approximately 80 of them have now come forward to volunteer on the recovery task force. Alberta Sport Connection has also loaned about 2,000 cots to the Northlands evacuation centre for use at the reception centre. I want to thank all the staff of the ministry who have come forward and helped.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister for the update. We know that this is a tough time for Fort McMurray residents staying at evacuation centres, including families with children. To the same minister: why is it so important to waive these fees?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We know that this is a very stressful time that these families are facing right now. We wanted to provide the opportunity for them to have a bit of a distraction and to be able to leave the evacuation centres. We felt it was very important to do that at this time, and I am pleased to inform the House that since we made that announcement, we've had reports of families visiting the Royal Tyrrell, Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump, the Reynolds-Alberta Museum, the Frank Slide Interpretive Centre. I would encourage all of the families right now in the evacuation centres to take the opportunity to visit these places as it will be . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the minister responsible for Northlands can you give this House an update on the work that they are doing to support the evacuees?

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I can tell you that I'm very proud of the work that Northlands is doing. Like other evacuee centres, Northlands is providing emergency lodging, food, clothing, entertainment, access to medical supplies, health services, access to insurance companies, and other services. The outpouring of support from Albertans has been tremendous. I want to personally thank all the front-line staff and the volunteers working at Northlands right now and at the evacuee centres across the province for stepping up and providing these very much needed services to Albertans who are hurting right now.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

School Construction in Irma

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The highest priority for the Battle River school division is the school in Irma. Built in the 1950s and last upgraded in the '80s, the heating and other systems are vintage at best. The ministry staff have said that the school is at end of life and is on the unfunded capital project list. I understand that funding is available for certain projects on that list for planning. Can the Minister of Infrastructure explain the criteria for having an unfunded project receive funds this year?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the school at Irma I'm going to have to look into that specific project and get back to the hon. member, but I want to assure him that we take into account the priorities that are set by school districts and the Department of Education in compiling the capital plan for schools.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Taylor: Well, thank you. Given that the school board has a template design for this school similar to the previous build that was done in this district and given that the village of Irma has raised funds to enhance the project to meet local needs – this school would be streamlined and efficient – to the same minister: is there a process whereby a shovel-ready project could be moved to the capital plan?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, a shovel-ready project is one of the criteria that we base the capital plan on, but we also have to take in many other factors, including the competing demands on the Infrastructure money. I point out to the House that when we expanded the capital plan and put out a call for projects of about 4 and a half billion dollars, we received over $15 billion in requests. There are many, many important requests, more than we have cash for, so we have to set priorities. Sometimes communities . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Taylor: You have put it into priority because it's on your unfunded list.

Given the level of collaboration between the school board, the MD, and the village of Irma and given that they have raised over a million dollars to enhance the build to include a community centre and a gym for the village as part of the school design and since there is a time constraint for having the community centre built, would the minister meet with the partners to discuss possible strategies for moving forward on the school build?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would be happy to do so.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-North West.

Homelessness Initiatives

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am proud to sit on the Calgary homeless council along with my colleague the Member for Calgary-Elbow. I was pleased to see our Minister of Human Services join us last week for the 7 Cities conference on homelessness, but I continue to be dismayed that the government doesn't consider this council important enough to warrant a government member taking part. To the Minister of Human Services: given that the Fort McMurray fires leave a significant number of Albertans in a very vulnerable place, are you willing to listen to the concerns of this council?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. In relation to the people displaced from Fort McMurray, we will be working with our regional partners to track the number of people, and we will work with the partners to make sure that they have a place to call home.

Thank you.

Ms Jansen: Well, that didn't actually touch on my question at all.

Anyway, given that the homeless experts tell us that while we have many shovel-ready projects, they aren't a hundred per cent sure that these are shovel-worthy projects, is the minister confident that everything that they are slated to invest in is in the best interests of vulnerable Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. As I mentioned in that conference and I'm saying here as well, we have allocated money, $1.1 billion, through the Ministry of Seniors and Housing. That money is geared towards building more affordable housing, which will have an impact on the homelessness situation. While we build those houses, we still continue to work with those seven cities' CBOs to make sure that people have temporary places to go to and survive. Meanwhile we are . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: All right. Again, Mr. Speaker, that was a totally different answer than the question I asked. Let's try another one.

Given that one of the most important areas for improvement on the issue of homelessness is the sharing of information that enables service providers to get a very full picture of homelessness in the province, is the minister willing to look into our council and the information we are gathering?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Certainly, I was willing to look into your council. That's why I was present there. I'm committed to working with the council and all partners across the province to make sure that we can reduce and eliminate homelessness.

The Speaker: The Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Emergency Management in Indigenous Communities

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the midst of an emergency the scale of which we saw in Fort McMurray, it is of the utmost importance to remember the many communities nearby that can also be affected. To the Minister of Indigenous Relations: what has the government done to ensure that the needs of First Nations and Métis communities in Alberta are considered and addressed in an emergency such as this?

The Speaker: The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. My ministry does have a seat at the Provincial Operations Centre, which works with ministries and federal partners to co-ordinate the initial response in any kind of disaster. This ensures that my ministry is closely involved in the wildfire response and relaying information as needed to co-ordinate. There is a dedicated unit co-ordinating First Nations and Métis communities' needs, which is comprised of four field officers and one manager. These officers work closely with indigenous communities, providing supports to ensure that all evacuees are accounted for . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the update. I'm glad to hear there is a system in place to help co-ordinate this response.

The generosity of all Albertans has been moving to see. In particular, many First Nations and Métis communities that I've talked to have opened their homes and hearts to evacuees in need. Again to the minister. Many of these communities are remote and limited in terms of resources. What is the ministry doing to ensure that they have the supplies they need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I, too, was very touched by the generosity and professionalism of the First Nations and Métis communities who opened their homes to the evacuees in need and continue to be an important part of the firefighting and the safety provided to members from Fort McMurray. The First Nations field officers are in constant contact with the community and working together with them. Over the weekend we were able to ensure that there were shipments arranged to bring food, baby supplies, and other necessities to Fort McKay and to Fort Chip. We continue to monitor the situation and would like to thank the First Nations for their contributions.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It sounds like the field officers and the Provincial Operations Centre are working effectively with indigenous communities.

Again to the minister: can you tell me what you have done personally to assist in this emergency?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Our government is working very closely with indigenous communities. I and the Premier have both been deeply involved in this over the last week. You may know that the Premier is in Fort McMurray today with Grand Chief Courtoreille of Treaty 8 looking over the situation and working towards solutions for the future. I, of course, have personally been involved with the grand chief of Treaty 8 as well as the president of the Métis national association, the regional chief of the Assembly of First Nations, the chiefs of four, five, six – I'm just counting as I look down . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Again I'll remind the member: no preambles on supplementaries.
The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Porcine Epidemic Diarrhea

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few weeks ago I brought up concerns regarding the biosecurity of farms. Another ongoing problem is the federal government's enforcement of a ruling stating that Canadian livestock trailers returning from shipping hogs to the U.S. must now use possibly contaminated washing facilities in the U.S., thus risking the transfer of porcine epidemic virus, known as PED. To the minister of agriculture: what has your government done to alleviate concerns of pork producers worried about the spread of the PED virus?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. To this point there have been no cases of PED in Alberta, and it's important for all of us, producers and governments, right across Alberta to ensure that it doesn't happen, you know, working with entire organizations, the processors, the producers, to ensure that our biosecurity maintains importance in Alberta, maintaining how crucial it really is and working also with the CFIA to ensure that their standards are as high as possible and that they meet those high standards.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, given that this virus is also prevalent in eastern Canada and that the four western provincial chief veterinarians and pork boards are concerned about the transfer of this virus to Alberta farms, to the minister: have you and your western colleagues developed any strategy to combat the spread of this disease not only from the U.S. but from eastern Canada as well?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As the member has suggested, the main risk for the spread of this disease is trailers that are not washed. You know, currently we're relying on the producers to do so. They know how important it is. I think it's important that I do work with colleagues right across the country. This summer we will have the opportunity as the federal-provincial-territorial meetings for agriculture ministers, including the federal minister, are going to be in Alberta. It only happens once every 13 years, so I'm absolutely looking forward to the discussions.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that these producers have their livelihoods and their way of life heavily invested in these hog operations and given that measures to stop the transfer of this disease include the washing of any trailers returning from the U.S. and indeed from other provinces so as to prevent the spread of this virus, will the minister lobby the federal government to reinstate the temporary amendment to the regulation that allowed trailers to return to certified wash facilities in Canada to ensure our industry's biosecurity?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. You know, I share his concerns. I think PED and other biosecurity risks right across for our producers, whether it's in beef or in pork, are important. It's important to maintain those standards whether or not we have cases in Alberta, actually, to maintain our high level of product that we can market right across Canada and right across the world. It's important. I'm looking forward to working with producers, processors, and other levels of government to ensure what more we can do to ensure that we keep those risks at the minimum.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 205

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As elected officials we want to make positive changes for Albertans. Bill 205, the Pharmacy and Drug (Pharmaceutical Equipment Control) Amendment Act, 2016, will not just improve lives; it will save them. This bill regulates the possession of pill presses, which criminals use to produce homemade concoctions that kill such as fentanyl and W-18. As legislators Bill 205 provides us with a rare opportunity to directly save lives.

Why is this bill so critical right now? Well, it's because 272 Albertans died last year from overdosing on fentanyl. They popped a $20 pill expecting a recreational high, but they quickly spiralled into the biggest downer of their lives, and then they were gone. Bill 205 gives police a powerful tool to reduce deaths and save families and friends of victims from terrible, lifelong anguish. Restricting pill presses places Alberta at the forefront of the fight against fentanyl in Canada and may lead the federal government to take action nationally.

This bill amends the Pharmacy and Drug Act to license pill presses, used in the illegal manufacture of drugs. It gives police the ability to seize presses, which can generate thousands of the deadly tablets in an hour. Fines can reach up to $375,000 or jail time. The penalties sound high, but make no mistake. Criminals manufacturing this powerful drug make millions of dollars.

When this bill comes before the House, I encourage all of you to participate in the debates. What better way to use our special position as Members of the Legislative Assembly than by working together towards halting the production of deadly drugs and actually saving lives. While Bill 205 carries my name as its sponsor today, should it become law, it will be the 29th Legislature that will have passed it.

Let's do this. Let's save lives, let's do it together, and let's do it today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Parkland School Division

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My thoughts and prayers go out to all of the families affected by the wildfires in this past week.

I have the distinct privilege of working with Parkland school division in the riding of Stony Plain. Parkland school division is one of the largest employers in my area, with around 1,000 employees, and encompassing 22 schools with a number of alternative sites as well. The vision of Parkland is to be a place where exploration, creativity, and imagination make learning exciting and where all learners aspire to reach their dreams. There is a caring, inclusive, healthy environment at all levels. I am lucky enough to have a child in elementary school, one in junior high, and one heading to the local high school in the fall. The programming is astounding, the options and possibilities endless. This attitude of acceptance and striving towards excellence starts with the local school board.

Mr. Speaker, the administration team is incredibly hard working, attempting to make sure each child and their family is on the road to success, and this is apparent at each school site I have seen. And of course these teachers and administrators work so diligently; they work with our children in mind. This was brought to the forefront of my mind because Parkland school division was one of the first organizations I heard from last week in the days during the evacuation of Fort McMurray. As I discussed with Superintendent Tim Monds, Board Chair Eric Cameron, and Vice-chair Kathleen Linder, there will be families coming, children who need support to finish this school year, grade 12s that need to write diploma exams, and they are welcome. We will take them. We will arrange for free transportation for all of these students wherever they need to be picked up and returned because documentation cannot be a hurdle right now. We will help them finish the year the best that we can.

This is the community where I live, a community I am proud to be a part of, a place of generosity and giving, which is always apparent but never more so than now, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Buffalo Rubbing Stone School

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've all had a really bad itch from time to time. I mean one so bad that you had to reach for a backscratcher, some hydrocortisone cream, or maybe a helpful friend with some fingernails. Fortunately, in the northern hills of Calgary we have just the solution you're looking for. There is an ancient giant stone on a hillside left behind from the last ice age. Although a geologist might refer to the stone as a glacial erratic, a bison or buffalo would have referred to it as the kind of relief you just can't find in a drugstore.

These lone boulders are scattered all over the prairies and continue to stand as a memorial to the vast herds of buffaloes that once roamed the open grasslands and foothills and within the present-day riding boundary of Calgary-Northern Hills. Over many generations millions of buffaloes, some of whom you might refer to as my former constituents, rubbed against the rocks to remove their winter coats and to alleviate the itch of insect bites. These boulders often have polished surfaces and are marked with a deep rut around the base of the stone where countless generations of buffalo have left their marks. In the modern day this buffalo rubbing stone sits in a small park in the quiet neighbourhood of Panorama Hills.

Recently the Calgary board of education selected the name for a new public school that is being built in the Panorama Hills community. It will be called Buffalo Rubbing Stone School. The CBE chose the name to honour the significance of the buffalo in the lives of the indigenous peoples in the regions. When completed in September 2016, Buffalo Rubbing Stone School will serve students from kindergarten to grade 4, with an expected capacity of 600 students. I think it's wonderful that the school's name represents a historically significant landmark which the children and families can connect with in their own neighbourhood.

So if you're itching to come to Calgary-Northern Hills this summer, be sure to stop by and see our buffalo rubbing stone. It might provide the relief you're looking for.

Education System

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, over the last month or so I've had many constituents contact my office to express their support of Alberta's education system and the fact that the parents and students in our province have a large diversity of choices in the education of our youth. In my own riding of Little Bow there are four public school boards and at least four independent private schools. There is a range of classrooms from the traditional classroom to classrooms that are more self-directed, schools that offer online courses to schools that support home-schooling in various forms. There are schools that provide faith-based education as well as schools that have an emphasis on sports.

This diversity has allowed students to thrive in the program that they and their parents have chosen. They are able to obtain an education that is far more than just adequate, and they are able to do it in ways that support their own circumstances so that they can improve their lives.

Diversity and innovation have also allowed schools to stay sustainable and to keep their schools in their community. They do this by adjusting to their new realities and taking advantage of new ideas, new technology, or a new focus. The Palliser alternative secondary school runs online courses that students can access from their classroom in Coaldale, from their campus in Calgary, or from their home. This school runs all year long, so students don't need to be limited by course availability.

I've talked about Hope Christian School in this House before. They operate a school that has a self-directed on-site classroom as well as online courses and home-schooling. They also operate some consolidated sites for home-schooling for the Low German speaking Mennonite population in southern Alberta.

Faith-based schools in Little Bow provide blended programs which are based on the values of their faith. That's important to them. Regardless of the school system the student is able to further their education in the best way possible for them. This in itself will provide a richer generation of students to help grow Alberta at all levels.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On April 14 I tabled this spring's estimates calendar. Today I am tabling a revised spring 2016 budget main estimates schedule based on a request from Municipal Affairs officials, so that they have additional time to prepare due their current preoccupation with the wildfire situation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table two documents today. Both were referred to in question period. One is with respect to the cancelling of an air tanker contract.

The other is called Air Tanker Group Set Up 2016.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a letter referenced and circulated at the Treasury Board and Finance estimates debate on May 4, 2016, where I questioned the financial position of ATB Financial. Alberta Treasury Board and Finance responded with the following information with respect to the letter. ATB has informed us that they are introducing new fees in July for cash and coin services that could impact high-volume cash customers, that all of ATB's competitors, except for Servus and some credit unions, charge such fees and that ATB's will be the lowest and exempt more customers than others. The change in the fee structure has nothing to do with ATB's financial position according to ATB's response.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I am tabling five copies of a report from the Chief Electoral Officer, that is submitted pursuant to section 44(1) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, listing those candidates and their chief financial officers who failed to eliminate their campaign deficit by the prescribed deadline.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to table a letter from Nick Dira. The House may recall that two or three weeks ago I introduced Nick. He was a gentleman in a wheelchair who, amazingly enough, within a year had recovered some of his ability to walk and is working hard to recover. Unfortunately, Nick has now run into some of the rationing and lack of oversight in our health care system. One of the sentences in the letter: "I am unable to access the health services and care that I am assessed as requiring because of the new policy limiting Glenrose patients to [only] 90 days of therapy." The letter is sad. It's amazing that this is happening in our province, and I would ask each and every member to read it.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise at this time to request the unanimous consent of the Assembly to waive Standing Order 8 in order that the Assembly may proceed immediately to the consideration of second reading of Bill 205.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 205

Pharmacy and Drug (Pharmaceutical Equipment Control) Amendment Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to rise and begin debate on Bill 205, the Pharmacy and Drug (Pharmaceutical Equipment Control) Amendment Act, 2016. Bill 205 will place Alberta at the forefront of a national fight against fentanyl and W-18 by regulating the possession of pill presses. The bill amends the Pharmacy and Drug Act by requiring Albertans to obtain a licence to possess a pill or tablet press, and it lays out sturdy fines for those who have them illegally. Pharmacies are exempted from having to obtain a licence. Other details such as further exemptions will be determined in the regulations after additional consultation has occurred.

The concern with pill presses is that drug dealers use various recipes to manufacture these highly hazardous opioids as well as other deadly compounds such as counterfeit OxyContin and heroin. It should come as no surprise to anyone that criminals mixing these drug concoctions are not known for their quality control. That is why 272 Albertans died last year after ingesting fentanyl, more than double the 120 citizens who died in 2014.

When these criminals mix their fentanyl recipe, two extra micrograms of the drug, the equivalent of two grains of salt, added into the cutting agent turns fentanyl into a killer. Fentanyl is coming into our province in a powder form. To press it into a pill, tablet, or capsule, criminals need a press. I found one on eBay for $750 USD. It manufactures 3,000 pills in just one hour. Commercial pharmaceutical tableting machines sell for less than $10,000 and can produce 10,000 to 18,000 tablets per hour. That, Mr. Speaker, is the reason we need to regulate the presses.

Two weeks ago we learned that a massive amount of W-18 had entered Alberta. ALERT, the Alberta law enforcement response teams, managed to seize it before criminals pressed it into pills. If they had not done so, untold deaths may have occurred.

ALERT is Alberta's front line of defence against serious crime, which includes drug trafficking, gang activity, and child sexual exploitation. The highly trained officers recruited to join ALERT are particularly important for rural detachments, which don't have the expertise to deal with many of these crimes. Rural Alberta has suffered equally with our cities when it comes to deaths from fentanyl. That's why I fought so hard to ensure that this government provided full funding to fully staffed ALERT teams.

The arrival in Alberta of W-18 on top of the 272 citizens tragically killed last year by fentanyl underlines the ability that we have to save lives by regulating the devices that produce the pills for distribution on our streets. Bill 205 is designed to give police a powerful proactive tool in their fight against fentanyl and W-18. Officers will have the ability to seize these machines and to fine criminals who have them in their possession. The bill can potentially take tens of thousands of pills off Alberta streets, that tens of thousands of pills of which any one can kill a person. As I've said before, it's like playing Russian roulette with your life.

The fines in Bill 205 are unapologetically high: up to $50,000 for a first offence, $250,000 for a second offence, and $375,000 for a third offence or imprisonment of up to six months. There is no reason for alarm at the size of the fines; the criminal can pay them.

Let's look at their business model. A drug dealer can spend five hours manufacturing pills on that $750 manual pill press. That's 15,000 pills ready for the street. Multiply that by $20 to $40, given the street value, and we're talking about $300,000 to $600,000 from just five hours of work. If a few people die along the way, well, why would they care? These pills travel all over Alberta for distribution. They don't know their victims and they never will. It is simple cost versus reward. No drug dealer really wants to kill their client, but when the reward is so great, it is a risk that they are willing to take, and that risk is, sadly, the life of the victim. On a larger magnitude scale one kilogram of fentanyl costs $12,000. A clandestine drug lab with a commercial pill press will compress that powder into one million pills. At $20 to $40 each, given the street value, we're talking about $20 million to $40 million.

In developing Bill 205, I wanted to make sure that in seeking to penalize illegal drug labs and the people who run them, we are not causing problems, of course, for those who legitimately use pill presses. That is why my consultation has been very extensive and, I am pleased to say, collaborative. I consulted with the RCMP and the Alberta law enforcement response team as well as Calgary and Edmonton police services. Police made excellent recommendations, which are reflected in the bill that you see before you. I also sought my own legal counsel, which helped direct me to considering amending the Pharmacy and Drug Act rather than drafting a new specific act.

Because of this direction it was incumbent upon me to consult with pharmacists. I turned to the Alberta College of Pharmacists and the Alberta Pharmacists' Association. Both professional bodies provided excellent suggestions, which are also reflected in Bill 205. I sought further feedback from the natural practitioners of Canada as I was not sure if their members used tablet presses. I was informed that they had no concerns. Finally, I consulted with the medical profession as well. In all instances I received strong support as well as feedback that strengthened the bill.

As a former sergeant with the Calgary Police Service I know that regulating pill presses will not mean the end of hazardous drugs in Alberta. We still need education to help Albertans make good choices, we still need prevention in the form of good laws and strong law enforcement, and we still need intervention in the form of addiction counselling and long-term beds for treatment as well as a ready supply of naloxone, a reactionary antidote that has saved lives. Bill 205, however, lets police seize the readily available machines criminals are using to make money and callously kill people.

The penalties included in Bill 205 will provide a deterrent to those attracted to easy money. I'm pleased to note that the fines will go to helping those who have suffered. The victims of crime fund is one such example.

Finally, there is an aspect of the bill that is truly Albertan because Bill 205 seeks to provide a solution to a problem. It does not wait for anyone else to do it; it simply leads the way. Today pill presses are regulated in the U.S. by the drug enforcement agency. They are not, however, regulated in Canada or any other province. Bill 205 puts Alberta at the forefront of the fentanyl fight in our nation. It may empower other provinces to introduce their own laws and it may convince the federal government to take this measure as well as others such as controlling the analogues and precursors for making fentanyl and W-18, but we do not have to wait for anyone. We can't wait. Bill 205 is what it actually means to be an Albertan. We innovate, we problem solve, and we adapt. We cannot wait for someone else to find the answer. We do not look to other jurisdictions for answers. We are Albertans. That means that we are leaders.

A few weeks ago we were all aghast to learn of the arrival of W-18 in Alberta. It is hard to imagine a street drug a hundred times more powerful than fentanyl, but it exists and it is here.

Mr. Speaker, when I was first elected in this House a year and a half ago, I didn't know that this would be the first private member's bill I would be bringing forward. But as soon as I began hearing about the deaths from fentanyl overdoses, I started investigating the kinds of proactive measures that we could take to stop them. Now I appeal to all of you as fellow legislators to consider the important role that you play in this process. By voting in favour of this bill, this is your chance to show true leadership while saving lives. This is your moment to proudly stand up and put aside all political alliances and say: I have had enough, and I will support this bill because I do not want to see any more Albertans die.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to everyone's comments on this very critical bill. Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-West for introducing this bill. His commitment to helping the fight against fentanyl is admirable.

I understand that the Minister of Justice has raised the need for the federal government to regulate pill presses multiple times, so this bill follows up on the member's work. It's worth noting that the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police passed a resolution in the fall seeking federal government, not provincial government, regulation of pill presses that are fentanyl precursors. It appears that the federal government has the best tools available to combat the use of pill presses in assembling counterfeit narcotics.

While this bill introduces a potential penalty of $50,000 for a first offence, the federal government has much stronger powers to deal with issues like these. For instance, under section 462(2) of the Criminal Code anyone who manufactures, sells, promotes, or exports instruments for illicit drug use is subject to a $100,000 fine and up to six months in jail for the first offence. The federal government could institute even more significant penalties for pill press possession given the impact of the current fentanyl crisis. As provincial governments do not have jurisdiction over criminal law, we are left with regulatory measures such as the lower fines found in this bill, and these may not be a sufficient deterrent to reduce pill press use.

Additionally, the regulation of pill presses really needs to occur at a national level. Under this bill an individual could still just drive over the provincial border to B.C. or Saskatchewan and legally purchase a pill press in that jurisdiction. So given these individuals are involved in the illegal manufacture of illicit drugs, typically with a value reaching well into the millions, it is unlikely that the measures in this bill will provide a substantial deterrent. Federal government regulation would allow the government to stop pill presses at the border and a much more thorough measure of regulating access.

I would urge the member bringing forward this bill to join us in our call for the federal government to take up the regulation of pill presses. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to speak on Bill 205, the Pharmacy and Drug (Pharmaceutical Equipment Control) Amendment Act, 2016. This bill is a step in the right direction in looking at trying to bring illegal drugs in the pill form off of streets. I have to commend the member for his passion in this area. I myself have addressed this with my colleagues as well, bringing up our fentanyl 10-point plan.

We all can agree that illegal or illicit drugs – like ecstasy, W-18, fentanyl, and MDMA – are hurting Albertans. They're hurting everybody that they touch. It is encouraging to see that we are finally seeing that members in this House are looking to do something that will actually change how we are trying to move law forward to discourage these kinds of drugs. We're trying to hamper the production of these drugs, which will make our communities safer. I know that every member in here wants their community to be safer.

We've heard from other members of the House. On fentanyl, specifically, I want to reiterate that we are all, I'm sure, concerned. This isn't just a scare tactic or an overdramatization; this is an actual danger that we need to be looking forward to moving something, some solution, forward.

Now, I do see that the government is getting naloxone kits into our first responders' hands, and they are moving in directions of helping people that have overdosed, but I do understand what the Member for Calgary-West is trying to emphasize here: we wouldn't have to go to those drastic measures if the drug just wasn't out there. I understand, and he's brought forward that it is important that we are trying to find ways in all different directions to reduce this on the streets, but, in the end, when we're looking at moving forward, prevention seems to be the better route than reaction.

These drugs are affecting all walks of life. Last year alone we saw that over 270 people died as a result of fentanyl. This is a staggering number. I can't think of any other type of substance that has had such a wide-ranging and deep impact in such a short time. These drugs are putting people's lives in imminent danger, and no one, no matter what community you are part of, would disagree with that. Specifically, young people are at an incredible risk with this because, in the end, grams make a difference with this drug. As we've heard from the Member for Calgary-West, two grains of salt can mean life or death. That seems specifically incredible that we would have something so powerful out there that is being put into a pill form. The thought alone is scary, what it could do to my own family should it get to my own daughter when she gets old enough that this is actually going to be a concern. Fortunately, my daughter is 10 and less likely to be exposed to something like this, but teenagers, who regularly go out, are the focus of a lot of these drugs. Parents losing their children is tragic.

Now, W-18 and fentanyl take it to a completely different level when we look at the long-term neurological effects that these opiates can have on people. Even if drugs don't kill the user the first time, they can create significant brain damage. This is a concern for all Albertans because, in the end, we have youth right now that do not understand that these are not Aspirin and Tylenol. If they take two, they might die. High school students have taken a pill that someone has given them one evening when they were at a friend's house. The next morning they were either gone or their future was taken away from them. These were kids that could have gone on to do amazing things, kids from good families – like mine, like yours, like everybody's in this House – who had their entire lives in front of them, but they were robbed. That's the future by making a mistake with a drug that needs to be eliminated. We need to take action now. Well, we really should have taken action last year, when Wildrose produced its 10-point fentanyl harm reduction plan with my colleague the shadow Health minister.

Now, hopefully, it's not too late to get in front of this issue and start cracking down on the organized crime syndicates that are responsible for the manufacturing, proliferation, and distribution of these terrible drugs. It is my hope that the police will be able to obtain a warrant for organized criminals with greater ease and be able to hold the criminals to account when they are caught with these drugs and these drug labs. The men and women in Alberta enforcement do a tremendous job each and every day. I hope that this bill will put one more tool in their hands to fix Alberta's drug crisis.

I will be supporting Bill 205 at second reading, and I am curious to learn more details about this bill when Committee of the Whole comes forward, when we all have the opportunity to add what we feel will grow this bill into something that protects Albertans. I hope that the government, across the aisle, instead of just voting down this bill, brings forward amendments that they feel will strengthen this bill instead of just saying to the federal government: please, protect us. If we do come forward and we want to move this bill in a positive direction, I believe that as an Assembly we are able to work together and able to actually make a difference against fentanyl.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and speak about Bill 205 and the important issue that this bill takes aim at, which is illicit fentanyl. Fentanyl is an opioid, or painkiller, that can be used safely when it is prescribed by a health professional and taken as directed. It is also made and sold illegally in our province and across Canada. Fentanyl is very toxic. Just a small amount, the size of two grains of salt, can be deadly. Fentanyl is made and sold in many different forms and can be hiding in other drugs.

Alberta has the highest per capita legitimate opioid consumption in Canada. There is no question that there needs to be a multifaceted approach to addressing both legitimate and illegitimate use of opioids here in our province. Bill 205 can serve to support a broader strategy to mitigate the impact of illicit drugs and stem opioid misuse and abuse. In short, it is one more tool in our toolbox to help stem the tragic tide of deaths in our province caused by fentanyl.

We will continue to address this issue through a variety of actions. This government is exploring as many avenues as possible in response to this issue, including advocating for stronger measures around pill presses and precursor drugs with the federal government; co-ordinating efforts through the fentanyl action response team, which is poised to become a contributor to the overall implementation of the mental health review recommendations; working with the health colleges on the triplicate prescription form drug program; working with the federal-provincial-territorial working group on prescription drug abuse; improving data reporting; and ensuring appropriate information and education materials are available to both the public and to medical professionals.

We also continue to be committed to harm reduction strategy, ensuring that people will have access to naloxone, the drug that can help reverse opioid overdoses and save lives. The Minister of Health has signed ministerial orders that directly allow EMTs and EMRs to administer naloxone, RNs to prescribe naloxone, and paramedics, EMTs, and EMRs to dispense the drug. As well, the Minister of Health has signed a further ministerial order that authorizes Alberta Health to pay the dispensing fee charge for naloxone prescriptions. We know that people are using naloxone kits, and we know that they are saving lives.

As well, we want to ensure that people have access to the supports they need for detox and recovery when they are prepared to enter into them. For example, Alberta Health is currently working closely with the community of Cardston to establish a Suboxone clinic so that recovering opiate addicts will have the medical monitoring and support for opioid replacement therapies.

I want to thank the Member for Calgary-West for stepping up to the plate with this bill, and I look forward to discussing the bill in greater detail in third reading. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to speak to second reading of Bill 205, Pharmacy and Drug (Pharmaceutical Equipment Control) Amendment Act, 2016. I can say from experience in this House that it's very rare indeed to see overwhelming support from every corner of this room, at least when it comes to debating the emergency of this bill. I can appreciate that from that perspective the government was not playing political games on such a critical concept which will, without a doubt, save countless lives.

Now, to the hon. Member for Calgary-West, the mover of this bill, I truly appreciate your sponsorship of this legislation. Perhaps it's worthy of note that it does indeed come with the inspiration of our former MLA for Calgary-Greenway.

Colleagues, we've all seen the horrendous news stories about how fentanyl and the emerging, extremely dangerous W-18 compound are killing Alberta's children. Let this be completely clear. Fentanyl killed 272 Albertans in 2015, and to me that's exactly 272 too many. The proposed legislation will make a quantifiable and real difference. It'll make it more difficult for drug makers and drug middle-men and drug dealers, for those people to get those drugs into the hands of Albertans.

Again, I know from personal experience during my time as chair of AADAC and associate minister of wellness that these folks are often obviously suffering from addictions of other kinds. They're dealing with unemployment and other unfortunate circumstances, and it comes from an extremely long list. This bill will make it more challenging for Albertans who are simply seeking a recreational high to achieve that increasingly deadly goal.

The measures this bill is proposing will make Alberta a national leader. Indeed, as has been said, that's the Alberta way. We will combat these types of drugs. That's what it's going to take. We'll also make those people who are considering breaking the law and placing deadly cocktails of ingredients into the palms of Albertans think much more seriously about what they're doing and, hopefully, change their minds.

The hon. member has used the penalties from within the existing Pharmacy and Drug Act as a guideline for establishing penalties that match the seriousness of the crime of making fentanyl into something that can be ingested readily and easily. This is critical because some of the main driving factors behind systemic drug abuse are visual stimulation and ease with which a high can be achieved. Now fentanyl pills are breaking these particular barriers with ferocity.

Again, Mr. Speaker, sometimes I wish I didn't know as much as I've learned about this, but during my time with the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission and in my time in wellness, sadly, I heard so many stories, so many horror stories, that I've actually lost count hearing of untimely deaths of children and parents and, yes, even seniors. I will never forget these people. It's with them in mind that I stand here today to speak to this bill.

Now, today as the Progressive Conservative advocate for indigenous relations I want to discuss the positive effect this legislation will have on our First Nations across Alberta. Now, earlier this year the province more than doubled its purchase of the life-saving naloxone kits and has made them freely available in more than 300 pharmacies since February 17. We asked for this move, and we applaud it. However, only four of these kits are known to be located on reserves. The chances of an indigenous youth being killed by fentanyl are significantly higher because they simply don't have the proximity to life-saving support systems if something goes terribly wrong.

We know this is a huge issue. Just as one example, the Blood Tribe declared a state of emergency over a year ago after officials within the community noticed a significant spike in the use of fentanyl and the subsequent deaths that were mounting. Health Canada has been working with the Blood Tribe as well as 17 of the 45 First Nations to develop a plan to combat fentanyl and educate our youth about the dangers that this drug possesses. Additionally, we know that the province is working hard to open a Suboxone clinic in Cardston in response to the crisis. Doctors, nurses, and addiction counsellors would be located under one roof and provide many of the services needed to help fight the battle against fentanyl.

However, my friends, we can and we must do more. We can do our best to cut off the supply of street-grade fentanyl and other dangerous drugs like W-18, which is marketed as counterfeit OxyContin or counterfeit heroin, that ends up in the hands of indigenous youth and other vulnerable people clear across the province. Regulating pill presses, as proposed in this bill, will mean that there will be decreased opportunities for local illegal drug makers to get their hands on the smaller, cheaper pill presses. It will also mean that the larger scale illegal drug manufacturers in Alberta will not be able to illegally acquire the industrial tablet pressers that are able to compound, as we've heard, over 10,000 pills an hour. This will reduce drugs on our streets. It will save lives.

Hon. members, the magnitude of the crisis on some First Nations is best put according to Tyler White, head of health services for Siksika Nation. "A failure to deal with the prescription opioid crisis of the past two decades has resulted in our present situation where, in some demographics, opioids are more pervasive than marijuana and alcohol." More pervasive than marijuana and alcohol. Hon. members, fentanyl and other pills are more widely used than alcohol in many circumstances, and if that's not disturbing to you, I don't know what is. This is a challenge. This is the challenge that we're dealing with, that we're up against right now and can do something about, so I encourage all members of this House to support Bill 205 to help end fentanyl and opioid abuse in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, before I conclude my remarks, I have to say that I am aghast that one of the previous speakers to this bill seems to be passing this incredible responsibility, may I say opportunity, on to the federal government, who may one day do something about this. Or that day may never come. Let me remind all members, with great respect, that they're talking about the same government who is right now in the very middle of decriminalizing marijuana.

Mr. Speaker, during my time in this House I've been honoured to sponsor many government bills and private bills and private members' bills, and I've been told that the reason that they successfully passed was that a whole lot of research was done before coming to this House. I'll tell you that I take it as a humble source of pride that I championed many causes that went way beyond politics. Friends, I commend the hon. Member for Calgary-West for doing exactly that in this circumstance, and I trust that every member of this House will see this for what it is. Please, in the name of the hundreds of Albertans who have been killed by this curse and all of those family and community members who mourn their deaths and in the name of all future possible victims, I implore you: drop the party colours, do the right thing, and pass this bill quickly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I welcome the opportunity to speak to Bill 205, the Pharmacy and Drug (Pharmaceutical Equipment Control) Amendment Act, 2016. In 2011 our province saw six fentanyl-related deaths. In 2012 that number rose to 29 fentanyl-related deaths, in 2013 to 66 deaths, in 2014 to 120, and in 2015 272 Albertans died a fentanyl-related death. Those numbers total 493 citizens who died a fentanyl-related death.

Naloxone, when given in time, could and is saving lives from drug overdoses. Supplies for 7,000 naloxone kits have been funded, 4,000 kits have been distributed or are available for distribution through Alberta Health Services, and 3,000 naloxone kits have been distributed or are available for distribution by seven harm reduction agencies in eight Alberta communities.

Mr. Speaker, since July 7, 2015, in my constituency of Red Deer-North Turning Point distributed 379 naloxone kits, which saved the lives of 98 individuals. Recently Alberta Health provided a further $300,000 grant to Alberta Health Services to purchase additional naloxone kits as well as further supporting public education and awareness. As of March 17, 2016, 613 locations across the province registered to distribute the Alberta Health Services supply of 4,000 naloxone kits, including 102 nonpharmacy sites, 50 of which accept walk-in clients, and 511 community pharmacies. As of March 17, 2016, seven harm reduction agencies across our province are distributing or have distributed 3,000 naloxone kits in eight communities.

Mr. Speaker, more than 1,200 Alberta Health Services staff and 200 external health professionals have now completed the Alberta Health Services take-home naloxone e-learning module, and 80 per cent of emergency medical technicians have completed the training. These are a few steps that our government has recently taken to address the fentanyl crisis in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, our government has taken the issue of fentanyl and W-18 abuse very seriously. Our government continues to be committed to harm reduction strategies, ensuring that Albertans have access to naloxone, and we know that individuals are using the kits and that the kits are saving lives. Our government is continuing outreach and education as well as working to address the root causes of drug addiction. As well, our government is working to ensure that individuals will have access to the supports they need to detox and recover when they are prepared to enter into them. I am happy to report that in my constituency of Red Deer-North 20 beds have been upgraded to provide medical detoxification services at Safe Harbour.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 205 is another step forward in the fight against devastating drugs such as fentanyl and W-18. This bill will make it illegal for anyone to own a pill press or machine, a tablet presser machine, a capsule-filling machine, or a pharmaceutical-grade mixer unless they are licensed to own one. This means that pharmacies or people specifically licensed to manufacture drugs and those specifically designated in the regulations will be able to own the machines.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all in the House today to support Bill 205, and I thank the member for bringing it forward. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak on Bill 205, the Pharmacy and Drug (Pharmaceutical Equipment Control) Amendment Act, 2016. I just want to say right off the bat that I do support Bill 205 and will be happily voting for it. I want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-West for bringing it forward.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West and I used to work in similar neighbourhoods, he, of course, as a police officer and me in my work with the homeless, but we would interact with many of the same clients and had a great relationship with the Calgary Police Service. I think his passion for this issue comes from the same area as my passion for this issue, and that is that he has seen the tremendous amount of damage that drugs can do to individuals and their families. Mr. Speaker, they take our best young minds and they set them on a path that they are all too often not lucky enough to get out of, the path of poverty, homelessness, and often death.

Over the past year our province has been thrust into a crisis. We have seen the rise of fentanyl and the even deadlier opiate W-18. We know that these drugs are incredibly toxic. Fentanyl is 100 times more toxic than oxycodone, and W-18 is 100 times more toxic than that. Now, for me, that is extremely alarming because it makes me think of the first time that a person in my work at the Mustard Seed died on one of my shifts. Before that, I had seen addicts and other homeless people that I had worked with pass away when I was not at work, but that was the first time where somebody died in our shelter and I was on shift.

It was an individual who had come to Calgary and who was not typical of what we would see in the street scene. This individual had been severely sexually abused in Vancouver and had somehow suppressed that for many, many years. All of a sudden he just snapped and got on a bus and ended up in Calgary, living on the streets. One night he decided that he wanted to numb and self-medicate what he was going through. Somebody within the shelter system gave him heroin, and he, unfortunately, overdosed and died on the floor because of heroin.

That really stuck with me because this was not an individual that even did drugs. He was not an individual that probably would even have become addicted to drugs. He just decided at that time that things were hurting so bad that he was going to make a decision to numb it, and somebody gave him that. That is alarming to me because heroin is bad enough; this makes heroin look like a joke, Mr. Speaker.

We often think of drug addicts and the people that are doing drugs, you know, as the people that we would see on the streets, that are already homeless and suffering, et cetera, but often it's our kids. When this stuff makes it into schools and a young person decides that they're going to experiment with a drug that could kill them in one dose, that's scary. That's really scary to me, and that's why it stands out for me.

Last year, as has been mentioned, Mr. Speaker, 270 Albertans lost their lives due to fentanyl. Now the medical community is bracing themselves for an even harder year. These drugs are chemically engineered to be powerful numbing agents that can be added into a wide variety of drugs, meaning that we are now fighting a battle on many fronts. Fentanyl and W-18 alone can be consumed through injection, by way of a patch, and most frequently by pills. Drugs like ecstasy are also commonly manufactured into pills, and our province already knows all too well the deadly potential of that narcotic. As a province we have to do better to protect our communities. More and more we are seeing these drugs manufactured as pills. We need to make it harder for criminals to produce these drugs, and at the same time we need to make it easier for law enforcement to enforce the law.

Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful that Bill 205 will be a step in the right direction of making it harder for drug dealers to put this poison into our communities and to give this poison to our kids. The reality is that organized criminals are not going to stop making fentanyl or W-18 just because we pass this legislation – we know that – but what Bill 205 will do is put one more tool into the hands of law enforcement to bring these criminals to justice. If a dealer gets busted, they will face an additional charge in their hearing. More importantly, this law will help officers prove probable cause, making it easier for them to get a search warrant and crack down on organized crime.

Mr. Speaker, every little bit helps in the fight against drugs. I'm glad to see that the hon. member has brought forward part of the Wildrose plan, that we outlined in December. Point 9 in the Wildrose 10-point fentanyl harm reduction plan was to encourage the enactment of "regulations regarding the import, export, sale, and possession of commercial pill presses." Bill 205 is a step in the right direction; let me make that perfectly clear.

Mr. Speaker, we still have a long way to go in combatting this crisis. The best place to start is by getting the rest of our 10-point harm reduction plan approved. This plan will help law enforcement bring down organized crime while at the same time providing much-needed help to those who are at risk of long-term damage from the misuse of fentanyl. This government has recently begun to show some willingness to listen to common-sense solutions on this issue. Our plan suggested increasing access to fentanyl's antidote, and the government has somewhat listened. Our plan called for the restoring of previous funding to the Alberta law enforcement response team, and the government has recently done that as well.

Mr. Speaker, I think that adopting three of the 10 ideas is a great start, but we still have a long way to go. Whether it be implementing a patch-for-patch system, increasing education about the dangers and risk of drug use, or improving collaboration between other provincial governments and the federal government, much still needs to be done to eliminate the threat of synthetic opiates.

Mr. Speaker, as I said, I will be supporting this bill at second reading, and I encourage other members of this House to do so as well. I also encourage this government to think about what else could be done to help those most in need.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to the bill brought forward by the Member for Calgary-West. I certainly want to commend him for his dedication to making sure that we continue to find ways to make our communities safe. I will expand on that in a few moments, but I do personally feel like I need to address some of the comments raised by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Certainly, assuming that somebody's remarks around federal responsibility imply that they are going to vote against a provincial bill is, I think, short sighted and wrong headed. I think that saying that there are party colours that are driving this decision and, again, assuming that there is a decision being made to oppose a bill that I think has some merit is, again, very short sighted and disrespectful to the members of this House.

I want to say that I agree with comments that I think almost everyone has made around this being one tool. One tool is better than no tools. Obviously, we've been working on this file for almost a year, since we took office, and I'm sure that the previous government was doing work on this file as well. Obviously, a fine may not be as strong a deterrent as a criminal charge, but it is better than no charge. Certainly, I personally have conveyed my feedback to the Member for Calgary-West, who is bringing this bill forward, around my support for finding something that we can do that's within our own controls. I know that his desire might be to go further – mine is, too – but obviously we have to look at what our own parameters are, take those tools within our own abilities but continue to work in partnership with the federal government.

Again, I know that there were comments made around decisions being made in an election platform, in a campaign around marijuana legalization. I have to say that the efforts that have been made by the federal government to date on moving forward with addressing the fentanyl crisis have been quite responsive. I think that there are continued efforts that we can make moving forward, but I certainly wouldn't say that their election campaign, which Canadians did vote for, which included the piece around the decriminalization and legalization of marijuana, should in any way lead anyone to believe that the federal government doesn't take the situation around fentanyl across Canada, not only in Alberta, very seriously. They're trying to work with us on finding solutions to help address this incredible crisis.

That being said about the comments being raised, I do want to touch base again on a few of the positive outcomes that have been achieved. It was also mentioned that there were only four kits on a reserve. I just want to clarify that there are four pharmacies on-reserve that are distributing kits, those being the Blood Tribe, Tsuu T'ina, Siksika, and Eden Valley, through the pharmacies and other distributors on-reserve, but there are actually 17 health centres staffed by the First Nations/Inuit health branch that have kits available and RNs on staff who are prescribing. Certainly, it's greater access than what was conveyed in a previous comment.

I want to provide that assurance as well as the fact that I know that the day that ARCHES, which is an organization out of Lethbridge, came on to the Blood Tribe and did a harm reduction workshop, that day two kits were used to save lives. That day. That is something we should all be very proud of. Yes, this isn't just about harm reduction. It's also about reducing access to illicit, illegal drugs on the street, and I want to commend the member for trying to come up with one strategy to help address pill presses.

I am thinking about some of the similarities between this and other areas where it would be nice if there was federal leadership. For example, our province and some other jurisdictions have taken leadership around reducing access to menthol cigarettes. That doesn't mean you can't drive over the border and buy menthol cigarettes. [interjection] Thank you very much. But the research shows that if youth, to a large extent, were smoking menthol, we had to take action on that. Just like the member is proposing here, if we have the ability to impose a fine provincially – and we do – we make the efforts to try to create some deterrence. Again, we'd like stronger deterrence at the federal level, but I'd rather have some power in our control of local law enforcement than none whatsoever. I'm sure that my colleagues agree, and to again assume otherwise I think would be short sighted.

Certainly, we will continue to work with our federal partners. We will continue to make efforts within our own ability to address pill presses, as this bill is proposing, to increase access to the antidote naloxone, which has saved lives significantly across this province and can continue to do so, as well as treatment for opioid dependency.

I also wanted to touch on another piece around opioid treatment, and it's about a conversation I had with a First Nations health leader around doing work – because we're talking about manufacturing illegal opioids. There's also opioid use that's prescribed by a medical professional that is being used illicitly in an unsafe way. I've talked to some First Nations leaders who have said that they looked at the rate of prescriptions in their communities, and they had to have some very serious conversations with their members and also with the physicians who were prescribing at increased rates and make serious adjustments to make sure that only those who needed opioids had access to them. Of course, while this is about the manufacturing of the illicit substance, there are also prescriptions out there that are manufactured very legally, but that doesn't make their use any safer.

Certainly, this is a lot about increasing awareness and trying to give at least one more tool to local law enforcement. I want to commend that as well as just touch base on some of the work that AHS has been doing in the area of fentanyl as well. The communications department has launched an awareness campaign that has had some impressions. I guess the visual impressions or pop-ups through social media and otherwise: over 17 million, and that's driven over 109,000 clicks to the government-sponsored website to help individuals, families, and communities increase awareness about ways that they can address this.

There have certainly been campaigns around posters. When we were at the launch of the mental health report, I remember walking into the washroom and there was information about if you witness somebody overdosing, these are the symptoms that you can look for and these are the next steps you can take to help save their life.

I want to honour the work that's happening in our ministries, honour the drive from the Member for Calgary-West to try to add yet one more tool to law enforcement's capable hands, and continue to say to our federal counterparts that we need to continue to collaborate, we need to move this further because, as has been mentioned by all parties represented in this House, the more than 200 lives that were lost last year were tragic and they are preventable. We need to work together as a community to find ways to reduce access, to provide the harm reduction strategies through the antidote naloxone, and to address transitioning off addictions in a safe and respectful way.

Certainly, today's discussion and, I'm sure, when we have opportunities in committee to consider further amendments that might be considered by this Assembly to try to give us, again, even more tools than we have today and to continue even passing this, should we do so – I'm assuming we probably will – will not be the end. This will not mean that we say no to the federal responsibilities and moving forward and providing greater safety across the country. This gives us a tool. Is it the right tool? Well, it's better than no tools. We want to go further, and we need collaboration with our federal counterparts to make sure that we take this most seriously and move forward in a way that will continue to save lives across our province. Everyone deserves to have a chance, and this is literally life or death, Mr. Speaker.

Thanks again to the Member for Calgary-West for bringing this bill forward for our consideration today.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise to offer my very strong support for Bill 205 and thank the Member for Calgary-West for his diligent work in bringing this forward. I think it's very important that we in this House not only seek out the advice of experts in the field but actually listen to that advice. The Member for Calgary-West has direct, relevant experience in the field, but today's law enforcement officers, as they deal with the rise of the crisis of fentanyl, see the devastating effects of this drug, of W-18, of others.

The fentanyl crisis, my friends, is not a new trend. It happens to be fentanyl this time. It happens to be W-18 coming down the pike. We've seen these things before. Anything that we can do in this House to slow the spread of that drug and the scourge that is fentanyl on the streets is worth doing. It's absolutely worth doing and doing enthusiastically. Restricting access to pill presses will help now, and it will help in future crises as well. It is just one more tool in the tool box.

I'm very pleased to hear the Minister of Health lend her support and the Associate Minister of Health also lend her support. Just to circle back again to this question of: is it a provincial or a federal responsibility? Frankly, we have no control over what our friends in the federal government do. We only have control over what we in this House do. If we are able to do anything at all to stop it or even just to slow the spread, we have to do that. We're never going to stop speeding cars in neighbourhoods, but you know what we do? We put down speed bumps. This is at the very least a speed bump to stop those drug dealers and criminals from hurting people. Anything that we can do to help is worth doing.

Now, I know we've talked a lot in this House about what fentanyl actually is. We've talked about its potency. When we think in terms of drugs that we may take in a legitimate sense, of ibuprofen or Aspirin, we think of those in doses of milligrams, right? What is a legitimate clinical dose of fentanyl, which by the way is a synthetic opioid that is used regularly to deal with breakthrough pain, extreme pain in cases of legitimate postsurgical or people who are dealing with cancer or any other number of very, very, very serious illnesses? Fentanyl is administered in doses of 25 to 100 micrograms. What is a microgram? A microgram is one-thousandth of a milligram. It is a tiny, tiny, tiny amount that is used in legitimate clinical practice. The drug dealers that are lacing other drugs with this stuff or even just selling it legitimately are selling it in far greater quantities.

How do you die when you take fentanyl? What does it do? It stops your breathing. It slowly stops your breathing. You suffocate from fentanyl. It is an absolutely horrific way to die. Anything we can do in this House to stop that from happening to any more Albertans – to think that this happens in this province almost on a daily basis is frightening, shocking in the extreme. This drug, like all drugs, knows no boundaries of gender, race, socioeconomic class. Anyone and everyone is at risk from this drug, so anything that we can do in this House to address the fentanyl crisis is absolutely worth doing.

I'll say again just a thanks to the member for the work that he has done not just in talking with law enforcement but in his work talking with members of the medical profession, the pharmaceutical college, other practitioners who may legitimately use pill presses in their practice. I think that was one of the questions that I had originally for my staff: well, is this going to, one, help? And I think that's a pretty clear yes. But are there other unintended consequences? Very clearly, you've done your work in asking others. It's very encouraging to know that other professions have said: sure, it may be another step in our process, but we're very happy to do that to ensure that only legitimate uses of pill presses, either manual or automatic, are used.

If it's one more tool for law enforcement to prevent the scourge of fentanyl on our streets, I'm absolutely enthusiastically supportive. So, of course, Mr. Speaker, I will be supporting this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of Bill 205, the Pharmacy and Drug (Pharmaceutical Equipment Control) Amendment Act, 2016. I actually take some umbrage at the comments from the Member for Calgary-Lougheed. There is no colour in this Chamber. There is only sense, common sense, and I think that this bill really is common sense.

Bill 205 supports a broader strategy to mitigate the impact of illicit drugs and stem opioid abuse. It's only one element of a very broad strategy, and we've heard a fair bit of discussion in this House already about it. The bill, I think, may be of some real use to our law enforcement officials. But let me be clear. Our government takes very seriously the issue of fentanyl abuse, and I again take some umbrage at the suggestion that we would try to put this aside just on a partisan basis. We know people across the province are facing life-and-death situations, and we're moving forward aggressively to curb the impact of fentanyl here in Alberta.

I want to speak about one other thing about this. It's been mentioned here already, and as a physician I know this very, very well. Alberta has the highest per capita consumption of opioids in the nation. That cuts across all socioeconomic strata, whether it's First Nations or immigrants or people that have lived all their lives here. We physicians – and I'm still a practising physician – may be part of the cause of this in that we haven't been as careful as we might have been to make sure, as the Minister of Health was alluding to, that the prescriptions were appropriate.

But there have been lots of efforts done. The triplicate drug plan is unique to Alberta, actually. It gives the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta some control on the overprescription of opioids by physicians. There has been this FPT working group on prescription drug abuse. We're trying to get better data, and there are monitoring programs beyond the triplicate drug program.

I'm fully supportive of what is being suggested, and I think it's a very important bill. I thank the Member for Calgary-West for putting it forward. But it is only one part of a very broad strategy that we need to be considering, and I think we need to be approaching our federal counterparts and suggesting that they take this issue seriously.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. It's a great pleasure for me to speak today on Bill 205. First of all, I'd like to thank my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-West for introducing this and for all of the work that he's done on this bill. As was correctly pointed out by the Member for Calgary-Elbow, he has truly done his homework, as is his professional tendency, to investigate an issue very thoroughly and to talk to the people necessarily involved.

I do want to take a minute because I think the one part of this debate that perhaps has caused a little bit of, let's just say, rancour within the House was arising from some comments made, I think, quite frankly, with the best of intentions by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. I have to confess that when I first heard what the member said, I was a little bit puzzled because it certainly appeared like there was not necessarily support for the bill, but I do think he does support the bill. The member – and I'm going to be very cautious here because he's cautioned me before with regard to paraphrasing his comments – did make reference to the importance of a federal strategy on this and the challenges of having a restriction in one jurisdiction but not having comparable restrictions in neighbouring jurisdictions.

Trust me, living in Lloydminster, I know all about the challenges that get involved with that, especially when we have the legal drinking age of 18 on one side of the border and 19 on the other side. You can imagine what side of the border the bars do better on. But I will tell you, sir, that – and, certainly, I actually think that the ban on flavoured tobacco and extending that ban to menthol is a very good example of this – the passing of provincial legislation in one jurisdiction often spurs neighbouring jurisdictions to do the same. So from that standpoint I do think it is a very positive thing. I don't think it should ever be something that makes us less apt to go ahead with the passing of specific pieces of legislation that apply only within our own borders.

As far as that goes, you know, I would hope that he would probably agree with that principle. So some of the umbrage that has been taken on either side of the House, either by the Minister of Health or my colleague or the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud – I think we can agree that the member's intentions were positive. I do agree with him that we do need to lobby the federal government to bring the full weight of federal jurisdiction and all of the tools that the federal government can bring to bear on this issue, that they should do that as well, including criminal charges if necessary. Now, that's not within the purview of this bill, as was clearly found by the investigation in doing the preparation for this by my colleague, so I'm glad that that's what he has done.

Along with my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud and, no doubt, my colleague the Member for Calgary-Mountain View I stand in this House as probably one of three individuals that actually has the right to prescribe and use fentanyl legally. We also have members of the nursing profession here that, no doubt, have also used fentanyl as a drug, and they will know that fentanyl is an extremely potent, extremely useful, and extremely helpful drug in the right circumstances.

I'm glad that the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud mentioned the use of triplicate prescription forms because that's something that we in the veterinary profession also use in order to try to reduce, shall we say, the iatrogenic abuse of opiates in this province. It's something that was recognized by the College of Physicians & Surgeons. They approached the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, recognizing that veterinarians also prescribe opiates.

In fact, because of the relatively large size of many of our patients we use opiates that are particularly concentrated. Fentanyl, as has been pointed out, is some 100 times more potent than morphine, but in fact veterinarians, especially those working in wildlife and zoological practice, use compounds that are even more potent than fentanyl. The compound etorphine, better known as M99, is used by zoological veterinarians, for example, and it is 10,000 times more potent than morphine. In fact, one drop is enough to kill a human being. Because of that it has to be handled with extreme care. When we were taught how to use this product in veterinary college, we were always taught to draw the antidote naltrexone first into the syringe and to have it prepared in case you accidentally needle-pricked yourself with M99. And when you consider that these products are used, for example, in wildlife medicine in places like Africa for darting individuals like rhinoceros and hippopotamus, you get the idea of just how potent these products can be.

One of the statements that's been made during the course of debate on this is how this cuts across all socioeconomic strata in this province.

The other thing I also want to talk a little bit about, to the importance of doing something about fentanyl in our province, is that it cuts across all regions. It is a mistake to assume that the problem with fentanyl is a problem that is restricted to Alberta's urban areas. In point of fact, fentanyl knows no boundaries. Fentanyl does not respect any division between rural and urban, and in fact rural Alberta has seen many, many cases of fentanyl abuse; tragically, fentanyl deaths; and, sadly, also fentanyl production and trafficking. In the 2014-15 ASIRT annual report there were reports of fentanyl and the use of fentanyl in Drayton Valley, in Hinton, in Wembley near Grande Prairie, in Taber, Cold Lake, Olds, and Brooks. So you can see that this is not necessarily something that is confined to our large urban centres. In that regard the hon. member's bill is something that will affect Albertans across the province, whether they live in large urban centres or in smaller rural communities.

I know from my own conversations with emergency personnel in the Lloydminster hospital that they estimate that typically they will see one fentanyl overdose case daily. Now, fortunately, they have had very few fatalities. They've been very successful in terms of using naloxone as the antidote. But the Member for Calgary-Elbow was quite correct: an overdose of opiates causes death by respiratory arrest. It is respiratory depression initially and then respiratory arrest. It is a horrific thing to see. You know, the one thing that we do fortunately have going for us is that naloxone is an extremely potent and effective antidote, but it also is important that it be used correctly. I do applaud the government in its efforts to make naloxone more available.

The problem with fentanyl and what is apt or likely to become fentanyl's successor, W-18, is all related to, again, as the Member for Calgary-Elbow said: if it's not one drug, it's the next drug, and if it's not that drug, it's the next drug after that. It's because there's a shift, and there's always – we have to recognize that the illegal element within our society, the bad guys, as my colleague often calls them, is always looking for a new way to exploit the vulnerable within our society. The beauty of this bill is that whether it's OxyContin, as it was until 2012, or fentanyl, as it is now, or W-18 or whatever the next opiate is that is on the market, banning pill presses and making the possession of pill presses by those individuals who are not supposed to be in possession of them an expensive undertaking will at least be a tool, as has been said before, that can be used by our law enforcement officials across the board.

I'm very pleased to see the support for this. I would also like to say and I'd be remiss in not saying that I appreciate members of all parties agreeing to unanimous consent to move ahead with this piece of legislation this afternoon. I can think of very few issues that we're dealing with that are more pressing than the current situation that we're dealing with in Alberta with fentanyl. Just because of the timelines that are required for the passage of private members' bills and the fact that, even though it may not feel like it, we don't have a lot more Mondays to debate private members' business and we have to get through second reading, Committee of the Whole, and third reading, we'd really, really like to see that happen before we reach the end of this spring session. I do thank all members on all sides of the House for providing that unanimous consent.

Bill 205 is an effort on behalf of my colleague the Member for Calgary-West to do something very positive for Albertans. We all have slightly different takes on how it goes, and I bring again my own experience as a veterinarian, having actually used fentanyl on a lot of patients. As the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud correctly pointed out, it is a very effective painkiller.

I urge members to join me in supporting Bill 205.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to join the debate on Bill 205, recognizing the tremendous damage that this drug has done already in our culture. It doesn't look like there's any containment happening soon. It's a legal drug. That's part of the challenge, of course. It's not only available; it's easily manufactured with ingredients that are available online.

When we talk about preventing use, of course, we talk about at least two levels. One would be education and prevention, and that is ongoing. I mean, that is part of the everyday challenge of parents, of communities, of schools, of people who care about the well-being of young people and others. It's also about harm reduction and intervening in the lives of people that are already in trouble with drugs and addictions and mental illness. It's also about restricting access: restricting sales, restricting who can get access to it, restricting or attempting to restrict, in this case, production. We know that there are alternatives that we can be invoking, and this is one of them. This is one means of trying to reduce the local access to illegal sources.

It's perhaps informative to know that there are six other formulations of this besides pills. You can spray it. You can snort it. You can inject it in your veins. You can put a patch on your skin. You can actually have it in lozenge form as a lollipop, sugar-coated, and you can inhale it in a spray format. Unfortunately, there are already a number of different options for using for those who want to use it, but pills are certainly one of the most common vehicles and one that we could add value to restricting.

I'm pleased with the Member for Calgary-West's initiative here and, certainly, his consultation and the support from both pharmacists and physicians around it and the police service, who know so much about trying to restrict access to it. Obviously, it will be a limited impact that one can have in one province, on one formulation out of seven formulations that one could, if one was really keen to get the stuff, give to oneself, but it's a step. It's a step in the right direction, and it sends a message that we will use any means that are feasible, practical, affordable. I don't think this is going to add significantly to the budget for either the police service or the court system. It is actually, in the end, going to save costs, of course, and lives, so I, certainly, for one would see benefit from this and would be supporting this.

Those are my comments, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this bill, and I thank the member opposite from Calgary-West for his sponsorship of this bill. As the members in the House may or may not know, my previous career of 30-plus years was with the Correctional Service of Canada. I have over and over again worked with offenders dealing with addictions, so my perspective is a little bit different from the perspective that's been shared this afternoon. Their lives are well on the way to destruction. That destruction is not confined to just themselves but includes their immediate families, their friends, neighbours, and all of us in our communities because we all pay the price.

I also know how difficult the struggle is for them to scratch their way out from under their life's destruction through addictions. I believe that no one wanted to be an addict. I have seen addicts working so hard, fighting and fighting that addiction, and then somebody puts something else in front of them, and they're right back to where they were before. It is so sad that it happens. When presses are used and pills are being made and so easily accessible, it certainly makes it harder for somebody who's already addicted to stay away from those drugs. A drug like fentanyl is a drug that will drag them back into addiction and probably kill them. Their ability to say no is much more difficult than someone who is not addicted. But theirs is a life still worth saving.

Perhaps your daughter, son, or grandchild is out with friends, and someone slips something into a lemonade – it doesn't have to be a beer or a drink – and your child or your grandchild could be right back into that position. To the hon. member across who mentioned that he felt he was safe because his daughter is 10: no, you're not. You have to keep an eye on your children, and that's another part of this whole puzzle to stop addictions.

We must take steps to stop pills being made and addictions being spread among our youth and among other people in our society. This is a step, a very good step, but certainly, as others have said, we need a much greater strategy if we're going to stop addictions in this country, if we're going to stop those Albertans who die because they happen to get one of those pills, whether they do it knowingly or not. If they're doing it knowingly, obviously there's another step that needs to be taken. But I stand here, and I absolutely support this bill because it is our opportunity to do our part to stop it. We've got lots more to do, but this is a good step.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to take this opportunity to speak to Bill 205. As many members in this House are in very similar circumstances to mine – you know, any time we talk about drug use or access to drugs, especially chemical drugs, I worry about my children receiving or getting access to these drugs. As the Member for Lethbridge-East echoed, it doesn't really matter what age they're at. You know, when I was in elementary school, I knew individuals who had access to drugs before they even got to junior high. It's a reality that we face, and it's a reality, unfortunately, that we're going to continue to face. We need to make sure that we provide as many tools as we can to really try to fight these issues.

We need to make sure that we work collaboratively, and I'm sure I'll echo that a few times when I speak. It doesn't solely lie with the provincial government. All three levels of government and the indigenous people of Alberta need to work collaboratively to really try to fight this because it's going to be a battle that we will continue to fight. When we move past this legislation, there will likely be another chemical drug that will hit the market, and we'll have to work together to fight that. It's a reality that we're always going to face as legislators. It's really sad to hear that 272 people passed away last year because of an overdose of fentanyl.

Ultimately, you know, it reminds me of a time when I was working in the restaurant industry. Being in the service industry, you deal with a lot of people who sometimes are going into their first job or are very young or sometimes may have been marginalized. It was not uncommon for me to hire someone who a year ago was homeless. The challenge is that you deal with people who've had substance abuse, who have fallen off the wagon multiple times, and sometimes they fall off the wagon again. You see them one day, and sometimes you never see them again. You hope that they're okay, but in some cases they're not.

I remember an instance once during my restaurant time. It was a Sunday. Usually on Saturdays people are out partying and having a good time, and kids are being kids. One time one of my members went a little bit too far. I was talking to one of my colleagues. He called me when I was at home, and he told me that he had had an overdose in the prep hall. They had to perform first aid, and they had to call paramedics. Very fortunately, he was all right. He was very fortunate that he was at work that day and he wasn't at home because I don't know what would have happened to him. Very fortunately, the place that I worked at had a lot of supports, so we could provide intervention and help this individual with some rehab therapy. From what I've heard, he's doing well now, but it was a very scary time for not only myself but for my colleagues as well.

I think it's important that we look for all the tools and we ensure that we advocate for all Albertans to make sure that we're doing the right things here. Our government has done a lot of good steps to move forward. Recently we put an additional $2.6 million into the funding for ALERT, which is going to help combat a lot of the organized crime that we see from this. We've opened up 31 new treatment beds, including 16 in Medicine Hat, and there are additional beds in Hull Services, which is near my constituency as well.

Today I actually had an opportunity to attend the 50th anniversary of FCSS in Calgary. They were doing their annual report, and it was really exciting because for the first time in 10 years they're receiving additional funding. They handle a lot of preventative issues. The number one thing that they think about is prevention. When we move forward with this, we also have to look at how we can prevent people from utilizing this awful drug and other drugs as well. Our government has already committed $300,000 for fentanyl prevention methods as well, so that's one of the steps along with other organizations like the FCSS programs that we have throughout Alberta.

You know, it's funny. Talking about prevention has been around for 50 years. Fifty years ago Ernest Manning was in this Legislature, and he was talking about prevention. I think it's important that we continue to have these comments and talk about preventative measures, which I've heard from many members around the floor here as well.

As I've said many times, I see this bill as one of the many steps that we as legislative members are going to take to really work towards keeping these drugs out of the hands of vulnerable and young and even well-educated Albertans. That's why I'm going to stand in support of this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 205. In fact, I wish that the need to speak to this bill didn't exist as greatly as it does, but unfortunately that is where we're at. I would just like to take a moment to thank the House. It's not every day that we have the opportunity to work collaboratively and find an issue of pressing importance that we all can have some agreement on. On behalf of myself and my colleagues I just wanted to say thank you so much to the House for providing unanimous consent to hear second reading today as it is of pressing importance.

Mr. Speaker, this is, unfortunately, a crisis that is affecting every corner of the province. Oftentimes there is this belief that rural Alberta isn't affected by some of the negative impacts of drugs and crime that affect a lot of the larger cities, but in this case inside the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills we have lost a number of young people. I don't know the exact number, but I know personally at least five young people who have lost their lives to this horrible, horrible drug. The town of Irricana and the village of Beiseker are just two of the places where people have suffered a great loss. It has such a profound impact on a small community when virtually every person in town knows the individual who has overdosed and died. Some of the challenges and the connotations that come with that event and some of the challenges that their family will face because of it – not all of those kids were bad kids. In fact, all of those kids were good kids who made a few bad decisions. Unfortunately, they made a decision that they can never take back.

I think it's our duty, our responsibility to do the things that we can do as legislators to help prevent these horrific, horrific acts. While, Mr. Speaker, I don't believe for a moment that Bill 205 would have likely stopped the deaths of those individuals, it is certainly one tool that we can provide that might just curb the ability for one young person to have access to this horrific drug. If, in fact, we are successful in that, just one, the time we've spent here in this Legislature discussing this important piece of legislation will be more than worth the time because the lives of those affected and the lives of those who are addicted matter. They matter to me, they matter to this side of the House, and I know that they matter to the other side of the House.

We have this duty to legislate where we can. We all have a duty to educate where we are able. I am thankful for the government's efforts in this area. I'm thankful that they have taken some of the recommendations that this side of the House has made and put politics aside to put the needs of the people first. That's why we're working on this issue together. Now, we have a long way to go. We have a giant hill to climb. As we've heard from the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, there are, unfortunately, many ways to access this horrific drug, but the thing we can do to limit the most widespread use is definitely a step in the right direction. So, Mr. Speaker, it's with pride that I stand today to be part of one step in a solution, the step that will allow our law enforcement professionals one more arrow in their quiver, one more tool in their tool belt to do the important work that they do.

It's my hope that there will be many individuals that won't have access to fentanyl because of this legislation. As the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster mentioned, there is a great opportunity to reduce access in the future to drugs that come in pill form. I appreciate some of the checks and balances in this piece of legislation with respect to pharmacies and other individuals who may need to have access to a pill press. I'm pleased that we've worked collaboratively and the hon. Member for Calgary-West has worked collaboratively with physicians, first responders, and pharmacists to try to do what we can to ensure that this crisis is managed to the best of our ability.

I thank the member for bringing the bill forward, and I thank the members of the Assembly for debating it today. I look forward to an expedited process that can see this piece of legislation pass prior to the rising of the House this spring.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would wish to speak to Bill 205? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the chance to rise and add my voice to the discussion on Bill 205. I think there is certainly a desire for everyone in this House to move this forward. I'll keep my comments brief. We do have a crisis on our hands. We have an uncontrolled product, and if I can build on the comments from the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, I think that as long as these products are uncontrolled and within the borders of Alberta, all Albertans are at risk. We need to be able to take action on that.

I certainly commend the Member for Calgary-West for bringing this bill forward and bringing this bill forward in the best way that he could. I don't think there's any expectation of anyone with regard to whether the federal government should have moved first on this. I think they should have moved first on this, but they didn't, so it's up to us right here right now to move on it. I think this bill will at least get us started, and it's my hope that maybe this will serve as the template that other jurisdictions can duplicate and adopt so that we get a little bit more control of this. I mean, it's like they said. This stuff is nasty, it's killing people, and we need to do what we can to stop it.

Certainly, I want to see this moved quickly into Committee of the Whole, where I would entertain some amendments to maybe see some more teeth brought to this. If I may use your words, the bad guys are in this business to make money, and they seem to be making a lot of it. You know what? Maybe we should consider taking them out of business by giving this a few more teeth to work with.

I would certainly urge all of my colleagues right across the House to support this. Let's make sure that we move as quickly as possible to ensure that no other Albertans lose their lives.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:30

The Speaker: Any other members on Bill 205?

I would ask the hon. Member for Calgary-West: do you wish to close debate?

Mr. Ellis: Yes. Thank you. You know, as with many things since the beginning of my political career, I am humbled. I think this is another day in which I am truly humbled. This is a bill, honestly, with the pure intent to save lives. We as Albertans were faced with a crisis, we had to come up with a solution, we consulted with stakeholders, and here we are working together, working collaboratively to come up with a solution. Certainly, I welcome anything, as the member opposite has stated, that could create even further teeth, but I'm happy to know that there is support for the bill. As I think some of the other members have mentioned, if we can save even one life, then we will have done our job.

As I've stated before, Mr. Speaker, this is not the be-all and end-all; this is purely a tool. I've stated that we have educational opportunities for the people in our society to help them. We have preventative measures to help them. The government is doing things regarding naloxone, and they need to be applauded for that. But it is truly that collaborative effort that will allow us to go forward in the best interest of those who have addictions, those who are victims to ensure that we are truly putting our stamp on the province as the 29th Legislature of Alberta in saying that we've identified a crisis, we've had enough, and we will do something effectively to make a change.

Thank you very much, ladies and gentlemen. I look forward to further debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 205 read a second time]

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I think that if you seek it, you will find it, unanimous consent to go to Motion 505 given that there are estimates this evening and the opportunity, then, for us to rise at approximately 5:30 and prepare for estimates if we were to call the clock now 5 o'clock and begin Motions Other than Government Motions.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Minimum Wage Increases

505. Mr. Taylor moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to postpone further implementation of its planned $15 per hour minimum wage target until a comprehensive study on the effects that these increases would have on employment rates and on the prices of goods and services has been completed by the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to table this motion today. The NDP government needs to slow down on its minimum wage hikes and ensure it fully understands the impact of this policy before it makes another poor decision based on ideology rather than sound fiscal planning. In these difficult economic times the stakes are too high to rush a policy that has only been shown to have negative effects on low-income earners. Ensuring that any action with respect to the minimum wage is based on clear evidence is one of the most important things we can do for workers here in Alberta. Albertans are already worried and anxious in this economy, and they deserve to know if this policy would help create jobs or if it would kill jobs. We as legislators need to ensure that we are acting in the best interests of all Albertans. We can do that by listening to the evidence and to our job creators, who would be covering the cost of a higher wage.

You know, I've had the pleasure of speaking to business owners across my riding over the last year, and this issue is often the first concern they come up with. It seems to me that one of four things are likely to happen when wages are increased from $10.20 an hour to $15 per hour in three short years: one, employers paying minimum wage or close to it will have to lay off workers or avoid new hires in order to constrain costs so they can keep their prices down and stay competitive; two, businesses will do their best to automate services in an effort to keep their competitive edge through low prices which will kill jobs; three, prices for goods and services will go up across the board as wages, minimum and otherwise, face upwards pressure; finally, four, businesses that don't have a wide enough profit margin to cover the increased costs will sadly have to close their doors.

Mr. Speaker, the businesses in my riding are not alone in fearing this minimum wage increase. Across the province businesses are already struggling, and according to data from industry Canada personal businesses and business insolvencies have increased by over 30 per cent in Alberta between 2014 and 2015. Even without the minimum wage hikes, the Calgary Chamber of commerce pointed out that in June 2015 Alberta had the second-highest take-home minimum wage in Canada at $10.20 an hour. A minimum wage earner actually took home nine of those dollars. That's an after-tax minimum wage second only to Ontario's. This massive 47 per cent increase to the minimum wage would kill anywhere between 50,000 to over 180,000 jobs in Alberta through direct cuts or jobs that will never be offered to workers because the minimum wage is too high. That's according to an analysis by the Canadian Federation of Independent Businesses.

Wildrose has heard from businesses across the province that want to be consulted. The NDP needs to listen to our province's job creators, who have told us that they're hurting and have to cut jobs or close doors in the event of a $15 minimum wage. The NDP government also needs to listen to the facts about who a higher minimum wage would actually help. The truth is that the government's own minimum wage profile shows us that the largest percentage of minimum wage earners are between the ages of 15 and 19, and research compiled by the CFIB shows that most minimum wage earners are not only young but live with family members who are not part of a low-income household. Because so many minimum wage earners are young people, the CFIB predicted that a $15 minimum wage would trigger between a 14 and a 28 per cent decrease in youth employment. Those are their words, not mine.

Even more troubling are studies like those from Labour Economics, a peer-reviewed journal that researched teen employment, poverty, and the minimum wage in Canada. The study showed that "a higher minimum wage may paradoxically result in a significant negative shock to household income among low-income families." When the Journal of Labor Research studied the impact of the minimum wage, it found that "job losses are disproportionately concentrated on the poor," and also that "political rhetoric notwithstanding, minimum wages are poorly targeted as an anti-poverty device."

It's independent evidence like this that makes me worry that this policy will hurt the very people the Premier claims to want to help. That's even before we look at the unintended consequences for low-income earners, like the rising cost of consumer goods and child care. Will low-income families have to pay even more for child care as child care providers implement a wage hike for their workers?

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are all looking for hope in these difficult times, real hope, not the false hope of a job-killing $15 minimum wage. The evidence is already there in other jurisdictions. Higher minimum wage hurts low-income families. If the NDP truly wants to help these families, it should work to grow the economy so that those earning the minimum wage can move on to better earning opportunities. The fact is that the government already received and ignored an internal assessment that significant job loss is a realistic consequence of a $15 minimum wage and that major research would be needed to grasp the full implications. All I ask is that the government allow this Assembly to take the time to conduct the research.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the members of this Assembly to vote in favour of this motion and to ensure that we set policy based on evidence, not blind ideology. Thank you. I'll sit down now and let the discussion happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really feel the need for the opportunity to rise and speak to Motion 505 as the chair of the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future and also a former job creator, a restaurant manager. The first comment I have to say when I heard the opening remarks and that I'm a bit concerned about is: there are child care workers making $11.25 an hour? That's a bit worrisome for me. To be fair, I want to make sure that if someone is looking after my children, they are receiving a fair, living wage.

Now, in the most recent estimates that we had with the Minister of Labour, she indicated that she was going to be spending some time consulting with the business community over the summer, discussing the next steps with the implementation and the phase-in of the minimum wage to $15 an hour. What I worry about with this motion and us moving forward with these steps is that we're just basically going to be duplicating work, and that's not fair to taxpayers. We have a lot of things under consideration with the committee right now. We've had to be fighting for time because of two budget estimates, and we also have to make sure that we review PIPA, which is coming up, as it's important legislation that does need to be reviewed considering the times that are occurring right now, not to mention that if any other bills were to be referred to this committee, it'd be important for us to make sure that we have the time allotted for that. I'm also concerned that if this was referred to the committee, we wouldn't have enough thorough time to look through this.

Further to the point is that when we're interacting with businesses, we need to make sure that we're providing them with certainty. If we're going to be sitting on this for two years, it's not fair to the business community, and a lot of small businesses in the service industry are businesses that are paying people minimum wage. They are responsible for heavy finances. They need to make sure that they're reporting their finances and they're projecting adequately. Therefore, we need to make sure that while we do consult with them and we work with them, we provide them with answers in a timely fashion because they are responsible to their owners, to their stakeholders, and to the corporations that they may fall under as well.

Now, I want to kind of go through some statistics and just talk about the overarching things. In the last little while we've talked about how one-quarter to a half of homeless are the working homeless. It depends on which region you go to, whether it's a large municipality or a smaller municipality. That is a bit troublesome because even in these times where the rental market is starting to open up and we're seeing decreases in rent, they're still having trouble finding a place to live, let alone feed their kids. We hear a lot about people who are earning minimum wage also being heavy recipients of the food bank as well. This is a time where the food banks are really pinched heavily and are heavily depended on by a lot of people who may be out of work because of the low price of oil.

Three hundred thousand people in Alberta earn minimum wage: 60 per cent of those are women, and 35 per cent of those are parents. That's 100,000 parents that are earning minimum wage right now.

You know, it's been discussed many times that the states of California and Seattle are implementing minimum wage. Now, I want to do a little bit of compare and contrast. They have a $15 minimum wage, but as we are aware, the Canadian dollar has dropped. Therefore, they actually have a higher minimum wage than Alberta does, and they seem to be doing fine. When I looked this up – granted, it was Friday, so the numbers may have changed but not heavily because I haven't heard anything on the news – $15 in Canadian dollars is $11.55 U.S. That means that the minimum wage we're looking at is $11.55 U.S. I must remind all hon. members that last May, May 2015, when we were elected on our mandate, $15 in Canadian dollars was $12.45 U.S. That means that it has dropped by a dollar U.S.

Now, as many of us talk about, the business communities have to deal with the implications of the U.S. dollar because of import goods, but so do the consumers. While things may get a bit more expensive for businesses, especially when we're looking at imports like fruits and vegetables, they are going way up for those who are earning minimum wage. We need to be cognizant of that. Looking at heavy delays in this could be creating huge barriers for families who are simply trying to make sure that their kids have a nutritious meal to eat.

With that being said, I must remind all members that sometimes we look at it in this overarching – that it's going to hurt one business. We're all in this together. Every business is going to be implementing this together. It's not like we're in this business of picking winners or losers. We want to make sure that Albertans are earning a fair, living wage, especially when we're facing Albertans who, because of the low price of oil, have to take a job in the service industry to make sure that they have food for their family and that they can pay their bills.

Mr. Speaker, for that reason and as our government continues to consult with businesses and will continue to look into this and study the implications that come as we phase in the minimum wage, I cannot support this motion.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak following the Member for Calgary-Shaw. I'm just checking some data here, which I will use in my points in this debate. I want to make a few essential points about minimum wage and, really, I would hope, all decisions that get made in this Chamber. One, good data makes for good decisions. Two, I think every single person in this Chamber wants to help Albertans. I don't think anybody here saw an election thinking: aha, I can finally put one over on people. I want to be very clear, as I make my points here, on what I believe, certainly speaking for myself and my mighty caucus, but I also think that most members on this side genuinely and truly want to help Albertans.

I've been very clear that I have a lot of questions about the $15 an hour minimum wage. Is it going to actually help more than it's going to hurt? To be clear, in case you hadn't guessed it already, I am absolutely and enthusiastically speaking in support of this motion. I think that we need to really take a moment – well, more than just a moment. We need to study and examine the impact of a $15 minimum wage in Alberta in this very challenging economic time.

Now, I believe the other side when they say that they want to help people. I know you do. I believe that's in your absolute heart of hearts. What I would love is for every single person in this province to have a living wage, to not have to live in poverty, to not have to be a working parent, to not have to scrape and go to the food bank, to not have to face unemployment or reduced work hours. That's what I want. I think that's what every single one of us wants. But if a $15 minimum wage puts small businesses out of business, if it results in people finding that they have fewer hours at $15 an hour than they did previously at $11.20 or another minimum wage, then have we actually solved a problem? Have we actually helped anyone? In fact, we may find that there are unintended consequences of this effort to help, where, in fact, the government has ended up hurting the people they tried to help. That, I think, is what the evidence is starting to show in the U.S.

I want to speak briefly to the points the Member for Calgary-Shaw made about the $15 minimum wage and how it compares to Canadian dollars. That's not the way economics works. With great respect, the Fight for $15, while a lovely slogan and very easy to type into a campaign brochure, is totally different in a Canadian context. What is the United States? The United States does not have public health care. The United States has very little in the way of a social safety net. The United States barely has public education. We have all of those things in this province and in this country. A $15 minimum wage in the U.S. is totally out of the context of what a Canadian social safety net would support. Now, what we have in this province, what we have in this country is not perfect. We certainly need to work on those things. But there is a real need to look deeper into what the impact of a $15 minimum wage would be.

There was mention earlier from an hon. member on the other side that the government is going to consult, and the Minister of Labour has talked about consulting business about the raise to $15 minimum wage. But the Premier has been very, very clear about doubling down: absolutely, we have made a platform commitment; a $15 minimum wage is on its way. What in the world is the minister consulting about, then, if, on one hand, you know you're going to $15 minimum wage and, on the other hand, you're consulting? On what? That's not a consultation. [interjections] So the phase-in, the timing? You're saying: the phase-in. You've also said, as I understand it – it's been very, very clear that this is coming in the term of this government, by 2018. That's coming. So does that mean that we stay low and then jump up a dollar and a half, two dollars at the end? I don't know. But you've said that it's $15. There's no wiggle room on that. What are we consulting about? That, frankly, is disingenuous.

Let's just talk about the minimum wage increases that we've had in this province over the last number of years, dating back to 2012. In 2012 minimum wage went up from $9.40 to $9.75; in 2013 it went up to $9.95; in 2014 to $10.20; and now it's at $11.20. So the cumulative impact of that – that's an 8.5 per cent increase up to $10.20, and then jumping from $10.20 to $11.20 is a 16 and two-thirds per cent increase. Those are substantial increases. That puts Alberta at the same rate as the next highest province, essentially. Ontario is at $11.25. We're now at $11.20. The Northwest Territories is at $12.50, if I'm not mistaken, but their cost of living is substantially higher. What I'm saying is that Alberta is not out of step with the rest of the country.

Let's look at other data. There's a very clear study in the province of Quebec that shows that once the minimum wage exceeds 42 per cent of the average weekly wage, job losses start. So minimum wage can be up to about that level. Now, the average weekly wage is in the $28, $29 range, and that would mean, the average weekly wage being at that rate, that 42 per cent of that puts it at about $11.50, $12, something like that. Based on that data, that evidence, that peer-reviewed study, it would show that we're about right, where we are now. Maybe we can deal with a little more.

Let's come back to this. This is not about being punitive. This is not about saying that people shouldn't earn a fair wage. Of course, they should. Of course, people should be able to do that. But if the end result of implementing a $15 minimum wage is hurting people so they lose their jobs or they earn less money because they get fewer hours, have we actually solved the problem, or have we gone about making something worse? As a government, wouldn't you want to know that? That's what this motion is about. That's what this is talking about. That's really important. I would sincerely hope the government would want to support that.

My final point. A minimum wage was never meant to be a living wage. Those are different things. Those are very different things. Where, my friends, is the overall poverty reduction strategy? What I want to know is: where is the poverty reduction strategy? Poverty reduction is about housing. Poverty reduction is about access to resources. Poverty reduction is about education. Poverty reduction is about early childhood learning. That's poverty reduction. That's what's really important. If we end up with the unintended consequence of putting people out of work, of disincanting small businesses or even large businesses to hire more people, that is going to make what is already a dire economic situation in this province even worse. I know that's not what you want to do. It's really easy to just say: "$15 dollars an hour: that's going to save the world. That's going to make things all better." No, it's not. There's a big risk that it makes it a lot worse. I want it to be better. I know you want it to be better. I do. I really have talked to many members on that side.

The Speaker: Hon. member, your comments through the chair. Thank you.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the reminder.

This is obviously something that we're all trying to tackle here, this challenging economy, but we need to take a step back on this particular issue. Now, I'm certainly not supportive of sending absolutely everything to committee because I think this House has a lot of work to do directly and not everything should be referred to committee. This is one of those cases where I think it really is important that this government take its time to get it right. This motion is an opportunity to do that, and I would really encourage the government to rethink and support this motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, yesterday was Mother's Day, and you're probably wondering: why is he talking about Mother's Day? Well, my mother, when we first came to Canada, used to work really hard. She was making the minimum wage that was offered at that time. I can't even remember what it was. She used to work at the Army & Navy. My mother was the kind of mother that'd go without to make sure that her children would have plenty to eat. I'm sure that there are lots of Albertans out there right now that would probably do the same thing for their children. So it was a pleasure for me to honour my mother yesterday on Mother's Day because she was the kind of woman that taught me that we need to fight as hard as we possibly can to make sure that life is fair for all Albertans.

Now, I respect the intention of this motion: to look into matters, to consult. But I would ask all the members in this House to go and consult with those mothers or those parents that are out there right now making minimum wage, trying to meet the budget. Now, I know that there are members who are saying, "Well, if you increase the minimum wage to $15, it's going to take away," but that's not what we're seeing in other jurisdictions in North America. We're seeing that it is possible to meet that $15 minimum wage.

To suggest that because here we have a higher social safety net, to me, is not a good argument at all. Yes, we're going to provide health care. Yes, we're going to make sure that people have access to education. That's what's going to help them get a better job in the long run. But in the meantime you have to make sure that you have a living wage so that you don't have families having to go to the food bank. That's a shame. That's an incredible shame, that we have families in this province that are making a minimum wage and still can't make sure to put enough food on the table, that they have to go to the food bank on top of that. No one who works a full-time job in Alberta should have to go to the food bank to feed themselves. You know, many of the roughly 300,000 Albertans who earn less than $15 per hour are forced to do just that, to go to the food bank, and this denies them the economic security that their employment should provide and the basic human dignity that many of us take for granted.

When was the last time that you earned minimum wage? I remember earning minimum wage. I also remember being unemployed and having to do everything I could possibly do in order to put food on the table for my family. Luckily, I'm in a privileged position right now, and we as privileged Albertans who sit in this House cannot forget those Albertans who are struggling to make ends meet at the end of the month.

We know that around 55 per cent of those 300,000 people are one of the heads of their household and that their families count on that income to make ends meet. We know that over 60 per cent of those 300,000 people are women like my mother, and we know that over 35 per cent of those 300,000 people have children. That means over a hundred thousand working parents are trying to raise children on an extremely fixed budget. Alberta can do better for Albertans, and we have to make sure that we stick to our plan.

Our government promised to make work fairer by improving the income of those who work for minimum wage, and work should pay enough so that people can take care of their families. Our government ran on the promise to raise Alberta's minimum wage to $15 per hour. We have not strayed from that target. However, we fully recognize the current economic realities, as we all do, in taking a gradual approach in order to allow for economic recovery and to carefully consider all input regarding the process of achieving that goal.

Now, our government has committed to consulting with all stakeholders to gain a wide range of perspectives as we continue to monitor business confidence and overall economic conditions. After consulting and after considering, after the Minister of Labour considers and consults, we'll be communicating more about the plan, about going forward and how we will be engaging with Albertans on the best way to reach a $15 per hour minimum wage.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I respect where the member is coming from. But I believe that we've waited far too long in order to make sure that work is fair here in Alberta and to make sure that people are earning a fair wage for the hours that they put in.

You know, yesterday being Mother's Day, again I want to honour my mother and all the hard-working mothers out there that do so much for their children. The parents: I'd say that the majority of them are mothers, single moms. Yes, there are also single dads, but the majority are and the tendency is that they're single moms. They work so hard. Some of them even work two, some of them even work three jobs. In my own constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie I've spoken to these people. You wonder why I'm so passionate about that. It's because I've actually looked in their eyes. And when they say to me, "Yeah; I don't earn enough," then something has to be done about that.

I'm proud that this government ran on a platform that included a $15 minimum wage and that they're still going to work hard to implement that. At the same time that we're going to implement it, we're still consulting Albertans that are providing jobs for other Albertans. I know that we can reach this target, but it's going to take co-operation. It's going to take a willingness on behalf of everybody to make sure that we make Alberta the best place to live for all Albertans, including those people who are on a minimum wage.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate the opportunity to speak on my colleague's Motion 505. You know, we've actually talked about this, and being the shadow minister of Labour, I have thought a lot about this issue. The concern that I have is that the idea of bringing this minimum wage to $15, as noble as it is in broad strokes – really, the evidence shows that it will hurt the people that they are trying to help.

Now, I have heard many times from the members opposite: show us the evidence. There's a plethora of evidence out there to show us that this idea of bringing it to $15 is not the silver bullet for poverty reduction. It just is not. Instead, what it is is a blunt instrument at best, and more importantly what we see is that people who are young are hurt most by this.

I think about the intentions of raising to a $15 minimum wage. I was thinking: you know, you go to a mechanic, and he does some work on your engine, but he forgets to put the oil in the engine, and then when you try to drive away, it seizes the engine. You know what? I'm sure he had the best of intentions, but you don't judge him on his intentions; you judge him on the outcome.

This is why when we make legislation, when we go down a certain path, we do an economic impact study. When we want to know what the outcome is going to be, we take a look at past precedents, or we take a look at other jurisdictions that have done the same thing. Then we find out what the outcome has been, not the intentions, because I do believe that the intentions are good. But if you take a look at the outcome, there has been no example where the outcome has been acceptable.

I've heard lots of numbers here about how many people are on minimum wage. It's interesting that when they use these numbers, they spin the numbers because in reality what they're doing is they're saying that the 300,000 people who earn minimum wage – that's actually if you take into consideration how many people are under $15. We're not at $15 right now. We're at $11.20, so the reality is: how many people are really single parents that need to have, as they like to call it, a living wage? About 579 people. There might be a better program than this blunt instrument to be able to help 570 people who really need it.

The other people who have dual incomes, the other people who are younger people that are living at home, that do not have to have this, that are using this as a training wage, these people do not need to have the increase in these wages. What they actually do need is to have training because no one wants to stay at a $15 minimum wage, Mr. Speaker. No one wants to stay at a $10 minimum wage. No one wants to stay at an $18 minimum wage.

Whatever you put it at, it's still going to be something that people say: I don't want to stay there. What these guys are doing is they're saying: let's make sure that people have a living wage there so they want to stay there. We don't want people to stay there. We want them to be able to rise up from that point and be able to have the dignity that they deserve, the dignity of being able to provide for their children and for their families.

Now, this is the sort of thing that these economic impact studies would study. These are the sorts of things that scientists would study. When they do these studies, they take the empirical evidence. They do study what happened in Seattle, they do study what happened in California because we have precedents now. Now that we have the precedents, we can say: "Have we actually lost jobs? Have there been any sectors, have there been any demographic groups that have actually lost their jobs?" What we find is that the evidence is that these groups, especially the young people aged 18 to 24, are adversely affected by a substantial increase in minimum wage.

I am concerned about the single mom with three young children, absolutely. We should be in this House concerned about the single mom with three young children. She's got a hard go to be able to make it work here. We have increases in costs that she has to deal with. These things are something that we should be compassionate about. These are things that we should really say: "You know what? How can we help?" But remember this: the difference between a tax and charity is that the tax is mandated; charity is freely given.

So when I hear the argument saying, "You know what? We should do more," guess what? In reality, when they came to this great country, people came here not for a guarantee. They came for an opportunity. They did not ask for a guarantee. In communist countries they got a guarantee. That is not what we offer in Canada. What we offer here is an opportunity. If you come here and you work hard, you study, you develop your skills, you have the ability to grow and prosper and provide for your family, whatever the sky offers. This is what we offer here in Alberta. This is what we offer here in Canada.

This is the reason why statistics show that Alberta had the fewest number per capita of minimum wage earners. Now, what did we do right here? Obviously, we must have done something right, better than other provinces. The one thing we did right is that we had a robust economy. We created a juggernaut of an economy – a juggernaut of an economy – that actually allowed us to be able to provide that dignity, provide that opportunity for our parents to be able to provide for their families, not just the needs. The needs are very important, obviously, but what about some of the wants? This is the thing that we can offer in a robust economy. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Mr. Hunter: Now, Mr. Speaker, I just want to establish once again, really, you know, the truism that the only guarantees in life are death and taxes. Every time I have heard in this House a member from the opposite side say, "Everyone deserves" – no. That's an entitled mentality, an absolutely entitled mentality that is causing us throughout . . . [interjections]

Mr. Cooper: Point of order, sir.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to rise briefly given the volume in the House from the other side. I'm rising on Standing Order 23(h), (i), (j), language to create disorder, et cetera, et cetera. While I can appreciate that the other side doesn't agree with the hon. member's position, I think we found that, generally speaking, outside of question period the decorum in the House is often much more respectful. From time to time in question period the volume in the House does get quite loud, but certainly during routine debate it's not the norm of this House. I would just respectfully comment that the behaviour from the other side is not behaviour that is likely to create order.

The Speaker: Any other comments with respect to the point of order?

I think the volume clearly is not of the same degree that I've heard in the past in question period. To the government side, I appreciate the fact that there is a certain norm that is more acceptable in this, that is to deal with a quieter tone of reaction. However, I would also note that the member needs to be cautious about the words that may have caused that reaction to take place. I think it goes both ways, but I would ask the government to please contain your volume of comments and be respectful.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments that you made. It is not my intention to inflame. It is not my intention.

Debate Continued

Mr. Hunter: This is actually a place where we can debate issues. This is actually a place where we have an open conversation to find out what is the best legislation for the people of Alberta. I actually want the members opposite to know that this weekend I was speaking with a group of legionnaires. I said to them: you know, the members opposite, the NDP, and I disagree most ardently most of the time, but that is one of the rights we have here. One of the opportunities that we have is to be able to have that argument. There are some countries where you can't have that argument. You go to jail if you disagree with the government. But it's great that we have an opportunity in this place to be able to have these kinds of debates.

Mr. Speaker, the argument or the discussion that we're having here today is about a motion that was brought forward that I felt in my heart was a good motion, was a prudent motion, was one that offered the government an opportunity to be able to prove whether or not their $15 minimum wage idea met the litmus test. If it does meet the litmus test, if an economic impact study is done and it shows empirical evidence that in reality this will help those people who we're trying to help and that they're trying to help, then by all means we'd support it. By all means we'd support it.

This is not about us versus them. It really is not. This is about us being concerned about the single mom with three young children. This is about making sure that we have a process or a program that specifically helps them.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak against Motion 505, and the reason why I do that is because of some small math. Twenty-one thousand, two hundred, and sixteen dollars: that is the total annual wage of a person that would be making $10.20 an hour working a full-time . . .

Mr. McIver: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I know we've only got – probably this is the last speaker. A member from our party may not get a chance to even address this item. I just thought that you should be aware of that, sir.

The Speaker: And I am aware of that, sir.

Mr. McIver: Thank you.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you. A person making $10.20 an hour would make $21,216 a year. Now, I know that we are a smart group of people and that that is a really low number if we're expecting people to be able to pay for the basic necessities of life. Really, when we're talking about the wage differential for liquor servers, that's even lower. It was $19,136. So what I am doing is that I'm rising to speak in support of a phased-in approach to $15 an hour. Of course, that is a promise that we made during the election last year. It's a commitment, accompanied with consultation with employees and employers, that would be phased in with a goal to reach $15 by 2018.

I rise because I want to talk about the people that we are really talking about. On average we are talking about a woman, and she is 20 years of age or older. She works full time. She has a high school education or greater, and her job is permanent, not seasonal, not temporary. She's the head of a household, and it is her only job. There are people that work more than one job to make ends meet, but is that what we want? Is that what we want, to have the head of household away from their children more than they should be?

And why is it important? You know, we need to ask ourselves in this House, in this position: do we want Albertans to be able to engage meaningfully in their communities? Do we want that person to be living paycheque to paycheque? Is that something that we really want to be ingraining in people, that they can't make plans for the future?

Living paycheque to paycheque does not allow you to do the simple things that we all take for granted. We do these things in this job all of the time, and we take them for granted. We have the opportunity to go to the movies. We have the opportunity to visit art galleries. We have the opportunity to drive to the mountains. People making now $11.20 an hour can't do that, you know, simple things for people's families. Purchasing a winter coat is a luxury that we take for granted.

You know, $15 an hour after working 40 hours a week for a year is only $31,200. We're not talking about people that can set aside money for retirement. We're not talking about people that travel outside of the city even. We're talking about people that are just making ends meet.

There are other ways to assist that the government is doing. We are, you know, being a part of investing in the STEP program, to assist students in gaining valuable work experience. The government is investing in the Alberta child benefit tax program, which will benefit 340,000 children. We've committed to investing stable funding in hospitals, in schools, in FCSS. But we all have a role in addressing inequality in Alberta. We have that role as business owners and, you know, as people that make those other decisions.

My dad owned his own painting business, and he started people at $15 an hour. It was a small business. It was a meagre business. It's not like we ever made a lot of money. He knew that if you had the ability to hire someone, if you had the privilege to hire someone, then you had the privilege to pay them and you had the privilege to pay them what they deserved. You know, it was always part of his business plan. He would draw up a contract that would include estimates of time and materials, and businesses do this all of the time on an ongoing basis.

They do have to plan, and costs do go up, and everyone here understands that. But it concerns me when I meet with stakeholder groups, and they tell me that you can't control food and you can't control transportation costs and you can't control fuel costs or energy costs but you can control labour costs. That gives me great, great concern because what that tells a person is that: I give you what I think you deserve, not what I think you need to survive in this world or to thrive in this world.

Working as a nursing attendant, after three years I was making $12.50 an hour. I couldn't stay at that job, taking care of people not unlike your parents and your grandparents, making $12.50 an hour. I went from that job to working somewhere as a supervisor because, thankfully, I did have other experience at that time. But I couldn't do things like own a car. I couldn't do things like take a trip with friends. You can't do things like buy Christmas presents for your family.

It's just, quite simply, not possible. To try and believe otherwise is to be disingenuous. We know what the simple math is, and we don't want to come down to simple numbers when we're talking about people, but those are the simple, at the end of the day, numbers that people are counting on us to think about when we think about how it is that they take care of themselves and take care of their families.

The Member for Battle River-Wainwright was talking about job mobility. Of course, you know, the idea that he is putting across is that you enter at minimum wage and then you use that as your starting point to move up the ladder. Well, when I was working in long-term care, that wasn't a ladder to ascend. That was my job. That was my career. My career was to be a nursing attendant, that after three years paid $12.50 an hour. That was the post that I chose. So the idea that that job is only worth $12.50 an hour is appalling to me, and I have to look around this room and expect that it's appalling to everyone else.

Only making minimum wage does not give you job mobility. It does not give you the ability to save for upgrading your education. It does not give you the ability to save for postsecondary. It does not give you the ability to own a car. You know, with public transportation, being privileged to live growing up in an urban centre, you can take the bus, and that is great. But when you live out in rural areas of Alberta, not having access to public transportation limits your mobility as to what you can do, where you can go, what careers you can fulfill. So that's a very basic need that lots of Albertans have that we take for granted all the time.

I want to tell you some of the things that happen when you make minimum wage, you know, just things that we need to keep in our minds when we think about these issues. When I grew up, neither of my parents could afford a winter coat. We're talking about Alberta winters. So when we're talking about single moms or single dads or even people that between the two of them can't afford a winter coat, it's something that – when I finally had the opportunity, making a little bit more than $15 an hour and being able to donate to the United Way, one of the things that you could pick was buying four winter coats for a family, and it gave me great, great honour to be able to provide that for a family. Being so privileged to be here and be able to think about those people that are not only in my constituency but in the rest of Alberta, that I can play my part in helping take care of those people, is incredibly rewarding to me. And I'm so proud to do it, to stand up and to stand up for them.

In closing I would just like to say . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've listened carefully to this. This is an important issue, and I believe that everybody wants to do what's right for Albertans, but the fact is that I've heard some interesting things here.

Listen, the fact is that the government has said that they would raise the minimum wage to $15. The Premier doubled down on it at the Leap Manifesto meeting, at the NDP meeting here a few weeks ago, and she made it very clear in that public pronouncement that she would do it on schedule. So when the Premier publicly says that she's going to do it without changing the schedule, and the government says that they're going to consult with business, it seems completely inconsistent when they've already made up their mind. And they've made it clear publicly very recently that they have made up their mind.

I've heard arguments about minimum wage in Canada versus the U.S. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that if we had the same tax rate as the U.S., that money, that hourly wage, would buy a lot more, which is an important point, too, which wasn't mentioned by the member.

Mr. Speaker, minimum wage is not the same as a living wage. I know that there are members on the other side that would like it to be, but their $15 doesn't get them there either. I tabled a report last session in the House, I believe, from the poverty coalition of Edmonton that says that the wage in Edmonton is north of $17 an hour, so, please, the government shouldn't pretend that this is in some way a living wage. It's not. This is the minimum wage. The minimum wage is the first rung on the economic ladder, the one from which people can reach up and get to the next rung.

You know what? We need to look after people working without a high income, but the answer is not to artificially raise their income to the fact where they don't get a job at all. What I don't want to see is those single mothers being told when they come to work after it gets to $15: "Sorry, I've got no more work for you. I can only hire 12 people instead of 15. You didn't make the cut." That's going to be way worse. The answer might be for the government to think about their income support programs. I agree with the hon. member who said that people working full-time shouldn't have to go to the food bank – I couldn't agree more – but the minimum wage isn't going to get it done. A proper income support program for people working that makes sure that their basic needs can be met, now there's a good idea. Artificially raising the minimum wage is a bad idea.

In fact, there have been many studies. The Labour minister in estimates said the other day that there are as many studies that say that this is a bad idea as say that it's a good one. Check Hansard. Any of the government members that want the page, I'll send it to you. I'll be happy to.

Mr. Speaker, a report out of San Francisco, what's considered one of the most major ones, says that every 10 per cent increase in minimum wage takes away 1 to 3 per cent of the total jobs paying minimum wage. Simple. If you want to help people, don't take away their jobs. It's the worst thing you can do. Listen. I know the government members want to help people. I recognize that. They just need to recognize the truth of how the world works.

I've heard in the past government members say: well, people will pay the least they can, and they'll make more money if the minimum wage goes to $15. Well, Mr. Speaker, the same people have said: people that run businesses are greedy; they don't want to pay more. Well, the things don't jibe. If businesspeople were truly greedy and paying more money made them more money, well, the greed would drive them to pay more money, and they would make more money, but the fact is that it doesn't always work like that. I'm sure they can find one or two examples where it has worked like that, but I've talked to lots of people from small businesses – I'm sure government members have, too – that said: "I can only afford to hire fewer people if you make the minimum wage $15," or "I might not be in business and all of the jobs go away," or "I need to automate and have fewer people."

I know that there was a debate a while ago about McDonald's and their machines. I know they have fewer people because they have those machines there, but they did it so they could stay in business. Thankfully, they changed other things in their business model, where they actually hired more than they did need. They're now taking food to the tables. They're providing additional service. They actually are hiring more people than they used to but not because of the minimum wage, Mr. Speaker, and not because of the machines. The machines made them profitable enough to stay in business, to hire other people, but not every business is set up so that it will work like that.

Mr. Speaker, the research does not support the government's proposition that this will cause more jobs and a better style of life for people with low income. The Labour minister herself said that there's as much research one way as there is another. I don't want to see those single mothers with two or three kids be told after the minimum wage goes to $15: sorry; I no longer have room for you because I have to employ fewer people than I used to employ. That would be terrible. Nobody in this House wants to see that – the government members don't want to see it; the opposition members don't want to see it – so what we're really talking about is the best way to accomplish that not happening.

Mr. Speaker, there is a lot to talk about. There are a lot of studies. Some say that it's a good idea; some say that it's a bad idea. The hon. member that moved this says: let's talk about it a little bit more in committee before the government does something they don't want to do, and that's to hurt people of low income. The government doesn't want to do that – I don't believe that for a second – but that's where they're going. If it was ever true that the road to hell is paved with good intentions, it's with the government's promise to raise the minimum wage in a short period in the order of up to $15, by 20 or 30 per cent from where it started, and, by the San Francisco study, taking away 3 to 10 per cent of all the minimum wage jobs that are there now. I don't want to see it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 8(3), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright to close debate on Motion 505.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, Wildrose has been hearing from Albertans about their concerns about the rapidly deteriorating economy. Many say that their concerns are made worse by the haste with which this government is pushing legislation through without proper consultation, without regard for current research, and without due consideration of the cumulative impact of risky economic experiments. Albertans heard last year that the government's own advisers warned that significant job loss is a realistic possibility if the minimum wage is set at $15 per hour.

With many families now struggling to make ends meet and many young people looking for work, the stakes are high. The NDP has an opportunity to avoid making yet another policy mistake by taking the time to conduct a full study of the impact of the $15 minimum wage before implementing it. So I'm tabling this motion with the hope that the NDP government will slow down, listen to Albertans, listen to its own advisers, consider existing analyses of the impact of increasing the minimum wage, and stop the fast-tracking of ideological experiments on Albertan families, because this is really about, you know, requesting a study.

You know, I heard the opposite side say that they are spending time over the summer reviewing the minimum wage. That's a good start, but why are they consulting when they're going to double down on it anyways and just make sure that it goes through? They said that they were concerned that we won't have time to review. Well, we've got two years to review before this comes in, so we have lots of time for this review to happen.

You know, the minimum wage is not intended to be a living wage, and it never was. I heard that from several members as well.

Members are very passionate about what evidence there is to show if this will work. But the $15 minimum wage at best is a blunt instrument, I heard. You look at the outcome. There's no example that it actually worked. The ability to rise up is stifled. I heard from the opposite side, too, that they were concerned for a mom with three children. People came to Canada for an opportunity, not a guarantee. That's why they came to Canada, for an opportunity. That's what Canada provides people. If the $15 minimum wage increase passes the litmus test, it would be supported. If after all the studies are done – the Wildrose would support a minimum wage increase to $15 if it passed that study that we talked about.

There are other ways to assist children, and this is what I've heard from the members opposite, too. There are other ways to assist, with the child tax credit, and they're putting in the STEP program.

The member opposite was at $12.50 an hour, but I noticed that she chose to move on to another job. She had the ability to do that. We need to do what's right for Alberta; that's what I heard from another member. Minimum wage is not the same as a living wage. There are no jobs at all if the minimum wage is too high. What good is having a minimum wage that's high?

Albertans are looking for real hope – that's what I'm getting out of this – and evidence, evidence that our economy will turn around before the standard of living is ground into dust. We do not need to forge ahead with an ideological, job-killing $15 minimum wage, that all research suggests will further destroy our economy and hurt low-income families. We need leadership that will take a well-founded, evidence-based stand for Albertans. We need to make sure that there's a study that's done, a proper study.

I urge all members of this Assembly to bring their combined voices to bear and vote in favour of this motion. Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, if we could just sneak it in, I'd love to request unanimous consent of the House to move to one-minute bells.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion Other than Government Motion 505 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:39 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, May 10, 2016

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let's bow our heads, and let us reflect, each in our own way. Let each of us be thankful for this privileged opportunity to serve. Let us accept those events which we cannot control, the courage to lead the change that is necessary, and the wisdom to understand the difference.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly His Excellency Tariq Azim Khan, high commissioner for the Islamic Republic of Pakistan. His Excellency is on an official visit to Alberta and is accompanied by Dr. Muhammad Tariq, consul general for Pakistan in Vancouver. I'm pleased to say that Alberta and Pakistan enjoy a strong relationship, and there is great potential to build more partnerships across energy, innovation, and advanced education. During His Excellency's visit we have had crucial conversations regarding collaboration between Alberta and Pakistan in areas such as renewable energy and clean technology as well as sharing knowledge and expertise about the oil and gas sector. And while we move to explore new and exciting possibilities to collaborate, we will continue to build on and strengthen our established ties.

Our esteemed guests are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I would now ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my distinct pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you a group from George P. Nicholson school from the greatest constituency. The 25 students today are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Marele Syme, and hard-working parent Mrs. Victoria Twanow. If they'd please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really pleased today to rise and introduce to you and through you the students, parents, and teacher from the Irma school. You know, I had the really distinct pleasure this afternoon to be able to go and meet with them. I talked with the students and the parents and the teacher as well. I found them to be most polite. They were very well-behaved children and had some really good questions. Part of what we got to discuss was that yesterday in question period, when I was able to ask the minister about their school, the upcoming school, he promised to have a meeting sometime in the near future about the possibility of building a new school in Irma. Also, I'd like to say that when I did my practicums for teaching, the first practicum I did happened to be in Irma. So I'm very pleased to be able to, like I said, rise and introduce this school. Would the teacher and parents please rise as I call your names: teacher Mrs. Tara Gwinn and parent helpers Mrs. Tammy Pauls, Mrs. Kathryn Ward, Mr. Robert Ward, and Mrs. Jackie MacKay. And the students: please rise. Can the members please join me in welcoming them with our traditional warm welcome to this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great privilege today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the House two classes of grade 6 students from Namao school. I think they're behind me. They're accompanied by their teachers, Ms Barbara Kleespies and Mr. Mike Paustian, as well as parent supervisors Mrs. Jenn Winder, Mr. Keeling Hedstrom, Mrs. Tanja Crozier, Mrs. Kmita-Aumais, Mr. Jason Van Koughnett, and Mrs. Jamie Hildebrandt. Any mispronunciations are purely my responsibility. Could students, parent supervisors, and teachers please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school guests? The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some of our province's exceptional students from the Bow Island area. These students hail from Sun Country Christian School, and while the name may reflect the beautiful local weather – and yes, we do lead the nation in days of sunshine – these students outshine even the brightest day. Sun Country reflects the unique diversity and strengths of educational choice in Alberta, offering faith-based learning in a small, local setting. I ask that the students of Sun Country Christian School as well as teacher Craig Toews and parents Brian and Lora Thiessen, Weldon and Brenda Reimer, and Wendy Reimer, who all made this long trip possible, please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school groups today?

Seeing none, the Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. On your behalf I rise to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly three constituents from Edmonton-Manning. Master Corporal Don Fraser works with the Canadian Heroes Foundation. The Canadian Heroes Foundation is a registered nonprofit organization that is about creating awareness and support for our front-line responders, our fallen heroes, and their families. It is also a tribute to those who have served in the past, the present, and the future. He is accompanied today by his wife, Cindy Fraser, as well as his son Brice Fraser. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

Mr. Speaker, it is also my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the Edmonton Eskimo Women's Dinner Committee, which I will speak more about in my statement later today. Joining us today in the gallery are Carol Bentley, the chair of the Eskimo Women's Dinner Committee; Joyce LaBriola, marketing and event planner; Cathy Presniak, finance; Suzanne Sparrow, sponsorship and acquisitions; Michelle Pollard-Bruce, sponsorship and acquisitions; and Nicole Moquin, ticket sales. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mrs. Cindy Gracher and her son Stefan. They are Edmonton-Gold Bar constituents that home-school, and Stefan is currently studying the grade 6 curriculum unit on politics and government. Two weeks ago I had the opportunity to meet them at my constituency office, and Stefan had a number of great questions for me on topics like carbon pricing, emission reductions, and choice in education. He also shared with me that he loves science and classical music, particularly Elvis Presley. Stefan also figure skates and plays the guitar and is able to do all of these things thanks to the support, training, and education that his mom, Cindy, provides. I'd ask them now to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

I hope that you did not tell him that he had to take accordion lessons from you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you. I rise today to introduce to you and through you an old friend of mine, who hopefully you'll recognize, seated in the members' gallery today, my good friend Matt Owens. Matt is currently attending the University of Western Ontario, pursuing a dual degree in integrated engineering and his HBA from the Ivey Business School. He's also someone I'm proud to call my brother as he is the vice-president academic excellence of the undergraduate chapter of Delta Upsilon there at Western. Mr. Speaker, you should also recognize Matt today as he was a page in this Assembly from 2012 to 2015, serving as your page as recently as last year. You'll note that, much to his chagrin, this actually means that he served me as a page and my hon. colleagues here in the Chamber as well. Would he please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly Sukh Ghuman, Sam Jhaggi, and Raja Nagpal. Sukh Ghuman is a very popular Punjabi music artist, who is visiting from Punjab. She was here performing a concert in Edmonton this past weekend. Sam and Raja are representing Royal Star Entertainment, who both organized and promoted her recent concert. From what I've heard, it was very well attended. I'd ask my guests to please rise now and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an absolute honour and pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you two outstanding Albertans and two absolute pillars of strength for the Leader of the Official Opposition and, in fact, all of our caucus. Seated in the gallery today are Mrs. Frances Jean and Ms Kim Michelutti, respectfully the mother and the fiancée of the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin. Mrs. Jean was one of those brave Fort McMurrans who made the trek to Edmonton to escape the wildfire that threatened her city and her very large family, who are now dealing with the destruction of six separate family homes. She has been a pillar of strength in the community through periods of boom and bust and, no doubt, will be active in helping to rebuild the city. I would just like to personally thank both of these ladies for their patience and strength as the Leader of the Official Opposition has travelled around the hard-hit areas of Wood Buffalo. I invite them now to rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Vern and Laurie Lafortune. Vern and Laurie are joining us from Red Deer today. They both worked tirelessly on my election campaign, and I was very grateful for their support. Their son Brad is also the chief of staff for the Minister of Labour. I'd like to ask them both to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome from the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members of the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, or the ABVMA, and the Alberta Association of Animal Health Technologists, the AAAHT. First, I'd like to give our kudos and our thanks to the ABVMA for assisting with rescued pets affected by the Fort McMurray wildfire, along with our other partners. Many Albertans consider their pets as part of their families, so we thank you for your care and attention during this disaster. These professionals play an important role in ensuring that our animals are healthy and receive the best care possible. I'm pleased that they're here today as our government will be introducing Bill 13, the Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2016. Joining us today are Dr. Darrell Dalton, Dr. Kevin MacAulay, Dr. Margitta Dziwenka, Dr. Louis Kwantes, Ms Linda Glasier, Mrs. Vanessa George, Ms Nicole Olivier, and Mrs. Erin Young. I would like to ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Jon Tupper. Mr. Tupper is the business development officer for the Canadian Cancer Society in Fort McMurray. Jon and his wife, Sandy, and daughter have called Fort McMurray their home for more than a decade. Jon, of course, like the other 88,000 McMurrayites, is anxiously awaiting their return home to begin the rebuild of their community. Jon is especially interested in the rebuild of the social infrastructure of Wood Buffalo, which is as resilient as the people of Wood Buffalo. With that, I would ask Mr. Tupper to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Fort McMurray and Area Wildfire Update

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I would like to welcome back to this Assembly the Leader of the Official Opposition as well as the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. [applause] Yeah. Our hearts continue to go out to both of you and to all of the people evacuated by the wildfires and displaced from the comforts of home.

Fort McMurray, Anzac, Gregoire Lake Estates, and Fort McMurray First Nation remain under mandatory evacuation orders. We continue to focus on those who are evacuated to ensure they remain safe and have access to the services that they need.

We have some welcome news today, Mr. Speaker, that the fire weather is moderate across northern Alberta due to the temperature and wind being reduced and increasing humidity. Although fire conditions, however, are no longer extreme, the fire potential remains high. The wildfire in the Fort McMurray area remains out of control, and as two fires have now merged into one, the size is currently estimated at 230,000 hectares. I am told that the fire continues to move towards Saskatchewan, slowly to the south-southeast.

The current forecast indicates a high of 11 degrees Celsius today, 40 per cent humidity, and winds will remain a factor at 20 kilometres per hour towards the north. Last night we had wind gusts at 28 kilometres per hour, which thankfully is the lowest we've seen in a while. Widespread smoke remains a concern, and we are monitoring air quality closely to ensure our first responders are safe. In Fort McMurray there are more than 700 firefighters bravely battling the blaze along with 20 helicopters, 27 air tankers, and many pieces of heavy equipment.

Mr. Speaker, I continue to urge those evacuees who have not already registered with the Red Cross to do so. People can do this by visiting redcross.ca to register their name and their whereabouts. For those who have already registered but have changed locations since registering, I'd ask that they please call again to ensure that we are updated about their current location. As of this morning approximately 45,000 households have registered with the Red Cross, for which I am very thankful. This registration process is so important to ensuring that we can provide those who are displaced with access to the assistance and services they need. There are currently 12 reception centres open within Alberta. As always, the best place to go for the most up-to-date information is emergency.alberta.ca, and Albertans can call 310.4455 for information or to have their questions answered as well.

As Minister Hoffman updated yesterday, cabinet authorized $200 million in immediate disaster recovery program funding, and we will revise this number as needed. Our government is providing emergency financial assistance for evacuees in the form of preloaded debit cards. Adults will receive $1,250 and another $500 for every dependant. We are continuing to work hard to begin the distribution of that financial assistance. That assistance will be available to those who have registered with the Red Cross. We'll have more details on how that money will be distributed in the coming days.

One of our main priorities continues to be to provide evacuees with information as it becomes available. Last night we held our first town hall meeting over a conference call. These calls allow evacuees to hear the latest information on the fire and the services available to them. Participants were able to ask questions of the Premier, myself, and several other experts, to ask them directly. Dr. Karen Grimsrud, Alberta's chief medical officer of health, and Bill Adams with the Insurance Bureau of Canada were also available along with the government of Alberta representatives from the ministries of Human Services, Education, and the Alberta Emergency Management Agency. We had more than 15,000 people, Mr. Speaker, who participated in the call, and many good questions and information were provided. We'll hold another call tonight and again on Wednesday and Thursday and hope to resolve some of the issues around questions and concerns and what is unknown for those evacuees. Evacuees should be registered with the Red Cross to ensure that they receive the details of these calls.

I want to remind evacuees as well that if they left behind documents such as Alberta drivers' licences or ID cards, new cards can be issued free of charge at a registry agent. As well, Alberta personal health cards can be ordered by calling 310.0000 to get a replacement card.

Canada Post is helping reconnect displaced residents with the postal system by registering with their mail-forwarding system. By registering, Canada Post will be able to ship mail and parcels to different addresses as well as reprocess and ship existing mail and parcels. I encourage residents to check online or call Canada Post for more details.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier, myself, and Mayor Melissa Blake were on the ground in Fort McMurray. While there, we were escorted by emergency management experts along with media to inspect the damage first-hand. We saw devastating images that came out of that visit. We've lost about 2,400 structures, but almost 25,000 are intact, for which we are so greatly thankful.

However, I know that some evacuees will be getting the news that the places they called home are now gone. The emotions that come with that, Mr. Speaker, are tremendously deep and challenging. With that, I want to remind everyone that mental health supports are available to anyone who needs them.

Mr. Speaker, another important update for displaced residents with school-aged children is information about diploma exams. All students who are registered with the Fort McMurray public school district; Fort McMurray Roman Catholic school district; l'école Boreal, within the greater northern central francophone education region; and Bill Woodward school in Anzac, within the Northland school division and are registered in a diploma course and are scheduled to write diploma exams in June 2016 will receive an automatic exemption from the diploma exams. Students may still decide to write their diploma exams if they choose, and, where possible, schools will be expected to accommodate those requests.

Starting immediately as well, all student loan payments or Alberta repayment assistance plan payments will be automatically deferred for six months interest free for students displaced and affected by the wildfires.

Mr. Speaker, I know how hard it is to not know when people want to get home, and they desperately want to get home. While we do not have a confirmed date for when that can happen, we will have re-entry times available within the next two weeks.

There's a lot of work to be done before Fort McMurray is safe for people to live in again. Damage assessment and the re-establishment of essential services is under way. Emergency services are working tremendously hard around the clock to ensure that the wildfire is no longer a threat, repairing critical infrastructure to a basic level, and securing hazard areas. The re-establishment of local government is also a critical piece of re-entry. I understand that it is so difficult to hear that it could be some time before you can return home, but the safety of residents remains our top priority. Our government-wide wildfire recovery task force has been established to help with recovery, and this team is working diligently to make the re-entry happen safely and efficiently and as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker, we know that this is a very difficult time for many Albertans, especially given that there are so many unknowns. I want to thank all of the first responders, everyone who has donated time, money, and a variety of services and supplies, and everyone who has offered to help the evacuees. We are here to support you through these difficult times.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Welcome back, hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. [Standing ovation]

Mr. Jean: Thank you. I take that for the people of Fort McMurray.

Before I begin, I want to personally thank all of the RCMP, emergency officials, and the first responders who have made the people of Fort McMurray and Alberta so, so proud with their actions. I also want to extend our gratitude to all of the families, all of the towns, all of the municipalities, villages, neighbourhoods, and faith communities all across Alberta that are housing the evacuees.

Oral Question Period

Fort McMurray Residents' Housing Concerns

Mr. Jean: My questions today are a simple extension of what the people of Fort McMurray have been asking me to ask all across this province. Premier, with 85 to 90 per cent of Fort McMurray still standing, why do our residents have to wait two more weeks before even hearing about a timeline for when they can return to their homes?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, our thoughts are with you, your family, and all families that have been impacted by the fire.

Certainly, our top priority is to ensure that when people do return, it is safe for them to do so. This means that we need to make sure that we have safe water to drink and essential services like electricity and heat available in the community. We have people on the ground as we speak conducting damage assessments, and the focus needs to be on critical infrastructure as well. We are actively working to assess the repairs required for the power grid, gas lines, and water-treatment facilities. AHS has deployed a team to assess the hospital and establish an urgent-care centre.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, 2,400 buildings have been lost. We've heard of people trying to see if the power is still on or if their Internet connection is still live. Many other families are poring through videos online or photos in the paper, desperately, desperately trying to see if their house has survived. We know that emergency officials are going through the city. Premier, is there a list being compiled of houses that are still standing, and is it possible for residents to have that information shared with them immediately as they wait weeks to learn when they can go home?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The fire does continue to burn in the surrounding area. We have worked with a contracted imagery company to begin assembling images to help people identify their homes and if they're still intact. This involves co-ordinating over the flight path to ensure that photos can be taken and assembling the satellite information. The first priority continues to be the safety in fighting the fires. Of course, air space is limited, but at any time when there is air space available, the company is working to make sure that we can gather that information so it can be shared with residents, who, we know, want to get home very soon.

Mr. Jean: They sure do.

Many have heard that first responders and other officials have gone door to door to check on the status of each and every house in Fort McMurray. When I've met people from Fort McMurray, whether they're in Boyle or Athabasca, Lac La Biche, Edmonton, or even Calgary, they all want reassurance that their property is being taken care of. Can the Premier tell evacuees that are out of their homes what the reasons would possibly be for entering their properties and what is being searched for?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the important question. There are only two reasons why RCMP would be entering a facility. One is because they are approaching the door, hear somebody in distress, and they need to make sure that that individual, who may not have been able to leave at an earlier time, is safe. So if they hear somebody who is in distress, they will enter and save that individual. The second is if you've registered with the SPCA that you have a pet in the facility, they will happily enter the facility, the home, retrieve the pet, and work to reunite pets and their owners. Those are the only two reasons.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Support for Wildfire Evacuees and Fort McMurray Economic Recovery

Mr. Jean: We heard time and time again from Fort McMurray residents worried as they see their own personal resources drop. I've heard it clearly. Many of them left their houses without ID, debit cards, or even cash. They are in good spirits, but it's the little things that they can't get at the evacuation centres that could make a real difference in their lives right now. Can the Premier please explain what work has been done to get financial assistance out the door and how residents can actually get this assistance as soon as possible?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We recognize the importance of getting that financial assistance to evacuated Albertans as soon as possible, so we are providing that assistance to 80,000 people. We are asking for patience as we set up the necessary staff and equipment to support this work and ensure that evacuees receive the support they need in an orderly and timely fashion. We will make that happen as soon as possible.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, it's already been a week. Many of these residents don't want to rely on financial assistance for long. They do want it, but they don't want to rely on it. They want to get back to work, they want to rebuild their lives, and they want to get home as soon as they possibly can.

Right now the lost oil sands production is costing the people of Alberta $70 million per day. Seventy million dollars per day. My question is simple: for residents who are ready to go back to work right now at the mines and at the work sites all across northern Alberta, under what timeline can they expect to get the call to be able to restart their lives?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that Albertans want to get back to work as soon as possible and that industry wants to resume operations, too, and we are fully committed to assisting them with that, which is why this afternoon the Premier and the Minister of Energy are meeting with oil and gas companies who operate in Fort McMurray to assess the impact of the wildfire and discuss next steps. We are tremendously happy to report there was no major damage to facilities and that no workers were injured, and we continue to work with the industry to make it happen as soon as possible.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, we know the people of Fort McMurray are incredibly resourceful, hard-working, determined. With their own hands they built a beautiful city, I would say a world-class city comparable to none other. We are engineers, tradespeople, pipefitters, construction managers, plumbers, and electricians. These are the people we need to rely on to make our city even better than it was before, and we will. Can the Premier today commit to not letting unnecessary delays or red tape get in the way of these workers, who are so important and who will need to start new construction as soon as possible so we can get back to our lives?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the Premier and the Minister of Energy are meeting with industry in terms of the necessary steps going forward. We've heard from industry that safety of workers and evacuees is paramount to them. Once we can guarantee the safety, we will work with industry to resume production as quickly as possible, and we will ensure that appropriate safety and environmental protections are in place. We will continue working with our partners in industry as we rebuild from this devastation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Fort McMurray Wildfire First Responders

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, I've known for years what a strong group of men and women my brothers and sisters at the Fort McMurray Fire Department are. I still consider them family, and in the past week my family has been tested more than ever before. I stand here today beaming with pride that those selfless men and women rose to the challenge and stood tall fighting back that beast of a fire that threatened to take our city. To the government: what immediate supports are being put in place for the firefighters and other emergency responders, who until this point have been supported by volunteers, as they work around the clock to protect our city?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We also cannot express the depth of our gratitude to those firefighters, who are working so hard. With that, the regional emergency operations centre in Fort McMurray, in particular the Canada Task Force 2, who is leading the logistics there, consider providing the necessary support to our firefighters a key priority. We're ensuring they have access to food, shelter, and water, including the mental health supports, to ensure that they are taken care of and that we respect the commitment that they have to the people of Fort McMurray.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, in meeting with my brothers and sisters on the front lines, I know that they're resilient and that they will do anything for their city. In the days, weeks, and months to come, however, the reality will set in, and the totality of this fire that they fought will become apparent. Just as our first responders have had our back in the past week – an army of Davids taking on Goliath – we need to have their backs. Posttraumatic stress disorder is real, and it is something that many will face. What specific supports will the Premier put in place to ensure that none of them go on this journey alone?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the first responders and second responders working on the front lines are our heroes, and we will continue to support them. Everyone who's been touched by this disaster is under incredible stress, and of course we're going to prioritize their supports in mental health, so we have mental health therapists in each reception centre. We'll make sure that the first responders also have access to ongoing supports, not just today but for weeks and months to come. We're also having discussions with other jurisdictions around how we can bring in these specifically trained experts, who will be needed now more than ever.

Thank you.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, I need to remind this House yet again that we are only in May of what is sure to be a very long and arduous fire season. This is a subject I have studied in past years, and I know that conditions are ripe this year for many more fires to take place because of current forestry practices. The boreal forest doesn't stop at the Alberta border, and other jurisdictions are going to face the same wildfire conditions. Fire, forestry, and logging practices need to be re-evaluated. Will the Premier commit to working with other provinces and the federal government to ensure that best practices are in place?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Actually, just late last week, Thursday and Friday, I was at the Western Premiers' Conference in Vancouver. I had an opportunity to meet with Premiers north of our border as well as east and west. They all shared their great support and sympathies as they continue to address their own needs in their own communities, so certainly patrolling borders, making sure that we're sharing best practices and that we continue to have each other's back, as Albertans have shown to Fort McMurray and as Fort McMurray has shown to many communities in the past. We need the support from our partners on all borders as we move forward.

Thank you for the question.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Support for Wildfire Evacuees and Fort McMurray Economic Recovery (continued)

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta health professionals are doing a great job assisting Albertans affected by the wildfires, and there are some reports that they're overwhelmed. Fort McMurray evacuees staying at the Expo Centre, I understand, are experiencing symptoms of gastroenteritis. I understand that these people are getting special care in a separate living area. Thank you.

To the Minister of Health: have you learned anything from this that will prevent a similar outbreak when future events occur?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, it is never fun to have gastroenteritis, especially when you're in a time of chaos, and obviously it has been a very chaotic last week for the individuals who are living at the facility. Unfortunately, it's not uncommon, when people are living in close quarters, for a spread of something like this to take place. I'm happy to report that the numbers are down today from where they were yesterday. Part of that is because of very stringent cleaning practices in the facilities there, making sure that individuals who were impacted were moved to a different area, providing increased bottles of hand sanitizer, and encouraging people who are coming to visit not to if they're sick.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the government is helping Fort McMurray evacuees, and to fight the fire they've sent a large number of people and equipment, and I thank the government for doing that. The province's strong financial position is one of the things that makes all of this possible. To the Finance minister: are you confident that the government will be just as able to help should an emergency crop up once the government is carrying $60 billion in debt?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. Yes, I want to assure the hon. member that the government will do everything possible to make sure that we address emergencies like wildfires and droughts as soon as they become known to us. We'll do everything we can to address them.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to know that the Premier and some of the ministers toured the Fort McMurray area yesterday and got some reports out to people, at least, on the condition of what's there. I heard the Leader of the Opposition talk about people wanting to get home and back to work. To the Infrastructure minister: are there any roads, bridges, other pieces of infrastructure that have been compromised that will prevent people from Fort McMurray and area from getting back to both home and work?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While I think it would be better directed to the Minister of Transportation, I just want to indicate to the hon. member that we're doing ongoing evaluations of all the critical infrastructure in Fort McMurray. The bridge across the Athabasca River was inspected under very difficult conditions and found to be in good shape. We understand that the main roadways through Fort McMurray, highway 63 and so on, are in suitable shape. In fact, we conducted a very extensive evacuation of people who had fled to the north in the last several days, so I can assure the member that critical . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will add my voice to the praise for first responders and for the strength and bravery of the people of Fort McMurray. Welcome back to the Leader of the Official Opposition.

2:10 Electricity Power Purchase Agreements

Mr. Clark: Today I am going to move on to a different matter of government business. Last night in estimates I asked the Minister of Energy about the impact of the termination of power purchase agreements. She admitted a remarkable thing, that after PPAs were returned to the Balancing Pool, the province of Alberta is now the largest dispatcher of coal-fired electricity and will be the biggest payer of Alberta's new carbon tax. To the minister of environment: did you know this was a risk before you developed Alberta's climate plan?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the hon. member for the question. In fact, at estimates debate last night the record was corrected. The carbon price applies to generators of electricity. For coal-fired emitters what will be happening is a transition from the specified gas emitters regulation to an output-based allocation performance standard. That is the way that this system will work for our electricity generators.

Mr. Clark: But one way or the other the bills are going to have to be paid.

Now, I want to add and make sure that the House is very clear that I do support action on climate change, but it's important to know not just the benefits of a policy but the potential costs as well before implementing that policy. Now, today the Balancing Pool issued their 2015 annual report and said that the return of PPAs "will result in future charges to electricity consumers." So now we know. To the Minister of Energy: have you calculated the cost to consumers from the return of PPAs, and if so, what will that cost be?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. On the issue of PPAs the government will be initiating an appropriate proceeding shortly, and all the facts will be before the public as issues are adjudicated.

Thank you.

Mr. Clark: I don't know how the other five PPAs are any different than the one that's already been accepted, so there is substantial risk.

Maybe I can help with the calculation of what this will actually cost Albertans. The cost to consumers, based on the return of all the PPAs, will be more than $1.5 billion, which works out to nearly $100 per consumer per year. It's Albertans, Mr. Speaker, who pay these bills. Again to the Minister of Energy: can you confirm that Alberta consumers will go from having a credit to a rate rider cost on their power bills as soon as this year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I am not in a position to confirm any of the back-of-the-envelope calculations conducted by the hon. member. What we are in a position to confirm is that the government will be initiating an appropriate proceeding shortly on the matter of PPAs. In addition, of course, the AESO is ensuring an orderly phase-in of renewables as coal-fired units are taken offline in accordance with the federal regulations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Health Services for Wildfire-affected Albertans

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While wildfires continue to rage across the north of this province, it's certain that the condition of the people forced to flee their homes remains at the forefront of every Albertan's mind. It is a remarkable achievement that almost 90,000 people have been relocated as well as they have been, but I understand that some evacuees in the reception centres are unwell. To the Associate Minister of Health: what is the source of this illness, and what's being done to combat it?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are very proud that, thanks to a well co-ordinated effort and co-operation from all evacuees, everyone has made it safely out of the danger zone. Now ongoing health and support is our major concern. According to recent numbers we've got about 105 cases of gastrointestinal illness at Edmonton Northlands and another six at Conklin Lodge. AHS infection prevention and control and environmental public health staff are on-site at Northlands managing the outbreak. Where necessary, patients have been transported to hospital while others are resting in isolation. Based on the advice of a CDC expert, AHS operations have been reorganized at Northlands to ensure best care.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the associate minister for the update. Given that the mental health of evacuees as well as others involved in responding to the crisis is a concern and one that will be felt for many weeks and months to come, to the same associate minister: what mental health supports are immediately available for the fire evacuees?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We recognize that supporting the mental health of evacuees and responders will be a fundamental part of the recovery process. Mental health workers are working in each of the reception centres, and anyone in Alberta can call the mental health support line at any time at 1.877.303.2642.

We've also added an addictions and mental health night shift at the Lac La Biche centre, and AHS mental health support will be located at each of the four debit card disbursement sites in Edmonton, Calgary, St. Paul, and Lac La Biche.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the safety and health of all those evacuated from the fire zone is largely secure and given that our minds must also turn to the first responders who are continuing to fight the blazes, to the same associate minister: how are the health needs of firefighters and other first responders being met?

The Speaker: The associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the recognition given to our first responders, who have been working around the clock without reservation. Several first responders have also reported GI illness, and they have been treated on the spot. A Fort McMurray field medical clinic has been established, and a team of four first responders will be flying to Fort McMurray tomorrow.

With respect to mental health, starting today there is a telehealth line dedicated to first responders, which is separate from the mental health line I mentioned earlier. There is also an AHS critical incident team offering support by phone 24 hours a day exclusively to first responders, and we will also be deploying on-site resources.

The Speaker: The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Fort McMurray Energy Industry Recovery

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Our province is a place where people start anew and come to make a name for themselves, and we've been blessed with abundant natural resources, which has had a profound impact on the success of the people in our province. A key piece of our story is the success of our energy sector and the companies that do more than make a dollar. They care deeply about their community, as we saw during the worst wildfire when these companies opened their doors to evacuees. To the minister. Now that everyone has thankfully been able to travel south on highway 63, my question is: how long will it be before these facilities are running again, particularly when there continues to be an evacuation order for Fort McMurray?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, this afternoon the Premier and the Minister of Energy are meeting with oil and gas companies who operate in Fort McMurray, and they will be assessing the impacts of the wildfire and discussing next steps. We thank them for their partnership with us and for all of the assistance that they have provided so far.

Mrs. Aheer: Given that the longer these facilities are down as a result of the wildfires, there's a profound impact on the country's and the province's financial well-being and given that these closures are also seriously impacting not just the oil workers but all of the secondary and tertiary industries that rely on the success of the energy industry to keep their businesses afloat, what assistance is the government providing to ensure that the lifeblood of Alberta's economy gets back on its feet in a safe and timely manner?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we are moving forward in partnership with the companies who are operating north of Fort McMurray. They have all been excellent partners to our government in assisting us with evacuation and other pieces in support for evacuees. It is too early to speculate on any re-entry at this point because the focus has got to be safety and security for the folks in Fort McMurray.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that while these energy companies opened their doors to evacuees, they were also forced to shut down their major operations due to safety concerns and given that the wildfire has no regard for these multimillion-dollar facilities and the key infrastructure that surrounds them, what discussions have been held with the energy companies to survey the damaged infrastructure, including pipelines, and what will be done to get them operating at full capacity?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we are happy to report that there was no major damage to facilities and that no workers were injured, in part because of the excellent safety response of the oil sands operators north of Fort McMurray. You know, industry has stood with Albertans during their time of need. We'll stand with industry as we rebuild from this disaster. First and foremost in terms of working in Fort McMurray, we need to make sure that the townsite is safe, the critical infrastructure is safe, including clean water and all of the other services that need to be in place.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Calgary-Lougheed.

2:20 Wildfire Control and Support for Recovery

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Fort McMurray fire is creating catastrophic effects for thousands of residents in many ways, including fire protection, addictions, and advanced education. The beast, as it is known, has spiralled into a vortex that demands vast firefighting resources. To the minister responsible: with more than 10 other wildfires burning in the province, including another dangerous one northeast of Cadotte Lake, can you assure indigenous peoples and all Albertans that the province has enough resources to respond to any fire that may suddenly threaten any Alberta community?

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. You know, we have resources right across the province. He's absolutely right. The concentration has been in Fort McMurray, but there are dry, tinderlike conditions right across the province. We've seen a little bit of relief these past few days, but he can rest assured that our resources are in place where they're needed, when they're needed right across the province.

Mr. Rodney: During my time as chair of AADAC and associate minister of wellness I visited the addictions facilities in Fort McMurray, and I witnessed first-hand the unique needs of clients there. Given that highly stressful crises dramatically intensify the need for support, to the Minister of Health: with these critical treatment centres shut down, where can citizens seek assistance, including specifically those congregating right now at the Northlands evacuation centre?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We are happy to report that all of the people who were at the treatment facility in Fort McMurray have been relocated and are receiving the treatment that they require at appropriate facilities in the Edmonton zone.

We are working very diligently to address the mental health needs of our population immediately and in the near future. As I mentioned earlier, we have added an addictions and mental health night shift to the Lac La Biche centre and are continuing to work with AHS to assess the needs of evacuees and ensure that the appropriate supports are in place.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Associate Minister. That's good news.

Given that Keyano College has been fortunate not to have sustained damage but that its programs and services have been postponed indefinitely and given that Keyano will have to regroup when its business operations resume and that students have to obviously consider their options depending on how the delay fits into their plans, to the Minister of Advanced Education: what kind of support will you provide to Keyano College students and staff to ensure that it can resume operations in the most efficient manner when it is indeed safe to do so?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you to the member for the question. I had the opportunity to attend a makeshift convocation ceremony that Keyano College students put on for themselves, hosted at Grant MacEwan campus. It was a rather touching moment to see people make their own diplomas and celebrate what was otherwise denied to them.

Our department is working hard with our postsecondary institutions to make sure that business at Keyano College continues as well as it can. I'm particularly thankful to our partners at NAIT, who are providing payroll services to staff at Keyano College. We'll make sure that the students and staff and administration can get back to school within . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Wildfire Emergency Funding Eligibility

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many First Nations people who live in and around Fort McMurray also lost everything. Like so many others, First Nations people have been evacuated from the area and now find themselves struggling. My question to the Minister of Human Services: in the face of this terrible tragedy and since First Nations are the responsibility of both federal and provincial governments, will First Nations and Métis people qualify for the $1,250 payment being given to adults and the $500 payment being given to dependants, or has the federal government made other commitments?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're working very closely with indigenous communities during this provincial state of emergency to reassure them that regardless of where you live in Alberta or what your status may be, all Albertans who were forced from their home or are unable to return for an extended period of time will receive a variety of supports from us, including the income supports. Certainly, Indigenous Relations is sitting in on the Provincial Operations Centre, as is First Nations indigenous health branch, as is Indigenous and Northern Affairs Canada. We also have indigenous field officers who are working very closely . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, since I can't help but think about what happened on March 12 in Lac La Biche when a fire ripped through an apartment building and the foreign workers who lived there lost everything and given that Alberta Human Services did not help those fire victims with their costs, will the minister be helping the many foreign workers who were displaced from Fort McMurray with financial assistance measures, and are they at risk of being sent home because their jobs are now on hold?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the great question. Certainly, we recognize that all of those who were forced to evacuate the Fort McMurray area and are unable to return to their homes are experiencing substantial and tremendous distress, so we've opened those supports to all of those who were evacuated regardless, again, of their status, and we will work with them. We certainly recognize the issue, with them being tied to the community in terms of being here, and we will work diligently to try to address that in order to ensure that they can stay here and find work elsewhere.

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, given that this government has shown a pattern of behaviour that suggests that it simply does not understand the costs and challenges of running a small business, how is the minister planning on helping small-business owners and their family member employees from Fort McMurray who do not qualify for EI but will still have to take care of their families and pay their bills while they try to rebuild their lives?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We certainly recognize that small businesses are the heart of communities and that they are absolutely essential to maintaining healthy communities. We're committed to working with the small-business community in Fort McMurray to provide the resources they need to become re-established. In the meantime, of course, we will continue to provide every single adult $1,250 for intermediate costs. We're ensuring they have access to their basic needs and also providing support for their dependants as well.

Red Cross also has coverage for those who have immediate financial needs, and they can have that conversation.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, the current government's carbon tax will make life more expensive for all Albertans and raise costs on businesses in our province. Yesterday, while discussing the main estimates for Infrastructure, the minister admitted that there was no finished assessment on how the carbon tax will impact costs for the construction industry. While there's no formal assessment, has the current government asked Alberta's construction industry, to see how the increase in gas and diesel prices will impact them?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I had a further opportunity to discuss this matter with my officials in the department, and it is extremely difficult to calculate these things. We will undoubtedly see some incremental effect with respect to that, but that will have to be tested when we see tenders in. We are still expecting the tenders to come in at lower prices because of the downturn in the economy. This is a great time to be investing in the infrastructure that Albertans need. We can get very good deals at low interest rates. This is the right thing to do for the people of Alberta.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, given that the carbon tax has impact to individual Albertans and will certainly be a burden and given that those charged with constructing the buildings required in our province will see no relief from this new tax and given that buildings like schools need to be heated once they're open and that thousands of students require busing transportation, has the current government done any assessment on how taxpayer dollars allocated to education will get less bang for their buck as a result of this carbon tax?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the piece that the opposition leaves out consistently is the reinvestment in energy efficiency programs. Those are designed to reduce emissions and therefore costs. That is a piece that I am aware the previous government didn't understand given that they left us as being one of the only places in North America without an energy efficiency strategy. Also, the Official Opposition has no concept of how this basic energy efficiency calculation works.

Mr. Schneider: It's easier to attack the opposition than to answer the question, Mr. Speaker.

Given that there are numerous hospital projects on the go in the current government's proposed capital plan and given that many types of surgeries that have been booked by doctors must go forward and given that hospital facilities need constant, around-the-clock electricity and heat in order to function, has the current government done any assessment about their ideological carbon tax, that will affect health care costs in our province?

Ms Phillips: Well, once again, Mr. Speaker, you know, our carbon levy will be reinvested right here in Alberta in a number of different initiatives, not the least of which is public infrastructure, in order to reduce our emissions. That is the point because greenhouse gas emissions cause climate change, which is real. So what we are trying to do here is to price those emissions as per many, many economists' advice, including Preston Manning's. We will reduce those emissions, and organizations will reduce their costs.

Resource Industry Policies

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The recent wildfires have caused direct damage estimated to be in the billions of dollars, and any disruption to the oil sands' production will hamper Alberta's economic sustainability. As other areas of Alberta are also susceptible to wildfires, it is assumed that much of Alberta's economic activity will appropriately be shifted to disaster recovery. To the Minister of Energy: what has been done in the last week to reassure and counsel general investors and others that Alberta will continue to be open for business?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We fully recognize the importance of the energy industry to this province and not only to the province but to the whole, entire country that we live in. That's why we're committed to working with our industry partners. In fact, the Premier and Minister of Energy are meeting with key representatives today to have the conversations about how to restore that industry as quickly as possible in a safe, efficient, and orderly fashion.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's forested areas are key aspects of the carbon cycle in Alberta by storing carbon as they grow and releasing it as plant material is used or burned and given that many Alberta jobs depend directly on the forest through harvesting timber and touring guests into or through forested areas and given that these industries are now being rendered inoperable, to the minister of forestry: what supports will be made available to the companies and individuals operating in this sector as they look to return to work?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. It's important to note that the vast majority of the forested area, the green area in Alberta, has been allocated to a forestry company under a forest management agreement. The forestry industry, you know, I'm pleased to say, has been doing very well and will continue to do very well with some challenges on the horizon. But I see no reason to think that the forestry industry is going to see a large hit from this disaster or otherwise going forward, knowing that there are some challenges.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the recent wildfires showed the value of roads for Alberta's remote communities and given that highway 63, which is a key lifeline for industry, became a lifeline for evacuation and supplies and given that many other remote communities are difficult to access and expensive to supply in normal circumstances, never mind in an emergency, to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: are you considering any partnerships with private builders to stimulate the economy and improve access to rural communities?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the very good question. We're doing a great deal of work both in Transportation and in Infrastructure to reach out to our stakeholders to develop and strengthen the partnerships that we have. We restored funding to the STIP program, which the previous government had allowed to lapse, which will improve rural transportation and provide options for rural municipalities to assist in economic development. So, yes, in response to his question, we are doing a great deal to work with our partners in rural Alberta and in the private sector in order to improve the rural economy and the transportation of goods and people.

The Speaker: The Member for Sherwood Park.

Fort McMurray and Area Environmental Monitoring Province-wide Fire Bans

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past week we have heard stories of Fort McMurrans losing their homes and belongings as they evacuated the area. This is devastating. Albertans have acted generously to show support for affected Albertans. My constituents are also concerned about the support our government is providing for less visible consequences such as the impact and hazards that the fires will have on the environment. Fort McMurrans need to be able to safely return home. Could the Minister of Environment and Parks provide an update on the work the department is doing to monitor air quality . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Phillips: Thank you for the question. I'm pleased to update the House on the matter of air quality in the Wood Buffalo region. There have been severe air quality warnings in the Fort McMurray region due to the ongoing fires. There are five mobile air quality monitoring units that have been installed in addition to the stationary monitoring units that are already in the area. AEMERA, under the guidance of Environment and Parks and in partnership with Canadian Forces, has installed three mobile units. The Wood Buffalo Environmental Association has provided an additional two mobile units. Additional air monitoring needs will be evaluated and assessed to determine priority resources. We'll begin the soil monitoring in the region once it is safe to have staff do so.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister for the information. Could the minister provide an update on any additional monitoring or support for the region?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to update the House on the other matters that we are working on. We're working with the Fort McMurray First Nation to install an air monitoring unit. We're working with the Public Health Agency of Canada for additional support related to indoor air quality. We're continuing to provide support for water and waste-water treatment facilities and the managing of solid waste, and we're providing assistance and support for waste management issues in camps north of Fort McMurray.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this weekend we saw brush fires in Edmonton and that now there are many other fires burning around the province, to the same minister: what is the importance of the fire bans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, no one wants to be that person who is responsible, however inadvertently or accidentally, for another fire that might divert resources away from the priority areas in our province. I would like to reiterate that the ban applies to all open fires in Alberta's forest protection areas, counties, MDs, and special areas such as provincial parks and recreation areas; that is to say, Crown land. The cities of Calgary and Edmonton, among many others across the province, also have their own municipal fire bans in effect. It is really crucial at this point that all Albertans respect those fire bans so that we can protect the safety of our communities.

Business Regulations

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, a nonprofit organization in my riding was required to bring potable water into their RV park as a requirement for getting their operating licence this year. The initial quote was for $4,000, but what began as a simple request by one department turned into a multidepartmental fiasco with a price tag of $20,000 to $80,000. Bureaucratic red tape hurts businesses, plain and simple. Every province except Alberta has a red tape reduction strategy. Will the government commit to a red tape strategy, yes or no?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. Of course, one of the reasons why we have regulations is to protect each other and to make sure that citizens can be safe. Some things that might be referred to as red tape are simply security measures to make sure that individuals don't speed on highways, don't sell alcohol to minors. These are things that we certainly are proud of. If there are specific instances that the member would like to raise, we certainly would be willing to have those conversations.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, probably the first problem is to learn what red tape is.

A few points to ponder, Mr. Speaker. Given that the CFIB has given the Alberta government a D grade for its red tape report card for several years and given that they estimate that red tape costs Alberta businesses over $4 billion a year, will the current government at least recognize here and now that bureaucratic red tape is a massive hidden tax on businesses and all Albertans and that they need to address this?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, there are reasons why we need to protect citizens and protect businesses. Again, if there are specific instances that the member wants to bring up rather than spouting grandiose ideas that are created off the back of a napkin, I'd certainly be happy to discuss specific instances that he's referring to. But there are reasons why we have regulations and protections for citizens: to make sure that they're protected and so are the businesses.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, we see again that it's easier to attack the opposition than to answer the question.

Given that provinces like British Columbia get an A rating from CFIB on red tape reduction because they keep track of the regulatory burden and given that even other provinces, like Ontario, that share a high-spending agenda still manage to have a red tape reduction framework, will the current government here at least commit to quarterly reports on red tape reduction or a one-for-one rule on introducing new regulations?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. Mr. Speaker, certainly, I think it's fair to ask why we have regulations, and one of the reasons why we have regulations is to protect citizens. When it comes to: will you guarantee that you'll get rid of a regulation if you add a regulation? Not if the regulations are there to protect citizens. Certainly, we take our responsibility in that matter very seriously.

Seniors' Housing

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Albertans we care greatly about our senior population, especially all those who are currently displaced. For all seniors across the province we want to ensure that they have housing available to them so that they can age as comfortably and carefree as possible. We need to take measures today to ensure that the infrastructure we need in 20 years is available because we have done the planning now. To the minister of seniors: what studies are you conducting to ensure that infrastructure is planned and developed for current and upcoming senior populations?

The Speaker: The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member for the question. I'll just address some of the concerns regarding Fort McMurray currently. I've met with Cynthia Woodford, who is the vice-president of property services at Wood Buffalo Housing & Development Corporation. I want to commend them on their efforts in the evacuation and in the face of adversity, and I'm really pleased with the work they've done. We know that the Rotary House Lodge was not destroyed. Of course, we have to make sure that all the other infrastructure needs are in place, so we're working very closely with the authority right now to make sure that seniors in Fort McMurray are protected.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that you have announced capital dollars but have not announced any process for accessing the funding and given that partnering with private and nonprofit sectors is likely the most effective method to build and renovate seniors' facilities in Alberta, to the minister: when will an application process be in place so that private industry can apply to create this much-needed infrastructure?

The Speaker: The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member for the question. Of course, we do have a $1.2 billion investment in our five-year capital plan, and unlike the previous government, we are addressing the concerns about $1 billion in deferred maintenance that we inherited from that government. We're investing $582 million to support major replacement and renewal of existing social housing and seniors' lodges. We've put money into rental assistance: $1.3 million will be provided for immediate support for approximately 260 families to . . .

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that as the population shifts over the upcoming years, the use of specific facilities will inevitably change – and the needs of seniors using them will – and given that we want to make best possible use of the infrastructure that we build, to the minister: what is your plan for ensuring that both private and public facilities built for seniors' housing can be repurposed in the future if or when they no longer serve the need so that we make sure that we do not waste taxpayers' dollars?

Ms Sigurdson: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, the seniors' facilities, many of them, you know, are 30, 40 years old. There has to be some redevelopment of them, and actually some of them are no longer functional. Of course, they have to be brought up to modern standards. That's why we're investing $30 million this year into bringing seniors' lodges up to code to make sure that by 2018 a hundred facilities will have sprinkler systems and all the fire safety that they need. Other work that we're doing is making lodges have their own in-suite . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-Currie.

Women's Economic Equality

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I look back at my childhood, I remember the hours my mother put in at home in the morning getting me ready for school and in the evenings ensuring that I was well fed and cared for while at the same time holding down a job for which she was being paid 30 per cent less than her male counterparts. This problem of the wage gap is still with us today. To the Minister of Status of Women: what steps are being taken by this government to address the gender pay gap in this province?

The Speaker: The Minister of Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to member for the timely question as we go into Status of Women estimates this afternoon. Alberta's women are strong and capable. That's why it makes no sense that we have one of the largest pay gaps in the country. We know that 62 per cent of minimum wage earners in Alberta are women, and our plan to responsibly phase in a $15 minimum wage is real progress in closing that wage gap.

Mr. Speaker, we're actually taking women's economic security seriously by creating Alberta's first-ever ministry dedicated to advancing women's equality.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given this economic environment that we're in now, child care is at the forefront of many people's minds, and given that child care spaces are still at a premium, the prices seem to go up during the good times but never come down in the bad. To the same minister: what are you doing to increase the availability and affordability of child care spaces throughout the province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Raising kids is expensive. Our government knows that and is committed to helping Alberta families with the costs of child care. We're expanding benefits to 380,000 Alberta kids. This is so that, for example, a single mom with two kids who qualifies will get more than $3,000 in her pocket each year. We're also investing $10 million to pilot child care programs so that when finances improve, we will be in a position to move towards $25-a-day child care for all Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that an increase in the availability of child care spaces is just one way that we can help increase the ability of women to participate in the workforce, again to the Minister of Status of Women: what are you doing to ensure that women in our province are able to fully participate in the economy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Women's economic security is one of the three key areas of Status of Women's mandate. A big part of getting better paying jobs is training and education. We are moving Alberta forward with our jobs plan. In our budget there's $10 million for training opportunities for women and indigenous people, who are underrepresented in the economy. I'm proud to be a member of a government that is taking real action to help Alberta's strong and resilient women succeed in this economy.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Fort McMurray and Area Wildfire Relief

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past week has been very difficult for residents of Fort McMurray and the entire province as we battled with the single biggest fire in our history. Without a doubt we are going through a stressful and trying time.

I am humbled and touched by the resilient spirit of my fellow Albertans who have stepped in to support with whatever they can. From complete strangers bringing flowers to brighten up Mother's Day for moms staying in reception centres to schoolteachers driving students to safety through the heart of the blaze, from hundreds of firefighters battling the blaze around the clock to peace officers directing traffic in thick smoke and staff from the SPCA working to remove all the animals abandoned during the city-wide exodus, everyone is working as quickly as possible with all they can give to get resources and services where they are needed. In my own constituency of Wetaskiwin-Camrose people have donated generously to relief efforts and held the people of Fort McMurray in their thoughts.

This is a disaster of extreme magnitude, and I am proud that our government is doing the right thing, showing clear leadership, and ensuring we meet the needs that people have. People's safety comes first, and that's what we have prioritized.

When tens of thousands were being forced from their homes as firefighters battled the wildfire, two beautiful babies were born in an evacuation camp. At just a week old today, Mr. Speaker, they are at least two rays of sunshine amid the smoky devastation.

Fort McMurray, please know that we have your back and we will get through this difficult time together. Like the phoenix, we will rise from the ashes. Thank you to all ordinary Albertans for performing extraordinary acts of compassion.

Thank you.

2:50 Fort McMurray and Area Wildfire Relief

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, history has been punctuated with moments of greatness performed by regular people. The spark of heroism lies dormant in all of us until that urgent whisper calls us to step up, suppress our fears and our own self-interest, and do something significant and meaningful. Pictures of caring Albertans coming to the rescue of fleeing motorists stranded on the highway remind us of the hero lying dormant in each of us, waiting for that quiet moment when we see a need and instinctively reach out with a helping hand and a caring heart. Pictures of brave firefighters trying to recover from exhaustion, lying on the lawn bone weary from battling insurmountable odds, fighting to save homes and possessions. These images will be indelibly etched in our memories for years and years to come.

They came from far and wide, not because they were paid to or required to but because they saw the Goliath for what it was, an inferno whose sole purpose was to wreak carnage and destruction wherever it went. What do heroes do when they are confronted with the Goliaths of the world, Mr. Speaker? They steel their nerves, they take a deep breath, and they plant their feet to stand bravely in defiance.

Many of Fort McMurray's homes and businesses now stand safe from the fiery tendrils due to the gutsy and courageous efforts of those unsung and unheralded heroes. To all of you first responders that ran towards the fire when everyone else was running away from it, to all of you angels in pickups that brought gas cans and food and water to the stranded on highway 63, to all of you volunteers and givers of charity, to all of you who offered heartfelt prayers for the safety of the displaced: from the bottom of our hearts we say thank you. You answered the quiet call of heroism that moved you to action in this great time of need. Goliath reared its ugly head, but you brave souls were courageously there to stop it.

Mr. Speaker, I am proudest to report to you that in Alberta heroism and leadership are still very much alive and well.

Fort McMurray and Area Wildfire Relief

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, over the past week Albertans watched in horror as the raging wildfire forced more than 80,000 Fort McMurray and area residents from their homes, leaving unimaginable destruction in its wake. In the face of this danger it would have been easy to panic, yet so many brave Albertans swallowed their fear and evacuated their city without incident. In the hours and days that followed, it has been remarkable to witness the strength, kindness, and generosity of Albertans as they rush to help evacuees.

Whether it was patrolling highway 63 with fuel, food, and water for those stranded or opening their homes without hesitation to welcome the weary or quickly organizing fundraisers to support the amazing work of the Canadian Red Cross, Albertans have been a source of inspiration across the country.

Time and time again our resiliency has been tested, and Albertans have answered the call. I think about the wonderful couple from Fort Mac that I met this weekend in Calgary, so overwhelmed and in shock but who were treated so kindly at a local Best Buy, whose staff replaced their electronics at little or no cost, or the group of young people from Fort McMurray who came to North Star Ford in Calgary to say thank you to volunteers, who then furnished them with food and supplies for their pets.

Unfortunately, we cannot say that no lives were lost. Our hearts break for the families of two young people who lost their lives in a vehicle collision fleeing Fort McMurray. This is an unimaginable loss, and our prayers are with their families.

Alberta is no stranger to hard times, but as the people of this great province have demonstrated so many times in the past, we are stronger than tornadoes, floods, and wildfires.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Peace River Constituency Events

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I went home early to High Level this past weekend due to wildfire evacuations and a local state of emergency. Thankfully, fires are currently under control and people are safe, but my visit really highlighted the incredible, resilient northern spirit.

Friday morning I had the honour of speaking at the Northern HEAT conference in Peace River, where firefighters from across northwest Alberta improve their skills and efficiency through live fire training and sessions on engine company operations and leadership. When you stand in front of a roomful of such brave men and women, knowing each and every one is ready and willing to face wildfire and risk their own lives to keep the rest of us safe, there isn't a lot you can say except: thank you for always being there when we need you.

A key conference session was on posttraumatic stress disorder, something that affects both the victims of wildfire and first responders. By taking early steps to address mental health concerns among those impacted by the fires in northern Alberta, we can hopefully lessen the severity of posttraumatic effects.

Saturday brought a lesson in how to stay mentally healthy in the face of trauma at the Northern Alberta Fiddling and Jigging Championship in Fort Vermilion. We had a sold-out crowd, with participants from across northern Alberta. First up was Marvin, a fiddler from Fort McMurray. Marvin stood on stage, and he spoke about losing everything in the fire, including all his fiddles and guitars. Then he picked up a borrowed fiddle and lifted the hearts of everyone in the room with his music, celebrating life through music and dance and healing our soul and spirit.

I saw incredible generosity. Although the economic downturn has hit Peace River hard, within 48 hours residents had filled a huge box truck with emergency relief supplies. The mayor of High Level has reached out to the province to offer accommodation for evacuees, stating: we have 1,000 rooms and big arms to support.

In the days ahead we'll have much work to do in northern Alberta as we begin our journey of rebuilding, but with the strength and bravery of our first responders, the generosity of people across the province and country, our focus on maintaining mental wellness, and our incredibly resilient northern spirit, we will succeed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Edmonton Eskimos' Community Activities

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to rise and speak about an amazing group of women and our city's favourite team, the Edmonton Eskimos.

Recently it was my pleasure to spend the evening at the Edmonton Eskimos dinner, which raises money for the Lois Hole hospital and ovarian cancer research. This event is hosted every year in memory of long-time Eskimo friend and employee Pam Monastyrskyj. Pam was an integral member of the Green and Gold for more than two decades. In 2005 she lost her long, hard-fought battle with ovarian cancer. Two years later the Edmonton Eskimos Women's Dinner was created in her memory to provide funding for research at the Lois Hole hospital for women. This dinner has raised $392,000 to date, including over $59,000 in 2015 alone. This is one of the many things that the Edmonton Eskimos do to give back to the community.

As many of you know, Fort McMurray has a special place in the Green and Gold's hearts. Last summer the oil sands capital hosted the Northern Kickoff between the Saskatchewan Roughriders and the Edmonton Eskimos in a preseason match. This game was a huge success and developed an everlasting relationship between the CFL and Fort McMurray, so much so that the players, the Eskimos Cheer Team, and the mascots all visited the evacuees currently housed at the Northlands Expo Centre this past Saturday.

This team has also participated in a $50,000 donation made by all nine teams of the CFL and the league office to the Red Cross and has also donated to the Edmonton Humane Society's disaster fund to support affected animals. The Edmonton Eskimos and their volunteers continue to make significant contributions not only in support of great initiatives like the women's dinner but also through their ongoing support of the evacuees of Fort McMurray.

In closing, I will quote the commissioner of the CFL. "They have been our gracious hosts. They are our friends. And most importantly, they are our fellow Canadians. All of our teams, and I know all of our fans, wish them safe passage and in time a full recovery from this crisis."

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I would like to move that we accept unanimous consent in order to extend the Routine until its completion. It's my expectation that that will only take a few additional minutes. Of course, there are some bills that need to be introduced, so I would respectfully request the House's support for that.

The Speaker: The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Energy Industry Response to Fort McMurray Wildfire

Mr. Strankman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Albertans never cease to amaze me. We are currently in the middle of battling one of the most devastating natural disasters in our history as the fire near Fort McMurray is still going strong. Thankfully, the courage of Fort McMurray's residents, emergency personnel, and helpful Albertans ensured a successful evacuation when the city was threatened. I want to talk today about some of those helpful Albertans, especially members of our energy sector.

Now, the energy sector in our province is often demonized by those with an agenda. In this emergency oil field companies and their employees are acting selflessly to provide emergency lodging, food, and, in many cases, transportation for displaced residents. For example, at the height of the mass exodus from Fort McMurray men such as Kurt Scharr and his friends, self-named the Power Strokes, loaded their trailer with Tidy Tanks and jerry cans of fuel and drove towards the fire when everyone else was evacuating. Likewise, Shawn McDonald and his company, Black Scorpion, ran up and down highway 881 and highway 63 providing fuel not only to stranded motorists but even sometimes to emergency responder vehicles. They did so for days, paying for the fuel out of pocket and through donations. Only Albertans would run with gasoline and diesel towards a fire. These folks knew that many people leaving in a hurry likely didn't have a chance to fill their tanks, so they loaded up of their own accord and began helping stranded Albertans get out of harm's way.

These are just a few of many stories of our friends and neighbours stepping up and pitching in because it was the right thing to do, with no agenda beyond helping others. Mr. Speaker, I would like to think that these responses are typical of how Albertans act in a crisis. It takes a special kind of person to knowingly place themselves in a dangerous situation. These men and women and others like them exemplify what it means to be Alberta strong.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice pursuant to Standing Order 15(2) that at the appropriate time I will be rising on a point of privilege regarding the obstruction of the government in preventing members of the Assembly, in particular the Official Opposition, including myself, the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, and the MLA for Drayton Valley-Devon, from carrying out their parliamentary duties. I have the appropriate number of copies of the letter that was provided to your office at the required time this morning. Subsequently, I understand that there may be a response from the government, at which point I may be happy to withdraw this point of privilege.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2016

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise and introduce Bill 13, Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2016.

These proposed changes will allow veterinary technologists to be given representation on the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association's governing council and practice review board with full voting rights. This is important because the association is responsible for setting and enforcing the rules around the practice of veterinary medicine in Alberta. The amendments introduced today in Bill 13 were initiated by the ABVMA with member support, and I'd like to thank them for being here in the gallery today. The amendments will not change the scope of practice for veterinary medicine or the qualifications required to be a technologist. By enhancing accountability for all technologists, Albertans can be confident their animals are receiving the best care possible.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Health Professions Amendment Act, 2016

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise in this House to introduce first reading of Bill 14, Health Professions Amendment Act, 2016.

It's first reading, and it's also my first bill, so this is pretty exciting. Thank you.

The Health Professions Act delegates professional self-governance and regulatory colleges and establishes standard processes for registration, continuing competency, complaints, and discipline. The proposed amendments reflect Alberta's changing and evolving health workforce and health system. The amendments will ensure that Albertans continue to receive safe, high-quality care from regulated, accountable professionals. The amendments will also ensure that this care is delivered in facilities that meet consistent, rigorous standards, part of our right care, right place, right time, right professional.

Mr. Speaker, thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to table 10 copies of a response to a written request from the fall session respecting government spending in regard to student learning assessment pilot projects. I'd also like to take a moment to apologize to the member for the delay in providing my ministry's response. I understand that the member has asked a similar question in the spring session, and I would assure him that we will table that response and all of his other requests in a more timely manner.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table 10 copies of the responses prepared by Alberta Health to written questions and motions for returns submitted last session, and I, too, would like to apologize for the delay in providing these to the House.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Mason, Minister of Infrastructure, return to order of the Assembly Motion for a Return 9, asked for by Mr. Cooper on May 2, 2016, copies of all ministerial orders issued by the Ministry of Infrastructure between January 1, 2014, and December 31, 2015.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe there was a point of privilege that was raised by the Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today on the point of privilege that I had mentioned earlier in question period. I'd just like to extend my acceptance of the apology from both ministers. I appreciate the fact that they have tabled the required information and apologized. I am more than happy at this time to withdraw my point of privilege. However, I'd just make a brief comment to make sure that the government is aware that their actions, or inaction, affect other members of this Assembly, and it's important for all of us to ensure that the rules of the Assembly as well as the standing of the Assembly are respected, and I appreciate that they have done that now today.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, the daily Routine has now concluded.

A legislative policy committee will convene this afternoon for consideration of the main estimates. Families and Communities will consider the estimates for Status of Women in the Grassland Room.

[The Assembly adjourned at 3:09 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b)]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, May 11, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

If you would bow your heads. Let us reflect, each in our own way. Let us reflect on the power of community and the power of collaborative work and the impact it can have on our province. Through a co-operative effort we will be able to preserve our communities and our province through the tough times that they may face. Let us as Albertans remember that we are here for one another and that no one should feel alone during these difficult times.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two guests sitting in your gallery. Former MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo Mike Allen is also the owner of Campbell's Music, which just happens to be celebrating a 40th anniversary this week. Mike is also a two-term municipal councillor and past president of the Fort McMurray Chamber of Commerce. I had the pleasure of working with Mike Allen on highway 63, which is now 99 per cent complete. Thank you, government, for finishing it. I expect that the evacuation efforts would have been severely worse if highway 63 remained a single-lane highway.

Attending with Mike today is Denise Wilkinson, who is a restaurant manager and the vice-president of membership for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo PC Association and Mike's partner. I would ask Mike and Denise now to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House students, staff, and parents from Webber Academy in my constituency of Calgary-West. For the teachers: Mrs. Kari Labelle, Ms Barbara Webber, Mrs. Valerie Ellaid, Ms Jennifer Harriman, and Ms Carol Webber. The academy is one of the top private schools in western Canada. It's recognized for its high educational standards and renowned for preparing students for university and their broader citizenship in society. The school's founder, Dr. Neil Webber, is well known to this House as he is a former cabinet minister, as is his son Len, now an MP for Calgary Confederation. I'm proud that Webber Academy is in Calgary-West. It is located in a truly beautiful venue overlooking the foothills and the mountains. Almost 100 students from Webber Academy are here today. Can we please welcome them and give them the traditional warm welcome of this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school groups today, hon. members?

Hearing none, the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two women who are on the forefront of co-ordinating local relief efforts for evacuees from Fort McMurray. Kathy Prudhon and Cindi Haché are respectively the founder and executive director of the Edmonton Emergency Relief Services Society. With the support of the city of Edmonton and the government of Alberta and many community partners, Cindi and Kathy lead the EERSS in co-ordinating local partners and volunteers to deliver direct material assistance to victims of disaster. I look forward to speaking more about their work in my member's statement today. For now I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and all members of the Assembly Matthew Lillico. Matthew is a Wildrose member who is working to build our organization up here in Alberta's capital. I'd ask that he stand and receive the tradition warm greetings of the House.

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two staff members from my constituency office in Edmonton-Mill Woods and one staff member from the Labour ministry. I have my constituency office manager here, Marta Azocar, who has been with me since July and does a fabulous job of keeping things running in Edmonton-Mill Woods, as well as our part-time constituency assistant, Dylan Sloan, who started in March. As well, from my ministry staff I'd really like to introduce Karen Ramkhelawan, my scheduling assistant. I do not know how she does it, but thank you, Karen. I'd like to ask that they all rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't see my guests, but I'll introduce them here. They might be on this side.

It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Jagvir Brar and Zora Singh Brar. Jagvir has become a good friend of mine over the last year, and I was honoured to have him as a volunteer on my last election campaign. He's an extremely dedicated volunteer and participates in all outreach events organized by the constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. Zora Singh Brar is Jagvir's father-in-law and is visiting Edmonton from Punjab and is looking forward to a tour of the Legislature later this afternoon. I'd ask both my guests to rise if they are here and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Your guests may not be here yet, hon. member.

Fort McMurray and Area Wildfire Update

Ms Larivee: Mr. Speaker, the situation in the Fort McMurray area and the well-being of those who were evacuated continue to dominate our thoughts and our actions. There are thousands still under mandatory evacuation orders for Fort McMurray, Anzac, Gregoire Lake Estates, and the Fort McMurray First Nation. I know first-hand how hard it is to be away from your community, and my heart goes out to all those people who are displaced from the comforts of home. We continue to focus on those evacuated residents to ensure that they remain safe and have access to the support and services they need.

This morning our Premier announced the details on the emergency financial assistance available to evacuees. This afternoon our government will start issuing preloaded debit cards to those who have registered with the Red Cross to help them through this tremendously challenging time. Adults will receive $1,250 and $500 for every dependant. This one-time emergency payment will help evacuees meet their immediate short-term needs.

I know this has been a stressful time, and I would like to make an appeal to allow individuals and families with the most need to come forward first. Those families who are not in dire need of funds, who perhaps still have at least a few dollars left to use, are being asked to please wait a few days. These funds will be available for some time, and no eligible evacuee will be left out. There are debit card distribution centres in Edmonton at the Butterdome, in Calgary at McMahon Stadium and the BMO Centre, and at Lac La Biche in the indoor soccer centre adjacent to the Bold Center.

Evacuees will need to bring with them their Red Cross registration number, photo identification, identification for their partner or spouse and dependants if they are claiming relief for them, and proof of residence or presence in the community. For those who left behind identification documents such as drivers' licences, new Alberta ID cards will be issued free of charge at a registry agent. Those who have questions about this program or questions about any of the efforts under way should contact 310.4455 or, again, check the emergency.alberta.ca website.

Our government also remains committed to providing evacuees with as much information as possible as it becomes available. We held our second telephone town hall last night, and it was very well received by residents. We had several experts available to answer questions of evacuees on topics ranging from house insurance to health care, education, the current state of the wildfires, and plans for re-entry. We had good participation on last night's call, with more than 13,000 evacuees who participated. There are plans for at least two more town halls, one tonight and one on Thursday. Again, evacuees should register with the Red Cross to ensure that they receive the details of these calls.

Mr. Speaker, an important step in the recovery will be to get the major industry in Fort McMurray back up and running. Yesterday our Premier met with leaders from the oil industry to discuss the state of the oil sands facilities in the region and plans to return to full operations. We expect that many companies will resume operations in the coming days, which is good news for their employees and for our economy. We are committed to working closely with them on the plan for a safe and timely recovery. The Alberta Energy Regulator has created a recovery team to assist with planning for the safe and environmentally responsible resumption of operations. The regulator is working with each affected company on a start-up plan. This work will include appropriate authorizations, inspections, monitoring, and logistical support to get sites operational.

On that note, yesterday highway 63 was reopened for industry goods to move through. That includes the transportation of oil sands supplies and equipment. The RCMP is managing a staging area south of Fort McMurray to allow for free-flowing travel that's intended for industry use. This is good news, Mr. Speaker, to get our industry working again.

While industry begins its return, I want to say that we are working as quickly as possible to make Fort McMurray safe for residents to return to. As we speak, we have many people on the ground in Fort McMurray, those conducting damage assessments and beginning repairs on critical infrastructure such as the power grid, gas lines, and water treatment facilities. A team of inspectors is on the ground to conduct structural assessments, first on critical infrastructure and then on businesses and residences. Alberta Health Services will be assessing the city's hospital and begin establishing an urgent care centre. In fact, there are already health care services available for the first responders there. And planning is under way to develop interim housing solutions for those who lost their homes.

Mr. Speaker, we have hundreds of people on the ground right now working as quickly as they can to make the city safe and habitable, but there is significant work to be done. I understand the difficulties faced by those who have lost so much. I want everyone to know that everything that can be done is being done around the clock to get you home.

Although the fire has moved away from Fort McMurray, the fire potential remains high. The fire in northeastern Alberta is out of control, and the size is currently estimated at 230,000 hectares. The current forecast indicates a high of 12 degrees Celsius today, 30 per cent humidity. Winds will remain a factor at 25 kilometres per hour from the northeast. Widespread smoke remains a concern, and we are monitoring air quality closely to ensure that our first responders are safe. In Fort McMurray there are more than 700 firefighters bravely battling the blaze along with 20 helicopters, 13 air tankers, and many pieces of heavy equipment.

This battle has physical and emotional impacts on our first responders. To provide the support these brave women and men may need, three mental health therapists trained in psychological first aid arrived yesterday in Fort McMurray to provide support. In addition, Alberta Health Services is deploying a critical incident stress management support team. The team will include one mental health trauma specialist, three emergency medical services peer support members, and one EMS chaplain to provide psychological health help to all interested emergency responders.

Mr. Speaker, I continue to urge those evacuees who haven't already registered with the Red Cross to do so. People can do this by visiting redcross.ca to register their name and whereabouts. As of this morning more than 47,000 households have registered with the Red Cross. There are 13 reception centres open in the province. As always, the best place to go for the most up-to-date information is emergency.alberta.ca.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Fort McMurray and Area Wildfire Relief

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past week has shown the steel and resolve of our province. It begins with a story of those who, without being asked, found their way to drive up highway 63 and to evacuation centres to provide free gas and free meals. For over a week these individuals have done this tireless work without ever being asked.

The acts of service did not stop there. Many businesses and individuals immediately brought their equipment, both big and small, to provide immediate relief and assistance to those in need. In cities, towns, and villages across Alberta families have opened up their homes to strangers, to pets on a moment's notice. In fact, barely an hour after a mandatory evacuation was in effect, folks were already signing up to help.

In our cities we've seen incredible leadership from our municipal officials. I want to first thank the mayor of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, who was asked to oversee the largest evacuation in our province's history. I'm thinking of towns like Lac La Biche, which, despite a population of only 3,000, has warmly welcomed 4,000 evacuees to the Bold Center on the southeastern edge of town.

It should come as no surprise that the City of Champions, too, stepped forward to lend a hand. The Edmonton Expo Centre received a call for help at 9 p.m. By 11 p.m. their doors were open and ready to welcome nearly 20,000 evacuees. Edmontonians have been tirelessly assisting evacuees to find accommodation, stocking up on things like clothes, pet food, baby diapers, and other important items.

Not to be outdone, Calgary, too, has opened its doors, providing lodging for nearly 2,000 evacuees. Calgary facilities like the Calgary Zoo, the Telus Spark centre, and leisure centres are all offering Fort McMurray residents an opportunity to spend even a couple of hours having fun, getting their minds off all this worry.

Once again Albertans have shown their true character in the face of a crisis. The coming days, weeks, and months are certain to be difficult, but I know we will emerge from this tragedy stronger than ever before.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Acts of Kindness to Wildfire-affected Albertans

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the news we are hearing about the big players in the evacuation of Fort McMurray. There is no doubt how important their work is and the lives that have been saved because of it. But thousands of smaller acts of kindness are taking place, and I want to honour these today.

There are the children setting up lemonade stands; groups hosting barbecues and pancake breakfasts, with the proceeds going to the Red Cross; the family whose child's specialized walker had to be left behind, and someone in Edmonton stepped up and gave them their daughter's spare one. Local bands are coming together for concerts to raise funds and to raise spirits. There's the Hutterite colony that showed up at a reception centre to feed the people a home-cooked chicken dinner; the Syrian refugees in Calgary, who have so little, that gave what they could to purchase much-needed supplies; the people of Fort St. John, who sent a large horse trailer of supplies because Fort McMurrans needed it more. People are opening their homes to complete strangers. One farmer and his wife not only gave someone gas, but fed him, cleaned and fixed a tear in his clothes, and sent him on his way. When he stopped to get coffee, he reached in his pocket and found a $100 bill.

I could list these incidents all afternoon and not be finished. These are all small acts in the big scheme of things, but added together, they are huge, and they speak to the remarkable character of Albertans.

I am so proud to be an Albertan, and I want to express my heartfelt thanks to everyone for these acts of kindness.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Fort McMurray Wildfire Pet Evacuation

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been eight days since the wildfire forced the residents of Fort McMurray to evacuate, leaving unimaginable destruction in its wake. We've seen the chilling photos and videos that some have taken as they fled, showing just how little time people had to escape, and we've heard from many of the evacuees who were forced to leave beloved pets behind. I can only imagine how difficult that was and how anxious these pet owners have been waiting for news.

Well, late last week animal control, SPCA, and Humane Society officials began going door to door. They have already rescued hundreds of pets of all shapes, sizes, and species. These pets are being cared for in a facility here in Edmonton until they are well enough to be reunited with their owners. Yesterday morning I had the honour of spending a few hours conducting health assessments and treating these frightened and bewildered animals. I can't tell you how rewarding it was to play a small part to reunite these animals with their families, families that I know will benefit tremendously from the comfort of their beloved pets during these difficult times. I was struck, but not surprised, by the selfless dedication of my Alberta Veterinary Medical Association colleagues, veterinarians and animal health technologists, some who have been there on duty for days with only a few hours' sleep.

Pets enrich our lives in immeasurable ways: they have become integral parts of our families; they give unconditional love; and they bring us joy, laughter, companionship, and comfort day in and day out. We know that in the days since the evacuation these four-legged companions have been greatly missed. We also know that in the difficult days ahead, they will play a vital role in the healing process.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans have contributed their unique skills and expertise in countless ways to help the people of Fort McMurray. I've always been proud to be a veterinarian but never more so than yesterday. I'm thankful that I can put my skills to use and be of assistance during this crisis.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Fort McMurray Residents' Housing Concerns

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to take a moment to commend the strength once again and the courage of the Fort McMurray evacuees. We know that for many of these evacuees, there is a good chance their home survived the blaze. Understandably, however, these men and women want to see the damage with their own eyes. The other day I asked about timelines for these Albertans to return home. The government had no answers for me then and would only defer to work being done on the ground by officials. To the minister: what specific infrastructure criteria must be met before the evacuees are allowed to return home to Fort McMurray?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Certainly, we fully recognize how desperately people want to get back home, and we're working around the clock to make that happen. A big piece of that is actually the assessment of the work that needs to be done. We continue to work on things such as water, power, electricity, waste management, and we'll transition slowly to ensure necessary services such as the grocery store being prepared and the hospital being prepared and all of those pieces. We look forward to providing that information, with a clear representation of the plan, to residents as soon as possible.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that safety is paramount, but there are things this government could do to ease the burden on evacuees while they wait. On June 20, 2013, flooding devastated parts of southern Alberta. Eight days later there were bus tours arranged so that residents could assess the damage for themselves. Similarly, seven days after the Slave Lake wildfire officials organized bus tours there, too, so residents could have a first-hand look at the wreckage. Is the government arranging bus or video tours so that Fort McMurray evacuees can see their homes with their own eyes?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for that important question. There's no question that officials have been discussing that very issue. The mechanics and the logistics of having 80,000 people return to a town that is a four- or five-hour drive away for bus tours are not the same as the examples that were given previously.

However, there is work being done on the issue of a video tour. Our officials are working with Google Maps to look at whether that kind of work can be done because we understand that people want to see things as soon as they can.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has said that a schedule for return won't be provided to evacuees for another 14 days, on top of the painstaking seven days that they've already been waiting. These men and women need to get back to their homes or, at the very least, to have a solid timeline for a return. The 2011 fire victims were back in their homes in 13 days; the 2013 flood victims were back in their homes in nine. Can the government provide a full list of reasons why Fort McMurray evacuees will have to wait 22 whole days before they even get a timeline for a return?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We know that it is absolutely the first thing on the minds of the evacuees from Fort McMurray, that they want to go back. We absolutely understand that. Particularly, you know, the first responders that the member opposite referred to in his member's statement have had tremendous success in getting people out of Fort McMurray safely, so we don't want to undo that record by letting them go back prematurely. We also don't want to set a date which then has to be missed because of a gas line or an electric line or lack of a water supply because, quite frankly, the emotional task of building towards a specific day and then having that day removed is even more . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Fort McMurray Wildfire Recovery Contracts

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been talking with many of my constituents over the past week, and I've heard many stories of compassion, generosity, and pride for our Fort McMurray community. However, many of my residents are skilled labourers and trained professionals, and they are eager to lend their expertise to rebuild their home, but they've been prevented by this government from doing so. As the MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo this is of great concern as in the days and weeks and months and years to come we will need all the help we can get in rebuilding.

My question to the Premier is this. Will you ensure that Fort McMurrayites with the will and resources are given the opportunity to rebuild their city?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. It's certainly a very good question. That issue actually comes up as part of the larger consideration of: how do we help small-business owners and business owners who've been negatively impacted by the fire in Fort McMurray? As we move from the emergency response phase, which, quite frankly, really just ended about Sunday, Monday, into the transition phase, that exact work is being done. The whole evaluation of the services that are required and where we can get them and how we can certainly be sure that those from Fort McMurray are able to participate as much as possible is being worked out right now. We'll have more to say . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, I have specific examples of Alberta businesses and individuals who are from Fort McMurray and have the infrastructure and capacity to help during this crisis. They are companies with machines on the ground, who want to help. Take, for instance, a local excavation and demolition company that has machines sitting at the waste-water treatment plant in Fort McMurray. They're ready to help with the fire abatement and cleanup, but instead of using these ready-to-go machines on the ground, the government has already said, "No, thanks" and are instead bringing up machines and contractors from Calgary. To the Premier: why are you ignoring this made-in-Fort McMurray assistance being offered?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's not a question of ignoring; it's a question of assessing the resources on an urgent basis, on an emergent basis. There's no question that this issue is being addressed and being examined by the transition team, by the emergency management people who are planning the transition. So it will form part of the plan going forward. The decision is not done. We've only just begun the work of securing the city, and there will be a great deal of work going forward. I ask the member to give us specific examples, as I indicated to his leader yesterday, and we'll be happy to . . .

Mr. Yao: I do have a specific example.

Examples of local solutions are being ignored. The Wildrose has heard stories of water trucks being available in Janvier, which is just 120 kilometres from Fort McMurray. When the offer was made to supply these 20 water trucks, the forestry department said: no, thanks. A rebuild of Fort McMurray without utilizing the tools available in the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo does not make sense. Will the Premier work with her officials to rectify this situation?

Ms Notley: Again, Mr. Speaker, I think I've kind of already answered that question exactly. We've asked our officials to look at that issue and to look at a planned-out process to ensure that those who want to help, who are capable of helping will be offered the opportunity to help. As I've said, there is a tremendous amount of work going forward. In the meantime specific examples, with names and people and contacts and that information, will help us as we work with our officials to work through this together, collaboratively, to ensure that everybody can contribute and the most support can be given to business owners in Fort McMurray.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Job Creation

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP government has failed to support job creation in Alberta, and Albertans are suffering for it. Last week the Labour minister admitted that they are failing on contractual obligations to promote the Canada job grant, which trains Albertans for better jobs. Big-union AFL-CIO has called the Canada job grant the kind of action Canadians should expect from government at all levels. Will the Premier commit to unemployed Albertans that her government will fulfill skills training obligations?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that question. Through the Canada-Alberta job grant we provide skills training to Albertans who need it, and the program is incredibly well adopted. Through a provincial election and a federal election some of the announcements have not been happening as per the contract. However, rather than announcing our skills training, we are delivering the skills training. We will work with our partners to make sure that we fill those contractual obligations and do those announcements going forward. In the meantime providing the skills training is our priority.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, six major announcements have to be announced every year to be able to fulfill that obligation. That has not been done. Albertans send away an extra $15 billion a year to Ottawa, and our government is not even fully utilizing what little money gets transferred back. Alberta receives over $100 million annually under the labour market development agreement to help with skills training. What we are not sure of is if these dollars are being used to provide useful training to Albertans who are out of work and worried about making next month's mortgage payment. Will the Premier commit to releasing details on which specific organizations are receiving these funds?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of the work that our government is doing on jobs and skills training. I've provided the member opposite with significant information and details about the program and the nearly 2,000 companies that have taken advantage of Canada-Alberta job grants as well as the 14,000 workers who have enjoyed that. I'd be happy to work with him if he thinks more details are necessary on this particular issue, but the Canada-Alberta job grant is very well utilized in this province, and we can be quite proud of the work that's happening there.

Mr. Hunter: There's no doubt that challenges from outside and inside our borders are having an impact on everyday Albertans, but the government has to take ownership of their poorly thought out policies negatively affecting and impacting the economy. It's been one year since the election, but any policies designed to give businesses a sliver of hope won't even kick in until next year. With increased costs to businesses like dramatic minimum wage hikes and a new carbon tax, what is this government doing to help support job growth now instead of sending jobs away?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. Our government has been very active since last fall's budget, where we increased ATB's capacity to lend to small and medium-sized businesses by $1.5 billion. In the fourth quarter they kicked out $338 million. There is also the STEP program, that the previous government cancelled, that our government has brought back and increased its capacity. That's going to employ about 3,000 folks this summer. There are a number of initiatives that our government has taken that are going to get Albertans back to work and get our economy moving.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Fort McMurray and Area Wildfire Information

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our hearts go out to the people displaced by the Alberta wildfires. The impact of fleeing on a moment's notice and leaving your life behind is something that I cannot comprehend. I am surprised to hear that anyone seeking to enter Fort McMurray is required to sign a nondisclosure agreement, including the media, required to have photos and videos vetted by the government before they can be released. Can this be true, and if so, why is it necessary to control the information coming out of Fort McMurray?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. All I can say, very definitively, to the member opposite, in answer to your question, is: no, it cannot be true. It is not true. That is not happening. Sometimes information gets out there, and it spreads a little bit too quickly. To be very clear, that is absolutely not something that's happening in Fort McMurray.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to hear that, but on Global News there was a report today, and it talked about how even first responders, who have risked life and limb to fight against the disaster, are required to sign a nondisclosure. Again I will ask the Premier or anybody else over there: is this the case, and if so, what possible reason could there be for it?

Ms Notley: We've been advised by officials that on one or two occasions private contractors may have introduced this particular practice – for whatever reason we're not entirely sure – to some people. But let me be perfectly clear. None of the public officials that are managing the disaster response in Fort McMurray are asking for anybody to sign this kind of document. It's just not happening, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, people out of their homes are worried about their pets, their neighbourhoods, their belongings. They're anxious, they're scared, and they need information not two weeks from now but right away. Everybody understands the concerns around safety, and we all respect that, but since the Premier has admitted just now that some people have to sign nondisclosures before sharing information, can I ask the Premier to disclose who does? Give us the list of who does have to sign a nondisclosure so that that'll also tell us who doesn't.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, what I am saying is that there have been some second-hand reports that maybe some private contractors may have done that, but I wouldn't know because I'm not in charge of them. To be clear, the public officials who are managing this disaster are not asking anybody to sign nondisclosure agreements. So in answer to the question: it's not happening.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Wildfire Evacuee Emergency Debit Cards

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today displaced residents of Fort McMurray will begin to receive emergency financial assistance in the form of preloaded debit cards. This is a much-needed support, and I'm glad that the government has moved so quickly to get this help to residents. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. When and where can evacuees receive this money, and what ID is required to receive this assistance?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Evacuees can start receiving their emergency assistance cards this afternoon, beginning at 2 p.m., at four reception centres: the Butterdome in Edmonton, McMahon Stadium, the BMO Centre in Calgary, and the Bold Center in Lac La Biche. They will be open 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. every day, and more centres will open tomorrow, and we'll continue to add more locations in the coming days.

Registration with the Red Cross is required along with identification and social insurance number to receive the cash card. Family members may pick up the debit cards for the entire family but must bring the identification of their spouse and dependants. Any evacuees without ID can receive the cards by making a statutory declaration or can be reissued Alberta ID . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many Albertans have evacuated out of province to stay with family and given that many evacuated Albertans may be far away or simply cannot get to a distribution centre, what is the plan to ensure that these Albertans get the emergency assistance?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will ensure every Albertan evacuated from the Fort McMurray area will receive emergency assistance whether they are out of province or cannot access a distribution centre. Seniors, those with mobility issues, those with special needs, and others who are in Alberta but unable to apply in person can contact 310.4455 to make arrangements to receive emergency financial support from the government of Alberta. We are also working with the Red Cross to provide that assistance from the government of Alberta in addition to the funding provided by the Red Cross for those who have left Alberta. Details on how this will happen should be coming in the days to come.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Loyola: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Many evacuees live and work in Fort McMurray. However, their identification lists their residence as somewhere else. To the same minister: how will the government ensure these evacuees will receive emergency assistance?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard from many evacuees about this concern through the telephone town halls I've been hosting and various messages we've been receiving. As stated, our government will do what it takes to make sure all evacuees receive the emergency assistance cards. Evacuees in this situation may present documentation such as pay stubs or utility bills to prove residence or presence in the community to receive the cards. Additionally, any evacuee lacking identification or documentation can still receive the cards by making a statutory declaration or can be reissued ID at any registry office. We continue to make every effort to ensure evacuated Albertans receive the assistance cards and the support they need in this difficult time.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Seniors' Advocate

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in the estimates for Seniors and Housing the minister clarified that the position of the Seniors' Advocate, which was created to help vulnerable seniors navigate government bureaucracy and to help stop elder abuse, is currently only being filled on an interim basis, which wasn't exactly clear when she said on April 7, "Certainly, we do have a Seniors' Advocate." To the Minister of Seniors: how can you claim that protecting vulnerable seniors is a priority for your government when you haven't even appointed a permanent Seniors' Advocate?

The Speaker: The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Currently the seniors' and health advocate is responding to all the concerns that are coming forward for seniors. There's staff available to help them, and certainly that's going ahead. It's very important for us to be responding to any concerns that seniors are presenting, and their concerns are being taken care of.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister resorted to pointing fingers on April 7 and saying, "This is an area that has been neglected by the previous government" and given that yesterday she admitted that there hasn't been a permanent Seniors' Advocate since January 1, 2015, which means that her government was at the helm for 12 of the 17 months of the interim period to date, to the minister: when will your government actually take some ownership and do the right thing for vulnerable seniors by appointing a permanent and independent Seniors' Advocate?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. All of the concerns of seniors in this province are being taken care of by the seniors' and health advocate, that's currently in place. Any concern that comes through to our government is being addressed immediately by that person. Right now we're going through an open recruitment process for the Seniors' Advocate, but right now there is the seniors' and health advocate, who's looking after them, so those concerns are being taken care of.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that when the government's in-house position is finally permanently filled, the Seniors' Advocate will still be under the government's authority and only have limited powers and given that the Seniors' Advocate is a vital component to seniors' support services and should be empowered to act independently on seniors' behalf, when will this minister do her job, stop playing politics, and prioritize an independent Seniors' Advocate?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. What the opposition is proposing would cost 10 times what the current arrangement costs. It seems this is another example of the opposition wanting to make deep cuts while also asking to spend more. Our Seniors' Advocate is very effective in the responses to all the seniors, and we're very pleased with the work they do.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-North West.

PDD Service Delivery

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When asked during the recent review of the Human Services budget estimates, the minister stated that there are currently 413 people waiting to access PDD services. This number is shocking and has been growing at a rate of approximately 100 per year since 2012. These are people and families potentially in crisis waiting for PDD housing and supports. To the Minister of Human Services: what supports are the people on the wait-list getting, or are they just being left to fend for themselves?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Human Services' mandate is to assist Albertans in creating conditions for safe and supportive environments so they can realize their full potential. There are, yes, 413 people on the wait-list. These are people who are in the process of planning for services, who are waiting for appropriate service providers, and whose service request exceeds available funding. We are working with those people to make sure they get the services they need.

Ms Jansen: Well, they need more than just excuses.

Given that the previous government recognized PDD as a fully distinct program branch with an associate minister, this has been lost under our current government, and since you no longer recognize disability services as distinct and unique, the stakeholders are distressed and they are confused. To the Premier: will you take the big step towards restoring trust with the disability community by reinstating an associate minister of PDD?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that this is a little rich coming from the members of the third party because, you know, I was there when they tried to cut $40 million from the PDD program, and we had to fight very hard to get that money put back. We talk about the wait-list, which, absolutely, we need to focus on, but the members opposite might want to think about the fact that that wait-list was developed primarily under their tenure. We can't fix everything right away, but we're working on it.

Is the Minister of Human Services prepared to commit to answering stakeholder calls on this issue and instituting a collaborative review of not just part of the PDD system but all of it, including SIS and your PDD transformation plan? The stakeholders want to know.

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ever since I've been the minister, I've been working with the stakeholders and I've been fixing the issues that they have created, such as standard 8 for the safety of individuals. I have been fixing the issues that they created with contracts, contract alignments. These are the problems of the past government. We are working with our stakeholders, representative organizations to get this right.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Fort McMurray Energy Industry and Contract Workers

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fort McMurray's oil and gas companies first opened their doors to evacuees and then moved them to safe locations. But those employees who are not working and not collecting benefits such as employment insurance will not be safe financially. What is being done to ensure that those who are not covered by EI, such as PSAs, personal service agreement contractors, are still being looked after in their time of need?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we're very concerned about all the residents of Fort McMurray that have had all the various impacts that they have had regardless of where they came from in the area. We're working very hard to ensure that we provide supports to them. That, certainly, is the reason that we're providing the short-term emergency aid, that starts as of today, the $1,250 per adult, the $500 per dependant, to provide them that additional support to help with their short-term needs at this time, when they're away from both their homes and potentially their employment.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I asked about PSAs, and it was not answered.

Anyway, given that economists predict that Alberta's unemployment rate could hit 15 per cent because of the disruption from the fire and given that Fort McMurray's oil field companies employ tens of thousands of people from across Canada and that these people, my former colleagues, Mr. Speaker, are eager to return to work and are crucial to resuming oil sands production, can the minister tell us what's being done to expedite the process of getting people back to work?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. The Premier and I met yesterday with the oil industry folks, oil sands CEOs, and there's in fact a lot of hope coming in the next while. Most, if not all, of the north facilities were not damaged, so there's a plan in place. Shell is already ramping up; Suncor is. We believe that the facilities in the south were also not damaged, but we need to ensure that once the hot spots are taken care of.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Minister. Given that for every day that production is kept offline because of the wildfire it provides an opportunity for foreign oil companies to fill the supply gap, taking money out of Canada, and given that any sustained pattern of this supply gap taking place could result in a significant loss of wages for Alberta's oil workers, what will be done in the coming weeks and months to ensure that our market share is protected and expanded so that Albertans continue to have employment opportunities at home?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, when we met with our industry partners yesterday – they have a plan to get production back in as quickly as possible. We were fortunate that much of the infrastructure was not hurt. The pipelines are just being inspected to make sure that there are no ruptures anywhere. Once most of that work has gone on, the AER is working with each individual company to get them online in an organized fashion. Some will be on in the next few days; many will be on in the next few weeks.

2:20 Springbank Reservoir Flood Mitigation Project

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the government held an open house in Calgary to discuss the details of the Springbank off-stream reservoir project, called SR1, with the public. My constituents and I were hoping that the government would provide some important details and updates to show that it was taking the concerns of the Springbank residents seriously, but once again we were disappointed. The government had no updated details or cost information to share. I'd like to ask the minister: now what is the current total estimated project cost, and when will you release those numbers? I'm not sure who to direct that to.

Mr. Mason: The Springbank diversion project is absolutely critical to protect people downstream and many hundreds of people in the city of Calgary as well, so it's a critical project and very important that we move forward with it. Mr. Speaker, we're currently in the process of talking to the landowners about acquiring their land, and I don't wish to prejudice those negotiations by throwing out any numbers.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: I'm interested in the negotiations. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Given that SR1 could require the expropriation of private lands, which merits an extensive impact assessment and consultation with landowners, whereas McLean Creek would require little to no private land expropriations and given that the amount of land required for SR1 is continually and rapidly increased while the government's projected land costs have remained unchanged, will the minister commit to listening to Springbank landowners in this process, and can the minister tell them when they will be releasing accurate land cost estimates for SR1?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, it's unfortunate the hon. member wants to jeopardize the negotiations by asking us to tell the price before the negotiations are even concluded. It's important that this project proceed in order to protect people, and it's our job to make sure that it's done in a sustainable way and at the best possible price for the citizens.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we might have a different definition of negotiations.

Given that a key component in the decision to choose SR1 was a shorter timeline required to complete the project and given that the project did not take into account the time necessary for the regulatory process or, more significantly, the time needed to procure the required land, how can this government be so confident that SR1 will protect vulnerable communities faster than the proposed alternative of McLean Creek?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that we did very much take into account the time necessary to acquire the land. We've completed successful negotiations with landowners to provide access to officials in order to conduct a four-season environmental impact assessment, and that is on schedule. The work has begun.

Ethics and Accountability Committee

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, shortly after being elected, the government appointed a Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee. There were high hopes and expectations for a collaborative, nonpartisan review of four critical pieces of legislation that govern our democratic institutions, but this committee has only met seven times in eight months and has yet to begin substantive discussions on even one of the four acts. Last night the Member for Calgary-Elbow proposed extending the committee's arbitrary and artificial deadline, which was defeated. To the committee chair: how many hours of meetings do you anticipate being required to complete the committee's mandate?

The Speaker: A point of order is noted.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I will respond by way of saying that it is not in order for a member to ask . . .

Speaker's Ruling

Questions about Legislative Committee Proceedings

The Speaker: As I heard the question, it was with respect to the schedule and time. Is that correct? I think the question is in order. I would rule that it is.

Minister, please.

Mr. Mason: I'll be happy to answer. It is very unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that the opposition members who walked out on that committee . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I'm advised that you cannot answer. The member who is chair of the committee, I'm advised, is . . .

Mr. Mason: Any member can answer a question, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Could I have counsel with the table, please.

I had already recognized the chair of the committee. I must caution that the issue is exclusive with respect to schedule and time as I've understood the question that was asked by the hon. member, so would the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville please answer the question.

Ethics and Accountability Committee

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand and answer my first question in this House. You know, democratic reform is a priority for this government, and that's why the government launched an all-party committee, something that has never happened in this province, to be able to provide recommendations. So being that the opposition members, instead of rolling up their sleeves and getting to the work at hand last night, chose to walk out of yesterday's meeting, through the committee clerk . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, you may not have heard my comment. Please limit it to time and schedule. You were continuing to give far more than what was necessary. I think the question has been answered. When is your meeting scheduled?

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you. Through the committee clerk I have requested future meeting dates and am waiting for some of those members to respond in order to work on the task at hand and schedule the next meeting.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, given that even Senior Parliamentary Counsel last night described the scope of the committee's work as unprecedented and given that the federal electoral reform committee is planning eight months to review only one act and given that the committee needs additional time to thoroughly study, discuss, and debate some hundreds of changes that have been proposed, to the committee chair. In eight months we have actually debated zero changes to zero acts. Given this committee's past productivity, how much time are you allowing for each of the hundreds of proposed changes to all four acts?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I certainly would, if need be, consult, but I think your question has gone beyond the answer that was provided.

Dr. Starke: Schedule and agenda, Mr. Speaker. In order.

The Speaker: I don't believe that to be the case, hon. member. Is there another question you'd like to ask?

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, there is. Given that the government has now used its majority on the committee on more than one occasion to vote down reasonable proposals by opposition members and given that we are yet to enter into substantive discussions that will fundamentally change the way whistle-blower legislation . . .

The Speaker: I must rule that question out of order as well.

Mr. McIver: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Noted again.

Point of Clarification

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, under 13(2) I think members have the right to ask the Speaker to explain a decision, and under that section I'm rising and making the request.

The Speaker: I believe I've explained my reasoning, that it was related to the schedule and timing of meetings, and I have made my ruling, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-South. [interjections] Quiet, please.

2:30 Fort McMurray Energy Industry Recovery

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our industry partners have been essential in the work that is being done to support the people of Fort McMurray during this time of crisis, yet we know that the fire has also had significant impact on the energy industry as a whole. Yesterday the Premier and the Minister of Energy met with many top executives from the oil and gas sector to discuss the current state of operations and the plan for going forward. To the Minister of Energy: can the minister update the House on how this meeting went and how the minister is working with our industry partners to support them in this current time?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. First, I want to continue to extend my sincere thanks to the energy companies and their staff for their tremendous efforts in our time of crisis. Their role was not only to evacuate themselves and their employees; they shut down their facilities in a safe manner, took care of others that showed up at their sites, and made sure there was a safe evacuation. Yesterday the Premier and I met with our industry partners and we discussed the safe . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the destruction we've seen from this fire has been devastating in many parts of Fort McMurray and given that the many from Fort McMurray who work in the oil sands are worried about the impact it will have on their jobs, again to the Minister of Energy: what is the current status of the oil sands sites in the Fort McMurray area, and how have they been affected by the fire damage to the region?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Yesterday at our meeting the oil sands CEOs that we met with were able to report that all facilities north of Fort McMurray appear to be undamaged. There is some work being done to secure some of the electrical lines that were overground. The underground pipes appear to be fine; there are a couple valves to be fixed. The south of Fort McMurray also seems to be fine, but they have to do a little bit more work once the hot spots have cooled down.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the longer our industry partners are either offline or operating at reduced levels of production, the greater the possible impact on our province and the people that work in the area may be, again back to the same minister: can the minister update the House on the progress that has been made so far in getting industry back online and returning to normal production?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. At our meeting yesterday government and industry officials discussed the requirements that were needed for a normal return to production. Our Alberta Energy Regulator is working with each company on their recovery plans and making sure that things are safe and environmentally responsible in the resumption of their operations. This will include appropriate authorizations, inspections, monitoring, and logistical support for them to return to operation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night the NDP members voted down a motion to extend the deadline for the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee. The committee is tasked with reviewing four significant pieces of legislation over the course of a year, but now we're over seven months into the mandate, and we haven't reviewed a single act. To the minister responsible for democratic renewal: why isn't the government taking the task of improving our democracy seriously?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Democratic renewal is a top priority for this government as evidenced by the creation of an all-party committee, something unprecedentedly done. Let me be clear. The committee has been busy working, and our members have been busy preparing, doing foundational study, knowledge. If the members opposite have not been using this time, that is to their detriment, and last night, rather than get to work, the members opposite chose to walk out.

An Hon. Member: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Ms Gray: I realize that the Wildrose do not appreciate mornings, but now they don't like summers?

Mr. Cyr: The democratic processes have needed to be . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member.
Please proceed.

Mr. Cyr: Sorry, Mr. Speaker.

Democratic processes have needed to be reviewed in Alberta for a long time. Last May Albertans were promised more accountability and transparency when the government changed hands. Since then things have barely changed. When will the NDP government stop limiting democratic engagement and involvement?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've had some big changes since the last government. We no longer allow corporate and union donations in our democratic system, something that has had a large impact already. The discussions that have already begun at this committee are meaningful. I would like to take a moment to thank the member of the Liberal Party for staying, and I would like to urge all members of the committee to stay at the table and help us work through these issues.

An Hon. Member: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Mr. Cyr: The scope of the work for this committee is what Parliamentary Counsel has dubbed unprecedented, yet this committee has only met seven times. Given that members leading this committee can't seem to get their act together, to the minister responsible for democratic renewal: when will this government admit they have dropped the ball and extend the timeline so the committee can conduct the proper reviews?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The deadline for this committee of one year and the large task set out for us was known to all members from the beginning. I personally called and spoke with members of the opposite party to talk about how we could deal with such a large task. All members assured me that they were interested in working with us, and then last night they left the table.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Fort McMurray Wildfire Recovery

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo's economic development organization operates under the mantra of BIG, or Bold Innovative Growth. I'm confident that the agency will hold to this ambitious strategy when working to rebuild Fort McMurray area businesses and the regional economy. To the minister of economic development: what supports will your ministry provide directly to regional economic development agencies as they seek to recover from the devastation of their economy and business infrastructure?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for his very pertinent question. Everyone's first focus, of course, is safety and support for Fort McMurray evacuees. You know, as the fire danger decreases and we work toward recovery and rebuilding, we know that there are going to be serious and immediate challenges for many small-business owners and employees. Providing support for small businesses is essential to help our local economy. I can tell you and the hon. member that I'm committed to working with that body along with small businesses in order to get . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Fort McMurray and the oil sands are internationally known and given that the regional municipality has been extremely successful at leveraging other natural attractions in support of a vibrant tourism and recreation sector, I'm concerned with the impact the devastating fires will have on visitor attraction and the economic benefits derived from them. To the minister of tourism: as we rebuild, what short- and long-term impacts do you expect on tourism-related businesses, and how do you plan to mitigate these challenges?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the very important question. Right now, as we know, we are talking about securing and making sure that everything is safe. Going forward I have had the opportunity to speak to the staff in my ministry to see where we can actually go in and help and provide the support that we have available to them. We have, for example, provided accommodation for Fort McMurray Tourism CEO Frank Creasey within the division offices here in Edmonton while he's working.

The whole point, Mr. Speaker, is . . .

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that housing is a critical concern and top of mind for residents displaced by the fire and given that the Wood Buffalo Housing & Development Corporation has been on the cutting edge of affordable housing innovation and would be a natural partner for this government in rebuilding efforts, to the minister of housing: could you outline for this House how your ministry is planning to work with and support Wood Buffalo housing as they seek to provide appropriate and affordable homes for affected residents?

The Speaker: The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I've met with Cynthia Woodford, the vice-president of the property services at Wood Buffalo housing corporation, and I certainly want to commend them on their tremendous efforts in the face of adversity during the evacuation. The seniors' facility there, the Rotary House Lodge, was not destroyed, and there'll still be a lot of work to do to ensure that structure is safe. We are continuing to work with the housing management body regarding the affordable housing units and taking stock of that, and we're very pleased to do that with them, and they're a very strong organization.

Thank you.

Fort McMurray Disaster Relief and Recovery

Mr. Carson: Mr. Speaker, to say that the fire in Fort McMurray has been tragic is an understatement. While the efforts of first responders and fire crews that continue to protect the people in this city have been heroic, I've heard from many people who are anxious about the future and who are unsure if they have a home or a job to return to and are looking for an update on the current state of their homes. To the Deputy Premier: can you update the House on the work that is being done and what still needs to be done before people may return home?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, we have a number of individuals working on the ground and in the air as we speak. Our first focus, of course, is critical infrastructure, so we're actively working to assess and repair the power grid, gas lines, and water treatment facilities and making sure that there's somewhere for refuse to be disposed of. We are sending teams of inspectors in to conduct structural assessments. Of course, once critical infrastructure is addressed, then we'll be able to move forward to businesses and residences.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that it may take a considerable amount of time before evacuees are able to return home for good and given that I've heard from many people who are concerned about making ends meet in the meantime, again to the same minister: what is the minister responsible doing to ensure supports are available to the people in the long term?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, ensuring that we get the preloaded debit cards that we've announced into the hands of those who need them most and to everyone as quickly as possible is a high priority. That has begun already, about 45 minutes ago, in Edmonton, Calgary, and Lac La Biche. We're continuing to work with the Red Cross to bring in additional supports to residents who may not be in those municipalities but in other parts of our province and even our country, and we continue to work with our partners on the ground in Fort McMurray as well as in the receiving centres to make sure that individuals get the supports they need.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that some people who call Fort McMurray home have left the province to find temporary housing with friends or family, again to the Deputy Premier: what supports are available to those people who are waiting to come back home?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, if anyone requires special assistance, joining in the town hall conversations that are happening tonight and tomorrow night and raising your questions would be useful as well as calling 310.4455 if you have any questions that require immediate support. We also want to ensure that everyone who needs the resources the most in terms of those preloaded cards gets them as quickly as possible. We're working with industry so that workers who are returning in short order get the supports they need, both in Fort McMurray and their families, if they're not able to return, in the other communities throughout Alberta and Canada.

Thank you for the question.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Edmonton Emergency Relief Services Society

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to recognize the incredible work being done by the Edmonton Emergency Relief Services Society. For 30 years the EERSS has been assisting the victims of fires and other disasters by providing them with basic supplies, household necessities, furniture, and support. The organization is small but mighty. They took the lead on provincial relief efforts after the 2011 fires in Slave Lake, helping to collect and deliver an airplane hangar full and two warehouses full of relief goods, and supported victims of the 2013 Calgary floods with two full semi-trucks of goods and supplies. They've supported hundreds of victims of local fires, were there for those impacted by the Black Friday tornado in 1987, and even reached across provincial lines to support Manitobans caught in the 1997 Red River floods.

Now they're using their expertise and their experience to lead the charge to collect and distribute essential goods for evacuees from Fort McMurray. In less than a week they have set up two additional donation centres, converted a former department store into a distribution and assistance centre for evacuees, and have taken on the task of organizing hundreds of volunteers to co-ordinate it all.

Mr. Speaker, I don't have the words to convey the importance of the work that the EERSS does. They're the embodiment of the spirit of generosity, compassion, and goodwill that we've seen well up in Albertans in response to this recent disaster. It's my honour to represent the EERSS, and on behalf of this House I would like to extend to them our most profound thanks and appreciation for their commitment to supporting Albertans in need.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

CC4MS Centre for Male Survivors of Sexual Violence

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured and privileged to rise in this House and speak about the Calgary-based not-for-profit Canadian centre for male survivors of sexual violence, also known as CC4MS. This centre is one of three organizations in Canada that specifically offer supports for male survivors of sexual abuse. CC4MS focuses on the healing of adult male survivors, building advocacy, and educating others about this situation in their community.

Last summer I had the opportunity to learn about CC4MS. I was honoured to meet with their hard-working staff and to know about the valuable services they provide to our community. Their mission is to improve the lives of adult male survivors of childhood sexual abuse through treatment, education, advocacy, and research and has helped survivors heal with hope.

Mr. Speaker, CC4MS estimates that about 1 in 6 adult males has been sexually abused by someone they trust. This issue has gained much-needed public attention through advocates such as Sheldon Kennedy. But, unfortunately, we have a long way to go. Adult male survivors are made to face stigma and go through emotional difficulties and traumatic experiences. Often survivors prefer to remain silent. Their silence can lead to substance abuse, disconnect from one's family and one's loved ones, depression, and possibly suicide.

While meeting with CC4MS, I was touched to learn about the services they provide. They shared a moving story of an adult male survivor disconnected from his own family due to the fears of triggering a painful childhood memory.

I want to thank CEO Frances Wright and all the employees and volunteers who help break the silence and provide support to men in need.

Mr. Speaker, we are fortunate to have CC4MS in Calgary. They are an integral part of our community and an asset to us all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Fort McMurray Wildfire First Responders

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What can we say to our first responders and emergency workers who rushed into the inferno in and around Fort McMurray, the very same men and women who continue to provide us with selfless acts of bravery? When others flee for safety, they run towards danger, focusing on the job they were both called to and trained to do, working long, exhausting hours in conditions that at times seemed like hell, as we saw in Fort McMurray, taking rest when they can on lawns.

Emergency call-out, shift work, time away from their families, and the inevitable danger that comes with this way of life are all accepted norms for our first responders. Again I ask: what can we say to our first responders? We can say thank you. To the over 700 men and women who've fought these infernos in northern Alberta: you have our support and deepest gratitude. First responders are living, practical examples of the following text: greater love has no one than to lay down his life for his friends. That is from John 15:13.

I'll close with the Firefighter's Prayer:

When I am called to duty, God,
wherever flames may rage,
give me strength to save a life,
whatever be its age.
Help me embrace a little child before it is too late, or save an older person from the horror of that fate.
Enable me to be alert,
and hear the weakest shout, quickly and efficiently
to put the fire out.
I want to fill my calling, to give the best in me,

to guard my neighbour,
and protect his property.
And if according to Your will
I have to lose my life, please bless with Your protecting hand my children and my wife.

Thank you to all our first responders.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a news article from CBC dated March 17, 2016, referencing McDonald's decision to use self-serve kiosks in their restaurants, entitled McDonald's Plans to Add 1,900 Jobs in Alberta with Revamped Service Model. On Monday during debate over Motion 505 the Member for Calgary-Hays made a reference that some individuals would infer that McDonald's...

Mr. McIver: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. This sounds like debate, not a tabling.

The Speaker: Yes. I agree, hon. member. Table the report, please.

Mr. Sucha: Okay.

The Speaker: Are there any other tablings?

I believe we may have some points of order. Leader of the third party, I believe you had a point of order? Is that correct?

Mr. McIver: Well, I just had the one point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'm in error, hon. member.

I believe that the Government House Leader was first on his point of order.

Point of Order

Questions to Committee Chairs

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe that you dealt with this, although I wasn't able to get it all out, but it basically has to do with the requirement that members are only allowed to ask the chair of a committee with respect to the agenda of the committee, and I believe that you've already covered that today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, as long as the hon. Government House Leader has opened that door of debate, let's walk through it. In point of fact, for someone who is such a learned and long-standing member of the Chamber, he should know the rules best. In fact, on page 506 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice it very clearly indicates that "Questions seeking information about the schedule and agenda of committees may be directed to Chairs of committees."

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm advised that this relates to a ruling which I have already made and provided an explanation to the House for.

Dr. Starke: So why is he making it, then?

The Speaker: He just said that he withdrew the point of order.

Where are we in terms of other points of order? I think it was the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Cooper: Did he have one first?

The Speaker: Is there another point of order that you have? Is it related to the ruling that I made earlier?

Mr. McIver: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Then I believe I've made a ruling. The order stands.

Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, I believe you had a point of order. Is that correct?

Mr. Cooper: I think the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has one on referring to the presence or not of a member, and he would be next.

The Speaker: To the point raised by the Opposition House Leader, I assumed that the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster was speaking to the first decision, that I've already made. My error.

Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, please proceed.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of Members

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we can perhaps expedite the process because I have three points of order but they're all really the same. There was one earlier, and then there were two more later on.

In the response of, initially, the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by two responses from the Minister of Labour, the members made reference to members of both the third-party caucus as well as the Official Opposition caucus leaving yesterday's committee meeting. That is clearly and has traditionally been out of order.

I'll refer you to page 213 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, in which attendance is dealt with at some length. I'll just simply read the last sentence in the first paragraph, which says:

The Speaker has traditionally discouraged Members from signalling the absence of another Member from the House because "there are many places that Members have to be in order to carry out all of the obligations that go with their office."

Mr. Speaker, this is a long-standing tradition of this House, and it, in fact, is in place so that members cannot be unduly called out or embarrassed because at times they are unable to be here, whether it's here in the Chamber or, indeed, in committee meetings.

Mr. Speaker, this was further substantiated on April 3, 1987, in a ruling by Speaker Jerome on a point of privilege that was raised by the Member for Windsor West, Mr. Gray, on the absence of the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister from the House of Commons during question period. He raised it on a point of privilege, but in that ruling Speaker Jerome reiterated and reinforced the long-standing practice within the House that the absence of members is not to be referred to, nor is the fact of whether members leave or come to a committee meeting to be referred to.

I have to say that it is more than a little bit rich that at last night's meeting we were treated to the members of the committee lecturing members of the opposition on their work ethic, and now we have them breaking the rules. [interjection] I'm getting to it, Mr. Speaker. Now we hear them breaking the rules not once, not twice, but three times in succession.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I heard the reference with respect to page 213. Is that correct?

Dr. Starke: That's correct.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Government House Leader, do you have something with respect to the point of order?

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to quote the section which says, "Allusions to the presence or absence of a Member or Minister in the Chamber are unacceptable." That is true, but I don't wish to deal with this just as a technicality because I think there is something much more serious about this and something that I think needs to be addressed in this point of order. And that is to say that the third-party House leader is attempting to use a rule that is intended to protect members who may have other duties from being, I guess, exposed as being absent when, in fact, they have other things to do. That's what it rules on, that there are many places members have to be in order to carry out all of the obligations that go with their office.

What we saw last night, Mr. Speaker, was a shameful walkout of opposition members from the Wildrose Party, the Progressive Conservative Party, and the Alberta Party from the committee because they did not get their way in the committee.

The Speaker: Are we speaking to this particular point of order? Is there additional, new information?

Mr. Mason: I'm not finished, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Is there new information?

Mr. Mason: Am I allowed to make my response to the point of order, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: I would ask, hon. Government House Leader: is there new information? You seem to be referring to the opposition.

Mr. Mason: I'm responding to the point of order made by the third party's House leader, and normally the Speaker would permit me to conclude my remarks.

The Speaker: I would ask you to conclude your remarks. However, is there new information that you are introducing that is related to the point of order?

Mr. Mason: Yes.

The Speaker: And what would that be?

Mr. Mason: It has to do, Mr. Speaker, with the attempt to use a point of order in a way that does not apply. The fact is that opposition members in an apparently premeditated walkout from the committee to make a political point is not the same as a member being absent while they're pursuing other duties. For them to try and use a point of order to hide their irresponsible behaviour is beyond rich. [interjections] Beyond rich. [interjections]

3:00

The Speaker: Government House Leader, I would ask that in the future you stick to the point. The last concluding adjectives were not necessary.

I think I will recognize the leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will say that the repeating of the offence by the Government House Leader is not in itself a defence.

I'll cite 23(h), "makes allegations against another Member," and (i), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member." While I don't have the benefit of the Blues in front of me – and if I turn out to not be a hundred per cent correct on this, I'm happy to be corrected – without that, it seems to me that when the member who is the subject of the point of order was on her feet, she made reference to people not wanting to do their jobs, which is again making allegations against other members and imputing false and unavowed motives to other members.

The Speaker: Opposition House Leader, were you speaking to this point of order?

Mr. Cooper: I was intending on speaking to the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster's point of order. I'm not sure if we're currently on a new point of order.

The Speaker: No, we are not. We are on the point of order of the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. You have additional points to make?

Mr. Cooper: I have additional points to make that are new information.

The Speaker: All right.

Mr. Cooper: And I would like to rise on the leader of the third party's point of order in a moment's time.

I would just like to add that the hon. Government House Leader had made comments with respect to page 216 in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, specifically referring to the Chamber. I might just add that in our standing orders, the ones that the Assembly follows significantly, is Standing Order 1: "The proceedings in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and in all committees of the Assembly shall be conducted according to the following Standing Orders." So if, in fact, a ruling will be made on a reference to House of Commons Procedure and Practice, particularly 216, then it should not only refer to the Chamber but to committee.

Furthermore, I encourage you to review in your decision chapter 20 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice on committees, page 1051, when it speaks about committees not being able to adopt their own rules. In my opinion, it speaks specifically to the rules applying in the Chamber also applying to committee. As such, the Government House Leader's comments with respect to it only applying to the Chamber, I would say, certainly is not the case and referring to the absence of a member both here or in committee is equally as inappropriate.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in past decisions in this House it's been suggested that I maybe should have taken more time to contemplate decisions and consider all of the aspects and not make one too quickly, so I have taken the liberty of taking more time to consider the various arguments that have been put forward. I have looked at – I hear the arguments that are put forward.

I think what has happened, notwithstanding the point that the Opposition House Leader has suggested, is that it seems to me that the balance of the standing orders – well, that may be an umbrella. They are the more specific details, within our standing orders.

I believe what is taking place here is that both sides have used this as an opportunity to talk about their opinions and views of activities that might have taken place within committee. As I understand and interpret both the earlier decisions of this House as well as in Ottawa, committee work stays within the committee until they report back to this House. I think there's been undue exercise of getting that debate in, and that's on both sides, Government House Leader. In fact, we ought to leave that within committee.

I ruled the member out who was answering the question. I accepted the first question from Vermilion-Lloydminster. Hon. member, I determined that the answer you were giving went far beyond schedule and dates and times, so it would be my ruling on this matter that with the decisions I have made thus far, the point of order raised by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster is, in fact, out of order, and I've made a decision.

There are other points of order, I believe. The leader of the third party.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did raise the point of order against a member, and I'll repeat that. While I don't have the benefit of the Blues in front of me, it occurs to me that if I had the Blues, I might find phrases about how the opposition doesn't want to do their job, which under 23(h), (i), and (j) qualifies as imputing motives to another member or making allegations against another member. Without the benefit of the Blues – and there was a lot of noise, but it occurs to me that I heard the member say something to that effect.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have taken the opportunity to ask the hon. member what it was indeed that she said, and she has sent me a note with the words that she used or recollects using. What she said was that instead of rolling up their sleeves and getting to the work at hand, they chose to walk out. In my view, that is the opinion of the hon. member, and she is entitled in this place to express that opinion. I happen to agree with it.

Mr. McIver: Well, I think, Mr. Speaker, the very best argument I could make . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think you've made your point.

Mr. McIver: I think the Government House Leader made it for me.

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. On this particular issue, hon. member, I do not have access to the Blues, either. So on this particular point of order I am going to look at the Blues and, in fact, confirm if that's the case. However, I would defer that decision.

I think that the daily Routine is concluded if I am correct.

A legislative policy committee will convene this afternoon for consideration of the main estimates. Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for Culture and Tourism in the Grassland Room.

[The Assembly adjourned at 3:11 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b)]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, May 12, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us bow our heads and reflect, each in our own way. As we conclude our work for this week and return to our constituencies, let each of us individually reflect on the privilege and the responsibility we have to serve Albertans.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly four students from Northern Lakes College, Athabasca campus, as well as their group leader. I'm so happy that they came up, made the trip to see us at work here in the Legislature, and I kind of hope that we actually give a good impression today. Could Nancy Giese as well as the students – unfortunately, I don't have their names – please rise and receive the customary warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my distinct pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly, from the constituency of Grande Prairie-Smoky and from the communities of Crooked Creek and Ridgevalley, the Rosedale Christian School. Please rise when I say your names. These fine students are accompanied by their teacher, Stephanie Thiessen, and joined by chaperones Arlin and Gloria Loewen – now, you might notice that name, Loewen; Arlin is my cousin, accompanied by his lovely wife, Gloria – and also by some other spectacular people from the community, Eldon and Heather Thiessen and Frank and Debbie Thiessen. I ask that the students please rise also and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my absolute pleasure today to rise and introduce some fabulous constituents from the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. There are 15 students and a number of teachers and parent helpers. They are accompanied by their teacher, Miss Terri Miller. I might just add that they are from the Kneehill Christian School, which is based in the Linden area of the constituency, where you'll find the finest people and the greatest food. I invite them all to rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?

Seeing none, the hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly two family members of one of our current pages, Rowan Ley. Joining us today in the Speaker's gallery are Rowan's grandmother, Beverly Cairns, and his mother, Eva Cairns. Beverly is visiting from Elora, Ontario, and Eva is a constituent of mine from Edmonton-Strathcona and is the managing producer of Catalyst Theatre. They are both here to observe Rowan in his role as page here in the Assembly. I would ask them to please rise, which they've already done, and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Mr. Dave Beninger. Dave is a former senator of the University of Calgary, where he recently completed a degree in political science. He is also a former board member of the Chestermere public library and a dedicated community volunteer. I would ask David to please stand up and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Service Alberta and Minister of Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two guests. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you Courtney Hare, the public policy manager at Momentum. Courtney researches and supports the development of policy that fosters economic inclusion and reduces poverty. Momentum is an award-winning community economic development organization that works with over 4,000 Albertans each year who are living on a low income. Momentum supports participants in getting a good job through trades training, creating their own job through an entrepreneurship program, and managing to save their own money through financial literacy programs. Momentum has worked diligently to address the needs of Albertans who use payday loans. I'm pleased to have Courtney here today when our government introduces legislation to regulate payday lending. I ask that Courtney rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it is also an honour to introduce to you and through you Danielle Klooster, a community mobilizer with the Central Alberta Poverty Reduction Alliance, known as CAPRA. CAPRA is a group of people and organizations working to make a real difference on poverty. Organizations such as United Way, Safe Harbour Society, city of Red Deer, Alberta Health Services, Catholic Social Services, Hope Mission, and many, many others work to spark community action on poverty and advocate for systemic change. Since its inception in 2010 CAPRA has been advocating for food security, support for early childhood development, equal access to services, and restrictions on predatory lending services. I am so glad that she could be here today when our government introduces legislation to regulate payday lending. I ask that Danielle rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you Mr. Aja Loudon. Aja is a muralist, designer, and educator who believes strongly in the values of education and community building. In 2011 Aja created a program called the aerosol academy in order to share his passion for the arts. In addition to volunteering on several other forward-thinking projects, his work can be found here in his home city of Edmonton as well as in Berlin, Barcelona, Prague, and the U.K. I'm happy to also share that some of his recent work, which reflects the history and diversity of Edmonton-Ellerslie, can now also be found on a wall in my constituency office. I'd ask Aja to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you. It's my honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Ms Lisa Mason and Mrs. Angie Schickerowski. They hail from the extraordinary constituency of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, from the Benalto area of my constituency. Mr. Speaker, I don't know if you've ever had the pleasure of going to Benalto, but I can tell you that it has some of the most exceptional people this province has to offer. Both of these ladies have been working very hard to advocate for Benalto's school in their community, and I thank them for that. I ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of guests to introduce to you today if you'll indulge me. First, I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House guests who are joining us here for the introduction of Bill 206 later today: Colonel Stephen Lacroix, base commander, Edmonton, who has witnessed first-hand the effects of posttraumatic stress disorder on our Canadian soldiers and veterans; Deputy Fire Chief Keven Lefebvre, representing Edmonton fire rescue services; Helena Gillespie and Jerris Popik from the iSTEP program of the Edmonton MFRC, along with their mother, Lois Hawryluk; Julian Daly, the executive director of Boyle Street co-op services; Magda Guevara, intake co-ordinator at Multicultural Health Brokers Co-op; and Elisha Astles, an advocate for mental health and addiction supports for individuals and their families, and her husband, Darren Astles, a Canadian Forces military veteran. I'd ask all my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

Go ahead.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd also like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my wonderful constituency staff. Kahye Dubow is a current practicum student from NorQuest College, the social work program. He has been amazing at learning quickly how a constituency office works and brings laughter to our office. Cassidy Green is my summer part-time employee, and she was my previous practicum student from MacEwan University's social work program. We are thrilled that she remains with us as she is an exceptional asset to our office. Heather Belanger is my full-time constituency manager. She has been keeping our office running and has been a valuable member of our team Edmonton-Castle Downs since August of last year. I'd ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three individuals from my amazing constituency of Sherwood Park: Chris and Dick Swaren and Shirley Mireau. Today is International Awareness Day for Chronic Immunological and Neurological Diseases, which include chronic fatigue syndrome and fibromyalgia. Chris has been living with fibromyalgia for many years and is the current president of the Fibromyalgia Society of Edmonton and area. Dick is a past board member, and Shirley is a current board member. I would like to ask Chris, Dick, and Shirley to please rise to receive the traditional warm welcome from the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Alison Azer. With Alison are her sister Elizabeth van Egteren and her brother Alan Jeffrey. Alison grew up in the great riding of St. Albert, and I had the pleasure of meeting with her earlier today. Alison is the mother of four young Canadian children, aged 11, nine, seven, and three, all of whom have deep roots in Alberta and were abducted by their father in August of 2015. The children are now believed to be in Iran. I ask my fellow members of the Legislature to support Ms Azer by spreading the word of her plight and that we stand in support of her tireless efforts to ensure the safe return of her children to Canada. I'd ask all three to please rise and receive the welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is National Nursing Week all across our country, and I'm honoured to have a number of individuals to introduce today. We are joined by Heather Smith, the president of the United Nurses of Alberta, as well as Jane Sustrik, Daphne Wallace, and Karen Craik. Also with us is Cathy Giblin with the College and Association of Registered Nurses of Alberta, also known as CARNA. I'd ask that those individuals please rise. I just also want to acknowledge a number of other nurses who show that everyday nurses show unwavering determination. These four nurses work in Fort McMurray, and I am honoured to introduce them. They are Naomi Broderick, Michelle Warren, JoAnn Cluney, and Heather Young. I ask that you please stand as our House shows our appreciation for your work and especially your determination over the last week.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly several guests who are joining us today to remember Robinson Koilpillai, whose life I'll be speaking to more in my member's statement later. There's a sizable contingency of guests, so unfortunately I won't have time to name them all. I will note, however, for the interests of this Chamber that among our guests today are Ardis Kamra, the granddaughter of former Premier Charles Stewart, and also Allan Sheppard, who authored a biography of Robinson Koilpillai a few years ago. I'd ask all my guests now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other guests today? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly Mr. Cole Hogan. I had the honour this morning of meeting with Cole and discussing, among other things, advanced education, which is under my portfolio. Cole is the advocacy co-ordinator – he's held this position for two weeks now – for the Alberta Students' Executive Council, or ASEC, and works with trades and technical institutions' students' associations. Cole, would you now please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ministerial Statements

Fort McMurray and Area Wildfire Update

Ms Larivee: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to provide an update on the wildfire situation in Fort McMurray and the supports we are providing to evacuees. Last week we requested federal assistance in the form of support from the Canadian armed forces. That support was readily provided. Armed forces personnel helped in the evacuation of threatened communities. They provided supplies to isolated First Nations communities, and they assisted in the transportation of essential firefighting equipment and personnel. But now that we are moving out of the emergency phase and into the recovery phase, our Provincial Operations Centre in collaboration with the regional emergency operations centre has determined that armed forces assistance is not required at this time. I would like to personally thank all the armed forces members who have supported Alberta during this very difficult time. They were here when we needed them most, and we all say thank you.

Mr. Speaker, our government's focus continues to be on meeting the needs of evacuees. Yesterday we began the distribution of debit cards for those evacuees. As of noon today we have provided more than $12 million in assistance to approximately 11,000 people. As expected, there were significant lineups at the four distribution centres, and today we have added a second location at NAIT for evacuees to pick up their debit cards.

Now I wish to address a question that I know is top of many people's minds, and that is: when can people go home? I know how stressful it is to leave everything behind and to be away from your home for a prolonged period of time. It was five years ago this Sunday that I was forced to flee my home in Slave Lake, and I know how stressful that time is and how hard it is to be away. But, Mr. Speaker, safety is our first priority, and right now Fort McMurray is not yet safe. Until it is, people cannot go home.

There are a number of things we are working diligently to make happen to make the community safe. We are working for the complete restoration of essential services like natural gas, water, and sewer and ensuring that there is a clean, working hospital with functioning equipment and staff. I know this is not the news that Fort McMurray and area residents would like hear today, but this is what we need to do to ensure their safety.

The good news is that there are a lot of people already working in the community to make it safe. Power and data services have been restored to the downtown area, and we have damage assessment teams on-site. They inspected 520 structures yesterday from the outside, not entering residences, so we are beginning to develop a clearer picture of exactly what we're dealing with in terms of damage. Insurance assessors are going in today, and they, too, will be assessing from the outside, without entering people's homes.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the firefighters and other emergency personnel who continue to battle the wildfires. I thank those who have gone into the community of Fort McMurray to begin the hard work of making the community safe for re-entry. And I want to thank the residents of Fort McMurray, Anzac, Gregoire Lake Estates, and the Fort McMurray First Nation for their patience. I know it's been a difficult time and that it's hard to wait, but they have been patient. We need to ask them to be patient a little while longer while we make things safe for them to return home. It is a big job, but there are a lot of people working hard, and we will get the job done as quickly as possible.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Mr. Clerk, would you please stop the clock.

There was a point of order raised yesterday that was deferred, and I would like to deliver my ruling with respect to that point of order.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

The Speaker: Hon. members, with respect to the point of order raised yesterday by the hon. leader of the third party, I've now had the opportunity to review the Alberta Hansard and to conduct some research on the matter. At page 888 of yesterday's Alberta Hansard the leader of the third party made the argument that comments made by the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville constituted allegations and imputed false and unavowed motives against another member under Standing Order 23(h) and (i).

Neither the leader of the third party nor I had access to the Blues at the time, but on review of the Hansard at page 882, it appears that the relevant comments made by the member were that "the opposition members, instead of rolling up their sleeves and getting to the work at hand last night, chose to walk out of yesterday's meeting." The remarks made by the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville referred to actions taken by certain members of the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee during its meeting on May 10, 2016. This seems to be more of a dispute as to the facts or a difference of opinion but not a point of order.

I also note that footnote 148 on page 614 of the second edition of House of Commons Procedure and Practice provides that Speakers have declined to extend the prohibition to references to the absence of Members from the Assembly to absences of members from committee meetings.

The more important point is to the exchange that took place. It was not in order in the first place as the exchange involved a committee proceeding. During the exchange I cautioned both the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster and the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville to adhere to the rule of this Assembly that questions may be put to the chairs of committees but that such questions may only deal with the timetable or the schedule of a committee or a committee's agenda and nothing further.

As indicated in the House of Commons Procedure and Practice at page 506:

Questions seeking information about the schedule and agenda of committees may be directed to Chairs of committees. Questions to the Ministry or to a committee Chair concerning the proceedings or work of a committee, including its order of reference, may not be raised.

Furthermore, Speaker Kowalski on May 1, 1997, on the matter of asking questions to private members, as noted on pages 319 and 320 of Alberta Hansard from that day, said that "questions may be asked directly of members who chair committees of the Assembly, but this would be a narrow range as these committees are not part of government."

Although there is no point of order here, I want to remind all hon. members that the purpose of question period is to seek information about government policy and not to debate what has transpired before a committee of the Assembly. I will be more vigilant in enforcing this rule in the days to come.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Wildfire Evacuees in Smaller Municipalities

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The cost in human impact of wildfires in Fort McMurray has been overwhelming. The stress and anxiety of the evacuation is being felt by many. The population of Lac La Biche doubled as they welcomed evacuees with open arms. While news of financial assistance arrived yesterday, several of these small towns and communities will quickly be drained of basic commodities like food, clothing, and water. What is the Premier doing to make sure that the Provincial Operations Centre is delivering these services and supporting these towns housing evacuees?

Ms Notley: Thank you very much for that question. Let me begin by thanking the people of Lac La Biche for the incredible generosity that they have shown to the evacuees of Fort McMurray. They have reached out, as the member has rightly pointed out, to a level that is well beyond their per capita expectation. They have welcomed people in a way that's been extremely helpful.

We were pleased to be advised yesterday that the financial assistance cards were pretty much completely distributed through the reception centre at Lac La Biche yesterday. I'll have more to say . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Communities like Boyle, Athabasca, Bonnyville, Wandering River are all struggling to keep up with supplies. If there's no food or clothes to buy, debit cards just don't help. They are trying their best to co-ordinate between each other and keep their spirits high, but many are frustrated that they are not seeing clear communication from the POC. Volunteers have done amazing work, but they need direction and help. Will the Premier commit to working with these communities to ensure that Albertans are kept aware of the needs of these evacuees?

Ms Notley: Again, thank you very much for that question. As well, let me please extend my thanks to the additional communities that were mentioned by the member opposite. They, too, have been reaching out to their neighbours to the north and supporting them. I know that it's been a lot of work.

I'm advised this morning by officials that additional communication is going on from the Provincial Operations Centre with officials and leaders and representatives from those communities to find ways to support their specific needs going forward. We're aware that they are being stressed because of their size, and we're looking at a number of different options to perhaps facilitate movement but also to provide . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night through efforts of the opposition we found that the POC is now making daily deliveries to Boyle. It's nice to know that the members opposite have their finger on the pulse of the situation.

Evacuees are spread as far and wide as Grande Prairie to Medicine Hat, and many of their situations remain just as desperate. We know the Red Cross is able to provide immediate e-transfers to all evacuees registered. Can the Premier explain why the government isn't able to also do e-transfers to evacuees in more remote areas of the province, who aren't able to access or can't stand in long lines?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. It's a good question. We deliberated on whether that was a process that we thought would work for the delivery of our funds to people. At the time we determined that it was a very large transfer that the Red Cross was doing. It was the first time that they had done one anywhere close to that magnitude, so the certainty of it was not entirely clear.

As well, we have obligations with respect to accountability to the people of Alberta and the Auditor General in terms of how we assure that we can track who got what. That being said, we are working directly now with the Red Cross to find ways in which we can work with them to help people who are . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Opioid Use Prevention

Mr. Barnes: The fentanyl crisis deserves the full attention of this government, and those on the front line need access to as many resources as possible. In British Columbia a public health emergency allows first responders, emergency room staff, and the coroner's office to provide the time and place of overdose, which drug was used, how it was taken, and details about the patient. Getting this information into the hands of public health authorities and to the public in Alberta would save lives. To the Premier: will you commit to putting a public health emergency into place to allow for this crucial sharing of information?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. The Alberta act and the B.C. act are radically different. Our department has looked into whether or not a public health emergency would accomplish the goal of giving us additional tools with which to deal with this crisis, and it has been determined that it does not. What a public health emergency would do is allow us to quarantine people against their wishes, seize private property, and enter into private homes without a warrant, which, frankly, won't help with an addiction problem.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, it isn't just fentanyl that is killing Albertans. There's an opioid crisis. To get an understanding of what needs to be done, we need to know how many overdoses there have been from heroin, from morphine, from hydromorphone, from oxycodone, and even from W-18. Only then will we get a clear picture of the crisis and how to combat it, including partnering with Health and law enforcement. Will the Premier commit to releasing these statistics on a continual basis so resources can be best allocated?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Our department is working very closely with our partners in Justice and with the medical examiner to ensure that we have timely and up-to-date statistics. We are also recognizing that this goes beyond just fentanyl, that we do indeed have an opioid crisis in our province, which is why our government is also moving forward on opioid replacement therapy treatment options as well as support for detox beds throughout our province.

Mr. Barnes: Hearing the Associate Minister of Health say only yesterday that for the first three months of this year numbers seem to have stabilized was concerning. I'd say that this crisis is anything but stable. It's growing. Here are the numbers to date even though medical professionals tell me they are low. Sixty-nine deaths in the first three months of 2016 mean we are on track for 276 deaths this year. That's higher than in 2015, Mr. Speaker, when the crisis was first addressed. This government needs a wake-up call. What concrete steps, not just vague promises of a fentanyl strategy . . .

The Speaker: Thank you hon. member.
The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Indeed, any death due to an overdose is a tragedy, and our hearts go out to all the families and loved ones who are affected by this crisis. Our government is moving forward on the opioid dependency treatment that I outlined. We're going to be opening a clinic within Cardston very shortly and are working with partners across the province to ensure that we are able to offer those treatments around our province. Additionally, I was pleased to announce yesterday that Albertans can now access take-home naloxone kits without a prescription and that we've worked with our partners and pharmacies to ensure that family members can pick up those kits for their loved ones.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. Third main question.

Carbon Levy and Health Care Costs

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, today we woke up to more bad news on the NDP carbon tax. Whether it's driving your car, heating your home, or buying groceries, we know this carbon tax will hit our families hard, but now we know that it will be sucking dollars out of the health care system, away from patients. The carbon tax will impact the delivery of health care in our province, and the ones paying the price will be everyday Albertans. Why does the NDP insist on taxing hospitals and patients with their new carbon tax?

Ms Phillips: Well, leaving aside whether this is, in fact, a supplemental, I will provide the hon. member with the following information. Of course, the future carbon levy is a price on emissions. That's why we'll be investing in initiatives to improve efficiency, and an energy efficiency agency will be designed to be accessible to all Albertans and all sectors. That's because climate change is real, Mr. Speaker, and we are taking actions to address it.

The Speaker: Just for the record that was a main question.
First supplemental.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The increased carbon tax will mean less: less for surgeries and less for front-line workers. The spike in heating costs alone is the same as taking away 240 hip surgeries or 60 nurses. That doesn't even include the added costs for our emergency vehicles, increased food costs for patients, and sterilizing gowns and linens. Will the Premier commit to completing an economic impact assessment for how damaging the carbon tax will be on health care before plunging ahead with her plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, the future carbon levy is a price on emissions. That's why we'll be investing in initiatives to improve efficiency, which will then reduce carbon use and therefore emissions costs. It's very basic. It's both basic economics and science. It is an initiative that will encourage economic diversification and address climate change. We know that neither thing is being taken seriously by the Official Opposition.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, I've outlined direct costs on the health care system that will increase because of the carbon tax, but there will also be ripple effects across the whole industry and the whole province. The price of fuel for life-saving services like STARS and HALO, that depend on donations, will rise at a time when their donors also have less money. Lodges and seniors' facilities that run on a nonprofit basis will also be paying the price under this carbon tax. Can the Premier at least provide exemptions for these charities and nonprofits in the health care industry who will be so negatively impacted by her carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, this province will be investing $645 million in energy efficiency efforts over the next five years. That efficiency programming will be designed to be accessible for all Albertans in all sectors. Every single dollar from the future price on carbon will be put to work right here in Alberta creating jobs, reducing pollution, promoting greater energy efficiency, and diversifying our economy.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Government Spending

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the oil sands are trying to return to normal, so must we in the House. A budget is on the table. In question period the seniors minister complained that the previous government left a billion dollars in deferred maintenance behind. Meanwhile on page 89 of the current government's business plan it states the NDP will make zero improvements on the percentage of government-owned buildings in good or poor condition as far out as 2019. To the Premier: was your minister's complaint insincere, or is she that unaware of her own files?

Mr. Mason: This government has invested significant new money in repairs and capital maintenance of our infrastructure. There was a vast deficit left. Frankly, despite the increase, Mr. Speaker, we're barely at the point where we're not seeing further deterioration in our extensive holdings of infrastructure, both in Transportation and other areas. We were left with a very big problem by the previous government, and we're fixing it.

Mr. McIver: An admission by the government that they're spending a lot more and getting no results actually doesn't help.

In Labour estimates the minister said that the Health and Finance ministers would be saving money on labour. In question period the Finance minister confirmed this, saying, "We have negotiations that'll be taking place . . . with all of our unionized people, and we're looking for improvements there." To the Finance minister. Alberta's unionized, publicly paid employees deserve to know your government's intentions before they go to the bargaining table. Are you planning on saving the money you talked about by offering less pay, fewer people, or just cutting benefits?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's concern about this, and of course we are going to take our obligations to negotiate on behalf of Albertans and Alberta taxpayers very seriously. But we are also going to respect the negotiation process, and we are going to negotiate at the table with the people on the other side, not in the media and not in the House.

Mr. McIver: Well, that's funny, Mr. Speaker, when the minister is constantly saying in the House that they're going to save money on it.

Unlike the NDP government, ATB customers have to pay back the money they borrow. In Finance estimates the minister would not admit how much more interest ATB will pay to get the money that they lend out to Albertans due to the lost triple-A credit rating. To the minister: due to your lack of spending control, your $60 billion debt with no repayment plan, and not having their backs, shouldn't you tell Albertans how much more ATB will be forced to charge, or will they just earn less money as a result of these failed policies?

Mr. Mason: This government is investing in jobs. It's investing in diversifying our economy, getting people back to work, Mr. Speaker. We don't make any apology for doing that. We have serious investments in job creation. We have tax credits. We are moving forward to build the infrastructure this province needs, which the previous government ignored.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mental Health Services for Wildfire Evacuees and First Responders

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, on Monday I asked the Health minister what her plans were for increasing the capacity of Alberta's mental health services in light of this serious recession and a massive increase in need due to Fort McMurray fires. She indicated that she was in consultation with various experts and groups, so today I'd like to know the plan. To the minister: can the minister tell us, based on past disasters, what increase is expected in needs for mental health services?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I want to reiterate my previous statement on this issue. Supporting the mental health of evacuees and first responders is a fundamental piece of our recovery process. We are committed to ensuring that there are appropriate resources in place that meet the needs of each of these populations. At this point it is difficult to speculate on a percentage increase, but I want to assure the member opposite that we will be making sure that the necessary resources are available, and we are continuing to work with our partners to ensure those are in place.

Dr. Swann: Well, it doesn't sound like we have very many facts based on past disasters, Mr. Speaker.

Could the minister tell the House what specific plans she has for providing expanded mental health services?

Ms Payne: Thank you to the member for the question. In terms of specific plans, in the immediate term we have added an addictions and mental health night shift at the Lac La Biche Bold Center. AHS mental health support is also located at each of the debit card disbursement sites in Edmonton, Calgary, and Lac La Biche. Mental health workers continue to work at each of the reception centres, providing support to evacuees. A reminder yet again: anyone can call the mental health support line at any time at 1.877.303.2642.

Dr. Swann: Let's try another tack, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell us how she plans on tracking and evaluating the services to prepare for the next disaster?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, we've evaluated the things that have happened in previous disasters, and we are keeping close track of the things that we are doing now to see what's working and where there's room for improvement. Alberta Health Services is working closely with the emergency response team to ensure that all supports are available, especially for first responders. I want to take this opportunity to again thank all those Albertans who have responded on the front lines and in their communities to cope with this very difficult situation.

Fort McMurray Wildfire Impact on Justice Services

Ms Woollard: Mr. Speaker, the wildfire in Fort McMurray has impacted so many Albertans in so many different ways, including justice services. To the Minister of Justice: how are court services being impacted?

The Speaker: The hon. Justice minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Well, of course, when we had the evacuation in Fort McMurray, court personnel were taken out as well. We've had a number of personnel affected, and those people are being paid in the interim while they are evacuated away from the courthouse. Currently it's the case that we have some video appearances occurring for people who are in secure custody. People who are not in secure custody are having their matters set over till later.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister for the update. We are extremely happy to hear that everyone was able to evacuate safely. Given that firefighters continue their battle and that damage assessment is ongoing, to the same minister: what is happening with cases that were scheduled to be heard at the Fort McMurray courthouse?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We know that people who have been forced to evacuate Fort McMurray are very stressed out about their current lives, and having a court case doesn't make that any easier. It's currently the case that people who are in secure custody are having their matters heard via CCTV from other locations. They were initially in Fort Chipewyan, but I believe they have moved to Edmonton subsequently. In addition, there are a number of people who have out-of-custody matters. Those matters are being rescheduled by the court, and people are best to contact the Court of Queen's Bench or the Alberta Provincial Court, depending on where their matter was scheduled.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we've heard that critical pieces of infrastructure such as the hospital are still intact, can the Minister of Justice update the House on the current state of Fort McMurray's courthouse?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. It's my understanding, at last update, that the courthouse has not been affected. Of course, as further inspection occurs within Fort McMurray, more information may become known, and I will commit to get back to the House with that information.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday I presented a motion in this House asking the government to postpone further implementation of their $15 minimum wage until it can be determined what effect it would have on employment rates and the price of goods and services. Even though their own advisers told them last year that further study was needed, the government rejected this motion. To the Minister of Labour: why won't the government commit to a review of the evidence surrounding the minimum wage hikes?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is reviewing the current impacts of the minimum wage hikes and is beginning to engage in a consultation plan. It is important to remember that 37,000 Albertans who are 55 years old or older are earning $15 or less when they go to work. This is not an issue about teenagers and children; this is real Albertans with real families, and that is why we are moving forward with our consultation plan and our plan to implement $15 an hour minimum wage.

Mr. Taylor: I'm not sure how it's a review if they're going to ensure that it's going to be $15.

Given that existing research shows that raising the minimum wage would kill jobs, which will put more people in line at the food bank and hurt low-income families, and given that the Journal of Labor Research says, "minimum wages are poorly targeted as an anti-poverty device," why does the government insist on clinging blindly to ideology when their risky economic experiments will hurt low-income earners and families?

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that research shows it does not impact jobs, our consultations will help to determine the size and pace of future increases as well as discuss with impacted stakeholders the possible strategies [interjections] . . .

The Speaker: Are we at second supplemental?

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, I was still responding if I may.

The Speaker: I thought your time had elapsed. No. I'm sorry. Go ahead.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Possible strategies to mitigate the impact are one of the things we will be discussing during our consultations. IMF director Christine Lagarde has said that a minimum wage increase would be very useful to kick-start growth in our economy. This is an expert, and we are listening.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you. Will you table that research?

Given that Alberta has the second-highest take-home minimum wage in Canada before the current government started hiking taxes and the minimum wage and considering those earning a $15-an-hour wage will pay more taxes on top of being hit with extra costs for food, shelter, transportation under the carbon tax, will a minimum wage actually mean more money in people's pockets under the NDP's high tax regime, and will you table your results?

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, increasing the wage that people make at their daily job will put more money in their pockets. Currently in Alberta nearly 1 in 3 people who use the food bank are working for a living. Alberta has the highest percentage of working people who have to use the food bank. These are very real statistics that are important to discuss, and we look forward to discussing them with Albertans during our consultation process.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Fort McMurray Disaster Relief and Recovery

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The outpouring of generosity by Albertans continues to showcase what makes Alberta great. Every little bit counts. With the $10 here, $20 there mentality, donations to the Red Cross have exceeded $67 million. That's $761 per person displaced due to the Fort McMurray fire. To the Finance minister: what specific levers in addition to prepaid cards is the government providing to nonprofits to expedite all physical and monetary donations?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, there has been a tremendous outpouring of support and donations to the Red Cross from right across this country. We're tremendously thankful to Albertans and all Canadians for that generosity. The Red Cross has a long history of supporting other nonprofits in terms of the work that they do in the communities. We continue to expect that the Red Cross will share that generosity with other nonprofits in the Fort McMurray area to ensure support for those organizations and the people in those communities.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Charity Intelligence Canada has said that the front-line services will require significant support as we move into recovery and rehabilitation into the coming weeks and months and given that the logistical challenges may be complicated by unplanned ventures and bottlenecks of Fort McMurray's transportation infrastructure on re-entering, to the Transportation minister: what plan is being developed to ensure that transportation routes, scheduling of returns, and the thousands of individual humanitarian missions can all be accommodated in a safe manner?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to assure the House and the hon. member that the Transportation department in conjunction with all other ministries and other agencies is working to ensure a safe return for the people of Fort McMurray. The first key thing to do is to make sure that structures are safe, roads are safe. Under very difficult conditions during the fire we were able to check, for example, the bridge across the Athabasca River to ensure that it could accommodate the subsequent evacuation of up to 25,000 people who had fled north. That was accomplished, and we are going to also work carefully to make sure that the return is safe.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this outpouring of support and generosity is not limited to this province or indeed within the borders of our country and given that international sources are coming forward by offering financial support to assist in the relief and humanitarian efforts, to the trade minister: how, specifically, are you co-ordinating donations that come from foreign countries, both enterprises and government, and where will this assistance have the greatest impact?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. He's quite right to point out that the outpouring of generosity has occurred not just from all corners of our province and from all corners of our country but, quite frankly, we've had a number of offers for support from our international partners. I've spoken with some of the representatives myself. My ministry is co-ordinating the donations that are being offered through our ministry to help the residents of Fort McMurray. On behalf of the government of Alberta we thank all of our international friends, whether they've donated firefighter support, like from the country of Mexico, to other countries who have offered their support.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Motor Vehicle User Charges

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Wildrose has asked the NDP about the use of tolls on provincial highways, and the Minister of Transportation has taken tolls off the table for now. That being said, the city of Edmonton is openly musing about bringing in toll roads, and the mayor of Edmonton is recently quoted as saying: we don't have the means to charge road tolls at this point. Although tolls may be off the agenda for the Minister of Transportation, is the Minister of Municipal Affairs preparing to grant highway toll powers to the municipalities under the MGA?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There was incredibly tremendous consultation done on the MGA right across this province with so many stakeholders. As a result of that, there was the what-we-heard document online that covered the key topics we were going to be speaking about. Based on what was heard from that time, we came up with some direction in terms of that, and I look forward to introducing the bill and having conversation about that at that time.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that two weeks ago at the Alberta Motor Transport Association's annual convention one of Alberta Transportation's senior assistant deputy ministers mused about bringing in a vehicle kilometre travel tax, a per-kilometre charge to motorists based on the distances they travel, to the Minister of Transportation: is your department serious about a per-kilometre charge for the trucks and vehicles ordinary Albertans drive every day just to live their lives, and will the minister refute his ADM?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member and the House that there is no consideration being given to the use of the types of taxes and so on that he's proposing. I think if the assistant deputy minister was blue skying it and talking about different possibilities, it's a good thing because we need to look at all the ideas, but that's not an idea that we are going to be pursuing.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are worried. Given that the NDP increased fuel tax from 9 cents a litre to 13 cents and now their carbon tax will increase the tax on fuel to as much as 21 cents a litre in less than two years, with all these potential new costs from tolls and a vehicle kilometre travel tax on top of existing fuel taxes and a carbon tax, does the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance believe the only way to balance the NDP budget is by taxing Albertans more and more?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the hon. member ought not to ask for whom the bell tolls because it tolls for him. We have no intention of introducing tolls or per-kilometre charges or any of those other things. With respect to the price of fuel . . . [interjection] Thank you. If I could have my time. With respect to the price of fuel, I'll remind all hon. members that the price of gasoline a couple of years ago was about $1.20. It's now about 90 cents.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Building Codes and Standards

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs. My constituents have raised the growing issue of imported steel-frame buildings that do not comply with CSA certification standard A660. The concern is that substandard buildings may collapse under stress, risking occupants. This issue has been brought to the attention of many officials, yet it seems that nothing has been done either to prevent uncertified buildings from being constructed in Alberta or to enforce a 13-year-old building code. Due to the confusion and complicated multijurisdictional nature of this issue, will the minister take the lead to correct this deficiency?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we're tremendously committed to the safety of Albertans. That's certainly one of the primary goals of this government in terms of moving forward. At the time that I became minister and, in fact, at the time we were elected, many of the codes were incredibly delayed in terms of adopting. We've moved forward with updating and adopting many of the safety codes. One of the things we continue to work with is being responsive to the current changes in terms of what is out there, and we continue to work to ensure the safety of Albertans and update those codes to reflect the current situation of the day.

Mr. Orr: Thank you to the minister. Given that Alberta businesses manufacture steel frame structures in compliance with building codes but find that imported products have different rules and the lack of enforcement is hurting our already struggling economy and given that purchasers of these structures lose their investment when the product fails and are not able to claim insurance for structures not certified by Canadian engineering standards, what is this government going to do to protect Alberta businesses and consumers?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think in the question there the member is asking for more regulations, which seems to be counter to what the Official Opposition asked for. I guess this is kind of a tax or spend day. We're not quite sure. Quite frankly, number one, Alberta is bound by our trade regulations that are negotiated through the federal government, so we have to work within those parameters. We want to ensure, obviously, that buildings are made with the highest quality of materials and adhere to existing regulations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not more regulation. It's just enforcing what's already there.

Given that in the recent Municipal Affairs business plan outcome 2 is for stronger systems of standards ensuring Albertans are safe and that 2.2 calls for effective municipal enforcement of safety codes and building codes and given that on January 8 the Minister of Municipal Affairs affirmed that a safety bulletin would be issued but it has not yet been given, will this government follow through with their promise and issue a bulletin to the municipalities and the inspection agencies to ensure that buildings must have the proper A660 certification?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, in terms of enforcement, in terms of municipal authorities enforcing that, there's actually been somewhat of a challenge across the province. Some areas have it; some areas don't. So I was proud to bring forward the Alberta safety codes authority to help with enforcement right across the province, and I continue to work with the Safety Codes Council here in this province to ensure that we roll out safety standards in a timely fashion and we work together to enforce them right across the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Capital Infrastructure Planning

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know first-hand that developing an effective transportation strategy needs input from both department and industry. You said yesterday that you're consulting with all representative stakeholders that help create an effective transportation strategy. To the Minister of Transportation: what kinds of advice have you received from industry and Albertans, and when will you table this information that you have collected?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It is true that we're doing extensive consultation with stakeholders, with municipalities in particular, municipal organizations, and organizations involved in transportation on a wide range of subjects, from urban transportation, from LRT. We are talking to people who are in the motor transport business, people that build and maintain roads and other important transportation infrastructure, and we're going to use all of that information to inform the development of a long-range transportation plan, which should be ready within . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that you say that you've consulted with municipal leaders from all over Alberta and given that you still have not committed one way or another on continuing with P3s, to the minister: what did these Albertans say about public-private partnerships?

Mr. Mason: Well, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, with some certainty that certain school boards were very dissatisfied with the operation of P3 schools under the previous government. We know that these projects are very expensive. We know that we undertake very lucrative long-term contracts for the maintenance and the operation of our infrastructure, and that has to be carefully evaluated to make sure that we're getting the best value for money.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that you say that one of your goals is to integrate innovation in your transportation strategy and given that entrepreneurs have created billions of dollars in opportunities for Albertans through access to jobs in Fort McMurray, to the Minister of Infrastructure: will you allow industry and partners in Fort McMurray the opportunity to rebuild their infrastructure?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, we're working with all stakeholders and people from the Fort McMurray area. We want to make sure that we do the job as quickly as possible, that we do it right, and if it's possible and the conditions are appropriate, we certainly want to engage local business first.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Fort McMurray Health and Environmental Issues

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our hearts continue to go out to the people of Fort McMurray. In addition to the stress of being asked to leave their homes at a moment's notice, their minds are now turning to what work will be needed to get them back. We know that the fire has had an impact on key infrastructure such as electricity delivery, and of course we need this to operate large household appliances. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what is being done to help get those necessities that are needed to run a healthy household, like fridges and freezers, back online?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an important question, and it underscores the importance of securing critical infrastructure before people can return home. There are teams on the ground in Fort McMurray working on these problems as we speak. When people do get back to their homes – you know, most homeowners' and renters' insurance policies cover fridges and freezers, so most people will not need to clean out their fridge and freezer but can keep them closed and remove them although I would encourage people to confirm with their insurers in advance, of course.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning the smoke from Fort McMurray actually just found its way to Fort Saskatchewan. Given that air quality is critical to the health and safety of the residents of Fort McMurray and given that smoke from the Fort McMurray wildfire has a significant impact on air quality, can the Minister of Municipal Affairs update the House on this important health issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our first priority is the health and safety of evacuees and of the first responders on the scene there. There have been severe air quality warnings in the Fort McMurray region due to the ongoing fires. Currently four mobile air quality monitoring units have been installed. The Wood Buffalo Environmental Association has also provided an additional two mobile units. This is in addition to the existing air monitoring network. Additional air monitoring needs will be evaluated and assessed to determine priority resources. In the meantime we take the steps needed to keep our first responders safe.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we should do everything we can to fight this wildfire and given that the opposition has suggested that there is a more affordable option for fire retardant than what is currently being used, could the minister report to the House on efforts officials have made to explore that option?

Ms Larivee: Mr. Speaker, all the resources available are being deployed in and around Fort McMurray to fight this wildfire. We tender contracts for the fire retardant chemicals we use. We only use qualified products approved for use in Canada and certified by the United States Department of Agriculture Forest Service's qualified products list. In the future there may be additional products approved for use from different vendors, and we will evaluate them. I want to assure Albertans that we get the best possible fire suppression products to fight this and all other wildfires. We currently have long-term contracts in place for long-term fire retardant and class A foam.

Energy Policies

Mr. MacIntyre: Mr. Speaker, solar power producers would have to sell power to the Alberta power pool at $90 a megawatt hour, wind would have to sell their power to the power pool at $65 per megawatt hour, and in stark contrast natural gas and coal generators are bidding their power into the pool at zero, taking whatever price they can get in our competitive power market. In estimates we asked the Energy minister how Albertans would continue to have affordable power given these market realities, and she had no answers. You've had several days, Minister. Do you have an answer now?

The Speaker: The minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have tasked, of course, the Alberta Electric Systems Operator to consult with industry experts to recommend a program that will bring on renewable generation, keep costs low, and ensure the reliability of electricity. That program will be developed throughout 2016 and for the first RFP by the end of 2016. Of course, the stakeholder consultation has now wrapped up, and stakeholder feedback is on the AESO website.

Mr. MacIntyre: Again no answer.

Given that having Albertan hockey moms trade in their minivans for $150,000 Teslas does not result in overall cost savings and given that a self-employed journeyman isn't about to trade in his pickup for a Smart car that will never pull his tool trailer and since travelling long distances is an Albertan reality and not a discretionary choice, what behaviour exactly does this government think is available for modification under this punitive carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our government is committed to ensuring that efficiency programming will be designed to be accessible for all Albertans and all sectors. In addition, we are moving forward with voluntary partnerships with the Alberta Motor Association, for example, to ensure that we can take action on air quality as well as reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

The Speaker: Second supplemental, please.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you. Well, that was swing two, strike two.

Given that this government has yet to provide any monetary assessment for any cost increases on the average Albertan family outside of fuel costs for the vehicle and given the numerous media reports of increased costs for bussing children to school, heating classrooms, hospitals, businesses, and administrative buildings, can this government table one – even one – impact study that they've conducted assessing the economic consequences of a carbon tax on Albertan families? Even one? Just one?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I have tabled the Choose Wisely report, which is the latest report of the Ecofiscal Commission, in which there is an analysis of various carbon pricing schemes and their effects on the various provinces, including an assessment of what has happened since 2008 in British Columbia. Of course, we have chosen to invest the carbon levy into the economy, creating jobs, ensuring diversification, and reducing emissions, therefore reducing overall costs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Support for Wildfire-affected Vulnerable Albertans

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo rapidly evacuated its 80,000 residents from Fort McMurray, many vulnerable people were part of that number. Seniors, for instance, are a group that we are particularly concerned about, and that includes those who reside in the local lodge as well as seniors who are able to live independently with assistance from the community and home care. To the seniors minister: how are you monitoring the vulnerable seniors who had to flee and are now dispersed around Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I met with Cynthia Woodford, the vice-president of property services with the Wood Buffalo Housing and Development Corporation, and I can assure you that they did an excellent job evacuating and supporting the seniors. There were 67 seniors living in four Fort McMurray and Anzac facilities, and they were evacuated with family and with our staff. Most are now with friends and family. The Eagle Hill foundation and the Sturgeon Foundation have graciously offered to house some seniors in their facilities, so seniors are being well taken care of.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Given that seniors with challenges may not be able to wait for hours in lineups for the financial assistance that the government finally began offering yesterday and given that people with physical challenges and parents with children may also have trouble waiting for hours in lineups for this assistance, to whoever the minister responsible for this is: what arrangements have you made for everyone with unique circumstances for obtaining assistance without a long wait?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the important question. We have made arrangements so that vulnerable people such as seniors and those people with mobility challenges do not have to wait in the line. Our staff is working with them to make sure that the support is provided to them where they are and they don't have to stand in the lines.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the existence of the Centre of Hope, which supports the homeless people of Fort McMurray, indicates that there are high-risk residents in Alberta's northern city and given that homeless residents would also have fled during the evacuation but these people do not have the same level of support as other evacuated citizens, many of whom have the option of staying with family and friends, to the Minister of Human Services: how is your ministry monitoring these vulnerable residents to ensure they have support wherever they are?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Human Services is taking part in this response in four ways. One, it's managing those financial benefits. Second, it's providing supports along with provincial operation centres. Third, it is providing provincial emergency social services. Fourth, it is focusing on continuing the business as usual. With a combination of all of these, we are working with all of the population that deserves and needs government support to make sure that their needs are met.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Public Transit

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Alberta strives to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, the Ministry of Transportation plays a significant role in providing Albertans with choices of alternate modes of transportation. Can the minister indicate what is being done to make public transit more accessible and attractive as a means of transportation for Albertans?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, and I thank the hon. member for that important question. As our economy and population grow, public transit provides a safe, accessible, and environmentally sustainable means of transportation to connect Albertans to work, to services, to families, and to every other activity. On March 1 of this year we launched the first-ever provincial transit engagement with municipal, regional, rural, industry, and indigenous stakeholders. We also approached the general public to talk about transit and rural bus service, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the mayors of Calgary and Edmonton have both stated that increasing public transit is one of the biggest priorities for their cities, again to the same minister: what is this government doing to support public transportation in Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, Budget 2016 invests a total of $1.3 billion for . . . [interjections] Sorry. I think this is an important question.

Of this $1.3 billion, $914 million is the green transit incentives program. There is still $415 million in uncommitted funding. The Capital Region Board has received its full amount. Calgary and the rest of the province have $415 million between them, so that's $130 million and $285 million. We're committed to building transit.

The Speaker: Do you have a second supplemental? Please proceed.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that our government is committed to tackling the causes and effects of climate change, again to the Minister of Transportation: how does public transportation support Alberta's climate change plan?

Mr. Mason: What a good question, Mr. Speaker. Public transit activities result in the reduction of greenhouse gas emissions. Personal vehicles as a whole emit significantly greater quantities of greenhouse gasses per passenger transported. It also reduces vehicle emissions through increasing efficiency of existing fleets and reducing the number of less-efficient cars and trucks on our roads. For every bus on the road 40 other exhaust pipes are potentially removed from our roads.

The Speaker: Members, you have 30 seconds to leave this Chamber.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Robinson Koilpillai

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to pay tribute to a great Albertan and a great Canadian, Robinson Koilpillai. Robinson passed away on April 27. There are very few individuals who've had such a significant impact on education and human rights as Robinson Koilpillai. Born in India, Robinson came to Athabasca, Alberta, to teach in 1960 with his beloved wife, Helen, and three children: Susan, Michael, and Chris. Around that time I understand that he was the favourite teacher of our Minister of Energy, and the results show.

It was later in Edmonton that his career in education blossomed. He became a principal and a social studies curriculum co-ordinator with Edmonton public schools. Mr. Speaker, back then Alberta was not as diverse as we see it today. You can imagine how Robinson made an important contribution to the multicultural and intercultural education in Alberta and attracted attention to human rights issues across Canada. As the president of the Canadian Multicultural Education Foundation and through his association with a multitude of nonprofits and civic society organizations, including the Alberta heritage council and the Canadian Human Rights Commission, Robinson became a popular community volunteer. His charitable work included fundraising for women and children here and in India, Nepal, and South Africa.

He became a member of the Order of Canada 20 years ago and received many local and national accolades, including a 2008 lifetime achievement RISE award from the Edmonton Mennonite Centre for Newcomers.

Robinson was a visionary dedicated to education, peace, and international co-operation. His genuine concern for all peoples was inspirational, as is the title of his biography, Among Friends: Robinson Koilpillai: Teacher, Citizen of Canada, Advocate for Common Humanity, authored by Allan Sheppard in 2009.

Robinson was a believer in family values.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Highway Cleanup Campaign

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is an annual rite of spring in this province that helps improve the natural beauty of Alberta, helps protect the environment, and provides financial support to community groups. I'm speaking about the annual Highway Cleanup Campaign.

Motorists need to be reminded over and over again that litter and garbage should not be tossed from the windows of moving cars and trucks. Not only does this pollute the environment; it makes Alberta look trashy and unkempt. We all need to be good stewards of the environment, and this is one of the easiest things to do. Save your garbage for the next stop with a garbage can.

First impressions from the tourists coming to Alberta get developed along those highways from our border crossings, near our airports, and around our major cities. We want to attract investment and more tourists here. Garbage-strewn ditches contribute to driving people away.

Last year 16,245 volunteers representing 650 volunteer organizations from 4-H clubs; sea, army, and air cadets; Scouts; Girl Guides; Rotary alliance clubs; and various other nonprofit groups helped clean up more than 11,400 kilometres. These organizations earned over $1 million for their cleanup efforts and used these funds to support education, community works, supports for the disadvantaged, and developing that sense of place and community.

These volunteers don orange safety vests and attend safety training before going out between the hours of 7 a.m. and 5 p.m. and can range in age from nine to 90. Motorists are asked to slow down, obey signs, and be cautious when passing cleanup crews.

With the cleanup getting under way this weekend, groups looking to do their part to help their province can call 310.0000 to sign up. I look forward to seeing many groups doing their part on the sides of our highways this weekend. Remember: please slow down to make this highway cleanup safer.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Calgary-Mountain View.

Mental Health Services for Wildfire Evacuees and First Responders

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is facing an unprecedented crisis in mental health amidst a serious recession and over 80,000 people being forced to flee a devastated community. If only a fraction of these individuals require help, our already strained mental health system will fail many Albertans. In the coming months most of us will remember this fire as a terrible event and will move on with our lives. For the residents of Fort McMurray and first responders, however, moving on will be a painful process fraught with recurring challenges over many years.

Recovery from major emotional loss and trauma is a difficult and delicate process, with no two people having the same experience. What is certain, though, is that left alone, this type of trauma can cause severe suffering, whether it be overt such as alcohol abuse or family violence or covert such as anger and depression. To avert a domino effect and further crisis in the health system, the government must increase funding and activities.

The first activity is increased public education. There is still a stigma associated with mental health problems, and many of those in Fort McMurray won't realize or won't want to admit they need help. The consequences of ignoring the effects of trauma will harm not only the sufferer but their family, friends, and community.

The second is early access to new funds, immediately, for funded psychologists, experienced trauma professionals, and navigators so that they can avoid unaffordable fees. They can offer screening, triage, and timely referral, reducing wait times and freeing up psychiatrists for more critical patients who may need medications.

The third is the navigator or the primary care home to ensure that various financial, medical, and psychological supports communicate with each other and work together through an integrated care plan over the coming year.

I am fully aware that these recommendations require substantial new money from a budget already strained, but the money must be found either in our own budget or through federal assistance. To do nothing is to take half measures, merely moving the problem forward in time and exponentially increasing both cost and human suffering.

Thank you.

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 7(7) in order to extend the afternoon Routine so we may complete it.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Fort McMurray Teachers and School Administrators

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to thank an amazing group of folks who I don't know but who are near to my heart, the teachers and school administrators of Fort McMurray.

May 2 would have been a day like any other in classrooms all over Fort Mac, teachers and principals working to help children learn in all of the usual ways. May is starting to edge toward the end of the year, and with the warm weather no doubt the students were starting to feel summer coming.

However, as the day wore on, it would have been obvious that that day was different. The city was being evacuated. Parents were starting to come and pick up children early. As teachers we practise fire drills, lockdowns, and other emergency situations so that we know what to do when the time comes. I wasn't there, but I know that the teachers on that day did everything they could to keep their students calm. They followed procedure, and they got those kids safely to their parents, some of them doing it while they didn't know if their own home was on fire or not. I know that all parents in Fort McMurray and parents all across Alberta are grateful.

Many of us have heard the incredible story of Lisa Hilsenteger, who fled Father Turcotte elementary school with a bus full of children. She kept trying to reach the parents and assured kids that they would be reunited. This is just one incredible story, but I know that it's not the only one. I know the teachers and principals across Fort Mac stepped up to the pressure and ensured that all schools were evacuated safely. This is no small task, and I thank you.

I thank you for continuing to do your work, to share your marks with students' new schools, to hug your students at evacuation centres. I have no doubt that some of you are still doing marking.

The ATA is hosting a barbecue just for you in Edmonton this afternoon, starting at 5:30, at Barnett House, and I hope that many of you can make it out to support each other and share your amazing stories during this difficult time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

School Psychology

Ms Woollard: Mr. Speaker, when I began teaching, my focus was on teaching the students in my class what was appropriate for the grade level. I had some knowledge of child development, but my common sense led me to believe that most challenges that students experienced were quite straightforward. A student goofing around in class is not likely to learn well or at all. However, teaching and watching in the classroom suggested there was more to this problem than met the eye.

I started to notice students who were not misbehaving or not paying attention but were still failing to learn well. Teachers sometimes apply the common labels: needs to try harder, needs to work more carefully, needs to pay attention. But while these descriptors are accurate for some children, they don't tell how to help children learn more effectively. My search to find out why some students struggle to learn while other students learn easily led me to find out about learning differences and learning difficulties. I attended workshops, professional development activities, and completed a graduate diploma in special-needs education. It was helpful but only part of the solution.

Psychologists do assessments which investigate how children's behaviour, attention, memory, and other abilities affect how they learn and remember. I decided to become a psychologist. I learned how to administer psychoeducational and behavioural tests to students struggling in school. Now, once an assessment is complete, the results are shared with the student's parent or guardian and teacher, and then plans are made for how to modify or adapt the program and support the students.

Psychoeducational assessments provide information that enables our great Alberta education system to work for each student. This individualization and support helps students be successful in school.

3:00 Volunteer Support for Wildfire-affected Albertans

Mr. Yao: Volunteerism is an activity where individuals or groups provide a service for no financial gain. It promotes goodness, with the endeavour of improving human quality of life. This incident that occurred in my region drew volunteers from so many places who provided services in so many ways and who helped so many people. I drew strength from these volunteers and was humbled by them as they selflessly helped those who were vulnerable. I wish to use this opportunity to thank all of those volunteers.

There were, of course, the volunteer fire departments that sent fire trucks and tankers, who came without a request from the municipality of Wood Buffalo. Fire departments came from Olds, Athabasca, Slave Lake, Smoky Lake, Lac La Biche, and so many other communities.

There was a crew of civilians from Grande Prairie who brought in their own food and cooking supplies and stationed themselves on MacDonald Island, the recreation centre where all the emergency services were staged and housed. They cooked food and provided hot coffee until they ran out.

There was a team from Sylvan Lake and another from the Edmonton area who had their own Tidy Tanks and stacks of jerry cans with fuel that they had purchased themselves to provide to anyone – no questions asked, and no money asked for; when offered, they outright refused it – so that people could escape the fire.

There were the various groups and municipal governments providing and manning reception centres, whether it was in Lac La Biche, Boyle, or Edmonton, to name a few, who selflessly provided food, water, and shelter complete with beds to evacuees.

There were the people who went in to rescue our pets. Our familiars were saved by volunteers who were willing to go into a danger zone and rescue our furry best friends and by professional veterinarians, including the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, who volunteered that medical expertise to our animals.

It's interesting to note that of the over 80,000 people that were evacuated from Fort McMurray, only a small percentage actually relied on the evacuation centres for shelter. Most could rely on family and friends. Yet, more so, there were so many who voluntarily opened their homes to shelter strangers. The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View opened her home to our constituency staffer and his friends.

I feel it unjust to mention but a few of the volunteers and communities who gave so much to those in need in these tragic times. So many volunteers and so little time. With so little to give, they gave so much. To all those: I thank you, and God bless.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and Minister of Status of Women.

Bill 15

An Act to End Predatory Lending

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce Bill 15, An Act to End Predatory Lending.

As the throne speech made clear, our government is committed to protecting vulnerable Albertans from predatory lending practices. Currently lenders are able to charge very high interest rates to Albertans who are the least able to afford it. This bill will reduce the high cost of borrowing for payday loans and help ensure that alternative financial assistance and short-term credit options are available to all Albertans. It will also strengthen consumer protection for borrowers of payday loans by introducing mandatory instalment repayment plans, requiring payday lenders to provide financial literacy information to borrowers, and imposing stricter controls on the activities of payday lenders. Through this legislation our government is building pathways out of poverty by helping Albertans who find themselves in difficult financial circumstances to escape the cycle of debt caused by short-term, high-cost credit.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a first time]

Bill 206
Post-traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD)
Awareness Day Act

Ms Goehring: Mr. Speaker, I request leave today to introduce a bill, that bill being Bill 206, the Post-traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) Awareness Day Act.

Through my consultation with stakeholders I have constantly heard how important increased awareness of the effects and triggers of PTSD is, and this bill will hopefully help continue an important conversation here in Alberta. Especially given the current situation, a dedicated day will also help educate the public about the long-term effects and triggers of PTSD, the importance of accurate and early diagnosis as well as help to combat the stigma and silence we often see around mental health issues.

I'd ask all members for their support. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 206 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I made reference to a document the other day, an Ipsos-Reid poll that talks about how 65 per cent of Albertans think the NDP is crippling future generations. I have the requisite number of copies here.

Orders of the Day
Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading
Bill 7
Electoral Boundaries Commission
Amendment Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move third reading of Bill 7, the Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2016.

The proposed amendments in Bill 7 would authorize the early appointment of an Electoral Boundaries Commission on or before October 31, 2016, which is earlier than currently allowed under the act, and clarify a commission's authority to consider recent information respecting population that is not collected on a province-wide basis such as municipal population information. This information would be used along with the federal decennial census of population or a more recent province-wide census.

As mentioned, the first proposed amendment would allow the early appointment of the Electoral Boundaries Commission. The act's timeline for the appointment of a commission is based on the assumption that general elections are held about once every four years. Unfortunately, due to the previous government's early election call, this timeline has been somewhat thrown off because the election occurred a year earlier than anticipated.

The current wording of the act provides that a commission is to be appointed during the First Session of the Legislature following every second general election after the appointment of the last commission. However, if fewer than eight years have passed since the appointment of the last commission, the following commission is to be appointed no sooner than eight years after that.

A commission was last appointed in July 2009, and there have been two general elections since then. However, the earliest a commission can be appointed is eight years after that date. As such, under the current wording of the act a commission cannot be appointed earlier than July 2017. A commission needs to be appointed before July 2017 so that there's sufficient time for the commission to complete its work.

The early appointment, Mr. Speaker, will also ensure that there is sufficient time for election preparations such as preparing lists of electors under the new electoral boundaries and providing these lists to registered political parties for their use during the election campaign. It's anticipated that the next general election will be held between March 1 and May 31, 2019, as per the fixed election period set out in the Election Act. The Chief Electoral Officer recommends that the commission be appointed in the fall of 2016.

I will now explain why it's important to proceed with authorizing the early appointment of the commission from a legal perspective. The Charter of Rights includes a guarantee of effective representation. Alberta currently has 87 electoral districts. The act says that the population of a proposed electoral division should be no more than 25 per cent above or below the average population in the proposed electoral district. There is an exception for four special electoral divisions, which can have a population of up to 50 per cent below the average population of all proposed electoral divisions if they meet certain criteria.

The 25 per cent deviation from the average population is intended to be rare and not the norm. The early appointment of a commission will give it time to consider the population of the electoral divisions and to protect that right. Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to make clear that this is simply a procedural change necessitated by the early election call.

The second proposed amendment would clarify a current section in the act dealing with the information that the commission must and may use when determining the population of Alberta. The act says that the commission must use population information from the federal census carried out every 10 years. However, if there is a more recent province-wide census, the commission may use that population information. The act also currently allows the commission to use other more recent population information in conjunction with the federal decennial census of population or a more recent province-wide census.

The proposed amendment clarifies the authority to use data collected municipally, but this does not represent a change in policy, Mr. Speaker. The last Electoral Boundaries Commission used municipal census data and found it very helpful in their determination.

Finally, there was one amendment proposed regarding this aspect of Bill 7 during Committee of the Whole. That amendment was defeated. The defeating of that amendment, Mr. Speaker, was with the support of the Chief Electoral Officer. The amendment would disproportionately prejudice the representational rights of Albertans in rapidly growing areas of the province by not including population increases in this area that have occurred since 2011.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is important in protecting Albertans' rights to effective representation, and I ask for the support of all members for these important amendments. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any members who would like to speak? The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about Bill 7, the Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2016. This legislation is significant to all Albertans because it does a lot more than draw lines on a map. Electoral boundaries reflect the interests of people in Alberta's communities, neighbourhoods, counties, regions, towns, and cities. These boundaries show Albertans how the provincial government understands their community, and these boundaries help establish the foundation of the relationship between these representatives and their constituents.

In Committee of the Whole we spent time discussing the data that the commission will be using in its deliberations. It's important to discuss the other factors that will be going into the commissioner's decision. In the past these boundaries haven't been influenced by population alone. The law mandates that the Electoral Boundaries Commission take into account population density, community interest, community boundaries, municipal boundaries, geographical features, distance, area, and even local issues.

When we begin to untangle all the considerations that the Electoral Boundaries Commission has to make, we can see that its mandate is confronted with an incredibly complex task. This important and challenging duty falls on five people, five people to review the interests and the unique features of a province with over 4 million people and 660,000 square kilometres. It's not exactly an enviable position to be in. Balancing all of these factors and interests doesn't have a set formula. There's no textbook to look to for answers. The only guidelines are the parameters of the legislation and the work done by previous commissions. That is why public consultation will be critical and crucial to guide these five people in gaining an understanding of Alberta's intricacies.

Mr. Speaker, in looking back to the 2009 Electoral Boundaries Commission, we can see how much public consultation an Electoral Boundaries Commission must conduct to even begin to understand our province. I believe that the last time a commission was organized was in 2009. There were a total of 14 public consultations in the first round of meetings and nine public consultations in the second round. Between these two rounds and 23 consultations there were over 200 presentations made to the public and approximately 500 submissions put in to that commission.

This type of engagement is exactly what this commission has to do. It has to get out in front of people and listen to what communities all over our province have to say. I know how much of a task that is for one MLA to do in one riding. Going to all the corners of the constituency and listening to as many people as possible isn't easy, so imagine what the entire province must look like. Challenging but necessary.

The concept of getting out to as many people as possible and seeking meaningful engagement and consultation brings me to my next point on the work of this commission. How these boundaries are drawn will lay the foundation for relationships between the people of Alberta and their representatives. For representatives – yes, us – the commission tells us who our bosses will be. It tells us who we are directly accountable to. How these lines are drawn will be fundamentally affecting people and how they will engage with these representatives. The essence of this relationship is effective representation no matter the size, location, population density, community interest, community boundaries, municipal boundaries, geographical features, distance, area, local issues. This commission must maintain effective representation for every boundary that is drawn.

The Speaker: Hon. members, a little quiet, please.

Mr. Cyr: The riding I represent is largely rural. I love that about where I'm from. I love being in Alberta's beautiful nature, and a connection to the land is part of my area's culture. To keep a strong connection to my constituents means a lot of driving, something I love to do, especially since Bonnyville-Cold Lake is in what I would describe as one of the most beautiful parts of Alberta and possibly the world.

While I love living in and representing a rural riding, there are challenges in maintaining a close relationship with the constituents based on travel time between all the different places that I need to be on any given day. This challenge isn't unique to me by any stretch. I believe that it is challenging for all MLAs but particularly the ones that have large rural components to their ridings.

Maintaining effective representation must contain relative parity of voting power, but exact parity is impossible. What I hope this year's Electoral Boundaries Commission will keep top of mind are concepts laid out in the Supreme Court of Canada's ruling in 1991 regarding the Saskatchewan reference. In the court's decision they point to the problem with ridings that are too sparsely populated and difficulties associated with communication. I believe that even with the rise of information technology like the Internet and cellphones, there is still a barrier to proper communication if constituents are unable to contact their MLA in a way that best fits them. I deal with a lot of seniors in my riding. Many of them are tech savvy but not all of them. A visit to my office is commonplace for people in my riding, and I encourage all of my constituents to drop by my office any time they feel the need. My door is always open.

If the boundaries are redrawn in rural areas to the extent that people are not able to come into their MLA's office because the journey is too expensive or time consuming, there is a real risk of deteriorating an important element of our democracy, accessibility to their MLA. Accessibility to our MLAs is crucial for a free and fair democracy.

I also want to conclude by discussing the importance of respecting community, municipality, and geographical boundaries. Albertans are an incredibly proud group of people. They work hard to make their communities great. They feel a bond with their neighbour, whether that neighbour is right next door to them or kilometres down the road.

I urge the commission to really work hard to learn the different facets of our communities and not divide them for partisan or political reasons. Honouring these unique features across the province and maintaining effective representation will ensure that Albertans have a free and fair democracy for generations to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2016

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to move Bill 8, Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2016, on behalf of the Minister of Service Alberta.

The Speaker: Are there any members who would like to speak to Bill 8? The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just rise to offer my enthusiastic support for Bill 8, and I want to say that the minister deserves thanks for bringing this forward. Now that she will have certain powers under this act, I would strongly encourage her to use them.

As has been discussed in this House already, there have been some serious concerns specifically with the Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council and its ability or willingness, perhaps, to protect auto buyers. Bill 8 is going to give the minister the powers to ensure that people who have been taken in scams like the Treadz Auto scam, in fact, receive appropriate compensation.

There is $4.5 million in the AMVIC compensation fund. They have arbitrarily capped compensation for this particular case at $300,000, which left upwards of 120 people out nearly a million dollars who have been scammed by a disreputable company. AMVIC's job is to protect those people. If they are not doing that, this bill will give the minister the ability to do that. Again, I strongly encourage her to do that.

I have some constituents in Calgary-Elbow who have been taken by this scam, and it's been very, very difficult for them and for many others. Again, I welcome the powers that the minister has been given, in particular the authorization to appoint a representative to oversee management of the organization. Again, this bill gives her very broad powers, and I certainly encourage her, please, to use them, especially as it relates to the compensation fund and perhaps even management of the organization. There's been a report by MNP that's made several recommendations, and I know that some of those have been addressed or at least claim to have been addressed.

Now that these powers are in place for the minister, I really do encourage her to use them. It's very important that the people who have been taken by the Treadz Auto scam, in particular, and any other consumers who may be victimized by disreputable auto dealers have the assurance that they will be protected by the industry council, whose job it is, in fact, to protect them.

With that, Mr. Speaker, again, my praise to the minister for taking such strong action, and I enthusiastically support this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's certainly been some great conversation around Bill 8, and I was certainly happy to cosponsor that bill. For all the speakers that stood up and supported this, I certainly thank them for that. I think this bill will add the oversight that the DRO doesn't currently have under this act, that all the others enjoy in every other piece of legislation.

With that said, I think there's consensus within the House, and we can move on.

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, I move that we finish up third reading and take the vote.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 12 Aboriginal Consultation Levy Repeal Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very honoured to be a cosponsor of this particular bill. I guess I officially have to move it for second reading on behalf of the Minister of Indigenous Relations.

It might seem like it's a very small act, it might seem that it's not really all that important, but it's actually an incredibly, incredibly important piece of legislation. Consultation is something that I've heard plenty about in my constituency from my First Nations and my Métis settlements communities. They've talked about how the previous government might have thought they were consulting, but they never did consult. That did not just apply to this act but in so many ways. The government would come. They'd sit down and have dinner. They'd exchange gifts. They'd do a photo op. Then they would tell the First Nations and the Métis communities: "This is what we're going to do. This is what we're going to do for you." They never actually asked: "What would you like us to do? How do you feel about this legislation? Can you give us some feedback? Can you help us? Can you work collaboratively with us as we do this process?"

My First Nations communities have told me how they really felt almost disrespected, demeaned in this process because they were not treated as equals in a nation-to-nation kind of relationship. Rather, they were treated in a very paternalistic way. In trying to forge a better and a new relationship, our government is trying to do things very differently.

Actually, I was in the House when this act received its readings back in 2013, in May. I sat over there with Hansard, and I listened to the arguments. There were some very passionate arguments by the opposition from all sides. We had the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. They all argued very passionately against this bill.

There were some key issues with Bill 22. Among them, of course, primarily, was that they had not adequately consulted with the First Nations when they were trying to bring this act in. The act was actually intended, ironically, to effect a consultation levy. The irony was remarked upon over and over that night.

A couple of more concerning issues were that it seemed to interfere with the treaty process, that the government was seeking far greater control of negotiations between industry and the First Nations. First Nations were even being forced to openly declare all of the negotiations that they would have had with industry partners in the process, something that no other Albertans needed to do. They really had issues with this. The minister would even have the right to decide which groups were considered First Nations for the purpose of this process. So there were some real concerns that were brought up by the opposition.

It was quite interesting to me to go through Hansard and read some of these comments, but they also brought up better reasons and better ways of consulting and how you do have to consult in a very respectful way.

That evening we also had sitting in the gallery – and I believe it was across there – a very large contingent of First Nations chiefs and representatives. Among them was Chief Cameron Alexis, who at that time was the Assembly of First Nations' regional chief. Now, Cameron is somebody who I'm now honoured to call a friend and a colleague because he's the CEO of the North Peace Tribal Council up in High Level, where I live. He and I have been working very closely on trying to advance the interests of our aboriginal communities up there. I asked him for his thoughts on this bill. He immediately came back and reiterated all of the concerns. Primarily he said that they didn't feel that they had been consulted in a way that was meaningful to those First Nations and that that needed to be really recognized. He also brought out to me that we still have to go forward on these kinds of legislation, but he said that what's really important is that we do take into account the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples in everything we do when we're developing this legislation.

I think that's something that our government is doing, and that's why I'm really pleased that we brought forth this repeal act because it's going to be a first step forward in restarting the negotiation process and actually engaging with our aboriginal peoples in meaningful consultation going forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak to second reading of Bill 12? The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to stand today and speak to Bill 12, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Repeal Act. If there's one thing I've learned throughout my career, it's that the more people work together toward a common goal, the better the final product will be. Whether we're in manufacturing, agriculture, the oil and gas industry, education, health, or any other activity you can think of, strategies and common solutions developed in consultation are often more solid and find support through implementation. This consultation process takes a lot longer than simply handing down a decision and expecting that everybody involved will do their best to make it work.

In the end that time taken during the planning phase will lead to a higher level of buy-in from all concerned and a greater sense of ownership and pride in the work that follows. I have used a consultative process in virtually all of the work I have done. From the oil field to farm work to my family, I've recognized that decisions that are developed together are much more likely to be honoured, and the end result is a stronger relationship built on a knowledge and certainty that everybody impacted has been heard and their concerns respected.

What does this have to do with Bill 12? Very simply, Mr. Speaker, the bill is about consultation. Proper and full consultation with First Nations will benefit not only the First Nations but all Albertans. For far too long economic development initiatives and infrastructure upgrades such as bridges and roads have built up due to uncertainty about how the First Nations in the area will be impacted and how they need to be included meaningfully. We have had decades of one-off approaches to development on First Nations land that have led to a divide-and-conquer sort of mentality, working with select First Nations while excluding others.

The lack of consultation was a major stumbling block with Bill 22. None of the groups that are impacted by the bill were in favour of it. It did not meet the needs of the First Nations communities and was never proclaimed. The bill imposes levies on industry to provide funding to First Nations and Métis settlements to support their participation and consultation over resource development in their areas. The irony is that none of the treaty organizations, First Nations communities, or Métis settlements councils were consulted as the bill was being drafted, and step by step that bill made it more difficult for industry and First Nations to come together to find mutually acceptable ways of making best use of local resource development.

This bill is a first step toward changing that pattern. Firstly, it stops the piecemeal approach to fixing the previous bill. It recognizes that Bill 22 was flawed both in the content of the bill as well as the process by which it was drafted and presented to Albertans. By repealing Bill 22, this government is recognizing that the fundamental relationship between government and indigenous Albertans needs to be formalized in a way that recognizes and honours the autonomy and authority of both parties. It also recognizes that that relationship must withstand scrutiny by being transparent and open.

I hope this bill will set the stage for a better framework for First Nations and Métis communities as well as for government. If so, it should support all Albertans with certainty and a map for the best approach to resource development. The whole intention of Bill 22 was to provide funds to allow First Nations to participate in consultations with industry about resource development. We know that the bill did not meet the expectations of First Nations and that they were against the bill, but so, too, were the representatives from the energy industry who would have been impacted by that bill. Our representatives suggested that Bill 22 actually would have gotten in the way of consultations between First Nations and industry. They're looking forward to a new framework for consultation that is supportive of and supported by First Nations and Métis communities. The uncertainty surrounding Bill 22 was very difficult, and investors do not like uncertainty.

Since this government was elected, the Wildrose caucus has been urging the government to slow down with the proposed legislation to make sure that they get it right. So far our caution has not been well received. Instead, we have seen government push through legislation that has caused huge concern. For instance, how many thousands of people rallied here at the Legislature over Bill 6? How many gathered in towns across the province to get their voices heard in opposition to the lack of consultation and the haste with which the government addressed the bill that had the potential to fundamentally alter the fabric of rural Alberta?

Mr. Speaker, we saw the same thing with Bill 8, the Public Education Collective Bargaining Act. Wildrose fielded an enormous outcry over the process by which the government introduced the bill and then rushed it through, with a promise to hold consultations afterwards.

In order to build trust, this government needs to take time to work with stakeholders to ensure that the legislation they table has the support of the people it will impact. This is particularly true when considering issues that impact First Nations and Métis peoples and communities as the relationships are extremely complex and involve other governments. Of course, in the area of resource development the parties involved, including indigenous communities, local municipalities, towns, industry, and the provincial government, all need to have a voice in how the process will unfold and how their concerns will be considered.

The continued support of First Nations through the First Nations consultation capacity investment program will continue to support negotiations while government engages with First Nations on a new structure and process. This is good news for all of Alberta. Wildrose hopes that the new commitment to Métis through the Métis settlements consultation policy will also be in the works and will ensure that this government maintains its firm commitment to indigenous peoples. However, this bill could potentially cause more red tape as the government implements a new approach to consultation. It could also incur higher costs for governments of all levels as they work through the bill to determine the implementation process.

I support this bill, and I hope this repeal will bring a new level of expectation for consultation that this government will apply to all further proposed legislation as well instead of racing ahead to pass legislation without due consideration for the impact on the stakeholders in the province. I hope this bill becomes a standard by which legislation is researched before being tabled and pushed through without due consideration.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When this bill first came across my desk, I was reflecting back on a powwow I went to on the Alexander First Nation in my constituency. The first thing that struck me was the amount of co-operation between the industry representatives who were present, many of them oil and gas representatives, and the Alexander First Nation. The second thing that struck me was that both groups expressed concerns about Bill 22. Both of them identified this bill as a roadblock to working together to address both of their concerns.

This is definitely a big step towards the reconciliation that we have all agreed is important as a Legislature, as a government, really, as a people. Both Alberta and Canada have begun these steps towards reconciliation. Further, I believe that this bill will help to give industry and Alberta the tools that we really need when we're moving forward on diversification as industry and First Nations will have an easier time, a more streamlined time consulting and getting towards the projects that we really need to build a resilient economy moving forward.

I had more to say, but it's not coming, so thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or observations under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, I would recognize the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to stand today in the House and speak to Bill 12, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Repeal Act. As has been expressed multiple times – but I believe it deserves repeating – First Nations communities felt that they weren't properly consulted on this. I think it's very important in light of that now we are so compelled to implement the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples and, not only that, also, the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's call to action that we re-establish our relationship with First Nations. I'm so grateful that our government is doing exactly that and that it's such an important priority for our new Minister of Indigenous Relations.

I've had the opportunity to build relationships with many First Nations people here in our province, and I just want to stress how important that word "relationship" is. For many First Nations as well as Métis communities being able to sit down in the circle to discuss, to build the relationship first, to build that trust with one another and, especially with First Nations, to engage in the process, the protocol, perhaps better stated, of ceremony, of actually being able to sit down and share medicine, smoke pipe, lay down tobacco: all these things are important to First Nations people, that their protocols be followed. We must never forget that this is part of respecting First Nations constitutionally protected treaty rights. We can never forget that we are signatories to treaties 6, 7, and 8 here in this province.

As we move forward, it's important that we sit down and we have more productive discussions and that First Nations feel that their participation is a genuine participation in a process of consultation and that industry and stakeholders would also be respected in that process as we all sit down at the table together to discuss these matters.

It gives me great honour to share the words of Grand Chief Tony Alexis of Treaty 6. I really hope that all of the members of this House take these words to heart. Regarding Bill 22 he said: it was the same mindset as residential schools; we know what's best for you, and we will look after you, so don't worry about a thing; our first stance is to protect the land, and if government is going to put together a bill, we have to be involved in that bill so we know that those interests will be heard.

With that being said, Mr. Speaker, again, it gives me great pleasure to speak to Bill 12, and I highly recommend that everyone in this House please vote in favour of Bill 12. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions or comments to the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie?

Are there any individuals who would like to speak to Bill 12? Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise to speak in favour of this bill. I think this is something that, from my own experience in dealing with indigenous communities, is very appropriate. I mean, I'd like to just sort of echo what the Member for Peace River stated in her comments. That's how previously this consultation seemed to have been carried out, you know, by people working for companies. The kinds of stories that I would hear in some of the communities would be that they would drop by a band office, maybe drop off some cigarettes for the elders, chat with a few people, then maybe a week or two later they'd send out a facsimile with a bunch of technical information that the band wouldn't really have any ability to respond to in a practical manner.

I think that taking a look at this again and making sure that consultation really does mean consultation – it's not just fulfilling our constitutional obligation. It's basic decency that if you're going to be having conversations with people, those are conversations that you're really trying to find out what people want and not trying to massage the situation to just get what you want out of the situation.

Once again, I'm in favour of this bill, and I really appreciate our minister bringing this forward. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a) are there any questions or observations to the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater?

Hearing none, I would call upon the Minister of Indigenous Relations to close debate.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to stand here today to close debate on second reading of this bill because it is a fundamental reflection of our commitment in this government to forge a new relationship with the indigenous community in this province. I arrived just moments ago because I was on the phone with the federal minister of indigenous relations co-ordinating our efforts regarding the fires in Fort McMurray. We had a very clear conversation about the United Nations declaration, as the federal government has just adopted the same practice that we have. They're joining us, and she commended Alberta on being the front of the pack on that.

It feels the same to me as the repeal of Bill 22. It's time to get in front of a problem that we have allowed to languish for far too long. Bill 22 was intended to establish a levy on industry as a way to increase funding to First Nations for consultation around activities on traditional lands. Unfortunately, as we have heard from many of the speakers today, the consultation itself provided no consultation with the indigenous community in terms of the construction of the bill and the application of the bill. The irony has been noted but cannot be left out of any speech because it just is so glaring.

We had the opportunity to speak with indigenous people around the province, and they consistently have told us that this was wrong. They appreciate the fact that indeed both sides of the House are behind the repeal of this legislation and that we are committed as a full government, and I think both sides of the House are committed to truly changing how we do things with the indigenous community.

One of the things that you're going to hear me say a lot more in the future is that not only are we getting rid of this very flawed act, which was apparently on consultation, but also I want us to begin to be aware of the language we're using and understand that what we want in this government is not simply an issue of consultation with indigenous people, but we want to have true engagement with indigenous people. It's not simply a matter of asking them to reflect on decisions we've already made. We want them to be party to making the decision in the first place.

Our government is committed to that through the First Nations consultation capacity investment program, often referred to as FNCCIP. We will be making sure that in the future we are providing the monies that are necessary for First Nations to truly consult on this bill and other bills. To support the capacity for First Nations, we're providing money through FNCCIP in a range between $80,000 to $135,000 for every community from the budget of Indigenous Relations right now until we get the new act put in place. We look forward to doing that. Under the FNCCIP $5.9 million was provided to First Nations in 2014 and '15 and $6.3 million was allocated to First Nations in 2015 and '16.

Treaty organizations will be at the table for our discussions. They will be prepared. They will have had the adequacy of having the resources to speak to experts who can assist them and speak to us about what their needs truly are. Together we will construct a bill, and we will be coming back into this House as soon as we can to move forward in our new engagement relationship with the First Nations of Alberta.

I respectfully urge all of my colleagues at this time to support this bill. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a second time]

Bill 11 Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and move second reading of Bill 11, the Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016.

Mr. Speaker, research and innovation are the key to creating a more diverse and resilient economy. While we lead the country in investing in this field, we know that we must continue to be proactive. We must innovate, create, and work together. We must build on our strengths while positioning us solidly for success in the 21st century, and that is what we're doing through this legislation.

The intent of this legislation is to strengthen one of the main drivers of Alberta's research and innovation system, the Alberta Innovates corporations. Right now we have four Alberta Innovates corporations divided up by sectors: Bio Solutions, Health Solutions, Energy and Environment Solutions, and Technology Futures. This legislation consolidates the strengths from each of the corporations through the creation of a single Alberta Innovates corporation.

By combining the four Alberta Innovates corporations into one, we are simplifying the system for researchers, helping leverage additional outside funding, aligning with government-funded priorities, and making government more accountable. The new corporation will drive research and help turn great ideas into innovations that improve lives and our economy. One corporation will make it easier for Alberta researchers, entrepreneurs, and companies to access the programs and supports available to them. This integration will better connect Alberta's drivers of economic growth with the academic and technical expertise required to move to the next level. Whether it's exploratory research that may identify future economic opportunities or the expertise to solve immediate industry challenges, by simplifying the system, the drivers of our economic growth will also have more time and energy for their research.

In short, we are making it easier for Alberta's researchers and businesses to navigate the province's innovation system. The amendments I'm proposing help make that happen. For example, we're streamlining the legislation by repealing section 5, which established a committee for the four board chairs of the research and innovation corporation. With one corporation a committee of the four corporation board chairs would no longer be relevant.

The amendments also reflect what has happened since the act was introduced in 2010. This includes changing the name of the Alberta Research and Innovation Authority, otherwise known as ARIA, to the Alberta research and innovation advisory committee. This was in response to ARIA members telling us that they've operated more as a committee than an authority and recommended the change. Going forward, I see the Alberta research and innovation advisory committee continuing to play an important role in providing strategic advice to government and Alberta Innovates. This shows our government's desire to learn from others and leverage new opportunities.

I see great opportunities to link the new Alberta Innovates even further with the work of our Campus Alberta institutions from a research perspective. By bringing these minds together, we will achieve more sooner. As I said earlier, that's what we're aiming to achieve through these amendments.

The proposed changes are based on best practices from other jurisdictions. They're also based on expert panel reviews and feedback from stakeholders. We listened carefully and examined what they had to say. Now we're taking action on this through legislation so that our research and innovation system is better positioned to support innovative bioenergy plants, develop new therapies and procedures for patients, minimize our footprint on the environment, and help small and medium-sized companies commercialize some very innovative technologies.

While this act is under the responsibility of my ministry, we have been and will continue to take a collaborative approach. We are working closely with a number of other ministries that see research as an important component of achieving their objectives. This includes the Ministry of Health because health research in the new corporation will help transform the health care system and accelerate access to health innovations. We will continue to work closely with the new Alberta Innovates board and senior management to ensure a smooth transition.

Mr. Speaker, our government has long established our support for research and innovation. In last November's state of the province speech the Premier made it clear that our government will help drive innovation. We want Alberta to be a great place to turn an idea into a product and a product into a prosperous enterprise.

In the Alberta jobs plan we identified research and innovation as a key to improving the Alberta economy, industry, workforce, and well-being of our citizens. The amendments we're proposing strengthen Alberta's research and innovation system so that the province is positioned to seize on the opportunities that will diversify our economy and create jobs. As such, I encourage all members to support Bill 11.

At this, Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Seeing as we've made some great progress today and this week in our Legislature, I move that we adjourn the House until Monday, May 16, at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:01 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 2nd Session (2016)

Activity to May 12, 2016

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter numbers until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, May 16, 2016

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us reflect. As we begin our work for the week, let us do so with a positive and hopeful spirit, always focusing on the incredible work Albertans across this province have been doing to support each other during these challenging times.

Thank you.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark. I'd invite all to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: I understand we have some school groups. The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my privilege today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly teachers and students from Home School Christian Fellowship in my riding. They didn't want me to play any favourites, so they only gave me one name, but it's always a great pleasure to see young people come down and see us at work. Once again, I hope we satisfy. All right. If you would like to rise – I know there are three maybe on the other side there – and please receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: And St. Paul. Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my absolute pleasure to stand and introduce to you and through you 52 students, teachers, assistants, and parents from the newly renovated l'école Racette school in St. Paul: teachers Paula Fejzullai and Cheryl Smereka, assistants Connie Bigam and Andrew Harvey, and parents Aline Brousseau and Teresa Pruden. If I could get the students, teachers, assistants, and parents to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Deputy Speaker: It was particularly important that I didn't leave St. Paul out of that constituency name. I apologize.

The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my privilege to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 24 students from the grade 6 class of l'école Greenfield school, accompanied by their teacher Mr. Sharplin and parent volunteers Brett Kowalchuk, Kim Christopher-Norton, Heather Close, and Christine McVige. Greenfield is a wonderful English and French immersion school in my community, where diversity is respected and celebrated in the work that these dedicated educators do every day. I would now ask you to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other school groups to introduce?

Then I'll call on the hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly Dr. Cindy Blackstock. I have had the great pleasure of getting to know Dr. Blackstock over the past year as we work towards our shared goal of protecting the rights of indigenous children. Cindy Blackstock is a member of Gitksan First Nation, a social worker with 25 years of experience in working to improve the lives of children, and the director of the First Nations children's action research and education service. I was proud to bring greetings this morning to the YESS allies and youth conference in Edmonton at which Dr. Blackstock was the keynote speaker. I'm always moved when I hear about the work she is doing. Dr. Blackstock is a furious and tireless advocate for youth, who sometimes believe our society isn't there for them. As we continue to work through the heartbreaking stories of indigenous youth in crisis, I am so thankful that those often without hope otherwise have Cindy Blackstock on their side.

The recent landmark Canadian Human Rights Tribunal ruling on the case brought forward by Dr. Blackstock after nine years of fighting and speaking for those who cannot for themselves is just one example of the tremendous difference she is making in the lives of these children across Canada. As this case demonstrates, there is much work to be done both within and across government to ensure the health, safety, and well-being of indigenous children. I look forward to continuing this important work with our colleagues in other orders of government, our indigenous partners, and, of course, with Dr. Blackstock, who is a leader and an inspiration to all those who seek to make a difference in the lives of indigenous children. I ask Dr. Blackstock to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Merci, Mme la Présidente. C'est avec plaisir que je présente aujourd'hui à vous et à tous les membres de l'Assemblée Mme Julie Fafard du Conseil de développement économique de l'Alberta. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Ms Julie Fafard from the Conseil de développement économique de l'Alberta, the CDÉA. She has been a wonderful partner in promoting tourism opportunities in the French language in Alberta, and I would ask her to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Do you have another guest?

Miranda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I also have the pleasure of introducing to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two remarkable Albertans, Matt McMillan and Josh Eberley. Matt is a lieutenant with the Canadian armed forces and cadet training instructor with the 22nd Royal Canadian Sea Cadet Corps, where he mentors the new recruits who have stepped forward to serve our nation. Josh has now written his final exams and later this month will receive his bachelor's degree in communications from the University of Calgary. Both of these young men work with me in the constituency office, serving the good people of Calgary-Cross. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guests and long-time friends Margaret Keown, Claire Keown, Barbara Medioli, and Shawn Keown. Margaret is a four-year-old who can talk your ear right off, and I think she just may be a future politician. Claire is a considerate eight-year-old who loves reading mysteries. Barbara is a geologist with Natural Resources Canada. Shawn is a stay-at-home dad challenged to keep up with both Margaret and Claire and shares a long history with the TUXIS Parliament of Alberta with both myself and with the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. I ask my friends to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and to the whole Assembly three of my friends: Mr. Liam Sparks-O'Neill, accompanied by Roxanne Hughes and Myles Usher. They are all students at the University of Alberta, and I know that our province is lucky to have minds as bright as those and lucky enough to have universities of the calibre of the University of Alberta to train them. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you several members of the Specialty Vehicle Association of Alberta. Colleagues may have heard from some of their members in their constituencies as they're currently working on a campaign to get a classic car day designated here in Alberta. Would you please rise as I say your name. Joining us in the gallery are James Herbert, president; Dave Scragg, vice-president, north; Earl Clements, director; Del Morrison, director and member of the Vegreville Iron Runners Auto Club in my constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville; and Malcom Fischer, director. I'd please request that my colleagues join me in extending the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three guests of mine that have joined us here today: Laurel McCalla with Ubuntu, Julian Daly with the Boyle Street co-op, and Gary Kearns, who is a manager at the northeast office in Edmonton for child and family services. These three individuals work tirelessly with a variety of populations that are in need of supports, whether it's new Canadians or those settling into our communities, and I just want to recognize the hard work that they do and ask all colleagues to join me in giving them a warm welcome to the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my parents, Deborah Dean and Don Sucha. Both are former alumni and retired faculty of the University of Calgary. My mother, Debbie, served as librarian at the law library while some talented cabinet ministers were studying there. She was also an AUPE negotiator and senator for the university as well. My father worked nearly 30 years at the Nickle arts museum on campus. He was recognized for his service when he became part of the Order of the University of Calgary in 2007. He currently volunteers at the Stampede school and is active in the archives at the Military Museums of Calgary. I would ask that they both please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce three people to the Assembly today. The first two come from the constituency of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. The first is His Worship Rick Pankiw, who has the honour of being the mayor of the town of Rimbey, as well as Shawn Hatala, who is a leader within our community in Rimbey and a good friend to many of us in that town. Along with them today is James Maloney, or, to his friends, Jim, who has ties to us in Rimbey but is actually from Fort McMurray and has come to spend some time with us in Rimbey while waiting to be able to go home. I think I can speak for everybody in the Assembly to say that we wish you a speedy trip home. With that said, I'd like all three to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my absolute pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members of the Council of Edmonton Filipino Associations, which I'll be speaking more about in my member's statement later today. Joining us in the gallery are Mandy Servito, president; Marjorie Newman, vice-president; Rosauro Gilera, business manager; Maria Edna Gilera, executive director, Pinoy City Market; Aurelio Sumalinog, co-ordinator, Edmonton Couples for Christ migrant worker program; and Virginia Sumalinog, president, Vismin association. I'd like all my guests now to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House Rob Laird, a well-known advocate and champion for those who are struggling with addiction, homelessness, and other social issues. Rob is the director of fund development for Recovery Acres, 1835 House, a society in Calgary, and he's here today to hopefully listen to the debate on Bill 205. He is seated in the public gallery. I ask him to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

Ministerial Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Wildfire Update

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I know all members of the House join me in thanking every one of the thousands of men and women who are working around the clock to protect Alberta from wildfires. Today there are 15 wildfires burning in Alberta: three out of control, one being held, eight under control, and three that have been turned over to local authorities. We currently have 1,919 firefighters on the ground supported by 161 helicopters, 377 pieces of heavy equipment, and 29 air tankers. Conditions today will make for another extremely challenging day for our firefighters and emergency responders. Fire risks remain extreme across much of northern Alberta.

Yesterday a mandatory evacuation order and a state of local emergency were declared for the hamlet of Little Smoky in the MD of Greenview. A fire that was approximately five hectares at 1 p.m. yesterday is now approximately 800 hectares. Ten families and their pets were safely evacuated. The Fox Creek fire department is arranging for livestock to be evacuated to the Valleyview agricultural society grounds. That fire is being fought by 38 firefighters, eight helicopters, and 15 air tankers.

Madam Speaker, inside Fort McMurray firefighters continue to work on dozens of hot spots and uncapped gas lines. Outside the city the wildfire is now more than 251,000 hectares and remains out of control. The fire is threatening key energy and transportation infrastructure, and some facilities self-evacuated yesterday. Protecting these assets is our priority. There are 869 firefighters on scene with 46 helicopters, including five heavy units, and 13 air tankers. Smoke and extremely poor air quality are a very significant concern at this time. This is impacting all our operations: fire-fighting, air operations, our re-entry preparation work, including actions to begin restoration of essential businesses. The air conditions underscore the fact that Fort McMurray is not yet safe to return to.

However, work is continuing toward making the city safe. Assessment teams have inspected almost 20,000 buildings, and close to 90 per cent of those are structurally sound. Substantial progress has been made to restore electricity and the gas supply; however, the water supply is not yet safe to drink. At the hospital general cleaning in the emergency room has been completed, and detailed cleaning of equipment and the HVAC system is under way. There are 400 people working around the clock in two shifts to restore the hospital.

We continue to support Albertans who were forced to flee from their homes in the meantime. As of yesterday afternoon the government of Alberta has issued more than 27,000 cheques or debit cards to support more than 58,000 people, totalling $60,536,900 in emergency financial assistance.

We are working to help owners retrieve abandoned vehicles. This does not apply to all vehicles, but vehicles that were abandoned on highway 63, highway 881, or a major street in Fort McMurray are being towed to secure lots, and owners can make arrangements to retrieve them by calling 310.4455. Air quality conditions are disrupting our effort to retrieve abandoned vehicles, but we will continue this work along with all of our other work as soon as it is safe to do so.

On Saturday we e-mailed evacuees a link to satellite imagery that provides some information about damage to neighbourhoods. Later this week we will be providing phase 2 images from aerial photography that will include a broader geographic area. These will give residents a clearer picture of the current state of their homes. Madam Speaker, these will be very difficult images for some people to see, and AHS has increased staffing at the mental health helpline as a result. I want to stress that no one has to go through this alone, and there are mental health therapists available through the helpline, online, or at any of the 16 reception centres across Alberta.

In all our actions, Madam Speaker, our first priority is always the safety of Albertans, and again I extend this government's sincere thanks to every person working in extremely difficult conditions to get Albertans safely back to their homes.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to respond?

Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Justice System Delays

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. When our justice system is broken, it means that victims are actually the ones that end up being punished. We saw this in Airdrie in 2012, when a sexual assault case was thrown out because of a lack of resources from this government. For this victim this was a horror story that should never have happened. Today we are now hearing of cases of sexual assault trials again being delayed because of both a lack of judges and a lack of resources. Premier, what is this government doing to ensure that we have enough resources in our courts so sexual assault victims don't have to live with months and months of uncertainty?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Thank you to the member opposite for the question. Of course, we're very concerned about this news. It is very troubling. It is directly related to the fact that over the period of the past 20 years Alberta has received one new QB judge position. At the same time our population has grown, and the fact of the matter is that it's putting tremendous pressure on our court system. So our Minister of Justice has met with her colleague and is pushing very hard for additional QB judges to be appointed and new positions to be created here in Alberta so that we can deal with these kinds of delays.

Mr. Jean: Ninety-one per cent of sexual assault crimes are never reported to the police. The anguish, pain, and bravery for a victim to even get to court here in Alberta are immense. Any further delays or any risks of trials being thrown out are just further victimization. Alberta has six vacant positions on the Court of Queen's Bench. Only one of the two new positions announced in 2014 has even been appointed yet. It's been six months since the new federal government was elected. Why hasn't the Premier secured firm timelines from this government to have these positions filled?

Ms Notley: Well, Madam Speaker, in fact, our Minister of Justice has worked very hard with the federal government to move ahead on this. But to be clear, the very government that the member opposite sat in for the last six years stood by and did not fill these positions. So, you know, I think that we all need to take some shared responsibility on this. That being said, we're moving as quickly as we can to get these new judges appointed because we know that these matters need to be heard in a full court situation. They can't be delayed, and they need to move forward.

Mr. Jean: Madam Speaker, blaming lack of leadership on that side for the vacuum that currently exists is not going to help. We need to move forward, and we know that the province could take steps to help limit delays. A report filed in 2013, after the Airdrie case was thrown out, showed that 98 per cent of all delays are because of the Crown or the system this government manages. This is unacceptable. To date there remain fears that there are too few courtrooms, too few prosecutors, and not enough resources to ensure justice for victims of crime. The report laid out 17 recommendations in 2013 to free up court time for serious cases going to trial. Can the Premier please tell Albertans how many of these recommendations have been fully implemented by this government?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the member for the question. Before I can commit, I'd want to actually see the report to which the member is referring, but if it's the report to which I believe he is referring, we have been working very hard within all matters in the system. We have implemented a court case management program to ensure that things get to trial in a timely manner. We've been working with the Provincial Court as well as with the Court of Queen's Bench to ensure that things get moved forward in a timely manner. We have seen some reductions in lead times to trial on a number of issues as a result of those actions.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. Second main question.

Energy Policies

Mr. Jean: A few months back our Premier praised the Ontario Liberals for their emission plan. Now a leaked report shows what this plan means for an already hurting Alberta energy industry. The Ontario Liberals will require all gasoline sold in Ontario to have a lifetime carbon reduction of 5 per cent. To put it plainly, gasoline refined from our oil sands and sold in Ontario will be even less competitive than it will be under this carbon tax from this government. This will further hurt all Albertans who work in the energy industry. Is the Premier still endorsing this plan and this Premier, or will she tell Ontario that they've simply gone far too far?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Let me begin by saying that we're not going to develop our interprovincial policy on the basis of leaked cabinet documents around decisions that haven't been made yet. That's the first thing.

That being said, we are as a government working with the industry to reduce the emissions associated with the production of oil and gas here in Alberta. We're working with forward-thinking, forward-looking industry partners. I'm very, very proud of that because I know that it's that kind of action that's going to increase market access for our product, not decrease it in the way it would have done under the plan put forward by those folks.

Mr. Jean: That kind of action leads to unemployed Albertans.

This report not only takes a direct shot at oil sands; it takes aim at cheap low-carbon fuels like natural gas, our solution. With Alberta producing 67 per cent of Canada's natural gas, this will be a hit to an Alberta industry that should be part of the solution to reduce global emissions instead of being a target. Here in Alberta the NDP disruptions to our power grid are already putting natural gas projects at great risk. When will the Premier start defending our natural gas industry instead of making it far worse for all Albertans?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. In fact, we're working very closely with the natural gas industry. They will play a critical role in the transition off coal-fired generation, and we're very pleased to have that important, important resource here in Alberta. Just as we work very hard to increase market access for our oil and gas, we will do the same with respect to natural gas. We understand that that's an important industry that we have in this province. It is a cleaner burning fuel and presents tremendous opportunities for Albertans.

Mr. Jean: A new report from FirstEnergy highlights the chaos NDP policies are having on our power grid here in Alberta, and it will be Albertans who ultimately pay the price. The cost to replace coal generation will be $16 billion without even pricing in any new growth or additional facilities. That means either even higher taxes, massive subsidies, or big price increases on all Albertans' power bills. Right now consumers and businesses cannot afford these changes, and investors are spooked to invest in Alberta. Will the Premier back down from her plans before any more damage is done by these NDP policies?

Ms Notley: Well, Madam Speaker, it doesn't surprise me to hear folks on the other side embrace, with no critical analysis, the absolute first bargaining position of somebody trying to get money from taxpayers. That being said, we are actually going to move forward on a responsible transition off coal-fired power generation because it's good for the health of Albertans, good for our ability to reduce our greenhouse gas emissions, and ultimately will ensure that we have a more renewable, more sustainable electricity production grid in this province.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. Third main question.

Wildfire Control and Recovery

Mr. Jean: It's only mid-May, but we continue to hear of more evacuations because of wildfires growing out of control. A mandatory evacuation for residents within the municipal district of Greenview was ordered last night as the fire burned just 10 kilometres north of the community. Evacuees have been forced to leave their homes, are very worried about if there will be enough resources to keep the community safe and if their homes will be all right and when they can return. Can the Premier please assure these residents that everything will be done to keep these communities safe?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Thank you to the member for that question. It's a very good question. Indeed, those are the questions that we ask every morning in our briefings with officials because we share those same sentiments as the member opposite. Absolutely everything is being done that needs to be done to fight these fires. We have over 1,900 firefighters in Alberta right now. We have a growing number of resources. We've established working relationships with other provinces, and we have the number that we need right now, but we are also engaging in additional conversations with international resource providers, and we will ensure that everything that has to be done will be done to fight these fires.

Mr. Jean: The most recent update from the Premier has the people of Fort McMurray receiving a timeline within the next 10 days for when they can actually return to their homes. Last week at this time the Premier said that residents would know within two weeks when they could return. We understand the need to get all services back online and, of course, for the community to stay safe, but residents are feeling increasingly anxious. The longer they're out of their homes, the more distressed they become. Can the Premier assure the people of Fort McMurray the 10-day timeline won't be delayed further by this government?

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and again thank you to the member for that question. I absolutely agree completely with everything that he says, that this issue of not knowing the plan going forward is very stressful and very anxiety provoking. We hear that, and we understand that. So we can absolutely commit that a schedule and a timeline going forward will be communicated to the evacuees of Fort McMurray within the 10 days that remain within the deadline that we set.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the Premier reassuring us.

A sense of panic among Fort McMurray business owners seems to be growing, however. Many lost their homes, and now they're worried they'll lose their businesses. They're unable to work in Fort McMurray, obviously, but because their equipment is stranded there, they can't go to work anywhere else in the province either. Meanwhile their bills continue to pile up, and business owners fear they may go under even before work in Fort McMurray is available again. It is concerning. What assurances can the Premier give to business owners in Fort McMurray who've lost their homes and now worry about losing their very livelihood?

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We understand that that is a challenge for everybody in Fort McMurray, and indeed most Fort McMurrans have experienced income disruption and are struggling with that. We're working as quickly as we can to ensure that we can assist them any way that we can. Just yesterday – maybe it was even Saturday – we started contacting some small-business owners to invite them back up to Fort McMurray to start setting up so that they were ready for when people came back and, unfortunately, had to postpone that because of the air quality concerns that we have today. So safety continues to be the priority in terms of how we get people into the community and have them, you know, either collecting their stuff or staying . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The hon. leader of the third party.

Carbon Levy and Vulnerable Albertans

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The NDP carbon tax is an attack on Albertans. In 2017 all Albertans will pay more for nearly everything they use, including necessities such as food, electricity, heat, and transportation. Seniors, single parents, income support recipients, and persons with developmental disabilities will all pay more, making life difficult for some of Alberta's most vulnerable citizens. To the environment minister: why are you financing your government's operations on the backs of Albertans living on a fixed income?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, this government will be investing $645 million over the next five years into energy efficiency. I just note that in a report, which I'll table later today, by the Canada West Foundation, Alberta was left by the previous government as the only jurisdiction in North America without any kind of energy efficiency strategy. That is an embarrassing record left by the previous government that we are correcting.

Mr. McIver: So the minister is leaving vulnerable Albertans under the bus. Albertans now know the carbon tax rebate will cover less than half of the extra costs of the carbon tax, yet the NDP government has the impudence to state that "putting a price on carbon will reward Alberta families." Given that your rebates will not compensate Albertans' extra costs and it certainly won't reward them, what measures will you take, Premier, for those Albertans who do not have enough money for food and won't be able to pay the increased costs to heat their homes?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. First of all, let me just correct one of the premises of the previous question. Not a cent of the carbon levy is going towards running government operations. That's something that we've been very clear about all along, so I think that needs to be reinforced. In terms of the rebate, there's no question that the rebate – those lower income families that the member talks about will receive a rebate. In fact, it will be more than what they will likely end up having to pay in terms of the carbon tax, so it is not an issue. Moreover, there's additional investment that will go into energy efficiency . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Well, Madam Speaker, low-income Albertans will not get enough to cover what they pay, and the Premier is not giving the straight goods on that. Albertans deserve a government that will respect their hard-earned tax dollars and show leadership by responsibly managing debt. Rather than financing your government's operations on the backs of Albertans, particularly those with low incomes, through your carbon tax, to the Finance minister: why don't you empower Alberta's public servants to reduce public spending without impacting the front lines, as we have suggested?

Mr. Ceci: Madam Speaker, I think the answer was just given by the Premier. None of the monies will make their way into general revenues. We are putting them back into the economy. We are putting them back into people's pockets directly, and we are creating energy efficiencies throughout the province. That's what we're doing with the levy.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Investor Tax Credit

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Now, the investor tax credit, long supported by the Alberta Party, is a good first step in rebuilding Alberta's economy. It will give investors new incentive to remain in and grow their business in Alberta, but the plan is still very vague. This ambiguity has left me and, I'm sure, Alberta's business community with a lot of questions. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: what criteria will you use to determine which industries will be eligible for the new investor tax credit?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question, a very good question. Part of what we're doing over the summer and into the fall is consulting, and I can let this House know that we've already begun conversations with small-business owners, with associations throughout the province looking at – we want to ensure that we get the right parameters and that the investor tax credit does what it is supposed to do, which is to incent investment in Alberta-based companies. I can assure the member that we will be working with different sectors, different businesses to ensure that when we roll this out, we get it right.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Now, in the past the minister has said that the credit will only support a small subset of industries: IT, clean tech, video games. Now, these industries are certainly important to our provincial economy, but by no means do they encompass all of the possible economic activity in Alberta. In fact, there's a big risk that the narrow focus will mean that bureaucrats will decide which businesses are worthy of investment and which are not. To the same minister: why do you think you know better than the business community when it comes to investment decisions, and will you make the only restriction for investment be that companies are not already receiving government assistance?

Mr. Bilous: Madam Speaker, I can assure the member that our government works with business and industry and has from the day that we formed government and especially since this ministry was created. I was very clear at the announcement of the investor tax credit that we are looking at areas of focus. The intention is to stimulate investment in areas that fall outside of our traditional area of strength. However, I did make it clear that if in consultation with business and industry it is determined that this tool can be used by and is critical to our oil and gas sector, we are open to that conversation.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much. Now, I remind the minister, Madam Speaker, that B.C. made the mistake of having their tax credit too narrow and have since broadened their program, so let's get specific here. Will the investor tax credit apply to an energy company that develops a carbon reduction technology, a software developer whose current product line is used by the energy industry but could be used by others, or a welding shop that wants to expand from a focus on oil and gas to infrastructure projects? These are just three of countless examples where your government is going to have to decide who's worthy and who's not. Will you do the right thing, Mr. Minister, and broaden the program?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. Once again, this is part of the reason that our government is consulting with business and industry throughout the province throughout summer and fall, to ensure that we get it right. I acknowledge the three examples that the member gave are great examples. Again, we are open to the parameters of this, and I'll reinforce the fact that in British Columbia there was some critique, and still is, of their investor tax credit on a number of fronts, which is why we are consulting with business and industry to ensure that the tool is the right tool for the job.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Just a reminder to all members that from now on there will be no preambles to supplementals on the next set of questions.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

2:10 Fort McMurray Wildfire Recovery Contracts

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thanks to the extraordinary efforts of first responders, 85 per cent of structures in Fort McMurray were saved. Unfortunately, that was not the case for all of the town. But Albertans are resilient, and similar to Slave Lake in 2011 and Calgary in 2013, we will rebuild. Much of the work that needs to be done revolves around cleanup, rebuilding, and long-term recovery. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Have provincial contracts been awarded yet for the cleanup, rebuild, and recovery efforts in Fort McMurray?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Our government is absolutely committed to ensuring that the residents of Fort McMurray have every resource they need for recovery. The work on cleanup and rebuilding has not started yet, and no provincial contracts have been awarded for disaster recovery efforts. We are committed to using local contractors, and as we shift our priorities towards Fort McMurray's long-term recovery, we are amassing a database of local contractors with whom to partner.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you to the Minister.

Madam Speaker, given that as of late I have heard that there has been an increase in heavy equipment being shipped towards Fort McMurray through highway 881, could the minister elaborate on what kinds of equipment are travelling up highway 881 and what the purpose is?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Our priority right now is ensuring safety and essential service restoration such as electricity and gas by ATCO. The heavy equipment going up highways 63 and 881 is related to these essential services and operations for the oil sands. Oil sands operations play a vital part in our provincial and federal economies, and we are focused on ensuring that our energy industry has the tools it needs to return to full capacity. Much of the heavy equipment going up the highway is related to those efforts along with utility restoration by ATCO to prepare for the re-entry of Fort McMurray residents.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that it would be beneficial to work with local contractors who are familiar with the region, when choosing contractors for the cleanup, rebuild, and recovery, how will you ensure that local contractors will be prioritized when issuing provincial contracts?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to reassure all local contractors in the region that they have not missed out on anything. There will be local contractors working on rebuilding Fort McMurray, but as of today no provincial contracts have been awarded for recovery. To ensure that local businesses have the opportunity for work in helping with rebuilding the city, an inventory of available local services has been compiled. Those who are interested can still get on that list by calling 310.4455. Since the beginning of this crisis local businesses have been stepping up to offer their help. All of those offers have been compiled for the regional operations centre, and the Provincial Operations Centre has been contacting every vendor who offered support.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Home-schooling

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Many parents in home-school programs are telling me that they're shocked to hear that their home-school has to claw back funds that traditionally have been paid. What were once routine program reimbursements are no longer being approved. To quote one stakeholder: auditors seem to be making de facto policy that seems to be arbitrary and very inconsistent. End quote. Parents want to know: who in the department is responsible for funding changes, and is the minister aware of the inconsistent audits that reimburse some parents for specific expenses while denying others reimbursement for the same expenses?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you Madam Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. Certainly, it's important to understand from the beginning that in regard to home-schooling, charter schools, private schools, and our public and separate schools we restored funding for all of those areas. We moved it for enrolment as well. That being said, as well, it's very important for us to keep track of public monies as it moves to each of those areas. I know that there have been some difficulties in regard to home-schooling and some of the receipts that they have to present. Certainly, I'm happy to take a look to resolve that issue.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member. First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that a stakeholder has written, "We are deeply, deeply concerned over the NDP government's disregard for choice in education" and since this Albertan says, "Home education is a viable option, and clawing back on the significantly lower amount of funding that is provided per student compared to public school children is affecting that option" and given that this is only one e-mail among many voicing the urgent concerns about the impact of these clawbacks, what will the minister do to fix this inequity?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As I just finished saying, we have maintained the funding, in fact, growth for enrolment in all of the different areas of funding for the province. So if someone is choosing to suggest that that's not the case, which is simply not true, if the member opposite is fanning those flames, then he'd better go back and do his job properly and make sure that he doesn't spread disinformation to the public in Alberta.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, given that the current government has already given the opposition cause to speak in this House several times in defence of parental choice in education and since these inconsistent audit processes have left many home education parents and administrators worried that this government's hidden agenda is to shut down home education programs administered by independent schools, will the minister provide certainty that these threats to parental choice are not something that he, his government, nor his ministry personnel condone?

Mr. Eggen: Well, once again, Madam Speaker, I'm not going to somehow justify those very, very poor-quality statements by even suggesting that there's anything to it. You know, fearmongering is not the way to run a school, and that's what this gentleman is doing here, and quite frankly it's inappropriate. School choice is there, parental choice is there, and anything else is just subterfuge by the Wildrose.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Tourism Strategy

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Last week in budgetary estimates for Culture and Tourism I pressed the minister for the new plan for Alberta's tourism levy. The levy was introduced to provide sustainable funding for Alberta's $8 billion tourism industry, and when invested in tourism, every levy dollar returns $20 to our provincial treasury. Now, the minister told us that the $30 million generated from the levy would be redirected into general revenue. To the minister. Had that $30 million been invested in tourism, it would have generated as much as $600 million in tax revenue. Why is he shortchanging Albertans?

The Deputy Speaker: The minister of culture.

Miranda: Thank you, Madam Speaker and to the member for the question. As I stated during estimates last week, our government is still committed to tourism by investing $49.5 million to promote this province through marketing initiatives. We're also investing $11.5 million with the tourism division in support of the tourism industry. We are going to continue doing that as well as protecting the services that Albertans care about such as health care and education.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Speaker. That $49 million is a $5 million cut to Travel Alberta.

Given that last fiscal year this government took 23 per cent of the tourism levy and siphoned it into general revenue and given that this year's budget increased that number from 23 per cent to 33 per cent siphoned into general revenue, to the minister: this is an alarming trend. Is there a limit to this, or is it like the Finance minister's debt ceiling, that has no limit?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. I want to be clear that it was, in fact, the previous Conservative government that started the practice of putting the tourism levy into general revenues. Let's just make that clear to begin with. This government is committed to tourism as a tool to diversify our economy, and my ministry will continue working with everyone in the industry to complete our vision of growing this industry to a $10 billion industry by the year 2020.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Dr. Starke: Madam Speaker, with everybody but the 17 people on the Alberta Strategic Tourism Council.

Given that that council was dissolved by this government because the minister believes that the new Premier's Advisory Committee on the Economy would better integrate tourism into the government's overall strategy and given that the minister did not meet with the council and indicated that their work would be counterproductive and given that the Premier's advisory committee does not have a single tourism expert on it, to the minister: you just fired over 500 collective years of tourism industry experience . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Do you have a question, hon. member?

Dr. Starke: Where is that input going to come from?

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. Quite frankly, our government and our Premier through the creation of my ministry have signalled to all of our sectors that economic development and recovery is a priority for our government. I can assure members of this House that I work very closely with the ministers of Culture and Tourism, Energy, and Agriculture and Forestry and that the Premier's Advisory Committee on the Economy is a sample of some of our sectors. It is not inclusive of all, and that's because there are many round-tables that exist throughout the various ministries where we are constantly in consultation with our stakeholders, looking for opportunities to build on our strengths.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Last week the NDP opposition in Nova Scotia introduced a motion to raise Nova Scotia's minimum wage to $15 per hour. No surprise there. However, unlike the NDP government here, they want to specifically exempt small businesses and family businesses, recognizing that they can't afford increased labour costs. Is it the position of this government that their NDP allies in Nova Scotia are wrong to do this exemption, or is our current government proceeding with wage increases that they recognize will hurt small businesses?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of jobs, skills, and labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to hear that our cohorts in Nova Scotia are looking at raising it to a $15 per hour minimum wage because, of course, we know that raising that minimum wage is going to support real families, families that are currently having to go to the food bank to support themselves. We are looking forward to consulting with Albertans and with local businesses to hear more about how our phase-in of the $15 minimum wage can support Alberta families.

Mr. Hunter: I'm sorry. I didn't actually hear the answer about how it was going to help small businesses.

Madam Speaker, given that personal and business insolvencies in Alberta have increased by a devastating 47 per cent over last year and given that an internal assessment had warned that a higher minimum wage could result in significant job losses and given that the current government seems unwilling to accept the advice of their own officials, can the government table definitive evidence showing that their wage increase won't have a negative impact on the most vulnerable Albertans?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We've been keeping well abreast of the research regarding minimum wage and the impact of it. We are also submitting our updated minimum wage profiles, reviewing Stats Canada information, and consulting with Albertans about this crucial issue. We know that raising the minimum wage will increase the spending power of Albertans and will help to stimulate the economy by providing more money for things like clothes, food, school supplies, and these types of things. It's unfortunate that the opposition does not see the value in paying people a decent wage.

Mr. Hunter: Madam Speaker, given that under the current government's watch the percentage and number of Albertans earning the minimum wage has actually increased and given that figures released last week show that in Calgary's job market wages offered for available jobs are declining below the national average and given that this government's alleged job-creation measures tend to get cancelled, is this government actually doing anything to support job creators now, or is it telling Albertans to just go apply for EI?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Speaker. To the first statement: as we increase the minimum wage, more people will be making it because, of course, we are raising that ceiling. This is what's happening with our minimum wage increase. Supporting small business is a top priority for this government. In fact, we have cut small-business taxes from 3 per cent down to 2 per cent, a 33 per cent cut. We will be consulting, we are looking at the numbers, and we are committed to making sure that this phase-in goes well here in Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Under the NDP the going rate for the social licence to get pipelines built is a $3 billion carbon tax on everyone and everything. This social licence isn't working and is only going to hurt everyday Albertans. This weekend we saw friends of the NDP setting up shop on the B.C. coast to break free from the fossil fuels. Even with the typical Alberta family paying an extra thousand a year, nothing will ever be good enough for the NDP hacktivists. Will the NDP cancel this risky and damaging carbon tax?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, our climate leadership plan does exactly what the Canada West Foundation, for example, encourages western provinces to do, which is to create their own climate plans. If the opposition had their way, they would sit on their hands and have a solution imposed upon us. I commend Canada West Foundation's report to the opposition. It will make for better reading than some of the climate denial that, for example, the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat retweets on Twitter.

Mr. Panda: The ignorance of those protestors is astounding. While they protested oil, they sat in kayaks made from petroleum products.

Given that the deadline for the NDP's final recommendation on Trans Mountain to the federal government is this Friday and given that the shovel-ready pipeline projects are a surefire way to support our economy, will the NDP commit to voicing strong support for the Trans Mountain expansion and the great benefits it would bring to our province?

Ms Phillips: Madam Speaker, of course, when we released our climate leadership plan along with Suncor, Shell, Cenovus, and CNRL, who are, of course, shippers on Trans Mountain, we enjoyed their support and that of others because of the fact that the climate leadership plan reduces any doubt about Alberta's environmental record. This is, of course, not an approach that either of the conservative parties is interested in. They would rather hold us back. This province's climate leadership plan is moving us forward.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that the NDP ranks are full of experienced hacktivists, usually against the oil sands, and that now is the time for them to rally around the pipelines and given that the best thing the NDP could do would be to follow the Wildrose lead and support the Energy East, Trans Mountain, and Northern Gateway pipelines, will the NDP government direct their hacktivists to help, not hurt, our economy and have them join Albertans in supporting these crucial pipeline projects?

Ms Phillips: Well, Madam Speaker, I'm always very pleased when we take the trip down memory lane with members of the Official Opposition given, of course, that we've got half a dozen folks across the way who ran on a climate denial platform. We don't even have to look too far in the rear-view mirror to find more climate denial. Our approach is opening up markets and refurbishing our reputation. I will remind the members opposite that if it's a trip down memory lane that they would like, it leads to a lake of fire.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Opoid Use in Indigenous Communities

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Last week AHS released the first-quarter number of fentanyl-related deaths of 2016. It's extremely distressing that we have to track this figure in the first place, let alone the alarming fact that fentanyl killed 69 Albertans in the first three months of this year, which puts us on track for the same number of fatalities as in 2015. Sadly, there's been no change in the prevalence of deaths. To the Health minister: how many of the 274 Albertans who died after ingesting fentanyl in 2015 were indigenous Albertans?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Speaker and to the member for the question. Absolutely, we are saddened by any of the losses of life through fentanyl overdoses, which is why our government has been working very diligently with our partners both in law enforcement as well as with the federal and other provincial governments as well as indigenous communities to ensure that we're able to expand access to the potentially life-saving antidote, naloxone. We are very pleased that we were able to announce last week that as of this past Friday Albertans are able to access naloxone in a pharmacy without a prescription and that loved ones are able to pick up that prescription for families that they're concerned about.

Mr. Rodney: With great respect, Madam Speaker, I believe Albertans deserve an answer to the previous question. Perhaps we'll get it in the next one. No new information, unfortunately.

Given that the number of fentanyl-related fatalities is not decreasing despite the government's self-applauded efforts to alert

Albertans about this deadly opoid and given that the Health ministry just mentioned that they've recently made naloxone available without a prescription in an effort to make it more widely available across the province – but there are a limited number of pharmacies serving Alberta's indigenous people living on-reserve, and this group is particularly at risk – to the Health minister: how are you ensuring all of Alberta's indigenous peoples have access to naloxone?

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Speaker and to the member for the question. Currently the system is that pharmacies sign up to be able to distribute the naloxone kit. We have tripled the supply of our province's naloxone kits, from 3,000 to 9,000, and we will make more available as demand increases. We also have a number of the kits available on-reserve for any of the reserves that do not have access to pharmacies, and we are working very closely with our partners in Indigenous Relations to ensure that we are able to get those naloxone kits into the hands of the people who need them.

Mr. Rodney: The question was: how can she assure Albertans that all indigenous peoples have access?

We'll try this question, please. Given that on March 9 the minister indicated that an opoid addictions plan for indigenous peoples was an immediate priority and given that she asked me to check with her in two months about the establishment of the indigenous advisory committee to help her ministry address the opoid addiction problem and that now it's over two months later, to the Health minister: what's the status not only of the advisory committee but also the recommendation of the Mental Health Review Committee to develop an opoid addictions plan?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Speaker and to the member for the question. We've been working very closely with our partners in Indigenous Relations, and we've also reached out to chiefs across the province to ensure that we're able to get naloxone kits available as well through the health centres on-reserve. Through our mental health and addictions implementation team stemming from the Valuing Mental Health report, we are continuing to work very closely with the communities to ensure that the services that are required are available.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow. Once again, I'll remind you about the preambles, please.

Wildfire-affected Postsecondary Institutions and Students

Ms Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Over the last two weeks Fort McMurray residents have shown tremendous strength and resolve. Now they wait to return to their community. Many people are looking at the costs ahead. This includes people who have had their source of income disrupted paying off student loans. To the Minister of Advanced Education: what is being done to ease the burden on these residents paying their student loans?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I'm pleased to say that we announced last week that all student loan payments will be automatically deferred for six months interest free for affected students, which mirrors a similar commitment that the federal government has made, and I ask that all students who have been affected by the wildfires please reach out to Student Aid Alberta to make sure that they can get their student loan payments deferred. When people have been displaced from their homes and their jobs, the last thing that they should have to do is worry about costs like student loans, and I'm proud that our government is dedicating the necessary resources to meeting the needs of those affected by the wildfires.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In these difficult times we have seen Alberta step up and demonstrate the strength and resolve that gets us through events like this wildfire together. Will the Minister of Advanced Education tell us how postsecondary institutions are playing a part in this?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm proud of the actions that the postsecondary institutions have taken to step up and pull together to support the Keyano College students who have been affected by this. Roughly 2,000 evacuees have been accommodated on postsecondary campuses all across the province, and we've also had all of our institutions reach out to say that they have spaces available if they're needed. They're doing their part, and I'm very proud of the support that these institutions have provided to people in need.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that we now know that both Keyano College campuses in Fort McMurray remain intact, can the minister tell this Assembly what his department is doing to help Keyano students impacted by this fire? [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I've heard some cries from the opposition that we're shutting universities down. They must be confusing our platform with their platform.

I've had the chance to talk to staff, students, and faculty at Keyano College, and we're working with technical training institutes across the province to support students registered at Keyano to continue their studies. Again, I'll urge any affected apprentices to reach out to Advanced Education as soon as they're able so that we can ensure that they get the training that they need. I want students, staff, the Fort McMurray community, and all Albertans . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Wildfire Prevention and Control

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Another Alberta community has declared a local state of emergency due to wildfire yesterday. This time it's in the riding I serve, Grande Prairie-Smoky, where some residents of the MD of Greenview are currently under a mandatory evacuation order, and the fire season has just barely begun. This government is trying hard to calm Albertans' fears, saying that it will fund wildfire management as necessary despite having budgeted only $86 million, probably one-third of the average. To the Premier: will you abandon the accounting sleight of hand and actually budget according to the realistic historical figures for managing wildfires?

Ms Hoffman: I have to say that if the opposition is saying that the budget forecast caused these devastating fires, I think that's a contemptible accusation and not befitting of being an MLA, Madam Speaker. This year we budgeted more than $280 million, which is slightly more than the average expenditures for the last five years, but rest assured, Albertans, that we are investing every dollar necessary to make sure that we move forward and address these fires. To accuse otherwise is simply disrespectful and dishonest.

Mr. Loewen: Well, I guess the minister maybe needs to look at their own paperwork.

Given that the FireSmart program has been helping communities in numerous northern energy projects mitigate the risk of wildfires for decades and that while these practices don't prevent forest fires, they certainly lessen their impact on communities and given that FireSmart has helped reduce forest fire impact throughout the world and that the Flat Top Complex report recommended adopting its practices, to the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry. Your government has chosen to reduce the Flat Top Complex's budget by $4.25 million. Does this cut affect grants . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Do you have a question, hon. member?
Go ahead, Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Certainly, we have 49 per cent more seasonal fires this year than is typical, 9 per cent more contract firefighters than we had five years ago, and the same number of air tankers we had last year available at the same time. Fearmongering when so many people are living through the worst disaster that we've experienced in many years is irresponsible and disrespects all Albertans who have stepped up to help each other during this very difficult time.

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Point of order noted.

You can proceed with your second supplemental, but I don't want to hear another preamble.

Mr. Loewen: Okay. I'll show you the notes on the preamble, and the minister can look at the notes there, too.

Given that the FireSmart best practices recommended by the Flat Top Complex report help to slow the progression of wildfires in communities and given that while implementing FireSmart principles is costly for communities, it pales in comparison to the cost of rebuilding, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: will your ministry look into sharing the cost of implementing these FireSmart practices with municipalities in order to make Alberta communities safer places to live and raise a family for years to come?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm not sure why he directed to me a question that clearly resides with Agriculture and Forestry. However, as a member of Slave Lake I certainly am very thankful for the work that FireSmart has done in my community, and we continue to support the rollout of the FireSmart program. It's distributed in the fall and winter. Obviously, it had nothing to do with this fire whatsoever. We'll continue to look at the pacing of the Flat Top recommendations, but we've accepted all of them, are rolling them out, and continue to support the FireSmart program.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Electricity Power Purchase Agreements

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As Albertans look with dread at their electricity bills after January 2017, a modest but meaningful credit will disappear seemingly into thin air. As Alberta's Balancing Pool absorbs negative contracts due to cancelled PPAs, what has to date benefited Albertans will disappear and likely become an ongoing cost to electricity consumers. To the Minister of Energy: in being accountable to Albertans as promised, has your government calculated what the total annual cost will be to taxpayers and consumers as the Balancing Pool continues to absorb these contracts?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the question. First of all, we need to step back a little bit for context. We need to be clear. These PPAs are not being handed back because of the increase to SGER. These PPAs are already unprofitable, and the issue here is what the power companies believe the previous government agreed to. This is no small issue, so we are being very deliberate about how we proceed.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll answer the question. It will be roughly a billion dollars.

Given that government has continuously deflected blame for the cancellation of PPA contracts and given this government's refusal to acknowledge legally binding principles, which hints at litigation, and given that many of these same companies are, surprisingly, the largest investors in renewables in Alberta, again to the minister: did you not consider the implications of fighting with the very companies that you're asking to make risky investments in your climate leadership plan?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question again. Again, these companies believe they signed contracts that send profits in their direction and losses to the public. We're being very deliberate – and, again, this is no small issue – about how we proceed. The government has been very clear that we're going to take all necessary steps to protect ratepayers.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's interesting; I see that Enbridge just invested, because of PPAs, over in France.

Given that the accelerated phase-out of coal will give us an excess of thermal coal and given that the environment minister has repeatedly implicated coal as detrimental to the health of both the planet and its people and the Energy minister confirmed in estimates that thermal coal may still be exported to other jurisdictions before and after the phase-out, again to the minister of . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, do you have a question? Please get to the question.

Mr. Gotfried: Of course.

Again to the Minister of Energy: does coal magically conform to your standards and do emissions mysteriously disappear when it is burned on the other side of the world?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. I want to confirm that you're incorrect on the thermal coal. During my estimates I said that we would export metallurgical coal, not thermal coal.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Red Deer and Area Economic Opportunities

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and speak today about the tremendous economic opportunities presented by Red Deer and surrounding area. I am honoured to represent Red Deer-North. My pride in Red Deer is always inspired by investing time and thought into the issues that my 50,000-plus constituents engage with on a daily basis.

During our current economic challenges the development and diversification of our local economy are top of mind. I am delighted to speak at any opportunity of the great people and businesses I represent. For example, Red Deer-North is home to one of Olymel's largest and most modern food-processing locations. Employing over 1,300 people, the Red Deer-North location serves several large export markets in addition to supplying the market in western Canada.

Located moments outside my electoral district is NOVA Chemicals. The Joffre mother ship is the largest ethylene and polyethylene plant in North America and amongst the top five largest in the world. It employs over 700 individuals plus contractors. Having just completed the polyethylene expansion phase 1 project, NOVA's legacy community nature trail is both a celebration of this milestone and a demonstration of their commitment to the Red Deer community and the preservation of its wetlands.

With a steady 3 per cent population growth per year my central Alberta gem can be recognized as a viable and optimal location for investment. The recent government investment in Red Deer's infrastructure provides strong opportunities for local businesses to continue supporting Red Deerians, Albertans, Canadians, and global citizens now and in the future.

Madam Speaker, the third-largest city in Alberta is now home to over 100,000 people, and I am dedicated to advocating for and seeking out opportunities that support their momentum.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Volunteer Support for Wildfire-affected Albertans

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. There are certain things in life that happen that are so meaningful that it's hard to put words to the experience, and I can honestly say that for me having my children, holding my grandmother in my arms as she passed away, and celebrating my 20th wedding anniversary are at the top of my list of moments that I will not only treasure but that keep me grounded every day, especially after having the great privilege of being elected to this Legislature.

My family and I are avid volunteers, and we are always humbled that people give of their time and their busy schedules to help with a cause or to fund raise for local programs. This past weekend in the beautiful and diverse constituency of Chestermere-Rocky View 1,200 people came together to fund raise for their northern neighbours in Fort McMurray and other surrounding areas affected by wildfires. We've all watched the footage and seen the pictures, lived every moment of this fire through the media and through the eyes of our leader, the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin, and the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. They received a hero's welcome in our little city, and I can tell you without a shadow of a doubt, Fort Mac, that Chestermere-Rocky View has your back.

Here are some of the community members that came together to bring this fundraiser to life in five days: my husband, Malkeet Aheer, who led the charge, gathering 50 volunteers; Alex Halat of the Chestermere-Langdon Oilmen's Association, who contributes to our community through fundraisers like the longest hockey game, where he raises money for the Children's hospital; Jed Snatic, a local entrepreneur and community leader; Patrick Watson of the Knights of Columbus; the Chestermere recreation centre; and Synergy, led by Patricia Sproule, who has said so perfectly that there was an unprecedented response to the call for volunteers.

This is how Albertans get things done. We are resilient, thoughtful, and generous. People who donated on May 13 are having a hard time making ends meet and have lost their jobs, and they are hurting. Yet with a few calls in a few days the city of Chestermere and Langdon and the surrounding communities could not wait to help.

We are proud Albertans, and we are proud because we take care of our neighbours without prompting. I'm so proud to call this province my home and my fellow Albertans my family.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Progressive Conservative Opposition

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's been a full year now since last May 5. Our PC caucus has willingly embraced the job given us by the voters of Alberta. In this House PC caucus attacks policies and not people. PC caucus pushed back on Bill 6, which disrespects farmers and ranchers. We led the charge against the long-term damage that a $60 billion debt will do not only today but to Alberta's children and grandchildren. We debunked the false premise of the $15 minimum wage. Albertans now know the carbon tax is really a carbon attack on Alberta, taking away jobs and investment in the short term and causing almost everything Albertans buy to cost more for all time until the policy is corrected. Through our efforts Alberta also knows this carbon attack will do little for the environment.

On the positive side we have convinced government to miraculously convert from pipeline deniers to advocates as the best way to keep jobs here and pay for infrastructure and social programs. We have gotten the government to reduce small-business tax by a third and got the government to commit to maintain parental choice in education, though it took a big battle to make that happen. Not bad for a team new at opposition, with an interim leader and not a lot of money to spend.

Recently in Red Deer a thousand members at their own expense attended our annual general meeting. They left energized by our absolute commitment to serve under Albertans while other parties yearn to rule over this great province. We remain the only party with a solid fiscal policy and a caring social policy. We know there is a long way to go. We need infrastructure to drive quality of life as well as the economy. We know that looking after those who need it is the same as looking after ourselves as we may all need help one day as circumstances arise. We are the only party in this House that fully grasps these realities.

Through Engage and other efforts we need to get this message to all Albertans. Then and only then might Alberta voters consider making a positive choice three years from now by choosing Progressive Conservatives, not for our sake but, if we do our jobs well, for Alberta's sake.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Filipino Wildfire Evacuees

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to bring attention to the 5,000 evacuees from the Fort McMurray wildfires who come from the Filipino community. They are Canadian citizens, landed immigrants, and temporary foreign workers who call Fort McMurray home. Currently these men and women and children are housed temporarily at the Northlands expo centre and Lister hall at the University of Alberta while some are hosted by Filipino families.

On Saturday evening I was honoured to attend a fundraising event organized through the offices of the Council of Edmonton Filipino Associations to help raise funds to support Filipino evacuees. Community businesses and individuals organized very quickly to supply Filipino comfort foods, including pancit bread, to evacuees who have been longing for their traditional dishes. Numerous local singers, dancers, and musicians performed for the appreciative audience. Spiritual guidance was offered by Alberta area 1 pastor Reverend Leopoldo Narido of the Jesus Is Lord Church while Edmonton Honorary Consul General Esmeralda P. Agbulos, who is known as the Mother General to all Alberta Filipinos, provided her eternal message of strength and perseverance in the face of adversity to the Filipino community.

Madam Speaker, the Filipino community, some 120,000 strong, is a rapidly growing segment of our population and represents the best that Albertans are known to stand for: strength in family and dedication to community, that is demonstrated best in times of need.

I would also like to highlight an upcoming Filipino cultural celebration, the Edmonton Filipino Fiesta and parade, taking place in Churchill Square June 11 and 12. I would encourage everyone to attend this exciting event celebrating the food and artistic traditions of the Philippines.

Madam Speaker, I was honoured to participate with the Filipino community in support of the displaced kababayan, or countrymen, who along with over 80,000 evacuees from Fort McMurray will need our ongoing help and compassion for many months to come.

I know that all Albertans are up to the task. We will be there for the people of Fort McMurray. We will rebuild this vital energy city.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadow-lark.

2:50 Edmontonian Support for Wildfire Evacuees

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to recognize the many people across this province who have opened their arms, their homes, and their pocketbooks in support of wildfire evacuees.

We've seen the footage of the harrowing journey that so many of our fellow Albertans made down highway 63, and we've seen the stress and confusion our neighbours have experienced trying to reconnect with friends, family, and animals that have been displaced. But I've also seen something else, Madam Speaker, something that has made me even more proud of this beautiful province. I've seen the people of Alberta rally together to do everything they can from the very beginning. As thousands of Albertans rushed from their homes with little more than the clothes on their back, it was ordinary people who packed up their vehicles with thousands of litres of gas, food, and water and headed toward the fire to help evacuees stuck on the highway. It was ordinary people who opened their homes and businesses to do everything in their power to show that evacuees were not in this alone, and it is ordinary people who continue to support those efforts weeks after these devastating events took place.

Madam Speaker, we continue to hear stories of ordinary people doing extraordinary things, and though we are still in the early stages of dealing with the aftermath, I am confident that our neighbours to the north and this province as a whole will grow stronger because of the efforts of regular Albertans. Volunteers in my constituency have been tirelessly gathering and disbursing items for evacuees out of the west Edmonton Days Inn & Suites, who have been kind enough to offer space. Just yesterday a young girl from the town of Millet, after raising nearly $1,000 from her lemonade stand, bought hundreds of toys and brought them to Edmonton for young evacuees. Newcap Radio in West Edmonton Mall hosted a toy drive and gathered thousands of items to give out to evacuee children as well.

Madam Speaker, I could go on about the incredible initiatives and stories that pour in from around the province, but I would just like to say that despite what you may have heard, the Alberta advantage is still strong and well in this province. To every person who has helped with relief efforts, from the first responders to the evacuee centres and everyone in between: thank you so much for what you've done for this province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Carbon Levy and Health Care Costs

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Over the past several months it has become abundantly clear that the NDP simply does not understand the full impacts of their punishing and regressive carbon tax. One might think that a government would consider all potential consequences before charging ahead with a policy, but we all know that unawareness of the subject matter has never stopped the NDP in the past.

In the off chance that they're listening, I'd like to offer yet another thing they have failed to properly take into account, the impact of a carbon tax on health and seniors' organizations. Consider how much electricity a hospital requires to power complex medical equipment. Consider how much fuel is required by an ambulance during the course of a shift or an aircraft responding to an emergency in a very remote location. Consider the natural gas usage of a seniors' lodge or supportive living facility as they keep residents comfortable over the winter months.

In response to this, all the government can offer are vague assurances of a pie-in-the-sky efficiency program while telling Albertans that they're just going to have to make do with less and start changing their behaviour. Air ambulance organizations like STARS, HALO, and Phoenix are organizations funded largely by donations and municipal grants. How are they going to change their behaviour? Are they going to be forced to cover less area, or has the NDP brain trust sketched out plans for solar-powered, electric medevac helicopters? How will seniors' facilities absorb the tens of thousands of dollars in increased costs on everything from heat to food to transportation? The proposed rebate won't even begin to cover the added expense for residents or for facility operators, but perhaps they can just follow the NDP's advice and turn the thermostat down a few degrees in January.

For the sake of our health and seniors' services the NDP must back down now from this most regressive and poorly targeted tax.

Introduction of Bills

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Bill 16

Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2016

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2016.

Madam Speaker, I rise today to introduce Bill 16, an act to amend the Traffic Safety Act. We have talked to stakeholders and traffic safety partners, and the changes that we're proposing reflect current and future traffic safety issues. There are four main legislative amendments that we are making in the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2016.

Currently the legislation is vague about drivers producing out-of-date proof of insurance, known as pink cards, that some officers have ticketed them for even though they may have a current pink card as well. The first amendment would prevent drivers from receiving a ticket if they can produce a valid pink card.

First-time offenders whose blood-alcohol concentration is less than .16, or double the legal limit, currently can apply for an exemption to the ignition interlock program. An amendment will strengthen impaired driving legislation by removing that application for first-time offenders.

The six general housekeeping amendments aim to clarify intent, to correct errors in drafting instruction, to remove obsolete provisions, and to achieve legislative consistency.

The last amendment, Madam Speaker, will allow the government to regulate transportation network companies such as Uber as outlined by the government on February 29, 2016.

Madam Speaker, I look forward to discussing Bill 16 with all members of the House. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm rising to table the requisite number of copies of written responses to questions about the Ministry of Energy estimates from committee last week. There were seven questions where a written response was requested, and the Ministry of Energy has provided those responses. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of seniors.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to table the responses to estimates questions that due to time I was unable to answer. Copies are being sent to members who asked the questions and to the leader of each party. I have five copies of these documents for tabling.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of the Canada West climate change report to support what the minister was speaking about in question period. Our climate leadership plan does exactly what the Can West encourages western provinces to do, which is to create their own climate plans. If the opposition had their way, they would sit on their hands and have a solution imposed on us. The report states . . .

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

Mr. Dang: . . . that Saskatchewan should consider pricing carbon as British Columbia and Alberta have.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceed with the tabling, hon. member, please. Thank you.

Point of order acknowledged.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm rising on a point of order under 23(h), allegations against another member. It's been a long-standing tradition of this House that during tablings we stick to the business at hand, which is a tabling, not making wild allegations . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, if I could just interrupt you. Given that we're still in part of the Routine, we will defer the discussion on this point of order until afterwards. Thank you.

Do we have any further tablings?

All right. I guess we have no more tablings. We'll now consider points of order.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise on the point of order from earlier in question period. I want to make two very distinct references to the standing orders based upon the egregious comments that were made by the Minister of Health, first and foremost, under 23(h), "makes allegations against another Member."

For the benefit of the House the allegation that was made by the Health minister was that the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky was fearmongering. I'd just like to take about 35 seconds to provide to the House exactly what the member said. The Minister of Health said that the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky had implied, or fearmongered, that the budget cut caused the fire or was part of the reason for the fire. So for clarity's sake:

Another Albertan community has declared a local state of emergency due to wildfire yesterday. This time it's in the riding I serve, Grande Prairie-Smoky, where some residents of the MD of Greenview are currently under mandatory evacuation order, and the fire season has barely begun. This government is trying hard to calm Albertans' fears, saying that it will fund wildfire management as necessary despite having budgeted only $86 million . . . To the Premier: will you abandon the accounting sleight of hand and actually budget according to the realistic historical figures for wildfire management?

Madam Speaker, at no point in time did the hon. member make any reference to the budget causing fires; in fact, didn't even go close to that. The challenge is that every single time this government has to answer a hard question, whether it be on budgets and wildfire budgets or be it on another topic that they don't like to speak about, the only answer that ever comes is: you are fearmongering. This is an accusation that is totally unacceptable, particularly given recent events.

So let me continue with my point of order to (j), "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." Madam Speaker, unparliamentary language is more about the context in which it is used and less about the word that is used.

I would like to make a case that the word "fearmongering" be considered to be unparliamentary in this Assembly, and let me tell you why. The last time this government used the word "fearmongering," the Leader of the Opposition's house was burning down, and it is disgusting. It is more than a little disappointing, Madam Speaker, to hear the hon. member ask a question about wildfire management and be accused of fearmongering at a time when we saw some of the most horrific events of two weeks ago. No one at that time or this time made any statement like: you cut the budget, and now the province is burning down. No one made any statements like that. They were legitimate questions.

So, Madam Speaker, I ask certainly in this context, and I believe that the speaker should consider the use of language because I can assure you it is likely to create disorder if the government continues to use it.

I would ask that the member do the right thing and withdraw the comments so that we can all move on.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister to respond.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and respond to this point of order. I think the hon. member and I agree on one thing, if not much else, and that is that words need to be considered in the context in which they are used. In this particular instance, the words were used in the context of questions surrounding wildfire. Now, the member has just read out for the benefit of the House what exactly was said, and it is our view that this is not, in fact, a point of order. It's simply a dispute as to the facts.

The member has asked that the term "fearmongering" not be allowed in the House, and I think that – you know, he's referenced several other uses, which, of course, we don't have in front of us at this moment. We have only this one particular instance, but the words that he read out certainly imply that there should be fear. He asked that people have their fears calmed – so we're trying hard to calm the fears of the individuals – and then implied that those fears arose because of the way wildfire budgeting is done. It has always been the case, Madam Speaker, that a base budget exists to fund the operations throughout the year and that emergency funds are advanced as needed. That has been the case for years, and the opposition well knows it. They nonetheless choose to draw attention to this fact and imply that in some way the response to the disaster was inadequate because we budgeted in the normal course as is done in every other year. I would certainly call that fearmongering.

If they choose to become disorderly when they make statements which make implications to the general public which are prone to incite unnecessary fear or do not represent the state of facts as they actually exist, it is, I think, a responsibility of the government to set the record straight and to ensure that members of the public are aware that those statements are inaccurate. There were multiple statements made today in question period that are inaccurate. That elevated the temperature in the House, certainly, to the point at which we found ourselves, but it's not the case that using the term "fearmongering" to describe those actions would be inaccurate. This is a dispute as to the facts.

You know, the hon. member stood up and referenced another event which apparently used the term "fearmongering." I can't refer to that event because I don't have the Blues in front of me. I have no way to verify whether those facts are in fact accurate. Calling it accounting sleight of hand to budget in the normal course is not appropriate. To imply that somehow the response was inadequate because we budgeted in the normal course is not appropriate. This is a dispute about whether or not that had an impact, and it is our view that it didn't.

You know, Madam Speaker, it's challenging that they would raise this particular point and imply that the term "fearmongering" should never be used again in this House. First, because terms should be read in their context. Secondly, I think to say that spewing out a series of false and faulty premises and then, when someone comes up and calls them on it, the calling them on it is the thing that's likely to create disorder is somewhat absurd.

It's not appropriate in this place, where we know that the public is watching, where we know that people are stressed out and have significant concerns, to make statements that one knows rely on faulty premises. It's not appropriate, and I think as the government we have a responsibility to disseminate the appropriate information to the public and to call what the opposition is doing what it is, which is fearmongering.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, on the point of order.

Dr. Starke: I didn't hear any of that.

The Deputy Speaker: You don't wish to speak?

Dr. Starke: I would like to speak, if possible.

The Deputy Speaker: Yes. Go ahead on the point of order.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I apologize. I didn't hear your remarks when you were standing.

Madam Speaker, I've listened to the discussion on this point of order, and I'd like to just offer a few comments. I guess I'd like to start by saying that I find it absolutely incredible that the hon. minister is defending her colleague's remarks. Unbelievable.

Madam Speaker, we know that we are dealing right now with a situation where tensions are particularly high. You yourself in your home community had a portion of your community evacuated. We now have another evacuation in the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky's constituency. The inference that somehow the members of the Official Opposition are suggesting that the change in the methodology or the change in the amount for budgeting is somehow responsible for the cause of the fire, that inference, that came from the government side, is so far off base and is, in fact, what caused the outburst in the benches here.

You know, the use of the term "fearmongering," quite frankly, goes on regularly, and I can tell you that it is something that has gone on a long time. That, in fact, is not what triggered that exchange. What triggered the exchange was the budgetary change – let's just call it that – that members of the Official Opposition were suggesting that that was the cause. That's not at all what was being suggested. But that certainly does cause disruption within the Chamber, and this minister knows it and members of the government know it, and they know that they should stop short of choosing those comments to make.

So the simple way to extricate ourselves from this situation would be for the minister to withdraw the remarks and to apologize so that we can move on to substantive debate on other matters.

The Deputy Speaker: Any others wishing to speak to the point of order?

I believe we have a case here where once again there is a difference on how we interpret words. You're quite right that context is everything. I'm hearing that one side of the House interpreted the situation differently than the other side of the House.

I think you have made a very valid point, that right now people are very sensitive, and it's very easy to incite fear, rightly or wrongly, in people just because of the situation. So I think we want to caution all members to be careful in the words that we use, that we aren't making a bad situation more difficult for the people we serve in any of the words that we speak here in this House.

That said, I really hesitate to rule the word "fearmongering" as unparliamentary because, as the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has noted, it has been used quite regularly on occasions, and there may be times where it's quite appropriate to use it. So I don't think we can rule it a blanket out of order. But I would caution members on both sides to think about the words that you use and be respectful of the people we serve in everything that we say.

I will rule that there is no point of order.

Second point of order.

Point of Order

Statements during Tablings

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just wrapping my head around the ruling.

Earlier, during daily Routine, an hon. member rose during tablings and made accusations against the opposition. Traditionally speaking, in this Chamber Standing Order 37 lays out the procedures for tabling documents. It doesn't speak to making accusations about what the opposition would or wouldn't do. More so, the tradition of the Assembly has been to table the document, speak to what the document is but not the politics around the document.

The Deputy Speaker: Did you wish to respond?

Mr. Dang: I'd like to withdraw my comments.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West has withdrawn his comments, and I trust that that's satisfactory.

But I would like to just comment, related to the first point of order as well, that I don't have the benefit of the Blues, so I don't know if what you read from was the main question or supplementary. I think as a general rule that's why preambles are not appropriate, and that's, again, the reason why we don't add them when we're doing tablings. We just have to be cautious of the words because they do incite tempers and they do create more disorder in the House.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to request unanimous consent of the Assembly to waive Standing Order 8 at this time to allow the Assembly to proceed immediately to consideration of Bill 205 in Committee of the Whole.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Good afternoon. I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 205
Pharmacy and Drug (Pharmaceutical Equipment Control) Amendment Act, 2016

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered in respect to this bill? The Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Chair. Once again it is truly an honour for me to rise and open our deliberations on Bill 205, the Pharmacy and Drug (Pharmaceutical Equipment Control) Amendment Act, 2016, at this stage of the legislative process. You know, I've been extremely humbled and encouraged by the response from all sides of this House, and I believe that we now collectively have the opportunity to make this bill even stronger.

First and foremost, I want to remind the House of the importance of this legislation. I know that nobody needs reminding at this point, but at least we've learned that the total deaths from fentanyl in 2015 were 274. This year we have already lost 69 people because of this dangerous and deadly opioid. We do not know how many people have been killed as a result of the W-18 compound. It is very difficult to trace because of its incredible potency.

I want to take a minute to address a couple of points that were made in second reading. Yes, I agree that this should be in the Criminal Code of Canada, and, yes, I believe that the federal government should show leadership in this fight. Absolutely. However, we don't have time to wait. What we can do is pass this bill now here in Alberta. Frankly, if we save even one life, then it will all have been worth it.

In my consultation with the constitutional lawyer I was directed to section 92(16) of the Constitution Act of 1982. It provides provincial legislators the ability to regulate "Matters of a merely local or private Nature." I'm not suggesting that we are alone in our country with the opioid abuse that we have here, but we certainly have the ability to deal with it in the most aggressive way possible in order to save the lives of vulnerable people. This bill won't stop people from driving to other jurisdictions and purchasing these devices. If they are motivated, which they are, by money, these types of criminals will always find a way. But this bill will mean that if any device is brought back to our province, it is automatically illegal without a licence.

Sections 92(9) and (13) of the Constitution Act, 1982, also create the provincial power of regulation through licences. Hon. members, legislating to suppress conditions that are likely to favour the commission of crime is well within the provincial legislative competence. There will even be a cross-benefit outcome for society.

Madam Chair, at this point I would like to move a series of amendments. I have the requisite number of copies, and I will read them into the record once you and the table, of course, have a copy.

The Deputy Chair: We'll just pause for a minute while they're dispersed. This amendment will be A1.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 205, the Pharmacy and Drug (Pharmaceutical Equipment Control) Amendment Act, 2016, be amended as follows.

A. Section 2 is amended (a) in the proposed section 18.8 by striking out "or pharmaceutical mixer" and substituting ", pharmaceutical mixer or tablet punch or die"; (b) by striking out the proposed section 18.81 and substituting the following:

Pharmaceutical equipment

18.81(1) No person shall own, operate or possess designated equipment unless that person holds a licence or is a proprietor or is exempt under subsection (2).

(2) The following are exempt from subsection (1):

- (a) an institution pharmacy;
- (b) a person authorized to compound or manufacture drugs under an Act or regulation of Alberta or Canada;
- (c) any other person designated in the regulations as being exempt.

(c) in the proposed section 18.82, (i) in clause (a) by striking out "under" and substituting "for the purposes of"; (ii) by adding the following after clause (a):

- (a.1) defining terms for the purposes of section 18.8;
- (a.2) respecting the granting, cancellation and suspension of permits for any activity under this Part;
- (a.3) respecting the charging of fees for any permit issued under this Part;

(iii) in clause (b) by striking out "that are exempt from section 18.81" and substituting "as being exempt from section 18.81(1)"; and (iv) in clause (c) by striking out "and return" and substituting ", return, sale and destruction."

B. Section 3 is amended by striking out "18.81" and substituting "18.81(1)."

C. Section 4 is amended by striking out "18.81" and substituting "18.81(1)."

D. Section 5 is amended in the proposed section 39.1 (a) by renumbering it as section 39.1(1); (b) in subsection (1) by striking out "18.81" and substituting "18.81(1)"; (c) by adding the following after subsection (1):

- (2) A prosecution under this section may be commenced within 2 years after the commission of the alleged offence, but not afterwards.

Madam Chair, as you can see, more lawyers have gotten involved. Hon. members, the majority of these amendments are technical in nature and are here as a result of the goodwill that has been shown by both sides of this House, and I want to personally thank the government members and opposition members for their collaboration and their input. The amendments have been worked on in consultation with the department and the Health minister's office, so I'm sure that the minister will be able to supplement my comments.

These amendments refer to some language that needs to be consistent with the Pharmacy and Drug Act such as incorporating the term "proprietor" into section 18.81. This removes a bureaucratic hurdle for proprietors, individuals who own, manage, or direct the operation of a facility in which a licensed pharmacy is located. While the proprietor may have a degree of control over the management and conduct of the licensed pharmacy, designated equipment will be licensed because of the pharmacy operation, and ownership of designated equipment would not be under the name of the proprietor. Quite simply, for people like me to understand it, this measure just avoids double permitting.

Other changes specifically allude to a permitting process in the proposed section 18.82 and related issues regarding granting, cancellation, and suspension of permits; the fees for permits; and the sale and destruction of designated equipment. If a piece of high-tech equipment can be used legally by a research laboratory, for example, the government will have the ability to cede it to them. If it is a cheaper, cruder piece of equipment, then of course the government has the option to destroy that piece of equipment.

This amendment also includes a clause to allow for the prosecution to be commenced within two years. This is included in order to mirror section 39 of the act. Essentially, members, this is a reasonable statute of limitations.

Finally, the very first amendment includes another piece of designated equipment. Hon. members, it was clear in second reading and discussions with folks on both sides of the House that the Assembly would like to see more teeth in this bill. Fentanyl patches were raised as per the, quote, one-for-one, unquote, system that was introduced in an Ontario private member's bill. We also talked about other ways in which illicit fentanyl can be ingested. Unfortunately, these do not fall within the scope of this bill, but – trust me – I considered all of these eventualities when I developed this bill.

However, we are dealing with designated equipment relevant to pill and tablet presses, so I wanted to include tablet punches and dies. The device leaves an imprinted stamp on a pill or tablet. Now, there are very few companies in Alberta that require this type of equipment; therefore, the impact on businesses will be very minimal. Now, many of you have seen pictures of a green pill with the letters “CDN” on one side and “80” on the other side. Hon. members, this is simply the drug dealer trying to fool the victim into believing that they have purchased OxyContin, but instead the victim has purchased fentanyl. You may ask: why? It's because people know that fentanyl can kill them, so victims are trying to stay away from fentanyl.

Certainly, kudos to people on the government side and our side as well. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise on this important piece of legislation and just object to one particular statement that the member made, that many of you have seen these pills. I have never seen any drug, so if it's not a Tylenol, I likely haven't seen it.

Mr. Connolly: T-3s?

Mr. Cooper: Or those, even.

Anyways, the long and the short of it, Madam Chair, is that this is a very, very important piece of legislation, and the Member for Calgary-West has done some very good work on this legislation, so on behalf of the folks of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills I'd just like to say thank you to him for that. As I mentioned in my comments last week, anything that we can do to try and ensure that fentanyl or other opiates get into fewer hands, things that can curb some usage, proactive steps that we can take to ensure that law enforcement officials have the tools that they need – as mentioned prior, this is just one step in what needs to be a much larger plan.

So I rise to support the amendment. You know, as he mentioned, the lawyers have been involved, so there are some significant changes that make the legislation much more technical. But, more importantly than those things, I appreciate it when the House can work well together. The hon. member reached out, I know, to this side of the House and gave us a bit of a briefing on the plan forward today.

I know that my colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake does have some additional amendments that will come in the form of subamendments to this piece of legislation. You know, while it's critically important that we expedite the process on this, I think it's very important that we do take the time to make sure that we get it right. It's not just about rushing through legislation. We've seen what happens when we do that. It's also about ensuring that we get it right on the first pass because sometimes it takes many, many years for legislation to come back. We want to do what we can to get it done, and it's my hope that we can get it done in the next two weeks as we head towards the close of session. So I'd like to thank the hon. member.

With that in mind and the fact that there are a number of other amendments, I'll keep my comments brief as we move through the process today and try to ensure that we do wind up with a piece of legislation that meets the needs of stakeholders, that meets the needs of young people as we try to do what we can to slow down this horrible, horrible crisis.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

The hon Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I will be brief. I'm just rising to support this amendment. You know, what is really encouraging is that all sides have worked together, took what was a very good idea from a member of the opposition side. I give the government a lot of credit for giving this idea due consideration, taking what is a good idea and recognizing that good ideas can in fact come from all sides of the House.

As the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills has indicated, there will be further subamendments. Of course, we do want to make sure that we take our time to get it right. It is an important bill because it does at least put some speed bumps in place that would help address not just this crisis – fentanyl is really just the latest in a series of crises – but, hopefully, it will have a long-term and lasting impact. It's not going to solve it all by itself but will have, I hope, a positive impact.

Thanks again. Let's hope we can use this as a good example of how to get things done in this House in the future. I look forward to hearing further debate.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will also be brief. Our government is indeed committed to reducing the harms caused by illicit fentanyl. We've been taking a multipronged approach to this issue. Bill 205 is a great bill that gives us another tool in our tool box.

I want to thank the Member for Calgary-West for working with my office and my department to ensure that Bill 205 is as comprehensive as possible. I also want to thank the staff at Alberta Health for their input in this process. Together these amendments will strengthen the bill by including proprietors as persons who are permitted to own the equipment in question; by ensuring that the correct types of legislation are identified as authorizing individuals to compound or manufacture drugs; and by adding regulation-making authority related to the sale and destruction of designated equipment, the granting, cancelling, or suspending of permits for the equipment in question, and the charging of fees for permits.

Under section 18.81 proprietors have been added alongside licence holders as persons exempt from the offence. This is necessary because in the Pharmacy and Drug Act the licence holder for a pharmacy must be a pharmacist, but not all pharmacy proprietors are pharmacists. Therefore, to ensure that proprietors continue to be able to own pharmaceutical equipment, they have been included as individuals exempted from the offence.

Under subsection (2)(b) a reference to regulation has been added because the authority to compound or manufacture drugs may be found in regulations in addition to acts. For example, the authority for pharmacists to compound drugs is located in the pharmacists and pharmacy technicians profession regulation. This amendment ensures that the language of the subsection references the correct types of legislation. This section has also been separated into two subsections for clarity.

Under section 18.82 regulation-making authority has been added so that regulations could potentially be put into place for granting, cancelling, and suspending permits for designated equipment and for charging fees for these permits. Further, sale and destruction have been added so that regulations may address a broader range of options regarding the disposition of seized equipment.

The other changes are for housekeeping purposes. Under the penalties a two-year time frame for prosecution after the commission of an alleged offence has been added, and this time frame is consistent with the period set out for other offences under the act.

We are very confident that these amendments support the intent of and strengthen this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I think my colleague spoke to most of the things with respect to the amendment. I would like to thank the Member for Calgary-West for the bill and for working together with the government on these amendments. I think that this will give us one additional tool.

I did just want to speak very briefly to something that the Member for Calgary-West mentioned in his speaking, that this was within provincial competence. I think that that is absolutely correct. It's absolutely the case that this is within provincial competence. I think that what the member was referring to was a suggestion that this was best addressed by the federal government. It's not that the province can't act here, but it's our view – and it was the view, I understand, of the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police when they came forward and asked us to work with the federal government to have them restrict pill presses – that it's better addressed by the federal government. The reason it's better addressed by the federal government is because they have a stronger deterrent effect. I think that given that there has not yet been movement, although we are still hopeful that there will be movement on that front, this additional tool is very useful.

I hope that this will have the impact of deterring people, but if there are individuals out there listening to this today: don't stop working on your federal Member of Parliament. Continue to do that. It is still important that the federal government make those changes, both with respect to pill presses and with respect to precursors. I hope that we can move forward on that.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. There are a couple of points in this amendment that I'd like to speak in support of. The fact is that this is a great bill. I know that I have to commend the Member for Calgary-West for his commitment to limiting the number of fentanyl pills. This is also a commitment made by the Wildrose Party, which was brought out by myself and the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat in points in our fentanyl reduction plan.

Specifically, the fact is that this amendment deals with adding another tool to this great bill. To be specific, the bill wants to restrict or license pill or tablet presses, tablet machines, capsule filling machines, or pharmaceutical mixers. This is where this amendment really speaks. It wants to add a punch or die.

The fact is that we've got very devious criminals out there right now that are really going out and making pills to look like either competition pills or, actually, pills that look harmless like Aspirin or Tylenol. The fact is that when you think you're taking one thing and you're actually taking something else, for one, it's hard if you do overdose to actually work out what it is that you took. The second problem here, when you're looking at reducing the amount of pills that are illegally made on the streets, is that we are assuming one thing, that we're taking an Aspirin, but we're receiving something totally different. It could be that you just think that you're having a reaction to the pill or something you ate. You might not even know that you're at risk.

Now, the hon. member mentioned that dies can be used to make counterfeit tablets by stamping them. This absolutely is a reality these days. We have people out there that are just outright, I guess, putting the lives of Albertans at risk, to be exact. Cracking down on this equipment will make it harder on the criminals. The fact is that this gets this equipment off of the streets, gets it out of the households. It doesn't mean that we will be eliminating W-18 or fentanyl through the reduction of these, but it will reduce them hitting the streets, and every tool that we have is best for all of us.

We also need to be looking at some of the other things that this amendment is doing. It's trying to make sure that the owners of the property that have these criminals in them don't have their property, I guess, seized or be held responsible for the equipment on the premises. The fact is that that's very admirable. You know, it's great to see that we've got the government and opposition and even – as mentioned by the Member for Calgary-West, we actually have people writing in and saying: have you considered this, and have you considered that? That is the power that we have when it comes to working together, working with stakeholders, working with all of those that are going to be affected, people actually wanting to make a difference.

The fact is that last year we had more than 270 deaths because of fentanyl alone. When we look at these deaths, we have to look at: how can we prevent them; how can we be proactive in this? The question here comes down to: where do we go from there? It comes down to really spending some time and thinking about it.

I do believe that in the end what we've got is that the hon. Member for Calgary-West has put a lot of thought in this, and that's good. I'm glad to see that he's worked forward with this. I do think, though, that this bill may overreach a little, and this is where I would like to bring forward a subamendment to A1.

The Deputy Chair: If you could just wait, Member, until I receive a copy, please.

This subamendment will be referred to as SA1.

Please go ahead, Member.

Mr. Cyr: All right. I'd like to read the subamendment. I would move that amendment A1 to Bill 205, Pharmacy and Drug (Pharmaceutical Equipment Control) Amendment Act, 2016, be amended in part A by striking out section 2(a) and substituting the following:

- (a) in the proposed section 18.8
  - (i) by striking out "or pharmaceutical mixer" and substituting ", pharmaceutical mixer or tablet punch or die", and
  - (ii) by striking out ", and any other equipment prescribed by the regulations".

This subamendment that I have proposed makes two changes. I am striking out the questionable clause in Bill 205, that will remain focused on punishing unauthorized users of commercial pharmaceutical equipment. The fact is that when we read specifically – I've got a lot of amendments here – "and any other equipment prescribed by regulations," the spirit of the bill is good, but we also need to be looking at what exactly it is we're restricting. I believe that in the end what we're looking at is moving forward. Where is it that we actually describe what it is going to be in the regulations? This is my concern here. We're not specific. Amendment A1 is a good example of the fact that we need to be specific when we start to move forward with restricting and licensing different pharmaceuticals and mixing and creation items.

Now, really, what is other equipment prescribed by the regulations? I don't think it's unreasonable to say that that seems to be a little general. I would like to strike that out and be very, very specific in what exactly it is we're trying to accomplish so that, in the end, we don't hit innocent Albertans with an unintended consequence. Now, the vague language opens the door to legislation being overreaching, which I've said already. By far what we're trying to do is reduce fentanyl. We're trying to reduce fentanyl. We're trying to reduce these drugs, but with good intentions we also need to be clear that being vague is never good for Alberta; being vague is never good for what we're trying to accomplish.

For this I would like to move forward, and I encourage everybody in this Assembly to vote for my subamendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Would anybody like to speak to subamendment SA1? The Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Chair. I certainly would like to thank the hon. member for this amendment. I know he and I have had discussions, again in the spirit of collaboration, with all parties. It's certainly something that we have discussed.

I'm afraid I cannot support this subamendment, and I certainly would like to give my explanation as to why. For me it's the understanding of the justice system but also the understanding of the drug dealers themselves. The drug dealer is always ever-evolving. The drug dealer is always trying to be one step ahead of us. If we limit ourselves to literally the content that we have in the act itself, then what we're doing is that we're really putting handcuffs on the government to evolve with the drug dealers as they come up with new ways to press these pills. Believe me, you know, I racked my brain, and I consulted and consulted and consulted, and we came up with everything that we can think of. However, as we have seen with the history of the drug dealer, he will always find a way to come up with a new way. We have to give our Justice department the ability to be ahead of the drug dealer by making sure that we put the necessary legislation in place as it evolves.

You know, that goes back to what I was talking about before with the drug dealer. We're succeeding in that we're getting the message out that fentanyl is killing people, so the drug dealer must always evolve himself. What does he do? He pretends that the pill that he is selling is Oxy, and that is then fooling the victim into thinking that. I know that, again going back to the equipment itself, the drug dealer will always be evolving, trying to come up with new innovations, and we have to be able to react to whatever he is coming up with. That's why this is an ever-evolving process that involves each and every one of you in this Legislature.

For that reason – and again I do appreciate the spirit and the argument that he gave – I'm afraid that I cannot support this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Chair. Echoing the comments of my colleague from Calgary-West, the concern with this amendment is that the purpose of including other equipment as prescribed by regulations is to allow government the flexibility to adapt to the changing illicit drug market in order to enable us to have all of the tools potentially available to us as quickly as possible. By keeping this definition within regulation and allowing for that flexibility, we're going to be able to address these emerging concerns as they come up. I think we've seen in this House – and we've certainly discussed it many times in this House – that one of the best tools that we have at our disposal when dealing with an illicit drug crisis is the ability to move quickly to address the actual concerns and the actual problems. So I am speaking against this amendment.

I would also like to add that if in the future we find that "pharmaceutical mixer" does not in and of itself capture the types of equipment that are being used to manufacture illicit drugs that we're targeting with this bill, by leaving the regulation allowance within the bill, that allows us to amend the regulations as quickly as possible to ensure that the appropriate equipment is being identified.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just very briefly, I appreciate the comments from the Member for Calgary-West and the Associate Minister of Health about the need to be able to move quickly, particularly in crisis-type situations. We know that drug dealers don't respect any law that we write, anyway.

Now having said that, I am speaking in favour of the amendment, and here's why. We do run a risk when we write into legislation sweeping powers for regulations. Not that the two things are the same, but we've seen, as an example, just for this Legislature, in Bill 6 significant amounts of widespread opportunity in regulation, and it often can create uncertainty and frustration. The challenge with regulation is obviously not the ability to move quickly to catch drug dealers. The challenge with sweeping powers in regulations in the minister's office is the unintended consequences that can come from them. There are lots of examples throughout history of that.

While it sounds like this particular amendment isn't going to pass, I think that it's important that we speak about the role of legislators and the role of regulators, and those are two very separate things. To give wider power around regulation just creates some pause and concern for us and for me, not that it would stop me from supporting the legislation should this amendment fail, but I think that it is worth while putting on the record.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to SA1, the subamendment? I recognize the leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Madam Chair. I would say that on this I'm going to take the side of my colleague from Calgary-West, but that's not in any way to criticize the amendment. I know it's well intended. This is one of those areas where I also appreciate the House leader from the Official Opposition because we do need to be a little bit careful about what we put in regulation and what we put in legislation.

At the end of the day, I think this is one of those cases where we need the government of the day having maximum flexibility to make changes. Of course, the government could always come back and change the legislation, but I don't think we can always count on the fact that when the government does that, we can always be holding hands and singing Kumbaya as we seem to be on this piece of legislation, which is kind of nice. As much fun as it is to fight with the government and sometimes the opposition, it's also nice when we can come together on something of common interest that matters to Albertans and work together as, it appears, we're doing today. That may not always be the case if the government needs to make some slight adjustment to the regulations. If it's in regulations, the government can do it more quickly than if they have to bring it back into the House.

While I won't support the amendment, I would not want the mover of the subamendment in any way to think that I'm criticizing it. I'm only concerned about the government's ability to be nimble because when the folks on the other side of the law don't have to obey any rules, they can always be nimble. We, on the other hand, cannot always be that way. So I'll be voting against the subamendment.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any additional speakers on the subamendment?

[Motion on subamendment SA1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will return to amendment A1. Anyone wishing to speak? The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Sorry. This is for A1?

The Deputy Chair: Speaking to the original amendment?

Mr. Cyr: Yes. I have another amendment I'd like to put forward.

The Deputy Chair: Member, please continue.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to move that amendment A1 to Bill 205, Pharmacy and Drug (Pharmaceutical Equipment Control) Amendment Act, 2016, be amended by striking out part D and substituting the following. Section 5 is amended in the proposed section 39.1: (a) by renumbering it as section "39.1(1)," (b) in subsection (1) by striking out "18.81" and substituting "18.81(1)," (c) in subsection (1)(b) by adding "or to imprisonment for a term of not more than 6 months or to both fine and imprisonment" after "$125,000," (d) in subsection (1)(c) by striking out "6 months" and substituting "1 year," and (e) by adding the following after subsection (1):

(2) A prosecution under this section may be commenced within 2 years after the commission of the alleged offence, but not afterwards.

(3) A member of the Executive Council shall, within 6 months of the coming into force of this section, beg leave of the Assembly to introduce a Bill to amend the Victims of Crime Act to provide for the funds collected from any fines imposed under this section to be deposited in the Victims of Crime Fund established under the Victims of Crime Act.

That was a little longer.

All right. This subamendment aims to make two changes. The first is to the ability of law enforcement to be tough on crime and to ensure punishment that reflects the severity of the crime. I believe that people that are making pills illegally should be thrown in jail; that's where they belong. The fact is that we need to be stronger when it comes to commitment to keeping these men and women off the street. The fact is that they're killing people.

The second part of this is to amend A1 to ensure that funds go towards the victims of crime. When we see these people making these illegal drugs through these pill presses and the different tools that they're using, it's appropriate that this money end up with the people that they're actually impacting, the actual fentanyl users. The fact is that they're hurting people, and through the victims of crime fund we can actually start addressing some of the crimes that they're committing to get these drugs.

The criminals that are targeted by this bill should be facing strict punishment, which helps enforcement to do their job in protecting the public. Under this amendment an individual who is charged for a second time will face the punishment of a fine to a maximum amount of $125,000 or imprisonment for a term of not more than six months. This amendment is a minor change to the legislation. It simply accelerates the punishment for a third offence to being the punishment for a second offence. The punishment should be firm but fair, and jail time for a second breach of this legislation would be a serious punishment to match a serious threat to public safety.

As the Auditor General pointed out in his February report, the victims of crime fund is far from being well managed. It needs to develop and accept a business plan to administer the surplus funds that have been accumulating in this fund's account. When it operates properly, the victims of crime fund is meant to fulfill an important function by helping to rehabilitate those who have fallen victim to criminal acts. This amendment calls for the government to amend the Victims of Crime Act so that funds collected from the individuals convicted under Bill 205 will be directed to the victims of crime fund. Rather than putting the money collected under this bill's provision into general revenue or a government slush fund, I believe that any funds collected under this act would be best used helping those who have suffered at the hands of the criminals who create fentanyl or any of the different opiates that they're sending out to Albertans.

Now, what we're actually looking at when it comes to this amendment is that we need to be ensuring that Albertans are safe. We need to be ensuring that in the end, those who are abusing these pharmaceutical machines are being held to account. We also need to make sure that the victims of these criminals are helped through the transition, I guess, so that they're able to move from being a victim to being a rehabilitated Albertan and are actually helped by these criminals' paying a fine.

In the end, I encourage everybody to vote for this amendment, vote for harder penalties. Let's actually get some funds to where the people actually need them.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Just to clarify, the subamendment will be referred to as SA2.

The Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will be brief. Of course, upon initially reviewing this, I am absolutely, you know, in favour of harsher penalties against violators of this act. My only concern – actually, before I get to my concern, let me just say that I remember that in my opening remarks I had mentioned that my hope was to have monies going to the victims of crime and make sure that, you know, people who are truly victims of crime get this money. However, when I look at subsection (3) – and this will ultimately be up to the government to take a look at, and I know that the hon. Minister of Justice is going to speak here momentarily – my question, of course, is: is subsection (3) even possible? If it is, I certainly would support it, but I will allow the minister to speak on this.

Thank you very much, Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise also to speak to the amendment and to echo the comments of the Member for Calgary-West. We are absolutely supportive of the increased penalties found in here and of most of the amendment. The challenge, of course, that we are having – and this is a challenge that often comes with subamendments that come in rather late – is that we are not confident as to how exactly one would execute subsection (3), which has to do with the victims of crime fund.

The challenge is that that would require impacts on ministries of my colleagues, and as of right now we're not confident that we can execute those things. You know, I think it's very important for everyone here in this House and certainly everyone in the government to ensure, if we're going to commit to doing a thing, that in fact we are able to do that thing. The challenge we are having currently is that we are not confident that subsection (3) is something that we are able to do, and without the assistance of some of my colleagues from Treasury Board and Finance it's difficult for us to determine if that is something that we can manage in that particular way.

That being said, we're certainly supportive of the early parts of the bill. I mean, certainly, the more force we can put behind this, the better and the greater the deterrent effect on those who are out there. This drug is very challenging and is very dangerous for individuals, so we think that greater punishments are certainly warranted. We would like to support those portions of the amendment, but it can be a little bit challenging to do this.

With respect to the rest of it, though, we are quite pleased. We think that the stiffer penalties, sort of advancing the penalties, particularly when we're talking about people who have been caught, you know, a second or third time – it's really critical that we be deterring those people in the appropriate way and that we send the appropriate message. That is our concern.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you so much, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to subamendment SA2. I appreciate the comments from my colleague for Calgary-West and the minister, particularly around their desire to ensure that portions of the amendment could be passed with respect to ensuring that we're actually tough on these individuals who are out there selling this horrific drug. At the end of the day, those people have been responsible for the deaths of hundreds of Albertans, so we ought not to take this lightly.

I thank my colleague for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for bringing forward this amendment, which strengthens this piece of legislation, increases the fines, increases the opportunity for drug dealers to reflect on their actions should they be caught on subsequent offences and, as a result, spend some time in jail. It sounds to me like the government members have some significant challenges in supporting the entire amendment, and the big challenge is found in subsection (3). "A member of the Executive Council shall, within 6 months of the coming into force of this section, beg leave of the Assembly to introduce a Bill."

Now, because this is a subamendment, we are in some unique parliamentary territory when it comes to being able to deliver on changing any amendments before the Assembly. The Assembly, when provided with unanimous consent, can move forward in a number of positive manners because in some respects the Assembly can set the rules that are best for the Assembly. If unanimous consent could be granted for the withdrawal of subsection (3), which, at the end of the day, would strike that section from the subamendment, one could assume that unanimous consent would be a reasonable tool with which to do that.

This is a very important piece of legislation, and we definitely want to make sure that we get it correct because what it means for all Albertans is that there will be the appropriate fines and jail sentences. Because I know that members on this side of the Chamber would prefer to not see all of the good work in the front half of the amendment lost to a vote, I think it seems reasonable that we ask for unanimous consent of the House to withdraw subsection (c) of the subamendment presented.

The Deputy Chair: Subsection (3)?

Mr. Cooper: Subsection (3). Sometimes C and 3 sound similar. Just for clarity purposes, subsection (3).

What I would propose is that we ask for unanimous consent of the House to withdraw or scratch or delete subsection (3) of the subamendment.

The Deputy Chair: Just to clarify, Member, you're referring to subsection (3)?

Mr. Cooper: That's correct, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you for clarifying that.

Hearing the motion to remove subsection (3) in clause (e) of SA2, is anyone opposed?

Hearing no objection to the request, the original copy of the subamendment will be amended in clause (e) by striking out the proposed subsection (3).

Returning now to subamendment SA2, are there any additional speakers?

[Motion on subamendment SA2 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Now we'll be returning to the original amendment, amendment A1. Are there any additional speakers?

Hearing none, are you ready for the question on amendment A1?

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the main bill, Bill 205. Are there any members wishing to speak to the now amended main bill?

Mr. Cyr: I'm pleased to stand to speak on Bill 205, put forward by the Member for Calgary-West, because there are some aspects of this bill that directly align with what the Wildrose has put forward. As members may be aware, in December Wildrose issued a report addressing the fentanyl crisis with the following recommendation: "Urge the federal government to enact federal laws or regulations regarding the import, export, sale, and possession of commercial pill presses in Canada."

Fentanyl has been a deadly problem across the country, most especially in Alberta. Last year 270 Albertans died from fentanyl overdoses, which was more than double the number in 2014. The problem doesn't end with fentanyl, however. As deadly as fentanyl has proven to be, the sad reality is that prior to fentanyl there were other drugs that surged in popularity, that became drugs of choice, so the strong likelihood is that once we effectively combat and limit the effects of fentanyl, we will be faced with a new drug. In fact, we're already seeing W-18.

Madam Chair, Wildrose is committed to keeping Albertans safe on the streets and in their communities, and we're pleased to see that members on both sides of the House are supportive of this bill. While naloxone may be made more readily available in Alberta, that measure only addresses the issue after the fact, once a user is already in danger. Wildrose has been advocating that the House do more on this issue, and this bill certainly paves the way forward for taking further action against drug makers, suppliers, and pushers.

Listening to people's stories about lives being cut short due to the awful influence of drugs is both sobering and heartbreaking. Family members and friends remember marking the change in character and behaviour once drugs have taken hold. Even more, there is an ongoing litany of phrases dreaming of what could have been, statements that begin with, "He would have just graduated university now" or "She had such a promising career ahead of her, and we'll never know what she could have accomplished." Albertans are crying out for help because they recognize that this war on drugs is proving too costly in terms of human life, relationships, and potential.

Because of this, it's important that we look at ways to combat the fentanyl crisis and the war on drugs right from the start. We cannot afford to sit back while hundreds of Albertans are dying and many more are beginning to experiment with drugs and growing more and more addicted. Even one life lost to drugs is too many; 270 is unacceptable. I tried to think how high that number really could climb to. Because of that, Wildrose supports this bill. I support this bill because it will clamp down on the ease with which people can fabricate drugs and push them out onto the streets and into the hands of Albertans from every walk of life. Madam Chair, drugs, specifically fentanyl and W-18, are not problems just for vulnerable Albertans. Drugs infest the living rooms of Albertans on all ends of the social spectrum and in all corners of the province. Furthermore, drugs taint school classrooms and boardrooms and businesses in all sectors. It is truly a crisis that requires our attention.

We need to equip our law enforcement agents and agencies with tools and skills that are needed to combat the rampant use and abuse of drugs within Alberta. We need to take steps to ensure that we keep our communities safe. To put a different spin on it, Madam Chair, we need to make sure our neighbourhoods are safe and cared for. Police officers invest their lives doing what they can to ensure the safety of all of us. We need to support them in the endeavour. The stakes are too high to just let things slip past us simply because we don't have the resources or tools or the training to stop them right in their tracks. The work that is being done by police officers and law enforcement agencies is absolutely critical, and we need to provide them the tools that they need to carry out their work.

Madam Chair, now is the time for that action. Now is the time for all members of the House to stand up and say: this has gone too far. Let's make sure it doesn't go any farther. We have slid down the slippery slope too far already, and we need to put on the brakes. We cannot afford to wait. Families are begging us not to wait. They're watching their children and siblings, parents and friends fall farther under the grip of drugs, and they're asking us not to stand by idly. When we have the ability to make changes that will truly help and have a positive effect on Albertans from all walks of life, from all communities, we need to take advantage of it.

There is simply no more time to waste, Madam Chair, and that's why I'm happy to see this proactive bill from Calgary-West move forward. The fact is that I believe that we need to support this unanimously.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Are there any additional members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you. Bill 205, the Pharmacy and Drug (Pharmaceutical Equipment Control) Amendment Act, 2016, is a good start. It's a good start because we don't just need a punishment for wrongdoers; we need a way for it to help people that are stuck in these circles and these cycles. We need a holistic wraparound strategy for opioid use. We need this strategy to prevent overdose and abuse within our system. Bill 205 can be part of this strategy, which may assist law enforcement to get drugs such as fentanyl off the streets. It's a tool in the tool kit, and that tool kit must also include data reporting, prescription monitoring, triplicate drug prescription programs, education for the public and professionals, and advocating for stronger measures across Canada as well as continuing to support harm reduction strategies with access to naloxone, which can help reverse opioid overdoses. It saves lives.

To see patients come into hospitals suffering from opioid overdose is heartbreaking. Fentanyl does not just affect any one demographic; it affects all Albertans because it's hidden. Naloxone can save lives, but there are much longer term effects once a naloxone kit is used. We see patients suffering from psychological trauma and guilt when they're conscious. For addicts we see severe instances of delirium tremens, also known as the DTs, and long, long recoveries. I've had to tie people to their beds. I've had to drug people so that they aren't conscious. That's part of what happens when somebody is an addict. Many times this leads to a relapse. Many of our patients that we see have compromised mental health, and many times this is the first opportunity or the best opportunity for mental health intervention.

With an overdose treatment must be holistic, and the problem is that many times these treatments can be refused, which is why we need to work on our education and our outreach activities by making it illegal to own a pill or tablet press or capsule-filling machine unless licensed, with consequences increasing as these things happen. Bill 205 is a good start to help our populations at risk of an overdose, as is Alberta Justice making proceeds of crime grants available to police and community partners to fund awareness and prevention.

It's estimated that 1 in 10 Albertans over the age of 15 will battle drug or alcohol dependency at some time in their lives, and over half of those are between the ages of 20 and 39. We see them in the emergency departments. We see them in our urgent care centres. Being able to access naloxone easier is a great thing, and not having to deal with this hidden danger is even more of a great thing.

Most of our teens – I have two, and I know that many people have or have had them – don't think about the long-term consequences of their actions. They're looking for a fun night, and they don't know that fentanyl is in those drugs. I want to protect our teens, and I want to protect our young people, and I want to protect these 20- to 39-year-olds, who have so much promise. I don't want to see these kids, these young people become addicts in our society and be punished just because they've made a bad decision.

This devastating effect on our communities is why our government takes the essential issue of fentanyl and opioid abuse very seriously, and I think that we need to support a bill like this. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak on the original bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question on Bill 205, Pharmacy and Drug (Pharmaceutical Equipment Control) Amendment Act, 2016? All agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Agreed. Thank you.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 205 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Madam Chair, I rise to request the unanimous consent of this Assembly to waive Standing Order 8 to allow the Assembly to proceed immediately to third reading of Bill 205.

The Deputy Chair: Member, sorry to interrupt. We have to rise and report first, and then we can move forward.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Chair, I move that we rise and report Bill 205.

[Motion carried]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 205. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Member.
Does the Assembly concur with the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Any opposed? It shall be so ordered.
The Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise to request the unanimous consent of this Assembly to waive Standing Order 8 to allow for the Assembly to proceed immediately to third reading of Bill 205.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Pharmacy and Drug (Pharmaceutical Equipment Control) Amendment Act, 2016

The Acting Speaker: The Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Madam Speaker, thank you so much. I guess I first want to take a moment here and thank the government members as well as all members of the opposition, from over to my right and over to my left, including my own colleagues in the PC caucus. I think this is truly an example of what Albertans have been looking for in identifying an issue, having a collaborative approach, and actually coming up with a solution.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I'd like to touch on a couple of things here. You know, as I have stated, as members of the opposition have stated and government members have stated, this is a multipronged approach. This is but one tool – one tool – that law enforcement can use in their battle, their fight against a deadly disease and against some really, really unscrupulous people.

We must also understand the addiction itself and make sure that we have all the appropriate mechanisms and measures that are available for the addiction itself. That's why I support long-term care beds. I support funding for the long-term care beds. I certainly applaud the government in their approach to naloxone, as well, certainly. Again, one more tool. The only thing I would like to say is that people who may be watching this need to understand that naloxone is not a cure. All it really is – it just stops somebody from dying. We must, again, focus on the actual addiction itself.

In conclusion, I would like to thank everyone from all parties in this Assembly for this. We will continue this fight as a team together for Albertans. We will continue to support the government in their request of the federal government, of course, to get this as something that is in the Criminal Code.

Thank you very much, and thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any others who wish to speak to Bill 205 in third reading? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today in support of Bill 205, and I want to take this opportunity to commend the Member for Calgary-West. Our government takes the issue of fentanyl abuse very seriously. We know people all across the province are facing life-and-death situations and are moving forward aggressively to curb the impact of fentanyl here in Alberta. As we all know, so far this year we have already lost 69 people here in Alberta to fentanyl. Madam Speaker, I know this all too well as I just lost a close friend of mine very recently to this very dangerous and awful drug. These deaths need to stop, period.

Since I was elected back in May, I've been very active with an organization in my riding of Calgary-Bow. Simon House is one of the highest performing addiction treatment programs in North America. On the last Wednesday of every month the clients have a celebration of their sobriety, which I or my staff attend on a very regular basis. I've spoken with the president and CEO of this organization, Trevor Loria, at length about our shared concerns surrounding this drug. I'd like to quote Mr. Loria as saying in support of this bill:

I believe that this Bill is a necessary, appropriate, and ultra-important step in addressing the opiate crisis in Alberta.

Simon House clients who have used non-prescription pills & tablets purchased on the street are playing "Russian Roulette" with their lives, as the chemical make-up of these pills and tablets is unknown, even to the people producing them via the currently unregulated machines.

Simon House supports this Bill, and the rationale behind it in bringing it to the house.

I am pleased to be able to bring the voices of this stakeholder group to the debate on this bill today and share support of Bill 205. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just want to rise in support of the bill and first of all thank my hon. colleague from Calgary-West for bringing this forward. Certainly, with his experience as a police officer and, as such, an expert in public safety this is – I know that it's been a passion of his. He's spoken of the fentanyl crisis many times in this House. I also want to thank the other opposition parties for their support, and I want to thank the government for their support of this. This is one of those cases where I think that when we're doing our jobs well, we can rally around an issue that matters to Albertans, put our heads together, even work together on some amendments, and improve what started out as a very good piece of work but, in a collaborative way, make it so that it will better serve Albertans.

I know that there are probably members in this House that haven't laid eyes on a fentanyl pill – and I may be one of those – but there are other people in Alberta that are addicted or other citizens of Alberta, as has been talked about in the debate here, that may think they're buying something that, maybe even while they don't think it's legal, is a lot less dangerous than what they actually get. That's why they call them drug dealers. They don't follow anybody's rules. They don't follow even the most basic codes of decency and conduct and care about their fellow human beings. They'll sell somebody something, simply to make money, that will kill them and turn around and not even think about them again. This ought to make the business a little bit harder for those people to do.

I think that there's some leadership here, basically, in terms of doing that. I also believe that while other provinces haven't done this yet, I wouldn't be surprised to see some follow. This is a great place for us to lead. I will be supporting this, and I thank all members of the House that have spoken their support for what I think is an important bill and one that, for certain, will save lives in Alberta once we get this business done.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today I rise to speak in favour of Bill 205, the pharmacy and drug amendment act. The intent of this bill is to regulate the possession of pill presses, which criminals use to produce and create homemade illicit drugs such as fentanyl and the new W-18. These drugs are no joke, and we certainly need to take action now, which I think is something we all agree on in this Assembly today. Wonderful news.

Madam Speaker, last year we had 272 Albertans die from fentanyl overdoses, which is more than double the 2014 death toll. According to AHS this represents a 126 per cent increase in fentanyl-related overdoses in a time span of just one year. Fentanyl is an opiate up to 100 times more powerful than morphine, and now an even more lethal drug is about to hit our streets, W-18, which is a synthetic opioid with no known clinical use at all. It'll mean an even greater risk of overdose given that this is 10,000 times more powerful than morphine and 100 times more powerful than fentanyl. According to the AHS website fentanyl and W-18 are often sold on the streets as green beans, beans, green apples, apples, shady eighties, eighties, greenies, or fake OxyContin. They receive these names because of the way dangerous drugs are manufactured and presented.

You can never be sure what will be in any drug you purchase off the streets. Please, I'd like to make that very clear: you can never be certain of what is in the drug that you purchase off the streets. Criminals are using these pill presses to deceive vulnerable Albertans into consuming an even more lethal drug. It's a deadly bait and switch for these criminals. It's shameful. Drug use is something that has permeated through cultures, and while there is not an ultimate solution, we need to take every real step we possibly can to protect people from these deadly drugs. This bill is something that I certainly support as it takes another tool out of the hands of criminals.

This is why the Wildrose Party actually released its Safer Communities, Saving Lives: Combatting the Fentanyl Crisis plan in December of 2015. In this document our shadow critic for Justice outlined 10 key recommendations for this government to follow to save lives. This is just something – I think everybody here is just trying to do their part to help. Point 9 of the Wildrose's fentanyl plan states that we “urge the federal government to enact . . . laws or regulations regarding the import, export, sale, and possession of commercial pill presses in Canada.” Certainly, I will take the recommendations as well from our hon. Justice minister and urge my MP to do the same. Madam Speaker, this is because we view this problem as one that transcends all legal borders of our province. A complete, Canada-wide strategy must be implemented. This government should be raising this point at a national level when the Council of the Federation's health ministers meet again, which, I have no doubt, this government will do.

This bill is an important first step in leading the Canada-wide crackdown on pill presses and introduces real measures to hold those drug dealers responsible for the thousands of senseless overdoses and deaths in our province. Now more than ever Albertans are looking for hope and for strong leadership, Madam Speaker. With threats like fentanyl and W-18 seeping into our communities and even into our schools, now is the time for action. As a mother of two young children there is nothing more important in my mind than keeping Alberta's streets safe. We need to ensure that our law enforcement teams like ALERT are equipped with the mandate to crack down on crime. Mass-producing illicit and lethal drugs is not a victimless crime at all, and the consequences are documented and absolutely tragic.

I support this bill, Madam Speaker, and will support any other real measures to stop the W-18 and fentanyl crises in our province and take the criminals off our streets. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to third reading? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Madam Speaker, thank you very much. I, too, rise in support of Bill 205 on third reading. I'd like to very much commend our Member for Calgary-West for bringing this forward and for his words and his diligence. Of course, he has my full support.

I'd like to take a second and offer my condolences to the Member for Calgary-Bow. My goodness, I can only imagine losing one of your friends. My sincere sympathy.

You know, it's refreshing to see the House work together, 87 of us, starting from the seriousness, the absolute crisis of what fentanyl and now W-18 and other opiates have done in our society to our people – the first responders, the police, how difficult their jobs have been at different times – respecting, of course, the civil liberties that are crucial and important to us all but ensuring that those that have such little respect for our society and for others in it have the opportunity to be brought to full justice. I absolutely believe that Bill 205 will help do that. Again, I commend the Member for Calgary-West for doing that.

Of course, our critic for Justice, from Bonnyville-Cold Lake, and I worked on the 10-point plans in November, and I'm glad to see that the government has picked up some of those and is working on others. The naloxone thing is absolutely a critical step. I absolutely commend the government for making these kits widely available at no charge to those that need them, want them, and can help. ALERT, of course, the extra concentration and help to ALERT and the good work that first responders and police do: that's another good thing. Detox beds: my goodness, a brand new detox centre just opened up in Medicine Hat, and it is well done. It is staffed by excellent, excellent people. So the addition of these types of resources around our province will go a long, long way to ensure that, you know, this fentanyl crisis – and as others have mentioned, W-18, methadone, oxycodone, all these other names and the potential that's there are alarming and are going to continue to take a consistent effort.

I would ask that this House not forget to continue to support our good first-line responders, our good medical people. We had some talk about the patch, how in Ontario there is a system where you cannot get a new patch unless you turn in your old one. Unfortunately, a policeman in my constituency told me that our last two overdoses were directly related to used patches. I would ask the government to please keep that high on their radar.

Education and information: it's a hard world in which to get information out there now, with all the fragmented media and all the different things that people support, but again that's maybe one of the bigger steps. I would strongly, strongly encourage the government to do that. B.C. has had some success in treating their crisis as well by gathering some information and doing things with that information. Perhaps there's something the government can look at there to make it as effective as possible.

When the Wildrose released our report in November, on Twitter a couple of people messaged me with the concern: jeez, we need to look at how come Alberta is such a leader in opioids being prescribed in the first place. I understand that we're the highest per capita. That's maybe something that has to be part of this equation as well. Yes, this is a good step, but as the hon. Member for Calgary-West said, it's not the only tool in the tool kit. I would strongly, strongly encourage the government to keep fighting it with all of our great people and all of our resources.

Madam Speaker, thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to speak in support of this bill. Also, many thanks to the Member for Calgary-West for his initiative here and, as importantly, as mentioned by my colleagues earlier, for the support and co-operation of the House in addressing this very important initiative, one step forward, I think, in hoping to reach some resolution in terms of some of the addiction issues that we have.

There are many challenges we face, I think, as a society, and unfortunately addiction is one of those that does not discriminate. Unfortunately, on top of that, while it doesn't discriminate, it does show itself on an overrepresented basis within our indigenous populations, and I think that's a further challenge we have within those communities, certainly, to ensure that this is one step in solving that. The root causes, I think, are there. We need to invest more in preventative and supportive programs.

I had the honour and privilege of attending about a three-hour session at AARC, the Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre, in Calgary a few months back. I was honoured to be there, but I was shocked, of course, at the level of addiction of some of these young people, some as young as 13 years old, and, luckily, some of the graduates that survived. They'd had a number of people that they'd lost through that program, who had passed away during treatment and had not quite made it across the line. Many of their peer counsellors there are graduates of the program. To hear their stories and about that, unfortunately, slippery slope that they still live on, about the commitment that they've made to themselves and to their families, was very touching. It was heart-wrenching, but it was touching, the commitment that we have in the community.

I know the people from AARC have been up to the Legislature just over the last few weeks to visit the government. At this point in time they do not have any government funding and are seeking that. I encourage all members if they're in Calgary – and I'm sure that there are similar organizations not just in Calgary but in Edmonton and across this province. I think it's very important that we address that.

You know, I think that in looking at the numbers here, the deaths last year, they represent about three individuals in each one of our 87 constituencies, to put it into perspective. That's frightening for us to see. Those are mostly young people and those that are facing challenges within their lives. We hope to get them through that to lead the fruitful and full lives ahead of them.

This is a great step forward, again one of the many tools that we need to keep bringing forward. Of course, the addictions and alcoholism and many of these issues are ones that we need to face. I think, of course, we've had discussions. I know that with the federal changes in marijuana laws coming forward, we need to make sure, even with those, that as we move forward with the issues around that in terms of distribution and how we're going to tax and distribute that, we also take into account that any type of drug, whether it's alcohol, marijuana, or other opioids of different sorts, can be abused at different levels and can ruin lives. We need to be cognizant of that.

I'm proud of my colleague for his hard work. I'm proud to be able to support this and very proud that we've been able to work together in the Legislature. I hope that this is a sign of some of the work we can do in the future together to not only table legislation but to improve it and to bring it forward for the betterment of all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak? I'll recognize Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'd like to begin by thanking my colleague from Calgary-West for his passion with respect to Bill 205. As you know, during second reading of this bill I used my full 10 minutes to speak on this, including experience as chair of AADAC and as minister of wellness. At the end of my speech I offered a rather impassioned plea to ensure that this issue would not be politicized. I know that at the time more than one government member seemed offended by this, but thankfully very shortly thereafter members from all corners of the House determined that I was simply trying to point out that this is an issue that transcends all party colours.

It reminds me of a number of private members' bills that I've been honoured to spearhead in this Chamber, each of which required consultation and homework and co-operation from everyone in the Legislature. I'm thrilled that on this occasion all-party co-operation is indeed alive and well.

Colleagues, you've heard me speak on this topic many times very passionately, including with our indigenous Albertans, even today in question period. In the name of passing this bill expeditiously, I will conclude my comments today this way, by thanking you sincerely in advance for your invaluable part in passing this legislation, which will indeed save Albertan lives and communities. Long live Alberta.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, I'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-West to close debate.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I guess just a few points. I will really, truly be brief here. Members of this House, I think it's important for everyone to know that this was Manmeet Bhullar's bill draw. Sadly, as we know, he's not here, but I will speak and say that I know that he would be proud not only of the co-operation by this Assembly but of the fact that this is a bill that will go to saving lives. That is something that Manmeet was always all about.

I would also like to add a couple more points. About a year ago I put on the six-inch pumps and did the Walk a Mile in Her Shoes event. I did it with two other individuals. One of those individuals, who was an acquaintance of mine by the name of Joel Dixon, passed away from a fentanyl overdose. I certainly didn't know the man very well, and I was absolutely shocked to find out that he had passed away, but again this is a drug like any sort of narcotic; it does not discriminate. It touches everyone from any and every socioeconomic class.

Thirdly, I would like to just say again in support of addiction treatment centres – and I know that my good friend Rob Laird is here today from 1835 recovery house – that the support for addiction treatment is absolutely paramount in getting to the root causes of these problems.

In conclusion, I want to thank everyone for their support. I know that we will all do the right thing here and support this bill.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 205 read a third time]

Written Questions

[The Clerk read the following written questions, which had been accepted]

North West Redwater Partnership

Q12. Mr. Clark:

What is the status as of March 15, 2016, of the approval process for phase 2 of construction for the North West Redwater Partnership upgrader?

Ministerial Trip to Washington

Q13. Mr. Clark:

What are the deliverables of the Minister of Economic Development and Trade's recent trip to Washington, DC, from February 3 to 5, 2016?

Adult Learning Review Program

Q14. Mr. Clark:

What is the status as of March 15, 2016, of the adult learning review program proposed in the New Democratic Party election platform during the May 2015 Alberta provincial general election?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Disaster Recovery Program Claims

Q11. Mr. Clark asked that the following question be accepted.

How many disaster recovery program claims arising from the 2013 flood event that were previously approved have since been deemed ineligible?

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I think this is a timely question as we move, I hope swiftly, into recovery mode in Fort McMurray and a significant number of people in Fort McMurray will unfortunately have to make claims in the disaster recovery program. I look forward to having a fulsome discussion about that tonight in Municipal Affairs estimates.

The reason I want to know this is that I've had a number of constituents that were previously approved, initially approved, for disaster recovery that now have been told they're either no longer eligible or an argument has been made through the appeal process by the government that they are no longer eligible. I think this is relevant at any time because it's an important question of public policy when you have Albertans being told one thing at one point in a process and then something entirely different, perhaps being disentitled to compensation under disaster recovery, at some later time in the process.

I'm very curious, and I think Albertans are owed an explanation as to the scale of this particular issue. How many claims were approved initially and were then denied at a later time? I understand the government may in fact be bringing in an amendment to this question, but I will stand by my original question, that I think is a very important one, the point being that if the government is interested in answering only how many at any point have been deemed ineligible, including those that were deemed ineligible at the very beginning of the process because that sort of claim was not eligible within the DRP, that is not something that we don't already know. We know that from the government website, and should it become necessary, I'd be more than happy to share those statistics.

In fact, we know that 2,647 were deemed ineligible for a number of reasons because, of course, not everyone who applies for the disaster recovery program is, in fact, eligible. The government did their work right up front and deemed that number ineligible, but of the 2,647, which were originally deemed eligible? I think that's a very important question, especially as we, unfortunately, move into a new phase of having to rely on the disaster recovery program. I think it is an urgent matter for this government to answer, and I would certainly hope that they provide that answer in due course.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice on behalf of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs to respond.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise today to move an amendment to Written Question 11. I am proposing that Written Question 11 be accepted as amended. The question is currently written: "How many disaster recovery program claims arising from the 2013 flood event that were previously approved have since been deemed ineligible?" I propose to accept the question amended as follows: "How many disaster recovery program claims from the 2013 flood event have been deemed ineligible, and why were they deemed ineligible?"

Amending the question will allow for a better response to the question as it more appropriately reflects the two-stage process that all DRP files go through. As the member will be aware, the first stage of the process determines whether an application can be accepted under the established program criteria. Program criteria include things like whether the losses occurred during the prescribed timeline of the event, whether the applicant owns the property in question, and if the losses were uninsurable in nature.

The second stage in the process determines whether the items being claimed are eligible for reimbursement under the disaster assistance guidelines. Claims can include lost or damaged items, cleanup hours and expenses, and the repair and replacement of structural damage. Additionally, it's important to remember that funding under the disaster recovery program cannot be provided if other sources of funding are available to the applicant. For example, the program is not designed to duplicate other means of financial assistance that may be provided through insurance or charitable donations. The disaster recovery program does not apply to cover second residences, pre-existing damage from before the disaster, lost income or profits for business, or losses that insurance also covers.

For the 2013 program we received more than 10,600 private-sector applications. This was, by far, the largest disaster recovery program not only in Albertan history but in Canadian history. Madam Speaker, we've provided more than $144 million to individual Albertans to help them recover from this unprecedented disaster. I want to assure you that all applications were considered carefully and fairly to ensure that Albertans received all the assistance that they were eligible for while spending taxpayers' dollars appropriately.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other speakers who wish to respond? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: May I speak on the amendment?

The Deputy Speaker: You may speak.

Mr. Clark: Yes. Thank you. I will speak very briefly. We know the answer to the first half of the proposed amendment, how many DRP claims. I've already talked about that being 2,647. Why they were deemed ineligible: I think the minister listed off many good reasons why a claim may be deemed ineligible. Given that there were more than 10,000 claims, of which roughly a quarter were deemed ineligible – that, of course, I think is a normal course of this program.

The heart of my question is: how many that were previously approved were subsequently deemed ineligible? That is a vital question to answer because this was a terribly poorly administered program from the very, very start. I think that that would be my point, that it does fundamentally change what I'm driving at and I don't think answers the important question that Albertans ought to have an answer to. I can tell you that so many people had difficult times with DRP. This is an important question to answer.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, but I guess the time now has arrived to move on to the next order of business.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Crude Oil Tanker Traffic and Pipelines

506. Mr. Loewen moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to request that the federal government not implement the moratorium on crude oil tanker traffic along British Columbia's north coast and that it swiftly approve pipelines such as the Energy East, Trans Mountain, and Northern Gateway in order to increase employment in Alberta's energy sector.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak on my proposed Motion 506. Wildrose has always been committed to responsible energy projects such as these. Alberta needs all members of the Assembly to voice their support and send a clear message to the federal government that our energy sector is important not just to us but to all of Canada. Wildrose knows that when Alberta prospers, Canada prospers.

The economic benefits of these three pipeline projects are enormous. I would like to share some numbers with all members in the House. First of all, the Trans Mountain expansion. This Kinder Morgan project would twin a pipeline from Strathcona county to Burnaby, B.C., almost tripling the capacity of the existing system. The most significant benefit of this pipeline would be in getting our landlocked oil to overseas markets, which is crucial to the health of our economy. The economic benefits are significant, specifically for Alberta. The benefits of project development, operations, and net-backs will be as much as $19.4 billion.

At the municipal level Kinder Morgan expects property tax revenue to jump by $530 million. That's half a billion dollars going to local governments along the pipeline right-of-way in Alberta and B.C. over 20 years. Beyond property tax, other existing and new municipal and regional tax payments would exceed $1 billion over 20 years.

Madam Speaker, it's clear that this pipeline would reap significant benefits for Alberta, from the provincial government down to regular Albertans, because like the other pipeline projects, it will also create much-needed jobs: 16,000 construction jobs and 37,000 direct, indirect, and induced jobs per year of operations.

Now, as far as Energy East, the Energy East pipeline for its part would create almost 2,000 of those jobs right here in Alberta. Those are good-quality, well-paying jobs, Madam Speaker, that would give a fresh start to thousands of Albertans who are out of work right now. But this pipeline, which would get 1.1 million barrels of western oil to eastern refineries and then to tidewater every day, is currently stuck in the seemingly endless delays in its approval process. Despite the fact that it would address the fact that eastern Canada imports 86 per cent of its oil from outside Canada instead of using good Alberta oil, this project languishes in red tape.

The Northern Gateway pipeline, one that has already been approved with conditions by the National Energy Board, is arguably one of the most important energy infrastructure projects for putting a stop to Canadian oil being sold at a discount because it would allow Canadian companies to sell their products globally and, in particular, directly across the Pacific to the growing Asian markets. This access would also help to reduce supply bottlenecks that result in the discounts on Canadian heavy oil, which trades for about $14 U.S. a barrel lower than the North America benchmark, west Texas intermediate, costing the Alberta government and companies billions of dollars each year.

Now, this pipeline, that the Premier last year called, quote, not the right decision, end quote, though she has now apparently come around to cautiously supporting it – while Wildrose is pleased to see a glimmer of common sense in the current government, we also know that it will take more than a few words to convince us and all Albertans and the energy sector itself that this government really means business. What better way to do that than by supporting this motion and producing results on pipeline approvals?

Albertans need more than a government that can't seem to make up its mind on pipelines, one that supports its antipipeline friends in Ontario one day and then the next day spouts pro-energy, pro-pipeline talking points. We need leadership that will consistently support Northern Gateway, a project that would trigger a $312 billion increase in our national GDP over 30 years, that would create $50 billion in provincial revenues over the same time period, and that would help 1,100 people get to work during construction and then create 260 permanent jobs during its operation. Crucially, though, we need leadership that will consistently support and produce results on getting our landlocked Alberta oil to market, which this pipeline would do.

The thing is that claiming to come around in support of Northern Gateway isn't actually enough to support it. If the tanker ban proposed by the federal Liberals is put in place, it will spell the end of the Northern Gateway project and any other pipeline to the west coast with a terminus north of Vancouver, which means that the Premier must come out against this proposed ban. For context, the current Prime Minister has directed his Transport minister to formalize a moratorium on crude oil tanker traffic on British Columbia's north coast. While it doesn't explicitly define what the north coast is, most assumptions place it north of Vancouver Island, in the area that covers Dixon Entrance, Hecate Strait, and the Queen Charlotte Sound. It is commonly understood that this tanker ban would kill Northern Gateway and any similar project that terminates in that area.

Wildrose is standing up for Alberta and for our energy sector and the jobs it creates. Our leader, Brian Jean, personally wrote to the Prime Minister asking him to abandon this tanker ban and effectively to allow Alberta's oil to get to market without going through a glutted American market. In contrast, the Premier so far said nothing, this despite the fact that a moratorium on the north coast could open a Pandora's box of issues, primarily regarding the United States. Issues that could arise include a potential violation of freedom of navigation rights such as the right of innocent passage, which allows vessels from other countries to pass through Canada's territorial waters. The U.S. may also see this as a pointed bilateral legal and security issue and act accordingly.

Furthermore, the reality is that Alberta itself could conceivably launch legal action due to the federal government's disruption of co-operative federalism principles, resulting in interference with Alberta's jurisdiction over our ability in development and global sales of our natural resources. Yet we have heard nothing from the current provincial government about standing up for Alberta's rights.

While many within this government seem to have changed their stance on some pipeline projects, the fact remains that many actively protested and spoke out against these energy products and anything that supports our oil sands. It was such a perception issue that in B.C. the NDP acknowledged that resource development equals jobs, and if the NDP say no to a project, they are against job creation. They didn't manage to dispel that notion during their election. As one of our colleagues across the floor stated, that argument is a trap, and the NDP need to rewrite that narrative.

Albertans can rest assured that the Wildrose will always be consistent in lending our voices in support of our energy sector. The members opposite seem to have a revisionist approach to their pipeline stance, and their tepid approach is simply not good enough if we truly want to convince Albertans and the federal government that they're serious about supporting our energy sector. Comments such as our energy sector being the embarrassing cousin do little to change the perception that the NDP just aren't up to the task of protecting Albertans' interests.

Madam Speaker, Albertans need to be assured that this government truly has Alberta's best interests at heart. Supporting this motion would send a message to not only our energy sector but to all of Canada that this government is committed to energy projects such as these. We need access to the global market, and this is our best opportunity to get this accomplished.

Again, Motion 506, "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to request that the federal government . . ." [Mr. Loewen's speaking time expired]

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Just a reminder, hon. member, that we don't refer to other members by their names in the House.

The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you. I rise in response to the motion before the House, Madam Speaker. Opening up new markets for Alberta's oil is a high priority for this government, and we are working diligently and with purpose to achieve that goal. The reason is clear. We need access to tidewater to diversify our energy markets. It's just that simple. However, getting the job done is much more complex. Former governments in Alberta and Ottawa took the approach that has set us back. I will leave those details to historians, but let me just say that those governments offered everyone a lesson on how not to get a pipeline built.

So here we are confronting an oil price collapse without the access to tidewater we need to get full value for our energy. Things might be different were it not for years of inaction, denial, and political game playing. But we can no more turn back the clock to avoid the mistakes of the past than we can control the world price of oil. We must confront the situation we face today head on with a plan to move our province forward.

Madam Speaker, let me take a moment to lay out the argument for building a pipeline to tidewater. Owing to the inaction and failed policies of former governments, Alberta must sell its oil with North America at discounted prices. That puts us at a competitive disadvantage. First, we need to build a pipeline to tidewater to diversify our energy markets so that we can get the best price for our product. It's important to the future of our economy and to the well-being of every Albertan.

Second, it is also important to note that pipelines are the safest and most environmentally responsible way to transport our products. In Canada we have the expertise, the knowledge, and the technology to build a modern, safe, and well-regulated pipeline.

Third, our energy industry needs access to the Canadian market itself. In a country as rich in energy resources as ours, it makes no sense to import almost a million barrels of oil from other countries. That needs to change.

Madam Speaker, the case for a pipeline is clear. Pipelines are the safest, most environmentally responsible way to diversify our energy markets, to get the best price for our products, and to ensure that Canadians benefit from our country's energy resources. Faced with this reality, we have a choice to make in how we achieve this goal. As I said earlier, former governments failed miserably. Instead of bluster and political game playing that got Alberta nowhere, this government is taking a better approach. We are engaged in a drama-free discussion with industry, with the environmental community, with governments across Canada, and with indigenous peoples about judging individual pipeline proposals on their own merits.

The principles underlying this discussion are very clear. To move forward, pipelines must be judged independently with a fair and balanced framework, and they must meet the highest possible standards for environmental safety and community consultation. These principles apply to every aspect of a pipeline proposal, from construction through to transport and distribution.

Madam Speaker, we are making good progress. The Canadian energy strategy adopted last July provides Canada with a framework to protect the environment and develop our energy industry. Every government in the country understands that these issues must be dealt with. The work continues, the hard work of government.

The motion brought forward today does little new to advance this effort. Quite frankly, it repeats the kind of political gamesmanship that former governments pursued so relentlessly and with so little effect. Sound and fury signifying nothing: that's the opposition's prerogative. They failed in the past, and they are not accountable for their actions today, Madam Speaker.

We are not going to play that game. Grandstanding is no substitute for a strategy that is focused on results, a strategy that can bring people together, that addresses real and legitimate concerns about the environment. That is why our government brought forward a climate leadership plan, the single most important step any government has taken in Canada to address climate change, because climate change is real, Madam Speaker, and we must take action to deal with it. That is why our government continues to pursue a thoughtful and constructive approach to achieving market access, an approach that sets aside the divisive battles of the past and focuses on what really matters, getting the best possible world price for our energy exports, that are permitted under our climate leadership plan. What matters to Albertans and what matters to this government is that we make meaningful progress towards our shared goal.

When members across the aisle were in government, they did not do this work. Now they have brought forward a motion whose aim is clear: to turn back the clock to the failed policies of the past. Madam Speaker, the reality is that a tanker ban on the north coast of B.C. may or may not be a problem for Alberta, depending on its terms and on the progress being made on one or more of the projects currently before us. The members opposite want to play political games with these critical strategic issues.

We won't play those games. We won't give the quick political win they are looking for. We are working to achieve practical results. We'll stick with our plan and work in close partnership with other government stakeholders until the work is done, because on this side of the House we are focused on what matters, moving Alberta forward with a plan that builds a more diversified and a more resilient economy, that protects our environment and addresses climate change, that effectively advocates to new markets with a safe, environmentally responsible pipeline, and that ensures that we get the best price for our energy products. Madam Speaker, at the end of the day, that is what matters to Albertans, and that is how this government will continue to proceed.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, followed by Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. You know, I rise to speak in favour of this motion. What I hope is that we may be able to carry on in this House in the collegial attitude that we had earlier on today, and I hope that perhaps we can still find a way to get to that place where we can have the government supporting this important motion.

I would sincerely hope that the government of Alberta would be advocating for an end to the tanker ban on the north coast of B.C. because it is in Alberta's interest to do so. I would sincerely hope that that is part of the conversation that's going on between this minister and her government and the federal government.

I'll say that it is good to see that this government seems to be coming around on Northern Gateway. I'm a supporter of pipelines in all directions. I think we'd all agree in this House – it sounds like we do – that pipelines are, in fact, clearly the safest way to ship Alberta's energy or any oil of any kind around the world.

One thing that I guess I want to pick up on in the previous comments from the minister is that I find it really unhelpful to continue blaming the previous government and the previous federal government for their approach when it's been a year that this government has been in power. I think it's now time where this government can take accountability and should take accountability for their own actions in driving this conversation forward.

I would certainly hope that you're advocating for this tanker ban, because it's the kind of thing that came up as a result of the now federal government's fairly vague campaign promise, that was made at a time when they didn't think that they were really, perhaps, actually going to be government. The polls certainly didn't have them in that position. That is something that I'm sure this government understands full well: making campaign promises at a time when perhaps you don't expect to be government and finding yourself in the position to have to actually implement those things. I would think that this would be something, I hope, where our provincial government can use fact-based arguments – and I'm fine with it being drama-free or however you want to put it – but it is important that this government advocate strongly for the best interests of our province.

I'm also very curious why this tanker ban applies only to northern British Columbia but not to the supertankers off the east coast, who also have to dodge islands. The supertankers bring tankfuls of Saudi crude to Canadian refineries, something that – we would be far better served by a pipeline, Energy East in particular, taking Alberta crude to the east coast and supporting domestic Canadian production.

The same thing applies to Northern Gateway. Northern Gateway is equally safe, perhaps even more so, than Energy East. Energy East is a very safe pipeline, given the rigour that has gone into supporting and designing Northern Gateway and given some of the terrain that it goes through. Very clearly, a tanker ban is yet another part of the proxy fight against Alberta's oil sands, restricting pipeline development in any possible way they can, facts be damned.

They are going to have a big impact not only on Alberta's economy, not only on the economy of our country but on our social well-being, because while Alberta has a strong social safety net – and so does the rest of our country – it's important to ask: where does the money come from for those social programs? We can have strong social programs, a strong economy, and strong environmental regulation, all at the same time. That's one of the tremendous benefits of being Canadian and being Albertan. In fact, it's something we do better, I think, than anywhere else in the entire world.

It's time for this government to stand up and say proudly that Alberta does have strong environmental regulations, that Alberta does have a strong track record on the environment, that that track record is only getting stronger and only getting better, that Alberta innovation will help the world address climate change in a way that means that we can continue to succeed with the oil sands but also address carbon emissions not only in this province or in this country but around the world. Those are the sorts of things that I'd like to hear from our government as they advocate passionately for Alberta's interests. Advocating against the tanker ban is one of the things I would hope this government would do.

I sincerely hope that all sides of the House will be supporting this motion. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by Edmonton-Centre, followed by a member of the third party.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak in support of Motion 506 because pandas, just like tigers, can't change their stripes. I will always be in support of pipelines. I will always be in support of increased market access for Alberta's resource sector. I will not flip-flop and one day stand in protest, opposing Alberta's oil sector. I will not write an introduction and support a book that encourages the protest of market access and pipelines and details how to go about opposing what makes Alberta great. I will not sign a manifesto that encourages people to oppose the livelihoods of thousands and thousands of people here in Alberta. I will not change my stripes, and I do not take a position that opposes Albertan values and Alberta's oil sands. I am proud to be consistent in what I believe.

I was elected because people met me while I was door-knocking and promoting a party that backs Alberta's oil sands. I was not elected because people saw me at antipipeline protests. Now that I'm in the House, I have not changed my values. I still support our oil industry, and my actions prove my support. I have questioned this government time and again as to what they're going to do to support market access. I have stood up with the members of my caucus and put forward a jobs action plan that supported pipelines and was swiftly mocked by the members opposite. My values do not change, and that's why I ran and was elected with the party that supports pipelines.

I have asked the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: what is being done to approve oil and gas pipelines? He told me that his government has, quote, made more progress in the last eight months than the previous government had in decades. Yet not a single ounce of oil has been transported in a new pipeline for the last year, since this government has been elected.

Under the previous provincial and federal governments we saw the conditional approval of Northern Gateway and the pursuit of Trans Mountain expansion and Energy East. Just as a reminder, the Wildrose leader was part of the government that not only oversaw the conditional approval of Gateway but the line 9 reversal and many other pipelines across the country. Could they have done better? Absolutely. There's always scope for improvement. This party has members who have done more and had more success getting pipelines approved than the NDP government.

But they still have time to show results, and this motion will help them to get a commitment to get pipelines approved. The government does not need help on this anti-oil image they have created. Its sudden transformation into a pipeline-friendly group isn't enough to convince Albertans. This government is closely related to the federal NDP Party, who backs manifestos that oppose the production of fossil fuels here. This government says that they have changed their stripes, and they say that they support market access. Yet other than taxing charities, seniors, families, and hospitals with a carbon tax, what actions has this government done to support the pipelines? Have they spoken out against the protest that took place against Alberta's pipelines, that they say they support? Did the Premier speak to the Prime Minister about reversing his stance on a tanker ban?

There were thousands and thousands of dollars allocated to advertise the carbon tax, but not a single dollar, Madam Speaker – not a single dollar – was allocated to educate their former pipeline protest friends that pipelines are safe and that increasing our market access is the right and proper thing to do for Alberta. The NDP is set on spending taxpayers' dollars on advertising their poorly-thought-out attempt to create some sort of elusive social licence instead of using the simple truth about pipeline safety to reduce opposition to pipelines.

What actions has this government truly taken to get a single pipeline approved so far? What actions has this government taken to assist oil and gas companies to expedite their approval process? What actions has this government taken to reduce the regulatory burden for pipeline approvals? What actions has this government taken to oppose a proposed tanker ban that would make a pipeline to the west coast useless?

Madam Speaker, we are here to help. The Official Opposition is here to help. We are here to help rid this government of their risky ideological policies. This motion is just another action we're taking to help this government do what is right for Alberta. This motion would help Albertans and support the oil and gas industry. This motion requests action that this government should not have to be encouraged to take, action that should have been taken when the issue first surfaced. The opposition party should not have to encourage the government to act on behalf of one of Alberta's largest job creators, yet here we are. We have to encourage this government to act because they refuse to do anything except tax Albertans.

This government needs to act and to produce meaningful results. They need to publicly and definitively request that the federal government not implement a crude-oil tanker ban. If this government is not willing to oppose this tanker ban, then we will know that that tiger cannot change its stripes.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise in response to this motion before the Assembly. I'd like to thank the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky for bringing it forward and providing us with the opportunity to affirm the hard work and advocacy of the Premier and our ministers over the past year. Since our election they've been in continuous consultation with stakeholders in the energy industry. They've been building relationships, hearing their concerns and recommendations, and our government has clearly heard their biggest concern, the need for a pipeline to tidewater.

Madam Speaker, as others have already referenced, previous governments, both federal and provincial, have failed to meet this need. They've skirted around the need to truly address the issue of climate change, made empty promises, implemented cosmetic policies, and their failure to truly engage with the concerns of those we needed to partner with has ensured that our largest export commodity remains landlocked and unable to access global markets. As a result our province loses millions of dollars a year due to being restricted to a single customer and a single price, and with the rise of production in the U.S., that's projected to get even worse by early next year.

With this in mind, our government has chosen a different path. This past November, in consultation and partnership with the energy industry, with indigenous leaders, and with environmental groups, we introduced our climate leadership plan. This is a bold commitment to real, concrete action on climate change, a commitment built on consensus and partnership that moves Alberta from the back to the front of the pack, and this climate leadership plan will make our province one of the most environmentally responsible energy producers in the world.

Madam Speaker, this plan has not gone unnoticed. The Prime Minister referred to the plan as a historic moment and a positive step, a strong positive step, in the right direction. Our federal minister of the environment stated: we are very proud of the government of Alberta; I think they have shown real leadership. This bold action to improve our environmental standards, to reduce emissions of carbon and methane, and reinvest every dollar collected through the carbon levy back into our economy has begun to open doors where previous governments proved unable.

Recently the Premier was given the opportunity to present our case for pipelines directly to the Prime Minister and his cabinet, clearly outlining Alberta's contributions to Canada's economy, GDP, and revenue base and noting that pipelines from Alberta to tidewater will create increased employment and prosperity across Canada. Now, this is something our government has been consistently vocal and clear about, that, as stated by the Minister of Finance, we cannot continue to help Canada if Canada will not help Alberta.

Madam Speaker, that message is being heard. Following the Premier's meeting with the federal cabinet, federal Natural Resources minister Jim Carr stated that she was very effective at making her case. He stated that she has an argument and a story to tell, and ministers were very keen to hear it.

The Prime Minister has openly acknowledged that one of the fundamental responsibilities of any Canadian Prime Minister is to get Canadian resources to international markets, and in order to get our resources to market in the 21st century, we have to be responsible around the environment.

Mr. Mark Salkeld, CEO of the Petroleum Services Association of Canada, also acknowledged the ground that we've gained, stating that the federal government is stepping up to the plate and creating conversations that we weren't having before. This, Madam Speaker, is as a result of the bold steps we have taken in the government of Alberta.

Even David Manning, the former Alberta representative to Washington, has praise for our approach, declaring that the Premier is a great messenger for the idea of reconciling environmental action with a vibrant resource economy, an important step, as was noted by the Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Madam Speaker, because of the work of our government we are closer than ever to ensuring that we have access to the safest infrastructure available to get our product to tidewater, that being a pipeline, and we are there because we have worked collaboratively and built partnerships through responsible action and diplomacy instead of falling back on belligerence and petty politicking.

While this motion does little to help advance the case for pipelines or add to the ongoing conversation with our provincial and federal colleagues, I will support it as a reflection of the work our government is already doing and the considerable ground we've gained in this last year.

I should note that I'm also proud of the work that's going to continue, that I support the work being done through the Canadian energy strategy, which was adopted last July, which provides the framework to ensure that we protect the environment and develop our energy industry. We understand that every government in this country understands that these issues need to be dealt with. It's going to take focus and determination, collaboration with our partners in industry, the environmental community, with governments across Canada, and, of course, the important consultation with indigenous peoples.

I look forward to the continued work of our government, the implementation of our climate leadership plan, and the eventual success of securing Alberta a pipeline to tidewater. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by Edmonton-Manning, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand and speak to this motion requesting that our government ask the federal government to not have a tanker ban in place in northern British Columbia. Let me say this. This should be easy for every member of this House to support if indeed we care about the economy of Alberta.

You can imagine that I was just a little disappointed to hear the Energy minister talking at length, when I think she used the word "gamesmanship" 30 times. If it was 20, then I stand corrected. The gamesmanship happens when the minister, frankly, talks about how we shouldn't be importing energy into Canada when Alberta can supply it. This is the minister from the same government that is going to squeeze off Alberta's electricity supply that we can provide here so much that they're making a deal to bring in more electricity out of British Columbia.

That's gamesmanship, when you talk out of one side of your mouth about it being bad to import energy and out of the other side of your mouth you're actually forcing energy to be imported into one of the most energy-rich jurisdictions in the world by your failed policies, particularly when the government ought to know that when you look at the coal-fired plants right now, the best one in Alberta – and we know that they're not all up to this standard – produces electricity from coal with emissions very similar to burning natural gas. That this government would lock all those billions of dollars in the ground when the technology is almost equal to what they're going to shift to: now, that's gamesmanship.

This is about clearing the path in hopes that we can negotiate a pipeline. This is clearing a path, for the next three years at least, for this current government to try to negotiate a pipeline, and every member of this House would like to see them succeed. But the gamesmanship comes in when they stand up and pretend that no one tried up till now or that no one cared. What I've heard members from the opposite side say here in the last few minutes is that we're going to bring Alberta up to some world standard for how we produce energy. Well, folks, we've been the world leaders for decades.

The previous pipeline deniers on the other side, at least up until recently, are the ones that were on the record calling Alberta embarrassing cousins. Meanwhile the people in our industry, named by the Energy minister, have been at the forefront of making sure that we live up to those standards that were in place by the previous government. Yes, we haven't got a pipeline now, but you know what? Talking down about the standards that the men and women that work in our industry live up to every single day and have lived up to for years isn't going to get it done.

Now, I appreciate it. Thank you. Welcome to the party, government. I'm glad you're now on the pipeline bandwagon. Thank you. That's the right place for you to be. But for them to pretend that no one was trying to get this done before when they've got people on the front bench that have written forewords for books designed to actually shut down the oil sands . . .

An Hon. Member: An Action a Day.

Mr. McIver: Yeah. An Action a Day. These are the An Action a Day people, that will keep the oil sands away.

Now they're done being pipeline deniers, and that's a good thing. But the fact that they're trying to pretend that no one else has tried anything: now, there's the gamesmanship. That's what's really sad. That's not collaboration, Madam Speaker. That's actually counter-productive to Alberta's best interests, to say that we are going to somehow now magically become better, particularly with what the government calls their climate change strategy, which will do next to nothing about climate change. What it will do is transfer a lot of money from people that use energy to buy votes from 60 per cent of Albertans.

We also know that even those people receiving the rebates are going to pay more because of the carbon tax, a lot more than the rebate that they get back is going to be worth. We know that. It's in the government's own documents, Madam Speaker, where they say that people will be rebated. If the government is right – and that's quite a stretch, but we'll give them the benefit of the doubt for a minute here – they'll be rebated for the amount of gasoline they use and the amount of natural gas they use to heat their homes.

Let's just say that the government is right about that – congratulations – but what the government ignores is the extra cost people will pay for the electricity they buy, for the clothing they buy, for the food they buy, for the furniture they buy or anything else they buy that rides on a truck or a train. The fuel that those trucks or trains use will be taxed, and as things go through the distribution chain – although the government might not understand it, you can't run a business without making a profit – the fuel tax will be paid at the manufacturing stage, at the distribution stage, and even to heat or cool the stores where the retailing is done. So there will be three or four times, potentially, the cost of the carbon tax, the carbon attack, as I prefer to call it, because that's what it is. It's a carbon attack on Albertans. The carbon attack will make everything that Albertans buy cost more.

The government says that they're rebating two pieces of it. Well, okay, but even the government's own documents – the government members talked about that the average family of four makes $90,000 a year. Well, that family isn't going to spend more than $5,000 or $10,000 a year, probably, on gasoline and to heat their home. So with the other $80,000, $60,000 if you will – it doesn't matter – the vast majority of what they spend, everything will cost more, and they're doing nothing for that. The government really knows that the poorest of Albertans – and not everybody that is getting the rebate is the poorest, but the poorest are included in that – will be paying more as a result of this government's carbon tax than they're getting back.

The fact is that if you want to talk about gamesmanship, the Energy minister hasn't really thought it through. Now, getting a pipeline: the government ought to support this. I think one of the government members said that you can't tell for sure whether this will make a difference to the Northern Gateway pipeline. Okay. I'll even buy that from them just for a second though I'm not convinced. Let's give them the benefit of the doubt for argument right now. The fact that it might means that the government should be all standing up, every single one of them, and supporting this motion because all it says is that we're going to encourage the federal government not to have a tanker ban on one of the lifelines to get our product to market on the world market and get full price for it, which is very important. Then they'll have more money to spend. Lord knows what they'll spend it on. Maybe they'll even make a payment on the debt.

Madam Speaker, the fact is that the government's arguments are disingenuous. They have been harmful to the energy industry before they ever so recently stopped being pipeline deniers. This is one more chance for the government to have a modicum of credibility on this file by saying: we are in favour of one of the many roadblocks being taken out of the way to a pipeline. If they want to be believed by anyone, then they ought to all stand up and vote yes for this at the end of this debate, as I shall, because I care and the members of our party care about the jobs that Albertans have, the men and women that work in that industry. We also care about the environment, which is why the standards are so high in this province. We also care about the things that the royalties will pay for: roads, schools, hospitals, seniors' homes, social services. These are the things that the money will pay for if we can get it to market at full price.

When the government wants to spend so much money on these things – and I have to say that there are a lot of things that they want to spend money on that are good ideas although they still don't seem to have any sense of when it's too much and when they should stop borrowing – the fact is that if you want to spend money as bad as this government does, you would think they would get obstacles out of the way of the money going into the cash register. Today the government has an opportunity to do just that by voting for this motion.

Madam Speaker, that's what I think. I believe this is such an easy thing to do. Nobody is asking them to pick a fight. They are asking them to say that we will encourage the Prime Minister and the current federal government to take a roadblock out of the way of Alberta's economy.

I strongly, strongly recommend to the government that they vote yes as a sign that they care about Alberta men and women who have lost jobs and need jobs because up till now they're falling pretty darn short of making their case. This is a chance for them to provide a little bit of evidence to the public that they might care.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today I rise in response to Motion 506. As many of you know, I was raised on Vancouver Island until I was 16, a beautiful little town dependent on forestry, fishing, and the tourism industry. During my time growing up I had the unique opportunity of being able to go camping not on land but on water. Our family would take our family boat out and go and anchor at night in a harbour or at a local dock. Due to this, I was able to see killer whales scratching their backs on the bluffs, porpoises racing the boats, and sea lions and otters playing in the water. So I have an understanding of the concerns for the residents of the west coast and the tanker ban. I understand that our ecoclimate on the island and along the coast is vulnerable and fragile and that it can be impacted by increased freight traffic.

However, I also recognize the fragility of our Alberta and Canadian economies. We are an energy country, Madam Speaker, and Alberta is the economic driver of our country. We currently depend on the oil and gas industry to support the financial stability not only of Alberta but of many other provinces. However, this is currently at risk. With the competition from the United States and our lack of access to tidewater we have a limited ability to get our product to market.

This must change, Madam Speaker, if we as a province and as a nation want to continue to be economic leaders across the globe. To succeed in this important goal, we must work with our neighbours thoughtfully, constructively, and respectfully to achieve this important market access. We need to move past the divisive battles of the past and focus on what matters, getting the best possible price for our energy exports. That's what my constituents in Edmonton-Manning elected me to do.

Madam Speaker, every day I see my constituents working together to solve problems in their community. In reality, the tanker ban on the north coast of B.C. may or may not be a problem for Alberta depending on its terms and on the progress of more of the projects that we currently have before us. We'll stick with our plan. We will work together with the governments and the stakeholders to get the work done of getting our pipelines approved. That's what Albertans expect from us, and that's how this government will proceed.

This can be done, Madam Speaker, in a way that not only supports the concerns of the environment but also the economic development opportunities. Our government recognizes that we need to address climate change. This is why we have introduced our climate change strategy, a plan that will create new jobs by diversifying our economy as well as ensuring the environmental safety of our oil and gas industry. This is the right thing to do. It will ensure that we have a sustainable economy for generations to come. It will support Albertans in their jobs, and it will take care of them, as we said we would.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. I rise today to speak to the important motion put forward by my colleague from Grande Prairie-Smoky, Motion 506, regarding pipeline access and regarding the proposed moratorium on the tankers. It should go without saying that Northern Gateway is one of the most important infrastructure projects for Canada.

Our province has long suffered the discount of petroleum products, and it is commonly stated that our province is blessed by geology and cursed by geography. As a landlocked province we are reliant on our neighbouring territories to obtain access for a project, and this may come as a surprise to members across the way, but we've actually worked together in the past for our economic interests by permitting our beautiful province access to the ports we need.

Just in the last 10 years, while my esteemed colleague from Fort McMurray-Conklin, now the Leader of the Official Opposition, was in federal politics, supporting common-sense infrastructure projects like pipelines – and I'll reiterate this again, just in case – four major pipeline projects were approved. Projects ranged from major repairs to expanding Alberta's existing access to tidewater, line reversals, expanding the province's access to domestic, international ports.

In June 2010 Keystone phase 1 between Hardisty, Alberta, and Roxana, Illinois, spanning 3,456 kilometres, was completed. The Alberta Clipper, or Enbridge main line 67, was completed in April of 2010. This pipeline is part of Enbridge's extensive pipeline system, with this particular pipeline running from Hardisty, Alberta, to Superior, Wisconsin. Then in 2008 a major pipeline expansion project was completed on Kinder Morgan's anchor loop, expanding the already existing Trans Mountain pipeline. As everyone in this House should already know, the Trans Mountain project provides Alberta access to tidewater through British Columbia. In 2012 Enbridge completed its reversal of line 9. These are just recent examples of expansions that brought significant changes to massive pipeline infrastructure. However, the access is insufficient.

Perhaps what is more problematic is that this infrastructure is largely designed to service a market that is no longer reliant on significant volumes of Canadian crude. The shale oil and gas revolution has significantly reduced American reliance on Canadian crude, and significant technologies accounted for under this revolution have meant that the American market is now oversaturated. So our neighbours to the south went from being a country so traumatized by the oil price shock of the '80s that both their foreign and domestic policy was largely guided by the goal of ensuring the security of their country's energy supply to a country that is now nearly self-sufficient in energy.

Much of our infrastructure was built around supplying American markets. To repeat what the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky has said, this oversaturation in the market has meant pipelines are overcapacity, so we are bottlenecking at this point. Canadian producers are so desperate to move their product out of province that they're selling it at a discount. To reiterate again, that is billions less in royalties and taxes for this province.

Western Canadian select trades at $14 a barrel lower than North American benchmark west Texas intermediate. When you are a province producing millions of barrels a day, that discount hurts. Our oil and gas industry needs to access new markets, particularly economically booming Asian markets, and this access will come from this project of Trans Mountain and Northern Gateway. The moratorium on tanker traffic would be unequivocally detrimental to Alberta's energy industry and, consequently, to the Albertans who rely on this.

Long before I was elected to represent the constituency of Chestermere-Rocky View, while the Leader of the Official Opposition held a seat in the federal office, our then Conservative federal government showed explicit support for the arm's-length agencies which are charged with pipeline regulations and approvals, the National Energy Board. Arm's-length bodies made sound recommendations to our federal cabinet, and in turn the cabinet generally – and this was true for decades, in fact – trusted the strict standards of these agencies and followed their recommendations. It was a time of quiet recognition and rigorous requirements mandated by the NEB in order for a company to gain a licence to build a pipeline, rigorous regulatory requirements that meant Canada had and still does have the highest for pipeline approvals in the world, just to be clear.

During this same time period – this government was newly elected and had antipipeline protesters, and then the federal government was also elected with anti Northern Gateway activism – the Member for Calgary-East was one of the members opposite who was protesting Keystone; our current Premier was attending anti, quote, unquote, tar sands rallies; while the Member for Edmonton-Calder, our new Education minister, was riling up the crowd, not to be outdone by the Member for Lethbridge-West, our environment minister. The actions taken by members of the NDP and their fellow travellers have had a profound impact on pipeline approvals.

Members of this government are personally responsible for pushing pipeline approval, a process once handled by an apolitical, arm's-length body, a process that until recently saw pipelines regularly gain approval and construction, into an issue of partisanship. The members of this government contributed to the politicization of a process of pipeline approval to the detriment of these common-sense infrastructure projects. Because of the actions taken and written about by members of this government, pipeline approval is no longer apolitical, and it's those members of the NDP and the groups this government is usually happy to work with that have caused the massive delays in pipeline construction that we are now facing.

Now that this government is done changing the pipeline approvals process to the detriment of the people they've been elected to represent, it is time for this government to apologize for their past indiscretions, follow Wildrose leadership, and actually support pipelines. The members of this government have created a climate in which quiet support for this process is no longer sufficient. Now it is time for the government to provide active vocal support for these projects, not the hollow, qualified support that we've seen so far. Albertans deserve far more than reserved support from this Premier on a project with economic benefits ranging in the billions. It's time for our Premier to stop recommending that Trans Mountain alter the proposed project instead of actually supporting . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but under Standing Order 8(3), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky to close debate.

I will first recognize the hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise to request unanimous consent of the House to go to one-minute bells.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. First of all, I want to say thanks for the support expressed today, but I do have to clarify a few points. I want to point out that the NDP government did campaign against Northern Gateway, and they did bring in anti-oil activists from across Canada to work in their upper staff. So if Albertans are a little suspicious of this government and their support for pipelines, they have good reason to be. How can you convince Albertans that you truly changed a lifetime of work against the energy industry? Well, one way would be to support this motion but follow that with action.

Mr. Panda: Concrete action.

Mr. Loewen: Concrete action.

Now, think about Northern Gateway. Some say that it's looking like it's a little closer to happening. Finally, the Premier has kind of come onboard and said that she might support Northern Gateway, but of course we've never seen any of that support until the last few weeks.

The support for pipelines isn't just about taxing Albertans out of business; it's about actual support to get Albertans working and get Albertans back into business.

Now, this isn't an exhaustive list of pipelines. We picked three good pipelines to put in this motion. These pipelines: we just need to get them approved and get them going. That doesn't take any government money, doesn't take anything. Business wants to do this, and we need it.

I do want to point out a few comments from the Energy minister. She says that other governments failed to get pipelines built. Well, I can't see how you can suggest that the other governments failed when the very people that support this government, that actually sit in the benches across, actively campaigned, put up roadblocks and obstructions against these pipelines. If we want to talk about drama-free action for pipelines, all the drama was against pipelines before, Madam Speaker.

We've spent $6 billion on carbon capture and now $3 billion more on a carbon tax. We've increased the carbon emission tax. We're spending billions of dollars here. Finally, maybe we're starting to see a little bit of light, but I don't think it should cost Albertans billions of dollars to get their energy to tidewater.

As far as political games, this isn't a political game; this is about supporting Albertans and supporting jobs. It's our job to do that. That's not a game.

Now, the Member for Edmonton-Centre said that this government has been working hard for a year to get pipelines. Well, sorry. When it comes to Northern Gateway, it might be two weeks of humming and hawing, but it isn't hard work. He also mentioned about making Canada the most environmentally responsible oil producer. We always have been. We are. He also talks about the carbon tax, reinvesting it. I'm not sure where else tax dollars would go but to be reinvested in Alberta. It's like it's some sort of new idea that you've never heard of before. He said that the federal government was keen to hear the Premier. Well, what about the proposed tanker ban? There hasn't been a lot of talk from the government side on the proposed tanker ban.

Anyway, I want to end with thanks for the support. We may have differences in our view of the facts that got us to this point, but we really need to work together to get fair dollar for our resources and put Albertans back to work again.

Thank you.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

10 a.m.

Tuesday, May 17, 2016

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. In our service to the people of this great province let us work together to seek out new solutions, new opportunities, and new ideas. As leaders may we by our actions inspire others to achieve their goals and dreams and to never give up.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day Committee of Supply

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Prior to beginning, I will outline the process for this morning. The Committee of Supply will first call on the chairs of the legislative policy committees to report on their meetings with the various ministries under their mandate. No vote is required when these reports are presented according to Standing Order 59.01(10). Members are reminded that there were amendments introduced during the legislative policy committee meetings, so the committee will vote on all proposed amendments.

The committee will then proceed to the vote on the estimates of the Legislative Assembly as approved by the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services. The vote on main estimates will then take place.

Finally, the chair would like to remind all hon. members of Standing Order 32(3.1), which provides that "after the first division is called in Committee of Supply during the vote on the main estimates . . . the interval between division bells shall be reduced to one minute for any subsequent division."

Committee Reports

The Chair: I will now invite the chair of the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future to present the committee's report.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Chair. As chair of the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future and pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(10) I am pleased to report that the committee has reviewed the 2016-17 proposed estimates and business plans for the following ministries: Ministry of Advanced Education, Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry, Ministry of Culture and Tourism, Ministry of Economic Development and Trade, Ministry of Executive Council, Ministry of Infrastructure, and Ministry of Labour.

I would also like to table amendments to the following ministries, that were introduced during our meetings, for the Committee of Supply's consideration: Ministry of Advanced Education, one amendment; Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry, one amendment; Ministry of Culture and Tourism, one amendment; Ministry of Economic Development and Trade, one amendment; Ministry of Executive Council, one amendment; Ministry of Infrastructure, one amendment; and Ministry of Labour, one amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

I would now call on the chair of the Standing Committee on Families and Communities to present the committee's report.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Chair. As chair of the Standing Committee on Families and Communities and pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(10) I'm pleased to report that the committee has reviewed the 2016-17 proposed estimates and business plans for the following ministries: Ministry of Education, Ministry of Health, Ministry of Human Services, Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General, Ministry of Seniors and Housing, Ministry of Service Alberta, and Ministry of Status of Women.

I would also like to table amendments to the following ministries, that were introduced during our meetings, for the Committee of Supply's consideration: Ministry of Education, one amendment; Ministry of Health, one amendment; and Ministry of Service Alberta, one amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

Now I'll call on the chair of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Chair. As chair of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship and pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(10) I am pleased to report that the committee has reviewed the 2016-2017 proposed estimates and business plans for the following ministries: Ministry of Energy, Ministry of Environment and Parks, Ministry of Indigenous Relations, Ministry of Municipal Affairs, Ministry of Transportation, and Ministry of Treasury Board and Finance.

I would also like to table amendments to the following ministries, that were introduced during our meetings, for the Committee of Supply's consideration: Ministry of Energy, one amendment; Ministry of Environment and Parks, one amendment; Ministry of Transportation, one amendment; and Ministry of Treasury Board and Finance, also one amendment.

Vote on Main Estimates 2016-17

The Chair: The next item of business is the vote on the amendments introduced during the legislative policy committee meetings. There are a total of 14 amendments, and they will be identified as amendments A1 through A14. Members have copies of all amendments on their desks. We will begin with A1 and carry on in sequence.

- A1. Mr. Taylor moved that the 2016-17 main estimates of the Ministry of Advanced Education be reduced
- (a) for the minister's office under reference 1.1 at page 20 by $39,000
  - (b) for the deputy minister's office under reference 1.2 at page 20 by $32,000
  - (c) for communications under reference 1.3 at page 20 by $145,000
- so that the amount to be voted at page 19 for expense is $2,730,214,000.

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 10:06 a.m.]

Introduction of Bills

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Bill 17 Appropriation Act, 2016

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 17, the Appropriation Act, 2016. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to this Assembly.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a first time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

Bill 10 Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 10 today, a bill that drastically and dramatically changes the future of our province, a bill that is not laying out a course to fiscal responsibility. It is a bill that lays out a path to reckless spending, higher taxes, incredible amounts of debt, and at the end of the day it will mean significant challenges for our province's future and, in particular, to the future of our children with respect to the full weight of government coming to bear on those future generations.

While the government, Madam Chair, might like to talk about this plan being a good one, it was only approximately four months ago – I think it's just over a hundred days now – that the hon. Finance minister stood in this place and made it clear to all of the Assembly that 15 per cent of debt to GDP would give the current government lots of room, and he assured us on a number of occasions – and my colleague from Strathmore-Brooks asked a significant amount of questions both during debate and during question period about raising the debt limit.

One of the concerns that we highlighted at the time, Madam Chair, was the creep that begins to happen when the debt limit is raised. We saw in October, I believe it was, this move to move to 15 per cent. We suggested that south of the border they have this problem as well, where they continually come up against the debt ceiling, come back to Congress, in the example that I'm using in the States, and say: we just need to raise it this one more time. But what we've seen from this NDP government is something even worse than what they propose in the States. Every time they raise the debt limit in the States, they put a new one on.

What Bill 10 does is remove any sort of accountability to the Legislature, an institution that I and this side of the House hold near and dear. To remove the accountability to the Assembly and the requirement for the government to have to come back and ask the people of Alberta whether or not increasing the debt limit is okay with them: the fact that the government has chosen to do that is more than a bit disappointing. In fact, I am convinced that this is not the type of governance or the type of change that Albertans were hoping for a little over a year ago, when this new government was elected.

What they were hoping for was a government that would be accountable to the people of Alberta. What they were hoping for was a government that would improve transparency, would increase debate, increase accountability, which, I am sorry to say, the previous government had gotten away from a great deal, but what they've gotten is not that at all. The new government hasn't lived up to their promises to be accountable, to be transparent, to be open. This is a perfect example of that. This government is taking steps to remove transparency and accountability, and that is not the kind of change that Albertans were hoping for.

Over the last number of years the province of Alberta has prided itself on being debt free, and then over the last eight years or so we moved in the opposite direction and began this desire of governments of the day to change legislation, to go back upon things that they once held dear and start to work on softening legislation. Today we are at the point where they're removing legislation, and this is not helpful.

Politicians from time to time have a hard time with accountability. Certainly, what we see here is a removal of accountability and an opportunity for the government to spend past 15 per cent of debt to GDP, past 20, past 30, all the way to the sky being the limit. This is not helpful because what it does do is put the financial stability of our future at risk.

Even at this time, by the end of this government the debt interest payments will be close to $2 billion per year, Madam Chair, $2 billion every single year moving forward, and that's if we don't go into debt even further. One thing this government hasn't done is propose any sort of plan on how this will be repaid. The plan that they spoke about just months ago was a 15 per cent debt to GDP, which was concerning to the opposition and many members of this Assembly, but now they're doing away with that and have zero plan. Two billion dollars is a lot of hospitals, schools, teachers, nurses. As we continue down this reckless path, we run the risk of putting those institutions and individuals in jeopardy in the future because of the negligence of today's government.

When we throw away the future because of the immediate concerns, it presents a real challenge. As legislators we need to make sure that we have a forward vision for the province, one that is looking long past just the challenges of today and considering the well-being of the future of our province.

I am certain that I and colleagues on this side of the Chamber will have a significant amount to say around this bill, but for the time being I will allow some of my colleagues, who, I know, have some concerns, to share some of those with the Chamber.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the opportunity to address some of the concerns brought up by the Opposition House Leader. You know, budgets are always about choices, Madam Chair. The opposition and their choices are pretty clear to me and members on this side. They would cut billions out of this budget. They would cut the services that Alberta families count on like health care and education. They would balance a budget on the backs of Albertans. They want us to return to the mistakes of previous governments that in the past cut recklessly or proposed to cut recklessly things like health care and education. That would be on top of the previous $9 billion cut to investments on schools, hospitals, roads, and bridges.

It's clear, Madam Chair, that they want to tear down Alberta while we choose to build Alberta at this time, when there is ready capital, when there is ready machinery standing idle, when there are people needing to be employed, when there is opportunity in this province. We want to build; they want to push it down the road like a previous government did with the lack of infrastructure spending that they caused in this province. It left a legacy of infrastructure decline.

The 15 per cent debt-to-GDP limit set in the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act is being removed at this time so that we can provide the flexibility required to deal with the current economic situation, which is dire. There are no two ways about it. We're taking this measure during the difficult economic times to invest in jobs and protect public services. That's something that won't happen on that side of the House.

Our balance sheet in this province remains the envy of the nation. Our borrowing costs remain among the lowest of all the provinces. This fiscal year we expect to spend 2.4 per cent of our budget revenue on debt servicing. Only 2.4 per cent. By comparison, in B.C. they will spend 5.5 per cent of their budget revenue on debt servicing. In B.C. they will spend more than twice what we're spending. In Ontario they're expecting to spend 9 per cent of their budget revenue on debt servicing, almost four times higher than Alberta.

We have on page 9 of the fiscal plan identified at this point in time by the most recent numbers, 2014-15, 3.4 per cent debt to GDP. If members look at the following page, at the end of this fiscal plan the target is for that to be 15.5 per cent, which would put us at odds with the law that we put in place. So we will be changing that. Back to page 9, when you look at the debt-to-GDP ratios of all the provinces by comparison and the federal government, you see that Alberta's position is enviable still.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee will now rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Rosendahl: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 10.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. With an eye on the clock I will move that we call it 12 o'clock and adjourn until 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:57 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, May 17, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my absolute pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 50 of the brightest grade 6 students, from Northmount elementary school, located in the incredible constituency of Edmonton-Decore. They are accompanied today by two of their teachers, Nicole Christian and Diana Coumantarakis. I'd ask that they all please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly the students and teacher of Eleanor Hall school from Clyde, Alberta. They are here conducting the week-long School at the Legislature. Their teacher is Mr. Albert Perreault, and the parent helpers are Ms Julie MacLean, Mr. Jim Laughy, Mr. Ian Despina, and Mrs. Linda McCoy. I'd would ask that the teachers, parents, and students rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I take great pride today to introduce to you a class from Rutherford constituency, l'école Greenfield school, with their teacher Caitlin Hudon and parent helpers Susan Woepel and Jessica Doody. If they could please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school groups, hon. members?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and all members of the Assembly an organizer and supporter of the group Oil People Helping Oil People, Mr. Orion Fike. Based in Brooks, Oil People Helping Oil People stepped up to help our laid-off oil and gas workers in the Newell region and have been successful in raising funds to provide food, gas, and medication and accessing community supports to our laid-off oil and gas workers. I'd ask that Orion please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my absolute pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly several guests joining us from the Imperial Sovereign Court of the Wild Rose. I ask that they rise while I call their titles: Lj Steele, Emperor XXXV; Trey LePark Trash, Imperial Grand Duke XL; Davvid Drag On, Imperial Crown Prince XL; Carrie Du'Way, Imperial Crown Princess XL; Yeust Bobb, Emperor Elect

XL; and Myra Maines, Empress Elect XL. I'd be remiss if I didn't add that Myra Maines' nondrag name is also Michael Connolly, spelled exactly the same way as mine. As you can imagine, there have been some mix-ups in the past year as we seem to run in similar circles. I now ask that the Assembly affords them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce you to a wonderful family, the Elkuraji family, consisting of Yasir, Safiya, Ahmat, and Ramadan with their volunteers Merna Schmidt, Julie Kamel, Badi Jabbour, Ahmed Najar, Elise Campbell, Carol Vogler, Alice Sears, and Phyllis Ramsden. Would you all please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three people that volunteer in Strathcona-Sherwood Park: Jim Johannsson, Shelley Johannsson, and Cam Robinson. All three of them are essential to the day-to-day ongoing operations of the Cooking Lake Airport, which I'll be speaking more about later on today. Their hard work is exemplary of the volunteer spirit alive and well in my constituency. I'd ask all three of them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other guests? The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure and honour to introduce to you and through you a group from Fort McMurray who played an instrumental role in ensuring the safe and timely evacuation of a few hundred pets from our community. It was comforting to know that the SPCA was there when the community needed them the most. As I state your name, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly: George Rowe, the SPCA president of Fort McMurray; Gilles Huizinga, the treasurer; Tara Clarke, the executive director; Sara Gaertner, the operations manager; Misha Gaertner, the kennel manager; and Andryia Browne, public relations. Please rise and accept this warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome. Thank you.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Wildfire Update

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several important updates for the Assembly on the wildfire situation, but first I must again express our gratitude to the people working on the ground in difficult and dangerous conditions to protect Albertans.

Today there are 17 wildfires burning in our province, including five new starts. Four are out of control, one is being held, 11 are under control, and one has been turned over to local authorities. We have over 1,950 firefighters and support staff on the ground today, supported by 208 helicopters, 412 pieces of heavy equipment, and 29 air tankers. Fire risk remains extreme across much of Alberta.

The fire in the MD of Greenview has grown a small amount, from 800 to 900 hectares, which is substantially less growth than expected, which is great news. The mandatory evacuation order was lifted from the hamlet of Little Smoky although residents remain under evacuation notice. We have 75 firefighters and three helicopters fighting that fire.

The Fort McMurray fire is now close to 355,000 hectares and is still out of control. Conditions remain extreme, and we expect another very challenging day for firefighters and emergency responders. Yesterday the fire rapidly burned north, prompting mandatory and precautionary evacuations for more than a dozen energy camps and facilities. Approximately 8,000 people were safely evacuated. These camps and facilities are at risk; however, no assets have been damaged. Highway 63 has been restricted north of Fort McMurray as the fire advances eastward.

Within the city structural firefighters responded to a fire in the Thickwood neighbourhood and to an explosion in Dickinsfield. The causes of both are still under investigation. Both incidents damaged several homes, but those fires were quickly put out thanks to the structural firefighters ready and on the scene.

Much of the re-entry work has also been delayed due to the continued threat of the fires as well as the extreme air quality conditions. Fort McMurray is not yet safe to return to, but we continue to make every possible effort to keep Albertans safe, to protect their homes and businesses, and to bring them back to their communities as soon as it is safely possible.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Members' Statements

Depression and Suicide

Mr. Connolly: Just over a year ago we were all elected to this Chamber, and we all have different stories as to how we got here. In March of 2015 I had to leave Ottawa, the place I had called home for three years, because I knew that if I was to stay in the situation I was in I would be dead before the end of the semester. I was in a relationship that had become unhealthy, and I felt that my options were either suicide or to come back to Calgary, where I knew I would have the supports that I needed to get through this incredibly tough time. I therefore returned home that same week.

I tried to get my mind off things by involving myself more heavily in the upcoming election and offered to be the NDP candidate for Calgary-Hawkwood. But failing to deal with my mental health problems sooner, I continued to fall into depressive states during and after the election. I didn't make time for myself, and I simply tried to ignore my issues until they couldn't be ignored. I eventually did get help and have been seeing a psychologist ever since. However, this is only because I'm privileged to have the resources that I have.

According to a 2013 national college health assessment survey of 30,000 students 1 out of every 10 postsecondary students in Canada has seriously considered attempting suicide. In that year 390 admitted to unsuccessfully attempting suicide.

Mr. Speaker, a couple weeks ago a friend showed me the spot where they had once intended to hang themselves. While I was in university, I had many friends who were in continuous battles with suicide and depression. In high school I drove a friend to the hospital when they believed they could no longer carry on.

Reaching out for help can be extremely difficult for someone who is suffering from depression and/or suicidal thoughts. Oftentimes those who are suffering feel that even if they do reach out, no one will care. I would like to sincerely tell all those who may be suffering from depression or suicidal thoughts that people are here to help you, you are loved, and our world is better because you're in it.

Thank you.

Sexual Assault Victims

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, one of the main reasons that I stand in this Chamber today is because of the duty and responsibility I feel to make Alberta a better place for the next generation. I also think of the responsibility I have to teach my children right from wrong and how to be decent and moral upstanding citizens.

We can and we must do better to change parts of our society that are marginalizing women and allowing for sexual assault and harassment to exist. As I stand here today, there's absolutely no reason for sexual violence to have a place in our society, but the fact is that it persists. As long as sexual assault and harassment continue to be a problem in our society, every woman deserves to know that should they become a victim of sexual assault, they will be believed.

The fact is that only 10 per cent of sexual assaults are reported to police, and that means that there are women that all of us know who carry the burden of having been violated in silence. Those women will never have their day in court, will never see justice for what was done to them. But for the 10 per cent that come forward, I say this: I believe you, and I want to thank you for your bravery.

That is why it is so devastating to learn that these brave people who came forward to police, who are prepared to have their lives scrutinized by the courts, aren't getting to see their day in court because of the lack of justices. These women do not deserve to be further traumatized because the justice system has failed them. The Justice minister needs to be doing everything she can, not just urging the federal government to appoint more justices but also working to remove roadblocks to prioritize these cases, to ensure that the victims of sexual assault have their voices and cases heard.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's a government with a Premier who has effectively developed a policy which is both socially progressive and fiscally conservative. That Premier won an election when no one thought she could win. Sorry, Premier; I'm not talking about you. I was instead speaking of Premier Christy Clark.

It would seem that our current Premier is a great admirer of Premier Clark as well. One of their flagship pieces of legislation was almost a direct copy of a program which has been in place in British Columbia for years. When I say "almost a direct copy," I mean that B.C. does it better.

Normally when drafting a government policy, you look into similar jurisdictions who have policies you're considering, and you build upon those successes while avoiding the pitfalls. Yet somehow this government has taken effective policy from our western neighbours and made it worse. When B.C. introduced the carbon tax in 2008, they made the tax truly revenue neutral instead of trying to redefine the term. In rolling out the revenue neutral tax, the B.C. government also accounted for a potential unfair impact on low-income British Columbians by introducing a tax credit designed to offset the carbon tax created by these individuals.

The NDP tries to justify their lack of revenue neutrality by repeatedly touting their plan to invest in energy efficiencies. Well, Mr. Speaker, B.C. did that, too. However, instead of taking money away from their constituents to fund their own pet projects, they introduced a grant which gives local governments and school districts four years to become carbon neutral. If successful, the grant offsets the carbon tax these entities pay, a win-win for everybody.

When the government reviewed the tax, they considered the impact it had on B.C. businesses. Instead, the NDP decided that they needed to be a shining beacon to this world, the success of our backbone of industry be damned.

The Speaker: Order, please.

Cooking Lake Airport

Cortes-Vargas: Mr. Speaker, it's an exciting time for the Cooking Lake Airport in Strathcona county. On June 11 of this year they are celebrating 90 years of service, making it Canada's oldest publicly operated airport.

I wanted to take the opportunity to share a bit about the story of the Cooking Lake Airport. The airport was established by early aviation pioneers in 1926. In the 90 years since its inception the airport has been the site of many interesting firsts in our province: in 1932 the first recorded medevac flight from Fort McMurray; in 1953 the delivery of the first single-engine Otter aircraft to Wardair. In 1959 the airport hosted the first full-length Hollywood picture filmed entirely in Alberta. During World War II the airport served as a temporary U.S. Army air base and contributed to the construction of the Alaska highway and Canol pipeline. It has been the training site for four generations of pilots, longer than any other airport in Canada.

They continuously contribute to our province, and recently, like many of the constituents in Strathcona-Sherwood Park, they looked for ways to utilize their unique skills and assets to respond to the needs of the wildfire evacuees. A student in the aviation services collected donations of basic necessities and then flew them up to Lac La Biche to drop them off.

Today the airport continues to serve Albertans as our sixth-busiest community airport and our newest international airport.

Mr. Speaker, I want to recognize the dedicated volunteers who keep the Cooking Lake Airport in operation. I'm extremely proud to have a piece of aviation history in my constituency.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Syrian Refugees in St. Albert

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Who doesn't remember the haunting image of the Syrian child washed up on a Turkish shore? I think we were all horrified and felt compelled to help. The UN estimates that 4 million Syrians are now refugees. Since the conflict began, four years ago, 250,000 children, women, and men have been killed. Since January 2016 2,000 Syrian refugees have arrived in Alberta.

A couple of months ago a group of volunteers in St. Albert chose to join the Edmonton refugee volunteers to help as many government-supported families as possible. The St. Albert group is now connected with 10 families, and one of those is the Elkuraji family. During the first year of the civil war the Elkuraji family lost an 18-year-old son, a brother, a mother, and an infant in two separate bombings. Young Ahmat lost a leg and the use of an arm in the third attack just within hours. The Elkuraji family was able to get to a refugee camp in Turkey, where they stayed until coming to Canada. Although those three years were difficult, love did bloom, and they now have a stepmother.

The Elkuraji family is a government-assisted refugee family, with supports coming from a federally funded resettlement organization. There are very big differences between private and government sponsorship. When the St. Albert volunteers got involved, the young children in the family had not been enrolled in school nor had Ahmat been assessed for mobility aids. Within a couple of weeks the volunteers got together, fund raised, and he now has a scooter. I think that he's scaring pedestrians all over the place. As of today the family continues to live in housing that is not wheelchair accessible, but I know that surrounded by the love and support of their volunteers and their translators and their new friends doors will open for them all over Alberta and Edmonton.

Thank you very much, and thank you to the Elkuraji family for coming.

Oil People Helping Oil People

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, layoffs in the oil and gas sector have hit close to home in rural communities across Alberta. Many oil and gas workers and their families in Strathmore-Brooks have lost their jobs and sometimes even their homes, so members of the oil and gas community have banded together to help each other out.

Oil People Helping Oil People is a grassroots organization that started in Brooks and has stepped up to help oil and gas families get through this crisis. OPHOP is helping those in need with some of the most basic necessities such as food cards for the grocery store, fuel cards for the gas station, and assistance with medications for those who have lost their medical coverage. OPHOP is even providing professional guidance on managing paperwork, finances, and taxes and guidance on community services.

Support from sponsors and donors has been exceptional. Businesses like the Dent Clinic, CSC Workwear, the Longhorn Ad Board Company, Brooks Bulletin, League Pipeline Services, Mark's Market, the Red Basket, Paramount Mechanical, and so many others have stepped up to the plate to help. These are small, community-based businesses stepping up to look after one another and families in need. To date OPHOP has been able to help 14 families with supports in the Newell region, including the city of Brooks, the town of Bassano, and the villages of Duchess and Rosemary. This is the spirit of rural Alberta, communities and neighbours pulling together in a crisis to help one another out.

Just this past weekend in Strathmore-Brooks events were held to raise funds for other oil people in Fort McMurray. We managed to get 55 six-foot-tall pallets of requested supplies collected, loaded, and trucked to relief agencies in northern Alberta. In just one weekend we raised $75,000 in cash donations for the people of Fort McMurray. That's Alberta strong, Mr. Speaker. That's oil people helping oil people.

Statement by the Speaker

Rules and Practices of the Assembly

The Speaker: Hon. members, if the Clerk would just hold the clock for a moment, I would like to take this opportunity to just remind all of the members of the House that when the Speaker is standing, other members should be sitting at all times. If they are coming in, please remain stationary while the Speaker is standing.

I also would urge the members again and remind you that the volume and substance of the comments need to be respectful of this Chamber and of each other, and I would ask that you pay particular attention to those two attributes as we go into the several weeks that we still have ahead.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Fort McMurray and Area Firefighting Resources

Mr. Jean: Last night was another bad day and night for Fort McMurray. Fire consumed multiple structures, and two separate explosions levelled nearby homes. Further north fire destroyed the Blacksand lodge. Eight thousand people who just got back to work at multiple oil sands plants were again ordered out and rejoined thousands of others as evacuees right across this province. This comes a week after international offers of assistance to fight the fire were rejected. Many Albertans are struggling to understand this. They are asking why more hands wouldn't help to fight this fire. Can the Premier please explain why extra help has been turned away?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. First of all, just to clarify with respect to yesterday, there was one explosion and one other fire, that was caused by other causes. Both are under investigation.

In terms of the issue of firefighting resources we can only rely on the advice of the firefighting experts who are working so hard each and every day to control the wildfires throughout the province and especially in Fort McMurray. What they tell us is that at certain points they become limited by the amount of airspace they have and that at certain points the amount of work in advance that can be done in front of the fires also limits what they can do and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: As the size of this fire grows, so, too, does the anxiety felt by my friends, my family, and the residents of Fort McMurray. Two weeks – two weeks – after residents fled a burning city, homes and businesses are still being burned by a fire that rages on. On top of the personal losses, we're told that at least $1 billion of oil sands production has been lost just from these fires. It means increased uncertainty for evacuees and for our economy, for our jobs. Albertans want to know if more can be done to stop this fire. Can the Premier please explain how she can consider the current level of firefighting resources to be sufficient as Fort McMurray continues to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Notley: Well, to be clear, Mr. Speaker, Fort McMurray itself is not continuing to burn, and no businesses were impacted by what happened last night.

That being said, we have over 1,900 firefighters at work on firefighting in Alberta. We have interprovincial agreements and have the ability to get more firefighters across the country and additional agreements with international firefighters. The requests for new firefighters come on the basis of what those experts say that we need, and they tell us that we have what we need. We can't change the fact that for five years there's been no rain. We can't change the fact that there's a huge amount of very dry fuel. We can't change when the wind comes up. But we can do what we're doing . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, every single business and person from Fort McMurray is being affected by this fire continuing. There are dozens of people whose feelings of relief a week ago upon learning that their homes were untouched by the initial fire now are feeling horror as they learn that fires and explosions last night consumed their homes. It's difficult to provide certainty in disaster situations – we understand that – but residents and business owners of Fort McMurray at least deserve to have the assurance that absolutely everything possible is being done to fight this fire and protect our city and property. Can the Premier please provide even just that small amount of certainty to those . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, the question for the Premier, please.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I absolutely understand the level of anxiety that Fort McMurray residents are feeling around this, including the member opposite. Indeed, we were meeting with the members of the Wood Buffalo council when news of the change in the weather and the growth in the fire pattern came to all of us, and it was very clear to see the impact that it had, the personal impact that it had on residents of Fort McMurray.

There is absolutely nothing that should be done that is not being done. There is no resource that is not being dedicated to this. There is no ask that is not being made that will contribute to fighting this fire. Everything possible is being done, Mr. Speaker, and I would like the people of Fort McMurray . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Fort McMurray Wildfire Damage Control and Recovery

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With explosions going off in Fort McMurray, Albertans are worried about the safety of all first responders working to get Fort McMurray back online. We've seen the photos of firefighters sleeping on lawns, trying to recover from their work. We know that trades are working around the clock to get services back online. If explosions are going off in Fort McMurray, what precautions are being taken to keep trades and first responders safe?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the member for that question. We value intensely the work that is being done by the first responders, not only the original first responders, who were heroic in their efforts to save the city, but those who have been rotated through ever since. We are working with them to ensure that what they do is well supported. They have accommodations. They have food. Their health is being monitored. We have a health care facility up there that's dealing with them, and all the personal protective equipment that they need is there. When the conditions get too intense, we pull them back so they're not at risk. Safety is always number one as they do their work.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, emergency officials at this morning's briefing described the situation in Fort McMurray as, quote, very volatile. We know that embers blowing into the city remain a threat, but currently most of the city remains safe from any direct threats from the fire. With gas restored to 60 per cent of the homes in the city, will the Premier tell Albertans: what exactly are the conditions that are leading to this volatility that might be leading to these explosions?

Ms Notley: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, just to clarify, we're talking about one explosion, not two. As I said previously, this is under investigation, as it should be, because we're not exactly sure what led particularly to the one explosion and the two fires.

The fact of the matter, as members opposite would know, is that there was significant disruption to the services of the city. Ten per cent of the structures were lost. Electricity stopped, water supply stopped, gas supply stopped, and now we're in the process of trying to get it back online while we still have these issues around air quality. That's why we have the level of volatility that officials are describing.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, we know that several businesses in Fort McMurray are being hit hard. Workers are displaced not just across Alberta but all of Canada. Oil sands production has taken a major hit. Those who depend on a vibrant Fort McMurray for their livelihoods need to see local businesses supported. The Fort McMurray Chamber of Commerce has recently made a request for emergency bridge financing so that local businesses can survive. Is the Premier considering this request, and if so, when can Fort McMurray expect an announcement?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I mean, we are working on all fronts with respect to this fire. Yesterday we sort of took a step backwards and got back to the whole emergency response phase of things. But in the meantime I've asked the minister of economic development to work closely with our recovery team, that is giving advice to the wildfire task force in cabinet, to look at exactly these issues in terms of what can be done to support small-business and other business owners, quite frankly, in the area, to link up between what they have in insurance and what else they still need and what additional programs we can look at either through our government, the federal government, or through the Red Cross.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Third main question.

2:00 Justice Services for Sexual Assault Victims

Mr. Jean: No victim of sexual assault should have to feel that the justice system is working against them, but that's what we have here today, a court system where people who bravely came forward to tell their stories of abuse are now unsure if they'll even get a chance to see some justice. It's a pain they shouldn't be suffering, and it runs the risk of seriously allowing criminals who should be put behind bars to walk on the streets free. Yesterday the Justice minister said that she hasn't received a timeline from Ottawa for appointing any new judges. Will the minister please pick up the phone and tell Ottawa that this is simply not acceptable?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Of course, we're incredibly troubled to hear that these cases are not proceeding forward. These incredibly brave women who have come forward to tell their stories are not getting their day in court, and we're very troubled by that. I have been in contact with the federal government over this, and in fact my office was in contact with them yesterday, was in contact with them multiple times before that, and will be in contact with them again today. Hopefully, we will be provided with a timeline today.

Thank you.

Mr. Jean: Still no answer, Mr. Speaker.

Albertans aren't looking for excuses or for politicians to play the blame game. They want answers and solutions, and we want an answer for Albertans. By failing to protect the victims of sexual assault and other serious crimes from being revictimized by a failing system, the government risks creating a chill on other victims coming forward to tell their stories. The federal government is dragging its feet. It's no excuse for the provincial government to do the same, not just in appointing judges but also on the overall review of the system for judicial appointments. Does the minister worry that delaying justice will discourage other victims of sexual assault from coming forward, and what ...

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for something that may have had a question in there somewhere. You know, obviously, we're deeply concerned about this, and we've taken a number of steps. We've been working with the Crown prosecutors' office to ensure that court case management is proceeding forward, which has done some decreasing of lead times in terms of provincial judges. For provincial judges, that we have the constitutional ability to appoint, we are making those appointments as quickly as possible. In terms of the federal minister I understand that she will be making those appointments in advance of completing her review of the system, and if that is the case, which, hopefully, I may find out later today, then I would thank her for that.

Mr. Jean: Yesterday I mentioned a report from Alberta Justice after a sexual assault victim in Airdrie saw her case tossed out. I hope the minister has had a chance to refresh herself on that. It's called Injecting a Sense of Urgency, and it was released in 2013. Outside of recommendations to provide better resources in our courts, it carves out several steps the province can take to ensure that our justice system is putting the interests of victims of violent crimes first. I will ask the Justice minister again: how many of these recommendations have been fully implemented by this NDP government?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We are familiar with the report he has referred to. It was prepared under the previous government. You know, we have moved forward on a number of those steps. As I've mentioned, we have in fact been working with the Crown prosecution service in terms of court case management. Additionally, we have been looking at the traffic court system, which is primarily what was criticized in that report. I'm not totally sure that all of those criticisms were absolutely accurate, but we're certainly looking at fixing what we can in the interim.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Coal Strategy

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in QP the Energy minister claimed that "we would export metallurgic coal, not thermal coal." What the minister actually said – she was correcting a previous statement – was that what happens to those coal mines and coal exports really is up to the market forces, not government. To the minister: since your incorrect correction of your previously corrected statement now needs another correction, will you just now answer the question instead? Does coal magically conform to your standards and the emissions magically disappear when it is burned on the other side of the world in a plant with lower emission standards?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: What our plan is going to do is to tackle the emissions from coal. We care not what the source is but what the emissions are, and Minister Phillips' climate change plan will be addressing that.

Mr. McIver: Well, clearly, the minister doesn't care what the emissions are because she's going to let the emissions happen on the other side of the world. Apparently, that doesn't count.

To the Energy minister. Your ministry opposes innovation that would lower emissions at Calgary coal plants even though those coal plants create jobs, and instead you favour higher emissions that cannot be controlled while it's burned in other countries. When we share the air all over the Earth, how does shifting high emissions to a lower standard jurisdiction benefit the environment?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, Old King Cole may have been a merry old soul, but he was rather less jolly when he presented in an emergency room with acute asthma, which is why we are addressing the health effects of burning coal for electricity. In this province we are phasing them out such that by 2030 we will be avoiding a number of health impacts, including, according to Environment Canada, $2.7 billion in avoided health care costs.

Mr. McIver: In the spirit of nursery rhymes, the emperor minister's answer has no clothes, Mr. Speaker.

Now, the Member for Calgary-South East asked the Energy minister in estimates about coal-fired electricity and said: if we were world leading in emission reduction, could there be a future for this sector in Alberta? To that, the minister answered, "If there is a commercially viable means of making coal zero-emissions, then I don't see why [not]." To the Premier: do you agree with your Energy minister, who says that clean-coal technology is a good idea, or with your environment minister, who won't listen to anybody under any circumstances?

Ms Notley: I believe the question was to me. Let me just say that what I agree with . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Ms Notley: . . . is the climate leadership plan, that our whole caucus supports. It is a great plan. It is a leading plan in Canada. It is a plan that will reduce and eliminate coal emissions in Alberta, which is the kind of thing that should have happened under the previous government decades ago. But I'm very proud on behalf of Albertans that we are moving forward on this issue.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Electricity Prices

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In order to implement their climate leadership plan, the government has announced phase-out of coal-fired generation of electricity. However, wholesale electricity prices have declined steadily over the past several years, and the cost of new generation is substantially higher than what pool prices have been able to produce since 2014. At current and projected price levels the market may not be sustainable, particularly in terms of building new capacity. Higher cost generating plants may not be economically viable, and substantial subsidies may be required. To the Minister of Energy: how much more will Albertans have to pay for electricity in order to build out this new infrastructure?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, we are phasing out coal-fired electricity, in the first instance according to the federal regulations established by the Stephen Harper government and after 2030 according to a schedule for those plants that is currently under discussion by the coal negotiator. In the first instance what is guiding our deliberations on this as well, when we designed the renewable energy competitive procurement, is stability for ratepayers, no unnecessary . . .

Some Hon. Members: Time.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Excuse me, hon. members. I will take care of the time.

Dr. Swann: Given that under the current system the government cannot guarantee power pricing and given that almost all experts, including the government's own experts, believe that the cost of power is going to go up, can we ask the Minister of Economic Development and Trade how he expects industry, particularly heavy industry like manufacturing, to invest in Alberta given the uncertainty around one of their primary expenses?

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you for the question. You know, this is part of the climate leadership plan, that indeed we are phasing out the post-2030 plants, and we are in the midst of a negotiated process for that. We are equally in the midst of designing the renewable energy procurement policies that will phase in renewable energy as coal phases out. Of course, we are in the midst of that via the Electric System Operator. In addition, there have been some budgetary pieces for community energy systems and other investments in renewables.

2:10

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Second supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister. Well, given that Alberta has an energy-only market where prices are determined in real time and given that in an energy-only market potential investors need to see high prices for sustained periods before investing hundreds of millions of dollars and given the uncertainty of energy prices in energy-only markets, is the government considering alternatives: long-term, fixed-price contracts or re-regulating the market?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, as we negotiate the post-2030 phase-out, we are also designing the renewable energy procurement process, and within that there are many different competitive options for how we might phase in those renewables, which are under active consideration by the Electric System Operator. I do note that there were about 120, 130 submissions, many, many investors very interested in the new markets. There's a tremendous amount of positive energy around Alberta's renewable energy procurement, and we're very pleased.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents in Edmonton-Ellerslie know our government's budget invests in stabilizing and maintaining the services Albertans depend on rather than making reckless cuts that will only make things worse for Alberta's most vulnerable. Given our government's commitment to supporting the safety, dignity, and well-being of persons with disabilities, to the Minister of Human Services: how has our government invested in the assured income for the severely handicapped program in Budget 2016?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Our government believes that all Albertans should be able to live in a stable home and be able to put food on the table. That's why, despite challenging economic times, Budget 2016 maintains AISH benefit levels, with a targeted funding increase of $28.3 million. Families receiving AISH may also be eligible for the Alberta child benefit, for which a single parent of two children can receive a maximum of $1,650.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that I've had several constituents who are AISH recipients connect with me about the program and given that I've heard concerns from some of them about the ability of AISH workers to manage growing caseloads, again to the Minister of Human Services: what is our government doing in order to make caseworkers more accessible to those that depend on AISH?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the question. In tough economic times like these even more people need supports. That's why we have increased the funding to AISH to accommodate increased demand. The AISH caseload increase is upwards of 1,500 clients per year, and our government has invested an additional $28.3 million to address the growing caseload and increase in cost per case.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the minister. Given that AISH recipients depend on this funding to pay for their housing, food, and other basic needs, what is being done to better streamline services so AISH recipients receive the supports they need when they need them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Overall, there are 54,000 adults with disabilities receiving supports from the AISH program, and our government is committed to ensuring that these Albertans receive the support they need. AISH application wait times have been reduced through improved and centralized processes in the AISH program. In addition, AISH applicants can seek short-term assistance through Alberta Works income support programs. I will continue to work with my officials to find ways to further reduce the wait times for Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Farm and Ranch Worker Regulation Consultation

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've had several serious inquiries concerning the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act and those round-tables. In estimates on April 21 we were informed that the announcement of the specific membership of the tables would be a few weeks away due to the volume of applicants. To the minister. We are now nearly a month away from those estimates. Can you please tell us when you're releasing this important information to the stakeholders?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. You know, we're still working with groups, including the ag coalition, making the opportunity to make sure we have the best possible people to populate these techno working groups. It's important for our producers, important for Albertans, important for the workers. To answer the member's question, we're very close, and I'd ask him to stay tuned.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that this process has been anything but open and transparent and given that the farmers and ranchers continue to feel excluded from the process, can the minister at least tell us how many actual farmer and rancher positions, labour groups, and individual producers are included in the 72 available seats?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. It's important that all groups are represented in this. Farmers, ranchers, workers, health and safety, labour experts are all well represented. I'm quite happy with the work that we've done to this point to make sure that they are represented, and I'm looking forward to getting onward with the process and starting this process.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that this legislation has been surrounded by secrecy from the start and given that there is still plenty of suspicion, confusion, and anger around this government's intentions for family farms and ranches, will the minister take this opportunity to be forthright, honest, and guarantee that the round-table makeup will be announced before the end of this session?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Good question. You know, we're so close. We're really close – right? – to be able to get this together. We have the representative. We know that going forward these recommendations will help government shape the policies and shape the regulations, looking for the input from all of these groups, knowing that it will be a benefit not only for workers but for the farmers and ranchers themselves.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

PDD Service Wait Times

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the Minister of Human Services there are 413 people currently on the PDD service wait-list. We have however heard from the government's own individual supports program who tracks the population on the wait list that this number isn't entirely accurate and that the actual size of the wait-list in Calgary alone is over 500. To the Minister of Human Services: where did your numbers come from, and what is the actual total number of people on the wait-list for PDD services in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For these numbers and advice I do rely on my officials, and I will stand by my statement that according to my officials the wait-list is 413 people. That's the correct number.

Ms Jansen: Well, I guess the people who actually do the work must be wrong.

Given that last week I asked the Minister of Human Services what supports were available to the individuals in the families on these wait-lists and given that the minister's answer provided no clarity and no reassurance to the families who were waiting for services, again to the Minister of Human Services. People are stressed and worried and they're waiting for answers. What is the plan to reduce the size of the wait-lists that you presented to Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. A couple of questions. One: what supports are available? People who are waiting for services can access income support programs. Second thing, we have centralized that process, and we are working with our officials. We've added more funds, reversed the cuts from the previous government to create capacity to deal with these issues. So we are working with our partners. We are working with our officials to make sure that Albertans who need the support get it in a timely manner.

Thank you.

Ms Jansen: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're certainly hearing from PDD families that things were better under the previous government, so nice try.

Given that the minister promised a one-stop integrated service delivery approach for Human Services and given in the same estimates the minister stated that there were no measurable outcomes, deliverables, or even a commitment that this plan would appear in the next business plan, to the Minister of Human Services. No plan, no outcomes, no commitment to even act. How does this minister actually plan to improve service delivery for PDD in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. As a government we are committed to making sure that Albertans get the support they need in an appropriate and timely manner. Integrating services towards a more centralized, integrated model is a work-in-progress. Once it's completed, Albertans will have access to services like one-stop shop services through Alberta Supports centre and other avenues. We are working on it, and we will report on the progress.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Pipeline Development

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The rhetoric of the NDP government regarding pipelines is becoming very tired. Let there be no doubt that principled conservatives in this country have long been in favour of pipelines in every direction. This is in sharp contrast to the conflicting views of the Leapers and the sitting MLAs in the NDP caucus who have in fact protested against pipelines. Keystone phase 1, Alberta Clipper, Kinder Morgan anchor loop, and Enbridge's line 9 reversal were all completed under the previous federal government. Will the Minister of Energy acknowledge that her partisan and out-of-touch talking points on this issue are just plain wrong?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, I think. Our government weekly and daily is committed to pipelines. We work with energy companies. We work with the builders. We work with the shippers. Our commitment has been to be collaborative partners in making sure that the process is respected and that we can do it all in a timely fashion.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Perhaps it's time for a little bit of self-reflection. Given that the Member for Calgary-East was busy protesting less than five years ago against Keystone XL, holding a sign saying "no more dirty oil" and given that the minister of environment put her wordsmithing to use by cowriting a handbook entitled An Action a Day: Keeps Global Capitalism Away and given that when the going got tough, the current economic downturn, the jobs minister took a trip to B.C. to campaign for an environmental extremist NDP candidate, which of these actions would the NDP government like to choose to demonstrate their stellar track record on pipelines?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you. Again, we work constantly with our industry partners. They are very happy with our approach. They recognize that the approach of previous governments did not work. They like being partners with us. And they agree totally with the way we are managing this project to get a pipeline to tidewater in a timely fashion.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that I along with my caucus was pleasantly surprised to see that the NDP members of this Chamber voted in support yesterday of the Wildrose motion which voices support for urging the federal government to remove a proposed tanker ban on B.C.'s north coast. Up until last night the NDP government has been mum on this issue, refusing to publicly voice opposition to proposed tanker bans by the Trudeau government. So I will keep this simple. Will the Energy minister publicly state right here right now that the federal government must not place a tanker ban on the B.C. coast since it would kill the Northern Gateway pipeline?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I will publicly state is that the energy companies I work with like our plan. They are frankly confused about why you don't like pipelines and why you want to see us fail. They want you to be . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please try to keep down the volume of hitting the desks. I've asked before about that. I'd ask you to do it again.

I think it's the Member for Airdrie.

Airdrie's Sierra Springs Commercial Area Access

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is the member for Airdrie.

Last month Airdrie city council approved a recommendation from ISL engineering, an independent consulting firm, to pursue a left-hand turn lane for the Yankee Valley Boulevard and Sierra Springs corner, the Boston Pizza corner. This has been a high-risk intersection for years, and ISL has now provided independent confirmation that this left-turn lane is the best way to improve traffic safety and flow. To the Minister of Transportation. Your department has been against this proposal in the past. Where do you stand on this matter now?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the hon. member to provide me with that report. I will review it and give her an answer.

Mrs. Pitt: I have, but I will again.

Mr. Speaker, given that this is a matter of transportation safety and that the consultation firm stated on the record that, quote, improvements at Sierra Springs would provide the best overall benefit for the city of Airdrie – end quote – and given that these recommendations have been unanimously accepted by the local city council as being the best way to mitigate risk and keep Airdrie residents safe, will you commit to working with your department, when I provide the report again, to respect the safety of Albertans and the autonomy of our local government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for the question, Mr. Speaker. I remind the hon. member that it is also a provincial highway, so the provincial government and the Department of Transportation also have a say. Having said that, I respect the work that's been done by the local council, and I will be happy to review this matter again and get back to the member.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this simple change is something that has long been needed in our community – it's truly an annoying corner – that would improve traffic flows as well as the safety of Airdrie residents and given that costs would be covered by the city, please, please, please, Mr. Minister, can you give us a timeline for this?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the timeline is this: when I review the report, talk to my department, and make some sort of decision about what the timeline is, then I'll provide the timeline to the member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Emergency Management Planning

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Environmental issues are front and centre with many governments and their citizens all over the world. Even in this House we have members who want to implement environmental policy at all costs, any cost, even if it hurts Albertans. On the other hand, we have members in this House who believe that we as humans have no impact at all when it comes to the environment. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: how, specifically, is your government preparing for future disasters in Alberta given the increase in extreme weather conditions we have seen over the past few years?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Certainly, the Alberta Emergency Management Agency works closely with the municipal emergency management experts to ensure that they have plans in place to give them the support they need to have those plans in place in terms of responding to a disaster. We also continue to work with the federal government in terms of talking about how we can all respond together as a country in terms of how we deal with the continued increase in challenges we're faced with. I look forward to ongoing communications with them and coming up with some solutions in co-operation with one another.

Mr. Fraser: Given that during the 2013 floods in southern Alberta many people experienced tremendous losses: loss of life, precious personal items, and vital documents – as the associate minister in High River I saw first-hand this crisis Albertans were faced with, and it was heartbreaking – to the same minister: is there any work being done on my recommendation in developing a system where Albertans, especially those living in disaster-prone areas, have the ability to preregister for the disaster recovery program?

The Speaker: The minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that I'm not familiar with that recommendation. One of the things that we are doing is looking at across the province where there are areas of high risk and how we can work together to reduce that risk. Some of that work is being done in terms of the mitigation work that my colleague in Infrastructure is leading, working together with Environment and Parks. Certainly, we're happy to work with Albertans to reduce their risk if we are faced with a disaster in the future.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence, I want to be clear. Our caucus fully stands with this minister, the Premier, and their government to support all of the efforts in Fort McMurray. But, Minister, tell this House, tell Albertans that you have read the recommendations from the most recent disasters and that you are giving the latitude to the Alberta Emergency Management Agency to act on those recommendations.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that I think the Alberta Emergency Management Agency team that I have is incredibly amazing, and I have great faith in them to continue to move forward in terms of ensuring the prevention but also the response to disasters as they happen. You know, I will continue to support them and encourage them and ensure that they have the support they need to be able to do that work freely and without my micromanaging that experience.

Short-term Personal Loans

Mrs. Schreiner: Mr. Speaker, I have heard from constituents who shared with me stories of taking out a payday loan to help cover their family in an emergency only to have to go back and take out another loan just to pay back their first. This creates a further crisis for these folks. People who are living in poverty want to get out, but it can be difficult. To the Minister of Service Alberta: what is the minister doing to ensure that people who may need temporary financial assistance are not being unfairly punished?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We heard loud and clear from Albertans last fall to take action on exploitive payday loans. They asked us to bring in fair rules so that vulnerable Albertans don't get trapped in vicious cycles of debt. We took action last week by bringing forward legislation that brings in the lowest cost of borrowing in the country, requiring instalment payments and longer payback periods as well as financial literacy. Alberta municipalities, local business revitalization zones, and community and poverty-reduction groups all support these changes, and Alberta's credit unions have committed to launching alternative products.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many of these same people have told me that they only turned to payday lenders because they had no alternative, again to the same minister: is the minister going to be working with stakeholders to ensure that Albertans have access to the socially responsible loan products that they may need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Albertans do need access to short-term, small-dollar loans that won't exploit or gouge them when they have unexpected expenses. We've been working with Alberta's credit unions, ATB, community groups, and others to put in strong and fair alternatives. First Calgary Financial and Momentum are leading with their cash crunch loan, which is a microloan product, and it's exciting that Servus Credit Union will offer short-term loans at significantly lower rates than traditional payday lenders. Our government is committed to promoting these and other alternatives that are fair and sustainable.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, given that we all know the importance of accurate and up-to-date data if we want to develop the best possible additional strategies to educate and protect Albertans from financial crisis, again to the Minister of Service Alberta: what is the minister doing to ensure that the ministry and stakeholders have access to the information that they need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Accurate data is critical, as mentioned, so that we can make decisions based upon evidence. That's why part of this legislation, An Act to End Predatory Lending, will require companies to report data on loans, which will provide us with a clear state of the market. Based upon that, if we need to go even further to protect Albertans, we will act. We want Albertans to have access to fair, short-term loans when they need them.

Government Policies

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, the NDP's hard-line agenda has made an already bad situation worse for our small and mid-sized oil companies. One of the job-killing policies is the looming carbon tax, which will drive taxes on gas and diesel from 13 cents a litre to 21 cents a litre in less than two years. The NDP did a special side deal for certain big energy companies but showed no such consultation and concern for the small and mid-sized companies like those in Strathmore-Brooks. Will the Minister of Energy show fairness and help our small oil companies by exempting them from their punishing carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the climate leadership plan that we released in November of 2015 outlined a number of different ways in which our energy-intensive and trade-exposed industries will be kept competitive going forward; for example, the on-site natural gas exemption until 2023 and a series of performance standards which will be phased in to phase out the existing specified gas emitters regulation.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Bluster and BS from the government, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bilous: Point of order.

Mr. Fildebrandt: The NDP finally did right on pipelines but only after they were put in a corner and shamed by the Official Opposition. The Wildrose Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky's motion yesterday calling for a stop to the proposed tanker ban on the B.C. coast was passed unanimously in this House but only after the opposition once again shamed the government into going on the record with a vote. They cringed while doing it. Will the Minister of Energy come out and enthusiastically endorse no tanker bans on the B.C. coast and fight the federal NDP's attack on Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and for the question. I'm in touch biweekly with my federal minister, asking for clarity on the tanker ban. There is no tanker ban yet. It is a moratorium, and we are constantly trying to seek clarity on that.

Mrs. Pitt: Do your job.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Excuse me. I'm doing it right now.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Could I warn the hon. Member for Airdrie. I requested volume control at the beginning of the session. I would ask that you remind yourself of that.

Could you finish the answer, please?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Yeah. It's become apparent recently that the opposition cares more about seeing us fail than actually getting pipelines to tidewater. [interjections]

Mr. Fildebrandt: I would request the same level of order when members of the opposition speak, Mr. Speaker.

Laid off oil and gas workers . . .

The Speaker: Pardon me? I didn't hear your point. Could you please be seated? The point you made was – what? I didn't hear it.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I would request that order be restored equally when members of the opposition speak as when the government, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, the tone of your voice makes me concerned that you are raising the fairness of the Speaker into question, and I would ask that you contain your comments with respect to that. Do you hear me?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Given, Mr. Speaker, that laid-off oil and gas workers are suffering, that the federal employment insurance program is designed to support other parts of the country and is ill-fitted for the workers of Alberta and that for many EI is about to run out even though most Albertans pay far more into the system than they will ever take out, groups like Oil People Helping Oil People in Brooks are stepping up to help, but they can't do it alone. One-off EI tinkering to the status quo will not do the trick. Will the Premier stand up for Alberta and demand an EI program that will work for Albertans?

The Speaker: The deputy House leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Quite frankly, our Premier has been very effective in communicating with the Prime Minister to ensure that Alberta and Edmonton get the same benefits that are extended across the country. To the member's point, our budget is the Alberta jobs plan, which is investing millions of dollars in Alberta companies, in small businesses, in much-needed infrastructure. Quite frankly, that party over there would cut billions of dollars out of much-needed infrastructure, which would cause an exacerbation of layoffs of nurses, teachers, and you name it. That is not the solution. Our government is moving forward with a robust jobs plan.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Beef Marketing

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we saw recently, there's an appetite for certification of beef raised and processed in Alberta to clearly define that it is humanely treated at all stages of life. While I know that it's being done here in Alberta, we need to make it known to the whole world that Alberta beef is not only the best but it abides by the highest standards of humane treatment of livestock. To the minister of ag: what is your government doing to introduce a certification program that will be recognized in all markets?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Nobody produces better beef than Alberta. Alberta beef has a well-deserved reputation. It's delicious, healthy, and is sourced from second-to-none ranchers and producers. Our beef industry has already taken the lead in helping set benchmarks for sustainable beef, which include animal health and welfare. For example, McDonald's Restaurants has worked with Alberta to determine and establish sustainable protocols for beef. Their verified sustainable beef pilot project, on which a report will be due this June – I'm looking forward to finding out . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the term "certified humane" is a registered trademark created in the United States for marketing purposes and given that Alberta could create and uphold a certification which more accurately reflects the quality of meat for consumers since the meat is not only tested for antibiotics, hormones, BSE but also has traceability throughout its life cycle, which is not the case in the U.S., to the minister: what areas of standardization can we expect to see in an Alberta certification program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We support and fund the Canadian round-table for sustainable beef with our industry partners. It's an industry-led initiative to determine best practices and supply-chain reporting. This is second to none. It has allowed the industry to market right around the world. Both myself and the Minister of Economic Development and Trade are expanding those markets right around the world. We all know, everyone in this Chamber and in Alberta, that Alberta producers have the best beef. We need to have that message go out loud and clear.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta beef producers' livelihoods depend on Alberta beef being marketable as certified and given that these producers are the experts in defining what is needed to certify the most humane and best-tasting beef, to the minister: how are you working with the beef industry to decide what this certification will include and what the timeline will be for this to be introduced?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Canadians know that when they eat Alberta beef, they're getting the absolute best. We as a government and myself as the minister will continue to partner with industry, continue to work with industry to maintain those high standards. Going forward, it is about marketing. It's about maintaining those markets right around the world, and we're doing our best, working with industry as they are the leaders, and will continue to do so.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Indigenous Peoples' Economic Development

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our collective future is brighter when all Albertans are able to participate and help grow Alberta's economy. However, many indigenous people face barriers which prevent them from participating in the labour force. To the Minister of Indigenous Relations: what is the minister doing to address and improve the economic participation of indigenous people?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. My ministry collaborates with indigenous communities, industry, other Alberta ministries, and the government of Canada to provide funding for community-driven indigenous projects that improve economic participation. In 2015-16 we provided approximately 100 grants through the aboriginal economic partnership program, the employment partnership program, and the aboriginal business investment fund. These services help to create and enhance opportunities for indigenous people to participate in the Alberta economy. They enhance economic development within communities, support job training, and employ . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to hear about the supports available for indigenous people. I'm also interested in what the ministry is specifically doing at the community level for First Nations. Given the economic challenges faced by many First Nations communities, to the same minister: what are you doing to support and enhance the economic development of First Nations communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The aboriginal business investment fund is the only provincial funded capital investment fund in Canada specifically meant for indigenous community business owners. The whole community benefits when these businesses have the capital and the opportunity to flourish. The aboriginal business investment fund helped support several notable projects this year; for example, a $750,000 grant for the O'Chiese First Nations market, which placed an 11,000-square-foot grocery store in the community. We also had a $250,000 grant to Bigstone Cree to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the update. It is encouraging to hear more about this fund and some of the great projects where our government is supporting our First Nations.

Again to the Minister of Indigenous Relations: what kind of collaboration is occurring between your ministry, other Alberta ministries, and the federal government to co-ordinate grant delivery and enhancement of economic developments?

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. There are a significant number of grants and services provided by the Alberta government. My ministry works with other government of Alberta departments to share information and best practices and to increase awareness of supports for economic development. We link indigenous communities to other departments like Culture and Tourism and Economic Development and Trade. My government is also collaborating with Canada's lands and economic development advisory committee to explore opportunities to strengthen relationships between government levels and to improve the training and capacity of First Nations economic development officers. Providing new training opportunities for their officers will equip nations with . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, unanimous consent has been requested to introduce some visitors who have arrived late.

Introduction of Guests (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the members of the House for the indulgence. It is definitely my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 40 students from the ESL Dickinsfield Amity House, located in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Decore. They're joined here today by their very proud instructors, Louisa Bruinsma and Frieda Maaskant. These are the students behind a unique book project, And War Shall Be No More, which is a collection of stories about their experiences with war in their home countries, that I had the pleasure of speaking about in this House last month. I'd now like to ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, in 15 seconds I will recognize the minister.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office.

Bill 18 An Act to Ensure Independent Environmental Monitoring

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and request leave to introduce Bill 18, An Act to Ensure Independent Environmental Monitoring.

In April I announced a plan to put in place a stronger, more accountable environmental monitoring system that will ensure rigorous scientific oversight and will regularly report to Albertans on the condition of their environment. This plan also ensures that environmental monitoring is brought back into the department as a core function of government as it relates to the health and safety of Albertans. Bill 18 is an important step in that plan.

The bill will establish a system that will ensure the scientific integrity of the province's monitoring data. It does this by outlining specific legislative duties of the chief scientist and by establishing a science advisory panel to provide advice as well as assessment of the scientific integrity of the overall environmental program.

It also mandates the minister to establish another panel to advise the chief scientist on how to incorporate traditional ecological knowledge into the environmental science program. This will be the indigenous wisdom advisory panel.

Bill 18 also includes a number of transitional provisions that are necessary to move the front-line staff from the Alberta Environmental Monitoring, Evaluation and Reporting Agency back to government as soon as possible and with as little disruption as possible.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 18 will ensure that we quickly move forward on the return of the core government responsibility of environmental monitoring so that we can ensure that we are building a focused, efficient system that is fully accountable to Albertans.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: I understand you might have a tabling, Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and table the requisite number of copies of written responses to questions from my Health estimates just late last week.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite copies of pages 244 and 245 of the transcript from the Resource Stewardship Committee, which are from the Energy estimates which took place on May 9, 2016. On page 244 the Minister of Energy initially states that Alberta will only be exporting metallurgical coal. On page 245 she corrects herself and states:

Sorry. Before you ask a question, there is one correction I need to make regarding the coal. The climate plan is about ending coal emissions by 2030, but what happens to those coal mines and the coal exports really is . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, you're tabling the document. Is that right?

Mr. Gotfried: Yes. That's correct, sir.

I'm also tabling the requisite copies of page 919 from Alberta Hansard from question period yesterday, where the minister stated: "I want to confirm that you're incorrect on the thermal coal. During my estimates I said that we would export metallurgic coal, not thermal coal." This is a direct contradiction to what the minister actually said, and perhaps she would like to . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, table the report.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Acting Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Schmidt, Minister of Advanced Education, response to a question raised on May 11, 2016, Ministry of Advanced Education 2016-17 main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Ms Sigurdson, Minister of Seniors and Housing, responses to questions raised by Mr. Gotfried, hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, and Mrs. Pitt, hon. Member for Airdrie, on May 10, 2016, Ministry of Seniors and Housing 2016-17 main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Minister Miranda, Minister of Culture and Tourism, responses to questions raised on May 11, 2016, Ministry of Culture and Tourism 2016-17 main estimates debate.

The Speaker: On a point of order, the Deputy Government House Leader.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under 23(h), (i), and (j): (h) is "makes allegations against another Member"; (i) is "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member"; and (j) is "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder."

Mr. Speaker, in very short order I believe you will see that in his first supplemental the Member for Strathmore-Brooks in his preamble, when engaging with the Minister of Energy, actually stated that her response was, and I quote, BS.

I will quote from numerous rulings in the past, Mr. Speaker, that this has been ruled unparliamentary language. Rulings on December 11, 1990, Acting Deputy Speaker Jonson; on June 5, 1990, Deputy Speaker Schumacher; May 22, 1987, Deputy Speaker Gogo; and on May 21, 1987, Deputy Speaker Gogo had ruled that completely unparliamentary. I'll also draw your attention to Beauchesne's parliamentary practice. On page 149 "B.S." in Debates from 1978-79 was ruled as unparliamentary language.

Mr. Speaker, it's not just unparliamentary. That kind of language in this Chamber is offensive, is disrespectful, is unbecoming of a member of this Assembly representing the over 4 million Albertans that reside in our province. The member should be ashamed to be using that type of language, which is offensive. I will remind the House that there are many school groups that are often in this Chamber witnessing question period and others that are watching this live streamed. It not only is offensive to members in this Chamber but to Albertans and, quite frankly, is unbecoming of a member of this House.

So I would ask that the Opposition House Leader and the member apologize to the minister for using that language against her, to yourself, Mr. Speaker, and to the House and withdraw his comments.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the point of order today. From time to time members inside the Chamber say things that they ought not to. I think we saw an example of that yesterday when there were accusations made towards this side of the House.

Typically speaking, the most appropriate path forward when that happens is for the member to rise, apologize for their comments, and withdraw them, and I am more than pleased to do that on behalf of the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. I hope that in the future the Minister of Justice will also be happy to withdraw statements that ought not to be made.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 13 Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very honoured to rise and speak to Bill 13, the Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2016.

My ministry is responsible for legislation that governs the practice of various professions through their respective professional regulatory organizations. The government grants authority to these organizations to regulate their professions and ensure that their members carry out their practice according to professional standards in order to protect the public interest. The Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, or ABVMA, governs both veterinarians and veterinary technologists in accordance with the Veterinary Profession Act.

If passed, this bill will enable veterinary technologists in Alberta to be represented in ABVMA's governance. These changes mean that technologists can participate and vote in the association's governing council, practice review board, and disciplinary committees, and as full voting members they will have a voice in governance decisions which may affect them professionally. This is important because ABVMA is responsible for setting and enforcing the rules around the practice of veterinary medicine in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed changes will provide greater public protection by ensuring that the highest professional standards are followed by all technologists. There are approximately 1,500 practising veterinarians in Alberta and the same number of practising veterinary technologists.

One other point I'd like to make about this legislation. If this bill is passed, it also has the potential to increase the number of women sitting on ABVMA's governing boards and committees. Since 98 per cent of veterinary technologists in Alberta are female, this change could mean that more women are given a voice in the governance and practice of this profession.

Mr. Speaker, it's important to note that Bill 13 will not change the scope of practice for veterinary medicine nor the qualifications required to be a technologist. The purpose of this bill is to allow veterinary technologists to participate in the governance of the ABVMA with full voting rights. By enhancing accountability for technologists, Albertans can be confident that their animals are receiving the best care possible.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all of my colleagues in the Legislature to support this bill. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, are you moving second reading?

Ms Gray: Yes. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak? The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 13, the Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2016. I don't think there's a single member here who doesn't recognize and appreciate the importance of the veterinary profession. Albertans across the province look to veterinarians for the health and well-being of their animals. In many cases that involves looking after the health and well-being of household pets, but in other cases, including in large parts of my constituency, Albertans work with and depend on animals for their livelihoods. For them, good veterinarians and veterinarian technologists are a must-have.

Now, veterinarians and veterinarian technologists are both under the jurisdiction of the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, but I think we can all agree that giving adequate representation to both on the ABVMA body makes sense. We owe a lot to those who work in the veterinary field. If we are going to insist that their profession be one of those where governance comes back to Alberta Labour, we should ensure they're treated fairly.

I appreciate what the bill seeks to do, which is to ensure adequate representation of veterinary technologists on professional boards, and I was glad to hear that this provides more opportunity for females to be able to be represented on this board as well. If veterinary technologists are to be governed by the same act and the same professional organizational body as veterinarians, it only makes sense that the act is applied properly to them. I appreciate that the Minister of Labour is seeking to achieve this here.

That said, my caucus colleagues and I are reaching out to stakeholders in the veterinary profession for feedback to better inform our opinion here. We want to make sure that there aren't adverse regulatory problems being created or problems that aren't being addressed in this act. There is, rather regrettably, a certain skepticism that accompanies the current government's legislative initiatives.

My colleagues and I over the past year have seen this government put forward bills that are done with little to no consultation. For instance, look at Bill 6 and the massive oversight that occurred in consulting Alberta's farming and ranching community.

We saw this with Bill 1. To this day I don't know what the government hoped to achieve with it given that barely anyone has stood up to defend it thus far, and I don't think the government knows either. To this day it languishes on the Order Paper. To this day the current government has failed to make the case as to why that legislation is needed at all. Not a single policy expert or business group or anyone, really, has stepped forward to say that Bill 1 as proposed fills some sort of gap. Its necessity is still in question.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you're dealing with a different bill in Bill 1. Please get to the subject matter.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I will. I'll tell you why I'm saying that . . .

The Speaker: I know. I heard it. That's why I'm saying: get to the bill.

Mr. Hunter: Then there's Bill 4. Despite being delivered under the guise of implementing a Supreme Court decision, that line itself went above and beyond that. It is for reasons like these that there is a certain skepticism about other legislative initiatives taken up by this government.

We wouldn't be an effective opposition if we took things at face value, of course. But with this government – and this is certainly not the sole fault of this minister, in particular – we do have to be particularly attentive to the details. My colleagues and I are reaching out to veterinarians and veterinary technicians in our constituencies. To date there aren't any really significant concerns, but we do want to do our due diligence on this file given the importance of what veterinarians do. As the Official Opposition we at least owe this much to Albertans.

The government's own figures show some 1,500 veterinarians in the province and approximately 1,500 veterinarian technicians. That's not an insignificant number who will be impacted by this legislation. Under this legislation veterinarian technologists not following the instructions of the registered veterinarian supervising them or practising veterinary medicine that the technologist is not authorized to practise are deemed: "conduct that harms the integrity of the profession." That seems like a common-sense, straightforward measure, Mr. Speaker.

Furthermore, technologists cannot imply that they are veterinarians. After all, the Veterinary Profession Act already does not allow anyone except a registered veterinarian or permit holder to imply that they are veterinarians. It also does not allow a registered veterinarian or permit holder to imply that they are a specialist without actually being approved as a specialist in the field of veterinary medicine. So extending the spirit and letter of the law to technologists is a common-sense measure. In many ways it's also a consumer protection measure for those who rely on the services of those in the veterinary profession.

Given that the aim of this prospective legislation is to bring veterinarian technologists into the fold of the same professional governance as veterinarians, all of what's included here involves technical updates. Where the governance body already could make decisions on the registration of students and required qualifications for veterinarians, they can now do so for technologists as well. Just as they could revoke licences of veterinarians, they can now do so for technologists as well. These seem to be professional house-keeping measures, and I support that, Mr. Speaker.

Under the existing law, as it stands on the books today, the council of the self-governing professional body consists of a minimum of seven veterinarians elected by registered veterinarians for a length of time as determined according to their bylaws. Under the proposed legislation that number is moved down to six, and two technologists are added. That is not unreasonable.

Under the proposed legislation both veterinarians and technologists can now be appointed to both hearing tribunals and complaint review committees. This is a fair measure given that these are the tribunals and committees now responsible for veterinarian technologists as well.

There are also some changes to the membership of the practice review board, which makes determination of one's academic qualifications and experiential qualifications and makes decisions on whether they should be allowed to practise veterinary medicine. If they are able to make such consequential decisions about veterinarian technologists, it only makes sense that veterinarian technologists are represented. These are issues of professional representation. These are issues that seem to be addressed directly in this legislation without any apparent intent to move outside of those boundaries.

We support the intent of this bill. Frankly, in many regards it does seem like a rather straightforward piece of legislation, one that addresses a professional matter at the technical level, but we are going to continue our outreach to stakeholders on this file and reserve final judgment until we do so. We want to ensure that the government has done their due diligence and that there are no unintended consequences of this legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am proud to rise in support of this bill today, and I urge all members to support this bill as well. This bill at its core allows veterinary technicians to be represented by the Veterinary Medical Association. In particular, it gives them representation on their governance council, the practice review boards, and their disciplinary committees, rulings all of which could impact the work of a veterinary technician. No major changes in the scope of practice or the qualifications of either veterinarians or veterinary technologists – I have a feeling I'm going to get tongue tied more than once – are a result of this bill.

Now, one thing I am very proud that this bill has the potential to do is to increase the representation of women in governance. That's because 98 per cent of technologists are female. As a result of that, there is the strong potential for more women to serve on these boards, on the governance council, the practice review boards, et cetera. At present I note that only 14.5 per cent of board members in Alberta are women, and that is a statistic that I believe all members and indeed all Albertans should be striving very hard to improve.

Now, I also note that this bill is supported by both the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association and the Alberta Association of Animal Health Technologists. Indeed, I am informed that this bill was spearheaded by the ABVMA with member support, an indication that all members should get behind this bill.

Finally, I am excited to note that this bill should improve accountability and consumer protection for all Albertans. I was talking to somebody about this bill earlier, and the first place their mind went to was their family dog and the care that they receive, but I note that both vets and veterinary technicians are also heavily involved in the livestock industry. This is certainly something that all parties in this House have expressed strong support for, especially in light of a certain company's recent decisions. I strongly believe that accountability for this industry is something that we should all support as well.

I urge all members to support this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions of the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to question the member. I believe that he made some comment in regard to the potential input from technicians in this bill. That's a concern that I have because they are not members of the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association. Even though they will be and could be included in this legislation, I was wondering how he feels they would then be represented. Even though the legislation encompasses them, they are not allowed to be on the Veterinary Medical Association board, so I was wondering how they would have a representative voice on that board.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is certainly an important concern. I do note once again that the Alberta Association of Animal Health Technologists supports this bill. Further, there is certainly room for a change to the veterinary act to expand on that. However, I believe that with their support, we can certainly move towards a more inclusive set of boards and councils in this regard.

The Speaker: Other questions under 29(2)(a)?

I recognize the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As members of the Assembly might suspect, I have an interest in this particular bill. I'd like to thank the Minister of Labour for bringing this forward, and I am rising in wholehearted support of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I am still a somewhat delinquent member in my attendance of the Border City Rotary Club. One of the principles of Rotary Club is that we have representation from a wide range of professions through which the members in our club get to know about professions. When issues arise, quite often we turn to those professionals and ask them for some insight into this. I'll give an example. A few years ago there was an issue where a chiropractic adjustment had resulted in a patient suffering a very serious complication, so we turned to the chiropractors within our club to get some further information about that specific incident. In some ways I feel that today we're doing something a little bit similar, or at least I would ask the hon. members, my colleagues here in the Assembly, to allow me to provide some insight and some context into this piece of legislation from the point of view of a veterinarian.

I'm very proud to be a veterinarian – I said that last week – and I continue to be very proud to be a veterinarian. Our profession is one that, somewhat paradoxically, is one of the most respected professions in survey after survey after survey. Becoming a politician was a real adjustment for me because in those same surveys politicians do not fare nearly as well. But I will say, Mr. Speaker, that I remain very proud to be a veterinarian, and as a politician I do endeavour wherever possible to not besmirch my profession in my conduct here in the House.

Animal health technologists. Please do not call these folks technicians. They're technologists. There is a very significant difference. If they're called technicians, as I have occasionally made the same error myself, you can sometimes expect a very well-deserved retort. Animal health technologists are professionals in every sense of the word.

I have had the privilege of working alongside animal health technologists throughout most of my career, although I will confess that when I first graduated, in 1983, the practice I worked with did not have the fortunate nature of having an animal health technologist in its employ. We had a nurse who had been trained in human medicine but also had a lot of experience working around horses, and she adapted a lot of her training to what we were doing. But over time and thanks in no small part to the excellent training programs that we have at a number of colleges here in Alberta – at Olds College, at NAIT, at Lakeland College, and also at Fairview College – we have some of the top programs in the country for training animal health technologists. It's a two-year program, it's a very rigorous program, and it also involves a practicum period of a minimum of four weeks working in a veterinary hospital. I have had literally dozens of these students come through my hospital. It is always fun to have them. I always really enjoy it.

These technologists go on to work in practices but not just in veterinary practices. They work in a number of other applications. They sometimes work in research facilities. They sometimes work in animal production facilities. Animal health technologists are also at times employed in places like feedlots and hog production. Now, in that context they're not under the direct supervision of a veterinarian and therefore are somewhat more limited in their activities, but I can tell you that the animal health technologists that I had the privilege of working with were better at starting catheters, were better at getting blood samples, were better at taking X-rays, and could do a lot of the work in practice that is so important. Again, I cannot speak highly enough of them.

Now, there have been some concerns that have been expressed by some members. The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner expressed some skepticism, and I always wonder where that skepticism starts. Does it indeed start with a stakeholder group, or are there just questions in the stakeholder group that are then fanned by the Official Opposition? That's a question that I sometimes have to ask myself.

I will tell you that veterinarians have been working with the AAAHT, the Alberta Association of Animal Health Technologists, for the last decade to bring a greater sense of unity between these two professional groups, and in fact in 2011, five years ago, at our annual general meeting of the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association a motion was passed to bring AHTs into our profession as full members and also to have them sit on the ABVMA council as full council members. So this has the support of veterinarians.

Now, I would say that you could probably find a veterinarian or two out there that probably don't think it's a good idea, but I think that, like any professional organization, at some point decisions have to be made. In our profession those are made at annual general meetings. At the annual general meeting in 2011 it was duly voted on to proceed, and in fact the activity of the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association along with the AAAHT working with the government, working with the past government, to bring this about has been ongoing since that time. So it has the support of veterinarians. This measure would bring technologists into the fold.

You know, the animal health technology field is one that has developed a great deal in the last 35 years. The AAAHT was formed in Alberta in 1977, but the profession of animal health technology dates back well before then. In fact, if you were in the U.K., these individuals are known in the U.K. as veterinary nurses, and they work very much in the same capacity as AHTs do here. They are known around the world, and there's even now specialization in a wide variety of specialized disciplines for animal health technologists, including small animal clinical practice, neurology, dentistry, orthopaedics, and a wide variety of other fields.

I do wish to take, though, Mr. Speaker, some issue with a point that was raised by the Minister of Labour and reiterated by the Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert. It has to do with the potential for this bringing more women onto the board of the ABVMA. Veterinary medicine is already a profession that has undergone a significant transition in the last 30 years, and there is no need to worry about adequate representation of women either in our profession or on our board. In fact, when I graduated in 1983, our class had an equal number of men and women. We had already achieved gender parity back in 1983.

There has not been a class graduated from the University of Saskatchewan since that time that has had more males than females, and in fact there have been a couple of classes at the Western College of Veterinary Medicine in Saskatoon that have had 100 per cent females in the class. Now, this has been achieved without quotas, and this has been achieved without any specific artificial means to increase the participation of women in the profession. It is simply because women have qualified on their merits and been chosen by one of the most competitive colleges to get into, more competitive than medicine, more competitive than dentistry.

It is harder to get into vet school than just about any other faculty. There are usually six or seven qualified applicants for every seat in most veterinary colleges, and that situation hasn't really changed much since the opening of the University of Calgary school of veterinary medicine, the dean of which, I'm proud to say, up until just very recently was a classmate of mine.

Mr. Speaker, the suggestion of bringing animal health technology onto council: yes, 98 per cent of animal health technologists are in fact women, but right now our ABVMA board, with its 12 members, has five women and seven men. We have had many, many, many female presidents of the ABVMA, and I'm actually very proud to say that this is a profession where women and men have enjoyed, I think, equality for a number of years. I say that with a certain amount of pride because my wife is also a veterinarian, and we met at vet school. That maybe had something to do with the equal numbers of men and women.

Mr. Rodney: And some horsing around.

Dr. Starke: No, there was no horsing around, but thanks to the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

I will say, Mr. Speaker, that while we can talk about a lot of things in this debate, I would really urge members to not say that they like this bill because it will increase the number of women on our council. That gives the impression that our council is a number of old guys like me who are sitting in darkened rooms smoking and playing poker at night.

An Hon. Member: Like your caucus.

Dr. Starke: No. That wouldn't be accurate either.

I will say, Mr. Speaker, that that is a relic from the past and that while veterinary meetings in the '60s and '70s occasionally may have looked like that, I can tell you we have moved a long way forward since then. I would ask both the Minister of Labour and others who speak to this to recognize the fact that our profession has already moved forward a long, long way, and to put a fine point on it, we didn't need the government's help with that.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to support this. I am proud to bring animal health technologists directly into our profession. I, quite frankly, think that this is a potential model for other professions. Having worked somewhat in the health care field, I sometimes note with a certain amount of sadness that there is a certain amount of tension between different professional qualifications within the health care field. I don't think that serves us well in human health care. That separation, that tension does not exist in veterinary medicine. In veterinary medicine we enjoy a level of respect and co-operation. Our practices function as teams. From the veterinarians to the animal health technologists to everyone else working in these practices, we all have the concern for the comfort of the patient first and foremost, ahead of all other considerations, and I know that that is something that we strive for in human medicine as well.

This is a good bill. This is a bill where I would never say, "Let's get this done quickly" because I don't necessarily cater to the idea that we have to rush any piece of legislation through. But if you want the opinion of a former practising veterinarian who is a member among you, who can provide some context to what this bill would mean to our profession, I will tell you without hesitation or reservation that this would be a good thing for our profession, it would be a good thing for not only the veterinarians but also the animal health technologists in our province, and because it is our sworn duty to promote and preserve animal health in our province and, through that, also preserve and promote the health of the entire society, I think that members should all consider supporting Bill 13 and moving ahead.

Mr. Speaker, thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions to the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a fondness for experiences working with veterinarians, and I can fully relate to the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster in what I believe and what I believe a lot of could I call them agriculturalists believe is a high moral ground in working with animals and relieving any sort of distress that they may be in.

To the Member for Spruce-Grove-St. Albert: when I questioned him earlier, I wanted to make him aware that even though these people are being brought forward on these situations, this is legislation, and I will be supporting it.

I also wanted to ask the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster if he also believes that maybe the profession that we have chosen relating to animals is something that relates to what some people in the rural and agricultural communities may believe to be a higher moral ground.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a difficult question. I guess I have a certain degree of discomfort in replying or responding to it because I've never considered, certainly, myself or members of my profession to stand on any kind of higher moral ground. We do the job that we've been asked to do by our clients, we do the job that we've been trained to do, and we do the job, indeed, that we love to do because that's what we do. You know, I know that I run into lots and lots of people who say, "I always wanted to be a vet," and for some reason or another that was something that didn't come out in their life's journey. I didn't always want to be a vet. I wanted to be an accountant, but a series of incidents in my youth changed that path, and I'm grateful for them, and I'm grateful for the fact that, quite frankly, it was animals that changed that path for me.

But with regard, specifically, to the Member for Drumheller-Stettler, I am very proud of the contribution that veterinarians make in communities, large and small, across our province. I'm proud that I was just joined recently by another veterinarian in a provincial Legislature. There was an election of a veterinarian in Manitoba just a few weeks ago. He joins myself as well as a veterinarian in the B.C. Legislature, who also happens to be the Minister of Health in British Columbia. There is, in fact, a long tradition of veterinarians that have served as elected officials.

Now, again, I referenced earlier that given the relative esteem that veterinarians are held in and the relative esteem that politicians are held in, that may not necessarily reflect the higher moral ground, but it is nonetheless certainly a profession that I'm proud to be part of, and I'm proud of the contribution of my colleagues to their communities throughout the province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, hon. member, I did want to become a veterinarian, but I didn't make it.

I'll go to the Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: On the bill, please, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Not under 29(2)(a)?

Any other questions under 29(2)(a) to the member?
Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Good afternoon, everyone. First of all, I'd just like to start out with a little bit of a statement here if I could. I have the deepest respect for this profession. As a boy and all the way through to my mid-30s I experienced many, many occasions where we had qualified professional veterinarians out to our operation, and it was always something that I was thoroughly, thoroughly fascinated about.

I'd also like to take a moment to say that I have the deepest amount of respect for the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster and for this profession that he is in. I think he speaks eloquently on this subject, and I, too, would like to echo a lot of his thoughts. I, too, am in support of this bill.

We have accumulated a bit of information that we'd like to present about this today, Mr. Speaker, and a bit of background has been prepared. I'd just like to go through it a bit. There are a few points that we have found that we'd like to bring up for perhaps a little bit of discussion, for further clarification, a bit later on in my presentation here.

The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster started out talking about, I believe, animals and a lot of things to do about animals. You know, almost as long as there have been humans, there have been domesticated animals. Whether for food or companionship, animals have been with us every step as we've wandered through our history. While the ability to aid and heal animals has been a focus of humans for centuries, veterinarian medicine as we know it today apparently was not formalized until the late 18th century – I'm reading here right now – when the first schools were established in France. It would take over a hundred years before a school – I believe that in Canada the Ontario Veterinary College was the first one to be established. Since that was established, veterinarian medicine has apparently quickly grown and expanded both in terms of medical advancements but also in governance and structure.

By 1874 the association there had been established, and over the course of the next six decades provincial associations popped up across the country, including the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, founded in 1906, I understand, a year after this province was established. According to their website:

The Alberta Veterinary Medical Association (ABVMA) is the professional regulatory organization governing the practice of veterinary medicine in Alberta under the authority of the Veterinary Profession Act. As a self-governing profession, [it's] required to perform its regulatory and professional functions in accordance with the law and in a manner responsible to the public of Alberta through the government of Alberta.

Almost as long as there has been formal veterinary medicine, there has been a need for educated veterinary assistants to support them, and, as the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster said, they are now called veterinary technologists. In 1908 the Canine Nurses Institute was established, in fact, in England in an effort to meet this demand. While there had been trained veterinary assistants prior to that, now called technologists, since the turn of the 20th century, there wasn't an established association in North America to support them, really, until 1960.

It would be a further 18 years before Alberta finally would see the creation of its own provincial association, apparently in 1978, when the Alberta association of technologists was established. As per their website it was created to provide continued education for veterinary technologists in Alberta and to serve, support, and register those technologists.

As veterinary medicine has evolved in sophistication and quality, so has the need for evolved leadership and oversight of the industry. Bill 13 proposes to be the next step in that development. The proposed changes, from what we can see, include having veterinary technologists subject to similar professional obligations of actual veterinarians and expanding the regulatory scope of the council of the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association to include veterinary technologists. With the expanded authority to regulate technologists, Bill 13 will mandate two members of the council to be veterinarian technologists as elected by the ABVMA.

It also proposes to change the definition of a member to include both veterinarians and veterinary technologists and to change the composition of the practice review board, which is the body that makes determinations of an individual's academic and experiential qualifications and makes decisions on whether they should be allowed to practise veterinary medicine in Alberta.

Of course, with any change we must be cognizant, I think, Mr. Speaker, of unintended consequences, and this case is no different. I mean, with all of the kinds of legislation that we deal with from time to time, we can run into unintended consequences. I'm sure that all of us in the House today recognize that. Over the course of the coming days we'll be taking the opportunity to speak with more veterinarians and more veterinary technologists to get their feelings and thoughts on these proposed changes.

One issue that I've heard about already – in fact, it's actually from an acquaintance of mine – is with regard to the membership fees. While both veterinarians and veterinary technologists are vitally important to maintaining the health of Alberta's animal population, we must understand that the responsibilities and, thus, the compensation of both of these professions, of course, are not the same.

Labour market information shows the median wage in Alberta for technologists to be only $21 per hour before taxes, in fact. The cost of a full-year membership fee, though, for technologists is almost $350, with an initial application fee of $122. Compare that with the veterinarians, for which labour market information shows the median wage in Alberta to be $45 per hour. The current full-year membership fees for veterinarians total in excess of $1,600 per year. I'm wondering: will the changes currently proposed in Bill 13 result possibly in increased fees? Will this have a consequential impact, potentially discouraging others, perhaps, from joining this wonderful profession? These are the sorts of questions my colleagues and I hope the minister can speak to as we continue to debate this bill.

There are many reasons why we must be skeptical of claims that this government consulted extensively. I need only mention the complete lack of consultation this government did with regard to their insistence to forge blindly ahead with increased minimum wage. I don't even need to mention Bill 6 as a catastrophe in the fall in that regard. Follow that with the introduction of Bill 1, and there's a clear pattern this government has established with regard to its desire not to consult widely with stakeholders beyond those that already agree with it.

As my hon. colleague mentioned earlier, we in the Official Opposition will continue to reach out to stakeholders for their input and will watch this government closely to ensure that they keep their word. While I still have some concerns with the bill with regard to consultation and unintended consequences, as I just said, I intend to support the intent of this bill, as I said in my earlier remarks, and the effort it makes to modernize the legislation covering the veterinary medicine industry. For this reason I will be fully supporting this, Mr. Speaker, at second reading, and I encourage all other members to do the same.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the member?

Seeing and hearing none, I would recognize the Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today to support Bill 13, Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2016. I'm very pleased to stand up to support the professional assistance to veterinarians that we have today. I really appreciate the background and overview provided by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. I learned a lot about the profession in detail. From what I've understood so far and based on my knowledge, I am in full support of this profession, considering the fact that they provide great assistance to the vets. Animal care is something very important for us because we have got animals in the form of pets, wildlife, on farms, and in many cases they are considered as being part of the family as well.

In terms of providing excellent care to animals, it's very important that the profession is under the umbrella of a regulated body. That will add more credibility and put a standard on it so that people have no question about the technologists and their services. Although they do provide excellent services, it will just add more credibility and put them under the umbrella of being professionals, just like many other professions, and give them more respect and dignity in our province. This will be great way to do that.

I can speak to the importance of having a profession under a regulatory board with confidence because I myself am an engineer in training under APEGA, and I see the importance of how once a profession is affiliated with a regulatory body, how much of a difference it makes. I have a lot of appreciation for that, and I believe that having this profession under that professional umbrella will also help people who are working as veterinary technologists. As their scope of work is broad as they take care of animal clinical pathology, radiology, anaesthesia, surgical, assisting necropsy, office, hospital management – the list goes on – we can see the important role they play, and having the opportunity for them to participate, actually, in the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association governance board will also allow them to be more actively involved with other veterinarians and to have that opportunity to progress in their careers as well.

I was also going to mention the part about how 98 per cent of technologists who are working are women; however, gender parity was already elaborated about, so I'm glad to know about that. I feel that this bill is an excellent opportunity to create an excellent pathway for technologists to further succeed and to have that respect, that credibility and standard in the province of Alberta.

This concludes my remarks. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there any questions for the hon. member under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, the minister to close debate.

Ms Gray: I'd just like to thank all members for their comments.

To the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster: you asked if we wanted your opinion in this, and we did, so thank you very much for your support of this bill and your opinion and your vast history and experience as a veterinarian. We appreciate that insight being brought here to this debate.

With that, I would like to close debate.

Bill 11 Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016

[Adjourned debate May 12: Mr. Bilous]

The Speaker: Anyone wish to speak to this? The Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak on Bill 11. The Innovates groups have been brought under one ministry, that being the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade. As the shadow minister for this ministry these four corporations have been on my radar since this ministry was created.

I have had the chance to meet with the CEO and soon to be previous CEO of Alberta Innovates: Bio Solutions, Mr. Steve Price. This meeting was back in February of this year, and he was already aware that the Innovates departments were amalgamating. He was able to provide some of the details such as on the merger of the boards and the separation of Innovates: Tech Futures into a separate subsidiary.

During that meeting I was able to learn a lot about the organization itself. I learned that they examine research proposals and fund those they deem worthy. With more funding from private investors they have been able to help take research projects to the market. I learned that due to Alberta's large agricultural sector and forests many companies come to Alberta for the vast biomass available. Alberta is also one of the leaders in nanotechnology for agriculture and cellulose nanocrystals, otherwise known as wood pulp. It was a very informative meeting, and I was grateful to Mr. Price for taking time out of his busy schedule to educate me on what this arm of the Innovates corporations does. It is always great to know that many of our brilliant Albertan minds are creating new and exciting products, whether through government or private institutions.

I was also privy to a tour of Alberta Innovates: Tech Futures by the CEO, Mr. Stephen Loughheed, back in April. He was also aware of the merger of the Innovates corporations at that time. I was able to see the prototypes of new technology that may one day help my former petrochemical colleagues in the future. I was able to see their very large facility, with very few people working in such a large complex. It was interesting to see why many people wanted to ensure that the funding arm of Innovates stays separate from the spending arm. There are many things that past governments did with tax dollars that may have been questionable. Innovates has done some great things in the past like create many of the technologies used today by our oil field workers.

At the beginning of February I had a very productive meeting with the CEO of Alberta Innovates: Energy and Environment Solutions, Mr. Eddy Isaacs. He told me that he was going to retire once the merger happened. He enjoyed his time as the CEO and was able to do many great things with this arm of Innovates.

Four months back, in February, I had a meeting with the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. He was also able to give me some minor details on this merger. He said that Innovates asked to be merged so that people would not be confused as to which Innovates corporation they should be approaching with the research proposals. The meeting did not revolve around that issue, but it was brought up as a concern from myself. It was very interesting to hear about this bill from multiple different sources months and months before any public announcement. The very earliest public hint I could find that this merger was happening was in March, when an article came out talking about laying off senior educators in advance of a restructuring for Alberta Innovates.

Information gained and compiled from multiple sources leaves me with concerns. I do not have all the information; otherwise, I would not have concerns. Obviously, nothing happens overnight, and there was a lot of work put behind this bill and this merger. Whoever has held a corporate job would understand this aspect. I have, and I understand that there are many working parts that need to continue to operate for a corporation as large as Alberta Innovates to work properly. I understand that many things had to happen before this bill came to the floor. I'm not questioning that many of those things may have had to happen before this bill was presented to the House. For things to run smoothly, I understand that people need to be informed and put in place to ensure a smooth transition.

What I'm questioning is the transparency of the entire operation. This government ran on a platform of transparency. Did the government do everything in its power to ensure that this whole process was as transparent as possible? Was it possible for the government to be more transparent on this process? Was it possible for this government to release their intentions back when the cabinet agreed to merge the Innovates corporations?

When I first heard about this back in January, there was not a speck of information available on this. There was no way to verify if my source was telling the truth. I was happy that the minister did not hide his intentions, and I appreciate his honesty. I'm just curious why this information was not made more readily available to the public sooner. If the minister could answer these questions next time he speaks on this bill, it would be greatly appreciated.

I would also like to get clarification on something that was mentioned in one of the meetings. I was told that 50 per cent of the executive positions for the new Innovates corporation would be filled prior to the CEO being selected. Would the minister be able to answer for me if this is true or not? If it is true, why were those positions filled before the CEO was selected? Should the CEO not have the authority to fill those positions? Will those positions be replaceable? Who is deciding who will fill those positions? Is the minister or his ministry choosing those positions? If so, are those positions going to be patronage positions like the previous government was accused of doing?

For the record I'm not accusing this government of doing any of these things. I sincerely do not know the answers to these questions, and that is the purpose of this time. Any and all information would be greatly appreciated.

The minister has mentioned the $5 million being given to Alberta Innovates, which should eat up the $2 million in savings from this merger, so this leads me to questions relating to the savings. We have not received any information as to how this money is being saved. Back in August the Minister of Economic Development and Trade was looking into managers being paid more than triple the salary of the Premier. Now, if that position was removed, that would be a little over one-quarter of the savings. Is the minister saving $2 million by removing four executives? Or five? We don't know. Mr. Speaker, I want to know where this $2 million worth of savings is coming from and why the savings are not higher.

Cutting three-quarters of the boards should save more than $2 million. Can the minister table for the House where the savings are coming from? Can the minister also detail how many board members have been removed and what their costs were so we can do the math ourselves? I believe that if we added those numbers, it would equate to more than $2 million.

I know this government likes to jump up and down about being transparent. Hopefully, I'm helping them by showing where their transparency is lacking. I do not mind being proven wrong. What I do mind is not having all the information to make an informed decision on a bill. I appreciate that this government is finally making some effort to find efficiencies. Don't get me wrong. That's a great first baby step on the journey to getting us back to a balanced budget.

If the government can find 5,000 more $2 million efficiencies, we can eliminate the $10 billion deficit we are looking at and avoid the $58 billion debt this government will have in 2019. A debt of $58 billion is a huge amount. I don't think this government realizes how long it will take to pay that debt off or the toll it will take on Albertans, who will have to pay an extra $2,000 a year just to service that much debt. That's why I want to ensure that this merger of Alberta Innovates is as fiscally effective as possible, and from the minimal information that has been released on this merger, I do not believe this is the case. I do not believe that this merger is being done in a way that is as fiscally effective as possible.

These are the unanswered questions, Mr. Speaker, that have been brought to my attention. I really hope that this government can answer my questions and provide clarity and more transparency on this merger.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise to support the bill, Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016. Research and innovation are fundamentally important for diversification of our economy as well as giving us a competitive edge in many areas that eventually will help boost our economy. Combining public research, innovation, and commercialization systems will strengthen our research department because it will open doors to utilize expertise from all over the world.

The consolidated and leaner innovation system will allow innovators, researchers, and industry to work in collaboration to create more opportunities for Albertans. Intellectual growth, progress, advancement, and success we can all envision once we have all the expertise from all over the world from different areas of innovation, creativity, industry, and research brought together at the same table.

The current system for the past many years has not been strong enough due to the lack of focus and leadership, the sustained low price of oil, and the current economic situation of the province. We can see that if we can bring in more innovation and diversify our economy – and diversification comes through research and innovation – then in that case we don't necessarily have to rely on one resource to strengthen our economy for the long term.

Basically, when we look at sustainability, sustainability is a triangle of social well-being, economy, and environment. In order to find that balance of making sure that we are trying to be sustainable in these three areas, we want to ensure that we are continuously trying new things and moving forward with bringing in expertise in different areas from all over the world and trying to do new experiments and bringing in new things to make sure that in the long term we are sustainable as a society.

This investment of consolidation will help build the world-class reputation of Alberta world-wide in the field of research and innovation. It will allow educational institutions higher rankings world-wide, opening doors to a bright future for our students and researchers. Having the higher ranking of educational institutions particularly is very crucial for the well-being of any society. First of all, they're providing excellent education, and once a society has quality education available, then it means that they have better chances for being successful.

Having that world-class reputation, once that reputation is acquired, will then encourage people, students, researchers, and other communities from different parts of the world to specifically come to Alberta and learn about Alberta's economy, Alberta's culture, at the same time bringing value and adding value to our education system through their wealth of knowledge and information and expertise. So this plays an important role in boosting the economy because it will allow more international students or more foreigners to come to our institutions as well as to come to Alberta. That will allow Alberta's economy to do well.

At the same time, research and innovation plays an important role in many areas of our lives. For example, when it comes even to health care or patient care, we can provide quality health care to our citizens. As well, we can advance in energy efficiency, reduce carbon emissions, and all that will help us to advance ourselves from technology borrowers to, basically, technology providers.

In fact, recently we can see that. As we know, Harvard University is one of the top universities in the world, and they actually have some programs when it comes to decarbonization and the environment. This year they are offering fellowships to people from all over the world to look into policies in China as well as Europe when it comes to decarbonization and reducing carbon emissions in the environment. They're opening this opportunity to people from all over the world. As we can see, this is a step towards globalization through having an institute or having that excellence in academia that is allowing or promoting globalization and collaboration amongst people from all over the world towards sustainability.

I can speak to that with great confidence myself as well because I have five years of research experience. Before getting into the oil and gas industry, I was working as a research assistant and did my thesis specifically on carbon dioxide sequestration, and then I did research in different areas as well. I did research for the dentistry department of my school in nanotechnology, where I was working basically on creating artificial teeth for the replacement of teeth operations. That was something that I gained as an experience. At the same time I worked on a research project related to fluidized beds that was totally traditional chemical engineering based research, and then I did research on algae cultivation. That was more related to environmental engineering. At the same time I was taking workshops to understand how there is a relationship between social issues and economics involved when it comes to sustainability and how society, the economy, and the environment are all connected.

Having that research experience in different areas and different departments, I gained the experience that through the research, basically, we are looking 20 years ahead of time. Basically, we're planning our future. If we do research today, we are securing our future for the next 20 years or so, and if we excel in that department, then basically it means that we are providing security for our future generations.

I'm very happy to see that the ministry is taking the step by having this bill because through this bill they are bringing academia, small businesses as well as industry all together on one platform, basically. That is very important because, as I mentioned, when I was working in different research departments, as well I worked as a student with other students on a research project that was sponsored by industry, and it was called Capstone, in Sarnia, Ontario. My project was basically with other group members of mine on varieties of production. We had the opportunity to present that project because we had collaboration with the industry.

If all these three bodies – industry, businesses, and academia – are all connected, that is when we are able to bring it to the next level. Otherwise, it's really hard to connect all three bodies together. If you work in silos, then basically we are not creating that flow of information that is needed or not creating those channels, that are important, to send that information across and to achieve the goals that we are trying to achieve. This creates synergy, having all three bodies together, and once there is synergy, then there's more energy to move forward, and once we have more energy to move forward, then we are more able to get closer to what we are envisioning.

I would like to basically congratulate the ministry for coming up with this bill. I was very delighted to see that, and I'm very happy to stand up for this bill because I'm speaking on behalf of the students here, on behalf of residents of Alberta as well as the MLA for my community. I'm also applying all my background experience from the past, from all perspectives. In the way a jeweller will examine a diamond, if I do that examination, I don't see any flaw in this bill. I would like to encourage and urge all the members of this Assembly to support this bill, and then we can all plan more security and more sustainability for our province.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions to the Member for Calgary-Glenmore under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I would recognize the Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 11, the Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016. On the surface of the bill I see the potential for what the government is attempting to achieve. They're trying to create a leaner system, with less CEOs and board members, that apparently has the ability to save taxpayers $2 million per year. Having one ministry with four boards consolidated into one board would seem to make sense. This could result in less confusion for the public if handled properly and provide a more effective way of using public funds.

Wildrose is certainly in favour of reducing government budgets, but today I was a little bit confused because they were talking about reducing government budgets with this one, and we had brought forth a lot of amendments to the main estimates, but none of them – none of them – were actually accepted. I thought they were great amendments.

An Hon. Member: Well, at least someone did.

Mr. Taylor: Yes, somebody did.

I guess we need to take baby steps when trying to get the government to reduce their budgets and reduce costs. This is a first, and that's a good thing.

On first glance at this bill I was quite hopeful that we finally were starting to see some constraint on the government to reduce costs and streamline operations. That was a good thing. However, when I look at what happened with the same plan that formed Alberta Health Services, I'm left with some doubts. I am not confident in this government's ability to consolidate programs into one massive organization and maintain or improve services for Alberta. We haven't seen that at AHS, and I'm concerned that we may see challenges at a megasized Alberta Innovates with a smaller accountability structure.

In addition to my general unease with the format of the new corporation, I also have concerns regarding some specific provisions. Now, when I was reading over the bill, I looked at section 7. It's one of the areas that caused me to think that we have some real issues involved in this bill if implemented. It's not perfect like a diamond, like the member opposite was saying it was, not just exactly the way it should be. Section 7(a) – this is where I had my confusion – says:

in subsection (1) by striking out “up to 4 research and innovation corporations” and substituting “one or more research and innovation corporations, in addition to the corporation established under section 6.1(3).”

What does it mean? Well, at this point it's unclear, but it would seem to me that the government is leaving the door open for more research and innovation corporations in the future, Mr. Speaker. When the government says that there will be one or more, how many does the government intend to form? Why go to all the trouble to table this amendment bill only to leave the door open to create one or more research and innovation corporations, which would put us back right in the same situation, with multiple corporations? This clause could leave Albertans with many more corporations in the future than they have now, with little or no involvement in that decision-making process. Who would decide that more corporations are needed? What criteria would be used to make that decision? What are the potential costs and benefits of having an unspecified number of corporations where the current bill limits the government to four?

This is simply too open-ended and too vague, Mr. Speaker, and too prone to uncertainty for me to be comfortable with it. Through this Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016, we should be saving taxpayer money from the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade, which I have to applaud. That's a good thing if this government actually does find those savings, and I mean: if. But another risk is that the savings may be found in places other than management levels. Albertans would like to know where the government is going to find these efficiencies.

When I was in business, you know, I had to track all the costs that were associated with my business. That's what I did. I tracked all the costs for advertising, for how much my salesmen were costing me at that time, and for my administration, the cost for the copiers, the costs for all the mail-outs that we did. There was a ton of different costs, but in the end I was able to see where my money was going and the return for my dollar spent. From that information I found efficiencies, and I grew my business and got a solid return on the investment. This is a very simple business practice, and it's used right across Canada.

I simply come back to the question: what is the government doing to track the money spent on grants? They can find efficiencies beyond the consolidation of research and innovation corporations, those four corporations that we've talked about. When it comes to both jobs and grants, Albertans expect transparency so they can readily see what programs and jobs are being created with their money and what the overall impact is going to be on the economy in Alberta. How do we find this transparency within this new legislation? Where exactly will Albertans see the supposed savings of $2 million, Mr. Speaker? Even if we find $2 million in the short term, how long will Albertans see those savings with the open-ended clause that I see, that was mentioned, section 7? That section 7 leaves no accountability for the eventual number of corporations that could possibly be established under this bill.

The sunshine list disclosure of all the salaries and bonuses paid to Alberta Innovates: will they disclose all those? How will Albertans know if they are receiving good value for the wages and the benefits paid to those employees in the corporation? I am hopeful that some of those savings, those $2 million in savings, will come from the reduction in the outrageously high wages being paid to the top management positions as opposed to coming from front-line staff. Again, I and all Albertans indeed want to see how this government transitions to this plan.

I am concerned about the effectiveness of the new corporation as it consolidates the research areas of four corporations into one. How will the highly technical and specialized areas of research be assigned? What priorities will be assigned to those research areas? How will stakeholder input be gathered and used to ensure that the priorities of Albertans are reflected in the new corporation?

You know, while I am concerned about this bill – it leaves doors open to the growth of these corporations in the future, that will lead us to a perhaps more costly and less efficient scenario than we have now – I believe that it's a step in the right direction, and it shows that the government is finally beginning to look at ways to cut the outrageous spending spree that they've been on since forming government.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, while I have some very real concerns – and section 7 is my biggest concern with this, the open-endedness of that one part of the bill – I can support this bill. I believe that we need to support the government in finding efficiencies in how they manage the province and Alberta Innovates, and this is a good starting point.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, are there any questions under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Battle River-Wainwright?

Hearing none, I would recognize the Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of this bill, and I do so for a number of reasons. But, first of all, I want to thank my colleague for her wonderful analysis of what this bill will do.

My first reason is that I think that Albertans deserve to be represented in the most effective manner possible to diversify and grow our economy. This is an innovation system that builds on our strengths, and it creates a more diversified economy, and it delivers value for money.

Now I'm going to kind of sidestep a little bit. This past weekend I was very pleased to be at the University of Lethbridge when we provided a cheque to a group called MindFuel. It went to a group of students from one of the high schools in Lethbridge. They were there for the weekend at a workshop, and what they were developing was nanotechnology to develop a biological way to coagulate blood quickly in case of an accident or for a haemophiliac or in any number of cases.

The other thing that I've seen in Lethbridge was – I met with a group of scientists and professors at the university, and I've heard many, many incredible ideas. A group of scientists got together at the university – there are probably 25 in the group – and they looked at so many different things that could be done in Lethbridge in terms of renewable energy. In my opinion, this bill is supporting those kinds of things where we can move our economy forward in a very diversified manner. This bill really supports that happening, having one corporation that's going to deal with that and work with those people to do those things. Here we have a group of students, and we have a group of professors. We can get together. We can develop all kinds of things.

To me, this bill is a necessity, in terms of going forward, if we want to do this – and we must do this – in our economy, and this is the time for us to do it. The decision to refocus our public research, innovation, and commercialization system through consolidation reflects the advice from stakeholders and best practices from around the world. That's what I see happening in Lethbridge right now. The bill will support this new approach and enable much-needed subsequent changes to Alberta's research and innovation system.

The investment helps to diversify the economy by creating a knowledge-based economy and enhances Alberta's reputation as a world-class research and innovation jurisdiction. Co-ordinating and leveraging the research and innovation system will help to drive research and its applications, will increase business start-ups and the commercialization of Alberta ideas, and provide access to services.

A more effective and efficient system will spur innovation and allow for the development of new companies and industries. By increasing the pace of technological innovation, we can add value to our resources such as by improving patient care, advancing energy efficiency, and reducing carbon emissions. Alberta's innovation system has realized practical applications and numerous benefits from scientific innovation and research, including creating thousands of new jobs as a result of technological advances such as the investment in oil sands development, up-to-date health care services resulting from Alberta's medical research facilities, and diversifying Alberta's economy.

Again, I'll look back to Lethbridge. We have two research centres apart from the university and the college. All kinds of research is being done for agriculture in my community, research that has shown itself to increase our agricultural output. The fact that we have irrigation in southern Alberta in a drought area: those kinds of things are all part and parcel of this.

I absolutely support this bill, and I urge everybody in this House to do so. Thank you.

The Speaker: Any questions for the Member for Lethbridge-East under 29(2)(a)?

I recognize the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 11, the Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016. Unchecked, Alberta Innovates has ballooned inefficiencies at the board level. Wildrose has long advocated for the government to find those inefficiencies within the numerous organizations and the departments that it funds.

It's my belief that this move to consolidate Alberta Innovates, if done right, will result in a superior outcome for all Albertans. Technological investment is especially important. To echo the Member for Calgary-Glenmore, one of the most important things we can do is to bring those ideas together.

Technological investment is especially important at a time of deep economic recession, and now is the time for Alberta's considerable labour and capital resources to be directed towards initiatives that foster innovation and technological growth. The reality of the recession is seen every day as Albertans struggle to make ends meet, to put food on the table, to pay for hockey skates and music lessons. However, there is an economic opportunity for our resilient Albertans. The weakened economy, with its depressed prices, facilitates an opportunity to restructure and retrain and reinvent. I believe that it is our job as government to help steward Albertans with efficiently operated programs that assist them in finding opportunities to grow.

For a number of Albertans, Alberta Innovates is that opportunity. Consolidation of this organization, to the extent that it results in streamlined services, is the common-sense solution for an organization that risks becoming an unnecessarily cumbersome entity. Unmanaged redundancies such as duplication at the board management level risk slowing down the innovation that this organization is actually designed to facilitate. This is a time when finding simple, low-consequence cost savings could not be more important. As Alberta's tax base shrinks with unchecked unemployment, every dollar spent needs to reach further.

As we continue on with second reading, there are still, however, you know, a number of questions about this bill that remain unanswered. Albertans are owed the highest degree of transparency – and that's something all of us campaigned on – especially with regard to the consequences and the extent of the consolidation. It's important that any changes to this organization are not coming at the expense of quality investment decisions.

My constituents have told me that they're eager for clarity on how exactly this consolidation will save the government $2 million. I along with, I'm sure, my caucus mates and Albertans are eager to hear from this government more details on their findings with regard to that. We're a little disappointed that we're still waiting for transparency from the minister on where the $2 million efficiency is coming from. It's concerning to Alberta that this organization may have been running for years with $2 million in inefficiencies. I think the faster that we can get to understand where this money is being taken from, the better.

In conversations with my constituents some have expressed their concern that the money may have been wasted by Alberta Innovates and are uncertain about how now, suddenly this is becoming a problem when issues like this tend to be systemic or structural. It's my hope that this government could provide the good, innovative, entrepreneurial people of Chestermere-Rocky View and Alberta with some more answers with regard to this.

The government should be looking into finding further efficiencies within its own departments as well. Albertans are, however, concerned that the government is only interested in finding efficiencies within the arm's-length organizations. While this is important, we would really appreciate seeing the government look at all options in all areas of government.

Albertans want to know how the cuts will be made to this organization. Will it be through reductions in employment levels? As you're likely aware – you've heard this before – the CBC received news of layoffs in a leaked e-mail, that was sent around to employees of Alberta Innovates: Technology Futures by the organization's chief executive officer, Stephen Lougheed. We feel that the minister needs to confirm that the approach that this government will be taking – is this the approach that we're going to be taking to find efficiencies?

Perhaps more importantly, to what extent will the government find its efficiencies? Is it through a reduction in the labour force? Alberta Innovates is our province's mechanism for funding Alberta health researchers and getting the ideas of Albertan entrepreneurs to market. Technical expertise is clearly an important factor in making appropriate investments with the money of Albertan taxpayers. If positions are being eliminated, which positions are those, and are those high-ranking positions? In addition to the alleged layoffs, is the government considering reductions in salaries similar to the reductions we've seen at a number of private companies in what they're doing?

Our province faces turbulent economic circumstances, and we have clearly, most recently through our jobs action plan, recognized the importance of building our knowledge capital, especially in this beautiful province. There is a lot here.

Wildrose believes that this move by our party and the government will increase the speed at which the applicants are able to move through the program and receive funding, but what we are asking for is just assurance that this is, in fact, a mechanism for reducing onerous systemized redundancies along with all of the other important things that will happen by consolidating. Wildrose is eager to see the evidence and will appreciate seeing that this move to consolidate produces better results for Albertans.

Albertans are interested to learn more about the minister's conversations with the stakeholders as well, Mr. Speaker, that requested this move by the government, again transparency being the most important aspect of that. The investments that come out of Alberta Innovates are a complex thing. There are, obviously, competing interests at play, and Albertans need more information, and Albertans should be told where the efficiencies would be gained. Albertans deserve to know how the organization will be structured after the changes are made, and I would ask that the minister give some clarity on how the existing research areas will be organized and prioritized under the new system. Alberta Innovates is an organization that needs to have an investment edge over its competitors as they're not only using private capital. Much of their funding comes at the expense of Alberta taxpayers.

In addition, some stakeholders are concerned about energy research and how that will continue. Reducing the level of specialization on Alberta Innovates boards should not come at the expense of investments in energy-related research. Obviously, Alberta has a competitive advantage in energy and energy research, and we want to see that this advantage is utilized through the proper facilitations. However, we are still waiting to see a plan from the government to ensure that energy research maintains its position as a top priority area for the research.

I'm hopeful that as debate continues, the questions of my constituents and fellow Albertans will receive more answers. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions for the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, I would recognize the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my pleasure to rise and speak on Bill 11, Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016. I would say first that this is a good start, but in facing a $58 billion deficit in a few years, we've got a very, very long way to go.

I have to say that this amalgamation of the four Alberta Innovates into one entity with one subsidiary corporation was one that my colleagues and I were pleased to see. We are pleased about the cost-saving measures, and we can only hope that wisdom was used when they decided where the cuts would be made because this government isn't great about being transparent. Efficiencies in government and all entities is a huge priority for Wildrose. I have to say that I was a little taken aback when I realized that this spendthrift government was going to take some cost-saving measures to begin the work of efficiency, especially since we had no effect with our amendments on any of the budget estimates.

Anyway, Albertans have been frustrated with the government's and the previous government's efficiency when it comes to creating high-earning positions. We are hoping that this amalgamation will help relieve those frustrations. Because of the growing frustration and apprehension, I do have some questions when it comes to issues of transparency and accountability, so I'm going to take a little bit of time to go over those.

The public has asked for this merger to simplify the organization and, hopefully, reduce costs. The government says that this consolidation will save $2 million a year. Alberta Innovates has received $170 million in grants, and I'd like to know where the $2 million will be saved. Not only do we want to simplify things, but we would also like to ensure that this creates a leaner system. It would be a missed opportunity if we were not able to see some additional cost savings. My colleagues and I would like this government to please share with us and all Albertans how it is that they will be reducing Alberta Innovates' costs by $2 million a year. Where does it come from?

It's not like we're asking for too much here. We're only asking for transparency and for this government to be more accountable to all Albertans. I believe my colleague alluded to the fact that we all ran, both sides of the House, on a more transparent government. Albertans want a government they can trust, and they want to trust this government. They want to trust that this government knows what it is doing. When you hide details, it only makes confidence in government worse.

Please keep in mind that I was delighted to hear that these amendments were being made and that a possible restructuring could take place and efficiencies be established, but we need more information. Albertans deserve to hear how the former corporations' research areas will be assigned priority after the changes are made. Will it be savings through employee reduction or by not replacing employees after retirement or resignation, through attrition? These are questions that Albertans would like answered. It's not like this government has given any reason for Albertans to trust it based on its assurances. The government has gone back on its promises on many occasions, so the people really need explanations.

There really are so many questions here about what the government's plans are with this amalgamation. I have heard that Albertans are anxious, frustrated, and worried that the government will break their trust. Why not come out and show Albertans what plan you have in place, something substantial, something transparent, something that we can agree or disagree on but a plan? The consolidation of Alberta Innovates is a common-sense approach and a cost-saving measure. However, we need this NDP government to be more honest and open with Albertans by explaining these cost-saving measures and exactly how they came up with $2 million.

We are worried, Mr. Speaker. We are worried when we see how reckless this government has become with budgetary issues. Trust: well, that's another subject. Albertans have said that they have lost trust. How can we begin to trust when the government only doles out small amounts of information on huge decision items such as this one? What is the intent behind this legislation, and how will this legislation create real results for Albertans? So many questions but, again, not many answers.

However, once again I would like to say that I'm very pleased to see some cost-cutting measures being implemented in such a fragile economy. I just wish that we could go further. I guess my hope is that this government might get it right for once by implementing cost-saving measures and making sure that these measures and decisions are open and transparent for all Albertans so that answers are given to many of our questions.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any questions for the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, I would recognize the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to speak at second reading of Bill 11, Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016. It's a really interesting and important time in our history to be trying to balance innovation, technology, new breakthroughs in health care and the environment and biosciences and engineering. What a dilemma this government faces in trying to stimulate a new economy, get off our singular dependence on oil and gas, and foster new business and a new economy given the many challenges that we face today, recognizing that oil and gas may never be the same in Alberta, that we actually are going to need some dramatic shifts in this province, and that this is, in fact, the time to invest in research and new technology, energy being one of them and, certainly, biosciences and biotechnology.

What I'm hearing in the health sciences is precision medicine, where we're looking at the genome of people and defining whether people need a certain diet to prevent disease, whether they can predict that certain exercise programs will have a significant effect on their blood pressure or not. The genetic field has opened up massive new opportunities in health care. Of course, health system research can help us make more efficient use of the professionals that we have and the buildings that we have and the technologies that we use for testing people. All of that opens up tremendous opportunities not only for more efficient use of our current resources, which is widely recognized to be inefficient in Alberta, but also to improve the quality of life for people who need and expect the kinds of technologies that improve their arthritic conditions, their blood pressure conditions, their diabetic conditions, whatever they happen to be. There are tremendous breakthroughs happening in terms of prevention and early intervention.

Health, in particular, I guess I'm starting to get to. The roll-up of Alberta Innovates: Health Solutions into this large amalgam called Alberta Innovates is a problem. It is going to reduce our visibility on the national stage. It is going to reduce our credibility across the world as a leader in medical research. It is going to diminish our capacity, actually, to improve the very system that is costing us so much. It is going to be rolled up into one ball under this plan, in which there will be a board, as I've seen it developed. I know that there are lots of reasons for trying to bring this all together and manage it more efficiently, but I think that there are some real downsides to lumping environmental technology and energy solutions with the major spender in Alberta, which is health care.

We have to focus, I think, in a special way on health care because of both the budgetary demands that health care presents and the tremendous leadership that Alberta has had for 40 years in health care. If the world sees that we are pulling back on this primary investment, then we are going to get fewer people coming here; we're going to have less investment coming to this province. We're going to have, I think, a real loss of both good people and confidence in the people in the profession. I'm not just talking about physicians. I'm talking about PhDs. I'm talking about nurses. I'm talking about lab people who are innovating new laboratory tests. I'm talking about imaging people who are doing exciting things in imaging. I'm talking about geneticists who are looking, again, at the genome and identifying tremendous opportunities for more targeted intervention for people of high risk, starting in childhood, starting in prenatal life, that can actually make a massive improvement in both their opportunities but also in the costs that they're going to engender in the health care system over time.

While I respect the decision to try to economize, that's the dilemma you're faced with, for one, and I hope it's not just because I have a background in medicine but because I see the tremendous economic as well as the health benefits of having a strong research agenda driven by those who are connected with the health system, not diluted by a bunch of people around the table competing for resources for their pet project but deliberately focused and separate at some level from the larger board that's overseeing innovation in Alberta.

As indicated, Budget 2016 will reduce by $33 million the overall funding for Alberta Innovates corporation. The government's press release states that "we are committed to making it easier for Alberta's researchers and businesses to navigate the . . . innovation system." In some ways it may be nice to talk about a single shop for innovation, but that's not the way research works, Mr. Speaker. These are very separate areas of research that can communicate with one another, but if there is no storefront that says that health research is here in Alberta, if it just says Alberta Innovates, the rest of the world is going to say: okay; we've stopped that world-breaking record in medical research that we've had here for 40 years, since Peter Loughheed first initiated the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research.

I think that one has to look very carefully at that particular issue. I'm willing to hear arguments in the other areas, but I don't think they're quite as persuasive because of the tremendous investment we're making in health already and the opportunity for more efficient use of our health services as well as improving people's health in Alberta and reducing their costs as well through improved management of people with medical problems.

Previously health research received the lion's share of funding under the Alberta Innovates initiative. With the cuts now health will lose its status as a research focal point. While the proposed merger will undoubtedly result in some cost savings, there's still a very real question as to how health research fits with the other three entities and whether we will indeed not only lose in terms of efficiencies in our health system because we don't have the health system connected to the research arm and working together to improve outcomes; we also lose, obviously, the marketing or the business opportunities that come out of some of this fantastic research. For example, our dean of medicine here has discovered some tremendous new approaches to hepatitis C, and this, of course, is improving the quality of life and the length of life and the productivity of people. We've been leaders on a number of fronts: transplants and health promotion and prevention leadership as well.

I will be in committee suggesting that we try to find a way to amend the bill, not that we haven't made some good decisions here in terms of cost cutting, in terms of amalgamating, in terms of reducing redundancy in the management. By all means, nobody has any problems with that as long as it doesn't cause the unexpected or undesirable side effects of cuts to international funding for all these areas, loss of business opportunities that we're obviously going to be faced with. If we don't do the research, we can't develop the technologies and market them around the world. It's a very double-edged sword, the direction we're taking now.

Certainly, in the area of health innovation I think we should seriously look at how we can include that, especially since it received an $80 million annual endowment back in the day that, through the interest on that fund, has continued to fund tremendous research. In some ways it would be disingenuous, at least, if not a misappropriation, to take that endowment, which was dedicated to medical research by past governments and indeed by philanthropists who have donated to that endowment. It would be to some extent unacceptable to pull that money out of health research and put it into other areas just because you want to.

Some people have made serious commitments in their lives to research and have come here – some of them have been here 20 years working on and improving our systems of care and our base laboratory technology, lab studies. I think we are going to have to look at that carefully and debate it, and I would hope that the government could see a way to include under the larger innovation corporation a separate branch of health innovates.

While I applaud the government's attempt to streamline, to manage more efficiently, and to ensure that we continue the strong legacy of research and knowledge translation and new technologies, which we desperately need in this province if we're going to get off the one-trick pony, let us not throw out the baby with the bathwater here, and let's make sure that we protect what has really been a tremendous asset to Alberta both as a technical profession and as a marketing and business opportunity around the world.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, I would call upon the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the interest of time I think I'll pass.

The Speaker: Okay. The Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: I'll take a short stab at it, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 11. This is a bill that I'll be able to support, I believe. Of course, it's long been the position of my caucus colleagues and I that there are efficiencies that can be found in government and government corporations, including those impacted here. I believe everyone in the House is aware that the Official Opposition suggested amendments to the office of every ministry while we were going through estimates. Of course, we dealt with that this morning, and we all know the outcome.

To that end, if done right, Mr. Speaker, consolidating Alberta Innovates is a common-sense measure. It's my sincere hope that what this bill seeks to achieve with the consolidation of the Alberta Innovates boards will be an effective solution to some of the frustrating inefficiencies that emerged as a result of having several boards. And by frustrating inefficiencies, I mean that we should at the end of the day at least see a much leaner system. Frankly, there will be fewer CEOs to deal with and pay and fewer board members, of course. I think it's likely that a single board in this case will be much more accountable than four boards. That all does tend to make some sense. Pooling resources may have the ability to be an attractive alternative.

That being said, I do have a few questions and concerns that I hope the minister responsible for this bill or, candidly, just anyone on the government bench will be able to speak to. There are some consolidations that have created issues that weren't foreseen. I'm thinking, of course, of the creation of the single health superboard, which was justified in terms and phrases much like some of the justification that was used in the consolidation we're debating here today. It doesn't work ideally in every instance. Best-laid intentions don't remove the fact that consolidation doesn't have an inherent tendency to save costs. It's not a guarantee, especially where government is concerned, and not just this government, any government. Even though we may believe that costs may be reduced and efficiencies will be found, consolidation, if not organized properly, can lead to long-term negative consequences.

Rural Alberta, for instance, would be hard-pressed to suggest that one of the largest bureaucracies in Alberta, the health superboard in AHS, has created a better system than the personal, local health boards that it replaced. That ship has sailed, though, so debate is over in that instance.

We should always be looking to create something better when we amalgamate, something that's more well organized or effective, not less. I know that creating something less effective would never be the intent here, but it bears attention. I know that this is the intent with the reorganization, so we encourage the government to be honest and transparent with Albertans by explaining exactly how this consolidation will save taxpayer dollars and create the desired efficiencies that are sought. That is important to Albertans.

I want to note that there was a media article on March 18 of this year with the following headline: Alberta Innovates Begins Laying Off Senior Executives in Advance of Restructuring. That was nearly two months ago, before this debate began. March 18 was also nearly one month before the current government rolled out its latest budget, which, if I recall correctly, first committed to these changes. Now, that could be considered somewhat presumptive. Establishing laws that can affect and impact the lives of everyday Albertans is a responsibility that we share within these walls, and compared to other levels of government we do so with what is, arguably, minimal scrutiny. There is no upper Chamber that gives consideration to the same items we do. Proposed legislation is rarely sent to standing committees. Very little stands in the way of any governing caucus to fire through legislation as they see fit.

Look, I'm not suggesting that the current government is the only government in Alberta that has pushed legislation through this House. Certainly, it's happened before, and I expect it'll happen again. But for this government to start laying off people because they know that legislation that they will eventually introduce to this House will eventually require it regardless of the debate that takes place, regardless of the public response, regardless of any amendments that any of the opposition parties may propose all seems a little bit presumptive, Mr. Speaker. It may be fair to suggest that a certain complacency may be presumed in the work that is done from time to time in this House. Given that the work we do in this House is the work that is done on behalf of Albertans clear across this province, I wonder: would they consider that presumptive action respectful?

Given what was in the media report about the layoff of workers several months ago now, my colleagues and I would be interested to hear someone on the government benches give a little bit more detail on precisely how much consolidation has already happened under the expectation that this proposed legislation will pass with the government's majority. And not only the government's majority; it seems like a lot of parties in the House are speaking in favour of supporting it.

That being said, beyond the procedural concerns I have a few concerns that I hope the minister will be able to help us out with. Consolidating Alberta Innovates: Bio Solutions, Energy and Environment Solutions, Technology Futures, and Health Solutions into one corporation has raised some anxieties. Once again, from media reports regarding Alberta Innovates, health researchers have expressed concern that a merger, quote, would reduce money available for medical research in Alberta, potentially affecting access to cutting-edge treatments for patients. Unquote. I sincerely hope that the current government can address that claim by either confirming it or proving it not credible before this legislation is passed in this House.

Our offices have heard from economic development and business groups that have expressed confidence in Edmonton as a centre for health research. They obviously see a potential for health care in Edmonton. They see a potential for growth. A key component of that is medical research.

Speaking only of statistics, the economy in Edmonton is doing marginally better than many other parts of the great province that we live in amidst the downturn because there are some growing industries in the city that aren't as negatively impacted by the downturn, which I'm sure is common knowledge for the current government. In the year and 12 days, I believe, since the election, speeches from the government side of the House have used the phrase "economic diversification" a number of times. I can only hope that those sentiments are indeed sincere.

Health care innovation is an opportunity for our province. There is interest here. There's a clear possibility for growth. But, as stated earlier, the current government must take care to ensure that their decisions are not negatively impacting that potential. To be clear, I'm not suggesting that this consolidation of four Alberta Innovates corporations will necessarily make things worse on this front. But professionals in the field have raised a concern; thus, I hope that the government can speak to whether or not that concern is valid. That would go a long way to alleviating the concerns mentioned.

My caucus colleagues have heard from industry that the existing system was ineffective. It was also frustrating, we've heard, and this sort of consolidation can indeed make things more effective. We are of course pleased to see that the current government is taking action on that criticism, but please regard this critique as well. The current government in the course of, well, one year and 12 days, I believe, since the election has demonstrated a bit of an aversion to doing consultation. We saw that with Bill 6 last year. There was almost an unwillingness to listen to concerned farmers and ranchers. I know that I'll hear from members on the opposite side that there were consultations going on. The problem was that the consultations weren't going on with grassroots farmers and ranchers. That probably could have seen a very different reaction to that imposing bill.

You know, we have also seen that this government is unwilling to pause in order to carefully consider evidence, in order to conduct economic impact assessments to ensure that there aren't negative consequences to the policies put forward. I don't know how many times the opposition has suggested that certain bills be sent to committee for study. This can only be considered good for the folks that send us here. In fact, we saw earlier this week that the opposition outlined an array of studies concluding that this government's minimum wage hike will hurt job creation and have negative consequences for low-income Albertans. My colleague from Battle River-Wainwright had a motion that simply asked that this government pause their plan in order to conduct an impact assessment first, but those that have the power determined that such a suggestion wasn't warranted. That seeming aversion to evidence-based policy has left many Albertans questioning this government's sincerity. That diminished credibility casts a long shadow over other initiatives like this bill that we debate here today.

While I'm on this subject, I do hope that the minister will be able to elaborate on which stakeholders have asked him to consolidate these boards. Albertans need some assurances. They just want to know that consultation regarding the collaboration, as it were, has taken place. It is not an unreasonable request. Certainly, I don't believe it is. Frankly, it should be standard practice.

I stand to be corrected, but I don't think that I've heard a clear explanation of how the Alberta Innovates corporations research areas will be assigned priority under the new consolidated system. Seriously, I'm not trying to be terribly critical, but shouldn't that information be something that we have all heard so that we can all, including Albertans, understand how and what priorities are dealt with in which order?

I wonder what the new funding allocation model looks like. I wonder what the newly consolidated organization chart will look like. We know that there will be layoffs. There have already been layoffs, but what does the new Alberta Innovates look like as far as staff are concerned? With the consolidation of support staff for the four boards, were there any job redundancies identified right away, any attrition possibilities? Questions like this are important. I certainly hope we can hear some clear answers before the final vote is counted.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, consolidation is a good idea. The reality is that our province is facing a massive debt and deficit, one that wasn't expected, certainly not campaigned on. The fact is that we do have a large debt looming as well as a large deficit. One way to slow its growth, minute as it may be, is to find efficiencies in existing operations. I certainly hope that care will be taken with this consolidation in order that it can meet that criteria. Consolidating Alberta Innovates: Bio Solutions, Energy and Environment Solutions, Technology Futures, and Health Solutions has its merits, but there are valid concerns as well, and they, too, need to be addressed. I do hope that the government is able to give this piece of legislation the due attention that it deserves as restructuring occurs.

I will be supporting this bill and encourage the rest of the House to do the same. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Little Bow?

Are there any other members who wish to speak to Bill 11, Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016?

Is there a wish to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 9 An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 9, An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences, here in Committee of the Whole. I'd like to thank my colleagues on both sides of the House for a good debate on and their support of this valuable legislation. I want to thank my colleagues for acknowledging their commitment to this bill and identifying concerns, which I'm happy to address. During debate at second reading there were some questions asked about the legislation. I'm pleased to respond to those questions to further the dialogue about this bill and what we're doing with it.

As I mentioned previously, the purpose of the bill is to make amendments to improve enforcement of provincial laws and municipal bylaws by making it more effective, efficient, and proportionate while better assisting vulnerable Albertans. In addition, the bill will also allow the processing of e-tickets. It's clear from the comments made during second reading debate that the current system of using warrants to enforce tickets for minor infractions is not effective and has not been so for a number of years. Many of my colleagues express their sentiments that these amendments will clearly help focus law enforcement and court resources where they should be, on more serious crimes.

The Official Opposition had some concerns about how enforcement will work after changes are made, and I'll be happy to address these. If passed, the legislation will expand the registrar of motor vehicle services' authority to restrict services to include unpaid fines for non motor vehicle infractions. Firstly, I want to emphasize that civil enforcement measures, including this restriction on motor vehicle registry services, will be more effective than warrants at holding offenders to account. Almost 97 per cent of Albertans of age 16 or older use motor vehicle registry services, and for those who don't, other enforcement mechanisms such as filing writs against property and garnishing bank accounts, wages, income tax refunds, and GST rebates will be available.

Secondly, I want to make it clear this legislation will only impact motor vehicle registry services. Other services, including health care services and the issuance of health care cards, will not be affected.

I realize this doesn't address the most vulnerable populations, and the Official Opposition had some concerns about how repeat offenders would be held to account, so it's important to take a look first at who those repeat offenders tend to be. One category is homeless individuals or individuals with mental health conditions or living with addictions and youth at risk of entering the cycle of poverty. This is one category of people who typically wouldn't have a motor vehicle registered or may not have any property to enforce against. These people are the province's most vulnerable, and they need support services from the province. Those services are not necessarily best provided in a jail setting.

Based on experience in working with our law enforcement and social services partners, we know that vulnerable people often end up in jail because they can't pay these fines. These vulnerable people aren't being sent to jail because it's an appropriate penalty for their infraction or because they pose a danger but rather because they can't afford to pay a fine, so landing in jail further perpetuates a cycle of incarceration, poverty, and homelessness, which does not create safer communities or help vulnerable Albertans. If we can stop this revolving door of poverty and incarceration, we know the lives of vulnerable Albertans will improve.

These amendments will put our government and social agencies in a better position to help these vulnerable Albertans. I will add, though, that these amendments do not affect tools available to law enforcement officers to deal with other chronic offenders and with disturbances. Officers will still be able to remove individuals from premises, arrest when necessary, and, where appropriate, issue a mandatory court appearance ticket that can be enforced by way of a warrant.

Madam Chair, we have received a wide range of support for this legislation because if passed, it will result in significant benefits. In addition to protecting Albertans, the province will save money on the costs associated with incarcerating these individuals, which will help to offset some of the pressures that we experience as a result of increasing incarcerated populations. It will also help to create some efficiencies. Additionally, the province will benefit from more effective collection of fines and penalties payable to the province.

The greatest benefit, ultimately, will fall to the social realm, which is to say that people who are otherwise marginalized will not be falling into this cycle of incarceration and poverty. We recognize that with respect to certain individuals who are very, very vulnerable, who have mental health challenges, we won't be putting them in jail, and perhaps we won't be able to enforce against their motor vehicles because they don't have any. But with respect to those people it's our view, ultimately, that they are in need of services and not in need of jail. As I've mentioned, with respect to those other individuals, the powers that police had to force an appearance will still exist but can only be exercised in the public interest. I have great confidence in our law enforcement officers and their ability to make those discriminations.

The other piece of the legislation, obviously, deals with e-tickets. This will just be streamlining of the ticketing process, allowing police to file tickets electronically with the courts and improve service, create efficiencies, and reduce errors.

I will conclude my comments with that, as I don't understand additional questions were asked. I welcome the comments of my colleagues.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak about Bill 9, An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences, in Committee of the Whole. As we've heard in second reading and as we're hearing again today, there is real promise for Bill 9 to reduce administrative burdens that are currently weighing down the justice system.

The two amendments in this bill represent a twofold reduction in red tape, the first of which seeks to end the issuance of warrants for those who have violated provincial offences by not paying their fines. This has been explained to the Assembly as a way to reduce the workload on court clerks, which we just heard again from the hon. minister. I believe the number that has been used several times is a yearly reduction of 9,000 hours of court clerk time. That's great. This would mean that court clerks would be able to spend 9,000 hours more every year working on issues that present a real risk to the public.

My only question at this point would be: why are there no savings in the Justice department as a result of these 9,000 reduced hours? Now, we need to look at efficiencies within the system, and I understand that there's going to be a transition time. But in the end, when we are reducing workloads, are we also creating efficiency with that as well? I believe that the hon. minister has said that they're moving the resources to other areas. In the end, I do believe that when you reduce the volume, you also increase the efficiency, and we should be able to see some reduced cost in that.

Another administrative burden that Bill 9 stands to eliminate is the waste of tax dollars that are currently being spent on arresting, processing, and jailing offenders who have not paid their tickets.

There have also been some discussions earlier about cost savings that would come from no longer needing to pay officers to transport and process the people and savings that will come from the corrections facilities that will no longer have to house and feed nondangerous offenders.

Another step to remove administration burden or red tape has to do with the second amendment that is proposed in Bill 9, and that is introducing e-ticketing. This removes the burden on police officers to swear a summons ticket to a commissioner for oaths. Our law enforcement officials will simply be able to enter their ticket into the computer, which I imagine will be in their police vehicles, print the ticket, and be back on their way, monitoring Alberta's communities and making it safer for all of us.

Madam Chair, the removal of administrative burdens needs to be a priority for not only the Justice department, but it needs to be incorporated as a philosophical approach to governance across Alberta. In my opinion it is something that has been lacking from this government, and I'm glad to see that they are at least recognizing one way to tackle some unnecessary spending. I believe that removing administration burdens should be a priority for all governments. It saves taxpayers' hard-earned money and allows for front-line services to be administered more efficiently. In this bill the institution of e-ticketing would be saving police officers time in the field. They would spend less time writing and processing tickets and more time – more time – protecting our communities. This is great.

The same can be said about no longer forcing police officers to arrest and jail people who are tardy on paying fines for minor offences. The time that officers are spending to take individuals to jail is time that is taken away from patrolling a neighbourhood or responding to an emergency. There's also an administration and onerous cost to those who are being arrested. If someone has a loitering ticket and is pulled over for speeding, they could be imprisoned. This could impose an economic burden on the person as well as on the facilities themselves. If the individual is on their way to work, they could lose their job because of the fact that they are caught in this cycle. Once they are in this cycle, they may not be able to get out of the cycle because it is a perpetuating cycle. I believe that enforcing a payment mechanism that is similar to overdue traffic tickets is an appropriate means for collection rather than arresting and jailing.

On that same note, much has been said on Bill 9 and the ending of what some refer to as debtors' prison. Essentially this means that when marginalized people like the homeless commit a provincial offence, they often do not have the means to pay their tickets. As a result they are being picked up on the streets, put through the process to make sure that they don't have any tickets outstanding, and then sent to prison. It seems a little counterintuitive to me.

This bill ends that cycle. It no longer puts homeless people in jail simply for being homeless, which is something that I commend. However, I think that if this bill is to pass, then we also must have a greater explanation from the minister on what this government's plan is to deal with the marginalized people that are no longer in the corrections system. Has the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General worked in concert with Human Services or perhaps the Department of Health to make a plan to tackle mental illness? As I understand it, mental illness is a significant challenge that confronts the homeless population, and I think this Assembly could use a little more clarification on what the plan is to address the issues that affect homeless people other than just no longer ticketing them and throwing them in jail.

Madam Chair, I look forward to having some of my thoughts on the points that I have raised today being answered by the minister. I will say again that I support Bill 9, and I would hope that everybody in this Assembly would support it with me.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Are there any other speakers with questions or comments on this bill?

Then we'll have the question.

[The clauses of Bill 9 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Madam Chair, I would move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Ms Woollard: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 9.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much. I would like to thank all hon. members for a very productive debate this afternoon on a number of important pieces of legislation. As we have accomplished our goals for the afternoon, Madam Speaker, I will move that we call it 6 o'clock and reconvene tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:33 p.m.]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect, each in our own way. Many cultures have traditional ceremonies intended to bring rain. Perhaps if we direct our united thoughts and energies together, Mother Nature will co-operate and some much-needed rain will bring relief to our neighbours up north and first responders, who are working so tirelessly to keep our communities safe.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 14

Health Professions Amendment Act, 2016

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Madam Speaker, thank you. I am pleased to move second reading of Bill 14, the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2016.

The Health Professions Act has an important role in Alberta's health care system. It is central to ensuring that our province's health system remains second to none. It ensures the system and health providers working within the system maintain a commitment to excellence and to providing unparalleled care. It is one of the cornerstones upon which our foundation of quality health care is based.

How does the legislation achieve these aims? The act is a legislative framework through which regulatory colleges partner with government to create accountability mechanisms in our health system. Through this system nearly 100,000 regulated health professionals are held accountable for their practice. These accountability mechanisms are in place to protect Albertans. These mechanisms ensure that Albertans are provided with the best possible health care services, delivered in a safe manner by highly qualified health professionals.

Through the act processes are put in place to assure Albertans that health providers have the required knowledge and skills to capably provide care, complete ongoing education and training to maintain these skills to stay current, and to follow best practices and adhere to standards of practice and a code of ethics, which ensures that health professionals provide highly professional, competent care in a responsible, respectful way.

If a health provider does not provide care that meets quality and safety standards, Albertans have a means of recourse. They may choose to file a complaint with the appropriate regulatory college. Regulatory colleges, in turn, have systems of investigation and discipline in place should they be required. Public members serve on the councils of these regulatory colleges so that the views of Albertans are represented and reflected in decisions made by the health professionals.

However, the Health Professions Act has not been amended in eight years. During that time Alberta's health system and health workforce have continued to evolve. Patient expectations have changed, and professional roles have changed. Gaps, deficiencies, or better ways to deliver care have been identified and the need for improvements brought forward.

To ensure that the act remains current and continues to protect Albertans, amendments are required. These amendments involve adding two new professions so these health providers can be regulated under the act and be accountable for the care they provide; giving the Minister of Health the authority to determine a body to accredit medical facilities so that consistent, rigorous standards can be applied; allowing for new care models by removing ownership restrictions; providing for name changes that more clearly delineate roles; protecting more professional titles so Albertans can be assured that only qualified individuals are permitted to use these titles and provide the corresponding services; and, finally, updating a profession's description of its roles and responsibilities in order to reflect expanding scopes of practice.

I'd like to take a moment to address the amendment that proposes adding two professions to the act; specifically, physician assistants and diagnostic medical sonographers. The position of physician assistant is relatively new to Alberta. These professionals have only been working in the province since 2013. There are currently 30 physician assistants on the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta's voluntary register, and 12 work for Alberta Health Services. They independently assess and treat patients, and their responsibilities under physician supervision may range from conducting patient interviews and physical examinations to diagnosing and treating illnesses and providing selected diagnostic and therapeutic procedures. In this role they increase access to health care by giving physicians time for more complex patients.

With regard to diagnostic medical sonographers, there are about 800 working in Alberta at this time. Diagnostic medical sonographers perform sonographic examinations, or ultrasounds. In 2013 approximately 270,000 ultrasound exams were performed at AHS facilities, and more than 900,000 were performed in community clinics across Alberta. Adding these professions to the act means they will be regulated and accountable for the care they provide.

By making these changes, regulatory colleges and their members will be better served by this legislation. That, in turn, means Albertans will be better served by their health providers. We must ensure this act captures what our health professions need in order to do their work effectively. At the same time, we need to ensure that Albertans continue to be protected when they seek health services in our province. Regulating health professionals means they are obligated to maintain high standards of competency, safety, and ethics and provide Albertans with high-quality care. It also means health professionals are accountable for the care they provide and that members of the public are protected. For health professionals the act provides them opportunities to work to their full scope of practice and for their skills to be fully utilized in the health system. The proposed amendments will update the act and at the same time reinforce the important safeguards this legislation provides.

I ask all members to support this bill and move it to the next stage. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for this opportunity to speak to Bill 14, the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2016, and the many changes it introduces. This is a bill I will be supporting. Of course, I will be speaking to some of the more prominent amendments to the Health Professions Act, but I'd like to start by addressing the importance of this act in more general terms.

Bill 14 is quite heavy with changes across a number of different health professions and schedules within the HPA, and much of it is a matter of legislative housekeeping, but many of these schedule amendments are a matter of bringing the standards of practice, titles, and categories of members up to date, which, of course, is an important part of any housekeeping.

Medical fields are constantly evolving and changing with the times, and it's important that our legislation governing these professions keeps current with today's and best practices. It is my understanding that the Health Professions Act has not undergone a major update since 2008, so it's time for a welcome facelift. The Health Professions Act has been, I think, largely successful in its intended purpose of providing the legislative framework for self-regulation of our health professionals in Alberta. If I'm not mistaken, we have 28 distinct regulatory colleges that are governed under this act, with still three governed under the Health Disciplines Act but outlined in the Health Professions Act as well.

9:10

I've heard it said that one of the strengths of our system is that a large number of the health professions we have working here are self-regulated under this legislation. I would suggest that self-regulation provides a number of successes in our province, and ultimately that is really the benefit to Albertans.

That brings me to the central, key point in this discussion. These colleges exist for Albertans. They exist to govern the best interests of the public, providing Albertans with the necessary protections and accountability mechanisms. Regulatory colleges in their service to the public provide standards of practice, codes of ethics, standards for registration of members, continuing competence, and mechanisms for holding members to account if discipline becomes necessary. These are functions which are well provided under our and under a self-regulatory framework. When the self-regulatory framework is doing what it should, we can all have confidence in the quality of the health services Albertans receive. While this bill is quite dense and thorough, it is very critical to how our health system actually works at the ground level.

One of the most significant changes that we find here is the regulation of physician assistants under the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta. My understanding is that these physician assistants, who do work under the supervision of a physician, are not particularly numerous in our health system, maybe a few dozen or so. I believe that you'll see them more commonly in military settings, and I think we have some of them practising here who were foreign trained as well. I've actually had the pleasure to meet with a few since taking on my Health critic role, and they definitely do play an important, crucial part in our system. From what I can tell and from what I've heard from Albertans, it's a good move to formally pull them under the membership of the college. Doing so should provide some opportunities for further integration into the system and really work toward involving them in being able to utilize the full scope of their practice and of their capability.

It's important that any health professional be maximized to their full potential, but again the entirety of the Health Professions Act is about serving, serving the best interests of the public, and that's the core goal of any legislative change that we discuss today and most days. By all means, this change does serve the public well.

On the topic of the College of Physicians & Surgeons I also note the change to schedule 21 in section 8.1(2). This is noted on page 16 of the bill, whereby the minister – the minister – is granted the discretion to direct the college to be the accreditation for certain health facilities. Madam Speaker, my understanding is that the way things are currently written in the act, government facilities are exempted from requiring this accreditation. While they often do seek and get accredited anyway, this change here in Bill 14 gives the minister the authority to make that happen as the minister deems necessary.

If I were to use the example of a diagnostic lab, every nongovernment lab requires this accreditation from the College of Physicians & Surgeons. It's not hard to see why. Doctors rely heavily on lab services to do their jobs, and both the doctor and the public must have the utmost trust in the accuracy and safety of these services. So if this change gives an added tool to the minister to direct government facilities to have and meet the same standard, Madam Speaker, that's a welcome development. Albertans must have absolute confidence in all the systems and facilities working for us.

Moving on to the Alberta College of Medical Diagnostic and Therapeutic Technologists, we see sonographers, or ultrasound technicians as we might more commonly know them, being added under schedule 12 of the Health Professions Act. Again, Madam Speaker, this is a good move for the sake of the profession but, more importantly, a move that will serve the public well. As a bit of an aside, if you find me coming back to this issue of how to best serve the interests of the public again and again, of course, it's for good reason. The entire theme of the Health Professions Act revolves around this core principle. In any case, adding stenographers under the umbrella of the diagnostic profession is another move that may just seem simple on its face, but it's important. It's important to good self-regulation of our health professions.

Under schedule 20 we find a number of changes regarding physiotherapy. The most notable is the removal of the restriction around physical therapy corporations. Bill 14 does away with the requirement that 75 per cent of shareholders of a physical therapy corporation be regulated members of the college of physiotherapists. Madam Speaker, this is an appropriate change when we consider the purpose and scope of the Health Professions Act. The Health Professions Act is not a business organization act. From what I understand, this is a holdover from many years ago and no longer needs to be in the Health Professions Act. Frankly, it's not appropriate to have it in there in any case. As the framework that protects the public, it's not necessary or helpful for the Health Professions Act to regulate ownership shares here. By all accounts, easing this restriction should make it easier for physiotherapists to work in joint practices with other health professionals.

I'd like to conclude by speaking a little bit about the topic that we've discussed in the past in the context of other issues, and that is the appropriateness of joint associations and colleges. I think it's a worthwhile conversation to have as there are two bodies that will undergo a formal name change to encompass both the college and association title. Those are, of course, the Alberta college and association of opticians and the Physiotherapy Alberta College and Association. Now, I certainly don't mean to single out any organizations or imply any misconduct or impropriety. It's just that these legislative changes here before us provide a jumping-off point where we can have a bit of a broader philosophical discussion about the nature – Madam Speaker, about the nature – of a professional association versus a regulatory college.

To beat a dead horse one more time here, these self-regulating colleges exist to protect and serve the public interest. Self-regulating colleges exist to protect and serve the public interest, whereas a professional association exists to serve the profession and its members. A professional association exists in a voluntary capacity. Members join specifically because they derive benefits. Don't get me wrong, Madam Speaker. Both functions and organizations are absolutely important for the overall health of a profession. However, it seems to me that these functions are better served when they are entirely separate. Inevitably, the mixing of lobbying and regulating can pose challenges or at the very least pose a problem with public perception. While a college regulates its members for the sake of the public, the public trust must also exist. The public needs the assurance that their interests will not be muddled or forgotten or prioritized any lower.

Again, it needs to be said that this principle of not mixing the two functions is not a slight toward either of the organizations under our consideration today. In fact, I'm assured that the lines are clearly drawn and that the financial interests of members and discussions around fees are not – are not, Madam Speaker – the concern of these two colleges. Given the largely out-of-pocket nature of the payment model for physiotherapy and optician services, the negotiation of fees may not be a significant factor in the first place. The addition of association services fills more of a role for professional education and development in the aforementioned colleges, which are things that may not be fulfilled otherwise if there were an absence of a professional association. Obviously, there may be some extenuating circumstances here, and I'm sure they do a fine, excellent job regulating their respective professions, but it's still beneficial. It's still good to debate the broader principle in this House.

There is also an opportunity here to bring evidence and case studies and have a little crossjurisdictional review to help us consider best practice and apply it to Alberta. I want to bring up the case of British Columbia and the way that they have structured their own Health Professions Act and colleges. Madam Speaker, in 2001 the Health Professions Council was tasked with making recommendations to the B.C. Health minister about the regulation of health professions and produced a report. The report was called Safe Choices: A New Model for Regulating Health Professions in British Columbia, 645 pages. I won't table the whole thing here today, perhaps just a relevant part of the relationship between regulatory bodies and professional associations. The report drew on both the earlier Foulkes report and the Seaton Commission.

I'll quote the Seaton Commission, which recommended that two separate bodies be created for all regulated or licensed professions so that there is a clear separation of membership promotion functions and licensing and discipline functions.

Madam Speaker, now from the Foulkes report.

It is only reasonable to recognize that professions, like other groups and individuals in society, may well be expected to have certain private self-interests of their own which are not coincident with the public interest . . . This important distinction between the public function of the licensing body and the private function of the voluntary association is now widely recognized in Canada. From the standpoint of both the professions and the public, it is desirable that the separation of the two functions be kept sharp and distinct.

The council went on to say that it agreed with these statements about the clear separation.

In another section about mandatory membership, Madam Speaker, the council concluded that it is not in the public interest for members of a regulated health profession to be required to belong, or to pay dues, for that matter, to a professional association.

Interestingly, you'll find that in B.C. today health regulatory colleges do not include any professional association overlap. They do not include any professional association overlap. The two bodies are kept distinct in all cases.

Also of note is that similar recommendations have been made here in Alberta. The 2004 Health Professions Act Employer's Handbook notes the following recommendation of the Health Workforce Rebalancing Committee.

Enhanced mechanisms to avoid conflicts of interest, including the separation of "college" and "association" functions.

Despite this, Madam Speaker, we still don't see the total separation here in Alberta as they do in B.C.

Madam Speaker and members of the House, I hope I've been able to provide some evidence and reasoning on this topic. I think it's well worth discussing as we move forward with this bill on updates.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, I will call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek to close debate.

Ms Woollard: Madam Speaker, I think we are all agreed that the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2016, is an action that it's time for, it needs taking. It will help to clarify and better organize and update the Health Professions Act.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 12

Aboriginal Consultation Levy Repeal Act

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just a few quick points. I believe that it is indeed worth noting for members of this Chamber and those beyond these walls that the previous Progressive Conservative government introduced Bill 22 with the goal of increasing the effectiveness of public consultation with our indigenous communities. We recognize that there were some issues with the legislation. The then PC cabinet actually approved the steps to repeal the bill, which, I might point out, was never proclaimed in the first place. The NDP are simply following through on this commitment, which will benefit all Albertans, and we support their efforts in this respect.

Over the years previous governments have made tremendous progress when it comes to building relationships with Alberta's indigenous communities. In fact, Alberta was one of the first jurisdictions to recognize Métis rights, way back in the 1980s, and to fund basic services on reserves regardless of jurisdiction, including education and disaster assistance. Many people recall the floods of just a few years ago as a great example of that.

Now, that said, we recognize that there is always room for improvement, and the repeal of Bill 22 would be a step in the right direction. I say this with respect: given the government's difficulty with the adequate consultation processes they've engaged upon in the last year or so, we really urge the Premier and the Minister of Indigenous Relations to work closely with our FNMI communities and individuals clear across Alberta so that they can indeed develop an effective consultation framework.

Thank you. I just thought it was worth pointing out those points of information and clarification, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm thankful to get the opportunity to stand and talk about Bill 12, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Repeal Act, today in the House. I have a lot to say in regard to this bill but first want to express that I am completely in support of repealing the former government's Bill 22, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act.

Unfortunately, Bill 22 was introduced by the minister without enough consultation from either indigenous groups or industry, and it brought further problems to the table, so to speak. Wildrose voted against Bill 22 originally because after listening to indigenous groups and industry proponents, we recognized that the former government was not listening to stakeholders and to all Albertans. It was faulty from the start, and too many hours were spent on the bill that was misguided. Treaties 6 and 8 leaders felt that the bill was discriminatory and that nonaboriginal people did not have to disclose any of their agreements with proponents. They also felt that the government was overstepping its constitutional authority.

Even though I am glad that the previous government's work will be repealed and that the government has promised that it will work to develop a new consultation process, I do have some concerns with how this government may or may not hold those consultations. I truly hope that the government will acknowledge the lessons this failed legislation has to teach us. My worry is that once this legislation is out of the way and new consultation policies are brought forth, the government will not take the time to get it right. My fear is that they will not make sure that it is in the best interest of all of those affected.

9:30

An Hon. Member: Fearmongering.

Mr. Hanson: Excuse me?

Government has a responsibility to consult with all First Nations, and in dealing with this particular policy area, they also need to collaborate with representatives of industry at the table with First Nations representatives.

This NDP government is in the habit of breaking trust with Albertans. In order to build trust, one must encourage a relationship with all partners. This government needs to engage with all indigenous groups and proponents and really delve into matters that concern both and continue to work until both are satisfied.

We also know that the government has signed a new protocol agreement with Treaty 8 and that the government has planned to do the same with Treaty 6 and Treaty 7. However, the process was not really open and transparent. Much can be left to the imagination for all other stakeholders, and they have felt out of the loop. While I believe that it's important to have certain expectations in place and have good, solid consultation policies in place, I also think that it is just as vitally important to have action in critical areas and certainty for communities. After reading the new protocol agreement between the government and Treaty 8 and seeing the many tables dealing with different matters of concern, it was interesting to see and I look forward to hearing the results of these negotiations.

I understand that the First Nations consultation capacity investment program is there and in place to help provide consultation funding to First Nations when they need it, but we would like to know: when will the minister be announcing his plans for a new consultation policy, and will you give indigenous groups and industry the time they need to do the necessary research and planning that will need to be done on their end in order to collaborate effectively?

We are most certain that many groups that were involved were not happy with the way legislation went down last time, and I don't think I need to tell you that communication is key. The aboriginal consultation levy was intended to create a fund that would support consultation between First Nations in Alberta and industry proponents, to try to make sure that all parties were well prepared and equipped for negotiations so that energy projects could proceed in a way that benefited everyone. An excellent goal but one that has not yet been achieved.

Right now the last thing Alberta needs is for this government to further destabilize our economy by upsetting the business environment. Madam Chair, the minister needs to get this right this time. The government has made enough mistakes that have hurt Albertans and their pocketbooks with their high-risk ideological practices. This government needs to get this right, and if the legislation isn't beneficial or useful, then this government should be prepared to act swiftly instead of allowing it to sit on the books indefinitely.

The indigenous annual report from 2014-15 indicated that the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act would not be implemented since it did not meet the needs of the communities. We all know for a fact that both indigenous people and industry were not happy with Bill 22, and since we are aware that this government has committed to a new consultation policy, we need to make sure they completely understand that not getting this right in this go-round will not be acceptable. Hurting Albertans further when they're already down would not be good practice.

Another area that I would like to address is the announcement of the Métis settlements consultation policy. I would think that any stakeholder that might be involved with that work should be properly prepared and given ample time to reflect on anything this minister brings to the table. It is vital not only for this minister's relationship with all stakeholders but for industry and indigenous groups to have meaningful discussions on the future of all Albertans. Relationships need to be based on trust in order to be meaningful. We know that a lot of Albertans are feeling the effects of broken promises and risky ideologies that have been implemented by and through this NDP government.

Madam Chair, these relationships need to be restored in order for this vital work to be done. My hope is that the government will not repeat the same mistakes that were made in Bill 22. Let's not have any group feel that they were discriminated against or left out of the process. I do worry that the next consultation policy will only reflect this government's agenda, so I ask that it please acknowledge the previous failures and work to make sure that industry proponents and all Albertans are included and that the mistakes of Bill 22 do not happen again.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you. It's a pleasure to rise in this House today to talk about Bill 12, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Repeal Act. Alberta has a duty to consult First Nations when government decisions may adversely affect their constitutionally protected treaty rights. We are committed to enhancing the capacity of First Nations to meaningfully participate in the consultation process, and it's important that we do that. The repeal of the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act will remove a significant barrier, renew the relationships with First Nations, and help to lay the groundwork for more productive discussions with First Nations, which is very important that we do. In addition, repealing Bill 22 allows government to have respectful and reciprocal engagement with First Nations.

During our first year in government we have remained committed to engaging with First Nations in an effort to renew and forge stronger relationships. In West Yellowhead I've continued to do that. The issue up in Grande Cache is long, and the First Nations peoples there are disgruntled and very unhappy. At first they wouldn't even meet with us because of the previous failings in what had gone on, failings in consultation.

Consultation involves the part of listening, and they haven't been listened to. This is the problem. We have to change our attitude, the way in which we listen to these people because their governance and the way they conduct themselves are different from ours; so I found out. It's taken a considerable amount of time in meeting with them to gain their respect so that we can truly consult with them. The main issue here is us not telling them what we want to hear. It's us having the respect to listen to what they have to say and taking that information to determine what is in the best interest that they have, and we haven't done that. We have failed them in Grande Cache.

The previous government created a committee that supposedly would look after all the interests of the First Nations in the Grande Cache area, and they failed to do that. The committee decided that they would have representation from everybody there, but it wasn't truly representation, so many groups up there weren't represented at all. This is a problem. It's taken a considerable amount of time to meet with them and understand what it is that they want. Like I said at the start, they didn't even want to meet with us.

Part of the barrier, too, was that some of the elders up there only speak Cree. They only understand Cree, not English or anything else, and that creates a barrier. But when I sat down with one of the elders, through an interpreter I created an area of respect, and through that respect I got a good understanding of what the problem is. That's why I'm saying that we have to respect the way in which they communicate to us, and that is the true meaning of consultation. That is what we need to do, listen and understand.

Repealing Bill 22 establishes the guideline and the start so that we can do that in a respectful manner. I urge everybody in this House to support Bill 12, and I close with that. Thank you.

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Seeing none, we will call the vote.

[The clauses of Bill 12 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 1

Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak on Bill 1, the Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act. However, over here we kind of know it as the minister of economic development's job description act. The bill, frankly, is a farce. The minister already has all of the powers that are mapped out in this bill. It is rather disappointing to see Bill 1 so vacuous when typically Bill 1 is used as a flagship piece of legislation by a government. What is truly alarming is the NDP's approach to economic development. It harkens back to a time known as the 1970s. Maybe too many of the members here don't remember back that far.

But I remember a story. I'm going to relate it to you because history tends to repeat itself. This story has to do with what happened in New Brunswick. They had a Premier known as Disco Dick.

An Hon. Member: What?

Mr. MacIntyre: Yeah. Disco Dick Hatfield. He would take the government plane on weekends to Montreal and New York City in the name of economic development – he really did – and there he would dance it up in places like Studio 54, surrounded by celebrities like Mick Jagger, Margaret Trudeau, Truman Capote, Diana Ross, Elton John, and Donna Summer.

At one of these swinging business trips the Premier met an entrepreneur by the name of Malcolm Bricklin. Hatfield lured Malcolm to New Brunswick in 1974, offering easy economic development money. New Brunswickers were going to start making sports cars in Saint John and Minto. The Bricklin SV-1 sports car was believed to be the only vehicle in automotive history at that time to have factory-powered gull-wing doors that opened and closed at a touch of a button as standard equipment. Not even the DeLorean was that advanced. The car came with a built-in roll cage, a fibreglass body with bonded acrylic – this was all brand new in those days in the '70s – and in five glorious safety colours: white, red, orange, suntan, and green, probably olive green to match the bathrooms of the day. The Reynolds-Alberta Museum in Wetaskiwin actually has one of these cars in storage. I recommend that you all go see it.

But problems arose in the production process and the poor management, as you might guess. Some say that the plant could not produce vehicles fast enough to make a profit, and there were rumours that Bricklin was extracting money and funnelling it into his other business operations to keep them afloat. At the end of the day, the company went into receivership, owing the New Brunswick government $21 million, which in our dollars today would be $88 million. Only 2,800 cars were ever built. The moral of that economic development story is: don't be a Richard Hatfield. Do not give corporate welfare to private businesses. Do not be picking winners and losers in our economy.

To contrast that story, I want to tell you a story about something we all know as the Alberta advantage. Even in those periods of time we did have some examples of corporate welfare stricken businesses in this province, some of them right here in Edmonton. Madam Chair, the notion of state funding into private business, a simple handout, a grant, a loan, or using the power of a triple-A credit rating – but we don't even have that anymore; we have a double-A credit rating – to provide a loan guarantee is not the role of the state. It is not safe. So please hear me. If the banks, the financial institutions, venture capitalists, wealth funds under management, the people in the money business themselves, even the Dragons' Den or the Shark Tank will not risk the venture for investment, why should the government risk taxpayers' money?

It is the government's role to create the level playing field environment for entrepreneurs. It is the government's role to provide public infrastructure and a business-friendly regulatory climate that will create jobs and create wealth. That's the role of government. Government should not be in the business of business, and that's what we had when we had the Alberta advantage.

In my estimation, the Alberta advantage had seven pillars that made it successful. The first was honest and straightforward financial accounting, that the government's books be presented in a way that Albertans could make sense of and hold their government to account for. The second pillar was a reasonable, affordable, and sustainable level of government spending. The third was our low debt and our triple-A credit rating. The fourth pillar was our low-tax regime and a business-friendly regulatory environment. The fifth was affordable energy to produce competitively priced goods. The sixth was taking pride in our resource sector rather than seeing it as an embarrassment. The seventh pillar was taking pride in our farmers and ranchers and trusting their stewardship rather than seeing them as some kind of overbearing, endangering slave-drivers in need of a smack down.

The Alberta advantage results? Well, in 1985 Alberta's GDP was $66.8 billion. Energy made up 36 per cent of that total. Fast-forward 28 years, and our GDP was $332 billion in 2013, and energy only made up 25 per cent of the economy. That was the result of the Alberta advantage compared to what happened in New Brunswick.

Now, I want to have just one more look at a case study, this one from Nova Scotia. I think this one is very fitting given the way Nova Scotia wanted to travel. Back in 2010 Nova Scotia's government wanted in on the green revolution. They wanted in on the green economy, so they bought a 49 per cent stake in a joint venture with Daewoo Shipbuilding & Marine Engineering. The plan was to establish a wind turbine tower and blade manufacturing facility at the former Trenton Works steelworks site. To quote the Premier of the day, he said:

Today is an exciting day because this partnership will help create the secure jobs our economy needs, employing up to 500 Nova Scotians within three years. This new facility will also showcase and develop Nova Scotia's leadership in renewable energy and the green economy.

Well, they even had a secured customer. Nova Scotia Power guaranteed them orders for wind turbines to help meet Nova Scotia's green power initiative.

Six years later the whole thing fell apart. No 500 jobs were ever created, the province's 49 per cent stake in the company was worthless, and there were 19 people working there, another fine example of why government should never be in the business of business.

Now we come to Bill 1. Frankly, given the performance record of the minister, who has been pulling down a minister's salary and perks for months now, who has had a $178 million budget, the performance to date is not one job, but the reward – well, now that minister is getting an even bigger pile of taxpayers' money.

This government has been in power for one year. They entered the scene just as Alberta was staring down the barrel of the worst job crisis in our history, and the first thought they had to help the situation was to launch a series of frontal attacks on the cost of power in Alberta, copying the destructive electricity policies of Ontario, which have been the single largest factor in driving job-creating industries out of that province. Then to help matters further, they introduced tax after tax after tax during an economic depression, I'll call it. Name me one industry that doesn't have electricity and/or natural gas as an input item into the cost of goods and services. This government, frankly, doesn't know the first thing about creating a job-friendly economic environment, and this piece of legislation is a waste of paper.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. I was eagerly waiting for this debate. This government doesn't look like they're going to withdraw or amend this bill into something useful. This Bill 1 as it stands is a bill of sarcasm. Therefore, if they need some help in creating more useless bills, I can help you out with that. [interjections] Hang on.

I figure this government can create 20 new bills just like this bill, for each of the other ministries. These bills can be just like Bill 1 except we get a little bit more specific for each ministry. The Minister of Finance's bill would ensure that he has to publish a budget every single year. In that budget it would require the publication of the government's revenue and expenses. Additionally, the bill would require him to spend far past inflation and population growth. In that way, when he racks up $58 billion of debt in just three years, he can just point to his bill and blame bad, risky, ideological policies. Of course, since balancing the chequebook is an optional requirement for his ministry, it should be legislated in this bill.

For the Minister of Health we can include a line which says that she has to do all the duties of the CEO for Alberta Health Services and that sometimes she can act as CEO in voice mode. There will be an exemption, of course. She doesn't have to do any of the duties that she doesn't want to, especially any that attract unwanted attention. This should include a line that would allow the minister to give health care services to the people of Alberta.

I'm sure we could spend hours and hours of our civil servants' time crafting these very unnecessary bills. We may even create jobs through this process of writing out the job descriptions.

An Hon. Member: Pardon?

Mr. Panda: Yes, really. That's how we can create jobs.

They will get all the details organized and correct, and maybe they could just rewrite the Government Organization Act and put it in there. I'm sure there are lots of ideas in that act, but of course we don't want to provide any existing examples and, instead, build these job descriptions from the ground up.

It could be part of the NDP job-creation plan since they would have to hire more government bureaucrats to find a hole in the legislation that doesn't exist and then fill it up with the exact same dirt that was there before. I know the bureaucracy is already bloated, but this government seems to like to fatten up the bureaucracy and their union friends.

On a side note, and just for Hansard, I want people to know that I'm being a hundred per cent sarcastic. I know that members across the aisle probably think I'm serious, and I just wanted to make it known for the people who are reading this after the fact.

I asked the minister on the 3rd of March in question period whether he knew he had these powers listed in the bill, and he said he did. That's the reason these other bills are along the exact same lines as Bill 1, the other bills I am proposing.

For the minister of agriculture, we would allow him to implement safety measures without consulting. The minister can already do whatever he wants without consulting, but by putting it in the bill, Albertans would not be able to protest. They would not be able to protest because the minister could point to his bill and show Albertans that they have no power here. It will also help the NDP carbon tax because there will be fewer people driving to protest and using gas. The icing on the cake is that the rebate will actually cover their expenses if they just stay home and don't use any gasoline.

The minister of environment's bill would have a line that says that every time someone says "economics," she will automatically think that the person said "science." It will just be as if the word "economics" doesn't exist. It might require some brainwashing to ensure that she never hears the word “economics” and only ever hears the word “science,” but those are minor details, and that can be worked out later, Madam Chair. Her bill would allow her to coauthor books that go against the industry she represents. Additionally, she will be able to legislate that fish do not have to pay any carbon tax because when the fish die, they are completely biodegradable and will give off zero emissions as they rot and have zero effect on the ecosystem if they all die.

On a similar note, we want to legislate that the Minister of Labour doesn't have to table any studies, including minimum wage studies and its economic impacts. This bill will protect the government from facts, criticism, and evidence. Her bill should also state that everyone shall have a job and that to do this, she has to raise the minimum wage by 50 per cent every single year. That way, eventually everyone will be a millionaire on top of having a job.

I know that the details I listed for these bills are a little more in depth than Bill 1. They don't have to have that much detail if you want to keep it along the lines of Bill 1. They're very bad suggestions, but they're suggestions that are in line with Bill 1.

The Minister of Justice would be required to bring justice to the guilty. She would have the freedom to bring justice through the courts or through a league. This would be solely dependent on whether or not there are enough superheroes to create a Justice League. Additionally, her bill should allow her to remove minimum wait times for the court dates to ensure that nothing is done quickly or efficiently. She would also legislate to ensure that Alberta continues to have the lowest judges per capita in Canada.

The minister of seniors' bill would tell her that her stakeholders are not getting any younger. That way, by the time she has read her talking points on what she cannot do, she knows there will be one fewer stakeholder to help. Through her legislated ignorance she would not have to appoint a Seniors' Advocate to help them navigate the bureaucracy.

Now, I know these are a lot of bills to digest. Luckily, the job descriptions in these bills would be filled with items already practised by the ministers. Therefore, the bills would not change anything, and it should be relatively simple to work our way through these bills. Additionally, they would give the government a chance to talk about how great they are at their job descriptions, how they can do the things listed in the bill. They can talk about how they have had so much practice at the items in these bills since being elected.

I know that the minister responsible for Bill 1 likes to jump up and down and tell us how great he is at something that apparently he needs legislation to do, which is very confusing for me, that he would need legislation to do something he has been able to do for ages, but I digress.

Let me get to the point. This bill is useless. It is silly. It is a waste of our time. It's an affront to this House. I do not support useless bills; therefore, I do not support Bill 1.

Thank you.

10:00

The Chair: Any other speakers? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak on Bill 1, the government's flagship bill, Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act. Albertans and this Official Opposition have considerable concerns regarding this empty husk of a bill. It does nothing to explain how the NDP will actually create jobs, just like their failed jobs subsidy scheme, which they basically cancelled after it created zero jobs. This bill does nothing new. Section 2 of the act basically allows the minister to establish programs pertaining to job creation, increasing access to capital, supporting innovation and export development. It is a mandate letter disguised as a bill, which is odd because the Premier no longer issues mandate letters, yet here we are with a job description for the minister with responsibilities he already had before.

Madam Chair, it's easy to measure a jobs bill's effectiveness. Does it create jobs and increase employment? That's a measure everyone can understand. This bill has been dying on the vine. Vague promises of, “You'll have to wait for the budget,” have come and gone, and it's still a really vague piece of legislation. One of my colleagues referred to this bill as vacuous. What a perfect word to describe a bill that is broad in promise but short on details. It's a form of hyperbole that our government seems to embrace. It's the fallback position of talking points.

The Minister of Economic Development and Trade loves to get up and proclaim how members on the opposite side of him believe a solution to this economic crisis will turn back the clock, that we propose reckless and extreme cuts that will only make things worse, that the bogeyman opposition will cut teachers and nurses and front-line workers, abandon seniors, and steal candy from babies. It's rhetoric, Madam Chair, a battered shield that this government can trot out when they are notoriously short on substance.

The reality is that the current government has failed to provide a single economic impact study or a single reason to justify why this bill is needed. I have not seen a single credible stakeholder or policy expert quoted on the record anywhere saying that this bill will accomplish something that can't already be accomplished. They claim that it will create jobs but are not demonstrating how. They're creating false hope. They're simply peddling the illusion of doing something for the job situation in our province.

The hon. member talks about setting a strong Alberta jobs plan that will support families and communities and diversify our energy industry. Now, that sounds great on paper, but so did the member's prior dismal failure of a jobs plan. That jobs plan was also rolled out without any credible assessment that it would actually create jobs, and for months the current government doubled down, saying that it would work. The previous Labour minister and the Finance minister were adamant that the failed jobs plan would be good for business.

Folks can't pay their bills and feed their families on ideology, Madam Chair. They need something more tangible than an eight-page document that contains fewer words than this speech does. We need a government that actually creates conditions that benefit Albertans, conditions that create growth and investment, something that this bill sorely lacks. Investment is fleeing the province. Spending is out of hand so much that we have experienced three credit downgrades while this government has been in power. Alberta needs stability and fiscal responsibility. We have seen neither beyond a misguided tax policy and a radical agenda based on debt and deficit.

Wildrose, on the other hand, released a 12-point jobs action plan that does propose solutions such as reducing small-business taxes, providing tax relief for families and stability for our energy sector. There is nothing in this current government's Bill 1 that even provides this much detail. If this bill had any semblance of focus, it would have included some of these points or made some valid ones of its own. It could have legislated change. Instead, we get vague talking points. This is cold comfort to the thousands of Albertans who are out of work.

They could do so much to empower Albertans, help them be part of the solution, help them use their entrepreneurship and creativity to diversify our economy, help reduce red tape, as we suggested. Let Albertans do what they have done since they settled and formed our province. Give them the tools, then get out of the way. Create the right economic conditions, break down barriers, and let competition thrive. That's how a dynamic economy can be achieved.

Nobody in this House disputes how hard working Albertans are, but taxation and restrictions are not levelling the playing field. You need to ensure a fair regulatory environment, respect property rights, and provide stability for our energy sector. Lay a solid foundation for business, and the people will thrive. Stop hampering them with taxes on everything, restrictive and punitive ideologies, and simply help them help themselves. We have provided a framework within our jobs action plan that can be used to do just that, and we encourage this government to look beyond their ideologies and rhetoric and get Alberta back on track.

Alberta has long been referred to as the economic engine of Canada. This is absolutely nothing to be ashamed of, and in fact it should be shouted from the rooftops and celebrated. We need to enact policies that reflect this rather than stifling opportunity with massive taxes and restricting growth. This government is acting like a brake on this engine rather than the gas pedal.

You can't just create diversification and jobs on a piece of paper with less substance than a menu. You need sound economic principles and a regulatory environment that encourages innovation in all sectors. Lasting economic growth must have a sound foundation and be self-sustaining. It can't be created by a vague, feel-good mandate letter. The superficial wording of this legislation pretty much just positions the NDP government for talking points that could be used to portray opposition parties as opposing or blocking a program designed to create jobs. It's a vain exercise that attempts to shelter the government from critics pointing out that the bill really does nothing.

The last time we convened here to speak to this bill, in second reading, there was absolute silence on the government benches in speaking to the merits of the bill. To be fair to the government benches, I'd have a hard time defending this, too. Albertans are already worried and anxious about the future. There is nothing in this bill to reassure them. Rather, it just underscores the fact that the NDP don't have a real plan to promote job creation or diversify the economy despite the jobs title.

This bill is window dressing, an attempt to appear to the public that the government is doing something bold and creative. They are not. It's simply economic sleight of hand, and it wouldn't pass scrutiny at a carnival. Bill 1 doesn't do anything new or specific. Ministers can already create programs. This bill assigns no powers to the minister that he and other ministers don't already have, and it doesn't allow for much in the way of public accountability. Last month my colleague from Calgary-Foothills asked the minister some very pointed questions. He went line by line and asked the minister if he had the ability to create partnerships that support entrepreneurship and help businesses to grow and succeed. He went on to ask the minister if the minister had the power to help working people upgrade their skills and secure employment and increase the development and production of Alberta innovations. The answer to all these questions was, and I quote the minister: absolutely. End quote. That just proves how vacuous this legislation is, Madam Chair, a vacuous piece of legislation, indeed.

Now, according to section 4 of this act the minister must report on progress at least once a year to the Executive Council but then has no obligation to make those reports public. That's hardly the open and transparent government promised during the election, a flaw the NDP pointed out the former government continually lacked. Unfortunately for transparency, the Executive Council is under no real obligation to release these reports. Even the reporting is unqualified. It could simply be a verbal update to the Executive Council from a minister or a delegated official.

Mr. Rodney: You mean voice mode?

Mr. Loewen: Simple voice mode, as it were.

The reporting requirements are flimsy, at best; nonexistent would be more accurate.

Madam Chair, Bill 1, the minister's mandate letter, represents another miss by this government. It's delusion of action on jobs, another failure to propose some real solutions. It provides no relief to families, small business, or our hurting energy sector. It contains no indication of what the NDP will actually do for Albertans, and for that reason I will not be supporting this bill.

Now, when the minister brought this bill forward, he said: "That's why our government's number one priority is to help Alberta get through this downturn." This bill was introduced, I believe, on March 8, and today is May 18. My question is: if this is this government's number one priority and if this bill has any hope of doing anything, why are we sitting here on May 18, almost two and a half months later, waiting for this bill to be passed? Is it that important?

He went on to say: "Bill 1, Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act, will give the government additional tools to carry out its Alberta jobs plan to do just that." Again, the question is: what additional tools? All the same tools the minister had in the first place. I guess it's understandable why the minister hasn't created one job. It's because he's still waiting to start work, and Albertans are waiting for him to start work, too.

Now, of course, he went on to say, in his rhetoric:

They propose reckless and extreme cuts that will make a bad situation worse, billions of dollars in cuts to front-line services; firing thousands of teachers and nurses; cutting supports for seniors; and abandoning the most vulnerable; no new schools, hospitals, or roads; and no plan to open new markets.

Well, the Premier has used some choice words in the past, that I won't reiterate here because of unparliamentary language. What I will say is that those comments from the minister are unsubstantiated, and they're not true. The facts are, Madam Chair, that the Wildrose have always stated that the reductions plans will not result in any loss of front-line staff. That is fact. That is in print, and the minister has absolutely no basis to make the claims that he made.

It was interesting in estimates to hear the Energy minister get up and say that she cut 2 per cent from her budget and did not lose one front-line staff. So my question is: how can a minister cut 2 per cent from her budget and not lose one front-line staff, but if the Wildrose was to suggest a 2 per cent cut, automatically it would be that thousands of teachers and doctors and nurses would be fired? I would find that amusing if it wasn't so absolutely wrong.

This is a quote again from the minister.

Alberta is known for its healthy small-business landscape and entrepreneurial spirit; 95 per cent of all businesses in the province are small businesses. Together they are responsible for 28 per cent of Alberta's GDP as well as 35 per cent of all private-sector employment in the province.

With this importance of small business, which, of course, we on this side of the House recognize, how can this government come up with this small-business tax reduction of 1 per cent in its budget when they flatly turned it down as one of our amendments last year? In fact, not only did they turn down the Wildrose suggestion of the exact same thing last year, but then we came and said: how about a .1 per cent reduction in small-business tax, just a token to small business in Alberta to show that government cares? And what did they do? They voted that down, too. Now, of course, they come up and say: oh, the 1 per cent here is a great idea now. But when Wildrose proposed it last year: absolutely not, not even .1 per cent.

We've heard this government say that the opposition wants them to fail. That is simply not true. That's why we tell this government when they're off track. We come up with amendments. We come up with suggestions. We come up with plans. We make these well-intentioned amendments to their bills to help out, to help Albertans because we know that when this government fails, they fail Albertans, and that hurts Albertans. So to suggest that we want this is reprehensible.

Far too often, though, we have to tell this government: I told you so. Nobody wants to hear it, and we don't want to say it, but unfortunately we have to do that once in a while because this government fails to get things right the first time. They're constantly going on their ideological bent, that detracts from the opportunities that Albertans expect.

Again, Bill 1: I won't be supporting it. It's a vacuous bill. That's a great way to put it. It does nothing for Albertans; therefore, I can't support it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Madam Chair, I have some amendments, and I have the requisite copies.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A1.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. Mr. Panda to move that Bill 1, Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act, be amended in section 2 by renumbering it as section 2(1) and by adding the following after subsection (1):

(2) Prior to the establishment of any program under subsection (1), the Minister shall ensure that a member of the Executive Council introduces into the Legislative Assembly a motion that would require a committee of the Assembly to review the program and report back to the Assembly.

(3) The Minister shall not take any steps to implement a new program, including the signing of any agreements respecting that program, until the committee has submitted its report to the Assembly under subsection (2).

The Chair: Any members wishing to speak to the amendment?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. This government has a track record of creating programs that fail, cause protests, and are just completely useless. Therefore, we have created an amendment that will help this government create valuable programs for Albertans. This amendment will provide the government with a place to revise their programs before wasting valuable taxpayers' money on implementing programs that are doomed to fail. The committee will be struck to go over the programs in detail, and each member would have the opportunity to give their input and point out potential problems of the program.

Additionally, this committee could consult on these programs before – the key word is “before” – the program is implemented. We could contact experts on the program and get their input on how to make it better. There would be no more protests happening due to lack of consultation. After the committee has consulted and crafted the program into something valuable for Albertans, then the program could be implemented. This is just one extra step to ensure that Albertans get the best value for their taxes.

I encourage every member here to vote for this amendment to ensure that every program the minister would like to create with this bill is valuable for Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. When we're looking at creating amendments to any act, we need to be looking at how to make it better, and the fact is that when we're looking at this bill, really, we need to be asking the question: is there accountability? Now, we've got a job description here but no accountability.

This bill actually doesn't just affect itself; it actually affects multiple ministries. If we look at the bill itself, the establishment of programs, section 2(d), “Help working people upgrade their skills and secure employment,” that tells me that we need the minister to be working with the Minister of Labour, and we also need the minister to be working with the minister of postsecondaries. Now, what's important here is that in the end what we're seeing is the minister actually working with all ministries, in the end needing to make sure that not only these ministries are consulted but also the stakeholders of all of these ministries as well.

Now, how do we do that? Well, we can't do that with a lack of transparency. We can't do that with a lack of accountability. What we need to be looking at is, really: how exactly can we facilitate this? This is where this amendment comes in. “The Minister shall ensure that a member of the Executive Council introduces into the Legislative Assembly a motion that would require a committee of the Assembly to review the program and report back to the Assembly.” That means that we're actually involving MLAs in this as well. That means that we're involving everybody in this Chamber in the direction of where our province is going.

Now, we've already seen a failed program put out, the job creation program, and we've heard over and over again that it didn't create any jobs. That I would agree with.

The fact is that we're also bringing out new tax credits. Now, these tax credits are brought out by the ministry, and we have no foundation to work with. It's just: we're going to bring out $250 million of corporate welfare, possibly, and we don't even know how or what entities are going to be involved in this. It's bringing out a plan with no plan. Now, that is why we need to make sure that the minister thinks this stuff out before he just goes and launches something that may in some cases put taxpayers' money at risk.

We are stewards of Alberta, and the fact that we're bringing out three different programs, I believe, through the economic development ministry, with a more complex set of rules and with no description of how they will be implemented, distresses me no end. The fact is that this program is not only going to affect our businesses today, because this program is a tax credit. Now, what's going to happen is that businesses can apply for this credit after their year-end has been done. So we're looking a full year, maybe a year and a half, two years down the road before we can even see any of the money, that $250 million that's being put out, saving the Alberta economy. This is a ludicrous move.

We need jobs in my riding. Already we're seeing rates of almost 10 per cent unemployment in my riding, and the minister is putting this ministry forward to say: we're going to create jobs. Does the minister not have faith in the Minister of Labour? Does the minister not have faith in the postsecondary minister? We need to ask these questions because in the end what we need to be looking at is: what is this minister going to do? Why are we waiting for Bill 1 before he starts his job? Why are we not moving forward and actually creating employment for Albertans, especially in the northern communities where we need it the most?

This is sad. This truly is sad, that we have a whole ministry that is moving forward in no direction. No direction. Creating Bill 1, three pages saying, “This is what I’m going to do,” is not the right direction. It’s amazing that a ministry has focused their whole attention on this waste-of-time bill when we need jobs in my riding. We need jobs across Alberta. We need to help Albertans through this economic downturn, and we’re not seeing it – we’re not seeing it – from this government. We need to move forward. It is legislation like this that is holding up the Legislature on things that are important, and we need to be moving this whole process forward to actually make an impact for Albertans.

Now, we have seen some legislation come through from the government that I agree with, and that legislation, being put through by some of the other ministers, is commendable. Why is Economic Development and Trade not taking the route that his fellow ministers are moving in? Not all of the legislation we’ve seen put forward is a waste of time. Actually, a lot of it is moving Alberta forward. We may not agree with all of the legislation that the government is bringing forth, but you will find that there are a lot of times where the opposition is trying to help the government move forward with its bills to try and make a better Alberta – a better Alberta – and this is not what this is doing.

This is creating a whole lot more – what? – amendments that are going to come later on, when the minister realizes that this didn’t cover, actually, what he needs to do? Does this mean that we’re actually going to create other legislation to add to this? Has this started a process of actually describing what all of the ministers are going to need to do? Are we going to be going through Bill 1 for every ministry? These ministers already can do these jobs. They know what they can do. Why the government hasn’t just gotten rid of this legislation is beyond me.

Now, let’s go to the point of talking about the fact that we have a ministry that is spending millions and millions of dollars and consulting afterwards. Now, I will say that we’re looking at creating an amendment that will actually change how the government is going to deal with the spending by this ministry. We need to have some accountability, and that’s through MLAs on the committee being able to facilitate decisions on where this government is going, and the only way we can do that is by voting for this amendment. This amendment actually will bring accountability. We need to bring accountability because we’ve seen what happened in the past when there was no accountability.

In closing, I encourage all of my colleagues to vote for this amendment because in the end we need to make sure that Albertans see that we are an accountable, transparent government.

Thank you very much.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Back on the main bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. The title of this bill, Bill 1, is the Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act. My clever colleague the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster calls it the Seinfeld bill because, of course, like the TV show, it’s a bill about . . .

Some Hon. Members: Nothing.

Mr. Rodney: . . . nothing. Thank you very much.

Similarly, with sincere apologies to William Shakespeare, I’ve come to think about it as Much Ado About . . .

Mr. Rodney: This was not prerehearsed, Madam Chair. It just emanates from the Chamber.

In fact, in reading this bill, which does not take long at all, it is almost as humorous as the Bard’s classic farce. Let’s explore why. To begin with, when choosing to make Bill 1 the flagship legislation of this Second Session of the 29th Legislature, this government has told every Albertan that Bill 1 represents one of its key objectives. Job creation certainly sounds noble, doesn’t it? Well, it is noble, and it’s keenly, keenly necessary. Except this piece of legislation contains – wait for it . . .

Some Hon. Members: Nothing.

Mr. Rodney: . . . nothing, and the government’s job-creation plan so far has come to nothing. There’s that word again.

Budget 2015, unveiled last fall, introduced a job-creation tax credit that was going to create – do you remember the number? – 27,000 jobs. Wouldn’t that have been fantastic? Except the job-creation tax credit created how many jobs?

Some Hon. Members: One.

Mr. Rodney: Some would say one. Not one single Albertan was put to work because of this tax credit, which business could not use, except for the one ministerial appointment.

Within a few months the government abandoned its only job-creation plan. But Albertans are telling us loudly and clearly that they want to see a government that supports job creation. What should a government without ideas do? Well, how about creating a flagship piece of legislation that has “job creation” in its title? It’s a great idea, except Bill 1 is empty.

Just as a point of information and clarification, a flagship is the vessel in a fleet that carries the admiral. This flagship does have an admiral in the form of a minister of the Crown, but the admiral is alone on the deck of a ship without any cargo. I could push this analogy a whole lot further – and it would be a whole lot more fun – but it would not be flattering, so I will restrain myself here today.

Madam Chair, the preamble to Bill 1 is a fascinating read. We apparently need new legislation to tell us that “all areas of Alberta, from rural communities and indigenous communities to the largest cities, will benefit from a stronger and more diversified economy.” Well, thank you very much, Bill 1, but I am really quite sure that Albertans clear across the province already knew that, I’m afraid, a little bit too well, especially these days.

What Bill 1 fails to mention is the rural economic development plan, which was created through thorough consultation with rural residents and communities in the last year of our previous government’s mandate. The whole premise of the plan was to build upon the successful economic diversification that was already going on. People weren’t just surviving; they were thriving. Perhaps the minister of economic development would do well to maybe glance at that report as it might help him to do his job as laid out in this mandate letter. Sorry. I meant legislation. Right.

Sticking with the preamble, we see a lot of talk about finding new markets for Alberta. Again nothing new here, sadly and inexcusably. Alberta has long been known for working hard to open markets and to keep them open and growing. A good example of that, Madam Chair, is the Ports-to-Plains trade corridor. I haven’t heard much about that lately. Not too long ago Alberta was a valued, significant part of this corridor, which went from Fort McMurray and Grande Prairie all the way to the Gulf of Mexico. Part of the support for Ports-to-Plains included the Keystone XL pipeline. Remember that one, Minister? That’s the pipeline that your government decided to abandon.

If we turn to page 2 of the bill, we come to the substance of the legislation, except there is . . .

Some Hon. Members: None.

Mr. Rodney: . . . none. Right.

The bill simply tells us what the minister may do, which previous ministers have been doing for years and decades already. If the minister is dependent on this bill to give him ideas for economic development, well, what about that minister’s colleagues? Do they, too, need legislated mandate letters to tell them how they might handle their portfolios? If we’re all going to receive legislated mandate letters, the House won’t have any time at all to deal with the real business that Albertans expect of us, and, Madam Chair, that’s ridiculous. It’s just untenable.

If we turn to section 3(2), here’s where we learn that should the minister want to do something of substance, he must introduce a bill in the Assembly. I don’t think people need to be policy wonks to understand that this is just extremely time-consuming. Would it ever reveal any real results? There’s just no proof that it ever could or would.

This so-called enabling legislation does not enable the minister to do anything. In fact, some have told me that it actually disables the minister, and therein lies the farce of Bill 1. It clearly pays lip service to job creation and nothing more.

But we are not done exploring Bill 1. There is still an entire half page more. Half a page. In section 5 we learn that the minister may establish panels or committees to provide advice to him. Again, anyone in cabinet knows that that’s been happening ever since we’ve had a parliamentary system.

I do have one question for the minister. If he can establish panels and committees, can he not also appoint them? I’ve asked the Premier about representation on the Premier’s Advisory Committee on the Economy in the past, including all Albertans but especially our indigenous Albertans. Can the minister perhaps now make an appointment? There might be something positive that could come out of Bill 1.

Finally, I suppose a person could congratulate the government for its flagship bill for one important reason. As our hon. colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays likes to remind the minister, whenever the term “Bill 1” arises in this House, he says that it has been indeed successful in creating one job, and that would be the minister’s. At least that’s one more job created in Alberta, one more than the government’s last job-creation initiative.

With that, I thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Yeah. Madam Chair, I have another amendment to present, and I have the requisite copies.

The Chair: This will be amendment A2.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Panda: I move that Bill 1, Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act, be amended by striking out section 4 and substituting the following:

Reports

4(1) The Minister must, at least annually, and more frequently if the Premier directs, prepare a report outlining:

- (a) the Minister’s progress in establishing and implementing any programs under section 2, and
  - (b) the number of jobs created by all programs established under section 2.
- (2) When prepared, a report under subsection (1) must
- (a) be laid before the Legislative Assembly by the Minister if the Assembly is then sitting or, if it is not then sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting, and
  - (b) be posted on a public website of the ministry of the Minister, regardless of whether it has first been laid before the Assembly under clause (a).

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Did you wish to continue speaking on the amendment?

Mr. Panda: Sure. I’d like to.

The Chair: Continue.

Mr. Panda: Madam Chair, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed mentioned the parliamentary system. I’m still learning. This is my first time proposing amendments to a bill in the hope that, you know, people are consistent in their voting patterns and all that in the House. But I’m a little bit confused because when the Member for West Yellowhead brought his motion, Motion 502, it asked the government to consult energy workers when they bring in new bills. We all supported it. With my previous amendment, all we are trying to do is make the bill better.

We all agree in the House, including the members opposite, that Bill 1 lacks details. Bill 1 is not required. The minister already has the powers he needs. If they really believe that Bill 1 has all that usefulness and utility, probably the members from my neighbouring ridings, Calgary-Hawkwood or Calgary-Klein, would have stood up in the House and spoken in support of it. The fact that no member from the government bench has spoken in support of Bill 1 itself tells us that there is something wrong with the bill. That's what I thought, actually, when I proposed the first amendment, although in my initial speech I said that I won't support Bill 1 because there is nothing good in the bill. But then I changed my mind, and I brought in an amendment to make it better because that's what we are paid to do, to make it work. That's why we are here, to help the minister make it work so that he can actually create jobs. He can take credit for it.

Anyway, Madam Chair, this second amendment, section 4(1), that I propose, gives some much-needed meat to this bill. As the bill sits at the moment, the ministry is required to report to Executive Council once a year. It gives zero details of what that report should entail. For all we know, it could be the minister saying that his programs are going great. Not only that, but the House and the public will never find out the details of the report.

Thus, this amendment is twofold. The first part outlines what the report should entail. It should entail the progress in establishing and implementing any programs under section 2 of this bill. Since the title of this bill has "job creation" in it, this amendment also states that the minister must detail how many jobs have been created through the programs under section 2. With these two additions, the minister will be held to account in detail, in an open and transparent way.

The second part of this amendment is to publish this report to the House instead of the Executive Council. That way, this report, that details what the minister is actually doing, will be public knowledge. There is no reason to do things in secret, like other governments did before. Albertans do not want a government who prepares and delivers reports in secret. This is the government's flagship bill, and the results of this bill, if any, need to be made public. Combined, the two parts of this amendment will provide the minister with some accountability to the public. It changes nothing else about the bill other than the reporting aspect. If this is voted down, then the public should consider whether or not this government actually intends to follow through with their plans or if this is actually a useless bill, as we have been saying for weeks.

I hope the members opposite and the third-party members will support this amendment for the reasons I gave. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? Are you wishing to speak to the amendment, hon. minister?

Mr. Bilous: Yes, please. I'll be very brief, Madam Chair. I want to thank the member for bringing forward this amendment. Although I do respect and agree with the spirit of this amendment, I can assure this House that reporting on progress will be an ongoing matter not only with the Assembly, quite frankly, but with all Albertans as they're very interested. I mean, the economy is their number one priority; it's the number one priority of our government.

Working with the private sector, the job creators, government can only set the right conditions and support our business and industry throughout the province in all sectors. It is the private sector that creates jobs. I can assure this House that we will be continuing with ongoing dialogue with Albertans to know exactly what our government is doing and reporting progress on that on an ongoing basis.

Therefore, this amendment is not necessary, and I will not be supporting it. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Just briefly, Madam Chair. Obviously, this amendment is needed. This legislation is fairly empty, yet it seemed like the hon. minister needed a piece of legislation to outline specifically what his job was going to do. Now he's telling us that, no, it is government's job to report all the time. Well, frankly, if that's the case, why isn't this already in this legislation? There's no compulsion on the minister's part to respond to anybody but the Executive Council in this legislation. We need this amendment because, obviously, this minister needs that much micromanagement.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A2? I see none.

The Chair: Back on the main bill. Are there any further comments with respect to the bill? The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that we rise and report progress on Bill 1 and that we rise and report Bill 12.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 12. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 1. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 17
Appropriation Act, 2016

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 17, the Appropriation Act, 2016.

This act will provide funding authority to the offices of the Legislative Assembly and the government for the 2016-17 fiscal year. The schedule to the act provides amounts that were presented in greater detail by the 2016-17 government and Legislative Assembly estimates tabled on April 14, 2016. These estimates were subsequently debated by standing committees and voted on in Committee of Supply.

This Appropriation Act will enable the implementation of the Alberta jobs plan, the government's response to the most challenging economic downturn in a generation. The plan has four key pillars: supporting families, investing in infrastructure, diversifying our energy industry and markets, and supporting Alberta businesses.

Madam Speaker, the Alberta jobs plan introduces more supports for businesses with a two-year, $250 million package of initiatives, including the creation of two important new tax credits to promote early-stage capital investment. The new Alberta investor tax credit provides a credit for those investing in eligible small and medium-sized enterprises, and the capital investment tax credit provides credits for the first-time acquisition of new or used property or spending in value-added agriculture, tourism infrastructure, culture, manufacturing, and processing industries. The new tax credits are estimated at $165 million over two years.

The Alberta jobs plan also reflects our belief that business leaders and financial experts know best how to support business. We are investing in the entrepreneurship incubator program to help small and medium-sized businesses bring their ideas to market; we are providing $10 million in new funding to Innovate Calgary, TEC Edmonton, and regional commercialization organizations to support innovation and job creation; and we have committed $10 million to expand the agrivalue processing incubator program. This will support further success in creating new companies in Alberta's food industry.

Other supports for business include an investment of $5 million to help Alberta attract investments and new headquarters to our province and $10 million for the regional economic development program, which supports community and business leaders to collaborate on business strategies to promote a wide range of industries across the province, from tourism to value-added processing.

In addition, our government announced in February the petrochemical diversification program. This will encourage companies to invest in development of new petrochemical facilities. The goal of this program is to attract investment, create jobs, and provide long-term benefits to Albertans. We expect the new petrochemical facilities to generate about 3,000 construction jobs and more than a thousand permanent direct and indirect jobs. These job-creation initiatives reflect our government's central commitment to Albertans. It says: we have your back during these challenging economic times.

Madam Speaker, the Alberta jobs plan also makes a historic investment in our infrastructure, the lifeblood of the modern, 21st-century economy. We're investing in a five-year, $34.8 billion capital plan that will build and upgrade roads, transit, schools, and hospitals right across the province. Our funding commitments over the next five years include $9 billion in municipal infrastructure support over five years, as I said, including $6.1 billion under the municipal sustainability initiative; $6.2 billion for capital maintenance and renewal; $4.6 billion for roads and bridges, including Calgary and Edmonton's ring roads; $3.5 billion for health facilities and equipment, including $1.2 billion for the new Calgary cancer centre and $365 million to improve access to long-term care facility housing right across the province; $3.5 billion for schools, including $2.9 billion to complete the 200 new and modernization projects previously announced, with $500 million for future projects; and $900 million for affordable housing.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, all members of this Chamber know well that our province has enjoyed prosperity when oil prices have been high, but we've also felt the pain when oil prices have plummeted. Every Albertan is feeling the pain right now. We all see it every day. That is why our government has vowed to get off the royalties rollercoaster. Therefore, a key pillar of the Alberta jobs plan is to diversify our energy industry and open up new markets.

In addition to the measures I've already discussed, Budget 2016 takes a historic step to implement the climate leadership plan. This plan is an important step to achieve our energy goals. It will phase out our coal emissions and develop more renewable energies. It will implement a new carbon price on greenhouse gas emissions, and it will legislate an oil sands emissions limit and employ a new methane emissions reduction plan for the oil and gas sector. Mr. Speaker, to be clear now, the carbon levy is a key component of the climate strategy, and every single penny of the levy raised will be rebated back to Albertans or recycled back into the economy. That's the levy. The climate leadership plan demonstrates that Albertans are committed to being one of the most environmentally responsible, progressive energy producers in the world, and this plan will also help us open up new markets for our energy products and will ensure that Albertans get full value from the energy we sell.

Mr. Speaker, our government is also determined to help families get back on their feet during these tough economic times. Supporting Alberta's families is a key pillar of our jobs plan, that takes steps to ensure families who are affected by the downturn are supported. This summer we are implementing the Alberta child benefit and enhancing the Alberta family employment tax credit. Together these will support about 380,000 children, and those benefits will start to flow in July.

We're fully funding enrolment growth in our public schools and increasing operating grants in all of our universities, colleges, and postsecondary institutions. The Alberta jobs plan also invests $15 million in new funding to help apprentices complete their training and work experience requirements and $10 million for the training for work program. This program will help unemployed or marginally employed Albertans, including women, indigenous people, and newcomers, secure and maintain employment in high-demand jobs.

Mr. Speaker, as I conclude, let me be clear that Budget 2016 also contains important initiatives to control spending. For example, some of the cost-saving initiatives include amalgamating or dissolving 26 agencies, boards, and commissions; freezing management salaries at government agencies, boards, and commissions; freezing salaries for cabinet, MLAs, and political staff for the entire term of this Legislature; freezing senior public servant salaries for two years; and reducing budgets for salaries and supplies in government departments by nearly 2 per cent this year. As this fiscal year continues, perhaps as early as this afternoon I'll have more to say on measures that our government will be taking to find cost efficiencies across government.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, let me be clear that Budget 2016 maintains the key advantages that make Alberta a great place to live, work, and to start a business. We continue to have the lowest overall tax regime in Canada, no provincial sales tax, no payroll tax, and no health care premiums. And as members of this Chamber know well, we are supporting Alberta's small businesses with a one-third cut to the small-business tax rate, from 3 per cent to 2 per cent.

In summary, the Appropriation Act before you enables us to implement the Alberta jobs plan and support Albertans during these tough times. This act will create the conditions for 100,000 new jobs and will support Albertans when they need our help most. I ask all members of this Chamber to support this bill, support jobs, and support Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other members who would like to speak to Bill 17?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, it's my honour to rise today and speak to Bill 17, the Appropriation Act, 2016, the next stage of our budget debate here. I certainly welcome the Minister of Finance to be here for the full debate and to engage back and forth so that he can answer questions from the Official Opposition.

This budget is the latest reckless budget in a very long series of reckless budgets in this province. This is the ninth consecutive consolidated deficit in this province. On a consolidated basis we have run deficits every single year since 2008. We have seen our net financial assets in this province decline by almost $65 billion. We used to have zero debt and $17 billion in the rainy-day sustainability fund. We had zero debt and 17 billion bucks in the bank. Today we have about zero bucks left in the rainy-day fund and have a debt that will soon exceed $58 billion, before the next election.

This is grossly irresponsible. This is intergenerational theft, Mr. Speaker. This is taking from future generations to pay for today. To take money that doesn't belong to you is not right. To take from future generations, to tax future generations before they have had any chance to even vote for the politicians making the decisions that we're making today, is intergenerational theft. Today's deficits are tomorrow's taxes.

We've got a bunch of chirping MLAs over there who have no interest in making responsible decisions. They have an interest in only spending as much as they can to try and buy off the electorate to try and get re-elected. But some of us in this Chamber, Mr. Speaker, take a longer term view of things. I believe that we should hold our finances as a trust, the way we should view the environment. Just as we inherit an environment today, we are expected to pass on an environment to our children and our grandchildren that is, at the very least, no worse – no worse – than the environment we inherited. We should always try to pass on an environment that is better to future generations and certainly not any worse.

We should take the same view of our finances, Mr. Speaker. We should take an intergenerational, big-picture view of things, not just short-term decisions to try and get us re-elected in three years. That's irresponsible. We should be responsible with our finances across the generations. Instead, we are seeing a $60 billion decline in our net financial assets over the last decade. We are seeing a debt that will exceed $50 billion in just a few short years, and it's not enough.

Just four and a half months ago the Minister of Finance had the gall to sit right across from me in this Chamber and introduce a bill that he said would provide a reasonable cap on our debt, at 15 per cent of debt to GDP. That was a significant increase to the debt ceiling in this province, and he repeated until he was blue in the face, Mr. Speaker, that 15 per cent was the absolute highest we would ever, ever go. Famous last words from the last session.

Just four and a half months later the Minister of Finance, accompanying this budget, has to bring forward another bill to repeal his own debt ceiling. I would be embarrassed if I was the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. I hope that he will be able to stand up in this Chamber and defend his decisions on repealing his own debt ceiling just a few short months after he touted it as a measure of fiscal responsibility. We said it then, that it was not going to hold water, that we would be like the U.S. Congress, where every nine months we come back to the Legislature and state that we need to increase the debt ceiling just a little bit more and then nine months later do it again, and again, and again.

I said this years ago, when the former government repealed Ralph Klein's strict laws against debt and borrowing in this province. We were boiling the frog very slowly in this province, going from a debt-free status with money in the bank to spending the sustainability fund to going back into debt only for capital to going into debt for capital and operations but limited to 15 per cent and now no limit whatsoever. This is grossly irresponsible, Mr. Speaker.

Now, Alberta has a very serious spending problem. We spent more than two and a half thousand dollars more per capita on program spending in this province than British Columbia. Now, British Columbia is not some right-wing, conservative dystopia without roads, police, firefighters, nurses, and teachers. British Columbia is governed by Liberals, probably the least offensive brand of Liberalism in the country, but it is governed by a Liberal government that is providing a high quality of public services, yet they manage to spend two and a half thousand dollars less per capita.

Compared to Ontario, a socialist basket case, we are spending three and a half thousand dollars more per capita. An absolute basket case of a province, facing insolvency, with the largest subnational sovereign debt in the world is spending three and a half thousand dollars less per capita than Alberta on programs, and these members over here have the guts to say that cutting a single dollar of spending out of this government will result in mass layoffs of nurses, doctors, and teachers. If that's not untruthful, Mr. Speaker, I don't know what is.

Now, what's their plan moving forward? What's the plan moving forward? They have no plan. They have said that they're going to control costs, but there's no evidence of it in their budget. They continue to increase spending in every single year of their plan. There is little assurance in the way of details in their budget that would give us any confidence that they will even be able to hold to it.

They have gone out and hired big union bosses from the AUPE to go from one side of the table to sit on the other side of the table, so we're going to have AUPE-friendly governments negotiating with AUPE negotiators with AUPE, who happened to staff their elections. That's a conflict of interest, Mr. Speaker. Taxpayers are not going to be represented at that table. All you're going to see is big government unions negotiating with big government unions for the benefit of a government-first government.

Now, this government has taken very little in the way of any spending restraint, but they've shown no restraint whatsoever when it comes to taxes. Now, they like to pat themselves on the back for the small-business tax cut proposed by the Official Opposition. When the Official Opposition proposed the exact same tax cut – the exact same tax cut – in the spring session of 2015, they did not have the guts to vote for it then.

I know that when the four veteran members of that caucus sat in the back corner as the fourth party just over a year ago, they would say constantly to the former government: why would you not accept our amendments just because they're from the opposition? Good ideas come from all parties. No party has a monopoly on good ideas, as much as we all tend to think that our own parties do. No party has a monopoly on good ideas. But when the Official Opposition put forward an amendment to their own bill to reduce the small business tax rate from 3 per cent to 2 per cent, they said that it would be reckless and that they couldn't possibly vote for it. They voted against it even though every single party in the Legislature other than the government supported it. Then just a year later they turn around and say: it's our idea, and no one else had anything to do with it.

Absolute power corrupts absolutely, Mr. Speaker. The democratic principles that the four veteran members on the government side used to hold when they were in opposition seem to have really gone by the wayside. I know that the minister of economic development would not agree with himself if he was debating himself from opposition. He would stand up in this Legislature and say that no party has a monopoly on good ideas and that if the government hears a good idea, they should accept it. That is the one bright spot, though, in this budget, that the government has accepted the Official Opposition's idea to cut the small business tax rate. Now, that's the only good piece.

In the small spring session of 2015 the government brought in a rash of new taxes. They kept in place several of the proposed taxes from the outgoing government in the budget that was not passed. In addition, they raised business taxes in this province by 20 per cent, and they finally abolished the once-proud flat-tax system in this province, the flat-tax system in this province that made us the shining example in this country of fiscal rectitude, of fiscal conservatism. That was the very foundation of the Alberta advantage, Mr. Speaker.

I am proud to stand for real fiscally conservative policies like the idea that if you are willing to work hard, if you are willing to take risks and start a small business, if you're willing to bust your back, the government should not penalize you for earning more. That is real equality, Mr. Speaker. That is the Alberta advantage that this party stands for and that I wish this government would stand for. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, keep it down.

Mr. Fildebrandt: If 10 per cent is good enough for God, it should be good enough for the government. Some of us believe in God; some of us believe in government. Mr. Speaker, I can tell that you agree.

In the fall budget they went further, implementing new taxes on things like gasoline and diesel, and now with this . . .

An Hon. Member: Hallelujah.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'm getting more amens from the speakers over there. I would remind them that we're no longer on Bill 1, as enjoyable as that debate was.

This budget is now bringing forward a massive new carbon tax, a $3 billion carbon tax that is going to penalize businesses, families, and individuals in this province. It is going to hammer our number one key industry at a time when it's already on its knees. When the price of oil has plummeted, when we are experiencing an already natural economic slowdown, this government is going to kick the knees from under our oil and gas industry.

I represent Strathmore-Brooks, towns with very serious junior oil and gas servicing and drilling industries and many other ancillary industries, and they are getting hammered. The government may have consulted with big oil, to their credit, but they didn't talk to small oil. They didn't talk to medium oil. They didn't talk to the small drilling and service companies in places like Brooks that are getting hammered, that are closing their doors. Some of them are barely keeping their doors open to keep alive, but they're laying off employees, just waiting for this to pass while others are shutting down outright. They're going to kneecap them, and they're going to hammer families with a backdoor PST, the equivalent of a 3 to 4 per cent PST on Alberta families, when they promised that they would never do it. That's shameful, Mr. Speaker.

Now, I know that the Minister of Finance and members on the government side love to call it a levy. Well, Mr. Speaker, if it quacks like a tax, if it sounds like a tax, if it hurts your wallet like a tax, what is it?

Some Hon. Members: A tax.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, I know that even the government would agree with me.

Now, I would encourage all members of the House who have the fiscal plan handy to open to page 22. There is a table here that I find very interesting. It lists the government's different taxes: personal income tax, corporate tax, education property tax, other taxes, and then it says something called "carbon levy." Then if you read the title of this table on page 22 – I would invite members to do that; I would invite the Minister of Finance to stand up and read the title of it – it reads, "Tax Revenue". You can call it whatever you want, Mr. Speaker. You could call it an environmental levy. You could call it anything you want, but at the end of the day it's a tax, and it's going to hit Albertans hard like a tax.

Now, they're saying that they're going to do this for social licence. Well, what are their lefty friends in Ontario doing right now? They are proposing a ban on natural gas. It's Flintstones policy, Mr. Speaker. They are proposing to ban natural gas. It is absolute insanity. Ideologically the closest aligned government to the NDP in Canada is probably the Ontario Liberals – the Ontario Liberals – and they're proposing to ban natural gas in Ontario. It is absolute insanity. So what kind of social licence success is this? What kind of social licence is this? It's not succeeding.

Now, we want this government to succeed. I want pipelines built. I want market access. I know that members of the Official Opposition and, I would dare say, even the other opposition parties all want what is best for Alberta here, and that is to get pipeline access and market access to international markets here, but buying people off with this promise of a carbon tax, which will do nothing to lower global emissions, is a fraud. This is promising people that it's going to get pipelines built and market access before any are built.

So let's just try this on for size. If the government is saying that it's going to bring in a carbon tax, shouldn't we at least make it conditional first on there being pipelines built to the east, west, and south before we start hammering Albertan families?

So I'll summarize where we are at, Mr. Speaker. This government's plan to move forward is to pray. They are praying for a rise in oil prices. They are praying that the traditional roller coaster of oil and gas prices, that they promised to get off of, is going to go back up. Oil would need to be over a hundred dollars a barrel for this government to balance the budget. Over a hundred dollars a barrel. They blame the entire deficit on the price of oil, but no matter what the price of oil will be, pretty much, we're going to still be running a deficit. So this government's plan is to pray for high oil prices. It is to pray that their corporate welfare spending program is going to somehow pay off, that in three years they're going to be able to wave their magic wand, and through government state intervention into the economy they'll be able to forcibly diversify it to replace our entire oil and gas sector. They're living on a prayer.

Most importantly, they are praying that Albertans won't pay attention. They are praying that Albertans won't know how to read the balance sheets that see a meltdown of $60 billion in our net financial assets. They are praying that Albertans won't read this budget and see $50 billion of debt before the next election. They are praying that Albertans won't read this budget and see an ND PST carbon tax that is going to punish families and businesses in this province without any hope for market access or social licence in advance. They are praying that Albertans are not paying attention. But the Official Opposition is paying attention to it, and we are going to make them pay for it every step of the way.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I'm just asking for the unanimous consent of the Chamber, if they might, to revert to introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three grade 6 classes, which are behind me in the gallery right now. They are coming from the constituency of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, particularly from Rimbey elementary school: kids from Rimbey, of course, as well as the county of Ponoka, and communities such as Bluffton. A few weeks ago I had the pleasure of joining all three of these grade 6 classes for one social class at their school, and I can tell you that they've learned their curriculum this year very, very well, and they had very, very good questions and even answers, something that we don't see too often in this Chamber. With that said, I would ask that they would all rise with their chaperones and with their teachers and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. member, I had the privilege of meeting them before I came into the Assembly, and they said that you are a very nice MLA.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I'm pleased today to rise and talk on the bill at second reading. To start, I guess I want to focus on the consequences of this government's budget, this government's legislation, the huge increase in spending, the continuation of the high per capita spending. It's very, very fitting that we've just introduced three grade 6 classes, who, unfortunately, are going to be paying back these billions and billions of dollars of debt, never mind the $2 billion in annual interest in a short time. The consequences, of course, of the interest: we've seen in other provinces how interest has become the second- or the third-biggest line item, crowding out money that's needed for the very schools that hon. members are heckling me about; $2 billion a year in interest just three short years from now. I dare say that that's 80 brand new schools a year, never mind how many teachers, how many nurses, how many doctors, how many mental health workers, how many things we could do with that money instead, rather than paying banks, rather than paying affluent people more interest.

So what it's going to take away from the quality of Albertans' lives needs to be addressed. What we also need to know – it's also fitting that we started this morning talking about Bill 1, the government's on-paper-only attempt to diversify the income and add jobs. Surely, by now our friends across the floor must realize from all the businesspeople, from all the editorials we've seen written how all these new taxes, how these new regulations, how this uncertainty is either scaring business away or causing it to halt.

I read a few minutes ago that the new buyer of Sanjel in Calgary has closed the office. Let's add that to the hundred thousand jobs that have been lost since May 5 of last year. Let's add that to the, I think, somewhere around $50 billion that's not being invested in our province, money that adds jobs, money that we can tax and create services with, you know, a province that was home to the Alberta advantage, home to Albertans taking care of Albertans, families taking care of friends and each other and the landscape that we're at now. That's the second part of the consequences that greatly concern me.

Then there's the consequences of your budget and the extra spending and the extra taxing. I mean, the carbon tax clearly – clearly – is going to be a huge tax on Alberta families and communities. We've thrown numbers back and forth here on this side. We think it's at least a thousand dollars per Alberta family. Never mind that you guys from the Alberta government side are doubling gas tax. My goodness; Alberta families and consumers finally get a break on the price of gas, and you jump in to take it away from them. You know, it's amazing.

To me, one of the revealing things in the House three or four weeks ago was that I think the minister of environment said that lower income Albertans would be given a rebate equal to the GST rebate. I hope I heard that wrong because if that's right, that suggests to me that your government – your government – thinks it's a 5 per cent tax. As the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks said: a tax is a tax. It comes out of Albertans' pockets. It comes out of Alberta families' budgets. It comes out of our communities.

There's a huge rumour going around Medicine Hat now about some businesses about to close. Mr. Speaker, as you well know, we've lost lots. It would be unfortunate to lose more.

Yeah, the economy has changed, but the amount of money that Albertans have has changed dramatically. I spoke in this House about a month ago about a friend of mine who, fortunately, is still working the same job that he had a year and a half ago, taking the same money out of his corporation that he did a year and a half ago. Mr. Speaker, the net to himself is $800 a month less – $800 a month less – that he's not spending in men's clothing stores, that he's not spending in restaurants. He had a small business on the side, but without this $800, he decided it wasn't worth his effort, worth the risk to continue, so a couple of layoffs for a couple of employees. This friend takes care of his parents. Thank goodness he hasn't quit that yet.

You know, I also want to go on and talk a little bit about how we got here. The last speaker spoke about our high per capita spending. The last government, the Progressive Conservatives, had spending levels 20 per cent more on a per capita basis than the Canadian average, and what it led to was inflation and waste. Unfortunately, under this new government, when you had the opportunity to make changes, we have seen our scores in health care continue to slip. Alberta is not a leader in spite of spending the most money.

That brings me to my next point. This government has some rhetoric around bringing costs in line. As Health shadow minister I can't help but smile when the Minister of Health stands up and says that she's going to bend the cost curve. Instead of increasing it 6 per cent, as the last government used to, she's only going to increase it 3 per cent. Then I look at $240 million over budget last year. Mr. Speaker, at $20 million or $25 million a school how many schools could that $240 million have built? How many nurses, doctors, teachers, mental health workers would that have been?

11:50

Mr. Speaker, I guess my point here: it's a lot easier to say than it is to do. Like Bill 1, we have seen so little, almost no action when it comes to getting more value for the Alberta taxpayer out of this government. Yeah, we have rhetoric and talk. We run around and make these promises, but at the end of the day we have a government that's borrowing to buy the groceries, a government that's borrowing to keep the lights on, a government where three years from now every family in Alberta will be spending $2,000 per year just to pay the interest at the same time, with our high per capita spending, at the same time as our programs, especially in health care, are slipping. What have we seen this government do?

Mr. Nixon: Not much.

Mr. Barnes: Not much but hurt equity and fairness.

Alberta's unemployment rate will be 8 per cent in 2016, 7.5 per cent in 2017, above the national average by almost a full point. Mr. Speaker, when have we seen that? I absolutely know that a large part of that increase in unemployment is because of this government's ideology, this government's spending. The uncertainty they have caused has driven $50 billion of private investment out of the province.

I find it so disingenuous when this government stands up and says that we can afford to go into debt because we have the lowest debt-to-GDP ratio, and then inside of four months what was a debt ceiling is completely disregarded. Well, Mr. Speaker, we all know that Albertans will decide three years from now what the appropriate level of debt is. Can we afford to go into debt?

Yeah, you know, it's going to lower our credit rating. Albertans know that when your credit rating is lower, you pay a higher interest rate. Albertans know that when you have a lower credit rating, it's harder to borrow. There are more acquisition costs in bureaucracy to do the borrowing that has to be done. Albertans know that when their government is borrowing billions and billions of dollars, it makes it harder for private industry to compete, to borrow the same money, to actually create efficiency and jobs and investment and a long-term, innovative strategy that is based on finding new technologies, finding innovation, and finding ways to truly diversify the economy.

You know, the Finance minister stood up and said: the four pillars of the budget. I absolutely believe that he and the government have failed on all four, taking thousands of dollars out of families' pockets, taking thousands of dollars out of communities, so businesses will have more trouble attracting scarcer dollars, so families will have more trouble paying for their decisions, services they may want, holidays they may want, whatever they may want.

Infrastructure was the second pillar. We've seen very little on that other than an attempt to create a list, but, again, huge billions of dollars of unallocated amounts. Under the previous government the Wildrose opposition clearly showed how on a per capita basis we were spending double – double – what other provinces were spending and not receiving the extra value for the infrastructure. I don't know why the new government has stayed quiet on trying to get the taxpayer more value out of infrastructure.

The third pillar was diversification. Pick up any newspaper. Look on any blog. The uncertainty of the continuation of your high per capita spending, the uncertainty of your new taxes: the uncertainty that you cause has done more to hurt diversification by a long shot than it has to help.

The last pillar was to help small businesses. Well, you increased the tax, and then you put the tax back to where it was. I understand that you're some side of $700 million less in tax revenues than a year ago. Businesses are paying less tax there but, obviously, making way less money. Way to go there, too, guys. Good job.

You have failed on every single pillar, and you're spending $50 billion, the highest spending in Alberta's history. You've continued the last government's inefficient per capita spending. You have put Alberta families, Alberta job providers, job creators further in debt, further behind the eight ball.

Mr. Speaker, with that, I will state that I will be happy to vote against this bill at every step. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. Is it with respect to 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Cooper: I'm okay.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions for the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat under 29(2)(a)?

The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 17, the Appropriation Act, 2016. I wish I was rising to speak to a significantly different budget, one that didn't put the future of our province at risk, one that took a much longer term vision of the province, because there's one thing that I'm certain of, and it's that this NDP budget is making things worse. It's punishing families and businesses with risky, ideological policies. There are a number of different points in this budget that cause significant concern, particularly for families and the costs that are associated with raising a family in the Alberta of tomorrow because of this NDP government.

When we look at just the carbon tax alone, the carbon tax will punish everyday families and businesses and make life significantly more expensive. Everything from heating your house to the groceries you buy, Mr. Speaker, to driving your grandkids around to hockey practice will be more expensive thanks to this budget and to the NDP's carbon tax.

While the government would have you believe that every low-income Albertan will be fully compensated in the form of a rebate because of the program that they've initiated, nothing could be further from the truth. When you start to add up all of the costs that are associated with this tax, it is going to be significantly – significantly – higher than the $400 that their rebate provides at the full rebate. What that does is that it causes a significant amount of stress on families. It makes everything more expensive. We're going to see a significant increase in the cost of fuel, a significant increase in the cost of heating your home in the form of natural gas, and the big challenge here, Mr. Speaker, is how this tax will make everything more expensive.

I was speaking to the owner of a transportation company in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills just a number of weeks ago, and he fully intends to add into the cost of trucking a line item that says "carbon tax" because the costs are going to be passed along.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt; however, under Standing Order 4(2.1) the Assembly stands adjourned until 1:30 p.m.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, May 18, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my mother, Barb Phillips, and her partner, Mike McCague, seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. They are visiting here from Lethbridge, and I ask all members of the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members of the Olde Towne Beverly Historical Society in my riding of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. The Olde Towne Beverly Historical Society builds community spirit by collecting, sharing, and celebrating the stories of Beverly and its residents. The society preserves the community's historical documents, artifacts, and significant landmarks and also does an incredible job working with our schools to educate our young people on the history of Beverly. It's quite remarkable. Today we are joined by Dan Vriend, Alene Carter, Bill Pisarchuk, Bertha Pisarchuk, Harold Schlodder, Darlene Schlodder, Lee Speed, and Amanda Harriman-Gojtan. I'll ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the Pembina Hills public school board's board of trustees. I would ask that they please rise as I call their names: Jennifer Tuininga, board chair and trustee for Barrhead north; Sheri Watson, vice-chair and trustee for the town of Swan Hills; Annette Bokenfohr, trustee for Westlock south; Jackie Comeau, trustee, Westlock north; Jan Hoffart, trustee, town of Westlock; Judy Lefebvre, trustee for the town of Barrhead; Kim Webster, trustee for Barrhead south; and Colleen Symyrozum-Watt, superintendent. I would ask them to please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Taylor Stiles, Ryan O'Neill, and Ruth Plitt. Taylor, Ryan, and Ruth are members of the organizing committee for the 2016 Alberta Summer Games, taking place in the wonderful constituency of Leduc-Beaumont this summer, which I'll be speaking more about a little later today in my member's statement. Their hard work is essential to ensuring not only that the games will be a success but that Leduc-Beaumont will be ready to shine on the world stage as well. I would like them to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all of the members of the Assembly a group of people with a strong desire to step up and help their province by getting involved in the democratic process. All members know that we're able to stand in this place because of the incredible efforts of volunteers to organize and run constituency associations in all corners of the province. To that end, I would ask the following members of the Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville Wildrose Constituency Association to stand up and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: Jerry and Melanie Semen, Ed Clarke, and Matt Kastendieck.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other guests, hon. members? The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you two members of our Health team who I convinced to sneak in and watch question period today, and those are Tracy Kully and Lisa-Marie Gaucher. Both have been fantastic additions to our office. They've worked in this building for many years serving many ministers, and I am very proud to have them on our team in Health. Thank you very much. Please rise, and we can give them a welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Bonnyville-Cold Lake Response to Wildfire

Mr. Cyr: Excellent, Mr. Speaker. Today I couldn't be more proud of my home, the province of Alberta. I know that when the troubled times are behind us, Alberta will still be in Canada's future, and Fort McMurray will still be in an integral role. Fort McMurray is now heavy in our hearts, and we need to remember those evacuees who've lost their homes and livelihoods and who are in a state of confusion right now. Their grief can be felt across Alberta, and that includes my riding, Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

It fills my heart with pride to say that during the initial stages of the evacuations I immediately received calls from across the riding from people looking to help. Whether it was the reeve, mayors, councillors, residents, businesses, or local societies, everybody was ready and willing to help. Cold Lake and Bonnyville were named reception centres, and later Bonnyville was upgraded to an evacuation centre. It's the hard work and long hours that volunteers and workers across the constituency put in that I will always remember. Alberta Works, the local FCSS, food banks, city and town staff, and many, many more: these people are on the front lines, and we need to recognize that they have contributed significantly. Their contributions added to getting the evacuees food, water, shelter, information, and comfort.

This is also the time when we need to remember the local first responders, who ran towards the fire to lend a hand in saving one of our greatest cities in Alberta, Fort McMurray. These men and women took the ultimate risk to secure the safety of evacuees and their homes. I would also like to take this time to extend my most sincere thanks to everyone who is still fighting the fires in northern Alberta. All of Alberta is truly with you. Although this fire continues to burn, it is no match for the strength of our people when we come together.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Islamic Month of Sha'ban

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and recognize the month of Sha'ban according to the Islamic calendar. The word "Sha'ban" in Arabic is the combination of five words which translate as nobility, sublimity, piety, harmonious intimacy, and radiant light. Sha'ban precedes the month of Ramadan and is the eighth month of the Islamic lunar calendar. It is observed by Muslims as one of the blessed months, that hold mercy, compassion, and kindness of Allah.

This year May 8 was the first day of the month of Sha'ban. It is a month of celebration, catching up with friends, and practising compassion. The first celebrative occasion of this glorious month is on the third of Sha'ban, when the grandson and third descendant of Prophet Muhammad, peace be upon him, Husayn ibn Ali, was born. To mark this special date, Muslims gather together in their homes and mosques to share food, recite poems, and share thoughts and wisdom.

Next comes the 14th night of Sha'ban, a very blessed night, Mr. Speaker. In Persian it is called Laylatul-Bara'ah, and in Urdu, my mother tongue, it is called Shab-e-Baraat, meaning the night of salvation. On this night Muslims seek protection from calamities, acceptance of their repentance, and pledge to abstain from committing sins. All night long we recite prayers, keep fasts, and visit cemeteries to pray for the deceased. It is also said that on this night the departed souls of ancestors visit the houses of their friends and relatives.

1:40

The final Sha'ban celebration takes place on the 15th night. Shias celebrate the birthday of Muhammad ibn Hasan al-Mahdi as he was born on the 15th of Sha'ban. The birth of Mehdi is a grand celebration in the form of alms and prayers for his return; thus, Sha'ban is also known as the month of Prophet Muhammad, peace be upon him.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to wish all Muslims Sha'ban Mubarak. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've been requested to seek unanimous consent to introduce some guests that have just arrived.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you some of the finest councillors from Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo as well as our assistant from our office up in Fort McMurray. If you could all please stand as I call your names: first off, Councillor Tyran Ault, Councillor Phil Meagher, Councillor Jane Stroud, Councillor Julia Cardinal, Councillor Claris Voyageur, and, of course, our assistant, Vaughn Jessome. If you could give them the warm welcome of this Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to introduce two outstanding Albertans, Mr. David Yurdiga, the MP for Fort McMurray-Cold Lake, and his executive assistant, Angela Betts. I ask them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome from both sides of the House.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Buller Mountain Summit Climb 2016

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the past it's been an honour to be involved with expeditions which have raised awareness of those struggling with respiratory diseases and diabetes as well as those who are disabled here at home and students throughout the developing world through our Top of the World Society for Children.

Today I have a formal invitation for all Albertans to be part of an exciting event for an incredible cause right here in the Canadian Rockies, along with Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry Foundation and the Calgary Health Trust, who are Reaching the Summit for Mental Health and Wellness to heighten awareness and raise funds for veterans and their families who are suffering from the devastating consequences of depression, posttraumatic stress disorder, and other forms of mental illness.

On June 25, 25 climbers, including members of the military, will seek the summit of Mount Buller, and 50 hikers will scramble to the pass to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the death of Lieutenant Colonel Herbert Cecil Buller, who was killed in action leading the PPCLI. One group will be led by Laurie Skreslet, the first Canadian to climb Mount Everest, and it is my great honour to lead the other climbing team. To register or donate, please visit calgaryhealthtrust.ca and follow the links.

Mr. Speaker, alpine experiences may culminate in standing on top of the world, but they can also include risking your life to save another, treating horrendous injuries, getting there too late and carrying down the body of your mate, and dealing with the bottomless demands of a society that simply cannot relate to what you've gone through.

But that cannot compare, Mr. Speaker, with the experience of Corporal Ryan Forest, who writes:

When I returned [from Afghanistan], I came back a different man. I was withdrawn, paranoid, not sleeping, jumpy, depressed and the list [goes on]. It took a panic attack that seemed to last an entire night that led me to get help . . . [that] literally saved my life.

I encourage all Albertans to join us as we thank the men and women who literally put the lives . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Alberta Summer Games 2016

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a fantastic event soon to take place in my beautiful constituency of Leduc-Beaumont. For four days in July, from the 14th to the 17th, over 3,000 athletes, coaches, and officials from across Alberta will visit Leduc to compete, learn, and share experiences of a lifetime at the 2016 Alberta Summer Games. Young athletes representing 14 different sports will meet teammates and competitors from eight regional zones. Over 2,000 volunteers and 100-plus sponsors will pull together to make the 2016 Alberta Summer Games in Leduc the best-ever Alberta games.

Mr. Speaker, once upon a time I competed in discus and shot put in the BC Summer Games. It was an incredible experience that I still cherish to this day. I'm very much looking forward to these games as I know they will be a positive, life-changing event for many people.

I also have the pleasure of being the honorary board chair of the sustainability committee of these games. For these games in Leduc we are hoping to achieve 80 per cent waste diversion at the Leduc Recreation Centre, power the Leduc Recreation Centre with a hundred per cent clean energy, host a disposable water bottle free event – and I'll be donating water bottles to these games to help out – and educate thousands of visitors and residents about sustainability at the games.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, events like these don't happen overnight, so I would like to thank the volunteers and the board of directors, who have been working tirelessly to get us ready: John Bole, Dennis Nosyk, Darrell Huber, Fern Richardson, Darrell Melvie, Lynne Chalmers, Gary Kwasnecha, Megan Madden, Donna Tona, Doug Dungavell, Darren Demone, Bill Casey, Myron Keehn, Eugene Miller, and, of course, my guests that are here with me today.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage everyone to come visit Leduc, not only for the Summer Games but at any point and especially this July, and catch part of these best-ever games.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

St. Clement School Human Rights Event

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an exciting time for the students in the International Baccalaureate world school program at St. Clement school in my beautiful constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. Later tonight students are hosting Inquiry into Human Rights on their school campus. This event will engage peers and parents to know more about social justice and human rights issues. This year's central idea is Choices and Decision, the two most important pillars that affect people's access to opportunities. The students will share their understanding of commonalities that connect humans around the world, people's perspectives on the rights and responsibilities of others, the way in which people respond to opportunities, and individual responsibilities to create peaceful action.

Mr. Speaker, it gives me great joy that students and teachers at St. Clement school are undertaking this process and are encouraged to look deeper into human rights and how as individuals and through their community they may take action. It fills me with pride and honour to see these students working so hard to promote awareness of human rights issues. It is by building awareness of freedoms as well as political and social rights defined in the United Nations declaration of human rights that we all will build a stronger province for all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today this government announced that they are doing alleged consultations on their ill-advised minimum wage hike. They're a little slow on the uptake, but better late than never. Now, as to the announcement, there was no mention of how anyone can join these consultations, where they would take place, or even when they will take place. Under this current government's watch the number and percentage of Albertans earning the minimum wage has increased. When I put that question to this government earlier this week, the Minister of Labour dismissed it, saying that it is the natural result of an increased minimum wage. Minister, please stop reading from your speaking notes and think about the issue.

Mr. Speaker, let me give you the CliffsNotes of the argument presented by the minister. The NDP first raised the minimum wage in order to supposedly help the single moms with three young children, which at $10.20 per hour was about 600 people in the province of Alberta. Then after raising the minimum wage a dollar, they said that more people are on minimum wage; therefore, more people need the minimum wage increase. That makes about as much sense as the Abbott and Costello skit Who's On First. If you haven't seen it, I recommend that you watch it. You will notice an unsettling comparison to the way this government has been performing.

Mr. Speaker, what the government should have announced today was that they are sorry that they have caused such undue uncertainty in the job market and that they are now willing to pivot, as the economic development minister likes to say, to a plan that actually helps Albertans, not causes more harm.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Fort McMurray Recovery

Mr. Cooper: Everyone knows of the importance of the oil sands to Fort McMurray. It's the beating heart of our economy. There's no doubt that the $1 billion in lost production is having a financial impact. Like any town, Fort McMurray relies on its small businesses and entrepreneurs: the bankers, the butchers, and the mechanics. They all need capital to survive. To date the province has not announced any strategy to support local Fort McMurray businesses. When can we expect this announcement?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Certainly, with this situation in Fort McMurray, everyone's hearts go out to the families and to the local business owners who are impacted. This is something that has been quite devastating. We're working collaboratively with the local businesses as well as with the municipality to make sure that we can return people safely and that they do get the supports they need. We'll have more to say in coming days about this specific matter.

Mr. Cooper: The fact is that the fire has kept businesses, both big and small, out of the city for over two weeks, with the timeline to return uncertain. The fire has removed any opportunity for income to be earned in the immediate or near future. The Fort McMurray Chamber of Commerce is warning that by the time the rebuild begins, it may be too late for many businesses to survive. They have asked for access to emergency bridge financing and access to government-backed loans. Will the Premier say yes or no to this request?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much to the member for the question and, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to address it. Of course, our first priority must be ensuring the safety of all the people of Fort McMurray, and we will continue to ensure that this principle is first and foremost as we develop plans for re-entry. We are working with local businesses as well to ensure that they are there to support people when they do return home and that they themselves are supported. Right now our crews are hard at work assessing damage and repairing critical infrastructure, and that needs to be in place before people can return and before we can be able to move forward on additional remediation.

Mr. Cooper: After the Slave Lake fires one of the primary complaints from residents upon returning was not having an opportunity to be on their property and recover any personal items before any lots were bulldozed. For evacuees, families, and businesses looking to rebuild and restart their lives, there's nothing more important than proper closure and ensuring nothing more is lost. What guarantees can the government give evacuees that they will be able to be on their properties before the lots are torn down or cleaned up?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We did hear this as feedback from the remediation efforts that were done in Slave Lake, and we have made a commitment to ensure that when people do return, they have the ability to be there. They will be supported and escorted because, of course, these situations are not safe for people to be entering into unaccompanied, but we do understand that they want to be able to see their business, see their home, and if there is anything salvageable, have supports in making that possible, so we commit to that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

FireSmart Program

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Adopting practices under the FireSmart program was one of the key recommendations coming from the Slave Lake fire. These practices don't stop wildfires, but they go a long way to protect communities. If money isn't going out the door, the system is broken. But the forestry minister said yesterday that it's just a problem of encouragement and a lack of an education model. Millions of dollars available for grants sitting on the table shows a chronic problem throughout the system. Albertans want more than encouragement. They want this fixed. What will the minister do about it?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, we know it's important to move forward on FireSmart. Although this isn't a new program – it's been in place since 1997 – it has been ramped up in response to what happened five years ago in Slave Lake. While there are some applicants that didn't meet the criteria, we're certainly interested in working to make sure that people are applying for it, that the criteria are being met, and we'll be supporting communities in partnering with us to address as much in terms of prevention as possible.

Mr. Yao: Albertans want to make sure we're doing all we can to prevent and contain future fires. A new report today shows that since 2014 the Forest Resource Improvement Association of Alberta, or FRIAA, the group that administers provincial grants for the FireSmart program, has left $12.4 million unspent. These dollars need to be flowing to communities and our neighbourhoods. The program is either not working or needs a complete overhaul. This NDP government inherited a heavy bureaucracy and an inefficient system from the previous government. Will this government consider changes to this program, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While grants for 2016 are still forthcoming, we will be working with communities to help them with making sure that they can do vegetation management and educational programming, and we've allocated more than a million dollars to the Forest Resource Improvement Association of Alberta. Certainly, we want to make sure that people are accessing the funds that are available, and part of making that possible is ensuring that the public service, sometimes referred to as bureaucracy, can support applicants in doing that.

Mr. Yao: For firefighters, the National Fire Protection Association 1620 is a standard criteria to develop pre-incident plans and identify risks to help responders manage and alleviate these concerns. The support for fire departments in Alberta is the fire commissioner's office. When they have a bureaucratic grant program that leaves millions of dollars unspent, would the government consider replacing this broken FRIAA model by allowing the fire commissioner's office, the real fire experts, to manage this money?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, the Flat Top recommendations, including investment in FireSmart, are 20-year recommendations, and we will continue to invest in FireSmart to make communities safer. Right now, as I'm sure is everyone's priority, we need to make sure that we're addressing the wildfires that are burning today, and we'll continue to reflect on and consider ways that we can improve our programs moving forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Medical Laboratory Services

Mr. Barnes: The Health minister's insistence on blindly pursuing an ideological agenda is putting lab services at risk. The need for action on the lab situation has been well known for years. We know we need a new, state-of-the-art lab in Edmonton, we know the current situation is untenable, and we know from AHS's own analysis that the most effective and efficient way to go forward is with a public-private partnership, with the risks and best path forward clearly identified. Why has the minister sent us back to the drawing board?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wish I could say thank you for the question, but certainly it seems to be couched in a number of things that aren't true. What the Health Quality Council report indicated is that there wasn't consideration of all three models, including containing the current mix of public and private delivery, expanding private delivery, or expanding public delivery. There was a clear ideological drive that led to the outcome that was determined previously. The Health Quality Council has determined that the best way to move forward is collaboration with a working group, and that's what we're doing.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, that Health Quality Council report has been sitting in the minister's office for nearly half a year.

Furthermore, the report does nothing to justify why the chosen RFP model was worth throwing out. It's clear that the Health minister had her mind made up first, then went searching for evidence to fit her agenda. Despite the urgency and importance of the situation and her mind being made up for months, the minister still hasn't figured out costs, a budget, or even a plan. Is the minister delaying because she's backed herself into an impossible choice?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm incredibly proud of the thoughtful work that happened in the department, in the Health Quality Council, and that continues to happen as we move forward to ensure that everybody in Alberta – we're also looking at the Edmonton and north zones in particular – have the resources and the right lab services that they need moving forward. That's one of the reasons why, after being elected in May, I took the time to ask for the evidence to show that the model that was being proposed was exactly what was best needed for Albertans. When that evidence did not come forward, I put a halt to the project, and we asked that we reinvestigate this situation, how to best move forward. This is something that's going to be evidence based and that's going to be consistent for Alberta.

Mr. Barnes: The NDP insists on pursuing plans with no consideration to economic or practical realities as long as it fits their ideological agenda. Alberta Health Services documents even show it can't do the job, but this minister has also chosen to ignore health professionals, including the Edmonton Zone Medical Administrative Committee, who insist that there are significant gains to be had in access to capital, expertise, efficiency, and service by using a public-private model. Mr. Speaker, what does this minister have to say to Albertans, who just want health services done right?

Ms Hoffman: The first thing I need to say to Albertans is that when assertions are made by members opposite, be very careful about what they're asserting, and make sure you're actually looking at evidence. We are proud to be building a long-term public platform for lab services that will afford Albertans consistency and that it will be predictable moving forward. This is not to say that there won't be a role within the public platform for specific pieces to be delivered within the private sector. That's exactly why we struck a team of professionals to guide this work through firm footing and hard evidence. Be very cautious about what the members opposite are saying and whether or not you trust it.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Coal Strategy

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, we know that the Environment and Energy ministers don't agree when it comes to emissions on coal-fired electricity. Yesterday the Energy minister said, "We care not what the source is but what the emissions are." Meanwhile the environment minister is committed to proceeding and refuses to be influenced by even science-based facts. To the Premier: who's got the power? Your Energy minister, who will consider updated, innovated technology, or the environment minister, who refuses to acknowledge any new information?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As was said yesterday by the Premier and that I'll say again today, our cabinet is committed, and we are united. Our caucus is united on the climate leadership plan as we move forward. While the member opposite might be trying to find divisions, we are clearly united. We've put it in writing, and we've sent it out to the public. We're proud, and we're moving forward.

Mr. McIver: Decision made. Sorry, Energy minister; you're on the outside.

It's clear that this government's plan to phase out coal has more to do with environmentalist dogma than it does with actual emissions. The environment minister often quotes a 2012 federal government report regarding health care costs associated with coal, but the minister fails to admit that the calculations are based on all forms of air pollution, not just coal. To the environment minister: do you think it's wise to take away thousands of Alberta jobs based on statistics that you have selectively manipulated?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we think is wise is to move forward with a plan that will diversify our economy and create jobs, that will invest in our economy, and that will ensure that we have new markets for our product and that we will have cleaner air and water, that we are doing the right thing, and that we are not, as the previous government was, stuck in the past.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you. The environment minister continues to ignore evidence.

Mr. Speaker, let's try the Energy minister though she's on the outside. This government has chosen natural gas as the fuel for the future, claiming it burns cleaner than coal. It may be true today, but as we know, industry is making advancements all the time. In situ oil sands technology proves that it's possible that the coal industry could find ways to reduce emissions to those lower than natural gas. To the Energy minister: will you keep fighting to work with evidence so that the coal industry has a chance to incorporate their research into the government's future plans?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, the fact of the matter is that the province is going to be phasing out plants that would have gone past 2030. This is consistent with what is happening throughout North America and indeed throughout the industrialized world. We are ensuring that we are cleaning up our air. We are ensuring that we are open to new investment, which the previous government was not, with respect to renewables. We're ensuring that we're diversifying the economy and creating jobs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Opioid Use Prevention

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that illicit fentanyl is being used by Albertans of all different ages and from all walks of life. From our inner cities to our suburban communities it does not discriminate. In the first three months of 2016 there have been 69 deaths due to fentanyl overdose. To the Associate Minister of Health: what is being done to protect Albertans from the dangers of this highly toxic drug?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, the abuse of illicit fentanyl is putting Albertans in life-and-death situations, and because of that, we want to make it as easy as possible for at-risk Albertans to get access to take-home naloxone kits. As a result our government has tripled the province's supply of kits, from 3,000 to 9,000, and has made take-home kits available without a prescription at over 650 pharmacies across Alberta. By working with our partners in the College of Pharmacists, we are able to add more pharmacies each week.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many users of drugs in Alberta may be afraid to discuss their use or identify as a user of illicit drugs and are therefore forgoing accessing those take-home naloxone kits, to the same minister: how is this government ensuring that family members and friends can actually protect their loved ones from the dangers of fentanyl?

The Speaker: The associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the question. We certainly understand that there can be a stigma behind drug use that can be a concern for users, which is a big part of why we worked so hard to get naloxone available without a prescription. And thanks to our co-operation with the College of Pharmacists we were able to make it so that not only at-risk individuals can access those take-home naloxone kits, but kits can also be picked up without prescription by Albertans who have a family member or a loved one who they are concerned about.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many at-risk Albertans are put in life-and-death situations due to opioid dependency and given that there has been a surge of fentanyl abuse since 2014, to the same minister: will the minister commit to a plan that assists at-risk individuals by providing funding to increase treatment spaces for Albertans seeking opioid addiction treatment?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, our government recognizes the need to increase treatment spaces for individuals struggling with addiction. We are opening nearly 50 detox beds for adults in Lethbridge, Red Deer, and Medicine Hat, and three new beds for youth in Calgary opened last month. More than 240 Albertans will have access to methadone and suboxone treatments over the coming year because of our government's $3 million grant to AHS to expand access to these treatments. This will include a new suboxone clinic in Cardston to help address the high need in that area.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Oil and Gas Transportation

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The National Energy Board, an independent arm's-length body, has been reviewing the Trans Mountain expansion for nearly three years. Now, with the recommendations set to come out tomorrow, the federal government has added an extra layer of bureaucratic roadblocks. These seem to be following the motto of Why Use One Review When You Can Have Two or Three or More. To the minister: will the NDP government stand up for Albertan interests and vocally reject the federal government's unnecessary additional review when we need this pipeline built now?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. As I've said many times, we support the process of the National Energy Board plus our province in making sure that we support the companies and making sure that communities are consulted with and that pipelines that are built are environmentally responsible as we get our product to market.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Well, forgive me if I have a hard time believing that the NDP government has suddenly changed the song card that they're singing from on pipelines. Given that saying something and doing so are two very different things and the NDP rhetoric of supporting pipelines is getting a little tiresome without any real action and given that the Energy minister voted in favour of the Wildrose motion urging the federal government to lift its B.C. north coast proposed tanker ban but seems embarrassed to acknowledge so, will the Energy minister do her job in support of the motion and commit to writing to the federal Transport minister, laying out plainly that Alberta opposes this proposed tanker ban?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Energy minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. We continue to do things in a new way because we know that the last way did not work. If you don't believe us, listen to what Murray Edwards and Brian Ferguson from the Globe and Mail said:

It's time for a new conversation about building pipelines in this country... about how Canada can get full value for its oil production while also addressing environmental concerns, including climate change. This dialogue needs to take place with the type of constructive, interest-based, problem-solving approach that Canadians expect.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. This conversation is only new to you. The insinuation by the Energy minister that Wildrose wants to see pipelines fail...

The Speaker: Hon. member, no preamble. Remember: we're past question 5.

Mrs. Aheer: ... is, frankly, ridiculous. Given that the Wildrose has been consistent in our support for pipeline projects, unlike the members across the aisle, who have transitioned from radical anti-oil activists to government, and given that the Energy East, Trans Mountain, and Northern Gateway are still on the table and all still need vocal support, not failed soft diplomacy of this government, will the Energy minister acknowledge that they need to change their tack, or is she just in over her head?

2:10

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. As I said yesterday, I find it odd that an opposition who claims they like pipelines and want to work with us spend hours trying to see us fail in order to address their political ambitions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Coal-fired Electric Power Plant Retirement

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government made a good hire in selecting Terry Boston to guide them through what might become an ill-fated accelerated phase-out of coal. We know that he will be negotiating compensation for stranded electricity generation capital, likely to cost Albertans billions of dollars in freshly minted debt. However, the full scope of his work will not be known until this cabinet receives a report later this year. To the Minister of Energy: will Mr. Boston be involved with the strategy or process around negotiating with municipalities and local businesses on their stranded physical and human capital?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. You know, first and foremost, we went and found the best in the business, Terry Boston, who has transitioned over 26,000 megawatts of coal-fired electricity in the United States. We have the best in the business. We have Alberta's back. We are also working with communities that are affected throughout the province. That is one of my priorities. We've told communities and workers and their families that we will engage with them and that we will work with them, and that's exactly what we're going to do.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, Minister, given that the communities of Hanna, Hinton, and Forestburg rely on coal mining as a major source of employment and given that the accelerated phase-out of coal jeopardizes the very sustainability of these communities, to the minister of economic development: can you outline for the House an economic transition plan for just one of these communities, perhaps by giving an example of how you might support the creation of even 100 jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll take a moment to remind the House that federal regulations are causing 12 of our 18 coal-fired facilities to close early. Our government, through our climate leadership, is working with the six that our leadership plan will have phased out by 2030. We're doing this because it's the right thing to do. We know the negative effects that coal has on our health, especially on children and the vulnerable in our communities. I can assure the member that we are working with all of the communities, and we'll be going out and consulting with them to look at supports that we can lend to help workers transition.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It sounds like One Job might become a fitting middle name.

Given that the communities I mentioned will likely be driven into the ground by this government's policy decisions and given that the minister of tourism fired a council of experts because he feels he knows better, to the minister of tourism: is your new tourism initiative based on creating a new tourist attraction, the ghost towns of Alberta, by driving coal communities into extinction?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. Culture and tourism in this province is one of the bright spots in the economy these days. This government is going to continue supporting the tourism industry. We're going to continue supporting attractions throughout the province, and we're going to be supporting education and health care in this province as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Job Creation

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, 100,000 jobs have been lost in the energy sector since this government came to power. The NDP said that it plans on creating 100,000 jobs in this year's budget, but Albertans are wondering. Is the minister planning on recovering the 100,000 jobs that have already been lost under the weight of low oil prices and this government's risky policies, or is the minister planning on creating 100,000 new jobs – that means 200,000 jobs in total – using the divine powers he granted himself through Bill 1?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the Official Opposition for finally recognizing . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister, is there a point of order?

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there is.

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to begin from the top here. I'll begin by thanking the member for finally acknowledging that it is the international price of oil that is having a massive impact on Alberta families, on workers, on our budget. But, unlike the opposition, our government isn't about to make matters worse. Our Alberta jobs budget is investing in Albertans. We're investing in small and medium-sized businesses. We've made monies available. We have two tax credits, that we're rolling out, and a series of initiatives.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to get answers for Albertans about when and where exactly these 100,000 jobs will be created. Given that the Labour minister told us to ask the Infrastructure minister, who told us to ask the Finance minister, who, like the trade minister, doesn't have any real answers for me, to the Premier. The buck stops with you. When and where will these 100,000 jobs be created? Albertans want to know the specific details.

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll try to outline it yet again for the hon. member. First of all, we have the 100,000 jobs over three years. We're investing $34 billion in infrastructure over five years. We have the $500 million petrochemicals diversification program. We have $10 million to restore the STEP program, that the former government cut. We have $165 million in an investor tax credit and a capital investment tax credit. We have $25 million in new funding for the Alberta Enterprise Corporation, that's going to be investing in Alberta-based companies. We have $35 million to attract and support new businesses through regional economic development models and a series of . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I didn't get the answer, but here is a common-sense plan that doesn't cost any public dollars. There are three shovel-ready pipeline projects ready to go that would create tens of thousands of jobs for Albertans. The NDP has finally started to support the Wildrose position on pipelines in every direction, but talk is cheap, and actions speak louder than words. What has the government specifically done to get the construction of these pipeline projects under way and get the people back to work?

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the Official Opposition talks, our government is doing. I can tell you that through our robust climate leadership plan we have already been making headway as far as getting pipeline approvals. I will remind the House that the Premier and the Minister of Energy have been champions of getting pipelines both east and west. As opposed to jumping up and down and trying to play politics between the government of Alberta and the government of Canada, we choose to work collaboratively with them. I can tell you that we've already made more progress than the previous government did in 40 years in getting a pipeline to tidewater.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2013 Alberta Energy started . . .

The Speaker: My apologies, hon. member. I jumped ahead.
The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the NDP government announced plans "to consult on the minimum wage." For businesses, youth, and families worried about what a 50 per cent increase to the minimum wage would mean for their jobs, these meetings will be nothing but come-and-be-told meetings. As stated by their own members: we will consult when, not if. In fact, the government's own studies show that this minimum wage hike could lead to, quote, a significant job loss. End quote. If the minister is serious about consulting, why won't she scrap this plan until a full economic impact study is completed?

2:20

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government has promised to make work more fair by improving the income of those who make a minimum wage. As part of that we are initiating the consultations with some of the key stakeholders, including the employers who employ low-income Albertans, including low-income Albertans themselves, from whom I really want to hear the impact that the increase to the minimum wage had on their lives, and social services agencies. We'll be sitting down to talk to them about the size and pace of the next increase so that we can move to the $15 per hour minimum wage.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, you heard it. She said that she wanted to make sure she got to $15. That's not consultation. Albertans just can't afford experiments that will put the health of our economy any more at risk.

Given that every chamber of commerce across the province has warned about the dangers of a minimum wage hike to jobs and given that every small-business group I have talked to has warned about the damage a 50 per cent hike in the minimum wage will have on jobs, what, pray tell, does the minister expect to hear from our job creator experts on her come-and-be-told tour?

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have also been speaking with some of the chambers. We've heard some of those concerns. At this consultation we are also going to be hearing from low-income

Albertans – 300,000 Albertans who currently earn $15 or less, 33,000 single parents who earn $15 or less – and hearing about potential mitigation strategies as well as the best size and pace to implement our $15 per hour minimum wage.

Mr. Hunter: Every time you raise the minimum wage, that number is going to go up. It's circular reasoning.

Given that the minister's claims aren't grounded in fact because the evidence shows that a minimum wage hurts the economy and kills jobs for those who need them the most and given that an analysis from CFIB shows that this wage increase will result in a minimum of 50,000 lost jobs and given that the Journal of Labor Research concluded that "job losses are disproportionately concentrated on the poor," why is the current government willfully ignoring the evidence in favour of ill-conceived campaign promises?

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to talk about the facts and the evidence: 1 in 3 food bank users is someone who works for a living; 300,000 people make $15 per hour or less; 33,000 of them are single parents, 100,000 are parents, and 60 per cent are women; 194,000 women make under $15 per hour. These are facts and evidence from Statistics Canada, that I'm happy to talk about.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Value-added Energy Industries

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2013 Alberta Energy started developing a program that looked to increase and strengthen the value chain and production of methane and propane products in Alberta to continue diversifying our economy. This is known to all members in this House as the petrochemicals diversification program, and I'm appreciative that this government has continued the good work of the previous Progressive Conservative administration. To the Energy minister. In estimates we pointed out that the application date closed two months and four days after it opened in early February. Can you confirm why that application period was so short for such a vital program?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, that deadline was actually extended a couple of weeks due to some circumstances with some of the applicants. We did intend last week to do an announcement of the number of applicants and progress on that, but because of the Fort McMurray fires that has been delayed. There will be an announcement coming out shortly.

Mr. Fraser: Given that during Energy estimates the minister was unable to provide the committee with the names of any applicants because of legal commitments – and I appreciate that – can the minister instead provide the members of this House with the number of applications she's received and if she's deemed the application period long enough to see a wide range of business models? Can the minister also confirm that there's enough demand for these products to support healthy business models?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thanks for the question. As I mentioned, we will be having an announcement come out, I believe, sometime next week where we will have more details about all the things that the hon. member is asking right now.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, given that the devastating fires are still burning in northern parts of our province, causing some uncertainty regarding the feedstock supply of our province's upgraders and refineries – Minister, I do recognize that some of our transportation fuels are imported from other jurisdictions east and south of here – can you assure Albertans that our upgraders and refineries have sufficient supplies of incoming feedstock so Albertans will not begin to see a shortage of refined products such as diesel and gasoline in these coming weeks and months, especially in our agricultural communities?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for that very important question. Mr. Speaker, what I can say is that we are monitoring that issue daily, our Energy department, in conjunction with all the businesses. That is being monitored, and we will address things as they change.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Royalty Framework

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The massive drop in the global price of oil has not only been hard on Albertans, but it's been hard on our energy industry as a whole. Many of my constituents rely on the oil and gas sector for their livelihoods, and while they were happy with the royalty review, they want to ensure that the implementation of those changes works to the benefit of everyone in the industry. To the Minister of Energy: how will the government's new cost formulas promote investment and create jobs?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the question and the opportunity to update where we're at. As I've said before, the former system was outdated due to technology and just different ways of doing things. It was out of date, it was a bit rigid, it was risky, it lacked incentives for diversification, and it also lacked transparency. The new one will provide some greater certainty, encourage all companies to keep their costs down, remain adaptable to the changing energy issues, support the environment, and provide greater returns to Albertans without increasing rates.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Minister. Mr. Speaker, given that our energy industry is one of the biggest parts of our economy and given that any changes need to ensure that our industry remains competitive, again to the same minister: what is industry's response to these changes?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for that question. Mr. Speaker, rather than taking the opposition's advice to do nothing and wait it out during the thing, we chose to do the royalty review and make it more competitive. Response from industry has been very positive. One response from Tim McMillan of CAPP:

I commend the Alberta government for its timely approach to create a more modern royalty system through a constructive process. This has led to a royalty system that is true to the principles of the royalty advisory report. The new royalty system helps provide . . . clarity that investors need to plan for the future.

Mr. Coolahan: Mr. Speaker, given that both industry and Albertans are now looking to the future and making plans for going forward, again to the Energy minister: what are the next steps in implementing our new royalty framework?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, there is still some important work to do in order to fulfill the recommendations. We're working through some details related to strategic programs that will help to ensure a tailored approach to some plays that are unique. The Department of Energy is also working on transparency measures so Albertans will see the performance measures and the overall measures of the royalty system. Additionally, the department is working with industry on the technical and computer system changes needed to implement the new framework and continue the same . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Rural Ambulance Dispatch Service

Mr. Nixon: Borderless EMS dispatch in central Alberta is intended to allow EMS resources to help neighbouring communities when required, but when rural ambulances are used to transport patients between care facilities, which usually takes them far away from their base communities, borderless dispatch calls often keep them away for extended periods of time, depriving their own communities of their service. To the Health minister: what is this government's plan to protect rural communities and families from the risks that come with a lack of ambulance coverage?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Albertans have a right to expect that when they dial 911 to ask for emergency medical care, it will arrive promptly. We are very proud and grateful of the hard work and difficult work that emergency responders do on a daily basis. Paramedics, EMTs, and EMRs respond to nearly half a million calls every year across our province. The best way to organize first responders may vary from community to community, from rural areas to urban centres, and we recognize that.

Mr. Nixon: Given that in communities like Rimbey volunteer firefighters play an integral role in emergency response and given that a lack of ambulance coverage often means that local volunteer firefighters are the first to arrive at the emergency scene, does this government plan to empower volunteer firefighters, who are often off-duty paramedics and EMTs, to fully utilize their specialized skill sets to provide emergency and medical assistance when they are first on the scene to save rural Albertans' lives?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We absolutely want to ensure that Albertans are receiving the best medical care possible whenever they are calling for help and as required. We are continuing to work with our partners in the paramedic field and across health practitioners to ensure that Albertans have the care that they need at the right time and in the right place.

Mr. Nixon: Ambulance coverage is a matter of life and death in ridings like mine. Since interfacility transfers have become so problematic for rural communities that they are buying nonemergency vehicles for patient transport and given that AHS routinely refuses to allow communities to use these nonemergency vehicles, again to the minister: why won't this government accept local solutions to the lack of ambulance coverage and allow rural areas to utilize nonemergency vehicles for patient transport to save rural Albertans' lives?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We have regulations and legislation in place to ensure that Albertans are getting the highest quality care that they can and that ambulance services that arrive to greet a patient are conforming to safety standards that are set out by regulation. The safety of patients is the most important piece for our government, and we will continue to work with our partners across the health care system to deliver safe and efficient health care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Provincial Fiscal Deficit

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Minister of Finance has repeatedly blamed the price of oil for the massive deficit his government is running and will run in the coming years. He pines for the days of higher oil prices while he attempts to justify deficits of $10 billion this year, $10 billion next year, and $8 billion the following year. To the hon. minister, I have a simple question. If oil was $100 a barrel today, would we have a deficit, a balanced budget, or both?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'd probably have less of a deficit. We are doing our utmost to control the things we can, and those things are that we're turning the tap down on operational spending. Later today I will be presenting a bill that looks at doing that even more. The challenge in Alberta is that oil prices have fallen off the table and have left us with a huge hole in our revenues, and we can't change that. What we can change, we are.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So the answer is no balanced budget.

Given that when our credit was downgraded, the minister chastised the international lender by stating that they didn't understand his plan and given that Moody's and IMF are predicting that oil prices will be about $15 per barrel lower than his projection for the '18 and '19 fiscal years, again to the hon. minister: how high will the deficit be in the '18-19 fiscal year if oil is $49 per barrel instead of the $64 per barrel you're predicting?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, in the last fiscal year we achieved a better outcome than private estimates around the barrel of oil. We had $50 in our estimates, and $48.20 was achieved. That was four dollars better than private estimates, so we're on track. We've got a price shock insulator in this budget, so we're even going to be better on track.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government is still projecting an $8 billion deficit in the '18-19 fiscal year and given that this occurs in a year where they predict bitumen royalties to be four and a half times higher than the bitumen royalty estimate for the '16-17 fiscal year, again to the minister: when you said you were getting us off the oil roller coaster, did you mean you were getting on the oil merry-go-round?

Mr. Ceci: It's somewhat droll, but it's funny, too.

You know, what we have in this province is no provincial sales tax. We have no health care premiums. We have a competitive personal income tax system. Many of those things are because we brought them in. Previous governments left us on that oil and gas roller coaster or merry-go-round or slide. Call it whatever you want. You did it; we didn't.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-East.

Indigenous Education and Curriculum Content

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all know that it's critical that our government supports and builds greater understanding of our indigenous communities and their culture. Teachers and indigenous constituents that I speak to are eager to see new curriculum in this area. To the Minister of Education: what is being done to enhance our curriculum to reflect our indigenous heritage?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree with the member that we need to strengthen our curriculum to reflect our indigenous heritage. To that end we are enhancing curriculum so that all kindergarten to grade 12 students and teachers learn about residential schools, treaties, as well as the history perspectives and contributions of First Nations, Métis, and Inuit people in this province.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's excellent to hear.

Given that we know that our indigenous students generally have lower attendance rates and are less likely to graduate from high school, to the same minister: what is being done to close the education gap for our First Nations, Métis, and Inuit students?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Budget 2016, a difficult budget, we still managed to commit $28 million to close the achievement gap between First Nations, Métis, and Inuit students and all other students and in addition to the existing $48 million for FNMI grants. Also, we made an agreement in February with the Kee Tas Kee Now Tribal Council, which means that 950 First Nations students will have improved access to programs, services, and learning opportunities to give them the skills and knowledge that they need.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that my constituents want to ensure that our government is backing up its words with actions, again to the same minister: what resources have been dedicated within Alberta Education to support and promote the work that the minister is doing?

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you to the member. In addition to the Alberta Education establishment of a First Nations, Métis, and Inuit dedicated division, we have also established crossministry committees with Advanced Education, Health, Human Services, Indigenous Relations to improve governance of the Northland school division and student achievements. As partners in First Nations education we continue to work collaboratively with the federal government to close the education achievement gap, and we're working very hard to do that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Marijuana Use and Traffic Safety

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The results of a survey about driving and marijuana released recently are deeply troubling. Despite the fact that marijuana slows reaction time, almost half of pot-smoking Canadians surveyed, who said they drive while high, were convinced it didn't impair their driving abilities. Worse, 20 per cent said that there's nothing that would deter them from driving while high. The Trudeau government has indicated they intend to legalize marijuana in the spring of 2017. Can the Minister of Justice please reassure Albertans that she has a plan to keep Alberta's roads safe?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to assure the House and all Albertans that we're taking this seriously, and we're planning for this eventual development. Right now one of the difficulties is that there's not a good test, especially one that can be administered roadside or easily, to determine levels of impairment, so there's a lot of work to do in terms of determining what levels of impairment are serious.

Also, we need to change culture around the use of marijuana. There are many social norms about the use of alcohol, for example, that may or may not exist for the use of a recreational drug like marijuana.

Mr. Cooper: Given that many Albertans are concerned about traffic safety and worried about the impact of legalizing marijuana and given that all Albertans deserve to be able to drive on safe roads, regardless of what shape the federal government's law takes, can the minister please tell us if the kind of administrative penalties put in place to protect Albertans from drunk drivers will be in place to protect Albertans from high drivers?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, we are very concerned about the impact on traffic safety of people using marijuana or other drugs. It can become a greater concern if the use of the drug increases, as expected, upon its legalization. I want the hon. member to be assured that we are taking this matter very seriously. We're going to continue to make sure that appropriate penalties are in place around this. That is part of the work that is ongoing.

Mr. Cooper: Given that not everyone exhibits typical physical signs of being high and given that it is also important to protect those that may be suspected of being high but who are in fact not under the influence of marijuana, can the minister please describe for us what training Alberta sheriffs or other police currently receive to detect high drivers and whether a roadside test will be available before marijuana is made legal?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our government's first priority in terms of addressing this issue is ensuring that our children and that our roads remain safe. Currently it's the case that there are provisions under the Criminal Code that allow for specific tests and for the allowance of drug recognition experts amongst police, and we have several of those who are trained. The training is extensive, so I won't go into it right now. In addition, officials in my department have been looking at other jurisdictions where legalization has already occurred for lessons that we can learn from those jurisdictions, and our colleagues in the Ministry of Transportation have been working with some groups on tests for this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, we'll give you 30 seconds, and then we will continue with the items.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance.

Bill 19

Reform of Agencies, Boards and Commissions Compensation Act

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce Bill 19, the Reform of Agencies, Boards and Commissions Compensation Act.

The purpose of this legislation is to address consistency and fairness in executive compensation levels for the public agencies, boards, and commissions that are subject to the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act. This legislation also follows through on the government's commitment that we laid out in the Speech from the Throne.

On that note, Mr. Speaker, I now move first reading of Bill 19, the Reform of Agencies, Boards and Commissions Compensation Act.

Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to table five copies of a document titled NDP Handling of Fire Wins Praise, Even from Danielle Smith. In it author Don Braid states: "Smith says today's fire communication is 'brilliant' by comparison" to the previous PC government. "She praises the detailed public briefings and releases, the extended telephone town halls with evacuated . . ."

The Speaker: I think you've had adequate time to outline the matter. I'm wondering if you could table it, please.

Ms Babcock: Absolutely.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a statement from Neil Shelly, the executive director of Alberta's Industrial Heartland Association. It's in response to Alberta Budget 2016, expressing their appreciation of our work in helping to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I think we have adequate information.

The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table this document and the requisite number of copies in support of private member's Bill 201, the Election Recall Act.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Hoffman, Deputy Premier and Minister of Health, pursuant to the Public Health Act the Public Health Appeal Board 2015 annual report; pursuant to the Health Professions Act the Alberta College of Medical Diagnostic and Therapeutic Technologists annual report 2015.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we had a point of order earlier.

The Deputy Government House Leader.

Point of Order Anticipation

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the Government House Leader on a point of order under Standing Order 23(e), that a member is called to order if he or she “anticipates, contrary to good parliamentary practice, any matter already on the Order Paper or on notice for consideration on that day.” I believe it was the Member for Calgary-Foothills that was asking a question directed at myself in relation to Bill 1. I’ll draw your attention to the Order Paper, where, clearly, we will be continuing debate on Bill 1 today, this afternoon, and we debated it this morning.

I just want to recognize, in case my colleague opposite decides to look in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, that on page 496 there was a ruling that members in the House of Commons would be ruled out of order if they anticipated Orders of the Day. I recognize that that has changed with our colleagues down in Ottawa. However, I will draw your attention again to the fact that in Alberta in our standing orders – and I’m citing the standing orders from January 1, 2016 – that has not been changed or amended. Therefore, a member asking questions about legislation or anticipating matters that are already on the Order Paper is, in fact, a point of order.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s my pleasure to rise and speak to the point of order today. While the hon. member may have mentioned something that is to be debated, the question of the hon. member – and, unfortunately, I don’t have the benefit of the Blues – was not specifically about Bill 1. It was about jobs that have been or may have been or, more appropriately, may not have been created by this government. Clearly, this is not a point of order because the question was not specifically about Bill 1. If the question had been specifically about Bill 1 and a matter of debate around Bill 1, not around the jobs that Bill 1 isn’t going to create, I would suggest that it would be a point of order. Unfortunately, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader is mistaken in the direction of the question, so as a result of his error, this is a matter of debate.

The Speaker: Any other perspectives to be offered?

I believe that the statement that may have been referenced in the point of order is: “Is the minister planning on recovering the 100,000 jobs that have already been lost under the weight of low oil prices?” Hon. members, in this particular instance I see no point of order.

Orders of the Day Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 11

Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered in respect to this bill? The Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have been looking forward to rising and speaking in support of Bill 11, the Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016. Simply put, Albertans deserve and have been asking for an innovation system that builds on a well-educated workforce that creates a more diversified economy and that delivers value for money. This act proposes a new model that consolidates four agencies into one Alberta Innovates board, and it will provide the focus and leadership required to drive success.

Research and innovation is something very dear to me. To give you some context, when my older brother and I were a mere three to four years old, which, I’ll admit, wasn’t too long ago, my grandmother was babysitting us, and after having observed both of us one evening, she turned to my mother and said: you know, one of them is going to become a scientist and the other the next president of Colombia. Well, she wasn’t too far off. While I’m no president, I am humbled to be the MLA for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, and my brother is most definitely a scientist. Specifically, he’s a nanophysicist engineer. Until very recently he conducted and published his theoretical research right here in Alberta.

An interesting fact, Madam Chair, is that my brother’s colleagues were also raised in Strathcona county, and knowing the demographics of my constituents, I can confidently say that I’m not the only one that grew up alongside academics.

What we are doing here today is very relevant to a lot of my constituents, Madam Chair, because it talks to both the researchers and the innovators. My brother and a few of his colleagues had to look internationally when their studies moved from theoretical to experimental, which brings us to the importance of the investments that we’re making, that help diversify by building the supports that a knowledge-based economy requires and enhance Alberta’s reputation as a world-class research and innovation jurisdiction.

This bill coincided with his short return home from his studies in the States, where he is working on increasing the efficiencies of solar cells. What he told me, Madam Chair, was that it would be ideal from his researcher’s perspective if Alberta could learn from the systems that have been in place in Europe. I was able to explain that the evolution of the Alberta Innovates corporation is based on the best practices of other jurisdictions, including Innovate U.K., Germany, and Ontario, and has drawn on these to develop a made-in-Alberta solution to address the challenges of the 21st century.

As part of this transition a performance measure framework will be developed that gauges the progress toward achievement of the corporation’s mandates and outcomes and reports on the corporation’s progresses and finances in a consistent manner year after year. You see, Albertans elected a government committed to accountability and transparency. From my understanding, Madam Chair, the government is inviting the Auditor General to assess the intended outcomes of the performance measure framework and to examine whether the necessary processes are in place to achieve the desired results. A more effective and efficient system will spur innovation and allow for development of new companies and industries. Co-ordinating and leveraging the research and innovation system will help drive research, its application, and increase business start-ups and its commercialization of Alberta ideas by providing access to services.

I've spoken in this House before about the many examples of innovative technologies that are being developed in my constituency, from portable water treatment systems to Nutraponics. Many of my constituents are innovators and entrepreneurs and have reached out to me to ask how our government is looking to support diversification in our economy. By increasing the pace of technological innovation, we can add value to our resources, improve patient care, advance energy efficiency, and reduce carbon emissions.

As has been mentioned, Alberta is a leader in health research, and our government understands that support for strong health research and innovation means better health and well-being for Albertans and a more diversified economy. That's why we continue to lead the country in our per capita funding for research and innovation. If we choose the opposition's path during these difficult times, we would be slashing funding for research and postsecondary education, but Albertans deserve a research and innovation system that is nimble and helps provide a more diversified economy and ensures that every dollar of research is spent wisely.

There is strong support for our plan to consolidate the four agencies into Alberta Innovates. I am proud to be a cosponsor to this bill, and I look forward to continued debate.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Any additional members wishing to speak? The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to Bill 11, the Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016. It is very encouraging to see the NDP make a move to save money in an area where there is some fat to trim. Mind you, it is only about $2 million, but I assume some high-paid positions are being retired here instead of front-line research and development that is to be done. One of those high-paid positions was making $670,000, more than triple the Premier's salary. We also know that there was mention of some disciplinary action taking place in the corporation, but the minister would not necessarily go into any specifics there.

The budget estimates show that the Alberta Innovates corporation will see a reduction of over $45 million from 2014 to this year. The changes Bill 11 will usher in will provide a leaner system, fewer executives, international governance practice, and the flexibility to direct funds for research and development.

I find it interesting that the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park's brother was working with solar cells in nanophysics. My son was also working on that at the U of A in the last few years. It's important that we see this research and development continue on.

The board will also now be included in the sunshine list, which I believe is a positive move.

The work of the Alberta Innovates corporation is of great value to all Albertans. Discoveries here will be used to develop the jobs of the future. The streamlined approach will eliminate duplication of efforts and be able to link industry to research and development early on. I know that stakeholders were asking for this, and I look forward to that improvement.

I look forward to reading the annual reports to see the new products and innovations created and brought to market by the Alberta Innovates corporation. It will be through commercialization of this technology that we recover the investment and reinvest to create even more jobs.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

3:00

The Deputy Chair: The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to recommend an amendment to Bill 11, that I spoke about in second. I have copies of the amendment and will circulate them and speak to it as you wish.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member. If we can just get a copy to the table, and then you can go ahead. The amendment will be referred to as A1.

Please go ahead.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. This amendment states that Bill 11, the Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016, be amended in section 6, in the proposed section 6.1(1), by striking out clause (b).

This, I believe, will recognize the critical contribution of medical health research in this province for the last 20 years and the way that that recognized entity under the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research and then Alberta Innovates: Health Solutions has brought internationally renowned researchers and huge investment to Alberta and a recognition that we have a separate identity in research within the medical and health area that has brought more innovation dollars than any other and needs to be protected. If it's hidden under a single entity called Alberta Innovates, there's a real danger that there will be a loss not only of recognition of this as a research centre but, indeed, a loss in terms of the connection between health research and the health system.

Currently under Alberta Health, Alberta Innovates: Health Solutions is carrying out relevant research to the health system, improving efficiencies, improving connections, and making sure that the research that's being done can be translated into concrete improvements in our health care system, can translate into improved management processes various aspects of health research that have really not only improved health in Alberta but have improved health delivery in Alberta, have not only saved lives in terms of new technologies and new drugs and new opportunities for Alberta and the world but also contributed to market and business opportunities around the world. So it has been a generator of tremendous growth, new medical breakthroughs, and businesses in Alberta, to put it in a nutshell.

There is real concern in the research community that since it was removed and put under the Alberta Innovates: Health Solutions, it lost some degree of integrity, some degree of credibility. Certainly, if this continues a trend toward uncertainty about our commitment to health research and medical research, this sends an unfortunate message across the world, if it's hidden under a general rubric of Alberta Innovates and doesn't have its own clear identity.

I would argue that if we're going to continue to be a source of attracting the best medical and health researchers on the planet, if we're going to continue to have the kind of reputation and investment opportunities from outside of the province, which we've enjoyed for many years – and it's my understanding that it's about a 2 to 1 investment. Alberta invests a dollar and other provinces and other funding bodies invest $2 in Alberta medical research because of the very reputation and quality and outputs that we've had here over the last 25 years.

I heard from both deans Fedorak and Meddings – that is, the deans of the universities of Alberta and Calgary – about the tremendous concern that this second level of change is having on the medical community. They are already concerned in these medical centres that top-notch students are not coming here, that dollars have started to go elsewhere in terms of investments in new research, and that teaching programs are losing momentum in some areas. So I think we have to think very carefully about whether health and medical research should continue to have some autonomy outside of the Alberta Innovates organization.

I would argue that that's very much the case. The new strategic clinical networks, for example, in the health system that have identified maternity care have a separate research arm that's looking at child and maternal care and how that could be improved; the areas of prevention and public health as a separate entity and the research needed in that to try and improve prevention programs, health promotion programs in the community. It's by no means certain that a single research body would be able to identify the priorities and allocate the funds in a way that would maintain the kind of momentum and credibility and international visibility that the name Alberta Innovates: Health Solutions could or some other name, whatever it be.

I'm arguing that we need to pluck out from this bill Alberta Innovates: Health Solutions and find a place for it, I would argue, under Health but anywhere, including as a subset of Alberta Innovates. But it needs to have its own name. If the international community sees that Alberta no longer has a health and a medical research name and that all their resources are going into something called Alberta Innovates, there will be a tremendous loss of momentum in terms of our health and medical research.

Thanks, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I do want to begin by thanking the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View for this amendment. I recognize that we've spoken a couple of times about the intention and spirit of this amendment. I want to assure the hon. member and all members of the House and all Albertans that, one, our health system is second to none and that, two, research and innovation regarding health is absolutely a priority of the Premier, of myself, and of this government and will be a top priority even within the new Alberta Innovates corporation.

You know, Madam Chair, we recognize that Albertans deserve a research and innovation system that is nimble, that helps build a more diversified economy, and ensures that every research dollar is wisely invested. There is strong support for our plan to consolidate the four agencies into Alberta Innovates. The member's amendment, unfortunately, would erode the intent of our plan and this bill. Now, I know the member opposite cares deeply about medical research, so his intent is honourable, and it's why I can tell the House that I considered it very carefully. But I'm worried that the intent that he has will have unintended consequences.

First, Madam Chair, this bill does nothing to change the mandate of the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research endowment fund. There still will be strong support for medical research in this province, and support provided by Albertans will continue to be the envy of every other jurisdiction in this country. It is already firmly established in section 11 of the Alberta Research and Innovation Act. The Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research endowment fund was established to support a balanced approach for health research and innovation and will continue to support health research and innovation, including "the discovery of new knowledge and the application of that knowledge to improve health and the quality of health services in Alberta." I would make a note that part of that wording actually comes directly from section 11 of the Alberta Research and Innovation Act.

However, the amount devoted to medical research, quite frankly, should not be decided by members of this House. It should be merit based, and it should be directed by experts for the benefit of Albertans. We've recently heard some exciting ideas promoted about health research, including in the state of the city address when the mayor of Edmonton, Mayor Iveson, spoke about his intention regarding health research and innovation within the province and the importance it has for the mayor and for the city of Edmonton.

I believe the best days for medical research in this province are still yet to come, but we want to give the experts the tools they need to get the job done in health research and in every other research discipline, which is exactly what this bill does. Therefore, again I want to thank the member for his amendment, but for those reasons I've just outlined, I will not be supporting the amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, are you speaking to the amendment?

Mr. Clark: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. I won't repeat the examples that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View used, but I did want to rise in support of the amendment because I have heard very similar concerns as those raised by my hon. colleague here.

You know, I think that while I support the idea of streamlining the administrative side – and perhaps there's even some opportunity within Alberta Innovates: Health Solutions to move to more of a shared services model – continuing to keep Alberta Innovates: Health Solutions carved out is one of the true strategic advantages that our province has. There's a great deal of concern within the research community about a lack of continuity, of continued change, and I think there's some change fatigue within that community as well. Perhaps one of the reasons the government may not have heard a tremendous amount of push-back is because of that change fatigue and, perhaps, a fear that this is not a time to be rocking the boat.

One of the great advantages that Alberta has in the endowment that is the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research and just the heritage fund itself is that annuity type of funding. It's not subject to the whims of a given government in a given budget cycle, related to the price of oil or anything else, and that's a tremendous advantage we have in this province. It allows us to invest in medical research and in other areas but especially in medical research, which can be very long term to get to success. If there's anything that's going to hinder that goal in terms of attracting top-notch, truly world-class researchers to our province, then I have a concern, and I worry that by consolidating all of this into one, that's precisely what's going to happen.

You know, there's already worry that we're starting to lose some of these researchers or perhaps not bringing them to Alberta in the first place, and that's a real concern. That's something, I think, that although this bill may appear just like an administrative efficiency move – we're saving, as I understand it, about $2 million a year in administrative savings. That's not trivial and not to be sneezed at, but at what cost? At what cost are we going to save that money?

I think that sometimes when we're looking at these things, we have to be careful about unintended consequences and we have to be worried about the global reputation of our province. I think those who don't have a fully formed idea of Alberta will look at the price of oil and say: gosh; things in Alberta must be really terrible. And now that they've had to consolidate these four into one, there's a risk that the global community will say: gosh; I'm not sure Alberta is somewhere I want to be. I think the signal we should be sending is that this is a time for us to have stability, to double down on the investment in especially health research but all forms of research, and I worry that this particular move works against that objective, Madam Chair.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. Imagine my surprise, not expecting when I woke up this morning that I'd be standing here on my feet, standing behind and supporting the amendment from the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. But you know what? When the hon. member's right, the hon. member's right, and this is one of those cases.

I would ask the government side to consider how much money they are saving with their Bill 11. Consolidating administration, being more efficient, delivering services in a more organized, concise way are all laudable goals, so I have no criticism. Whether I support the larger bill or not, even if I think it's a bad idea, I'm not going to criticize it because any time this government tries to get more efficient, that's a good thing.

However, the hon. member, with this amendment, makes a very good point. If you're talking about advancements and innovation in the field of health and biotechnology, that, members, in my view, is one of those places where Alberta can expand and diversify its economy. That, hon. members, is a place where we can actually do research.

There have been great examples. I know that at the University of Alberta what they call the Edmonton protocol for I think it's diabetes treatment is something that is world renowned. Some of my colleagues and I were able to recently have a look at the Li Ka Shing centre at the University of Alberta, where they have new cancer research innovation. It's on the seventh floor for those that want to see it. It is amazing. We talked to a number of researchers there that said: if this investment was not here, we would not be in Alberta doing cancer research. That's what they said, and I believe them.

What we know is that when you get the right researchers in the right fields, a single person – here's one for the minister of jobs – can create an industry. The right researcher, Minister, can create a whole industry. If there's anything in Bill 11 that by taking away this reference to this particular title will stop Alberta from being able to attract those top researchers and developing those jobs with them if we do it right – again, I hope that same minister is thinking about exploiting those inventions, exploiting those discoveries, exploiting those new technologies here in Alberta. Now you're talking about the opportunity to employ potentially thousands of people, for many millions of dollars in financial activity, and to enhance Alberta's reputation in other fields, too, as a place where innovation can happen. I think on all sides of the House the one thing that we agree on is that innovation is the road to the future.

I'm going to support this amendment. I think it's a good one. I hope that the government, when they're thinking about not only this amendment but the rest of Bill 11, thinks about – again, I say this advisedly. It's why I'm trying to be gentle with the government. Any attempt to actually reduce expenses and consolidate things and bring them together is, generally speaking, a good idea, but the potential is there to cut off the very innovation that could well become key to the successful future of this province. If it's in any way threatened, then I think all of us should think again.

My compliments to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. I think that his head is on straight on this. I think that his explanation for it was excellent. I think that his reasoning is laudable, and I compliment the hon. member for really bringing something forward to this House that could well benefit Alberta not only now but far into the future.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak on amendment A1? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I'll rise just to address a couple of points that the last two members raised. Again, first and foremost, research and development or research and innovation within our health system is a priority of our government. It has been and will continue to be.

Part of the challenge that I've found with keeping the Health Solutions innovation corporation is that, number one, it's not best practice when we look at jurisdictions within Canada and internationally. Best practice is having one entity that is able to not only process applications but to look at ensuring that the Alberta Innovates corporation is moving consistently in the same direction. Health is extremely important to us, but there are members from Energy and Environment Solutions, from AITF, from Bio Solutions that would argue: well, then why don't you keep us carved out, and why don't we actually create even more Innovates corporations to cover off every single sector in the province? That, unfortunately, defeats the purpose of consolidating the Alberta Innovates corporation.

One of the reasons why there was a little confusion is that we had three different Alberta Innovates corporations – Health Solutions, Bio Solutions, and EES – and then we had AITF, Technology Futures, which really focused on the commercialization of technology. Well, if you were, let's say, a person within the health space who created a great new widget, you had to then work with AIHS for the actual technology, but on the commercialization side you had to liaise with AITF. That's who is doling out the grants as far as helping to commercialize the widget.

Feedback that we received is that there was some confusion. The process was complicated. We feel that within one Innovates corporation we can continue to protect and invest in research, especially in research around the health sector, while at the same time ensuring that we are supporting the commercialization of those ideas and helping support innovation throughout the province and, quite frankly, across all sectors.

I do want to make note of the fact that Alberta invests more dollars than every other province and territory in the country when it comes to Innovates. That hasn't changed. I can tell you that innovation will continue to remain a priority for our government. The one point that I agree with from the Member for Calgary-Hays is that innovation is a cornerstone of diversification. I agree with that a hundred per cent. I can assure members of this House that we will continue to attract and retain some of the best and brightest minds, whether it's in health or in other sectors. Having one innovation corporation does not limit us or will not lead to a brain drain because we have one Innovates corporation.

We've been very clear in our communications. Our interim CEO, in fact, is the CEO from the Health Solutions, a woman named Pam Valentine. We have a number of board members – and I'll encourage all members of the House to look at their biographies – a very strong new board, with some consistency, a couple of members from previous boards so that we have that knowledge continuity. But at the same time we also have a number of board members who come from and have a health background. I can assure members of this House and all Albertans that that still remains a priority.

Alberta is a leader when it comes to health research and innovation, and I am certain that we will continue to remain a leader moving forward. The consolidation of these four entities into one will actually lead to a more simplified system, a more integrated system, and one where we will continue to be a leader in the country and around the world.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, I appreciate the minister's considerations. I do have to say two things about it. Number one, there's a global perception that when you eliminate a body called AHFMR, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, you have changed the agenda and you have lost a commitment to health and medical research. The second is that Alberta Innovates: Health Solutions was closely connected to Alberta Health, the ministry. If we lose that, then we lose a sense of connection between what is happening on the ground and what the research agenda should be.

Those are two critical pieces. Number one, in terms of national or international terms, if you've reduced your commitment to medical and health research by dropping the name, you've lost significant connection. Secondly, if you lose connection to the very health system that should be a guide for what's relevant and what's important both in terms of commercialization and in terms of new health innovation, you've lost something.

I'm deeply concerned, as many in the research area are. This may be a simpler way of managing. It may save money, and I don't think there's any problem with saving money, but we need a designated body called health or medical research or we're going to lose very substantially in international competition for research dollars in health and medical research.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will now return to the original bill, Bill 11. Any members wishing to speak to the original bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to rise to speak to Bill 11, Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016. I'm sad to see that this amendment was defeated, but I think the intent – we have to give, again, credit where credit is due. To save dollars with respect to the administration of possible innovation opportunities is always important to us.

I think the ecosystem of innovation is what really is at stake here, and what we have to hope is that it's something that we'll move forward on. We have the likes of TEC Edmonton, Innovate Calgary, Calgary Economic Development, and Edmonton Economic Development, who are hard workers in this ecosystem of innovation. Obviously, Alberta Innovates, in its previous form, has done so as well and been leaders in that. It's been an opportunity, I think, for many organizations to get involved, and I think we have to move forward.

As mentioned by the Member for Calgary-Hays, we had an opportunity to stop in to the University of Alberta. Our universities and postsecondary institutions are very key to innovation within our province, and I'm hoping that the new organization will work very hard with the savings that they make to partner with these postsecondary institutions.

Another key, I think, to innovation is celebrating our successes in innovation and making sure that we take those people who work hard and have success in innovating and lift them up so that there's an opportunity for people to see what success looks like within the sector. We see that from the likes of Campus Alberta, from the Alberta distinguished innovators awards, from distinguished business awards, from some of our publications like Alberta Venture or Business in Calgary, and also from the Manning innovation awards, all celebrating innovators across our province. I think we need to do more of that in this province to encourage it.

You know, I see that we tend to focus on innovation in the technology sector, energy sector, agriculture, forestry, tourism, housing, biomedical areas as well, but I think we also have to think of innovation in different terms, in social services and indeed in government. I think it's something that we've asked for in our Engage initiative and Engage document, which is to look for innovation in government to provide savings and value for taxpayers. It's something that we've hinted at and will move further in describing with our $4 billion challenge to the government of Alberta in the future, which is to find innovation, again, not where we traditionally try to find it, which is where we see it in Alberta Innovates, but in all sectors. Housing, certainly, is one industry that I've been deeply involved with, and we've seen great innovation from the nonprofit sector and the private sector in terms of looking at innovations not only in mainstream and affordable housing but in seniors' housing, and I think that we need to continue with that innovation.

I'd just like to speak out in support of this bill. Again, I think the intent is strong. Again, $2 million in savings is noteworthy. I hope that we not only save $2 million but that we enhance the value received by millions and maybe even hundreds of millions of dollars in the future, that we continue to invest.

I think it was pointed out by the Member for Calgary-Hays that the facility that we were able to visit was – you know, many people say: whatever happened to the Alberta heritage savings trust fund? Well, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research has invested over $850 million since the formation of that organization by the previous government in 1980. Currently there are over 230 senior researchers that are supported by that medical research foundation.

Indeed, the facility that we visited just yesterday not only is, I think, a beacon of hope in terms of innovation, but the Alberta Cell Therapy Manufacturing centre, which is part of the Diabetes Institute, as mentioned, is working on cancer cell therapy. They talked to us about surgery. They talked to us about chemotherapy. They talked to us about radiation therapy. What is the real innovation that is being done right here in Alberta through investments and the passion of many people and the support they get from our innovation ecosystem is actually cancer cell therapy, and there's some incredible work being done there that we need to be proud of in this province.

It allows us to retain talent that otherwise would go elsewhere, not necessarily even in Canada but around the world, and we would lose that innovation. We saw some young researchers there that said they had been supported through their education to do that. There was also in their model a chance for third-party revenue. I think we need to make sure that we don't lose sight of the fact that when we innovate, there is also an opportunity to commercialize some of that capacity that we develop.

Again, I wanted to speak in favour of this bill. As we often say, the devil is in the details. I think that we are going to support this. I'm personally going to support this and going to hope that the commitment from the ministry is there to ensure that it doesn't narrow the opportunities, that it in fact creates a one-stop shop for innovators in this province to move forward, that we will see that innovation internally in the management of that organization, that we will see the retention of the people who have the best experience and the best knowledge of how to make it work better for us here in Alberta, that we do get that return on investment even with the savings there.

I'm proud to stand up and support this and to give this government kudos for an opportunity like this. It's a rare opportunity, but I'm glad to take this one to do it

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 11, the Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016. In 2010 the Alberta Research and Innovation Act created the four corporations – Bio Solutions, Energy and Environment Solutions, Health Solutions, and Technology Futures – and each of these had a focus in the economy and built the relationships with local communities to be able to research and integrate and support emerging technologies that would be coming into the Alberta economy.

Through Bill 11 we see that these four corporations are going to be merged. They are going to be integrated into one that we're going to be calling Alberta Innovates. Alberta Innovates will be a new, wholly-owned subsidiary corporation which will fund and drive the innovations and which will be responsible for delivering on research and innovation priorities for the province. My understanding is that it will focus on the agriculture, energy, environment, forestry, and health sectors. Alberta Innovates is intended to be a catalyst for change for the benefit of the full economic base of the province.

On a personal note, I just returned from Europe, and I saw in the Netherlands something related to this, where they've created and funded a place called Brainport, designed to do exactly this, to go into the research and development of new technologies. It was exciting to see how they have been working in the research and development of things like biomass digesters and looking at new technologies with regard to hydroponic greenhouses and using different wavelengths of light to increase production within those greenhouses.

It's an interesting idea, that we can use a corporation to try and advance the technologies within our province. I think that we've seen it done successfully elsewhere in the world, and there's no reason why we can't do it here in Alberta.

As I understand it, this change is being brought about partly because the stakeholders within Alberta and within this system have actually asked for feedback, and we've asked for feedback, and they've identified that the previous model of four separate streams of research was becoming unmanageable and inefficient and that streamlining the research and the innovation system would make it easier for researchers and for companies and small businesses to access and to navigate the opportunities for supports available to them through the various programs in Alberta Innovates. That's a laudable goal.

Again, having come back from Europe, I saw how they've done that successfully in the Netherlands and how they have moved forward in some of these technologies and have provided world-leading research and development. We need to continue to make sure that as a province Alberta has the right tools and the right systems to be able to push forward this kind of research. If this amendment actually works, if it does what it's intended to do – I believe the government is sincerely trying to provide a solid benefit for Albertans, trying to navigate through the programs and the services that would allow for this kind of research to develop.

Now, Alberta Innovates and the ministry will have to be vigilant. They're going to have to ensure that this transition does not lead to a reduction in its reputation for research and innovation. I believe our hon. colleagues this afternoon have brought this to our attention in the area of medicine and that it is a concern. We are going to have to ensure that we continue the good work that has been done and actually improve on it. So we have to ask some questions like: who's going to decide on the research and the funding priorities under this new system? What happens as the innovations are introduced? Will one corporation have the capacity to adapt and to adjust to the emerging technologies in a timely and effective way, or will we see a deterioration, as is feared, that may reduce the capacity of the organization to move and adapt and to quickly see any change in circumstances or see a reduction in the focus in a particular field like medicine?

We read from the current fiscal plan that the government will save somewhere around $45 million by realigning their priorities at the Alberta Innovates corporation, and that's a good thing in light of all the things that we've got to do. You know, we've got to make sure that these savings are truly put together.

Now, for all of that, the money that we're going to be saving is supposed to support start-up tech companies in an effort to diversify the Alberta economy. We just hope that as we do that, we don't see some of the concerns that have been brought up, where sometimes the monies from this corporation go towards increasing the compensation to the executives that sit on the corporation. We know that the CEOs of Alberta Innovates, the four branches, recently received significant increases in their salaries. We're a little bit concerned about that, but as we go through that, we also know that these compensation packages should be a part of the sunshine list, so we believe that that should be able to take care of some of the problem.

I guess one of the big issues that we do have is under section 7, where it does say:

by striking out "up to 4 research and innovation corporations" and substituting "one or more research and innovation corporations, in addition to the corporation established under section 6.1(3)."

In other words, it leaves some wiggle room here. If the idea is to streamline and to bring down some of the costs and make it a little easier to navigate, we're worried that "one or more" will allow for this corporation to continue to divide and to add as it goes through. We are going to look forward to listening to the government and to seeing how they're going to address this particular issue, Madam Chair, that we want to see put before the House. I mean, if the purpose is to reduce and to streamline and to become more efficient, we wouldn't want to have this continue to expand. We want to ensure that this is going to be a corporation that is able to innovate and not just place money into a larger and larger bureaucracy.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to spend a couple of brief moments. My hon. colleague has made a lot of very reasonable comments about some of the strengths of the bill, and I just wanted to make sure that we had highlighted one of his concerns because it's a concern shared by a number of my colleagues on this side of the Chamber.

He mentioned section 7(a): "in subsection (1) by striking out 'up to 4 research and innovation corporations' and substituting 'one or more'." It's really the "or more" that is a concern. This "or more" allows, potentially, the new organization to create the exact challenge that we're in today, where there are four separate, and the creep that can sometimes happen in government organizations and government generally. I know that some of my colleagues here had spoken about the possibility of doing an amendment around limiting the "or more." So I'd be curious and we'd be curious to hear if the government has any comments around this particular section in the legislation as it is certainly one of our large concerns when it comes to going forward on this bill.

There are many, many good things here in this piece of legislation, but certainly a significant concern for this side of the House is around times where government bodies give themselves sweeping powers to expand without the accountability to the Assembly. So I hope that the hon. minister will be able to provide some clarification there.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The deputy House leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the last two speakers and some of the comments they made, which I'd like to address. First of all, this consolidation of Alberta Innovates will result in only a $2 million yearly savings. The reason that the number is not significantly higher is because the intention is to bring them into one innovation corporation, not to cut and gut a whole bunch of the arms of the existing bodies. Again, it's meant as a way to provide efficiencies, but at the same time we still want to be having our program supports for the different areas, and now this one entity also is not restricted to what the three previously were.

Again, if we're looking at exploring – the member cited looking on his recent mission at some other systems like the Netherlands', some of the things that they're investing in in their innovation system — our new Alberta Innovates will have that ability to continue the great research that is ongoing and support of commercialization in our existing sectors but will also be able to explore new sectors.

I just want to clarify again that the savings is only $2 million, and the Alberta Innovates board are all volunteers. They are not paid a salary. They do receive the traditional government honorarium for the days they meet, but the board themselves are volunteers. One of the things that the new board will be doing is working with our interim CEO, and their first task will be to find a permanent CEO.

I think there were members that spoke earlier about: why a board first and not a permanent CEO first? It's because the board of directors are the ones who hire the CEO and make that decision and are the ones that supervise the CEO. If we hire the CEO, we're going in reverse. So the board will determine which CEO. We've engaged with a professional agency to do an executive search. This is not something the government of Alberta is doing, and I can assure all members of the House that we are casting our net not just nationally but internationally as well, looking for the best person for the job.

The other point. To the deputy House leader: I appreciate his comments. When we're looking at section 7(a) – and I'll just read this into Hansard.

- (a) in subsection (1) by striking out "up to 4 research and innovation corporations" and substituting "one or more research and innovation corporations, in addition to the corporation established under section 6.1(3)."

What that's referring to is not that the board or the government will have the ability to create a second Alberta Innovates corporation. This is referring to that subsidiary corporation that, again, came to us in the way of wanting to ensure that there is no conflict of interest, that the body that decides which areas of research to prioritize is not the same body that's then deciding who gets funding. It's separating those two. That's the purpose of the subsidiary corporation.

What this section in the bill does, Madam Chair, is that should the board determine that a second subsidiary corporation is needed – the example that I gave to the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills was that should the board determine, for example, in the realm of health that a second subsidiary should be created in order to ensure that we are getting funding protected for health solutions and innovation dollars in health, the board has that ability. I can assure the House that the board will not be creating a whole host of subsidiary corporations. This just gives them the tool to do that but not to create a second Alberta Innovates corporation, because, quite frankly – and I appreciate the comments from the Official Opposition on this – that defeats the purpose of the bill, which is to consolidate the four into one.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 11?

Mr. Cooper: Madam Chair, I move that we rise and report.

The Deputy Chair: Official Opposition House Leader, progress?

Mr. Cooper: Oh, yes.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

[Motion carried]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 11. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Member.

On progress of the bill, all in favour, say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Any opposed? So it will be recorded.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole (continued)

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 1
Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment to Bill 1, and I have the requisite copies for everyone.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. If you could just wait one minute until I see the original at the table, and then you can proceed.

Mr. Panda: Sure.

The Deputy Chair: Go ahead.

3:50

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak about Bill 1 one more time. The theme of the budget is jobs. I mean, the budget itself is called Jobs Plan. The government also said that they're going to create hundreds of thousands of jobs. I have been asking since then about the details of that. But there is one way we can actually help industry to create the jobs, and that's why I'm bringing in this amendment, and with your permission I'm reading this. I move that Bill 1, Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act, be amended in section 2 by adding the following after clause (a):

(a.1) measure the current regulatory burden on businesses, set targets for red tape reduction across Government, and report the results in an annual report published on a public website of the ministry of the Minister.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The amendment will be referred to as A3. Are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. This amendment that I want to speak to, from my hon. colleague here, deals with the issue of red tape and the burden that red tape gives to businesses. To give us all in this House a little idea of just how burdensome red tape can be, I was reading a report from the U.K., and as you all know, there is a big issue in the U.K. right now as to whether they should continue to belong to the European Union or not. They did an estimation that the cost of red tape to the U.K. of belonging to the EU is £33 billion.

An Hon. Member: Say that again.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thirty-three billion.

Mr. Panda: Million or billion?

Mr. MacIntyre: Billion, with a "b."

That was the U.K. government's own estimate of the cost of red tape in just belonging to this other body, belonging to the EU. Red tape is one of those insidious, seemingly little things that can cost all of us a great deal of money.

Recently – I think it was last year, 2015 – the Canadian Federation of Independent Business gave the golden scissors award, which is a red tape reduction award, to a federal cabinet minister, the minister of the Canada Revenue Agency, for cutting red tape. A really simple little thing that she did was to no longer require businesses to have to report payroll taxes weekly but to spread it out. You could choose to do it monthly. Just that one little thing saves businesses across our country hundreds and hundreds of thousands of man-hours in redundancy, and the government still gets the information that they need to get. Those are just a couple of things about red tape.

I have in Hansard a number of statements that have been made by the Premier and the Deputy Premier about red tape that I'm going to take a moment just to correct. I'm going to read to you a little bit here from Hansard, March 15, 2016, from the hon. Premier. "When we talk about red tape and regulations, let's be clear what some of those are: minimum wage, environmental protection, health and safety, speed limits." That was the Premier's own definition of red tape.

Now I'm going to read to you the definition of red tape from the dictionary. Red tape is an idiom that refers to excessive regulation or rigid conformity to formal rules that are considered redundant or bureaucratic and hinder or prevent action or decision-making. One definition is, quote, the collection or sequence of forms and procedures required to gain bureaucratic approval for something, especially when oppressively complex and time consuming. Another definition from the dictionary: the bureaucratic practice of hairsplitting and foot-dragging. End quote. Red tape generally includes endless filling out of paperwork and having multiple people or committees approve a decision and various low-level rules that make conducting one's affairs slower, more difficult, or both. In the EU in 2008 they launched a campaign actually giving awards, the best idea for red tape reduction award, and many nations and departments within the EU work really hard at coming up with red tape reduction measures to get this award. Those are some of the definitions of red tape.

I'm going to reread to you the Premier's definition of red tape. "When we talk about red tape and regulations, let's be clear what some of those are: minimum wage, environmental protection, health and safety, speed limits." Madam Chair, that is not red tape. That is not red tape. That was from Hansard, the 15th of March, 2016. So now we know why it is that this government is not at all concerned about cutting red tape; it's simply because they haven't got a clue what the definition of red tape is.

Again, the Deputy Premier, in Hansard of May 10, 2016, on the same subject of red tape: "Some things that might be referred to as red tape are simply security measures to make sure that individuals don't speed on highways, don't sell alcohol to minors." Just a profound lack of understanding of what red tape is.

Do I support this amendment? You bet I do. Should we have a red tape reduction strategy? Yes, we should, once we have a proper definition of red tape. I think every member in this place can agree that red tape is a problem. It's expensive. It's costing our people money. It hinders decisions being made in a timely fashion. It slows down everything within government and everything within our province and ultimately costs our people millions and millions of dollars.

I would ask this government to seriously consider a very widespread red tape reduction strategy, and I would support my hon. colleague's amendment wholeheartedly. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

My apologies to the Member for Calgary-Foothills. I didn't let you speak to your own amendment. Please go ahead.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think everyone in the House agrees that with Bill 1 the intentions may be great, but the operating part of that is not clear. On behalf of the Official Opposition we are trying to make this bill work for the government, for the people it intends to help. That's why I brought in this third amendment. Here is the opportunity for all members of this House to make this bill a better one.

Also, the Finance minister said that they want to find savings in the budget. The theme of the budget is, again, a jobs plan, and the Energy minister spoke about how to help people get back to work. Everyone's intentions seem to be helping people to create jobs.

I just want to give my personal experience from when I worked in the oil patch for 28 years. For most of the projects, you know, many times it took three to five years, whether it was a SAGD project or a mining project or any other pipeline project, just to get the approvals. From the initial application to the time they got the approval, it took many times five years. In the meantime the world market is not waiting for us. Most of the time the steel price had gone up so much, and then some of these projects became actually unviable. There were cost overruns. There were schedule overruns. So from someone who experienced that, I just wanted to share my experience with the members opposite so they can make an informed decision.

If you guys really want to make this bill at least look better than what it is and if you guys want to really believe in your budget theme of creating jobs, the best thing you can do is to vote in favour of this amendment, red tape reduction. That would show your seriousness in terms of helping Albertans by creating jobs and also, you know, to find savings in the budget without cutting front-line services.

That's why in our 12-point jobs action plan, from which you accepted recommendations 1 and 12 – and red tape is in between. That's another recommendation we made in our jobs action plan, that every time you introduce any bureaucratic process or regulation that adds to the approval process or adds to the cost of the project or anything, you need to take out another regulation that is adding layers of bureaucracy in this approval process.

Madam Chair, we can all agree that supporting entrepreneurship is important. We can all agree that supporting businesses is important. But we have to put our words into action. We need to agree on a way to support businesses and entrepreneurs.

The previous government did many studies on the excessive red tape in our province, and we have urged the government to take a look at those reports and do something about them. We don't have to duplicate the work. The previous government has already done those studies, and we can make use of some of that.

This amendment is to encourage the government to help Albertans by reducing the red tape that entangles businesses and entrepreneurs. Red tape takes up valuable time for Albertans, and time is money. As someone who worked in downtown Calgary, I can tell you: time is money. When you work on billions of dollars of projects, cost overruns sometimes could be billions of dollars. This red tape is a serious cancer. It could spread like wildfire. So all of us here have a responsibility to look at that and contain that. That would save Albertans money while simultaneously encouraging new start-ups because of reduced red tape.

The minister talked about Bill 11 a little while ago. We talked about innovation, how innovation is important for creating new businesses, which will, in turn, create jobs and wealth for the province. So if you are serious about that, please work on this red tape.

I encourage the members to vote for this amendment and support businesses and entrepreneurs. This is the last chance for the minister to make this bill better, so let of all us in the House help him. I mean, he worked really hard to earn the middle name One Job. I'm here to help him so he can take credit for creating jobs. If he's serious about really helping businesses and entrepreneurs, here is your chance to vote in favour of this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. Red tape is a problem; we need to acknowledge that. There are a lot of things that we need to solve in government. Wildrose has been very clear. We even created a red tape reduction shadow minister. This is something that we need to put on the forefront of where we're going as a province because it actually impedes what we're trying to achieve, which is trying to make sure that our tax dollars are spent effectively, with transparency and accountability.

Now, we need to be clear. When we're looking at red tape, it's everybody's responsibility in this Chamber – it's all of our responsibility – to make sure that when we run across red tape, we address it and move forward because in the end red tape costs jobs. It's a terrible burden on any province or country in the world, and we need to address that.

I do have a couple of important quotes that I'd like to read out. From November 18, 2015, in Hansard:

I can tell you that this is one of the priorities of our government in looking at ways to increase value-added. We are not about to charge out in isolation, on a decision that we make on our own, without working with the private sector to look at ways the government can support. Nowhere and never have we stated that the government of Alberta creates jobs. We do not. The private sector creates jobs. We have a role to play in, you know, increasing efficiencies, reducing red tape, looking at supporting private industry in their creation of jobs. From our point of view, if there are opportunities that the private sector has to increase value-added, both downstream and upstream, then we will look at ways of supporting them.

This is from our hon. minister of economic development.

This is something that we need to be very clear on. It's ironic that we've got a bill that is meant to create jobs even though we've got a quote stating that this isn't in the government's capacity. Our hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills has brought forward concerns that the government continues to say that it is out to make 100,000 jobs, and we haven't seen that. We have no way of being able to work out exactly how they came up with these job numbers.

This is where we come up with saying that this is a way to help create those 100,000 jobs, by reducing red tape. You need to be making sure somebody in government is being held to account to say that this is a priority, that this needs to be addressed. It doesn't appear that anybody is taking that leadership role. The fact is that this is foresight, that my fellow caucus member has brought this amendment forward, saying: let's actually do something with Bill 1; let's actually create something that this department will move forward and be accountable and transparent to Albertans on; let's bring a function that we can actually use.

Now, this brings me to the second quote that I've got.

Our government has been working quite closely with not only chambers of commerce but small businesses and entrepreneurs across this province, looking at ways that we can help. Part of the reason my ministry was created was, quite frankly, so that businesses have a one-stop shop. They have one place to go to access government. Whether it's an entrepreneur who's come up with a great new idea related to the agriculture sector, the forestry sector, a new clean-tech idea, they have a one-stop shop through my ministry.

Again this is the Minister of Economic Development and Trade in Hansard, March 9, 2016.

4:10

Now, the ministry itself acknowledges that we need to make sure that we encourage business. So far the government appears to be working counterintuitively to that. We're seeing increased taxes. We're seeing increased bureaucracy, which will increase red tape. The fact is that as we grow bigger with government, we become less efficient, and we need to be looking at efficiencies. We need to be making sure that every dollar that the taxpayer contributes to Alberta is utilized in a responsible manner. That's why these two quotes are so important. The minister acknowledges that red tape is a problem. The minister acknowledges that a one-stop shop is important. It would be unbelievable if the government votes against trying to reduce red tape.

Now, let's look exactly at what my hon. colleague is trying to do. He's trying to measure the current regulatory burden on businesses, set targets for red tape reduction across the government, and report the results in an annual report published on the public website of the ministry of the minister. That seems very reasonable. So how is it that when we're looking at Economic Development and Trade, this minister is only looking towards Alberta but should be looking towards and improving all of our relations with the other provinces? It shouldn't be just limited to Alberta.

But let's stay with this amendment. Let's just stay with this amendment and say: let's focus right now on Alberta. My colleague from Calgary-Foothills has been very clear that the businesses that he has worked with are hampered by red tape. It is costing hundreds of millions if not billions of dollars to our economy. My colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake has also stated that this is not just an Alberta problem; this is a global problem, costing billions and billions and billions of dollars that are not going to health care, that are not going to our education system, are not going to any of our front-line employees.

If we focus on red tape, we will create jobs. That is just a fact. Minimum wage increases won't. Corporate tax increases won't. Personal taxes increased won't. We have a lot of things that definitely don't increase jobs, but this is something that will actually create jobs in Alberta, and voting down red tape reduction is incredibly distressing for me, distressing for my colleagues, and it will be distressing for Albertans. You need to stand up. You need to do the right thing. You need to vote for reducing red tape.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

We will now have the leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Reading the amendment: "measure the current regulatory burden on businesses, set targets for red tape reduction across Government, and report the results in an annual report published on a public website of the ministry of the Minister." With all due respect to the mover of the motion, there is some benefit to the motion, but I have a big problem with it. Everything in the motion seems like a good idea, I have to say. I'll compliment the mover on that. My number one reason for wondering whether I'm going to support it or not is that this will add the very first piece of substance to the original bill, and then I'll be conflicted on whether I support that or not.

The bill itself, as it's commonly referred to around here, is the bill about nothing because it gives the minister authority to do what he already has authority to do and ought to already be doing. So whether Bill 1 passes or not without this is inconsequential. My concern with the amendment is that it may require me to vote for the rest of the bill, which is inconsequential, in order to get this, and that leaves me with a dilemma because it actually puts a little bit of meat on the bones where there is none right now.

So I will sit down and contemplate this legislative dilemma which the mover of this amendment has burdened me with.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak on amendment A3? The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Chair. Thank you very much to the mover of the amendment. You know, I'm listening to the interesting comments on the other side and the perceptions that they have of red tape. I think it's been clear, though, that we are looking at ways to reduce red tape and that not just the Minister of Economic Development and Trade but all of our government is willing to work together to find these things.

What I didn't hear in a lot of the comments were specific examples of red tape, because what was provided and at once referred to was taxes. The quote that was provided actually quoted the Premier explaining something about what the opposition was saying was red tape. Again, it's not clear exactly what they mean. I would assume that if they have a shadow minister of red tape, they would have some examples. Nonetheless, I do want to say – I mean, I even remember it previously in this House. The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner criticized officials for requiring clean water in RVs and that being an example of red tape.

If that's what you're talking about, I think we also have to evaluate that we are stewards of Alberta, and we have responsibilities and we have processes that are there for a reason. It's not just about making sure that we have the openness to receive feedback to make sure that – absolutely, we started by creating a ministry for people to have a one-stop shop. As was said on the opposite side, it's a good start, and it provides us with the ability to also have those conversations with people.

In fact, we don't need an annual report if we're continuously working on this issue. I would hope that as the shadow minister, you would be continuously showing actual things that are prohibiting or not allowing businesses to succeed in the best way, because at the end of the day those are the outcomes that our government is working towards. We're continuously meeting with business stakeholders and chambers of commerce in order to do so. I don't see the reason to add this because it's absolutely a priority for our government.

I believe that it's also not best done in silos. I think that throughout ministries everyone needs to work on this and that you continuously need to be open to having these conversations, to hearing that feedback, to hearing what the experiences are on the other side from the people e-mailing you and going through those processes. That's part of just basic governance and reviewing your processes. That's why we ask a lot of questions.

I'm actually not going to support this amendment for those reasons. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. MacIntyre: The hon. member that just spoke: is it permitted for me to ask her a question?

Mr. Cooper: You can say whatever you want. If she answers . . .

Mr. MacIntyre: If she answers? She doesn't have to?

I would like to have the hon. member's definition of red tape, please. She did refer to statements made over here as being too vague, so I am asking for clarification.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you can make a statement or ask a question. However, it's up to the member to respond if they choose to.

If not, we will move on to Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, I've appreciated listening to the members here, especially the comments over here about putting some meat on the bones. That would be an interesting dilemma to actually be in at some point in time.

You know, governments can help or they can hinder business. I would, I guess, refer to some of the comments by the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park. We do understand that governments do have to have regulations and that those regulations are there to protect the citizens and they're there to protect and ensure that government is accountable and that business is – it's public safety. Governments can and do set those regulations to try and help businesses and society.

At the same time I think that a fair look at this issue would also show us that there are times when governments, through their regulations, can become burdensome. There's always a balance that we're trying to find here. You know, there are times when our governments can be excessively bureaucratic, where they can place rules that are a burden on the taxpayers and on the businesses in this province. And, as you suggested, there are times when we do have to start asking questions and we do have to start looking at the unintended consequences – we throw that term around a lot – of the regulations and the bureaucracy that sometimes accompany government.

I think that this member's amendment, that I would speak in favour of, is suggesting that there are times when we can use good judgment and look at these things to see if there are ways that we can make government more efficient and make business more efficient and be able to navigate the rules and the regulations of government so that they are allowed to be more efficient.

You know, as I was preparing for this, I found a couple of articles that I found kind of interesting. One was by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, that has started a Red Tape Awareness Week. They've suggested that there are places and there are times when you could take a look at the research that's been done on red tape and see just what kind of a burden it has placed on the ability for business to do business and to create jobs.

You were asking for some examples, so here are some examples. It is referring to Canada and the United States, and in this study they're comparing red tape in the United States and Canada.

In both countries, regulation is a highly regressive hidden tax with the smallest businesses paying the highest per-employee costs. Canadian businesses of every size, except those with over 100 employees, pay more per-employee than their American counterparts.

Immediately, that means that Canadian businesses are behind the eight ball when comparing themselves to American companies in their ability to be efficient and to be able to compete with American companies.

For the majority of business, the gap is significant. Businesses with fewer than five employees in Canada pay forty-five per cent more per employee in Canada ($5,942) to comply with regulation than their U.S. counterparts ($4,084). In total, Canada's businesses pay $31 billion a year to comply with regulation.

[Now] how much of these regulatory costs are red tape?

It goes on to say.

Businesses owners in both countries report that about one-third of the cost of regulation could be reduced without affecting the legitimate health and safety objectives of regulation. In other words, eliminating red tape would be the equivalent of a $9 billion annual stimulus package in Canada.

Significant by anybody's thinking.

Now, when we take a look at some of the examples that I'm going to suggest here, you know, in my own constituency I was talking with one gentleman that owns a drilling company. He has suggested that in this past year the application process for being able to drill – that it's taken so long for the government to approve that application that he's missed the window of opportunity to drill. Therefore, jobs and the ability to make a profit for that company have been set in jeopardy by the bureaucracy of the government in trying to apply the regulatory process for drilling.

You know, here's another one. I was at the ASBA zone 4 meeting, and I was talking with one of the school boards. They were saying that the government has implemented a new policy whereby they now have to put forth their budgets monthly to the Ministry of Education and that in order to do that, that has considerably increased the costs to the school board without, again, any additional revenue being given to the school board in order to be able to do that.

Now, we understand that school boards have to be accountable, and we would all support that, but asking ourselves whether we need to do it, as previously, quarterly or now monthly: what are the benefits of actually going from a quarterly system of reporting to a monthly system of reporting? They're suggesting that, really, there is no additional benefit to the government, there is no additional benefit to the taxpayer, and that this is a considerable issue within our system. This would be an example of red tape which the government should be able to look at. So you've asked for some suggestions, you've asked for some examples, and I think I've provided you with some.

I would ask that this government would consider and that the people of this Legislature would consider this amendment. It is asking for us to consider this whole issue of red tape, and there's a benefit to it, I believe. So I will be supporting this amendment.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

If I could just gently remind all members to speak through the Chair, please, when you're delivering your message. Thank you.

The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair, and I'll thank the previous speaker for his comments. I do appreciate that and will comment on a couple of his comments.

And I will thank the member for moving this amendment. Again, I appreciate the spirit of this amendment and what it's intending to do. But I can assure the House that I meet regularly with business leaders, entrepreneurs, industry leaders in all sectors in all corners of this province and will ask them for examples or ways that government can support business and industry, whether that's to gather ideas, you know, outside of monetary ways of supporting our business and entrepreneurial sector – although we did listen to the business community, which is why our government dropped the small-business tax rate by a third.

To this point that the member was speaking of, we are looking not just to finding efficiencies but to making Alberta an even more competitive place to do business in. That is something that happens on an ongoing basis, that we are listening and consulting with our stakeholders to remove barriers and that if there are barriers, to decrease speed bumps when there are.

You know, I appreciate the member's example about a driller and the regulatory burden that he faced. I do need to comment that there are processes in place that ensure that before projects begin, they've gone through the proper environmental processes, that they've gone through a series of processes. I appreciate the opposition may refer to that as red tape, but they are processes that are in place to ensure that we are protecting the well-being not only of Albertans and our citizens but also of our planet. We are stewards of the environment, and we have a responsibility to act in the best interests of all Albertans.

Although I do appreciate that at times that may be burdensome for some businesses, we do also look – and, again, when I sit down with these business leaders, we'll ask them for specifics. I appreciate the member mentioning that one as a specific. Again, previous comments talked about things like taxes. Taxes are not red tape. You know, other comments in previous conversations looked at, again, providing public safety, which I don't think is red tape. It may be burdensome at times, and companies may wish for a speedy process, but there are processes in place.

Now, are we and can we always look for ways to simplify or expedite in a way that still guards the public interest yet doesn't unnecessarily drag things out? Absolutely. You know, the Premier has spoken on numerous occasions about pipelines, whether it be Energy East or the Trans Mountain pipeline, that, yes, there is a regulatory process that they go through with the NEB, but she has urged the federal government not to lengthen or make it overly burdensome because we recognize and our government knows that we need market access for our product. There is a process in place, but dragging one's feet is not going to help anyone.

I just wanted to stand and clarify that and to thank the member for his amendment. I will make it easy for the leader of the third party in his previous comments in the sense that I will not be supporting this amendment, and I encourage members of the House to do the same.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Cooper: I was doing everything I could to stay in my seat, but I just couldn't stop myself. [interjections] I know that may disappoint some members in the Chamber.

You know, the Deputy Government House Leader was thankful for some examples of red tape. I think that they are numerous, and I'd just like to provide another one for him. There's a particular community in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that has a very strong belief that the provincial government is one of the most significant obstacles that they currently face to economic development. There's a particular quarter – that's a quarter of land, for some city folks if you might not know – within the boundaries of this particular municipality. While the economy was charging, a certain company did a significant number of studies that included environmental studies, transportation impact assessments, and some other land-use studies. Now, on this particular quarter the economy slowed, and as a result the developer chose not to proceed with the development, but now this particular community, fortunately, is having some real success during this downturn and would like to now proceed with the development of this quarter.

Now, unfortunately, a period of time – and I believe in this case that it's 18 months – has elapsed, and as opposed to the government working closely with the developer, the developer has been required to go back to square one, and all of the studies and hoops that they had to jump through in order to develop the land are now back at square one. Environment has informed them that even though it's the exact same study, the exact same piece of land, the exact same bureaucrats in Edmonton, in order to get approvals, it will be over 12 months – 12 months – to approve something that's already been approved. Transportation has given some indication that it will take close to 10 months to approve something that was already approved by the same bureaucrats and the same ivory tower elites in Edmonton. There is no greater example of red tape. All of the checks and balances have been gone through. All of the i's had been dotted. All of the t's had been crossed.

Now, instead of expediting the process, an organization who wants to create jobs, who wants to move a community forward, who wants to provide economic development and growth is being held up by this government. Yet they say: oh, well, give a real example of red tape. They are in all sorts of places, and this is a perfect example of one. It's an exact reason why we should have a report card on red tape, so that we can be identifying things just like this and ensuring they don't happen in the future, things that prevent jobs, prevent economic development. I would think the minister would be keen, given that he's having a hard time creating any jobs, to identify issues just like this and move forward.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's indeed a pleasure to rise and speak today. I thought I might bring a little levity to the comments this afternoon because some of the members opposite aren't necessarily as familiar with some of the rural acronyms and some of the rural things that happen. To some members of the government side who represent primarily rural ridings, I'd like to relate a story that happened to myself and a good friend of mine when we travelled to Broken Bow, Valentine, and I believe it was Glendive. Glendive is in Montana, but Broken Bow and Valentine are in Nebraska.

We were talking specifically there about red tape and how government affects Canadian agriculture production. A very good friend of mine actually got up and talked about police and how bureaucracy and such is policed in Canada differently than it is in the U.S. My good friend Jim got up, and he started talking about that in Canada we have chicken police. If you have too many chickens in a commercial operation, an organization will come out and make sure that you don't have too many chickens, the chicken police.

That same agency also has egg police. We have supply-managed egg production in Canada, which they do not in the U.S. We also have milk police so that under supply management you cannot produce under commercial operations more milk than the quota size that you're allowed.

Madam Chair, we also have had wheat police. Some of you may know that I've been in direct incursion with the wheat police. A former government of the country actually changed that regulation so that we don't now have wheat police in western Canada and such that the farmers can sell their wheat to whomever they want. They don't have to go through a government agency to decide to whom and where and when they can sell their wheat.

In the constituency of Drumheller-Stettler we have a government agency known as the special areas, and they have grass police. The man comes out and actually assesses the grass production on your property and decides when, where, and how you can graze your cattle.

Certain regulations related to the milk industry also incur cheese police. You may laugh, but this is serious business to those people who are importing cheese into this country because it has a monstrous tariff on it. It's insanity. If you think that this does not affect commercial operations, you need to reassess your evaluation of it. It's a serious situation.

My friend Jim, when he rattled through this whole list of chicken police, egg police, milk police, wheat police, grass police, cheese police in an auction mart in Valentine, Nebraska, the whole atmosphere broke out in open laughter because they could not believe the government red tape and how that would affect the agricultural industries that they're involved in.

I know there are some members from international heritage backgrounds, as am I, that need to realize that sometimes government regulation actually can negatively affect commerce. That's what this amendment is trying to do. Maybe you have cousins who are involved in the police industry. I don't know. Maybe you have cousins that are involved in the ag police part or with traffic police. We limit commerce traffic by weights and restrictions and speeds, and we all agree on that, and there are penalties for that. But the cheese police, for example, travel around and talk to people who import cheese at the borders. Now, does that sound like a sane thing for business?

We need to re-evaluate, and we need to re-evaluate the member's intention to the amendment here. I'd ask that you give it serious consideration and support the amendment that's before you.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members wishing to speak on amendment A3?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A3 lost]

Bill 13

Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2016

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to talk today about the veterinary amendment act. I don't think I'll be quite as informative as I was earlier about the police and their involvement in this organization although there is some consternation among some veterinarians and the self-policing that this professional organization does do, but that's not really our point today. Our point is betterment of the industry and betterment of the service that it provides to agriculture, to cattle producers, to animals.

Before I forget, I want to mention to the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster – I talked to him yesterday about what I believed was higher moral ground in working with the animal profession, and I may have chosen the wrong words. It is an honourable profession to be working with and caring for animals, especially animals who are in distress. I've seen it, personal experience where some animal is in distress. We had a dog who had a bunch of quills come to us after the dog had had an altercation with a porcupine, and the animal – even though they can't speak, they know that they are in distress and come to a care provider, whether that be a veterinarian or anyone, to try and alleviate their problem.

This bill is trying to streamline regulation, and unlike some of the previous legislation, which may have been stabilizing red tape and not necessarily decreasing it, as the Member for Calgary-Foothills would like to have had brought forward, it is an interesting change in direction by the government to take a step in the direction, in this case, of what some of us would believe to be reducing red tape.

Wildrose knows that adequate professional representation for veterinary technologists is important, and we will continue to engage stakeholders to ensure that this legislation will not trigger any unforeseen consequences. Madam Chair, that's a fear that needs to be exercised vehemently in this Chamber, that legislation that we bring forward and legislation that's passed is brought and done so in a fashion that does not create unintended consequences, just like I talked about previously with the wheat police, the chicken police, the egg police, the milk police. Some would say that it could turn into a cheesy situation.

Madam Chair, protecting Alberta consumers is a Wildrose priority, and it's important that this housekeeping legislation does not facilitate government overreach. As we deliberate here on this legislation, it's important that we are cognizant and serious in recognizing that we have a duty and responsibility to Albertans, to Albertan taxpayers, and in this case to the animals and the husbandry that's affected. To date stakeholders have told us that this bill is harmless housekeeping legislation, and that's part of the reason why I'm supporting it and why, I believe, the rest of the Wildrose caucus will. Given the importance of the veterinary profession, we will be paying close attention to the accompanying regulation to ensure that it does not effectively limit the operating potential of veterinary technologists.

Yesterday, Madam Chair, I brought it up to the member from Spruce Grove, I believe it was, that veterinary technologists do not necessarily have a chance to vote under the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association body. Even though they may be included in this, I have a concern that there may down the road be an unforeseen consequence, but at this point in time it seems to meet with approval of the stakeholders that we've spoken to. Reducing red tape saves time and money for professionals as well as the government, and by bringing veterinary technologists under the same regulatory framework as veterinarians, this bill would simplify their professional obligations. Albertans deserve to know that they are receiving the best services from the people that they are qualified to approach for this matter.

Madam Chair, the veterinary technicians, who are not necessarily gender specific, as the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster talked to us about yesterday, provide a valuable service, and they do that with heartfelt feeling. I've seen them at our farm and in the facilities operated by veterinarians at odd and unusual hours. The clock on the wall or the clock on their wrist does not necessarily signify the end of the working day. They do that out of compassion for the animals and to, effectively and hopefully, make a better environment.

Madam Chair, this bill appears to be a rare example of the current government resisting the temptation to make things worse for Albertans.

I want to relate a story about the idea of taxation and how regulation can sometimes create a problem for regulations going forward and how this would actually create problems. A situation that occurs in the cattle industry: we use a product called ivermectin, which is a licensed product, to relieve a parasite in the cattle, and these parasites are both internal and external. They can cause harm to the animal. They can cause degradation of the hide as they go forward, and they can cause degradation internally to the performance of the animal as it's brought to its performance of raising another calf or in some cases slaughter. This product is, in my estimation, an effective product. Actually, what it does is that it kills a parasite.

In some cases people could relate regulation or, as my Member for Calgary-Foothills talks about, undue regulation coming forward as a parasite or a taxation base that is unnecessary. This chemical called ivermectin is administered topically upon the animals, and it kills the parasite. That's something that's needed in this industry and needed in an economic area to reduce the parasite of taxation in government and allow people to have the freedom to spend their own money wisely with less taxation, less interference by government, or less interference, as in the example I gave, by police.

Madam Chair, there are analogies that we can use, going forward, between various parts of industry, various parts of the economy to bring some of these issues forward. I want to say that I believe that the supporting of this legislation is important. If there's some way that there are unforeseen consequences, hopefully and possibly the government, down the road, would find a better way to bring this legislation forward and that this legislation could effectively be changed should it need to be.

Madam Chair, I'm going to be voting in favour of this amendment, and I think I would endorse others to do the same. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak on Bill 13?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question on Bill 13, Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2016?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

[The clauses of Bill 13 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I move that we rise and report bills 11, 1, and 13.

[Motion carried]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Mr. Rosendahl: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 1, Bill 11, Bill 13. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur with the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 17 Appropriation Act, 2016

[Debate adjourned May 18: Mr. Cooper speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise in the House and speak to Bill 17, the Appropriation Act, 2016. I had the pleasure of adjourning debate earlier today and look forward to hearing some important discussion around a piece of legislation that, certainly in my opinion and in the opinion of many on this side of the House – and I can assure you that many of the outstanding constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills have some grave concerns about this particular piece of legislation – is a piece of legislation that is going to see an unprecedented amount of debt, a path of reckless spending and high taxes, a path where we'll see a carbon tax implemented on every single Albertan, a tax that is going to make every single thing more expensive.

As I was mentioning earlier today – and I didn't have the opportunity to finish – a constituent in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills runs a transportation company, Madam Speaker, and one of the things that he has spoken to me about is the fact that on every single invoice that he writes following the implementation of the carbon tax, he is going to include a separate line item for the increased costs to his business from that carbon tax. He transports a wide range of products.

The fact of the matter is that this carbon tax is going to be downloaded and placed at the feet of Albertans and, in many respects, at the feet of families right across this great province of ours. It's a concern because the government wants you to believe, Madam Speaker, that the increased cost for families is only going to be about $400 a year. They have made this claim, that for low-income Albertans they're going to provide a rebate of $400 a year and that that's going to cover all of the costs, but what the government has failed to do is to table any piece of economic impact study on the true costs to Albertans. An example like I used just moments ago, a transportation company in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, is just one example of how the carbon tax is going to be passed along to Albertans.

The wild thing about the carbon tax is that it's going to be paid at so many different levels. It's going to be paid multiple times by every consumer that touches a product. It's going to be paid at the transportation level. It's going to be paid at the manufacturing level. It's going to be paid at the distribution level. It's going to be paid at the retail level. So what we have is a tax on a tax on a tax on a tax on everything.

It should be a concern because we are going to continue to lose the competitive advantage that has made Alberta great. We see a path forward that's being proposed by the government that, I can tell you, the constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills certainly don't support. They have one concern on the tax side. They also have concerns on the debt side, that this government is borrowing more than any government in the province's history, and at the end of this government's short mandate there are going to be more than $2 billion in debt payments on interest alone.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Cooper: Two billion, with a "b." Sometimes people in this place get a million and a billion mixed up, but in this case we're talking about $2 billion. That is a lot of schools, hospitals, roads, teachers, nurses, and on and on it goes.

The challenge is that this government is not only making everything more expensive for average Albertan families; they're also increasing the debt and the burden of government on future generations in this province, and we all should be very, very concerned.

5:20

You know, this government had initially spoken about their jobs plan, and now they have this nice shiny name for this budget, calling it the jobs plan. The last jobs plan they introduced was a subsidy plan with a price tag of $178 million for two years, and it did absolutely nothing, so little that, to their credit, they listened to some stakeholders and cancelled this project. My concern is that their track record on laying out plans in stage 1 of their jobs plan is going to be very similar to their track record on this new jobs plan.

There is significant risk to all of Alberta because of this so-called jobs plan. Madam Speaker, not only is it going to have an impact on families; it's also going to have an impact on communities. Right across this province we see communities from all corners hurting, and much of that pain is because of this government. We see that this budget makes everything more expensive at a time when Albertans are losing their jobs, at a time where they are feeling the pains and the realities of joblessness. This government wants to make everything more expensive, and as a result it's going to hurt communities.

To add insult to injury, through the carbon tax and the impacts of that carbon tax and their desire to accelerate the phase-out of coal, they're going to cost thousands of jobs right across this province in communities like Hanna and Foremost and Grande Cache. I received an e-mail just this past week from an individual in Grande Cache desperate for this government to stop their attack on those communities, desperate for their livelihood to be able to remain. Unfortunately, I don't have the e-mail with me today, but I would love to be able to table that e-mail and read it into the record so that government members can have a real sense of the impact that they have. This budget has real consequences. This carbon tax will have real consequences on real communities and on real people.

I think of other consequences that this budget has for our province, including our credit being downgraded. Madam Speaker, you know that as individual credit ratings become worse, the individual's ability to borrow money at reasonable rates is decreased. That's exactly what we will continue to see in our province. Not only do we have $2 billion in debt payments on the interest alone; that number doesn't even include the increases from the downgrades of our credit. So there are real consequences, and there are real costs to families, to communities, to the treasury. Every day we come to this place we hear the government talking about leadership. The people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills don't believe that this is the type of leadership that the province needs right now.

Madam Speaker, there are so many significant challenges and concerns with this budget that I could stay and stand and chat all day, but I know that time is short in the Assembly today. I'd like to provide the opportunity for some of my hon. colleagues from other parts of this great province of ours to share some of the things that they're hearing from their constituents because I think that it's important that the government understand that the decisions they're making, the path that they're taking have real consequences. If there's one thing that I'm hearing from the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, it's that this NDP government is making worse – much worse – the unfortunate situation, the bad situation that our province is currently in in terms of the economic realities that we're all facing.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will recognize the leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have to say that this is unfortunate, the way the government has brought forward Bill 17, the appropriations bill. Unfortunately, there are no sunny ways in this particular bill.

An Hon. Member: No sunny ways in Ottawa.

Mr. McIver: There are no sunny ways in Ottawa, and there are none in Edmonton, Madam Speaker.

Unfortunately, this actually sets Alberta back in a number of very unfortunate ways. It erases a good part of the Alberta advantage. It puts our province, unfortunately, in a spiral where the government borrows money uncontrollably, with no plan to pay it back at least till 2024. We don't know how much the debt load will be by then, but we do know that what the government will have in hand as a result of this bill and other ones to come is nearly $60 billion in debt before the next election.

Assuming that a lot of Albertans haven't left by then because of this government's policies – assume that the population is about the same, or just assume that the population is what it is in the government's budget documents – children born in 2019, the year of the next election, will come into this province owing on behalf of their province about $13,000 on day one. Happy birthday. Happy birthday to all those new Albertans. The same could be said to those that move to Alberta that year from other jurisdictions: "Welcome to Alberta. You owe us $13,000. If you stick around, if this government is here, it will be a lot more really soon."

It's going to hurt Alberta families, unfortunately, Madam Speaker, in more ways, starting with the fact that this government has only taken less than a year to throw Alberta's triple-A credit rating overboard. I know the government will complain that they're not responsible for low oil prices despite the fact that I think the Finance minister accidentally said today in question period that he was. I don't think he actually believes that. The fact is that the triple-A credit rating will make it more expensive for this government to do business.

An Hon. Member: Didn't you leave them with that?

Mr. McIver: Actually, in fact, a member of the Official Opposition is chirping here, so I'll remind him that I think we left the government with a $7 billion fund and a billion-dollar surplus. Thank you, sir.

We also had a plan to pay back money that was borrowed, which is very important because that is an important fiscally conservative policy. I know there are people in here that believe that no debt is the right policy, but that's not actually a fiscally conservative policy, Madam Speaker. A fiscally conservative policy is using debt responsibly as a tool to furnish infrastructure. To use it responsibly requires a plan to pay it back in a reasonable amount of time, a plan that's credible and actually leads to the people paying for the infrastructure actually being able to use it.

5:30

What we have, on the other hand, from the government is, unfortunately, a plan to borrow money and never pay it back. I would say that the loss of the triple-A credit rating is going to hurt in ways that we don't know yet. The Finance minister, certainly in estimates, refused to put a number on it, but we know that it's going to cost the government more to borrow money, 1 to 1 and a quarter per cent more, we think.

What we did get out of the Finance minister is that even for the Alberta Treasury Branches, a tremendous Alberta institution, that does a great job on behalf of Albertans – we were told that they don't borrow money; the government borrows it for them. So if it costs the government more to borrow money for the ATB, then clearly it's either going to cost the ATB more or the government is going to eat the difference. But either way the taxpayers are on the hook at the end of the day for that difference, that the government has brought on to Albertans.

What you have, then, is a spiralling effect, a very negative spiralling effect based on what's before us in this bill, Madam Speaker, and it's really due to the government's absolute refusal to put in place any cost control. I know that they say: well, what would you not spend? We've even had government members say: you know, we're going to build all this infrastructure, and it's a great thing. I agree. Building infrastructure is a great thing. The problem is that when you don't have a plan to pay off your debt, which there isn't in this plan, and we have $2 billion of not even servicing costs, just interest costs that don't actually service the principal at all, that is $2 billion of infrastructure every year that could have been built, which could be one and a half cancer centres, which could be 50 or 100 schools, depending on the size of the schools, that Albertans will not get every year for the rest of their lives or at least for the rest of their lives with an NDP government, because they'll just be paying the interest on what happened in the past.

Lots of other things. We spend all this money, and we learned in estimates that the government has chosen to cut crack filling on the roads and to let the average condition of the roads deteriorate over the next three years. They've also committed to letting the average condition of health care facilities deteriorate over the next three years. They've also promised to let the condition of every building that the government of Alberta owns deteriorate over the next three years. Madam Speaker, I want you to know that these are not editorial comments on my part; these are numbers directly lifted out of the government's business plan.

In fact, the only infrastructure that the government says they're going to slightly increase the average condition of is schools, which is, I would submit to you, probably as a result of the ambitious program to build new schools started by the previous government. I'm glad this government saw the value in that and has decided to carry on. What that amounts to is that the average age of schools, based on how many new ones there are, is going to improve, but I didn't see anything in the plan where it says that they're actually going to do catch-up on repairs to the old ones.

A government comes in, complains about what they call a backlog of deferred maintenance, and their result is to spend way more money and let the deferred maintenance grow. They're spending more money but getting less benefit for Albertans. I think that's pretty much exactly the opposite of what they promised before they came here. When you think of that, it really makes this difficult to support.

Let's talk about the hon. House leader from the Official Opposition. I agree with him on this. There are towns in this province that produce coal. The government has promised to put them out of business. I know they can keep that promise because through this budget and through these appropriations what they can guarantee is how many jobs they will cause to go away from Alberta. What they're unable to promise is how many jobs will come to Alberta.

Just today in question period the jobs minister was asked: "You know, you're putting thousands of people out of business, potentially turning several Alberta towns into ghost towns. Can you tell us how you're going to create at least a hundred jobs there to replace the several thousand that you're eliminating?" The minister did not have an answer.

Ms Renaud: That's not true.

Mr. McIver: It actually is true. The minister didn't give an answer. He actually had an opportunity to give an answer, and he did not provide where he was going to provide jobs in those towns.

Madam Speaker, unfortunately, it's a comedy of errors that just gets worse the further you read into the appropriations and the budget that they're attached to. We talked about the additional borrowing costs. You know what? The government can't actually claim the low oil and gas prices and the triple-A credit rating because the previous government over 15 years had several rounds of low oil and gas prices and maintained that triple-A credit rating. But I'll tell you that what they did not do was to borrow without a plan to pay it back. They didn't. They always had a plan to pay it back. They always managed to have net assets, where this government is going to have net negative assets in a very short period of time.

Again, Madam Speaker, those listening at home and those in the House don't have to take my word for it. These are things that the bond-rating agencies have said about this government and their fiscal policies, their severely damaged, negative, hard-on-Alberta, bad-for-the-future fiscal policies. I don't have to create words around this. The world's lenders, the credit-rating agencies that every government depends upon are saying it for me, are saying it for us. The only problem is: are the members on the government side listening? So far there has been no evidence whatsoever that they are, no evidence whatsoever that they will be willing to in the future.

Between that and the fact that – if it wasn't bad enough that the government is driving investment and jobs out with their plan, they've added a carbon attack, which they call a carbon tax, on Albertans, which is going to take money out of every families' pockets in Alberta. In fact, the Premier yesterday in question period said that people that are rebated will get as much out of the carbon tax as it costs them. Well, I think that the Premier might not have thought it through because, actually, her own government's budget documents don't say that; they say something quite different. If the government is right, people will get back what they pay extra for gas in their car in carbon tax, and they'll get back what they pay for heat in their house in carbon tax – and that's only assuming that the government is right – and that's where the rebates stop.

Unfortunately, that's not where the carbon attack stops on the average family. The food that they buy in the grocery store rides on a truck: extra costs. The clothing they put on themselves and their kids arrives on a truck: extra costs. The furniture that they buy, the electronics they buy, every other thing that they buy that rides on a truck will cost more because of the carbon attack on families.

On top of that, municipalities are not being rebated. They're all angry about this thing. I mean, if you listen to them, you couldn't possibly support this. They're all going to have to either cut expenditures or raise their property taxes in order to pay the way for this government's carbon attack on Albertans. We know that.

This is a tax on kids playing hockey and swimming and figure skating and all activities where you've either got to heat the water or cool down the water to make ice or a warm place to swim, which takes energy. The carbon attack is an attack on kids' activities as well, and that is what we're considering here.

Madam Speaker, it doesn't add up very well for Alberta. It doesn't add up very well for families. It doesn't add up very well for – even the most vulnerable of Albertans are being attacked by the carbon attack. Like other families, whether those Albertans are on AISH or seniors on fixed incomes and or any type of other supports, the people that you least want to hurt will be hurt by the carbon attack. Yes, they will be rebated. [interjections] No, the government members never think that's funny, that people on AISH and seniors will be hurt by this.

Again, not unlike other Alberta families, when a senior on a fixed income gets their rebate cheque, assuming that the government is right – and we'll try to give them the benefit of the doubt at least on this – they'll get rebated for the gas they put in their car and the heat in their house. But they, too, will pay extra for their food: not rebated. They, too, will pay extra for their clothing: not rebated. They, too, will pay extra for everything else that they bring into their homes: not rebated.

It's so damaging. Really, you would think, Madam Speaker, that I would be making this up, but the crazy thing about this is that there's nothing to make up. The government actually put something as bad as all of this in black and white and published it for all Albertans to read. You don't need to embellish this. You don't need to exaggerate. A friend of mine in the media says oftentimes one of his sayings: you can't write this stuff; it writes itself. The government has written it for all of us. We don't have to write it; they've written it for us.

I know that the government members are not enjoying me talking about this, but really they need to remember that what I'm doing is recounting what they have put in black and white and presented to the public. Some of them are squirming in their seats – and I don't blame them – but they should remember that they actually had the authority to make a different choice. They actually had the ability to make a choice that would support Alberta jobs, support Alberta families, support Alberta people on fixed incomes, and they chose instead to go down this path, the path of Bob Rae, that Ontario still has not recovered from decades after the fact. Decades after the fact. He spent the province into oblivion with no plan to pay any of it back.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will recognize the Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. When I saw this budget, I was literally speechless, and that takes a lot of doing. That takes a lot of doing. I couldn't believe – I couldn't believe – that the government actually had not only a $10 billion deficit in this budget but a $10 billion deficit next year and an $8 billion deficit the year after that. It is beyond irresponsible; it's negligent. It really is. There are choices that this government can make that avoid massive front-line cuts but allow Alberta to maintain a strong financial footing in difficult times.

The big question I have for this government is: what if you're wrong? What if these forecasts are wrong? What if it's even worse than this? We could be in serious, serious trouble because what you're doing is setting us up for massive cutbacks in the future or massive tax increases or both. That's a huge risk in this budget. This government had other choices, and they unfortunately didn't have the bravery to make those choices.

It's like someone who moves out of the house for the first time, racks up a huge bill on the Visa, and doesn't realize that you've got to pay it back at some point. Those debt service charges, those interest charges will ultimately add up and add up very, very quickly. We are looking at $2 billion in debt service costs by 2018. That's a 159 per cent increase in two years – 159 per cent – and there's no plan to balance the budget anywhere in sight. The Minister of Finance has said: well, maybe at some point in the next five to 10 years, maybe eight years. Why eight? Where does that number come from? Where is the plan? There's absolutely no plan that sees us move anywhere close to balance.

In difficult financial times running a reasonable deficit: that's okay. Borrowing money to build infrastructure projects: that's okay. In fact, it's a desirable thing. So I'll give this government credit for doing that. That makes a lot of sense in a difficult economic time. But what doesn't make a lot of sense is borrowing money for operations, day-to-day operations: keeping the lights on in this very building, paying salaries, buying pens and pencils and office furniture. That doesn't make sense because it is not sustainable. It is the difference between buying a house and taking a mortgage and having good debt, and borrowing money and just making the minimum payment on your credit card, bad debt. That's the difference. It's not a small amount of bad debt on the operating side; it's substantial, multibillion-dollar, year-after-year borrowing for operations.

Now that the credit rating of Alberta has been downgraded yet again and yet again, this budget and future budgets, if you stay on the same path, will see the province of Alberta downgraded yet again. That means that our debt service costs will continue to grow, that more and more money will be spent on debt servicing rather than on important front-line programs. That is a huge concern.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, but in accordance with Standing Order 64(3) the chair is required to put the question to the House on the appropriation bill on the Order Paper for second reading.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:45 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

9 a.m.

Thursday, May 19, 2016

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Let us reflect. As we conclude our time in the Assembly for this week and prepare to return to our constituencies and homes, let us continue to find ways to work collaboratively in our efforts to help our fellow Albertans as they overcome the many challenges that we face and will continue to face in the days ahead. Thank you.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 17 Appropriation Act, 2016

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to the bill. I guess the main thing that I want to say is that the reality is that this budget is not making things better for the province of Alberta; it's making things worse. It's punishing families, it's punishing business with risky ideological policies that in reality are going to make our province a weaker place. It's going to make it much harder for us to survive as a province.

The carbon tax, for instance, is going to punish everyday families and businesses and will make life significantly more expensive in Alberta. Everything from heating your house to buying your groceries to driving your kids to hockey practice will be more expensive thanks to the NDP carbon tax, and a lot more things could be added to that list. Any good that would have been done with the small-business tax reduction that was called for in the Wildrose jobs action plan is negated by the $3 billion carbon tax. The typical family will see a thousand dollars a year in additional expenses thanks to the carbon tax. On top of the pricey and ill-advised carbon tax the typical family will now be paying probably up to $2,000 a year more just to pay the interest on the NDP government's ballooning debt payments. That's like taking out a credit card in every Alberta family's name and expecting them to pay it off.

Let's break down the budget just a little bit with regard to the impact on families. The cost of living in Alberta, as I have said, is going to climb thanks to the policies of the NDP government. Everything from driving your car to buying groceries will be more expensive, and 40 per cent of Albertans will see no sort of offset to these damaging policies. The NDP government campaigned on asking the top 1 per cent to pay a little bit more. Instead, we've seen a reliance on personal taxes climb while the amount of revenue from corporate taxes actually shrinks. The reality is that the policies being put forward have created that scenario, created that reality.

The impact on businesses. The NDP cancelled their ill-advised jobs subsidy plan, with a price tag of $178 million for two years.

Now, instead, they're forging ahead with an even more costly $250 million for a two-year scheme, with no actual plan, no economic analysis or any idea of the number of jobs that will actually be created. It's good that they took our proposal to drop the small-business tax rate by 1 per cent, but any benefit is clearly going to be completely negated by the NDP's ideological $3 billion carbon tax and their other policies that make our economy generally much worse and much weaker.

A couple of key facts. Seventeen thousand people are leaving the province this year in a net outflow of interprovincial migrants. Alberta's unemployment rate will be 8 per cent in 2016 and 7 and a half per cent in 2017 above the national average. Despite the struggles in every other sector and our exploding debt, government spending will go up 13 per cent by the next election. Everybody else in the province is having to tighten their belt, reduce their expenses, cut back on their income, but government just gets to keep expanding their little world endlessly. Well, it's not so little, actually.

What about the impact on communities? Alberta is seeing oil and gas investment at a point lower than during the major recession of 2008, which is hurting communities all across our province. Alberta is seeing approximately $700 million less collected in corporate taxes, showing how badly this economic downturn is hitting businesses in every corner of our province. While the NDP wants to blame the price of oil as the entire and only cause for this, the reality is that everywhere else in the world is experiencing the same low oil prices but not the same massive economic collapse that we're experiencing.

In exchange for killing entire communities with an accelerated phase-out of coal, the NDP government has deemed it appropriate to allocate just a part of $195 million for, and I quote, coal community transition. Apparently it costs less than the cost of an average overpass to kill a community. This fund will not even cover the average cost of an annual wage of the workers in those communities.

Then there's the impact of the carbon tax directly. The typical Alberta family will face an extra $1,000 a year in taxes and other costs thanks to the NDP carbon tax. Families will see a 50 per cent increase in Alberta taxes on gasoline thanks to the carbon tax. Albertans can expect Vancouver-level gas prices thanks to the NDP government. At least in B.C. they were smart enough to get rid of that.

The credits being offered by the government to 60 per cent of Albertans don't take into consideration power bills, the increased costs of consumer goods, or the realities of busy families in the suburbs. The NDP government is punishing hard-working, everyday Alberta families, who work hard to make a decent income. There's even a marriage penalty in the rebates, with a married couple not receiving the same credit as two roommates living together.

A couple of other key facts. An individual family making $51,000 a year net won't receive any sort of rebate. Families making over $100,000 a year won't receive any sort of rebate.

The impact of ballooning debt and deficit. The NDP have taken less than half a year to break their own law that states there should be a 15 per cent cap on the debt-to-GDP ratio. This out-of-control spending is just plain irresponsible and puts Alberta on a path away from fiscal sustainability.

An Hon. Member: How long did they go?

Mr. Orr: Not very long. Less than half a year.

Wildrose came out with a solid, realistic plan to reduce the deficit by $2 billion. Instead, the NDP plunged ahead with spending increases for a more than $10.4 billion deficit. Alberta debt will be $58 billion by the next election, a situation that is passing down irresponsible governance and poor decision-making to future generations of Albertans.

Then on the lack of a hiring freeze or restraint by the NDP government. While over 100,000 Albertans have lost their jobs, the NDP government has deemed it important to hire 250 new non front-line bureaucrats, people who don't actually serve on the front lines at all.

On infrastructure we will have to take a wait-and-see approach with this infrastructure spending until June to see what has lapsed. We are pleased to see that some form of an infrastructure sunshine list has finally been introduced. Sunshine is a good disinfectant. Some of it needs to be disinfected. Some key facts as well with regard to the infrastructure list. The Grande Prairie hospital is still at least four years out on that list. The new prioritized projects for this year – Peace River bridge; Gaetz Avenue, Red Deer; Grande Prairie bypass – are good projects. And $2.2 billion has been allocated for green infrastructure, but it's unclear what that will actually mean, whether it will result in any return to Albertans or whether it will just be, really, a taxpayer hit.

I'd like to speak a little bit to the specifics of some of the Culture and Tourism aspects of the budget. The biggest source of new revenue, supposedly, in the Culture and Tourism area – and Culture and Tourism is an area that is often said to be actually doing well in this recession, although I am cautious about that because the truth is that the data is two years old. We don't have any current data on it, and there are indications from the hospitality sector and others that, in fact, there are steep declines there as well. The only real source of new revenue that can be identified besides Albertans spending money on themselves would come from the adoption of new flight arrangements from Alberta directly to China.

The reason this is actually going to be successful is because private businesses, the airlines specifically and the airport hubs, saw an opportunity and knew that they could actually make some money on it. This wasn't even a government decision. It's not even part of the budget although they want to claim it. Private industry actually is the only money-making source we have in this province. All government industry is basically taxing individuals. It's private industry that creates wealth in any society. Private industry should be making some of these financial decisions and being listened to, not just government forging ahead with their spending as they want to. This is a good example of what the government should be doing, which means staying out of the way and doing as little as possible to interrupt the ability of the industry to create wealth and vitality in our province.

The carbon tax is going to affect the tourism industry negatively, and I fear that this is going to be a huge drain on our tourism value. It's going to affect the price of gas for travelling. Everything in this province is spread out. I had Japanese friends who came from Japan a few years ago. They landed in Calgary, and as we were driving them home, they were just in utter awe. They were stunned to realize – the comment was: everything is so big. Well, that's true. Everything in Alberta is big, and it's spread out, and people can't travel far without their cars and their vehicles. The price of gasoline to get to any of these tourist attractions is going to increase, which is going to decrease the appeal of Alberta tourism. It's going to affect the price of airline tickets, aviation fuel, the costs of airport hubs to be able to operate. Ticket prices are going to increase, and pretty soon we put ourselves in an international market where we're no longer competitive and foreign tourists choose to go elsewhere.

The entire cost of the hospitality industry is going to go up because of the carbon tax, hospitality in the sense of accommodation and of food. The carbon tax will affect the suppliers of restaurants. It will affect the cost of hotels and lodges. Producers have to pay for fuel to produce food. That's going to push the price up. Food may grow on trees, but it doesn't transport itself to your table, and neither is it served in buildings that aren't taxed by carbon.

The minimum wage is going to affect the price of tourism. Many tourist destinations are actually not-for-profit organizations. Museums and many others are not all greedy, grubbing capitalists trying to take money out of people's pockets. They're actually attempting to provide cultural and historical benefit to our tourists. They're on tight budgets. They have no room to give raises, yet they're going to be forced to the point of increasing their wages. It will cost more, quite frankly, to operate these tourist sites because the wages are higher, because the fuel to heat the buildings is higher, and many of them will find their attraction being much less attractive because of the increased costs. Same thing with the hospitality issues for that: less service.

In estimates the Minister of Culture and Tourism essentially said that if he had more money, he would spend more money. When asked about tax credits for film instead of grants, the answer was that it would cost us a whole lot more money, which, depending on how you allocate, may or may not be true. He said, "I would hope that one day, when we have that kind of money in the budget, we could seriously consider that." Well, the challenge there is that with that sort of way of looking at it, there's no hope that we'll ever save. There is no hope the government will ever stop spending. There is no hope that we will ever see a balanced budget by a government with socialist ideologies driving them and behind them.

The reality is that they always talk about social licence. Here's a challenge on social licence. You want to spend money now, according to your budget documents and statements here in the House, because the economy is down and you're going to supposedly stimulate the economy, and Keynesian economics says that you're supposed to do that. The fact is that that has never worked in history. When, finally, if we get a return to economy, the budgets go up, then tell me what kind of social licence you're going to have to not spend money. Tell me what kind of social licence you're going to have when everybody knows you've got money coming in, but now you're not going to spend it on them. You're going to tell them: oh, now we have to pay off the debt. There isn't a possibility in all the world that you'll have the ability – emotionally, psychologically, or socially – to actually restrain spending when money starts to come in.

The truth is that we will never ever save under this government. We will never ever stop spending. We will never ever see a balanced budget because it's not within the realm of possibility for a socialist mindset. I'm sorry, but that's the reality.

Madam Chair, I am entirely opposed to this budget, and I will vote against it. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? I will recognize the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Chair, I was enjoying the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka's speech about the absolute inability of a socialist to ever grasp the concept of balanced budgets. I was hoping that he would care to elaborate on why that is.

Mr. Orr: Well, I think we really do have to think about the aspect of social licence. Governments respond to the will of the people, and in reality in a day and an age when we don't have money, the argument is: well, we'll spend money to supposedly stimulate the economy. But later, when there's supposedly an increase of taxes coming in, there are going to be all kinds of people standing in line – partners and friends of a socialist mindset, unions – who will be asking for more money, who will say: well, we took our no raise period already; now you owe us; now you have to give us more money. So they'll be standing in line, demanding it of their friends, and there will not be the ability to actually restrain spending either if there's money coming in or if there's not money coming in. The reality is that we still have that situation where there's no hope we will ever save, there is no hope we will ever stop spending, and there is no hope we will ever see a balanced budget.

Thank you.

The Chair: I will recognize the hon. Member for Little Bow next.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Chair. [interjection] No, not 29(2)(a).

The Chair: We don't have 29(2)(a) in committee.

Mr. Schneider: Of course. That's a good point. You'd think the whip would know that, wouldn't you?

I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 17. The minister and his government have attempted to present a budget as a jobs plan that will help families in tough economic times, a clever marketing exercise, to be sure. But for all of the current government's grandstanding and boasting about this being a jobs budget, I would have to say that it is not. This is no credible jobs plan. Most of the plans laid out in the proposed budget don't start till next year. The labelling of this budget as a jobs plan just distracts from the massive debt that we see starting to pile up, a debt that endangers our province, to be sure.

As my colleague from Strathmore-Brooks pointed out yesterday, this is Alberta's ninth consecutive consolidated deficit, deficits every single year since 2008. This is deeply consequential for Alberta's future. It will make things worse. It can't help but make things worse. The carbon tax in this budget will hurt businesses, it will hurt jobs. Once again, the carbon tax introduced in the budget is accompanied by no economic impact assessment. The absence of that is now a common trait, it seems, as this government moves forward.

There are consequences to debt. Today's massive overspending is just an invitation for tax hikes or service cuts in the future. This government likes to espouse a Keynesian view of the debt, but they've somehow managed to contort even that economic theory. The flip side to that economic theory is that you curb spending when you're not in a recession; you don't just keep spending. This government seems to have missed that part of the equation. It's a problem that began in the twilight years of the previous government, to be honest, but the current government here today seems to have pushed their heel into that pedal a little more.

Debt is not an isolated matter. When debt grows, so do interest payments. That's why the cost of servicing the debt grows over time, and this is particularly consequential as time passes. It can't help but increase because there are only so many taxpayers, and with interest payments on multibillion-dollar spending, spiralling debt will continue to rise. This means that an increasing share of government expenditures over time will not go to services but more to servicing the debt that is acquired. Of course, that means there is less money to spend, less money for schools or teachers, less money for front-line staff. That's a problem.

Albertans pay taxes in exchange for government services. Taxes are compulsory contributions to the state – these are facts; they're not ideological statements – but Albertans pay taxes to all three levels of government expecting that there will be a certain quality to their services. Sure, they make a compulsory contribution deducted from income, but in exchange there are hospitals and roads and law enforcement and so on. When debt is racked up, those payments get fewer results because an increasing number of tax dollars are used to service debt. Worse yet, this government has taken barely six months to break their own debt ceiling law, which stated that there should be a 15 per cent cap on debt-to-GDP ratio. Not only is this escalating spending entirely irresponsible; it directs our province away from fiscal sustainability.

Now, as my colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka stated in his speech, our caucus came out with a solid, realistic plan to reduce annual spending by $2 billion. There are ways to achieve it. That's only 2 cents per dollar. There are realistic ways to achieve modest spending reductions, Madam Chair. But the sad reality is that Alberta's debt, a debt that will haunt future generations at this rate, will be $58 billion by the time we get to the next election. This government is simply passing down its governance and poor decision-making to future generations of Albertans.

This budget, we're told, is a jobs plan – the Minister of Finance's speech here yesterday emphasized their focus on jobs – but it's entirely difficult to believe that this government will actually deliver on the jobs plan. Just yesterday we gathered here to speak to Bill 1, which is the flagship bill to implement the government's jobs agenda, but hardly anyone from the government side actually stood up to speak to it. Only the minister responsible stood up from time to time to explain why his government would be defeating amendments to a piece of legislation that nobody seems to want to defend.

To this day the current government has failed to properly and fully account for the alleged 100,000 jobs that will be created by this budget. We've all seen the Member for Calgary-Foothills go on and on. Also, in estimates he did ask several ministers the same question. The last budget was to allegedly create over 20,000 jobs at a cost of $178 million to taxpayers for two years. To this day we don't know how they arrived at that figure, but they claimed it was an accomplishment and stood their ground until they conceded that they needed to rethink it. Now we are told that this budget, as the result of this appropriation bill we are considering today, will create 100,000 jobs.

Just over two weeks ago in the main estimates consideration for the Labour budget the minister was asked to give an accounting for the 100,000 jobs created. She chose instead to refer to the Minister of Infrastructure. I thought it was somewhat peculiar, but when we did the Infrastructure estimates, I did question the minister, the following week, in the consideration of those estimates, and he indicated that they expected infrastructure investments to create approximately 10,000 jobs. Beyond that, he referred us to the Minister of Finance. It seems like it's quite a circle, Madam Chair, and it reveals a certain uncertainty about this government's projected job numbers.

Writing in the Financial Post about a month ago, Trevor Tombe, an assistant professor in economics at the University of Calgary, wrote:

The budget forecasts employment growth of 112,000 jobs between now and 2019. That's a sensible estimate, but due more to a normal and gradual economic recovery than any specific budget measure. Mere population growth accounts for roughly one-quarter of that increase.

If the jobs that are to be created by this jobs plan are the result of normal and gradual economic recovery, then why on earth is this government embarking on such a devastating road to long-term debt? It's just not clear, but it does make life more expensive.

There are further hidden costs. Many of my colleagues have spoken about the impact of the carbon tax, an ill-advised excursion that will make life more expensive for all Albertans, but it will also adversely affect other areas of life as well. The proposed carbon tax in this budget is just another massive overhead fee for actual job creators. With increased overhead fees, the amount they will be able to set aside for labour will become less and less.

Now, this government prides itself on infrastructure investments. But as we've seen in the preceding two weeks, the government has made no final assessment of how much the carbon tax will impact the construction industry, and thus, by extension, how much they're going to diminish the results that can be achieved with this much infrastructure spending. When you get down to it, it becomes clear that you get a lot less out of this budget than you are paying for.

I remember asking the minister what the increase would be in relation to the carbon tax and the building of infrastructure. I'm not arguing that we're going to do some infrastructure building and that it may be a good idea. We certainly are going to see some one way or the other. The carbon tax will increase the price of fuel, certainly, and the people that have to build the infrastructure for Alberta will have more costs, so increasing those costs will now mean that it costs more for infrastructure itself. I think the question that I asked was actually a transportation question, and the minister's response was that, well, gas right now is 98 cents a litre, and several months ago it was $1.28. So what's the difference? Nobody will know the difference as the increase goes on.

Madam Chair, the facts speak for themselves. This budget proposes a significant uptake in debt for Alberta. Debts and deficits like those proposed here will result in incredibly difficult decisions in the future. For all the problems that will be caused by this head-first dive into debt, perhaps one of the most significant problems is that the government will actually have little to show for it when it comes to results.

With that, I thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers, questions, comments, amendments? I will recognize the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod. Oh, sorry. Battle River-Wainwright. I was looking at my list and not at who was standing. My apologies.

Mr. Taylor: I was willing to sit down, you know, in case the Livingstone-Macleod gentleman was up there before me, but thank you, Madam Chair.

Today I rise to speak on Bill 17, the Appropriation Act, 2016. In short, I'll be speaking on the budget because that's really what it is. That's what the average person understands. If you say "appropriation act" out on the street, they look at you with a blank stare and say: what are you talking about? But if you say that we're talking about the budget, they understand that. So, in short, that's what I'll be speaking on, how we'll be making things worse and punishing families, hurting job creators in my riding with their irresponsible actions, and also portfolios like mine, Advanced Education. Those are the things that I'd like to touch on.

This government's budget, Madam Chair, is raising taxes on everything and making everything more expensive in the end. I know you've heard it before, and we'll continue to let the members opposite know that that's what's going to happen. Unfortunately, when I look at this budget, there seems to be no plan, just money being thrown, like a dartboard. You know, you take a dartboard and you put a blindfold on and see what's going on, hoping to hit the right spot. But this budget does not seem to hit the right spots of the target that Albertans need.

This government wants to raise money for its risky, ideological agenda, and that's why, in part, we don't have a balanced budget. Too much money seems to be going into too many places that at this present time make absolutely no sense, that it shouldn't be going to. Let's take, for example, one of the means to raise taxes on every Albertan. That's where you're getting some of your sources for the budget from, the carbon tax. The carbon tax, you know, will punish families, businesses, charities, postsecondary institutions, schools, K to 12, and the list goes on. Life will be more expensive for everyone. It's going to be even more expensive for my neighbour here who had to run with the ambulance services. It's going to cost more to run those ambulances up and down the road here. You know, these things are all going up in price because the carbon tax is making it more expensive.

Take your own home, for example. The cost of heat will go up. The cost of power will go up. Driving to and from work will go up. If you want to take your kids to some kind of sporting event – whether it be hockey, ballet, whatever it is – it's going to cost more just because the cost for those things is going up. The cost of groceries is going to be going up. The groceries don't just magically appear here in this province. They have to be driven into this province, and when the trucks fill up their tanks with fuel, they have to pay the carbon tax, so the cost of food is going up.

Compare this to institutions that Alberta depends on day in and day out, like our hospitals and postsecondary institutions. These buildings literally – and I mean literally – have millions of square feet of space that they need to heat and light, and they need to be able to run the computers. Well, that takes electricity. They have labs that they have to have in their buildings, so they have to have those things and have the right conditions. They also provide food, and the cost of food that's in there will go up. Everything is going up that they supply. Everything goes up as a result of the carbon tax, as will the cost of maintenance, so when they run their trucks back and forth. The cost of transportation: whether it is to get the students to the schools or whether it is transportation for having the students going from the campus to the field to do their work at the universities, they have to get there, so students frequently go from the Edmonton university, the U of A, and they'll go somewhere out in the field to discover whatever that project is. At the U of C and the U of A they have people that work with paleontology, I believe, but they have to go over to the Brooks or Drumheller area to dig the bones. There are fuel costs. Everything goes up.

The typical family will see a thousand-dollar increase per year, every year, due to this carbon tax. Unbelievable.

Mr. Yao: How much?

Mr. Taylor: A thousand dollars per year, every year, as a result of this carbon tax. It's a shame. It truly is a shame. For the reasons I just mentioned as well as others, there is virtually nothing that is not increased by this tax. I would really love it if the government would table it and show us the things that won't be increased by this tax because I believe everything has an impact on this tax.

The increased cost to postsecondary institutions will literally be in the millions of dollars as a result of this carbon tax. Our poor students. These costs, of course, will be passed on to students in one form or another. It is simply going to cost more to get training or education past grade 12. Obviously, this will make those options less attractive to the potential students, and we will probably see a decrease in enrolment as a result of the tax hikes once they're truly felt. Is that what this government wants to see, the costs go up in postsecondary institutions and the enrolment go down? I think that should be the opposite of what their objective is, but there is a potential unintended consequence of that happening.

You know, an interesting note – I think it's a very interesting note – on the timing of the implementation of the carbon tax is that it coincides quite closely with the lifting of the tuition freeze. At least, that's when the government says that they're going to extend them to. That's 2017. The carbon tax will be implemented in 2017, and that's when they're going to start to hurt Albertans. Coincidentally, 2017 is also the time that the tuition freeze on what universities can charge students will be lifted. That seems like a funny coincidence there. Perhaps that was part of the plan. I don't know. I believe tuition fees have been artificially held down, and with the implementation of carbon taxes postsecondary institutions will become more expensive and perhaps a whole lot more expensive.

If you look at simply the support for adult learning expenses in the current budget for Advanced Education, we see that $2.3 billion will be spent just to keep the institutions running. That's $2.3 billion to keep the institutions running, but this number does not include the cost of the carbon tax.

Next year we'll see the next budget. We will see not only the 2.9 per cent increase, but the government will also have to include increases to that amount to cover the cost of the carbon tax. Alternatively, the universities will have to impose a huge increase in tuition fees to cover those costs. Either way, increasing costs will put the cost of postsecondary institutions beyond the reach of many Albertans. That's what I fear, and that's what the numbers are starting to look like.

Things are getting worse by the minute, literally. Every minute. If you look at the debt clock – and the Member for Strathmore-Brooks went around the province with a debt clock, and he was showing how fast that debt was rising. That is where we met, in Wainwright, and we were looking at the debt clock. Every minute we go into debt more, and it's spiralling faster and faster and faster into a larger number as a result of this government's budget. That debt, like I say, keeps going up, and we have to pay it back, and we'll have to pay interest on this. The more we have to pay, the more we'll see credit downgrades. That's another one of those unintended consequences but inevitable facts about what's going to happen. In fact, Albertans will shortly be paying interest on the NDP's debt to the tune of $2 billion per year.

Mr. Yao: How much?

Mr. Taylor: Two billion dollars per year.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Taylor: I said $2 billion a year. Can I have an amen?

That's $2,000 per family for every year. That's what it's going to cost them, $2,000 a year to pay for that debt. That's irresponsible. That's, frankly, very expensive. This will take $2,000 out of the pockets of families that want to send their children to postsecondary schools – institutions, schools, whatever – making it that much harder to do so. You combine that with the carbon tax, and that's another thousand dollars that comes out of every family. So $2,000 to pay for the debt, a thousand bucks to pay for the carbon tax, and once the tuition freeze is lifted, there's going to be an additional cost associated with that. We're looking at quite a bit of money that's going to be going to pay for this for the students. It's going to have to come out of their pockets.

Albertans didn't want this. They want and expect a responsible, predictable, sustainable budget, not one that keeps going up wildly by the minute. Wildrose has a plan for Alberta, not one that focuses on risky, ideological social experiments that this NDP government is giving us. Albertans can't afford this.

Why should Albertans care about how much money this government is spending? Albertans have to pay not only for it now but in the future, when they're old and grey if they're not there now, or their children, their grandchildren will be paying for these risky economic policies. Money will be taken from these young children now. It's irresponsible because they don't have a chance. They don't have a vote. They don't have a say in what's going to happen with it for the rest of their lives. Right now we're spending money from children that are just being born and ones that are eight, 10, 12 years old. We're spending their money, and that's just irresponsible, saying that we know better for them. Well, when they have their chance to have it, I think they would want to have a balanced budget, one that's predictable and sustainable, and not one they have to pay high taxes on. For the sake of Albertans and for the sake of our children, fellow members, budgets need to be balanced and responsible.

We can't afford the price of everything going up. What's going to happen with this budget? It looks like in the future here they're looking at getting rid of coal-fired plants. That's going to kill towns like Forestburg and Hanna. It's also going to affect the people that are in the towns right close to it. We've got Donalda, we have Killam, and we've got Bashaw. These ones are right next to them. It's hurting these towns.

The debt is not a laughing matter. It's something we need to be serious about. We have to be serious about the debt. We need to balance budgets. We need to be able to look at these budgets and be able to predict how much we can spend as how much we have coming in here. We need to have a responsible budget, not one that's going to be taking us up more and more into debt.

With those points, Madam Chair, I cannot support this budget. I truly hope that the members opposite will agree with me and not support this budget.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd actually like to just add a few comments to my previous comments. This is a budget that is truly going to destroy Alberta. I have young couples, young families in my riding who have literally chosen to make an appointment at my office, and the one thing they want to say is: "I don't want to live with a lifetime of debt. Why are we doing this?" Young families do not want to live with a lifetime of debt, and that's what this government is creating.

I am troubled by a Minister of Finance who will stand up in the House and brag that we have a perfectly healthy debt-to-GDP ratio, who will brag about the fact that our credit rating is healthy. "The ship of state is safe. What are you worried about?" It's a bit premature to claim that all is well while you're selling the family farm. To say that the ship of Alberta is safe all the while drilling holes in the hull is, I think, a bit hypocritical. It's like a healthy person standing up and saying: "I can feed my addiction. I'm healthy. What's the problem? I feed my addiction all I want." It is financial hypocrisy to claim strength and all the while to be destroying the foundations of financial strength in our province.

Now, I know that if I say that the government of Newfoundland is making the right choices – they have the same loss of oil revenue – that all the lefties will stand up and cry, "Oh, there's such suffering about it," and they try to rein the government in on this, all those with their hands out for more money. But why does Newfoundland make this choice, the opposite of what Alberta does? Let me give you a little bit of history. Why did Newfoundland even come into Canadian Confederation? Why? Because they were bankrupt, and the federal government bailed them out of their bankruptcy and paid off their debt for them. Is that the next step for this NDP government, to ask the federal government to bail you out of your bankrupt state? That's why Newfoundland is wise enough to make the choices that they're making today.

I call this – if I might use a bit of an illustration from our friend the vet – a dog chasing its own tail budget. That's what this budget is. Let me explain what I mean. The government wants to hand out candy in the form of benefits to everyone, but candy costs money, and where do they get their money to give to all the children of Alberta? They get it by stealing from the kids' piggy banks. That's where they get it from. They steal it from the kids so they can give it back to the kids, which is a dog chasing its own tail.

We talk about infrastructure spending as if it's investment in our province, and in some ways it benefits us socially, but this investment, let's remember, requires money to be made, and where do they get the money from? They get it through the extortion of taxes. Raise the taxes endlessly: personal taxes, income taxes, not just the big, evil corporations. They raise it from their own people.

Maybe a sports illustration would be helpful. Every coach in the country challenges his players, every coach in the country challenges his team to be the best and to do the best. No coach that I can imagine would be encouraging his team to become like the Edmonton Oilers, the very bottom of the rankings, the very worst in the league, yet we're constantly told: oh, well, Ontario does it. The very worst player in the provincial league, and we want to compare ourselves to them? We brag about the fact that Alberta is the best place to live, but it's a self-delusion. We're financing it with a reverse mortgage on this province. Reverse mortgages actually bleed seniors of their assets. They leave seniors with nothing, and I have no desire to be part of a government that's going to leave the people of this province with nothing, and neither should all of you.

This is not a budget to be approved. This is a budget that everybody in this province should oppose entirely. The spending profligacy of the last government got them thrown out, and so it will do to any future government that continues to spend without restraint and without regard. If you can't pay for it, you can't have it is how I live my life. I believe in living with true simplicity. Smaller is actually better in many cases.

I cannot and I will not vote for this budget at any time. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Okay. Thank you. I just want to make a few more points that came up as a result of our last member's passionate speech. You know, I've been on the phone daily, it seems like, either that or e-mail. People are leaving this province. They're telling me that they have to leave this province because they can't afford what's happening here. They're leaving in droves. They're either going to Saskatchewan or British Columbia. That's where they're looking at as the best options. Businesses, large businesses in my riding have left as a result of this. Many are ready to close their doors as a result of this. They told me that they can't afford it, so they're going to go. They said that they can't afford not only the next three years – that's when this government is here for, another three years – but they said that they can't afford this socialist government. That's what they said, that they can't afford this socialist government.

They're saying that the problem, too, is not just the next three years. They said that it's going to take years and years. Once we get ourselves into $40 billion, $60 billion in debt – we're not sure – it's going to take how many years to get us back to having ourselves paid in full?

I would just challenge this government to answer that question. You're spending like this right now. How quickly do you think you can have this paid in full? That's what I would love to see tabled, an answer to that question, because that's a question that I get handed. It seems like every time I go back to my constituency office, I'm having people come to my office and ask me those questions. That's one of the very first ones that comes out of their mouths. They cannot believe what's going on, and it's just a sad thing.

We had the Alberta advantage – the Alberta advantage – where it was paid in full. Ralph Klein held up the sign in 2004: paid in full.

9:50

An Hon. Member: We have a socialist disadvantage.

Mr. Taylor: Now we have, yeah, the socialist disadvantage.

I don't know how they want to spin this one, but that's what's happening. It's going downhill. We're paying more. We're paying so much in debt. Just to pay the deficit is killing this province. Once the oil recovers, we won't see a full recovery because we will have that much more that we will be having to pay. I can't see any places in Canada that these social experiments, where they tried to spend themselves into prosperity, have worked. Again, please try to give me an example of where they spent themselves to success, to a balanced budget, or to excess in a budget. It has not happened.

For those reasons, Madam Chair, I cannot support this budget. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Chair, thank you for the opportunity to rise today and speak to Bill 17. You know, I'm very interested in the way debate is proceeding in this House. Members of the Official Opposition during debate have pointed out that the socialist members opposite get very upset when they get called socialists. When they call me a conservative, I don't wince. When they say, "Derek, you're a limited-government conservative," I don't say, "Ah, don't call a conservative a conservative." But when you call a socialist a socialist, oh, they squirm in their seats almighty, don't they? They get pretty squirmy.

You know, I really wish we would have more participation in this debate from the members opposite. It's their bill. They should stand up and defend it. Unless I'm mistaken, I haven't heard a single member from the government opposite stand up and defend their own budget yet today. That's shameful, Madam Chair. We're talking about the big ideas of this budget, the big ideas that are informed by our values, in this case the socialist values of the members opposite, and it does seem to be heavily informed by that set of values.

You know, we've got clear, self-avowed socialists on the government side like the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, who vigorously defends the hard-line Marxist regime in Venezuela, a country that has run out of medical supplies, that has almost run out of food, a country that produces oil but doesn't even have gasoline anymore, a country that can't even produce toilet paper for its citizens. There's an apt metaphor about cleaning up socialism in there somewhere, Madam Chair. We've got the Member for Calgary-East, who protested against pipelines, who protested against the very viability of our energy industry in this province, who has now been shamed into slightly more common-sense policies by the Official Opposition.

You know, we have these members opposite here that positively hated the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky's motion about ending the tanker ban on the west coast. They absolutely hated it, but they were shamed into voting for it only when the Official Opposition called for a recorded vote. Madam Chair, it looked like a child squirming as you fed him some pretty bad medicine, but it was good medicine that was very good for this government. Now we've asked that the Minister of Energy go out there and carry out the wishes passed by this House to the federal government to advocate for an end to the proposed tanker ban on the west coast, something very critical to our economy. What does the Minister of Energy have to say? Shrugs her shoulders because they actually disagree with the motion that they voted for. They only voted for it because Albertans would have seen them for what they are.

This is very serious, Madam Chair. This goes to the very heart, the spirit behind this bill. This is a bill informed by a hard-line socialist ideology with members that have no idea of how a responsible government should act. That is why they are proposing to remove their own 15 per cent debt-to-GDP limit.

Now, let's remember. We have had a long, steady decline in the fiscal position of this province. You know, after the fiscally reckless years of the Getty government Ralph Klein balanced the budget. Ralph Klein paid off the debt. To ensure that that wouldn't happen again, the Klein government, which I was very proud to support, banned deficit spending in the future so that politicians like this couldn't come around and put their hands in the cookie jar again. And piece by piece successive governments have dismantled the laws that we put in place to protect taxpayers.

Piece by piece some reasonable measures were taken to allow for things like P3s and limited financing for capital projects under the Stelmach government. But it was the thin edge of the wedge. They did this with the best of intentions, I believe, but it was the thin edge of the wedge and eventually led to significant liabilities for P3s, led to growing liabilities for capital projects. It saw us draw down our $17 billion sustainability fund in consecutive deficits.

Then under the Redford government we saw a total abolition of the remaining Klein legislation, the Fiscal Responsibility Act. The repeal of those bills led to a massive influx of debt financing in the province, that has left us in a very poor fiscal position, with virtually no savings left in the bank and a significant debt that will reach over $60 billion in just a few short years.

But this government came in. Now, they got their math wrong during the election. They said that they would balance the budget by 2018. It turns out they forgot to carry a few numbers. Then they said that they would have to balance it by the end of 2019. Then within the first month of being in government, they said, "Well, that was wrong, too, so we're going to have to kick it back to 2020." But then they said: "You know what? Don't worry about this. We're going to get rid of even the remaining small restrictions that we have left on debt financing and deficit financing in this province." And they allowed now borrowing for the operations of the government. Absolutely disgraceful and irresponsible, Madam Chair. "But don't worry. We're going to put a cap of 15 per cent of debt-to-GDP on our financing. Don't worry. Anything beyond there would be reckless, and we won't be reckless." Just four and a half months later they come crawling into this Chamber and present us with a bill to repeal their own debt ceiling limit. It's shameful and embarrassing.

You know, I like to tell the Minister of Finance that it's my job to hold him accountable and to take his job in three years. If I have his job in three years, Madam Chair, and I pass a bill, I swear by the gods that I hope I never have to go through the disgrace of having to repeal my own legislation a few months after I pass it. I would be embarrassed. Either he didn't think it through then, or they had no intention of following through with it in the first place.

We warned the government repeatedly – repeatedly – that their revenue projections were ridiculous, and they called us fearmongers. They said: "Aw, you don't know what you're doing. Just trust us." Well, as Ronald Reagan used to say about the Soviet Union: trust but verify. We verified their numbers, and they turned out to be bollocks. They turned out to be absolutely worthless, Madam Chair. They turned out to not be worth the paper they were written on. They have not even come close to hitting their revenue projections. First, during the campaign they moved their balanced budget date from 2018 to 2019. Within a month of getting elected, they moved it from 2019 to 2020. And then they moved it in the fall budget from 2020 to 2021. Now they're saying: best-case scenario, shot in the dark, maybe 2024. But that's not even a firm commitment.

Has anyone ever tried to drive a car on a dark road without headlights, Madam Chair? That's pretty much what this budget is akin to. They think vaguely they're heading west, but they're really just driving down a road with no headlights on. They have no idea where they're going. They have no idea where they're going.

An Hon. Member: They're leaping into the dark.

Mr. Fildebrandt: They are leaping into the dark, Madam Chair.

You know, it really is sad to see a government that is supposed to represent Alberta, to have the best interests of Albertans at stake be unable to formally and equivocally divorce themselves from their federal organization, which is vehemently anti-Alberta, that has passed a Leap Manifesto that would crush the economy and send us back into the pre-industrial ages. I tell you that if there was such a thing as a Wildrose Party of Canada, however oxymoronic that term would be, if there was a federal Wildrose Party that passed policies that would crush the Alberta economy, the Wildrose Party would divorce itself from it unequivocally, and it's shameful that the members over here refuse to do the same with the Leap Manifesto.

10:00

During the main estimates we had the pleasure of having the Minister of Finance in. I really like it because when we're having a debate about the budget, he actually has to be there and answer questions, unlike other forms of debate that may or may not be taking place in the Chamber. When we sat down for debate on the estimates, we went through the absolute inability of the government to meet its revenue targets and how that's going to mean perpetual deficits for the foreseeable future. I asked a question of the Minister of Finance. I said: do you have any intention of bringing forward a provincial sales tax or harmonized provincial sales tax if not during this term of the government then in the future? Because they have no plan whatsoever to even get close to a balanced budget, I said: do you have any intention of bringing forward a PST in the next term?

Mr. Nixon: What did he say?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, the chair of the committee that I was at, the Resource Stewardship Committee, the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, tried to block the question. He tried to protect the minister. He tried to protect the minister from even being asked the question. He said that that is not relevant to a budget debate. Madam Chair, the NDP tried to shut down questions during estimates, saying that it is not pertinent to the budget to ask the Minister of Finance if he has any intention of bringing forward a PST. That's like asking the Minister of Health if there's a plan to keep a hospital open.

They're afraid of Albertans knowing what they're up to. They're afraid that Albertans will see their hidden agenda for what it is. Now, we know the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is a hard-line socialist and a big fan of Hugo Chavez and had even said prayers to his name when Hugo Chavez passed away, but he abused his position as the chair of the committee to shut down questions about a provincial sales tax, arguing that a provincial sales tax had nothing to do with the budget. How ridiculous is that? How ridiculous is that? That is because the NDP has no intention of having a legitimate budget debate. The Member for Calgary-Elbow and I had to put the chair back in his place – and he was pretty quiet after that – but he tried to shut down legitimate questions until we bit back, and he had to shut his mouth pretty quickly.

Madam Chair, the NDP want to shut down legitimate budget debate and not answer the questions. That is why I'm shocked to see that the Minister of Finance has not risen once in the House today to defend his own budget. We can't even get a single backbench member of the government to stand up and defend their budget.

Maybe the Member for Calgary-Currie will. I know we always have enjoyable interactions in the House. Perhaps the Member for Calgary-Currie will stand up and defend the budget, or perhaps my friends from Calgary-Northern Hills or Leduc-Beaumont, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, Banff-Cochrane. The people of Banff-Cochrane: I know a lot of folks in Banff-Cochrane who are very unhappy with the representation they're getting in this government right now. I'm working very hard with the Wildrose organizers on the ground, Madam Chair. They are quite upset with the way it's going. So perhaps the Member for Banff-Cochrane would like to stand up and defend his budget. I haven't seen him stand up for a very, very long time in this House. I'm not sure if it's because he doesn't actually agree with this budget or if his party whip isn't letting him stand up and defend it. Perhaps the party whip just isn't letting him stand up and defend it. Maybe the Member for Calgary Shaw. I have certainly met with a lot of his constituents, and they're very unhappy with the representation they're getting here. The Member for Calgary-Shaw should stand up and defend the budget.

Madam Chair, it is a basic principle, I believe, in this House that if you are going to vote for a budget, you should stand up and defend it for at least 30 seconds in this House. The Official Opposition is going to continue to press for answers from this government, and I would really hope that at least one member on that side of the House will stand up and answer questions to defend their budget before we vote on it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would hope that in this House we have robust debate about ideas, about policies, about bills under consideration. I don't think it's tremendously helpful to call out individual members and put them on the spot. I think that we've heard a lot of name-calling. I've heard the word "socialist" more times in the last 20 minutes than I've heard since my time as an undergrad at the noteworthy left-wing University of Victoria.

You know, I want to say a few things about this budget, about Bill 17. Some debt is okay. Sometimes some debt is okay. I think there's a clear argument to be made. The member previous, from Strathmore-Brooks, referenced the Ralph Klein era. That massive cutback in the '90s led to a substantial underinvestment in infrastructure in this province. That's a platform we ran on, to borrow responsibly to rebuild infrastructure in this province for the benefits that we will reap from having that infrastructure. There's a real need to rebuild hospitals and rebuild schools and build new schools and build new health facilities.

You know, it's like a mortgage. I bet you that almost everyone in this House, if not themselves personally then their families, has taken a mortgage at some point, and that is responsible borrowing. It's backed by an asset. That's okay. I have a real worry that our friends in the Wildrose, should the day come – and I hope it doesn't – where they actually form government, will never borrow another penny ever again. [interjection] We now have confirmation from Strathmore-Brooks that they would never borrow a penny ever again. That is a recipe for massive cutbacks to front-line services. There's no other way to do it in a real challenging economic time. I don't know what our friends in the Wildrose would do.

At the very least, we have a budget here, which we're going to debate. Now, lest my friends on the other side get too excited, I'm not a big fan of this budget, because there is a middle way, a better way of dealing with the financial crisis that our province faces right now. Responsible borrowing for capital? That's okay. Borrowing for operations? That's not okay. It is the difference between mortgage debt and credit card debt. Credit card debt racks up over time, and it gets to be out of control. We've already heard that $2 billion a year, in a couple of years, will be our debt-service cost alone. That's a 159 per cent increase. The debt ceiling being eliminated, which is a bill before this House later this morning, is a huge concern. That lasted less than six months.

I ask the question again: what if the forecasts are wrong? What if there's a further crisis? What will the terrible forest fires in Fort McMurray and area do to Alberta's budget? We don't know yet. We're still in crisis mode, and I sincerely hope that we move very quickly into recovery mode. I sincerely hope that the good people of Fort McMurray can find their way back as soon as possible, but that's going to have a substantial impact on the bottom line of the budget of this government. There's virtually no way, I think, at this point that we can even expect to hit the deficit number that we're facing. One of the reasons that you want to have a strong balance sheet and one of the reasons that you want to make sure that you have some flexibility in your budget is for unforeseen things like the terrible, terrible situation in Fort McMurray.

Now, what's happened there to date is not the fault of this government in the slightest. In fact, I think this government deserves a lot of praise for the way that they have responded to the forest fires. It is remarkable. I said this in estimates, and I'll say it again here for the House. I think the emergency response that's happened from this government and from the tremendous people in the Alberta Emergency Management Agency and in Transportation, in Energy, in Health, in Human Services, in Education, in every single department of this government that has anything to do with Fort McMurray, is nothing short of remarkable. It is tremendous, what has happened, I think something that we should be proud of as Albertans. We should be very proud of that, but the challenge that we face when we have a $10 billion deficit is that when unforeseen things like a forest fire happen, we have no fiscal flexibility to deal with that. That puts us even further behind, and that is a real, real concern.

Not only is there no plan to get to balance, but there's no plan to get to surplus, because once the money is borrowed, well, it has to be paid back. We have this vague idea that perhaps, maybe in eight years, the budget maybe will balance itself magically, but there's no plan then to get to surplus. There's no plan to actually pay back the money that's been borrowed, and that's a real concern. So there are choices. There are choices this government can make.

I'm going to talk about some of those choices. I'm going to talk specifically about what we in the Alberta Party would do to address Alberta's fiscal crisis, and I would challenge every other opposition party to put forward their plans. This is something that I think is very important on the opposition side. It's, frankly, very easy to poke holes in what the government does. The government has no choice but to put forward legislation, put forward policy. That's your job, and our job on the opposition side is two things. We oppose; we poke holes and identify areas where you might want to improve or things that we don't like. But there's a second half to that job, which I think is more important, and that's proposing ideas of what we would do differently. That's our job, equally and maybe even more so than simply tearing down what the government does.

In fact, I think it's far more consistent with Alberta values because in this province we are builders. We are doers in this province. We talk about what we would do. The Alberta Party's shadow budget: what would we do? We would balance the budget in four years. How would we do that? We would accommodate for population growth, and we would freeze but not roll back public-sector salaries. I think that's a fair request at a time when the great public servants – and I've talked about the work that's gone on in Fort McMurray. I think that's a really good indication of the quality of people that we have in this province working in Alberta's public service. I have a tremendous respect for those people. But when your neighbours are losing their jobs, when your neighbours are being asked to take a four-day work week and therefore a 20 per cent pay cut, I think it's fair that we ask public-sector workers to get paid the same next year as they got paid last year. I think that's fair because they have a stable, steady job. That is how we're going to bring costs in line in this province and get Alberta's spending back to at least the national average.

I think that's fair. We do that. It doesn't result in massive public-sector layoffs, it doesn't result in big front-line cuts, but with that wage freeze I think it's a fair request of our public service. So that does gradually bring our per capita spending back in line with the national average.

Now, the other thing we can do is engage in a genuine way with our public servants and ask them how they think we should find cost savings. There is scarcity in Alberta's economy right now. There is massive job loss; we have high unemployment. For the first time in three decades our unemployment is higher than the national average. There's scarcity out there that's being created by these market forces that are imposing on Alberta. We need to engage people in the public service to find ways of doing more with less. That's what every other company, every household is doing around this province, finding ways of getting more out of what they already have.

The only area where I don't see that happening in any meaningful way is the Alberta government. There is a way to engage those great people in the public service and ask them to do more with less, to think of innovative ways of streamlining processes. It's not just about moving a piece of paper from point A to point B. It's about an outcome for Albertans; it's about good service for Albertans. There are great people in there. What we need is real leadership from our provincial government to make that happen.

We agree with the small-business tax cut of 2 per cent. We agree with the idea of an investor tax credit, but it needs to be a broad-based investor tax credit. I asked earlier this week exactly how that investor tax credit will be rolled out. I can tell you there's a lot of concern that the tax credit is going to be over narrow, that it will result in the government picking winners and losers. It's very important, and I really do encourage the Minister of Economic Development and Trade to consult widely and to listen to those business owners and to really allow that to be as broad a tax credit as possible. Don't make the mistake that others have made previously. Ensure that we don't borrow for operational spending. Make that our hard-and-fast limit. If you want to legislate something, legislate that.

The carbon tax. I'm in favour of a carbon tax. Done properly, I think a carbon tax can help Alberta not only reduce our emissions but create a frame where in this province we can innovate. Alberta companies, Alberta entrepreneurs will develop technologies that we can sell to the rest of the world. That will not only reduce Alberta's carbon emissions and find that elusive social licence we talk so much about in this House, but the world will see that Alberta is, in fact, a very responsible energy producer already and that we're only getting better by reducing carbon per barrel. We'll create technologies the world wants. That will help diversify our economy by pivoting off what we already do very well in this province.

If the carbon tax is done right, then we will achieve that goal, but if we have massive rebates to almost two-thirds of the province, I'm not sure that, in fact, that's done properly. So that remains to be seen. I imagine we will be debating that carbon tax even further in this House, so we'll see exactly how it's done. The principle of a carbon tax I support. The implementation and the way it works is an open question.

This budget makes me worried for the future of our province, not worried for the future of our province in terms of the total viability. I'm pretty sure that the sun is going to come up tomorrow once this budget is passed. But it puts us on the wrong path, and we need to find a middle way, a better way, a better way than massive front-line service cuts and a better way than massive, unsustainable deficits. There is a middle ground. Unfortunately, I haven't heard, aside from this end of the House, any of that tone in this debate.

With that, Madam Chair, I thank you very much for the time.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to this bill? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. This comes from Wikipedia, the new, modern Webster's dictionary:

Financial literacy is the ability to understand how money works in the world: how someone manages to earn or make it, how that person manages it, how he/she invests it . . .

Investing, by the way, is how you turn that money into more money, a foreign concept to many across the way.

. . . and how that person donates it to help others. More specifically, it refers to the set of skills and knowledge that allows an individual to make informed and effective decisions with all of their financial resources.

Financial literacy is something that this NDP government just does not understand. They don't even pretend to. The $2 billion in annual debt repayments that this government is going to impose on future generations is simply irresponsible. It truly is. It's easy for this government to boast about how much they're investing in the future, how you're investing in the children when you're spending someone else's money. It's a spend day every day. This government will spend, knowing full well that they won't be the ones who will have to deal with this debt. Now, ironically, it will be those very children that this government claims to be trying to help who will have to pay for this debt.

Now, if I might focus a little bit more on some specifics with the seniors budget. We found in the estimates process that this government has not prioritized elder abuse. The seniors minister stated that they spend less than $1 million of a $756 million budget protecting our seniors. This is a concern. The minister has also stated that the creation of an independent Seniors' Advocate would have cost $10 million. Even though they have literally increased spending in every area of this government, protecting our seniors is not on their radar. It's too much money. It's about priorities. But I want the seniors out there to know that they do have an advocate. It is me, the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. I will be their voice.

You know, this comes at a time when our most vulnerable are at risk. They don't have an appropriate venue to truly express their concerns. We found out in question period that the Seniors' Advocate has been vacant for almost 18 months. That is shameful.

Now, we understand that you put it all under Health. I find that even more interesting. At the same time that you took the Seniors' Advocate and put them under Health, your Health minister recognized that there was too much work involved and separated Seniors and Housing away from Health. So it's good for one, but it's not good for the other, and that is disappointing.

You know, the government just has not addressed the real-life implications of this carbon tax on everything, including housing-management bodies, who provide that social housing. They don't explain how these costs will be passed on to the vulnerable Albertans who rely on social housing. Their gas is going to go up. Their power is going to go up. Any repairs on their houses are going to go up. These are people, seniors who rely on social housing, that are on fixed incomes. This government hasn't performed a market assessment of how the carbon tax will affect everything. There is no due diligence here.

This government has stated that they're going to create 2,000 long-term care spaces over the next four but have yet to provide any details. They bragged about these 2,000 beds in the fall. They bragged about these 2,000 beds in the spring. Each time I asked for a plan. They have yet to provide a plan. Once again in estimates last week they bragged about building 2,000 long-term care beds: still no plan. That's a shame.

The creation of the SHARP program: it doesn't adequately address aging-in-place mechanisms. Instead, it gets this government into providing high-risk loans and placing caveats on seniors' homes. The grant portion for vulnerable Albertans is significantly lower than the loans, which is a signal that this government is not focusing on the needs of the most vulnerable. This experimental program is untested in Canada, but most of its details will come through regulatory changes. We are eagerly watching to see what will happen in the coming months. I understand that you're not going to use the Alberta Treasury Branches, which is the financial arm of this government. Instead, you're going to manage it yourselves. You're going to do the work of a bank through your bureaucracy. I'd certainly like to see what the staffing concerns are with that in your ministries.

The obligations on contractors to inform and educate and even show these people how to fill out the forms are concerning. You're asking independent contractors to do your work for you. The total liability that's based on eligibility is exponentially higher. I mean, this is really an irresponsible program, which I truly question, and I hope that not too many seniors will consider this. They do have other venues, and, quite frankly, many of them are independent enough to have those supports.

In conclusion, Madam Chair, I ask that this government truly reconsider their entire budget and study financial literacy and recognize what $2 billion in debt repayments annually are going to do for future generations.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Bill 17, the Appropriation Act. Like many who have spoken today, there's no question in my mind that Alberta is at a crossroads. It's at a crisis point. Economics and crises that are going on in our far north raise some serious questions about how we're going to maintain a stable, dependable set of government services, the supports that people need for both expanding or maintaining the infrastructure that they live and work in, how we're going to maintain the services that Albertans have come to expect and, in many cases, have lowered their expectations around. I'm thinking more particularly about the health system today.

This budget attempts to maintain stability, maintain support for the foundations of a healthy society, and I respect that. I guess that like some others who have raised questions about the current debt load that we're taking on and the clear indication that we're not planning to live within any constraints around taking on debt, I have real concerns about that. Indeed, it builds, I would say, on 20 years of living beyond our means, of passing on to future generations financial liabilities and other liabilities that have not been in the best interests of our children and our grandchildren. We need to be paying more of the standard at which we're wanting to live.

I'm not as concerned about the level of the debt that we're taking on. I am concerned about the lack of planning around reducing expenses where we can in the public sector. I'm pleased that we're at least freezing salaries, that we are looking at agencies, boards, and commissions and reviewing very critically the amount that we're spending there. Looking at efficiencies has to be number one.

We need infrastructure. We need this time of investment and maintaining jobs and growth and the maintenance of our capital infrastructure. But I guess I'm one who needs to see more indication that we have a vision, that we know where we're going in terms of savings, in terms of new sources of energy, new sources of economy, finances, and that we have a sense that as a society we are going to pay more of our share as opposed to passing it down the line to future generations.

That is a trend that was of course started by the PC government in the last 20 to 25 years and has left us in a tremendous vulnerability at this stage, but I don't see the solution in the current budget. I don't see a recognition that salaries have to be reviewed, public services have to be reviewed, user fees have to be looked at, new forms of revenue generation. Quite apart from hoping and praying that the oil and gas prices will improve, we have to look at some new sources of revenue. Current generations, especially my generation, have to start paying more.

We've talked about, I guess, royalties: no shift there. It's hard to talk about those things at a time when the oil industry is on its knees, but we have not been getting our fair share for the last 30 years. It means that now we're laden with massive, massive debts to continue the services that most other Canadians expect and Albertans certainly expect.

The dreaded provincial sales tax, that we don't seem to be willing to talk about, would actually generate, even at 2 per cent, the same taxes we were paying for many years before the Harper Tories cut it back to 5 per cent. So 2 per cent in Alberta and 5 per cent federally would bring us back up to what we were paying before and would bring in an extra, perhaps, $2 billion a year and start to get a handle on the tremendous and growing debt that we're going to be again passing on.

I have no problem with capital borrowing. This is an investment in our future. It's an investment in more stable infrastructure. But we do need to start paying our way, and we do need to have a clearer plan to pull down that debt before we leave office. I don't see that here, so it makes me nervous in terms of what we're leaving to future generations.

I know that there are tremendous savings to be found in Health, which is about 42 per cent of our budget. Much frustration at the front lines of health that we're not using common sense in terms of purchasing, in terms of efficient use of resources, in terms of streamlining patient flow and getting at some of the earlier stages in the community, where we could be dealing with problems in doctors' offices, using fully the skills of nurses and nurse practitioners, expanding the scope of some of our primary care networks, where they could be doing so much more in terms of mental health and addictions issues, which are now ending up in emergencies and beds inappropriately being used in long-term care. We calculated that something like $50 million was spent last year just keeping people in hospitals, people that really were not helped in hospitals, were not healthy being in hospitals, needed to be out where there's more connection with the community and more opportunity for the kind of quality-of-life activities that actually bring back health. So we know that in health care, for example, there are tremendous opportunities for savings.

I talked yesterday, of course, about the importance of research in diversifying the economy and getting clear about the fact that medical research in this province has been nothing short of stunning globally. We are a world leader in research, have been up until the last 10 years, when we've seen that funding and the confidence eroded and the loss of over a hundred top researchers in the last year because of the lack of clarity about our commitment to health and medical research. There's a win-win there, both in drawing other resources into this province from across the country and across the world and also the opportunity for innovation and new technologies and some real business opportunities, which are so much of what we need to get off this single-industry roller coaster that we've been on.

Also, the concern about removing the debt cap – I called it a death cap, but it's a debt cap – and the many concerns about why we wouldn't want to constrain ourselves within some kind of limit and have changed so dramatically since the last commitment by the government to limit it to 15 per cent of GDP. Without a debt cap, how can we have any confidence that we know where we're going and how we're going to manage our financial future? If low oil prices are the new norm, there's a huge gap, then, in funding that we can be expected to receive over the next few years.

Not only does the bill contain nothing in the way of a debt cap; it offers nothing in terms of a debt repayment program. I think all of us need to be more forthright, I guess, especially the government of the day, in how we intend to bring that down to a manageable level.

I'm also concerned about the proposed amendment to the Financial Administration Act that aims to exempt the government from having to table before the House any loan agreement which involves a loan to an individual of less than $500,000. It's not clear to me what the rationale there would be. Although the government has talked a lot about increasing openness and transparency, particularly since the former PC administrations were so challenged in that respect, I'd be curious to know: what is the government thinking in not making loans up to $500,000 public? That's inordinate as far as most of us are concerned.

Madam Chair, I can't support the overall budget without a stronger indication that these folks know where they're going, how they're going to get there, how we're going to leave our future in better financial shape, how we're going to pay more of our share in these years, currently, and how we're going to manage, I guess, what's become a much more affluent culture and the high expectations that have come out of that and the need to start reining in some of the expectations across the board in our public sector. That includes physicians, but it doesn't preclude all of the other high earners in our society. That should be reviewed as well. I think that in some ways the medical profession is being held up as a scapegoat in some of the spending.

I think we need to look at all aspects of our public spending and recognize that all of it needs to be reviewed. We need to get more real about paying our way, whether it's in the public sector or the private sector or in government services generally.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Are there any further comments with respect to the bill? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I move that debate be adjourned on Bill 17 at this time and that when the committee next rises and reports, it reports progress.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 10

Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. This is a challenging bill. In many ways this is a more terrifying and dangerous bill than the budget itself. This is a bill that raises the debt ceiling.

During the summer I spent a lot of time visiting some amazing people in my riding. I was able to converse with families that live in the cities and in the towns and in the countryside. I talked with business owners and farmers and teachers and nurses, and the list goes on. Not a single one of them suggested to me that the government should take on unlimited debt. I can say with a hundred per cent certainty that no one said that I should suggest to the government to remove the debt cap. Nobody said that or mentioned it or even referred to that in a joke, so to speak. Madam Chair, it is not a joking matter.

Bill 10 came up after the budget, and not a single person was laughing, well, except the Finance minister and possibly the Premier, as they announced a budget with a $58 billion debt for Albertans. They knew they needed to have some way to permit that. That picture of them laughing actually went viral.

Now constituents are talking about unlimited debt, except they aren't laughing yet. Some are laughing, thinking it's a prank, thinking that it's Facebook information that doesn't have the facts straight, but when I assure them that this government is truly going to eliminate any limit on debt, they stop laughing, and they ask: what can you do to stop this? I tell them: we'll try and talk sense into them, but they rarely listen and never listen on spending issues. There's no laughter from them after that. When we're done talking about the massive amounts of debt planned to be accumulated by this government, they give a sad look at their children, knowing that they are the ones that will have to pay this debt back.

Our generation and even our children's generation won't have to pay this debt back. It'll be their generation, the kids that are in grades 1, 2, and 3, our grandchildren, that will be paying back this debt. I've even had people say to me: "I don't want their stupid family benefit, but I have to pay taxes in order to create it. They've forced me. I have no choice but to pay taxes on it, and I get less back from it." People today will enjoy the benefits of a government who is willing to spend and spend and spend. People today will enjoy the millions of dollars being spent on this program and that program, but eventually the money runs out. Eventually our credit rating is so poor that we cannot borrow anymore. Of course, this government will be long gone and won't have to deal with it, but eventually we have to pay the money back, and our kids and our grandkids will have to pay the money that was spent on their parents.

You know, it's been said that there is a terrible bias in NDP policy. It's been called the grey bias. It's the bias that favours the baby boom generation. It's a bias against the younger generation. There is very little benefit in this budget, or in this allowance of spending money endlessly, for the younger generation. It's all aimed at the current baby boom generation.

Instead, we should talk about reductions in spending somehow. This government could just save pennies in each area, and it would make a difference. The Minister of Economic Development and Trade says that Bill 11 will save us $2 million a year, pennies on the dollar, really. And Bill 11 didn't cut front-line workers. It is actually entirely possible to make small savings in many places and to make small efficiencies in many departments without cutting front-line workers. You can die from a million cuts, but it isn't necessary. I know this government knows it is possible to do so. We need to always be finding ways to reduce our spending, and we do not need to always be increasing spending.

I was reading the comments in a newspaper article not long ago that announced the removal of the debt limit. One person was arguing that they set a limit on how much they spend for their family and that it's completely reasonable that the government should set a limit. The rebuttal was quite entertaining. The rebuttal was that the government has so many more levers to pull to deal with their debt and that it doesn't matter how much debt we have. Really? Well, in a way they're right. Government does have lots of levers they can pull with regard to debt, yet every lever that the government can pull affects Albertans in one way or another. Take taxes out of this tap and taxes of that tap and taxes out of the next tap: taxes are all paid by Albertans. It's not some lever the government can pull at will. Taxes are people's hard-earned incomes and their lives, and the government needs to respect that income and their realities.

Government cannot just take that income for granted, thinking that money grows on trees, because one day the fire will come. We're very aware of that these days. Forests need the pruning of a regular fire. Experts in forestry know that. Without it, we end up with massive destructive wildfires that come through. It's the same in government spending. Without a bit of regular cutting back, we get stuck with out-of-control burns.

This government likes to blame Ralph Klein for cutting back excessively. Well, you know, the reality is that if that happens in the future, it will be this government's fault because they will not allow for any cuts or restraints. They will put us in a place where there is no option and no choice, and we'll have that kind of experience.

Governments can finance their debt differently than a household – it's another lever that can be pulled – but as we are seeing already, this process becomes more and more expensive as the debt increases. Our debt rating is already falling and will continue to fall as our debt increases. We will not get a better interest rate because we are a repeat customer. That's not how this works. Every time we borrow a few billion more, the interest rate increases. Those interest payments are completely wasted money. Those interest payments could be spent on front-line workers: more nurses or teachers or firefighters. Instead, we'll be paying the bank back for decades to come if this government continues on the course it has set.

Madam Chair, this is not a good idea, this bill. This is a slippery slope that does not lead to greener pastures. I do not know what has to be done to convince the members opposite that this needs to stop. I don't know how long it will take to pay back $58 billion. I do know, though, that it will not be paid back in the same amount of time that it was racked up. It's easy to spend lots of money, but it's not easy to pay it back. This government is stuck with the revenue it has now. This government needs to make a serious effort to restrain spending and to get back on track towards balanced budgets.

There's a reason that most debt financing is financed by the largest money market in the world, the largest finance market in the world, which is the bond market. The reason they call it bonds is because it immediately puts you into bonds. It restricts and it restrains.

I'd like to make a reference also to Bill 15, which this government has put forward, as an example, a bill to limit predatory lending, which we all agree is shameful. Predatory lending is shameful, and this government has introduced a bill to curb predatory lending. Yet this government needs to be protected from itself. It needs to be protected from its own dangerous, compulsive going to lenders and becoming a compulsive borrower. The predatory lending bill requires that financial literacy be taught to borrowers, yet this government in its own borrowing is not paying attention to financial literacy. The bill on predatory lending requires signs and declarations and a complete disclosure of all the terms and conditions and costs and interest rates, yet none of this has been declared to the people of this province as we enter into this experience as a province. The costs have not been fully declared. There's an inconsistency here, Madam Chair.

The bill on predatory lending prohibits rolling loans into new loans and refinancing them, yet that's what governments do over and over and over again continually. The bill on predatory lending seeks to stop the vicious payday loan cycle, yet here we are as a province plunging ourselves into a vicious loan cycle. I don't see how these two things can come from the same people.

A recent government survey with regard to predatory lending found that 3 out of 4 Albertans agree that Alberta should limit the amount of money that can be borrowed at a predatory loan office. So 3 out of 4 Albertans agree that predatory lending should be limited, yet here we are as a province removing the limits, completely opening the door to expose ourselves to every possible amount of predatory lending you can possibly imagine. It is completely contradictory, completely ludicrous for our province to be doing this.

I ask the members of this House to please vote against this bill. Keep your promise to stick to a debt limit, please. I ask you on behalf of common sense and on behalf of future generations to defeat this crazy bill.

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm happy to stand up and speak to Bill 10, the Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016, which, in my mind, I've been thinking about as the motherhood, apple pie, and monsters bill because there are a couple of things in there that are a little bit like motherhood and apple pie, that are hard to argue with. The bill co-ordinates some of the standards with the federal government. It seems like a nice, common-sense thing to do. It makes sense. The problem is that the bill includes the monster, and the monster is taking the cap off the debt ceiling.

Now, before this government was elected and came to what they call power and what I call the responsibility to look after Albertans – as much as I don't really care for the debt-to-GDP ratio, the previous government expressed it in different terms – the debt-to-GDP ratio was about 4 per cent, by far the lowest in the country. There was a buffer there in the financial position so that the province, faced with tough times, would be able to react accordingly. If people didn't think that that was a reasonable level then, I think many of them surely do now, faced with what we're faced with today.

Where we are now is that we've gone to a place where the government has gone from roughly a 4 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio and in the last budget raised it to 15 per cent, almost four times the amount of debt that the previous government had allowed itself. It was, like, four and a half months ago, five months ago tops, that the government said, "Fifteen per cent debt-to-GDP is responsible. We won't go above that. It's a place where we think it's better than most provinces,” which might be true, but I’m not sure that the province of Alberta should be reaching for the bottom. I think we should be reaching for the top. So as much as the government has a point, that it’s better than some of the other provinces, the fact that it’s going completely the wrong way and reaching for the bottom should give all Albertans concern. You know, that step alone would see Alberta increase its debt to nearly $60 billion in this budget.

Now, here’s the crazy thing. Here’s the monster. The fact is that the government wants to take the limit completely off, saying that it’s not enough that in 2019 every person coming to Alberta and every child born in Alberta will owe the provincial government $13,000 on day one: welcome to Alberta; you now owe $13,000 to your province. They’re saying that that’s not enough. I’m not sure, Madam Chair, what the government anticipates, whether they anticipate that they are going to borrow even more than their budget says that they’re going to borrow or whether they think that their policies are going to cause the province’s economy to shrink so much that that’s going to put them offside. Perhaps it’s both. In fact, I’m a little afraid that it’s both.

In order to get us past this, because this is clearly bad policy – this is clearly irresponsible; this is clearly a sign that things are out of control – I would like to, with your permission, Madam Chair, move an amendment that I think will improve the bill. I have the requisite number of copies prepared and signed off by the lawyers around here if that’s okay. Now, the amendment is a short one. Everybody is going to get a copy, with your permission.

The Chair: Just give me a moment till I see the amendment.

Mr. McIver: No. I understand. You’re the boss here as far as this stuff goes, so I’ll be happy to wait.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. I move that Bill 10, the Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016, be amended by striking out section 5. Of course, section 5 is where the debt limit, the cap on the debt, is removed. The government shouldn’t be all that negative about this because what we’re saying is – and listen. I didn’t love or support the 15 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio that the government put on a mere five months ago, but I’m saying: let’s not make it higher than what the government told us ever so recently was okay. This amendment is designed to protect Albertans and keep in place the debt ceiling that was instituted by this government so recently.

You know, the government just over a year ago took control of a government with a $7 billion fiscal sustainability fund. They were coming off a budget with a billion dollar surplus and a debt-to-GDP ratio of about 4 per cent max. Since that time, since this budget has come out, we know now that the $7 billion fund will be gone. The billion dollar surplus will be replaced with a $10.4 billion deficit, and the government is now, on top of that, wanting to increase the amount they can borrow above the 15 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio, that they told us ever so recently was all that they would need and was responsible and that they could stick to.

When you think about it, Madam Chair, this isn’t a big adjustment for government. This is just a chance for the government, if they support this, to say: “Yeah. You’re right. You’re right. The promise we made to Albertans ever so recently, less than half a year ago, is one that we’ve decided to keep to be responsible and put a limit on how much we borrow, as Albertans have to do.” Albertans have a limited amount of revenue that they can grab. Albertans know that after all the money is gone, you have to stop spending one way or another.

In fact, when you’re borrowing money, once you get to the end of your credit limit, you certainly have to stop borrowing because at some point they will make you stop borrowing. The government has received some pretty clear signs from some pretty responsible bodies that we’re getting near there. You know, three different credit-rating agencies have lowered Alberta’s triple-A credit rating. I would say that this is a chance for the government to say: “We are heeding the warning signs. We see the red lights flashing on the dash, and we’re going to pull over before the engine blows up because that’s the responsible thing to do.”

With that, Madam Chair, thank you. I would move that amendment and will listen to the debate, and I will hope for the support of the Legislative Assembly.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I’m pleased to stand in support of this amendment. I was eagerly awaiting a chance to put forward an identically worded amendment myself. I think, instead, we’ll move to support the amendment put forward by the hon. leader of the third party.

Bill 10 has been given a rather innocuous name. This government has a funny habit with bills. It gives bills with no substance, that do nothing at all, these big, interesting names. Bill 1, if I recall, is the economic diversification bill. It’s a big bill with a grand name about economic diversification and development, that does absolutely nothing. It gives the minister a job description. It does nothing, but it has a big name. On the contrary, Bill 10, the Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016, is about the most boring name I can think of for a bill, but it is very substantive. This bill seeks to completely remove any limits whatsoever on the ability of the government to borrow. It seeks to remove any restraint on government whatsoever and its ability to borrow from future generations.

We did not get here overnight. We’ve been running nine consecutive deficits in a row. We’ve been running deficits since 2008. Now, in 2008 it was reasonable for the province, perhaps, to go into a brief and temporary deficit. We had $17 billion in the sustainability fund. That money was set aside for a rainy day, but unfortunately we never stopped using the sustainability fund.

I have to call out the member, the leader of the third party, when he says that this government inherited a surplus. It did not. According to page 110 of the fiscal plan – you can look at the change in net financial assets, which is effectively the way we used to record the deficit in this province until Alison Redford shamefully tore up the most accountable budgetary accounting system in this province when they divided the budget into three different pots to try to deceive Albertans about how big the deficit really was.

Our net financial assets are the financial value of the government in a year. Those net financial assets declined by $9 billion last year. You cannot take a $9 billion hit to your bottom line and claim that you’re running a surplus, Madam Chair. That is ridiculous. That is trying to deceive Albertans.

Mr. McIver: The Auditor General disagrees.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Now, I know that the leader of the third party has to try and defend an old record. I’m not interested in rehashing it, but I’m just going to point out, Madam Chair, that I’m not going to stand here and let people claim that this government inherited a good fiscal situation when they inherited eight consecutive deficits before them. This government has made a bad situation worse, but let’s not pretend that they inherited a good situation to begin with. They inherited eight years of fiscal irresponsibility: massive spending increases, massive debt, tearing up all of our fiscal accountability laws. Bill 10 is in a long tradition of watering down our financial accountability legislation in this province.

When I was the Alberta director of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, I got into pretty big fights with the then Minister of Finance as he repealed Jim Dinning's extremely effective financial accountability legislation, legislation that – Jim Dinning said that if any politicians after us try to repeal it, they would, quote, have to look Albertans in the whites of their eyes and ask them why they are willing to accept subpar government. That is a quote from Jim Dinning. There is only one party in this Legislature right now that represents the values of Jim Dinning and Ralph Klein in this House, and that is the Wildrose, Madam Chair.

Madam Chair, it is a bit rich to come in here and act like this government inherited a pristine fiscal situation and then squandered it. They inherited a big deficit and made it worse. In the last year of the former government our government ran a $9 billion consolidated deficit. They can try and call it a surplus. Alison Redford tried it, too, and Albertans saw through it because it was bunk. This government has taken a $9 billion deficit and turned it into a $14 billion consolidated deficit. A $14 billion consolidated deficit. Let me put it in terms that I think everybody can understand. If you are spending more than you are bringing in, you're running a deficit. I don't care what accounting tricks you've got to try to cover it up. Now, that's enough of correcting the record there.

Let's talk about the substance of this bill. I do not support legislation that gives government a free hand to do things without any accountability. I was elected to come here and stand up for taxpayers and stand up for accountability, accountability and limited government, restraint on the power of the state. When politicians vote themselves new power, when politicians vote to remove any restraint on their ability to act with other people's money, I will oppose it. The Wildrose will oppose it every time we see it, too, Madam Chair. What we're seeing here is an attempt by the government to remove the very last vestiges of restraint on the ability of the government to borrow.

It has already led to crippling multiple downgrades of our credit rating. We have seen every credit-rating agency in Canada downgrade this government's credit rating. Now, they like to pretend that it's the price of oil, but if it was the price of oil, would we have received a credit downgrading one day, less than 24 hours, after the budget was introduced? If this was about the price of oil, they would have just downgraded our credit rating when the price of oil went down, but the credit-rating agencies downgraded our credit rating when the budget came out. It is the budget that is responsible for our credit downgrading. It is the NDP that is responsible for the credit downgrading, not the price of oil in this province, Madam Chair.

The reason they are downgrading our credit rating constantly – and we face future downgrades beyond this, very likely, Madam Chair – is because this government does not have an ability to cut a penny out of the government. They fearmonger and say that cutting a single penny out of this government's operating expenses will result in mass layoffs of thousands of nurses, doctors, and teachers. They say that if you were to spend even close to the national average, if we were to spend per capita anywhere even close to British Columbia, we would have no nurses, doctors, or teachers. Well, British Columbia spends two and a half thousand dollars less per capita on operations in government. Two and half thousand dollars less per capita. They've still got roads, bridges, nurses, doctors, teachers. They've got, actually, a pretty big government and welfare state, Madam Chair, yet somehow they manage to do it at two and half thousand dollars less. But the members opposite claim that getting even anywhere close to going in that direction will result in mass layoffs in the government and absolute government shutdown. It is fearmongering, and Albertans know better.

They don't have an ability to cut anything in the budget except for one thing, Madam Chair, and that's the emergency budget. The emergency budget. On average, this province spends half a billion dollars every single year on emergencies. We've done it for a decade. Every single year we spend between $400 million and $600 million on disasters and emergencies in the province. It is the oldest trick in the book. We've been doing it for a very long time in the province, and the new government is continuing on with it. That is that the government consistently will underbudget at the beginning of the fiscal year for emergencies to make their deficit look smaller, knowing absolutely that they will spend more on emergencies at the end of the day to make their deficit look smaller at the beginning of the year. So at the end of the year, if they have a deficit, which they most certainly will, they can say: "Oh, how did we know that there'd be an emergency somewhere in this province? How did we know that there'd be a fire or a flood or a tornado or a windstorm? We had no idea that these things would happen because none of us can predict the weather."

But we do know that there will be disasters every single year, and we should budget accordingly for it. Instead, we see these games with the budget, where they underbudget on emergencies to make the deficit look smaller at the beginning of the year, and then when they inevitably have a significant amount of disaster spending at the end of the year, they get to blame the deficit on it and shirk all responsibility. It is a proud and long tradition of budget manipulation in this province, and I'm very ashamed to see that the NDP have continued to do it. They have found one area where they are willing to cut out of the budget, and it was the one area where the Wildrose says that we need to increase spending, and that is emergency and disaster spending in this province, Madam Chair.

Now, there was a great video going around on YouTube a few weeks ago. It was: this guy goes into the banker's office, and he's requesting a higher debt limit. He's saying: "I want to go on vacation. Going down to Australia, leaving tomorrow. I need some more money." And his banker says to him: "You're not making enough money. You're spending far more. You've got a huge debt already. You don't have any ability to pay this off." And the guy says: "Well, I cut my expenses. I stopped going out for an expensive lunch once a week." And it was obviously a drop in the bucket. The banker says: "I'm sorry; that's just not going to cut it. I can't authorize to give you more credit. We can't raise your debt limit. We can't give you more credit." And just as he's about to give up hope on getting more money out of the bank, it occurs to him that he can sign his child up for a line of credit. He brings his kid in, and his kid signs on the dotted line, and he gets to enjoy the money and leave the bill for his kid. That is what Bill 10 is doing right now, Madam Chair. That's what Bill 10 is doing.

Right around the time that this budget was introduced, I had a new niece born, Lucy Graham. She was born just within a few days of this budget coming out. By the time the next election comes, she will have over $5,000 of debt to her name. She'll be just about three years old with $5,000 of debt to her name. By the time she can vote, by the time she can vote for politicians to undo the damage being done right now and done over the last decade, she will have more debt to her name, to her provincial government alone, than could put her through university. My niece Lucy will have as much debt to her name that would be able to put her through an undergraduate program at the University of Calgary as it will take to pay off the provincial debt alone. That is absolutely shameful, Madam Chair. It is unethical. This is not just a fiscal and budgetary issue now. This is now an issue of the moral fitness of what we are doing. It is immoral to vote to put this kind of debt on future generations without them having any say over it whatsoever. It is taxation without representation.

The amendment put forward by the Member for Calgary-Hays is identical to the amendment that was going to be put forward by myself at this time. It is a prudent amendment to strike out the worst part of Bill 10, and I think all members of the House should be strongly encouraged to support it.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert on amendment A1.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise on this amendment. It's a very interesting amendment. I'm sure it will come as a shock to the opposition members that I will not be supporting this amendment. When I was a child and in school in the years of Premier Klein, who hon. members across the aisle like to talk up a lot – I will be excited to see if the hon. member continues applauding for Premier Klein later – I recall that every single year on the first day of school we were told that there simply was not enough space in the school for students. We had to close down our peripheral spaces. We needed to pull in more portables, and that school still hasn't seen a renovation. In my constituency we have schools that were promised a renovation under Premier Getty, and they are just now seeing that renovation.

That infrastructure debt is not something to be proud of. That is something to be ashamed of. I am proud that this government is investing in infrastructure, investing in our families and communities, and I will strongly urge all members to vote down this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to rise to support this amendment. It's really, I think, a strong reflection of where we're at. We've had the likes of Moody's, Dominion Bond Rating Service, Standard & Poor's all take this province down a notch in terms of our credit reliability and our credit rating and our credit costs as we go forward. We're looking at $57.6 billion accumulated debt by 2019, but that's with highly optimistic views on the price of oil. I think – we had some calculations in this House the other day – that we might be off by $2 billion or $3 billion if the energy prices do not rebound and do not reflect the projections that this government has put in place on those as well. We have a possibility of stranded capital compensation for shutting down coal by 2030, and those are estimated at between $3 billion and $16 billion on top of that. We have other possible costs and expenses, unbudgeted expenses, sadly, things like the Fort McMurray fire, which could cost us a half a billion dollars or more once compensated.

Madam Chair, that takes us up to close to $70 billion by the end of 2019, and I've done some quick calculations. That works out to roughly $16,000 per man, woman, and child. The average size of a household in Alberta is 2.6 people, so that works out to about $41,600 per household in Alberta that this province is going to face because of this irresponsible borrowing and no plan to pay it back.

Madam Chair, this is the problem here. The last time I checked, households in Alberta, when they go out to borrow – again, fiscal responsibility is not about not borrowing. It's about borrowing responsibly. When a household goes out, number one, hopefully they're looking at what they can truly afford, and modesty guidelines are something they take into account, whether it's a principal residence to borrow for so that they can provide appropriate and affordable housing for themselves, transportation, those sorts of things.

Madam Chair, when they do that, when do the payments start? They go to the bank, they take out a loan, they buy that dream home, and that dream home could be a starter home, it could be a mobile home, it could be a move-up home for them. But when do they start paying the interest on that? Right away. The next month, that payment comes out of their bank account, and they need to know that they can pay that yet still put food on the table, still put fuel in their cars. That's another issue because it's going to be more expensive for them as we go forward, thanks to this government. They've got to pay their heating, electrical bills. They want to save for their children's education. They want to save for their own retirement.

Madam Chair, this is responsibility. This is planning to invest in infrastructure, planning to invest in things, not operations. They're not going to go and buy their groceries on that debt. Hopefully, they're not going to take their mortgage and go and take on a second mortgage to pay for their groceries.

Madam Chair, this debt that we're looking at, $41,600 per household, works out to $243 a month. Now, I was looking at some numbers here, and I think that not only are we paying a huge amount of interest on that, increased because of our downgraded credit ratings, but on top of that take a look at the opportunity that is lost to Albertans: the ability to save for their children's educations, their retirement, to pay down their mortgages faster so that they can put more money in the bank for themselves in case of an emergency like a downturn in the economy, so that they have savings that they can draw upon in tough times. That $243 a month could calculate into a hundred thousand or, if they're lucky with their investments, a few hundred thousand dollars towards their retirement or towards the reduction of other personal debt.

Madam Chair, that's where the irresponsibility of this borrowing is, and this amendment recognizes the fact that this is an irresponsible, ideologically driven move to continue down a path that Albertans cannot afford.

This is not government money. This is Albertans' money, and the sooner we all recognize that in this House, that there is no such thing as government money – there are taxpayers' hard-earned dollars, and those hard-earned dollars typically, when they have to spend it across their own threshold, are after-tax dollars already. They've paid their fair share, and what we're doing is that we're taking that money they give us and we're spending more and we're borrowing against that even further so that they will have somewhere between $13,000 and $16,000 per person debt – man, woman, child, and unborn baby – in 2019, and that is shameful for us here in this House, Madam Chair. We need to be more responsible with the taxpayers' hard-earned dollars. This is not government money. This is not ours to take lightly when we are but frugal and humble stewards of those dollars, but we are also here to be very cautious when we borrow on their behalf, and I do not see that in this bill.

Madam Chair, I could go on and on with this because – you know what? – it makes my blood boil when I look at what this does to future Albertans, to the next generation, to new immigrants we're trying to attract, to new workers we're trying to attract to this province so that we can welcome them with an invoice.

You know, Madam Chair, this irresponsibility is something that we – this is man, woman, and child. These are low-income men, women, and children. This is senior citizens, men and women. This is their children and their grandchildren. This is not some magical number. These are not people that we can reach into their wallets deeper. This is every man, woman, and child in Alberta, unborn, on the day they're born in 2019. That, Madam Chair, is irresponsible, and that's why I will be supporting this amendment to remove that increased lending, which is irresponsible on the backs of Albertans.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I just want to briefly respond to the hon. member and just pose some questions. When his party was the government, over the last 10 or 15 years the money flowed like honey, especially during the period in the early part of the 2000s, when the price of natural gas was sky-high, and the revenues poured in at that time. In fact, just natural gas royalty revenue alone in a couple of those years approached $8 billion, a windfall that the government had. Now, despite that, people were warning the government that it was important to diversify the sources of income of the government as well as to diversify the economy.

In fact, in 2007 the Emerson report, appointed by then Premier Ed Stelmach, made that recommendation very clearly, one of its top recommendations in 2007, and warned about that, but the government didn't listen. The question I have is about all the billions of dollars from royalty resources that that government had. Where are they? Where did they go? And why didn't that government diversify the economy and diversify the sources of revenue of this province?

What they did instead, when they were floating on that sea of natural gas royalty money, was to cut taxes for their friends. So when they brought in the flat tax, Madam Chair, it actually increased the tax burden on middle-class Albertans, and it cut the taxes of the super wealthy by a massive amount. By a massive amount. That's what they did. They used the money to help their rich friends, to cut corporate taxes in this province from, well, it was at that time about 15 and a half per cent down to 10, and according to Steve West they were headed all the way to 8 per cent.

The Wildrose cheers and claps, but they have no way of substituting the revenue to prevent the cuts. They'd like to pretend that they're not going to cut massively in this economy, that they're not going to cut government expenditures. They like to pretend that they can cut billions of dollars from capital spending, billions of dollars from operational spending and not affect anything. Madam Chair, it strains credulity. Nobody believes that. Nobody believes that they're going to be able to cut billions of dollars from the expenditures of the government without seriously affecting people, laying off people.

Now, they get all mad when we say, "You're going to lay off teachers and nurses," but they try to pretend, Madam Chair, that they're doing this somehow by magic. By magic they're going to retain all of the front-line services in the province. They're not going to borrow a dime, and they're not going to increase taxes. In fact, they were applauding taking corporate taxes down another couple of per cent. They seem to think that they can square this circle, that they can make all of these things happen simultaneously. Well, when you're in government, you have certain choices, and the choices available to you in difficult economic circumstances are to cut spending, which is what they want to do, or to increase revenues or to borrow. Those are the only three tools that you have.

Madam Chair, one of the things that we've been through before – and I think this is why the public is so strongly in support of retaining the services that we have in this province. It's because they saw that movie before. They saw what Ralph Klein did when he was the Premier. He cut to the bone, you know, our health care system, and it's never fully recovered. The people of Alberta know what that looks like. That's not what they want.

Now, you know, it's an important, I think, fact . . . [interjections] I'll just wait to see if they want to settle down on the other side, Madam Chairman. Probably not. Probably not.

11:20

The Chair: Hon. members, the hon. member has the floor, please.

Mr. Mason: Madam Chair, there's no difference – it's like night and day with the lack of manners on the part of the opposition side when government MLAs are speaking, as we see now. As we can see now, the government sits and listens to some of the twaddle from the other side . . . [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. members, please.

Mr. Mason: . . . with great forbearance and patience most of the time.

I just want to conclude by getting back to the PCs. I mean, obviously, the Wildrose would take us from the PC frying pan into the Wildrose fire. The PC government had every opportunity to diversify the sources of income of this province. They had billions upon billions of windfall royalty dollars to manage that process.

Instead, Madam Chairman, they squandered the money. There's no money left. They've left us in this vulnerable position and left us to try and clean up the mess that they made, and they stand there on their side and point the finger at this government for trying to do the right thing under very difficult circumstances, which are entirely of that former government's making. So we make no apology for the direction that we're going forward in. This is what the people of Alberta need, and we will fix the PCs' mess.

Thank you.

The Chair: We've just had a request to do an introduction.

Mr. Nixon: Yeah, Madam Chair. I think that if you seek it, we would be able to get unanimous consent to quickly revert to introductions for the school group that's here, if that's possible.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly members of the grades 5 and 6 class of a small town by the name of Champion in my riding. If I could ask a couple of well-respected people from the riding, Todd Thompson and Amanda Ellis, to please rise with the rest of the grades 5 and 6 class of the Champion school so they could receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow. Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's wonderful to see the students from Champion school here to see us as we debate important bits of legislation and to take part in the democratic process. So nice to see you here.

I always find it edifying and educational when I hear from the Government House Leader, with his many, many, many years of experience in this House. Just two? Not a third “many”? No. But I think you have something to teach us.

Back on Bill 10, let’s talk about exactly what this amendment does. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment because I think it’s important. One of the most important things government can do is to impose some constraints on public spending, some parameters. I think of it as sort of two telephone poles on the prairie. They’re not telling us exactly where to get to, just somewhere in there. Unfortunately, what section 5 of Bill 10 does is that it removes any possible constraint on government spending. In the private sector, in the market we have these natural forces of the market which will tell you what you can spend, what your expenditures can be, what your costs are, how much you can charge your customers.

That isn’t the case in government. We don’t have, necessarily, the same constraints in the same way, so it’s the job of government to put some parameters in, to put some guidelines in. That’s exactly what that 15 per cent debt-to-GDP cap did. You know, I think that it’s important for us to understand, when we talk about Alberta’s debt-to-GDP ratio, the importance that credit-rating agencies place on the debt-to-GDP ratio. It is not the only measure that they use to determine what Alberta’s credit rating will be, but it’s a very important measure. More important, though, than the specific number itself is that it sends a signal to the market that Alberta is a responsible fiscal operator, that it has a plan to constrain debt, that therefore any money that is lent to Alberta is in safe hands, and that those who are lending that money will have a reasonable expectation of getting paid back.

Now, let’s have a bit of a lesson here in how credit-rating agencies work. They look at risk: what is the risk of default on a particular loan? Now, as a result of Alberta’s relatively strong balance sheet and relatively low risk, to date we have very low interest rates. That’s a good thing.

The Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert talked about a school facility that was old and constrained and that there was never enough classroom space. That is exactly the problem that we need to solve in this province, absolutely. It’s a very real problem, not just in Spruce Grove-St. Albert but all around this province. We do need to build more schools, we do need to update the schools that we have, and in doing that, we stimulate the economy and create jobs. Keynesian economics: it makes all the sense in the world when we’re borrowing for capital because there’s an asset behind it, and to do so in an economic downturn makes sense. We don’t want to do it all the time.

But borrowing for operations, which is what exceeding the 15 per cent debt-to-GDP cap allows this government to do, puts really no constraint on spending, and that’s a big problem. So that’s why I think it’s so important that we vote in favour of this amendment.

There’s just one final point I want to make. This government in their original plan in the election said that they were going to balance the budget by 2017. Clearly, there was a bit of a math error, and that turned into 2018. So that’s two plans. Then they got into government, and they said: well, actually, it’s going to have to be 2019. That’s three plans. And the fourth plan? What’s the fourth plan? The fourth plan is no plan at all. There’s absolutely no plan or interest in balancing the budget. That’s why it’s important to have some caps. You can work with the public service and you can work with Albertans and say: “Look. Here’s the level of service we’re able to provide. Here’s how much we’re able to spend on it because there’s a limit.”

What removing this cap does is that it makes that borrowing unlimited. It makes the easy choice the only choice. They’ve tried everything except actually constraining spending in any sort of meaningful way, which is why I’m enthusiastically supportive of this amendment, and I would sincerely hope all members of the House would vote in favour.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I’ll be voting in favour of this amendment because I’ve worked very hard all my life to provide for my family and make sure that my kids were well equipped for the future so that they would have a better chance of succeeding. My wife and I worked very hard to make sure that we’ve provided an inheritance that will be passed down from one generation to another so that future generations in our family will have a better chance of succeeding as well. Families have been doing this for many, many generations throughout Canada, Europe, all over the world. It’s nothing really new.

The unfortunate part is that all of my and my wife’s hard work could be negated by legislation like Bill 10 and the budget that’s about to be passed. Passing on uncontrollable debt to our future generations in this province I find very, very distasteful, so anything that I can do as a member here to slow that process down, I will do to my utmost. If that makes me a conservative, I guess that’s a good thing. Madam Chair, I cannot and will not support this bill or any other legislation that puts my family’s or Albertans’ future in jeopardy, and I can’t understand how anyone in this Chamber can justify doing so. For those reasons, I’ll be supporting this amendment and voting against this bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A1? The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Okay. Thanks, Madam Chair. I’m happy to stand and close on this, correct the record on a few things, and provide some information.

It was interesting. We heard about the economy not being diversified, but in fact I know that I tabled a document in this House a few months ago that I would recommend to the reading of the House leader of the government, a document that shows that the Alberta economy in 1984 was the size of about $64 billion, and at that time 36 per cent of that economy was the oil and gas sector. The same document shows that the gross domestic product, the economy in Alberta, 30 years later, in 2014, was over $600 billion. It grew by almost six times.

Even though there was that much growth, the oil and gas sector actually shrunk to 25 per cent. If that isn’t diversification – I hate to confuse the hon. Government House Leader with facts, but those are the facts, sir. So the economy has constantly been diversified in Alberta. There’s still more work to do, in fairness, but to say that it hasn’t been diversified is just flat out not true.

I’m also happy that the hon. Government House Leader as well as members of the other party asked about the heritage savings trust fund. Well, I would recommend to all of these people that – every year that the heritage trust fund has been in existence, there’s been an audited set of statements there, and I would recommend the reading. Having done some research, I’ll read some highlights of where some of the money went: southern Alberta children’s hospital; Alberta Health Services; Walter C. Mackenzie; southern Alberta cancer centre; the clinical research building; cancer research; heart disease research; irrigation rehabilitation and expansion; Alberta reforestry nursery; conventional oil enhanced recovery program; maintaining our forests; Alberta Oil Sands Technology and Research Authority; Fish Creek park, one of the largest provincial parks in Canada; new rail hopper cars, helping to get our agricultural products to market; Kananaskis Country recreation development; municipal recreation/tourism; airport terminal buildings; Alberta heritage learning resources – there's so much, so many things that Albertans value to this day – helping the grain terminals in Prince Rupert, that have allowed Alberta farmers to get their grains to international markets. [interjections] Even the opposition is banging for this because they know that the heritage trust fund has done some great things.

You know what? Was it perfect? Of course not. But there was a lot of good. I'm not sure if I can get it done today, but if not, then next week I will table a report, because while I've got a lot of things here, they're not all attributed to the source. We'll do that extra work, and I'll table it in the House for the hon. members that want to know where the money went. It was all audited. It was all reported. It's all there for Albertans to enjoy in the hospitals that they go to and the seniors' homes that are available to them when they get older and the seventh floor at the Li Ka Shing centre at the University of Alberta, that they are very proud of, that's opening up soon, that'll have world-class cancer research, some of which will only be available here in Edmonton.

The heritage savings trust fund is working for Albertans as it ought to. There's some of the answer to your question, hon. Government House Leader. Ring roads, highway 63. Believe me, there's so much. The fact is that this happens because of a government with a strong fiscal position. And I know there are people here trying to say negative things, but the fact is that before this government, despite what all the political people say, the government had a triple-A credit rating. Oil prices were high. Oil prices were low. Since 2001 it has had a triple-A credit rating, until the current gang arrived and destroyed all of that. That's the fact.

We're saying to them now: "Now that you've driven the car into the ditch, there's still time to repair it and get it back on the road. Don't drive it right over the cliff. Put a limit on the borrowing. There is time to recover the strong financial position that Alberta had and to bring it back."

Madam Chair, I know another hon. member talked about whether we had a surplus two years ago. Well, I stand with the Auditor of Alberta, that says that in the last budget we had, or at the end of the time that our party was in government, there was a billion dollar surplus. Now, there are members in the House that don't stand with the Provincial Auditor, but I do because I think the Auditor has more credibility, frankly, than my esteemed colleague in the House because he's the Auditor for the province. That's just how it is. You know what? The Auditor sometimes says bad things about government and things that happen. You know what? That's the Auditor's job, and I stand with the Auditor because that's an important piece of accountability for our government.

I also take advice from the world-wide experts in finance that say that the government's triple-A credit rating is gone because of the unrestrained borrowing, because of the complete lack of cost control, because of zero plan to pay any of it back. To my government colleagues: this is a chance to put the car back on the road, to start the repair process. You've gone pretty far in the last year, but you could actually if not stop the damage, slow it down. It's pretty important. Our children and our grandchildren will depend upon it. They already depend upon it, which is why I'm proud to have moved the amendment to remove section 5, which would reinstate a debt cap.

I still think the debt cap is too high, so I'm not actually asking the government to – they can save face because all they would do if they supported this is to go to the debt cap that they themselves put on six months ago. I would like to see the debt cap a lot lower, but I don't like the chances of the government accepting that. I think it's something where they can save face and say, "Yeah, you know, we were right six months ago, and we're going to stand by what we said six months ago," instead of saying: "The promise we made six months ago, we're going to completely ignore, throw it out the window, and plan on our debt becoming way bigger or plan on our government's policies making Alberta's economy way smaller." We're going to take a more optimistic view. We're going to show we care about Alberta's children and Alberta's grandchildren.

This is a chance, folks, to redeem yourselves. This is a chance to do the right thing. This is a chance to acknowledge that Albertans do not have an unlimited capacity to shovel money into this government. They'll leave. If they don't leave, the jobs will leave.

You know, the hon. Government House Leader talked about low tax rates. Low tax rates, actually, are what caused a lot of jobs to happen. Companies chose to come here instead of other places. Companies chose to invest here instead of other places. When they do that, they hire people, and those people pay taxes and fill the provincial government's coffers. I know this because when we were in government, when there was almost full employment here, the coffers were full all the time, which is what enabled a lot of those things to be purchased, the support for the cancer centres and the universities and the ring roads and made things like that happen.

Lower taxes, the right competitive tax regime, actually bring in more taxes because people and companies want to come here and pay taxes, because while they don't like paying taxes anywhere, they will often choose to pay taxes where they have a better tax rate. That used to be Alberta. It could be Alberta again. This government has it within their authority. They have it within their ability. I just hope they have it within their hearts to care for the Albertans who have lost their jobs, to limit the amount of debt that we take on, to say to them: "We actually are putting up a stop sign. This is enough. This is where we draw the line. This is where we're going to say that we're not going to borrow anymore. This is where enough is enough. This is where we're going to start caring about Albertans and making sure that we can still keep building that infrastructure five and 10 and 20 years from now because we can do that if the banks haven't said that, no, you can't borrow any more money."

That's, unfortunately, where this government is headed. They're headed for a place within a few years where the banks will say, "You can't afford to borrow anymore," or where the cost of borrowing will become so prohibitive that it will not be a competitive place to live and work and raise your family and have a great quality of life in Alberta, as Albertans up to a year ago used to take for granted, used to expect, used to have great confidence that when they raised their children here, they could educate them well and that their children could reach their full potential and, if they chose to, have a good job here and stay in Alberta. That's hope. That's called hope. Let's maintain some of that hope. I'm asking the government and my colleagues in opposition to support this amendment, to retain some of the hope that Albertans used to take so much for granted only a year ago.

Unlimited debt, unlimited borrowing with no plan to pay it back is a hope destroyer. It's an economy destroyer. It's a job destroyer. We know that. You know what? People a lot smarter than me say that. I know it doesn't take much to be smarter than me. I agree with that. [interjections] See? Everybody agrees with that.

But the people that lowered Alberta's credit rating are saying that that's destroying the economy and jobs. They are. The chambers of commerce say that. The people that vote with their dollars, that moved the jobs and the investment out of here – and since this government, there has been $20 billion, $30 billion, based on this government's policies, that has left Alberta, that may come back or may never come back. It certainly won't come back until the policies change. Give hope that some of that investment could come back and provide jobs for our children and our grandchildren. Give hope that those jobs could come back into the tax base to pay for us in our old age, for the support that we and all Albertans in their senior years are going to need. Give hope that there will be choices for our children, good choices, good jobs, where they can put their educations to use and create a better Alberta for their children.

We're really at a crossroads here. We're at a crossroads here where the government needs to make a decision. Are we going to throw out all of the hope, all of the optimism for the future, or are we going to make a stand and say that enough is enough? Believe me, even the 15 per cent debt-to-GDP is too high but is a sign that the government has a limit, that the government actually will recognize a stop sign, recognize that when the engine light is flashing, if they won't stop immediately, they'll at least stop at the next gas station and get it checked before the engine blows up in Alberta's economy, before the hope goes away, before the optimism is gone.

This is a chance for the government to say: "We believe in hope. We believe in optimism. We believe in the future of Alberta. We care for our children. We want to have the resources to look after our seniors and those that need support most in the future." This is a chance for the government to say yes to all of that by saying yes to this amendment. I heartily hope that they choose to do so.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Are we not allowed to speak after? Is there a formal closing in committee?

The Chair: No, no. There's no closing debate in committee. You're allowed to speak to the amendment if you wish.

Mr. Fildebrandt: All I will say is that I very much agree with the Member for Calgary-Hays; however, I just can't help but point out what a famous former Premier said: debt is hope.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A1?
Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 11:42 a.m.]

The Chair: Pursuant to Standing 4(3) the committee shall now rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bills: Bill 17 and Bill 10. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. I could just talk for one minute and we would adjourn automatically, but I'll move that we call it 12 o'clock.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:59 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, May 19, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my distinct privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a remarkable group of grade 11 school students from Calvin Christian School in Coalhurst from the marvellously outstanding constituency of Little Bow. I had the privilege of meeting with this impressive group of students and some of the parents earlier as we got a picture taken down here on the steps leading into the Chamber. I shook every one of their hands and heard every one of their names. I can't repeat them all, but as I say your name, please stand: parent Adrian Moens; one of the parents, Jenn Moens; teacher Fred Neels – please stay standing – parent Marian Neels; parent Mr. Leen Van Esch; a teacher, Mrs. Geraldine Van Esch; one of the parents, Mr. Bruce Coates; another parent, Mrs. Geraldine Vanden Hoek; and the last parent was Miss Lelaina VanDenHazel. Was I close? I hope so. I ask that the rest of the class please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, to you and through you I would like to introduce on behalf of MLA Schreiner the Glendale sciences and technology school. I lived in Glendale, so I feel privileged to be able to introduce to you teachers Mr. Adam Lionheart, Mr. Larry Hartel, Joyce Tang, Miss Katie Bruinsma, Miss Amanda Mercia; parents Ria Cole and Kim Witwer. Would all the students and those I identified please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce the staff and students of the Edmonton Academy, a private special-education school for children diagnosed with a learning disability. The Edmonton Academy provides specialized teaching to meet students' needs and is found in the wonderful constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. They recognize that a valuable education will provide more than an academic grounding but social and emotional tools as well. The 19 students and the teachers Mrs. Ashley MacGregor and Mrs. Christa Farmer-Shave will be present in the House between 2 and 2:30.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other school groups for introductions today?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For several years the Legislative Assembly has supported the Edmonton Regional Heritage Fair, which provides an opportunity for students in surrounding areas to research and present projects celebrating Canada's heritage. The Legislative Assembly Office recognizes one participant for an outstanding presentation which relates specifically to Alberta history, politics, or governance.

It is my great pleasure to introduce this year's award winner, Britlyn Hammer, a grade 6 student at Elmer S. Gish school in St. Albert. Her presentation, entitled Canadian Oil Industry, was well researched and engaging and speaks to an important and relevant contemporary topic. Accompanying Britlyn today are her mother, Megan Phan, and her teacher Brayden Guy. They are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my mom, Sylvia Hoffman. She is seated in your gallery. She is a dedicated schoolteacher, now retired, and community volunteer and, I say, the nicest person I know. Also with her is her newly wed husband, David Gordon. My mom and David met through a government-supported grief support group at the Cross Cancer Institute for spouses who had lost their partners to cancer. David is also a dedicated volunteer at the Marian Centre. With them is my great-aunt Alma Ostapek, the only surviving sister of my baba Anne Krupa, who people thought would be the first to go in our family when she was diagnosed with TB as a young teenager. She is strong, fierce, and managed to have a wonderful life with three children and a loving husband. Please join me in welcoming them.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Infrastructure and Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 11 staff members from my Ministry of Infrastructure: Carla Down is with project services; Cindy Kuchka and Anar Fazal are with government facilities; Lynne Cunningham and Samantha Routhier, from health facilities; Eveline Audy, Patricia Gillard, and Cecily Gauvreau, from technical services; Alyssa Boisvert, Sarah Bonnah-Vink, and Gail Baron Simpson, from the assistant deputy minister's office. These wonderful employees support the work of almost every branch of government to ensure that Albertans have access to good facilities, whether they're attending in a hospital, a school, a museum, or any other public provincial facility in our province. I ask these guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning I had the honour to congratulate the first graduating class of the Women Building Futures and Alberta Ironworkers' apprenticeship and training plan program. Women Building Futures is Alberta's premier trades training organization for women and is represented today by JudyLynn Archer, president and CEO, together with the North West Redwater Partnership, represented today by Ian MacGregor, president and chairman of North West refining, and the Alberta Ironworkers' apprenticeship and training plan, local 720, represented by Scott Papineau. This group launched a new training program for these women and today are celebrating the success of the very first class of all-female ironworker graduates, now entering Alberta's workforce at the Sturgeon refinery. These 11 amazing women are also indentured ironworker apprentices, and they join us here today along with their fantastic group of partners. These women are mothers, daughters, sisters, and I know they will make some of the toughest, most driven ironworkers Alberta has ever seen. I ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of students from the Leduc ESL program. This program has been running for over 20 years and serves students of all ages, nationalities, cultures, genders, and education levels, combining community inclusion and education to connect new community members in the region. I'll do my best to say their names properly, and if you would rise when I say your name. Today we have Anvar Abdoullaev, Marina Abdoullaeva, Jane Kim, Jasmin Jeong, Thomas Lee, Seohyun Lee, Mike Kachuk, Maria Kachuk, and, last but not least, an outstanding individual in our area, Eugene Miller, who not only wears this hat as a director and teacher but also heads up the volunteers for the Summer Games coming up. Thank you very much for being here. I would wish the warm welcome of the Assembly for them.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two separate introductions today. First, it is my distinct pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two long-term residents of Fort McMurray. As I call your name, I ask that you please rise: Lana Maloney and Natasha Maloney. Both women are dedicated members of our community and anxiously await the safe return of all their friends and family to home.

My second introduction is two good friends of mine from the beautiful country of Poland, who have made Fort McMurray their home. Kasia Odrzygozdz is a financial analyst for the Fort McMurray fire department, and Pawel Odrzygozdz was the co-ordinator of the IT team for the regional emergency operations centre that manages this crisis in Fort McMurray. These tireless professionals stayed behind in support of emergency operations.

I ask this House to please give all my good friends the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Melissa Nelson, program operations manager of the Calgary Keys to Recovery Society, an organization I'll be speaking more about in my member's statement. I ask Melissa to rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Wildfire Update

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the latest updates for the Assembly on the wildfire situation in Alberta. Today there are 15 wildfires burning in our province. Two are out of control, one is being held, two are under control, and two have been turned over to local authorities. We have approximately 2,400 firefighters on the ground today, supported by 189 helicopters, 439 pieces of heavy equipment, and 29 air tankers.

Fire risk remains extreme across most of northeast Alberta, but we're pleased that the risk has lessened across much of the west.

The fire in the MD of Greenview continues to burn 10 kilometres north of Fox Creek and 25 kilometres southeast of Little Smoky. It is being held at 660 hectares and is being managed by local authorities. The two-hour evacuation notice for residents of Little Smoky has been lifted.

We continue to fight a fire in the Peace Country. It remains at approximately 20,000 hectares. That fight, obviously, is conducted in collaboration with our counterpart in British Columbia.

In the Fort McMurray area, Mr. Speaker, the fire is more than half a million hectares and is still out of control. Lower temperatures and higher humidity will provide slightly more favourable conditions for our firefighters than in the previous days. Our focus on the ground and in the air today is protection of key infrastructure to the west of the city.

In the city our re-entry plans have been affected by smoke and extreme air conditions. The air quality index has improved but continues to fluctuate.

Structural firefighters responded to a fire in south Thickwood. The cause of the fire is not yet known, but it's worth noting that gas was not activated for these residences.

As the House knows, yesterday the Premier announced a conditional timeline for residents to begin to return to Fort McMurray starting June 1 on a phased and voluntary basis, but we continue to stress that this timeline is conditional on the five basic safety needs being met. There is a great deal of work ahead, but we are committed to supporting the people of Fort McMurray and to protecting homes, businesses, and industry from fire right across Alberta.

As always, Mr. Speaker, we want to express our thanks to all of the people working to protect Albertans and bring them safely back to their homes as soon as possible.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Calgary Keys to Recovery Addiction Services

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to recognize an organization dedicated to reducing homelessness in Calgary, the Calgary Keys to Recovery Society. Keys to Recovery was developed in 2010 in response to a gap in services addressing homelessness in Calgary, led by Karen Crowther, executive director, and Melissa Nelson, program operations manager.

With other types of services chronically homeless men and women with addictions who had made a decision to reclaim their lives and voluntarily attend treatment centres often ended up back on the street once their treatment was completed. Keys' programs recognize that homelessness is often the result of a number of complicating factors. They provide intensive, collaborative case management services in conjunction with permanent, affordable housing. The program combines both harm reduction and abstinence strategies and includes providing access to elders, monthly sweats, and a biweekly healing circle in addition to addictions, housing, vocational, and mental health services.

By equipping the formerly homeless with the resources they need to achieve independence, the program reduces costs for the health, justice, and emergency shelter systems. Their approach provides the basic needs as well as the nonthreatening and supportive atmosphere that is necessary for the individuals to regain their independence and maintain their sobriety. Clients are referred by treatment centres, mental health agencies, corrections services, homeless shelters, and other housing providers. I personally toured one of the fully Keys-occupied buildings in my riding, and I met a woman named Lynn, a 57-year-old participant who told me that she would not have survived if it were not for the Keys to Recovery program.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank Keys to Recovery for the vital work that they do in our community and for making Calgary and our province a better place.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's been one year that this NDP government has been in power, one year of many mistakes and a total disregard for many struggling Alberta families. The many flip-flops and indecisions I witnessed are a constant reminder that this government really doesn't know what it's doing, and it's making Albertans nervous.

In November 2015 Bill 4 increased the debt ceiling from 7 per cent to 15 per cent. Less than four months later, the ink barely dry on Bill 4, the government voted unanimously to repeal a section, effectively removing the 15 per cent debt ceiling, again against objections from the opposition. Last September during the Legislative Offices Committee government members voted for a 7.25 per cent increase to senior officials and to send three MLAs to Boston, again against the recommendation of opposition members. Less than one week later a flip-flop due to pressure. Now wages are frozen and no trip to Boston.

On June 24, 2015, the opposition attempted to amend Bill 2, asking for a 1 per cent decrease to small-business tax. Government MLAs voted unanimously against this amendment and the subsequent amendment to reduce small business tax by a mere .1 per cent. Now in the jobs action plan they brag about reducing the small-business tax by 1 per cent because it is the right thing to do. We agree. It was the right thing to do. It should have been done last year.

One year ago most government MLAs were against development in the oil industry, anti pipeline construction, and some had actively protested against pipelines. However, the government now appears to support pipelines and will likely try to claim any new development as their own. Careful getting on and off the bandwagon.

Now, thankfully, it appears that they're about to flip-flop on their ill-conceived minimum wage nonplan. Indecisions like this cause concern and confusion in the investment community and concern Albertans. It would appear that the only things not flip-flopping in this province are the tens of thousands of fish asphyxiated under this government's control.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Pipeliners' Daughter

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My thoughts and prayers are with the evacuees of Fort McMurray. Seeing them, once again I remember that I am the proud daughter of an Alberta pipeliner and boilermaker. I have been to and I have lived in almost every corner of our great province and indeed western Canada as we followed the work. We followed the TransCanada pipeline to Ontario. We learned about shutdowns at Sheerness, Genesee, and Fort McMurray. We watched pipelines being built, wrapped, and put in the ground as far north as Fort St. John, B.C.

I learned at an early age to never look at the arc and to appreciate the smell of burnt metal because it meant my dad was finally home. My mother was a wife in the oil patch. She went to concerts, games, and almost every one of her children's activities by herself and then wrote weekly letters to my dad about them. That takes an enormous amount of strength of character and determination.

We were raised to recognize the value of the times when our family could be together but to also fear them. We feared them because that meant there was no paycheque. Spring always meant that as the grass was growing, so was the stockpile of bread and bags of milk in our freezer. We had a 20-cubic-foot freezer to accommodate spring breakup and the shelves of goods my mom had preserved to get us through those lean times.

Mr. Speaker, I also remember the recession in the '80s and again in the '90s. The boom-and-bust oil economy affected every Albertan and none more so than the families dependent on that industry: long wait times when I broke my arm, large class sizes, and incredible stresses on our families. My father lost his job, like so many others, last year in the downturn. Seeing my fellow Albertans from Fort McMurray today, I recall my days as the daughter of a pipeliner. We all stand in solidarity with those from Fort McMurray, and we hope for them a speedy recovery.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Tax Policies

Mr. Jean: This morning Albertans in need of work woke up with more bad news. Across the province engineers, mechanics, electricians, IT workers, and many, many others are finding their wages dropping or are looking for work. Since last March the number of Albertans forced onto employment insurance has jumped a whopping 68 per cent. These are men and women looking to get back to work, but all they're getting is a new carbon tax, punishing families, charities, and health care. Premier, how will new higher taxes do anything to help Albertans hurting right now?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We know that Alberta families are struggling as a result of the drop in the price of oil, and we certainly are working to diversify our economy. We put that in our platform, and we were elected to do so, so we've come forward with the Alberta jobs plan. It's creating the conditions to support the creation of a hundred thousand jobs. Our investment includes more than $34 billion in infrastructure, a cut to small-business tax from 3 per cent to 2 per cent, and the creation of 3,000 youth jobs through the STEP program. We're proud of the jobs plan, and all Albertans should be as well.

Mr. Jean: Under the NDP gas taxes will have gone up by 11 cents per litre by 2018. For Alberta families that drive to school, that drive to work, that drive to dance recitals and hockey practices, this is just making things for them much, much worse. It means that they will be paying nearly $900 per year more and be $900 a year poorer because of the NDP government. Families already pinching every penny around their kitchen table just can't trade in their minivans for a Prius. It's not realistic. So why is the Premier bringing in new taxes, higher taxes that will hurt Albertans even more at a time when they simply cannot afford it?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Once again the opposition's math is fatally flawed. Study after study demonstrates that the carbon price makes economic sense. Last month the Ecofiscal Commission report stated that carbon pricing makes economic sense for Canadian provinces, and Steve Williams of Suncor, a major employer in the Official Opposition Leader's riding, acknowledged the science of climate change and said: we think climate change is happening; we think a broad-based carbon price is the right answer. And so do we.

Mr. Jean: An attempt to deflect.

Under this carbon tax charities will see their costs absolutely skyrocket. There will be less money to spend to hire teachers, to hire doctors and nurses in our health care and education systems. It's a fact. If you need to take a flight in Alberta, even more surcharges and taxes and fees will be passed on to consumers by this NDP government, all at a time when employment insurance is on the rise and Albertans are simply struggling right across the province to make ends meet. The Premier has failed to produce any number of analyses of the wide-ranging cost to families, businesses, and our charities. When will they release these numbers? We need to see them. Albertans . . .

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We know the Official Opposition has no intention to diversify the economy. They've said so. It was not in their platform. We're actually putting our platform into action, which is moving forward with a price on carbon and reinvesting every dollar from that carbon price back into Alberta families, including 60 per cent of households receiving a direct supplement. That is a very positive step.

In terms of other research, the Mining Association of Canada said that MAC's support of the carbon price is guided by the principles of climate change policy design. Bob Dudley, CEO of British Petroleum, said that a global carbon price would help unleash market forces that provide the right incentives for everyone to do . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Deputy Premier.
The Opposition House Leader.

Opioid Use Prevention

Mr. Cooper: Albertans continue to be worried about the impact that fentanyl and opioids are having on communities and neighbourhoods. These drugs split families apart, and they put lives at risk. Alberta is on track to see over 276 fentanyl-related deaths this year alone. It's now been seven months since a full strategy to battle fentanyl was promised. This emergency is too important for more lengthy delays. Premier, when can Albertans expect to see a plan that might actually save some lives?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the situation with fentanyl is something that we are dealing with in Alberta very seriously. We've been doing so for many months. That's one of the reasons why we came out with take-home naloxone kits, why just two weeks ago we announced the expansion so that you no longer require a prescription. You can go directly to a pharmacy. You can call 811 if you want to know which pharmacies have them available, but it's over 500. We're working to make sure that these get into the hands of people to help them address harm reduction strategies as well as building beds and supporting others in prevention.

Mr. Cooper: Fentanyl is just one part of the opioid crisis our province is facing. Heroin, morphine, Oxy are also contributing to a growing number of overdoses across the province. We can't afford delays before the multiyear strategy is released. We need to make sure that all resources are available to battle this crisis, to help victims of these addictions. Premier, will you commit to providing whatever front-line resources are required to tackle this crisis?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. We are constantly working on ways that we can improve access. Harm reduction is one of those strategies. We've also done a mental health report that seriously looked at addictions and mental health in relation, and recommendations and that were around expanding access to detox and treatment beds. We've moved forward on a number of those recommendations and will continue to do so. It's the right thing. We've certainly increased funding in the budget in these line items and in other areas as well that will help families and keep people alive. We're proud of our budget, and this is helping to deliver on that.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, last week the government admitted that it isn't fully capable of tracking opioid deaths in the province. One front-line physician and expert on this crisis has pointed the finger at the government, saying: we just don't have any idea what is happening with other opioid-related deaths since 2013. If we aren't able to track the information, it makes it much more difficult to battle a crisis that is infecting our province and harming families. Will the Premier today commit to getting a handle on tracking these deaths and start reporting them to Albertans?

The Speaker: Thank you.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we take any death seriously, especially a premature death, in this province. We have been working with the medical examiners' office to continue to have the most up-to-date information. It's certainly available by each of our zones and hospitals. We also are working on the prevention side and making sure that we're working with communities, working with leaders in local communities across Alberta, and making sure that we get information into the hands of individuals, their parents. Harm reduction kits: this is a big piece in helping us save lives. Lives have been saved in communities all across our province with the use of these kits.

The Speaker: The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Fort McMurray Wildfire Economic Recovery

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to the large rebuild we have ahead of us in Fort McMurray, it appears that an Ottawa firm, the Advantage Group, has been awarded the contract and has recently been advertising for positions to clean up Fort McMurray. The problem? Social media posts state that these positions are advertised for Ottawa-area residents only. It's baffling that in a time of great need and when many people from Fort McMurray are looking for work, these jobs would be outsourced. Will the Premier confirm whether this information is true, and if so, will she work to rectify the situation and ensure that jobs and contracts aren't being outsourced?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for an opportunity to dispel this rumour. That's all it is, a rumour. We've granted no, you know, substantial contracts at this time. In fact, the work of cleaning up and rebuilding Fort McMurray will be managed locally, within the regional municipality. We're gathering information on local contractors who are interested in helping with that rebuild and providing all that information to the regional municipality so they can proceed and support local businesses.

Mr. Yao: All those in this Chamber are aware of how important the trades are to Fort McMurray. Many of these companies rely on their tools and their materials to do their work. While these trade workers have been evacuated from their city, with their tools hundreds of kilometres away, they have seen out-of-town vehicles and contractors entering the community to begin repair work. To the Premier: now that a plan has been proposed for the re-entry of its citizens, has any timetable been established to allow tradespeople to get back up there and assist in the rebuild?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, there has been equipment heading north. That is specifically for industry and for the camps that are north of Fort McMurray. At this point, again, we've awarded no substantial contracts. In terms of the cleanup and the rebuilding, the work will definitely prioritize local contractors.

In terms of returning, Fort McMurray is just not safe. We announced that June 1 will be the beginning of the re-entry, and I'm tremendously excited that, you know, if all the criteria are met at that point, which we expect they will be, we can allow people to return and start resuming their lives.

Mr. Yao: It's not just the big businesses and tradespeople we need to be thinking about when it comes to a rebuild. It's also those support and soft services that make a city tick. I know that the Premier has said that re-entry to the city will be triaged, but I would like to ask on behalf of my small business owners, that are my constituents: what sort of timeline will there be for the butchers, the bakers, and the barbers to get back to Fort McMurray?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I stated, right now Fort McMurray just is not safe. In particular, the air quality continues to be an issue, so we're allowing a very restricted number of people in a controlled situation to ensure that essential services such as grocery stores and pharmacies are open and available at the time that those people return to Fort McMurray. As soon as the area and the community in which a small business is located is opened up for the re-entry, I look forward to supporting those businesses extensively to help them with their recovery after the evacuation.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Coal Strategy

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Over the last few days we've learned a few things. The Premier and deputy say that cabinet is united on their plan to eradicate Alberta's coal industry, the Environment minister will not listen to evidence regarding clean coal because of her tunnel vision, and the Energy minister is in the penalty box because she showed common sense around market-driven factors during estimates. So let's try this again. To the Energy minister: why rush to eliminate Alberta's coal industry and the thousands of jobs attached to it when these facilities have committed to generating electricity as clean as natural gas can?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Study after study demonstrates that a price on carbon makes economic sense. That's why we are phasing out coal. We've developed a climate leadership plan that is going to take care of emissions because health is important, economic diversity is important, and we are going to continue to work with our industry and our communities to do this.

Mr. McIver: Sounds like the penalty box has eliminated that common sense.

Given that coal-fired electricity has moved forward by leaps and bounds, controlling and reducing NOx and SOx emissions from flue gas desulphurizers to selective catalytic and noncatalytic reduction systems, to the Energy minister: is this government really encouraging the coal industry to improve emissions intensity when the industry knows full well that the government is putting them out of business as soon as they can?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: You know, this plan to phase out coal was established a few years ago by the federal government. We are going to work with our industry, with our coal facilitator, and our communities to continue this work. We're going to work at diversifying our economy. We're going to work with the AESO and renewables and develop a plan that is going to keep prices reasonable, keep our lights on.

Mr. McIver: Well, when a government minister denies their own job-killing coal plan, you know it's a bad one.

Given that new technologies are able to reduce NOx emissions by 98.6 per cent and SOx emissions by up to 99.9 per cent and given that these technologies are able to prevent 75.5 per cent of all emissions from entering our atmosphere, to the Energy minister one last time: why can't coal-fired electricity be part of our electricity future after 2030 if they reach these incredibly high clean standards?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, we have developed our climate leadership plan to move forward in phasing out coal and diversifying our economy because we know that the emissions are harmful to our health and our children and our most vulnerable Albertans. We have tasked the AESO to consult with industry experts. We're pleased that over 130 industry experts were consulted with this. Our first RFP for renewables will be this fall.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Provincial Credit Rating

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today Alberta suffered yet another credit-rating downgrade. Standard & Poor's said that the downgrade comes partly from depressed oil revenues but very worryingly said: "The province's fiscal response . . . so far has not meaningfully counterbalanced this external shock." Now, this is after the Minister of Finance travelled to New York to try to convince these very agencies of Alberta's creditworthiness. It sounds like that was a big waste of time and money. To the Minister of Finance: how much will this credit-rating downgrade cost Albertans?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure the Minister of Finance will be happy to answer all the remaining ones, but I want to acknowledge a little bit of history here. Members opposite are asking us to turn back the clock and respond to the downturn by firing teachers and nurses and cutting back on investments. This is not going to support diversification. Let's also remember what happened back in time – 1986, 1990, 1992, all of those years – under Conservative reign. Unfortunately, we had a downgrade. Why? Because the price of oil went down.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, Wildrose is over there. I am over here, so the canned response to that question . . . [interjections] This irresponsible budget . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Clark: Thank you. Now, there is a middle way. Because your budget accumulates such astonishing levels of debt so quickly, you have virtually guaranteed future front-line service cuts or future tax increases or both. Quoting again from Standard & Poor's, the downgrade reflects "Alberta's very weak budgetary performance and high, increasing debt burden." The words of Standard & Poor's. In short, the NDP are risking the future of the province so that they don't have to make tough choices today. To the same minister: have you calculated the projected . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Which minister? The Minister of Finance?

Mr. Clark: Yes.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the borrowing costs we know that they have increased relative to the two large provinces that have lower borrowing costs. Over the last two years, not the last year but the last two years, those borrowing costs have increased, and that aligns with a dramatic drop in the price of oil. Our borrowing costs, the amount of the budget we put into debt servicing, are still far below B.C.'s, far below Ontario's. As a percentage, we're doing quite well.

Mr. Clark: Well, we won't be for long, and if we're comparing ourselves to Ontario, that's not a good thing.

I'm going to ask a very simple question of the Minister of Finance. Standard & Poor's says that it is time for a sales tax in Alberta or the province will face future downgrades. To the Minister of Finance: do you agree with Standard & Poor's? Will you bring in a sales tax at any point in this term of government or next?

Mr. Ceci: What I'll agree with is that I'll stand with Albertans. We will bring forward the work of the Alberta jobs plan. We'll invest in this province. We'll diversify this province, and we will create a better economy going forward than that party did and that party wants to wreck.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

2:10 Fort McMurray Resident Re-entry Plan

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been over two weeks now since the people of Fort McMurray have had to flee their homes and escape the fire that still threatens part of northern Alberta. I've talked to many people who are anxious to return home but know that there is still a lot of work to do. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: when can the people of Fort McMurray expect to return home, and will they be able to stay for good once they get back?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday our government announced plans for a conditional, phased re-entry on a voluntary basis for the safe return of Fort McMurray residents to begin June 1. I wish to make it clear that re-entry is voluntary, and re-entry will only proceed when key safety conditions that ensure the safety and security of residents are met. We're going to start with the least damaged neighbourhoods. People should understand that if they return in the first weeks of June, they will be returning to a community with very basic services. We strongly urge people with specialized health care needs to delay their return until June 15, when the hospital will be fully restored.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many people may still be unsure whether or not they have a home or business to return to, again to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: how can people find out about the current state of their homes and neighbourhoods?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, working with our government, released an update to the online mapping application. The app now includes high-resolution images from multiple angles to give residents a clearer idea of which homes have been lost and damaged. The high-resolution imagery, that includes new and expanding neighbourhoods, will provide additional detail to assist property owners with insurance claims, eligibility funding, and other recovery actions for both damaged and lost properties. This information is invaluable. However, I've seen the devastating effects a fire can have on a community, and I know how difficult it is to view these images. I urge those affected residents to seek out the emotional and mental health supports . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we need to ensure that Fort McMurray is a safe place before people can return, again to the same minister: can the minister update the House on the current state of essential services in the city?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We continue to work with the regional emergency operations centre and other partners to restore services to Fort McMurray. Hospital restoration has been stalled temporarily with the poor air quality, but the mobile urgent care centre is still operational. Electricity service has been restored to more than 90 per cent of customers and natural gas to 75 per cent of customers. The water treatment plant passed inspection on May 17, and we continue to make steady progress to secure the safety of water. However, returning residents will be subject to a boil-water advisory upon re-entry. We expect that will be in effect for at least a few weeks.

Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Nixon: Yesterday I asked the Associate Minister of Health how this government plans to solve the disparity in rural ambulance coverage that has been created by the centralization of EMS dispatch. All I received was a non answer: “The best way to organize first responders may vary from community to community.” Ambulance coverage is a serious problem from community to community, and it needs this government’s attention. Again to the Associate Minister of Health. Please, a real answer today: what is your government’s plan to solve the disparity in rural ambulance coverage and save rural Albertans’ lives?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Again, Albertans have a right to expect that when they dial 911 for emergency medical care, it will arrive promptly. This question has many parts, including shift rotations, dispatch, and time spent at hospitals. We are working with our partners in AHS to ensure that all of those criteria are met and that we are able to have Albertans receive the safest ambulance service possible.

Mr. Nixon: Wildrose understands that our first responders are doing their absolute best to provide world-class medical care. Given that Alberta has the best EMTs, EMRs, and paramedics in the country and given that their valuable time is best used to provide care in the golden hour of an emergency, can the Associate Minister of Health please explain why our fully certified EMTs and paramedics are being used to transfer patients for nonemergency, scheduled appointments instead of using their skills where they are needed the most, on emergency calls saving Albertans’ lives?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Alberta Health Services is also expanding its use of nonemergency vehicles to transport patients between facilities. We know that paramedics, EMTs, and EMRs respond to nearly half a million calls every year, and we’re very proud of the work that they do. We remain committed to working closely with our partners at AHS and with community leaders to give Albertans the right care at the right time by the right professional.

Mr. Nixon: Municipalities have been bearing the brunt of the lack of ambulance coverage. Given that in an effort to keep ambulances in their communities, municipalities have been purchasing non-emergency vehicles for patient transport and since the Health department clearly doesn’t have an answer, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: can you explain why Alberta’s municipalities are being forced to pay for what should be the Minister of Health’s responsibility?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, I’ve had the honour of meeting with a number of different local governments. We share their commitment to making sure that everyone gets a timely response, and we have worked with them on the process to receive a contract through the government, which is with Alberta Health Services as the operator. Certainly, there are conditions that need to be met with that contract, but there are a number of local regions that do have contracts with Alberta Health Services. The reason why we have a contract is to ensure safety and fair practices for employees and for the patients, who need to have the utmost confidence in the support of their communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Trade with the United States

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta generates more than $26 billion in trade annually with the 10 states in the Ports-to-Plains trade corridor, which runs through the Great Plains to the Gulf of Mexico. The Ports-to-Plains Alliance is a coalition of governments, communities, and regions advocating for the economic interests of North America’s energy and agricultural heartland. Alberta has a proud history of active and effective membership and political representation in the alliance. To the Premier: which hon. member did you appoint to represent Alberta to the alliance, and when was the last time they attended an alliance meeting?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I’ll thank the member for the question. Trade is absolutely critical to our government and to the province of Alberta. I can tell you that we work very closely with our partners. We recognize that the United States is our largest trading partner.

To the member’s point: I will get back to him as to when the last meeting of the Ports-to-Plains took place, but I can assure this House that Alberta is at the table. We are advocating for market access, and that’s a priority for our government.

Mr. Ellis: We’re talking about political representation at the table, Minister.

Given that one key focus of Alberta’s involvement in the Ports-to-Plains Alliance has been its interest in developing and promoting the eastern Alberta trade corridor, which runs alongside the Saskatchewan border up to Fort McMurray, and given that developing the eastern corridor can provide an alternative route for moving Alberta’s more than $75 billion of products to key American and other international markets, again to the Premier: why is Alberta abandoning its political – and I mean political – prominence in the Ports-to-Plains Alliance when so much is at stake?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’ll refute the premise that Alberta is abandoning its position at the table. Quite frankly, our government is working through a number of different initiatives for market access. We understand that there are many different opportunities, both within our province and within North America, to get our product to market. That is absolutely a priority of this government. We will continue to look at all possible different trade routes to ensure that we’re getting our product to market in a timely, efficient, and safe manner.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Ports-to-Plains Alliance works with Alberta to advocate for policies and investments that will promote trade and commerce and given that areas of advocacy interest include border crossings and trade issues and that Alberta, unlike almost all other provinces, has only one 24-hour border crossing, to the minister responsible for intergovernmental relations: what efforts are you making today to convince the federal government to expand the Wild Horse border crossing to provide 24-hour commercial service?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for that question. That is a very timely question. Quite frankly, I've had numerous conversations with REDAs down in southern Alberta as well as with our municipalities, who have raised that point. That is something that I'm in dialogue and conversations with my federal counterpart, looking at opportunities to expand trade. I recognize and agree with the hon. member that the crossing that he is speaking of right now is a 12-hour crossing. We're working with the federal government, looking at opportunities to expand that.

Thank you.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, this province has suffered four credit downgrades already in just the past few months. This is because of the government's reckless debt and spending plan. The day after they introduced their budget, Moody's downgraded the credit rating of this province as a direct result. As we are debating Bill 10 right now, S&P has just given us yet another credit downgrade. Will the Minister of Finance withdraw Bill 10?

Mr. Ceci: Oil-producing jurisdictions around the world, in Canada, in North America have received downgrades of late: Newfoundland, Saudi Arabia, Alaska, North Dakota. No.

Mr. Fildebrandt: The opposition isn't going to stand for non answers like that right now, Mr. Speaker. It's too important.

He is gambling with Alberta's future. We have had a balance sheet meltdown in this province over the last decade of almost $60 billion. Mr. Speaker, given that the price of oil has not significantly changed since our last credit downgrade, the only thing that has been downgraded is the minister's credibility. Will he take responsibility for this?

Mr. Ceci: What I won't take responsibility for is a PST. That's what they want. We won't do it. Albertans don't want it. [interjections] We're not doing it.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, even you're laughing at this one. I have no idea what the Minister of Finance is smoking today.

The NDP has already brought in a PST in the form of their ND PST carbon tax. Today the Minister of Finance himself said that we need to, quote, look at all fiscal tools. By that, does he mean even more borrowing, even more spending, or another PST?

Mr. Ceci: You know, if the hon. member wants to quote me, perhaps he should listen to the whole statement that I made. Diversification is what I was talking about. We need to have more revenue coming from a wider variety of economic drivers in this province. Oil and gas are too narrow a focus. We need to have more economy going on, and we're doing it with our diversification plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Highway Maintenance

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Transportation cut $33 million over two years to highway maintenance, and 50 per cent, or $30 million, was cut from highway preservation. Dangerous cracks, potholes, and missing shoulders in our area can easily pull a vehicle travelling at highway speeds off the road. Why is the Minister of Transportation putting Albertans at risk by making dangerous cuts to core public safety functions like road maintenance? Surely there are other places in the budget to trim.

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation and Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the hon. member for the question. This is a question from the Official Opposition that I responded to in the estimates, but I don't mind doing it again. We've all been asked to find savings within our budgets because we're serious about curbing the growth in expenditures of government programs. There are only so many places that you can go. This is not an ideal choice, and I am hopeful in the future that as the financial position of the province improves, we will be able to restore this funding. In the meantime we've made a very large . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in Alberta there are upwards of 14,000 large-animal collisions per year on our highways and given that these accidents result in huge costs, injuries, and, all too often, fatalities, why is the Transportation minister reducing highway maintenance, which includes cutting down grass and brush along our Alberta highways? Why is the minister putting Alberta drivers at increased risk?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I don't accept the premise of the hon. member's question. Again, the reduction in cutting along the medians and so on of our highways is a necessary cost-reduction measure. It's not ideal, and we hope in the future to be able to restore the funding for that program to the previous level.

Mr. Hanson: Given that Albertans are worried about this budget, which seems to only have cuts to essential road maintenance and to the wildfire budget, to the minister: are there no efficiencies to be found in his department, no areas that could have been reduced without having to make cuts that increase the risk to Albertans' lives and property?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, a number of reductions have been made throughout the department. Efficiencies are constantly being found. It's important to note that there was a significant reduction in the overall budget. We are working towards finding those efficiencies, and that's an ongoing piece of work that we do. We want to avoid layoffs, we want to avoid reducing essential services, we want to maintain safety on our highways, and we're doing so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Electric Power Plant Capacity

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Post-2030 the government endeavours to have a baseload, or firm electrical generation mix, that will look very different than it does today. For the record, I'm fully aware of the federal coal phase-out regulations and what they mean for Alberta. However, the increased scope of their rapid, early phase-out scheme is causing great concern. Investors crucial to cleaner electricity generation are stepping away from this government's new policies. Minister of Energy, what specific measures have you taken to ensure that Albertans won't be short on firm and dispatchable electricity if your policies continue to scare investors away?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for that question. Certainly, we are working with the AESO and consulting with industry experts for them to recommend a program that will bring on more renewable generation based on two principles: keeping costs reasonable and making sure that we protect the reliability of the system. We are going to have a fully phased, reasonable, solid, prudent plan.

Mr. Fraser: Given that in 2015 the Department of Energy called for 6,000 megawatts of additional generation over the coming years – the system is now going to need an additional 2,300 megawatts above the original 6,000 because of the NDP's early coal phase-out – and with natural gas investors stepping away and the early phase-out of coal generators, Minister, can you assure Albertans that they will not face brownouts stopping them from accessing reliable electricity for their homes and businesses?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, that is why we are working with the AESO to consult with industry experts and develop a plan so we will have reliability. We will have reasonable costs, and we will still have a mix of natural gas and renewables as we move forward.

The Speaker: Hon. member, be cautious about the use of preambles in the supplementals.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the NDP strategy leaves a gap in electricity generation for Albertans and given that you've been suggesting an electricity-for-pipelines deal with British Columbia, Minister, are you about to tell Albertans that you're not only killing the coal industry and the livelihoods that go with it, but you're about to tell natural gas generators that there's no place for them either, leaving Alberta short of electricity, jobs, and royalties for future generations?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Well, thank you for the question. You know, we consult with our provincial partners on a number of matters. The consultation on electricity for pipelines is in a what-if stage, but as I've made clear before, we won't need extra electricity if we don't get a pipeline.

Minimum Wage

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Labour announced consultation on the minimum wage. We've heard a lot of heated rhetoric in this House on the minimum wage, but I've heard a lot from constituents, who've shared with me stories of how this has already helped their families. To the Minister of Labour: why does the minister think that a phased-in approach to the minimum wage is good for Alberta?

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member for the question. No Albertan who works all day should have to go to the food bank to feed themselves and their family, but the people who run food banks in Canada say that 1 in 3 in Alberta do just that. That is wrong. It should not be acceptable to any member of this House. On this side of the House we believe in income security and basic human dignity. That is why we believe that implementing a phased-in $15 per hour minimum wage is right for Alberta.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: could the minister please update the House on some facts on this important issue given that there is a lot of misinformation about who is paid the minimum wage in Alberta?

2:30

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Members opposite like to pretend that the minimum wage is just a training wage paid to a few kids. They're wrong, and they should be doing their homework. Over 33,000 Albertans that earn less than $15 per hour are single earners with children; 194,000 women in Alberta earn $15 per hour or less; and over 37,000 Albertans earning $15 per hour or less are 55 or older. These are the people who are low-income earners here in Alberta.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Labour: can the minister please inform this House about who will be consulted in the weeks ahead and when we can expect a decision since many Albertans may be interested in participating in this consultation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we committed to previously, we will be listening to employers and employees on how to move forward with the changes to minimum wage. Focused consultations will be held over the next month with key stakeholders, including employers, social services agencies, and the low-income earners themselves. Topic discussions will include future increases, meal and lodging deductions, and the phase-out of the differential liquor server rate. We want to take the time to listen to the people directly involved while making sure that we are taking care of Alberta families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Wainwright Health Care Facilities

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Sunday a broken waterline at the Wainwright hospital drove 27 elderly residents out of their beds, forcing many to be transported to other facilities, and this is just the latest in a list of problems that reach back years. About six months ago a different waterline failed, causing flooding as well. The hospital serves as a hub for the community of Wainwright and for the military base, and it's literally falling apart. To the minister: when can my constituents expect to see the hospital they desperately need and were promised?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The safety of the residents and staff of the hospital is our first priority, and AHS is working with residents and their family members to ensure that everyone is getting the care they need. Over 20 rooms were affected by the water main break. This means that some residents will need to be temporarily relocated to a different wing of the facility or to facilities in nearby communities. Repair and restoration work to the damaged areas is already under way, and it is anticipated that it could take up to six weeks.

Mr. Taylor: When are we going to get a new hospital? Given that in 2010 the Wainwright hospital was Alberta Health Service's number two priority and a community care project and then dropped to seventh in 2012 and that in November 2015 the Minister of Infrastructure stated that it's "in a list of 24 high-priority projects," will the Minister of Infrastructure tell the people served by the hospital where it is on the priority list now and when this critical, life-saving infrastructure will be built in the community?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, unlike those on the other side who claim that they want large cuts to the Infrastructure budget, we're actually trying to step up and provide for the needs of the people of this province throughout the province, without regard to what political party represents them. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've passed a couple of notes requesting that the volume of the voices decline. I expect it to happen now, please.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that very much. It's important that the infrastructure needs are met throughout the province. We assess everything carefully and objectively, and I can assure the hon. member that the project in his community . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Taylor: We need to have it on the priority list, and that's really what we're asking for.

Given that both the mayor of Wainwright and I have contacted the Minister of Health requesting to meet and discuss the state of the hospital and have questioned the Minister of Infrastructure about the timing of the promised build and given that the hospital is falling apart around the patients and staff and residents, when will the ministers of Health and Infrastructure come to Wainwright and see for themselves the building that passes for a hospital for the citizens and soldiers who seek care in the hub of Wainwright?

Ms Hoffman: Once before in the House the member opposite talked about dirty water. I think he actually used the phrase "raw sewage." It was clean water. Now he's saying that a hospital is falling down around patients. I need to stress how important it is for us to talk about facts. We are taking patient safety very seriously. That's why we made sure that patients were moved to an area of the hospital and to other facilities, where they could be treated safely, Mr. Speaker. The tone and the misinformation that's being shared on the other side . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Would you finish your statement, Madam Minister?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The tone and the misinformation is certainly not conducive to a good dialogue.

I have met with the mayor and will continue to have ongoing conversations about this. As I have demonstrated, I am very keen to see the hospitals throughout the province. I think there are two ridings that I haven't been to.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Support for Agriculture and Forestry Industries

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While this government plays cat and mouse with Alberta's energy sector, putting current investments at risk and future economic expansion in serious doubt, the agriculture and forestry sectors continue to generate good news. Winnipeg-based Paterson Grain recently announced plans to invest some $25 million to build an export terminal near Bowden. It will have 55,000 tonnes of capacity and a high-speed unloading system that could empty 150 rail cars in seven hours. To the agriculture minister: since being elected over one year ago, what specific initiatives has this government taken to improve our capacity to move grain by rail?

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. That was very good news. Quite frankly, the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry has not only been engaging with stakeholders across this province but also has been advocating for increasing our trade opportunities with our trading partners internationally. Again, Alberta is an export-based province, and it's absolutely critical not only for our grain sector but also for our beef producers, our pork producers, and other producers to get their products to market.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this is not the only major agricultural project that has been unveiled in recent months, with GrainsConnect Canada proposing to build a 35,000 tonne capacity handling facility outside of Innisfail, and given that further economic diversification in this province will be dependent on innovative, community-based economic development initiatives, to the minister: what specific initiatives has this government taken to maximize opportunities throughout rural Alberta and to expand the value chain for Alberta-made and Alberta-produced goods?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. I think it's important to note that we do have some healthy sectors. Unlike the Official Opposition, that seems to only condemn one – quite frankly, there are a number of initiatives that the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry and I are working on, again looking at working with not just our producers but also with our different sectors. In the budget that we tabled we have $10 million going toward regional economic development. There are a number of projects that we are working on with the different REDAs throughout the province.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the still burning fires in northern Alberta are affecting forestry operations and threatening sawmills and given that significant stands of white spruce have been lost to the inferno and that some operations may be forced to downsize, to the minister: what specific assistance is this government providing forest producers, and how is this government protecting forestry transportation infrastructure so that the forestry industry can continue to be a multibillion-dollar contributor to Alberta economic history?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member again for his question. You know, first and foremost, as the Minister of Municipal Affairs has pointed out, all hands are on deck as far as trying to protect our infrastructure assets up in northern Alberta, and that includes our sawmills and our assets in the forestry sector. We do recognize that because of the size of the fire quite a large amount of our fibre has burned up. I know that the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry is working with our partners in the forestry sector to look at ways that our government can provide assistance to them.

Thank you.

Support for Business

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, we know that during tough economic times large-scale capital investments are important. They spur job creation and create spinoff economic benefits throughout our province. But tough economic times also mean businesses have challenges attracting private investment, capital investment. These businesses need support as they get Albertans back to work. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: how is our government encouraging investment in and by Alberta-based businesses?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for that question. Our government is taking action to attract capital investment that will support job creation and economic diversification across the province. Introducing a capital investment tax credit at a time when businesses are struggling with tight margins will help to boost investor confidence and encourage timely investment decisions when Albertans need it the most. In fact, once in place, we expect this program will support over $700 million worth of investment and thousands of direct and indirect full-time jobs.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that other provinces may also offer incentives to businesses and given that we need to be promoting Alberta as an exceptional place to do business, again to the same minister: how is our government supporting and attracting new businesses in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question. We know Alberta needs to level the playing field with other jurisdictions. British Columbia, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba, and a number of U.S. states have an investor tax credit. As part of the Alberta jobs plan the Alberta investor tax credit is a $90 million tax credit over two years that will support small and medium-sized businesses. The tax credit will also encourage venture capitalists and business angels to invest in homegrown businesses, boosting access to capital when it is most needed.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that as we work to stabilize our economy and get off the resource royalty roller coaster, we will need to ensure that we are supporting emerging and growing industries and given that often small businesses are creating new jobs, again to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: what is the minister doing to encourage more development and diversification opportunities for small and medium-sized businesses?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question. Our government made a commitment to support greater economic growth. Unlike the Official Opposition, our government believes in diversification. We announced the petrochemicals diversification program, which is just one example of the many ways that we're acting on that commitment. The new petrochemicals diversification program will help our province compete for new investment and job opportunities by turning our raw resources into the building blocks for plastics and other goods. We expect the program to attract two to three new petrochemical facilities to Alberta through financial incentives in the form of royalty credits.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, I've had a request for unanimous consent to introduce some guests who arrived late. Is there agreement?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce a classroom from Forest Lawn high school, grades 10 to 12. They're joined by Ms Tina Merali, Ms Nijenhuis, Ms Laura Duker, Mr. Thanh Ly, Mrs. Michelle Wagler, and Mr. Rob Gossen. It's my privilege to introduce the 50 students who are here. They've had a tour of the Legislature, and they watched this rather interesting question period. I'd like to thank everyone for coming and have them stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Wild Mountain Music Festival

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to talk about a very popular music festival happening in my neck of the woods, in Hinton, this July. You guessed it right; it's the Wild Mountain Music Festival, one of the province's biggest music festivals, at the original crossroads at the historic Entrance Ranch, just off highway 40.

First Nations peoples from all over visited this area, which is the traditional home of the mountain Métis, because this was a place for powerful medicine, summer celebrations, and feasting.

This year's lineup includes an impressive array of Juno award winners, nominees, and popular local artists from Alberta and across Canada. Serena Ryder, Buffy Sainte-Marie, Dan Mangan, and the Rural Alberta Advantage will join local talent like Laura Vinson and Free Spirit.

Wild Mountain has the best beer tent ever, with a great view of both performance stages. Free camping is included with the price of entry, but the field is rustic, so bring everything you need.

Every year the Wild Mountain Music Festival attracts approximately 6,000 people to the area, making it a major contributor to the local economy. The festival started in 2007 and is a 100 per cent community-owned and volunteer-run initiative supported by many sponsors. I would like to recognize some of them: Jules Oilfield, Alberta Foundation for the Arts, Travel Alberta, CKUA, SunDog tours, Eagle radio, rock FM 96.7 The Rig, Wild Orchid Liquor Co., town of Hinton, Titan Specialized Hauling Ltd., the Hinton Voice, Morad Communications, Yellowhead county, Servus Credit Union, and the Dunn family.

Come visit and take in breathtaking mountain vistas while grooving to the music of some of Alberta's and Canada's most talented artists July 15, 16, and 17.

The Speaker: Thank you.

To let the members who need to leave, have commitments, we'll just take a few seconds here.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

The Emeralds Show and Dance Band

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking of music, last fall, as you may recall, I asked Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to sign a letter of support to nominate the Emeralds to Canada's Walk of Fame. To refresh our memories, the Emeralds Show and Dance Band are an internationally acclaimed Edmonton-based group best known for their hit The Bird Dance.

Well, what a tremendous response we received. Over 50 MLAs on both sides of the House sent letters of support to my office, but it didn't stop there. Numerous people contacted my office to see if they could provide letters of support and if they could help in any way. The Emeralds also received numerous letters from all over the province, all over the country, and down in the U.S. fans signed support letters at their concerts as well. Some Edmonton city councillors have also sent letters of support to my constituency.

Right now there are hundreds of letters of support in my office waiting to be sent to Canada's Walk of Fame. On May 27 at 10 a.m. the Emeralds and I will mail the first box of letters to Canada's Walk of Fame at the Londonderry Mall post office located in Shoppers Drug Mart, and you are more than welcome to join us.

Thank you to each and every one of you that have provided your support for this nomination. Together we can make history by helping the Emeralds get the recognition they so rightly deserve.

Wildrose Conservative Coalition Initiative

Mr. Fildebrandt: One year of NDP government has made many Albertans clamour for a united conservative choice in the next election. Unfortunately, the PCs have rejected that option and chosen to continue in isolation. [interjections] Many of us in the Wildrose were once proud PCs and recognize that for many years...

The Speaker: Hon. members, we've had this discussion before. During Members' Statements there's respect for a tradition that the member has an opportunity to speak without being interrupted. I'd appreciate it if you would allow him to do that.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Reset the time? Reset?

The Speaker: I think we stopped the clock.

Mr. Fildebrandt: If we could reset the clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: How about – it took 10 seconds, so keep going after that.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Many of us in the Wildrose were once PCs and recognize that for many years they provided Alberta with good government, before they strayed from common-sense conservative principles. Indeed, any unified conservative party should embrace the best elements of the Lougheed and Klein legacies while rejecting the liberal drift and questionable ethics that caused Wildrose conservatives to leave in the first place.

But sitting across the aisle from an NDP government has made us reassess our prejudices. I believe that it is time for all conservatives to do likewise. Since the PC establishment shut the door to co-operation at their AGM, there is no point in pursuing that path any further. Instead, the Wildrose will rise to the occasion and move to invite and unite conservative Albertans with more than a greeting.

The current incarnation of the Wildrose can and should become a bigger and broader coalition of conservatives. We will begin a process whereby all conservatives can come together and be welcomed as equals and not as winners and losers. Let's start with a shared vision, a conservative party dedicated to the principles of individual freedom, fiscal responsibility, religious liberty, equality of opportunity, and the greatness of Alberta, welcoming to Albertans of all backgrounds, unafraid of taking principled stands even when they may be unpopular, and uncompromising in its commitment to accountable and ethical government.

This summer our party will bring people together to solicit support for changes to bring conservatives together. Together we will put our children's Alberta before...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure and Minister of Transportation. The Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation. Possibly for a third time...

Mr. Mason: Oh, I'm sorry. He was signalling to me, Mr. Speaker, and I couldn't understand him, but he was trying to tell me that you were trying to get my attention.

I have a notice of motion that I'd like to read, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) I'm rising to advise the House that on Monday, May 30, written questions 15 and 16 will be accepted.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of the S&P Global Ratings credit-rating downgrade, where it notes that Alberta has been "downgraded to 'AA' from 'AA+' on very weak budgetary performance."

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I table a copy of something we discussed this morning, just basically page 4 of the government of Alberta's annual report showing a billion dollar plus surplus from 2014-2015.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Sabir, Minister of Human Services, responses to questions raised from the May 5, 2016, Ministry of Human Services 2016-17 main estimates debate.

Orders of the Day

Bill 15

An Act to End Predatory Lending

The Speaker: I'll recognize the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to section 2(2) of the Conflicts of Interest Act I must at this time rise and recuse myself from the Chamber owing to a potential perceived conflict of interest. As has been previously disclosed to the Ethics Commissioner, I have a family member who sits on the board of directors of one of Alberta's credit unions. This creates a possible perception that I would be in conflict if I were to participate in the debate on this particular matter, and therefore I would ask that I be able to recuse myself from debate today and that that be recorded in the Journals.

The Speaker: So noted.

The Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and move Bill 15, An Act to End Predatory Lending.

In the Speech from the Throne on March 8 this government committed to stand up for Albertans when they are most vulnerable. We committed to introduce legislation this session to end the practice of exploitive interest rates that are currently permitted in Alberta for payday loans. An Act to End Predatory Lending puts an end to practices that harm Albertans. Let me be clear. Interest rates that reach 600 per cent are predatory; 600 per cent interest that prevents Alberta families from being able to meet their needs are predatory. Loans that require you to take out loans to pay back loans are predatory. We are ending it, and we are protecting Albertans. Bill 15, An Act to End Predatory Lending, protects Albertans by tightening the regulatory framework around payday lenders.

Right now Albertans have to pay $23 per $100 for a 10-day loan. Here's an example of where this leads. Let's say an unexpected expense comes up and it leaves you $500 short on your food budget in the month of May. To cover the shortfall, you head to a payday loan store and take out a $500 loan at the current maximum cost of borrowing of $23 per $100 borrowed. Although you can now pay for your groceries in May, you'll have to pay back $615 to the payday lender and still buy your groceries for June, so this totals $1,115. If that repayment or the $115 in fees leaves you unable to cover other expenses, you might then feel that you need to take out another payday loan, which will result in more fees in the next month. The longer this cycle of taking out payday loans continues, the more money the borrower pays in fees and the harder it becomes to catch up.

Albertans told us that they want us to end this cycle and reduce the cost of borrowing. We have significantly reduced the cost of borrowing to $15 for every $100 borrowed. This is the lowest in the country, Mr. Speaker.

Albertans also told us that they want longer payback periods. We are ensuring that repayment options help Albertans stay on their feet and have a chance to repay debt rather than being overwhelmed by it. These changes specifically make cycles of debt and rollover loans less likely by introducing mandatory instalment payments. This means that Albertans will have a minimum of 42 days to pay back an initial loan.

We've heard widespread support for this initiative, Mr. Speaker. We will ensure that this change is carefully implemented with payday lenders so that practices are standardized and compliance is high. The executive director of Momentum said that by moving to instalment payments, it makes it so that people have more of a chance to get out of a debt trap.

The executive director of International Avenue, Calgary's BRZ, or business revitalization zone, said:

This is ground-breaking legislation. It ensures vulnerable borrowers are protected, particularly now when budgets are tight. These changes will positively impact our community's revitalization efforts, and [actually] help attract new businesses to our neighbourhood.

We are so proud to support communities and Albertans with these proposed changes, and we are increasing other protections for Albertans who may not be directed to all the fine print at the payday lender counters. We will require that information be clearly communicated to people borrowing money. Fifteen dollars per $100 will be an all-in rate, Mr. Speaker. No more hidden fees or insurance premiums.

We are also adding a prohibition on lenders providing other forms of credit to borrowers who have already taken out payday loans. Again, this will help stop cycles of debt and will support Alberta families and help them ensure they can make ends meet. Together these changes will dramatically reduce the annual interest rates for payday loans.

Just as significantly, the legislation commits payday lenders, by law, to provide information on financial literacy. We need financial literacy to reach Albertans wherever they are.

Mr. Speaker, I have been inspired by GameSense. This is an initiative that operates on-site at Alberta gaming establishments. GameSense is a dynamic initiative and has had a real impact in casinos. We will work with community groups and lenders to promote similar models to provide Albertans the tools and resources they need to build financial stability.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, An Act to End Predatory Lending commits government to promote real and accessible credit alternatives. We are working with our community partners like Momentum in Calgary, with credit unions and others so that these alternatives meet the needs of Albertans. Once we get there, once uptake is strong, we will bring down the annual interest rate even further. I am confident in this approach, and I am excited to report that credit unions across the province have already made strong commitments to expand and launch alternatives, microloans and cash crunch loans. First Calgary, Servus, and Connect First together with groups like Momentum are showing community leadership, and we can all be proud of these Albertans.

In short, An Act to End Predatory Lending will promote fair and responsible lending. Albertans asked us to do this. When we consulted with more than 1,400 stakeholders last year, Albertans told us that payday borrowing costs are too high. One participant called them exorbitant. Another participant told us that after taking out a payday loan in an emergency, it soon became a cycle, needing a loan to cover the void left from paying back the first one. We heard last week that Google is banning payday loan ads for exactly these reasons.

Our leadership and these changes are making a difference. We are helping to end cycles of debt and making the time between paycheques a little easier for Alberta's families.

Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Anyone wishing to speak to Bill 15? I would recognize the Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: I decline right now, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today to speak to the bill before us here. This bill is very well intentioned. I believe it is crafted with the intention of ensuring that some of our most vulnerable citizens do not fall into extreme poverty as a result of the very high rates of interest faced at payday loan stores. No Albertan ever wants to find themselves in a payday loan store. The rates of interest charged there are far higher than rates of interest, I'm sure, that any member of this Legislature faces if we go to the bank looking for a loan.

It is well intended, but this bill has unintended consequences. Interest represents risk, risk to the person lending the money, and the individuals who go to payday loan stores are going to payday loan stores and not banks because they are, overwhelmingly, high-risk borrowers. For a variety of reasons their creditworthiness is going to be rather low. It might be that they're between jobs. It could be issues of addictions. It could be any host of very serious issues that keep this individual from attaining a reasonable credit score. But for one reason or another these individuals have low credit scores, and they are therefore high-risk borrowers. As a result most banks will not provide them with the loans that they might need.

Now, these loans are very specific kinds of loans. These are not like when we put something on a credit card, or they're not like a line of credit. These are traditionally short-term loans for a span of a single week, essentially before payday; hence, the term "payday loan." These loans are of a very short-term nature, but they're also at very high interest because the borrower in these cases has a high risk of defaulting, of not being able to pay back the lender. As a result the interest rates can take on extremely high levels, and if someone is not able to pay those loans back on time, the penalties can be quite severe, and it can trap someone in a cycle of poverty.

That being said, I do not believe that it is the answer to merely ban high interest rates. To legislate away a rate of interest might sound nice. It might sound like we're trying to help this person because we are saying, "We don't want you trapped in this cycle of poverty," and a big part of that will be these exorbitant, in many cases, interest rates. But what's going to happen if we legislate away some of these interest rates without addressing some of the deeper, core issues?

My fear is that we may drive some of this high-risk lending underground. In other jurisdictions, in other areas where these kinds of loans are not available, we often see the prevalence of organized crime being involved, where an individual is badly in need of a loan and they're willing to pay almost anything to get it. They might be in very desperate circumstances. Maybe they can't pay their heating bill, or they can't pay their kid's tuition. They could be in very desperate circumstances, and when that money is not available, people will sometimes turn to unsavoury methods of borrowing money. If these kinds of financial products are not available, my sincere concern is that some folks might turn towards illegal means of obtaining those loans.

This is a serious potential unintended consequence. It is a very well-intended bill. It is trying to do a very positive thing for lower income people who need availability of credit, but my concern is that we're going to have significant unintended consequences. One will be that we could be driving these people underground in search of available credit. The other is that there might just not be anything available and the extreme problems that can come from that. They might end up borrowing from family, or they might not have anything available at all. Instead of legislating an artificial rate of interest that we believe is reasonable – these interest rates are quite extreme – instead of legislating arbitrarily a rate of interest that we think is more fair, I think that we would be better served to provide services to these people.

Now, I'm pleased to hear that the minister is working with our credit unions. I think that's positive. If we can get our credit unions to provide financial products to these high-risk borrowers, then I think that is an extremely positive move, but I'm not convinced that merely legislating away high interest rates is going to fix that. The way we need to fix it is through financial literacy, helping people understand their household finances. We need people to understand the extreme cycle of debt they could potentially be getting themselves into. In many cases people take out a payday loan, and they don't know the kind of financial hole they could potentially be getting into as interest rates compound on them. That being said, some people do use these kinds of financial products responsibly, but some people do fall into a very unfortunate trap of poverty.

We should be working with our credit unions, and I credit the minister for doing that. That is a positive step forward, but I'm not convinced that this will necessarily fix the problem. As I said, interest represents the availability of money and risk, and if these borrowers are extremely high-risk borrowers, you're not going to be able to lend them that money without a high rate of interest because that rate of interest represents the high risk that they present to the person or institution lending the money. It's basic creditworthiness, Mr. Speaker.

Even if credit unions are making a conscious attempt to make credit available to high-risk borrowers, if those borrowers are finding themselves still not credit worthy, then a lower rate of interest will simply not be available to those people. They could potentially find themselves without any financial product available. It is very well intentioned on the minister's part, and I truly hope that the credit unions will be able to fill that gap, but I'm not convinced that that will necessarily be so. I genuinely hope that I am wrong about that.

There are significant unintended consequences here. I believe that we would be better intentioned to provide programs to high-risk borrowers in this province to educate them about financial literacy, to help them understand the real dangers of getting into these financial products if you do not use them very sparingly and responsibly. I think we would be much better serving the people we are trying to help here, Mr. Speaker, if we focused on education and programs to help these people rather than on an arbitrary limit to interest rates.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Under 29(2)(a)?

The Speaker: You're not under 29(2)(a). I believe that was the second speaker; 29(2)(a) does not apply.

Is there another member who would like to speak? The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will open my comments on Bill 15 by saying this. If Bill 15 makes it more difficult for payday lenders to stay in business, if it means that payday lending companies go out of business, good. I think the minister deserves a lot of credit for bringing this bill forward, for listening to stakeholders like Momentum in Calgary and many others.

The title of the bill, I think, says it all. We have a problem in this province with predatory lenders. When people are being charged, in any context, 600 per cent interest, it's not just, it is not right, it is not fair, and it is our job as legislators to stamp that out. It is far past time for that to happen, and I'm pleased and thrilled that that is happening here in this House and to even be a small part of supporting something like this. I am enthusiastically supportive of the work the government is doing here.

I want to pick up on an argument, the unintended consequences comment, from my hon. friend from Strathmore-Brooks, the idea that it may create demand for shady activity. You know, poverty does not equal criminality. For people who are low income, who have a difficult time, who are living paycheck to paycheck – and there are hundreds of thousands of people like that in this province – that doesn't mean that they know criminals and know people who would give them some back-alley loan and crack kneecaps if it's not repaid.

What it will do is that it creates something called a market demand. Demand for a product will be satisfied through things like credit unions or even chartered banks. I see section 2 of this bill references exactly that work that the minister will do, working with credit unions in this province to provide alternative products. I'm also thrilled to know that organizations like Momentum have already started a microloans program as an alternative to payday lending. The way the market works is that where there's a demand for something, supply rises to meet it – basic economics – and that's what I sincerely hope and fully expect will happen in this case. The government has a role to play to ensure that that happens.

You know, I think credit unions can make this a profitable venture over time even if they do it simply from a position of social good and do it only to break even. I expect that that's exactly what they would do. Credit unions in this province have a strong track record of standing up for our province. I would even encourage the government, of course, to use our very own credit union, Alberta Treasury Branches, as perhaps one of the vehicles where we can provide a microloan program to people.

But none of this replaces the need for a proper province-wide and comprehensive poverty-reduction strategy. We have to ask ourselves: why are people finding themselves in this position? Financial literacy absolutely is a big part of it. People shouldn't live beyond their means, but when their means only allow them to buy food for two-thirds of the month, what do we do to help those people and ensure that we can alleviate poverty in a more systematic way?

Income security certainly is part of that. Early childhood education is a huge part of eliminating poverty. Breaking the cycles of violence, breaking the cycles of addiction, ensuring adequate housing, ensuring great education systems, ensuring adequate health care: all of those pieces fit into a poverty reduction strategy, which will reduce the demand for microloans or what are currently called payday loans.

I also very much like the transparency aspects of this bill, requiring payday loan companies to calculate all fees in the borrowing process and make that very transparent right up front. Repayable loans in installments I think makes a lot of sense as well.

Again, I've talked about financial literacy.

You know, I do wonder if these payday loan shops have sprung up like weeds in low-income neighbourhoods because the profit margins are just so remarkable and outrageous that perhaps they're going to be able to make a go of it at much lower rates. Do you remember the terrible ad from it's got to be 20 years ago now, when the payday loans first came around? It's like, "Three bucks on a hun," right? That's $3. That's 3 per cent on $100 borrowed. Well, we're taking it to $15, which is a drop from $23. Twenty-three dollars to borrow $100: that is unbelievable in terms of the rate of interest. It's usury. It's remarkable to me that it was legal in the first place. This government deserves a lot of praise for no longer allowing that.

I think there's absolutely more than enough room here for payday lending companies to continue to operate if, in fact, there is a demand for it. But putting together all of the different aspects, I think that we will do some real good in this province if we can finally do away with the outrageous levels of interest and also think beyond just this, think beyond payday lending, and think about an overall poverty reduction strategy, which I certainly hope this government is working on, and I look forward to hearing exactly what you come up with there.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Mason: No. We alternate, don't we?

The Speaker: My apologies to the members. I understood it was only 29(2)(a) you wished to speak to.

You'd like to speak to the matter?

Mr. Mason: I would, please, yes.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Mason: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker. I cannot let the comments of the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks pass without some comment. You know, I found them breathtaking in their failure to grasp what we're dealing with. We have these payday loan companies, and the hon. member is trying to justify the existence of these predatory loans by claiming that it's just a relationship with the risk of the person who's borrowing the money and that that justifies the interest rates that are being charged. That's absolutely far from the actual facts.

At 23 per cent over a 10-day period, if you calculate that out, Mr. Speaker, over a year, the interest rates are 600 per cent over a year, and that is far beyond any compensation that might be required for the loss of loans. In fact, it is these loans themselves that are creating the extra risk. Because these interest rates are so high, the risk of default is much higher because of the interest rates and the way in which it is calculated. It is not the borrower that is the primary source of risk. It is the lender that is the primary source of risk because of the types of loans that they are providing to people who have very little choice. It may well be that these people have low incomes, maybe bad credit ratings, maybe they are a high risk, but to attempt to say that this is merely the market at work is to misstate it.

In fact, I want to read from some people. First Calgary Financial says: I don't see payday loans as high-risk loans; we're putting skin in the game; we believe this is a social issue; we believe we can make a positive impact. Mr. Speaker, the president of First Calgary Financial has said that this is a social issue, and perhaps that's where we lost the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. We know that social issues are not in his top 100 priorities, so he doesn't appreciate or understand the importance of this as a social issue.

Mr. Speaker, this is how poverty is perpetuated. This is how you keep people down. This is how you take advantage of people and you keep them poor and you make them poorer. I think that what we're doing makes tremendous social sense but also good economic sense. It's a good policy, a good economic policy, to help reduce poverty, to help people and families out of poverty and get them on their feet. These payday loans keep people in poverty. It's like quicksand; the more they struggle, the harder they are stuck.

I just want to say that I can't let Strathmore-Brooks' comments go without being responded to because I think that they really do not appreciate the dignity of the people who are caught in these traps, and it is unworthy of him and of the House. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the hon. Government House Leader?

Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to rise and address some of the thoughts I've heard in the Chamber so far. One of them is, of course – and I'll echo some of the comments of my colleague across the aisle – when the Member for Strathmore-Brooks talked about the unintended consequence of this bill and about high-risk borrowers. That's an interesting conversation to have, high-risk borrowers. I like the concept of discussing high-risk borrowers because they include a lot of people that I am very familiar with: single moms, vulnerable people. My colleague from Calgary-Elbow and I sit on the Calgary Homeless Foundation, and we discuss the issues relating to vulnerable people at every meeting that we attend. When we talk about a predatory lending bill, the key term here is "predatory." What do predators do? They prey on the vulnerable.

In discussions about the province's most vulnerable, certainly the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood hit the nail on the head when he said that some of our colleagues in the House have a difficult time talking about social issues. They are uncomfortable with them. They're bootstraps people; they think everybody should be able to pick themselves up and that we don't actually have to have a social safety net because everybody has the ability to go out and get a job and take care of themselves. Well, that doesn't always happen. You know, if there's anyone shocked at the idea that our two parties might not be simpatico, well, here's a perfect example of where we differ in how we feel about vulnerable people in this province.

Frankly – and I've said this to the minister responsible for Status of Women – the work she's doing right now is fantastic. I praise her for that. I think she has been inclusive. We've had a chance to sit down in a nonpartisan way to talk about issues that are extremely important, and I think this is one of those issues.

While I say that, I would hope that when we look at the idea of people who will go out and get a $500 payday loan and, through a series of circumstances, by the end of the year owe $6,000, $8,000, $9,000 and are mired in such a desperate place that they don't know what to do next – that is a terrible place to be. The kinds of people who are left in those circumstances are people who feel powerless. I certainly feel very good about the idea that there are tools that may be offered to those people so that they never end up in those situations, so that they can begin to have, first of all, a discussion about getting themselves to a place where they don't have to take advantage of those kinds of companies, where there is an opportunity to access microloans, where there is an opportunity to have a discussion about financial literacy in the sense that they can develop the tools so that they will never have to access those companies again.

But I think it's not an either/or situation. I don't think that we should just, as some of my colleagues feel, let these groups continue to operate because the alternative is that people who are desperate and go looking for these loans will then resort to criminal activity, which is such a terrible stereotype but not surprising.

Mr. Fildebrandt: You're lying. You're lying.

Ms Jansen: Did you just say that I'm lying? [interjections] Yeah, you did.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a point of order.

Ms Jansen: Thank you.

The Speaker: The point of order being . . .

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks just repeatedly told the hon. member who is speaking that she was lying. That is not acceptable in this House, as that member knows, and then he misstated the facts when she asked him about it.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, I did say that the Member for Calgary-North West was lying. She was saying things that clearly misrepresented what I was saying, but the term "lying" is unparliamentary. I withdraw the comment and apologize.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to wrap up by saying that certainly for those of us in the Progressive Conservative Party we do feel a commitment to the most vulnerable people in this province. We do appreciate that social issues have to be dealt with, and we don't believe that if you come from a lower income level, you're going to resort to crime in order to figure your way out of a problem. I think that those kinds of stereotypes, frankly, are tired and in the past, and we don't actually have to succumb to that kind of behaviour and that kind of thinking anymore.

I would just like to say that I thoroughly support Bill 15, its intent, and I look forward to seeing the results of it and the fact that in the future we will have many more families who can take advantage of . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I understood that you were rising under 29(2)(a). Did I misunderstand that? You were speaking to the main point? Is that correct?

Ms Jansen: I was.

The Speaker: You still have 10 minutes left.

Ms Jansen: Well, then, maybe I could go on and say that in discussing the whole concept of looking at the predatory lending piece, I like the idea that not only are we calling attention to it – there are probably lots of people who have no concept that this sort of thing goes on. If you live in a community where you don't have one of these companies on the corner, you probably have no idea about the pitfalls. If you watch a commercial and it's a peppy little commercial that talks about – actually, Member for Calgary-Elbow, what was the term?

Mr. Clark: "Three bucks on a hun."

Ms Jansen: "Three bucks on a hun." You know, it sounds so convenient, and if you don't make that payment, then you think: oh, well, I'm sure the consequences aren't that terrible. I think a lot of people get drawn into that. There is a reason those commercials make it look so easy. There is a reason those companies are in economically challenged areas. There is a reason that you don't see a company like that in an economically advantaged area.

I think we can draw attention to exactly what predatory lending means for the folks who don't know and talk about the kinds of tools that we should be able to provide to the individuals and families who would resort to using these companies. If they know that they have a whole tool chest available to them that includes microloans, that gives them an opportunity to know where it is they can go in order to access short-term help if they need that short-term help and then, if they access that short-term help more than one or two times a year, they should be able to talk to someone who says: "You know what? Here's an idea. Why don't we sit down and talk about how in the longer term you can manage your money better?" Now, aren't those great skills to be able to impart upon people who don't have them currently? Aren't those the kinds of conversations we have in a civilized society, where we want everyone to have the opportunity to get ahead? If you are in a situation where you access payday loans, you are not in that group of people. You are not getting ahead. Most of the people who access those loans do it more than once, and they are in a terrible cycle.

3:30

I'm not going to use all the rest of my time. I will only say that I think that when it comes to strong social policy, we all have to stand up, and we all have a responsibility to help it, to support it, and to ensure that it goes ahead for the vulnerable people in this province. I would also say that the PC Party is always behind good social policy for vulnerable people, and that's why the two of us will never meet.

The Speaker: Are there any questions to the Member for Calgary-North West under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am excited to rise today to speak in support of Bill 15. Now, my hon. colleague, presenting a few minutes ago, may be confused by that, but that's because my party has free votes, something that her party did not have when she was in power, that may be why they are not in power anymore.

Having said that, I rise in support of Bill 15 because, for me, the interest rates of about 600 per cent on these types of loans are exactly that; they are predatory. Now, I will take my record on social issues and the work that I have done with people in poverty in this province and put it up against anybody's in this House at any time. I resent and will not accept any remark that I do not or that all of my party do not support or have something against people in poverty because that is not true. In fact, that is why I will speak in favour of this bill.

I do want to address the issue of loan sharks and the implication that the previous two members brought up, that by bringing up concerns about how the poor could be taken advantage of, a member bringing up those concerns is saying that that means that all the poor are criminals. That is not true. Again, I have worked with homeless people my entire life, and they are not criminals. They are often taken advantage of by criminals, which is exactly why this government says they're bringing forward this bill and is exactly why I support this bill. They are taking advantage of low-income people, taking advantage of people in a tough situation. For a member to bring up the fact that other people can do that is exactly what the government is saying.

There's nothing wrong with pointing out that, yes, this bill is good. I'm going to support this bill, and I encourage my colleagues to vote with me in support of this bill, but we have to make sure that when we go through this legislation, go through the stages here, we make sure that we're not leaving open other areas where people can take advantage of the poor or the very people that we're helping. That is what the hon. member was discussing, and I don't appreciate the comments from the other two members who don't seem to understand that.

With that said, I want to be clear that I support this bill. Many of my colleagues support this bill because the interest rates and the payment rules put to extreme disadvantage the people that are already in a tough situation, and that's totally unacceptable.

I remember often seeing within our shelter system people that we call the working poor. A lot of people don't understand that people who live inside our shelters in Calgary and Edmonton and throughout the province work. In fact, a large majority of people who live in our shelters work, and we call them the working poor. They work, but they often have to take these type of loans in order to be able to make ends meet or to do certain things throughout the month and would get stuck in a vicious cycle, and then they were taken advantage of. I agree a hundred per cent on that, and that's why I'm going to vote for this bill.

But let's not be silly and say that other people can't take advantage of the poor in our province. Let's make sure that as we go through this legislation, go through the next stages of it, we get it right, that what we're trying to accomplish is actually accomplished.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre?

Are there any other members who would like to speak to Bill 15, An Act to End Predatory Lending?

Hon. minister, any closing remarks?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a second time]

Bill 16

Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation and Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Do you require me to move that Bill 16, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2016, be now read a second time? Is that what you want?

The Speaker: Yeah.

Mr. Mason: Then I just did.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 16, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, in second reading. Most sections of the Traffic Safety Act came into force in 2003. That was 13 years ago. It was a year before Facebook came along, three years before Twitter, and six years before the creation of Uber. The rapid advance of technology and social media has changed the way we do things in the world. For example, people hardly ever use their phones only for phone calls anymore. I recently have learned how to take a photograph with my phone. Apparently, we can now download entire seasons of TV shows and watch them at our convenience. I've no idea why you'd want to watch it on a screen three inches across, but apparently some people do that. If we need a ride somewhere, we have the option of tapping an app instead of phoning a cab company to speak to a real live dispatcher.

We are living in a world where things are getting more convenient, yet at the same time these conveniences are causing new complexities; for example, distracted driving. Keeping up with changing times means adapting to changing technologies and addressing the complexities that come with them. As government our job is to regularly revisit and update legislation to ensure that it meets the evolving needs of our changing society, and that includes the Traffic Safety Act, legislation that has an impact on some 3 million licensed Alberta drivers. The proposed amendments I will speak about today reflect the changing needs of drivers while ensuring the safety of everyone who uses our roads and highways.

A serious issue that continues to have an impact on drivers, passengers, and their loved ones is impaired driving. Between 2010 and 2014, Mr. Speaker, 400 people were killed and more than 6,000 people were injured in alcohol-related collisions in Alberta. Bill 16 proposes to strengthen the impaired-driving legislation through changes to laws that apply to the ignition interlock program. This is a mandatory program for all individuals who have been convicted of an impaired-driving offence in Alberta. Participants have an alcohol-sensing device attached to their vehicle ignition system. Basically, it's just a plastic tube that a driver must blow into in order to be able to start their vehicle, and if the device detects a certain level of alcohol, the person won't be able to start or drive the vehicle.

This program has proven effective at reducing drinking and driving. It separates the act of drinking from driving, and it changes behaviour. But under current legislation first-time offenders with under .16 blood-alcohol content can apply for an exemption to the program. That .16 is double the legal limit. So anyone under double the legal limit is currently able to apply for an exemption. Albertans have told us that this isn't good enough. The amendment will remove that exemption and will help us in our battle to keep more drunk drivers off Alberta roads.

Another proposed amendment will clarify the law regarding proof of insurance. The current legislation is vague, to put it mildly, so anyone who's ever received a ticket for producing an out-of-date insurance card, known as a pink card, even while they have a current pink card in their possession will attest to this. This amendment would make the law clearer to police officers and to drivers. If drivers can produce a current pink card, they would not receive a ticket regardless of whether or not they also produced their outdated pink card. If people are like me, when you get your pink card, you take it out to your car, and you just add it to the ones that are already there in your little plastic folder on your dashboard. That, apparently, is currently an offence, and we're fixing that.

Bill 16 also includes amendments that would address the relatively new influx of transportation network companies, or TNCs, that are operating in our province. The issue of private vehicle-for-hire operations is becoming an emergent issue around the world with the introduction of TNCs such as Uber. TNCs electronically connect private drivers with passengers seeking rides through a smart phone app. It's a new transportation business model, and our current provincial regulation does not fully address it. As a result, requirements for TNCs and their drivers are unclear.

We want to bring some clarity, and we want to ensure that TNCs operate safely, reliably, and fairly in our province. To that end, Bill 16 seeks to establish an appropriate regulatory framework for rides for hire. The impetus for regulation changes began at the end of February, when I announced basic safety requirements for TNC operation. These include requiring every TNC driver to have appropriate insurance coverage, driver's licence, and a police information check. At the same time I made a commitment to update our regulations. Our government's priority is public safety for passengers, drivers, and other users of our roads.

Over the past few months the government has been speaking with stakeholders, including Uber and other transportation network companies, the cities of Edmonton and Calgary, and the taxi industry. The amendments I am proposing today were informed by those conversations and will establish a reasonable framework for ride-for-hire companies. One of the main changes is to amend the Traffic Safety Act so that we may make regulations regulating these companies. TNC operations do not currently fall under the act.

As well, Mr. Speaker, we want to amend the act so legislation could apply to the companies themselves rather than to individual drivers. As it stands now, the legislation applies just to the drivers. We want to place the onus on the TNCs because it is the TNCs that control who drives for them, and they establish their own driver policies. This regulatory framework ensures that TNCs are responsible for knowing who their drivers are and that all drivers meet safety requirements before they provide rides for hire through a TNC. It also allows us to speak with the TNC directly rather than trying to identify hundreds or thousands of individual drivers. While I know that TNCs are typically doing these checks already, this amendment gives the province a practical enforcement tool.

Mr. Speaker, while it's important that we create regulations that enhance the safety of Albertans, we won't get anywhere if we can't enforce them. To that end, the amendments would also add a provision under which the registrar of motor vehicles may levy administrative penalties of up to $50,000 against a transportation network company if the company allows drivers to drive with less than a class 4 driver's licence, if the company fails to ensure that its drivers have adequate insurance, or if the company fails to produce a record of criminal background checks for its drivers. These penalties are significant enough to encourage compliance in an industry like this, which has the potential of growing much larger in scope and size.

We're also proposing an appeals provisions so that any transportation company that is affected by an administrative penalty has a recourse and can appeal to the Alberta Transportation Safety Board.

Finally, Bill 16 proposes a provision for the registrar to apply for an injunction against a transportation network company if necessary.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the regulations that Bill 16 proposes have been developed in part to keep our province moving forward and up to speed with changing needs of Albertans, changing times, and changing technologies. Many amendments in this bill intend to bring more clarity to an industry that is practically brand new and create regulations that will work for all parties, but this bill, first and foremost, is about safety on our roads and safety for Alberta's drivers, passengers, and all users of our province's roads and highways.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to the debate, and I encourage members to support Bill 16, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act.

I will now move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 11 Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move third reading of Bill 11 on behalf of the Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

We Albertans need an innovation system to strengthen and diversify our economy. This bill is a step forward towards innovation to secure the future of Alberta and drive the current economy of the province. By bringing the research sector and innovation as well as industry, small businesses, entrepreneurs, and academia all together, we are going to develop a strong system that will help us to diversify our economy and get the value for money that we Albertans always enjoyed. We are positive that we will have a bright future for our future generations.

Therefore, I would like to continue with the third reading of Bill 11. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Any other members? The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak on Bill 11, the Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016. This bill stands to eliminate the inefficiency of having separate boards of directors for Alberta Innovates: Bio Solutions, Alberta Innovates: Energy and Environment Solutions, and Alberta Innovates: Health Solutions. It does seem particular to have four boards working side by side to accomplish similar goals. The notion of streamlining leadership is appealing on the surface level. I certainly hope that efficiencies are found, that top-heavy bureaucracy becomes leaner.

I think that it is important that we make clear that governments rarely actually reduce spending, especially this particular government. One of the problems that I see far too often with governments is that there is rarely a meaningful scaling back of expenditure. There seems to be a culture of a lot of shuffling around of line items and responsibilities, all in the name of efficiency, but when it comes down to brass tacks, there is little that is actually saved or reduced. I certainly hope that this bill doesn't fall victim to the pattern I just described.

I think that we have a real chance to streamline some of the administrative components of the Alberta Innovates corporations, especially when we begin to look at some of the cost savings that can come from eliminating redundant positions at the board level. These salaries are large, plain and simple. These people get paid a lot, plain and simple. I read a media report that states that there are over $8 million worth of salaries among 30 employees. This is a result of instituting private practices in a public service. Anyone with any type of business experience understands that in order to attract talent, you have to be competitive, with competitive job postings that include a competitive salary. Albertans understand this.

On the other side of the same coin, there is a need to eliminate waste and reduce, to operate a more lean and agile organization. The people of Alberta expect that our government operate in a responsive and a responsible manner, especially when it comes to spending their hard-earned tax dollars.

Those are the points I'd like to make. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to Bill 11, Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016?

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a third time]

Bill 12

Aboriginal Consultation Levy Repeal Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today and am pleased to move third reading of Bill 12 on behalf of the Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Peace River.

3:50

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really honoured to speak once again to this bill in third reading on behalf of the Minister of Indigenous Relations. As mentioned before, it's a small bill but an incredibly important one. It fulfills one of our campaign promises, one that I know our government takes very seriously and that I personally take very seriously, and that's to reinforce our commitment to Alberta's indigenous people, to our First Nations and Métis communities, that we will always consult in a meaningful way, one that is open and transparent and that we always consult respectfully and as equals because we are all treaty people. With this bill we reinforce that any decisions that we make and any legislation that we develop that relates to our indigenous peoples will always be informed and grounded in the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples.

With that, I would ask that all in the House continue to support this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who'd like to speak to Bill 12, Aboriginal Consultation Levy Repeal Act? Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the opposition shadow minister for aboriginal relations I'm very proud to stand up and speak in support of the recall of Bill 22. It's long overdue, and I believe it's the right step. First Nations, Métis, and industry have all agreed that Bill 22 did nothing to help the negotiations.

What I would like to say is that I'd implore the government to make certain that any new legislation is not put forward until all parties have had a chance to properly consult, preferably in a round-table discussion with all stakeholders present. Only when we have a real dialogue with all parties present can we come to an agreement that will be equitable and honoured in the future. I'd also appreciate it if all parties in this Chamber would also be included in the discussion and formation of any new legislation prior to it hitting the Order Paper. This issue has gone on for far too long, and it is too important for us not to get everything right. We need to make this right.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any members who would like to address a question to the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing no one, are there other members who would like to speak to Bill 12, Aboriginal Consultation Levy Repeal Act?

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a third time]

Bill 13

Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to move third reading of Bill 13, the Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2016, which I am pleased to note has the support of this Assembly, on behalf of the Minister of Labour.

These proposed changes will allow veterinary technologists to become full voting members in the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association's governance. This bill will enable veterinary technologists to have a voice in the governance decisions that affect their profession. It will also ensure that veterinarians and technologists comply with the highest professional standards, which will provide greater consumer protection. As we have all heard, veterinary technologists are crucial to veterinary practice and are depended on by Albertans in the care of their animals. These amendments will not change the scope of practice of veterinary medicine or the qualifications required to be a technologist. I want to be clear on one point that came up in debate. There is no part of this legislation that changes or impacts membership fees.

The ABVMA membership is supportive of these proposed changes. By enhancing accountability for all technologists, Albertans can be confident that their animals are receiving the best care possible.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other members who would like to speak to Bill 13, Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2016?

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a third time]

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I think that if you seek it, you will see unanimous consent to shrink the bells in Committee of the Whole, which, it is my understanding, we have to do before we go into Committee of the Whole.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 17 Appropriation Act, 2016

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Mr. Stier: I have a few minutes to spare to give a little wisdom on that.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise this afternoon to speak a little bit on Bill 17, the Appropriation Act, 2016. I'd like to touch on a couple of themes that were raised during the Municipal Affairs estimates in relation to this act, actually.

I'll start with the Alberta Emergency Management Agency, which co-ordinates the government's resources in response to disasters and emergencies. In the Municipal Affairs business plan on page 110 under outcome 3 it states: "Albertans have an enhanced ability to prepare for, respond to, and recover from emergencies and disasters." In response to the 2011 Slave Lake fire the government at the time commissioned the Flat Top Complex report, which studied the government's preparedness and response to the disaster and in the end provided 20 recommendations for how the government could improve if not prevent a wildfire and mitigate the damage to people's homes and livelihood.

While firefighting and wildfire mitigation are largely under the authority of Agriculture and Forestry, the Flat Top Complex report provides a number of recommendations that do fall under the auspices of Municipal Affairs. The recommendations specifically dealing with improving communications, both internal and external communications, are incredibly important to conducting a thorough and successful disaster response. Unfortunately, when asked about Municipal Affairs and whether the department had accepted and implemented any of the recommendations, the minister questioned the relevancy and passed off the report as "100 per cent embedded in the Forestry budget." I'm certainly not saying that Municipal Affairs or the government as a whole failed to prevent the wildfire currently raging in northern Alberta, but I guess I question the minister's dismissive tone in relation to what I believe Albertans see as legitimate questions around the role Municipal Affairs plays in response to wildfire disasters.

One of the main sources that the provincial government uses to fund municipalities, though, is the municipal sustainability initiative, or MSI, which helps support local infrastructure priorities and to build strong, safe, and resilient communities. While the government has committed to providing long-term, stable, predictable funding, this program has almost since day one been underfunded. It was originally promised that the MSI would deliver $11.3 billion over 10 years to municipalities. As the minister admitted during estimates, the program is set to expire next year and as of today has delivered only 7 and a half billion dollars in funds. Even when next year's projected MSI funds are included, the program is yet $2.56 billion underfunded. When I asked the minister if there was a new funding agreement being discussed, her response wasn't clear on what the plan was or even if there was a plan, and that was really disappointing.

4:00

A significant issue for many municipalities, especially rural municipalities, is the lack of commercial tax opportunities. In addition, they face significant land issues, and their transportation infrastructure has experienced accelerated deterioration due to industrial installations and maintenance of things like pipelines. Rural municipalities depend on revenue associated with linear taxes to assist with covering these costs. In addition, rural municipalities have always shared these tax revenues regionally to fund projects of regional importance such as recreation centres, libraries, and community arenas.

Unfortunately, there has been a lot of mixed messaging about linear taxation recently. When pressed about whether there will be changes to linear tax assessment, collection, allocation, and/or distribution, the minister stated that there would be no redistribution of linear taxes to cities but, regrettably, wouldn't rule out other changes, and that was very disappointing to hear.

I hope the minister and this government will begin to be clearer on these issues moving forward. I was disappointed by the lack of clear answers to many of the legitimate questions raised by myself and others during the estimates committee meeting, and given the tough economic times Albertans deserve clear answers. Madam Chairman, until this government starts being up front on these issues, it will remain difficult to take what they say seriously.

Thank you very much. That's all I have to say to this.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

[The clauses of Bill 17 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Mr. Mason: Madam Chair, I move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 17.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I want to thank all the hon. members for their comments, contribution, and particularly their efficiency on this Thursday afternoon. I'll move that we call it 4:30 and adjourn until 10 o'clock Tuesday morning.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:04 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 2nd Session (2016)

Activity to May 19, 2016

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter numbers until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

10 a.m.

Tuesday, May 24, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning.

Let us bow our heads and each in our own way reflect upon the profound strength our province and our nation has because of our cultural diversity. It is the diversity in our colour, faith, traditions, and languages that binds us together.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Evening Sittings

16. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(1), commencing May 24, 2016, the Assembly shall meet on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings for consideration of government business for the duration of the Second Session of the 29th Legislature 2016 spring sitting unless the Government House Leader notifies the Assembly that there shall be no evening sitting that day by providing notice under Notices of Motions in the daily Routine or at any time prior to 6 p.m.

[Government Motion 16 carried]

Second Reading

Bill 16

Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2016

[Adjourned debate May 19: Mr. Mason]

The Speaker: Any members wishing to speak? The Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to speak to this bill this morning. For the most part our caucus will be supportive of this bill. I mean, there's some good work in there, frankly, some of the stuff I started a few years ago – and I'm glad to see it getting finished now – mostly some pretty common-sense stuff, you know. It's good to see that the minister has taken a start at trying to address the Uber question and everything else.

So I'll encourage our members to vote in favour of this bill. Thanks for the time.

The Speaker: The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 16, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2016. It is always good to see Alberta Transportation take the initiative and do some housekeeping of their laws. While there is much housekeeping here, there is also something new, the legal framework to draft regulations for transportation network companies. I can understand the government wanting to make sure that proper insurance is in place for TNCs. If there is an accident, everyone wants to make sure that they are covered. Yet not every TNC driver is driving for the TNC one hundred per cent of the time.

I am pleased that new insurance products are being made available by industry and being approved by the superintendent of insurance, but I question the superintendent's decision to delay the approval of one TNC's insurance product until July 1, 2016. While one TNC had to stop operations, a new taxi service based on a TNC had their ducks in a row and launched, scooping up market share. It gives Albertans the perception, rightfully or wrongfully, that there was some jiggery-pokery going on.

I can also understand the requirement to go do a police information check. This is a more rigorous screening than a simple criminal records check, but it's a little harder to get. I'm not against that, but I'll note that there are a lot of criminal offences, and there is no clarity about what kinds of crimes and how recent they should be to disqualify people from driving others around. Still, we don't want criminals and those known to police as criminal elements driving the general public around.

The issue that bugs most Albertans, or many Albertans, about the TNC rules is the requirement for a class 1, 2, or 4 licence. Most Albertans have a class 5. Most Albertans don't want to be bothered and don't understand what all is involved with obtaining a class 4 licence. With additional training, licensing fees, road tests for an uncertain benefit, Mr. Speaker, this is what many of my colleagues call red tape. Many Albertans figure that if you have a class 5 and can drive a car or a pickup truck, you should be good to go whether or not someone else is in the car with you. Given that most TNC drivers are driving their own cars and are not doing it full-time, why bother with this red-tape barrier?

These minor points of law go completely against the sharing economy that has emerged thanks to social media technology. I would expect many backbench NDP members would also share these concerns. This is cutting-edge technology that needs to be embraced.

I wonder if some folks across the aisle have thought about who might be discriminated against with a class 4 requirement; in particular, women and rural Albertans. You may ask: why women? Well, today in Alberta only 12 per cent of the class 1, 2, and 4 licences are held by women, but they hold 51 per cent of the class 5 licences. Of course, they could get a class 4 licence, but when you are talking about a part-time way to make some extra cash with your own car, this barrier falls disproportionately on women.

You might also ask: why rural Albertans? Well, from here in the Legislature there are a number of places that I could go to get a class 4 test done, but accessing testing locations isn't nearly as convenient in rural Alberta. There is also a special need for part-time TNC drivers in rural Alberta because full-time taxi operations are hard to find, especially on a Friday or Saturday night, when the public safety value of them is at a premium.

I'll note, Mr. Speaker, that these points about insurance policies, information checks, and licence class are not written into this bill. They will not be statute. They will be written into the regulations. I suspect the regulations are drafted but cannot yet go to cabinet for approval. In Ottawa draft regulations get published and circulated for comment in the Canada Gazette, but does this happen with the Alberta Gazette?

I am also concerned that this TNC legislation will impact carpooling applications and parcel delivery. I don't want to regulate how people use technology to do something they already do without technology, nor do I want to regulate people picking up and dropping off things, a practice that people already do without technology but could easily be made more efficient by driving apps.

Many times in rural Alberta we need to get a parcel from the country to maybe a family member that's living several hundred kilometres away. With a car-sharing app, where we can look at finding someone that's already going to be going in that direction, they can deliver a parcel for us. Need a parcel, a package, or something else dropped off? There's surely someone going where you want to get it, but you need the technology to match you up. Wouldn't everyone here rather an existing drive happen than a special courier or a hotshot? Without seeing the regulation, I don't know what the minister has up his sleeve, but the legislative framework is there.

There are some other provisions in this legislation that are good. If police pull you over and you produce your valid insurance pink card but the old expired insurance card is still in the folder, you will no longer be fined. That's just common sense.

Then we have some changes to the ignition interlock program and impaired driving laws. First-time offenders whose blood alcohol concentration is less than .160 currently can apply for an exemption to the ignition interlock program. First-time offenders won't get this exemption anymore with Bill 16. That is good.

Street racing causing bodily harm or death will now have a five-year licence disqualification, consistent with other Criminal Code provisions for driving causing bodily harm or death.

A loophole allowing a charged impaired driver to avoid escalating penalties if they appear in court on all charges at once is eliminated.

Novice drivers will now legally be able to be taken back to the police station and be administered the real breathalyzer, not just the roadside approved screening device.

A person in year 4 of 5 of a driving suspension who wants to start driving again under the ignition interlock program can now do so for the one year, not having to go through the full five-year program on top of the driving suspension.

Mr. Speaker, we would like to make Bill 16 better by adding some definitions to the law, definitions like what a transportation network company is. Unfortunately, one area that we cannot amend is the definition allowing a tow truck with lights flashing to be designated as an emergency vehicle. We cannot amend these sections of legislation at this time because those parts of the law did not come open. We hope the minister and his department will take these recommendations under advisement and bring them forward for round 3 of the update to the Traffic Safety Act.

I thank the minister for bringing this law forward, and I look forward to a productive debate on the bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or observations under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock?

Seeing none, are there any other individuals who would like to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly an honour to talk about this Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2016. In rural areas the ability to drive and be mobile in areas that require a mechanical means of transportation to be timely and efficient is important, but moreover, on that, the safety of those modes of transportation is also important. In the diverse constituency of Drumheller-Stettler, where we have expansive areas and where with modern transportation it requires upwards of almost three hours to get from one diagonal to the other in the constituency, it's important to be able to be mobile and have effective and safe transportation to do that.

On the surface this appears to be nothing more than housekeeping on the part of the government, and there are some elements of that within this proposed act. I was speaking to the members from Calgary-Shaw and Leduc-Beaumont prior to the beginning of this session, and we were talking about the housekeeping portion regarding the spelling of the word "motorcycle." I know there's serious and onerous work to be done in this Chamber, but I guess we're relegated to that today on this fine day in Alberta, and I'm proud and happy to be here to do that. Wordsmithing, as you know, Mr. Speaker and members opposite and members on all sides, is important, and spelling within this legislation is a perfectly reasonable housekeeping item.

I'm pleased that some common-sense items such as the requirement to produce your pink slip for law officers have been included here. In a personal incident of yours truly, with some of the diverse locations of our farm vehicles, that situation has happened to me, and through the affableness of the police officer at the time in the rural areas there was not a penalty enforced. But he and I both knew that the proper effect of the law, the law in the province, is to produce a properly dated proof of insurance. There are some vehicles now inoperable on the farm that I know that have a series of those expired proofs of insurance in them because that was the easier way to do that. Mr. Speaker and members of the Chamber, this change to the act is common sense. In this day and age it seems that common sense is not common, but this is long overdue.

The government has also taken the time to fix a few items that fall into the realm of, should I call it, or could we call it, law and order. This is a particularly serious issue or portion of the discussion. Alcoholic drinking and driving is something that I doubt anyone here doesn't believe needs to be eliminated from our roads. Now, with the potential changes regarding other forms of impediments, I guess I could call it, to our mental capacities, whether they be some sorts of drugs, there are going to be different challenges to our legal system going forward. In the case of alcohol, drinking, the inducement of drugs, despite strides in the right direction in Alberta, the problem still persists.

The government has proposed several fixes to some sections of this act that needed clarity and fixing, and part of that clarity and fixing was a result of legal actions brought forward by, should I call it, finely perceptive lawyers in the court system. The major one I see is to finally close a loophole that allowed accused drunk drivers to appear in court on multiple charges. Mr. Speaker, in the rural area that I know of, there are cases like this, and it has occurred. The constabulary, the Queen's Cowboys, as some people know them, the RCMP in the rural areas, is very frustrated by this. Some of those people that are challenging the system do this to avoid escalating penalties. Getting off lightly simply by bundling your charges is something you do with phone, cable, or Internet services. It is not something that should be used to avoid stiffer penalties for something as serious as impaired driving.

To our Solicitor General from this province: possibly the imposition of stricter consecutive penalties could be a differentiation rather than simply trying to bring forward legislation. It's been effected in the federal arena, where times before probation and continuation of sentences are of greater effectiveness than simply effecting penalties. Mr. Speaker, I believe this will make our roads safer and, hopefully, keep habitual offenders off the streets and roads and highways of the great province of Alberta.

As I stated earlier, impaired driving is a very serious problem, and any common-sense steps designed to curb it are a good idea, in my opinion. I note that the change to the ignition interlock program is one of those changes. Impaired driving is a serious topic, and we should do whatever we can to change the public's view of it. Chances are that if you are pulled over for the first time, as a first-time offender it wasn't truly your first time driving while impaired; you just happened to finally get caught at it. As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker and members of the Chamber, driving in Alberta and driving in the rural constituencies is a privilege. The first-time convicted offender should want to regain this privilege when having to abide by the ignition interlock program. This is not an unreasonable request. If it helps to break established patterns of drinking and driving and saves lives in the process, to me it is a positive step forward.

Any loophole that we can close to keep impaired drivers off the streets and highways is a worthwhile endeavour. Technicalities such as the one eliminated in section 90(2) to ensure that a novice driver can now be asked to produce a breath sample at either or both the roadside and at the station are a welcome fix as well.

Although I've seen boots on the ground a lot longer than some of my colleagues across the aisle, street racing has been around since before my early days. As soon as someone developed a means to propel a tire, racing has existed. From James Dean to The Fast and the Furious, racing has been glamourized by Hollywood and in books. Sadly, it has also had tragic consequences, as both James Dean and Paul Walker found out with their violent deaths. In fact, Mr. Speaker, as recently as last night on my entry into the city I saw a police officer on the Anthony Henday off the highway 14 exchange that had two vehicles pulled over at once. I could only believe that that's what was going on, that there was some sort of a multiple vehicle occurrence there.

It is only just that street racers who cause bodily harm or death be punished with the same severity as other dangerous drivers under the Traffic Safety Act. Currently under the Traffic Safety Act such a conviction carries a five-year disqualification from driving. Street racing causing bodily harm or death, however, only carried in the past a one-year disqualification. This was a joke, and I'm pleased to see it being addressed.

Now, before the members opposite get complacent about my positive and sometimes witty, supposedly, in my view, prose – others would disagree – I must point out that this proposed legislation is far from perfect. The hon. Minister of Transportation missed a golden opportunity, in my view, while opening up this act, to address some concerns that were brought up not only in this House in my questions to him but in my personal meetings with him.

I speak of an issue that I first raised on November 2, 2015, and again in question period on November 16. The issue was concerning tow truck operation and the fact that they are not considered emergency vehicles under the Traffic Safety Act. Mr. Speaker, these drivers are at serious risk while recovering vehicles on busy roads and highways. It is not uncommon for the drivers to be the last ones at an accident or a recovery scene, long after the police and other emergency personnel have departed. I'm sure that many members opposite and on this side of the Chamber will understand that while the police are at the location recovering vehicles involved in an accident of any kind or simply distressed on the side of the road, people are respectful of the lighting and displays that the police provide. But they are only there for the immediate information gathering at the incident, and after they leave, the tow truck operators are generally left to fend for themselves.

In a personal situation, Mr. Speaker, again on highway 14, near the divided highway section, the tow truck operator came out to service a flat tire. They will not approach those situations without the gravity of two tow trucks for the simple physics that many people will pass them at high rates of speed while they're providing service at the side of the road and do not slow down. The 60 to 80 operators killed on North American roads every year are almost as likely to be killed on the job as law enforcement officers. This gives the industry one of the highest occupational death rates per capita.

My disappointment that the minister did not open this or have this be involved in this legislation stems from the minister's quote.

Safety is the first priority of our department. Far too many people are killed on our roads in a variety of ways. The hon. member has quite rightly brought forward some serious aspects to that, that deserve careful attention, and I want to assure the hon. member that it will get the attention that it deserves.

We want to make sure that our roads are as safe as possible.

The people that work on the roads, whether they're first responders or people operating tow trucks... or driving their family for a long weekend, deserve to have safe roads.

Now, I believe – and I've known the minister for some time in the Chamber and outside of the Chamber – that the minister was sincere when he spoke those words, and I am hopeful that he will go the extra mile to ensure that this oversight is dealt with in a reasonable and timely manner.

No one should lose their life while doing their job when a mechanism exists to prevent it. This government, Mr. Speaker, is very adamant that farm workers should have legislation that protects them. I have had direct conversations with members opposite, with the minister on this subject, as I've stated here, and his response is proof of that. Why are we not exhibiting that? What is the slippage? Why is there impropriety here?

Sometimes regulatory change can be a great benefit, but sometimes it can also be overreaching as well. In this case, I refer to the meat, if you will – no pun intended – of these amendments, the changes to the transportation network companies, or TNCs, if you will. While this bill does not give details concerning the regulations around these transportation network companies, or TNCs, again, it does give the government the power to make whatever rules they want and define TNCs however they wish. Mr. Speaker, that is troubling.

Given this government's track record dealing with transparency and consultation – again, I can go back to the consultation that was done on the steps of this Legislature regarding Bill 6. It seems that that was the only consultation this government heard, and now we're proceeding with a series, some sort of reduced input from the agricultural organizations to come forward with regulatory restrictions and input on Bill 6.

The government's delay and lack of any temporary solutions cost thousands of Albertans that were employed with ride-share companies such as Uber a way to supplement their income.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Nixon: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I was very interested in what the member was saying, and I'm hoping that he could finish his comments, please.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. I seem to be in an illustrious mode here today. I want to continue on speaking about the TNCs. Companies like Uber were designed to be a part of ride sharing, and they're not taxis. Taxis involve a class 4 licence for professional drivers who drive company vehicles as a full-time job. The ride-share apps are designed for part-time and casual peak-time work. It's not exactly comparing apples to apples.

Mr. Speaker, there are many people – again I revert to rural areas now – who drive large, commercial-sized vehicles who have class

1 licences such as the Member for Drumheller-Stettler. We have large farm machinery. It's almost industrial sized, and the requirement for a slight improvement to the qualifications of these drivers is an important thing because people are invoking a method of trade. The idea that having a slightly higher level of qualifications for the operation of a vehicle is reasonable.

A quick anecdote: I'd like to recall a story from, I think, Toronto, where a large taxi drivers' protest regarding Uber was going on, and an interested bystander opened his Uber app to find that hundreds of available Uber rides were in the same group as the taxi drivers.

So it's a coincidence, Mr. Speaker, that although there may be concerns by some commercial operations that there are not options available to people – as long as there is a level of safety imposed, I think it's acceptable. Safety is always an important fact. Assuming that somehow a class 5 licence is more dangerous than a class 4 is serious business. Millions of class 5 drivers are on the road at any given time, many with passengers, but the addition of being able to use an app to get a ride and pay for it does not diminish people's ability to drive safely. It's the education that they have to achieve their different qualifications. Companies like Uber have rating systems that give real-time feedback to users to help ensure the highest of standards.

Given the distances we travel throughout Alberta, ride-sharing companies are a useful tool in rural Alberta. As I was preparing for this dissertation, Mr. Speaker, I gave great thought to the rural area that we live in, where my wife's retired uncle travels back and forth to a relatively urban, or larger, centre on a regular basis. Giving instructions to return home by way of a fertilizer dealer or a business that supplies agricultural parts or equipment would be a marvellous way to save time and create safety because there would be fewer people on the roads, but it would also be, at the behest of this government, environmentally friendly because there would be fewer vehicles on the road. Providing a service that did not necessarily exist in the rural areas, partially because there simply isn't the volume to set up a taxi in a rural environment, certainly not enough of a market for those taxis to meet the needs on a Friday night, the TNCs can fill the gap but won't if there are too many barriers.

It also gives both men and women an equal opportunity to participate in this casual employment. Roughly half of class 5 drivers in Alberta are women, 51 per cent actually, whereas with a professional designation, class 1, 2, or 4, only 12 per cent are women.

It makes little sense that many of us have no issue in letting our friends and neighbours drive us and our families around with nary a thought, but somehow when payment is an issue, then problems arise. I do relate it to the aviation industry, Mr. Speaker, that I also have some acquaintance with. In private industry . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 16, Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2016? The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise to speak on Bill 16. A lot of the ground that I'd like to cover has been covered, but I think it's worthy of talking about. There are a few things that I think the government seems to have gotten right on this.

Certainly, the one change, to the in-car breathalyzer system, is a positive one. Here's the interesting thing. During my time when I was Transportation minister, I once asked the question: what's our rate of graduating people from the system? Like, how long do they have to be on it, how does that work, and how do we make sure that they're going to drive without drinking and all of that? I was very surprised to learn that one of the biggest impediments to people graduating from the interlock system is that they don't want to. That sounded crazy to me, so I'll explain that because it's bound to sound crazy to other members of the House, too.

Interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, a lot of the people currently on the interlock system want to stay on it because they have and they know they have an alcohol problem. What they tell people in Alberta Transportation, as was explained to me, is: "Please don't make me give up the interlock – I'll pay you the monthly fee – because if you do, then I will drive impaired, and I will lose my licence for two or three years or whatever the judge decides when I get in front of the judge. Then I won't be able to keep my job, I won't be able to look after my family, and I won't be able to pay my own bills because I know that I'm a slave to alcohol." While it's not everybody, there are a surprising number of Albertans that actually, in a really odd sort of way are responsible enough to recognize their own weakness and guard against it using the interlock system as a crutch.

First of all, none of us should have any tolerance for impaired driving, but besides that, I'm going to say that this change in the legislation is one where, in my view, the government got it right. Of course, I wouldn't want to characterize everybody on that system as being in this set of circumstances, Mr. Speaker. I just thought it was interesting to note that there are a surprising number of Albertans that actually choose to stay on it so they don't drive impaired. That, interestingly enough, is a pretty good safeguard.

The increased penalties for street racing are something that is important. People really do get killed street racing. It's something that the police across this province fight on a regular basis. I know that during the couple of years I had on the police commission for the Calgary Police Service, it was a constant concern. In fact, it's one of the reasons that that police service was very much in favour of keeping a racing track around, largely because when that was around, they actually – and the police took part in it – got people to what they called Friday night secret street. On Friday night they would have young people get together, bring their cars to the track, and under supervised conditions and with some safety equipment and people there and with a separated track and, of course, completely separated from public traffic, which is kind of important, they would be able to see whose car could go the fastest in a quarter of a mile.

For me, it's one of those things that's fun to watch, but as not a really big car guy the chances of you seeing me there are kind of low unless I'm sitting in the stands watching. Nonetheless, there are people interested in doing that. I think that it's important to have places for people to try to get their thrills experienced in a safe way, but when they don't, that is in no way ever an excuse for street racing. To actually have the penalty increased to more fully recognize the extent of the damage that people can do when they're street racing is a very good idea and one that I support.

Now, the area of ride sharing in the legislation is one that probably I'll have more to say about in Committee of the Whole, but for now I will say that I've had some discussions with members of the taxi industry, that are looking for a level playing field. That's all they're looking for, which is, I think, reasonable. They're interested in making sure that people with ride sharing have adequate insurance, have adequate security checks, have adequate mechanical inspections. Now, when I asked the Transportation minister in estimates about those things, he said: yeah; we will do 2 out of 3 of those things with the legislation. He indicated to me that they were going to leave vehicle inspections to the local municipality.

I will part company a little bit with my colleague from the Official Opposition in that, while he's right that many of us don't think twice about taking a ride with a friend or a family member, when you take a ride with somebody for compensation, while the personal trust level may be the same, it becomes a business relationship rather than a personal relationship even if the person you're paying in the ride share happens to be a friend or a family member. While the member opposite may see it as the same – and I certainly recognize why he says that – I'm pretty sure that my insurance company doesn't see it as the same thing, and I'm pretty sure that the hon. member's insurance company doesn't see it as the same thing. That's, I think, where we have to be careful to make sure that people that pay for a ride are protected as well as the driver.

Of course, there's an uninsured drivers' fund, but if we do anything legislative that has us dipping into that fund on purpose, then we really should think again about what we're doing here. That is meant as a last resort, when someone is driving against the law either by themselves or for compensation without adequate insurance.

I intend to talk some more with people currently in the delivery system, people that deliver people from point A to point B for compensation. I will say that while there are some things to like in the legislation, unfortunately one of the usual shortfalls is the lack of consultation, and I say that because members of the taxi industry have told me that just in the last few days they've been asked to give their comments on the legislation whereas probably they should have been asked for their comments long before the legislation was printed or presented to this House. You know, once again, with all due respect, the government is chasing their tail a little bit when it comes to public consultation. I think they're kind of behind the eight ball, and they need to catch up. It's kind of unfortunate that we're going to have to try to do some of the catch-up while the legislation is before the House, but, Mr. Speaker, here we are. That's where the government has left it.

I intend to do some more consultation with some of my colleagues, with members that are in the transportation business right now, and we may – “may” is the operative word because, of course, we're going to try to do the consultation for the government in the absence of the government doing that, a good consultation, before delivering the legislation to the House. Admittedly, we're flying by the seat of our pants because the government essentially hasn't really left any choice by the fact that they didn't do full consultation before they brought the legislation in. We will try to do the government's work for them, Mr. Speaker, and thereafter we may have some suggestions for some improvements to the legislation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any questions to the Member for Calgary-Hays under section 29(2)(a)? The Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I guess that, first off, I'd like to address the comments with regard to the consultation process. You know, I have to disagree with the hon. member. There was certainly consultation that went on. I know that I did it myself. I have been speaking with the taxi folks for as long as or before the election even occurred, so I was bringing those comments forward during the entire time. I've spoken with them since the election. We've had the representatives of the taxi group come to see us to talk about their concerns and more things moving forward as well as consulted with all of the stakeholders, the TNCs, traffic safety partners, and whatnot. So, again, I do have to completely disagree.

We have done some very thorough consultation, which was what guided the creation of some of this.

I guess the other thing to quickly address, Mr. Speaker, is with regard to the carpooling. None of this really affects the carpooling. That will continue on as it has, and I understand that some of the TNCs may in the future be bringing forward a section of their app, I guess, that will deal with carpooling. So that will simply move forward.

I guess that during this discussion – and I call it a discussion, Mr. Speaker, because I'm sensing consensus right across here – the biggest thing that everybody is concerned with is with regard to safety. We want to make sure that drivers are safe, passengers are safe, pedestrians are safe, that everybody that's using the roads is safe. When we had initially touched on – I'll have to apologize; I can't remember which member it was that brought up the fact that Uber had ceased operations over the insurance issue. Quite honestly, that was a choice. TappCar decided to use the type of commercial insurance that was available at the time, and they began to operate. Uber made the choice not to do that. That's not to say that that was a wrong choice or a bad choice. It was just simply a choice that, you know, was available to them at that time.

When we start talking about the class 4 licence, again, this is with regard to safety. I mean, it doesn't matter, if you're a commercial operator, whether you're working full-time or part-time. If you drive a large semi part-time, you're still driving a large semi, and it requires you to have a class 1 licence. With class 4 there is the extra training. There's training on customer service. You know, as a class 5 driver, when I go to get my insurance, my company always asks me: do you drive to work or don't you? When I say that I drive to work and ask why the price goes up, that's because, as they say, risk increases because I'm on the road more often. When you're a ride-for-hire driver, you're performing a service for a fee. Your risk increases because you're on the road more often. We want these folks to have the proper training and be capable to deal with all of those situations.

In terms of maybe why this was taking a little bit longer, certainly we wanted to make sure that all of the basic regulations were in place before we started trying to develop an insurance policy. That is in front of the experts now and should be ready to go on July 1 of this year. As we create the regulations surrounding TNCs – the reason they're not in the legislation is because the industry, quite honestly, is evolving very, very quickly. I mean, we've already started talking about a carpooling service within the TNCs. If we start creating regulations in the legislation right now, these companies won't be able to offer their carpooling until we come back and change those to allow them. With the regulations being left up to the ministry, those regulations can be changed to adapt quickly for those businesses that want to make those changes and those improvements and offer a larger service for their customers.

At this point I hope I've addressed some of the concerns from the other side. Like I said, I think there's very large consensus across the House that this is about safety, making our streets as safe as possible. I don't need to delve into all the other points because, like I said, I think we have consensus there, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to further discussions about this in Committee of the Whole and third reading as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments for the Member for Edmonton-Decore under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, are there other members who would like to speak to Bill 16, Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2016?

An Hon. Member: Question.

10:50 Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 14
Health Professions Amendment Act, 2016

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 14, the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2016. The Health Professions Amendment Act is a legislative framework through which regulatory colleges partner with government to create accountability mechanisms in our health system. I won't spend a lot of time talking about the importance of the act; instead, I'd like to jump to why these amendments are needed.

Amendments to the Health Professions Act are required to ensure that it continues to reflect Alberta's constantly evolving health workforce and health system. The last significant amendments to the act occurred in 2008. The amendments in 2008 addressed the governance of pharmacy technicians, podiatrists, and inspections by regulatory colleges.

Recently Alberta Health, in collaboration with the Alberta Federation of Regulated Health Professions, reviewed the act and identified necessary revisions. These changes are needed to better enable the colleges to regulate the professions and protect the public while maintaining accountability. The federation is made up of the registrars or chief executive officers of 29 regulatory colleges who are governed under the Health Professions Act. Amendments were also identified by Alberta Health Services and by individual colleges. These amendments are necessary to ensure that the act is responsive to health professions and the changing health care system.

The proposed amendments include adding two professions, namely physician assistant and diagnostic medical sonographer, and giving the minister authority to direct the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta to accredit Alberta Health Services facilities in which physicians provide services by removing restrictions on the ownership of physical therapy practices and by updating practice statements, protecting additional titles, and changing the names of three colleges and renaming schedule 20.

I am sure that many members have questions and comments to make on these changes, so I will just stop there. Thank you.

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm happy to rise and speak to Bill 14, the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2016. This bill provides a number of quality amendments and good housekeeping items that I'm happy to support.

Bringing physician assistants under the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta as regulated members is a good decision. Physician assistants are common in the military, and if this decision helps the men and women of our armed forces transition to life after service, I think it's a positive step. While there are only about 30 physician assistants in Alberta presently, if this provides some incentive to physician assistants to come to Alberta, then again it's a step in the right direction.

Under the current Health Professions Act government health facilities are exempt from the requirement to be accredited by the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta. Compare this with private and not-for-profit facilities, that are required to be accredited by the college. Bill 14 will grant the Health minister the ability to direct the college to accredit government health facilities. In order for our health system to work properly, it needs to maintain the confidence and trust of Albertans, the ones that ultimately pay for and access the system. By providing the Health minister with the ability to require government health facilities to be accredited by the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta, we can be confident that the facilities they access for their health care needs are operating properly and meeting the same standards as private and not-for-profit facilities. This change levels the playing field and provides Albertans confidence that the system is working in their best interests.

I do have some concerns with the proposed changes that would see the creation of joint college and associations. The College of Opticians becomes the college and association of opticians, and the College of Physical Therapists becomes the physiotherapy college and association. A regulatory college such as those prescribed under the Health Professions Act exists for the benefit of all Albertans. It exists to regulate and ensure that its members are acting in the best interest of Albertans and conducting themselves accordingly. The purpose of an association is to promote and advocate in the best interests of their members. When you combine the two organizations, it can lead to potential conflict and conflict of interest. Best practice is to have the two separate. It would be of great benefit to see this trend continue.

That being said, the issue of having a combined association and college is outweighed by the many benefits of good governance and the provisions of this bill. For that reason I support Bill 14, the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2016, and I encourage all my fellow members to do the same.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I move that the committee rise and report.

The Chair: The intention is to call for the question.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 14

Health Professions Amendment Act, 2016

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to move third reading of Bill 14, the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2016.

Alberta's health system and health workforce are changing and evolving, and public and professional expectations are shifting. The act needs to be responsive to these developments. The act needs to reflect advancements in health professions and a new way of thinking and working that impacts how care is provided to Albertans. At the same time the act must provide for the wants and needs of Albertans. It must support government's vision of providing the right care at the right time in the right place and from the right provider with the correct information. While we recognize that adapting to change is important, one constant must remain, protecting the public. The act needs to ensure that the public continues to receive safe, high-quality care and that health providers remain accountable while providing for these new developments.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The proposed amendments to the Health Professions Act balance these needs. The amendments enable the health system and health providers working within it to move forward while maintaining a strong foundation of safety and accountability. The proposed amendments will regulate two additional professions to ensure these health providers are accountable for the care they provide and adhere to the highest professional standards of practice.

The amendments also provide for ensuring that all facilities are accredited using the same rigorous standards and that patient safety is improved. They allow for new, innovative models of offering care from the same qualified health professionals. Practice statements are updated to reflect the full scope to which professionals practise. Additional professional titles are protected, so Albertans can be assured that only qualified individuals are providing care and that no one can misrepresent their services. Name changes more clearly delineate the roles and responsibilities when an organization serves both as a regulatory college and association.

The act was last amended eight years ago. These updates are needed to support and enable the work of health professionals and their regulatory colleges. Supporting them, in turn, enables safer, better care for Albertans.

I ask all members to support Bill 14, the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2016, and the health care improvements that will result from these proposed amendments. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, do I understand you to mean that you're making that motion on behalf of the Health minister? Is that correct?

Ms Renaud: Yes, that's correct.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Anyone else wish to speak to the motion?

Would you like to close debate, hon. member?

Ms Renaud: Yes, I would. I close debate on Bill 14.

The Clerk: Bill 14, the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2016...

The Speaker: Hold it, hon. Clerk. I believe we have three members who are asking for a division.

The Clerk: It's too late. I just started reading.

The Speaker: Keep going.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a third time]

The Speaker: I think a division had been called, is that right?

Hon. members, I've been advised that since the Clerk was reading third reading, a division does not apply, so the motion passes as carried.

11:20 Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole (continued)

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I will call the committee to order.

Bill 10 Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016

The Chair: Any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm rising to speak to Bill 10, the Unlimited Debt and Fiscal Irresponsibility Act. Let's just get back right into fun debate in this House. I think we've been quiet long enough in here.

Madam Chair, this is perhaps one of the most irresponsible pieces of legislation that this Legislature has dealt with in the year since the last election. The Minister of Finance had the gall to introduce a bill just last fall that significantly increased the legal capacity of the government to borrow in this province. It abolished any restrictions whatsoever on the ability of the government to borrow for operational deficits, and it significantly increased the overall ceiling for the debt capacity of the government for both capital and operations up to 15 per cent.

I remember very vividly the Minister of Finance standing in this House and stating that 15 per cent was a very prudent debt ceiling to be setting, that going beyond 15 per cent would be irresponsible, but we could trust this government to be responsible because it would only be 15 per cent. "We're from the government. Trust us. We're going to do things right."

Now, at the time the Official Opposition stood up and continually warned the government that we were at significant risk of starting to act like the U.S. Congress, where about every nine to 10 months the U.S. Congress approves an increase to its debt ceiling. It's a joke. It's a debt elevator, where every year the U.S. Congress takes their debt up one more floor.

You know, we talked about the history of what's happened in this province. Ralph Klein and Jim Dinning put in place very strict restrictions against borrowing and deficit financing in this province, and that was watered down over time, originally, I think, for relatively decent reasons, to allow for P3s and limited borrowing for certain projects that had an actual financial value as an asset, that could actually be liquidated as a proper capital asset should be able to be if it's going to be borrowed for, that you can liquidate that asset at an actual cash value.

Those laws were repeatedly watered down, we saw, by the Redford government. We saw them watered down again by the NDP just last fall. We warned that this continued watering down of the restrictions against borrowing and deficit financing in this province would lead us into a debt crisis, that the government would let go of all restrictions whatsoever on deficit financing.

The minister had said that our concerns were not well founded. He said that they were not well founded when we warned about what would happen last fall. He said that there was no chance that we would ever go above 15 per cent debt to GDP. We were very clear. We provided very clear evidence that the Minister of Finance's revenue projections were grossly optimistic, that they would not meet their revenue targets, and that if they continued on their spending plan with unrealistic revenue projections, we would be into deficits in perpetuity.

We've seen this government revise its balanced budget date far too many times for comfort, so discomfoting that we have now suffered five credit downgrades in the short history of this government. During the election they promised to balance the budget by 2018 and then a week into the campaign had to move it to 2019. Then within about a month or two of being elected, they moved it from 2019 to 2020. Now they say: maybe, sort of, if we get lucky, 2024, 2025. They won't have to worry about it, Madam Chair. It's going to be the Wildrose who balances the budget by 2024.

That is their plan. Their plan is for somebody else to fix their problems. We've seen other governments across the country do this in the past, where governments sort of throw a dart at the board and say, "We're going to get to balance there," and every year they kick it one year down the road. We've been running deficits – this is our ninth consecutive consolidated deficit in this province, and every single year the government of the past said, "We're going to balance the budget probably two years down the road," and every year they would move that target out one more year.

It was one thing for us to do that while we still had a lot of money left in the sustainability fund. It was one thing to do that when we were still coming from a position where we had no debt, when we were debt free and paid in full in this province. Now, though, we have a significant debt load, exceeding $20 billion right now, and we have no money left in the sustainability fund. The result has been not just the downgrade in the province's credit rating but a downgrade in this government's credibility that they will ever balance the budget.

Just last Thursday, while we were debating Bill 10, the minister stood here and said that we were creditworthy, that this government had a plan, and we should just trust them. The minister had the guts to say that we were fearmongering, and just later in that afternoon, Thursday afternoon, Alberta received another credit downgrade, our second, so far, from Standard & Poor's. That is shameful, Madam Chair.

When the budget was introduced, we had a credit downgrade. I believe it was DBRS. DBRS downgraded the credit rating of this province less than 24 hours after they introduced their budget. Now, that's not coincidental timing, Madam Chair. It had nothing to do with the price of oil. If it had to do with the price of oil, they would have downgraded it when the price of oil went down. But, instead, they downgraded the credit rating of this province within hours of them introducing a budget. It's no coincidence, further, that Standard & Poor's gave us our second downgrading from that one agency. I believe, if I'm not mistaken, we're into the double A's now, perhaps even double-A minus. They downgraded our credit rating while we are debating Bill 10 to repeal any debt ceiling and restrictions on borrowing whatsoever.

The creditors have looked at this government's fiscal plan and decided, quite rightfully, that it's not credible, that they have no plan to pay it back. When the government borrows money and they are borrowing money to refinance existing debt, we have a very big problem. We have a very big problem. In our private lives if you have to take out a line of credit to pay your credit card, you've got a debt problem, and that is what our government is doing here. They are taking out a line of credit to pay the credit card debt now. It is extremely dangerous and reckless. They are now trying to change the rules to take away any restrictions on borrowing whatsoever.

In response to the Official Opposition's concerns about a credit downgrade directly related to Bill 10, the Minister of Finance, blustering, responded that the Official Opposition just wanted a PST. I don't know what the minister was smoking that day, but it must have been something very potent, Madam Chair. It must have been very potent for the Minister of Finance to believe that it is the responsibility of the Official Opposition, somehow, that this province had a credit downgrade and that the Official Opposition, the only party in this House that ran on no new taxes – you may have heard that before – wanted a massive tax increase akin to the carbon tax that the government is expected to impose on Albertans later today, that we wanted a PST, somehow.

That is the response we're getting from this government, not substantive responses to real, serious questions. Albertans have real, serious questions about this because when our credit is downgraded, it costs more to borrow. Every single dollar that we are paying on interest to the banks is a dollar that does not go to build schools, to build roads, to build hospitals, or to hire teachers or nurses. At the end of the day the biggest enemy of social programs is social democrats who can't get their spending under control. They are going to spend this province broke to the point where we are spending billions of dollars a year on interest payments rather than putting that money where it should be going, directly to building important capital projects and providing government services. So what do they have to show for it? Bluster.

We ask about the serious consequences, if the government will take responsibility for the credit downgrade. We ask real questions, and all we get – I'm not even sure it was a talking point; it must have just spilled out of their heads to think that somehow we want a PST in response to their government's plan getting us a credit downgrade. Well, Madam Chair, there are few issues that I am more passionate about than defending the fiscal position of this province. I was elected by the people of Strathmore-Brooks to come here and defend the Alberta advantage, that made modern Alberta great, that made Alberta the economic powerhouse of North America, that made us at one point paid in full, with no debt and money in the bank, that gave us the flat tax, that gave us the lowest business tax in Canada, a real Alberta advantage that supercharged our economy and made us an absolute magnet for investment, investment that this government is driving out of this province as fast as they possibly can.

That's why, Madam Chair, I'm pleased to introduce an amendment to Bill 10. Can I read . . .

The Chair: We're waiting for the original copy, hon. member.

This will be known as amendment A2.

Continue, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I move that Bill 10, Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016, be amended in section 5 by striking out subsection (2) and substituting the following:

(2) Section 3 is amended by adding the following after subsection (2):

(3) If a report made pursuant to section 6(1) indicates that Crown debt will exceed 15% of GDP for Alberta for a fiscal year, notwithstanding section 43(1)(a) of the Legislative Assembly Act, no member of the Executive Council shall receive any salary prescribed under that section until a subsequent report made pursuant to section 6(1) indicates Crown debt will be 15% of GDP for Alberta or less.

Now, Madam Chair, Albertans who don't have government jobs like us in this House are expected to perform well to get paid. Being a minister of the Crown entitles you to significantly higher remuneration than most Members of this Legislative Assembly. Most Members of the Legislative Assembly are paid a salary, and if you have special duties like being a minister or the Speaker, you get a significant increase in your pay. Now, if you are a minister of the Crown here, you have a basic fiduciary obligation to responsibly manage the finances of this province. I believe that if you cannot keep your debt under 15 per cent of GDP, when we were once paid in full in this province with money in the bank, then you're not doing your job, and you should not get a bonus for it.

That is what this amendment does. If ministers of the Crown, in particular the Minister of Finance but all ministers of the Crown, cannot keep the debt under 15 per cent of GDP, then they don't deserve the significant increase in pay that comes with their position. This would be considered performance pay in the private sector. Even in the public sector here we have something called pay at risk: you're guaranteed a certain salary, but if you don't meet your performance measures, your salary falls back to a lower level. We have the bill regarding agencies, boards, and commissions here. It seeks to standardize some of those pay-at-risk structures in the government. It's not a bad idea that you have two kinds of salaries, your minimum salary for just having the job and then a maximum salary if you're doing your job properly.

I believe that if the government cannot balance the budget after nine consecutive consolidated deficits, they're not doing their job. If they have to repeal a piece of legislation that they passed just four and a half months ago, then they're not doing their job. If they cannot keep the debt of this province under 15 per cent of GDP, then they're not doing their job, and they shouldn't get paid extra for it anyway.

That is why I'm pleased to move this amendment to ensure that ministers have at least some financial incentive to behave responsibly if their own sense of duty can't do it for them. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise in support of this amendment. This government just seven months ago argued forcefully for the increase of the debt ceiling to 15 per cent. It is difficult to see how this government has any credibility left for their ability to handle spending.

Albertans are hurting. Over 100,000 Albertans are out of work. Unemployment in Alberta is higher than the national average, and this government refuses to even consider holding the debt to less than 20 per cent of GDP. A 15 per cent debt ceiling is over $50 billion; at 20 per cent it's $75 billion. Considering that a few years ago we were debt free, that is an absolutely stunning amount of debt to be passing on.

What's worse is that this government cannot even meet their own spending limits after just six months. A government breaking its own legislation only six months after creating it is not the kind of thing you want to see in mature democracies. I suspect it is an Alberta record, but unlike setting a record for the hundred-metre dash, this is not something to be proud of. In fact, this is an embarrassment of historic proportions. This government has one thing in common with Usain Bolt, however. Our children will be talking about both of them long into the future, with this debt load.

With the elimination of the debt ceiling we see this government endorsing generalization debt. This government has no plan to get their spending under control. They have no ideas how to eliminate the debt they are saddling our children with. This government has singlehandedly ruined our province's pristine credit rating. In the course of 12 months they have seen our credit rating downgraded four times. This is a record. In response to the government sending the Finance minister to talk some sense to the credit agencies, all we see is that the result was another downgrade. With our debt getting past $50 billion, we will owe the banks $2 billion each year just in interest payments. That's $2 billion without a penny going to principal because there's no plan to repay the principal.

The question Albertans are asking is: where is the money going to come from? This government has made it abundantly clear that it will not cut spending. If the government is not going to cut spending, then it has to raise taxes. If this government is considering a PST, well, shame. They're already introducing an ND PST carbon tax. Even with the $3 billion they're planning on collecting from hard-working Albertans, they would barely cover the interest payments on the new debt they raised. None of it is going to that, of course. Most of it will go to a green slush fund for the NDP to splash around. This government continues to talk about how they refuse to consider cuts to government spending. What they refuse to consider is that every day they don't tackle their ever-increasing debt is another day that a future government will have to take stronger actions to get this province's fiscal house in order.

This House has a bill in front of them that tackles the cycle of debt created by payday loans. I support that bill, and it's unfortunate that this government refuses to take its own advice and apply it to its own spending practices. This government has no plan to reduce spending and tackle the debt that they and the previous government created. This amendment would at least signal to our creditors that we take their concerns seriously, that we have some idea of a plan on how to tackle the debt and bring back the Alberta advantage.

For that reason, I strongly support this amendment, and I call on my hon. colleagues to do so as well. Let's begin to make hard decisions today so our children aren't forced to make painful decisions tomorrow.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I won't be supporting the amendment. It doesn't look like there's a plan there at all, actually. I will say that we are not in a debt crisis. I will say that if you look at page 9 of the fiscal plan, it talks about debt-to-GDP ratio, and it shows all the other provinces. We know that the federal government is at 31 per cent debt to GDP. Even if you look at the three years of the fiscal plan, both the estimate target and the second target, it does go into 15.5 per cent at the end of three years. If you look on page 9, that is nowhere close to Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, P.E.I., or Newfoundland. The kind of exaggerations being made by the member opposite are just that. They're exaggerations.

With regard to the credit downgrades I do want to say that Alberta, like every other oil-producing jurisdiction, not only jurisdiction but company, is experiencing the same rash of downgrades from their bond-rating agencies that do that.

With regard to the statement I made last week, I think it lacked the context. The context was that I stood up and said: you know, if you seriously want to reduce the deficit, then you need to bring in something like a PST. I only said the PST part, but I think Standard & Poor's are saying that the deficit, that they're critical of, they want reduced. They say that you can do a number of things to reduce it.

So you could do a number of things to reduce the deficit. You could invest less in capital across this province, and we know that that'll have a negative effect on putting Albertans back to work. You could reduce program spending, but at this point in time Albertans are looking for the supports that they need to get through this downturn, so that would be a problem. You could do fewer diversification initiatives across the province. We know that the oil and gas roller coaster is one of the prime reasons we're in this challenge. Our energy sector is the prime mover for so much of our revenues, and it has dropped off the map: $9 billion collected for royalties in 2014-15 and going down to a projection of about $1.4 billion this year. You can almost say that the deficit that we're experiencing is a direct result of the drop in oil royalties to this province, so we need to diversify.

You could get the deficit down with something like a PST. If the opposition is saying that the deficit needs to be smaller right away, then that's how you get the deficit down, but we're not going to do that. We're going to carry Albertans with a shock absorber budget for a period of time so that we can get through this downturn to a better place.

While the opposition member says that I must be smoking something, I will tell you something, Madam Chair. I sometimes am warm in this House, I sometimes am hot in this House, I'm sometimes smoking hot in this House, but I never just smoke in this House.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. It doesn't surprise me to see the minister stand here and argue against cutting his own salary because he can't do his job. You know, it is something. If he had any confidence in his own legislation from five months ago, he would have no problem voting for this amendment. Actually, we had put forward an amendment to the original 15 per cent debt ceiling bill from five months ago, a very similar amendment that would have imposed financial penalties on cabinet if they exceeded the 15 per cent debt-to-GDP limit that they have here, and they voted against it then. They obviously had no confidence in their own legislation, and that's why they're voting against it now. I'd be pretty embarrassed if I introduced legislation five months ago and after just five months I had to repeal my own legislation. I would be pretty embarrassed by that.

Now, the Minister of Finance seems to think that going to talk to creditors is going to restore our credit rating. I believe that real, serious, concrete action is what's going to restore the credit rating of this province, but the minister seems to think that travelling to New York and Toronto to talk to the creditors is what's going to solve things. What happened when he did it? While he was talking to them, they immediately reduced our credit rating. His very presence in the room with these guys hurt the credibility of this government. The creditworthiness of the government was hurt by the minister going in to talk to them. It was bad enough when they saw the budget, but when they actually talked to the minister and saw how loopy their plan was to get our debt under control, they said: "Oh, goodness. It's worse than we thought after we actually met the guy."

I respectfully ask that the Minister of Finance refrain from talking to the creditors for the next three years. Not only will it save some money on travel, but I think it will save a heck of a lot of money because every time the Minister of Finance has appeared before the creditors, we've gotten a credit downgrade. I mean, it's like if I had my own personal creditworthiness hurt because I wasn't paying my credit card bills on time, and then I went to meet with, say, representatives of the TD Bank, and I was shifty, and my plans were not very solid, and then they downgraded my own creditworthiness again. Well, that's pretty much what happened. The Minister of Finance walked into the creditors' offices and said: I'm good for it.

You know, a lot of us will remember The Simpsons episode where Lisa Simpson was President, succeeding, bizarrely enough, a President Donald Trump. I don't know how they saw that coming. But Lisa Simpson was President, and she had serious trouble with the debt load left to her government by President Donald Trump, and she hired her brother, Bart Simpson, to go and deal with the creditors. She hired Bart Simpson to deal with China and all of the other countries who had been lending money to the United States, and Bart's plan was essentially just to go and lay out their concerns and be a cool guy. Well, it didn't really work in The Simpsons, and it didn't work here. When the Minister of Finance went and spoke with the credit-rating agencies, we got a credit downgrade just from his very presence.

Now, the Minister of Finance has blamed everything on the price of oil here. Well, if our credit rating was downgraded only on the price of oil, why did we not get our credit downgraded a few days before the budget was introduced rather than less than 24 hours after the budget was introduced? Why did we not have our credit – the price of oil has not significantly changed. In between the time of our last downgrade and our current downgrade there has been no significant change in the price of oil. In fact, oil may have actually come up a little bit.

There has not been a significant change in the price of oil since we last had our credit rating downgraded and the credit-rating downgrade of last Thursday, so obviously oil is not the reason for that. The price of oil hasn't changed in that time. All that has changed is that this government, after introducing a grossly irresponsible budget, has now got a piece of legislation before us, that we're debating right now, that repeals any limit whatsoever on the ability of the government to borrow. That is why we've had a credit downgrade.

And he has presented to us this bizarre false dichotomy, that we have only two options: massive deficits or a PST. It doesn't even cross their minds that we could cut spending in this province. It doesn't even cross their minds that the most bloated government in the country, that spends two and a half thousand dollars more per capita on programs than British Columbia, can't cut a dime out of its budget, that the only two options before us are massive deficits in perpetuity or a provincial sales tax, which would probably still come with additional deficits. Madam Chair, the Official Opposition believes that there is another way, a way that has worked for Alberta before, and that is to get our spending under control and balance the budget without raising taxes.

The Minister of Finance has talked about the oil and gas roller coaster. Well, I know the Member for Calgary-Greenway put it very well when he said that the minister is not even on a roller coaster anymore; he's on a merry-go-round. They're just going in circles on this. This government is just as dependent on the price of oil right now for its revenue projections as any government that has preceded it. Now, any government who promises you that they can do away with the price of oil and gas as a factor in our budget is not being honest with Albertans. No government can do it. You can maybe lessen it a little bit – you can cut spending, or you can raise taxes – but the fact is that any politician who tells you that they can get us completely off the oil and gas roller coaster is not being honest with Albertans.

This government – this government – is just as very dependent on the price of oil and gas as the last government and the government before that. They are being disingenuous with Albertans when they say that they're just going to wave their magic wand and get us off this through something they call diversification, which is really just a rehashed corporate welfare program, one that we saw in the 1980s, that left Albertans holding the bag for billions of dollars in misplaced adventures in the private sector by the government, when the government decides that it knows best, when the government can pick the winners and losers in the private sector and say that this sector is important and this one is not, so this sector is going to pay taxes to support another sector or another specific business. That's what they're doing.

If they believe that that is going to somehow wean us off oil and gas revenues in the next three years – they don't believe it, Madam Chair. They don't believe it's possible because it's not. It's been tried before, and it cost taxpayers billions of dollars. They should do what's right and put their own money where their mouth is and vote for this amendment. If they cannot balance the budget, if they cannot keep the debt under 15 per cent of GDP, then they do not deserve to have the big pay increase that comes with being a minister.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak on behalf of this amendment today. You know, it's very concerning. I believe as a member that's been elected to this Legislature that we show some fiscal responsibility when it comes to the planning and the expenditures of the money that we have in this government. We are talking about a debt ceiling only because we have gone from a place of having a surplus to where we are now, in debt. Any time you start to consider debt, it's a very serious thing, whether it's personal or whether it's on behalf of the citizens of this province, within the government.

Debt ceilings, unfortunately, have had to be considered when governments have too often had a problem with spending and incurring debt and seemingly no ability to control that. Madam Chair, a debt ceiling, then, is when the government sets out for itself a legal limit, a legal limit on the amount that it can actually borrow. We are now having to have that conversation, and for many Albertans we're sort of looking at each other and wondering why we are having this conversation when just so recently we had a positive bank balance, so to speak.

You know, this amendment speaks to accountability. It speaks to the fact that the Executive Council is called to be accountable for the decisions that it makes, for the bills that it passes, for the bills that it brings before this Legislature. It's accountable for how it runs the various ministries of this government. When it does a good job, it deserves the credit that comes from doing a job and having done it well and spending the taxpayers' money wisely. When it does not, it should be accountable for those decisions as well. Now, a very famous President of the United States, when talking about accountability, said that the buck stopped with him. I think that's what this amendment is trying to get at, Madam Chair. It's trying to speak to this whole issue of accountability and how the executive is accountable for the decisions that they make.

You know, there's a maxim in society that says that the higher the level of responsibility you have, the higher the level of accountability. We see that in the working world. We see that in government, or at least we should see it in government. When you take on a higher level of responsibility, you're expected to take your experience and your judgment and apply it in a wise way to whatever the decision is that needs to be made. In this case, we're asking in this amendment that . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee must now rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Rosendahl: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 10. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, say no. So ordered.
The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Seeing the time and the progress we have made this morning, I move that we rise and reconvene at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:57 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, May 24, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Hon. members, as is our custom, we pay tribute to members and former members of the Assembly who have passed away since we last met.

Mr. Malcolm Glen Clegg October 2, 1933, to May 20, 2016

The Speaker: A lifelong resident of Fairview, Alberta, and former Member of the Legislative Assembly, Malcolm Glen Clegg passed away, surrounded by his family, at his home in Fairview on May 20 at the age of 82. Glen Clegg was first elected to the Legislative Assembly on May 8, 1986, serving as the Member for Dunvegan. He was subsequently re-elected in 1989, 1993, and 1997. During his 14 years of service as a member of this Assembly he served on many committees and served as Deputy Chair of Committees from 1993 to 1997 and deputy government whip from 1999 to 2001.

Mr. Clegg also served in local government, serving in Fairview first as a councillor from 1967 to 1971 and then as reeve from 1971 to 1983. He continued his community service with his ongoing support of the Rotary Club and his two terms on the board of governors of NAIT from 2004 to 2010.

In a moment of silent reflection I ask you to remember Mr. Clegg as you may have known him.

If you would please rise, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark. I would invite all participants to sing in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, with our admiration and respect and years of gratitude to members of the families who have shared the burdens of public office and who serve today, I would like to welcome members of the Clegg family who are present in the Speaker's gallery. Please rise as I call your names and remain standing until you have all been introduced: Mr. Greg Clegg, son of Mr. Glen Clegg; Janis Clegg, daughter of Mr. Clegg; Connor Clegg, grandson of Mr. Clegg; Garrett Clegg, grandson of Mr. Clegg; Megan Carlton, granddaughter of Mr. Clegg; and Dr. David McNeil, a close friend of Mr. Clegg. If we would honour our guests today.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: We have some guests. The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 29 fine people from the diverse constituency of Drumheller-Stettler. To introduce the members and the parents and the students of the Lakeview Christian School in this facility is an honour for me. Would they please rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure – c'est mon plaisir – to introduce to you today two classes, grades 6 and 7, from the beautiful constituency of Leduc-Beaumont. They are from Saint-André academy, and they are accompanied by – and if you would please stand as I say your names – parent helpers Ms Laurie Widmark, Mrs. Lori Pumphrey, Mr. Ronald Engen; their teachers, Mrs. Angela Rastovski and Miss Katelyn Williamson; and the rest of the classes. Would you stand, please, and could we give them the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four guests from my constituency. Located in Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, Africa, It's Time, creates a partnership between Africa and Canada. The organization brings awareness among African diaspora in Edmonton to use their skills and resources to make a difference. I'd ask them to rise as I say their names to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. Shuni Masikini, Justine Maman Katana, Clotilde Nsimine, and Joe Littlejohn. I ask you to please welcome my guests here today.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to all members of the Legislature an inspiring group of students from my constituency and their social studies teacher, Dan Scratch. I'm proud to have Inner City high school here today. They count among their students some of the most hard-working, intelligent, and inspiring youth not just in Edmonton but the entire province. They are here at the Legislature today. They came by to visit my office. I invite everyone to give them the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you a multitude of stakeholders representing industry, nonprofits, other associations, and workers who join us for this afternoon's introduction of Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act. To our guests in the gallery, please rise when your name is called: Jamie Bonham, NEI Investments; Mike McSweeney and Justin Arnott from the Cement Association of Canada; Mark Ramsankar and Jonathan Teghtmeyer, Alberta Teachers' Association; Franco Savoia, Vibrant Communities Calgary; Alan Myles, the Co-operators insurance; Kevin Lecht, insulators local 110; Steve Clayman, Thermal Insulation Association of Canada; Ed Whittingham and Sara Hastings-Simon, Pembina Institute; Dr. Joe Vipond, Canadian Association of Physicians for the Environment; and Sean Collins, Jocelyn Kowalski, Nicholas Kwan-Wong, Edwin Edou, and Nakita Rubuliak from Student Energy.

We are proud to have these guests here today. I invite all members to extend to them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Ms Livia Kummer. Livia is from Zurich, Switzerland. She is here as an exchange student through Rotary International. Livia is living with Amanda Porter, one of our pages, and is currently attending Sturgeon composite high school for her grade 11 year. Livia is attending session today as she is very interested in representative democracy. I would ask the Assembly to please extend the traditional warm welcome to Livia.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of hard-working and dedicated NDP volunteers from the Fort McMurray-Conklin and Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo EDAs. They, like thousands of others, are all in Edmonton as evacuees from the fire, but I am glad that they've taken the time to be with us here today in the gallery. I would ask our guests to rise as I say their names: Stephen Drover, former candidate, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo; Sheldon Dahl, VP, Fort McMurray-Conklin; Brian Sulz, secretary, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo; James Hayward, treasurer, Fort McMurray-Conklin; Peter Fortna, president, Fort McMurray-Conklin; Liam O'Keefe, youth director for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo; and Sara Florez, member at large for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. I'd ask all members to give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you four wonderful people from the YMCA: Nick Parkinson, Karen Neff, Tim Haak, and Kyle Dias. Nick is the president and CEO of the YMCA northern Alberta and has over 29 years of experience and involvement. Karen is the manager of the Castle Downs Family YMCA. She has been fantastic in the community and plays an integral role in developing our community in Castle Downs. Tim is a board member and has been involved with the YMCA for 43 years. He's married to Janice, who has been involved for even longer. Kyle is the youth adviser for the leaders in training program. You'll be hearing more about their work in my member's statement later today, but for now I'd ask that we give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two individuals who do great work in the constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods. First, I have Mr. Duncan McColl, the principal of Hillview school. Over the past five years Mr. McColl has worked hard to secure grants to have solar panels put onto the roof of the school, to have an endoscope energy usage monitor installed, and to set up community gardens outside the front of the school. I'd like to thank Mr. McColl for all the hard work and for being an astounding leader for the students that he oversees and teaching them to take better care of the environment.

I also have here Mrs. Deanna Norton, who is the president of the Hillview parent council and who is also part of the Woodvale Community League. Deanna spends countless volunteer hours making our community a better place and has been involved in many initiatives benefiting Woodvale and Hillview. Deanna, your passion and drive are truly appreciated by all your neighbours, including myself.

Please let's give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly my wife, Lisa Smith. Lisa and I have been married going on close to 31 years now, and I can tell this Assembly that she is an amazing woman. I first met Lisa in church when she was in junior high, and we started seeing each other while we attended university. She is a graduate of the University of Alberta, an author, the national president of LifeCanada, and the amazing mother of our three children, but most importantly she's the love of my life. Would Lisa please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Wildfire Update

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Much of Alberta experienced a cold, wet long weekend, but unfortunately this did not extend to the Fort McMurray area. The southern edge of the fire received between three and five millimetres of precipitation this weekend. The northern edge of the fire, where it is burning most actively, received none. There is also no significant precipitation in the forecast for the next couple of days.

Mr. Speaker, there were 40 new wildfire starts yesterday. What's concerning is that most of these were due to campfires that were abandoned. There are 17 active wildfires burning in Alberta right now: one out of control, that being the Fort McMurray fire; one being held, the Peace River-Clear Hills fire; 14 under control, including the Lac La Biche fire; and one turned over to the local authorities.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, right now we have more resources working on the Fort McMurray fire, which continues to burn out of control, and fewer in other parts of the province, where the risk has gone down. With the cooler weather and as firefighters contain more perimeter of the Fort McMurray fire, we can now safely deploy more firefighters on the ground, which is beginning to happen. Now that it is safe, around a thousand more firefighters should be on the ground in the next two weeks from across Canada, the U.S., and South Africa, and we welcome these well-trained firefighters coming to our aid.

While fire risk has fallen in most parts of the province, it remains high to extreme in Fort McMurray. Suppression efforts will be a challenge today. Air quality also remains a concern in the region. As of 11 o'clock this morning air quality was 5. The fire has experienced some growth since we were last together, primarily along the northern perimeter. It is now approximately 522,892 hectares. Mandatory evacuations continue to be in place for Fort McMurray, Anzac, Fort MacKay, Fort McMurray First Nation, and Gregoire Lake Estates.

The regional municipality of Wood Buffalo has allowed a phased re-entry to all oil sands sites subject to environment and public health inspections. Re-entry of workers to these sites is subject to similar criteria as for residents of Fort McMurray. One is that wildfire is no longer an imminent threat and that air quality is within reasonable levels. The industrial sites have their own rigorous guidelines according to approved occupational health and safety for their sites. Currently they are assessing conditions and working with the province and the regional municipality to prepare for the re-entry of workers once their own re-entry conditions are met.

Efforts to support the re-entry of residents beginning June 1 continue. Restoration of the hospital and cleanup resumed on Sunday, and the mobile urgent care centre now has an operating room, an anaesthesiologist, an obstetrician capable of surgery, and a general surgeon. The centre is available to anyone in the Fort McMurray region, including first responders, restoration workers, and, when the time comes, Mr. Speaker, to returning evacuees while the hospital restoration work continues.

Progress is being made on safe drinking water, but a boil-water advisory remains in effect until the lines can be flushed, reservoirs are cleaned, and sampling confirms water quality. Water quality sampling equipment is being installed in the Athabasca and Clearwater rivers. Electricity service has been restored to more than 90 per cent of the community, including outlying areas like Anzac and Fort McMurray First Nation. Natural gas has been restored to more than 99 per cent of homes outside Abasand, Waterways, and Beacon Hill.

A re-entry information booklet has been posted on the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo website. It contains valuable information and tip sheets on things to bring with you when returning to Fort McMurray, safety precautions, how to safely clean up after a wildfire, and how to prevent mould. We are still on track for a voluntary phased re-entry beginning June 1, but I remind all Wood Buffalo residents that all services will not be fully operational by then. Some people, as a result, may choose to wait. Others may want to come back just to collect belongings, survey the damage, and seek some closure if they've lost their homes before returning to their temporary accommodations. For those who have an existing health condition, particularly a respiratory condition, or are pregnant, they should wait to return until medical professionals advise it is safe to do so.

While recovery work is proceeding, we continue to support the evacuees. Mr. Speaker, as of today, the debit card distribution moves to Alberta Works offices in 13 communities. There's the Grande Prairie office, the Lac La Biche office, four offices in Edmonton, one in Red Deer, four in Calgary, and also the Alberta Works offices in Medicine Hat and Lethbridge. As always, anyone with questions, especially those outside of those communities, can call 310.4455 for more information. As of last night, 35,797 debit cards were distributed to 73,395 people, for a total distribution of $76.4 million.

We continue to receive questions about how evacuees who have left Alberta can get their debit cards. We need to do so in a secure fashion so that the right funds are provided to the people who need it. At the distribution centres and, as of today, at select Alberta Works offices evacuees present proper identification in person, which makes verification easier and efficient. We are looking at options to ensure a similar level of verification for out-of-province evacuees and hope to have something in place soon. Please keep in mind that there is no cut-off date for evacuees to get their debit cards in person. If you qualify, you will get it, and debit cards will be available when evacuees return to Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, we are also continuing our outreach efforts to ensure evacuees have the information they need. The telephone town halls we've held to date have attracted around 10,000 participants or more each night, so we will continue to hold them while the demand is there. This week they will be tonight and Wednesday and Thursday nights. I look forward to answering the questions of the evacuees all three of those nights.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Jean: Here is the state of Alberta's economy: Albertans are carrying record levels of consumer debt, our economy has shrunk by 4 per cent just over the last year, housing prices dropped by 3.5 per cent in Calgary last month, and the number of Albertans on EI has gone up almost 70 per cent. Times are tough. People are looking for relief, but the NDP's only response is to bring in a tax that hurts and punishes families, businesses, hospitals, schools, and charities right across Alberta. With Albertans already hurting, how can the Premier possibly justify bringing in a carbon tax that makes every single Alberta family poorer?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, our government is proud of our climate leadership plan. We are proud that we are taking steps to finally establish Alberta not only as a participant but as a world leader on environmentally responsible energy development. Our plan has been praised by industry leaders and by environmentalists alike, and we will carry on with it notwithstanding the fact that the folks over there would just stick their head in the ground and do nothing. That is not the way we are going to go ahead with it.

Mr. Jean: During an economic downturn it's often the social services sector that is asked to do almost all of the heavy lifting. Food bank use goes way up, the demand for housing increases, and those seeking addiction services usually increase a lot. But under the carbon tax the cost of heating buildings and driving cars, essential for providing these services to these people, will only increase dramatically. That means less money for those in need. How can the Premier possibly justify a new tax on charities and the most vulnerable in Alberta at a time when they are already spread so thin?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting. In fact, when one looks globally at the issue of climate change, the people who are most vulnerable to its effects are the very poor, the very hungry, the very vulnerable, that the member opposite claims to be concerned about. We are concerned about those people. We're concerned about those people across this planet. We're concerned about those people here in Alberta, and our climate leadership plan will ensure that when it comes to the levy, they are properly rebated. We'll achieve climate leadership as well as fairness.

Mr. Jean: This NDP carbon tax also means we will have less money to build hospitals, less money to build schools and hire teachers and nurses. Alberta Health Services pegs heating costs from the carbon tax alone to go up by $6 million this year. That's 60 fewer nurses, 240 fewer hip surgeries for Alberta patients. Elk Island public schools alone is pegging costs rising by $260,000 per year. That's fewer teachers and fewer teachers' assistants in the classrooms. Can the Premier explain why resources should be taken out of classrooms and hospitals to pay for her new NDP carbon tax?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, together Albertans are going to work on the project of reducing our greenhouse gas emissions because it is the right thing to do. Schools will do it; teachers will do it. And you know who's going to love to do it the most? The students in those schools. I can't tell you how many times I have met with students who are so glad that we are finally taking action on this and that they are not living in a province where their political leaders try to pretend that there is no problem.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Jean: We were absolutely thrilled to see the National Energy Board, Canada's world-class independent energy regulator, give approval to the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion. It was good news. It's proof that our pipeline review process is the best in the world in analyzing the environmental and economic impact of new pipeline projects. But not once in the 553-page detailed report was Alberta's new carbon tax mentioned as any possible solution or reason for approval. Can the Premier please explain why it wasn't mentioned in this report?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I didn't write the report, so I'm not going to talk about that. What I will say is that as I spoke to people who are still unsure about whether they support Kinder Morgan, particularly people in B.C., they are exceptionally interested to learn about our climate leadership plan, they are very excited to hear about our cap on oil sands emissions, and they are much more likely to consider supporting that application when the decision comes to the federal government in a few months to come.

Mr. Jean: It seems the economic and environmental merits of the new pipelines do not rely on Alberta having a carbon tax according to the National Energy Board, nor does it seem like an important point for mayors in the lower mainland, for instance, in British Columbia, who continue to make anti-energy statements in an attempt to undermine the independent work of our national energy regulator, that does a good job. How can the Premier possibly justify asking Albertans to pay billions in new taxes when it's had zero impact in the actual pipeline approval process?

Ms Notley: Well, let me just begin, Mr. Speaker, by once again reminding the member opposite of the many, many years he sat in government federally in charge of making decisions and by reminding him just how many pipelines got built. I think zero. Zero would be the number.

Our government is committed to having a reasonable, balanced approach to energy development and a reasonable, balanced conversation with people on both sides of the issue because we understand that you can protect the environment and you can grow our energy sector responsibly. The two don't have to be pitted against each other the way those folks like to do.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, we should maybe ask the more than 100,000 Albertans that are out of work whether we're pitting them against one another.

If the Premier is going to bring in a carbon tax that makes life more expensive for families in Alberta and more difficult for our economy to compete, the government just can't ignore the fact that the National Energy Board along with several environmental activists she shared the stage with last fall have failed to acknowledge that the carbon tax is playing any meaningful role in getting pipelines approved. Why, then, does the Premier continue to insist the carbon tax is bringing us closer to a pipeline when the only thing it's doing is making Alberta's families much, much poorer?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: First of all, Mr. Speaker, the carbon levy will not make Alberta's families much, much poorer, but it will ensure that they live in a cleaner, greener province with a much brighter future. That it will do for sure. In addition, it will bring us closer to a pipeline. That's all I have to say.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation Consultation

Mr. Jean: Well, Mr. Speaker, more bungle. Bill 6 has alienated farmers across Alberta from the very start of it being introduced. This is no surprise given the refusal of this government to consult on such an important piece of legislation to Albertans. Now, after months of delay, the Bill 6 working groups have finally been announced – tah-dah – but only 29 per cent is represented by ag coalition, a group that actually represents 97 per cent of the ag sector. Meanwhile a former NDP caucus employee and a failed NDP candidate both managed to crack this important list. Can the Premier explain . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting. The MLA for Strathmore-Brooks disagrees that people should have labour rights. In fact, I think he disagrees with the Supreme Court of Canada and, as an extension, therefore must also disagree with their view of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The fact of the matter is that we are consulting with workers and employers, both of them, and that's something that we have to do as we work to bring people together on this important piece of legislation that will keep farm workers safe.

Mr. Jean: Frustration with this government's inability to properly consult with Alberta farmers and ranchers began to pour in as soon as these panels were named. The Western Canadian Wheat Growers have rightly stated that this NDP government "yet again, kicks sand in the faces of the tens of thousands of hard-working [families,] farmers and ranchers in our great province." I couldn't agree more. Can the Premier please explain how they failed once again to properly work with farm communities in this Bill 6 working group?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just to clear the air and to get the facts out, because sometimes that's a convenient way to have a debate, farm owners and farm managers – there are 35 of them on these, and there are 27 farm workers. So, to be clear, if there is a concern about balance, it's not about workers being overrepresented. On the contrary, though, what this is about is bringing people together to have reasonable conversations in mediated settings so that we can find common cause and move forward in protecting the health and safety of those people who work on our farms.

Mr. Jean: With this government's mismanagement of Bill 6, it's no surprise that even with these panels, there's no timeline for when these working groups will report back or if their recommendations will even be binding. The result is farmers and ranchers feeling frustrated, with no trust in this NDP government's plan. This uncertainty is only causing more stress to Albertans. Will the Premier please establish firm timelines and guarantee Alberta's farmers and ranchers that they won't be changing the rules on the fly?

Ms Notley: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, and almost on the contrary, our minister of agriculture has made it very, very clear that here's how it's going to work: we're going to keep working until we find the solutions that work for everybody. If it's done in two months, that's great, but if it takes us into 2017, we'll do that, too, because we're going to listen to people and we're going to hear them and we're going to let them talk amongst themselves to make sure that we have all the information necessary to make the best possible decision. We're not going to put an arbitrary end to it. We're going to make sure that everyone has the time to be heard because that's what we committed that we would do.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Government Communication and Consultation

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP government continues to botch public consultation almost every time they attempt it. We have reports of the Municipal Affairs minister saying one thing on linear assessment to rural communities and almost a completely opposite thing in front of urban communities and something else in this House. To the Premier: can Alberta municipalities believe what the rurals were told by the minister, what the urbans were told by the minister, or is there some other plan that's actually going to happen with linear assessment?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that we're going to put in place a regime which allows and welcomes people to come to the table to negotiate better solutions. Ultimately, there will be a mediated process where they come up with a negotiated solution that depends on their unique circumstances, their income levels, their industry profile, all that kind of stuff. That's the way it's going to work. We need to fix the problem. We need to do it fairly, understanding the unique nature of each community, and that's what the minister is committed to doing.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, now we have a fourth answer to add to the first three.

Last week government announced a consultation on minimum wage. It seems a little late and rather disingenuous when they've already made it clear they're committed to the $15 and the Premier doubled down on the timeline at the Leap Manifesto meeting. To the Labour minister: since you've stated that there are as many reports that do not support minimum wage as ones that do, will you now hold back on the increase and listen to what Alberta businesses are telling you, that the $15 means fewer people hired, fewer jobs, fewer opportunities on the economic ladder for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Members opposite seem to not value the people who are getting paid minimum wage or the work that they do. We know that at the level of $15 per hour or less there are 300,000 Albertans that are making those wages. We know that 33,000 of those Albertans are single parents with children. We are committed to respecting equality, respecting income security, and respecting human dignity by moving forward with our consultations on increasing the minimum wage to $15.

Mr. McIver: Well, with this, Minister, those single parents won't have any jobs at all.

We've also heard the government is reviewing the Workers' Compensation Board, Mr. Speaker. We heard this last year, when the Premier was reviewing it, she said, and then we heard that the Labour minister is reviewing it. To the Labour minister or the Premier: will Albertans see the result of the Labour minister's review? Will you actually table the results in this House, or will that information be kept from Albertans, as was the case with the review that the Premier claims she did last December?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's absolutely critical that Albertans feel confident that the Workers' Compensation Board provides fair compensation and meaningful rehabilitation. As part of our overall strategy to review agencies, boards, and commissions, I have asked for a very in-depth review to begin. The work is currently happening. I would encourage all Albertans to review what is being posted on that review's website. We are going to be asking for public input. I will be receiving an interim report this fall, with a final report coming next year. Based on the work of this report and the panel, we will then look at what we need to do to change WCB.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Public Service Compensation

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As Alberta faces a severe economic downturn and tragedy in Fort McMurray, I see people coming together, being creative, and stepping up to help their neighbours. The people of Alberta are doing more with less, and I see this everywhere, everywhere, that is, except the provincial government. The Premier said that she will honour public-sector contracts, but the situation has drastically changed. The province is not in the same position as when these contracts were negotiated, and Alberta's tremendous public servants understand that when 100,000 of their neighbours are out of work, it's only fair to earn the same next year as you earned this year. To the Premier: are you open to renegotiating public-sector agreements to bring in a wage freeze?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've answered this question a number of times, but I'm happy to answer it again. Under the laws of our country as well as our province, labour relations collective agreements are a matter of law, and it's not my view that we break those agreements once we've made them.

Now, we will certainly engage in future negotiations in a very careful way, understanding that our obligation is to the people of Alberta, to ensure that we get good deals on new contracts. But we will not be breaching the determinations of the Supreme Court of Canada on this matter and breaching already . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Clark: Well, that's very curious, Mr. Speaker, because clearly one group of public servants is being treated differently than the rest. During estimates the Minister of Health confirmed that the budget includes savings from reductions to physician compensation. Now, I think the Alberta Medical Association deserves praise for agreeing to come to the table in difficult times, especially in light of yet another credit-rating downgrade. Now, to the Premier: have you approached other public-sector unions with the same request, that they come to the table to help find savings in an economic crisis?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we have done is to go to those groups who are not unionized, and we have said: we want to look at freezing your salaries. For instance, we have done that with senior managers in the government of Alberta and also at agencies, boards, and commissions. The AMA is not a union, and doctors are not union. So, yes, we have approached them as well, and we will continue to do that because we have an obligation on the part of Albertans to try to avoid the 6-ish per cent a year increases that are coming from that particular sector right now.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, the Premier and others have said in the past that you can't discuss your plans in order to preserve the bargaining process. Yet the Minister of Health has said that she expects physicians to go along with her assumptions on cost savings, which were laid out in the budget before contract negotiations even began. Again to the Premier: which is it? Are you honouring the bargaining process and existing contracts, or are you prejudging the outcome of negotiations before even sitting down to bargain?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we're talking about two different types of conversations. But, to be clear, you can talk about generalized assumptions with respect to cost without that necessarily being negotiations on particular issues. One does not negate the other. So the minister is having respectful conversations right now, and I believe she will continue to do so.

2:10

Tourism Promotion

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, the low Canadian dollar has increased tourism to Alberta, especially in tourism towns like Jasper, Banff, and Canmore. Given the tough economic times this is good news for these towns. To the Minister of Culture and Tourism: what is being done to capitalize on the effect that the low dollar is having to boost the tourism industry and to support related jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. We know that the low dollar is attracting many visitors from around the world to this province. We're working with Economic Development and Trade on job-creation programs. We have worked on capital investment tax credit programs, which will increase Alberta's supply of new tourism products and facilities. This past weekend, for example, I was able to announce the expansion of the Royal Tyrrell Museum. As well, there were previous announcements of expansions of the Calgary Zoo and Fort Edmonton Park. We're investing in world-class tourism infrastructure, which will attract more people to this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the tourism industry is poised for further growth from both international and domestic markets, to the same minister: what strategies are being implemented to help cities and towns like Bragg Creek become as successful as their more established counterparts?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. My ministry continues to fund major events that attract visitors, that help build tourism in local communities such as Open Farm Days, Western Canada Summer Games, Alberta Culture Days. We're providing and will continue to provide support for growing rural tourism in this province at a conference that provides workshops and working opportunities. We're going to continue providing that support. We're very proud of the work we're doing so far.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to direct my second supplemental to the Minister of Seniors and Housing. Given that tourism-based communities are facing a severe shortage of affordable housing spaces to accommodate the hard-working staff that cater to tourists, what is being done to address this affordable housing crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to say that more Albertans will be housed in safe and affordable homes because of the significant capital investment our government is making through Budget 2016. Nearly $1.2 billion will be spent over the next five years to build new homes and to renew existing housing. Using evidence-based analysis, new housing will be built in areas of need, and we're looking at all areas of the province, including tourist communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Provincial Achievement Tests

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Provincial achievement tests are administered to improve student learning, inform Albertans about our education system, assist educators in planning for instruction, and hold the government accountable. The Fraser Institute's report on Alberta's elementary schools for 2016 shows that the number of students in grade 6 that are failing to meet the acceptable standards on provincial tests has risen from 14.1 per cent to 15.9 per cent. That's almost a 2 per cent decrease in achievement. To the Minister of Education: what are you doing to reverse this troubling trend and improve the results for all Alberta students?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks very much for the question. Certainly, it's very important to deal with these issues around the provincial achievement tests. We want to make sure that literacy and numeracy are focused, and we need a long-term plan. The best thing is to make sure that you have teachers in front of those kids. To that effect, I have 1,100 new teachers from this budget by restoring funding to education.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that one of the vulnerability measures included in the analysis is the gender gap in student achievement and the widening gap between girls and boys in language arts and since boys are falling behind girls by almost 6 per cent in grade 6 and this gap has been a growing concern for years among teachers, to the Minister of Education: how will your government close this gap and even out student achievement levels?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, this gap is significant, and certainly we are looking at these results with a critical eye to make sure that we have the resources in place to make sure our students get the education that they need to focus in on literacy and reading and so forth. For young boys it's very important. One of the best ways to do that is that we managed to save about 1,200 support staff jobs in schools because of the restoration of funding to K to 12 education.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a number of stakeholders have criticized the provincial achievement tests and have called for an end to them in grades 6 and 9 and since according to grade 3 teachers surveyed by the ATA, the grade 3 learning assessment pilots have failed and given that there is no alternative that would provide Alberta students, parents, administrators, and teachers with objective information about Alberta's education system, will the Minister of Education commit to maintaining the PATs in grades 6 and 9?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks very much for the question. Certainly, it's important for us to keep a finger on the pulse of where our students are at any given point and to make that demonstrably possible. It's also important to make sure that you work together equally with your partners – parents, teachers, students, the support staff, and so forth – that you're creating the best assessment possible so that you're not just trying a reductive way of doing this but are also, perhaps, providing a diagnostic tool by which teachers and parents can see where their kids are and where they can have that room for improvement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Carbon Levy and Postsecondary Education Costs

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In budget estimates recently I inquired about Advanced Education, the carbon tax, and unintended costs. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar stated, "I wasn't involved with any of the consultations with respect to the climate leadership plan." To the environment minister, therefore. If your ministerial colleague did not consult with postsecondary institutions, surely you must have, so please tell us: which postsecondary institutions did you consult with, and will the carbon tax be downloaded onto students?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, through the fall, through the climate leadership plan consultations undertaken by the Leach panel, we did a number of technical engagement sessions with a number of institutional players. Certainly, I examined in great detail efficiency investments that we could make with respect to buildings, codes, retrofits, and so on. That is why we have put aside $45 million for an energy efficiency agency that will be working with various stakeholders, including institutional stakeholders like postsecondaries, hospitals, and schools, to ensure that we've got the . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Rodney: Since we didn't hear any specific answers, we'll try this another way. Given that the minister in charge stated, "We expect administration at universities to manage their budgets accordingly so that . . . when they're subjected to the carbon levy, the financial administration is dealt with accordingly," to the environment minister again: how do you expect postsecondary institutions to manage their budgets if they have no indication from you specifically what the costs of the carbon tax will be for them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is why we are undertaking a great deal of work around energy efficiency so that individuals, small businesses, and institutional players like postsecondaries, schools, hospitals, and others can reduce their costs and also, at the same time, reduce their emissions. That's why we are putting a price on carbon. That's why across the spectrum that approach is favoured as a market-based approach that gets to reducing pollution and ensuring that we are preparing Alberta for the economy of tomorrow.

Mr. Rodney: By decreasing, I think she means increasing.

In any case, given that the adult learning review was announced a full year ago and that when I asked in this House on April 7 when it would finally begin, you stated, "in the fullness of time" and given that in Advanced Education estimates the minister indicated that this review will be instrumental in determining how students and institutions will deal with the carbon tax, to the minister: is this now the fullness of time, and will you launch this review before most students resume their classes in September?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, we are still in the fullness of time. Once we reach the appropriate time to launch the adult learning review, we will do that. I did inform the member in estimates that the adult learning review will now be conducted in phases, one of which will be a funding and tuition review, that we plan to undertake in the near future. I will keep the member updated as well as all of the other members of the House when we begin those undertakings.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

2:20 Carbon Levy and Charitable Organizations

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. From January 2015 to January 2016 the number of Albertans on employment insurance skyrocketed by over 90 per cent. These challenging times increase pressures on charities like the Red Deer Food Bank, whose usage is up 60 per cent, and distress line calls are spiking. Albertans are looking for hope, but this government's job-killing policies and its rushed, ideological phase-out of coal are just making things worse. To the Minister of Human Services: what are you doing to mitigate the increased demands placed on charities as a result of your ideological, job-killing plans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Budget 2016 restores funding to the program, and there is an increase in the line item for employment-related funding. We will be there for Albertans when and where they need the supports from government. We will make sure that we provide the necessary supports.

Mrs. Pitt: I should ask the same question because I didn't get an answer, but we'll do a different one. Given that charities are already facing a double-edged sword, with donations decreasing and demands for their goods and services increasing, and given that the current government has chosen this time to implement an ideological carbon tax on everything, which will increase operating costs for every single charity in this province, why is this government sharpening the blades of an already difficult situation by taking aim at the hard-working charities that Albertans rely on?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for the question. You know, we are working throughout the nonprofit sector, with charities and others, to ensure that we've got efficiency programming that fits their sector because, of course, one size does not fit all. I will just read a quote from Vibrant Communities Calgary.

We applaud the government as it tables the legislation to mitigate the impact of climate change. We especially appreciate the rebate of the carbon tax for the working poor in our province. Coupled with other key initiatives ... it will help to reduce poverty in Alberta.

This is certainly an item that we will consult on carefully ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, why does nobody care about the charities from the government side?

Given that some of the United Way's largest and most generous donations come from the natural resource sector and given the current government's ideological manifesto that seems custom made to kill jobs, hurt industry, and punish Albertans, to the Minister of Human Services: what's your plan to deal with the financial burdens your risky, ideological agenda is forcing Alberta charities to carry?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, the only ideologues in this Chamber are across the way, who would deny the science of climate change and have us do nothing. Meanwhile, on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, we are pricing carbon so that we can reinvest it in the economy, so that we can invest in energy efficiency across the economy, so that we can make our economy resilient, and so that we can ensure that we understand that the science of climate change is real, and inaction is not an option.

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order?

Landowner and Leaseholder Rights

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, residents of Cypress-Medicine Hat elected me to this House to stand up for their property rights. While in opposition the NDP spoke out about how wrong Bill 36 was in stripping landowners of their rights. Now in government for 12 months we have seen no action to reverse this damaging bill. When will this NDP government stand up for landowners and repeal Bill 36?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. Mr. Speaker, here I was hoping that the Official Opposition critic for Health would ask a health question, but I'm happy to enter into this dialogue as well.

We certainly have taken this into consideration and will continue to, and we will be happy to discuss it with all members of this House moving forward.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that this NDP government is perfectly content with damaging policies that hurt everyday Albertans, like the carbon tax, it's no surprise that they are backing down from their previous stand against Bill 36. Will this government commit to my constituents that property rights are an issue that they will respect? I can guarantee you that you will hear from Albertans.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, we have nothing to apologize to that side for on the question of property rights. We were in this House standing up for the rights of property owners in the face of a number of pieces of legislation – Bill 36, by the way, was never proclaimed – and we were standing here talking about due compensation, due process, and all of those things when the Wildrose Party was just a gleam in Preston Manning's eye.*

The Speaker: I believe it's the second supplemental.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that that member and that government have had a year already and given that property owners, including ranchers in my riding of Cypress-Medicine Hat, some for four or five generations, have worked or lived off the land and given that resource stewardship should be top of mind for all Albertans, will this government at least recognize that ranchers are protecting the land and ensuring the continuing prosperity of our province?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, our grazing leaseholders and ranchers are an integral part of the economy in southern Alberta, which I also represent. I have had many occasions to meet with them. I am pleased that we're moving forward on the Auditor General's recommendations and, in addition, having really great, productive conversations with farmers and ranchers on how to reduce their greenhouse gas emissions and continue their excellent practices, that already occur around a high-quality stewardship of the land.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Renewable Energy Strategy

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our Premier seems to have a keen admiration for Premier Kathleen Wynne and her antihydrocarbon policies. She often identifies the current Ontario government as a key partner for Alberta, with the belief that our interests are aligned. Both Premiers believe that demon coal must be eradicated from the Earth. One of them, for now, has publicly admitted to a profound distaste for clean-burning natural gas. To the minister of environment: as Alberta is already following Ontario's misguided and costly direction on coal, is natural gas next?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our climate leadership plan ensures an orderly phase-out of our coal facilities and our coal emissions and a phase-in of renewables and natural gas. This has been well laid out in the climate leadership plan. Of course, legislation that we will introduce this afternoon gives practical effect to many of these undertakings. This is a made-in-Alberta climate leadership plan. It establishes us as leaders on the continent and, indeed, as leaders among the world's energy producers.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Made in Alberta, copied from Ontario.

Given that this government seems intent on following Ontario's lead and given that Ontario's massive public and consumer burden and escalating electricity costs provide a textbook case of the pitfalls of an irresponsible accelerated transition away from coal-fired electricity, again to the minister: can you outline for this House the missteps Ontario made in their costly subsidization of renewables and how Alberta will avoid the taxpayer and consumer burden associated with such policies?

The Speaker: The minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the hon. member's assertion that we are following anyone in this matter is ridiculous because Alberta is leading in a number of different ways. Our economy-wide price differs markedly from the cap-and-trade approach that has been undertaken by the government of Ontario. Certainly, our coal-fired phase-out is following a different timeline, the federal timeline, that's already established, with the accelerated retirement of six remaining units. Of course, there are many different things about Alberta, which is why we have designed the carbon price as we have, to ensure that we have competitiveness retained for our energy-intensive . . .

2:30

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Leading in job losses and taxes, indeed.

Given that Premier Wynne will be welcomed this week at the Calgary Chamber and given that Premier Wynne's approach to natural gas, bitumen, and the National Energy Board process are all extremely detrimental to Alberta's interests, again to the minister: what is on your and our Premier's agenda? Do you plan to meet with Premier Wynne, and how will you ensure Alberta's best interests are at the forefront of your discussions?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, what's on our agenda is a respectful engagement with other provinces on matters related to environment and climate change and not engaging in Twitter-style hissy fits at every available opportunity. What is on our agenda is to lead this country in pricing carbon, to lead this country in investments in energy efficiency, and to lead this country in terms of our investments in innovation and technology to make our energy industry competitive for the future.

Registry Service Renewal Reminders

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, when this government announced that it was no longer going to issue registration and licence renewal reminders through the mail, the minister assured us that the transition would be, quote, quite smooth. But we are now hearing of thousands of individuals just in Calgary alone, several of whom have been seniors, who have been ticketed for expired licences because they did not receive any renewal notice, either electronically or by mail. Is this what the minister meant by smooth?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We brought in online renewal reminders in order to find efficiencies in government. We have saved over $3 million this year, and we will continue to save funds going forward. This is about moving Alberta into the 21st century when it comes to renewal reminders. As we move into the future, we're going to need to ensure that we're meeting Albertans where they're at. There will be, as we've seen, some discomfort with change – there always is – but we, going forward, are doing our utmost to ensure that there is as little complication with this transition as possible.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government clearly has no plan for rolling out electronic renewals smoothly – advertising was limited – and, of course, without consultation and given that Albertans shouldn't have to pay more because of this government's inability to manage this issue, will the government consider waiving the fines for individuals until the system has been corrected and is actually running smoothly?

Ms McLean: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, as mentioned by the member opposite, we did roll out notifications for Albertans through radio and print media, largely, in order to ensure that Albertans know that this change is occurring. Additionally, media have done us a great service in letting Albertans know about this, and registries in particular have also helped Albertans out by ensuring that they're getting their renewal reminders online. Going forward, we're continuing to encourage Albertans to sign up for renewal reminders online in order to save the economy . . .

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, given that the ticket for failing to renew your licence is a hefty $230 and given that this is starting to look a lot like another hidden tax grab on hard-working Alberta families, will this government waive the fines or reinstate mailed renewal reminders, or will it just admit that this is yet another tax grab on hard-working Alberta families?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Working together with our partners in Justice, we have worked with the city police as well as the RCMP to let them know about these reminders coming online and to let them know that discretion in these circumstances may be warranted, depending on the particular circumstance of the individual. However, going forward, it's important that all members of this House take the opportunity to inform their constituents that we are going online with renewal reminders. This is the way of the future, and we are headed into the future instead of being still in the past, as the opposition would have . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Softwood Lumber Agreement with United States

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's clear that not all provinces in Canada are on the same page when it comes to the new softwood lumber agreement. The last time this happened, softwood lumber companies moved their investments abroad, which harmed Alberta jobs and communities. I asked about where we were at on this issue last fall, and I ask again. To the minister: what have you done to get all Canadian provinces to agree on a new softwood lumber agreement?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Member, for the question. It is a very important question for our industry. Going forward, I'm a little concerned that the Americans are more concerned about what's happening with their presidential election than about softwood lumber. I was somewhat heartened some weeks ago when President Obama himself had mentioned softwood lumber publicly. It was broadcast on CBC Radio. Knowing that we have an opportunity here in a couple of weeks to talk to federal ministers right across the province that are involved with forestry, up in the Yukon, to be able to address this issue head-on, hopefully, going forward, we'll get an agreement on the softwood lumber agreement.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the forest industry does not all agree on what the parameters of a new softwood lumber agreement should be and given that only British Columbia and Quebec are being vocal about what they think a new softwood lumber agreement might look like, to the minister: how are you speaking up for Alberta to a national audience and ensuring that Alberta's forest industry is heard?

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I have been speaking up on the issue, most certainly. We've had the opportunity to correspond with several federal ministers, both myself and, actually, the Premier as well, knowing that it is most important to our industry, and make sure that our federal counterparts know it as well. Those conversations continue, and they will continue, making sure that we get the best deal possible.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta forest industry stakeholders are eager for a new agreement and that they are preparing for an expensive four-year court battle if a new softwood lumber agreement is not reached, to the minister: despite your best efforts with the federal government and other provinces, if you are not successful soon, how many Alberta jobs will be lost while we wait for you to defend one of Alberta's largest renewable industries?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and the member for the question. The Canada-U.S. softwood lumber agreement expired October 12 last year. We have until October 12 this year to write that new agreement, but I do share some of the member's concerns that the Americans do not seem to be, at this point anyway, willing to come to the table with anything fruitful. I'm willing and able and pushing the federal government, as it's a federal agreement, to push our American partners as much as possible to make sure we can get this deal.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Agricultural Policies

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year Alberta has the privilege of hosting the federal-provincial-territorial meetings of agricultural ministers from across the country. The partnership between the two levels of government is vital for the success and prosperity of Alberta's ag sector as well as income stability and many of the supports for our province's hard-working farmers and ranchers. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: how will you use this year's FPT forum on agriculture to ensure that Alberta's farm families and rural communities are well supported?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and the member for the question. I'm very much looking forward to hosting colleagues of mine from across the country in late July to talk about some of the pressing issues facing Alberta producers. I'm pleased to inform the House that the hosting and logistical planning aspects of the 2016 conference are on track. I already had the opportunity to cohost conference calls with all provincial ministers and the federal minister to discuss emerging issues facing producers across the country and right here in Alberta. I've already spoken about the need for a good deal for producers in business risk management programs and advances on rail transportation for our agricultural commodities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government has shown great willingness to work on environmental issues and given that the current federal-provincial agreement Growing Forward 2 funds innovative stewardship plans for our agricultural producers, again to the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: will you be pushing for a renewed federal-provincial agreement at this year's FPT to help Alberta farmers become even more efficient and environmentally sustainable than they already are?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member correctly pointed out the good work that our current Growing Forward agreement allows farmers and ranchers in our province to do on environmental issues. Just last year this agreement allowed us to earmark about $10 million for programs to improve the environmental impacts of ag operations, from on-farm solar to watershed enhancement to irrigation efficiency. GF2 concludes in 2018, however. Our government is committed to working with the federal government and other jurisdictions to ensure that the next policy framework negotiation on program development is completed as scheduled to ensure continuing programming between the frameworks.

2:40

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many issues in the agricultural sector such as trade, food inspection, and intellectual property are within federal jurisdiction and given that Alberta producers need the support of federal programs to remain competitive, are there any specific issues that the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry will bring forward to his federal colleagues to help support Alberta producers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, there is a wide range of issues that need strong leadership from Alberta, from adjusting to our carbon-constrained future to making sure that we have a regulatory environment that promotes and sustains value-added agriculture processing. Alberta's voice in the national conversation on agriculture is more important than ever. Personally, I'm looking forward to continuing conversations with my counterparts across the country on how the federal government plans to build research capacity that is complimentary to the groundbreaking work being done here in Alberta so that our province and our country can remain at the forefront of innovation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain Pipeline Project

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After three years of careful study the National Energy Board, Canada's world-class energy regulator, has come to the conclusion that the Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain pipeline is in the overall public good of our country, but now the Prime Minister is holding this project hostage, with more bureaucracy and time-wasting political panels. This kind of interference amounts to more delays on a project that we need now. Does the Premier trust our independent, world-class regulator to get it right, and if so, will she tell the Prime Minister to stop the games and get out of the way of this important project?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, first of all, we're not going to take advice from the opposition who thinks that things are roadblocks. I question what kind of red tape or roadblocks you're thinking the Prime Minister is creating.

Mrs. Aheer: Well, to answer the minister, there is no red tape. They are roadblocks, and there is a huge difference, just to be clear.

The NEB is an arm's-length, evidence-driven body that uses science, economics, and consultation to make pipeline recommendations. Given that the Official Opposition leader wrote the Prime Minister asking him to quit undermining our world-class energy regulator, quit standing in the way of pipelines, and quit emboldening the naysayers, will the Premier now show some leadership, stop sitting on the fence, and tell the Prime Minister that all of Alberta is unified and wants him to stop interfering in pipelines that have been independently approved by the NEB?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Well, thank you again for the question. Our province continues to work with the NEB on the process. The first step has been achieved in that it goes to the next step. Again, there are three different processes that have to go to the cabinet, and we're going to support those processes all along the way, and we're going to support Kinder Morgan in that process.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: No preamble.

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, anti-Alberta activists are trying to undermine the integrity of the NEB . . .

The Speaker: Get to the question.

Mrs. Aheer: . . . for political reasons. Given that the mayor of Vancouver just called the NEB process, I quote, a sham and vowed to block the project at all costs and given that the Premier's own Calgary outreach manager organized this mayor's campaign against the Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain expansion, will the Premier or her staff be doing anything to counter this mayor's dangerous and misleading claims, that are a direct attempt to damage the reputation of our independent, world-class energy regulator?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If you want to talk about somebody attempting to damage reputations, it's the Official Opposition. I am very proud of the fact that we have been working in a collaborative, respectful fashion with elected officials from across Canada. If you want to get something moving forward, certainly, treating each other with respect and not undermining and spreading misinformation are the best ways to do that. We're very proud of our government. We've been consistent. We're proud of the fact that we made good progress last Thursday, and we'll continue to work collaboratively with elected officials and Kinder Morgan to move forward.

The Speaker: I've a request to have unanimous consent for introduction of some guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the indulgence of the House to rise to introduce to you and through you a very distinguished Albertan. Dr. Andrew Leach, who chaired the climate leadership panel, has joined us in the gallery today. Dr. Andrew Leach is a professor at the University of Alberta School of Business. He very ably made the recommendations that we are going to be putting into the act today in Bill 20. If the Legislature would give him the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Castle Downs Family YMCA

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about a fantastic organization, the Castle Downs YMCA in the glorious constituency of Edmonton-Castle Downs. The Castle Downs Family YMCA opened in 1998 in north-central Edmonton. Eighteen years on, today it is not only a recreation centre but a centre of the community in north Edmonton, serving over 15,000 participants every year through a range of programs. Thanks to the YMCA's opportunity program, everyone can access its services. Affordability is not an issue. It has helped 28 per cent of the centre's total access financial support via the YMCA Strong Kids fundraising campaign.

Since 2008 YMCAs across the country host Health Kids Day. Mr. Speaker, it's a free community event to celebrate what the YMCA does best, creating life-enhancing opportunities to help grow people's minds and bodies. At our Castle Downs centre over 3,000 people attended.

On January 22, 2016, the NBA All-star Kidsfest was hosted here as well. About 1,300 community members joined this free event. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to say that this turnout was three times more than any other YMCA across Canada.

The centre recognized several years ago that the north side of the city has a large and growing Muslim population and therefore decided to have a few programs to suit the diverse needs, especially for the Muslim women. Now they have women's-only fitness classes. The centre also celebrates Eid with a big bash. Last year their Eid celebration was a huge success and provided the whole community an opportunity to learn about each other's cultural experiences. I invite all members of the House to join me in attending this year's celebration on July 10 and see the fabulous work all staff and community volunteers do to put on such a successful cultural event.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Oil Field Waste Liability Program

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, the oil field waste liability program, or OWL, performs an important function. If a licensee becomes defunct, OWL prevents the public from having to bear the cost to suspend, abandon, or remediate and reclaim an oil field waste management facility. I think we can agree that this is a good program we can all support. In a time of great economic uncertainty, with a record number of oil and gas companies becoming insolvent, there is a need for this program to ensure that oil and gas companies are paying their fair share. However, the Alberta Energy Regulator requires an outlay of cash to meet the terms of the OWL directive. Depending on the size and scope of the company's operation, getting coverage under OWL can require a hefty financial contribution, sometimes in the millions of dollars.

For an example, one local company in my constituency has been told its OWL fee will exceed over $2 million from its operating capital. Now, the Alberta Energy Regulator does allow companies to offset the required deposit by performing a facility netback calculation, or FNC, which requires them to disclose their assets, holdings, and/or provide profitability performance estimates for each of their sites. When an FNC was conducted on the company in question, it did in fact have ample assets to offset the required security deposits. However, because the company is a limited partnership, its assets are held by the partnership and not the licensee holder. On those grounds its FNC was rejected by the Alberta Energy Regulator. The issue is not that the funds or assets were not available, no. The partnership has the assets and is happy to post the security deposit. However, the fact remains that on the basis of a technicality and a rejected FNC, this job-creating project has been stopped in its tracks, more red tape consequences.

I urge the government to reconsider its stance on oil field waste liability fees paid by limited partnerships so this project can get moving forward. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Leadership

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was born and raised in Alberta, and for that I'm thankful. I often think of my childhood and how my father raised me and my siblings. My mother left when I was seven, and I had a lot of questions. I was angry, sad, and frustrated. We didn't have as much as other families, and in my mind we weren't whole. Some might have described us as poor, a broken family. As a child I looked for someone to blame, and I can't even imagine how my dad felt.

He could have blamed my mother. He could have blamed customers. For that matter, he could have blamed anything. But this was not the case, Mr. Speaker. I never, not once, heard my father blame my mom for leaving or blame people who couldn't pay their invoices, that left our family short. My father, even though he didn't have to, took the brunt of everything, accepting and owning his role as the leader of our family. He looked forward instead of backwards. He was hopeful instead of dreadful. He led his family into a better place. He created leaders instead of doubters, including me, even when it seemed unlikely.

Mr. Speaker, I often think of leadership and how to be better. I think of former leaders and the challenges they were faced with. One in particular is John F. Kennedy in the Cuban Missile Crisis. As I look back, I try to imagine the enormity of that crisis and what the President and his advisers were faced with. I imagine the strength, courage, and ownership it must have taken to lead in that moment, not just for the American people but for the whole planet. I also imagine: what if JFK was more accusatory than conciliatory? What if he spent his time blaming and looking backwards at former administrators rather than the task at hand? The outcome could have been disastrous.

For each one of us in this Chamber, we play a role in the future and history in Alberta. It's up to us how we want to be characterized in our roles. Will we blame others for our challenges and stand and be counted only when there's success, or will we stand with it all, good or bad? Hon. members, it's up to you how you'll be defined in the history books. Will you be collaborators of ideas and have the courage and character to own your place in history? For myself and our caucus, we accept our responsibility for the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Minimum Wage

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This NDP government committed to moving towards a minimum wage that will support hard-working Albertans, a minimum wage that would mean fewer Albertans working full-time jobs having to go to the food bank in order to feed themselves and their families.

Unfortunately, the opposition isn't on the side of these hard-working Albertan families. On May 9 the Member for Cardston-

Taber-Warner made a claim that a decent minimum wage is an entitlement, that Albertans don't deserve to earn a wage that helps them put food on the table and live with dignity.

Mr. Speaker, my fellow New Democrats and I fundamentally reject that risky ideology. In fact, it leads me to wonder what the minimum wage would be if the member had his way: $5 an hour, $2 an hour, or maybe he would just scrap it altogether. Just because someone makes minimum wage doesn't mean that they're not working hard. The only entitled mentality that exists in this debate is the one the opposition is arguing, the one that says Alberta businesses can't succeed if they pay their employees a fair and decent wage that pays the bills.

These workers are our family, our friends, our neighbours. Of those Albertans making less than $15 per hour, over 33,000 of them are single-income families supporting children, thousands of single parents that can't afford to buy their children a winter coat, never mind themselves, and who still have to choose between their groceries and their medication. I know the struggle. I grew up in a family where my dad was part of the working poor, where a winter coat was a luxury. This is unacceptable, this is un-Albertan, and this needs to change.

We are working with businesses, with social advocacy organizations, with nonprofits, and with those very Albertans who are struggling to make ends meet. Mr. Speaker, I would strongly encourage the opposition to get on the right side of history here. There is no dignity in advocating for working Albertans to remain in poverty.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Social Licence

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll start with apologies to Dr. Seuss's Green Eggs and Ham. Social licence is what I hear from the NDPers year by year. It makes me wonder where we buy this social licence we want to try. I do not see them where I buy my fishing licence to catch a fry. I do not see them when I look for my driver's licence in any book. My fishing licence cost 28 bucks. It costs 84 to drive my truck. I buy them at my local vendor, but social licence, I have to wonder where to purchase this right to plunder.

There are folks, it seems, who have to talk, who string us along and balk, balk, balk: Justin Trudeau, of whom I'm no fan because of his crazy tanker ban. Energy East, Coderre's not for it, but the river he fills with Montreal's – it doesn't make much sense, I say, but dump it in he does anyway. For driving and fishing there are regulations, but a social licence, it seems speculation.

When you buy one, where is it for, just the province or the world and more? Will it get us just one pipeline, or will it do for more than a few? Do we renew it every year? I would hope not cos I hope it's good until we rot. Can I buy one for just six billion? Carbon capture has left us reeling. What if we add three billion more of taxpayers' money to lay that bore to the coast to export more, more, more.

But who is dealing for this licence? I hope the deal is close to sealing. Will we get a solid contract, or will we have to search for facts? Now, pipeline approval, it's up to NEB, but the Premier will claim credit, just you wait and see. The lines we are awaiting were approved before, with the list of conditions getting more and more. I think the questions most want answered, not vague responses but right on Hansard, are what will it cost and when will it happen? Are we on a path, or are we just flappin'? We need to get our oil to tide to stop our province's downhill slide, so stop the chat and get right at it.

Though presented in prose, this in no way should distract from the seriousness of the questions and concerns brought up. I want to urge the members opposite . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office.

Bill 20

Climate Leadership Implementation Act

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request leave to introduce a bill, being the Climate Leadership Implementation Act. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of the bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, the climate is changing; there is no denying this fact. Doing nothing is not an option. We must take strong and decisive action. Those actions were announced last November as part of our climate leadership plan, a plan that is the right thing to do today and for future generations.

The climate leadership plan will diversify our economy, create new jobs, improve the health of Albertans, and erase any doubt about our environmental record. It will also open up new markets for our products. Mr. Speaker, Bill 20 ensures that Alberta has the legislative authority needed to realize the bold and ambitious actions laid out in our plan.

Thank you to all guests joining us today for the introduction of this important bill.

Mr. McIver: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During second reading of Bill 14, the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2016, I spoke at length about the province of British Columbia and how they've gone some distance to study and actually enforce keeping professional associations separate from the public regulatory boards. I would like to table the requisite five copies of the report, and if members are interested, it's got some very good information.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I rise today to table two documents. The first is five copies of a motion passed by the National Assembly of Quebec on May 10, 2016, which states:

that the National Assembly offer Albertans its support in the fight against the forest fires that are ravaging the Fort McMurray area; that it salute Albertans' courage; that it highlight [a society for protection of forests'] contribution and that of Quebec firefighters who have left to help their colleagues.

The second is five copies of a motion passed by the National Assembly of Quebec on May 12, 2016, concerning the creation of a single securities commission.

3:00

Hon. members, I believe we had some points of order today. The Government House Leader.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. At approximately 2:20 today the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo called the Minister of Environment and Parks a hack, not once but twice. This violates Standing Order 23(j), someone who “uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.” Mr. Speaker, that’s completely offensive. It’s often very difficult to hear, with the zoo-like sounds that come from the Opposition, when ministers are answering questions, but I did hear the hon. member say that twice.

This is not the first time that I have risen on a point of order in connection with that particular member. The lack of respect shown on the other side for ministers who are trying to answer the questions that they put to us, Mr. Speaker, is continuing to be a real problem in this Legislature. If they think that sounding like that and making that racket when ministers are trying to answer questions is helpful to this place, I think they’re sorely mistaken.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to the point of order today. I think there are a couple of key points to discuss. I think what we have here are some comments that may or may not have been made off of the record. I think that there’s been a long-standing tradition of comments that the Speaker may or may not have heard, and I think you can find some points of order from April 7, 2014, as well as March 19, 2012, with respect to comments that were made off the record and not in Hansard. Having said that, if in fact the member did say that, I would be happy to withdraw and apologize, but it isn’t traditionally the function of the Speaker to rule what has been said off the record or on the record.

Furthermore, during that particular exchange, Mr. Speaker, the minister used language that makes accusations about this side of the House, that we have risen on numerous occasions to highlight as a concern, in the form of that member making accusations about this side of the House being climate change deniers. This type of language is not helpful when it comes to maintaining order inside the Chamber. I could understand how members of this side of the House would have temperatures rising when the hon. member is making a very serious allegation about members on this side of the House.

Furthermore, I find it rather disappointing that in his point of order the Government House Leader would make an accusation utilizing language that is likely to create disorder in calling us animals by implying that it is a zoo.

The Speaker: To be clear, to the Government House Leader, I think your comment with respect to the sounds of a zoo was unnecessary. To the Opposition House Leader, he did not call you animals. He said that it sounds like a zoo. So, please, it seems to me that both of you might want to withdraw your comments.

Now, with respect to the original point of order I did not hear the comment being made. I accept what the Opposition House Leader said, that if it was made, it was unintended. I would accept it as that and make that decision, with respect, but I did not hear the comment.

I believe there was a second point of order raised by the leader of the third party. Is that correct?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I didn’t actually catch you recognizing me for that, and it’s kind of pointless now to deal with it because the minister that was introducing the bill treated it as debate rather than introducing the bill. Since you didn’t recognize me, it’s kind of pointless, so I’ll just withdraw that.

Orders of the Day Government Bills and Orders Third Reading Bill 17 Appropriation Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s my privilege to rise and move third reading of Bill 17, the Appropriation Act, 2016.

The Appropriation Act will allow our government to implement the Alberta jobs plan. In doing so, we will be supporting families, investing in infrastructure in Alberta, diversifying our energy markets, and supporting Alberta’s businesses.

Mr. Speaker, now is the time to act on economic diversification, job creation, and to get Albertans working again. I ask all members of the House to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to Bill 17? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m rising to speak to Bill 17, the Appropriation Act, 2016. We’ve got a number of bills before the House right now dealing with overall budgetary matters. Just introduced a few minutes earlier, we’ve got Bill 20, the carbon tax bill, which will bring forward billions of dollars in new spending. We’ve got Bill 10, that will repeal any limits whatsoever on the capacity of the provincial government to borrow and to run deficits.

So Bill 17 is before us now, the Appropriation Act. Unfortunately, the government has rejected every single one – every single one – of the dozens of amendments that the Official Opposition has put forward.

You know, earlier in debate today on a separate bill the Minister of Finance presented Albertans with two choices and only two choices. One would be massive deficits, and the second would be a PST. Well, I believe there is a third way, Mr. Speaker, and it’s not to borrow from our children, and it’s not to massively increase yet another round of taxes; it’s to get our spending under control.

Right now this province is spending two and a half thousand dollars more for every man, woman, and child on the operations of government than British Columbia does. Let’s put that into context. If Alberta spent as much per capita as British Columbia, we would have virtually no operational deficit. We would still have an overall consolidated deficit, but on the operational side we would be balanced, and it would be a massive, massive step forward to getting our finances back under control.

Now, the government, because they’re a new government, likes to talk as if this deficit is taken in isolation, but the fact is that there has been a long road behind us of overspending and overborrowing. Many of us can recall the pride we had when Ralph Klein held a sign over his head saying “paid in full” and we had no debt on the books anymore. We had paid our debt in full, and we had built up to $17 billion in the sustainability fund, a fund intended to get us through one to two or at most three years of deficits as a rainy-day fund.

Rather than control spending, the government increased spending. We went through a period of massive, massive spending increases, and as a result the sustainability fund was drawn down.

The rainy-day fund was spent in a rainy day, but then it continued to be spent even as we entered another serious economic boom. You know, with oil at $100 a barrel we were still drawing down the sustainability fund.

What happens when you spend your rainy-day fund on sunny days? Well, when the storm comes again, there's not going to be a lot of sympathy left for you when you've already spent your rainy-day fund. That's the position that the province finds itself in right now. We've spent our entire sustainability fund. We've taken on billions and billions of dollars of debt, and now the government, in Bill 10, is proposing to repeal any limits whatsoever – period – on the ability of the government to borrow; hence, the Appropriation Act in front of us today, Bill 17.

Bill 17 is going to continue to increase spending at a massive rate every year of the projected fiscal plan. It can't cut spending in a single year, and even where the Official Opposition has proposed very minor, sometimes even symbolic, cuts to things like the communications budgets in ministers' offices, the government has seen fit to vote those amendments down. They are not accepting a single amendment.

They have stated that they're opposed to cutting even a penny of government except – except – for the emergency budget. The emergency budget is the only part of the budget where this government, at least on paper, is going to cut spending, and it's an old trick.

An Hon. Member: Tourism. They're cutting tourism.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, perhaps they're cutting tourism as well.

They are cutting the emergency budget, and it's an old, old trick, where they try to make the deficit appear to be smaller at the beginning of the fiscal year by saying that they will spend less, and then at the end of the fiscal year they say: well, who could have predicted that there'd be a disaster somewhere, that there'd be a flood or a fire or a tornado or a windstorm? These things are going to happen, and we're going to have to spend the money on them regardless. When there's a disaster that happens, it doesn't matter who is in power, the money is going to get spent to fix the problem. Instead, what this is is an old accounting trick where they get to blame it politically at the end of the year and say: "Aw. The deficit isn't our fault. An emergency happened."

Well, Canadians, Albertans plan for this in their private lives. Businesses plan for this. Households plan for this. We know that there's always going to be a difficult time ahead. We build rainy-day funds into our household finances, into small business finances. We purchase insurance in the expectation that we could face disasters in our own lives. You know, your home could be damaged in a flood. It could be damaged in a fire. You get household insurance because you know something is going to happen. The equivalent of that for government is the emergency and disaster spending fund, and the government has said: "No. We're not expecting there to be a significant amount of money that's going to need to be spent this year."

I guarantee you, Mr. Speaker. I'll put a hundred bucks down to the Minister of Finance, if he'll take it, that they will spend probably twice as much, at least, on emergency and disaster spending as he is projecting to spend in this budget. The amount of money that they are appropriating right now – perhaps, actually, the Member for Calgary-Currie would take me up on this wager. I know he's done so before.

Mr. Nixon: He keeps losing.

Mr. Fildebrandt: He keeps losing, the poor guy. The poor Member for Calgary-Currie keeps believing the Minister of Finance's numbers will work out as so, and it doesn't end up as such.

I'm offering either the Member for Calgary-Currie or the Minister of Finance or anybody on the government side – I will bet them $100 that the government will spend probably twice as much on emergencies and disasters as they're actually budgeting to do in the Appropriation Act here, in the budget. [interjection] I don't see any confidence on that side. Could I get a show of hands of a single member willing to take me up on the bet? It's pretty good odds that you will spend twice as much, at least, on emergencies and disasters at the end of the fiscal year as you're projecting to do right now. Can I get a single member on the government side to take me up on this?

The Speaker: Hon. member, through the chair, please. Let's move on.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Sorry. Mr. Speaker, the wager stands to you as well. My apologies. If you wish to take me up on the offer, I would certainly welcome it.

We're going to be spending twice as much, at least, on emergencies and disasters as they're saying that they're going to here. I guarantee you that this government is going to bring forward a supplementary supply bill not more than eight to nine months from now, possibly even sooner, to make up that funding gap. They're going to blame it on everything else even though we are here right now saying that your budget does not appropriately account for how much you're guaranteed to spend on emergencies and disasters. We actually already might be there because of the events of the past few weeks. So there we've got a significant deviation already from what we know will be the year-end results in the budget, from what they're actually projecting in the fiscal plan. The year-end results will almost surely be significantly different.

Now, the hon. Government House Leader just likes to repeat like pulling the string on the back of a doll: oil prices, oil prices, oil prices. Well, when they had a budget here in the fall, we warned them that their oil price projections were ridiculous. We warned that they weren't going to be anywhere close to reality, and they said: "Oh, you're fearmongering. You're trying to hurt confidence in Alberta's finances." Well, we were trying to restore confidence in the finances by putting forward amendments to this bill, to the budget, which would properly reflect the price of oil. They projected a massive recovery in the price of oil that every member of the opposition, I would dare say – I believe that even all the other opposition parties as well said that their price-of-oil projections were ridiculous and they would not recover as they were saying.

In fact, they even provided years 4 and 5 of a fiscal plan without any numbers whatsoever attached to it. They didn't even provide numbers in years 4 and 5 of the fiscal plan to say how much they would bring in from income tax and corporate income tax and oil and gas royalties. All they said was: we're going to bring in a lot of money, and it's going to be really awesome. That's all they said, and we called them out on it, and they said: just trust us. Well, we didn't trust them, but they passed the bill anyway, and what did they do? They didn't come anywhere close to the revenue projections in the very first year – in the very first year – and I guarantee you, Mr. Speaker, that they're probably not going to hit it again.

Indeed, we should open to page 22 of the fiscal plan. I would invite the Minister of Finance to open to page 22 of the fiscal plan right now. This is one of my favourite moments from estimates, and I think it needs to be seen here as well. I encourage all members of this House to open up their fiscal plans right now like this was class time. Please open up your books to page 22, and look at the chart. There is a table on page 22 that lists a few things. It says: income tax revenue, corporate tax revenue, other taxes, then carbon levy.

I was wondering if the Minister of Finance could read the title of that table for me. He seemed to have some difficulty doing that during estimates. He was unable to read the title, and I spelt it out for him. Math might be hard, but English should be pretty easy for members of the House here. The title of that table was Tax Revenue, and the minister was unable to read it because what they're doing here is bringing forward, as a part of the budget, a massive new tax on Albertans, a massive carbon tax, that is actually closer to $6 billion a year, depending on how you factor in the rebate system, but popularly reported in the media as $3 billion a year, in addition to the massive tax increases they've already levied on Albertans.

In the spring session of last year they brought forward a 20 per cent increase in the business tax. They brought forward an up to 50 per cent increase in our personal income taxes, finally doing away with the flat-tax system that, I believe, was a very big contributor to making Alberta the most competitive place to invest, raise a family, and do business in North America. That was in the spring session, and then in the fall session – in addition to that, they kept a bunch of the other smaller tax increases proposed by the previous government – they brought forward a host of new tax increases. Now Albertans are paying far more for things like gasoline and diesel and heating their homes, transporting goods on railways, things like this, that are hurting the competitiveness of Alberta.

What do they think Alberta needs now? A carbon tax. More taxes. What does the Minister of Finance have to respond to the legitimate concerns of the Official Opposition about what their fiscal policies are doing to Alberta? He bizarrely accuses the Official Opposition of wanting a provincial sales tax. Mr. Speaker, the government has jumped the shark at this point. The NDP has jumped the shark. They don't have any idea what they're doing.

They've stopped even trying to answer questions. They've stopped trying to answer questions. I mean, just during question period we asked questions about Bill 36 and property rights. We couldn't find a single member on that side who even knew what we were talking about. Property rights are a foreign concept to the government across. They've jumped the shark, and they're not even attempting to answer real and legitimate questions anymore. It's because they're embarrassed about what they're doing – they are embarrassed – and if I introduced a 15 per cent cap on the debt-to-GDP of this province just five months ago and five months later I was sitting here trying to repeal it, I'd be pretty embarrassed, too. I'd be pretty embarrassed, too.

This is a budget that is a shot in the dark. They have no idea when they even attempt to maybe get back to a balanced budget. I'll at least give them credit now for being honest and saying that they have no idea. It'll maybe be 2024 but sort of, if things work out really well. This is opposed to the practice of other governments and their own government last year. Just promise to balance the budget at some future date, and every year move it back one more. This is not just an issue that's plagued the NDP. Governments of all partisan stripes in multiple jurisdictions across Canada have done it. Many people can remember, you know, the federal governments in the 1980s under Trudeau and Mulroney. They would promise a balanced budget four years out, and every year they would move their projection one more year down the road. We saw it from the Getty government. We saw it and we see it now from this government.

This is a very dangerous path to get onto because we are now running our ninth consecutive consolidated deficit, Mr. Speaker.

We have seen a decline in the net financial assets of this province of approximately $60 billion – $60 billion – over the last decade. From 2008 to 2018 projected, we will have had a decline in our net financial assets of almost $60 billion. It's an absolute meltdown in the balance sheet of this government – it's an absolute meltdown – and they have no intention of fixing it. I don't blame this government for inheriting a deficit. I don't blame this government for inheriting a significant debt load and a sustainability fund which has almost run out. I don't blame them for that, but I do blame this government for not caring one iota about actually fixing it. They have no intention of righting the ship.

I think at this point, Mr. Speaker, that they have made a political calculation that their electoral coalition doesn't care about fiscal responsibility. They've made a political choice, a very political choice not based on sound economics, not based on sound finances. They've made a political choice, a political decision. They're hoping that the group of voters that they need to convince to vote NDP in the next election doesn't care about balanced budgets, that they don't care about ending the practice of borrowing in this province, and that they will instead be able to replace the concerns that some Albertans have about deficits with unlimited borrowing so that they can spend, so they can buy Albertans off with their own money.

But the problem with socialism, Mr. Speaker, is that eventually you run out of other people's money, and that is where they are headed. That is why we have had five credit downgrades in this province, why we have had a credit downgrade the very day after they introduced their budget. If it was about the price of oil, we would have had a downgrade as the price of oil went down; instead, one day after they introduced their budget, less than 24 hours, this province received a credit downgrade.

Then the Minister of Finance said: I'm going to make it better and go talk to the creditors, and I'll convince them that I'm good for the money. What happened as soon as he talked to them? They gave us another downgrade. It was the worst thing that he could have possibly done. I ask that the Minister of Finance please refrain from speaking to the creditors of this province in the future. It's very bad for the fiscal reputation of this province. And when did we get another credit downgrade? Just on Thursday, while we were debating Bill 10 to eliminate the debt ceiling whatsoever in this province. That sent a very strong signal to creditors in this province that we're not good for the money, that we weren't even going to promise, however lightly, that we were going to have any limit on borrowing in this province whatsoever.

Instead, we are going to wave some magical diversification wand where the Minister of Finance would so brilliantly direct capital investment in the private economy away from oil and gas and into other sectors, that it would replace the revenue from the oil and gas royalties, that that would somehow convince our creditors that it's sound. But his attempt to convince them led to another downgrade because nobody believes that that's actually a sound plan.

An Hon. Member: There's no plan.

Mr. Fildebrandt: It's not a plan. NDP stands for No Darn Plan, Mr. Speaker, No Darn Plan.

Mr. Speaker, just the other day, as we're debating Bill 10 to eliminate the debt ceiling, in the morning we were talking about this. The Minister of Finance said: "Don't worry yourselves. Just trust me. It's good. This is necessary. I'll just diversify the economy by waving my magic wand, and the creditors will all think we're good for the money." Well, what happened? Just later in that afternoon we received another credit downgrade, our second – our second – from S&P. How many more are there going to be before this government gets serious? Does DBRS have to downgrade us again? Does S&P have to do it yet again? How many times are the creditors going to come knocking on the door of this government and tell us to get our actions together before we actually do something about it?

This is irresponsible, Mr. Speaker. I've spoken about my niece Lucy. She was born right around the same time that the budget was introduced. Lucy is going to have as much debt to her name by the time she is old enough to vote in this province as it would take to put her through SAIT.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Under 29(2)(a)?

The Speaker: No. I believe that 29(2)(a) does not apply in this situation.

The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 17, the Appropriation Act, 2016, the government's request from the taxpayers for about $50 billion to pay for things that haven't been fully disclosed yet. Now, I appreciate that the government has introduced a budget where they've talked about a lot of the things they want to spend money on, but the government itself has admitted that a lot of things are in there that they haven't actually fully disclosed, including a large part of the capital budget. The projects haven't been fully announced yet. I know that the minister in charge of that won't even argue with me there because he understands that.

Mr. Speaker, here's the problem. The government is asking the taxpayers to back them on a whole bunch of money, which is what governments do, and that's fine. But what the government doesn't really have a good answer for is: what's the public getting out of it that's in their favour in the long term in particular? In the short term the government talks about some of the nice things they're going to buy for people, and some of those are good things. They're building away on a school program that the previous government wisely announced and began work on, and the government has wisely decided that that was a good idea and to continue with that.

But, Mr. Speaker, they're falling short in a number of areas. I know that when the government was first announced, they took great glee in repeating over and over and over and over again complaints, for example, about maintenance, deferred maintenance. They went on at great length, talking about billions of dollars in deferred maintenance and the previous government, what terrible people they were because they had this deferred maintenance. And the government said repeatedly – the minister has a smile on his face when he's arguing with me because he knows that they said this. And they actually had the courage to come in this House and say: we're going to spend a lot more on deferred maintenance because we care. Well, that sounds pretty good except that when you read the government's business plans, all that caring doesn't really get much improvement in the condition of the infrastructure with the deferred maintenance.

In fact, in the government's own business plan it shows that between now and the end of the capital planning period in those business plans, though they spent lots more money, lots more money, as they promised – that's a promise they kept, Mr. Speaker.

They're spending a lot more money. Now, here's the promise they're not keeping. The average condition of the roads and the other infrastructure: actually there's going to be a higher percentage in poor condition and a lower percentage in good condition after spending all that money. Wow. It's kind of making the previous government look pretty good at this point.

But let's move on, Mr. Speaker. There must be a bright spot here, so let's go to the health facilities that the government repeatedly talked about deferred maintenance on and how they were going to spend a lot more money and make it a lot better. In their own business plan, at the end, it shows that they are spending a lot more money, but it shows the percentage of infrastructure in poor condition increases and the percentage of infrastructure in good condition decreases. So they spent a lot more money, and did they go forwards? No. They're promising to go backwards.

Well, there's a promise that the public should be more aware of, which is why I'm talking about it right now, and a promise that the public would have pause about giving them all of this money if they're going to do as they say and spend a lot more money and get less results. It doesn't really add up, Mr. Speaker. It just doesn't add up. What's really crazy about this is that I don't have to embellish this because it's in black and white in the government's own documents. There's nothing I've said here that is in the least bit embellished because they have put it in black and white in their own documents.

Let's move on to government-owned buildings and facilities, where they're spending more money and have promised to slay the dragon of deferred maintenance. Well, once again they've kept that promise of spending more money. But wait, Mr. Speaker. In the business plan the percentages of buildings in better condition, in good condition: whoops, that goes down. The number is smaller.

Dr. Starke: The dragon is healthy.

Mr. McIver: The dragon is healthy.

On the line where it talks about the buildings in poor condition, it's either the same or higher. Mr. Speaker, the promised improvements are not there.

But wait. It gets worse than that, Mr. Speaker, because the government is going to be $10.4 billion in deficit this year, leading to $57.6 billion and $2 billion a year in interest payments without touching the principal. That is if the government's revenue projections come true. Now, I know that they are hoping to have a pipeline bail them out. I would like to think every member in this House is hoping for a pipeline to come. The problem is, Mr. Speaker, that it may not actually bail them out. It will help. It will help a lot. But if you look at the government's projections on revenue, where we asked about it in budget in treasury and finance, the numbers on the revenue from oil and gas royalties actually require the province to sell more oil and gas than we can physically ship from the province today.

They've already budgeted in a pipeline that doesn't exist, and they're not sure it's going to exist. No. In fairness, maybe it's more rail. We'll be shipping more rail, and we don't know whether the railcars will magically appear or not. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that they have actually budgeted to sell more oil and gas – this is the government, by the way, getting us off the oil and gas resource roller coaster – in future years than the province has the physical capacity to take away today. They haven't got an explanation about how they intend to have it taken away.

All of these really ugly numbers that I've laid out from the government's plan – and, again, I haven't even had to embellish them, they're so bad. Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the revenue numbers they're projecting may not come in because (a) they don't have the physical capacity to take away what they say that they're going to take away, and (b) the prices that they have projected for the oil and gas are actually higher than the industry experts say are going to happen. They're in a whole heap of trouble, even much more than they admit to in their black-and-white numbers, which is why all Albertans should pause very, very long and hard before they think that they ought to trust this government with this much money when they are clearly – clearly – without any plan to be responsible with it.

Now, we tried to help. The Progressive Conservative caucus, Mr. Speaker, gave the government the $4 billion challenge, where if they saved $4 billion a year in operating over two years, they would have to borrow a lot less. It wouldn't get them out of all the trouble that they're in, but it would help. Of course it's on the operating side, so, you know, $4 billion a year is $4 billion a year forever, so over five years there's $20 billion fewer that could be spent. You would think the government would be pretty darned interested in that, but what did they do? They scoffed. They laughed. They said: forget it; it can't be done. We even kind of showed them how to get three-quarters of the way there. We showed them several examples of where they could find those efficiencies without cutting front-line services, without laying off doctors, nurses, teachers, those things that people love. Yet the government scoffed at it.

They even scoffed at our suggestion based on fact out of Alberta Health Services' own notes, that say that $3.2 billion a year is roughly the cost of emergency room visits. Of course, the same document says that about 90 per cent of those aren't emergencies. Now, we're not foolish enough to tell the government they could save 90 per cent out of that $3.2 billion. But if you take the 90 per cent and you go down to 90 per cent of $2.7 billion, $2.8 billion, that's the number that you're looking to reduce. That's not how much you could save. Let's just say that the government could cut that in half by delivering those nonemergency services in a nonemergency room. That's actually worth considering the possibility of. There could be a billion dollars and a half a year savings, a billion and a half a year forever, right there, the one piece. That's a pretty big piece of the $4 billion challenge. We handed it to them, Mr. Speaker, on a silver platter, and they kind of scoffed at us. They laughed at us. They made fun of us. They said: why would we do that?

I'll tell you what, Mr. Speaker. While they're not willing to find any efficiencies, they sure have lots of suggestions for other people to find efficiencies. The environment minister, when asked in this House, "How are schools going to pay for the carbon tax?" said, "They'll find efficiencies." When the environment minister said, "How are charities are going to pay for this tax?" they said, "They'll find efficiencies." When the environment minister was asked how municipalities would pay for this tax, she said – you got it – "They'll find efficiencies." The same goes for not-for-profits, for hospitals, for businesses, for families. The government wants the whole rest of the world to find efficiencies. The first efficiencies they say that they can find themselves and the only efficiencies they say, their words: we'll have to lay off nurses and teachers. Yet, Mr. Speaker, they think the whole rest of the world can find efficiencies where they don't have to stop delivering the services that they do to their families and their businesses and their nonprofits. This government isn't willing to find a single blessed efficiency, yet they pile taxes on, and they expect everybody else to recover from those taxes by finding efficiencies when the government, even when led – led – to water won't drink. They will not drink when led to water.

I have a friend from Mauritius. I don't fully understand the translation, but it's something similar to that, where he says that a horse won't eat Jell-O, but a donkey will. The reference is that somebody that's really, really stubborn won't do that, but the horse will. It is the same as: we tried to lead the government horse to water, and they would not drink. You know what, Mr. Speaker? That would be okay if it was for their own sake, but it's really for the sake of Albertans that they've chosen not to make the effort. Even when the answer has been to a great extent handed to them on a silver platter, they have chosen not to do so.

Now, we heard today in the introduction – I haven't really had time to get into the Bill 20, but of course some of the money we're talking about here is for that, so I feel comfortable addressing it at least in broad terms, Mr. Speaker. But we did find out in estimates that there is no plan in the budget to spend money on green line LRT. That's what we were told there. You know, one of the things about using less carbon is more public transit, so I don't know where that's going to come from, but we were told in estimates that that is not happening.

Then, Mr. Speaker, as if that wasn't bad enough, that the government won't listen to local advice from farmers or businesses or families or charities or schools or hospitals, they won't listen to international advice either by the people that control the purse strings: by Moody's, who lowered Alberta's credit rating; by DBRS, who has lowered Alberta's credit rating; by Standard & Poor's, who has lowered Alberta's credit rating.

Mr. Speaker, part of the revenue the government is depending upon so that they can still take us into $57.6 billion in debt is, obviously, from ATB. Well, I don't know how much ATB is going to be damaged. I don't. It's a sad thing because ATB is very dear to a lot of Albertans. A lot of Albertans depend upon ATB for their car loans, mortgages, other things. For example, if it does cost them 1 per cent to 1 and a quarter per cent more to borrow because of the reduced credit rating – and we did hear in estimates, too, that ATB doesn't borrow; the government borrows for them – I think it's a pretty short leap that I'm going to make right now that if it costs the government more to borrow, either it's going to cost the ATB more to borrow or the government is going to eat the difference for them. So you've got ATB in a position now where either they're going to have to make a lot less money or the government is going to need to have a bunch less money for them or they're not going to be competitive in the marketplace.

It's a pretty competitive marketplace. You can get a mortgage right now for like 2 or 1.9 per cent, so if you add a percentage on to that, that's pretty uncompetitive, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, if ATB has to eat that 1 per cent, I think they'd lose all their mortgage business. I'm guessing, I'm hoping that the government is smart enough not to make them do that, but at some point that 1 per cent or so, whatever it costs more to borrow, is going to cost the taxpayers either through lower profits coming back to the taxpayers through ATB or higher payments on the debt through the government.

Either way, who pays? Taxpayers, the same ones that are expected to find efficiencies at their charities, families, businesses, not-for-profits, municipalities, schools, and hospitals when the government causing all of this can't find a single efficiency anywhere. These are the same people expected to take all the heat to pay more for a carbon tax than they're going to get back. The government hasn't said that, but it's obvious that that's true because what they have said is that they will get the carbon tax back for the gas that they put in their car. They'll get carbon tax for the heat they put in their house. From then on they don't get any more back, but that's not where the expenses end for the households, Mr. Speaker. They'll pay more for anything that rides on a truck because the truck will burn gas, and it'll cost more. Anything they buy in a grocery store, which has a lot of heat and refrigeration, will cost more.

Mr. Speaker, the government hasn't got their act together for this Appropriation Act to ask for this money because they can't explain. They can't make a good case that they're actually going to get the revenue that they say they will. They haven't actually disclosed where they're going to spend all the money. Their plan is to borrow us into oblivion and almost $60 billion without making a single payment against it, and they won't accept help when it's handed to them on a silver platter. When you add all of that up, they have not even come close to making their case to have the taxpayers, through this Legislative Assembly, furnish them with about $50 billion to spend on all the things they want to spend on. They ought to be embarrassed for asking, having not done their homework, which is why I won't be supporting this, and I recommend that other members of this House do not either.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments to the Member for Calgary-Hays under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

What other members would wish to speak to Bill 17? The Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to get up and speak in support of Bill 17. I have been listening intently to the debate through the various stages of this bill going through the House, and I just wanted to take a little bit of time to, you know, bring my thoughts forward on some of the stuff that's been spoken about in this House.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays had, you know, talked about how his party had started some good ideas such as building schools. I know that during the election, at the all-candidates' debate, one of the things that came up is that for those schools the only thing that was built or planned for was the sign saying: new school here. That was about as close as those schools got. I note that there were multiple incidents where some of those schools, in fact, didn't even have land ready for them. It's easy to promise something without money being there to do it. So I'm very proud of our government, that we are actually putting money in this bill to build or modernize 200 new schools because that was an election promise that we made, and we are actually following through on it, which is something that I am very, very proud of.

Now, another thing that was talked about in this House is that certain members of the House do not want to go into debt. The solutions that are brought forward for that are ones that are good catchphrases – "It's the $4 billion challenge" – which, if you look at it, has a lot of what-if scenarios that have no numbers attached to them. You know, I, too, can say: what if we can save a magically high pile of money? That's easy. I mean, it makes for good talking points whereas we in our budget have actually gone through and found reductions and savings.

We have taken things like – we have bent the cost curve down on health care, which was going up at 6 per cent a year, which was unsustainable. We have taken our government spending, and we are holding it at 2 per cent per year, which is a much more reasonable rate of growth relative to population and inflation growth. That is something that we can be proud of because we found those savings without hurting the front-line workers that we rely on for schools, for health care, for road maintenance, and so on.

Going back to debt, the opposition likes to talk a lot about that, and especially the Official Opposition likes to talk about: we should always have balanced budgets; debt is bad. I'd like to point out that we have had an unprecedented drop in the price of oil, a 90 per cent drop in our oil royalty revenues. To that party: I'm wondering which solutions have been provided. Well, as I mentioned, I haven't seen any. I've seen talking points. I have seen reductions in capital spending, mysterious reductions that, not going into details or whether or not I think they would actually be effective, don't actually add up to a balanced budget either. What you get when you have a party that is so ideologically opposed to debt is that you just get these talking points: we've got to have no debt, absolutely no debt. Well, I wonder: what would you give up?

I will take no lessons from that party when it comes to deficits. I will note that the Leader of the Official Opposition, while in government – if he was so ideologically opposed to debt, I don't remember him standing up against the Prime Minister at the time, who ran five consecutive deficits. I don't remember him in a scrum standing up against the Prime Minister and saying: no, we can't have deficits. I don't recall him calling out the Finance minister of the day about those deficits. Do you know why I don't think he was doing that? He realized that in a downturn it was the right thing to do because it's what kept Canadians working at the time. Here in Alberta, it will keep Albertans working. It will lessen the pain as much as humanly possible.

When you are ideologically opposed to deficits, I guess you are ideologically opposed to the schools and hospitals that go with them. That is why, I would think, the opposition has kept their shadow budget in the shadows. I'm proud of our plan. I'm proud of the schools that it will build. I am proud of the roads that it will build all across Alberta, including the ring road which is very close to my heart, in my constituency of Calgary-Currie. I am very proud of the Calgary cancer centre that will also be built as well as the hospitals and fully funding teachers in our schools. While the opposition likes to talk a lot of stuff when it comes to deficit, it's nothing but partisanship.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to be voting in support of this bill, and I encourage all of my colleagues to do the same.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yes.

The Speaker: The Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A number of quick questions for the Member for Calgary-Currie in one of our always invigorating interactions. I hope that he'll write them down and actually respond to them point by point.

One, if he could table the requisite five copies of any shadow budget ever produced in the history of the NDP.

Is he now a supporter of Stephen Harper's budgets?

He blames everything on the price of oil. Could he explain at what price oil would need to be for the budget to be balanced under this budget?

He has said that they are holding spending to 2 per cent growth. Does that include spending from the revenue generated by the carbon tax?

He says that they have not cut spending. Could he please refer to line items under the emergency and disaster budget? Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll take a moment to go through a couple of these. The 2 per cent growth in spending, as the hon. minister of environment has mentioned, in fact, will not go into general revenue. It will be invested back into the Albertan economy or rebated to individual Albertans.

When it comes to Stephen Harper's budgets, as you can imagine, there were a lot of things that Stephen Harper did that I did not agree with. However, he did realize that when there was a massive downturn in the economy – after much persuading, I believe, by the Official Opposition, which was an NDP Official Opposition at the time, he decided to come around – helping Canadians in a downturn was, in fact, a good thing.

There was such a long list.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Table your shadow budgets.

Mr. Malkinson: Tabling the shadow budgets. Well, I would have to say that, of course, the Official Opposition – I believe that the quote I heard earlier was that, in fact, it is not their job to come up with shadow budgets, so I will have to defer to Hansard for the ones you're talking about.

I will leave it at that. Indeed, I am proud of our jobs plan, which is this budget, and I will be supporting it. Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. I'd just ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie if he was familiar with the Auditor's report on the building of schools. Particularly, I would refer him to page 5. There's a chart on page 5 with a timeline of the progress made with the schools. Of course, the top box on page 5 shows the progress made on the schools announced when the previous government, the Progressive Conservative government, was in place, when the vast majority of schools announced were actually on track to be built on time.

Then I would refer the hon. member to the box right below that, which is the first box on the timeline responsibilities of the current government, where it shows nothing being done, basically, in the next six months and way more projects being behind schedule than that last one. Had he seen that, how could he possibly talk about performing on those schools when the previous government didn't, when in fact the Auditor's report, produced and printed under this government's time in office, actually shows the opposite of what the hon. member actually said in the House?

Before he goes there, I would also ask him if he's familiar with the top of page 20 of the same report, where despite the fact that government members from the other side say that money was not in the budget to build those schools, the Auditor actually makes it clear that the government obviously had plans to put the money in place as it was needed to build those schools. I'd just ask the hon. member: did he actually read the report, and what does he have to say to those pages that show his government performing way more poorly, way less well than the previous government did in terms of the timelines for building the schools that he talked about when he was on his feet ever so recently?

The Speaker: Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will note, of course, that in the last budget that was produced by the member of the third party, they had actually reduced the per head funding for schools by capping it, and that was something that as soon as we became government, we restored. I will note that, of course, the hon. Minister of Education will have to follow up . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other members that would like to speak to Bill 17, Appropriation Act? The Member for Calgary-Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: That's close enough, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 17, the Appropriation Act. This is a bill that I won't be able to support. Bill 17 is going to create substantial financial hardships for the people of the province of Alberta. There is a tremendous amount of spending to take place, and there is a tremendous amount of money that has to be borrowed in order to see that spending. What the Appropriation Act defines is a $10.4 billion deficit for the fiscal year 2016-17.

Debts and deficits become somewhat confusing to the average Albertan, that doesn't sit in this House or doesn't sit around discussing the budget at length. They're so unlucky to be unable to do that. To help those folks that listen sometimes and some that watch now on occasion, a deficit is defined as "an excess of expenditure or liabilities over income or assets in a given period." Debt is something different. Benjamin Franklin said that "when you run in debt; you give to another power over your liberty." Webster's says that debt is simply defined as "a state of owing" money.

Well, we will certainly owe money as a province, Mr. Speaker, more money than ever before. As a matter of fact, we'll be borrowing to keep the operations of the government in a state of continuance; in other words, borrowing to keep the lights on. Borrowing money for operations and capital expenditures is one thing; removing the self-imposed debt ceiling so that unrestrained borrowing is available to those that make those decisions is something else entirely. The government intends to borrow billions of dollars which will be used to fund its operations and will exceed its own legislated debt ceiling in just three years. Total debt is projected to hit a very large number, a number never seen in Alberta, $57.6 billion by 2019. Also, the government is completely drawing down the contingency account and borrowing $5.4 billion to cover operating costs this year. The government last borrowed to finance daily operations in 1994.

The deficit, meanwhile, is forecast as a rather large number as well within this budget. Remember that a deficit is an excess of expenditure over income. In this fiscal year of 2016-17 there will be a record deficit of $10.4 billion. Those are staggering numbers.

We've seen, within this short amount of time since the newest NDP budget has been presented, several bond-rating agencies downgrade Alberta's credit rating. Now, this is not good. Alberta's Finance minister flew to Toronto and New York to sell the so-called job-creation budget in an effort to have bond-rating agencies quit lowering our credit rating. But those agencies, to be perfectly honest, Mr. Speaker, are not interested in whether or not this budget protects Alberta's core services or creates jobs. What bond-rating agencies like DBRS or Moody's or Standard & Poor's are interested in is whether or not Alberta's finances are creditworthy, whether or not this government has the intention to show the ability that the province has to pay back the money that it borrows.

There is increased risk for bond agencies to lend money to this province. The projected profound deficits are one part of the risk: $10.6 billion, as stated before, in this year; $10.1 billion in 2017-2018; and $8.4 billion in the '18-19 fiscal year. The amount of debt, another $57.6 billion within the next three years, and the rather prolonged amount of time between now and when the budget will supposedly be balanced, in 2024, all of these things reflect the downgrades that we've seen so far, the latest just five days ago. The fact that the province of Alberta has given no indication of how or when it will start to pay back the debt that it has accumulated or will have accumulated is another reason that bond-rating agencies get spooked.

Until we are shown or until debt-rating agencies are shown a plan to tackle the principal, Alberta is going to pay a higher rate of interest on the money borrowed. The cost to pay just the interest will be upwards of $2 billion per year. That's just the interest, not the principal. The largest expense in government after health, education, and social services will be the money that Alberta is going to have to pay just in interest on the money borrowed: less money for schools, less money for teachers, less money for front-line staff.

The Wildrose caucus did come out with a solid, realistic plan to reduce annual spending by $2 billion. That information is all very public, Mr. Speaker. There are always ways to achieve modest spending reductions in this budget, but it means making a choice.

In the Appropriation Act, 2016, Albertans will be taxed like they've never been taxed before. Many of my colleagues have spoken about the impact of the newly proposed carbon tax. When it is implemented, starting in January 1, 2017, we'll see the tax Albertans have to pay along with an increase in that tax on January 1, 2018.

Now, I will give one shot in the arm to the government, that came up with the newest budget. Hey, I'm going to say that I think every opposition party in the House probably will claim that lowering the small-business tax was their idea. I don't know anything about what the other opposition parties did or didn't say about the small-business tax, but I do know for a fact that the Wildrose did suggest that lowering that particular tax was important. We're glad to see that the NDP got that job done, lowering the small-business tax from 3 per cent to 2 per cent.

Back to the carbon tax. This proposed tax is just another massive overhead fee for actual job creators. With increased overhead fees the amount that businesses will be able to set aside for labour will become less and less. The price of fuel, whether fuel for heating buildings or fuel for delivering goods, will increase the cost of those goods to all Albertans, and every Albertan in their own circumstance will see the same additional costs as a result of the carbon tax.

In Alberta we have winter. Now, you can wear three sets of long underwear and three sweaters for five months of the year if you like, but you still have to keep your home warm enough to function while you're in it. This tax means that keeping your home at a reasonable temperature while you're in it is going to cost more. Now, you could turn down the temperature in your house while you take your kids to the rink for hockey practice, but – just a minute – the price of fuel for your car is going to cost more: 4 and a half cents per litre at the pump for gasoline and 5.4 cents at the pump for diesel. Those prices will go up by 50 per cent more on January 1, 2018. This tax will touch just about everything that an Albertan has to use his after-tax dollars to purchase.

What about the costs to the companies that build the infrastructure in Alberta, the companies that build our schools and our hospitals and improve our roads? There has been no exemption for those folks. The increased costs of operation for construction companies will have to be passed on to the government and, in turn, will be passed on to each of us. What about the cost of keeping the lights on in a hospital or heating that hospital or the cost of running an ambulance? These are not hypothetical scenarios. There are actually real numbers attached here. I want to quote from a recent article from Metro News of May 11, which reads:

If the government's carbon tax was in place, Alberta Health Services . . . would've spent about 38 per cent more on natural gas to power its facilities during the 2015-16 fiscal year.

It goes on to say:

AHS said it spent more than $17.7 million on natural gas – with more than 4,372,264 gigajoules consumed by all of its facilities – during its 2015-16 fiscal year.

The government's carbon tax will charge an extra [a little more than a $1.51, just about $1.52] per gigajoule, meaning AHS would've spent more than $24.3 million on natural gas, a spike of about $6 million.

The cost of heating schools and government buildings, the increased costs of busing children back and forth to school, the increased costs of public transit that Albertans who use it will be forced to pay for: those costs will all be passed on to Albertans. According to Edmonton public schools heating public schools will cost an estimated $630,000 more for the eight months that the carbon tax would apply. Now, unless they plan on exempting school boards, that's money allegedly earmarked for education that is being diverted back to the government as a carbon tax. When you get down to it, it becomes clear that you get a lot less out of this budget than you're paying for.

Mr. Speaker, the facts speak for themselves. This budget proposes a significant uptake in debt for Alberta. Debts and deficits like those proposed here will result in incredibly difficult decisions in the future. And for all the problems that'll be caused by this headfirst dive into debt, perhaps one of the most significant problems is that the government will have so little to show for it when it comes to results. Albertans will pay the price for decisions made in this provincial budget for years, perhaps generations, to come.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I don't intend to support this bill. Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak.

The Speaker: Questions for the Member for Little Bow under 29(2)(a)?

The deputy House leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 10 Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016

The Chair: We are on amendment A2. Are there any further speakers to this amendment?

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much. I'd like to understand a little bit more about why the government does not feel the need to adhere to the same rules that the average Albertan has to follow with regard to debt. For example, I wonder if there's an Albertan in these terrible financial times in the private sector who is in financial difficulty that has been given the freedom to just change the rules when they're not able to follow through with their financial responsibilities. No; they renegotiate instead of going into bankruptcy. This is one option that they have given the severe circumstances. If they can't pay their loans, are they given a break or told that they can walk away?

The government consistently brings up the $15 per hour minimum wage and how that will help Albertans and that it's about integrity and that small businesses need to dig in and find a way to pay that minimum wage, not realizing that the cost of doing business will always fall on all consumers no matter what they're earning. The government talks about minimum wage and speaks about hard-working Albertans yet is willing to pull the rug out from under Albertans when it comes to the government's own accountability and Albertans' tax dollars. There are consequences for not paying your loans for regular, everyday Albertans, and in this particular part of our lives right now, where we're at, for some people that is going to mean potentially losing their houses, their cars, and their businesses. We're talking about people putting food on their tables and all these other things that we talk about, yet the government is willing to not take the same consequences in their own house that they expect everybody else in their houses to incur.

The well-being of Albertans is tied to the value of their input into the world. We are creators and innovators, oil men, artists, parents, among many other descriptions, and we expect the government to lead by example. We expect them to impose the consequences on themselves, to hold themselves accountable to the Albertans that they represent, yet this government seems to be content to see Albertans struggle as we lose jobs and along with those jobs our dignity as well. There is no minimum wage in the world that can help that scenario.

The government is changing its own laws. Is that change going to be available to anybody who is in difficulty? I'm just curious because if we're going to lead by example, that means that what we are doing here should also be allowed out in the real world.

Just to give an example, we've talked a great deal about how much extra per man, woman, and child we are paying out in this government, which is $2,000-plus per man, woman, and child. I mean, without going into extreme detail, that's about $8 billion. To me, that's the deficit right there. How is it that we can have that much more per man, woman, and child and still be going into a deficit? I don't understand how those numbers add up.

Along with that you're changing the laws without a thought to what that means to the future of the province, and that is our children, all of our grandchildren, and the future of this province. With the increased debt ceiling you can borrow more, but you're increasing your interest. Understand that this is what you're imposing on Albertans. This actually is not about us at all; it's about Albertans and Alberta tax dollars. You can blame past governments all you want. You can keep pointing fingers. You can keep justifying, but the break of the debt ceiling at this point falls on your shoulders, and by 2018-2019, when people understand what that means and what that looks like, that will fall squarely on your shoulders and will be the legacy of this government.

I realize that there is a humongous amount of good intention, and nobody's taking away from that good intention, but understand that there's no amount of good intention that is going to take away that debt. Absolutely nothing. That will be your legacy. There have been many people in this House on this side that have tried to explain what that's going to look like and what that means for you and to try to help with that situation.

The $2 billion in debt repayment, as you understand by now, I'm sure, isn't even the principal. If you think that you have it bad now, imagine what you're leaving for future governments when they have to take on the debt that you've incurred. I'll bring this up again. Your legacy will not be all of the good things that you've tried to accomplish. It will be what you leave for the future. It will be in the fact that the programs and things that you have promised to people you will not be able to follow through on.

I cannot support this bill at this point. Thank you so much for letting me speak.

The Chair: Any further speakers to amendment A2? Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Chair. I was just reading this over, that no member of the Executive Council shall receive any salary prescribed under that section until a subsequent report made pursuant to section 6(1) indicates Crown debt will be 15% of GDP for Alberta or less.

We're talking about a legacy. You know, this is what you're leaving, but there are consequences for your actions, and the consequence for the actions in this case is not being rewarded for having a crummy performance, having a poor performance.

Madam Chair, this is really what this is about. We need to make sure that when people are doing things in government, they have accountability. If you look at local governance, in my town they can't run deficits. They have to stay within a budget, and they have to work towards that. The towns take it very seriously, and I think the government needs to as well, and if they're not able to stay within that budget, there needs to be a consequence. The consequence is that they don't receive that stipend, that extra monies for this.

This legacy that the last member talked about: is that what the government really wants to have as a legacy, a legacy of having a debt of something close to $60 billion, a legacy where we're paying $2 billion just to service that debt? Two billion dollars can go so far. You can buy so much with that amount of money, and that takes away so many jobs that could have been hired. If you took jobs that were paid at $70,000 a job and you divide that by $2 billion, you're looking at over 28,000 jobs that could be hired with that $2 billion. That's the number it comes out to.

Two billion dollars in debt repayment is what they're at right now, but what happens if oil stays low? They've projected oil to go up, but what happens if the oil prices don't go up to where they want? Now all of the sudden we have a debt that's $3 billion; $3 billion is a huge amount of money as opposed to $2 billion.

I wanted to make a comment for the Member for Calgary-Currie. The Member for Calgary-Currie said that they had budgeted for a modest 2 per cent increase in the budget. Ten billion dollars is not a modest 2 per cent increase in the budget; 2 per cent of that would be somewhere a little less than a billion dollars. So 2 per cent is nowhere near that price. We're talking about something that's 10 times over that modest 2 per cent he talked about. We're talking about numbers that are far more substantial than what the government is trying to portray themselves as having said to have done.

You know, up to this time this bill, to me, ranks as probably the worst, the most dangerous bill that we've got out there, that Alberta's ever seen, period. We're talking about taking the debt ceiling and just removing it. They had 15 per cent, which was a very high debt ceiling, because that allowed them to have around $48 billion, but now we're looking at something with the debt ceiling being removed. That's so dangerous. Where are we going to be in 10 years' time? If a future government chooses to go down the same path that this government has, what is to stop this government from staying at the $57 billion, $58 billion that they're projecting they're going to be at? There seems to be nothing in there to stop that. Does this government have any intention to pay this money back? I don't see anywhere that they have any intention ever. If the government did, you would see a balanced budget, but nowhere in there is there a balanced budget.

You know, in visiting constituents in my beautiful riding of Battle River-Wainwright, I had a lot of conversations, and as we were going through the time when we were talking to them, just as we were going for the election, we talked about the debt and we talked about deficits, and at that point in time the projected number was going to be around $12 billion. They thought that was crazy.

Well, we're now at a place where we're looking at something close to $60 billion. That's absolutely ludicrous. What contingency plan does this government have if oil, like I say, does not go to the price that they projected? How much will we be in debt? Will the government please give us an answer on that one?

My next question is: why is oil tied so closely with this NDP government? Why do you tie your budget so close to oil? They want to diversify it, but they still tie their budget closely to oil, so I'm not quite sure. I keep hearing from the members across that they want to diversify into tourism. Why isn't it tied into tourism as opposed to oil? Is tourism your shiny pony? I don't know.

I have a lot of issues with this, and again we need accountability. There's no accountability in this budget, so I can't support this budget as it's going.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A2? Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I don't think it's unreasonable to ask the Executive Council to accept some responsibility in this matter. It's simply a performance measure. We ask for it in budget estimates. It's in the business plan in each separate portfolio. In the private sector with any major projects, basically, a lot of the time 50 per cent of your wages is based on a performance bonus. A lot of the banks do the same thing. You know, that being said, I would suggest that a lot of members present might actually be in agreement to give a bonus to the Executive Council if they were to shave a couple of points off the 15 per cent because it would be a benefit to all Albertans if we were to do so.

With that, on amendment A2 I will be voting in favour, and I believe most of my colleagues will as well. I would ask the members opposite to really consider putting some kind of a ceiling on borrowing in this province and on this debt, especially as during these lean times it's very important, and to give some incentive to the Executive Council to try and stick to those numbers that they have put forward. We have to remember that this 15 per cent was voted on unanimously by the other side, to have a debt ceiling of 15 per cent. We're now being asked to exceed this, with no further ceiling to it.

I would ask everyone to vote in favour of this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to speak in support of the amendment. I think it's an important amendment. I think it raises some good points. The reality is that government raises taxes on the backs of the people or, as some famous others have said in the past, at the barrel of a gun. That's the only way government raises taxes.

Recently I was doing some reading and thinking back on the period between 1780 and 1820. It's the period of the Industrial Revolution. It's the time of the making of the English working class. It's the time of the rise of nascent unions, the time of guild social programs as they first began to be discovered. Part of the challenge of that era, part of the thing that drove the people to those necessities was, in fact, the burden of excessive taxes by the British government upon them, partly as a result of the wars they'd been fighting with France and for other reasons. The taxes were extreme, they were excessive, they were heavy, and the people themselves were forced into all of these kinds of social groupings and social responses because of the excessive burden of taxes.

I find it extremely ironic that we should now have a government that claims that it wants to be the social conscience of the nation turning around and, in fact, doing exactly the things that the British government did then, piling the burden of taxes upon people. They claim a social licence. Is it a licence to tax, to appropriate the wealth of the people and to leave them poorer? In every nation in the world where taxes are excessive, the people become poorer and impoverished and left with very little. Here we have a government that states in its own fiscal plan that now its greatest source of funding is actually the taxing of the people, riding on the backs of the people.

If this government really cared for the people, they would choose to be accountable to the people. They would put limits upon themselves. They would put their money where their mouth is. The reality is that I think they want their salary on the backs of the people, so they're willing to increase taxes to make taxes the single largest source of revenue. If they really believe in equality for the people, they would remember the lessons from 1780 to 1820 and make sure that they weren't raising taxes on the people and forcing all kinds of suffering and pain upon them.

Every single member across the way here voted for a 15 per cent limit on debt to GDP just a while ago. Now they have the crass freedom to just turn around and say: oh, we don't care about that anymore. How quickly power corrupts, and they claim absolute power, and it corrupts absolutely. They don't have the social licence to tax and appropriate the wealth of the people, and therefore I am going to vote in favour of this amendment. I think it's only reasonable that they should as well, and I think the people of Alberta are going to see it the same way come the next election.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment? Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I rose earlier in the House and was cut off by time . . .

An Hon. Member: Aw. Too bad.

Mr. Smith: That felt good to you, did it? There are a few students in my social studies class that would have liked to have had the bell ring a little earlier in some of my classes, too, I'm sure.

I wanted to rise just to finish off a couple of points here. We were talking about being responsible and having responsibility. I guess we have to ask the question, Madam Chair, as we speak to this amendment: why do we have a debt ceiling? Why even bother putting it on? Governments usually place a debt ceiling on themselves to try to bring some limit to their spending, to limit the debt that they're willing to accrue, to start to control their spending. I mean, that's the purpose of a debt ceiling, and it's the reason why you set up a debt-to-GDP ratio. That's why, I would hazard a guess, from what we heard earlier in the year, I would imagine, the NDP government placed a 15 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio on itself. It's why breaking that debt-to-GDP ratio so soon after it was set is so very disturbing. The reasons, the rationale that you gave for it, that you were willing to go into debt but that you weren't willing to exceed a certain level of debt, are disturbing when you see it broken so quickly.

I guess it's why, Madam Chair, this amendment is necessary. The 15 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio was an attempt at accountability. It was supported by the NDP, so we would suggest that perhaps the NDP would be willing to support this other accountability measure, that would hold the executive to account for how it spends the taxpayers' money.

You know, the United States is a good example of a country that we could learn from when it comes to this. There are times when a growing debt-to-GDP ratio might be acceptable. For instance, I use the example of former President Harry Truman. In his leadership he said, "The buck stops here," that the accountability stops with the President. It was also under his leadership that the United States achieved its highest debt-to-GDP ratio in the history of the United States of America. Now, why? Well, the United States was involved in perhaps, some would argue, the most cataclysmic war the world has ever faced, fighting the greatest evil that this world perhaps has ever faced. In attempting to confront that evil and in attempting to defend democracy, they were willing to go into and achieve significant amounts of debt, but always there was an understanding that that debt would have to be paid off.

Indeed, if we take a look at the history of the United States, it was soon after World War II that the public debt in the United States began to fall. It reached a low under the presidency of Richard Nixon in the 1970s. So if you're going to set a debt-to-GDP ratio and if you're going to accumulate debt, you need to have accountability. You need to have the ability as a government to be able to pull back from that debt and to lower that debt-to-GDP ratio.

Now, since the 1970s we've seen the United States again begin to accumulate debt, and we've seen the growth of that debt-to-GDP ratio. Indeed, since the year 2000 the debt ceiling in the United States has been raised more than 12 times, which is an indicator of a government that, I would argue, is out of control. Its spending is out of control. Indeed, the debt in the United States continues to rise, and today it stands somewhere around $18.8 trillion. Each time the government needs to borrow more money to perform the functions that they choose to spend that money on, it raises the debt-to-GDP ratio. It continues to borrow, and when it hits that ceiling, it simply raises the ceiling. It's become pretty obvious that they have an addiction to spending and to borrowing and to not knowing how they're going to pay it off.

Governments may borrow in times of war. They may borrow in times of recession. They may borrow when they want to spend but not raise taxes. All of those at times perhaps could be reasonable reasons for borrowing and raising the debt ceiling. However, always, if you're going to do that, the precondition is that you have to have some plan for being able to know how you're going to pay that off, how you're going to pay back that money that you've borrowed, and that is the sign of being a responsible government. I guess that's what we're asking from this government today. What is going to be the sign that you're going to give us that you're accountable for the decisions that you're making? I guess that's perhaps the most dangerous issue that we face and why this amendment, Madam Chair, is actually so very, very necessary.

This government, this executive, if it wants the responsibility of governing Alberta, must also be willing to be held accountable for its decisions. If setting a debt-to-GDP ratio is unable to hold the government responsible and accountable for its spending and if it's not going to ensure that it comes out with budgets that are fiscally responsible, then we have to look at other ways of trying to make sure that this government is accountable, that the buck actually stops with them and that they are accountable for the decisions that they're making with regard to the public purse.

My argument would be that this amendment actually speaks to that system of accountability, speaks to that idea of responsibility, speaks to that issue of stewardship of the finances that we have given to us by the taxpayers of Alberta. Therefore, I would argue that these ministers, who are responsible for government policy, should pay attention to the fiscal realities that we all face. If they can't, then this amendment would hold them responsible at least in some form of a monetary fashion.

So I would speak in favour of this amendment. Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you for recognizing me and allowing me the opportunity to participate in the debate on this amendment. I will say from the outset that I rise in opposition to the amendment, and the reason for that is fairly straightforward. It relates back to some of the discussion that we had back when we were debating Bill 201, and that is that I have a fundamental disagreement with members of government, Executive Council or otherwise, being able to make decisions that will directly influence their salary or their remuneration.

I think there is a fundamental flaw with this amendment in that decisions could be made by Executive Council for reasons other than the greater good of the province. Those decisions could be made to benefit themselves financially in one way or the other. While it is popular, perhaps, in some circles to suggest that checks and balances are put in place by having members of Executive Council, members of cabinet, forfeit a portion of their salary if they don't meet certain objectives, certain targets, this is the same sort of short-sighted, lurching kind of incentivization of behaviour that has landed many, many of the corporate CEOs into so much difficulty, not so much the CEOs but indeed the organizations for whom they are responsible.

You know, we can think, really, of the Executive Council, our cabinet, as being the board of directors of this government. As such, they are charged with the greater good of the entire province from a larger, from a writ large standpoint. They should not be making decisions based on whether it's good for their personal financial bottom line or not. They have a much larger responsibility. Those decisions should be made with great clarity as to the responsibility they hold on a larger scope, not on a scope that is confined to the benefits of their own financial well-being. So I have a great deal of difficulty when certain performance measures are tied to that.

It's been demonstrated in the corporate world, for example, with many CEOs being forced now with the pay-on-performance or the pay-at-risk model that was discussed a little bit earlier in the debate, that many CEOs in fact paid so much attention to the next quarterly result and the next quarterly result that they could do a lot of things to manipulate those quarterly results to pretty up the numbers so that they could maximize their own pay-at-risk bonuses. That has resulted in a major, major destruction of the corporate culture of some of North America's at one time best performing companies. You know, the failure to look at the long-term good, the failure to consider in a greater context the benefits to the organization as a whole because of those decisions, I think, is something that we have to guard against in every way possible.

Now, I want to be very clear. I do not support in any way, shape, or form elimination of the 15 per cent debt ceiling. I do not. It's a mistake. It is troubling to me that five short months after we were told that the 15 per cent debt ceiling was miles beyond what we would ever require, we are now in fact being told that it is very likely that in the third year of this government's mandate they will exceed 15 per cent. You know, I am very concerned that that is the direction we are headed, and I am very concerned with the amount of debt that this government is prepared to take on. It is a mistake. It is a significant financial and fiscal mistake.

But to try to eliminate that behaviour by making it tied to personal remuneration, to me, is a bigger mistake. It's interesting that it comes from members of the Official Opposition, who, you know, in the last Legislature spoke out against pay at risk or any kind of executive bonuses for anyone in the senior civil service of government. In fact, bonuses to senior government managers were eliminated.

The other areas that, you know, they were dead set against were any sort of pay-at-risk schemes in any way, shape, or form in government in general. So it seems odd that they would favour it in this particular circumstance but not favour it in the others. I mean, you can't have it both ways. You can't say that pay at risk is good in one area and pay at risk is not good in other areas. In this particular situation to suggest that the additional stipend that is payable to Executive Council should somehow be forfeited on this specific and, granted, very important measurement, to me, does not make sense. It is not good policy.

One wonders if the next thing we're going to see is some other performance measure that's going to be introduced. Pretty soon we'll have, maybe, five or 10 or 15 different performance measures for members of cabinet, that if they check those six boxes, they get X number of dollars, and if they don't check those six boxes or eight boxes or 10 boxes – you know, that's not the way these things work. To me, the suggestion that personal salary, personal remuneration can be influenced by decisions that are made is something that is fundamentally wrong and should be fundamentally rejected.

I will therefore be voting against this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I thank the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for his comments. There are certainly a few peculiar historical oversights in the comments. The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster spoke about the opposition of certain former members of the Wildrose caucus to the concept of pay at risk. I would remind the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster that they're all members of his party right now, that certainly the members he's referring to do not represent the Wildrose and never will again.

The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has talked about corporate CEOs who might want to manipulate quarterly results to make themselves look good. I would remind him of former Minister of Finance Doug Horner, who every single quarter that he was Finance minister manipulated the government's quarterly results to make it look like they were running a surplus.

Now, I remember. I stood in this building downstairs, just outside the press theatre, when the former Minister of Finance introduced, I think, the first or the second quarterly update. It was in September 2012, and it was a brochure. They provided no details whatsoever on the government's financial position. They didn't provide a balance sheet. They didn't provide a breakdown of expenditures. They didn't provide a breakdown of revenues. The government manipulated its quarterly results to make itself look good so that they wouldn't have to report a deficit to Albertans. So while I'm sure you can find examples in the private sector of a CEO or some kind of business executive who might manipulate a quarterly result to make themselves look good because of performance at risk, there are abundant examples from right here in recent history in Alberta where politicians without pay at risk have done the exact same thing.

Now, I do believe that performance pay or pay at risk is actually a positive model. This has been used in other jurisdictions to incentivize efficiencies. There is a huge incentive within government to build your kingdom, to empire build. Bureaucrats right now have an incentive to have more employees working for them, to have a bigger budget. It's quite the opposite of the private sector, where if you own a business, you have an incentive to maximize profit and minimize costs, that your costs will be justified and result in a maximum possible output of profit. In the public sector, by contrast, both ministers and bureaucrats have a built-in incentive to have a bigger empire, to have more people working for them, to have a bigger budget.

There is no incentive whatsoever right now in government to cut costs except, I might say, within our agencies, boards, and commissions. Under the model that exists currently within many of our agencies, boards, and commissions, supported by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, there is a huge incentive for many of them to meet certain criteria. It's pay at risk, that they are provided with a certain salary that is maxed out if they meet their objectives and is minimized if they do not meet their objectives. We already have pay at risk outside of the core GOA in this province within our agencies, boards, and commissions. We already have pay at risk, and I certainly cannot recall – you can correct me if I'm wrong – a single instance of the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster standing up before the election last year and condemning pay at risk while he was in government.

This is something that we've had for a very long time in Alberta. We can quibble about the right examples and the wrong examples. There are definitely examples in this province where we've had pay at risk that has not been deserved, where people have essentially gotten these bonuses or the maximum salary allottable when they've not been meeting proper goals. For example, Alberta Health Services executives were being given a significant pay-at-risk bonus while wait times were going up, while the cost of health care was going up at the same time as wait times were going up. Clearly, they're not doing their job when that's actually happening. That is a very good example – or I should say that it's a bad example of how pay at risk should be done. But when you have proper accountability measures in place, it is an important way to incentivize good behaviour.

Now, we do this in British Columbia. In British Columbia ministers of the Crown take a pay cut if they're not balancing the budget. Now, it shouldn't surprise a lot of people that British Columbia, when a lot of provinces went into deficit, ran smaller deficits and for a shorter period of time than other provinces. Right now there is no incentive whatsoever for many politicians to act responsibly. In fact, there is an incentive right now to act irresponsibly. There is an incentive to merely borrow and expect a future government to deal with the problem at a later time and enjoy the glory that comes with being able to cut cheques to everybody and buy off the electorate. We already have incentives built into this system, and right now the incentives are to borrow and buy people off with their own money.

Frédéric Bastiat said that government is the great illusion whereby everybody tries to live at everybody else's expense. That incentive is always going to be there regardless of who is in power, but we would expect that people would as much as possible attempt to minimize that temptation within power, within government, to simply play the game, to live at everybody else's expense.

We have already built in negative incentives, and I believe it is a positive move to try and right these incentives that we provide. Instead of an incentive to borrow and to spend money without any consequence, the instant gratification of financial incentives in this province right now, I think we should change the incentive structure so that politicians have an incentive to take a larger view of things.

If we can't trust the government to do what's right for Alberta, perhaps we have a better chance of trusting them to do what's right when it actually hits them in their own pocketbooks. Right now it's hitting Albertans in their pocketbooks. Albertans are paying the cost of what they're doing. Albertans are getting hosed by this government's actions. The more they borrow, the more they have to tax. The more they tax, the more they hurt the economy and the more they borrow to justify their corporate welfare plans. It is hurting Albertans.

It actually costs Albertans money, what this government is doing, so I believe that we should change the current incentive structure to incentivize good behaviour from governments. I think that if you cannot balance the budget in this province, if you cannot keep your debt to GDP under 15 per cent when we used to be paid in full and with money in the bank, then you're not doing your job. If you're not doing your job, you shouldn't get a bonus for it.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We are back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment that I'd like to put forward with your permission, of course. I'll speak to it when you say that I can if that's okay.

The Chair: Just give me a moment to get the original.

Go ahead, hon. member. This will be amendment A3.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. I move that Bill 10, the Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016, be amended in section 5 by striking out subsection (2) and substituting the following:

(2) Section 3(2)(a) is amended by repealing subclause (i).

What that is intended to do, Madam Chair, is to make it more difficult for the government to borrow for operating. The previous amendment that I moved was to keep the debt cap on, and while this isn't nearly as good as the first one, I think this still improves the bill. It just doesn't improve it as much as what I had previously asked for. It's intended, as I say, to make it harder to borrow for operating expenditures.

I hope members of the House see the wisdom in supporting this. I will sit and listen to the debate.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to support this amendment. As I've said in this House many times, I think that when done properly, borrowing for capital expenditures is appropriate. It allows us to build infrastructure, to catch up on that badly needed infrastructure build in this province, but it also leaves us with an asset at the end of the day and, of course, creates jobs along the way.

When 100,000 or more Albertans are out of work, I think it is appropriate to borrow for capital expenditure, but I do think that putting a floor on that borrowing or, I suppose, a ceiling is important. If this government is not going to stick with its 15 per cent debt-to-GDP ceiling, which was its previous plan – I thought that was, although perhaps a little high, at least something – I think we should have a ceiling in place where operational borrowing is not acceptable. That will require the government to live within its means and to make some of those challenging and difficult choices that not only governments but Albertans have to make. Albertan businesses, Albertan households have had to make some very difficult choices in the last number of months, more than a year in many cases, as our economy has taken a very sharp downturn.

While I think it is appropriate to borrow for capital to create jobs and to build infrastructure and to leave us an asset at the end of the day, I do think that it is absolutely appropriate to bar any borrowing for operations, which is why I will support this amendment and encourage other members of the House to do the same.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise in support of the amendment put forward by the Member for Calgary-Hays and leader of the third party. I think I would agree with the sentiment from the leader of the third party that this amendment would still leave the legislation worse off than we currently are, because the legislation proposes to remove the cap of 15 per cent debt to GDP, but it would make the legislation less odious, less bad by banning operational deficits.

You know, there are two kinds of deficits here. There are capital deficits and operational deficits. It's important to acknowledge that both are deficits. One is worse than the other; however, both at the end of the day will lead to an unsustainable level of debt if not managed properly. Operational debt is borrowing for the groceries, to keep the lights on. There's no justification for it whatsoever outside of major wars and extreme, extreme disasters. There is no circumstance right now that would justify an operational deficit.

We have squandered the sustainability fund, a rainy-day fund in this province. We've taken on billions of dollars of debt. We've been running operational deficits, actually, most years for the last nine years as well. The difference has been that we were drawing down the sustainability fund, renamed the contingency account, to fund operational deficits as opposed to borrowing for them. That's really the big distinction here. One is worse than the other. Borrowing for operations is worse than drawing down your savings for operations. However, both are generally ill advised when the economy is humming.

We were drawing down the sustainability fund for the operations of the government even when oil was $100 a barrel, so we've got a very systemic and well-entrenched problem with our fiscal framework in this province right now. We can certainly disagree about whether that is a spending problem or a revenue problem. The Official Opposition has a very clear position on that, and I know that the government has a clear position about where they stand, that they think they need more money no matter what whereas this side of the House generally agrees that we should get our expenditures under control.

Borrowing in general has to be very well thought out before you do it. You know, some folks like to compare borrowing for capital to a mortgage, but they're not the same because when you take on a mortgage, Madam Chair, you purchase an asset that you can liquidate, that you can get money back for at the end of the day, and you pay down the liability on that asset. When you buy a house – let's say that it's $400,000 – you own that, and you can sell it at any time to create liquid financial assets. You pay it down every year. You don't refinance your mortgage every single year so that your mortgage grows every year. Responsible people normally want to pay down their mortgages in most circumstances.

By contrast, the vast majority of government assets cannot be liquidated as a financial asset. They're not like the sustainability fund's investments, especially the heritage fund investments. They can be liquidated if necessary. Those are legitimate financial assets.

By contrast, if we build a fire station, you might need a fire station for a community, but if we sold that fire station, we'd probably not get back anywhere close to the value or the cost that it took to purchase the land, build it, and fill it full of the equipment that's necessary. If the government bought a fire truck, they would indeed have an asset, but as fun as it might be for one of us to privately own a fire truck, most of us . . .

Mr. Nixon: I own one.

Mr. Fildebrandt: The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre says that he actually owns a fire truck. If you know him, that's actually plausible. Most of us would not find any reasonable use for a privately owned fire truck, although some people on farms do pick them up second-hand.

You know, when you have a government asset, the vast majority of government-owned assets cannot be liquidated into cash anywhere close to the value that the government books them at. The government books the value of these assets at the cost it took the government to purchase them. Let's take, for example, a fire station. The government has to purchase a piece of land, it has to pay to have the building designed, it has to pay to have it built, and it has to pay to have it filled with the various pieces of equipment, the furnishings required. And the government books the value of that at what it cost to purchase it. However, if the government tried to sell that fire station the very day after they built it, they would probably get nowhere close to the actual value of it because private citizens don't have a use for that kind of government asset.

By contract, in the private sector when companies purchase capital assets to help them make money, that asset actually earns a cash return.

Government assets are absolutely necessary. No one is saying that the physical government asset is not necessary. I mean, we might need that fire station, but that fire station is not the same as a capital asset in the private sector, that actually earns a cash return.

The government likes to classify everything as an investment as if it was an equivalent investment in the private sector. But in the private sector you might buy a building to have a store, and that store will earn you a cash return. The government will purchase a piece of property, but it doesn't earn a cash return in the vast majority of circumstances. A toll road would be an exception to that, but we can book that as a private-public partnership. You know, those are examples of government assets that can earn a cash return, but they are few and far between and constitute an extremely small minority of the liabilities on the government's balance sheet right now.

The vast majority of the liabilities on the government's balance sheet are direct borrowing, and they are for assets that do not earn cash returns back as a private-sector investment would, and they are liabilities that cannot be liquidated at a cash value equivalent to what the government actually books the value at.

Borrowing for capital assets might be appropriate in cases where it earns a cash return back, or it might be that you could consider it appropriate, at least justifiable, if they were booking it at the actual value that it could be liquidated at if they put it on the open market. If they tried to sell that government asset on the open market, what could it actually be sold for? Governments do not account right now for what that asset could actually be sold for. As a result, it provides a misleading view to many people about the health of our balance sheets, which are already unhealthy but are significantly less healthy if you look at the actual cash value of these assets.

You know, we can have this debate about the appropriateness of borrowing for capital assets or how that should be done. I think that's more where the crux of the argument really goes: how should we account for the borrowing for capital assets, and what is an appropriate capital asset to borrow for? There will be a range of views here, but I think that, at the very least, we can agree that borrowing for the operations of government has got no excuse. Unless we are faced with a major war or extreme disaster, that completely debilitates the government, there is no reason to borrow for the operations of the government. That is like putting your groceries on the credit card when you've already maxed out your line of credit. At that point it's time to cut expenditures.

If you can't balance at least the operational expenditures of the government, you've got no business calling yourself a responsible government, Madam Chair. That's why I'm pleased to support the amendment put forward by the leader of the third party.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. I won't be supporting this amendment. I do believe it's necessary. It's, obviously, in our fiscal plan. Borrowing for the fiscal plan is necessary at this time. It's a requirement to continue to act as a shock absorber in terms of the provision of programs and services to Albertans that they require.

To not borrow for the fiscal plan at this time would mean to cut billions of dollars from the budget. Potentially, you could find those savings by eliminating one of the more significant ministries, perhaps, like Education. Then $5 billion or so would be cut out of the budget, and you could save the borrowing for this fiscal year – you wouldn't have to borrow for this fiscal year – by about that much. But obviously you can't do that. To continue the programs and services, to continue to provide the same high-quality level of programs and services to Albertans at this time, the necessary borrowing is in place to make that happen.

That won't always be the case. The plan we have, that's identified in the Alberta jobs plan, is to invest across the economy through capital infrastructure development and to put Albertans back to work.

The second part of the plan is to ensure that diversification takes place across the economy so that there's less reliance on the unstable platform of revenues that oil and gas has given us in this downturn.

Lastly, the third part of the plan is to ensure that the programs and services we all rely on, we all attend to, we all believe give us the advantage over other provinces in this country stay whole and strong.

That's what this direct borrowing for the fiscal plan does. It's a situation that has repeated in many provinces. A significant number of provinces borrow to supplement their fiscal plans. We haven't done that in the recent past, but we are doing it at this time. It's not something we will rely on forever, but it is something that we believe is necessary so that Albertans can rely on their government and the services it provides.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Chair, I just have a quick question for the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance has said that they won't borrow forever. I'm wondering if he can give a specific date in which he intends to balance the budget by, then.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment?

The Chair: Back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment to put forward if the pages would come collect it.

The Chair: This will be amendment A4.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 10, Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016, be amended in section 5 by striking out subsection (2) and substituting the following:

(2) Section 3(1) is amended by striking out "15%" and substituting "18%".

Now, off the top, let me state very clearly that the Official Opposition does not support an 18 per cent debt ceiling, nor does the Official Opposition support a 15 per cent debt ceiling. The Official Opposition believes that we should be paid in full again, and after the next election it is my intention that we will put Alberta back on a course to make us paid in full once more, Madam Chair. But in the meantime it is our job to as much as possible ensure that this government does as little damage as possible.

Now, just five months ago, four and a half from when they introduced the bill, this government brought forward a bill that limited the borrowing in this province to 15 per cent of GDP. I remember very distinctly the Minister of Finance standing here and stating emphatically that they would never exceed 15 per cent of debt to GDP. So far his arguments as to why they will exceed 15 per cent of debt to GDP have been laughable, Madam Chair.

We were very clear. When we looked at their numbers from the fall budget, it was very clear that their revenue projections were bunk. It was very clear that their spending projections would take them to borrow enough money to exceed 15 per cent of debt to GDP in relatively short order, and they said: absolutely not; there's no way that this will happen.

The minister has not yet taken the time to stand up and admit that he was wrong. All he has stood up and said is to make his baseless accusations about the Official Opposition, which ran on no new taxes, having some secret agenda to impose a PST, when there is only one party in this Legislature that stands for a PST, and they introduced it today in the form of Bill 20, Madam Chair. There is only one party here that wants to put a tax on everything and everyone, and that is the government side of this Legislature.

Now, we were very clear that this government's borrowing plan would exceed 15 per cent of debt to GDP, but the minister was crystal clear that under no circumstances will they exceed 15 per cent of debt to GDP. I understand why he's embarrassed. He stood here. He's in Hansard. I've read the Hansard, and he is quite emphatic that we will never exceed 15 per cent of debt to GDP and that to do so would be irresponsible. But the minister is responsible. He is responsible, so he wouldn't do something like that. He wouldn't do something like that because to exceed 15 per cent of debt to GDP would be embarrassing.

I understand why he would be perhaps even more embarrassed to just raise the debt ceiling, to keep some limit on the debt, however meaningless it might be because the government can change it in legislation. I understand why they would be embarrassed to just raise the debt ceiling, which is why they decided just to get rid of it.

Now, let's quickly recap. In the early to mid-1990s the Klein government passed a law to ban deficits in the province, and once the entire debt was paid off, they passed laws to ban government debt in this province. Now, there were minor changes after that during the Stelmach government, which were actually quite reasonable, to allow for limited public-private partnerships and borrowing for capital assets as long as they were valued correctly and they could actually be liquidated as assets. These were very reasonable, modest changes. In hindsight, they may have been the thin edge of the wedge, but they were quite reasonable, and there'd be no reason for us to oppose that.

But after that came the total repeal of the Government Accountability Act and the fiscal transparency act. That happened in early 2013, and that opened the door massively to borrowing on the capital side and to allowing government to value its capital assets in a manner not consistent with how it's done in the private sector, that you would be able to value capital assets as though they could be liquidated at that value. I've spoken to that during the last amendment, so I won't belabour the point, but it certainly opened up the door very significantly to borrowing. But operational debt was banned. Operational deficit was allowed as long as it was drawing down the sustainability fund, which was renamed the contingency account. That was really when the floodgates were opened up.

This government, when they were campaigning in the last election, swore up and down Alberta from High Level to Coutts – they promised everybody – that they would never borrow for operations. They promised everybody that they would balance the budget by 2019. They promised everybody that they would eventually get back to balance, just one year later than the Official Opposition and third party were promising to do, but they would get back to balance. They promised they would never ever – ever – borrow for operations. They promised it in every corner of this province.

Then as soon as they got into power, they threw open the floodgates even further. They brought in a bill to allow for operational borrowing. Now the government could borrow for both capital and operations and run massive consolidated deficits, that would exceed $9 billion in their last budget and $14 billion on a consolidated basis in this budget. But in that last budget, where they allowed for capital borrowing for operations, they said: don't worry, guys; we're good for the money, and we will never exceed 15 per cent of debt to GDP; that is our new debt ceiling. That, I think, is the third or fourth debt ceiling that's been raised in this province in the last decade. Well, just five months later they are here to repeal their own debt ceiling.

Now, it would have still been an irresponsible thing to do, but a less irresponsible action would have been for them to increase their debt ceiling. We would have certainly opposed that. I believe that 15 per cent is already far too high a debt ceiling, and I believe that 18 per cent is also far too high, but like we voted for in the last motion, which would outlaw operational borrowing even though we believe the government needs to balance its budget overall, this amendment is seeking to make the legislation less bad. We are trying to minimize the damage that the NDP are doing to Alberta.

They've made a determination that their electoral coalition doesn't care about borrowing and that their electoral coalition will be more happy with all that borrowed money being thrown at them to buy them off. Now, that's how they're going to try and get re-elected. I think that's shameful, Madam Chair, to take such a short-sighted view, to depend on the instant gratification that comes with borrowed money. We'd all love to borrow money and spend it right away; that feels good. We all love to have money and spend it in Vegas, but the responsible thing to do is to work hard and save and control your expenditures, make smart investments, and not gamble other people's money away willy-nilly.

So 18 per cent of debt to GDP is, I believe, far too high, but we're giving the government an escape clause here, because 18 per cent of debt to GDP they will not exceed before the next election. Even if they don't meet their current revenue projections, they'll probably hit 16 per cent or 16 and a half per cent. I would personally be surprised if they exceeded 18 per cent of debt to GDP before the next election. What we're doing here is that we are offering the government an escape clause, a get out of jail – well, not quite free – card. It's a very expensive card, but it will allow them to get out of jail here. You know what? It will do more to help the credit rating of this province than the Minister of Finance meeting with our creditors again, certainly. What we're doing here is that we're proposing to make the legislation less bad.

I ask that all members of this House consider voting for this as a small, small token of credibility to our creditors in this province, that we can at least try to prevent yet another credit downgrade. I don't believe that voting for this is going to restore our credit rating. Only one thing will restore our credit rating, and that is getting back to a balanced budget, but we can at least try to take some small, small steps like passing this amendment, which may reduce the likelihood of another credit downgrade. I ask that all members of this House support the amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm sure it will come as no surprise to anybody in this House that I cannot support the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks' amendment here. To be completely honest, I'm a bit concerned about the Official Opposition stance. It was just six months ago that they were proposing 7 per cent, and then they were fighting so hard to keep it at 15, and now they're saying 18. They seem to be little more than shots in the dark as we continue forward.

Even more concerning about this is the fact that they themselves cannot propose any numbers on what they would do if they were on this side of the House. As an Albertan I am quite concerned about that.

Further, I have nothing but confidence that this government will continue with the 15.5 per cent that we are proposing in the next three years according to our fiscal plan. I am proud that we are continuing to invest in our infrastructure, to protect our front-line services, that Albertans depend on, those services that the Official Opposition will not provide numbers on as to how it will impact them.

Thank you.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Oh, the Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert has sure asked for it here, Madam Chair.

Madam Chair, you know, as I think we've discussed today, I like to have a few friendly bets. I've made two bets with members of the government side so far. One was with the Member for Calgary-Currie. I bet him that the government would miss its revenue projections, and three days after he signed the written agreement of the bet, he had to pony up a hundred bucks. The other wager I made was with the Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert, who's actually sitting very close to the Member for Calgary-Currie right now. He made an even less wise bet when he bet that Spruce Grove's team would beat the Brooks Bandits, and of course we know how that went. So far we've got a pretty good track record of betting members on the government side.

Now, he said that this is a shot in the dark. He said that this is a shot in the dark. [interjections] Jeez. We hear a lot from the crying side over there.

Madam Chair, the member has said that this is a shot in the dark. You know what a shot in the dark is? Saying that you're going to balance the budget by 2018 and then 2019, 2020, and then 2024. If that's not a shot in the dark, I don't know what is.

You know, perhaps they're firing a shotgun at their balanced budget date. Perhaps they're throwing a grenade right into the credibility of this government. You know, our creditors have no confidence whatsoever in the ability of this government to get back to balance. When the Minister of Finance travelled to Toronto to meet with the creditors, we immediately got a credit downgrade. It was perhaps the worst thing that he could do for the confidence of our creditors in this province, to actually meet with the people lending the money. They met with this guy and said: jeez; they have no plan whatsoever. He said that his plan was to explain their diversification plan. He said that their plan was to read their diversification plan to them. Obviously, anybody with any understanding of economics or fiscal policy would look at that and say that nothing is going to come from that that's going to generate the revenue or the savings that would be necessary to get back to balance. It is a fairy-tale budget, and that is why we had another credit downgrade.

The Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert is saying: I can't vote for this because it's just a shot in the dark. Well, a shot in the dark is having four different balanced budget dates coming from this government in the last year, Madam Chair. Now, 18 per cent of debt to GDP: that's a heck of a lot of money. I think we're talking about $75 billion. I'm going to chance about $75 billion. I'm pretty confident that even they couldn't get there if they went to Vegas. If the whole NDP caucus packed up and got on a Sunwing plane and went down to Vegas and decided that they're going to bet the heritage fund, I'm pretty sure they still couldn't take our debt to GDP up to 18 per cent before the next election. After the next election I'm pretty confident that they'll get there. But they won't get there because I'm confident that Albertans are going to see this for what it is. [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. members, please.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Albertans are going to see this for what it is, and they're not going to have the chance to take us up to 18 per cent of debt to GDP, because the Wildrose is going to do what it takes to balance the budget and make this province paid in full again, Madam Chair.

I don't know what they should be so worried about; 18 per cent of debt to GDP would be the largest increase proportionately of debt by any province in this country in recent historical memory. There is almost no way that they can hit 18 per cent of debt to GDP. There is almost no way. They couldn't do it. But this would at least send a signal to creditors that, well, at least in theory they believe there is a limit at which we should probably not borrow any further, that there is a theoretical limit at which we should not borrow further. I don't think anybody would think that it has very much credibility, considering that they're repealing their 15 per cent limit just four and a half months after they introduced it, but an 18 per cent limit would at least be a token nod that they believe that they should not borrow infinitely.

Now, we have not heard many members on the government side stand up and actually debate the merits of this. We haven't heard many of the members. To the credit of the Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert, who may regret interjecting in this debate, at least he has spoken up. But I see all kinds of members here who have not stood up and spoken for their constituents. I know that the people of Alberta do not approve of unlimited borrowing in this province. Where are they standing up for their constituents? They're standing up for the party line, Madam Chair. They're standing up for the party line, and they're listening to their party whip. They're not listening to what their constituents have to say. Albertans are clear that you should not borrow for the operations of government, that you should pay your bills, and that if you're going to take on debt, even if you think you should take on debt, there needs to be a limit at which we cap it. Instead, we hear nothing. All we hear is at least one backbencher stand up and say: I don't like limiting it to 18 per cent because my party whip said so.

I would invite members opposite to stand up and be counted. I know that the good people of Banff-Cochrane do not approve of unlimited borrowing. I know that the good people of Calgary-Shaw do not approve of unlimited borrowing.

Ms McLean: Are you going to come to me next?

Mr. Fildebrandt: The good people of Calgary-East certainly do not approve of unlimited borrowing. [interjections] Oh, Calgary-Varsity. I'm sorry. I was picking on Calgary-East. But I do know that the people of Calgary-East support Energy East, and I do know that the people of Calgary-Varsity do not approve of unlimited borrowing as well.

I encourage all members to defy the party whip and vote for this amendment.

Mr. Mason: Well, I'll be very brief. I know we've got a vote coming up. You know, the Provincial Treasurer has been very clear in the government's fiscal plan that the amount of borrowing to GDP will not exceed 15 and a half per cent, and here we have the Wildrose proposing to take it up to 18. Who's fiscally irresponsible now? You know, it's pretty clear that the Provincial Treasurer has set this out, and it's not at all clear, as the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks says, that everybody agrees with him. He's just assuming that, Madam Chair. He's just assuming that.

What the people of Alberta have clearly said and what they clearly said in the election is that they want basic services to be maintained. These people on the other side want their health care there when they need it, they want to have good schooling for their kids, and they want to make sure that they have good roads to drive on, Madam Chair. This opposition likes to try and confuse people by talking about: oh, we could cut billions of dollars out of the budget, but it won't affect services. But when we actually try to find savings, as we heard yesterday in question period, in terms of actually having to find things that you're going to reduce, the crack sealing and the mowing alongside the highways is a place where we made a reduction. But they stand up and they complain about it. They say that you shouldn't be doing that because it has this impact and that impact. What they don't understand and what they'll never understand is that when you actually make changes to the budget, it actually has an effect on services that are delivered. They like to pretend that they can find efficiencies.

I just want to sit down because I know an hon. member has to say a few words, but clearly the Provincial Treasurer, the Finance minister, is saying that debt will not exceed 15 and a half per cent, and they're proposing 18. That's billions of dollars of extra debt that the Wildrose would like to see this government undertake, Madam Chair.

Mr. Hanson: Madam Chair, I'm going to read to you from page 5 of Bill 10. It says, "Section 3 is repealed." Section 3 is that "Crown debt shall not exceed 15% of GDP for Alberta." All we're asking for is to put some number to it. Put some number to it. Put 15 and a half to it, but stick to it. Stick to it.

Last fall during debates on increasing the debt ceiling, we warned the government that it was beyond their capabilities, that raising the debt limit was a bad idea. We proposed some decent amendments, that were all voted down by you guys. I'm going to remind you of what the Finance minister said last fall. He said that "this act will limit Alberta government borrowing to 15 per cent of GDP . . . That will provide enough room to allow our government to play its economic role without tipping into overdependence on debt.” Those are quotations.

Again, from October 29, another quotation: “The bottom line . . . is that a 15 per cent debt to GDP is a prudent benchmark for limiting government debt. With this cap in place, Albertans can be assured that the government’s borrowing will not get out of hand.” That’s a direct quotation from you, Minister, directly from you.

We are not promoting an 18 per cent cap. We just want to see some sort of number that stops you from ruining this province in the three years that you have left.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: I move that we rise and report progress on this, please.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 10. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, say no. So ordered.

Bill 17 Appropriation Act, 2016 (continued)

[Adjourned debate May 24: Mr. Carlier]

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to the bill?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: Seeing none, the hon. minister to close debate?

Then I’ll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:47 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, May 24, 2016

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 10 Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016

The Chair: We are considering amendment A4. Are there any speakers to this amendment? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Madam Chair. I appreciate that. I'm rising today to speak in favour of the amendment. Now, I do want to start off by pointing out that I do disagree personally with raising the limit to 18 per cent. I think that's too much, and if I had my way, we would not have to do that. But the reality is that the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks is trying to bring forward some sort of limitation. What the government is bringing forward right now is nothing, so they will eliminate the limit altogether and have zero limits, and the sky is the limit.

While I think 18 per cent is too much, at least there is some sort of a limit with the amendment that the hon. member is bringing forward. Now, you don't have to know the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks for too long to know that he would agree with me that he would like to see no limit at all, but for the same reasons I suspect that he is trying to bring forward this amendment.

Now, for me, Madam Chair, it brings to mind an example in my personal life that I think is applicable, and that is an example that I'm sure the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster will concur with as a veterinarian. Many a country pet dog has passed away prematurely waiting for the kids to return home from school on the school bus. Now, it's romantic for people who grew up in the city and didn't have a chance to be able to go down their own driveway and wait for the school bus to come or to watch your kids do it. It's really nice. It's a really cool experience. And dogs love to wait at the edge of the driveway for the kids to return home from school. Seriously. I mean, many a dog has unfortunately been hit by the school bus because of it.

Now, in my life we had two dogs in my family, two English mastiffs. Look at me, Madam Chair. I don't have small dogs because I would look a little weird if I was walking a chihuahua, but I have two English mastiffs, Nikita and Yukon. Both are pushing 270, 280 pounds, and I love them very much. They're really special dogs, and they're members of the family, as I know many members on all sides of the aisle will consider their dogs. They love to wait for my twins, Austin and Chyanne, to return from school on the bus. They will go there, so we've had to train them how far they can go to wait for our children to return on the bus. We've had to set limits on how far they go because we don't want them to get hit by a bus.

Now, my wife and I disagree on how far they should go. My wife is scared. We live in a place just outside of Sundre where we regularly see grizzly bears and we regularly see mountain lions on our property. Every year we'll have a couple come through, so my wife, Tiffany, is understandably concerned about those animals and our kids at the bus stop. That's part of our dogs' job. That's why we own such big dogs, because they're able to protect our children outside when they're walking, sometimes in the dark, from the school bus. She tries to extend the limit to the fence. That's her rule. She says that the dogs can't go past the fence, past the cattle guard, and then they can wait for the kids. I think it's too close because they get excited, they try to run out, and I don't want my dogs to get hit. I like them at our garbage can. We have a big dumpster on our farm that's a little ways away from there, and I've set that as the limit. But I lost, Madam Chair.

My wife has been able to set the final limit for the dogs, but she still set a limit. She still set a limit. While I disagree that the limit should be as far as the fence, I had to compromise to be able to still set a limit. Otherwise, the sky is the limit, and the dogs are going to end up on the street, and just like many of our neighbours, we're going to lose our dogs.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, by bringing this forward, is not saying that the debt ceiling should be 18 per cent. He's saying that if the government insists on making it unlimited, a government who, by the way, Madam Chair, just recently said that 15 per cent was going to be enough when they raised it and are already back here less than half a year later having to raise it again, if that government is going to ask for the sky as the limit, with no limits at all, then the hon. member is going to attempt to bring forward something that at least puts in a limit. Similar to my dogs, at least there's a limit at the fence, and they're not out on the street.

The second thing that I want to talk about – and I think that this is what people that I talk to in my constituency find most offensive about this type of situation – is that the government sets a law, and then they break the law, and then they set a law again, and then they break the law. Then here they are again. They're just going to eliminate the law. It's too much work to break it and have to come back and hear a guy like me talk about this, Madam Chair, about how they broke the law. So that's what they're going to do, but people in Alberta, I can tell you, are offended by that.

Now, the third party – and I think they'll agree with me on this because they brought it up before. There was a similar law on elections that was set in this province, and there was a loophole and an ability for the previous Premier to be able to call an earlier election. In hindsight I think the third party would agree that that was a mistake, and it's part of the reason why we're all sitting here with you guys in government right now. [interjections] You might think it was a great idea, but many people that I talk to in my constituency don't think it was a good idea. In fact, they were deeply offended by the idea that the government could break their own law even if there was a loophole constitutionwise and they could do it. Even if they could, you know, not follow their own law, people where I come from were very, very disappointed in that, and I'm sure all members heard that a lot during the election.

With that said, just because you can break your own law, that doesn't mean that you should. If that is the path this government wants to continue down, setting no limits – “The sky is the limit; we can do whatever we want; we're annoyed and don't want to have to come back to the Legislature and keep asking for an increase in the debt ceiling; get rid of those annoying opposition guys; we'll just do whatever we want” – well, you should ask the third party, because Albertans don't like that. It smells wrong to them, and they will remember in 2019 that you were doing the exact same thing that the previous government did with the election law. They'll be very disappointed, and I suspect you're going to have to answer for that.

In closing, Madam Chair, it's important that we still set limits. Sometimes we're going to have to compromise because the limit will be farther than we like, but to have no limit at all is dangerous, and somebody might get hit by a bus. Not following a law just because you can find a loophole or a way out and go to Albertans with "Oh, we've got a loophole; we're the government; we can change the law; we don't want to follow the law": they're not going to accept that. They're going to be extremely disappointed, and I think the government should be ashamed of themselves and consider at least setting a limit.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. What I thought was interesting when the 18 per cent was brought forward was how the eyes in here got big, thinking: "Wow, that's a lot. It could be $3 billion in debt repayment at 18 per cent." It's huge, isn't it? Well, we felt the same way at 15 per cent, so 18 per cent is a random number to help with setting some sort of limitations to the ceiling that we are talking about.
