You know, I think that like so many of the early homesteaders, those that were of Ukrainian background realized very quickly that their neighbours often had to become their family, that when they came here, they were a long way from home. Like, I think, so much of the flavour of western Canada, we find that we want to maintain our traditions, our family traditions and our cultural traditions, but at the same time we embraced the families and the neighbours that were around us regardless of where they came from, and it's created a really unique western Canada and Alberta.

The early Ukrainians came, and they tilled the fields. They created the property lines, and they built the roads and the infrastructure of this province. Today Ukrainian Canadians have continued to build this province in all of the areas of our economy, and we are just so grateful that they have come and become a part of the fabric of this great province. You know, every day that I drive back to my constituency, I see evidence of Ukrainian contributions to our province. I see the churches that dot my constituency, and every time I see them, the Ukrainian Catholic or the Ukrainian Orthodox churches with their iconic domes, I just feel at home. It's a part of who I am and a part of who we are as Albertans.

You know, modern-day Ukrainians in Alberta offer up some of Alberta's most notable tourist attractions. I know that as my wife and I have toured this province with our family, she has often wanted us to stop, like so many Canadians, at the various tourist attractions that dot this province. Whether it's the Glendon perogy or the Vegreville pysanka or the Mundare sausage, I think we have seen them all. As we've toured around Edmonton, we've been a part of the Ukrainian Cultural Heritage Village. I can remember some of the students in my classroom actually having jobs at the Ukrainian Cultural Heritage Village. We are just so blessed in this province to have access to this heritage, even if I can't claim it to be part of my own.

You know, those sites that we've been talking about here, while they provide opportunities to experience Ukrainian cultural heritage first-hand, there are things that I haven't experienced yet. I understand that there are cossacks from Vegreville, and while I know that this past New Year's I had the opportunity to watch one of the Ukrainian dance troupes in this great province, I'm beginning to think that perhaps my days of being able to try out Ukrainian dancing are pretty much over, and I'm not sure that my knees could really take it any longer. I know that my jaw dropped to the floor as I was probably no further than from you, Madam Chair, as these Ukrainian dancers were going across the floor and jumping to heights that I'm not sure I've ever been able to jump and landing in ways that look so graceful, that I will never be able to do any longer.

You know, I'm just so happy and so pleased that we've taken the time today to take a look at the Ukrainian heritage we have but also the vibrant Ukrainian community that's here in this province as we speak. It's everywhere we go. You know, every Sunday morning on CTV Two you can watch the show Kontakt, which showcases Ukrainian news from Ukraine. You can watch musical vignettes and dancing and crafts. Businesses are highlighted both in English and Ukrainian, and even the commercials are in Ukrainian.

In addition, there has been a Ukrainian folklore program at the University of Alberta since 1987. In my own field of education we are just so blessed to be able to have the Ukrainian language and cultural education in this province and to have had it since 1902. The first provincial curriculum for Ukrainian as a second language was introduced in 1956, and Ukrainian has been offered as a language of instruction in Alberta public schools since 1974.

The Alberta we know today would not be the same without so many of these Ukrainian institutions, without the landmarks that dot our country and our province, without the leaders, without the language, and without the culture. So let's join together and make September 7 the day to celebrate the arrival of the Ukrainian diaspora in Canada, in Western Canada, and in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. It is definitely a great honour to be able to rise today and speak to Bill 26, the Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act. I must first thank the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for bringing forward Bill 26 and for all the hard work that was involved in advocating for this very long overdue recognition. As well, I would also thank the government for its swift action to support this piece of important legislation and for allowing me as well to bring the voices forward of my constituents in its creation.

Madam Chair, I'm not a descendant. I don't have any heritage that goes back to Ukraine. I guess the closest I can come to would be sort of nearby in Denmark, but I'm definitely very delighted to be able to represent a constituency that is made up of quite a few Albertans of Ukrainian heritage. Because of that I've had the privilege to attend many Ukrainian events, and I was even informed a little bit earlier that I've been blessed with a bit of a designation of an honorary Ukrainian. It's something that I will hold in very high regard going forward.

This year marks the 125th anniversary of the arrival to Canada of the first settlers from Ukraine, and since that time Ukrainians and Albertans of Ukrainian heritage have made countless contributions to the province of Alberta in all aspects of our lives including academia, the arts, education, civil society, government, industry, economic development and prosperity, and I could probably continue to go on.

Ukrainian culture is simply an integral part of the Alberta culture. Their community, their spirit, and their many accomplishments can be felt across our province and for me personally in north Edmonton. I can't even begin to express the gratitude I have for the Ukrainian community and how they have welcomed me with open arms. And I must say, Madam Chair, that there is nothing like good Ukrainian perogies, something that I've been able to have a part of since I was even a boy and some family friends were Ukrainian, so I've enjoyed that very much.

Madam Chair, I would first of course like to thank the settlers who left their homeland in Ukraine to journey thousands of miles to a new country and to set up their lives right here. I would also like to recognize the many Ukrainians who through the last century and even up until today have chosen Alberta as their new home. Finally, I would like to thank all Albertans of Ukrainian heritage for keeping their vibrant culture alive and for sharing it not only with me but with all Albertans. To all my friends that are in the galleries today, I hope that Bill 26 serves as a small token of appreciation for everything that you have given us, including some really great perogies.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm very pleased to speak to Bill 26, Alberta's Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act. I, too, echo the sentiments that have been expressed before about the tremendous history and contributions of our Ukrainian Canadians. The premise of the bill, of course, is to recognize the 7th day of September each year, commencing in 2017, as Alberta Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day, the 125th anniversary of Canada's first recorded Ukrainian immigrants. Alberta shares a special connection with the people of Ukraine. Thousands of Albertans trace their roots back to Ukraine, and their community has been a strong and integral part of our democracy, both in Alberta and Canada at large.

Lured by the promise of land and a respite from troubles in Europe, Ukrainians first came to the prairies in the late 1800s. Many found Canada to be familiar and recognized in her landscape and her peoples a second homeland. Settling predominantly northeast of Edmonton, more than 250,000 Ukrainians had immigrated to Alberta by 1914. That's an amazing – amazing – influx. The next few decades were difficult. Many were incarcerated as enemy aliens during the First World War, and then the Great Depression took a large toll on a community composed primarily of farmers. In the aftermath of the Second World War another wave of Ukrainians found homes in Canada, settling in the urban centres of Edmonton, Calgary, and predominantly Lethbridge.

The Ukrainian community has never forgotten their heritage, and one of their most treasured contributions to Alberta are the customs and traditions that now permeate our society. It never ceases to make me smile when at festivals across Alberta I see new Canadians from many different nations smiling and laughing and participating in the dances, food, and celebrations of Ukrainian forebears, some of whom are now my cousins in the Vermilion and Vegreville area.

It should not be said, though, that the Ukrainian-Alberta community's most important contributions are cultural. They're teachers, doctors, lawyers, judges, and, yes, even politicians. There are several right here in this Legislature who identify with their Ukrainian ancestry, one of whom I just met outside, former Speaker Zwodzesky, a former Liberal. [interjections] Very, very former.

An Hon. Member: But he got better. He got the cure.

Dr. Swann: Somebody gave him the cure. Yeah.

Of course, I would want to highlight one of our favourites of Ukrainian ancestry, Laurence Decore. Many of you might not know that he was president of the Ukrainian-Canadian professional and business federation as well as the mayor of Edmonton and the leader of the Alberta Liberal Party. During his time as chairman of the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism he actually led a national lobby resulting in the constitutional change which acknowledged Canada's multicultural nature. He was also, as I said, leader of this illustrious Alberta Liberal Party.

I'm pleased that this government has brought forth this bill and heartedly endorse it. Ukrainian Albertans have contributed and continue to contribute immensely to our province and deserve all the recognitions we can bestow upon them.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, it's an honour for me to rise today in this Assembly to speak in favour of Bill 26, Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act. As we all know, this bill will make September 7 an official day of celebration of the arrival of the first Ukrainians in Alberta in 1891 and will officially recognize 2016-2017 as the 125th year of Ukrainians in Alberta. Ukrainian people have played a crucial role in shaping the colourful tapestry of Alberta's culture and heritage.

In the 1890s Ukrainians immigrated en masse to Alberta for the promise of prosperity, freedom, and opportunity. The Ukrainian people, with their determination and hard work, turned tough quarters of unsettled soil into the prosperous farmland that we now see in our province today, and I can't imagine how tough that would be, to have to go with the plows that they used by hand and turn the soil like they did 125 years ago. It's amazing when I think about it. It is in large part because of their dedication to the land that our agricultural industry is now the second-greatest contributor to Alberta's economy.

But Ukrainian people didn't just contribute economically, although their contributions helped develop the province. They also brought their rich culture, traditions that can be seen today in Alberta and through various cultural centres, museums, choirs, dance troupes, and historical sites. Everywhere you look in Alberta, there are elements of Ukrainian culture that the early immigrants brought with them along the way across the Atlantic and the Canadian prairies and used to help to build the province that we now see today.

One in 5 Albertans can claim Ukrainian heritage, including many of my fellow caucus members. In fact, one of my colleagues shared with me his family's story about the great trials and triumphs of their family as they worked tirelessly to till soil riddled with rocks and trees, the trials of cutting hay by hand, clearing land one small patch at a time, and learning to grow foreign crops in a foreign land. They moved to a foreign country, far from any other settlements, where they did not know the language, how to farm the local land, or what their futures would hold. Life was hard and uncertain. They brought with them only hope for a better future. There was no end to the hindrances that Ukrainians faced in our province, yet they persevered and created homes and communities, all the while preserving their tradition, culture, and community.

I know that growing up in the province I was surrounded by the dynamic culture of the Ukraine, and I'm a better person for being exposed to it. Our Ukrainian ancestors' impact on this province is undeniable. They have helped to develop our industries, enrich our history, and shape our culture. They were pioneers of the west, and I could not agree more that their contributions should be honoured with this bill. I have boundless respect for the spirit and determination that encompasses their pioneering legacy and will always be grateful for the sacrifices that they have made to this province.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. I've very proud to rise today and speak in support of the Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act and bring forward a few stories of my own family's immigration to this country. I know that my father never spoke English until he was about seven years old. He told a story often about his first day at school in a one-room school north of Thorhild, where they were taking attendance for the first time. His English wasn't all that good. The teacher would call out the names of the people who were there, and Mary would say: present; Steve: present; Mike: present. When it came to my father, Vladimir Dach, as he was then known – I later knew him, of course, as Walter Dach – he didn't want to be greedy, so he said: no, thank you. He always chuckled telling that particular story.

Lots of other stories abound about how my baba and gido first came to the country in 1913 on what was said to be the last boat that was allowed to leave the old country before the First World War broke out. They arrived here basically with nothing. In fact, they had gotten rights to a homestead, but they switched homesteads, and they ended up finally in the Thorhild area. I'll have to share stories with the Minister of Health and find out exactly what friendships might have happened between our relatives in the Thorhild area because I learned today that her relatives come from that area as well.

With that, my father's English did grow. He went to grade 7. That was the end of his schooling. The teacher gave him the option to go to dances or go to school, and he chose dancing, so that was the end of it in grade 7. The musical tradition amongst the Ukrainian community is something that's still very, very alive today. Most families had somebody who played an instrument of some kind, and the dances and entertainment were those that they provided themselves. I know that my dad's brothers and, actually, one of his sisters played music and sang in a band, and they were called upon many times to perform at country-hall dances. It was probably one of the most fun times of my father's childhood, growing up in the Thorhild area.

One other thing I wanted to say before I forget. I wanted to ensure that our gratitude was expressed to Mr. Speaker for allowing us to wear our traditional Ukrainian shirts today, the men in the House, without wearing a tie as traditionally is the custom in the House. So our gratitude to Mr. Speaker for allowing us to do that today.

I also wanted to say thank you, I guess, is the basis of what I'm saying today, to my great-grandparents and grandparents for having the courage to make that big jump, get on a ship, and come to an unknown land, which sometimes was overpromised to them as being the land of milk and honey. If you look at CP Rail posters from that era or even Canadian government posters from that era, talking about what they'd find when they got to the Canadian prairie, they were a little bit hyperbolic, to say the least. Because when you get to the Canadian prairie in the middle of winter and you get dumped off a train and you're looking at all those trees and stumps that have to be removed and you don't know how you're going to get to them without tools, you realize the posters weren't telling the whole truth. But they did get those stumps and those trees moved and crops planted little by little, usually living in a sod hut and then maybe a log house later on.

I know of early Christmases that my father recounts, that a few peanuts in a pile of straw beside the wood stove was a luxury. That was really the only Christmas presents he ever remembers as a child, just a handful of peanuts. Other than that, Christmas was a regular day, other than the celebration that they did and perhaps the prayers that they said.

I hope that today's new immigrants eventually receive the same warm welcome and integration that the Ukrainian community now has in our society. There's a bit of a backlash, and there's definitely some discrimination that's going on in our society right now that is similar to what immigrants of every wave of immigration suffered in our country. I think it's incumbent upon us to reflect today upon how the Ukrainian immigrant population was treated, in many respects very badly, by the established population here in this country and to try to apply that knowledge to what we sometimes see in our society today as a negative attitude towards immigration and the new waves of immigration that are taking place in this country right now.

I know that my baba never spoke English in her whole life. She was made fun of when she tried, so she finally just said: to heck with you; I'm not going to bother. I know that I never got to communicate with her in English or Ukrainian because we didn't know each other's language, but I know that the love and kisses and the "Oy, oy, oy, oy" were universal as we walked up the wooden sidewalk to her house. [interjection] Absolutely. There was always something beautiful cooking on the stove. It was a wood stove. She didn't have electricity. You could smell the crock of sauerkraut and kapusta downstairs, that she always made beautiful holubtsi out of. The love in her heart was true no matter what language she expressed it in. So I have very, very fond memories of her and of going to her house. She lived until I was about 10. She really gave me memories of the strength and commitment that has to be in the hearts of everybody who makes the big decision to emigrate to a new country. I'm very, very grateful that that decision was made.

I'm very proud to wear this shirt today and to be a member of the Ukrainian ancestral community here in this fantastic province of Alberta, and I'll continue to support and be hopeful that I'll be allowed to express this Ukrainianness forever and hope to celebrate this every year in this House on September 7.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Members, it is getting a little loud in here. If you could just keep it down. Thank you.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. While I do not have Ukrainian heritage, I do have immigrant grandparents with much the same stories and experiences as we've heard today. What I'd like to actually add to the debate is a current and ongoing part of the Canadian-Ukrainian story. In 2014 an endeavour called through the eyes of the children began with an individual in Lacombe and continues today. It's a Ukraine-Canada educational partnership involving students from Lacombe, Alberta, and students in Ukraine.

Students from approximately 12 different schools in Ukraine and 400 students in the Lacombe area have had some cross-cultural discovery through this program. There have been two trips to Ukraine so far, and there's another one planned this coming May, in 2017. One Lacombe student travelled to Ukraine with the adult sponsors. One Ukrainian teacher, Helena Romanov, from Lviv has come to Lacombe to speak to the students. The main focus has been on robotics education. On the first two trips the team took five robots. Not enough. In May they will be taking 10.

I have provided through my constituency office a Canadian flag and a substantial number of Alberta pins which have gone to schools in Ukraine. Just yesterday the first steps of a scholarship foundation for underprivileged students in both Lacombe and Ukraine was begun with a significant donation from a Lacombe resident. This is a wonderful program, and I'm proud to have a part in encouraging and supporting it. I am sure that it will ensure that the future of Ukraine-Canada relations will continue to enrich us all.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to chat on this. I want to talk a little bit about this bill and about my Ukrainian heritage. We've heard so much about where Ukrainians came from. For me, my family has gone back four generations in Canada with family names like Paluck, Pankew, and Siska immigrating here to Canada and spreading out amongst all three prairie provinces. My grandfather, for example, was born a farmer, and he tells me about how he was born and grew up in a one-room farmhouse out in Manitoba.

However, each successive generation of my Ukrainian family has aimed to succeed, to be better. As a result, my family has had a great number of successes here in Canada. We've been businessmen in the plumbing and sporting goods businesses. We have been teachers. We have been bankers. We've been serving Canada in a tank division after World War II, going on various NATO missions. We've been lawyers. Now in my family we have been MLAs. Well, one MLA. There's always time for more Ukrainian MLAs.

An Hon. Member: How would you rate that in comparison to the others?

Mr. Malkinson: Excellent.

However, you know, we've talked at great length about the food and culture, and I want to talk specifically about my family because at the end of the day that is how I know my Ukrainian heritage, through my family. Over those four generations that my Ukrainian family has been here, we've tended to merge our culture with the best of our new-found home, which has created some peculiar family dynamics. Specifically, my grandparents have had a great appreciation for the outdoors, fishing, camping, even when they lived on the prairies, and also has somewhere along the way picked up at least a three-generation-old affinity for dachshunds, not the lapdog kind but the large ones that hunt gophers and squirrels with great enthusiasm. I'm not sure where they got that from, but perhaps it was from their fellow German immigrants.

Of course, like any family, you always get that good farmhand advice that is sometimes so unwelcomely given to your girlfriends, perhaps. One of my relatives always had a great affinity for telling any girlfriend I'd had for over six months that the best thing that she can do in a relationship is to never make her boyfriend choose between his truck or his dog because she will lose that choice any day of the week, which always made for a very uncomfortable conversation with my girlfriend after that happened. But what good is family if they don't make it awkward for you?

With that, I mean, I am so glad that I'm here to be able to vote in support of this. For all my relatives and to my baba and gido, who provided me with so much love growing up, I am going to be voting in favour of this bill, thinking of them.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I move that the committee rise and report.

The Chair: We have to take a step back. Before we do that, I gather there are no more amendments, comments with respect to this bill.

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 26 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Mr. Bilous: Now I would like to move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Ms Sweet: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 26.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur with the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Mr. Bilous: Madam Speaker, I rise to seek unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 77(1) such that Bill 26 can proceed to third reading immediately.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 26

Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act

Mr. Bilous: Madam Speaker, I rise to move third reading of Bill 26, the Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act.

Madam Speaker, there are a couple things that I wanted to do while we're here on this very, very historic day as the Assembly is debating the Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act, which is a very historic bill recognizing contributions that Ukrainians have made to our great province over the past 125 years. I first want to thank all of the men and women that are in our galleries, from the Speaker's gallery to the members' gallery to the public gallery, who have taken time out of their busy day to join us today and witness this historic passing.

I should say, Madam Speaker – and this is a thank you to all members of this Assembly – that today is the fifth time in Alberta's history that a bill is moving through all readings of the Assembly in one day. Now, I appreciate that we're still in third reading and it hasn't been passed as of yet, but the fact that we've had unanimous consent to move it into third reading and we introduced it today is still historic. On that, I do want to extend a heartfelt thank you to all members of this Assembly, to all parties for agreeing to move this bill forward and for their participation in this debate. On behalf of the government it's greatly appreciated. I also want to thank the MLA for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for moving this bill, sponsoring this bill, and all of my colleagues on this side of the House.

Again, I want to give a special shout-out to Ambassador Shevchenko, who has joined us especially today for this bill, the Ambassador to Canada from Ukraine. His presence is very appreciated.

As well as other members, we have members from the board of the UCC Alberta chapter. We have men and women from the Ukrainian community who have contributed so much to our province in the form of volunteer hours to move – I was going to say their causes – to make sure that Albertans are educated on the contributions Ukrainians have made, and they continue to make significant contributions to our great province.

Madam Speaker, I will take my seat but want to invite all members of this Assembly, all members in the galleries, all of our guests – that at the conclusion of today's sitting everyone is invited to a small reception up in 512 to celebrate this day and this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Just to clarify, hon. minister, you are moving third reading on behalf of the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville?

Mr. Bilous: Correct.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Next on my speakers list to third reading I have the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to join my colleagues and to rise to support Bill 26, Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act. Today all parties and members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta are collaborating to unanimously pass a bill which will commemorate the 125th anniversary of the first Ukrainian settlers in Alberta by dedicating September 7 of every year to these great founders of Alberta and marking 2016 and 2017 as the Year of the Ukrainian-Canadian.

The hardships and extreme challenges these settlers endured were great. Despite their struggles, they settled the land in many areas of Alberta. They came to start a new life. Their work was long, but the reward they sought was freedom. Their drive, their rich history, their determination has resulted in some Ukrainians playing a prominent role in Alberta. Former Premier Ed Stelmach is a proud Ukrainian, and of course in my riding former MLA Genia Leskiw was the first woman and the first Ukrainian to ever hold a seat.

There are countless examples of Ukrainian contributions to this province, and I think it's wonderful that many of those will be recognized here in this Assembly today. Canada is home to the second-largest Ukrainian population in the world. It's estimated there are 3 million Canadians of Ukrainian heritage, and Ukrainian Canadians make up almost 10 per cent of our country's population. Today is about honouring the past and extending our gratitude to the future.

I urge all members of this Assembly to join me in passing Bill 26, Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act. Thank you.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and to take a moment to comment on the wonderful diversity in Strathcona-Sherwood Park, and I know that it's made up of a lot of members of the Ukrainian community. I would also like to take a moment to thank the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for being a champion of this legislation and working alongside community members to do it. I feel that she cooked her way into this and won awards and won the hearts over in a very authentic style. I know that you'll continue as the MLA for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville to get things done in the best interests of your constituents.

I'd like to also recognize the Ukrainian members of Strathcona-Sherwood Park and their countless sacrifices to grow our community. In fact, the very high school I went to in Sherwood Park has an aspect of this, as Archbishop Jordan high school has a really great program called the Ukrainian bilingual program. Over the summer I was able to attend a meet-and-greet with Ruslana. As many of you know, Ruslana is a famous Ukrainian superstar and a social justice activist, and it was an honour to witness her authentic energy. It moved the crowd with songs and with inspirational messages to maintain connection to their authentic roots of Ukrainian heritage. I know that this program does that continuously, and I learned a lot about the Ukrainian heritage through a lot of my friends that were in this program growing up.

As an immigrant I feel like I have a lot to thank of the Ukrainian community, and I would like to thank them for their dedication to building this province. For the sacrifices, thank you; for your knowledge and opportunities that you have created for generations to come, thank you; for your food that you have shared, thank you; and for your continual commitment to growing this province, thank you. I know that when community members of mine come to Canada, one of the first things that I go to show them is the Ukrainian food and the heritage here.

It is my honour to support this bill here today, and I thank all of the dignitaries for coming out, for making a long trip here, and for all of the work that made this day possible, for the collaboration between parties, for the championing by the MLA, and for the ability to have this debate and to have many witnesses for the debate here in this House.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, there are a few times in this place that I'm sure we'll all look back upon with the circle on our calendar. From time to time this place can be a little adversarial. It has its moments where politics breaks out, but every once in a while it's great to be part of a day that isn't quite as adversarial, where we celebrate the best of things, where we celebrate the best of our province, and this afternoon has certainly been that.

I'd like to thank everyone, and I know some of you have stuck with us all afternoon. I'd like to thank you so much for being here in the gallery. I know that many of you have done so much for our province and for your community and for us all collectively. I'd like to thank you for that.

It's been so wonderful to have the ambassador, His Excellency, here with us, in his own right a superstar. In Ukraine after a successful media career he was elected three times, something that many of us aspire to do. He served as chairman of the Free Speech Committee, the youngest-ever committee chairman of the Ukrainian Parliament. He sponsored 60 legislative acts that were adopted by the Ukrainian Parliament, including laws on access to information. Sounds like he'd fit well in the caucus here. In many respects we all can aspire to a life of public service like he has had and continues to have. It's an absolute pleasure to have you with us.

Our great province of Alberta in our great country of Canada has been a beacon of hope for so many immigrants from so many parts of the world. Our province has a rich diversity that we are all proud of. Today I'd like to spend just a few minutes underlining the contributions of a particular group of Albertans, Ukrainian Canadians.

In Alberta 1 in 10 of us have Ukrainian roots. It's not unusual to meet Ukrainian students from the Ukraine, in fact, at the world's largest Easter egg in the small community of Vegreville. I practised saying the word, like, 15 times and just got scared by it: pysanka.

We're so blessed in Alberta with beautiful Ukrainian agriculture, art, dance. I feel like we could start a dance troupe of MLAs who have such a rich history in Ukrainian dance. Surely that would be led by the Premier and Minister of Economic Development and Trade. Tied in with the members from this side of the House, I think it would be a wonderful opportunity that could unite us around an important thing like Ukrainian dance, poetry, food, and the other cultural blessings in Alberta of this very special community.

Ukrainian Canadians are strong and resilient, often as a result of hardship that has swept that nation over the last 120 years: famine, oppression, Russian meddling in Ukraine dominated life in Ukraine. Many, many were forced to flee their land for lands of hope around the world, and many of them arrived here in Alberta. Under some of the worst oppression that we have ever seen, through famine and oppressive governments, such atrocities have taken place. Even today Ukraine faces aggression from the Russian leader, Vladimir Putin. Throughout all of this hardship Ukrainians kept coming to Alberta to prosper in both urban and rural Alberta.

So many incredible Ukrainians have made an incredible impact on the fabric of Alberta. We salute them. Of course, we salute the first Ukrainian-Canadian Premier, Ed Stelmach. We salute the Ukrainian Canadian Congress Alberta Provincial Council, which has been active for a very long time in the province, putting on cultural events, raising money for so many important causes, including most recently supporting medical service for those in eastern Ukraine.

Over the past number of years, three open, transparent elections have taken place in the Ukraine, and Ukrainian Albertans have been there to observe as part of the elections observation missions, to ensure that those elections are done in a democratic way. In fact, one of those observers, who spent time on two separate occasions as an observer, had worked for me personally. I'm very proud to have supported him in his ability to go and be of assistance where needed.

Perhaps the most amazing thing to me about this incredible community is their commitment to three things: faith, family, and community. We all could be well served to look at the incredible amount of commitment that this community has to each other, to their faith, to their family and be reminded of the things that are truly important in each of our lives. To that I say thank you. Thank you for your efforts in our communities. Thank you for your efforts in building the very fabric of our province. Thank you for caring so much. May God continue to bless you, and may God bless Alberta.

The Speaker: I make the assumption that there's no 29(2)(a) request.

Hearing none, I would recognize the Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, if I might just very briefly ask for unanimous consent of the House to go to one-minute bells.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is indeed a very special day as we come together to remember and celebrate Alberta's rich Ukrainian heritage, a heritage and culture that has been woven into the identity of this province for generations. As we mark September 7 as Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day, we also do it on the 125th anniversary of Ukrainian immigration to Canada. As Minister of Culture and Tourism I appreciate the importance of this milestone and the value of keeping this history alive.

I had the chance to celebrate one of those living pieces of history this summer when we opened Stelmach House at the Ukrainian Village. The building served as a safe place for Mykola and Dora Stelmach, who came to Canada from the village of Zavydche, Galicia, in 1898 with the dream of a bright future. They were eventually followed by the 170,000 Ukrainians who eventually immigrated to Canada by 1914. They were faced with the realities of a harsh Canadian climate and unfamiliar territory, but despite those challenges they not only adapted and prevailed; they thrived here. As an immigrant myself I value that determination in a personal way.

Like so many of those who we are here to celebrate today, I too started my journey elsewhere. I came to this country in 1988 as a refugee from Nicaragua, and I made my home in this beautiful province. My family left our country, our home in search of a better life, in search of a safe place to be, and we found it here, just like our Ukrainian pioneers did. We found that safe place in this province, and we are here today celebrating that history.

Most Albertans of Ukrainian ancestry can trace their roots back to the earliest pioneers who arrived in Canada during that time. Days like Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day will ensure that the stories of Alberta's Ukrainian ancestors continue to be told and continue to live on today.

As Minister of Culture and Tourism I am so proud to be able to stand here with all of the members of this House in celebration of this beautiful history. Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other members who would wish to speak to third reading of Bill 26, Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act?

Seeing and hearing none, I would recognize the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville to close debate.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand today and close debate on what has been a lovely conversation, where people have talked about their families, their experiences, their histories. To be able to bring forward this bill and have something that is titled Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act, I think, is really important. Like I mentioned before, Ukrainians were here tilling the land, building the economy for a province that had not even come into this country.

But, of course, I want to recognize that amongst the many contributions that were brought by Ukrainians to Alberta and Canada to help build this province, it came with a lot of sacrifice. It came from families who took that chance to have mothers and children be separated for periods of time from their fathers and from their brothers and their sons, where they went to Canada and took a train to Alberta to see what was here, with the promise of a new life. They heard that there was good land for cheap prices, and it was something better than where they had come from. It was the opportunity to build something of their own. So with tears and sharing kisses, they said good-bye, but they were ultimately reunited here, and they built the farms that we have now.

If you look at the maps of who owns the different sections out in a constituency like Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, you see Stelmach, you see Warawa, you see Toroshenko, you see Kurulok, you see Gargus, you see Anaka, and those are the stories that have been so long a part of our province and that I'm so proud of.

Just a few people that have worked to help grow our culture and our economies in Alberta. We have people like Olesia from the UCC, who works all of the time. Whenever she is somewhere, she always enjoys a standing ovation because she works tirelessly in everything that she does.

Hazel Anaka brings people out to the town of Andrew, a town that only has about 300 people at a given time, and fuels the local economy by holding events like Babas and Borshch, where people come out from Smoky Lake and across Alberta, with many people from Strathcona county. Maybe I'll take first place in the borscht cook-off next time. We'll see.

Jars Balan is not here, but he's part of the Canadian Institute of Ukrainian Studies at the University of Alberta. It's a prized part of the university, where they do good, scholarly work to look more into what our history is.

Daniel Warawa, you know, not only is a deputy reeve and a councillor, but he's a farmer. He's one of the people that works to feed us on his 3,000 acres of land, and he welcomed me not only into his home but into his combine to take the flax crop off last year. I know that the peas were tough this year, but maybe next year it'll be better.

I want to thank Myron Kruk, who I didn't mention before. He's the president of the Vegreville Cultural Association, that actually puts on the Pysanka Festival. People just lend so much to the quality of life that we enjoy here.

There were four waves – and we're currently in the fourth wave – of immigration. In the first wave of immigration we had 170,000 Ukrainians come here in a very short period of time, between 1891 and 1914, and then we saw many more generations come after that. They were part of building our democracy, part of building our economy, part of building our identity, and also they were incredibly important with our labour movement here in Alberta. We had the sugar beet farm workers in the '20s and '30s. You know, they came here to do the work that the people here didn't want to do. We see these stories time and again, that people come here for a better life, and we know that if they're good enough to work here, then they are good enough to be part of our communities and live here.

I just would be so remiss in not recognizing the Association of United Ukrainian Canadians. Even though I know that they enjoy a different sort of reputation among some circles, they have long-standing roots in Alberta and in organization, and they worked really hard to make sure that the Ukrainians that were here and working were taken care of. I am just so proud of them and of everyone else who has really raised the profile of Ukrainians. There was a time when Ukrainians were seen as a lesser people, when they could not speak their language, when they could not sing their anthems in various places, when they were persecuted in Alberta.

We have come such a long way, but we know and have recognition days like this because we need to constantly remind ourselves that we are a province that is built of many, many different kinds of people, many backgrounds, many socioeconomic factors, and it's these differences that we embrace because we are ultimately united. I think that it speaks volumes when we have so much support – unanimous support, it looks like – in the House to do this and to recognize this. It's incredible. I'm so proud of all of us here in the Legislature today. I think we have done all of our guests from across the world very proud, and I look forward to seeing this pass.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 26 read a third time]

The Speaker: Congratulations to all of you. It's a historic moment. The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Seeing as how today is truly a historic day, it now being five pieces of legislation in Alberta's history read and passed all in one day, passed unanimously by this House, I will thank all members and invite all members and guests to join us in 512 for a reception, and I now move that the House stand adjourned until 9 tomorrow morning.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:32 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning.

Please bow your heads and let us reflect, each in our own way. Today let us strive to ensure that our actions that we take in this House aim to improve our tomorrow. Each day let us be reminded of the pure privilege of being able to serve the people of Alberta. Let us be inspired by our constituents as well as by one another.

Please be seated.

Bill 25

Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act

[Adjourned debate November 2: Mr. Dach]

The Speaker: The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to have the opportunity to rise before the House to discuss Bill 25, the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act. I'm quite confident when I say that this is not new information to anyone in this room, that the government seemingly does not want or feel the need to conduct or release economic impact studies on the radical ideological agenda. Perhaps it's not surprising that when you're imposing long-debunked economic policies, it's tough to find anyone reputable to rubber-stamp whatever – I don't know what this is – policy that the government is deciding to push through on a whim.

As the opposition we're used to asking the NDP to slow down, to study the impact or to at least try and give Albertans the heads-up on the terrible roller-coaster ride that they're trapped on for the next three years, but not today. Today I'd like to take the opportunity to talk to my colleagues about a report released by the Fraser Institute that outlines exactly what the impacts of this policy will be. [interjections] I'm not sure what was funny about that statement, but I will continue. [interjections]

The Speaker: Government members, please allow the member to make her statement. I'm having difficulty hearing her.

Please proceed.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I will be tabling the five requisite copies of the report this afternoon. I have them here if you'd like them.

In August the Fraser Institute released a study analyzing the economic impact that the 100-megatonne cap would have on Alberta's struggling economy. Nobody disputes that this cap is meant to cap future production. Using oil sands production forecasts to 2040 from the National Energy Board, the paper actually estimated future emission levels from the oil sands production and quantified what the prohibited production would cost. Using these production estimates, the Fraser Institute was able to determine that this policy has the potential to reduce cumulative production between 2025 and 2040 somewhere between 2 billion to 3 billion barrels of oil. Let me say that again: reduce the cumulative production between 2025 and 2040 somewhere in the range between 2 billion to 3 billion barrels of oil.

Most Albertans view this as a serious loss and that it should be avoided, and I'm just not so sure what the government is trying to – maybe they view this as a win. I'm not sure. As a legislator and an Albertan I can honestly say that I don't understand what the members of this government are missing when they speak to their constituents. Every single day I have constituents coming into my office, struggling Albertans, and it's so compelling. I don't know about some of you, but it keeps me up at night. They're desperate for help and work, and they come into my office and they send me e-mails, hundreds of e-mails, phoning me, desperate for help. Just in case you didn't know, Alberta has seen a loss of 104,000 jobs in this downturn in Calgary, and the unemployment rate in August was at 8.6 per cent. Eight point six per cent. It's a hard number to say. I can't get my head around it. That's the highest rate in the province in September since 1994, the highest rate in 22 years.

Unfortunately, the government wants to absolve themselves of guilt by blaming the low price of oil for all of Alberta's woes, but losing billions of barrels of oil production by 2040: that is not a consequence of low oil prices. That is not. That is poor government policy. Those barrels represent somewhere in the neighbourhood of $150 billion to $250 billion. How do you get your head around that? [interjections] My goodness. These amounts are the most unimaginable sum of money. I really can't fathom it. The figure represents jobs. It represents numbers of social services. It actually represents and it provides our citizens . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, the Minister of Advanced Education's volume is just a little louder than normal, and I was having difficulty hearing. I'm sure he will tone it down. Could you continue? Please proceed.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that I don't know about this side, but I find it appalling that the government thinks that these numbers are funny. I think that for every Albertan watching this right now, that is a shameful, shameful display from the government towards the people of Alberta.

As I'd like to say, and I'm going to reiterate just to make it clear: $150 billion to $250 billion. That is jobs, Mr. Speaker, that is social services that we provide our citizens, and it represents schools, hospitals, and roads, things that we take to understand that this government and this House actually care about. If you want to talk about cuts to social services, it has to be recognized that this type of backward economic policy that this ideological NDP government likes to pursue will have significant negative impact on our province's ability to care and results in higher taxes and less value for every Albertan dollar. A weak economy does not help the sick, it doesn't help the poor, and it certainly does not help the working class.

Now, the NDP don't like to keep track of what impact their green policies will have on GHG reductions either, and therefore the NDP do not like to keep track of the costs of their policies per abated tonne. The extensive research of the Fraser Institute has produced some estimates of the emissions that could be averted, so this is helpful information. As a result of the 100-megatonne emissions cap policy, they found that the potential emissions averted due to the policy change will be minimal – minimal – in comparison to projected global emissions. Not only are the oil sands a fraction of the per cent of global emissions, and any oil we don't extract here will just get extracted somewhere else – it's not like we can force companies to leave it in the ground. Even if we, even if this government, if the NDP forces companies here to keep it in the ground, nobody else will.

The Fraser study goes on to note that “if all production from Alberta’s oil sands were halted, the resulting reductions in global emissions would . . . be quite minimal” and that in 2040, when the NEB projects oil sands production will be largest, meaning the emissions from production would be at the greatest point in 2040, the 100-megatonne emissions cap policy will avert – get this – only 25 megatonnes.

The report adds that the abated emissions, so the reduced emissions, will also come at a high cost per tonne. So with the cost per tonne of abated GHGs beginning somewhere in the neighbourhood of $863 per tonne in 2025 and then increasing to a staggering $1,172 by 2040 – let us put that figure into perspective for you. [interjections] And you can laugh all you want. Prime Minister Trudeau wants Albertans to pay a tax of $50 per tonne of carbon dioxide equivalent by 2022, and that’s just three years later than the NDP’s policy would see Albertans forgoing $863 per tonne. The difference is astonishing. Estimates on the social cost of carbon do not come anywhere close to justifying this exorbitant rate.

The highest estimated cost, Mr. Speaker, for the social cost of carbon produced by the U.S. government’s interagency working group put 2040 costs of carbon at only $96. While the paper acknowledges that this is only a first step in attempting to quantify the effects of Alberta’s 100-megatonne emissions cap policy on future oil sands production and related GHG emissions, I would have to say, as an understatement, that its findings are quite startling. I have to speak to how detached this government is from everyday Albertans. The paper’s findings are that their policy has the potential to reduce future oil sands production by a large amount but that the GHG emissions that could averted would be minimal to the projected global emissions. That is not the hallmark of a successful and prudent policy.

Furthermore, the cost of the averted emissions would be so incredibly high that it’s so troubling for all Canadians. Alberta is the economic engine of Canada, and it needs responsible policies to remain so. I believe that in this House that is something we all agree on. As the Official Opposition we are left with serious questions about the choices that this government is making by putting Alberta’s future prosperity at risk. There’s a severe imbalance of costs and benefits that result from this policy. Unsurprisingly, perhaps the NDP have once again failed to consider the broader economic impact of a policy before proposing it.

One cost they may not have considered is lease payouts for the stranded assets. The 100-megatonne cap actually doesn’t even cover the development of leases that we’ve already sold. For example, if prices pick up and everybody wants to develop, some will have to be told no. Will we be paying out leaseholders who are told that they can’t develop their leases that they bought because that would just put us over this artificial cap? You know, just like we are about to pay out the coal companies in an early shutdown, this is a question that we need answered.

Ultimately I feel – and I think I speak on behalf of our caucus – that this policy is short-sighted and ignores the fundamental realities of energy demand and economics. This is not funny. This is Albertans. This is families. This is the people we represent and their livelihoods and their quality of life.

Alberta is an extremely environmentally responsible jurisdiction – an extremely environmentally responsible jurisdiction. Our energy industry actively advocates for polluter-pay models. They work hard to innovate, to reduce their water usage, and they are at the forefront of reclamation technologies and thus often restore their sites to a more pristine state than when they actually began their first extraction work.

As other countries . . . [interjection] Maybe you haven’t been there. You should maybe go check it out. I would go. Or perhaps you’re under the impression, Mr. Speaker, that it’s Mordor. Just to check, you might want to go and dispel this myth that has been prattled on about. As I’ve said, once you see it, once you understand it, there is absolutely no question about what our industry is doing. That doesn’t mean we can’t do better. There is always that opportunity. Here we do it better. Here we want the opportunity to do better. If given the economic environment to do it better, we’re always going to do it better.

As other countries move forward in their development and increase their energy consumption . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I have a sense that there may be a 29(2)(a) question. Is that correct, hon. member?

Mr. Loewen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Now, we’ve just heard several good reasons why this emissions cap is not a good idea. Yesterday, I believe, the minister, when she introduced this, said, “We need growth in the oil sands.” It stands to reason that if you want growth in an industry, putting a cap on it doesn’t make sense. She also said that we have justified pride in our industry, but that goes against what the Premier says, that we’re embarrassing cousins. I’m not sure where this pride is that this government is talking about here.

Now, this government always blames conservative governments for no pipelines, but who’s protesting the pipelines, Mr. Speaker? Who’s protesting these pipelines? We know who’s protesting these pipelines: the very people that this government hires and continues to hire. That’s who’s protesting pipelines.

I’d like to ask the member here. We know that we are the most socially, environmentally responsible oil-producing jurisdiction in the world. I would like to hear the government suggest otherwise. The minister just said that we should have justified pride in the industry. I’d ask the member to comment on this, on these different issues that I’ve brought up here about a government that calls us the embarrassing cousin, a government that hires anti-oil activists from across Canada to come here and work and be paid hard-working Albertans’ money, and then they sit there and bring forward job-killing bill after job-killing bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it seems to me that one of the things that gets flung across the floor on a regular basis is the words “climate denier.” That seems to actually be the only overarching message that comes back to us when we start promoting what we do in this industry. That’s actually the only answer that I can recall that we’ve received, which pretty much – as far as they’re concerned, flinging insults is the way to pivot away from actually speaking about what this industry does, whether, you know, we’re embarrassing cousins or we are climate deniers or whatever manner of slanderous comments and whatnot comes from across the floor. I’m not quite sure.

As a person who lives in this province, sends her children to school, who breathes the air, who eats the food from this Earth, and who drinks the water out of her tap, I can’t imagine a more insulting comment than to be called a climate denier because automatically that means anybody who’s me and who happens to believe in what I believe in doesn’t care about the earth, air, and water. I do take offence to that, Mr. Speaker, and as far as I'm concerned, that's probably the biggest issue that I have here.

If we're wanting to talk about facts, I have a few, and these are to be helpful. [interjections] You can laugh. Please. Albertans are hearing you. They're going to hear you laugh, and they're going to understand that those of us who live here, who believe in this industry and also believe that they can do better, also believe that there is policy that needs to come down to create an opportunity for diversity, to create an opportunity to become more environmental. All of those things are not up for question.

However, if the overarching mandate that is coming from this government is to call me and my friends on this side of the House climate deniers, that includes my children, that includes my family, that includes my neighbours, that includes my constituency. I'm sure Chestermere-Rocky View is extremely thrilled right now for those people who voted for me to be called climate deniers, Mr. Speaker. Just to be clear, if that's the mandate, I'm going to continue to explain a few of the numbers, and should this side of the House like to dispute those numbers, that would be fine. Fine. That's great. This is an open discussion to have that discussion.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. You will recall that yesterday there was a point of order with respect to language which may come close under 23(j), so I caution all of the members to be conscious of the words that they're using.

I believe, finally, we now have the Minister of Advanced Education, who wishes to speak. Is that correct?

Mr. Schmidt: No, it's not.

The Speaker: Then I have the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that one of the worst things that we are dealing with regarding this bill before us has to do with this oil sands advisory group. Albertans were told that the oil sands advisory group's primary focus is to consider how to implement the 100-megatonne per year carbon emissions limit for the oil sands industry. This responsibility is still noted in their mandate, stated on the government of Alberta's website for the oil sands advisory group.

This panel has been riddled with controversy from the beginning due to the selection of Tzeponah Berman, an individual that once referred to the oil sands as Mordor, among many other contemptuous claims.

We noticed another thing, that two members of this panel have ties to ForestEthics, including Berman, and we're not just talking about a basic membership there; we're talking about former senior director and cofounder.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I read an article recently in the Financial Post about ForestEthics, and I would like to read it into the record.

New information contained in U.S. tax returns makes clear that a large percentage of the fuss over the Northern Gateway pipeline has been generated by a single, American organization: ForestEthics, based in San Francisco. In its 2012 tax return . . . ForestEthics claims credit for having generated fully 87 per cent of the letters of comment sent to [our] National Energy Board.

That's an astonishing number, Mr. Speaker: 87 per cent of the letters of opposition. These are letters opposed to Canadian interests, letters opposed to Alberta jobs, letters opposed to ending the price discount Albertans receive for our resources.

The Financial Post article states:

[ForestEthics'] campaign to halt the Enbridge Gateway pipeline has cemented itself in the Canadian media and citizenry . . . In the last six months of 2012, we amassed more than 25,000 new supporters for this campaign and helped organize the largest act of Canadian civil disobedience in the history of the pipeline fight.

You hear that, Mr. Speaker? They're bragging about halting one of Canada's most important infrastructure projects.

The article goes on to note:

in August, we submitted to the National Energy Board 4,119 (out of 4,722 total . . .) unique Letters of Comment on the Enbridge tankers/pipeline project.

Those are ForestEthics' own words in its tax return dated September 30, 2013.

So now we've got two people representing an un-Albertan and an un-Canadian viewpoint on this panel. Worse than that, Mr. Speaker, ForestEthics boasted in their filings:

By stigmatizing "dirty" sources of energy, we can make it difficult to finance and sell these products.

It should be noted that California has far dirtier oil than we do, and this ForestEthics, based in San Francisco, makes no mention of that.

Mr. Speaker, this is a claim they make, that they have secured the tanker ban on B.C.'s coast. They are taking credit for that, a foreign organization taking credit for stopping tankers on our coast. That is an infringement on Canada, an infringement on Alberta.

This article states:

Since 2008, ForestEthics has been the workhorse of the Tar Sands campaign, co-funded by the Rockefeller Brothers Fund, the William & Flora Hewlett Foundation and the Tides Foundation. Tides has dispersed more than $20 million for the Tar Sands campaign, including . . . $1.3 million to ForestEthics. The origin of these funds is not revealed by Tides.

These are foreign interests, Mr. Speaker, from a country that is seriously advantaged by landlocking Canadian oil, by forcing our product through their refineries, their pipeline infrastructure. As a result, they have left Canadian producers with no choice but to accept a significant discount on prices we are able to demand. In other words, we are stuck on account of this.

The article itself says:

By blocking pipeline and port infrastructure projects, environmental organizations landlock Canadian oil within North America and continue the U.S. monopoly on Canadian oil exports.

The problem with the funding of the Tar Sands Campaign is the secret donors that may have an agenda . . . contrary to Canadian interests.

This government – this government – has clearly stacked this panel with anti-Canadian and anti-Albertan interests, Mr. Speaker. It is reprehensible. This is our oil sands advisory committee. Our government is validating un-Albertan opinions, giving these foreign radicals a voice and a platform, giving these destructive ideas legitimacy in our processes. It would be hard for an elected government to show more disdain than this for the lifeline of everyday Albertans.

The NDP I Love Oil Sands T-shirts and photo ops aren't cutting it, Mr. Speaker, not when they're appointing people like this from the leave-it-in-the-ground camp. As if that's not enough, Berman is signatory to the Leap Manifesto, co-chair of this committee. She isn't just a member of the panel; she has a significant and influential position.

And it gets worse. There have been unchallenged allegations that participation on this panel is some kind of a reward for companies that agreed to publicly back the NDP climate action plan.

Furthermore, this panel does not represent a true cross-section of our oil sands industry due to the exclusion of small players, Albertan companies, wholly Albertan-owned companies. All but one of these companies are multinationals. They have hedged their bets outside of Alberta. For example, CNRL: they have assets in the North Sea. They are already preying on juniors struggling in this economic climate to survive this government's radical policies. Statoil: main office? Houston. Assets? Norway, Gulf of Mexico, all over the world, really. Cenovus: Weyburn oil field in Saskatchewan; 50 per cent ownership in two American refineries. Shell: one of the largest resource multinationals, with significant assets on every continent in the world. Suncor: along with assets in a number of other provinces, they operate in Commerce City, Colorado. ConocoPhillips, an American multinational energy corporation: their assets are in Alaska, Latin America, Europe, Asia Pacific, Middle East, and Kazakhstan.

I don't know what all of their motives are, but I do know they are self-immolating their own industry just to get Trans Mountain twinned. This is a shameful thing given that the NEB had already recommended that project. It is disappointing to see the NDP government choosing to appoint extreme anti oil sands activists to co-chair this Alberta panel and stacking the deck. Albertans deserve much better, Mr. Speaker.

As if all that controversy wasn't bad enough, this House will not even benefit from the advice of this group before being asked to pass the legislation that this advisory group is discussing, for Pete's sake. Without their feedback, here we are today expected to implement a 100-megatonne cap. We've got this mess of a panel, and we're not even going to hear from them. What was the point? Healthy paycheques for left-wing friends? Was that the point of this panel?

During this time of economic uncertainty we need to have a balanced approach on environmental stewardship and ensure the success of our energy industry. Industry members are still very curious about how the 100-megatonne limit will be distributed, how the performance standards for GHG emissions will be crafted. This bill does not clarify any of that, and we are being asked to pass this bill without even knowing the full details regarding how fair this will be across the entire industry. This government continues to fail to see the urgency of clarifying their plans to drastically change the province's energy industry regulations. We've got the bill now, but the details we need to support it: they're not here.

Worse, this government isn't being honest with Albertans about the bill's role in pipeline approval. The NEB has already recommended Trans Mountain for approval after extensive vetting. The NEB has already looked at the GHGs in association with the pipeline itself and deemed them fair. Trans Mountain epitomizes common-sense infrastructure. Most of the right-of-way has already been secured as this was just a doubling. Beyond that, taxation in exchange for pipeline approval: really? A matter of interprovincial transportation as a core component to belonging to a federation is an abhorrent policy. This province has no role to play in pipeline approval aside from lobbying Trudeau to take the NEB, a science-based, evidence-based, apolitical body, and take their recommendations and approve that pipeline.

The whole thing is a charade by a government to push their ideological agenda, their radical agenda. This NDP government has done nothing more than spread misinformation about how pipeline approval really works. Pipeline approval is entirely a federal matter. In the real world when the merits of a pipeline are assessed, they are assessed based on the pipeline itself.

Only a handful of companies will be shipping product through Trans Mountain, not the entirety of the industry. It shouldn't be a radical idea that only the GHGs produced from the pipeline be considered in the approval process.

Beyond that fact, Albertans are sick and tired of listening to the NDP trash the environmental reputation of our energy industry. It is the best in the world, Mr. Speaker. Our industry is the most environmentally responsible industry on the planet. They do not need a senseless cap that could cost Albertans somewhere between $150 billion and $250 billion in lost revenue. Long before the NDP was even a relevant factor in this province, these companies were spending every single day striving to innovate, working to use less water, advancing their reclamation techniques. The NDP did not invent environmental responsibility. Our energy industry has been practising it for 50 years.

The fact that this NDP government thinks pipeline approval should only be given after they've broken the entire industry, only after they've destroyed the industry's profitability, is unacceptable. I will not support this bill.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) to the member? Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. I was wondering if I could ask you – you were speaking about a balanced approach. Would you mind giving us some examples from your perspective and potentially helping the government to understand what that balanced approach would look like?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, hon. member, for the question. There is a long-standing myth that somehow environmental responsibility and resource development are mutually exclusive, and the fact of the matter is that they are not. That has been simply the mantra of environmentalism for as long as it's been around, that you can't have both.

The fact of the matter, Mr. Speaker, is that you can have both, and our resource industries in this province have proven it year after year after year. You will not find anywhere in the world a resource industry, an agricultural industry, a manufacturing industry that is more responsible than what we have right here in this province.

If this other side over here really had a heart for greenhouse gas emissions and, I'm going to say, pollution in general, they would be trying everything they could to increase Alberta production of everything that we produce in this province, not lessen. Because we have this environmental responsibility ingrained within our souls, everything we produce here is produced with a greater environmental responsibility than anywhere else on the planet. So if you really want to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, stop carbon leakage from leaving our province, cause it to come back the other way, have more products produced in this province, with our environmental record, and you will impact GHG emissions. They will go down as more products are produced here and fewer products are produced in other jurisdictions.

I'll give you just one of many examples. Greenhouses in this province are going to be shutting down on account of carbon taxation. That production is going to go to Mexico, and that produce – peppers, cucumbers, strawberries – is going to be loaded in diesel trucks, cooled and refrigerated by diesel-powered coolers, trucked 4,000 kilometres up the interstates to Canada. In the end, there will no greenhouse gas reductions whatsoever; in fact, it'll go the other way. We ought to be encouraging our greenhouse operators. They should be shielded from Bill 20. They should be encouraged for being the carbon sink that they are.

An Hon. Member: Why don't you believe in local food production?

Mr. MacIntyre: What about local food production?

These are just some of the things. Mr. Speaker, we are the most responsible oil-producing jurisdiction on the planet. That needs to be acknowledged, it needs to be rewarded, and it should not be attacked by this government.

The Speaker: Any other members under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, is it under 29(a)(a)?

Mr. Schmidt: Yes, it is, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Yeah. He won't give a speech.

Mr. Schmidt: No.

Well, anyway, I had the misfortune, of course, of starting off my morning listening to both the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. I know that my day can only go up from here, Mr. Speaker.

But I did want to take issue with one thing that the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake said about carbon leakage. Mr. Speaker, of course, the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake is always in error but never in doubt, and again he made a mistake today when he said that if we wanted to reduce carbon dioxide emissions, industry should move here. Of course, if he knew what he was talking about, he would know that Alberta has the highest per capita carbon dioxide emissions of any province in the country except for Saskatchewan. And, of course, Canada has one of the highest rates of carbon dioxide emissions per capita of any country in the world. So, in fact, he is exactly wrong when he's saying that if we want to reduce carbon dioxide emissions, industry should move here.

Mr. Speaker, I think that that should cause all of the members of this House to take everything that that member says with a serious grain of salt because if he's wrong on that fundamental principle, I can only assume that he's wrong on everything else that he's saying.

The Speaker: Any comments under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. MacIntyre: What I appreciate about what the hon. member said just now, Mr. Speaker, is his clarity in his anti Alberta business position. I'm thankful that they've finally had guts enough to admit what we and Albertans have known all along, that they are anti Alberta business; they are antibusiness to the core.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, you referenced a document in your presentation. I request that you table it this afternoon as a part of the Routine.

Mr. MacIntyre: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It's from the Financial Post.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in support of Bill 25, which imposes a 100-megatonne emissions limit on the oil sands annually. This cap is an essential component of our larger climate leadership plan and sends a clear signal that we are very serious about reducing emissions. While we are serious about reducing emissions, we are also serious about creating jobs, about getting our product to market, and about being the most responsible energy-producing jurisdiction anywhere in the world.

Now, I will not or will endeavour to not reduce this argument to insults. I do not deny that anyone in the opposition cares about the environment. I acknowledge that you all do. I think, however, that we share a fundamental disagreement in terms of where we stand in the world and how we're going to move forward.

Today I'm going to outline a few things. I'm going to outline where Alberta stands in the global picture currently, what has been ineffective in the past, and how we are moving forward with our climate leadership plan. The Official Opposition: they talk a lot, but they don't ever seem to talk about the actual issue, which is climate change. They say they care about the environment. They say they care about vulnerable people. However, they continue to not offer any solutions for how to actually tackle climate change. They don't offer solutions for how we're going to get our products to market or how we're going to help our most vulnerable or how we're going to get jobs back here Alberta.

It leads me to believe, in fact, that members of the opposition are perhaps living in a bit of a bubble, one where climate change is not the defining crisis of our time, where the world is not moving towards a carbon-constrained reality, and where business as usual is an acceptable option. Given that they have no real solutions and given that they don't seem to accept the reality of the world that we live in, I'd like to take a little bit of time to talk about Alberta in a global context.

Mr. Nixon: What's your plan?

Ms Luff: I'm getting there. I have a plan.

The world got together in Paris last year, and they decided that it would be a bad idea to allow global temperatures to rise more than 1.5 degrees above pre-industrial levels. This is because if temperatures rise above that amount, it will have catastrophic effects world-wide.

An Hon. Member: Keep drinking that water.

Ms Luff: Here in Alberta that could mean more drought, more storms, more forest fires, more pests, less snow, more climate refugees, and a decrease in biodiversity.

I heard a member from the opposite side say just now: keep drinking that water. I'm sorry; I was trying not to resort to insults, but the fact of the matter is that you just accused me of saying some things that, in fact, are facts that 97 per cent of the scientific community agree on, and you... [interjections] The global community...

The Speaker: Hon. members, I wonder if you might direct your comments through the Speaker, please.

Ms Luff: If I go back, I'd just like to emphasize what can happen in the world if global temperatures rise by 1.5 degrees Celsius, which is, in fact, something that we are on track to have happen; 97 per cent of the scientific community agrees on this. Again, things that could happen: more storms, more forest fires, more pests, less snow, less biodiversity. I want my children to grow up in a world that still has tigers and polar bears and woodland caribou.

The global community – the global community – has decided that these impacts are unacceptable, and we made commitments to act. Canada has made a commitment within this framework to reduce our greenhouse gas emissions to 30 per cent below 2005 levels by 2030, and the federal environment minister has indicated that this is in fact a low ceiling, that we should be trying to do better than this.

Now, in this context, Alberta has a large role to play, as the Minister for Advanced Education has just mentioned. In Alberta we are some of the largest emitters per capita and also the largest overall emitters in Canada. We're responsible in Alberta for 37 per cent of Canada's total emissions, and we only have 11.7 per cent of Canada's total population. The oil sands represent 24 per cent of Alberta's emissions, and they are, in fact, the fastest growing segment of our emissions profile. This government recognized this reality, the reality that if we didn't do anything, the federal government was going to impose policy on us, and we have seen in the past little while that this is actually true. In creating this climate leadership plan, we're reducing our emissions in a way that takes into account our resource-based economy, our trade-exposed economy. We've created a made-in-Alberta solution in consultation with Albertans and industry so that we can do our part to help reduce Canada's emissions to help us meet our global commitments. The Official Opposition would have us do nothing and let the federal government impose policies on us, and we've seen how effective that's been in the past.

In a global context, then, it is necessary for us to reduce our emissions. Action is necessary. Given that the oil sands have been the fastest growing contributor to greenhouse gas emissions, the cap, in concert with output-based allocations, sends a signal to industry that we're willing to work with them to lower emissions, to get the carbon out of the barrel.

The cap alone is not enough, however. The overwhelming consensus of scientists and economists alike is that the best solution is a broad-based carbon price. The Ecofiscal Commission of Canada, composed of folks like Preston Manning and Jim Dinning, whom the opposition seem to respect very much, has endorsed our plan, stating that "putting a price on [greenhouse gas] emissions is a clear signal to the world that Alberta is adopting sound ecofiscal policies to meet its environmental responsibilities."

The Leach report along with the Canada West Foundation report outline the need to find balance, a policy that shows we care about the impacts of climate change and signals to the world that we are becoming a more innovative place to do business without being so stringent as to cause emissions to simply move elsewhere. The Canada West report states that "Alberta's new climate [change] strategy provides a good example of how to thread the needle . . . The genius of the plan is that it injects competition into the mix . . ."

Mr. Fildebrandt: Point of order.

The Speaker: There's a point of order noted. There's a point of order.

Ms Luff: "... at the firm level by [introducing] 'top quartile' performance."

The Speaker: Hon. member, could we wait? There's a point of order raised.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, it's not acceptable for members to say specifically that anyone has endorsed their plan when they most definitely have not. I've seen the reports from the hon. Jim Dinning and Mr. Preston Manning. They have endorsed some form of carbon pricing. They have most definitely explicitly stated that they do not support this government's plan. I ask that the member withdraw the remarks as it is impugning the reputation of the former members of this place that she has talked about.

The Speaker: Hon. member, can you cite an authority for the statement you've just made? I'm searching.

Cortes-Vargas: Mr. Speaker, this is most clearly a matter of debate, much like the opposition's position on climate change. Honestly, he didn't even refer to a standing order that he was implying that the member went to. I don't believe that there's any point of order here.

The Speaker: I tend to agree that this particular comment – and I have not heard an authority cited.

So please continue, hon. member.

Debate Continued

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will continue where I left off with a quote from the Canada West Foundation report that states:

Alberta's new climate [change] strategy provides a good example of how to thread the needle . . . The genius of the plan is that it injects competition into the mix at the firm level by [introducing] "top quartile" performance . . . there is an incentive to perform better than one's peers.

Alberta's fossil fuel resources will have lower value if we cannot develop them with a lower emissions impact.

Now, here in Alberta we already have the lowest overall tax burden in Canada, with no sales tax and no payroll tax. What the members opposite don't realize is that the world is changing. We are moving to a carbon-constrained future. Our economy here in Alberta, if we leave it at the status quo, is going to become less viable. Our neighbours know this. Washington, Oregon, B.C.: these are regions we have to work with in order to get our resources to tidewater, and they're all making strides in diversifying and greening their economies.

The Official Opposition want us to slow down and be left behind, and when I think about how far ahead we could be if past governments had chosen to act on this, had chosen to take a different path 10 or 20 years ago, I get incredibly frustrated and incredibly angry. It is astounding to me the extent to which previous provincial and federal governments have dropped the ball on this file. Decades of ignoring the issue have left us without access to tidewater and with a severely tarnished international reputation.

It is absolutely true – absolutely true – that we produce some of the most responsible oil in the world, but you wouldn't know it. You wouldn't know that we produce some of the most responsible oil in the world. You wouldn't know that our total emissions are simply a fraction of the whole. At global climate conferences we won fossil of the year award for nonachievement five years in a row. Five years in a row.

I recently read an article from Maclean's magazine which was entitled Oil's Worst Enemy, and, no, Mr. Speaker, it was not talking about me. It was talking about environmentalists, and it was actually talking about our past federal Conservative government. The article quoted several oil industry executives who supported the idea of a price on carbon and, in fact, deemed it necessary. For years, the article argues, we've been heading down the wrong path. To quote it:

Instead of convincing critics Canada could be trusted to develop a carbon-intensive resource in a sustainable fashion, Ottawa instead boasted about Canada's "emerging energy superpower" status, lashed out at environmentalists and thumbed its nose at international climate change efforts, painting a target on the industry's back in the process.

The Official Opposition would have us continue down this path, but our government won't. As an energy-producing province our leadership on this issue can spur innovation and action around the world. I'm so proud to be part of a government that recognizes the scale of the crisis, that is rising to the occasion rather than burying our heads in the sand. There are incredible opportunities here that we need to capitalize on that will benefit all Albertans.

I have heard from members opposite that we on this side do not see or do not understand that people are suffering in our current economy. This is fundamentally untrue. I have friends, immigrants from Korea, who came to Canada and spent their life savings on a small restaurant in downtown Calgary. Because of the downturn people are not coming to their restaurant as much as they used to. [interjections] Let me continue, please. They work the restaurant themselves. Minimum wage is decidedly not a factor. So due to the downturn they're having to work other jobs. They're having to be a dishwasher and a liquor store clerk to continue to make ends meet. Fewer people in offices mean fewer lunch customers. I understand, and I'm acutely aware, but the fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that all of the tax cuts in the world will not refill the office towers in downtown Calgary.

The price of oil is low. It's low right now, and it's going to rebound much more slowly than it has in the past. Our economy is changing. When I talk to friends who are engineers or I talk to the good people at Calgary Economic Development, they know that we ignore climate change and economic diversification at our peril. However, they are hopeful. They know that we can capitalize on opportunities in clean tech, renewable energy, and energy efficiency to create good jobs now and into the future.

Our climate plan is working to capitalize on these opportunities. I hear from constituents that there is a desire for programs to increase energy efficiency, to increase access to public transit, and to help individuals and communities install solar power. Currently in my office I have approximately 200 signed postcards from constituents who want to be included in our energy transition, people who want to focus on community renewable energy. Albertans want to contribute to a green energy future, and programs under our climate leadership program will help them do just that.

Until very recently Alberta was the only jurisdiction in North America without an energy efficiency program. Fortunately, we've established Energy Efficiency Alberta, and it has recently announced its first three programs. The direct install residential program will offer direct, no-charge installation of low-energy products to residences such as lighting, water, and heating. The residential consumer products program will offer point-of-sale rebates to residential customers at retail outlets with products such as lighting, insulation, and appliances. The business, nonprofit, and institutional rebate program will offer incentives for high-efficiency products and installation of electric and gas-based products. These are the first three programs from our energy efficiency program, that will all help to incent jobs, will help to reduce people's carbon emissions, and will help to move Alberta forward.

We are doing many additional things that are only the beginning of programs that will help to create jobs across Alberta, good jobs in clean, greener economies. We're working with school boards to put solar panels on 36 new schools as they're built across the province. This will have the dual effect of reducing costs for school boards and educating students about renewable energy. To quote the vice-principal of Sir John A. Macdonald school in Calgary, which has 40 panels:

It's important [that we] teach our kids about the realities of climate change. We expect many of our students, using the knowledge they learn about solar energy and other renewable . . . solutions in the classroom, will help lead Alberta as we transition to more sustainable energy.

We're also investing in farms to help them become more energy efficient. Through granting programs farmers will be able to lower emissions and costs. The Schuurmans, who are dairy farmers near Millet, said:

The energy-efficiency programs offered by the government gave us the incentive to move ahead with installing solar power on our operation. In addition to the environmental benefits that energy efficiency and solar power provide, we have found that by investing in solar power we have been able to lower our dairy operation's power consumption by over 60 per cent.

Emissions Reduction Alberta is currently seeking new technologies that can help us achieve our methane reduction targets. They've earmarked $40 million to help us advance technologies that reduce methane. The president of Seal Well Inc. supports this investment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to thank the Member for Calgary-East. It's interesting. In 2011 the hon. member was protesting against pipelines and was calling Alberta oil dirty, so I'm not sure whether to say that it's hopeful that maybe there's an attitude change on that side. There seems to be some contradictory information that came from over there.

Needless to say, there are a few things that I'd like to comment on if I may. One of the things that you had mentioned in your speech was: where do we stand in the world? This side, our caucus, the Wildrose caucus, has made it very clear that anything that needs to happen has to be in lockstep with other jurisdictions in the world. I don't believe, at least I have not heard so far, that the Americans are putting in a carbon tax. Maybe I'm mistaken.

I'd like to understand how it is that in order for us to create good, clean energy in this province, which, in my understanding, would require an environment of investment, an environment to bring folks in to create an environment of industry that is able to go forward to innovate with green technology – we have some of the best technology in the world. Wouldn't it be wonderful if our technology was touted by government not only provincially but federally to go across the seas to all of these other jurisdictions, to be the ones in place to help those folks get their emissions under control? That would actually be a real solution. If you're asking for solutions – because I wrote this down, that we evidently don't have the solutions – I don't recall if I could count how many times that we in our caucus have presented that as a solution.

We are in the province with the answers. I don't pretend to stand up here to understand everything that goes on, but thank goodness I live in a province where every single expert lives. If I need expertise, guess what? I'm surrounded by some of the most intelligent, thoughtful, common-sense, and forward-thinking people in this industry that not only wish to do better but are doing better given the opportunity by government, by good policy. I'm very interested to find out – we have a lot of policy coming from this side, and potentially the outcomes are similar, but really good policy will actually produce an outcome that we could all agree on.

Mr. Speaker, I would like the member across the way from Calgary-East to explain to the House about the global community and what it is that this government is trying to do in order to make sure that the global community is in lockstep with the rest of us.

I'd like to just say one other thing before the question is answered. As other countries move forward in their development and are increasing their energy consumption, our global energy demand is only going to grow. There are needs for new emerging markets for energy products that will be met, and they will be met by other countries that can supply them with fuel. I would love to see us be competitive in that aspect. They are not trying to stagnate their country's economic growth.

The Speaker: Hon. member, why don't we give the member a chance to answer?

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Mrs. Aheer: Well, I'm just going to finish my comments if you don't mind, Mr. Speaker, and then I will get to my question.

The Speaker: I believe there's a point of order.

Mrs. Aheer: Energy is at the heart of production and development, and cheap energy is an integral part of economic growth and is central to Canada's success. With respect to the emissions, I mean, it doesn't matter whether it's Canadian or Iranian supplies that meet the growing global demand; there is a demand for energy, and that demand is going to be met. It is inelastic. Energy is in demand and is going to result in emissions, so if we're talking in lockstep and doing a global outlook here, if those barrels of oil are going to come from anywhere, would you not prefer that they came from here and that we have some sort of understanding of what those emissions actually look like? We're actually the only ones that already know what that looks like. You actually said the numbers yourself. You actually said the numbers yourself, so if you look at your own numbers . . .

The Speaker: I sense that the point of order was withdrawn. Is that correct?

Mr. Nixon: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I believe that the hon. Member for Calgary-East mentioned some documents in her statement as well. I would ask, same as mentioned earlier, that they are tabled today in the Routine. The Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, where to begin? You know, every time we enter a debate, which is, I guess, what we're calling what we're seeing here this morning in this Chamber, I always think about people at home watching and saying: "Huh. I'm looking forward to a debate on the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act this morning, and I want to hear some salient points from the government, and I want to hear some equally salient points from the Official Opposition." What we've heard this morning is none of either, and one of the problems I have with that is that when we're dealing with an issue this serious that affects people in this province, reasoned debate is critical.

On one side we're hearing: have reasoned debate. You know, with all due respect, when you're screaming it, it's less effective. On the other side, every time someone brings up a point on this, you yell: climate change denier. In fact, a point of order was called, and you couldn't even answer the point of order without again yelling "climate change denier," and that really doesn't help the conversation either.

We have a whole lot of people watching this, Albertans, who are not seeing reasoned debate on either side of this House. Albertans are looking for balance here, and they're not seeing it. To the argument, I think, that came from the government side about tigers, bears, and woodland caribou: you know, we're actually talking about an Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act. Like, come on. We're talking about the possibility that people are going to lose jobs in this province.

Here's where I want to go into that. This bill actually creates an artificial scarcity in emissions without creating corresponding resources or incentives to innovate to reduce emissions. There are lots of people in the industry and people who write about the industry right now who are looking at this and saying: "What argument are you actually making for this beyond coming at it from a purely marketing point of view? What is the idea here?" Well, the idea is that we'd like to see a greater co-ordination with other jurisdictions. We'd like to see a greater co-ordination within Alberta to incentivize innovation, and we want a greater transparency in the process around oil sands regulations, and we're not seeing that either. You know, here's the government that was going to do things differently. The transparency piece is, frankly, very hard to see.

We look at Bill 25, and a lot of experts are looking at Bill 25, and we're not talking about party experts. We're not talking about think tanks that represent one side or another. We're talking about people who are actually looking at this piece of legislation, and they're saying that it's going to strand a significant portion of oil sands resources and limit Alberta's economic growth. Now, how is it going to do that? Well, it's going to do that by preventing responsible development once the emissions cap is met.

Now, I know that you've got some key players here who are coming to your defence, and they're saying: this is fantastic; we're going to get right behind it. You're forgetting about the lifeblood of this province, that is the smaller companies, that are going to be shut out of the process. Those companies are people with families, with children, with mortgages, with kids to put through university. I appreciate the woodland caribou and the tiger argument, but come on.

The bill also favours current players by artificially limiting the size of Alberta's oil sands market, and you can't deny that that's going to be the case. It stifles competition, and it creates unnecessary barriers.

Now, when someone stands up to say that – and I think I've been on record as saying that I believe there should be a price on carbon. I believe that we need to reduce our emissions. I want to sit at the table, as do my caucus colleagues, and have a conversation about how we make that happen, but that's not a conversation that happens when every time we bring up points, you yell "climate change denier" or "your government had an opportunity to do something, and they did nothing" or any of that rhetoric because you know in your heart that that's not true. The holier-than-thou attitude that you represent on the other side is not actually helping.

There are people who want to have this discussion, and we want to talk about: what are the unintended consequences? Now, I remember standing up here on Bill 20 a number of months ago and saying that our caucus presented a number of thought-out amendments that we had spent considerable time working on, and one of them, the one I brought forward, was an opportunity to look at the unintended consequences of Bill 20. I'm sure that we could probably do the same for this and say: a year after its implementation, what are the unintended consequences of this bill? The response that I got from the other side was: this bill is so good, it doesn't need oversight.

To me, when you ask for reasoned debate and people ask to talk about the oversight piece – and in the past number of months we have heard from people who are seriously concerned as well about GHGs, who are seriously concerned about the environment but also concerned about jobs in this province – and they want to have a conversation about what this whole picture looks like, how it comes together, the idea that they're not even allowed to come to the table and tell the government about the consequences of their legislation is just wrong. It's wrong.

You know, when you create, as you're doing here, two classes of regulated oil sands emissions, those from facilities whose first business occurs before December 31, 2015, and that are going to be capped and those from new or substantially upgraded facilities whose first full business year occurs after December 31, 2015, you are in fact creating two tiers of business in this province. Now, I see the nodding, so I see that you get that that's the case.

The disadvantages of this – and I'm going to bring up OSAG for a minute because I think that a lot has been said about the makeup of this panel. I had said before to a round of attacks on right-wing media that I didn't have a problem with who you put on that panel because I think that if you have dissenting voices from both extremes – and you have extremists on this panel, and I don't think anyone will argue that – somewhere in the middle you'll find some balance. Now, I'm not sure you've found a balance, but I don't think people should be afraid to have extremists sit down at the table for that conversation because the folks who are pushing for responsible development in the oil sands in Alberta just have to have a better argument. That's what I would say: come to the table with a better argument.

I will say that the OSAG consultation and the regulation-making process is not transparent. When you do that, when you put together that kind of a contentious panel and then you don't make the process transparent, what's the first thing people are going to say? Let's face it. You don't come to the table.

I remember when I got my master's, a number of years ago – I specialized in issue and reputational management – the first thing we talked about was: who do you bring to the table when you want to make an argument? You bring to the table your highest credibility sources. Let's be honest here, and I say this gently: you're not bringing to the table your highest credibility sources when some of the folks that you have over there are environmental protesters. So, yeah, not really. You know, this is a problem. You actually have to come to the table and do better and make the process transparent, and you haven't done that. I appreciate the effort. I think you need to come to the table with more transparency, and I think you also have to understand that when people talk to you about creating a two-tiered process and putting some of these smaller companies in jeopardy, you have to listen. You have to listen to those companies.

Finally, I will say to the comment – I did really roll my eyes right back in my head when I heard this – that all of the tax cuts in world will not refill the office buildings in downtown Calgary: they won't. But you know what? Showing the energy industry that you support them and the work they do and showing the rest of the world that you support the energy industry in Alberta will help refill those buildings.

I'll tell you what. During Stampede week I had more than 50 meetings with different oil and gas businesses in downtown Calgary. You know what that week is like. We meet a lot of people. I didn't hear one of those groups say that they encountered an open door when they came to you with their problems, and that is not acceptable. You need to listen. You need to pay attention. You need to appreciate the unintended consequences and have a seat at the table for people who want to come to you with their concerns. I don't see that happening here, and it's deeply concerning.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before giving the opportunity for 29(2)(a), I just want to underline again the principle under 29(2)(a). It's intended to give questions and comments, brief questions and comments, and not to allow any member on any side of the House to simply make another speech. I've also checked and looked at precedent. That seems to have been the past practice on a consistent basis, so I just want to remind you of that.

Is there anyone wishing to speak to 29(2)(a)? The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Calgary-North West and I have disagreed on many occasions, but I did enjoy in this rendition her use of the words "unintended consequences." I was just wondering if she could expand upon the unintended consequences that this policy may bring forward as she sees it.

Ms Jansen: Well, I'd like to thank the member for that question and talk about the idea that this bill favours existing leaseholders – and that's problematic – by limiting the size of the oil sands emission market. Any time you limit a market, there is going to be a segment of the population that is affected by that. Now, certainly, your larger companies are going to be a little more flexible, and that's not going to be problematic for them, but when you create an unregulated market for oil sands emissions, when you add new costs to the consumers and the idea that you lock out new entrants into the industry, that is problematic. What you're doing is limiting the opportunity for business and investment in this province. That's an unintended consequence. And when you do that, you create an unlevel playing field.

We don't even know what the other ones are. That's why I think, as we did on Bill 20, that to have an opportunity a year down the road to meet the stakeholders who will be affected – and we may not know all of them right now – and give them an opportunity to present their case to the government about the results of policy or legislation that is harmful, maybe in an intended way, is an extremely important piece of the process.

We wanted this for Bill 20. We didn't get it. We would like to see some more thought put into the unintended consequences of this. Listen to experts. Listen to economists. Listen to people who have spent 20 or 30 years writing about oil and gas issues. Have a conversation with them, and talk about what those unintended consequences are. Let's remember the idea that we're not going to know the half of it until something like this is put in place, and there has to be an opportunity for those people to come to the table at some point in the future, too. It's our responsibility to make sure they have the mechanism to do so.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View under 29(2)(a).

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. I also wanted to thank the Member for Calgary-North West. Some of the ideas that you did bring forward in Bill 20 were excellent. One of the ones that the member brought forward was about metrics and about accountability measures within this policy. As much as I may have been more passionate and lighting my hair on fire – and I apologize if I sounded like I was yelling; that's not my intention – I'm just a little passionate about this particular bill.

You had mentioned artificial scarcity. This is a very, very important aspect of what's going on with this bill. Would you mind, please, explaining a little bit more about that?

Ms Jansen: Thank you. Well, you know, I think we have a situation here where, when you limit industry's ability, when you limit people's ability to create businesses in the energy industry, you create an artificial scarcity. One of my concerns is that when you limit the oil sands emission market, you create an environment – and I've said this before – and you put limitations on it that shouldn't necessarily be there because they don't actually fit your end goal. I mean, you look at the idea. The Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act: I think it's a laudable effort. The thing, though, is that you're doing it, and industry is telling you that it's flawed. Here's the problem. When you create a piece of legislation that is designed to speak to your base, there is an inherent tendency to be tone deaf to the other people who are affected by this.

Let's be honest here. You've got a base of supporters in the NDP who want to see lots of legislation that keeps the oil sands from working. I mean, you can't deny that. You can't deny that you've got a lot of folks who are saying, "We'd be happy just to shut down the oil sands tomorrow," and if you could do that, good God, your base would be in heaven. The thing is that you've got to find balance, and the problem here is that when you create something like this, there's no balance.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act. I appreciate the really vigorous conversation around these issues. As many of you know, I got into this political game, if you want to call it that, or political role, political vocation, around climate change back in 2002. The then environment minister, out of Medicine Hat, ensured that I was fired in 2002 for criticizing the Klein government over its lack of action on climate change. Lorne Taylor was the nominal environment minister, but many of us called him the anti-environment minister.

I feel very strongly about the issue, obviously. It's about our children. It's about our grandchildren. It's about our global community. It's about leadership. A lot of the rhetoric I've heard today, especially from the Official Opposition, relates to what amounts to, really, a denial of the seriousness of this issue on our planet, a real lack of understanding that this is the most serious, most complex global challenge in our lifetime. It may not hurt us in Alberta for the next 25 or 30 years, it may improve agriculture in Alberta for the next 25 years, but it is a serious threat to the rest of the planet and indeed to Alberta and Canada in the long term.

If you believe the science, if you believe that policy change is essential to reducing our greenhouse gas emissions and their connection to warming and extreme weather events and new pests and new infectious diseases, then you have to believe that bold leadership is needed, because we have done almost nothing. We have made no progress on this globally.

Now, Alberta is not to blame for it all, of course, but we have a really important role to lead as a primary energy producer, as a wealthy western democracy. Who else is going to show leadership on this if we can't? So I applaud the government for putting a cap on emissions. Where else are we going to start to say, "There's a limit to what the environment can take"? We can't just improve efficiencies and expect people to drive less. "Oh, my gasoline engine now only burns one litre per 200 kilometres, so I can drive more." That's part of what happens when we improve efficiency if we don't add a limit on what we're going to actually put into the environment.

If we believe the science, we have to be bold. Tinkering with technology is not going to get us there. We respond to prices, mainly, as human beings. Consumers and producers respond to cost, and if we can make it more costly to do the less environmentally friendly thing, then we can start to move people in the right direction. This is really bold. What this government has done, to put a price on carbon and to put a cap on emissions, is bold. There's no question. It is going to cause some suffering, and it is causing suffering. We see that. We have to be measured about it. We have to be listening. We have to be looking at alternatives. I'm glad to see that cogeneration is given a special dispensation in this.

Cogeneration is the most efficient way of producing energy while we're transitioning to a low-carbon economy. It makes a lot of sense to me.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

We're at 400 parts per million now in our atmosphere, the highest in 10,000 years. If we don't say that there's a limit in Alberta, why would anybody else say that there's a limit on the global emissions? We have to say that there's a limit beyond which our environment simply cannot recover. Even today we know that in our lifetime we will not see any lowering in the carbon emissions in our atmosphere. It takes a hundred years to reduce the amount of carbon that's currently collected up there.

Both the Liberal government and the Conservative government in Ottawa failed us. They simply were not willing to take a bold step and see this as the most serious threat to the planet and requiring leadership. Again, Canada, as one of the most privileged, wealthy, and scientifically capable countries in the world, must show the leadership. Yes, we're going to have to pay a little more than other parts of the world. Yes, we might suffer a little more than other parts of the world because they are suffering immensely with extreme weather events, resource depletion, water problems, flooding. Let's get serious about trying to find the way forward. I hope this government is listening to the industry and finding that balance.

But we have been subsidizing the fossil fuel industry for decades. We have been subsidizing it in billions. Let's start providing the same level playing field for the renewable and clean energy sector. Why should we force the clean energy and technology sector to compete with current low prices of coal and carbon fuels when they have had all their infrastructure paid for, all of their accelerated capital cost allowance benefits, and all the research benefits that governments have poured into it for the last 50 years? Suddenly we're telling the renewable and clean tech: compete with what we have now; don't expect subsidies. Well, I'm sorry. That is simply untenable given the over 50 years of subsidies we've been giving to the industry.

Sector-by-sector standards under Stephen Harper haven't brought us to where we need to be. Cap and trade is difficult to monitor and to prove that sharing or trading credits between those who are planting trees and those who are burning fossil fuels is a responsible or a verifiable way of measuring. So a carbon levy is the way to go. It's simple; it's cheap; it's enforceable. It treats consumers and producers equally, and we're all going to have to pay if we want our children to have a better future. That's just the reality.

I believe that a cap on emissions is important. I believe that the larger industry, as the Member for Calgary-North West has said, is in an advantaged position. The larger industries are going to benefit more from this cap than the smaller industries, that are going to struggle. But I see this government is starting to pay attention to the smaller industries, the new industries that are coming on, and providing them with a little bit less of an impact from this cap. I see, again, the cogen, which I think could be a really interesting opportunity with the oil sands to provide the waste gas into a cogeneration facility and actually reduce the net emissions from our SAGD and even our mining operations substantially. It would actually keep our electricity prices at a reasonable level while we transition.

On balance, I look forward to some of the debate around Bill 25 and some of the very specific issues that are not at all clear. For example, the cabinet can approve exemptions for methods that result in low emissions such as small experimental projects and primary production. I'm wanting more clarity around what kind of flexibility, what kind of judgments cabinet is going to make around specific projects. I think we need to know more about that.

I'm also concerned about being clear. What constitutes cogeneration, how is it different from combined heat and power, and how much cogeneration? If an oil sands plant is providing its own cogeneration to heat and electrify some of its own facility, does that constitute the full contribution that it's going to make to the province, or is it simply taking its own advantage of this exemption, where cogeneration gets exempted with a separate 10-megatonne limit? I would like to see that apply to contributions to the grid, the general grid, rather than just in-house benefits to the company itself. Those are some questions that I hope we can see more explicit details on.

We in the Liberal caucus have been calling for a hard cap on emissions for at least a decade. I for one welcome that, and I look forward to hearing more details, then, about what exceptions, what exemptions this government is looking at and how that could be misused, in my view, to allow favourites, picking winners and losers and not being transparent and clear with Albertans about why they're getting exemptions and how it's in the longer term best interests of carbon reduction and climate change management.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thanks to the independent Member for Calgary-Mountain View for his comments. I want to thank him also for voting with the opposition here against the carbon tax when the government brought that forward. That's good.

But I did want to ask him kind of one question. He talked about cap and trade being very difficult, but he seems to suggest that cap is fine. So I just wanted him to maybe explain himself, how a cap is fine and cap and trade is difficult.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. That's a good question. To me, what I see happening here is the best of both worlds. It's difficult to enforce, in my view, and provide adequate oversight for companies that, for example, trade a credit for a cap in this province with some other province or some other industry, whether it's tree planting or no-till farming that gets credits for doing what they're doing. Just how do you measure that, and how valid is that? I have not been a supporter of cap and trade because it's so difficult to verify the tonnage and the benefits, for example, for certain tree-planting operations or a renewable wind energy project that doesn't actually work because of various technical problems or wind issues.

On the other hand, a tax provides a very clear message to all of us that we have to change our ways. The producers have to change. The consumers have to change. In fact, then, a cap on emissions is saying to everybody that we have reached the limit. Four hundred parts per million is beyond what is recognized as a safe limit for the atmosphere; 350 is considered to be something that we could live with and have some stability in our climate. Four hundred, where we're at now, is clearly pushing the very edge of what is sustainable.

So putting a cap on it is actually recognizing, for all of us, that our combined activities now at 400 parts per million has to be the limit that we try to strive for. If no sector, especially our largest carbon-emitting sector and our least clean fuel, our most energy intensive fuel, the tar sands, if we can't put a cap on those, how do we actually move beyond that?

Mr. Yao: Oil sands. Oil sands.

Mr. McIver: Really? Tar sands? Aren't you from Alberta? You're not even from Alberta talking like that.

Dr. Swann: Oh, I see. Okay.

To me, it's a combination of a serious, bold commitment to leading on climate. It's going to be difficult. I think there are lots of negotiations that need to go on. We need to listen to each other, not hammer each other, because we're all in this together, and our children and our grandchildren are going to pay the price for whatever we do, good and bad, losing jobs on one hand, gaining jobs in another area.

I certainly would like to see more greenhouse operations, food production, around Alberta. Given the benefits of solar and wind and our natural gas resources, why aren't we growing more food throughout the year, and not having this large transportation from South America and California for all our goods when we could employ people, we could develop our own more sustainable food security right here in Canada? Tremendous opportunities.

Creativity is needed, balance. As the Member for Calgary-North West said: let's listen to each other; let's not hammer each other. I think we all want the same thing – the best for our kids, the best for our planet, leadership – and it's going to cost us something, so let's negotiate, not beat each other up over what's considered to be ideological.

We call each other ideological. That's not getting us anywhere. If we're listening to the evidence, if we're listening to each other, if we're looking for better ways, hopefully, we will bend and change when we hear a good argument. That, to me, is the hope for this Legislature and for my session here. I feel much more positive than I have in years in working with a government that wants to do the right thing, doesn't know all the answers but with constructive debate I think will make some of the changes that are reasonable, that are rational, that are evidence based.

Thanks, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Sorry; under 29(2)(a)?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Hanson: Yeah. The problem that I have with this bill – and I'd just like you to comment on it – is a bill that looked for support from the major emitters. Now, if somebody came to me if I was a major emitter and offered me a policy that was going to give me the ability to gobble up my competition, my smaller competition . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Madam Speaker, since we are going to stop at 10:45 for Remembrance Day celebrations, I mean, after hearing both sides of the argument . . . [interjection] Sorry. Are we stopping?

Mr. Nixon: No. You're good. Keep going.

Mr. Panda: Okay. After hearing both sides of the argument . . .

Mr. Schmidt: You changed your mind.

Mr. Panda: I didn't change my mind. I mean, I respect the Minister of Advanced Education, being a fellow member of APEGA. As you all know, members like us are the ones who actually help to bring oil out of the sands. Those are the ones, those scientists and engineers, that are going to help take the carbon out of the barrel, not the politicians on either side of the aisle.

After hearing both sides of the argument this morning, I'm thinking that we should have more debate because the oil sands advisory group is still working on their recommendations, how to allocate the remainder of the 100-megatonne emissions quota. I have a motion to move here, and if you permit me, I would like to do that.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, if you could just wait for a moment until I've seen the amendment.

Mr. Panda: Sure. I have copies here for distribution.

I would like to move that the motion for second reading of Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

Madam Speaker, for the reasons that I explained before, I rise in opposition to Bill 25, the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, in its current form. If members opposite agree to move it to committee for fulsome discussion, we'll be happy to participate in that, but in the meantime I want to put some facts in front of every member here. In 2014 Canada's GHG emissions were 1.6 per cent of the global total despite being a coal country with the second-largest land mass. Alberta's oil sands make up 9 per cent of that 1.6 per cent, or .144 per cent of the global total, not even two-tenths of 1 per cent, Madam Speaker.

The NDP's 100 megatonne per year cap on emissions still means 50 per cent growth of those emissions over 2014 levels. This means that Alberta's oil sands greenhouse gas emissions will be allowed to rise to .216 per cent of the global total, so barely two-tenths of 1 per cent. But to keep the oil sands from going a little further in its fraction of 1 per cent, this government is placing a cap on Alberta's resources that will cost us $150 billion to $250 billion.

It's big money, Madam Speaker. To put that into perspective, that's about five to seven years of running this entire provincial government. That's how much wealth you're keeping in the ground. After hearing these numbers, I don't know how Avi Lewis or Naomi Klein are going to react once they figure this out. With $250 billion do you understand how many zeros there are after 250? I already see some of the supporters of the Leap Manifesto raising their eyebrows once they see that number, $250 billion.

You know, with that money you can actually implement your social agenda of building schools and hospitals and so many good things.

Mrs. Pitt: You could build everything. Everything.

Mr. Panda: Yeah. So maybe now, after hearing this, you may want to join me in opposing this piece of legislation. You still have time.

The numbers show that the increase in greenhouse gas emissions is negligible, 72 one-thousandths of a per cent. For that, the NDP is going to put thousands of jobs at risk and the livelihoods of families just trying to get ahead. As my colleague from Calgary-North West explained, so many livelihoods are going to be impacted. That is the unintended consequence of your policy. This 100-megatonne cap is an arbitrary number. We don't know what the science is behind that number. Why not at 150? Why not at 70 or 50? We don't know.

Mr. Schmidt: Now you understand science?

Mr. Panda: I studied science like you. I was on record in this House . . .

Mr. Clark: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow on a point of order.

Point of Order Decorum

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. You know, I sat this morning and listened to the debate in my office while doing some work. I know it got heated, and I know it does get heated, but it's happened too many times, when the hon. Minister of Advanced Education fires barbs across at the Official Opposition. I understand the Official Opposition will do the same to the government side. But, frankly, it does not further the debate.

So under Standing Order 23(j) I would respectfully request that the Minister of Advanced Education would refrain from taking shots at the opposition side and, equally, that the opposition side would refrain from taking their shots at the government. It does not further the debate. Frankly, it makes things a lot worse for this House and does not further the interests of this province. I would encourage the hon. minister of the Crown – I remind you that notwithstanding the fact that he doesn't sit on the front bench, regardless of that fact, he is a member of Executive Council. I'd encourage him, Madam Speaker, to behave accordingly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. First of all, I'll address one of the comments that was recently made, where it was an unnecessary shot at a minister, in his point of order doing exactly that, to create disorder by insulting a minister.

What I will say, Madam Speaker, is that we do appreciate the fact that in this House parliamentary tradition is that heckling is a part of this process. Now, I appreciate the fact that we do want to allow all members of all parties when they are up speaking – they do have the floor, and we do recognize that. I don't think that this is a point of order. I think, again, in the process of debate within this House that members do make comments while others are speaking. Again, you know, we recognize that we want to ensure that all members have an opportunity when they rise and are acknowledged by yourself, by the Speaker, that they do have the floor.

However, I do want to emphasize the fact that comments, whether they're heckles or otherwise, do come from all sides of the House and that a member jumping up on a point of order versus one member in one instance is not an accurate portrayal of comments that come from both sides of the House during an exchange.

What I can offer to the House is that I would encourage all members to be aware of the comments that they make and try to respect the Speaker when they have the floor.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you. I'd just like to point out that this is the second time that the hon. minister has been reprimanded this morning for speaking out of turn, and then when he was offered the opportunity by the Speaker of the House to join the debate, he refused. So the only time the hon. minister would like to speak is when other people are speaking.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Listen; I understand the reason for the point of order, but do we really want to say that there's no heckling in here? I mean, who are we kidding, folks? I don't think there's a point of order. There was probably a crack that wasn't required; there are cracks that aren't required constantly. Occasionally I author them myself. The fact is that this isn't Sunday school. This isn't a quiet meeting of contemplation. It's a public discussion – it's a public discussion – contemplation over public policy, and the public needs to hear it. While I have some sympathy for the mover of the point or order, really, who are we kidding?

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. I would just remind all hon. members that maintaining decorum and order in the House is the responsibility of the Speaker, and while I certainly appreciate feedback from members and reminders from time to time, that responsibility will continue to rest with this chair.

There is no point or order. But again I would caution members to please be respectful in the way that they heckle and keep the volume to a level where we can all still hear what's being said by the individual who has the floor.

I've been advised that we are at 10:45. Pursuant to Government Motion 24, as agreed to on November 1, 2016, the Assembly stands adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, November 3, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to stand today and introduce to you and through you a group of 22 seniors from St. Paul Community Learning Association that are here in the public gallery today visiting, and they also took part in the Remembrance Day ceremonies in the rotunda. It's just proof that you're never too old to learn. I'd like to also point out that two of the members are from the suburbs of the sprawling metropolis of Owlseye, Alberta.

One other point that one of the ladies asked me. They go out all over the province, and this is part of their education process. One lady is trying to convince the organizers that a trip to the casino would be a good math lesson. I wish her luck with that. Anyway, if they would please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you a group of students from the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, from the Three Hills school. In conversations with them earlier, if there's one thing I'm certain of, it's that one of them is going to have my job in probably only two elections. I'd like to welcome them here to the Assembly and invite them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly staff and students from D.S. MacKenzie school. D.S. MacKenzie is a school nestled in the northeast corner of my riding, Edmonton-Rutherford, named after the first Premier, therefore first among equals amongst ridings. D.S. MacKenzie takes pride in not just simply teaching students a one-size-fits-all model but in respecting the learning needs of all of their students and has done an excellent job representing students in this province. I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members, on behalf of yourself, Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured to rise and introduce to you and through you the first-place winner of the 2016 Royal Canadian Legion dominion poem contest, intermediate category, Quirina Thompson. Quirina shared her profound and beautiful poem with us today at the ceremony of remembrance service in the rotunda.

Quirina actually lives in your constituency of Medicine Hat, Mr. Speaker, as you know, and she is accompanied today by her family.

I'd ask that they all rise as I call their names: Dan and Barb Thompson, Quirina's parents; Jack Thompson; Marlene Thompson; Jacqui Cook; MaryAnne Gukert; Valarie Thompson; and, of course, Quirina herself. Please give them the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome. Did she mention it was Medicine Hat?

The Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you someone seated in your gallery who has shown true dedication for the well-being of his fellow soldiers, Regimental Sergeant Major and Chief Stephen "Sticks" Gallard of the Frontiersmen in Canada. He has organized a special evening for healing and remembrance on November 10 at 7 p.m. at the Trinity Lutheran church in Edmonton, where anyone scarred by war or conflict can attend and begin to heal. We would like to thank you for your service and ask that you now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Legislature Lisa Mueller, president and executive director of Epoch Energy, and His Worship Rob Mackin, the mayor of Hinton. Epoch Energy, with the support of the town of Hinton, has proposed the development of a geothermal project in the Hinton area. We would like to thank both of these individuals for their contribution in diversifying our energy sector. I would like to ask both of them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Michael Reinhart. Mike is presently the assistant business manager for the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. He joined the IBEW in 1979. This month the IBEW is celebrating their 125th year, after being founded in 1891. I want to acknowledge Mike and the IBEW and thank them for their contributions to jobs, training, and diversification in the province of Alberta and our economy. I'd ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a wonderful friend of mine and her family: Samreen Junaid, Ali Junaid, with Dua, Raheel, and Raiyan. Would you please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand today to introduce to you and through you two constituents from Strathcona-Sherwood Park, Mike and Lynn Roppelt. Mike and Lynn own and operate GSS Integrated Energy, a company whose operations I will be speaking about in more detail later on this afternoon. I'm proud of the contribution that GSS has made to our community and our province. I would ask that Mike and Lynn Roppelt rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Jacque Surgenor, Krystal Gibson, Amy Churchill, and Heather Wieler. They are part of a dedicated group of parents who raised about $300,000 in two years to build a fully accessible playground at Westboro school in Sherwood Park. The parents wrote grants and obtained over $100,000 from the province, $91,000 in cash and donated labour from Strathcona county, and over $100,000 from corporate sponsors and individual donations. I would like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Remembrance Day

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today, as the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs and as the provincial liaison for the Canadian Forces, to honour Remembrance Day as we take the time to show our gratitude and respect to those who have fought to maintain the freedom, peace, and security that we are so fortunate to have in this country.

It was at the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month in 1918 when the guns fell silent to end the First World War. It was intended to bring peacetime for our soldiers, yet here we are, a century later, still striving to bring stability to a fractured world amid one of the largest refugee crises in living memory.

In war, armed conflicts, and peacekeeping missions around the globe Albertans and their fellow Canadians have served with valour and without hesitation. The price has been and continues to be high. It has been and continues to be paid with the lives of our military or with their mental and physical health and their years of service, and it has been and continues to be paid by the families who soldiered on while their loved ones were away on tour or forever.

These are debts we can repay only by living honourably and in our own ways upholding the freedoms that they defended. We wear the poppy on our left lapel, closest to our hearts, to show the world that we remember, that we honour the sacrifices made for us, and that we who never saw a battlefield will continue to carry the torch and protect our society and its values. With that commitment, those who lie in Flanders fields and elsewhere can rest, and those who survived and who defend us still will know that we stand with them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. We must never forget.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Clean Energy Technology Centre

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to bring to the attention of this Legislature some good-news stories out of Drayton Valley and the opportunities they present for the government. A few years ago the town of Drayton Valley lobbied the government to create a unique organization called the Clean Energy Technology Centre, that would become a business incubator. Two of its initiatives are starting to grow fruit and reinvigorate the Alberta economy.

The first is between the CETC and Dan Madlung, owner of BioComposites Group. The CETC and the town of Drayton Valley have worked with Dan to set up the only manufacturing facility in North America that will create a one hundred per cent biodegradable matting out of natural fibres like wood and hemp. This business has just recently signed the first contract with an auto company to make the inside door panels out of hemp and flax. This new industry based on hemp has the potential to be a $400 million industry in Alberta in the next four years.

Hemp takes five times the amount of carbon out of the air in one year that a North American forest will take out of the air in 20 years, and Alberta is the best place in the world to grow hemp. The stock that BioComposites is using is now a waste product of the hemp industry.

Interest in this manufacturing facility is growing so quickly that Mr. Madlung has now decided that the industry must go provincial, and he's arranging the financing to build more facilities. To do this, he will need to work with the CETC and with the various levels of government, including the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade.

The second company is a company called Gas Recapture Systems, that is working with the CETC to assemble the equipment that will be necessary to recapture all of the fugitive gases from flare wells and turn them into a saleable energy product. GRS is turning a waste stream into a profitable venture and dealing with carbon issues at the same time.

Both of these ventures are using their expertise and working with various levels of government and organizations like the CETC to help Alberta diversify economically.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Geothermal Project in Hinton

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As part of Alberta's climate leadership plan Environment and Parks Minister Shannon Phillips and Eric Denhoff, deputy minister responsible for climate change, are working in partnership with the oil and gas industry to find innovative ways to combat climate change.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I would just remind you that we don't normally use ministers' names.

Mr. Rosendahl: Sorry. I apologize.

The Speaker: Please continue.

Mr. Rosendahl: Geothermal energy projects, which harvest energy from deep within the Earth, have been identified as an innovative way to deal with some of the abandoned, suspended, and inactive oil well sites found throughout the province. While oil companies complete environmental restoration work, we are looking for new ideas to redevelop some of these locations as industrial opportunities.

Epoch Energy in conjunction with the town of Hinton has proposed the development of a geothermal project to take advantage of the near perfect conditions for this type of initiative in the Hinton area. Lisa Mueller, president and executive director of Epoch Energy, is uniquely positioned to bring this groundbreaking vision to reality. Research supported by GeoDiscover Alberta, a provincial public information service, has identified Hinton as an ideal location to test the development of this groundbreaking industry. Supported by both Mayor Rob Mackin and my office, this project is expected to replace much of the carbon-based fuel currently used to heat government buildings and other facilities located in the community. Additionally, it may be possible also to produce electrical energy because of the high heat value, and another project is the possibility of greenhouses in the area to produce local food.

We are all very proud of our efforts to work in partnership with the oil and gas sector and local governments to find innovative strategies to promote the development of green energy options.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers 125th Anniversary

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to acknowledge that this month the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers will be marking their 125th year as an organization representing members employed in some of the most important trades in our province. After being founded in 1891 in St. Louis, Missouri, as the National Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, their Canadian arm set roots down in Ottawa in 1899. At that time they represented 286 electrical industry workers, with the goal of advocating for improved safety and training standards.

Today, representing 65,000 members from a diverse range of industries across the country, the IBEW plays a significant role in the lives of workers. Of the three locals in Alberta local 1007 represents EPCOR, local 254 represents Enmax, and local 424 represents 8,400 construction workers across the province. I recently had the opportunity to tour the IBEW local 424's facility. Their Electrical Industry Training Centre teaches a variety of courses, including photovoltaic systems and electric vehicle charging stations.

I'm continually impressed by the commitment of IBEW to ensure that their members have the best opportunities possible to upgrade their skills and to work in safe, equitable conditions. As an apprentice electrician and IBEW member I appreciate the efforts that go into ensuring workers have the best opportunities for training and employment.

IBEW 424 is doing great work to support the goals of diversification in our province by offering quality programs that are evolving to meet the demands of a changing industry. I want to thank assistant business manager Michael Reinhart and his colleagues for their great work and to congratulate IBEW on 125 years of great service.

Thank you very much.

Inclusive, Accessible Facilities in Sherwood Park

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The United Nations proclaimed December 3 to be the International Day of Persons with Disabilities. As this date approaches, I am mindful of the ways we build cities, design buildings, and are inclusive in our communities and workplaces. I am fortunate to live in a municipality creating inclusive, accessible facilities where everyone can participate and feel a sense of belonging.

It was my pleasure to open the new Emerald Hills Leisure Centre, which is equipped with specialized change rooms, aquatic lifts and wheelchairs, and zero-entry pools thanks in part to provincial funding. The Glen Allan fitness centre recently reopened and now includes a wheelchair-accessible curling rink. I was able to see firsthand how the design allows wheelchair curlers to deliver a rock.

Community groups in the area are also committed to creating inclusive environments. Earlier I introduced representatives from the Westboro elementary school parent council. Recently this group celebrated the grand opening of a playground designed so that everyone can play. Ramps are wide and plentiful. There's lots of space around the pieces of equipment for wheelchairs. Kids of all ages and abilities can now enjoy the playground. The wider ramps are also handy for parents pushing strollers, grandparents using a walker, or even someone using crutches while their leg heals. The design is spectacular, as anyone who drives down Broadmoor Boulevard can attest to.

At the opening I noted that it takes a village to raise a playground. In this case it took a committed parent council, a supportive municipality, provincial funding through the Ministry of Culture and Tourism, and donations from local businesses such as the Alberta manufacturers' recycling association. Thank you to the Westboro community and to all those involved in creating this playground. It is innovative projects such as this that encourage inclusion that I as an MLA want to support and inspire.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Energy Policies

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, Alberta used to be a proud leader in oil and gas production across Canada in all categories, but things have changed under this NDP government. The Petroleum Services Association of Canada announced yesterday that for the first time Saskatchewan will pass Alberta in oil and gas wells drilled in 2017. It's just the latest example of bad NDP policies, and it's making things worse for the working men and women across this province. When will the Premier stop driving jobs out of our province with their risky economic policies?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Let me begin by first of all noting that this projection, of course, relates to both oil and gas and ultimately is a projection that is driven by the geological differences in the new plays in natural gas. That being said, I think it's important for the member opposite to take some note of the recent report out of the U of C which actually states that under our government the oil and gas royalty framework is now the most competitive in western Canada.

Mrs. Aheer: Since the NDP came to power 18 months ago, they've raised every tax they can think of. They've raised taxes on business, incomes, gas, beer, even on trains, and now Albertans are preparing for a damaging new carbon tax to come into effect in two months, a policy even the Premier admits will mean thousands more jobs lost. These policies are doing more to help Saskatchewan's oil and gas sector than Alberta's. What is the Premier going to do about it?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think on the matter, for instance, of the climate change leadership plan, you know, let me begin by quoting the CEO of Cenovus. In answer to the question of whether this was a radical plan, he said: I'm not sure I would use the word "radical" to describe being a leader; I would describe it as being bold, and I would describe it as something that is very significant, something that all Albertans should now be able to take pride in.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Well, the Premier has no one else to blame, then, for her own NDP government's record.

One of the reasons cited for Saskatchewan beating Alberta in drilling is, quote, a more attractive investment environment for producers. That's just a nice way of saying that bad NDP policies are driving jobs and investment out of Alberta. The fact is that when you rip up contracts with Alberta-owned companies, raise everyone's taxes, it hurts the very people we are sent here to help. I wonder if the Premier can tell Albertans why Saskatchewan is becoming a more attractive investment environment for producers?

Ms Notley: Well, one thing I will say, Mr. Speaker, is that when it comes to comparing this province with Saskatchewan, even after the carbon levy is fully implemented, there will be a $7.5 billion tax advantage for investors here in Alberta.

Carbon Levy

Mrs. Aheer: A Fraser Institute survey conducted last December found that among 126 world-wide energy jurisdictions, Alberta's perception among oil and gas investors had fallen from 16th to 38th. The reason? Bad policies scaring away investment. And now the CEO of Surmont Energy, Mark Smith, is warning that the new cap will squeeze them out of the province. So will the Premier at the very least stop her plans for a carbon tax in 2017?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think over 80 per cent of Albertans understand that a key mechanism for improving the opportunity for jobs and investment in Alberta is getting a pipeline to tidewater. So let me just quote from the head of Kinder Morgan, the next pipeline that is up for consideration. He says, quote: I think the Alberta climate change plan and the alignment with some very specific environmental organizations was a huge step forward. Then he goes on and says: as a matter of dark clouds parting, it was a huge benefit to me and us, and we've seen that on the ground.

Mrs. Aheer: The NDP is telling Albertans that we need a carbon tax to grow our markets – okay – but down south two major presidential candidates are promising zero carbon taxes. It means that Alberta's businesses and our energy sector are put at a significant disadvantage with other energy producing jurisdictions across North America when we can least afford it. Why does the Premier believe that Albertans should pay a carbon tax when our number one competitor, the United States, won't?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that I am quite perplexed that that particular party, which claims to stand up for Alberta, wants to take a made-in-Alberta carbon plan and hand it over to Ottawa. It makes no sense to me because that, my friends, is the choice that is in play right now, and they are completely living in never-never land if they fail to accept that. [interjections]

The Speaker: Calm down, folks.
Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Okay. Well, Australia has repealed its carbon tax, and its economy is continuing to grow. The French Socialist government looks prepared to nix its carbon tax plan due to concerns about higher power prices and a sluggish economy. So maybe the Premier could give the socialists in France a call for some economic advice. The fact is that the government is more worried about raising everyone's taxes instead of getting people back to work. Why is it that at a time when major western economies are dropping the carbon tax, this government is bringing the largest tax increase in Alberta's history?

Ms Notley: You know, it truly is the case that the members opposite are reaching, reaching – the Fraser Institute; really? – in order to be able to tell a negative story. Even though leaders from around the world and within our province describe our government as taking a leadership role in moving forward on a long-ignored issue, what they want to do is vote against Alberta, against Albertans, against diversification, against Alberta innovators because they don't seem to think that we can do it. But you know what, Mr. Speaker? I know we can.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Ethics and Privacy Investigations

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week Alberta's Information and Privacy Commissioner asked for the Minister of Justice to be investigated, the second time in less than two months, for a quasi-criminal offence. There are currently three different investigations into what looks like a cover-up in the awarding of a tobacco litigation contract, and now the RCMP have told us in writing that they are doing an assessment of whether to investigate breach-of-trust charges. It is beyond me why the NDP government would want to cover up and obscure files. Has the Department of Justice turned over all the pertinent documents to this investigation?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin that with this matter our government has done everything we can to responsibly move forward with as transparent a review as we can. That's why we first invited in a former Supreme Court of Canada justice, Frank Iacobucci, to review the whole matter. He made recommendations, including that the matter be referred over to the B.C. Ethics Commissioner for additional review. That has been done. We are doing everything we can to follow the directions of all the various and sundry legal advisors to ensure that the process has integrity, that transparency is promoted at every possible corner because that is a value we believe in.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, again I've had to on a couple of occasions in this last week reference the sub judice principle. I hope that's not where we're going on this one. I would say that to both sides of the House.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this is serious. Here are the facts. We know the Justice department had crucial files from Alberta's former Ethics Commissioner and that we now have the B.C. Ethics Commissioner reinvestigating the matter. We know that Alberta's Information Commissioner has had to appoint an independent investigator and an outside prosecutor to look into whether the Justice department criminally tampered with the related FOIP. Let's be clear. This miscarriage of justice is happening under this government, and they can't keep blaming this mismanagement on someone else. Can the minister tell us why under her leadership Justice is covering up what happened with the awarding of the tobacco litigation contract?

The Speaker: Hon. Premier, perhaps yourself or one of the ministers might provide information on any particular legal action here or not, but if you're not concerned, please proceed. Not sub judice on this one? Please proceed.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I simply need to say that I reject the premise of pretty much all of that question. It is simply not accurate. I will say again: transparency and openness are exactly what our government is endeavouring to do while protecting the rights of all Albertans who would benefit from a successful tobacco litigation and at the same time ensuring that where there was any wrongdoing, it is openly and objectively assessed. So we are taking steps as appropriate to make sure that happens.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Nixon: Alberta Justice is accused of manipulating FOIP applications and imposing arbitrary deadlines on request. Until we're shown otherwise, it's a cover-up, plain and simple. The independent adjudicator has still not received all the government documents requested despite more than two years of investigation. There is no evidence that Justice is co-operating with any of the three ongoing investigations, leading Canadian privacy experts to describe our Justice department as a rogue organization. Albertans are curious, Minister. How are you planning to clean up the mess in your department and re-establish trust for Albertans in their institutions?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will simply say this, that we understand that there were additional recommendations made by an official from the OIPC, office of the Privacy Commissioner, and we are reviewing those recommendations. There will be additional information provided by the Minister of Justice in the days to come.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Electricity Power Purchase Agreement Lawsuit

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the last two days the Member for Calgary-West asked the Deputy Premier about Mr. Joseph Arvay, the B.C. lawyer with close ties to the NDP that the government hired to litigate its PPA court case. The Deputy Premier refused to say what the sole-source contract given to Mr. Arvay was worth, so we looked it up for her: $500,000. And that's just a retainer. To the Premier: given that there are surely a great many lawyers right here in Alberta who are more than qualified to handle this case and given that this money is coming directly from the pockets of hard-working Albertans, don't you think you should have at least spent the money in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely all of the rules were followed in the decision to secure the advice and work of this particular lawyer. I'm very pleased for the members opposite that they were successful in finding the blue book and looking up the amount. Congratulations to you all. That being said, the point here is that Albertans deserve to have the best representation that they can get, and I am firmly convinced that in selecting this particular counsel, that was the objective that we were achieving.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, $500,000 is a lot of money, especially to the thousands of Albertans who are out of work right now. When you add this half a million dollars to the $100,000 you spent to influence both public opinion and potentially the courts through advertising, it totals as much as your government provided to Alberta community organizations to prevent child abuse earlier this month. That is shameful. Given that you're wasting borrowed money on this court case, money that Alberta taxpayers are on the hook for, will you cut our losses and drop this ridiculous lawsuit?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, it needs to be understood that the money that is reported in the blue book has not actually been spent. That was just the retainer, so in fact a fraction of that amount of money has been spent on the matter thus far. So less, not more. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I can't hear the Premier's answer. Please.

Hon. Premier, please continue.

Ms Notley: That being said, Mr. Speaker, we will continue to take whatever actions we can to protect Alberta consumers, residential and industrial. I know the folks over there want to protect the right of certain companies to pass on their losses to consumers and to Albertans, but we are going to challenge that as long as we can.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find it curious that you insist that Mr. Arvay is the best person for the job when he has a long history of working with the B.C. NDP, close and personal ties to one of your government's most expensive patronage appointments, and given that the optics of paying one of your comrades half a million taxpayer dollars to take Alberta companies owned by Alberta taxpayers to court because you are too arrogant to admit you made a mistake are simply irresponsible, will you please save yourself from any further embarrassment and drop the case?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, we will continue our efforts to stand up for regular Albertans, for citizens, for consumers, for homeowners, for families, for business owners, and for industry because that's what we were elected to do. [interjections]

The Speaker: I can see that all of us can hardly wait till Monday.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Remand Centre Drug Overdoses

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Justice minister today. In the first nine months in Alberta there have been 23 near-fatal overdoses and three fatal overdoses in the Edmonton Remand Centre. In all of the year of 2014-15 in our federal correction services there were only six reported fatal overdose deaths, six in the entire federal prison system. This indicates a serious problem in the Edmonton Remand if not in the provincial remand system generally. Will the minister tell the House how many overdoses and overdose deaths have occurred in the other remand centres?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Of course, the safety of our inmates and of our correctional facility staff is absolutely of top priority at all times. Unfortunately, it has been a long-standing challenge with correctional centres that sometimes drugs do get into them, and because of the recent wave of fentanyl coming into the province, that has had a really tragic impact on our correctional centres. We continue to work with our correctional staff to make sure that they are trained. They use drugs, they use searches, they use a number of methods to do their absolute level best to prevent those drugs from coming in.

Dr. Swann: My question was: will you table the number of overdoses and deaths in Alberta remand?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

An Hon. Member: Hello?

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Sorry. That was rather shorter than usual.

I don't have those numbers in front of me right now. We can certainly look into how those numbers are kept. Given that the hon. member has the numbers, I'm not really sure why he's interested in my tabling them, but I will absolutely loop back with my officials.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, my final question is: will the minister call a fatality review and find out what opportunities for prevention, where we're falling down in protecting our children, our mothers, our fathers, our relatives who are charged but not yet convicted and staying in remand? I think we owe them a fatality review.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As I've said, the safety of our inmates and of our correctional facility staff is absolutely top priority for us. Whenever there is a fatality within a correctional centre, there's an automatic process that puts that before the Fatality Review Board, and ultimately that independent review board and not people at the political level makes the decisions on what ought to go to a fatality review. That being said, we do internal reviews of all overdoses and all deaths within corrections to make sure that we're always taking steps to get a little bit better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year has already been very challenging for Alberta ranchers and farmers with the wet and snowy conditions delaying harvest in many parts of the province, and now in southeastern Alberta some ranchers are facing a stressful situation after a case of bovine TB was confirmed in a cow that originated from that area. To the minister responsible: would you please update the Assembly on this situation?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to start by saying that our government supports farming families and is incredibly proud of the beef industry in this province and the iconic product that we export to the world. Our government remains very engaged on this issue and continues to work with industry and federal partners as the investigation continues. The CFIA has initiated an investigation into the case, and Alberta Agriculture and Forestry continues to work closely with them to provide any assistance they may require.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The beef producers affected by this situation are very concerned by the quarantines preventing them from marketing their cattle, and these producers have been dealing with this situation for a number of weeks. To the same minister: what is the government doing to help ensure an expedient solution for these farmers and ranchers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These farmers and ranchers need our government to help the CFIA expedite the investigation and reduce quarantine times, and doing that is our priority. A team of staff has been set up to co-ordinate activities, identify areas of co-operation, and help expedite the investigation. The team is also co-ordinating communications from Ag and Forestry and CFIA to industry and reviewing CFIA situation reports to identify areas where Alberta can help. We know the industry in Alberta is strong and resilient, and we continue to work with our partners to support them through this.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Canadian Food Inspection Agency, CFIA, is the lead on this investigation, again to the same minister: what is your department doing to aid our beef producers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've been in close contact with beef producers about this issue, and we know it is causing some producers a great amount of stress. A recovery team has been assigned to assess potential avenues for providing financial assistance to impacted producers. The Department of Agriculture and Forestry continues to work very closely with CFIA and beef producers to share information on financial options with affected producers. We will continue to listen to beef producers and affected parties to look for ways to support our hard-working farm families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

High-risk Offender Monitoring

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently an Edmonton justice found a national sex offender registry to be unconstitutional. I know that there are always exceptions to a rule, but this registry is about keeping our community safe from repeat sex offenders. The Crown is still able to oppose and find alternative solutions, and I sincerely hope that they will. To the Minister of Justice: what is her government's position on the sex offender registry?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, obviously, it would be inappropriate for me to comment directly on the decisions of a justice who feels that they are enforcing the rights of average Albertans.

With respect to the Crown prosecution service we have a number of registries that work within police at a provincial level and a federal level to ensure that long-term offenders, that high-risk offenders, that a variety of different offenders are tracked to ensure, Mr. Speaker, that we're keeping the population of Alberta safe. [interjections]

The Speaker: You guys done?

Mr. Nixon: Yes, we're ready, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'm glad.
First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that recently at a Wildrose AGM our members overwhelmingly passed a policy that says that Alberta should "improve monitoring of and strengthen restrictions on those who have been released from jail [and] still . . . pose a threat to the community" and given that the sentiment is echoed across our province from concerned parents to community members, what specific measures will the NDP be implementing to support this policy and keep our communities safe?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member, for what's really a very important question. Our Crown prosecution service has a number of ways in which they track high-risk offenders and long-term offenders, and they do make those applications whenever appropriate. In addition, we've made a number of reviews of different elements of the justice system, as has the federal government, to ensure that we're using the justice system more efficiently, to ensure that we're not using it in cases where people are suffering from mental health and addictions but to ensure that it is able to focus its resources on those who present a danger to society.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that according to the Justice website there are 40 high-risk offenders in Edmonton, 20 in Calgary, and 17 in other areas of the province and given that there are not enough resources for all these people to be monitored by the police forces, threatening the safety of our communities, what additional actions will the government take to stop these individuals from reoffending in our communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member, for the question. Well, certainly, it's the case that those offenders are monitored, both by Justice and by police, where appropriate. It has been my experience that our police partners do their absolute level best and that they actually do a fine job of ensuring that that's the case.

But we at Justice are always looking to move the ball forward, Mr. Speaker, and that's why we've instigated a number of system reviews to ensure that we are focusing critical resources like police, like jails, like the court systems on matters that actually pose a risk to the public as opposed to those . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-North West.

School Fees

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In its 2015 election campaign the NDP government promised Alberta parents that it would cut school fees in half. For the record, the pledge is on the NDP's 2015 campaign website and page 8 of its campaign booklet, which I will table. Allow me to quote from the website. "We will invest $45 million to reduce school fees by half, with a particular focus on banning lunch supervision fees." To the Education minister. You've been in office now for a year and a half. When will you fulfill this promise for Alberta parents?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question as well. Certainly, we have been working hard to identify where school fees are being charged and how much. We were in a circumstance with Budget 2016 where we had to make some difficult choices. However, we've seen over time that with our process of looking at where school fees are, many school boards have reduced their school fees, and certainly in the long term we will endeavour to do so on a province-wide basis.

Ms Jansen: "Difficult choices." Alberta parents will remember that.

Given that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona criticized the previous government for school fees which she claimed were the result of poor management and given that the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview accused the former government of downloading public services onto hard-working Albertans through the use of busing and supervision fees, again to the Education minister: reducing school fees got huge traction in the last election, but now that the voting is over, is your interest over, too?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, there are difficult choices to be made budgetwise. We chose to invest in enrolment so that we could hire 1,100 teachers, more than 800 support staff, and to make sure we kept the lights on. School boards appreciate it. Parents appreciate it. The kids appreciate it in the classroom. Otherwise, we would have fallen off an education cliff if the previous government had happened to have won again.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given this government clearly has no plans to reduce school fees and it's now downloading more costs onto parents with a carbon tax that school boards cannot afford to pay and cash-strapped boards have to increase school fees, particularly for busing, to help pay for this new tax, to the same minister: since you will not cut school fees, can you at least tell parents that you're not going to hike those fees up?

Mr. Eggen: Well, once again, Mr. Speaker, I'll make it very clear that we are working to reduce school fees across the province. We weren't able to do it this year because of a difficult financial circumstance, which probably most people understand in the province – maybe this member doesn't – and certainly we're working very hard to make sure that we don't just keep the lights on in schools but that we have the best school system here in Canada based on the financing that we put into place, funding for enrolment and building new things like a school nutrition pilot and building a plan to reduce school fees in the out-years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Home-schooling Providers

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've heard from parents that only 60 of 100 home-schooled students, out of the 3,500, as of yesterday have found an appropriate replacement for Wisdom Home Schooling. One of those parents, after being turned down many times by school authorities, has had to place their child, who has a special-learning need, in a public school authority in a classroom without an aide. Will this minister apologize to the parents of 3,500 students who have had their educational program of choice ripped out from under them and are now having to enrol in programs that may not meet the needs of their children?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. It's important to make sure that we're looking after each of the home-schoolers that need registration in an affiliate to move forward in education. It is home-schooling, so people can move forward because they are schooling at home.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage the member opposite to carefully read the report that started this in the first place and think twice about hitching his wagon onto allowing this financial situation to continue in that school.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not much of an apology.

We all want to ensure that taxpayer dollars are being protected while our students are getting a world-class education, but given that the minister's sudden decision to close Trinity has left 3,500 students and parents in a lurch two months into the school year with no authentic choices that meet their educational needs, Minister, what's to stop you from unilaterally closing any other school, leaving more Albertans suffering the consequences of your bad decisions?

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, I won't apologize for making sure that we spend public money appropriately, following the law. Once again, if this member wants to hitch his wagon to a circumstance like that, well, he does it at his own peril, quite frankly. We are making sure that we will have places for these students. If he has individuals who are having trouble registering, please come visit me in my office, and we will look after them. [interjections]

The Speaker: The two front rows, please.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this minister has created an outrageous problem for 3,500 students and their families by closing Trinity Christian School without warning and given that he decided not to approve ReThink charter school in Calgary and given that the NDP tabled an amendment to Motion 504 that negated parental choice, why should parents anywhere in the province believe that he and his government support parental choice in education?

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, it might be a convenient point to exercise and indulge in hyperbole, but let's look at the facts. We have maintained stable funding for all forms of education, including home-schooling, private schools, and chartered schools across the province. This is an unfortunate circumstance. Certainly, we are working hard to mitigate the situation. I looked at it. It's home-schooling, so schooling does carry on. We will work hard with all parents and students to come to an amicable solution.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Economic Development

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have been pleading with this government for stability and a sustainable economy. History has shown time and time again that this sustainability and job creation are the by-product of low taxes, entrepreneurship, and investment. What has the Minister of Economic Development and Trade done to create an atmosphere where investors' confidence can materialize into jobs that don't rely solely on government subsidies and spending?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. There's a number of initiatives that our government has embarked on over the past year since this ministry was created, including increasing lending limits of ATB by $1.5 billion. We've also reintroduced the STEP program. We've reduced the small-business tax by 33 per cent starting January 1. Alberta will continue to have the second-lowest small-business tax in the country. I look forward to telling the member about all of the other initiatives our government is undertaking.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given this government has gone after companies like Enmax and EPCOR, it could be argued that this minister is in fact doing the opposite to inspire confidence in people to invest and given that it's already hard enough to start a business and to be successful at it without making them even less competitive by adding a carbon tax and a 50 per cent increase to minimum wage, does this minister believe that he is creating an environment to nurture diversification or hinder it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to respond to this and to point out the fact that even with the carbon levy coming in on January 1, 2017, Alberta will continue to have the lowest taxes in the country, lower than Saskatchewan by $7.5 billion. I'll tell you how else we're helping to grow local economies. By raising the minimum wage, we are putting dollars in the hands of hard-working men and women of the province who are going to be spending that money within their local economies. I can tell you as well that we will be introducing legislation on two new tax credits.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hunter: Minister, a person will not invest unless they're confident that they will be able to earn a profit.

Given that your risky economic policies have severely damaged investors' confidence in this province and as a result jobs are being lost and families in Alberta are suffering, Minister, will you tell this House how many net new jobs Alberta has created under the NDP and provide evidence that shows that your policies are actually working to help Albertans get back to work?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd love to respond to this question. Increases to our Infrastructure investments sustain about 10,000 jobs a year for the next three years, and 2,700 students had summer jobs because we reintroduced the STEP program. The Alberta Enterprise Corporation investments: 1,100 direct and 1,400 indirect jobs. The modernized Alberta royalty framework has led to more than 80 new well approvals, supporting 135 jobs each. We provided $10 million to make Alberta's agrivalue processing incubator the biggest in the world, and that has created more than 400 jobs. The list goes on.

Ethics and Accountability Committee

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, last June, amidst great fanfare, the NDP government appointed the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee. Now, after a slow start, the committee worked diligently throughout the summer and completed work on one of the four acts that we were asked to review. The work on a second act is also largely complete, and a great deal of information has been collected from hundreds of submissions on the other two acts. The all-party committee unanimously asked to be reconstituted to complete its important work, but now we hear that won't happen. To the minister: why not?

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The committee that was proposed by this government was because we wanted to take a collaborative approach, working with all parties to review conflict-of-interest legislation, election financing, whistle-blowers, following on Bill 1, the act that banned corporate and union donations, getting big money out of politics. The committee worked well together to make some recommendations and made recommendations around whistle-blower protection. But when it came to stopping the old ways of doing things in elections financing, they did everything they could to stop it on the opposition side. They fought against getting big money out of politics.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that I was on that committee and given that when the minister was the chair, we met only four times during the first seven months of existence for a total of less than eight hours of meetings and given that the submissions of hundreds of Albertans on the elections act and the Conflicts of Interest Act have been collected and diligently reviewed by the committee and given that the mandate of the committee could easily be extended to allow for this important work to be completed, to the minister: what do you intend to tell the hundreds of Albertans who, because of your decision, will now be ignored by your NDP government?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have told us that they want to take big money out of politics, and we have responded. Moving forward, the committee will not be reconstituted, but we will be looking at the submissions from Albertans, the discussion that happened at that committee, and bringing forward some recommendations for our financial system to get big money out of politics. Today $105,000 can be donated by one person across four years. That is big money still in politics. Although the opposition was opposed to changing it . . .

An Hon. Member: Not true.

Ms Gray: . . . we will be bringing forward reform.

The Speaker: Allow me to remind the House again about language and statements being made like "Not true." Please contain it. [interjections] I'm reminding the House, please.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the committee's work was continuously hampered by interference from the Premier's office and given that dozens of votes by the committee ended in a tie which was always broken by the committee chair in favour of the government members' position and given that virtually all of the contentious issues were decided in the government's favour even when there was overwhelming evidence of widespread public opposition, why doesn't the minister simply admit that this committee was merely a sham designed by the NDP government to tilt the electoral playing field in its favour?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Modernizing elections financing should have been a nonpartisan issue. Unfortunately, the opposition parties did everything they could to stop changes from being implemented. We are currently looking at the unfinished work of the committee so that we can move forward, making sure that our electoral laws match the principles that exist in virtually every other jurisdiction in Canada. We will be working to get big money out of politics. We will be working with Albertans to do this in a smart, modern way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Fort McMurray Wildfire Recovery

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has now been six months since the Wood Buffalo wildfire forced tens of thousands of people from their homes. Many Wood Buffalo residents have voiced concerns about just how long they've been kept from their communities. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: can you provide an update on the progress of recovery in this region?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud of the significant progress that has been made in the recovery of the Wood Buffalo region. Demolition and cleanup are close to complete, and rebuilding is under way. We continue to support residents as they work through the insurance process and to ensure the community has the mental health supports that they need. As someone who lived through a devastating wildfire in my own hometown, I know this will be a long journey, but we have been standing with the people of Wood Buffalo since the start of this disaster, and we will continue to do that in the weeks, months, and years ahead.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister, for the answer. Albertans have shown just how resilient this province is and dug deep to contribute to those displaced by the wildfire. To the same minister: what assurance do these thousands of Albertans have that their money is going where it is needed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The generosity of Albertans is going exactly where it was intended, to making a real difference in the lives of those impacted by this devastating wildfire. Thank you again to the Albertans who dug so deep. Our government matched those contributions by individual Albertans to a total of $30.3 million. Those funds are targeted towards programs to help residents economically and emotionally. Through the Canadian Red Cross we are giving to great, local organizations that are already on the ground helping residents and supporting business owners so that they can reopen their doors and take care of their staff.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard that many small businesses in Fort McMurray are struggling right now. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: what supports do business owners impacted by the wildfire have available to them?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question. We know that the wildfires forced many residents of Wood Buffalo to leave behind their homes and businesses. It came at a moment's notice and at great personal cost. I can tell you that as soon as the evacuation ended, we funded a Back to Business Resource Centre to provide a one-stop shop for business, staffed with experts. Since then we've met with and I've met with business leaders, including the Minister of Municipal Affairs, and we listened to what they asked for. They asked for grants, for funding for their businesses, which we brought together, the other two orders of government and the Red Cross, and provided a $60 million envelope.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Forest Fire Fighting Contracting

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker, the media reports that not only did this government bungle the awarding of casual fire bomber contracts by forgetting to put them out for tender, but they mishandled them so badly that they cancelled them completely during one of the driest wildfire seasons on record and then retendered them the day after the Fort Mac fire started, at the beginning of May. Notwithstanding the heroic efforts of the front-line personnel, did these errors in any way impact the emergency preparedness for that fire season?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. It is absolutely absurd to imply that in any way the government of Alberta was not completely committed to ensuring that wildfire fighters had every single resource that they needed on the front line at every single moment during every wildfire in the province this summer. [interjections]

The Speaker: Government members, when you knock on your desks that loud, I cannot hear the minister. Please contain it.

Mr. Loewen: Given that it was found that the tendering of these air tanker contracts was so poorly handled and given that the department then tried to incorporate confidentiality clauses so fire companies would stop talking to the media and opposition about this government bungling, to the Premier: were these actions a direct result of ill-advised budget cuts, and why did you ask for these gag orders, that were clearly not in the deals before?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The contracts that are being talked about were actually for the 2017 fire season, so it had absolutely no implication for the fire season this summer. Certainly, we provide contracts for baseline firefighter services to provide a bare minimum of that; however, we have always had emergency funding available to be utilized to work with our partners from across this country and around the world to ensure that for every single wildfire every single resource will be there. That happened this summer, and I'm proud of the work our wildfire fighters did.

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker, given that the revised tendered contract for air tankers on May 2 contained exemptions to allow the slower, smaller, amphibious AT 802 from B.C.-based Conair to work in Alberta and given that these souped-up crop-dusters carry a smaller water load that's a fraction of the L-188s' or the CL-215Ts', did this government compromise wildfire fighting operations by procuring smaller aircraft far below what is needed to properly work Alberta's fires? Will you correct these matters before the next fire season?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do not profess to be an expert in fighting fires, and I would suppose that the member across the floor is not an expert in fighting fires either. We depend upon the experts in wildfire to tell us what resources we need, and when they tell us they need resources, we make sure they have them. I'm proud of the work they do. I am deeply opposed to any implication that our wildfire fighters are not doing everything they can to help Albertans, and we will continue to be there for them. [interjections]

The Speaker: Members, please.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

2:40 Government Agencies, Boards, and Commissions

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Electric System Operator, Energy Regulator, Petroleum Marketing Commission, Utilities Commission, China petroleum corporation Alberta Petroleum Centre, Market Surveillance Administrator, Transmission Facilities Cost Monitoring Committee, and the Balancing Pool, which is currently looking for no less than four new members, all report to the Energy minister. Will she take this opportunity right now to inform Albertans of all resignations that have been tendered for each of these groups in the past week, the past month, and indeed since she has become minister?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for that question, I think. Currently I'm not aware of any resignations this week. I can go back and give a report to the committee on all the things – we have been looking in the last while for members for the Balancing Pool as part of our ABCs' replacement of people.

Mr. Rodney: I look forward to that.

Given that outstanding Albertans are resigning from extremely important positions on all sorts of agencies, boards, and commissions across various ministries and that this is a huge problem for Albertans, I have a few questions for the Premier. Will you table a list of all of the board directors and chairs of all Alberta ABCs who've resigned since you've taken office, and when will you table that document? Will you and your ministers be tabling future documents of this kind in a timely fashion on a go-forward basis because of the importance of this, forging the future direction of our province?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question, Mr. Speaker. The agencies, boards, and commissions review is ongoing at this time.

As people know, we initiated this review. About 301 agencies, boards, and commissions were doing the work of government. We do need to better understand what they're doing. There are lots of things that this government, when it came into office, didn't understand. They didn't understand how many people were getting paid, how many contracts were out there for different organizations, and we have culled all that information and brought it in. We're saving Albertans money by amalgamating many of the agencies, boards, and commissions: $33 million over three years.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Rodney: Thanks to the Minister of Finance for that, but that wasn't the question. We'll ask it in a different way. Again to the Premier: given that more and more honourable Albertans are resigning from agencies, boards, and commissions across this province for all sorts of reasons, including political interference, as has been well documented, are you at all concerned about this alarming trend, and if so, what exactly are you and your ministers planning to do about this on behalf of and in the service of Albertans? Please tell us.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. You know, what we are doing is that we are resetting the appointment process for the agencies, boards, and commissions so those agencies, boards, and commissions will look more like Albertans and less like that side.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I did not note it, but I think I'm advised that there is a point of order that was raised earlier.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

GSS Integrated Energy

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am proud to be part of a government that is creating jobs and diversifying Alberta's energy sector. I constantly say that Strathcona-Sherwood Park is a community made of leaders, so it is an honour to again recognize constituents of Strathcona-Sherwood Park Mike and Lynn Roppelt and the innovative approach their company, GSS Integrated Energy, has taken to help Alberta move forward in an environmentally responsible way.

GSS is an Alberta-based company dedicated to improving energy efficiency and reducing consumption in residential, commercial, and industrial applications. They specialize in terra thermal energy exchange and storage systems, a process that captures waste heat to use when needed and reduces greenhouse gas emissions. They are proud of the many projects that they have been involved in across western Canada. These projects include residential builds that take place right in Strathcona county like Crimson Leaf Estates and other properties in and around Sherwood Park and Edmonton. Even in your own constituency, Mr. Speaker, Medicine Hat, they've provided specialized services for a variety of new and retrofit geothermal systems.

GSS uses the best high-performing technologies such as subsurface energy storage; solar, thermal, and photovoltaic energy; stormwater and grey water reuse; and cogeneration. They were recently recognized for their contributions by our local chamber of commerce during Small Business Week, winning the 2016 business award for environmental protection. They were also named as a finalist for innovation in the new large-business product or work system category.

I am very proud to have the owners of GSS in my constituency, and I look forward to continuing to support their work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Bill 27

Renewable Electricity Act

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act.

This proposed act will help carry out elements of the climate leadership plan. It will create the legislative framework to meet our target of 30 per cent of electricity produced in Alberta to be from renewable sources by 2030. Bill 27 will also formalize the commitment we made to create the renewable electricity program. The Alberta Electric System Operator will run the program. This bill ensures that the AESO has the authority to develop and implement the program, Mr. Speaker. This bill sets the groundwork for greener electricity in Alberta. It also helps to diversify our economy and create jobs while protecting Alberta's environment.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I believe this is a money bill and it requires – is there an attachment to the bill being circulated?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: It's been submitted, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly. Is that a motion you would have intended to state?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Oh, I'm sorry. I did not know. Yes. It has been signed by the Lieutenant Governor and submitted to you.

The Speaker: We'll proceed. Thank you.

The Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, there's an additional snag, to put it mildly. I rise on a point of privilege. I will give my brief remarks for you to consider, sir. Here's the citation for you.

The Speaker: I will take your point of privilege; however, I believe it's appropriate – I've been guided by the table – that we have a motion on the floor. The hon. minister has moved first reading of Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a first time]

The Speaker: I believe there was a point of privilege. The Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of privilege as just stated. For the courtesy of you and the table officers, that's standing orders 15(5) and 23(e).

I understand – and it's well documented – that a government minister spoke to the media and at a conference this morning about a new renewable energy program which had not even been introduced in this House. A government minister spoke with the CBC Eyeopener this morning and to the Canadian Wind Energy Association annual conference this morning. The government also issued a news release this morning describing the same renewable energy plan. I believe that those announcements were about Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act, which had not yet been introduced into this House. I ask that you find that this government has violated the privilege of all members of this House.

This is the first opportunity, obviously, to raise this point of privilege since the introduction of Bill 27 just a couple of minutes ago, and that confirms that the bill was indeed that same bill referred to in the government minister's comments and news release. Mr. Speaker, the minister is clearly . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I will take this as a notice. At the end of the Routine we will give you an opportunity to finish your remarks.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite five copies of the report Home Again: Recovery after the Wood Buffalo Wildfire. This six-month progress report documents our government's immediate response to the wildfire disaster in the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo this May and our role in the region's recovery. Our government has been standing with the people of Wood Buffalo since the start of this disaster, and this report confirms our commitment to continue to support the region as it rebuilds and recovers in the weeks, months, and years ahead.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. I rise to submit five copies of the Fraser research bulletin which I read from this morning in my documents.

Thank you so much.

Mr. MacIntyre: Mr. Speaker. I have here the five requisite copies of the article in the Financial Post that I referred to this morning from Vivian Krause, Forest Ethics' Cash Pipeline, talking about ForestEthics, the San Francisco based organization that is trying to manipulate our pipeline process.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Opposition House Leader will speak to the point of order. Is that correct?

Point of Order

Allegations against Members

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on a point of order from during question period, the citation coming momentarily. That's 23(h), "makes allegations against another Member." The hon. minister of labour, jobs, skills, and training – I'm sorry; I sometimes get the name wrong of that department as it changes regularly – made an allegation to the Official Opposition that the Official Opposition had intended to keep big money in politics. And the reason why this is an allegation and not a matter of debate is that, in fact, the opposition proposed a motion to lower contribution limits on numerous occasions, many of which were significantly lower than $105,000 over a four-year period.

As such, the minister has made a statement that, certainly, many people would say was not true and has made an allegation. In fact, the opposition did not do something that she said that it did. Those sorts of allegations are not helpful in this Chamber. I would ask that she apologize and withdraw.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, having not been in attendance at the committee meeting, I can only take the member's word for it that the motions were made. Nevertheless, it is only part of the story.

One of the things that this government has been very, very interested in doing is to eliminate big money from influencing politics. There are many aspects to that and many aspects that were discussed in the committee besides just simply the question of limits per se. There is the question of: should money come from outside the province? There's the question of whether or not these rules should apply in leadership campaigns. There are many aspects and facets to it.

It is a matter of opinion on this side that the various tactics that were pursued by the opposition in that committee were designed to prevent it from reaching conclusions on a fundamental issue of whether or not money should be influencing politics in an unreasonable way. It is our submission, our view, that the opposition has been attempting to prevent the government from pursuing its objective of getting big money out of politics through a whole series of disruptive tactics.

So I would respectfully disagree with my colleague across the aisle and suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it does not comprise a point of order.

The Speaker: Are there any other members that would like to speak to the point? The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I had the distinct privilege of sitting in every single one of 20 meetings of the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, and I want to speak in favour of my hon. colleague's claim of a point of order under 23(h). I would also suggest that there may even be a case for a point of order under 23(i), the false and unavowed motives that the hon. minister has cast at all members of the opposition.

To the Government House Leader's point that it was all about trying to get "big money out of politics," which is a lovely talking point, I can assure you that every single member on this side of the House agrees with that. We all voted in favour of Bill 1. We all also, Mr. Speaker, in that committee, supported motions and proposed motions that would in fact lower the donation limit even more than the $4,000 limit that the government proposes. Any claim that any party on this side of the House would in any way support having more money or "big money" in politics is patently false. So the allegations being made by that side of the House, sadly, are absolutely incorrect.

I do think it's worth noting that in this particular committee we had all four opposition parties. We had the Wildrose agreeing with the Liberals, agreeing with the PCs, agreeing with the Alberta Party. Now, that is something. There's some ideological spectrum there, Mr. Speaker, my point being that the allegations made by the minister are, in fact, patently false. I would urge you, please, to find a point of order because it's the sort of thing that does a real disservice to democracy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any new information that can be presented with respect to the point of order that's raised?

I do not have the privilege of seeing the scripts, nor do I have a strong enough recollection of hearing the comment that allegedly was made. Ordinarily I would have probably ruled on this event, it seems, in part, but I don't want to forego my conclusion or send a signal that it may or may not be a point of order. I think I would like the opportunity to defer comment on it until I have an opportunity to read the Blues.

I think we can now move to the point of privilege. Are there any other comments that the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed would like to make under the point of privilege?

Privilege

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to repeat the comments, just for the clarification of everyone in the room and beyond.

Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege under standing orders 15(5) and 23(e), which is, of course, anticipation. I understand that a government minister spoke to the media in a conference today about a new renewable energy program which had not yet been introduced in this House. A government minister spoke with the CBC's Eyeopener this morning and to the Canadian Wind Energy Association annual conference, again this morning, in Calgary. The government also issued a news release this morning describing the same renewable energy plan. So those are three different artifacts that I have right in front of me at this moment.

Obviously, these announcements are about Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act, which had not been introduced in this House until moments ago, so I ask that you find that the government has violated the privilege of all members of this House. This is indeed the first opportunity to raise this point of privilege since Bill 27 was introduced. It confirms that the bill was indeed the bill referred to in the government minister's comments and news release. Mr. Speaker, the minister is clearly acting with contempt for the House. I'd ask you to find as such.

It's right here. The Calgary Herald: Alberta to Buy 400MW of Renewable Power as It Phases Out Coal. Sentence 2: "The government will table legislation later Thursday... but [the environment minister] laid out details of the province's plan in a morning speech at the Canadian Wind Energy Association's annual conference."

In addition, at 9:49 a.m. today from CBC News: Renewable Energy Program to Add 5,000 Megawatts of Capacity by 2030, Says Environment Minister. I'll read just a couple of the spots here. "So today is sort of the first step in the real nitty-gritty details for the investment community on how we're going to move forward on that." It goes on about this program and this bill. This was from this morning.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that none of this can be broadcast anywhere to anyone until it is tabled in this House. Also, from their very own media release this morning, the same thing, sir.

I think it's a little late for rookie mistakes; it's been a year and a half. Maybe it's time for this government to get this right, and today might be a good day to start.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you've cited a couple of documents. I trust you will be tabling those. Is that correct?

Mr. Rodney: I will be happy to in the future, yes.

The Speaker: I have a note here from the Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, of course, I have not had the opportunity to review the documents and the news reports that are referred to by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed and to consider the precedents and so on. As a point of privilege is an extremely serious matter, the most serious point that can be raised in the House, I would respectfully request time to do research to compose the response of the government to this point of privilege and to afford other opposition House leaders the same opportunity. So I would request that I be allowed to make the response to this point of privilege on the next sitting day.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I, too, would need some time to look at the particular points, but I gathered from the Government House Leader that it could be as early as Monday that we would deal with this.

Opposition House Leader, do you have another point?

Mr. Cooper: Just seeking some clarification from you, Mr. Speaker, as to: if the question will be dealt with on Monday, I am also fine to reserve some comments until Monday. Having said that, if that isn't the case, then I am quite likely to speak in favour of my hon. colleague. You know, you found just this week, Mr. Speaker...

Mr. Mason: You don't get two chances.

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Mr. Cooper: I'm not sure who's in charge of the House today, Mr. Speaker, but it seems like the Government House Leader believes it to be him.

I will ask the question. If it will be dealt with on Monday, I will reserve my comments. If not, then I would like to provide some additional comment.

The Speaker: If we could just take a moment. I'd like to read 15(3). I'll read Standing Order 15(3) for the sake of those who may not have.

If the Speaker is of the opinion that the matter may not be fairly dealt with at that time, the Speaker may defer debate on the matter to a time when he or she determines it may be... dealt with.

I would be prepared to hear the arguments of all parties on Monday, after which time I would take the due time necessary to make a decision.

For those who may be leaving, have a safe journey.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 25 Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act

Mr. Panda moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Debate adjourned on the amendment November 3: Mr. Panda speaking]

The Speaker: I am seeing the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills. Is that correct? Please proceed.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning I was talking about this arbitrary 100-megatonne cap, which will risk thousands of jobs and will also impact the livelihoods of families who are just trying to get ahead.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Something happens when you implement a cap on emissions and also curtail the production. The first people into the investment get to make money, but the last people into the investment lose money. Doesn't that sound an awful lot like a Ponzi scheme to you, Madam Speaker? The NDP are turning the Alberta oil sands into a Ponzi scheme, where the rich get richer, because they were there first, and the poor entrepreneurs get turned into suckers and are not allowed to develop the resource they bought.

There are more leases sold than the emissions will allow, so who gets to develop? Bill 25 does not sort that out, but a panel chaired by a co-radical will tell us in February. That's not good enough. We need the answer now to give certainty to the industry, Madam Speaker.

Now, talking about the unintended consequences, which the Member for Calgary-North West talked about this morning, I fear we might have to pay out these leaseholders who will not be allowed to develop the resource. It's called property rights. When the Crown does something that negatively affects my property, I get compensated, just like our coal companies are going to get compensated for their stranded assets. Instead of having land sales and the government making money, the government will be in the game of purchasing land and losing money. Where is that money going to come from? Saskatchewan is not capping emissions of their heavy oil, nor is Venezuela. Maybe my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie can tell the House more about Venezuela's oil sands and how they compare to Alberta's in terms of emissions and their regulations.

Australia cancelled their carbon tax, and France just did the same, Madam Speaker. But only in Alberta is the NDP looking to curb growth and development. Only the New Democratic Party thinks it is fair to deny the world market a choice in their oil. You can buy a limited supply of ethically and environmentally responsible Canadian oil if you can find it, or you can buy cheap and plentiful Saudi Arabian oil. I can attest to their oil being cheap on ethics and the environment.

In many of those countries, actually, they need military efforts to bring the oil out and to export to countries like us and to other countries. Madam Speaker, the prosperity of Alberta and the prospects for Alberta are under attack by the radical environmentalists, funded by foreign investors. It's funny how there are never any Greenpeace protests in Saudi Arabia or Russia. Maybe, you know, they're scared of the cruel punishment they'd receive from the local governments there.

One study actually estimates that this cap on emissions will cost $150 billion to $250 billion in lost revenue to the Alberta economy over time. We already lose enough wealth to the rest of Canada that's not reinvested in Alberta, and the equalization system makes it worse.

The NDP like to crow and be proud about their carbon tax, but since 2007 the government of Alberta and industry were in agreement and have been paying a price in carbon dioxide emissions under the specified gas emitters regulation. Alberta was the first jurisdiction with a carbon tax in North America, and some of my colleagues on the opposite side were asking: what's your plan? Yeah. If you hear, you get it. The funds from the specified gas emitters regulation went to research and development, R and D, the innovation that comes up with ways to actually reduce carbon dioxide emissions and clean up the environment. The accelerated reclamation of tailings ponds has been from R and D.

In fact, Madam Speaker, I worked on some of those projects when I worked in the oil sands: reclamation projects, water recovery and recycling, cogen projects. They were all aimed to reduce the carbon footprint. Our plan is to encourage those kinds of investments. I worked on those projects, and if some of you want to know more, I'll be happy to talk to you.

People, by and large, are looking at the NDP and asking: "Are you really capping the development of your resources? Really? Who does that?" I came from India, where I helped to build the largest refinery in the world, at Jamnagar in Gujarat, producing 1.2 million barrels per day. That's almost one-third of Canada's production. We are competing with India, and they're not capping their development. No, it's full ahead. China is not capping their development either. So we need to be taking the R and D we do here to make the oil sands and the energy industry overall as green as possible and export that knowledge to help clean up the largest sources of pollution in India and China and other countries. That's our plan.

Alberta's resources are not the enemy in the global fight against climate change, but the solutions are here to take to the front lines of that battle, Madam Speaker. Our companies here need some flexibility and time for technology innovation, but this bill is actually, you know, driving investment away because there is no certainty for those companies who want to invest in those technologies.

That's why I oppose this bill, and, Madam Speaker, that's why I moved this amendment this morning. I encourage everyone to support that amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) comes into effect. Does anybody have any questions for the hon. member under 29(2)(a)? Go ahead, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate my esteemed colleague for the experience that he has in this field. I would be interested to understand from his experience his understanding of what happens in a situation like this. We have this massive oil sands field where much of the field now has to be developed by SAGD and other deeper technologies to extract that oil because the shallower areas are being mined right now, but we have this hundred-megatonne cap coming on. What happens to all of those leases that have already been purchased and paid for by smaller players, many of them Alberta companies? They put out good money and in good faith invested millions perhaps billions of dollars in these leases, and now we have – correct me if I'm wrong – about a 30- or 35-megatonne window for development.

All of these remaining leases: let's remember that each one of those leases represents thousands of jobs. It represents thousands of jobs, billions of dollars of economic activity, taxes that are paid, moms and dads having good-paying jobs, children with futures, and now all of these leases that are out there – I'm sure the owners of those leases are sitting there in their boardrooms and smaller, because some of them are quite small, and they're looking at this 30-, 35-megatonne window, and they're saying: "I wonder if there's even going to be a place for us in here. Who's going to get dibs on this window? Are we actually going to be able to develop this lease we've already put hundreds of millions of dollars into?"

I wonder if the hon. member could just expand a little bit on how they're all going to fit in here and sort of the impact that this kind of cap on expansion is going to have for these players.

Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Madam Speaker, point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: We have a point of order raised by the hon. member. Go ahead.

Point of Order
Question-and-comment Period

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As much as I'd really like to hear this debate continue on, in fact, under Standing Order 29(2)(b) the mover and the first speaker on a motion – 29(2)(a) doesn't apply to the speeches that they deliver. So as the Member for Calgary-Foothills was the mover of the referral motion, his speech is not applicable to 29(2)(a) nor is the speech immediately following his speech. It then kicks in after that according to 29(2)(b). As much as I hate to interrupt the dialogue that's going on here, this, in fact, is not in order.

The Deputy Speaker: Could you repeat the citation for the standing order, which number it was?

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Standing Order 29(2)(a) designates the five-minute question-and-answer period that is so commonly used here in the Chamber. Standing Order 29(2)(b) specifically says that "the 5 minute question and comment period referred to in clause (a) is not available following the speech from the mover of the resolution or the Bill in opening or closing debate." Now, the Member for Calgary-Foothills made an acceptable, or allowable, motion to refer, but that motion and the speech after that motion are not applicable to 29(2)(a).

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I appreciate that. Actually, I was looking at the standing orders myself to confirm that, but the (b) portion applies to the mover not of the amendment, only of the motion or the bill itself. Amendments fall under the bill. It is in order to have 29(2)(a) on amendments, so we are in order.

Debate Continued

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for a great question. Yeah, you're right. All the shallow leases were taken. Mine leases were taken. There are not many left. Most of the resource is deeper, and we need SAGD technology or other enhanced oil recovery technologies to get the resource out. That's why, you know, all those people who bought the leases before will be stranded, so they'll look for compensation, the same as in the coal phase-out situation we have.

That's why these unintended consequences – I mean, I respect the intention here of the NDP to reduce the carbon footprint, but the way we are rushing here, Madam Speaker, is not helping us. All those companies who are pioneers in this technology innovation need time and flexibility and certainty on the policy front. That's why it's not a good idea to rush this through. I see it as an attack on the prosperity and prospects in Alberta.

Every time I ask for an economic impact assessment of these environmental policies, I'm being blamed as a climate change denier. It is on record in this House that I studied science, that I believe in climate change, and I've worked on technologies that will reduce the carbon footprint. But they keep blaming us as being climate change deniers, which is not true. We are carbon tax deniers. We are reasoning with them on the economic impacts of these policies and how they impact livelihoods and kill jobs in Alberta.

That's why I encourage everyone in the House to actually support this amendment and, you know, to have fulsome discussions in the standing committee.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Orr: Thank you. I just wonder if the member would clarify a little bit for me. Having worked on one of the largest projects in India and having said that there is really no greenhouse gas emissions planning there or commitment, am I right, then, in assuming that, in fact, if we make our production and our contribution to world markets out of price, then places like India will just pick it up? Carbon leakage will simply move to India? [The time limit for questions and comments expired]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thanks, Madam Speaker. I was quite interested to see this motion that the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act be not now read a second time but that it be referred to committee. I don't know about most hon. members, but the first thing I think of when it goes to committee is: okay; who really needs to be consulted here? On the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act I think everybody would agree that it is, in fact, the oil sands producers that should be talked to first and foremost.

It is from that perspective that I was interested to note that the industry caucus of the oil sands advisory group, composed of Canadian Natural Resources, Cenovus, ConocoPhillips Canada, MEG Energy, whose facility I had the opportunity to tour with many of my colleagues, Shell Canada, Statoil Canada, and Suncor have all come out in favour of this bill, saying that the "climate policy leadership reflects the ongoing collective support for responsible development of the oil sands." They go on to say that they "believe that by investing in technology and innovation, we can produce oil from the oil sands on a globally carbon competitive basis." They further go on to say that the "emissions limit acts as an incentive to continually improve our performance in a carbon constrained world" and that they "look forward to providing advice on the effective implementation of the emissions limit."

I am honestly quite baffled that there are members here claiming to speak on behalf of oil and gas workers when oil and gas workers are telling us that they want this. This is how we tell the world that we are acting on climate change, that we are committed to making sure that we live in a better world, and that we need to get a pipeline to tidewater. We cannot continue to ignore that the rest of the world is concerned about Alberta's emissions. We have the highest per capita emissions in the country, and that needs to change.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Yes. Thank you very much. I appreciate the passion from the hon. member across the aisle. Perhaps the hon. member could educate the House here on just why it is that we should not put this bill into committee when we have yet to see the fullness of what the oil sands advisory group has to say on this issue. We have a bill that precedes that report. It's interesting to note that the hon. member is quoting industry when industry is supposed to be talking to OSAG. Could the hon. member perhaps tell us why he thinks it's just fine to have a bill come before this House when we haven't even had the full report yet from OSAG?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. That's because I believe that this helps us get a pipeline as soon as possible. We know that the federal government is looking at a pipeline. That's coming up next month, I do believe. We need to show that we are taking action. We cannot wait for a report. We cannot refer it to committee when we talk to Ottawa. We need to act now. Well, quite frankly, we needed to act 10, 15, 20 years ago; however, we weren't in government then.

I hope that answers the hon. member's questions. We need a pipeline to tidewater. The federal government is looking at it now, and we need to act now.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's interesting to hear the hon. member say that we can't wait for a report. Then what in heaven's name are we having this committee for, and why are we paying them to do the work that we are paying them to do if we actually don't need the report in the first place, which is what he's telling us right now?

Granted, we need a pipeline to tidewater. The Wildrose Party has always said that we need a pipeline, and that has only become a revelation to the other side in the last 90 to 120 days. Furthermore, let's be clear that the NEB in the process of getting pipelines to tidewater is actually a federal responsibility, and somehow or other this bill really isn't going to speed that process up. It's a federal responsibility.

But I would be interested to know from the hon. member, Madam Speaker, why it is he thinks that we now need to have this OSAG report. If he's saying that we don't need this OSAG report, why are we still paying for it? They can all go home now.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I will repeat the last line I quoted from the industry caucus: "We look forward to providing advice on the effective implementation of the emissions limit." There is far more work for the advisory group to continue to do. It is not limited to just an emissions limit. It has a lot to do. The oil sands happens to be our biggest employer. I am baffled that so many members are intent on standing in this House and speaking against what they are asking for, against what our biggest employers are really looking forward to. They want to get to work, they want to be innovative, and they need to continue to work.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Okay. I would like to ask the Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert about the workers, including Iron and Earth – the Member for Leduc-Beaumont and I attended their AGM – who are in the oil and gas sector who are very much involved in renewable energy and totally understand the challenges of not reducing the emissions. I was wondering if you could talk more about how the workers are also involved in this.

Mr. Horne: Absolutely, and thank you to the member for the question. Iron and Earth has certainly been a big movement recently. I know that they're very interested in looking at reducing our carbon footprint, and I also note that a lot of our oil and gas businesses are as well. In fact, when we were at MEG Energy, they were talking about their cogeneration program. They need steam. Of course, they're a steam-assisted facility. A lot of companies decide to bring in the water and just boil the water and do nothing with the energy.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to speak on this amendment to Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act. Today I rise in opposition of this ideological bill. I have to wonder if this cap was well thought out or if the goal of this NDP government is to decide once again who will be the winners or who will lose out. Will this come to a point in time where the government will decide who gets to develop their resources and who doesn't no matter how much they paid for their lease? This government's record on cap keeping is something to contend with. Maybe that makes this bill a little bit less dangerous.

But last November, when a budget was presented – and we remember this budget – the same government legislated the debt to about 15 per cent of GDP, if you recall. Government members on the other side of the House promised – they promised – and they absolutely were saying that there is no way they are going to ask for more money. This is all of the money that they're going to need. This would be the extent of how much the debt-to-GDP ratio was going to be. That was it. You knew what the situation was at the time. We were in the same straits. In fact, the oil prices have gone up since that time, so we have seen oil climbing and not keep going down. So you're looking at a situation where you just wanted to weather the economic storm, and you said: this is lots of room. Unfortunately, that's what you promised. This, you said, was a firm cap.

Along came the budget in the spring, and the government then introduced Bill 10, the Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act – we remember that one, too – which allowed them to get rid of that 15 per cent debt to GDP, in fact, to just take the lid off how much you can borrow, not putting any restraints, anything, on that. Now you can borrow, as I said in one of my previous speeches, to infinity and beyond, and that's what you're allowed to do with this other bill. You got rid of the cap, and you failed to plan how much would be the spending.

Now the NDP government is talking about putting limits on an industry, you know, a cap, but I would really like to ask: how did you arrive at this cap? What process did you take to get to that number? Has everything been accounted for, or will you have to come back to re-establish another number that's more appropriate? This causes me great concern because when the NDP was elected, a royalty review was announced. Although only minor changes came from the review, while we waited, it sent a message at the wrong time, throughout Alberta and the world, in fact, that investment in Alberta should be done with caution. The cap is one more signal to investors that the NDP government is not on the side of business, and this ideological cap will turn and worsen our economy.

I have to wonder why the government decided to task the oil sands advisory group to recommend all the details on how to implement the 100 megatonne per year emissions limit. Many of the panel members boast about having stopped the Northern Gateway pipeline – those are the people that are on this panel – and would like our oil industry to fail. They said that publicly. I wonder how many of them even want us to get to 100 megatonnes. What metrics did they use to determine the cap? It's a nice round number, I'll grant you that. That being said, it makes me wonder if rounding off is the science that they used to determine this number. It sounds like an arbitrary number, and the bill does not answer how the performance standards for GHG emissions will be crafted.

I'm proud to be from Alberta and of the advancements we have made towards creating a clean environment. Concerns have been raised in the past about our environment. A lot of it's unfair, but Alberta companies listened, and that's why we have the cleanest technologies in the world, something that we should not be ashamed of. Instead, the government just calls us embarrassing cousins.

In times like this we should use this opportunity to diversify, not into industries that run counter to our energy sector but that complement it, ones that we already understand. Our province has been working in the oil industry for so long that they understand oil, and we have the cleanest technologies anywhere in the world. Why aren't we advancing those to places like China, India, the United States? Like, selling your technologies: it's all throughout the world.

Has this government completed and released a study to determine how many leases can be sold before the government has sold too many to accommodate the cap? Do you know where that is? Can you please tell us what that number would be? Is there room under this cap to accommodate the leases the government has already sold? Do you know that you are over the limit at this present time? Do you know by how much?

This NDP government continues to arbitrarily impose their ideological will onto industry, with no thought for the future of this province. The government continues to tie the hands of industry without even looking at the cold, hard facts. You know, the reality is that we live in an oil-producing jurisdiction, and we should embrace what we have for our technologies, not try to restrict them and kill our economy in the process. This ideology has imposed policy that has the potential to constrain future oil sands production by $150 billion. By $150 billion. That's what the number is. That's lost jobs, lost revenue, loss of potential, loss of innovation as a potential result of less money in the industry. Smaller oil and gas producers are worried that they will lose opportunities for business.

This government never ceases to amaze me. They talk about how they're doing everything possible to get oil to tidewater, yet they continually use anti-oil advocacy groups to propagate their true intent.

Mr. Ceci: That's not true.

Mr. Taylor: It is true.

The intent of this bill is sending signals to investors that this NDP government is not on the side of business in Alberta. Their ideological agenda is contributing to the economic crisis our province is now in. No other jurisdiction is creating limits on long-term oil production, especially if you look at – these are our neighbours – Saskatchewan, B.C. You've got North Dakota; you've got Montana. These are people right around us. They're not putting this huge cap on what they're doing. We're being unfairly put into this position for our businesses, yet this government continues to block out any potential for new business. I hope you realize that. That's what you're doing. You're blocking out potential for new business in this province with your actions.

I will not be supporting this bill – I bet that's not a surprise to you – in its current form. But I ask that everybody in this Assembly at least consider sending this bill to the committee so that the effects can be further studied.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake under 29(2)(a).

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to my esteemed colleague for his comments regarding the referral motion. I would be interested to know from my colleague his thoughts on the value of referring bills to committee for further study in general.

Specifically, although we have had some mention from the other side of large players who have apparently spoken to this bill, I have yet to hear from a small player and, specifically, players who have leases that they are now struggling to find a way to develop up there. Perhaps you could speak to the value of having a more fulsome discussion with not only players in the patch but even everyday Albertans who have something to say about a bill and who look at the committee process, that is part of our parliamentary process, that the other side obviously doesn't like to use very much. Perhaps you could speak to the value of that in furthering and strengthening our democracy here.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you to the member. This is a notice of amendment that says: "Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2." Why is that important? That was, I believe, what your question was. Why is it important that we send them to these committees? If you send them to the committee, you have a chance for experts to go and look at this, and you have a group that can have a fulsome discussion and understand what's happening within this industry.

If we just generally look at something as a whole here, we don't know the ramifications often because we're not experts in the oil industry. I wouldn't say all of us. We have experts in the oil industry that are out here, but not all of us are experts, and when you bring these to committees, you bring them to experts. The experts are able to lay out a plan and their rationale and determine if that limit, that number that you've set, is the right number or what that number should be and show different ways that you can arrive at a number that would be practical for not just Alberta but for our oil emissions. So it's important to be able to get the experts onside to have their say.

Without going to this committee, I don't believe that this will be properly looked at, and this is an important bill. Frankly, it's a very important bill – and thank you for bringing it up – and this needs to be looked at in the full context that it is.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers on the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to speak on this amendment. I'm going to speak in favour of the amendment, but that's not because I necessarily agree with the views of the Wildrose opposition on this topic. I actually find the idea of a 100-megatonne cap a compelling idea. I think the principle of what this bill drives at is probably a fairly reasonable principle, but the reason I support this amendment is that there are just too many questions for me.

As I sat this morning and listened to the debate, it got pretty heated at times, with lots of accusations being hurled back and forth. But interwoven in between all of those things was, I guess, a theme that I detected from one side, being an argument that this is nothing but politics, that perhaps it's an attempt to shut down the oil sands and to leave the oil in the ground. I actually don't think that's what the government is doing. And the government would argue: well, it's just a practical way of ensuring we get pipelines built and market access to tidewater. I see no evidence in this bill that that's what's going to happen either. So I have many, many, many questions about this.

My answers to those questions are to find ways of incenting the oil and gas industry to develop technology to solve the carbon emission problem once and for all. Maybe this bill will do that; maybe it won't. But that's why I believe we need to send this bill to committee. You know, I'm optimistic. I'm ever the optimist, especially as I think about the innovation that comes from the oil and gas industry in this province. They're a world leader, quite literally, in environmental technologies, water-reduction technologies, tailings technologies – as the hon. Minister of Finance tries to distract me with the Associate Minister of Health's beautiful daughter. It's working. She's lovely. We've now got that in Hansard for all time. She is. She is. It's awesome, and it's great. It is really, genuinely great to see that in the Alberta Legislature. Long may it continue, my hon. colleagues, from other people than me.

We're done. Back on task here. Back on task.

You know, I want to talk a bit about the OSAG process. I guess my overall concern with the bill is that I wonder if we're cart before the horse here. That OSAG process may very well be a great process, but that should happen before we pass the legislation because it's going to answer all of the questions that we have here.

What about those smaller companies? The Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert had listed off a number of companies that are supportive of the 100-megatonne cap. I couldn't help but notice that those were all larger companies with established operations, and that's fine. That's great. Those companies are tremendous contributors to this province, tremendous job creators, tremendous environmental stewards, and tremendous contributors to the social well-being and fabric of this province. That is absolutely undeniable, and they should be recognized for the same.

But I do have a concern that this cap does disadvantage either new entrants or smaller companies, and I would like to know how exactly the process is going to work. How exactly are we going to mediate those disputes? Is it simply a mad rush for the remaining 30 megatonnes? How much additional upgrading do we expect to have? Is that 10-megatonne cap ample? Is it a lot of cap? Is it not nearly enough? These are things I don't know the answers to and that OSAG has been tasked with determining, but until that is determined, how in the world can we pass this bill? There are other bills. What are the penalties for exceeding the limit? What happens? Is production simply shut down? The small and large producer issue I've already talked about. How will new and existing projects effectively negotiate between using that cap room? I'm curious if the government anticipates subsidies or some sort of stimulus for producers to develop those new technologies to enable production to continue to grow while remaining under the cap.

I will note that I did have a look at the Fraser Institute report tabled by the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, and while I think that – I'll say this. I think a straight line between now and 2030 in terms of emissions growing in lockstep with production probably isn't accurate, and that's a good thing because I think new production coming on is likely to be far less carbon intense. That's a really good thing. You know, while I appreciate that it makes a point about the money that perhaps may be left on the table, all of these are things that would be answered by OSAG or at least I sincerely hope will be answered by OSAG. Will that curve bend? I strongly suspect it will, and I think that's part of the objective here from this government.

On the flip side, the exemptions are actually quite substantial, exempting cogeneration, exempting an additional 10 megatonnes for refining. That's actually quite a lot. If part of the objective here is ultimately to reduce carbon emissions – I mean, that's one of those questions I have on the other side, saying: gosh, does that actually dilute or water down the effectiveness of a 100-megatonne cap? All of these questions are reasons why we need to have a committee review this bill.

Finally, who would be responsible for the lease payouts for current leaseholders for those leases that will not be allowed to be developed? The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, I believe, made this point earlier. In good faith companies have purchased leases, acquired leases, and spent a substantial amount of money. Are we going to strand those assets, and if so, what's the compensation model? Where does the money come from? How much is it going to be? Those are complex conversations and negotiations, and it may be a consequence, either intended or unintended, that has a negative impact on our province.

For all those reasons – and I suppose if I spent even more time on my feet I could come up with a few more – I will absolutely support moving this bill to committee. I don't commit one way or the other at this point as to whether or not I will vote in favour of the bill at second reading or beyond. I will say again, Madam Speaker, that the principle of limiting oil sands emissions is a good one. It should spur innovation in this province, but I'm left with far too many questions at this point in terms of how exactly we get there for me to be able to make a proper determination as to whether or not to support the bill in its current form. Again, I would advocate for this bill to be sent to committee.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. member a question regarding – and just to pre-empt my question, one of the things that he said that was very clear and compelling is that he may or may not agree with some of the people in this House about what the right numbers are or how that should look. One of the things that we need to look at is exactly that, hence the reason that committee would be so important. Given the opportunity to have experts from all levels of industry within this particular sector come forward, the hon. members in this room who are a part of that committee will have the opportunity to actually sit down with the experts that may determine one way or the other where we sit on how to move forward with this. That would be a discussion that I would highly encourage to happen, and that's something I would personally look forward to having. I am not an expert in this, and I require those experts to be around me to help to determine the right policy to come forward because the policy matters.

You were mentioning about innovation and about the opportunities that could come from any sorts of policies dependent upon what the government is seeing fit to do here. I guess my question, hon. member, is: do you think that it would be a good idea, that going to committee will slow things down a little bit, having the experts to be able to come and speak to us to potentially help you to determine how you would vote on a bill such as this?

Mr. Clark: Thank you to the hon. member for the question. Yeah. It really is about getting answers. It's not so much necessarily about undue delay or slowing things down, but it really is about thoughtful consideration and putting all of the facts on the table so that this House can make a reasonable assessment. Who knows? Perhaps even the Official Opposition may find that they have satisfactory answers to their questions, that in fact the 100-megatonne cap is beneficial to Alberta and not detrimental to Alberta, not disadvantaging small companies. It's entirely possible that we come up with that determination. In fact, I think it would benefit the government's case if they had very clear data that showed that that was in fact going to be the case as opposed to picking a number that seems high enough that we won't hit it any time really soon but is still a cap so that we can tell the world we have a cap. You know, I hope that there's some more detail beyond just that, beyond just something that was cooked up in a strategy session. I really hope that this is actually something that's well thought through.

Again, you know, the makeup of the committee: while I certainly have some concerns about the bias of some of the members, I will give that committee its opportunity to work and see if it can in fact come up with some answers to these questions. If it can, given the very wide range of views on that committee I think it will have a tremendous amount of credibility. But that committee needs to be allowed to do its work. If it does that work, presents their findings in detail before the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, we, myself included – I happen to be a member of that committee – would have an opportunity to further delve into some of those details, which might even make the process of passing the bill before this House that much more efficient.

The Deputy Speaker: No other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Any further speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am very happy to rise, that the motion for going to second reading on Bill 25, the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be amended. I would like to speak a little bit about the importance of committee. To reiterate many of the things that we've already heard in here, one of the most important aspects of this is stakeholder outreach and having people come in on such an important piece of legislation. We've presented many, many parts of what our concerns are with regard to this legislation that I think are worthy of slowing these things down. We want to make sure as a government body that we have the opportunity to actually speak with these stakeholders.

Now, as the hon. member had mentioned, there are some groups that have been consulted and have made their statements towards this particular bill. However, as was mentioned by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, there are many small companies that right now are going to be questioning whether or not they're even going to be able to get in the ground, Madam Speaker.

If you look at that just from a business point of view, from an investor's point of view, when you have access to this lease – and there's a process, Madam Speaker, to even get to that. You've hedged into the future the future of your family, your business, and everything else, thinking that this was going to be the opportunity that you would have to get into this industry, and now all of a sudden you might be beyond the cap that has been set by this government and not even have the opportunity to recoup what you've already put into that, not to mention the fact that whatever investors and people and things that you've put into the future to try and make sure that you are able to do this opportunity to create the ability to drill or to do any of these other things within this sector: all of a sudden that's wiped clean because of policy and potentially a random number. All of a sudden you're outside the good graces of a 100-megatonne cap that no longer includes you in the discussion. No longer does it take into consideration the money, time, the energy, and everything that you did as a company to go forward in this industry. Suddenly everything that you've put your livelihood into is not important.

I highly recommend that the government consider the fact that these folks are going to want to come before a committee and, at the very least, talk to the government about how to move forward and potentially even give some suggestions that would help to mitigate some of the fallout from this situation. The whole point of committee isn't to slow things down per se, but it's actually to just step back for a minute and make sure that the processes in the policy that you're putting forward are actually going to be conducive to making sure that we are able to be productive. If we're looking at production, we're slowing down production in an industry that is growing. We're actually cutting off an industry at the knees without even understanding the projections within the industry.

We presented some numbers, and there's definitely room for discussion, Madam Speaker, about how these numbers work and all of that. That's fine. But if we are at least having the ability to go to committee as a group, as we are actually supposed to do in this House, as a joint committee to sit down with these folks and have a succinct discussion about how to move forward, the possibilities are endless. Those folks are the experts, and they can give us some insight as to how to move forward. They're the innovators, especially these small companies. I mean, my goodness, we're cutting them off at the knees before they're even getting going. If you want to talk about innovation and diversity and efficiencies, you're cutting the most important group of people out of a discussion, who will tell you how to be efficient, how to save money, how to do these things. When we're talking about the oil sands, even the small companies are humongous companies compared to some of the smaller companies that are in other types of production in the province.

These are not small numbers even for the small companies. These are large numbers. These are people and families and folks that were hoping that given the opportunity and having been able to get into the lease at that time, they're going to be job creators. Now, again, we're cutting them off at the knees before they even get started. How is the government without talking to these folks going to find out how they're going to compensate these people who are already having these leases? How's that going to happen? I'm assuming that's a question that you're going to want answered before there's another lawsuit.

I'd also like to just take a moment, especially with committee, with regard to some other comments that were made. One of the most disturbing comments, I think, that came from across the way, is: who needs to be consulted? Well, I'll tell you who. The folks that have already got those leases and other people that have the ability to tell us and help us to make this policy so that we are doing it the best, so that we continue being the most environmentally responsible, so that we continue to innovate. Those are the people that we actually need to consult.

To quote again the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, this government's advisory panel has not reported yet. How are we supposed to formulate any reasonable policy, Madam Speaker? I've been very vocal about how I feel about this panel and some of the folks that are on that panel. However, with all due respect, the government has created this panel, and I'm extremely interested, as is everyone on this side, to find out what the findings of that panel are. It is not my place at this point in time to make any prejudgment about which way that is going to go. I have my own thoughts about that.

Having said that, though, that panel has been struck. That panel has been paid for with Albertans' hard-earned dollars, and Albertans deserve to know what that panel is going to advise this government before being able to move forward with actually creating policy about the industry that is being impacted by the government policies, by legislation previous to having the oil sands advisory panel even advise us. Please do; please advise us. I don't understand the backwards mentality of how that's feasible. We need to go very carefully forward with this.

Another thing that the hon. member across the way mentioned was something about implementation. That was actually a very interesting point because implementation is based on – you have to have institutional knowledge, and then there's policy involved with that and the economic realities of that, none of which we will even begin to understand, first of all, without understanding where the advisory panel is going and, second of all, without having due time to actually have some of these folks come before us and help us understand how this should be implemented. The implementation of this policy is actually the bigger picture, and I do not recall reading anywhere or understanding how that implementation is going to go forward.

It seems to me, based on comments from the other side, that that's the least of their worries. Who cares about the panel? Why do we even bother asking? Who needs to be consulted? Well, I would like to know. I'm sure Chestermere-Rocky View folks would like to know. There are a lot of people who, I can pretty much guarantee, are very invested in the future of this province, and I can guarantee you that they are watching wide-eyed what this panel is going to say and what they're going to do. I can guarantee you, with the amount of people that I personally talk to on a weekly basis, that this has been a major point of discussion, not a small one. A big, big, big part of the discussion. What do I say every time? Well, we've got to wait for the advisory panel to come back so that we understand where they're going.

I'm assuming that we're going to have consultation and stakeholder outreach because it's just a small portion, you know, of the economic realities of Canada. Madam Speaker, I assumed, maybe wrongly, that the government would be interested in making sure, based on transparency and accountability to Albertans, that that panel information would come forward, that we'd have some idea of the mandate of this panel and some idea of how that panel has talked to the stakeholders and have some of their input, and then we'd be able to go forward and legitimately look at this policy.

The whole point of committee is to be able to do those things under the auspices of this building that we are all so privileged to be here for. We are supposed to be in committee. That's our job. We were put here to have discussions, robust discussions, and we're going to disagree a whole bunch. That's okay. That's the point. So the amendment to go to committee is thoughtful; it's a process. It is part of the due diligence of this building to make sure that we do not just put something on paper and go: woo-hoo; time to pass it. That's not the way that this goes. This takes time. It takes time and energy and people and experts.

I can't begin to tell you. I mean, when I came into this portfolio, if I hadn't had the brilliance of the experts in this province, who literally have taken me from a minor understanding – even now I would say that, at best, I'm at a high-level understanding of this industry. It's so complex and diverse and beautiful and creative. I'm constantly amazed. But if it hadn't been for those folks and their energy and the time that they've put into me personally without asking, I don't think I could speak quite as passionately about this.

Because I respect the industry so much and I respect the process so much and I respect those folks who have so much more information than I could possibly ever put forward in this House – so much, Madam Speaker – I can't begin to tell you how important it is for me personally, being educated by this industry, how much it would matter to me personally to be able to have the opportunity to go into committee with a diverse group of people with a lot of different ideas and the group of people in the middle who actually know this information to help us to figure out what is the best way to move forward.

Please remember. We have the best people in the world. Our geophysicists, geoscientists, and geologists are so underutilized right now. I can guarantee you that if this government decided to go to committee and invited in some of those specialists, they'd be here in a millisecond. This is an underutilized, massively talented group of people in Alberta right now that would happily come forward to help out with this information. I can think of hundreds of other people that would happily participate in committee as experts, come forward and help us actually craft policy that is going to inherently be there for our great-grandchildren, that we can be proud of, that we can look at and say: look at what we did not only for the oil sands but also for our own prosperity and for Canada.

It's very disturbing to me also that this government thinks that they can interfere with pipeline access. They think that some cap and other things or the social licence they keep talking about should impact national infrastructure. National infrastructure is all of ours. It's the prosperity of all of Canada. It's part of the federation. I take it very seriously that the government does not quite understand that it is the responsibility of the federal government to make decisions in the national best interest based on the information that comes to them from our very, very amazing NEB.

For the members opposite to assume that with legislation like this – I mean, there's no information to go on – our Prime Minister is suddenly going to look at a piece of legislation like this and go: oh, well, maybe we'll give them a pipeline. No. That's not how it works, Madam Speaker. If you would like a little bit more education on how the NEB works, I can try again. I've been saying it all along. The NEB is an arm's-length group. They consult, and they are your social licence. They are your social licence.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I enjoyed the comments made by the member just now and how she so succinctly expressed the value of going to committee and having more consultation. She covered how important it would be to have experts from all fields come and discuss it in committee, to have the small producers there, too, and to actually have the panel's report, which would be, of course, very valuable in making a decision on this.

I'm going to just read a couple of quotes from when the Minister of Environment and Parks introduced this bill, on collaborative conversations between the oil sands industry, First Nations, municipalities, and environmental groups.

This cap, the mechanism and the logistics of it will be worked out in partnership with industry, with First Nations, with municipalities, and with environmental groups. We have established a precedent-setting, collaborative, co-operative table at which all of those who are affected are making decisions together.

She also goes on to say that this bill was crafted in consultation with First Nations, municipalities, affected communities, Métis organizations, industry, and environmental groups.

Now, of course, it's great to have collaboration with all of these groups. All of these people are Albertans. It's all good. But where I don't see any consultation is with the public, with the rest of Albertans. I see lots of consultation with different groups and everything, but if we were to take this to committee, I would like to hear what this member thinks about the opportunity for the public, for anybody in Alberta to have a chance to learn, listen, speak their mind.

We always talk about making informed decisions. We can't make informed decisions without information, and that's what a committee can give us. It can give us this information. It can give all Albertans information so that Albertans can make that decision for themselves, make that informed decision. So I'd like to hear the member maybe speak a little bit about that, too. Obviously, she's made some great points, and I commend her for that, but I see that there's something missing in all of this conversation on collaboration and consultation that was done on this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you very much for your question. Look, I'm very blessed in that I have this portfolio of oil and gas, so my outreach is going to be very different from anybody else's in the House depending on who they get to speak to and what their specialties are. I have that distinct privilege of actually being able to speak to industry folks all the time, so my experience is going to be a little different. That's why this is so important. Having the privilege of having that portfolio, it's actually my responsibility to reach out to these people and to make sure that I'm listening and that I'm consulting and that I have good information to bring back for my personal education. But the expectation of everybody else and their portfolios and what they have going on – I mean, it would be great if we could always reach out to each other's portfolios, and I think quite often we're able to do that.

What this does by going to committee is that it actually brings all of the sector, all of the experts, the public – everybody – into our inner space to help determine policy that's going to impact them, the public especially. I mean, Albertans are savvy. They live this; they understand this. I have to tell you that some of the most compelling conversations that you have are out on the street with the public. They know so much more, you know, to a large degree than I do at times, even just their passion for the industry and for their province. If we're able to bring in the public, especially folks that work in the industry, people who are right now losing their jobs – the most compelling stories, of course, are from the people that end up in all of our offices, their absolutely heart-wrenching stories of job losses. I'm sure it's on both sides of the House.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Speaker, very much. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on the referral motion. I come to the referral motion with somewhat of a unique perspective. Having had the privilege of sitting both in government and in opposition, I can offer a perspective that is perhaps a little bit unique.

When I sat on that side of the House, referral motions were always bad. I can see, so far at least, that the pattern of this government has been that that has become, perhaps you could call it, a contagious impression, that referral motions are always bad, that they're always in place to sidetrack or delay government initiatives that are important. Yet, sitting over here, I think it's a good opportunity to recognize that referral motions are not always bad. You know, I see my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview over there, who often moved and spoke to referral motions when he was over here. I'd be certainly interested to hear his comments as well as to whether he senses a change in attitude towards referral motions.

But I'm inclined in this case, Madam Speaker, to absolutely agree with the need to refer this motion to a committee. It's because in the very words of the climate leadership plan document there are several phrases that indicate that even the drafters of this report were not exactly sure what the consequences of some of these measures would be, and it's because we were talking in some cases about time frames that are 10, 15, 20 years out.

You know, I went to the executive summary of the climate leadership plan, which I hadn't read for a number of months, and I found on page 25 under Technology and Innovation the following statement:

Even as the world acts on climate change, there will continue to be significant demand for oil and gas for mobility, heat and power. Alberta's challenge is to position ourselves as a preferred, low-cost and low-emissions supplier amidst the market shifts now underway.

I thought that made sense.

The report goes on to say:

Even as the world acts on climate change, there will continue to be significant demand for oil and gas for mobility, heat and power. Alberta's challenge is to position ourselves as a preferred, low-cost and low-emissions supplier amidst the market shifts now underway.

Now, Madam Speaker, I didn't make a mistake there and read the same sentence twice. The same two sentences appear twice on page 25 of the executive summary of the climate leadership plan.

Now, they had experts – I know that – and they did a lot of consultation. I know that as well. But maybe they should have hired a proofreader. When you have glaring errors like this in the report, a clear, glaring error like this in the report, it makes you wonder: well, you know, perhaps we need to take a closer look at some of what's in here.

On page 27 of the executive summary it goes on to say:

Many will look at these emissions reductions and claim that our policies will not place Alberta on a trajectory consistent with global 2°C goals, and in some sense this is true – the policies proposed ...

And I want everyone to listen to this carefully.

... for Alberta in this document would not, if applied in all jurisdictions in the world, lead to global goals being accomplished. However, more stringent policies in Alberta would come at significant cost to the province due to lost competitiveness, with negligible impact on global emissions due to carbon leakage.

The report goes on to say:

Imposing policies in Alberta that are more stringent than what we have suggested is not tenable, until our peer and competitor jurisdictions adopt policies that would have a comparable impact on their industrial sectors.

I want to be very clear about one thing, Madam Speaker. As I've said in this House before, I accept the science of climate change, and I accept that climate change is real. I further accept the need for us to take action on man-made climate change. I've been very clear on that, and I believe that that's important.

The third stage is what I call acceptance of climate change, and that is that Alberta and Canada have a role to play, even recognizing that we have a relatively small overall contribution to the world's greenhouse gas emissions. I know full well that Canada only contributes 1.6 per cent, I know full well that Alberta's contribution is less than 1 per cent, and I know full well that the oil sands overall is .15 per cent. That does not absolve us of responsibility to do something about it. I cannot accept a situation that says: well, we're not going to do anything about it because they have to do something and they have to do something and they have to do something. That, to me, is unacceptable.

That being said, our measures that we choose to limit greenhouse gases have to be carefully chosen, and they have to be judicious. Because of the very risks that are pointed out in the climate leadership plan document, we have to make sure that we are not so far out in front of the game that all we are succeeding in doing is damaging our own economy and not achieving the kind of major contributions to greenhouse gas emissions that are, in fact, the goal of the report.

I'd like to further quote because this, I felt, was very interesting, too. On the bottom of page 27:

There will be concerns with respect to the impacts of these policies on our economy and on employment. Greenhouse gas policies are often painted as win-win yet, at the granular level, they may not be. In an export-oriented province like Alberta, emissions control policies will not make everyone better off. There will be trade-offs and transitions resulting from any policy which alters the way our economy values carbon emissions. Those with better technology, more willingness to adapt and a comparative advantage in low carbon resource extraction and infrastructure will benefit. Those without those advantages, or those who choose not to engage in emissions reduction opportunities, will not.

Madam Chair, my concern here relates, then, to how the 100-megatonne limit will impact the industry overall. Now, when the climate leadership plan was first announced, I heard about the 100-megatonne cap on emissions from the oil sands. Knowing that the current level is somewhere in the 66-, 67-megatonne level as of 2014, I said: well, you know, that really shouldn't be that much of a stretch for the industry to get under. One would assume that in the other 34 megatonnes that they've got left before they hit the cap, they will develop technology and innovation that will allow them to stay under 100 megatonnes, and it will not create an undue negative impact on development and investment.

It turns out that that was a somewhat naive and incorrect interpretation. In point of fact, after I've discussed this with a number of individuals in the oil and gas sector, they've told me that the 100-megatonne cap is already causing a decrease in investment in projects for oil sands extraction, and that's a concern to me. The companies that are losing out on this are, in fact, the companies that are the smaller junior oil and gas companies, that often are niche operators and can provide extraction in certain instances that are either not profitable enough for the large companies or the large companies simply aren't interested.

So while I'm interested in the group of companies that the Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert quotes, he makes the assumption that the oil and gas sector is one homogeneous group and that they all agree on everything. I can tell you with absolute certainty that they are not a homogeneous group any more than beef producers are a homogeneous group or farmers are a homogeneous group or, for that matter, any number of other industry sectors.

The climate leadership plan talks about some players being impacted negatively and others positively. Well, a 100-megatonne cap – let us be very clear – favours existing operators. It favours those already in the business. And guess who approves of the 100-megatonne cap? All of those companies you listed off are already in the business.

It is a major concern of mine how this impacts the overall process. The development of an oil sands project has about a 10-year time frame from initial conception to design to permit approvals to construction to commissioning to bringing it on phase. If you wanted to open an oil sands plant in 2026 or 2027, you needed to start planning yesterday. I was surprised by that, but these are large projects, and there is a lot of work to be done before they can actually move into that phase.

My concern is that the projections for when we will hit the 100-megatonne cap vary. Some people say that we won't hit it even by 2030, but there are a number of industry projections that indicate that we will probably hit 100 megatonnes by 2026, 10 years from now. So if you're a small junior oil and gas company that holds an oil sands lease that is considering developing a project for extraction, you are now concerned as to whether or not you're going to be able to develop that project because by 2026 or '27 there may be no room left in the 100-megatonne cap.

These are the kinds of levels of uncertainty that people are concerned about, that people in the oil and gas sector talk about. Very sadly, these are the kinds of issues that seem to consistently fall on deaf ears when they're told to this government, and that's unfortunate. This is our most important industry, this is and for years has been a number one employer of Albertans, and it is, in fact, an engine to our economy. I am concerned about the negative effects that a 100-megatonne cap will have on our overall industry, and I'm very concerned about how this will affect investment going forward.

With regard to the amendment by the Member for Calgary-Foothills I think it makes sense to refer this bill to committee. I think it makes sense to have a broader conversation that brings in not just the oil companies that agree with the government policy, but just maybe you should listen to some of the ones that don't agree with the government policy. It would be a novel approach, one that you haven't tried before.

Madam Speaker, it's important that we have also as much information as we can possibly get about what sorts of technology could indeed be applied and are on the horizon for reducing the carbon intensity of the extraction process. I think that's important.

Finally, Madam Speaker, referral to a committee would allow the oil sands advisory group to develop regulations and to go through that very important step of understanding exactly what the relationship between the oil sands advisory group and the Alberta Energy Regulator with regard to oil sands project approvals would in fact be. I am very concerned that what we are setting up here with the oil sands advisory group is a second-tier quasi-regulator and that it will just simply make the whole process of project and development approvals more complex. I don't think that that is helpful to us at all.

Until we have the role of the oil sands advisory group and the regulations that they will develop clearly defined for us, I think that in an issue like this, that is so critical to the long-term development of our oil sands and of our oil and gas industry, it's really critical that we take a very careful look, even as the authors of the climate leadership plan indicated needed to happen, at who are the winners and who are the losers, because they clearly state in the report that there will be winners and losers. The other side would have you believe that it is universally good for everyone. Well, the truth of the matter is that that's not how government policy always works, and it's certainly not how this government policy will work. They need to understand that, and they need to hear from those who will be adversely affected by the application of this 100-megatonne limit to know how it will adversely affect them.

I think referral to committee is something that should not necessarily happen automatically on all bills. I think some bills can be adequately and fully debated in the House and moved on, but on complex issues like this one, I think that to have the input from industry experts, to have the input from indigenous groups, to have the input from environmental groups would be very useful. I want to point out that the input that was gathered for the climate leadership plan was excellent but that it is not the only input that's required.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I really appreciate, as I always do, listening to our esteemed colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster. He brings to us a perspective from being on both sides of this House, which I think is extremely valuable given the lack of experience of many members in this Chamber.

The hon. member touched on something – and correct me if I'm wrong – and I believe the words are “confirmation bias.” I believe that the hon. member could help us to understand something about that given the experience that he has had on that side of the House and some of the problems that were experienced with confirmation bias skewing the mindset of the party in power at the time. I know that . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) the Assembly stands adjourned until Monday at 1:30 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 2nd Session (2016)

Activity to Thursday, November 3, 2016

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, November 7, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us reflect, each in our own way. As Canadians and as Albertans let us give thanks for the diverse culture, traditions, and the heritage in which we share. Allow us to be inspired by the diversity of this province, motivating us to act for the betterment of our society. Let us understand that differences more often than not bring us together.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you 37 students from Muriel Martin school in St. Albert. Joining them today are Mr. Richard Pawsey and Michelle Kennett. If they could rise today and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to other members of this Assembly 17 hard-working people from Alberta Infrastructure's asset management branch. This team works with all government of Alberta departments to provide day-to-day administration and collection of rent from more than 33,000 parking stalls across the province for government employees, agencies, boards, and commissions. They also maintain the inventory and they report over 16,000 government-owned and -supported buildings, 13,600 land titles, and 6,700 other sites. We couldn't do it without them. I appreciate their work very much, and I would ask them to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any further school groups to be introduced today? No?

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly visitors from my constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona. Brandi Kobes and Stephen Trott are both students in the Faculty of Agricultural, Life and Environmental Sciences at the U of A. Brandi has come from rural Saskatchewan to work towards her degree in human ecology and is interested in a career that involves community development. Stephen Trott is from Illinois, here to study agriculture business. Stephen is interested in advancing the agricultural sector while pursuing a career in public service. I would now like my guests to stand, and I'd ask the members of the Assembly to please join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly members of the Council of Alberta University Students, commonly known as CAUS. This group represents the interests of more than a hundred thousand university students from the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, the University of Lethbridge, and MacEwan and Mount Royal universities. Their continued advocacy work ensures a quality, affordable, and accessible postsecondary education system for all Albertans, and I admire them greatly. As Minister of Advanced Education it is always a pleasure to meet with them. I want to point out to the House that the executive director of CAUS will be leaving on maternity leave because she'll be becoming a first-time mother in the next couple of months. We wish her well on her new parenting adventure. I'd ask all of the members of CAUS to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you to all members of the Assembly it is my pleasure to introduce Ms Jamila Moloo. I would ask her to rise. Jamila is the chair of the Nellie Carlson parent advisory council. That school council has been very effective in working with the teachers and principal, Henry Madsen, and getting the K to 9 school open by September 1 this year. I ask that all members provide Ms Moloo a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three guests from the town of Bon Accord in the exceptional riding of Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater: Randolph Boyd, the mayor of Bon Accord; Vicki Zinyk, the chief administrative officer for the town; and Steve Madden, assistant chief administrative officer. I'd like to welcome them and invite them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you a wonderful family from my constituency of Leduc-Beaumont: Mr. Robin Menaar, Mrs. Carol Menaar, Emma and Benjamin Menaar. The Menaars are a home-schooling family and engaged community members in Leduc-Beaumont. They have taken the opportunity today to come to the Legislature to watch the excitement of question period and to learn how respectful debate can lead to good policy-making. I hope we can set a good example for their family today, and I hope they have a wonderful visit to the Legislature. I ask that they now stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome. I hope you don't have too many high expectations.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature my daughter Tenea. You can stand now, Tenea. Tenea is a grade 10 student in Valleyview at Hillside high school. She decided that since it is a short week this week, she would take the week and spend it with me here at the Legislature. Her education is going to happen here this week, so we'll see what she learns today in question period.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Yet again another expectation that may not be met.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Nellie Carlson School

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Twenty-five months ago, during the by-election in Edmonton-Whitemud, our current Premier and I stood next to a bare field in Magrath. We noted a sign promising a K to 9 school for that site. That sign had been there for several years, thanks to these guys, despite Edmonton-Whitemud being represented by a long-term cabinet minister and interim Premier.

On September 1, 2016, less than 16 months after the historic election of our government and our commitment to re-funding education and infrastructure, the Nellie Carlson K to 9 school opened to several hundred bright children from my constituency. NCS is home to the Cub athletic teams and a burgeoning arts program. The building will be used as a model for other schools being opened in all parts of Alberta.

A special thanks goes to Clark Builders, who delivered the building on time and under budget. Thanks also to the Edmonton public school board, the teachers and staff at Nellie Carlson school, including Principal Henry Madsen, and the dedicated parent advisory council, who worked so diligently to get the school open.

Most of all, my thanks to Nellie Carlson, after whom the school is named. The students and staff are so proud to have the school named after her and were honoured with her attendance at the opening along with her husband of 70 years, Elmer Carlson, and five generations of family. I have met with and listened to the wisdom of Nellie Carlson on three occasions. She is a saint, in my opinion. Well over 90 years old, she has made several important contributions to First Nations, Alberta, and Canada. Thanks to her perseverance, the Supreme Court of Canada righted a wrong whereby First Nations women lost their treaty rights by marrying a nonstatus man.

She is also a proud Cree woman who has championed the teaching of First Nation languages and culture. Nellie Carlson is a role model for us all. In particular, she is a brilliant example for the hundreds of new students at Nellie Carlson school in the beautiful riding of Edmonton-Whitemud.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Home-schooling

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday parents and children of Trinity Christian School Association and the Wisdom Home Schooling Society let go a collective sigh of relief as the Court of Queen's Bench granted a temporary injunction to halt the NDP government's decision to cancel their accreditation.

As Wildrose said last week, the NDP government did not consider other options for tackling financial concerns and left the families of 3,500 students to deal with the effects of its sudden actions just two months into the school year. Town hall meetings on home-schooling are taking place across our province, and we are hearing the human side of this story, the story of moms, dads, and children who have had nothing to do with the alleged financial improprieties.

In Airdrie I have heard from parents who have children with autism, and the traditional bricks-and-mortar school system just does not serve their kids' needs. I have heard from parents with kids who are in and out of the hospital with chronic illnesses, who have relied on this program and who otherwise wouldn't have an education. And I have heard of students being affected who had chosen Wisdom to suit their high-level sports programming needs.

The minister and this NDP government need to start thinking more about the human impact that their heavy-handed governance has on everyday Albertans, especially when it comes to the deaccreditation of an education program which serves so many Albertan students. Parents need to be assured that their government will act in a fair manner and that their education choices will not be undermined.

With this ruling to grant a temporary injunction Albertans and I expect this government to put kids and families first and to come up with a reasoned solution now.

Government Policies

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, recently this NDP government shelled out 5 million taxpayer dollars for ads to promote their climate leadership plan, and they were everywhere: on YouTube, in theatres, even on TV during the Rio Olympics. I'll bet those slots didn't come cheap. At one point in the ad a sincere-looking fellow on an equally sincere-looking horse leans over his saddle horn and earnestly intones: I never thought I'd see the day. And I have to agree with him, but I suspect we aren't talking about the same things.

I never thought I'd see the day that NDP government policies caused businesses to move operations from the Alberta to the Saskatchewan side of Lloydminster because it was now the better place to do business. I never thought I'd see the day that the NDP government would shut trillions of dollars of clean-burning coal in the ground and destroy towns across our province instead of relying on the ingenuity of Albertans to develop even better clean coal technology. And I never thought I'd see the day that our Energy minister would tell energy workers to go look for work in B.C. if they couldn't find any in Alberta.

While we're talking about B.C., I never thought I'd see the day that this government would go there and spend a cool half million bucks to hire a lawyer to sue Albertans because apparently Alberta has none who are qualified.

I never thought I'd see the day when our farmers would get demeaned by their government, claiming it had to create a culture of safety.

I never thought I'd see the day when business was vilified and profit was a four-letter word.

I never thought I'd see the day when NDP government logic says that if you make carbon more expensive, we'll use less, but if we make labour more expensive, we'll use more. Must have something to do with that whole NDP world view thing.

Now, the sincere man on the sincere horse was no doubt talking about something else, but the Albertans I talked to are fed up. I never thought I'd see the day when people are counting the days until the next provincial election so they can vote this NDP government out.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I remind both sides of the House that the past practice and tradition in this House is that you don't make comments or interruptions, either pro or con, while members are speaking.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

New School Construction in Southwest Edmonton

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since September I've had the fortune of opening three new schools in my constituency of Edmonton-South West. I've joined my colleague, the Minister of Education, in opening Dr. Margaret-Ann Armour school, Roberta MacAdams school, and St. John XXIII school in just a few short weeks. Next year we're going to be opening five more of these schools. I'm proud to be able to support a government which doesn't just make announcements on schools but actually gets behind and funds those schools so that parents and students can have a place to learn.

Mr. Speaker, these schools would not be possible without the amazing work of our school boards, our development partners, and amazing staff at these facilities. These new schools are full of worlds of opportunity for these new students. But behind those students we have an amazing team of parents, and those parents are volunteers who go out every day and do their best to make sure their students have the best possible learning environments. They work on groups like parent associations, they work on groups like playground groups, and they develop their communities into something that students can excel in. Much to the surprise of many parents, schools don't actually come with playgrounds, and with the support of our amazing parents and communities we're able to build amazing recreation spaces for all of our students.

Mr. Speaker, these schools are not just a place of learning; they are cornerstones of our neighbourhoods and our communities. Well-funded education means a well-educated populace that can go out and live and work and succeed in Alberta. A well-funded student means a well-rounded learner. A good education leads to good jobs and lays the foundation for a healthy economy. With these new schools we are preparing Albertans for success. Our children can't wait. That's why this government is so founded in supporting and funding education.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to support a government that absolutely understands how important education is and funding education is.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Equinox Festival in Bon Accord

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to rise today to recognize the great work done by the town of Bon Accord in holding their fifth equinox and dark-skies festival earlier this year. I had the honour of attending this free event personally, and I wanted to share the great impressions I have of it.

The people of Bon Accord have put a great deal of effort into reducing light pollution in their community. In doing so, they have become Canada's first dark-sky community and only the 11th town in the world to earn this certification from the International Dark-Sky Association.

The guest of honour at their festival this year was the famed Canadian astronaut Colonel Chris Hadfield. It speaks volumes to the capabilities of the town and their dedicated volunteers that they were able to secure such an esteemed guest and host such a large and complex event so successfully. On a quick personal note, I'll say that this is one of the few things I've done as a member so far that my teenage son thinks is really cool. I had a chance to meet with Colonel Hadfield. It is dedicated people like these, found throughout Alberta, that Hadfield said that he was inspired by while living in Alberta, and in participating in this event, he had a chance to pay back a bit of that inspiration.

This festival has many benefits. It brings tourism and economic opportunities to the region. This year it attracted approximately 3,500 people. To put that into perspective, the community of Bon Accord has about a 1,400 population. It also brings the community together and fosters a love of science and astronomy. Culture, environment, and education are the three pillars of the community of Bon Accord, and it's events like these that bring these elements together in a very powerful way. I'd like to extend my sincere thanks to the town and their dedicated volunteers for hosting this event. It speaks to the community-mindedness and their commitment to preserving our night sky for all of us to enjoy.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Job Creation and Retention

Mr. Jean: More bad news came out for Alberta this past week. Calgary's unemployment rate is the highest it's been in over two decades, at over 10 per cent, a 120 per cent increase since 2015. Jobs are being shed all across all sectors, but the NDP is more interested in raising everyone's taxes and suing Alberta-owned companies than getting people back to work. What does the Premier have to say to the Albertans who have seen their companies and jobs be taxed and regulated out of existence because of this NDP government's policies?

Ms Notley: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I would say to many Albertans that which most of them already know, which is that the slowdown in our economy is due to the international drop in the price of oil. Now, that being said, however, it is certainly incumbent upon government to do whatever it can to have Albertans' backs as they struggle through these economic times. That's why we have the Alberta jobs plan, and that is why we have a plan that just today we announced would create tens of thousands of jobs over the next three years, and we'll continue to do that work because we care about Alberta families.

Mr. Jean: This government has been in power more than 18 months and has overseen one of the most devastating periods of job losses in our province's history and is totally unapologetic. Compared to October last year, Alberta has lost 47,000 full-time jobs. That's 47,000 families whose lives have been thrown into chaos, whose EI is running dry, and all the government can promise them is new carbon taxes and more risky NDP economic policies. Jobs are being lost in construction, in manufacturing, and in professional services right across Alberta. Will the Premier please tell Albertans how many net jobs have been lost since the NDP came into power?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as I said, responding to the fact that our economy was not well positioned to immediately adjust to the dramatic drop in the international price of oil, we've been working very hard to support jobs. For instance, our Alberta jobs plan will create an average of 10,000 jobs annually over the next three years. More than 129 wells have been approved under our modernized royalty framework. Each well sustains about 135 jobs for a total of 17,000. Our investor tax credit will support up to 4,400 jobs over the next three years. We'll continue to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Over 100,000 jobs have been lost since this party has been in power, and I would challenge the NDP to travel to the communities that their policies are hurting the most. Go to Grande Cache, where you can see the desperation in people's eyes. Talk to people in Hanna, whose community is hanging on the edge of a cliff because of this government's coal shutdown, or talk to the tens of thousands of workers and professionals in Calgary who are stuck at home, desperate for a job but simply can't find one because there are none available. How can the Premier and her government be so indifferent to the harm these policies are having on working people, working Albertans, families, right across this province?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I reject very much the premise of that case. We have been working very hard with coal companies to negotiate coal compensation because we made it very clear when we brought in our climate leadership plan that we would work with them to make sure that there was no capital stranded. Our minister of economic development is also in the process of going around and meeting with coal communities to talk about a just transition from coal because we believe that it's important to work with not only the companies but the workers and the communities who are impacted. Quite in opposition to what the member opposite has said, we are going to work to make sure that we make this adjustment together.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Oil and Gas Transportation to the West Coast

Mr. Jean: Last spring all parties in this Legislature followed the Wildrose lead and voted for our motion to fight any crude oil tanker ban by the federal government to British Columbia's north coast. This move would be aggressive and ideological, to intentionally block any current or future pipeline proposals heading in that direction, and now the Liberals are promising a moratorium later this fall. Can the Premier please explain if she has done anything at all to advocate against banning tanker traffic on B.C.'s north coast?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we have done is that we have met with the government of B.C. and representatives there. We understand, quite rightly, that they are concerned about marine safety and that that's one of the things that needs to be appropriately addressed in order to secure social licence for approval of a pipeline going to the coast. So we were very pleased to see that today the federal government, having listened to us, having listened to the government of B.C., is moving forward very aggressively on significantly enhancing marine safety in B.C. as of today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jean: The Wildrose motion passed by all MLAs in this House asked the government to do all it could to stop this move by the federal government designed to block new pipeline projects built from Alberta. It clearly stated that the government would support the Northern Gateway pipeline project, but Albertans haven't heard a single peep from the Premier or the NDP government giving support to this project and the damaging move to block crude oil tankers on B.C.'s coast. When, if ever, can Albertans, Alberta families expect the Premier to denounce this heavy-handed move from Ottawa against Alberta's interests?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, our government and myself as Premier – I have made one of my primary goals the issue of getting our product to tidewater. As a result, I meet regularly with federal officials. I speak with the Prime Minister about this issue regularly. I have met with provincial officials across the country to talk about this issue. We are doing everything we can to move this matter forward. You know what? The report that came out last week about the Kinder Morgan pipeline from the Kinder Morgan panel said that the first priority that needed to be considered was whether a new pipeline would work in alignment with the national climate change plan, and – you know what? – it will thanks to this government.

Mr. Jean: The first priority of this government should be Alberta's families.

The Premier's NDP allies in British Columbia have done all they can to smear Alberta's oil and gas industry. They've inflamed protesters, and they continue to attack the integrity of Canada's pipeline review process. But not once have we seen any of Alberta's NDP demanding better from their provincial colleagues. Not once have they ever travelled to British Columbia to drum up support for our pipeline projects. Why hasn't the Premier travelled to B.C. to convince her NDP friends and the B.C. government to stop blocking Alberta's pipelines and start supporting them and Alberta's families?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, what our government has done, as I've just outlined, is that we have met frequently and at great length with officials across the country, including representatives from B.C. Just a couple of weeks ago I met with a whole bunch of environmental NGO leaders to talk about why it was that we needed to get our pipelines to tidewater, in particular the one going west through B.C. So, in fact, we have done that work. But – you know what? – it's about getting the work done in a respectful way, not about political grandstanding. The latter will only create more division; the former will get results.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Student Assessment

Mr. Jean: Experiments and new educational fads from NDP government bureaucrats continue to hurt test scores for students all across Alberta. One-quarter of grade 6 students and one-third of grade 9 students are failing their PATs. Grade 12 math scores are also on the decline. It certainly shows a broken system that is no longer supporting teachers or students in Alberta's classrooms. When will the Premier realize that we need to stop treating our children like guinea pigs in the classroom and start giving them the tools they need to succeed?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin by thanking the member very much for that question because, of course, it lines up very much with the fact that our Minister of Education recently announced a curriculum review process into which parents, students, and members opposite can all contribute to ensure that we do better on the matters of the education that we're providing, to ensure that our kids are ready for the new economy. So I'm very pleased to hear that we're on the same page on this.

Mr. Jean: This NDP government seems more interested in taking instructions from the Alberta Teachers' Association boss than sticking up for parents and our students. Last month the ATA president argued that PATs are not a valuable assessment tool because they don't test important skills like creativity, collaboration, and citizenship. There's no question that they are campaigning to eliminate them. The Education minister is keeping the door wide open. [interjections] He hasn't yet made a decision on continuing with PATs, and this is not a laughing matter. Does the Premier plan to scrap standardized testing? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that we're not going to scrap is thousands of teachers. To be clear, if the member opposite takes $2 billion out of operational revenue, which they plan to do, that's exactly what will happen. We are ensuring stability in our education system. We are working with teachers, we are working with parents, and thanks to the Minister of Education we are inviting all Albertans to be part of the conversation on how to make our education the best in the country.

Mr. Jean: Fearmongering and passing the buck on Alberta students' failing math grades by this Premier just isn't acceptable. We need to have a plan to get us back to a place where our province once again prepares our youth for a successful life, with a strong foundation in literacy and numeracy. I know that many parents share my concerns that an NDP world view will be the main focus of their current curriculum review. If the NDP do away with PATs, we will have one less mechanism to track these slipping scores. Why, then, does the Premier refuse to commit to PATs and standardized testing?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, math skills are critical to student success. We believe that very strongly, and we know that we can do better. I think that the member opposite would actually be surprised to discover the amount of common cause we have on the matter of improving our math scores. We are working on that. The minister is working on that. We are reviewing math, we are reviewing the curriculum, and we will move forward to ensure that the way we measure that is also done in a way that best ensures the greatest and most successful outcomes for our children.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Coal-fired Electric Power Plant Retirement

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This NDP government has developed a solid track record of failing to consult with and listen to Albertans. We saw it with Bill 6, and we're seeing it now with the job-killing carbon tax. This government is continuing to attack hard-working Albertans and their families with the coal phase-out. To the Premier. Thousands of Albertans will be out of work and their families' economic viability put at risk because of the coal phase-out. Have you been in contact with the hardest hit communities like Hanna, and what will you actually do to replace the good, mortgage-paying jobs they have today once your government rips them out of their hands?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think the first thing to understand is that the coal phase-outs that will occur between now and 2030 were already going to happen because of the federal government regulations put in by the former Conservative government. That's the first thing to keep in mind.

That being said, our minister will be reaching out and consulting with workers and also with communities about how to do this with a just transition, to help retrain into renewable energy in some cases, to look at pension things, those kinds of things. We're taking a very open mind to this because we're very committed to ensuring that we support a just transition away from coal to clean, renewable energy for everybody's benefit.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad that the Premier didn't say that the minister has talked to them because that's not the case. Hanna has been trying to work with the government on an economic impact study because the expedited coal phase-out, the provincial part, will decimate the jobs of over 10 per cent of their population. One out of 10 people in the community will be out of work because of your policies. They've been waiting for an answer since June, yet who's on the job? To the Premier: since your minister is not doing the job, will you pick up the phone, call the good people of Hanna, and give them an answer? They need to know whether they're going to have jobs and what's going to happen to their community. Call the mayor.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member may or may not know, the government has actually engaged in a great deal of work to talk about the way in which we would go through a payout and also how we would negotiate the payout with the companies and the degree to which the companies would also work with the communities and the workers to make sure that they are justly transitioned. So that work is ongoing. There will be more to say about it in the very near future. As well, the minister will be out working with the communities in the very near future, once the coal transition part has been negotiated.

Mr. McIver: Well, now, thank you, Premier, for admitting that your government has been gazing at your navels instead of talking to municipalities.

We know that government got a report about a month ago where they paid over half a million dollars to get recommendations on the coal phase-out, but you haven't told the municipalities. To the Premier. You're sitting on Terry Boston's coal phase-out report. Albertans are in the dark. They don't know whether they're going to lose their homes. They don't know whether they're going to lose their jobs. They don't know whether they're going to have a community. When are you going to actually get on the phone, talk to Albertans? They're the ones that matter, not your NDP inner circle.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the report that the member opposite references is a report that is the foundation of the negotiations that are under way with the coal companies, you know, the kinds of negotiations that the members opposite suggest that we should do to ensure investor stability and competence. Once those negotiations are completed in good faith, we will then move on to make sure that the outcome of those negotiations is supported and also that the impact on communities and workers, if they are not addressed through those negotiations, will be additionally supported.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Adult Learning System Review

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the first things this government did back in June 2015 was announce a wide-ranging adult learning review, but very little has been accomplished in 18 months, and now they've scaled it back to focus only on tuition. When I talked with student leaders and administrators, I've learned that neither has asked for a tuition freeze. It seems they get it. I wish the government did. To the Minister of Advanced Education: will you commit to completing a comprehensive review to look at the needs of the system as a whole, including financial aid, noninstructional fees, mental health, board governance, and amend the PSLA?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. He is indeed correct that our government did implement a tuition freeze extension, and we're quite proud to be working to make sure that education remains affordable for all of Alberta's students. In addition to the other requests that he's stated with respect to board governance, a PSLA review, a funding review: all of those things we'll be rolling out in the near future.

Mr. Clark: We'd like to know when, Mr. Speaker.

Now, every PSE stakeholder I talk with is asking for quality and predictability, and it's frustrating to hear the minister continue to promise certainty but continually fail to deliver. On April 7, 2016, the minister said in this House:

We are going to be conducting the consultations around the adult learning review so that postsecondary institutions will have certainty about what will happen to their funding.

The student groups and administrators are asking for a legislated tuition cap to grow at a rate of no greater than CPI. Again to the minister: will you listen to students and amend the legislation to bring ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the issue of certainty that the Member for Calgary-Elbow raised, our government has provided certainty in funding. We've provided 2 per cent increases in the operating grants to every university and college, and we've committed publicly that there will be no surprises in the budget that we provide to universities and colleges next year. In fact, it was just last week that the president of Mount Royal University was on television telling the citizens of Alberta that he's very pleased that our government has provided certainty and predictability to the system. I'm very proud of the work that our government is doing in that regard.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, another big challenge for Alberta's postsecondaries is board governance. This government keeps moving the goalposts when it comes to board appointments. First, reappointments were rejected, then long-serving board members were asked to reapply, and now the minister has put a totally different process in place. As a result, several PSE boards have lost members and are having a difficult time making quorum. To the minister. I wonder: is this delay caused by your inability to find capable people who share the NDP world view, and how long are you willing to let postsecondary institutions and their students suffer?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to making students suffer, nothing would make students suffer more than implementing the policies of the conservatives that are sitting across the way from me today. Making billions of dollars' worth of reckless cuts would hurt students more than anything else that's on offer from that side of the House.

With respect to board appointments, Mr. Speaker, we have changed the process of appointing party insiders and party donors to boards. We have opened the process. It is a transparent process, and once we find the right people to appoint to those boards, they will be appointed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Agribusiness Industry Development

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Leduc-Beaumont is home to Alberta's agrivalue food processing centre and business incubator. This facility has supported the establishment of companies that have resulted in 500 indirect and direct jobs despite these tough times. To the minister responsible: given that our agricultural industries are the backbone of communities like the one I call home, what is the government doing to ensure that these industries have every opportunity to grow?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, hon. member, for the question. He's absolutely right. Value-added agriculture industries are critical to supporting jobs and diversifying our economy. Since 2011 Alberta's agrivalue food processing centre and business incubator has supported 10 new companies that have generated $60 million in investment in Alberta and created hundreds of new jobs.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta jobs plan is working. I can inform this House that our plan will ensure the expansion of this facility by 2,350 square metres, making it the largest of its kind not only in Canada but in the world.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the minister for taking a clear stance that Leduc-Beaumont's agricultural industries are, simply put, the greatest in the world, and she'll get no argument from me.

What else can Alberta producers and people working in agricultural industries across rural Alberta expect from the jobs plan?

Ms Larivee: I thank the member again for the question. Our minister of agriculture is currently on a trade mission to Asia, building investment relationships that are essential to creating jobs and diversifying the Alberta economy. Our Alberta export expansion package will provide additional support for small businesses in Alberta looking to enter international markets with $9 million of funding over the next three years.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans deserve a better plan than no plan, and returning to the days of boom and bust will hurt, not help our economy. On this side of the House we're not living in the past; we are building an economy for the future.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how would small businesses in Leduc-Beaumont get access to those supports?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through three programs: the export support fund for eligible companies to export to new markets, the global buyers and investors program for export-ready companies to connect with international buyers, and the export readiness program, which helps increase access to Alberta's 12 international trade offices.

Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has said that investing in our trade relationships is not a real plan of any substance, and the Member for Drumheller-Stettler disagrees with our government promoting trade at all, but on this side of the House we are proud of our businesses, big and small, and will continue to promote Alberta well beyond our borders and work to create jobs to diversify our . . .

The Speaker: The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, as we speak, there are over 30 ranches in southeastern Alberta under quarantine due to bovine tuberculosis. While these ranchers wait weeks for the Canadian Food Inspection Agency to conduct testing, they are forced to incur tens of thousands of dollars in costs to feed, water, and corral their cattle over winter. What's worse, this is the one time of year that producers go to market to pay their expenses. Can the minister of agriculture tell us what the government is doing to help cut through the bureaucratic delays and expedite this process?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, I have to emphasize that our government knows that the beef industry in Alberta is strong and resilient, and we're incredibly proud of the industry in this province and the iconic product we export to the world. We continue to be in close contact with beef producers about the issue. A team of AF staff members has been set up, using an incident-command system to co-ordinate activities to assess potential avenues for financial assistance, and we continue to work with the CFIA and beef producers to share information on financial options.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, seeing as the process continues at great expense to ranchers and their families, who are unable to access compensation for destroyed herds until the testing is complete, and since these producers face mounting stress and uncertainty from the prospect of having their life's work set back, even losing family pets and other important animals, what is this government doing to communicate with affected ranchers on how they will support them and communicate directly as they rebuild their lives?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hope that with the next supplemental you'll avoid the preamble. Thank you.

Hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The CFIA is leading this investigation, and we have offered our support in this matter. The situation is an important priority, and the government of Alberta will continue to do whatever we can to help the CFIA to expedite the investigation or reduce quarantine times. You know, certainly, we've posted a list of programs available to affected cattle producers, from advance programs to flexibility on AFSC loans. We've begun the longer term analysis of whether future AgriRecovery assistance may be available to producers affected by bovine TB. We will continue to listen to beef producers.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that the cause of this TB case is still unclear, that the animal in question was near CFB Suffield and given that CFB Suffield had 200 head of elk introduced that now total over 10,000 and given that these elk have already impacted the agriculture sector by destroying crops and breaking fences, can the government listen to the solution offered by local officials and aggressively manage this elk for the sake of controlling and preventing further disease and damage?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the fact of the matter is that Environment and Parks is working quite aggressively to reduce those elk numbers. We certainly share that view, and we are working with the Department of National Defence so that we can manage our elk populations properly. We're working with CFB Suffield to develop a long-term management strategy. In response to concerns from hunters last season we created more breaks between hunts so that elk can return to the base rather than moving toward adjacent private land. That should improve hunters' experience on the base. We will continue to evaluate that hunt so we can better manage the elk population and ensure that hunters have a worthwhile experience.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP government claims to be trying to make postsecondary education more affordable, but affordability should not come at the expense of the quality of the education received at any of our fine postsecondary institutions here in Alberta. Paying less for an inferior product is not affordability. To the Minister of Advanced Education: will your ministry be providing additional funding to postsecondary institutions to offset the cost of the tuition freeze, and if so, when will this funding be announced, sir?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our government values providing high-quality education at a low cost, unlike what the PC government did when they were in power: offering a 2 per cent increase in 2013 and providing them with a 7 per cent cut. That's not the way this government operates. We will be providing predictable funding to the institutions going forward. There will be no surprises in the budget, and institutions can count on what we're telling them as far as their operating grants go.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to table page 17 of our last budget, which indicated that starting in 2015 and every year forward we actually had increases every single year and no mention of a carbon tax.

On to the question. Given that the president of the U of A recently described the tuition freeze without offsetting . . . [interjections] Shall I continue, sir? Thank you.

. . . as a cut, a simple and pure cut to programs, and given that this seems to indicate that temporarily decreasing the cost of one academic year is more important to the NDP than the quality of instruction, to the minister: how do you intend to address these concerns that a continued freeze . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Hon. member, please sit when I stand.

Mr. Rodney: Happy to.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure which budget the hon. member is referring to because the budget that the Prentice government brought down was scheduled to make a 4 per cent cut to postsecondary education this year and continued cuts last year. In fact, that's a time-honoured tradition of the PC government. I spoke to Jim Dinning not two months ago, and he said that when he was Finance minister, they cut postsecondary education funding. If this government wants to support postsecondary education in the future, they should vote for our budget in the spring.

Mr. Rodney: As mentioned, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to table that document that proves him wrong.

Given that there are concerns that Alberta's postsecondary institutions may increase tuition in one big jump as opposed to the gradual increase we would likely have seen if there had been no tuition freeze and that the president of Grant MacEwan likened the freeze to being stoned to death with popcorn and given that postsecondary students are concerned that a temporary three-year reprieve from tuition increases may be nullified by large increases when the freeze ends, again to the minister: how do you intend to provide quality education at an affordable price when your tuition freeze inevitably ends?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed is quite right to highlight the fact that our tuition freeze will end in the 2018-2019 academic year, and that's why we've launched our tuition review consultation. I encourage all members of the House to go back to their constituencies, encourage citizens to go to tuitionreview.alberta.ca to share their views on what tuition for postsecondary education should look like in the future because this government is committed to providing high-quality education at an affordable price for all the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Seniors' Housing for Couples

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The divorce-by-nursing-home policy that was imposed by the previous government was crass, inhumane, and un-Albertan. This policy was allegedly scrapped in 2013, but we keep hearing stories about couples in care being torn apart after 40, 50, 60 years of marriage. In September we saw reports of a Camrose couple being separated in care after 66 years together. Now our office has learned about a Ponoka couple going through the very same thing because of their varying service needs. To the minister: is this the quality of care that you would want for your loved ones?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, when there are those experiences where family members are separated, particularly when they've been with each other for so long, it definitely pulls at the heartstrings. Staff do everything they can to make sure that families can be reunited but that they're also in a level of care that's appropriate to make sure that they're safe. I have heard of a number of facilities. If you want to reach out specifically with the example, we'll do our best to try to help triage that, but our number one priority needs to be safety. That's why when we're building new facilities, we're finding ways to make sure that they can be safe and provide a variety of care in congregated settings.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, the couple from Ponoka has been contributing to this province for half a century. They deserve to spend their final years together. Given that this government currently has no plan to address the issue of couples who have varying needs of care who live in rural Alberta and given that Albertans expect our senior couples in care to be taken care of in their golden years, again to the minister: why does this government consistently fail to keep Alberta's seniors together?

Ms Hoffman: The member opposite maybe didn't hear it, but absolutely we are working to make sure that we can keep couples together and provide them a safe level of care as close to home as possible, Mr. Speaker. That's why we've made a commitment to build 2,000 new long-term care and dementia care spaces to support Albertans. The members opposite have proposed cutting $9 billion from infrastructure spending; that certainly wouldn't help address the situations that the member is speaking to.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think I might have picked up a preamble in your last supplemental. Try and avoid that this time.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, talk is cheap. We need action here.

The Speaker: That is what I would call a preamble, a classic example.

Mr. Yao: We know that there are serious issues with capacity in long-term care, and given that a lack of space is contributing to the issues around keeping couples in care together, Albertans want to know why this government is content sitting on its laurels, referencing a couple of long-term care bed announcements. Again to the minister: how many new long-term care beds have been built under your leadership, and when are you going to fully deliver on the 2,000 beds that you have promised?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. Mr. Speaker, we are absolutely committed to building 2,000 new long-term care and dementia care spaces, and we will meet that commitment. We are on track to do that by the end of the term. We are absolutely moving forward in the right direction. I think you can look throughout Alberta to see the great progress we've made. There are many announcements being made already today, and construction is taking place as we speak, and that's important. Of course, in existing facilities it's difficult to make sure that the accommodations have been made to make sure that they're safe for everyone, but moving forward we are absolutely making sure that we have the ability to keep couples together and provide a variety of care within one facility. I'm very proud of that, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Carbon Policies

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Wildrose has repeatedly warned the NDP about the risk of Alberta's climate policies falling out of lockstep with other jurisdictions. The chair of the NDP climate panel knows that carbon leakage is a big deal. He said that until the rest of the world has policies that impose similar costs, you're not actually reducing emissions; you're just displacing emissions and the economic activity to other jurisdictions. The facts are clear. Alberta should be producing more goods, not less. To the minister of environment: how exactly does a punitive carbon tax prevent carbon leakage?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the hon. member is cherry-picking from the Leach report, which made a very clear commitment to a set of performance standards. That was the recommendation, which we accepted, which would allow for an output-based allocation for our large final emitters. I know those are big words and it's really hard, but the point here is that we are allowing for those competitive effects, and we are doing so in a made-in-Alberta way because the opposition's idea of a carbon plan is to have one imposed by Ottawa.

Mr. MacIntyre: Just last Thursday the Minister of Advanced Education stood in this Assembly to accuse the opposition of being exactly wrong in our steadfast support for made-in-Alberta products as a solution to global pollution. Given that when Albertans produce, we do so under world-class environmental standards and given that the per capita metric that the minister cited is a false metric for evaluating emissions intensity – they should use emissions by GDP – does this government understand the devastation that policies leading to carbon leakage have on Alberta's economy?

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we are engaged in these conversations right now with the oil and gas industry, with the cement manufacturers, with the fertilizer industry, and with all other large final emitters to make sure that our performance standards system fits with the overall structure of our economy. You know, where we won't take advice is from a bunch of folks who don't accept the science of climate change.

Mr. MacIntyre: Inexpensive and reliable power is a cornerstone of economic growth. Given that in 2015 78 per cent of Alberta's grid was used for either industrial or commercial purposes, demonstrating our job creators' heavy reliance on cheap power relative to our competitors, and given that neither U.S. presidential candidate supports a carbon tax and that Australia and this government's socialist comrades in France have both abandoned their carbon taxes, will the NDP admit that its carbon policies are harming Alberta job creators, just like France has discovered?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised at all that a party full of folks who deny the science of climate change are also denying the health effects of burning coal. The fact of the matter is that we are moving ahead because those health effects are real and they are demonstrable, and we are doing the right thing for our children and our elderly. [interjections]

The Speaker: If all sides of the house don't want to be quiet for my sake, I hope we don't want to wake any children with our loud noises.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Capital Infrastructure Funding

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 2015-2020 capital plan introduced under the previous government contained $29.5 billion in projects, including the southwest Calgary ring road and the University of Lethbridge destination project, both mentioned by the minister in a recent news release. To the minister. You seem to be very excellent at taking credit for PC initiatives. You even just held a press conference, when you knew the opposition would be sitting right there, saying that you created jobs, and those jobs came from PC projects. Can you please outline to the House the number of jobs created by NDP projects, not the projects already announced under the previous government?

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much for the question.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Don't stand when he's standing.

The Speaker: That's right. You don't stand till I . . .

Mr. Mason: Sorry.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Mason: Can I go now?

The Speaker: Now you can.

An Hon. Member: It's his first day, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Yeah. I know.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for that reminder, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. I just want to indicate that many of the projects that the previous government was working on were stalled and were not going ahead. Their budget, that they ran on and lost the election on, quite frankly, was also something that's not designed to make good progress.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government announced the completion of the northeast Anthony Henday Drive to much fanfare and given the government's own numbers that this project supported 2,000 jobs over five years and given that this project was built as a P3, to the same minister again: will your government be continuing the use of a P3 model for creating capital assets given the success of this project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, we're very pleased that the Henday is now open right around the city, and I think that people in the entire Edmonton region appreciate that. Clearly, that was a project that was initiated by the previous government.

With respect to P3s the jury is out as far as I'm concerned, Mr. Speaker, and he's hailing it a success. I want to see what all the numbers look like when it's all in. We'll make an evaluation, and I'll let all members and the public know where we're going.*

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government has taken a special interest in the PC leadership race, I thought we could revisit the Premier's leadership promises. Given that she stated – and I quote – that we need to replace aging hospitals like Edmonton's Misericordia, unquote, and given that AHS is calling for a new Edmonton hospital, which would create a number of jobs as well as support front-line health care, can we expect a groundbreaking ceremony for Edmonton's new hospital soon, or is this no longer a priority?

Ms Hoffman: It's not a surprise to me that the member from the third party cares mostly about groundbreaking ceremonies. It was clear, from the progress that the last government made, that all they cared about was getting signs up saying that they were going to build something and not actually bringing about action, Mr. Speaker. That's why, when we came in and we looked at what had actually been done – they announced that they were going to do all this work at the Alex. They hadn't even done any beginning plans. So we've actually moved forward by investing in planning processes. We're bringing about real change. We're actually getting things built, and we're paying for it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Affordable Housing

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I speak with affordable housing stakeholders in Calgary, they're excited that for the first time in decades the federal, provincial, and municipal governments are all on the same page with regard to investing in affordable housing. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: how will investments made through the affordable housing agreement and the social housing agreement impact the affordable housing market in Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I'm very proud that we've signed two agreements with the federal government. The social housing agreement transfers properties to full provincial ownership and provides $892 million in funding to 2033. The investment in affordable housing agreement provides an additional $94.5 million of federal funding over the next two years, funding that not only helps build homes but will diversify our economy and create jobs here in Alberta and will increase affordable housing here in this province.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in my riding of Calgary-East the Calgary Housing Company plays an important role in providing affordable housing and given that the company runs approximately 10,000 units for 25,000 Calgarians, to the same minister: what changes can the company expect to see with the signing of these agreements?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've had the opportunity to tour the Calgary Housing Company, and they can expect to see, through investment in affordable housing, significant capital investment in community housing, provincially and municipally owned units, housing for populations with special needs like those fleeing domestic violence and through the social housing agreement increased administrative flexibility for units previously owned by Canada Mortgage and Housing. This will create predictable operating funding to 2033.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister mentioned greater administrative flexibility for Calgary Housing. Can she elaborate on what that means and how it will affect tenants living in those particular units?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you. For example, a tenant living in social housing may improve their financial situation, and that puts them above the income eligibility threshold, and then they may be forced to move out of this housing. This policy is a disincentive for tenants and penalizes them for improving their financial situation, and this is certainly the wrong direction that we want to go in. Our updated agreements give greater administrative flexibility to explore alternatives like mixed-market housing and buildings. Tenants who improve their financial situation can continue to have stable housing as long as they pay market rent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Wildlife Management

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wildlife damage to crops and hay bales has been occurring in Alberta for years. What's worse is that this year there are still crops lying in the field, leading to the potential of high crop losses in a year when farmers are already suffering badly from this government's ongoing wildlife mismanagement. To the minister: what, if any, new programs has your department developed to manage this ongoing problem, and what is your department going to do to start working with farmers and ranchers on wildlife management?

The Speaker: The minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our work on wildlife management is ongoing, our work with the public lands, and our work with our fish and game policy is ongoing. We are always open to ongoing conversations with landowners on how we can best manage the number of tags, the wildlife management units, and the movement of wildlife, as I was talking about with CFB Suffield and many of the private landowners around there. If there are specific instances that the hon. member would like me to follow up with, I'm happy to do so.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, given that the Suffield elk herd has been damaging ranchers' fences and crops for years – and the problem has been getting worse – and given that your department has been failing at wildlife management in the areas of aeration, fisheries management, game management, predation management, and now the TB situation, to the minister of environment: when are you going to show the affected ranchers, farmers, and outdoor enthusiasts in Alberta a plan that will actually work and start taking wildlife management seriously?

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the specific situation at CFB Suffield our department is working with area hunters to assess the risk of bovine TB in the Suffield herd. We've asked our department to organize a meeting with area hunters so they can present their concerns to staff. We are continuing to evaluate that hunt so that we can better manage the elk population and ensure that hunters have a worthwhile experience there. One of the biggest things we can do as well for the quality of hunting experience is to ensure biodiversity, and that's why we've moved forward on a number of those conservation initiatives as well.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, given that wolves are already being culled to assist the woodland caribou and given that ranchers around Alberta continue to suffer significant and ongoing livestock losses from both wolves and grizzlies all across the eastern slopes of our province, when will this minister's department stop picking wildlife winners and losers and do more to assist farmers and ranchers with proper predation control management programs and proper wildlife management programs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I'm happy to follow up with the specific landowner and the concerns that the hon. member has in his riding and along the eastern slopes. Of course, we do continue to move forward with predation control in order to manage our caribou herds in the Duvernay and Montney areas and elsewhere. But if there are specific concerns in his geographic area, I'm happy to follow up after question period.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

2:40 Heritage Savings Fund Alberta Growth Mandate

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This NDP government is busy trumpeting its job-creation plan today. The Alberta growth mandate is an example of this plan. The mandate directs AIMCo to invest 3 per cent of the heritage fund into Alberta companies. Worthy? Undoubtedly. But jobs? Hey, let's find out. AIMCo invested $40 million from the heritage fund into Calfrac Well Services. To the minister of economic development: how many jobs did the investment create?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Through our Alberta jobs plan we're moving forward by creating employment, diversifying our economy, protecting services that Alberta families count on. Today we released numbers on the progress that we're making with our Alberta jobs investments.

Specific to the investment that the member has asked me about, I will have to take a look and see if we can find a more specific numbers answer for him, but I am able to share additional information, like with the STEP program, where we were able to create 2,700 jobs for students this summer.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Great. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the purported goal of the Alberta growth mandate is to create jobs and given that AIMCo's investment in Calfrac is actually a loan to restructure its debt as well as options for AIMCo to purchase shares at a preferred price – yikes – and given that the government issued a news release boasting of the $40 million as a means of supporting “innovation and environmental stewardship” in Alberta, again to the minister: why do you continue to claim that this investment is creating jobs in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Through our Alberta jobs plan we are using a number of initiatives to invest here in Alberta, including making a $500 million investment available for the petrochemicals diversification program, providing stable funding to health care, education, and other services.

Regarding a specific investment as directed by this member, I do not have details on that, but we will take a look at his feedback and return.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Calfrac, like so many fracking companies, saw its operating income in Canada drop by more than half in 2015 and given that Calfrac is downsizing and restructuring its operations in Alberta due to the economic downturn, which included laying off 200 employees in Medicine Hat, and given that Calfrac is active in the U.S. and South America and Russia – perhaps I'm a little confused here – to the same minister: is your job-creation plan to create jobs in other countries?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our jobs plan has been creating jobs here in Alberta through a number of measures. We have through the STEP program created 2,700 student jobs. We are looking forward to creating 8,000 jobs in 2016 through the Alberta investor tax credits. We are looking at supporting businesses.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds we'll continue with Members' Statements.

Calgary Veterans' Food Drive

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, over the weekend I held my fourth annual Calgary veterans' food bank drive. The veterans' food bank targets services to veterans, ex-service, widows, dependants who are in temporary financial difficulties. About 50 volunteers went out in northern Calgary, where we raised over $3,500 worth of food. In addition, we raised over $1,500 in spontaneous donations at the Alberta-wide rally at McDougall Centre. But our volunteers at the doors could tell that there were people giving who were also down on their luck. Normally the veterans' food bank does about 90 hampers a month. This year they're up to 140 a month, a 55 per cent increase. They also normally spend $10,000 to purchase food. This year it's $50,000, and that extra money comes from the poppy fund, the money raised from the red flowers on your lapels. The carbon tax will cost the food bank more to heat and power the building and will cut back on donations received.

Traditionally people think of veterans as senior citizens. That's no longer the case. Due to Canada's involvement in Afghanistan a veteran can be in his 20s. Younger veterans used to find work in the oil patch, but the oil patch isn't hiring. It is not through lack of effort. Some veterans have applied for work more than 300 times and still have no job. Last week it was revealed that the unemployment rate in Calgary is 10.2 per cent, the worst rate of any major city in Canada.

Join me in thanking my volunteers, especially Stephen and Karen Davis and Emery Pritchard, for hosting and feeding the team while we helped the Calgary veterans community.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier and Minister of Health.

Bill 28 Public Health Amendment Act, 2016

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to request leave to introduce a bill, Bill 28, the Public Health Amendment Act, 2016.

Immunizations save lives, Mr. Speaker. They protect our children and our communities and reduce the burden that we have on our health care system. Amendments are aimed at increasing immunization rates in our children and improving our response to outbreaks of vaccine-preventable diseases in our schools and communities. Amendments will also improve immunization services so that Albertans have increased access to safe, high-quality immunization services.

I look forward to discussion and deliberation with my colleagues in this House as we consider this important public health initiative.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the name of expediting the process this afternoon and not needing to wait until tomorrow, I will be referring to a couple of documents while we discuss the point of privilege later this afternoon. In anticipation of that, I will table two documents, both with respect to the point of privilege.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices and in accordance with section 19(5) of the Auditor General Act I'm pleased to table five copies of the following report: Report of the Auditor General of Alberta, October 2016. Copies of this report will be provided to members.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to table five copies of an October 2016 article from the University of Calgary's School of Public Policy titled Alberta's New Royalty Regime Is a Step towards Competitiveness, which is a document that I referenced during question period on November 2, 2016. The article states that Alberta's new royalty framework is making Alberta's energy market more competitive compared to other Canadian jurisdictions, including its immediate neighbours, British Columbia and Saskatchewan.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to table five copies of a May 2016 article from the Canada West Foundation titled Look Out: Toward a Climate Strategy That Reduces Global Emissions, that I quoted in my speech on Bill 25 on November 3, 2016. The article states:

Alberta's new climate [change] strategy provides a good example of how to thread the needle . . . The genius of the plan is that it injects competition into the mix at the firm level by [introducing] "top quartile" performance . . . [and] there is an incentive to perform better than one's peers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. After your request on Thursday of last week I'm very pleased to rise today to table the five requisite copies of an Alberta government website post, an Alberta government news release, and a CBC article with quotations from the minister of the environment. Please note that these documents were all available online while Bill 27 was on notice but before it had been introduced, and it clearly shows that this government made details of Bill 27 available to the general public before that information was shared with this House, demonstrating the lack of respect of this government for this House and the work that we're trying to do here. That's the first set.

The second – and I'm sure the Advanced Education minister will appreciate this after today's questions – is simply, as requested, Budget 2015's fiscal plan 2015-2020 consolidated expense, page 17, ministry of innovation and advanced education, indicating increases for each of the years going forward, 2015 through to 2020.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling, and oddly enough, it's the same document that the Member for Calgary-Lougheed just tabled, but it says exactly the opposite of what he just said, that, in fact, postsecondary operations are receiving decreases in the years 2015-2016, 2016-2017, and 2018-2019. I have the appropriate number of copies that I'd like to table.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Schmidt, Minister of Advanced Education, return to order of the Assembly Motion for Return 12, asked for by Mr. Cooper on May 2, 2016, copies of all ministerial orders issued by the Ministry of Advanced Education or its predecessor between January 1, 2014, and December 31, 2015; response to Written Question 14, asked for by Mr. Clark on May 16, 2016: what is the status as of March 15, 2016, of the adult learning review program proposed in the New Democratic Party election platform during the May 2015 Alberta provincial general election?

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe that at approximately 2:41 there was a point of order made. The hon. member.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on a point of order. At approximately 2:34 this afternoon, during question period, under 23(j), "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder," the Member for Calgary-East, after asking a question and as she was sitting down and, hopefully, caught on camera, very clearly mouthed an obscenity over to this side of the House. I would ask that she stand and apologize for that remark.

This is, you know, getting to be a bit of a pattern here, a common pattern, that people think that just because they're not saying it loudly, a gesture or mouthing obscenities is acceptable, and it absolutely is not in the House. Heckling is one thing, Mr. Speaker, but this is another matter.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I absolutely apologize. As the member stated, things do sometimes get heated, and I felt like I was coming under a bit of a personal attack. But it's never acceptable in this House, and I sincerely apologize, and I withdraw.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Allegations against Members

The Speaker: I would like to, first of all, deal with a point of order that was raised at our last meeting. You will recall that I indicated that I was – the Official Opposition House Leader raised a point, but I did not hear the statements being made giving rise to the point of order. I didn't have the chance at the time to read it out of the Blues.

I have now reviewed the exchange between the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster and the Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal, at page 1699 of Hansard. This would appear to be a difference of opinion or a matter of debate in connection with what transpired in a committee, a committee which, by the way, has reported its findings to the Assembly. Members did have an opportunity to clarify their respective positions on the issue. I do not find that the statements constituted an allegation, and I find there is no point of order.

Privilege

The Speaker: I also agreed at our last session that I would hear arguments in terms of the point of privilege raised by the House leader for the third party. First of all, to the hon. member, are there any new pieces of information? We have on the record your initial point. Is there anything substantive or new that you would need to add, sir?

Mr. Rodney: Yes, please, and thank you. I will be as brief as possible under the circumstances respecting the auspices that you have under this House.

I do rise to speak on the point of privilege related to a series of events which occurred last Thursday, November 3, 2016. Mr. Speaker, I quote from a news release issued by the NDP government that morning.

The first competition will see investors bidding to provide up to 400 megawatts of renewable electricity. The AESO will gather feedback from industry on draft commercial terms starting on Nov. 10, and before the competition takes place in 2017.

That was from the morning, sir.

Next I will quote from a printout taken from the Alberta government website, once again, released in the a.m., not the p.m., of November 3. "Alberta will add 5,000 megawatts of renewable energy capacity by 2030 through the Renewable Electricity Program, run by the Alberta Electric System Operator (AESO)."

Similar comments, Mr. Speaker, were also made by the minister to CBC, as noted in the article which I've already tabled.

Until Bill 27 was introduced, AESO did not have any legislative authority whatsoever to organize the competition as listed by the government, and for the sake of the table, these powers are found in sections 5(1) and (2) as well as section 7.

It's clear from these sequences of events that the government was once again thumbing its nose at this House and its conventions, I might add, by sharing the contents of the bill with the general public before it was shared here in this House. I'd simply remind every one of us, Mr. Speaker, that this is not the first, not the second, but the third instance of this demonstrated lack of respect for the House. Well, the last time I checked, the province is run by laws which have to be debated and ultimately passed right here in this House, not by some political bureau.

I just can't help but point out that this is the second point of privilege we're discussing in short order. Just last week we heard from the minister of economic development. He was earnestly apologizing to this House and promised that the government would do better in the future. That was the same week.

Mr. Speaker, this government is supposed to provide . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm encouraging you to give some new information.

Mr. Rodney: Yes. I'm happy to.

The Speaker: We've had that before.

Mr. Rodney: I'm on my last page of the exact same thing.

The Speaker: Good.

Mr. Rodney: The House is to provide a check on government power. Sharing information contained within a bill with the general public while that bill was on notice but had not yet been introduced circumvents our Assembly and the important work that we're trying to do here, so it's staggering arrogance.

The last point, that is new, Mr. Speaker, is this. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood was so surprised when the previous government was found in contempt that he stated: I've never seen a point of privilege be successful in events of the government of the past. I've been here for 13 years, and it's the first time in my experience. Fortunately for the member he didn't have to wait 13 years for a second one. My only hope is that the government will finally learn its lesson, and I hope it's the last time that we have to have a discussion of this nature.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to your ruling. I truly do.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, I have to say, listening to the hon. member talk, that there's scant information there to support his claim. Lots of rhetoric and attempts to chastise the government, but quite frankly, there's very little substance to this point of privilege, purported privilege, which has been raised. They are very serious, as I said on Thursday afternoon, and ought to be dealt with as such. They should not be brought up frivolously, but unfortunately I think that's exactly what's happened here, and it may be the inexperience of the hon. member as a House leader. [interjection] Maybe I can be allowed to proceed on my point without heckling, Mr. Speaker, by the hon. member.

Quite frankly, to summarize, we do not believe this is a matter of privilege because a copy of the bill in question was not distributed out of the House until it was given first reading, technical details from the bill were not part of Thursday morning's announcement, the program that was announced is not contingent on the passage of this bill, and where the minister did make reference to the bill, she did not prejudge its passage.

Mr. Speaker, let's first establish precisely what happened in this case, not starting last Thursday but actually going back to last year. In November 2015 this government launched an ambitious climate leadership plan that will make Alberta an environmental leader, among other things. At that time we said explicitly that we would be moving forward with a carbon levy. We discussed our plan to cap oil sands emissions, and we unveiled our target of 30 per cent renewable electricity by 2030. Why is that material? Well, each of these measures were the subject of subsequent legislative enactment.

Of course, on May 24 our Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, enacted a carbon levy as well as certain related rebates. Earlier last week my colleague the hon. minister of environment gave first reading to Bill 25, the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, which would cap emissions from the oil sands, and then on Thursday my colleague the Minister of Energy introduced Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act. Again, this measure expanded on what our government had previously announced.

In all three cases the government's policy objective was a matter of public debate well before any of these pieces of legislation were introduced. The measures had been outlined by the government, and elements of the plan had been the subject of debate in this Chamber on many occasions, specifically on March 15, April 12, April 16, April 18, April 19, April 21, May 3, May 10, May 12, May 16, May 24, May 25, May 26, May 30, May 31, June 1, June 2, and June 6. Renewable energy, the subject of Bill 27, was specifically raised in question period on May 24, May 30, and May 31. Mr. Speaker, these are matters of public debate, and of course there was no attempt by the opposition to claim privilege in either of the previous cases.

Let's talk specifically about renewable electricity. As noted above, the government outlined its commitment to renewable electricity, including a commitment to see up to 30 per cent renewables by 2030, last November. Shortly thereafter, on November 30, the minister of environment and the Minister of Energy noted that in pursuing that objective, Alberta would keep the cost of renewables as low as possible by using market mechanisms such as auctioning. In mid-September 2016 the government announced that Alberta will add 5,000 megawatts of renewable energy capacity through the renewable electricity program, a competitive and transparent bidding process run by the Alberta Electric System Operator, or AESO. This matter was detailed in a September 14 Calgary Herald article.

On the morning of last Thursday the minister of environment was in Calgary to announce details related to the first auction, specifically that the first auction will be up to 400 megawatts. The minister did not announce details related to the bill although she did note that the government's intention was to introduce enabling legislation later that day related to our broader vision of 30 by '30.

It is worth noting here that the bill introduced and the programs and measures announced are distinct. The program details are not spelled out in the act. The government could develop a funding program without the existence or passage of the act. On Thursday at noon the opposition were provided an embargoed briefing, as is the normal practice adhered to by this government, wherein they were provided a substantive document outlining various provisions of the act. On Thursday just before 3 o'clock the minister rose in this House to give the bill first reading. After first reading the media were given a technical briefing on the bill.

If I could for a moment, I would now like to summarize what is in Bill 27. For my summary I will quote from the briefing material provided to the opposition on Thursday. The purposes of the act are to establish a definition of renewable electricity for Alberta, provide the Alberta Electric System Operator with a statutory... [interjections] Mr. Speaker, I beg your assistance in muzzling the hon. member from Calgary. [interjections] You're out of order, sir.

The Speaker: Hon. members, as I understand it, the Government House Leader is providing information. He asked for permission on Thursday to make his arguments today. The reference to new information is entirely – it is all new, it seems to me today, because he did not have the opportunity. However, I would encourage the Government House Leader to provide substantive information with respect to the point of privilege being raised.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've put quite a bit of work into this, and I hope that I can be permitted the opportunity to respond fully.

The purpose of the act includes legislating the target of 30 per cent renewable generation in Alberta by 2030, clarifying the Market Surveillance Administrator's oversight function and extending it to market participants involved in the renewable electricity program, and providing funding certainty for renewable electricity programs so that developers can secure better financing rates, thereby improving government program cost outcomes.

Details of the bill were not in the announcement. The act and the program are two separate and distinct things. If you go to the Alberta government website for the renewable electricity program, it clearly outlines what the program is intended to do, much of which has been discussed publicly for some time. First, Alberta will add 5,000 megawatts of renewable energy capacity by 2030. The program will be run by the Alberta Electric System Operator, and the investment will be solicited through a competitive and transparent bidding process.

It outlines a competitive process, that the AESO will gather feedback from industry on draft commercial terms before the first auction takes place in 2017. The first competition will see investors bidding to provide up to ...

The Speaker: Government House Leader, you seem to be speaking to the details of the bill. I would encourage you to get to the matter as raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I have another page to read, but I take your direction. These are specific details on the renewable electricity program that are available online and to the public, none of which are contained in the Renewable Electricity Act and none of which are contingent on the act passing. Again, they are two separate and distinct things.

The precedent, Mr. Speaker. There are decades of precedent that allowed government to communicate elements of its legislative agenda to the public prior to the enabling legislation being given first reading. Just a few Speaker's rulings shortly, but to summarize, it's very clear based on the practices of this and other Houses that the government must have the ability to communicate with the public what its overarching plans and goals are. The final version of bills that may make up a part of that plan must be presented in the Assembly before they may be given to anyone else, but that absolutely does not preclude the government or ministers from talking publicly about that subject in any way.

On October 31, 2013, Speaker Zwozdesky made a ruling that can be found on pages 2655 and 2656 of that day with a regard to information that was released about Bill 32, the Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads Act, prior to its introduction in the Assembly. In that ruling Speaker Zwozdesky states the following:

Several points were outlined by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills when he spoke on October 29 in this Assembly. These points are in our recorded Hansard proceedings on page 2528, wherein he said, amongst many other things, the following:

We had seen a sign, obviously in the orange and blue colours, displayed publicly outlining Bill 32. We've seen press releases and public statements outlining the details of Bill 32. We know, of course, that Bill 32 was on the Order Paper yesterday, Mr. Speaker, and it was not yet introduced until earlier today.

I'd like to underline the reference to press releases and public statements outlining the details of Bill 32.

There are clearly parallels between that case and this one, bearing in mind that the comments made by the minister of environment on Thursday in fact did not outline details of Bill 27. In fact, they spoke to a government program, the details of which are not contained in the bill.

Speaker Zwozdesky goes on to refer to a previous ruling of his. At that time, and also as with the case before us today, there was no factual basis to actually conclude that explicit and verbatim details or provisions of the bill were discussed. Accordingly, it was held that the member's ability to perform her functions in that instance had not been impeded. Again, the same thing can be said about today's matter.

The ruling continues:

I would like to point out that not every statement about a bill that is on notice will automatically lead to and qualify for a prima facie case of privilege. In fact, Speaker Milliken came to this same conclusion in a November 5, 2009, ruling concerning comments made by a federal minister at a press conference. In that particular case, it was held and noted that the minister had not disclosed details of a bill yet to be introduced since he had only discussed in broad terms the policy initiative proposed in the bill. Similarly, Speaker Milliken found that there was no impact on a member's ability to perform his or her duty in a parliamentary ruling that he made on March 22, 2011, which can be found at page 9113 of House of Commons Debates for that day.

Again, in speaking on the subject of renewable energy, the minister did not disclose details of the bill and only discussed policies and plans that are on the same subject field as the bill.

Speaker Zwozdesky concludes that

Turning to the case before us today, there is no allegation and, indeed, there is no proof that the actual bill, Bill 32, in its final form was provided to the media or to any outside entity prior to its introduction in this Assembly two days ago, and neither was any evidence found in that respect . . . Accordingly, the chair does not find that there is a sufficient factual basis to find that the actions of the minister constitute a contempt of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed has not even made a claim that the bill has been distributed in its final form prior to first reading. In fact, there is no factual basis that it has been provided, where any explicit and verbatim details or provisions of the bill have been disclosed. This Assembly was the first to see the proposed legislation in its final form.

On May 29, 2012, Speaker Zwozdesky ruled on a purported question of privilege that referred to "a press conference held by the Premier and the Government House Leader . . . in which both the Speech from the Throne and Bill 1, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2012, were discussed." Speaker Zwozdesky stated:

In response the hon. Government House Leader noted that during the press conference Bill 1 was discussed but only in general terms and that no specific wording was provided to those in attendance. The Government House Leader acknowledged the importance of ensuring that members are the first to see proposed legislation in its final form before a bill is disclosed to outside parties.

The Speaker also noted "the Government House Leader's submission that the bill was neither circulated, nor was the specific content of the bill disclosed" and that "given the circumstances of this particular case the chair finds that the member's ability to perform her functions has not been impeded, and accordingly the chair is unable to find a prima facie case of contempt and considers this matter now closed."

Mr. Speaker, I have a number of other citations, which I propose in the interest of time to submit to you in writing if that is suitable to you. Or I can continue.

The Speaker: I would find that acceptable.

Mr. Mason: Okay. That's acceptable. Then I'll just conclude.

Mr. Speaker, in raising this matter last Thursday, the member made only cursory reference to our standing orders, for some reason citing Standing Order 23(e), which, of course, governs anticipation, being the practice whereby members should be called to order if during debate they anticipate a matter set out for debate later in the day. He made no reference to any citations related to the practice before us today, that being the discussion of bills prior to their first reading, nor did he explain how his privilege as a member could have been infringed by a minister of Crown discussing matters of state.

However, Mr. Speaker, he did make some comments that I would like to discuss. First he stated that "a government minister spoke to the media and at a conference [today] about a new renewable energy program which had not . . . been introduced in this House." Mr. Speaker, I would like to confirm that and say that the member knows full well that program announcements are not required to be made in the House. Ministers announce programs all the time. When those programs need enactment through either legislative or budgetary means, those measures come forward at the appropriate time.

Second, the member quotes from the Calgary Herald, which states, "Alberta to buy 400MW of renewable power as it phases out coal." That's true, Mr. Speaker. The Herald did say that. You know what doesn't say that? The bill. That detail is not part of the bill, and as such the minister or any other member is free to speak to the public about it. Specifically, a 400-megawatt program using competitive procurement and contracts with the eligibility criteria established here are all things the government could have done without this bill. This legislation is very specific in what it would accomplish, and the minister did not divulge technical details contained in the act.

Third, the PC House leader quotes the minister, from CBC, saying that "today is sort of the first step in the real nitty-gritty details for the investment community on how we're going to move forward on that," "that" referencing our 30 per cent renewable target, by 2030.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that target was set out in November. Initial details about how the auctions would get us there were a matter of public debate last month, as I've already outlined, and just like my previous point, those details are not set out in the enabling legislation. Just because there's a bill on notice called the Renewable Electricity Act does not mean a member of cabinet cannot speak about renewable electricity.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, nowhere in the member's comments does he even attempt to claim that we have done what Speakers in this Chamber have stated might be considered a breach of privilege; that is, released copies of the bill or detailed elements of the bill. The minister has not breached the privilege of this House by discussing the government's policy over the past year. It's our submission that it is not a matter of privilege.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the Government House Leader for his exhaustive comments. Very thorough.

I would just like to touch on a number of items today with respect to this point of privilege. Normally it's a real privilege to rise, but I'm a little disappointed to have to speak to another point of privilege, that was originally raised on Thursday. In fact, when the Member for Calgary-Lougheed first rose in his place to call a point of privilege, I thought perhaps it was on the way that the bill was actually introduced, in that I'm not a hundred per cent convinced that the Lieutenant Governor had actually been informed of this, but perhaps that was an overstatement.

The case that has been made by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed is that it is very clearly a breach of privilege. A mere two days after you, Mr. Speaker, found this government had committed a breach of privilege, we are again discussing the very real challenges that this government has when it comes to following the rules. Well, the last breach of privilege, that you found last week, was in regard to presupposing a decision of the Assembly. Here they are not respecting the rules of anticipation, and the very important part is: once the bill goes on notice and before it's introduced. So while the Government House Leader made a number of arguments around ministers of the Crown being able to speak to a piece of legislation, the key difference here is that the bill was clearly on the Order Paper and had yet to be introduced in the Chamber.

I want to reiterate a few points. Bill 27 first appeared on the Order Paper on Wednesday, November 2, and it wasn't introduced in this House until Thursday, November 3, at approximately 2:45 p.m. Again, that means that the government must refrain from providing detailed information about the bill during that time period. While the Government House Leader claims that they did, there are a number of statements both in the press release and on public record that specifically refer to the bill, particularly in the AESO's ability to deliver the programs of which they speak. Prior to the press release as well as the public comments that was not clear, and it is only the bill that provides AESO's ability in which to deliver on that.

As we learned last week, both the Minister of Energy and the Minister of Environment and Parks showed no hesitation in discussing the details of the legislation with the media or in discussing them during a lunch keynote to the Canadian Wind Energy Association. In particular, Mr. Speaker, they sent out a press release on Thursday, November 3, at 10:21 a.m., during the period the bill was on notice. This press release included many details that were contained in Bill 27 that hadn't been mentioned publicly prior.

As a point of interest, Mr. Speaker, it is not an uncommon practice for the government to send out embargoed press releases, one which this side of the House takes no objection to. This, however, was not the case last week on the 3rd of November at 10:21. The press release was sent out well before the introduction of Bill 27. The press release specifically mentioned Alberta's Electric System Operator being responsible for the administration of the government's renewable electricity program, a point that the bill provides the ISO the ability to do. This detail was made clear in the bill and had not yet been known to the public. It also mentioned the specific number of megawatts it is expected to add by 2030. The press release said that it will add 5,000 megawatts. That sounds a lot like presupposing a decision of the Assembly. It also spoke about the AESO starting consultation on November 10. I'd like to ask the question: is that going to be prior to the passage of this bill or after?

Now, these may be two separate issues, one presupposing a decision of the Assembly in the language used in the press release and releasing information prior to introducing the bill while the bill is on the Order Paper, but, Mr. Speaker, both are extremely, extremely serious.

I'd like to draw your attention to a similar situation that occurred back on March 5, 2003, when Speaker Kowalski found a prima facie breach of privilege when the government provided information to the media while a bill was on notice. The former Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and Speaker Kowalski made comparisons to a situation in the House of Commons when Speaker Milliken ruled on March 19, 2001:

The House recognizes that when complex or technical documents are to be presented in this Chamber, media briefings are highly useful. They ensure that the public receives information that is both timely and accurate concerning [ongoing] business before the House.

In preparing legislation, the government may wish to hold extensive consultations and as such consultations may be held entirely at the government's discretion. However, with respect to material to be placed before parliament, the House must take precedence. Once a bill has been placed on notice, whether it has been presented in a different form to a different session of parliament has no bearing and the bill is considered a new matter. The convention of the confidentiality of bills on notice is necessary, not only so that members themselves will be well informed, but also because of the pre-eminent [role] which the House plays and must play in the legislative affairs of the nation . . . To deny to members information concerning business that is about to come before the House, while at the same time providing such information to media that will likely be questioning members about that business, is a situation that the Chair cannot condone.

That, Mr. Speaker, allowed Speaker Kowalski to say this:

The chair wants to make it very, very clear that the Legislative Assembly . . . of Alberta is not bound by decisions from the Canadian House of Commons or any other Assembly in Canada. This would be contrary to the nature of Canada's federal system. However, how could this chair hold that the Canadian House of Commons and its members are to be accorded greater respect and dignity than the members of this Assembly? The role of the chair cannot be to lessen the dignity and the respect of . . . [members of this Assembly].

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to the debate that followed the prima facie breach of privilege I spoke of whereupon the Member for Edmonton-Highlands – incidentally, the current Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood – was permitted to immediately move that the matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing.

Mr. Speaker, it is very clear that the government in both the press release and in their public comments on what the bill would contain, in two separate media stories – and the fact that they released an unembargoed press release to the media prior to the introduction of a bill that, in fact, was on the Order Paper. The precedent is clear that this House holds supremacy to the other forms of information to be released.

On that day in 2003 the now Government House Leader participated in the debate scheduled for March 6, 2003, on the matter and had this to say:

I just want to reiterate that what's on trial here is not the [Energy minister], who's apologized, but what is on trial here are the procedures that have sometimes been used by the government, and what we want to do is find an effective way to correct those so that the rights of members are respected in the future and we do not have to spend time in this Assembly on matters like this.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, it's not just about respecting the members but all Albertans as an extension of the people that we represent. Statements like this remind me that the Government House Leader wasn't always like he is today. He once believed in the rights of the Assembly and the respect and dignity it deserves.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to interrupt, but I must, with respect, make a point of order with respect to those last comments. Maybe the Opposition House Leader would like to withdraw them now.

Mr. Cooper: In the interest of time, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw and apologize unreservedly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, the challenge, as I have laid it out, is that clearly this piece of legislation, Bill 27, was on the Order Paper when the government made numerous public statements, a lunchtime speech as well as a press release, with specific details, including AESO's ability to provide the oversight to this program, which only the bill provides them the ability and the power to do.

In closing, not only is it necessary for democracy in Alberta that another prima facie breach of privilege be found, but that you, Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 15(6) and the precedent established by Speaker Kowalski on March 5, 2003, allow this matter to be referred to the Assembly's Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I wonder if I could just ask you to speak to the question that you raised about the embargoed press release in greater detail. Had that have happened, what . . .

Mr. Cooper: Well, Mr. Speaker, it has been the common practice of this government to provide embargoed press briefings. As mentioned by Speaker Milliken, it is important, and in fact the press has a job to do with respect to dissemination of information across our province. I'm more than happy to table for you numerous embargoed copies of press releases that this government has provided to the press corps here in Alberta. What did happen last week at 10:21 a.m., well before the introduction of the bill, was that an unembargoed press release providing specific details about what the bill did was sent to the press well before all members of this Assembly had the ability to receive the bill.

The key privilege here that Speaker Milliken refers to is members' ability to respond in public without the appropriate information. That's exactly the position that this government put all members of this Assembly in by not respecting the rules of the Assembly and not respecting the traditions of even this government of holding embargoed press releases.

As such, I encourage you, Mr. Speaker, to find a breach of privilege and to refer this to standing orders and committees because what we don't need is another apology from the government but an actual discussion on how these things will be stopped and prevented in the future.

The Speaker: Is there anyone else who would like to speak to the point of privilege? Clearly, I need to have some deliberations on this.

Some new information, hon. member?

Mr. Rodney: Yes. Concluding remarks, sir.

The Speaker: I thought that we had decided the last time that you spoke that you had provided all of the new information.

Mr. Rodney: Absolutely not, sir. I have a few sentences. This has been very long-winded. A few sentences, I think, are in order.

The Speaker: Hon. member, with respect, I simply don't think that would be appropriate at this time. Thank you. I think you had an opportunity to speak to the matter, and it's been so noted and in the record.

Is there anyone else who would like to speak to the matter? The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Okay. Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you for allowing me to speak here for a few minutes. This is obviously a serious situation, which stops members of this House from being able to fully discharge their duties, including to answer questions. That legislation is to be tabled in the Legislature before being discussed in the public is an important principle. Details of the bill were, I would say, despite what the Government House Leader said, explicitly outlined in the three tablings that our Government House Leader made earlier. They demonstrate that in each of these ways procedures and protocols of the House were not upheld.

Perhaps it's the experience of this government to do this, but as this is not the first time, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that you do as the Official Opposition House Leader has recommended and rule that this is a point of privilege and that it be recommended to the committee so that we can avoid reoccurrence.

The Speaker: So noted.

Seeing no one else who has new information to ask, I think that there's been adequate shared information about the case being put forward by both sides of the House. I will clearly be taking an examination of that material plus all of the precedents.

I would now propose that we move to Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day

Motions for Returns

Health Electronic Record System

M20. Mr. Barnes moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of documents or reports prepared by or on behalf of the government, excluding documents that constitute confidential advice to the minister, from May 22, 2015, to March 7, 2016, pertaining to the review conducted by the Ministry of Health into creating an electronic record/information-sharing system, as referenced during consideration of the Ministry of Health's main estimates on November 16, 2015.

[Debate adjourned October 31]

The Speaker: Hon. members, is there someone wishing to speak to this matter?

Hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, are you going to close debate on the matter?

Mr. Barnes: Yes. It was my question that the government is wishing to amend, so if you will allow me, I will.

The Speaker: Could you just wait a minute, please? I'd like to consult with the table.

Mr. Barnes: Absolutely, yeah.

The Speaker: Just to clarify, hon. member, you'll be speaking to the motion as amended to close debate. Is that correct?

Mr. Barnes: Yeah.

The Speaker: That amendment passed.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Oh, the amendment has passed already?

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. I don't need to speak, then.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion for a Return 20 carried]

[Motion for a Return 20 as amended carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Ministry of Health Fraud Detection Procedures

M21. Mr. Barnes moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of internal working documents or reports prepared by or on behalf of the government from May 22, 2015, to March 7, 2016, pertaining to the review conducted by the Ministry of Health into their audit, compliance, and oversight procedures for the detection of fraud, as referenced during consideration of the Ministry of Health's main estimates on November 16, 2015.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you. Mr. Speaker and colleagues, health care spending this year is at over $21 billion. I hope the government takes very seriously the issue of fraud in the health system. It potentially represents a very large amount of our spending. You know, some estimates of fraud in the system in Canada range anywhere from 2 to 10 per cent, but as the Auditor General so aptly pointed out for us approximately a year ago, in Alberta we do not have a clear picture at all of the scope of fraud at the 21-plus billion dollar health spending level.

I think back to estimates last year, when the Health ministry and the department were $240 million over budget. I think back to a meeting I had with a predecessor who represented Cypress-Medicine Hat in the early '90s, who pointed out to me that in 1993 health spending was $4 billion. So from $4 billion to over $21 billion in that 23 or 24 years without the oversight, without the assurance for taxpayers, for ratepayers, and, most importantly, for Albertans – children, seniors, the sick – who need as much value as possible from our system, who need as much value as possible for their tax dollars.

A lot of times it's just ensuring that the oversight, the procedures are in place so that our great, great front-line workers, whether they be health care workers, nurses, doctors, have the mechanisms to see what's going on and the mechanisms to ensure that things are done as accurately as possible.

You know, we also know that the Auditor General's report from last year explored health fraud, both on the billing and the usage sides. It was noted: an inadequate response from the ministry and policy-makers to measure, control, and decrease it. Absolutely amazing, Mr. Speaker. Some side of 44 per cent of the money we spend, over 50 per cent of the revenues we take in, and our government gave an inadequate response from the ministry, policy-makers to measure, control, and decrease it.

I hope to see the minister at some point provide this House with a clearer picture of the extent of the problem and the strategy for dealing with it. I appreciate that sensitive or confidential information may be somewhat involved here, but, my goodness, how could all of it be?

I remember that one of the things the Auditor General pointed out was Alberta's lack of expiry dates on our health care cards now, something as basic as a card with an expiry date. His analogy was: banks do it. Banks do it because they know it controls fraud. They know it's a mechanism for control on their expenditures and their bottom line and their profit.

Mr. Speaker, it's absolutely crucial for 4.4 million Albertans, for the next generation, that needs to count on value for tax dollars, that this government take seriously the consequences of all this spending and the impacts if we don't try to have the proper oversight, if we don't try to have as much value as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the government would accept this question. I would hope that the government would provide to this House the information that would make more value for all of us.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak against Motion for a Return 21. Alberta Health works hard to ensure that the compliance and oversight measures used for the detection of fraud are effective. This is an issue that our government takes seriously, and that is why we are reviewing these measures to ensure that they are as effective as possible. Releasing detailed documents about a review of these operations could hamper government's efforts in this area, and for that reason I would reject this motion.

The Speaker: The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to admit that I'm a little surprised at the outright rejection of this question. This is a good question, a question that goes a long way in assuring not only members of the Assembly but all Albertans that this government takes inappropriate use of taxpayer resources inside our health care system seriously.

As mentioned by my hon. colleague, it's possible that some of these documents would be confidential or pose a risk to the system in terms of those who are acting fraudulently knowing the ways that the government is looking to minimize that, but what the minister doesn't even provide are the documents that aren't confidential.

The Auditor General has clearly stated that there are concerns and issues around fraudulent behaviour. He has mentioned a number of different concerns. So for the government to say, "Oh, somebody might find out what we're doing; we'd better not tell anyone," that is more than a little disappointing.

I know that on a pretty regular basis members of the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills come to the office and have ideas on ways that we can minimize fraud inside the system. It is something that Albertans care about, and they want to know that the government is actually taking proactive steps to ensure that fraud doesn't occur. I'm sure, Mr. Speaker, that you'll be aware. My guess is that people in the constituency of Medicine Hat have come and said: "Why don't we get statements anymore on the health care that we use, not in the form of a bill but in the form of some acknowledgement of the health care that we've used? Therefore, we would be able to have a better idea on whether or not the services we actually used were the services that were provided."

I recognize that there is a level of costs that may prevent the government from going down that road. There may be a number of reasons, but the point is that many Albertans have a deep care and consideration for fraud inside the system, and they want to be reassured that the government is taking those things seriously. It would be interesting to have some sense or understanding of what level of fraud there is inside the $20 billion health care system.

Let me be very clear, Mr. Speaker. Let me reiterate that I fully support the vast, vast majority of individuals inside our system. One can only imagine that there is some level of individuals who behave untowardly and don't appropriately spend those resources the way that they should, so as a result the Alberta taxpayer is the one that suffers.

One thing that I'm sure you'll hear me say on a number of occasions today is that this government got elected on a platform of being more open, more transparent, not less. I'm sure that the Minister of Health would be able to tell you that when she worked for the NDP caucus as a researcher, a very skilled and astute researcher at that, she likely crafted questions very similar to this around information that the government held that would be helpful for all members of the Assembly and, as an extension, Albertans to have. Now we see her not just as a researcher – and I don't mean just a researcher because these are some of the most important people in our lives – but as the Minister of Health. What do we see? The minister and the department protecting, if you will, the information that is so, so important to the debate.

I look forward to hearing from the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat when he closes debate because just today the Auditor General's report of 2016 came out, and my guess is that there is some very, very pertinent information in that report to this very issue. So I am very disappointed that the government, promising to be more open, more transparent, more accountable to the taxpayer, is flat out rejecting very important questions like this and not even providing information that may be publicly available, that may not be as confidential as other pieces of information with respect to revealing the ways that they fight fraud, just flat out saying: "No. We want to keep this secret from Albertans and reject the premise of the question."

These motions for returns and written questions are very important when it comes to the process of getting information out. We've seen this government take a number of different steps with respect to delaying information, whether it's via FOIPs and some of the worst record in terms of timelines around releasing FOIP information. Now we see it again here in the Assembly. The Assembly has asked for the production of a document, and we see the exact opposite of what we would have expected to see from this government.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to Motion for a Return 21?

Mr. Taylor: You know, when this was brought up, I thought that this was really a great motion for a return for having more transparency to find out if there is fraud in the health care department. I was shocked, frankly, when the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat said that between 2 and 10 per cent could be attributed to fraud. Frankly, that's a huge number when you're looking, as he also mentioned, at that $21 billion going into the health care system right now. We need to have value in what we're getting for our dollar, and when there's this much potential fraud, we're not getting that value.

I was surprised that we got this response from the government, where they just outright rejected having this done. They could have taken the approach and said, "Yes, we will provide it; yes, there is confidential information" and worked with that. They could have redacted the information that was confidential, that you don't want everybody to see. When I'm looking out for the constituents in Battle River-Wainwright, they're asking me to get good value for their money. They want a hospital; they want a facility in Wainwright. That facility is going to be approximately $240 million, and if you're looking at 10 per cent of $21 billion, you're looking at over $2 billion being left on the table because of fraud. Two billion dollars. You could have eight hospitals of the size that Wainwright needs just on that fraud that's occurring.

I think it's irresponsible to not have this review done and look for all the different fraud cases that are happening. It's critical for Albertans to be able to have the best value for their money. This government, I know, in the past, before they became government, stood for openness and transparency. That's what they fought for, and they said that that's what they will provide. When they have the opportunity with this motion here to be able to provide transparency and they don't, I'm frankly disappointed.

I just want to make sure I'm standing up for the constituents of Battle River-Wainwright in saying that they want a hospital. They could be having a hospital, perhaps, based on this, but we're losing the ability to have that money because $2 billion could be gone in fraud.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who would like to speak to Motion for a Return 21?

Seeing no one, I would ask the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to close debate.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As my colleagues from Battle River-Wainwright and Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills have so eloquently pointed out, the main concern here is that this money that's lost to fraud doesn't help Albertans, whether it's an individual suffering while unable to get access to a pharmaceutical or surgery, whether it's a person that needs a rotator cuff, a hip, or a knee done. I don't know if you find the same in your office in Medicine Hat, but in Cypress-Medicine Hat the number of Albertans that have spent $15,000 to get a rotator cuff fixed in Kalispell, the number of Albertans that have spent $25,000 to $30,000 to get a knee or a hip done in Great Falls is mind-boggling.

Secondly, though: the concern as to whose health system it is. It's not the government's. It's not the 87 of us in here. It's Albertans', and they expect us to run it with maximum results and maximum value. A government that doesn't even want to, you know, provide the basics – the Auditor General in his report, that we just received a short time ago, on page 118 points out two key things, again, that could go a long way to eliminating some of the fraud or impacts. He talks about health care processes and points out: "Establish a proactive check to ensure that individuals with an Alberta healthcare number continue to meet residency requirements." Our Auditor General is not scared to tell 4.3 million Albertans what to do. Why is the NDP government?

The second recommendation that he has caught my eye more. "Health care processes: Enhance processes to check for receipt of services for which physicians billed." One of my constituents has long pointed out to me and reminded me that he thinks every time we go to a doctor, we shouldn't pay a bill, but we should sign a bill on the way out so that we know what it cost. That would go a long way to raising the consciousness of Albertans as to the value, and it would go a long way to eliminating some of this fraud that may or may not be there.

We've also seen this government fall down on the $800 million they spent on electronic health records and now another $400 million without proper oversight.

Again, Mr. Speaker, colleagues, I'm disappointed that the government is hiding from being a little more transparent, and I would ask that all colleagues in the House vote against the government and vote in favour of them answering this question. Thank you.

Primary Care Networks Review

M22. Mr. Barnes moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of internal working documents or reports prepared by or on behalf of the government from May 22, 2015, to March 7, 2016, pertaining to the financial review of primary care networks conducted by the Minister of Health, as referenced during consideration of the Ministry of Health's main estimates on November 16, 2015.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker and colleagues, we spent quite a bit of time in estimates discussing primary care networks. We discussed the primary care model and the fact that funding to them was substantially cut in order to deplete existing surpluses, the old argument of local jurisdictions saving for future betterment for everyone versus the most use at the best time for taxpayers' money and, of course, leaving money with taxpayers.

You know, the primary care model, to me, is extremely interesting, extremely important. In the four years I've been in here, I've heard different arguments on it. I guess, to me, we have a system where the government will so often say that they want the Albertan, the patient, to see the right person at the right time and with the right delivery model. To me, primary care networks are so potentially the solution to so many things in our system, whether it's mental health, whether it's physiotherapy, whether it's prevention, whether it's the comprehensive care that Albertans need so we can get off this model of treating sickness and whatnot and we can get on a model of well-being and prevention.

You know, there has been a lot of criticism about primary care networks, and I think a lot of it hasn't been justified. My understanding as to what has happened is that the previous government decided to set these up with the hope that, I think, some side of 70 primary care networks in the province would have the opportunity to develop sort of independently, sort of autonomously, to share best practices, obviously, hopefully, but to develop in a way where we could have many, many different points of best practice, where we could have many, many different ways of analyzing this and seeing what worked and what didn't work. Then that's when I hear that it started to maybe fall down. Did they share best practices? Could or should there have been a little bit more oversight so that we could focus on, let's say, mental health or prevention and wellness instead?

That, Mr. Speaker, is the heart of this question. Let's see the internal working documents or reports prepared by or on behalf of the government pertaining to the financial review so that once again we can see that Albertan taxpayers, that the 4.3 million Albertans that could benefit tremendously from a stronger health care network, again concentrating on prevention and wellness and the mental health aspect – are we getting the value for the programs, the systems that have all been put in?

It's back to: through the primary care networks we could have the opportunity to ensure that people get connected to the appropriate care provider in the best way. Is that happening? You know, I was Health shadow minister for about a year and a half. I don't know. That's where, hopefully, the government will answer these questions. Hopefully, we'll see that we're getting value for money, and hopefully we'll see that in a world where technology and medicines and everything seem like they change instantly, we can see that we're staying on top of things to make sure they're happening right. Are we getting value? Are we getting our resources, our hard-earned tax dollars to the right places?

You know, I think we've had a lot of successes with primary care networks, but what is the long-term funding strategy to ensure that we're going to get more value and that Albertans are going to get better service? The question that especially was pertinent during the dates that I mentioned was that some of them were losing their surpluses. Some of them were losing funds that they were building up to hire professionals, to buy the equipment that was needed to ensure that proper facilities were put in place. How can a government know if it's doing the right thing if we don't have the proper oversight and the proper mechanisms? Most importantly, how can Albertans know that the government is doing the right thing if they don't share the information that ensures that, you know, we have the opportunity to look at what these financial reviews were and what they were going for?

Mr. Speaker, I think it's only proper that the House should be permitted to see the ministry's evidence for this review as to how they're going to ensure that we really get our full value out of primary care networks, and we should be able to see how the government intends to measure success and what it's doing to promote success. I think the primary care network budgetary item is somewhere around $280 million. I'm sorry, colleagues; I don't have that right here. But, again, that is a tremendous, tremendous amount of money that could do a tremendous amount of good for Alberta families, Albertans who at times need some support. I hope that the government will provide this information in a full, you know, fulsome context so the 87 of us in this House can go back to our constituents and share the good ideas that we hear to make it better and to share where this is going. I would hope the government would answer this question in full.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move to amend Motion for a Return 22 as follows: (a) by striking out the phrase "internal working" and (b) by adding "excluding documents that constitute confidential advice to the minister and excluding data and information that is specific to an individual or a specific primary care network" after the word "government."

The amended motion for a return would then read as follows:

That an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of documents or reports prepared by or on behalf of the government, excluding documents that constitute confidential advice to the minister and excluding data and information that is specific to an individual or a specific primary care network, from May 22, 2015, to March 7, 2016, pertaining to the financial review of primary care networks conducted by the Minister of Health, as referenced during consideration of the Ministry of Health's main estimates on November 16, 2015.

I am proposing this amendment to reflect our responsibilities under FOIP section 22(1), regarding cabinet and Treasury Board confidences. The outcome of the government's review was released publicly in June, and the full report is available on Alberta Health's website. We promised Albertans that we would take steps to protect and improve our health care system, and we're making great progress. This fall we partnered with PCNs to focus on sustainability for millions of Albertans who use these front-line services. Better financial management is part of ensuring that public health care dollars are directed towards care. We are working with primary care networks as partners, and together we will be able to achieve cost-effective, long-term health system reform.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health has moved an amendment. Wishing to speak to the amendment? The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment. I just really want to highlight a couple of quick things for you, particularly around the Assembly's ability and how we interact with the FOIP legislation. As you know, the Assembly has the ability to ask for documents, and it has the ability to require the production of documents. It's just whether or not the government in this case, if they vote in favour of the initial motion for a return, which I think at this point is highly unlikely given that they've just moved a motion that essentially changes the intent and really only provides publicly available information – but if they had supported the motion, the Assembly has the ability to require the production of those documents.

While I know that the minister likes to hide behind the FOIP legislation, last week I provided the specific reference in House of Commons Procedure and Practice that indicates that we have that ability. Perhaps at a later date, like when we're back on the same motion, I will provide that reference again for you as I'm just having a little difficulty finding it here on the fly.

But there are a lot of issues that present a challenge to the amendment, particularly around – essentially, the government is offering to provide information that's already publicly available and answering the question that they would have liked us to ask, not the question that was actually asked. While I'm sympathetic to the government in that I appreciate them at least trying to provide something whereas in the last question we saw that they provided absolutely nothing and just rejected the question out of hand, now they use the FOIP legislation to hide behind not providing documents to the Assembly that, clearly, there is the ability for them to provide.

I just would like to quickly touch on a couple of things around this issue of primary care networks and why getting this information is critically important. We see in the Auditor General's report, that was released just today, on page 115 an outstanding recommendation, the department's accountability for the primary care network, this initial recommendation from the Auditor General, where it says:

We recommend that the Department of Health:

- establish clear expectations and targets for each of the PCN program objectives
- develop systems to evaluate and report performance of the PCN program.

Outstanding recommendation 7, Mr. Speaker, July 2012:

We recommend that the Department of Health proactively inform Albertans which Primary Care Network they have been assigned to, and what services are available through their [primary care network].

While these specifics might not be to the motion for a return today, they speak to an ongoing lack of desire for accountability that we see from this government. The Auditor General, Mr. Speaker, asked in 2012 for accountability around the primary care networks. Again, 2012, outstanding recommendation from Alberta Health Services – so now this isn't just the department, but this is, in fact, Alberta Health Services – AHS accountability for primary care networks, recommendation 6, on page 40:

We recommend that Alberta Health Services within the context of its provincial primary healthcare responsibilities:

- define goals and service delivery expectations for its involvement in [PCNs]
- define performance measures and targets
- evaluate and report on its performance as a PCN joint venture participant.

My point is, Mr. Speaker, that since 2012 there have been outstanding recommendations. Now in the Chamber my colleague from Cypress-Medicine Hat asks for accountability measures and the review of the primary health care networks conducted by the Minister of Health, a review that the minister herself referred to during the consideration of the Health ministry's main estimates. This isn't a hypothetical review – or maybe it is a hypothetical review because we haven't seen anything that has come from that – but this is a review that she specifically referred to as under way. It would only seem reasonable that we would be able to see the information around that review, including the working documents and, at the very least, the conclusions of that review. So it's disappointing to see the ministry and the minister hiding from accountability. It's disappointing for them to continue to not respond to the Auditor General.

It is now – 2013, 2014, 2015, 2016 – four years, much of which time this government has been responsible for. I know that this current government likes to blame the third party for a lot of the predicaments that we're in. Let me be clear, Mr. Speaker. There's a lot of blame to go around to the third party. But in this case there's well over 18 months, yet this government chooses not to respond to the Auditor General, as he has proposed a number of recommendations, and now, perhaps even worse, has refused to provide all of the information available to this Chamber.

I'll let my hon. colleague speak about some of the challenges with this amendment, particularly not providing specific reviews to specific primary care networks. If we can't compare the good ones to other ones, how are we going to create any standards or have any real understanding of what's working and what isn't?

There is a smattering of real challenges with this amendment. I certainly am unable to support an amendment that doesn't provide more accountability, that doesn't provide more transparency, that doesn't provide information that 4.1 million Albertans so rightly deserve. It's disappointing. Again, this pattern of disappointment that this government is engaging in is not what they said when they got elected, it's not what Albertans have expected, it's not what Albertans had hoped for, and it's certainly not what I expected or hoped for either.

So I will not be supporting this amendment, and I encourage all members of the Assembly who believe in openness, transparency, and freedom of information to not support this amendment either.

The Speaker: Hon. members, is there anyone else who would like to speak to the amendment to Motion 22? The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to take a minute or two. Every party here acknowledges the importance of a publicly funded health care system, and as such I want to challenge all of the members here to consider who owns this system. No, it's not the government. It's not cabinet. It's not the Ministry of Health. My goodness, it isn't even AHS. It's the people. It's Albertans. It's our system, and the system is ultimately accountable and beholden to the people, not the other way around.

We're seeing it here on notice of motion after notice of motion. The government is consistently reducing transparency, hiding internal documents that may or may not be of a confidential nature. We're certainly reasonable and could understand, you know, if it had to be. But if it's just documents, especially the three that highlight around the Auditor General's concerns, his outstanding recommendations, as my hon. colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills just pointed out, from July 2012, "We recommend that the Department of Health proactively inform Albertans which Primary Care Network they have been assigned to, and what services are available through their PCN," that's basic.

I mean, I've talked to many, many Albertans who have no idea about all of the good services our primary care networks can offer to them, as I said earlier: mental health, prevention and wellness, and rehabilitation. The fact is that we should have the opportunity to look in and ensure that the government is making Albertans aware of this.

Again from July 2012: "We recommend that the Department of Health improve its systems for oversight of Primary Care Networks." As has been mentioned, oversight could just focus on sharing of best practices. We've got wonderful physicians, wonderful health care professionals. Sharing best practices could go a long way to improving the quality of Albertans' lives.

What triggered this specific question was to ensure that the PCN surplus funds are used in a timely and sustainable manner. Certainly, you know, I've heard that lots in my time as an MLA, that sometimes the government, the taxpayer has to give. Our health care professionals, our education professionals, our people that provide so many important supports socially for all Albertans: sometimes the government has to give them the opportunity to build up some funds, to do some long-term investing for a piece of equipment, a building, training for professionals. But by the same token the government is responsible for those tax dollars. So it's important to make sure that that information is two-way. The two-way part is what is greatly concerning me today.

Accountability. We're accountable for some side of over $50 billion a year in annual spending, and that accountability depends on transparency between the government and Albertans. The information has to flow, Mr. Speaker, to the owners of the system, and that, of course, is all Albertans, not just those that are in cabinet, not just those that are on the government side but to all of us. So I speak against this amendment in the hopes that my colleagues on the opposite side will realize that the system belongs to all Albertans.

As great work by the Auditor General's department has shown, there have been three or four areas since 2012 that, had they been addressed, could have greatly improved this. So I'm asking the government to show us this information more than is just publicly out there so we could absolutely have confidence that Albertans are getting the maximum value for their hard-earned tax dollars.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other members who would like to speak to the amendment to Motion for a Return 22?

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Yeah. Thank you. I'd just like to speak a few moments on the main motion, Mr. Speaker, for a brief moment. I just wanted to state that, as you know, we've heard on a number of occasions that this government likes to hide behind FOIP legislation and doesn't respect the ultimate authority that this Chamber has and that members of this Assembly have. So I'd just like to highlight for you and for members of the Assembly that this is private member's business, as you know, and we are all equal members of this Assembly, and we all have the ability to ensure that information is made available to Albertans.

I'd just like to speak, very briefly, about how important that information is and specifically refer to page 137 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, when it refers to the ordering of documents. It states:

The power to send for persons, papers and records has been delegated by the House of Commons to its committees in the Standing Orders. It is well established that Parliament has the right to order any and all documents to be laid before it which it believes are necessary for its information.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to you that the information around PCNs that the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat has asked for is necessary information.

The power to call for persons, papers and records is absolute, but it is seldom exercised without consideration of the public interest.

Now, I would suggest to you that it is in both the public interest as well as the interest of this Assembly for us to have a real understanding and working knowledge around what exactly is happening with PCNs and the, I believe I heard my colleague say, $280 million. I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that $280 million is in the public interest.

The House of Commons recognizes that it should not require the production of documents in all cases; considerations of public policy, including national security . . .

Again, this was not one of those cases.

. . . foreign relations . . .

Again, not one of those cases.

. . . and so forth, enter into the decision as to when it is appropriate to order the production of such documents.

Mr. Speaker, today we were asking for important information with respect to the expenditure of well over $200 million and how effective that expenditure was. We weren't asking for information that is critical to the province's security, we weren't asking for information that is critical to our foreign relations or even our relations with Saskatchewan but the very important information that should have been made available to the Chamber with respect to how PCNs are working. This Assembly has the ability to send for papers and records. It is absolute.

I might just add, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of members of this Assembly should want access to information. They should want more openness and transparency. It is exactly what this government was elected on. I know that members of the public would like access to this information. It is disappointing to see that not happening.

I'd just like to cite briefly for you that in 1990 the Solicitor General refused to provide the Standing Committee on Justice and the Solicitor General with two reports, citing privacy issues like we saw today around cabinet confidentiality and a number of other changes that aren't of a significant nature. The committee reported the matter to the House. This is the challenge, that this government is not respecting the importance of the Assembly and they are hiding behind legislation, not providing the most accurate information to the Assembly, which is critically important. In that case in 1990 a question of privilege was subsequently raised, and the matter of the failure of the Solicitor General to provide the report was referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure.

Mr. Speaker, we've had a lot of discussion around points of privilege. We've had a lot of discussion around the information that is important to this Chamber. So far today we've seen the government outright reject to provide information. We've seen the government amend questions to provide the answers to the questions that they would have liked us to ask. Perhaps we should have just asked them to write the motions for returns for us, and then they could have answered their own questions, similar I think to what happens during question period.

I can't stress to you enough the importance of the Assembly's ability to call for the production of documents. It's disappointing that this government hasn't done anything different than the previous government with respect to providing information to us. I don't want to go on too long, Mr. Speaker, as we are getting very close to 5 o'clock.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I believe that it might be 5 o'clock.

Mr. Cooper: Oh, that's unfortunate.

The Speaker: I certainly don't want to interrupt such an enthralling debate; however, I need to interrupt and advise that the time limit for consideration of this item has concluded.

Motions Other than Government Motions

Affordable Housing Committee

508. Mr. Gotfried moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly establish a special committee to conduct a review of the current state of affordable housing in Alberta, and in conducting its review the committee shall consult with key public, private, and nonprofit stakeholders; study attainable home ownership, workforce housing, low-income rental accommodation, seniors' housing, and homeless housing options; and make recommendations for the creation and implementation of a comprehensive provincial affordable housing strategy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you can see, I'm honoured today to present Motion 508, which is on the Order Paper today. I'm somewhat saddened, because I've had the opportunity to work very closely with the Member for Calgary-East with respect to her bill, which we have not gotten to yet, but in the interests of moving this issue forward, I think it's important that we focus on the now, which is that now is an ideal time to leverage public investment in collaborative and innovative partnerships to increase our supply of flexible, affordable housing appropriate to current and projected demographic and geographic needs. It is also time, I think, for this Legislature to send a message to Albertans that we are serious about addressing chronic housing shortages and a lack of affordability across many segments of society.

There are three things that I want to talk about here. The who: the committee shall consult with key public, private, and nonprofit stakeholders. I call that PPNP. Public responsibility, of course, is incumbent here. In an environment of constrained financial resources we need to take a look at what we can do to leverage the resources of the other sectors. The private sector could bring capital, expertise, and business acumen to the table and deliver cost-effective results. Of course, the Minister of Seniors and Housing witnessed just a few shorts weeks ago a PPNP in action in a partnership for affordable and accessible housing, where we saw that business can be a force for good when society engages, challenges, and encourages it. The nonprofit sector also needs to be considered here because it's lean, it's mean, and it tends to be very passionate about the issues they're involved with. They can make great partners in solving some of society's most challenging and persistent issues.

Mr. Speaker, then there's the what. The committee will study attainable home ownership, moving some people, those people that are able, from rental into home ownership to help them not just today but to build equity for the future so that they can actually put money in the bank, that forced savings plan that we call a mortgage, so that they have the opportunity to do that – there are some great programs already in place that we can consult with – workforce housing, what I like to call public, essential, and key workforce housing; low-income rental accommodation; seniors' housing; and homeless housing and support options.

Then there are the outcomes, Mr. Speaker, the recommendations that we hope will come from such a committee. The committee will make recommendations for the creation and implementation of a comprehensive provincial affordable housing strategy. We know that there is lots of good work going on. Again, the Minister of Seniors and Housing has been meeting, I know, with her national counterparts. This is meant to support that opportunity, again, so we can move this forward with the support of this Legislature so that we can actually be key to this initiative, to this outcome, and to moving forward.

We'll support the good work that's already being done in the Ministry of Seniors and Housing. We'll ensure broad input, engaging Alberta's best, brightest, and most passionate from all three sectors, and we'll bring forward the best, most cost-efficient, innovative, out-of-the-box recommendations to complement the expertise within the ministry while recognizing the expertise, experience, and ideas of the private and nonprofit sectors in addressing an enduring problem in Alberta and indeed across most jurisdictions in our country.

In closing, esteemed colleagues, I'd like to say that this is not about partisanship. This is not about who or what party the member is from that is proposing this motion. This is about Albertans: young, old, frail, infirm, facing physical, financial, emotional, mental health and addiction-related issues or just unable to access affordable and appropriate housing, which many in our province are facing. This is about all 87 of us here today doing the right thing to ensure that we take one step forward in ensuring that all Albertans can reach their full potential through a thoughtful, comprehensive, collaborative approach to addressing a key issue for us all: a roof over our heads, sleeping in a warm bed, and an opportunity to not just survive but to thrive, Mr. Speaker, which I believe is part of the commitment we all make when we step forward for public service. These are important issues for us, and these are issues which face us in good times and in bad.

As I noted, I've had an opportunity to work with the Member for Calgary-East on her bill, and I would be very supportive of that as well as it comes forward. I know that there's good work going on in the ministry, but this is an opportunity for us here today to support the development, the comprehensive consultation across three sectors, which will be the source, I believe, of solving some of our societal issues when we can all work together across three sectors as Albertans across this province, setting aside partisanship.

I encourage all of you to support this motion, to take this one small step forward in achieving the goals and outcomes I know we are all passionate about. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to rise and once again speak about affordable housing. It is so amazing that we spend so much time in this House talking about affordable housing. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for his motion, that is allowing us this afternoon to focus for an hour or so on the need for affordable housing. I only wish that so much focus on affordable housing had been in evidence under the previous government. We would not be in the situation we are now, with huge waiting lists, buildings needing repairs, and the lack of appropriate supportive housing.

I was delighted when our government began its work to put together a provincial affordable housing strategy that will guide and direct the $1.2 billion investment in seniors' and affordable housing. The government is currently consulting with Albertans affected by the lack of affordable housing, consulting with housing providers, municipal authorities, not-for-profits, housing co-operatives, and private-sector developers. The consultation included those involved with affordable housing for seniors, people with disabilities, those who need supportive housing, families, all Albertans that require the provision of affordable, stable, suitable housing.

I was one of eight MLAs who participated as an observer during one of the consultation sessions in Edmonton. It was a privilege to be in a room full of housing providers, advocates, municipal leaders speaking on what should be in the provincial housing strategy. I found that people were engaged, and they understood the need for government to develop a housing strategy so that a plan could be developed that would help all Albertans in need of affordable housing. It was also the opportunity for Albertans to participate in the consultation through an online survey. I'm hoping that the hon. member took the opportunity to indicate his support for affordable housing through his participation in a survey and that he had ideas to contribute to the process.

It is not only the provincial government that is engaged in developing an affordable housing strategy. As the Minister of Seniors and Housing indicated this afternoon, the federal government has signed an agreement with our province on affordable housing. I was very pleased at the recent announcement of funding from the Ministry of Human Services for the Alberta Rural Development Network to support projects on rural homelessness. Affordable housing is not just an urban issue; it's also a rural issue. This indicates clearly that while the consultation towards a strategy is taking place, the government is moving forward on key affordable housing issues.

I am always pleased when I can speak about how proactive my own municipality of Strathcona county is in dovetailing with the government's provincial affordable housing strategy consultations. Not only is there a community housing committee, led by two councillors of Strathcona county, but last week there was a community consultation on affordable housing, led by Heartland Housing, which is the local municipal housing authority. The municipality is being proactive by preparing its own plans so that they are ready when the government releases its provincial affordable housing strategy so that they can move forward knowing the needs and possible solutions and, therefore, have projects ready to work on with our Ministry of Seniors and Housing.

Mr. Speaker, while I am delighted with the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek's interest in supporting affordable housing, I will not be voting for this motion as the government is already moving forward to establish a provincial strategy for affordable housing.

Thank you.

5:10

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today to speak to the motion on housing brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I'm sure that you're aware of the statistics surrounding Alberta's affordable housing system. It's a very diverse system, involving over 350 partners. These partners help to enable more than 110,000 Albertans to benefit from different housing programs within Alberta, including rent supplement programs, community housing, and seniors' lodging, to name a few. It's vitally important that we have these programs in place so that Albertans from all walks of life have access to safe and secure housing no matter the situation they find themselves in.

The Edmonton Journal reported twice over the past year, first at the end of December 2015 and again at the end of May 2016, that the wait-list for social housing in Edmonton has recently skyrocketed. As of the end of December there were about 400 families reported to be considered high-needs. In Calgary the need has doubled according to the Calgary Herald. Those are huge increases, and that is a concern that needs to be addressed. Those aren't the only ones. If you look at the annual reports, Medicine Hat and Red Deer also mention increases in the need for housing. And I've only mentioned four cities.

Those are not mere numbers, Mr. Speaker; those are people, several thousand people who are waiting for assistance with one of the most basic needs that a person can have. The government needs to be proactive in its development of an affordable housing strategy that will address the concerns that are being raised today.

You know what, Mr. Speaker? Assisting people with housing is noble. It's satisfying to know that people have a place to call home, a place they can return to at the end of the day, or a place that family can visit. But it doesn't end there. It's important that these places that people call home be safe places, be places where they don't need to worry about the level of care they will be given, and be more than just a motel because there's no permanent or semipermanent place for them. It's important that these places, while they may not have all the bells and whistles, meet the needs of the person or the family that resides there. Even more important is that there are such places for people who need them.

That's what I'm hopeful such a review, as brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, will do. Now, I'm not typically a fan of reviews, sir, but I think that in this case, where we're looking at the current state of our affordable housing, where it may be succeeding and where it may be failing, it is important. More Albertans than ever are out of work, and the demand for affordable housing is on the rise, as I mentioned earlier. The government needs to act on this and consult with all stakeholders to see how we can work together to fill the gaps that exist.

Our seniors population is growing and will continue to grow over the next decade or two. The government needs to evaluate the state of our current seniors' housing now and needs to bring a plan forward to enable us to effectively prepare for and manage the need in two, five, 10 years.

We don't need a bill directing the government to act. When it comes to conducting a review, the government has the ability to act on its own volition. Would such legislation, such a piece of paper be the impetus that the government needs to move forward on a housing strategy? It shouldn't be. It should be enough that the members of this House stand together to ask the government to put the time and resources into a comprehensive study of the current state and projected need of affordable housing here in Alberta.

For those reasons I support this motion. Sir, this is better drafted than the bill that's before us that is similar. It hits all the points. For that I commend the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I encourage all members to stand together and support this call for the government to evaluate the current system, consult with all stakeholders, whether private, public, or nonprofit, and create an affordable housing strategy for both today and tomorrow.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to speak on Motion 508. I'd like to begin by thanking the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing forward this motion. Through my time in the House and events around Calgary I've come to note that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and I share a passion toward affordable housing for all Albertans, including seniors, so it comes as no surprise to me that the member would put forth a motion to establish a special committee to look at issues around affordable housing. I applaud him for doing so because today there are over 15,000 Albertan families on an affordable housing wait-list. Yes, that's 15,000. I've personally seen the stabilizing effect that having affordable housing has on low-income families who are working to improve their lot in life.

Given the previous government's lack of leadership on this issue the need for safe, affordable, and appropriate housing is clearer than ever. These families on the wait-list, Mr. Speaker, deserve better. I agree with the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek that improving the province's current housing situation and ensuring its supply of affordable housing is a complex matter requiring the engagement, consultation, and co-operation of public, private, and nonprofit stakeholders. However, we don't need to duplicate the work that is already in progress.

What I don't agree with is that a special committee as proposed in the motion will be helpful in reaching the goal of all Albertans having safe and affordable housing. This would slow down the good work already being done by the government on this issue. This government saw the need to act swiftly on housing, and as a result it's dedicated $1.2 billion to investment in seniors and affordable housing. This is why, Mr. Speaker, our government is establishing a provincial housing strategy which will help guide the $1.2 billion investment this government will make over the next five years.

Let's go over some of those investments, Mr. Speaker. It includes $298 million for capital maintenance and renewal; $582 million for sustainable housing renewal; $148 million for new housing supply as well as $120 million for housing for indigenous populations that are living off-reserve; $13 million for new supply, specifically targeted at demographics like those who are homeless, for example; and $14 million for planning new projects.

As reported in Capital Region Housing's 2015 annual report, no new social housing units have been built since 1993, this in addition to the $1 billion inherited by this government in deferred maintenance from the previous government administration. That's over 25 years of inaction on this file, Mr. Speaker, by the previous government.

Mr. Rosendahl: Shame.

Mr. Malkinson: Shame, indeed.

But make no mistake. Although the government had to act quickly on the housing file, we are committed to thoughtful discussions about how we move forward with respect to affordable housing.

So why are we moving toward an affordable housing strategy? Well, after more than four decades in government the previous government did not provide leadership on this issue, Mr. Speaker. After more than four decades in government the previous government allowed Alberta to be one of three provinces without an affordable housing strategy.

Let's be clear. Our government is committed to making thoughtful decisions about how we move forward with respect to affordable housing. This is why our government has had extensive consultations with thousands of Albertans across the province to ensure our government's strategy will guide the development of an effective and sustainable affordable housing system. This is why our government has proceeded with extensive consultations on this issue through regional meetings, that were completed in June.

In fact, these regional meetings included the participation of eight MLAs, including the opposition Member for Calgary-North West. Mr. Speaker, our government proceeded with online engagement via a survey for Albertans that was completed this July. This was followed by a second round of targeted engagements, completed in September. In addition, our government is working with housing management bodies across the province to identify shovel-ready projects and has made numerous announcements of projects to build housing. In fact, I'm working with the city of Calgary and my local city councillor on a housing project that I hope to see built in Calgary-Currie, which I believe is very close to being a shovel-ready project. I hope to see that in my riding.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the demand for affordable housing is now, and it's not a time to form a special committee on housing. Now is the time to continue with the work that is already taking place as it is moving in the right direction. This is a focused government that's working toward affordable housing. [interjections] The opposition may laugh at our focus on affordable housing, but I believe that it is an important issue.

This focus and determination on housing has opened up further opportunities such as a recently signed deal on the social housing agreement with federal minister Kent Hehr, which replaces the outdated agreements that tied the hands of housing providers and allows them to find modern solutions to tackle the need of Albertans. Our government has also signed an affordable housing agreement with federal minister Amarjeet Sohi that will provide Albertans with sustained funds for renovation and upgrades.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to reiterate that I know the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek brings this motion forward with a genuine purpose, to see fewer Albertans without a place to call home, and that is a worthy goal. However, I do not believe that there is anything to be achieved by supporting this motion. Starting back at square one with consultations, as suggested in this motion, will not help Albertans who need homes right now. As a result, I will not be supporting this motion, and I encourage all others in the House to do the same.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to rise on this important issue, affordable housing, one that, it's my belief, all members of this House care about and surely one that all members of this House ought to care about. I'm a little surprised by what I'm hearing from the government side. I mean, when you read the motion from the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, it's really about working together on all sides of the House on an issue that I believe all sides of the House care about, affordable housing.

I'm a little troubled by some of the commentary because it seems inconsistent with other evidence that's before us. We heard commentary about a backlog in maintenance on the housing. To be clear, there is a backlog in maintenance on the housing, but the budget the government brought forward actually makes that backlog bigger rather than smaller. But I'm not here to criticize that, only to point out that the criticism just levelled is in no way legitimate by that member. They actually have increased the backlog since they've been in government. Again, it's just a matter of: it's a big job. The reason there's a lot of backlog is because there's a lot of affordable housing because there has been a ton of work done by previous governments on this file for years.

I know this first-hand. During my time on Calgary city council I was the chair of Calgary Housing Company for three years running, so I speak, I think, with a little bit of knowledge on this when I say that the government of Alberta has for a long time been co-operating with municipalities across Alberta, private-sector and public-sector housing companies, and NGOs to provide housing. So there's nothing new here. This is a matter of moving forward in the best way possible.

The other thing that seems a little bit disingenuous: some of the slams from the government side, particularly when the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek offered an olive branch. It's like the government-side members snapped it in half and poked him in the eye. You know what? If there was ever a place where you actually ought to reach across the aisle and work together, it's on affordable housing. I would say to the hon. member that just spoke in particular: shame. This is a place where we should be working together. You know what? There are a lot of times to be partisan and hit each other over the head with partisan issues, and we'll do that. This isn't one of those days. This isn't one of those issues.

Further, I would say that it's further disingenuous, Mr. Speaker, when on the Order Paper today, though it probably won't be presented today, although time will tell, is Bill 202, the government's own bill coming up, the Alberta Affordable Housing Review Committee Act. Wow. That sounds pretty darn similar: affordable housing review committee. That's what this is proposing. It could end up being exactly the same or almost the same as what the government is going to bring forward – we don't know because we haven't got the text of that before us – yet the government members have said that this is a terrible idea.

You know what, Mr. Speaker? I wish they would drop the partisanship just for this issue – just for this issue – and, as our Member for Calgary-Fish Creek suggested that we do, work together. You know what? The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek was a little bit modest in his introduction, if you don't mind. I know he doesn't come to this lightly or easily, and this isn't his first day concerned about this. As a member of the construction industry he has been part of introducing and bringing to the market attainable-housing issues. Some of the first attainable-housing programs in Alberta were authored by this Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, and I think everybody in Alberta owes him a vote of thanks for that.

Those aren't just words. Mr. Speaker, I've actually been at the ribbon cuttings for the openings that were done by his employer, a house builder, when he was there. He's being quite modest in not bragging about how much he cares about this and how much he's accomplished and how much he could contribute to the government side and all other sides by doing this. Again, listen; that's just one, but I fully believe there are many committed members on the government side and the other opposition benches that could contribute a great deal as well. I can tell you that the government – well, the current government would tell you that the previous governments haven't done anything. I can tell you from my time as chair of the Calgary Housing Company that there has been so much done. It's a large and complex process.

In fact, the 10-year plan to eliminate homelessness originated at the city of Calgary, adopted in a slightly revised form by the government of Alberta, and I would say that that's been a great success. Has homelessness been eliminated? No, Mr. Speaker, it has not. But has it resulted in a lot more people finding homes that would not have found homes without a concerted effort for them to do so? That's a yes. Every time you put a family or an individual in a home that they would not have had otherwise, I don't know any way to call it anything but a success, and I would be surprised if anybody in this House would either.

I can tell you: it's so complex, and that's the reason why we all need to put our minds together. The Calgary Housing Company – I don't know if it's changed – when I was there, had nine different portfolios, you know: one fully owned by the city, one fully owned by the province, one fully owned by the feds, combinations of fed, provincial, city owned, city-provincial owned, city-fed owned, every combination of that, some with rent geared to income, some with mixed income. This is a complex issue that would be best solved, best dealt with if we work together.

You'll have to forgive me, Mr. Speaker, if I found it just a little bit disingenuous for government members to say that there's nothing to learn from other sides of the House here and that it will in some way slow them down to have a committee, particularly when on the same Order Paper for today is a bill suggesting the Alberta Affordable Housing Review Committee Act, which has not yet been introduced. For the government side to say that having a committee to deal with this – really, folks, let's work together on this. Drop the partisanship. In all of our communities, big and small, across Alberta there are people who need homes. This is one place where we need to hold hands, put our collective minds together, and actually make it better. We'll poke each other in the eye on the next issue. This isn't the one.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to this motion. I'd like to begin by sincerely thanking the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing this motion forward on something that is an incredibly important issue. I absolutely agree with him that now is the time to leverage the many opportunities that are available to us to address this problem. You know, in the last 18 months since I was elected, I've had the opportunity to meet with people across my constituency. Whether it's been business, whether it's been community leagues and community groups, whether it's been at seniors' homes, everyone I've spoken to has always asked me about the issue of housing.

That's because here in the heart of Edmonton we're very excited because we're going through a period of revitalization. We're seeing growth downtown like we've never seen before. It's amazing, and it's wonderful to see. It's great for our city. But at the same time it's highlighting the issue that's been ongoing for some time. We're also realizing that we can't ignore that in the shadow of all this amazing and fantastic growth there are still far too many people who are living in its shadows, on our streets. We recognize that if we want to have a city that really has opportunity and space for all, we have a lot of work to do on the issue of housing. I was reminded of that just a few weeks ago, when I had the honour of joining in Edmonton's homeless count and I spent a few hours out on the streets talking to men and women who did not have a home and learning more about their experience.

So the question of housing is one that I have personally made a priority for myself as an MLA and as a representative for Edmonton-Centre. Together with some of my colleagues, in particular the MLA for Edmonton-McClung, I've had the opportunity to meet with many of the housing organizations here in our city, folks like the Edmonton Coalition on Housing and Homelessness, or ECOHH, Homeward Trust, the Capital Region Housing Corporation, the Greater Edmonton Foundation, E4C, the Canadian Mental Health Association, Boyle Street Community Services, the Terra association, Edmonton Inner City Housing Society, and the Edmonton YMCA. I know that many of my colleagues on both sides of this aisle have had the opportunity to meet with these organizations as well.

I've had many conversations with my municipal colleagues about the challenges our city faces. They've spoken to me, and they've told me how they are ready and willing to be partners in addressing this key issue. I and my colleagues have been keeping in active contact with the Minister of Seniors and Housing, seeking information on our government's plan, asking what was going to be in the budget, asking for more information about the direction and the strategy that we were going to take. So we were incredibly pleased when we brought forward our budget this year and we learned that we would have an investment of $1.2 billion to build and repair affordable and seniors' housing across Alberta.

We were even more pleased when that minister announced that we would be working to create Alberta's first provincial affordable housing strategy. Mr. Speaker, this crisis in housing didn't develop overnight. I recognize that this began back in the early '90s, and it began with our federal government as federal funding began to dry up and be withdrawn. Of course, that trickled down to the province, and that trickled down, then, to the cities. It had a bit of a ripple effect, and of course the many cuts in social services that we saw in the early '90s here in our province didn't help with that matter either, unfortunately, as we saw vulnerable Albertans who were struggling with mental illness and addictions often left to fend for themselves.

But I recognize that work has been done since. We've been working to try to recover from that gap, and I recognize that the previous government tried to do what it could in some respects. I recognize that cities in Alberta – Edmonton, Calgary, others – have stepped up and tried to do what they could. You know, many community organizations stepped up to try to fill those gaps. They went out and they worked with – well, they depended on public generosity. They worked with private industry and philanthropy and, of course, just competed for whatever government assistance was available.

So we find ourselves where we are today, where we have a bit of a patchwork of a system of bandages trying to staunch the bleeding. One billion dollars was mentioned in deferred maintenance, and again that's something that's trickled down all the way through all three orders of government. Unfortunately, there was no real plan to co-ordinate the resources and the interests of all three orders of government with our community partners to try to address that need.

But, Mr. Speaker, we're finally on the road to developing that plan. I had the chance to attend the minister's consultations here in Edmonton back in June along with representatives from many of the organizations I had the opportunity to meet with over the last 18 months. They provided a wealth of ideas and great thoughts and feedback. They expressed enthusiasm for our government's commitment and the opportunity to be partners in helping us fulfill it. As others have mentioned, there was the online survey. I know that myself and several of my colleagues made an effort to get out into the community to let people know that it was there, be they community organizations or individuals. Now our municipal community partners are ready to work with us to get this done.

I sincerely appreciate the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek's passion for this issue. I recognize his own personal investment in this. I'll tell you that my door is always open to talk with anybody in this House about how we can move forward on this issue, and I dare say that it's true for all of my colleagues and it's true for the minister. That said, I don't see a point in duplicating the work that's already under way. The consultations are happening. We're speaking with our partners. The municipal partners are lined up, and they're ready to go.

When the minister brings forward that provincial affordable housing strategy next year, we will all be prepared to sit down and work together, and I am more than happy to work with any member in this House and to bring their thoughts and ideas forward because – you're quite right – this is an issue that we all need to work on together. I believe we should all support the work that's being done and the strategy that's going forward and the work that the minister is doing. I invite all members in this House to reach out to the minister and share with her your thoughts, your ideas, any connections, any networking that you have, and we can work together to address this issue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: You were standing, hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sorry for my exuberance in standing to be recognized.

Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, it's an interesting day here in the Chamber this afternoon. I am a little bit surprised. I'd like to commend my colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek, who's been a long-time advocate on behalf of the need for affordable housing here in our fair land, and the good work that he's done in terms of reaching out to the government members and offering the opportunity to work together on such an important issue.

You know, one of the trademarks of the NDP, formerly the fourth or fifth party, whichever they were, was a continual calling upon the government to work together, and it's disappointing to see such an about-face. Issue after issue after issue we see an about-face from this government with respect to how they functioned in opposition and how they function in government. Mr. Speaker, I hope that if the Wildrose ever has the opportunity of serving as the government, we won't fall into the same traps that this NDP has with respect to, well, a number of issues, including points of privilege and saying one thing and doing another and all that.

But for today let me speak specifically about this motion that's before us. Just last week in the House, you'll know, Mr. Speaker, that I asked some very specific questions about deferred maintenance. Specifically, in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills there are currently 41 bedrooms that sit vacant, not because of the previous government but because of this government's inaction and their unwillingness to act and take necessary and important steps to have those facilities maintained and repaired.

While the government likes to talk about how much wonderful work they're doing on an affordable housing strategy, I don't know what can be more clear than when you have 41 bedrooms currently sitting vacant, waiting to be accessed by low-income Albertans, and this government sits on their hands while they try to put together a strategy. They have announced $1.2 billion in funding for low-income housing, a very, very important initiative, but what many of those people need today is action from this government. They need to go ahead and identify a problem that clearly exists, with the 41 bedrooms sitting vacant, unavailable for low-income constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, but they've decided to play partisan politics on a motion inside the Chamber instead of doing the right thing.

Let me just highlight for you, Mr. Speaker, some of the inconsistencies of members of that side. I'll quote from Hansard.

I am delighted to be part of a caucus with such strong advocates for affordable housing, including the Member for Calgary-East. Bill 202 [provides] the Alberta Affordable Housing Review Committee Act, which is in keeping with our government's priority for safe, affordable . . . housing. What I particularly like about this bill is that it addresses the complexity of providing affordable housing by engaging all the stakeholders involved.

My question today, Mr. Speaker, I guess, revolves around the issue: do members of that side of the House still continue to support Bill 202 given that today we have seen a very clear departure from supporting the things that they once said were important? That particular speaker, on March 16, was the hon. Member for Sherwood Park. She then said, "I . . . therefore urge all members of this Assembly to support this bill and to demonstrate their commitment to planning and action on affordable housing." I understand that that was before the strategy, but the question is: do they continue to support Bill 202?

I hope that the hon. Member for Calgary-East will be in her seat when the vote is called so that we will have an understanding of whether or not she supports a motion that essentially is a reflection of her bill. She said:

The aim of this bill is to hear from many Albertans and to take a big-picture look at this [critical] issue. I want to allow a committee to conduct a comprehensive review of affordable housing issues in this province. I want a committee to make recommendations that would make Alberta a province committed to housing security, a province where every Albertan has a safe, secure place to call home.

Mr. Speaker, that is a noble cause, and what I'm curious to know about today is whether or not members of that government will vote against Bill 202 just as they're voting against the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. [interjections] While the government would like to heckle the opposition because of the important work that's before the Chamber, they have shown a complete lack of respect for the dignity of this House just last week. It's quite possible, Mr. Speaker, that you yourself . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader. A point of order.

Point of Order Impugning Motives

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, 23(h), (i), and (j). To suggest that the government shows a complete lack of respect for the dignity of the House is completely incorrect with regard to – and I'm assuming that he's pointing to the point of privilege that was dealt with last week, for which we apologized, recognizing that it was an error. He cannot presuppose the other point raised by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, which is substantially different and a much weaker case, in my view.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the hon. member should not impugn the government's attitude towards this place and this House and our respect for parliamentary tradition. I think that it's unacceptable for him to be making those kinds of statements in this place, and I ask that you so rule.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the point of order I think what we have here is a very clear matter of debate. Last week this government was found in contempt of this Chamber, and I was merely referring to that fact, that the government is contemptuous of the Assembly. They've been found in contempt, and a case very well can be made that they show – they certainly showed then – a lack of respect and dignity, that the Assembly desires. So I don't have a desire to withdraw because what we have here is a matter of debate.

You, Mr. Speaker, found them in contempt. Contempt is often referred to as a lack of dignity and respect. In fact, I was using the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood's own words, that he used both inside the House and in a media interview in 2013, that we've spoken about at great length.

I'm more than happy to have you rule, and should you rule that it is a point of order, we can deal with that at that point. I'm also willing to continue my remarks.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a private member's – the Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: You started my speech, Mr. Speaker. This is a private member's bill. I think the Government House Leader, the most seasoned one in the House, knows very well that he's just trying to take time away from a private member's bill. I'm suggesting as politely as I can that you should rule this for what it is, a frivolous complaint.

The Speaker: Hon. members, what an interesting day. I'm hearing two things. First of all, a point of order. I'm not exactly certain that it's a point of order. However, I would also point out that the House did accept the apologies. It was considered genuine and sincere. I think it is inappropriate to be referencing that matter.

With respect to the second one, that is still yet to be decided. I have not made a decision.

I would encourage, therefore, that we return to the debate on the matter before us and focus less on the other legislative matters and more on the private member's motion that is here.

I think you were speaking to the motion. Is that right, Opposition House Leader?

Mr. Cooper: Yeah, to the motion. Mr. Speaker, I will speak to the motion.

In the name of not being as hot under the collar as one ought to be, I'll withdraw and apologize for my comments.

Debate Continued

Mr. Cooper: The point is, Mr. Speaker, that it is very surprising. The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek intends to add value to this discussion. As you know, a motion of the Assembly is to urge the government to do something. The motion is not binding. But what the government is communicating today is that the work of members of the Assembly who want to add value to this conversation is not as important as the work that they're doing.

Now, that might not be their intention. We've heard a number of them say that they support the intent of the motion, but they just can't support the motion. I think it's unfortunate. I think it's disappointing. I encourage all members of the Assembly, particularly government members, to reconsider their position, understand exactly what this motion means and requires of the government, and in good faith to support that.

Now, with that said, Mr. Speaker, I'm pretty certain that we're going to have a recorded vote on this, and I would ask for unanimous consent of the House to go to one-minute bells.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise to speak to private member's motion 508 on the topic of affordable housing, a subject which I also have some degree of authority on, having worked in the housing industry for many years and also being a board member for homeEd, the City of Edmonton Non-Profit Housing Corporation for six years. I find it unfortunate for the member who has proposed this motion, that in all likelihood was written many months ago. I must say that a lot has happened since the time that the motion was, in all probability, originally written. The Official Opposition and the third party seem to want to continue to talk about affordable housing. We want to build some. We want to get moving on it.

Now, since the late '90s, as other speakers have indicated and I can verify, the federal government was absent from the affordable housing file. The money just didn't flow. I know that we tried to get opportunities, tried to force the federal government to come up with money as housing management bodies, but the well was dry for decades, and it was impossible to get anything built as a housing management body because we didn't have a willing partner in the federal government. That's one of the things that we do have right now, a federal government which has funding for affordable housing available in partnership with provinces and municipalities. That has to be taken advantage of, hon. members. I think that not to do so would be a very unfortunate circumstance.

What we are looking at doing right now is moving forward and getting housing built right away. We don't need to go backwards into a consultation process that is already well under way, and by accepting Motion 508 that's exactly what we would be doing. We'd be leaving our hammers in the tool box. We need those hammers at a workplace, and we need those affordable housing units built or improved. Those people who are on that 15,000 waiting list need to be moved out of the situations they're in and into safe, affordable housing.

Our government understands the need for safe, affordable, and appropriate housing that is accessible for all Albertans, especially those who are most in need. As was mentioned before, 15,000 Albertan families are on an affordable housing waiting list, and they don't need to be forced to wait longer when we already have a process under way that will get us closer to the construction phase than if we were to adopt the policy proposed under Motion 508 and roll the carpet backwards into a consultation process which really is a duplication of what's already taken place.

Nobody underestimates the passion and commitment of the member opposite who proposes this motion about the affordable housing file. He's demonstrated over the years a commitment, but – make no mistake – we are committed to getting them built, making thoughtful decisions about how we move forward with respect to affordable housing.

Mr. Speaker, we agree with the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. Improving the province's current housing situation and ensuring a supply of affordable housing is a complex matter requiring engagement, consultation, and co-operation of public, private, and nonprofit stakeholders. The need for a strategy is clear, but establishing a special all-party committee to conduct a review of the current state of affordable housing, as the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek says, is not the correct method. I cannot vote in favour of this.

I'd like to emphasize that our government is already taking action in creating a provincial affordable housing strategy. In fact, our government's strategy is expected to be in place by spring 2017 and will help guide and direct the $1.2 billion in investment in seniors' and affordable housing. By voting in favour of this motion, we would be back at square one. This would leave the 15,000 Albertan families waiting for a safe, affordable, and appropriate home sitting on a waiting list for more time than is necessary. Given that the Alberta housing crisis is the result of inaction from previous governments, moving backwards on our government's proactive approach is not the solution. These families deserve better.

The demand for affordable housing has been long-standing and never-ending, it seems, and the opportunity right now exists where we have a willing partner in the federal government. We should be taking advantage of it moving forward, coupling the financing that we are able to produce in tough times to join that federal government money and build and maintain units that need the maintenance and build more as projects present themselves.

This is why our government has proceeded with extensive consultation on this issue through the regional meetings that were completed in June. These regional meetings included the participation of eight MLAs, including the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek's colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-North West. In addition, Mr. Speaker, the government proceeded with online engagement via a survey for Albertans that was completed in July. It was followed by a second round of targeted engagements, completed in September. The fact is that thousands of Albertans across the province have provided their input, and through this extensive engagement and consultation process our government's provincial affordable housing strategy will guide the development of an effective and sustainable affordable housing system.

Mr. Speaker, the time for action is now. The hammers need to be getting out . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but Standing Order 8(3) provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of the motion to speak.

I would invite the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, I'm greatly disappointed by the response. You know, to go back and make this partisan by talking about what a previous government didn't do is to me unconscionable, given the fact that we have an opportunity here to do what's right. It seems to me that we've been talking about 2,000 beds, which was previously 2,612 beds, and we're cutting ribbons for that. It seems to me that we're still moving ahead with capital housing grants that were done by the previous government and that we have not seen a lot of net new beds occur in this marketplace.

Yes, this is a time for action. This is a time for consultation. Even within the consultations being done by the ministry, it talks about housing providers, Mr. Speaker. We need to consult the other sectors. We need to work with the private sector, who we've partnered with successfully in the past, to produce not just hundreds but thousands of beds for seniors' and affordable housing. We need to work with the nonprofit sector, who is being challenged today by – guess what? – the actions of this government in bringing forward a higher minimum wage. I talked to one provider. It has cost them $921,000 of costs which are now coming off the plates and the services given to seniors. We are now bringing in a carbon tax. I talked to another provider. It is going to cost them half a million dollars of costs that are going to be layered on top, and that's going to come off the plates and the services delivered to seniors.

Mr. Speaker, this is a time to put down the partisan sabres here and to work with the private and the nonprofit sectors for the benefit of Albertans, not for partisanship, not to say that we're already doing something because what they're doing is talking to housing providers. They're talking to a narrow group of people that is not exactly what we need to do here, which is to partner with a broader sector, with the private sector, who bring expertise and capital.

We see the Resolve campaign in Calgary bringing millions of private-sector dollars to support the efforts for affordable housing and the efforts against homelessness in the province. We see the private sector partnering to bring beds, both subsidized beds and market beds, to the market. I think we heard from one of the speakers here today, Mr. Speaker, that mixed housing is happening already in this province. We need to open the doors, we need to have conversations, and we need to bring the best and the brightest people together from all three sectors to solve this problem as we should have been doing for years and years. We were doing that. They're saying that we weren't, but that was happening.

I was a part of it. I was in the industry. I was one of the pioneers of the private sector in working to solve the problems of affordable housing in Calgary. I was proud to be one of the first authors of an attainable home ownership program in this province, bringing best practices not just from across Canada but from around the world. That is what Alberta is about, Mr. Speaker: best practices, doing it, a made-in-Alberta solution that we can do here with the entrepreneurial spirit, with the innovation and the expertise we have here, which is the public and the private and the nonprofit sectors brought together and firing on all cylinders.

That is what we should be focusing on, not throwing grenades at past governments, which I was not a part of. I have come here to do the work for Albertans. I come here to make sure that we work together, that we can partner with the private sector and the nonprofit sector and not worry about ideological issues, Mr. Speaker.

Business can be a force of good. I was at a ribbon cutting with the Minister of Seniors and Housing just two weeks ago with the company I previously worked for building affordable and accessible housing, Mr. Speaker. I see it every day. I see it all the time. We need to work together.

You know what? It disappoints me. You've got a bill, Bill 202, and I've worked and I've spoken to the member and I've suggested some positive amendments, which I hope will be accepted if we get to that bill. Mr. Speaker, this might be all we have to work with if we don't get to that bill for any reason. This is a chance for us to put down the partisanship and to work together to ensure that that work that they say is taking place over here – so why not make it better? Why not make sure that we have the stakeholders from all sectors involved with this? This is not to bring anything to a halt. This is a private member's motion. This is meant to enhance what government does.

I hope to provide direction from all 87 of us here in the Chamber so that we can do good work for Albertans, so that we can talk about the homeless, so that we can talk about those people who are struggling to find affordable and appropriate housing and rental, so that we can give the hand up to people that want to move from rental to home ownership, which will save the government hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars in the future by helping those households to build simple equity. Those mortgage-paying jobs that we hear about so much: we need to help those people that have mortgage-paying jobs to actually pay a mortgage.

Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed if we cannot get support from all sides of the House on this particular issue here. I thank the members in this House. I even appreciate . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, your time has passed.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion Other than Government Motion 508 lost]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

10 a.m.

Tuesday, November 8, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning.

Hon. members, just bow your heads and contemplate or pray as you wish. Today our neighbours to the south of Canada will be exercising their right to determine the future leadership of their nation. Let us commit ourselves to the maintenance of our long tradition of friendship and peace with the American people, with whomever they elect.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 27 Renewable Electricity Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise today to move second reading of Bill 27, the proposed Renewable Electricity Act.

As you know, the climate leadership plan confirms Alberta's place as a progressive world energy leader by reducing emissions, investing in green infrastructure, and promoting innovation. This proposed act would help carry out elements of the climate leadership plan by creating the framework to meet our target for 30 per cent of our electricity supply to come from renewable sources by 2030.

Our government's measures to reach this target through the framework established by this act will bring important benefits for Alberta. It will facilitate $10.5 billion of new private investment in our economy by 2030, and it will create at least 7,200 jobs for Albertans.

Now, let's be clear about what this means for our electricity system. It means that 30 per cent of our electricity energy will come from renewable resources. This puts Alberta amongst the leading jurisdictions around the world. It also means that the other 70 per cent will come from baseload sources, mostly from natural gas. This is good news for Alberta's gas producers.

How would Bill 27 bring these benefits? First, it would establish a clear understanding of what it means when we say "renewable electricity." Then a key element of the proposed act is that it would create the legislative framework to meet our target of 30 per cent of electricity generated in Alberta from renewable resources by 2030.

We recognize the importance of transparency to Albertans, so the act would require the development of interim targets and mandatory periodic reviews of progress towards meeting them. These steps provide clarity and confidence for investors.

It would also define the process for the Alberta Electric System Operator, or AESO, to develop renewable energy programs that would promote large-scale renewable electricity generation using a competitive process while ensuring reliability of the electricity system. It would enable the minister to set the objectives and criteria for the AESO to develop these renewable electricity programs. Once a program proposal is developed, including details of the competitive process and costs involved, the AESO would submit the proposal to the minister for approval to proceed.

To ensure this competitive process is transparent and impartial, the legislation would require an external third-party fairness adviser to be appointed to oversee the competition and provide a public report. It would authorize the AESO to run this competitive process and, once complete, to advise the government of competition results. The AESO would also request approval of the quantity of renewables to be supported and the resulting cost. Based on this approval, the AESO would then proceed with awarding the support agreements to the successful projects.

The legislation would include a range of provisions needed to support this process. It would enable the AESO to take security interest in projects that receive support as this is the best way to protect the government's investment of carbon funds in case of generator default or insolvency. It is something like a bank holding a mortgage on a house. If a homeowner lives up to the terms of the agreement, the bank simply holds what is called a security interest. The bank only enforces the interest and takes ownership stake in the property if the agreement terms are breached. Similarly, this proposed act would enable the AESO to register a security interest to ensure a generator's compliance with this agreement. This provides the highest level of confidence that invested funds will have the intended result and puts government in the best position to recover funds in case of default or insolvency. The security interest would be part of the deal when projects successfully compete for support.

We've chosen this approach to protect Alberta's investment, but it is also important that the safeguards in place in the Electric Utilities Act continue to ensure objectiveness and independence of the AESO. This legislation would simply enable the AESO to develop these commercial terms if it deems them necessary. The AESO would then administer the contracts with generators and report the progress to government.

It is essential that renewable project developers and investors have the certainty that programs are supported by the government, in this case through reinvestment of carbon revenues from large-scale emitters. The legislation would make this crystal clear for investors. This would allow project proponents to secure financing rates which, in turn, will produce better program cost outcomes.

In fact, the provisions in this bill are carefully tailored to maximize the benefit and value for Albertans from our carbon levy budget. The investment certainty that will come from legislating our target will bring greater economic benefit to Alberta. It will also draw stronger competition for the program, driving program costs down. With investment certainty come lower project costs, better bids, and the most clean energy for the same amount of investment from the carbon levy funds. This is why we are confident the program will bring the lowest cost renewable energy to Alberta. These provisions would also provide the government with the ability to monitor the program, administration costs, and provide additional direction if needed.

The proposed act would clarify the Market Surveillance Administrator's oversight functions with the program, so it's clear that the MSA's traditional electricity market oversight also extends to participants in this program. The MSA's traditional oversight role is to monitor Alberta's electricity market to ensure it operates in a fair, efficient, and openly competitive manner. The MSA's oversight role will be extended to the AESO's implementation and administration of the renewable electricity program and the behaviour of the program participants and generators. In another measure to ensure transparency and accountability, the AESO would also provide an annual report of the program to the government.

Finally, the act would include amendments to several other pieces of legislation to deliver the policy elements and ensure overall legislative consistency. These acts include the Alberta Utilities Commission Act, the Electric Utilities Act, the Hydro and Electricity Energy Act, and the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. These amendments to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act would enable the government to require an environmental impact assessment or other narrower forms of scrutiny for wind and solar projects of particular environmental concern.

Mr. Speaker, this proposed act is part of an overall approach to implement the climate leadership plan. By supporting the development of renewable electricity, we will reduce our greenhouse gas emissions and ensure a greener future for our province, but our commitment goes beyond reducing emissions. We are committed to creating jobs and diversifying our economy. Investment in renewable energy will result in innovation and future economic security by encouraging growth in our green-tech sector. This proposed act would set the groundwork, demonstrating our clear leadership, promoting the generation of clean, renewable energy while ensuring reliable and affordable electricity for Albertans.

I look forward to seeing the support of this House in helping to move this important legislation forward. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in this place today to represent the interests of the hard-working families of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, to be their voice in response to this new bill before the House, the Renewable Electricity Act, Bill 27. I can honestly tell you that I've been waiting years for an Alberta government to come up with some kind of well-constructed, affordable, multigenerational, environmentally honest, financially sustainable, and technically sensible plan for renewables, and I'm still waiting.

Before us today we have another bill preceding a report from one of this government's hired experts. The members of this Assembly have not seen the Boston report, yet here is Bill 27, déjà vu from Bill 25, the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, which this government is currently asking us to pass without hearing from OSAG. It has become a bad habit of this government to ask the elected members of this Assembly to pass a bill without all of the information. It has become apparent that this government likes to give the impression they are consulting by appointing experts and panels to study this and that, Mr. Speaker, but this socialist government is only fooling themselves if they think Albertans are buying it. Here we have another bill before this House before anyone has heard from the experts. It's looking like many of these panels and experts are really nothing more than window dressing to give the appearance of consultation when, in fact, the government has already decided what the outcomes are going to be.

Well, I represent the dear people of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. These are intelligent people. I cannot support this bill on their behalf without knowing the mechanics, without knowing the cost, without input from the power industry or owners of our coal and natural gas resources, without input from Albertans. They need answers about the impact of this bill and what those impacts will be. Will it be affordable? Will it be affordable multigenerationally, environmentally honest? Will it be financially sustainable? Is it technically sensible? What will the liabilities be today and tomorrow and upon future generations?

Mr. Speaker, this government's contempt for democratic process is astounding. This government has replaced honest consultation with confirmation bias. This act will legislate the government of Alberta's 30 per cent renewable energy target by 2030 as measured on an annual basis. When I read that, I cannot help but think how this forced and arbitrary target will impact Albertan families and business owners. An independent study has found that Alberta's renewable subsidies could hit $8 billion by 2030. This $8 billion figure does not include the cost of coal phase-out or the social and economic impact this policy will have on communities like Forestburg, Hanna, and Keephills.

This bill is meant to complement this government's early phase-out of coal. That is clear. What isn't clear is the timeline. Maybe the Energy minister doesn't understand why the timeline plan for coal phase-out matters, but it is massively important, and it must be synchronized perfectly with the bringing on of renewable generation to prevent power shortages, leading to power purchases from the spot market at astronomical prices. It makes me wonder whether the Minister of Energy grasps that.

Alberta is currently in a state of significant oversupply, Mr. Speaker. At present Alberta has 16,261 megawatts of installed generating capacity. Peak demand in the 2015 climactic year, meaning October 2015 to March 2016, was only 10,982 megawatts. That is down, down a whole 247 megawatts from the record high of 11,229 in 2014.

It is recommended that a healthy grid operate with a 7 per cent overcapacity margin but absolutely no more than a 12 per cent margin. Well, in recent years Alberta has been operating with an overcapacity margin of up to 31 per cent.

Now, being 31 per cent over demand is a good thing for Albertan consumers and businesses. It means that power prices are really low, and low power prices provide a significant economic advantage to our industry, our commercial operators, our agricultural sector, and our people. Low power prices have benefited Alberta businesses, with a wonderful result of 78 per cent of our grid being industrial or commercial, and that means tens of thousands of jobs. We are competitive with low power prices.

In most Canadian provinces the industrial sector is much smaller, and power prices for everyone are higher. In provinces like Ontario it's connected to their overly ambitious renewable gamble, and they have been hemorrhaging manufacturing jobs because their power prices are making it impossible for many businesses to compete. That is known as leakage.

Inexpensive and reliable power is a cornerstone of any economic growth in any nation. That is why we see developing economies like India's building 85,000 megawatts of coal-fired power generation, utilizing J-Power's revolutionary clean-coal technology. They're doing so because it produces cheap power for a growing economy that needs to be competitive in a global economy.

Out-of-control electricity prices in Ontario are the result of out-of-control, forced renewable injections into their grid, injections not based on demand, not based on economic reality, not based on technical sensibilities but based solely on unsound ideology.

Make no mistake. Low power prices, a competitive, deregulated market, and energy reliability are all integral parts of what we commonly call the Alberta advantage. Jurisdictions with cheap and reliable power prices attract business.

Albertans keep hearing about jurisdictions that are moving away from artificially incented renewables or market-distorting policies that make everything uncompetitive and cost jobs. For example, France is ending its carbon tax. Australia ended its carbon tax. Germany is moving away from renewables and nuclear and back to coal. Greece is on track to get 1.75 billion euros in free carbon allowances for two massive coal plants, but they're burning lignite, of all things, emitting seven million tonnes of CO<sub>2</sub>, practically gutting Europe's climate action plans. I'm not happy about it when our far cleaner coal industry is being vilified by this Premier during her international junkets. Japan is moving away from nuclear and toward some of the cleanest coal technology yet seen, but we're not. What do all of these jurisdictions have in common? A population that demands jobs in a competitive global market.

This isn't done like Alberta. As a province we are facing one of the most difficult unemployment crises in generations. This policy in particular poses a great risk to Albertans of becoming a retractive economic policy. Instead of aiding in the economic rebound that is desperately needed, this will penalize businesses, homeowners, fixed-income seniors, everyone. This government continues to spin everyone on their diversification of Alberta's economy. Well, diversification requires an enormous injection of capital, ideally private capital, not taxpayer capital. You cannot possibly fund effective, sustainable diversification in a market where costs for energy are rising drastically.

This NDP government likes to follow the ill-advised economic principle of: if it moves, tax it; if it keeps moving, regulate it; and if it stops moving, subsidize it. But you cannot subsidize your way around high electricity prices. High electricity prices are detrimental to economic growth. Since economic growth is a core requirement of diversification, high electricity prices are detrimental to economic diversification. The problem with renewables, the way this government is bringing them in is that they do not like jurisdictions with low power prices.

As beneficial as these low power prices are to Albertans, the NDP has for ideological reasons introduced this bill, which is designed to force those beneficially low prices to rise. This legislation is needed because renewables cannot get to 30 per cent in a free-market situation. It is the intent of this legislation to drive up costs until prices are at a level where multinational corporations deem our jurisdiction worthy of being taken advantage of by their predatory, subsidy-seeking business practices. The legislation will artificially drive up costs.

A part of that will be taking coal offline. Mr. Speaker, in 2015 our generation by fuel-share breakdown according to gigawatt hours was 51 per cent coal, 39 per cent natural gas, 2 per cent hydro, 5 per cent wind, and 3 per cent biomass. This bill is asking for significant investment to bring up our renewable targets. By phasing out our coal assets 30 years earlier than expected, this government has done two things. One, they're artificially making room for renewables. Two, they are creating more investor uncertainty in an already rattled market. The phase-out of coal is central to this legislation, so why don't we have the results of the Boston report before we have this bill?

There are a number of economic risks associated with a 30 per cent by 2030 target; in particular, are Albertans paying for it on their tax bill or their power bill? And how much will it likely be? We have yet to have numbers from this government.

A related issue that's very significant is: how do we dial down coal? The significant increase this government made in June 2015 to the SGER levy has resulted in more than just lawsuits. The rash and ideological increase to SGER has compromised this government's ability to control the coal phase-out. Older plants, looking at millions that they will owe in carbon fees, have all the incentives they need to shut down early. Let's face it. You can have a timeline, you can have a calendar, but if these coal plants are hemorrhaging dollars, they will shut down prematurely. Then what? Half our load is powered by coal. Even with our current oversupply of around 31 per cent, the accelerated phase-out of coal leaves Alberta at risk of serious electricity shortfalls when the wind isn't blowing in southern Alberta.

Alberta is in a precarious position. Due to oversupply our current wholesale rates are too low to support renewables, but if we phase out coal too quickly, Albertans will face skyrocketing power prices and utility debt as well as potential shortages. How will this government manage the variability of renewables? What power source will provide baseload generation? Where is the thorough natural gas strategy to increase investor confidence? When will the Department of Energy reassure our natural gas generators that the assets they hold now are not next on the chopping block? I have been asking the minister for this for over a year now, with no answer.

Instead of a natural gas strategy, there is a bill before this House giving the minister the power to instruct the Alberta electrical commission to put regard for obtaining the goals of the Renewable Electricity Act above regard for whether the generating unit is an economic source of electricity in Alberta or for whether there is even a need for that electricity. Alberta's existing power generation investors, the ones that this province will be dependent upon for additional private capital, are unlikely to find any market confidence in that clause. The legislation is clear. The minister may direct the ISO to purchase, to pursue generation that is both not economical in and of itself and not demanded by the market either.

We are in a dangerous position in Alberta today when it is no longer required to consider the need for electricity before asking the ISO to encourage a project to be built. Without having to regard the economics or the need for an electricity build, Albertans are greatly exposed to an Ontario-style boondoggle of Ontario proportions. When the wind blows, Ontarians are giving power away to the U.S.

This legislation furthermore gives the Energy minister an ability to interfere with the Independent System Operator, unlike what we have seen in this province. The irony of this is not lost on us.

Mr. Speaker, to make matters worse, this NDP government doesn't even seem to be interested in working through the legislative process on this bill. The NDP has presupposed a decision of the Assembly by already requesting that the ISO outline the criteria for a 400 megawatt RFI. This government just cannot get the order of governing the right way around. We have not heard back from the coal phase-out committee. At the same time, this government has asked ISO to operate outside of its legislative mandate by asking the ISO to set out the parameters of a 400 megawatt auction of renewable electricity. This bill hasn't even passed. The mandate of developing auctions is outside the current mandate of ISO. That is, for the record, why we are here today passing this bill. A number of amendments need to be considered for this bill, and all the while the ISO has already been required to craft an auction outline for the government.

This government is acting as if the bill has already passed. In doing so, it seems to me, the NDP are once again presupposing a decision of this Assembly. This is the third instance in a matter of weeks where the NDP has demonstrated its disregard for the authority of this House, just another example of the NDP's brazen disregard for democracy . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order.

Point of Order Privilege

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, if the hon. member believes that this is a contempt of the Legislature – he needs to sit down, actually, while I'm making my point. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members. The point of order.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member believes that there is another question of privilege related to this, then he needs to make that or he should have made that at the first opportunity. He has not done so. But he shouldn't be just standing there and saying that we're in contempt of the House without standing up in his place and giving his evidence.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I didn't hear a citation, and, you know, I've been listening quite intently to the conversation. I'd like to hear where the citation is, what the complaint is for the point of order. There has been serious contempt in the House here, and I believe that the member was just stating those or mentioning those specific ones. I don't think he was introducing a new point of privilege.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: It's section 15 of the standing orders, Mr. Speaker: privilege.

The Speaker: Section . . .

Mr. Mason: Section 15.

The Speaker: You have something new to add?

Mr. Hanson: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, I believe, just to reiterate, that the member was referring to a point of privilege that has already been brought up and delivered to the House.

The Speaker: I'm sorry. I couldn't hear you.

Mr. Hanson: It's already been brought forward. He was speaking about a point of privilege that's already been brought forward and presented to the House and ruled on.

The Speaker: Hon. member, as you know, these point of privilege experiences, point of order experiences seem to have raised their head considerably in the last week on both sides of the House.

Hon. Government House Leader, I think your point was to the comment that – you believe that the comment addressed by the hon. member was with respect to the citation which is currently under review. Is that what you were suggesting?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously, neither of us has Hansard or the Blues with regard to that matter, to what exactly was said, but what I heard clearly was that this is yet a third example of contempt of the Legislature. Under privilege, section 15(2), it says:

A Member wishing to raise a question of privilege shall give written notice containing a brief statement . . . to the Speaker and, if practicable, to any [other] person . . . at least 2 hours before the opening of the afternoon sitting . . . before the Orders of the Day are called.

The hon. member has not done that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

I suggest, hon. member, that there was a matter with respect to this item that, at my best recollection, was discussed yesterday afternoon. I would urge the hon. member to speak to the substantive aspects of the bill and avoid those things that might cause some upheaval in the room. Please proceed with your comments, and if you would, sir, be conscious of the point being made by the Government House Leader.

Debate Continued

Mr. MacIntyre: I will. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that.

Well, to just wrap things up a little bit here, I think it's very important that when this government, any government, appoints panels, appoints experts to advise the government and this Legislature on matters that come before this House – to introduce a bill such as Bill 27 gives the impression and may even be the reality that there is a presupposed outcome. We have Mr. Boston, who is preparing a report that has a significant impact upon the content of this bill and how this bill is going to roll out and the regulations behind it. We have yet to see that report tabled in this House, yet we are paying a substantial amount of money to have this expert come from the United States to take a look at our electricity industry and devise a plan, and here we are with Bill 27 already rolling out significant – significant – powers to the minister, significant impact to the electricity industry, and we have not heard this report. We have not seen this report. We just don't have enough information for this kind of a bill to come before this House and for us to be expected to pass it. There's a significant amount of work that needs to be done on this.

The mandate of developing auctions, just a side note, as I understand it, is currently outside the mandate of the Alberta Electric System Operator, and here we are passing a bill. That does not make any sense whatsoever. There are a number of amendments that need to be considered for this bill, and all the while the Alberta Electric System Operator has already been required to craft an auction outline. Again, that presupposes that the government has an already determined agenda before we've even seen this bill. They've been giving instructions to the AESO as to how to proceed, but we haven't seen this bill until, you know, just now.

Mr. Speaker, they're getting the cart before the horse again. The government is acting as if this bill has already passed. This is not acceptable. We as legislators need to have information. We need to speak to experts. We need to talk to stakeholders, and frankly I cannot in good conscience support this bill, and I must implore my colleagues on both sides of the House to do the same. There is much more information that is required for this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak to this bill if I may. It's an honour to rise and speak to the Renewable Electricity Act. Let me be perfectly clear here. The bill, from my perspective, has several issues, and I believe that it is yet another bill that could possibly continue to hurt the people in Alberta.

Where do we begin? Let's start with the government's desire to ensure that at least 30 per cent of the electric energy produced in Alberta will be produced from renewable energy resources by 2030 as well as the central planning committee's ability to set interim targets in the meantime. Bill 27 disseminates zero detail on how exactly this government plans to implement its renewable electricity agenda, which brings me to my point: on what premise was the 30 per cent number mandated? How does the government plan on meeting this goal? How will the proposal increase electricity costs? All of these finer details, Mr. Speaker, are completely ignored and will put Albertans at risk.

Secondly, with respect to power generation how was this legislation co-ordinated with the coal phase-out? We know the government wants to eradicate coal-generated electricity by 2030. We also know that about half of the power generated in Alberta comes from coal. If 30 per cent of power will come from renewables by 2030 and if we are to lose 50 per cent of our power due to the coal phase-out by 2030, where will the remaining 20 per cent come from by 2030, especially if the population growth and, therefore, demand for electricity continue to rise? We all know that is bound to happen with the government's ever so successful job-creation plan.

Details such as these need to be figured out, especially if the minister plans on mandating interim targets for renewable generation in the meantime. I think it would be a great benefit to Albertans if the government for the sake of transparency laid out its climate plan in full detail, clearly stating its intentions and plans moving forward. If they had nothing to hide, then they would have done so already. This is concerning to me.

With respect to these interim targets it's another problem. Mr. Speaker, they are to be determined by regulation. It seems to be a very common theme. If this government had any semblance of a plan, interim targets would have been clearly stipulated within the legislation. This would in turn at least signal to Albertans that a clear path is in place. Instead, the exact opposite is true, again increasing the need for the government to disseminate in full its climate leadership plan instead of guarding it behind closed doors, away from the public eye. Albertans deserve to see all these details up front and have them debated in the Legislature by their elected representatives.

Bill 27 also gives the minister sweeping power to interfere with Alberta's arm's-length electricity system operator, eroding the independence of this organization. Let me corroborate my point by referencing various sections of this current legislation, beginning with section 3(1) whereby the legislation states:

The Minister may, from time to time or on a periodic basis, direct the ISO to develop a proposal for a program to promote large-scale renewable electricity generation in Alberta.

Section 4 follows by stating:

When directed by the Minister under section 3(1) to develop a proposal, the ISO shall develop a proposal for a renewable electricity program that

(a) promotes large-scale renewable electricity generation in Alberta.

When we flip ahead to section 14(1), the pattern of ministerial meddling continues, whereby the Minister may provide directions to the ISO for the purposes of enhancing accountability or the control of costs in respect of renewable electricity programs or renewable electricity support agreements under this Act.

Subsection (2) then goes on to state:

The ISO shall comply with any directions provided under subsection (1), subject to the obligations imposed on the ISO by renewable electricity support agreements.

I must say that it's pretty cut and dried, Mr. Speaker. The minister may provide directions, and ISO shall comply. It does not get any clearer than that.

Within this section it also references cost control. In section 14 the minister is able to provide clear direction to ISO on cost management with respect to programs or contracts. This provision apparently will allow the minister to have oversight and authority to make adjustments to costs of the program for the purposes of enhancing cost control. It would appear that the NDP is implicitly insinuating that this plan could in fact increase costs to Albertans. Why else would it include a provision for the minister to interfere with the matters pertaining to expenditures? Is the NDP government already doubting its plan? Albertans need stability in times such as these, not risky gambles, which is what this legislation is.

Given the aforementioned sections, can someone please delineate how AESO is any different than a government department? I am having trouble seeing the difference. The independence of AESO is questionable, given that the bill will enable cabinet to make arbitrary regulations with respect to renewable electricity in Alberta. The legislation clearly stipulates that in some cases AESO must comply with the direction it receives from a cabinet minister. I cannot help but think that this is another scheme, although less advertised, in the government's plan to centralize arm's-length independent agencies into departments. Who can remember AEMERA? I can.

Mr. Speaker, I want to discuss section 6 of the legislation, that discusses the so-called fairness adviser. It is my understanding that ISO must hire an external fairness adviser who will provide confidence to participants in the program by ensuring third-party oversight. This so-called adviser must be independently selected, not hired or selected by ISO. It must not have any direct connection to the minister's office nor ISO. Doing so would completely undermine the legitimacy of the organization. The preservation of legitimacy is crucial in circumstances such as this, and it is my hope that the government acknowledges this moving forward.

Now, turning our attention to section 13 of the legislation that states that ISO must provide an annual report to the minister respecting the contracts, costs, and other business aspects of this bill. I think the government is leaving out a key component to this report, that is jobs and investments either forgone or attracted by this venture. We hear constantly from the opposite members in the government buzzwords such as economic diversification, job creation, clean energy creation. The list goes on and on. If that is the case, I would hope the government is monitoring what it would laud as successes. Wouldn't this report provide the perfect means to do so within the scope of this project? It may provide feedback to them that their plan is not working. Just a suggestion.

Mr. Speaker, the net effect of Bill 27 will be to keep electricity prices in Alberta artificially low by subsidizing the generation of costly renewable power. Ultimately, this plan will wind up costing Albertans either through taxpayer-funded subsidies or higher power bills. It also undermines the independence of what was once considered an independent, arm's-length organization.

Mr. Speaker, given the litany of reasons I just listed as well as the many others that I have even touched on, I cannot support this bill, and I thank you for your time.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for demonstrating a significant grasp of the deregulated market. I would like to ask the hon. member to perhaps illustrate or talk a little further about the value of the independent nature of our deregulated market. Having been in this field for some time, I'm aware that our deregulated market was unique. It is the only one of its kind in all of North America. To have a province with no utility debt is unheard of, and it's as a result of the deregulated market. Could the hon. member perhaps illuminate a little bit further about the value of that and the value of having AESO being independent from political interference?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you. Well, thank you to the hon. member for the question. You know, it has given Albertans the lowest power rates in any jurisdiction that I certainly am aware of. Of course, my colleague from Grande Prairie here has echoed that, of course, with his experience in government. Speaking in regard to AESO specifically, it is very important for organizations such as that, if they are to be effective, in order to have that arm's length from government to be completely perceived as being independent by the people of Alberta – failure to do so will compromise, in my opinion, the confidence that the public will have not only in government but in the services that are provided.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Calgary-West?

Having seen and heard none, I would call on the Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act. I like renewables. I really do. Renewables are the only way to reduce – or not the only way but just one way to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and fight climate change. The fact that they're renewables means you can actually source that energy often. But they're not the be-all and end-all solution, and I have a serious problem with committing taxpayers and ratepayers to an unknown tab just to meet an arbitrary target of 30 per cent of Alberta's electricity generation from renewable sources.

Let's take a look at the renewables in Alberta. It's a little bit technical, but I just want to understand. We want to understand how this works. Solar power. We take a silicon wafer and use solar radiation, a photon, to knock an electron out of the orbit around the nucleus of the silicon atom, into the power grid. That's solar power, Mr. Speaker, and the price is coming down as new ways of manufacturing the panels come into place. People I talk to in Lethbridge and Medicine Hat are very pro solar but only if the solar panel manufacturers come and set up shop. Those cities don't want to just be the service centres for giant solar farms.

How about those giant turbines to capture the wind energy? Did you know that the average wind turbine is made of 185 tonnes of steel? That steel comes from the iron ore that has been cooked in coke, and the coke is carbon that comes from metallurgical coal, so each wind turbine needs a hundred tonnes of metallurgical coal to be built. If you like your wind farms, stop your war on coal or there won't be enough metal to make them anymore. Alberta coal miners ship our coal, the best in the world, away to make the steel to make the wind turbines.

By the way, people of the Pincher Creek and Crowsnest Pass areas of Alberta are saying: enough is enough. There are too many wind farms down there now, and the turbines and all the power lines and service roads have made a real scar on the landscape and the beautiful scenery there. "Please," they say, "No more wind power in the Oldman River valley."

Wind power has also been known to generate subsonic sound waves, known as harmonic resonance. There have been suggestions that as you get these sound waves acting at the same frequency as different organs in your body, a person can get sick. Headaches and nausea are the first symptoms. Usually the only way to get better is to move away from the wind turbine. Those are some of the side effects of these laws.

Need I mention the killing of birds and bats by wind turbines? Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you that there are a whole lot more birds struck and bats killed every year than there are ducks landing on tailings ponds in Fort McMurray, but no one cares about songbirds or golden eagles or insect-eating bats, just ducks in Fort McMurray. It has become a passion for everyone, a fashion for everyone to criticize Fort Mac and the tailings ponds.

Then there is hydro power. Dams on rivers build reservoirs and pass water through turbines in the dam, turning electromagnets and inducing a current in the wires. It's not much different from the time of Faraday. The problem with dams is that they disrupt the natural migration and spawning patterns of fish, so fish ladders have to be built lest the poor fish get cut up in the turbines.

Dams also often flood prime agricultural lands, traditional-use lands, and communities. I was at the Dunvegan bridge this past fall, where Glacier Power has proposed a 110-megawatt hydro dam on the Peace River. This project I understand has lost its development rights, but a new group, AHP Development Corporation, backed by Concord Energy, Bowmont Capital and Advisory Ltd., and several individuals, wants to install a 330-megawatt facility 15.2 kilometres upstream from the Dunvegan bridge.

We have very few places to install large quantities of hydro capacity in Alberta, Mr. Speaker. Besides the Peace River, some have talked about hydro on the Slave River, south of Pelican Rapids. I have a feeling that the Athabasca Chipewyan First Nation and the Northwest Territories might have something to say about that project.

There was also a proposal to construct the Meridian dam on the South Saskatchewan River on the Alberta-Saskatchewan border, near Empress. That project was largely an irrigation project. I wonder how much hydro power it could generate.

Biomass energy is also a renewable form of electricity. I was up past Athabasca this fall and visited the Alberta-Pacific pulp and paper mill; Al-Pac, they call it. Al-Pac has the ability to convert biomass into electricity and sell it into the market. Biomass is also renewable. The trees keep growing and keep being replanted.

But enough about the renewables in Alberta. There has been much progress made without Bill 27, many other proposals out there, before it or the rest of the NDP climate plan came along. I see scary things in this bill, Mr. Speaker, things like asking the ISO to "prepare a budget for each fiscal year" where "expenditures for capital assets [are] allocated over the expected useful life of the asset." This sounds like the language of a government going into the power generation, transmission, distribution business. I bet the power companies will have something to say about this.

The minister will now be allowed to interfere in the ISO when there is an interest in a generating unit held by ISO. "Any ownership interest resulting from the enforcement of a security interest, [can] be transferred or assigned in accordance with any direction of the Minister." That sure sounds like government investment and involvement to me. After all, the $10 billion or so in private investment to bring about the renewable generation will need some kind of government backing now that the PPA contracts debacle is scaring investors away.

If Albertans aren't on the hook through taxes, they will be on their power bills. I suspect both. We have had two decades of private-sector investment in our power system, though not without controversy, Mr. Speaker. Government did not have to spend the money for capital, and prices are pretty low currently other than transmission costs. The target of 30 per cent renewables in this bill is arbitrary, but more important is whether or not the generation is economic or not or needed. If the power is not economic, Albertans will pay and pay dearly on their power bills. If the power is not needed, it will have to be converted to heat and wasted or exported, and that raises the spectre of building a taxpayer-funded export power line.

In response to wikileaked diplomatic cables in 2011, when he was in opposition, the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation was on record saying that there is nothing necessarily wrong with exporting surplus power to the United States but that by hiding it, they are proceeding with a policy that will require Albertans, through their electricity bill, to pay for this transmission infrastructure, which is worth billions and billions of dollars. That was the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. He said that in the past.

So how about it? Is this a stealth plan to build an export line on the backs of taxpayers? Maybe the fabled NorthernLights power line to Oregon. Surely, an anonymous NDP backbencher over there knows the full story.

As my colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake said before, Alberta has 16,261 megawatts of installed generating capacity. Peak demand in 2015 was only 10,982 megawatts, down from the record high of 11,229 megawatts in 2014. Alberta already has more power generation than it needs, especially when the wind is blowing in southern Alberta, and this has resulted in low power prices for customers. So the ministry will be interfering with the AESO, which I believe used to be called the Independent System Operator. Fitting, as it no longer is.

The Market Surveillance Administrator, the person meant to watch the system and investigate complaints, will not be allowed to investigate any renewable electricity programs now. The Market Surveillance Administrator is being turned from watchdog into lapdog.

Mr. Speaker, this is dangerous stuff. The NDP is trying to make it unprofitable for the private sector to generate power in Alberta such that government will have to step in and implement a taxpayer funded – and warn renewable power plants to keep the lights on. And people's power bills will be going up soon.

I ask the anonymous backbenchers to turn on their government and vote down this money bill at second reading, before it saddles Alberta taxpayers with liabilities. It is not too soon before an election to see what direction Albertans really want to go on this bill, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Calgary-Foothills?

Hearing and seeing none, I would recognize the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak this morning to the House regarding this bill. I'd just like to preface some of my remarks on this matter, because of my presence here today in this House, and that is strictly to ensure that the House is aware of some of the situations that we're facing in southern Alberta regarding this particular subject.

As my associate and colleague from Calgary-Foothills just mentioned a few moments ago, I think it's important for you to realize that my area down south, around the Pincher Creek and lower foothills and eastern slopes area, Lundbreck, Cowley and points beyond, is already fairly saturated with turbines, power lines, substations. It isn't, perhaps, the case that I get complaints every week, but I certainly get many complaints every month about the number of turbines that we have there, the number of power lines that we've recently had to endure the installation of, and the effects they're having on the viewshed in southern Alberta, which seems to contradict the intent of the South Saskatchewan regional plan as it takes a lot of farmland potentially out of production and seems to conflict with the South Saskatchewan regional plan's intent and goals and objectives of trying to preserve viewsheds.

Having spent a considerable amount of effort in the past year and a half on creating a new park in the region, it seems a little bit of a conflict to try to be promoting more turbines, more power lines, more substations, and more harmful impacts to the beautiful area than we've already had to endure.

Mr. Speaker, anyway, to go on further and so on, I want people to keep that in mind, that there are a lot of local residents and local business owners, stakeholders, et cetera, that are not – not – looking forward to having any more of this type of infrastructure created in the area without the proper type of review and the proper type of discussion on the subject.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, if passed, will legislate the government of Alberta's 30 per cent renewable energy target by 2030, which is tied to the phase-out of coal by 2030, as we've all heard already. The bill grants the minister the power to set interim targets and to become more involved with the formerly independent Electric System Operator. The reason the government gave for the necessity of this bill is that it is hoped that by legislating the target, it will give investors more confidence to invest in our province. At least, that's what they seem to say. I'm flabbergasted, flummoxed, befuddled, and utterly bemused by that claim.

An Hon. Member: Really?

Mr. Stier: Yes.

And I'm mystified because since taking over as government in 2015, the NDP government's relationship with the business community and investors has been more akin to some sort of a war or a warrior's type of direction. If the government was so concerned with building investor confidence in the province, maybe they should have abandoned their risky ideological policies, that have resulted in Alberta's credit being downgraded more times in the last 18 months than this province has had in the last two decades. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, come on.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

A province's credit rating is essentially the credit agency's report card on the government's economic policies and a sign to investors of the confidence they have in our province. A credit downgrade is a big fat failure.

With policies like increasing income taxes, a 50 per cent increase in minimum wage, increases on the taxpayer, and the introduction of a carbon dioxide tax, it's no surprise that investors are rapidly losing confidence in this government. I don't think legislating unrealistic targets for renewable energy production is going to do anything to stave off further credit downgrades and investors' continued loss of confidence.

While I admit that the proposal by this government appears on the face of it to be a plan that's perhaps slightly better than the debacle in Ontario, let's not kid ourselves. Albertans will be paying for this. It still results in a whole pile of new capital, whether generation or transmission, and needlessly stranding coal assets at a cost of billions of dollars, which will result in consumers and taxpayers, everyday Albertans, being nailed with higher energy costs and more government debt.

Once again this Legislature is being asked to endorse a piece of government legislation without hearing back from the high-priced expert that was commissioned with the very task of determining the legislation's viability. Just imagine that. They set someone up with a task, yet they're proceeding without that task being completed.

With this quality of decision-making is it really any wonder why investors have lost confidence to invest in our province? I think not.

There are a number of questions I would like to pose to the government when the opportunity comes since the recommendations of the Boston report, advising the government on the cost and the timelines we're facing on coal, have not yet been received. This has been said time and time again this morning, Mr. Speaker. We have to obviously keep repeating that for it to finally sink in, I think.

My first question is with regard to the 30 per cent renewables by 2030. If the expert report this government set up isn't back yet – it's not until the new year, apparently, that it's predicted to come back – I'm very interested to know who determined that 30 per cent was a realistic target. According to a recent Calgary Sun article "there is virtually no chance of reaching this 'bold,' 'pioneering' and 'revolutionary' goal, if for no other reason than current technology can't produce that much power from wind, solar and biomass."

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to add, getting back to my initial remarks about my area, that there's hardly a week that goes by – and there are frequently times when there's wind. That is true. But there's hardly a week that goes by when most of the time there's no wind at all. How can they decide that it would be worth while to put in wind and solar when we don't always have wind, when we don't have solar? Even though they have the capacity in those turbines to produce a lot of power, how can you get that capacity out of them when they really can't be efficient because there's nothing to turn them?

The same article that I mentioned goes on to say that "despite decades of research, even the latest battery technology cannot even out the ups and downs of renewable energy." And that's what it's talking about, Mr. Speaker, is the ups and downs. These turbines, these solar panels can't produce constant, reliable power.

The hon. minister cannot actually be asking Albertans to believe that this ND government knows how it will get the 30 per cent renewably sourced electricity along with all the backups that that much intermittent renewable would need without putting Albertans on the hook for billions and billions in added costs. I again ask this government to please explain how you arrived at 30 per cent. And what is your plan to get us there? We've been asking this for months.

Another concern I have with this legislation is that Alberta's generation capacity is significantly oversupplied. Much has been said about this this morning in this House. Currently Alberta's generation capacity sits at around 16,200 megawatts, but over the last two years our average peak demand was just over 11,000 megawatts. As I just mentioned, this means that our power grid is already significantly oversupplied. How does this government plan to drastically increase renewable power generation in a market that is simply not open to new production while not causing Albertans to be left with a very, very expensive bill that's not necessary?

Our current power generation grid is set up based on a grid that gets most of its baseload in power from coal-fired plants. Unfortunately, these power plants aren't necessarily located, however, in prime renewable power generation locations. For example, most of the wind power generation is located in my riding, as we've just talked about. Has the government considered the cost of building all of the necessary new infrastructure lines it will need with a completely reorganized grid? Who, by chance, do they think will be paying for all these additional transmission lines? Well, I think we know who will be paying for that in the end, Mr. Speaker. It will be the taxpayer, and it's not necessary.

That leads me to my next point, an issue that has risen in Ontario, where the government rammed through similar legislation, which was described in a recent Financial Post article. "Despite warnings of harmful consequences by distinguished economists and professional engineers [the legislation] was adopted with unusual speed by the legislature, moving from its introduction to passage in just 11 weeks." Well, that sounds suspiciously like what this government is trying to do here, except it will be more like 11 days. Just imagine: 11 days.

While the opposition members are presenting their facts here today, it's well to be noted, I think, Mr. Speaker, that many of the government members are smiling and laughing as I make these comments, and I think that's inappropriate.

The article goes on to say:

There is no business case for all this green energy, as the auditor general has consistently shown, yet the government [has been] so forceful in implementing it that it took away from rural municipalities their planning and zoning powers, denying them any say in whether or not these intrusive projects would be imposed, regardless of local wishes.

This leads to my questions on: how will this government ensure that local municipalities and landowners are respected and ultimately consulted as the plan to increase renewable power generation moves forward? Where will these new wind farms go? Will it take good, productive ag land out of production? Doesn't this directly conflict with the goals and objectives of the South Saskatchewan regional plan? Will they receive proper compensation, or will the government instead enforce expropriation?

Mr. Speaker, the introduction of Bill 27 has made it crystal clear that this government is enamoured with the idea of a centrally controlled economic philosophy. Bill 27 apparently will empower the minister to direct the AESO or ISO to develop large-scale renewable electricity without considering whether there is even a demand for additional production.

Wildrose believes in a realistic renewable energy program driven by private-sector investment, not government subsidies. That respects the Alberta ratepayer and doesn't leave them holding the bag when this risky ideological experiment ultimately fails to deliver. Don't say that we didn't warn you when this happens.

Until this government is able to answer and address the serious questions and concerns we have with this short-sighted proposal, I cannot support this bill, and I encourage all of my hon. colleagues to vote against it here in second reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With that, I now move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 25

Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act

Mr. Panda moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Debate adjourned on the amendment November 3: Mr. MacIntyre speaking]

The Speaker: Is there anyone who wishes to speak to this matter? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as I mentioned earlier, we have a bill before us that we believe needs to be referred because it is unacceptable and, actually, irresponsible to ask any member of this Legislature to support legislation without feedback from the oil sands advisory panel. This government put this panel together, and as flawed as I think it is, it is a panel that is supposed to be deliberating on the best way to roll out this emissions limit. We have not heard back from them.

This bill really does need to be sent to committee. There are other players in the oil sands, Mr. Speaker, that need to be heard from, Albertans that need to be heard from, experts that need to be heard from that have not been consulted by this government. The purpose of this referral is to ensure that the democratic processes that are the strength of our democracy are allowed, to bring in these other people with important things to tell us legislators about this bill. They need to have an opportunity to speak to it. It must be sent to committee.

In addition, we need to hear what OSAG has to tell us. These were the experts this government claimed we needed to have as a panel to advise this Legislature and the government on oil sands emissions limits and how to roll them out. We haven't heard from them, yet we've got this bill.

Again, it presupposes that the government has predetermined the outcome of the OSAG panel. That genuinely undermines not only investor confidence but the confidence of the good people of Alberta in the government's actions. Look, we have a system of democracy in place, and this government seems to continue to disregard the importance of that process in crafting workable legislation for the benefit of all Albertans. We have standing committees whose intention is to be a forum for Albertans and stakeholders to come together and advise on legislation, to improve that legislation directly.

I'm going to just take a moment and talk about confirmation bias. It works like this. You surround yourself with experts and advisers who think just like you do and you don't consider any opposing views. We have a significant amount of confirmation bias being conducted by this government already. The purpose of the legislative committees is to allow opposing views and other views and people who think outside the NDP world view box to come to this Legislature and speak to us legislators about the bills that are before us, to improve them, to bring points that we haven't considered, that the government hasn't considered to improve legislation that benefits all Albertans.

That very wonderful parliamentary process is being shortchanged because this government just wants to push bills through, claiming that they're fine on their first iteration. I remember, Mr. Speaker, when Bill 6 was before this House how they confirmed and reaffirmed and assured us that first iteration was just so perfect – just so perfect – and they were not accepting any amendments to it. But when the farmers in this province rose up and said, "Hold the phone; we have not been consulted," the government ended up issuing, or was forced to issue, six pages of amendments to their previously perfect five-page bill. Well, here we go again with another perfect bill, Bill 25, and we haven't even heard from OSAG. We're getting the cart before the horse has even come out of the barn. It's just an empty cart.

Here again we have something that Albertans deserve far better than. Not only did the NDP not run on these policies in the last election; they continue to make it clear that they're not interested in the feedback from not only elected members of the legislative body but not even feedback from their own oil sands advisory group.

Second point. This bill is very far reaching. We're talking about a 100-megatonne cap. Well, as my colleague from down south just mentioned in his speech on Bill 27, how did that number come to be? Who recommended that number, 100 megatonnes? Was it just pulled out of thin air? When I look at the exemptions that are within this bill, I get the feeling that the 100 megatonnes was pulled out of thin air, and then there was a very loud: oops, we'd better exempt these guys, and oh, we better exempt these guys, and oh, let's exempt that one, too. Well, if we put this in committee, we may find that there's a significantly long list of exemptions that need to be put into this bill, and that 100 megatonnes may not even be the right number.

The cap is going to prevent current leaseholders from developing. We have already sold those leases up there. We've gotten the money from them. With this 100-megatonne cap it's a little bit deceiving. Correct me if I'm wrong, but I believe we're already sitting at 68. That leaves us about 30 to 32 in the window. So really what we're talking about now is that the existing leaseholders who have not yet developed up there have to somehow squeeze into a 30- to 32-megatonne window, but we don't have anything in this act spelling out how that remaining window is going to be apportioned. Not at all. There is obviously going to be a bit of a fight for the remaining 32-megatonne window. Is that enough to finish the development of the leases that these companies invested in, in good faith, giving good money for leases to develop these resources, and now this government is changing the game?

Sounds a lot like SGER and changing the game on the PPAs and having to pay compensation. Here we are again, changing the rules of the game with sales already done, money already paid, leases not yet developed, Madam Speaker. Those companies, if I was them, I'd be saying: "Well, you know what? If because of this change in law I don't get to develop that lease and I've spent hundreds of millions of my investors' money on it, I'm going after the government of Alberta for compensation." Is that what we're going to be faced with?

These are the kinds of things that should this bill be in committee we can have those leaseholders come to committee, and they can tell us their story and tell us the challenges that this bill is going to force upon them. We need to hear from all the players, not just the big four that stood on the stage with the Premier for a photo op. We need to hear from everybody that's impacted – everybody that's impacted – and we're not being given that opportunity.

Once we pass this, frankly, we are going to be in what's known as an oversold position. It's the same thing that frustrates every one of us when we go to see the doctor, you know, and he's overbooked or when we go to get on a plane, and it's oversold. Well, we have a situation where we've got a 100-megatonne cap, but we have sold leases that far exceed that.

Of course, I can't help but say that I think this would be making a certain Tzaporah Berman exceedingly gleeful because it's going to force some of those leaseholders to leave it in the ground, and that is precisely what ForestEthics and the people that support Ms Berman want to see. They want to see Alberta leave it all in the ground: coal, natural gas, oil. We're a resource province. We are a resource province, and we should not be stranding those resources, stranding those investments, stranding those assets.

There are billions that have been spent buying these leases on the assumption and in good faith that they could develop those resources responsibly. Although this government has failed again to do their homework, we have an opportunity with this referral to committee for the government and all of us to get the homework right, to listen to what other people, other organizations have to say.

We have some questions that need to be answered. For example, how are we going to decide who gets to develop their leases in that remaining 30- to 32-megatonne window? How is that going to be decided? Is it going to be a lottery? Is it going to be an auction?

They've already paid for the leases. What will these stranded assets for those who lose out cost Albertans? They are going to want compensation. They've invested hundreds of millions of dollars, and now they're stuck. It's patently unfair.

We've not heard any information or analysis on the potential legal risks. I think it would be a very wise and prudent thing for a standing committee to bring in some of the legal experts out of the patch. There are law companies in this province that specialize in the law of the patch.

Mr. Hanson: And some from B.C.

Mr. MacIntyre: And apparently some from B.C., yes.

We need to be hearing from them. We need to bring these experts in. They need to be advising this government and saying: "Whoa, boys. Put the brakes on here. You're putting yourself in a very, very serious position here, subject to enormous liability."

The precedent for payouts has already been set, Madam Speaker. For example, under the lower Athabasca regional plan, under the coal phase-out and Terry Boston we know we're going to be paying compensation in these things. We're dealing with a PPA situation and those pending payouts. There are already – one, two, three – three precedents being set, compensation over stranded assets, and here we go again. Here we go again. Every single time that happens, it is the taxpayer who gets that thrown on his or her back again. It's government mismanagement on an enormous scale, in the billions of dollars. We cannot afford this.

This government has demonstrated an astounding lack of business acumen time and time again, and what we're asking for is to hit the pause button, put this into committee. Let's hear from people who do have business acumen, who have legal acumen, who understand what goes on out there in the oil sands, hear from these experts, hear the challenges that this kind of legislation is going to put upon them. It is vitally important that we get this right.

We're talking about not just money. I know we talk about money and billions like it's just nothing, but you know those billions of dollars we keep talking about: that's tens of thousands of jobs, tens of thousands of jobs for Alberta men and women, good-paying jobs, jobs that pay taxes, jobs that put their children through university, jobs that support local industry. These are primary industry jobs that always spin out into two times and three times the number of jobs by the time you spin it out into an economy, and every time we lose a primary industry job, that's the retraction in the workforce, too. We lose those jobs two times, three times.

When we see a statistic that, you know, such and such a primary resource company just laid off a thousand men and women, we need to immediately think: "Oh, my goodness. By the time two years transpires, that's going to translate into 2,000 or 3,000 lost jobs." That's the impact primary jobs have on secondary and tertiary business. It is vitally important when we're talking about those leases up north that we get this right because we are talking about a substantial number of jobs for workers who are currently unemployed in this province.

This is either – well, let's go here. This bill is going to impact the development of one of the largest job creators in our economy to the tune of $150 billion to $250 billion in undeveloped assets. That's $150 billion to $250 billion in undeveloped assets. The sheer size of this thing is demanding that it go to committee and have a really good look at this thing, thoroughly. We're talking about the future of a whole generation of workers. Just think of how many generations it's going to actually take to develop those leases up there. It's going to take a couple . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to 29(2)(a)? The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I wanted to thank the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake for describing some of the main concerns. There are so many concerns. I do have a question for the member, but I would just like to reiterate a few things with regard to my question.

One of the things I have a hard time understanding and why I think it's so important that we go to committee is that Albertans are actually asking us these questions, and this is extremely complicated information, even for those of us who marinate in this every day. When we're talking to our constituents and the average Albertans that are speaking to us and asking for answers about this, it's very, very difficult for a person in my constituency to be able to say: "Well, I don't understand what the government is doing. I don't understand why the dollar figures that are being put forward aren't important and why there's no information coming to us about the excessive amounts of dollars that could go into absolutely destroying this industry."

The other thing, too, is that if you consider the fact of this need for speed on putting this through without actually having the panel advising us, Madam Speaker, it begs the question as to why would you, first of all, spend taxpayer dollars to have the panel come forward? Then the second question is: why are we not being given the advice from that panel? Whether we agree with who's on that panel or not, the government decided that these were the folks that needed to help make the decisions and advise on it. Now we don't even get the privilege of hearing what that panel says previous to legislation that will come forward from this House and then the regulations that will follow that we are not privy to. You think the average Albertan, just given that small amount of information, would require us as legislators to be able to go to committee to be able to ask those questions so that we can relate to our constituents what this government is actually trying to accomplish here.

I would like to direct my question to the hon. member, please, if he could explain. You were mentioning that we have approximately 32 megatonnes left over. Could you perhaps give the House a description as to who you think those very precious 32 megatonnes may end up going to? Because, quite frankly, we have many leases sold, as you had mentioned, many leases to many, many different companies. Does that mean that those folks who have already paid for those leases now have to lobby the government for access to those leases? Which would beg the question: who's going to win, and who's going to lose? I was wondering if the hon. member would like to maybe give us some opinions on who he thinks those leases might go to.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, it's an excellent question, but unfortunately it's an answer that we do not know. There are some things that we do know. There were four major corporations standing on the stage with the Premier, applauding her climate action plan, and I suppose one might think: well, are they going to be favoured in this? The sorry truth is that we don't know. This act doesn't tell us those kinds of things. There is no mechanism here for a fair, impartial, and honest apportioning of that 32-megatonne window.

We talk about megatonnes, you know, and we talk about billions of dollars. I want to bring this back just for a moment to jobs and people, Albertans. Not very long ago I was in Calgary for meetings – in fact, it was on Friday – consulting with oil sands companies at their request about this bill. They called me to come down there because they had some very serious concerns. They are deeply worried about this bill and what it doesn't include and some of the things that it does include and the lack of consultation that they feel about this. They were not consulted, the companies that I was visiting.

You know, as worried as they were – I just want to relate a brief story. When I was driving through downtown Calgary, what really impacted me was coming across dozens of unemployed workers wearing their hard hats and their blue-and-yellow coveralls, hoping beyond hope that somebody would pick them up that morning and give them work even for just one day. This is Alberta. I've never seen anything like that in this country. It does remind me of what I saw in the Middle East.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other speakers wishing to speak to the referral? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would like to say that it's a pleasure to rise today to speak on this referral motion, but truthfully it's not. As many of my hon. colleagues have already pointed out, essentially what we're looking at with Bill 25 is a cap on our economy. All that this bill is going to do is continue to hamper investment more across Alberta and continue to create further uncertainty in our energy industry.

Now, I represent a very large constituency, as you know, but it really relies on the energy industry as well as agriculture. If you come to Rocky Mountain House – I know that many people on all sides of the aisle in this Assembly have spent some time this summer in Rocky Mountain House doing some of the tourist things that happen in our great backyard. We do have one of the most beautiful backyards in the world. But if they'd had time to just look away from the mountains and the rivers for a little bit and look at the industrial yards in our communities that are full, at all the rigs that are racked up, all the trucks that are sitting there and the equipment that has not worked now in well over a year – for our neighbours to the north, in Drayton Valley, it's even more obvious, as you drive through their community, how much this economic downturn has affected them, has affected the community.

As my hon. colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake said, it's important to recognize that when we're talking about the economy here, it just sounds like big numbers, but back home this is people. This is people and jobs, families that don't know how they're going to make ends meet. They don't see any hope in the future. As we were talking to them at rallies this weekend, it became more and more apparent how much people have lost hope, and that's really troubling.

The other thing is that when you talk to the employers in our community, right now in Rocky Mountain House I can think of many who are actually bidding jobs at a loss just to try to keep their employees working. That's happening all over, and I commend them for that. When you talk to them and you try to find out what is going on, over and over and over they will say to you that the lack of trust in the government, the lack of security in investment is what's stopping us from getting jobs inside our province.

Why would the government want to bring forward Bill 25 at all but particularly at a time when over a hundred thousand people are out of work? We already know that our large employers are having trouble getting work, do not trust the government. They know that investment has been hampered. Why we would bring forward another bill that would hamper investment is troubling.

I think it's one of the reasons why this referral motion makes sense. It's time to bring it to committee because then we could start to hear from our largest employers, from the people that this bill is going to impact, and from the other stakeholders that are associated with it what the costs will be to our community. We might be able to make it better. That's the point of going to committee.

Why the government would continue to try to ram through legislation of this type at lighting speed is troubling. Most of my constituents, when they find out how fast the NDP government is trying to move legislation through the Legislature, are shocked by that.

Madam Speaker, I know that you know that when we do things through committee, we can often make things better. We can hear from the Albertans that it affects. I think it's troubling to think that you would expect – not you, Madam Speaker; you don't expect it, of course – that the government would expect members of the Legislature to automatically know everything and not have a chance or the ability to communicate with the experts in this field, with the constituents that will be impacted by this, with the businesses that will be impacted by this to see other solutions that can make the legislation better.

I know that over the summer there was a lot of work done in the Ethics and Accountability Committee that I think illustrates why this referral is important. As you know, Madam Speaker, throughout the summer government members spent a tremendous amount of time trying to move forward motions on taxpayers paying for politicians' expenses. The opposition was very much against that. The government members on the committee at the time were very much for it.

Now, since then the government has changed their mind, and I commend them for that. I think that that was a great decision. I would like to think that after months and months of argument inside committee, we were able to make the government realize what a silly decision that would have been and how Albertans would not have liked it, how they would have been impacted by it, how they would have been disappointed by it. That's an example of a committee working.

In this case to bring this bill to committee would again allow an opportunity like that. In some ways we may be helping the government from making a terrible mistake, as we did in the Ethics and Accountability Committee, which, I have to point out, Madam Speaker, I've never been thanked for yet. I think the government should thank the opposition for that and give us a chance to help them make their legislation better in the future.

Let's be clear. This policy is likely to result in the stranding of our oil assets – the stranding of our oil assets – but we're going to try and ram it through in a couple of days without talking to the experts and, as has been mentioned by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake a couple of times when discussing Bill 25, without waiting for the report that the government themselves asked for on this. They're going to move forward without even hearing the report. One has to wonder what they already know about what's coming in that report. What's the need for the speed? Why would we not allow experts to communicate with all members of the Legislature to make sure that we make this legislation better?

You know, experts are estimating that the losses to our economy on this in terms of cumulative value of loss of production will be somewhere between $153.41 billion and $254.74 billion. Now, I want to put that into perspective, Madam Speaker. If every pipeline was approved tomorrow, we would expect a bump of about $30 billion to the Canadian economy. Thirty billion dollars. That would be great. We would appreciate getting our pipelines built, without a doubt. But think about that in comparison to the numbers that are being predicted we will lose in production on our economy from this bill. That's significant – significant – a significant amount of money.

I know the environment minister right now is heckling me. She obviously, Madam Speaker, through you to her, clearly has no concern about the hundred thousand people plus contractors across our province who have no work, about the thousands of people in the constituency that I represent who have no work. That's not a laughing matter, and that's not something to heckle about. When we go back to our constituencies and we see people losing their homes, losing their businesses, having to take pay cuts at work, it's not funny. It truly is not funny. We've got full shelter systems, food banks that can't keep up with the demand right now.

Outside of Rocky Mountain House and Sundre this summer the forest reserve, which is usually very, very full on the weekends, remained full the entire summer. Nobody had any work, so they went out camping with their families, and they tried to make the best of the summer. It's not funny. It's not funny. Losing all these jobs is not funny. Then the government wants to pile on. This is why people are frustrated. This is why thousands of people across the province protested against this government this week, from all corners of this province. They're frustrated, and they feel that their voices are not being heard.

By referring this to committee, by sending it to committee, we are able to give them an opportunity to have their voices heard. That's not unreasonable. That's not unreasonable. Just like when the government tries to bring in policies or government members on a committee are trying to bring in their policies to line their pockets on campaign expenses, it's important to hear from Albertans. We had great results from that. So I would argue to you, Madam Speaker – and I know you would not have been for that, of course.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

Mr. Nixon: I argue to you, Madam Speaker, that this would be a fair way to point out . . .

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Point of order. Sorry. The Government House Leader.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Mason: Standing Orders 23(h), (i), and (j). The hon. member just suggested that the government members were trying to line their own pockets. Perhaps he would like to reconsider his words.

Mr. Nixon: Madam Speaker, that is a matter of debate. Clearly, within the committee . . . [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Members, please, could you just let the member respond.

Mr. Nixon: Clearly, in committee the government members brought motion after motion after motion, attempted to bring forward motions that would get their political expenses paid for. I actually don't even think it's a matter of debate. I think it's a fact. As for a response to the Government House Leader's point of order, it is not a point of order; it is a matter of debate. [interjections]

11:40

The Acting Speaker: Members, please.

Hon. member, I would encourage you to think about how you are talking about some of the issues and return to the bill in front of you and the referral in front of you instead of speaking about other committee matters and what has happened in the past.

Debate Continued

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I will, for sure.

The reason that we are talking about a referral motion to refer this to committee is because of the need to make sure that Albertans and experts can have a chance to speak to this legislation that this government is bringing forward. Let's be clear. This government is in charge right now. They like to spend their time blaming the third party for everything that happened in the past, but they've been in charge for almost two years right now at a time when, again, hundreds of thousands of Albertans are out of work. So if you're going to bring forward a bill that, again, will lower the economy, cap our economy, and make things worse in communities that I represent and you represent, then yes, absolutely, that should go to committee.

There is not one reason that this government has presented for why this should not go to committee. They have not presented any reason at all. They have not. This is just, in my mind, an example of the NDP trying to get their tentacles into our energy industry again. They've already made it so bad, and people are suffering all across this province because of their decisions. Yes, the price of oil is low, but we know that from the very beginning the government has done things along the way, similar to what they're trying to do with Bill 25, which made things worse, which is why we should send this to committee.

They are making things worse for people. They are scaring away investors, they're creating instability in our industry, and they continue to force through legislation, as you know, Madam Speaker, without, in my view, consulting people appropriately. We have many examples of it. The carbon tax: we can tell that Albertans across the province are saying no. Overwhelming numbers don't like what the government is bringing forward. How does the government know that Albertans feel the same way about this bill if they don't take it to committee and give Albertans a chance to speak about how they feel about this bill? That's what committees are for. Why would we not give people a chance to talk about it? I would like to know.

I would like to know how the government came up with the cap number. That hasn't been presented. Did we just invent that? Do we have any expert testimony? Do we have anybody that can present to us that that's the right number? How did we determine that number? It would certainly be nice to know that. I would suggest, Madam Speaker, that that's something that we could find out through committee, which is why we have a committee process.

Again, we are dealing with a situation where our largest industry is in turmoil, and it is having an impact on real people. We should be able to at least agree on that. It is having an impact on families who are trying to make ends meet. It's having an impact on families who are trying to pay their bills. Again, in Rocky Mountain House I can name dozens of companies who are taking work at a loss just to try to keep people at work so they can pay their mortgages. I talk to constituents every month who are losing homes all across my riding, and I know that the government members do, too. What I want to ask the government is why they would not send something like this to committee so we can make sure that we get it right, make sure that we're not damaging our industry anymore, that we're standing up for industry.

Bill 6 was a great example of why this is important. Bill 6 should have gone to committee. There's no doubt, from the opposition's perspective, that that was the right spot for it to go. There was no doubt that the majority of Albertans were against Bill 6 from the start. There's been nothing but consequences still from the adoption of Bill 6 across the community. We still don't have the panels done. We still don't have any of those things.

Why this is relevant to this, Madam Speaker, is: how do we know that this is not going to happen with this? How do we know the same thing is not going to happen with this. I know the minister is really upset, but let's hear why. Let's hear the answer to why this can't go to committee. We see time and time again that as this government legislates, they force it through too fast. They don't try to talk to the people that the legislation impacts, and they often make mistakes. At the same time we've seen through other committees time and time again that the opposition and the public have been able to bring forward good solutions to make the government's legislation better.

Mrs. Aheer: That's all we're asking.

Mr. Nixon: That's all we're asking.

Now, if this bill is perfect, then it would go through committee pretty quickly, I would suggest, Madam Speaker. If there are problems with this bill that are going to make things worse, then there are probably going to be some great ideas that will come from the industry, from the public, from the opposition parties, and we can make the legislation better.

Instead, we're here talking about forcing through a bill that every expert that we've been able to talk to so far says is going to hurt our economy, is going to lower our economy at a time, again, when over a hundred thousand people are out of work. Think about that number: a hundred thousand people out of work. And it isn't getting any better. I mean, we're almost two years into this economic downturn, and then we're going to bring forward a bill like this that the industry says is going to cap our economic activity, is going to cost more jobs.

We won't even take the time to send it to committee to find out from experts what's going on, if this is right, to find out if the number the government has chosen is appropriate, to find out how they chose or determined that the numbers inside this bill are appropriate. Why? I submit to you, Madam Speaker, why would we not send this to committee?

Now, I suspect that the government is not going to answer that question of why. I surely hope that they do rise and answer the question of why because I think Albertans want to know. I think they want to know why several junior oil and gas producers are worried that this will squeeze them out of the market.

Are we trying, Madam Speaker, to get to the point – I'd like to find this out through committee – where the market isn't determining what's happening in our energy industry anymore and instead the government is determining what's happening in our energy industry? I can tell you that the constituents that I represent want the free market to determine what's going on in our industry, not the government picking winners and losers.

Committees are a valuable thing. It seems to me that every time we talk about committees or referring a bill to committee, the government wants the opposition just to rubber-stamp their legislation. That is not our job. It is not our job to rubber-stamp your legislation, particularly when people that we represent are telling us that this is going to cost more jobs, particularly when people are telling us that this is going to cause more companies to shut down, particularly when people are telling us that it's going to scare away investors from our industry and from our province at the very time that we need more of them. We need to put more people to work.

Again, if you go to committee, Madam Speaker, we can get some answers from the government on those questions. We can also bring in experts who will be impacted by the legislation to speak to why this matters. I think we can all certainly agree that going to committee makes the most sense. The question, then, becomes why the government would not support this motion to bring this to committee, to hear from all the experts. I mean, I can't imagine that the government would be concerned about what the experts have to say. I think that they would, in my mind, want to hear what the experts have to say to make sure we get this legislation right for Albertans, to make sure we get Albertans back to work.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Well, an interesting speech from the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, and a beautiful town, Sundre. I quite like it.

Madam Speaker, I just want to address some of the points that the hon. member has made. He's talked about stranding resources. He doesn't talk about the situation that the province is facing now and has been facing for some time, where because of international pressure, because of climate change, which is real and human caused, because of the growing awareness of that in the world, and because the government of Alberta previously had not been serious about climate change, nor had it taken any steps to mitigate some of the harmful effects of greenhouse gases, it's very, very difficult and has been impossible up until now to get pipelines.

The problem with this, Madam Speaker, is that it doesn't just strand some of the petroleum resources of the province; it strands all of them. Because we are unable to get our product to tidewater, it places an upset limit on the ability of us . . .

Mrs. Aheer: So you're going to cap ethical production? You're capping ethical production.

Mr. Mason: I'm sorry, Madam Speaker. The hon. member is chirping away at me.

Mrs. Aheer: I'm sorry. I didn't realize I wasn't allowed to.

Mr. Mason: Yeah. Thank you.

Mrs. Aheer: I'll keep chirping.

Mr. Mason: The hon. member says that she's going to continue to chirp. Well, let her chirp, Madam Speaker.

The point of the matter is that without new pipelines there cannot be any substantial increase in production of the products that we have, so it strands the entire industry, Madam Speaker. It strands all of the resources, and that is something this opposition can't get its mind around, which is that we have to do something in an international situation . . . [interjections] Oh, she's at it again. She's at it again.

It strands all of the resources, and we can't increase our production, practically, at all. The international situation is what is moving us in this direction. It's the international situation that means that the opposition to Alberta getting its products to market is almost – we're almost unable to overcome it unless we can convince people, convince the world, convince other governments in Canada and outside Canada that, in fact, we have a serious plan to combat climate change.

We've seen that with this plan, Madam Speaker. Everyone from the President of the United States to the governor of the Bank of England to the government of Canada has seen that Alberta has been leading the world in terms of a climate change process, a climate change policy that's foremost in the world, which allows expansion of the production of our basic industry in this province, which is, of course, oil and gas. That is the accomplishment of this government.

I ask the hon. members opposite if they want to strand the entire production of this province and permanently landlock this province because of their head-in-the-sand approach to climate change? Is that really what you want, to stand up here and posture as the defenders of unemployed workers around the province? Madam Speaker, we all feel for those people, and we are all working to try and improve the situation so that we can get those people back to work, get those families back on their feet. That's what this government stands for, and we're going to continue to fight for those people.

But we're not going to do it in the way that the opposition would have us do it, by pretending that climate change isn't real. Now, they may or may not believe in climate change, Madam Speaker – I think it depends which member we're talking about – but one of the things that's very clear from all of this is that they don't want us to take any meaningful action about it. That is what they want. They don't want us to take meaningful action even though it means that we will strand all of the petroleum resources that are left in the ground in this province on a permanent basis. That's their plan for this province. That's their plan for those suffering families, for those people that don't have work.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members wishing to speak to the referral? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to point out that recently, when one of the members on this side of the House used the five minutes of 29(2)(a), the Speaker pointed out that that wasn't what it was for. Of course, we just listened to the Government House Leader go on a rant, a five-minute rant under 29(2)(a), where he talked about international pressures that have brought us to this point, where we have to talk about – we have to do all of these things that this government is doing.

Now, he did point out that the previous government wasn't serious and didn't do nothing about climate.

Mr. Mason: Didn't do anything.

Mr. Loewen: Didn't do anything, of course.

What I do remember is that the previous government spent $6 billion on carbon capture. I'm not sure what kind of benefit we got when it comes to social licence, that this government likes to talk about, from the $6 billion of taxpayers' money that went into carbon capture, which, of course, this government is continuing.

Now, he mentioned that it was impossible to get pipelines before. Well, that's very surprising that he would bring that up when this very government appoints people and hires people that are antipipeline activists, paid lobbyists for antipipeline organizations. That's what's happened with this government. They're going to sit there and point fingers and say: no, nobody else could get pipelines. But they won't take responsibility for their own actions.

We have the Member for Calgary-East, who stood up in this House and said all sorts of glowing things about this. Well, we've seen the signs, Madam Speaker: no more dirty oil. The Member for Calgary-East: I'm sure her constituents would love to ask her what she was referring to when she had a sign that says: no more dirty oil. What oil was she referring to, and what was she doing that day? What was she protesting? She was protesting pipelines, Alberta pipelines. Right here in Alberta she was protesting.

So can you tell me that this government wants to sit here and say that they support pipelines when they have done nothing but protest pipelines, just sat here and protested pipelines and hired antipipeline activists, paid them big money, Alberta taxpayers' money, to protest – and they're sitting here. We're supposed to expect that they're on Albertans' side, that they all of a sudden support pipelines, that they all of a sudden support the oil sands, that they all of a sudden support the oil and gas industry in Alberta? I don't think Albertans believe it.

Mr. Loewen: Not for a second.

Now, another interesting thing. This is about taking this to committee, where it can be fully investigated. We can hear from experts. We can hear from the public. We can hear from a multitude of people. Now, this very government – in fact, the House leader got up in this very Legislature for years and railed against the previous government about taking things to committee. What is he doing now?

An Hon. Member: Roadblocking.

Mr. Loewen: Roadblocking. Denying that there's any advantage to going to committee. But, of course, when you're in opposition: oh, it was great then. Now, of course, not so great.

He also mentioned that the U.S. government sees us as leading the world. Well, we have a U.S. election coming up today. The two main candidates running for the U.S. presidency: neither of them have spoken for a carbon tax. Neither of them. Governments all over the world are going away from this, and this government is bringing in – so I'm not sure what part of the world they're leading. [interjections]

An Hon. Member: Just build a wall, and hopefully the carbon will stop there.

I guess they think it's funny that Alberta has lost 100,000 jobs, and that doesn't include contractors that have lost their jobs and are underemployed, that aren't getting near the hours that they used to get. Now, this is the truth: 100,000 jobs. [interjections]

Yeah. It's interesting how the Government House Leader likes to talk about people on this side of the house chirping when obviously there's plenty of chirping going on from the other side, and that's actually from the ministers on the other side. Can you believe it?

The Acting Speaker: I'd just like to encourage you to speak to the referral, please.

Mr. Loewen: Actually, I presume that if the Government House Leader was talking about the referral under 29(2)(a), then I guess I'm still talking about the referral, too.

Now, this Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act is bad for our economy. It'll hamper investment. Companies don't want to invest in a jurisdiction that likes to put caps on things, change regulations in the middle, increase taxes. That doesn't give certainty to people with the amount of money that's needed to bring investment to Alberta to create those jobs. This government has done multiple things to decrease certainty in the energy sector.

Now, this policy is going to end up stranding oil sands assets. There are companies that have bought leases in the oil sands that now – the cap won't allow them to produce them. Because this government hasn't done any economic study on this – they have provided nothing to us. They've got a committee that's supposed to be working on it, but they're not going to wait till that committee responds before they bring this bill in and try to pass it, so we don't have any idea what this is going to cost.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I'm sorry to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2.1) the Assembly stands adjourned until 1:30.

[The Assembly adjourned at 12 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 8, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Hinkley: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of students from Maskwacis Cultural College. Now, they are not here just yet, but if we could give them the traditional warm welcome, it would be appreciated when they get here.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you students and accompanying teachers from John Barnett school. Along with them are their teachers, Peggy Wright and Kenny Babatunde, and their chaperones, Ubah Ali, Kostas Karayiannis, and Nadine Bright. If I could ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly students and staff and parents from a school that's close to my heart, Donnan elementary school. They are accompanied today by parent chaperones Jade Gray, Cathy McMorran, and Lane Whitten and, of course, by their teachers, Mr. Scott, Mr. Burke, and Mr. Peters.

Mr. Speaker, if you'd like to indulge me for a minute, I'd like to acknowledge that Mr. Peters was my daughter's grade 6 teacher when she was in his class. There are teachers who make a difference in the lives of their students, and I know that he made a difference in the life of my daughter. I am so pleased that he continues to make that difference in the life of his grade 6 class to this day.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly staff in the Ministry of Culture and Tourism: Margaret Stewart, Brittany Sapiuk, Adam Bentley, Shauna Coombs, Fahad Khalid, Tom Bernier, Matt Brown, Clarissa Atienza, Hilary Pittel, and Martin Sasseville. I invite them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there any other school groups, hon. members?

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of outstanding young athletes, coaches, and support staff who made Alberta and Canada proud this summer at the Olympic and Paralympic Games in Rio de Janeiro. These fine young Albertans showed us all what human skill, endurance, grace, and strength look like in action. Our province is home to some of the best athletes in Canada.

I am extremely proud that we were so well represented by Blair Nesbitt from Stony Plain, Katelyn Wright from Edmonton, Amber Strypan from Plamondon, Tammy Cunningham from Red Deer, Heidi Peters from Edmonton, and Ross Wilson from Sherwood Park. Joining us today as well are members of the dedicated Paralympic support team: sitting volleyball coach Nicole Ban, massage therapist Chris Petch, team operations manager Charlotte MacNaughton, and team manager Ingrid Ruys.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to point out that the sitting volleyball team made history in Rio as the first Canadian team, men's or women's, to compete in sitting volleyball at a Paralympic Games. I'd also like to congratulate Ross for winning Canada's first medal of the 2016 Rio Paralympics and for taking home silver medals in paracycling, individual pursuit and individual time trial.

I am confident that I speak for all members of the Assembly when I say that each of these fine young athletes, coaches, and support staff makes us proud to be Albertans and Canadians this year. We look forward to their many future successes. Mr. Speaker, they are seated in your gallery, and I invite all members of the Assembly to extend a warm welcome to this tremendous group, who made the 2016 Paralympic Games so memorable. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Welcome. I think the applause reflects our pride in each and every one of you.

The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly veterans present in the House to mark Aboriginal Veterans Day. John McDonald, the president of the Aboriginal Veterans Society of Alberta, is a retired chief warrant officer who served 38 years in the military, with service in Korea, a peacekeeping mission in Egypt, and two tours of duty with NATO in Germany. His wife, Myrtle Calahaisn, also joins him. Mr. McDonald is also the co-ordinator and recruiter of the bold eagle program, a summer employment program for indigenous youth conducted by the military in Wainwright each summer.

Wallace Bona is a retired corporal who served 26 years in the military, with service with NATO in Germany and two tours of duty in Bosnia.

Jocelyne Eastman served 16 years between the Royal Canadian Air Force and the Canadian navy. Clint Eastman served 20 years in the army and six years in the Royal Canadian Air Force. They are joined by their son Damien.

I would ask them to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A real pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the House four individuals near my hometown. While these hard-working students complete their studies, they're also advocating on behalf of their fellow postsecondary students, including foreign students, for improved affordability, for extended employment opportunities, and for reduced tuition. Representing the students at the University of Lethbridge are Cameron Howey, president; Hailey Babb, vice-president academic; Royal Adkin, vice-president, student affairs; and Michael Gale, vice-president, operations and finance. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three visitors from my constituency: Sherilyn Danis, Karen Popoff, and Bev Decore. Sherilyn and Karen are the co-managers of the Foundation of Administrative Justice, and Bev is an instructor and co-ordinator there. The foundation is a nonprofit organization that provides training to agencies, boards, commissions, and tribunals. It's a national leader in delivery of administrative justice training and education. I ask that all members join me in welcoming Sherilyn, Karen, and Bev to the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly individuals associated with the Myeloma Alberta Support Society. I can only name a few of these individuals, but we have approximately 40 volunteers, including patients, caregivers, family members, and doctors, taking part in multiple Myeloma Awareness Day here with us. Visiting us is the cofounder and chair of Myeloma Canada, Aldo DelCol. I'd ask him to rise. From my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud we have Robert Thiessen with the Edmonton chapter of the Myeloma Alberta Support Society, and from Calgary we have Norma Gilbert, president and caregiver, as well as Phil Unland, who's a patient in southern Alberta. I would now ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two of our youth leaders in the PC Party. The first, Emily Gilroy, has been PCYA president of events for the last two years, actively involved in the PCYA executive since her mid-teens, and has contributed an enormous amount of work to the party, especially since the May 2015 election. The second, Mr. Adam Brown, is the University of Alberta Progressive Conservative Association president as well as VP of operations and finance for the AUFSJ as well as serving PCYA VP policy for the previous year. Mr. Brown's grandfather was a previous member of this Assembly. I ask these two young people to stand as amongst the best and brightest in Alberta and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other guests, hon. members?

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Foundation of Administrative Justice

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, under the former PC government compensation and spending for Alberta's agencies, boards, and commissions grew out of control. I'm proud to represent a government that is committed to increasing transparency, fiscal responsibility, and having diversity reflected in Alberta's agencies, boards, and commissions, which is why the vision of the Foundation of Administrative Justice is so important as it ensures that individuals involved with the ABCs are trained and certified in administrative justice.

In ensuring this vision, the foundation, a nonprofit organization, prepares agencies and tribunals for their responsibilities by providing effective and vital training in administrative law and natural justice. The foundation also provides training for people who appear before decision-making boards. The training focuses on the best practices and procedural fairness. Training in administrative justice helps organizations write better decisions and creates more efficient and effective environments for decision-makers to work within.

All levels of government, adjudicators, unions, professional disciplinary panels, and indigenous people are examples of the people and groups that benefit from these courses. The foundation provides comprehensive education for members of commissions across Canada. The course focuses on interpreting laws, presenting and weighing evidence, holding effective hearings, and making and writing decisions.

The foundation was the first organization in Canada to implement a certification program for appeals and tribunals. Recently they launched e-learning to make education more accessible. To date 455 people have graduated with a certificate in tribunal administrative justice.

I would like to take this time to thank the foundation for their hard work and for providing legal training and educational opportunities to many Albertans. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The leader of the third party.

Job Creation

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to talk about jobs, specifically the numbers released yesterday by the NDP government. While it's impossible to dissect all of the wild claims made in yesterday's news release in two minutes, I'd like to take a closer look at a couple.

First, there's the claim that the government's capital plan has been a major driver of job creation this year. Every single public infrastructure project that produced a paycheque in 2016 was announced, planned, and funded by previous governments. To date no new infrastructure projects have been announced by this government. Even if they were to announce them all today, it would be two years until a shovel hit the ground.

Now, let's talk a bit about the increased drilling numbers. While I'm happy to see that drilling activity in Alberta has increased, a projected increase of 53 wells next year according to PSAC, Petroleum Services Association of Canada, my enthusiasm is tempered by the fact that Saskatchewan's increase is 240 more wells. That's four and a half times more new wells and four and a half times more jobs than here in Alberta. Saskatchewan has the same low oil price. I find it interesting that the government continues to blame everybody but its own policies for the difference, because the facts, Mr. Speaker, prove otherwise.

The rest of the highlights in the government's news release were mere estimations of jobs they hope will exist at some point in the future, like a unicorn. While I'm sure the government's crystal ball is in good working order, none of these jobs exist today, which is of little comfort to the tens of thousands of currently unemployed Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, after a closer examination, it's a bit rich for the government to claim that they were at all responsible for any of these new jobs. By my estimation, the only jobs that they can actually take credit for are the jobs that exist in their imaginations, like a unicorn, and the last time I checked, imaginary jobs don't pay real mortgages.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Multiple Myeloma

Drever: Thank you. On September 28, Mr. Speaker, people gathered from across the country to march and raise money to help fund research for multiple myeloma. This was the first march to take place in Alberta, and it so happened to be in my beautiful riding of Calgary-Bow. I would like to take a second to thank Pamela Roberts for bringing this important cause to my attention and for the opportunity to participate.

Mr. Speaker, today marks a very special day as it is Myeloma Awareness Day in Alberta. It is supported by the Southern Alberta Myeloma Patient Society, the Myeloma Alberta Support Society, and Myeloma Canada. These three groups provide myeloma patients and caregivers with necessary information and support and also promote myeloma research.

Multiple myeloma is the third most common blood cancer in Alberta, after leukemia and non-Hodgkin's lymphoma. In 2012 there were 209 Albertans diagnosed with multiple myeloma. This includes 127 women and 82 men. In that year 111 Albertans died of multiple myeloma.

As Alberta's population continues to grow and age, the number of new myeloma cases is projected to increase by 60 per cent over the next 15 years. In fact, at the Cross Cancer Institute and the Tom Baker cancer centre a large number of clinical trials on multiple myeloma have led to the development of new drug combinations that successfully shrink myeloma and extend survival rates. Thanks to increased prevention and screening efforts, new treatments, technological advances, and new research, more people are being diagnosed earlier, entering treatment sooner, and living longer.

I would just like to thank all of the people who came out today to support and raise awareness of multiple myeloma.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Nonprofit and Voluntary Sector Supports

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Volunteers are the lifeblood of Alberta's communities. There are almost 25,000 nonprofit and charitable organizations in Alberta. This sector contributes $9.5 billion to our GDP and employs 187,000 people. These volunteers and their organizations benefit and enhance life for all Albertans. They provide opportunities for volunteerism, connectivity, and caring for others, which creates self-reliant and compassionate communities. Charities do great things with enthusiasm and donations, resulting in minimal cost to government.

I commend the spontaneous generosity of Albertans. We are the most charitable province in Canada according to the CRA, but Albertans are concerned. The policies of this government are not helping in these difficult economic times. This government is taxing charities with a carbon tax, that will harm their efforts to supply struggling Albertans with the bare necessities of life. We have asked time and again for this government to exempt charities from this tax. We need to reduce costs on our nonprofits instead of increasing them.

As time goes on, it begins to appear that this government is against charities. Charities are saying that regulations are stifling their attempts to help vulnerable Albertans. When charities jump through all the regulatory hoops, bureaucrats create more blockades in the form of judgemental, subjective decisions on what charities can and cannot do. We need to create policies that help instead of those that harm.

Charities receive some funding by volunteering at casinos. In the north, with only one casino, the charity rotation is twice as long as anywhere else in Alberta, which means half as much funding. Such disadvantage only adds to the loss of service and decline of community viability.

I call on all members to support our nonprofit, volunteer ventures through public policy and private participation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Aboriginal Veterans Day

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to rise today to honour Aboriginal Veterans Day. It is difficult to know exactly how many First Nations, Métis, and Inuit people served in the two world wars and Korea, but indigenous people are believed to have had one of the highest rates of wartime participation in this country.

Many aboriginal veterans reside in my own constituency of Peace River. Canada's aboriginal volunteers often overcame cultural challenges and made impressive sacrifices to help our country restore world peace. Although many were awarded medals for bravery, they were serving a country that often discriminated against them. Equals on the battlefield were not always considered equals after the battle, and many indigenous veterans did not receive the same benefits other veterans were accorded, something the federal government apologized for in 2000.

Aboriginal Veterans Day, which began in Manitoba in 1994 with a private member's bill, is a day to celebrate the heroism and valour of indigenous members of the Canadian armed forces. It gives us a chance to honour remarkable individuals like Henry Louis Norwest, the Métis marksman from Fort Saskatchewan who set a sniping record during the First World War; or Charles "Checker" Tompkins from Grouard, who translated messages in and out of Cree to fool enemy forces during the Second World War; 300 men from Lac Ste. Anne who signed up to serve in World War II; Robert Berard, who always led by example, not only laying mines during that same war but by taking the lead as an 83-year-old veteran to raise funds for a memorial plaque honouring the aboriginal veterans of Alberta that was erected in 2004 in front of this Legislature Building next to the fountains.

Aboriginal Veterans Day also recognizes the everyday contributions, sacrifices, and accomplishments of these veterans and their families, who to this day continue to serve this country with honour. Aboriginal Canadians have demonstrated time and time again their great service and sacrifice for our country through their participation in Canada's military, particularly during times of conflict. In this season of remembrance we must never forget that.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

AISH Administration

Mr. Jean: There is nothing compassionate about a cold, centralized government that's more interested in paperwork than in taking care of Alberta's most vulnerable, but that's exactly what the Auditor General found yesterday in a scathing report into funding for those living with disabilities. He found a system that just doesn't care, that is clogged with red tape, leaving people waiting 200 days for benefits, a system that often doesn't even speed up for those facing terminal conditions, and he found a total lack of oversight from this minister. How is the Premier going to hold her minister accountable for this?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to the member for the question. I share his concern about the speed of access to AISH services for Albertans who are eligible for those services. It's something, actually, that has been a long-standing issue for me, and that's why one of the things that we can say is that the minister has already directed his staff to look into ways to streamline and to speed up the application process for the AISH system. Now, that's not the only thing to do. We know that more needs to be done, and we'll be looking at ways to improve the system for all eligible Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: In 2013 this Premier released damaging documents that she obtained which proved that under the PCs, the former government, wait times for eligibility status increased to 23 weeks, but now things have even gotten worse. Application processes are overly complicated, bureaucratic, and difficult to fill out for some of Alberta's most vulnerable. This is not compassion. This is a total failure of the previous and this current government to reform a broken system. Applicants are now waiting up to 24 weeks. Why hasn't this government done anything to improve Alberta's system?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I just said, the minister has already directed staff to come up with a program to simplify and streamline the application process. I would also go further to say that we have not done nothing. Quite the opposite. We've increased funding to AISH by roughly $30 million. Generally speaking, with the disability community the minister has been working very hard on getting rid of the SIS evaluation, which was a big irritant, and also coming to resolution with respect to the accommodation standards. As well, we know that we have stabilized funding for that ministry as a whole, and the member opposite needs to remember that we would not have a stabilized situation in that ministry if we went ahead with the $2 billion drop in operating . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean:

I could go on forever about how we . . . discriminate against the people with disabilities . . . because the very system we set up to establish their eligibility discriminates against people whose capacity to navigate that system is impaired by [their] condition.

That was this Premier speaking in this House in 2014, two years ago, so she knows the problem. It's the exact same system that she has failed to change, and her minister, according to the Auditor General, has no idea how to fix it. This is not compassionate. Why has the Premier done nothing in the last 18 months to fix our problem system?

Ms Notley: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I think I just outlined a number of things that our minister and our government have done in order to stabilize the system and to slowly get improvements in the system, because I absolutely reject what the member opposite has just said.

That being said, though, I think I just need to reinforce the previous point I made. One thing that the member opposite cannot suggest is that taking $2 billion a year out of operating expenses will do anything to reach the objectives he claims he wants to achieve, because it won't, Mr. Speaker. We care very much about disabled Albertans. We will continue to work to improve the system.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Jean: This government's ideological push to eliminate Alberta's coal industry comes at a tremendous cost. Thousands of Alberta jobs will disappear, entire communities will absolutely vanish, and billions will be paid out to compensate power producers for their stranded assets. On top of all this, Albertans will have to pay – get this – to import electricity from British Columbia. Can the Premier explain to this House and to all Albertans just how much wealth she plans to transfer to B.C. in exchange for Alberta to be able to keep its lights on?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, it must be, you know, that in honour of the election down south the member opposite is engaging in a higher level of hyperbole than usual. Nonetheless, that is what it is.

To be clear, Alberta already imports electricity from B.C., Mr. Speaker, so to suggest that that's somehow a new thing is somewhat misleading. What we are doing is working carefully with communities, and we'll be working with impacted workers to ensure a just transition as we move off coal to a cleaner renewable energy fuel, which will be better for all Albertans going forward.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: There's nothing funny about Albertans' hard-earned tax dollars.

Albertans have just shelled out $17 billion to pay for the transmission line overbuild authorized by the former PC government. It was an enormous, unnecessary expense, and taxpayers know that, and now the NDP is about to send more good money after bad. Instead of relying on Alberta's inexpensive natural gas system, the NDP's decision to import electricity from B.C. would mean that a new transmission line will have to be built. Can the Premier say unequivocally that Albertans will not pick up any of the billion-dollar price tag for this new electricity infrastructure?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I can say is that Albertans know that it is long past time for this province to get off coal as its primary source of electricity. It is time for us to move forward with our climate leadership plan, not only because it helps us with respect to social licence in other jurisdictions but also because it is better for the health of individuals and for the health of our environment. So we will do that, and in the long term it will pay off both economically as well as environmentally.

Mr. Jean: The Premier is giving away the farm so that we can import electricity from British Columbia over power lines that Albertans actually have to pay for.

It gets worse. This week the Trudeau government confirmed plans to ban tanker traffic off B.C.'s north coast. Goodbye Northern Gateway. A Wildrose motion to oppose the tanker ban and support pipelines in all directions was passed unanimously in this House, but the Premier has been silent on it. Can the Premier please explain why her multibillion-dollar plan to buy social licence for pipeline has only bought a licence to import power from British Columbia instead?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I think that the member may well be just speaking a little bit prematurely. But let me just say, generally speaking, that I'm very pleased about the announcement that was made yesterday by the federal government with respect to marine safety. I think that the federal government is making great progress with respect to meeting a number of the conditions that the government of B.C. had outlined with respect to ensuring safety on their west coast, so I'm pleased by that. I hope that as we all continue to work together to make sure that we protect the environment while still building our economic infrastructure, ultimately we'll get to success on the economic infrastructure as well.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Auditor General released a shocking report on the state of Alberta's assured income for the severely handicapped, or AISH. This report reveals serious issues with almost every facet of this program. Problems with appeal decisions, application forms, assessments, communication of denials, monitoring, prescreening, timelines, and transparency are just a few of the problems revealed in the AG's report. Can the Premier tell us: how has this been allowed to happen under her watch?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I said, first of all, to ensure that these things work on time, you need to have staff there, and one of the things that ensures you still have staff there is continuing to fund the ministry. Of course, we increased and stabilized the funding for that particular ministry by 2 per cent this year, quite a bit different than what was proposed by the members opposite. In addition, we increased funding to AISH by $30 million. We have made progress with both getting rid of SIS and moving forward on the accommodation guidelines, and we are now in the process of reviewing mechanisms to streamline the application process, as I've already indicated to the member opposite.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
First supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's interesting because in addition to basic accessibility, the AG's report also highlights serious concerns surrounding eligibility. According to the report bureaucrats within AISH are given insufficient guidelines for making funding decisions. They're also provided insufficient training, and as a result of this they're making inconsistent decisions. Apparently, it really depends on which day of the week a loved one fills out the AISH application as to whether they're going to be approved or denied. What immediate action will this Premier take to address the inconsistencies of the funding process?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the minister has already indicated, prior to the report coming out, he'd already directed staff to look at ways to streamline and improve the application process. In addition, we will look further at the recommendations made by the Auditor General, and we will implement all of them. We will move quickly on this because this is a matter we care a great deal about. To be clear, when we say that we care about it, we also match that with a plan to not cut $2 billion out of the annual spending of the government.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, on June 3 the Minister of Human Services bragged in this House about the improvement to AISH wait times, yet from this AG report, which uses data up to July of this year, it is clear that this is not the case, that wait times are actually increasing. Furthermore, the AG's report states that "the department does not [even] know what it needs to change to improve the program." No clue. Can the Premier explain how she will ensure that vulnerable Albertans don't have to wait 200 days to receive AISH supports?

Ms Notley: Again, Mr. Speaker, as the member knows, this is an issue about which I care greatly. As I've said before, we've been working on trying to improve the performance in this area and to streamline the process to ensure that we get better outcomes. The minister has asked for that work to be done. It will be done, and I look forward to reporting on the improvements to this House.

The Speaker: Thank you.
The leader of the third party.

Coal-fired Electric Power Plant Retirement

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, yesterday this NDP Premier, when asked about her government's faster coal phase-out, instead referred to the policy before she made things worse for Alberta coal communities. At a press conference the NDP blamed low oil prices and the struggling economy for their absolute failure to create jobs. They continue to point the finger at everyone but themselves. Alberta's coal communities know better. The Premier admitted yesterday in this House to not talking to communities and to hiding the Boston report from them and the families whose livelihoods hang in the balance. To the Premier: will you now hit the brakes on your accelerated plan and stick to the federal timeline for coal phase-out and stop killing Alberta jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to certainly correct one thing that was part of the member's question yesterday. I have been advised that the minister's office has been in regular contact with all the affected mayors that were referenced in the previous question, so you might want to check your facts on that one.

That being said, we are working diligently with both the coal companies as well as the coal communities to put together both a package so that we're not leaving capital stranded and, in the meantime, to work on a just transition, something that is long overdue in this province.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. McIver: Well, the Premier's call to the mayor of Hanna is like that unicorn: just didn't happen, Mr. Speaker.

Only one member of the advisory panel on coal communities is from Alberta. The lawyer hired for the PPAs is from British Columbia. Since the government doesn't know any good Alberta lawyers for the job and can only find one qualified Alberta coal expert to get advice from, including the people in the communities your policy will kill, this shows your disdain for the skills and abilities of Albertans. Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: with so little faith in the knowledge and skills of Albertans, how can you possibly be trusted to defend their interests?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Generally speaking, as we move forward on these projects, we look for people who have experience with the same kind of matters that are being dealt with. Now, it is true; we have not ever in Alberta phased out coal. Quite the opposite. Anyway, where was I? We burn 60 per cent of the coal for all of Canada because these folks could never get it together to find a way to move towards a more renewable, more sustainable energy sector. So what we need to do is look outwards for people who have dealt with this.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. McIver: There you have it. The Premier just said that qualified people in Alberta, like the unicorn, don't exist. We just heard it.

We know that coal jobs are the long-term mortgage-paying jobs for Alberta families. We know that oil and gas jobs pay the mortgage for Alberta families. Mr. Speaker, we know that installations of windmills and solar panels are short-term construction jobs, with few long-term mortgage-paying jobs attached to them after the fact. Since the NDP world view hampers or eliminates the industries with jobs paying Alberta mortgages today, please, Premier, on what basis do you call your so-called jobs plan just that . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as the member outlined previously and as he knows from information that's been provided in this House, in fact, our jobs plan is creating jobs. We are working very carefully on it, and we will continue to work on it. You can't create jobs by cutting billions from operating expenses. You can't create jobs by cutting $9 billion from capital. You need to work with businesses. You need to invest in the people of Alberta. You need to provide stability when otherwise there is instability as a result of international economic conditions. That is what we are doing, and we will keep doing it.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the Human Services minister. For many years MLAs and constituency offices have been hearing about AISH: the application process, the delays, the inconsistency in appeals. It requires too much outside help and is inconsistent and unfair. We've heard now from the Auditor General that the times actually have increased between application and decision-making. How does the minister reconcile his statement that application times have decreased and the Auditor General saying that they have increased?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I believe that Albertans deserve to receive the supports that they need when they need them in an accessible and timely manner. We have heard the concerns from Albertans, and we are working on a plan to reduce the wait times. We also accepted all of the recommendations that the Auditor General made, and we will make sure that they are implemented, wait times are reduced, and Albertans receive the supports that they need.

Dr. Swann: Well, perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the minister could outline what he's done since he took office to improve the wait times, especially since the Auditor General said that they've actually increased.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, we have increased AISH funding by $29 million to make sure that Albertans receive the supports they need. Secondly, as of yesterday we have improved the website. The new website is online, with a focus on plain language and making it easier and accessible for Albertans. I've also directed my ministry to look into ways to streamline the application process.

Dr. Swann: It all sounds very good, but it isn't improving the wait times, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the MLA salaries have kept up with the cost of living, when are we going to allow AISH people to keep up with the cost of living?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Member, for the question, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have increased funding for AISH, but due to our economic circumstances we can't do everything that we wish to do. We are absolutely committed to making sure that AISH recipients receive the supports that they need. It's not only the cash benefit. There are other benefits that are available with the AISH program, and we will make sure that we have stable funding to provide those benefits to all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

2:10 Apprenticeship Training Awards

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many students in Red Deer are receiving technical training from Red Deer College, but given that the downturn has resulted in many apprentices not being able to find work in their trade, to the Minister of Advanced Education: how are you ensuring that the government's future-ready initiative helps our province's unemployed apprentices?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to my friend from Red Deer for the question. We know that Alberta's tradespeople have been especially hit hard by the economic downturn, and that's why I was pleased to announce two weeks ago the apprenticeship training awards. This is $1.5 million to support apprentices to complete their technical training, and I can tell the House that I was touched by the words of a gentleman who spoke at the event who will directly benefit from this award. Without this assistance he says that he wouldn't be able to continue to progress toward earning his journeyman's ticket. There's no doubt that this award is preparing Albertans for success, allowing them to continue with their skills training and helping them find better employment in the future.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that these services must be accessible, to the same minister: can you explain who is eligible and how apprentices can access these awards?

Mr. Schmidt: Such a perceptive question, Mr. Speaker. I'd encourage the opposition members to take some notes. The last thing that we want to do is make our students jump through hoops to receive this award. That's why we've ensured that all eligible apprentices who aren't currently working in their trade will be contacted by our department. Once their eligibility has been confirmed, they can expect a cheque in the mail covering approximately one whole period of technical training. This award will be broken up into $1,000 awards for up to 1,500 apprentices to ensure that they're able to keep building the skills that they need in their desired field.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we have seen the challenges that arise when there are not enough skilled tradespeople, to the same minister: can you speak to how this initiative supports Alberta's economic recovery?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you to my hon. friend from Red Deer for that final question. First of all, we know that education is a cornerstone of a healthy economy, Mr. Speaker. That's why our government is working to ensure that Albertans are prepared for success, whether they're in the third grade or the third period of their technical training. This means providing a leg up to apprentices so that they're able to stick with their trade and complete their training. We're supporting Albertans to not only better their lives today by helping them become skilled trades professionals, but the apprenticeship training award is also great news for the economy as these are people who will be needed to support Alberta's economic success tomorrow.

Health Care in Central Alberta

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, last week I received a call from a constituent, Art Martin, alerting me to the fact that the cardiac stress testing and cardiac rehab programs had been cancelled at the Didsbury hospital. I am deeply concerned to learn that front-line workers have lost their jobs and that residents now will have to travel to Calgary for treatment. Worse yet, those residents will have to pay $500 out of pocket for treatment. To the Minister of Health: why is she cutting programs and front-line workers in central Alberta?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Our government is engaged through Alberta Health Services in a review of the programs that are being provided in order to ensure that we are providing the best health service that we can across the province based on local needs.

Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: Given that local decision-makers wanted these services to stay in Didsbury and are now concerned with forcing central Albertans to drive to Calgary for treatment, particularly heading into winter, and given that, to make matters worse, residents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills will now be paying the bill for both gas to drive to Calgary and now to attend TotalCardiology, will the Minister of Health respect the fact that cardiac stress testing and rehab programs were working well at the Didsbury hospital and reverse this job-killing decision?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the question. Our government is taking a province-wide approach to health spending as well as to health programs, ensuring that programs are available where they're needed based on the needs of the population. It is important for us to remember that the members opposite wanted us to cut billions of dollars from health care, which would make these situations even worse.

Mr. Cooper: Given that the cardiac stress testing and rehab programs aren't the only programs that have been cut at the Didsbury hospital and given that four ALC beds were closed just this summer, resulting in the loss of local beds and positions for front-line health care aides, will the Minister of Health provide assurances right now to the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that the writing isn't on the wall and that this isn't a long, drawn-out plan to close the Didsbury hospital?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Our government is committed to a strong public health care system that is available to Albertans when and where they need it. We are not going to make ad hoc promises like the previous government. [interjections] We are going to take a strategic approach to health care services across our province, and we are going to support health care where it's needed.

The Speaker: We were doing so well. The volume ... [interjections]
The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Police Street Checks

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Justice has characterized street checks, which is a practice known as carding, as police just having conversations with people in the community. Well, that view alarms me. Police must have reasonable and probable grounds to suspect an individual is connected to an offence in order to stop them. Randomly asking citizens for ID, recording their personal information violates their fundamental right against arbitrary detention. It's also a form of psychological detention because they do not feel they can just walk away even though that is their right. To the minister: how many police services in Alberta card their citizens?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, as the member would well know, the process of street checks or checkups can encompass a number of things. It can encompass carding. It can also encompass talking to individuals without asking for ID. The premise behind community-based policing is well known, and we will continue moving forward with that. We have been working very closely with the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police to ensure that we have guidelines in place around when someone can be asked for their ID and to ensure that everyone can be onboard with that program.

Mr. Ellis: Police must have reasonable and probable grounds.

Given that from 2011 to 2014 the Edmonton Police Service randomly stopped and documented 26,000 citizens and given that African-Canadians and indigenous people call this practice a form of racial profiling and given that last year the minister told the media that she had not acted on this issue because no one made an official complaint, again to the Justice minister: has anyone complained now, and if so, what are you doing about it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I think I'd like to begin by pointing out that the statistics from 2011 to 2014 were when the member's party was in government. Since we've taken government, we have been working very closely with the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police to deal with this issue and to ensure that all people feel respected in Alberta. Not only do police have a need to ensure that they're able to talk to members of the community, but people have rights to ensure that they know that that's not going to be based on irrelevant factors. We're moving forward with that plan to make sure that everyone feels respected.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you. I was a police officer during that time, and that was not my instructions to the people that worked for me.

Given that carding violates the privacy rights of tens of thousands of Albertans and given that research shows that carding results in institutional racism at the hands of police, to the same minister: will you direct Alberta's police services to stop the unlawful practice of carding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, I think the member will be aware that reasonable suspicion is grounds for detention, but in this case we're not always talking about detention. We're talking about a number of different practices, which is why we are working very carefully with the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police to ensure that this issue is addressed so that police can attain their objective of making sure that everyone is safe while at the same time respecting the rights of all members of society.

2:20 Fire 'n' Wheels Raffle Licence

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, after eight years of successful fundraising, AGLC told Fire 'n' Wheels the shocking news that they could no longer apply for a licence to donate raffle contributions to local fire departments in the MD of Wainwright. This money has helped local fire departments purchase rapid response trucks, jaws of life, and other life-saving equipment. That's been done for years. To the minister: why are the heavy-handed bureaucrats standing in the way of local charities who are just trying to support firefighters?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question. You know, whenever a charity has an issue with regard to how they're wanting to expend their dollars, they do talk to AGLC officials, and there's usually a clarification of things that go on. So I would encourage Fire 'n' Wheels to connect with the AGLC representatives if they haven't done that. If they have done it already, circle back again, and I'll also do that.

Mr. Taylor: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker, there was no real clarification to them.

As a volunteer firefighter I know the long hours these men and women commit to making our communities safe. Given that the government had the nerve to tell Fire 'n' Wheels that departments, not charities, should do their own fundraising and given that it's not always realistic, considering that these men and women have full-time jobs and young families, will the minister demonstrate some common sense and commit to allowing charities to continue fundraising on behalf of firefighters?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. You know, there are hundreds and hundreds, probably thousands, of charities in this province that raise money and are connected through either casinos or other ways, raffles like you said. The fact that AGLC is connected to all of them and it works all of the time, perhaps not in this case, means that AGLC is doing a stellar job, and I support them for it. But I'm certainly interested. If you have the information, please provide it to me.

Mr. Taylor: Well, thank you for that.

Given that we recognize the important role that firefighters play in communities across Alberta and given that Fire 'n' Wheels is facing an onslaught of red tape that is preventing them from acquiring the same raffle licence that they've obtained for the past eight years, will the minister commit to sitting down with me – and it sounded like you were saying that you might – and helping Fire 'n' Wheels obtain a raffle licence and cutting the red tape that's preventing the charity from purchasing new life-saving equipment for Alberta firefighters?

Mr. Ceci: Well, what I will say, Mr. Speaker, is that I'm always interested in supporting the charitable community and the work that they want to do in Alberta, as is this side. We are connected to charities. We are connected to serving Albertans. That side is backward looking. I'll sit down with that individual and Fire 'n' Wheels and check into this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

PDD Service Delivery

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Human Services. PDD service providers across this province are very concerned about the new template contracts, especially given the multitude of changes to the system. Providers need to be assured that community-based organizations with long-standing service to their community are not in jeopardy. Will the minister respect the strong community-based relationships of PDD service providers and work with them to create mutually acceptable contracts?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. We are working with the Alberta Council of Disability Services, service providers, guardians, and Albertans who are receiving PDD supports to make sure that whatever step we take is in consultation with that group. We have demonstrated that by conducting a consultation on standard 8 and by eliminating the SIS, and I will continue to do that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Orr: Thank you. Given that many opponents to the new contracting process are worried that it undermines service quality and destroys community-based service capacity and development that leads to stronger communities and given that other service agencies such as women's shelters, family-managed services, and some aspects of children's services have already been exempted, does the minister have plans to exempt PDD-funded service providers from the new procurement model?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Everyone deserves to receive the supports they need in a way that respects their dignity. I want to make it very clear that we have no plan of putting PDD services up for bid or auction. That's not the plan. Clients will have the choice of who they want to receive services from. We will work with the client and the service providers to make sure that Albertans get the supports they need.

Mr. Orr: Given that when we are talking about these organizations, we're talking about people on the front lines providing care to those with developmental disabilities and given that this government has mandated minimum wage and carbon tax increases that impact service providers yet has no plan for how they will deal with the resulting economic impact, what is this government's plan to deal with the consequences of their ideological policies in a way that doesn't force a reduction of services?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Our government believes that all Albertans working full-time should not have to live in poverty. They should be able to put food on their table. They should have shelter. If that's ideology, we are sticking to that ideology. Having said that, we will work with service providers to make sure that the impact of the minimum wage is accounted for and that Albertans receive the services they deserve.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Indigenous Youth Suicide Report Recommendations

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Six months ago the office of the Child and Youth Advocate released Toward a Better Tomorrow. This report looked at seven indigenous youth suicides and offered recommendations on what the government could do to strengthen its support for indigenous children and their families in order to prevent tragic deaths like these in the future. The report made 12 recommendations for government to address the issues and move forward with our indigenous communities. To the Minister of Human Services: could you please, sir, update us on how many of the 12 recommendations have actually been implemented by your government to this point?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Our government is very concerned by the incidents of suicide in indigenous communities, and we are committed to working closely within the government with indigenous leaders and community partners and the federal government to make sure that we have supports and safeguards in place for indigenous communities. My ministry is leading the co-ordination of the implementation of those 12 recommendations along with other partners in the GOA: Education, Health, Indigenous Relations, and Alberta Health Services.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Minister. The indigenous communities are looking for a number, hopefully towards 12.

Given that within this report number 8 dictates, "The Government of Alberta should ensure that mental health programs are more accessible, holistic and readily available in First Nations communities" and given that without a thorough and collaborative response this issue will get worse before it gets better, to the Minister of Indigenous Relations: could you please update this House and all Albertans on the specific initiatives that your ministry is undertaking? And, please, sir, what metrics are you utilizing to measure any and all successes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. As I mentioned, Human Services is co-ordinating the government response and working closely with Education, Health, Indigenous Relations, and Alberta Health Services. Mental health, certainly, is part of that. The work is under way on three initiatives. We are in the process of developing a youth suicide prevention strategy, we are also funding research on indigenous youth suicide, and we are also in the process of developing a cultural understanding framework. So there is work under way. We want to assure Albertans that ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Rodney: I was looking for a response from the Indigenous Relations minister, but let's try number 3. Given that mental health is an extremely complicated issue, which, fortunately, is beginning to be discussed publicly, and given that youth who are suffering psychologically may not be comfortable or open when speaking with parents and caregivers and given that the same report noted in recommendation 6 that "Alberta Education should develop and implement school-based suicide prevention programs," to the Minister of Education: are programs like these actually being developed by your ministry, sir, and if so, what are the estimated implementation dates? Because every day it could be another ...

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. Certainly, we recognize as a government the importance of having a comprehensive mental health strategy, that I'm working on in conjunction with the ministries of Health and Human Services and Indigenous Relations. We have been working very closely with school boards and also ministry-wide to develop mental health strategies that can be implemented both into the curriculum and into support services that we have at each school. Certainly, this is an important issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

New School Construction

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that the student population in this province continues to grow and that we will need new and modern schools to make sure that they are ready for success. To the Minister of Education: can you provide us an update on school capital projects, including how many new schools have opened this fall?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. In these past eight weeks we saw 32 new schools and modernizations completed. Many people, including members opposite, were invited to these openings. It's been a grand occasion for all. These schools benefit about 22,000 students, and we expect another 17 projects to be completed by the end of the year. We worked very hard to find efficiencies in the process to ensure that these schools were started and finished on time, and I'm very proud . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the changing needs that students and schools face, to the same minister: could you please share some of the design features of these new schools that opened in the fall?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker and for the question. I've had an opportunity to go to about a dozen of these openings, and certainly we can see the employment of very innovative design features as well as accommodation for programming. For example, Nelson Mandela school in northeast Calgary has an aviation program and a very open design, flexible classroom space which allows for team teaching and so forth. At Pembina North community school I saw a fantastic commercial-quality kitchen, a learning commons at Nellie Carlson. We're seeing innovation to build schools that are not just schools . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that schools are required to meet population needs, to the same minister: what steps are actually being taken to ensure that all future schools will open on time?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we've been endeavouring to bring up those schedules. We found that there were some building and budgetary problems that were getting in the way, so we have put $1.9 billion into school projects in Budget 2016. We initiated a detailed monthly reporting risk analysis and a pay-as-you-go plan to cut down costs. I can tell you that schools are coming in much lower than the tenders that we expected. We've saved millions of dollars in this endeavour, and we've brought up the completion dates to many more schools being on time.

Calgary LRT Green Line Funding

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, for some time Wildrose has supported the construction of LRT in Calgary. The former federal government committed 1 and a half billion dollars towards this green line project, but the NDP government has made no commitment to the project. The money is not needed right now and can be spread out over a period of time, so why won't the Premier commit to helping fund Calgary's green line LRT?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Well, certainly, we've had a number of meetings with the mayor with respect to this matter. We know that the council is very interested in it, but they are continuing to look at that and to refine costs. I am planning to travel down and have a briefing with Calgary transportation officials in the next week or two. We're going to do our very best. It's a very expensive project, but we're going to do our best to help the city of Calgary with that project.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given the city of Calgary formally applied for government funding for the green line LRT in January 2016, with a deadline of needing to know by the end of October 2016, and given that the city of Calgary will have to split the project into phases without partners providing stable, predictable funding, can the Premier give a clear answer to the city of Calgary? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation and of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Eventually we will do that, but the city of Calgary is still in the process of refining costs, and there's a lot of work to do jointly between Transportation officials and officials in the city of Calgary as well as politically between myself and the mayor. I want the member to know that we're going to get to a clear answer, but I'm certainly not going to give it to him right now. That's something we're discussing with the city of Calgary.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Minister. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the constituencies of Calgary-Buffalo, Calgary-Klein, Calgary-Mountain View, Calgary-Northern Hills, and Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill stand to benefit from the green line and whereas the constituencies of Calgary-Fort, Calgary-Acadia, Calgary-Hays, and Calgary-South East would also benefit from the green line LRT construction, to the minister: you have administered Mayor Nenshi's funding commitment deadline, so what's the answer to Calgary? I'm asking one more time. Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I've given him my answer, and I'm not going to change that, only suggest, however, that the Wildrose Party in their platform promised to reduce capital spending over five years by $9 billion. If they get into power, God forbid, there will be no green line.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Forest Industry Issues

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The forest industry is one of Alberta's strongest industries and could lead the province in diversification along with the agricultural industry, but as with what happened in the energy industry, uncertainty will drive investment out of the province, uncertainty in timber supply and uncertainty in the market, because the softwood lumber agreement has ended. To the minister: given that the government is planning on increasing the cutblock retention from 5 per cent to 10 per cent, how will the government assure certainty in the forest companies' timber supply?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I will thank the member for the question. Our government very much supports the forestry sector here in Alberta. In fact, as we speak, the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry is in Asia with a number of forestry and agricultural companies looking at opportunities to increase our exports and our capacity to export to other markets. I look forward to talking a little bit about the state of the softwood lumber agreement in the next response.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the forestry industry is dependent upon their timber allocations to maintain strong businesses and given that they operate on an expected size of timber allocation, to the minister: with your latest plan to restore caribou habitat in Little Smoky and A La Pêche, will your protection plans for caribou rangelands result in decreased timber supply and uncertainty for Alberta's forest industry?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Certainly, Alberta must move forward with a range plan by October 2017, so that's why we're taking the time to get it right. We have put forward a draft, and I emphasize that word "draft." We are going to be speaking further once we are out of the duties of this House and go and speak to communities about that draft. But the fact of the matter remains that if we do not have a range plan filed by October of next year, one will be imposed on us by the federal government, and that is simply not a situation that is good for Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not much certainty in the first two questions.

Given the predicament with the mountain pine beetle destroying the same timber supplies, the lichen that caribou eats and given that both these could decrease timber supplies, to the minister: what are you doing to make sure that your healthy pine strategy does not affect timber supply certainty for Alberta's forest producers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We certainly know that mountain pine beetles remain a grave threat to the health of Alberta forests. In 2015-16 our government spent $35 million to combat the mountain pine beetle, and we are working to minimize the spread of beetles north and south along the eastern slopes and to prevent beetles from spreading further east in the boreal forest. The spread of the mountain pine beetle has not been as significant as we were anticipating, and this is thanks to the weather and the good work done by the ministry. We will continue to push the federal government for assistance in fighting mountain pine beetle in the Hinton area. We understand this concern. We're listening to producers, and we...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Marijuana Legalization

Ms Goehring: Mr. Speaker, given that the federal government has committed to legalizing marijuana and given that this will impact various areas of our communities, to the Minister of Justice, who recently travelled to Colorado to learn about the issue: how will the government tackle the issue of selling edibles and candies that contain marijuana?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. I want to begin by thanking officials in Colorado for sharing their knowledge in terms of what they've learned from the legalization of marijuana.

Our priority continues to be the safety of children and of our roads. This will require us to move forward very carefully, ensuring that there is strict monitoring of ingredients that go into edible products so that people know exactly what they're getting and regulation around packaging and design as well as childproofing and the shape that candies can be in.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Denver has seen a spike in the number of marijuana-impaired driving cases, to the same minister: what is the government doing to ensure roads are kept safe when marijuana is legalized?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Road safety is critical at all times and particularly in light of the legalization of marijuana that's coming. Despite the fact that Colorado has seen a significant increase in marijuana-impaired driving, those cases are still a very small percentage of the overall impaired driving cases that they're witnessing in that state. I think all Albertans need to keep in mind that driving while impaired by any drug is dangerous and illegal.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how is the government addressing concerns over where marijuana dispensaries would be located once it is legalized?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, one of the critical factors as we move forward on this plan is ensuring that our children are safe. We will be working with all levels of government to ensure that the right regulation is in place to ensure that this is kept away from schools. Depending on how the federal government ultimately decides to move on this issue, we will step in, and we will work with all levels of government to ensure that children are kept safe.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

I understand that the Government House Leader has a supplemental piece of information.

Capital Infrastructure Funding

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes. I want to supplement my response from yesterday to the Member for Calgary-Greenway. We're creating 8,000 jobs this year from enhanced infrastructure investment. Under our government funding has increased by approximately 15 per cent, several major projects, including the $80 million Gaetz-QE II interchange project in Red Deer, which will support 300 jobs; the University of Lethbridge destination project, which we are accelerating and providing increased funding for; postsecondary facilities like NorQuest, which had seen capital spending cut by the previous government by $16 million. This employs 170 workers per month.

We've also doubled what was spent on capital maintenance and renewal by the previous government, going from ...*

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: I appreciate the answer, the additional information, Mr. Speaker, from the hon. minister. But he mentioned just now about doubling the expenditure on capital maintenance. On the average condition of the infrastructure will you have higher or lower percentages of good and poor infrastructure after you do that capital spending?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that question, hon. member. We've seen, in fact, a deterioration in the quality of many roads in the province as a result of the previous government reducing expenditures on capital maintenance, and it's very much a challenge. Alberta has more kilometres of roads than any other province. In fact, the previous government took in secondary roads from rural municipalities, so we have more roads to deal with. I'm not sure that even this will fully restore that, but we're doing our very best, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Government Policies

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The generally accepted definition of a recession is two consecutive quarters of economic decline, and no one disputes that Alberta is in one of the worst recessions since the 1980s. Over the past 12 months well over 100,000 full-time jobs have been lost. That number increases drastically when you include contractors. Getting Albertans back to work shouldn't be a priority; it should be the priority. Yet, inexplicably, Alberta does not even have a comprehensive job plan despite repeated efforts by the opposition to get the government to adopt our recommendations.

Just what has this government been doing over the last year? Well, the NDP has continued to appoint party insiders to nonpartisan posts. It has been engaged in cash-for-access fundraisers in Ontario. Just this fall they spent 20,000 taxpayer dollars on a partisan, invite-only, campaign-style event. More than that, last week this government was held in contempt of the Legislature for spending a half million dollars on a taxpayer-funded advertisement. After ramming Bill 6 through the Legislature and blocking a study of the carbon tax on farmers, the NDP has seen fit to dispatch the agriculture minister on a series of international junkets. While health care wait-lists and rural ambulance wait times continue to grow, this government is actively implementing policies that make health care more expensive at the behest of their union friends, all the while voting down a motion to bring greater transparency and clarity to AHS.

This is my favourite, Mr. Speaker. Over the summer the NDP committee announced their intentions to require direct, political-party funding from taxpayers. That's right. NDP MLAs spent the summer fighting to line their campaign pockets with taxpayer money in the form of reimbursed campaign expenses.

I know Wildrose will be debating hard to help get Albertans back to work, but when it comes to the definition of self-serving government, Mr. Speaker, clearly there is no debate.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta and Minister of Status of Women.

Bill 29

Vital Statistics and Life Events Modernization Act

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce Bill 29, the Vital Statistics and Life Events Modernization Act.

Vital statistics services are essential. There are over 60 amendments proposed in this legislation, the response to Albertans' expectations for modern services and an inclusive, compassionate approach to major life events.

I urge all members of this House to support this legislation. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and request leave to introduce Bill 30, the Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of the bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

This bill will enable government to establish two tax credits that, taken together, will drive innovation, diversify our economy, and create jobs. One credit will bring Alberta investors and small businesses together while the other will help ensure that Alberta is attractive and competitive for larger capital investments. By encouraging investment in new products and services and capital projects, the tax credits will offer increased opportunities for more economic activity, diversification, and employment growth. Introducing these measures at a time when businesses are facing challenges will make Alberta more competitive in attracting and retaining investments while creating much needed jobs. Together these tax credits provide significant support to Alberta businesses when they need it most.

This legislation will ensure that the government continues to promote economic diversification, support employers and entrepreneurs in creating jobs, and encourage investment in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to table five copies of a January 15 article from Maclean's titled Stephen Harper: Oil's Worst Enemy, that I quoted in my Bill 25 speech on November 7, 2016. This article quotes many industry executives who see the value of having a price on carbon while arguing that the Harper federal government sent Canada down the wrong path when it came to providing environmental leadership.

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite five copies of the Alberta jobs plan report. This report provides an update on some of the key economic initiatives and outcomes that have been achieved by our government as part of the Alberta jobs plan to date.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any other tablings or returns, hon. members?

Hon. members, I'd like to table for the information of members a copy of a letter I received from the Government House Leader at 12:56 p.m. today in connection with the purported question of privilege that was argued yesterday in the Assembly.

Privilege

The Speaker: Hon. members, I am prepared to rule on the purported question of privilege that was argued yesterday. Before I deliver my ruling, I want to alert members that although I did receive a statement from the Government House Leader shortly before the Assembly reconvened this afternoon, there was no new information nor additional citations offered, and I want to assure members that that information played no part in my ruling.

On November 3 the House leader for the third party raised a purported question of privilege in regard to comments made by the Minister of Environment and Parks describing the government's renewable electricity program prior to the introduction of Bill 27 in this Assembly. Having heard the arguments with respect to this purported question of privilege and having carefully considered all of the information, I'm now prepared to make my ruling.

To begin, members will recall that the House leader of the third party raised this question immediately following the introduction of Bill 27, on November 3, which can be found on page 1701 of Alberta Hansard. No objection was made to this approach; however, I would note that it is normally provided in writing at least two hours prior to the opening of the afternoon sitting pursuant to Standing Order 15(2). This would have provided notice to all caucuses before the issue was discussed in the Assembly.

However, I also note that the House leader for the third party tabled three documents related to his purported question of privilege, which are marked as follows: Sessional Paper 331/2016, which is a printout of a government of Alberta website detailing the renewable electricity program; Sessional Paper 332/2016, which is a government news release entitled Renewable Electricity Plan to Create Jobs, Spur Investment; and Sessional Paper 333/2016, which consists of a CBC News article under the headline Renewable Energy Program to Add 5,000 Megawatts of Capacity by 2030, Says Environment Minister.

The House leader of the Official Opposition also tabled two similar documents, marked as sessional papers 326/2016 and 327/2016.

Based on the documents tabled in this Assembly and the arguments presented from all sides, I understand the relevant facts of this matter to be as follows. Bill 27 appeared on notice in the Order Paper on November 2, 2016. The bill was not introduced in this Assembly until the afternoon of November 3, 2016. In the period between the bill being put on notice and when it was introduced in the Assembly, the Minister for Environment and Parks made public statements about the government's renewable electricity program to the media and at a conference in Calgary. In addition, the government of Alberta issued a news release which also detailed the program.

As I understand it, the central argument raised by the House leader for the third party is that the work of the members of this Assembly was impeded as a result. It was impeded because information about Bill 27 was disclosed publicly by the Minister of Environment and Parks as well as in the government news release while the bill was still on notice but prior to first reading.

The House leader for the Official Opposition further argued that public statements made by the minister discussing the ability of ISO, the Independent System Operator, to deliver programs that were contingent on elements contained in Bill 27 presupposed decisions of this Assembly.

I would characterize the purported questions as twofold. Were members obstructed from carrying out their duties as a result of the statements made by the hon. minister and contained in the government communications? And did such statements offend the dignity of this Assembly? I want to clarify that the question being raised is probably termed more appropriately a question of contempt rather than a question of privilege although I'm advised that they are treated in much the same way.

You may recall my ruling on November 1, 2016. The Assembly "claims the right to punish, as a contempt, any action which, though not a breach of a specific privilege, tends to obstruct or impede the [Assembly or its members] in the performance of its functions" or which offends the dignity of this Assembly. You will find a further elaboration of this principle in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, page 82. I can tell you, hon. members, that I have read that document many times.

Speaker Zwozdesky addressed a similar question of contempt in his ruling of October 31, 2013, which you will find at page 2655 of Alberta Hansard for that day. In that case a concern was raised about information that was released about a bill that was on notice prior to its introduction in the Assembly as well as a related government advertisement. In coming to this decision, Speaker Zwozdesky noted the crucial difference between providing the text of a bill or detailed comments to the media or any other outside entity prior to its introduction in this Assembly and a minister making general statements about a policy initiative contained in a bill. There should be no question that all members are entitled to see proposed legislation in its final form before a bill is disclosed to outside parties, the key point being "in its final form."

Not every statement about a bill that is on notice will automatically lead to and qualify as a prima facie case of contempt. This approach was also applied by Speaker Kowalski in his ruling of March 5, 2003, at page 304 of Alberta Hansard for that day. Speaker Kowalski applied it with respect to a government briefing provided to the media about a bill which was on notice but that had not yet been introduced. In that case Speaker Kowalski found that a departmental briefing had in fact provided detailed information concerning the bill and, therefore, constituted a prima facie case. But he went on to note that consultations on proposed legislation are not out of order, nor is the practice of sharing bills with members of the opposition before introduction.

Speaker Milliken of the House of Commons came to a similar conclusion in his ruling on November 5, 2009, which dealt with comments made by a federal minister at a press conference. In that case he noted that the federal minister had not disclosed details of the bill prior to first reading by broadly discussing policy initiatives proposed in the bill. While the House leader for the third party argued that sharing information about Bill 27 circumvented the role of this Assembly in the legislative process, no allegation was made by any member that the text of Bill 27 was provided to any outside party prior to its introduction in this Assembly.

I would also note that there is nothing that I can see in the materials tabled by the House leader for the third party or the Official Opposition leader which contains specific details of what was in Bill 27. As noted by the Government House Leader in his arguments, the government's renewable electricity program has been discussed in this Assembly and in public on numerous occasions, including policy statements made about implementing generation projects through auction.

After carefully reading Bill 27, I also note that the public comments made by the Minister of Environment and Parks as well as statements included in the government news release did not contain any details of the text of Bill 27 in its final form. The information provided by the government communicated only broad statements of policy and did not impede members of this Assembly in the discharge of their duties. I can also see no evidence in the materials which would have suggested that the government was presupposing the outcome of Bill 27 in this Assembly.

Pursuant to Standing Order 15(6) I find that there is no prima facie question of contempt with respect to this matter.

Finally, as I've noted before, a question of privilege, as I understand and continue to learn, is one of the most serious matters that can be raised in this Assembly. I again encourage members to carefully consider all of the facts of a purported breach of privilege as well as past rulings made in this Assembly before raising such issues. Let me also add, hon. members, that I want to caution the government again with respect to being more attentive to these kinds of announcements in the future.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 25

Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act

Mr. Panda moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Debate adjourned on the amendment November 8: Mr. Loewen speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, previously when I was speaking, I was talking about having this bill, Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, referred to committee. This cap is bad for the economy of Alberta. This cap will restrict investment in the oil sands, and it will create further uncertainty in Alberta's energy sector. This government has already done multiple things that have created uncertainty in the energy sector. This kind of uncertainty restricts investment in our province, investment that turns into jobs.

Now, by adding a cap on oil sands emissions, we'll be forced to deal with an issue down the road of what will happen to the energy companies that have purchased leases whose production would fall under this cap. We've already determined, I think, that this cap won't allow for the full development of all the leases that have been sold already. So when you have companies that in good faith purchase leases from the government and do research and development to determine when they're going to produce these leases and then they find out that now they may not have an opportunity to recover any kind of income from these leases, we find that as Albertans the government may put us in a position where we're responsible to pay back that money and any of the damages that could result from these companies not being able to do what they were promised they could do.

This is just another example of this government trying to pick winners and losers in industry, and we know the government has a very poor record of picking winners. I guess that's it. Yeah. They have a really poor record of picking winners. The government has a pretty good record of picking losers. With this cap we will have government deciding what's best for the market instead of allowing the market to develop naturally.

When we look at this cap of 100, if I was buying – let's say I was going to my local tire shop and buying a set of used tires. The owner of the shop might just say: yeah, give me a hundred bucks. That's a nice round number. But I would hope that when government makes a decision on something so important and so big to Alberta's economy like a cap on emissions of one of our largest sectors in our economy, they would probably not just be picking numbers out of the air, a nice round number like 100, for making such an important economic decision.

Now, the government hasn't given us any information on how they chose that number. In fact, when we look at the bill, it almost looks like the government picked a number and then thought: "Oh, we didn't think about this. We didn't think about that." The first thing that happens in this bill is that we start talking about exceptions, and then we add maybe another maximum of 10 megatonnes for these other exceptions.

I don't know that we should be jumping into this quite so fast. We have a 100-megatonne cap, and we have no justification for the number, nothing at all. A hundred is a nice round number, but we're not buying a set of used tires here. This is a huge thing in our economy. When we talk about this cap, we need to realize that this cap could affect jobs for working Albertans, for families. We're already sitting here in this province with over a hundred thousand jobs lost. Again, that doesn't include contractors. It doesn't include contractors that are only working a day a month or a couple of days a month. Those contractors don't show up on the unemployment numbers. So here we have a government coming up with the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, throwing a number out there, no justification for it, at a time when Albertans are suffering, families are suffering.

Now, there have been some studies done on what the cost of this loss of production will be on Alberta's economy: $150 billion to $250 billion. That's an enormous amount of money. We talk about pipelines here a lot and how much of a benefit pipelines would be to the Alberta economy, to the Canadian economy. Well, that pales in comparison to the potential loss of revenue that this bill could cost Albertans.

The Speaker: The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just have a short statement and then a question for the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky. You know, about 20 years ago we had a new company move into our area, and they took over some existing wells and facilities up there. They came in with some new ideas, new ways of doing things. They revitalized some wells that the previous companies had given up on, and some of those wells 20 years later are still producing oil. That's innovation, and that's what we need in the province. That's what's built our province. They would have been absolutely delighted in the early '90s with $40-a-barrel oil.

A lot of times, I remember, when they were facing layoffs in the industry and things had slowed down to a trickle when oil was $11 a barrel, they kept on drilling, kept progressing. It was part of the way we do things up there. When you're in a steam-injection facility, you kind of have to keep rolling and hope that things get better. They did get better, and that company is now one of the biggest oil and gas producers in Canada. From humble beginnings back in the '90s to one of the biggest oil and gas producers, and I'm very proud to have been part of that and a lot of the innovation that they brought into the oil and gas industry in our province.

Now my question for the member. That entrepreneurial pioneer spirit brought our oil industry to where it is today. How is this new cap going to affect that? I would really, really discourage any members from encouraging a bill that is going to take away innovation, new ideas. It's very easy, when you're a large operator, to get stuck in the roll of things. It takes somebody coming in there with fresh new ideas sometimes to really revitalize our industry. I'd just like the member to comment on how he thinks this bill is going to affect that entrepreneurial spirit in Alberta.

Mr. Loewen: I'd like to thank the member for the question and his comments. Yes, when you put a cap on something like the oil sands emissions, what happens is that you restrict the opportunity for other businesses to come in there because they know that if they come in and there are already producers in there that are trying to use up the limit to that cap, they won't have an opportunity to grow. So they have decide: okay, am I going to invest in something like this? This investment is huge money. We're not talking about thousands of dollars. We're talking about millions and millions of dollars that these companies would have to invest, knowing full well that they may not be able to grow their company to a point to get a good return before the other companies that are already in place have used up the cap.

Now, these small companies that this is going to restrict: those are the companies, like the member mentioned, that would like to see their innovation, their ideas used to grow their own company. By putting a cap on there, we actually cap innovation from some of these small players that would love to get into this market but can't, and the ones that are existing there will look at it and say: "Okay. What can we do now? What are we going to do? Are we going to continue investing money and trying to grow, only to be swallowed up, or are we just going to have to give up and get out of this business?"

Now, when we look at this, we want this sent to committee. We want an opportunity to hear from experts, to hear from industry, to hear from some of these smaller players. We could even listen to the oil sands advisory group, that the government set up to advise us on the oil sands. Now, we know that the government appointed a radical environmentalist, an anti-oil, antipipeline environmentalist, as a co-chair. We know there are other members that are involved with organizations like ForestEthics, that boasts about having stopped pipelines. So what have we got going . . .

Any other members who would like to speak to second reading of the referral amendment? The Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak in favour of referring this bill to committee. As all bills, I believe, should go through a committee process, this bill in particular, Bill 25, the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, raises many concerns for myself and the good people of Airdrie. Certainly, I and the good people of Airdrie would like to see this go to committee, where this bill can be thoroughly discussed and vetted. It can have time for the good people of Alberta to provide feedback on the implications that this will have for them.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 25 certainly sends a message to industry and possible investment that we're just not really interested – "We're good; we've got enough; we want to remain stagnant; we don't really want to bring anybody else in" – and that's certainly a concern for the people of Airdrie, the future of our children, and what that absolutely means to them. I'm certainly raising a generation of entrepreneurs, where the sky is the limit, and when you teach your children that the sky is the limit, they can do anything they put their minds to if they work hard, if they get a good education. They can start up their own oil and gas company.

But this bill actually says to my children, to the people of Airdrie, and to the people of Alberta: "Actually, you're at your limit. That's it. That's all. Do no better because the government says that you can't." The government has decided: "That's it. We're good. Let's stay where we are."

Mr. Speaker, I have many concerns about this bill. In particular, the Alberta government put together an oil sands advisory group, chaired by radical people, people who believe and have authored the Leap Manifesto. Actually, this plays into that where it says: "Keep it in the ground. We're good. That's it. Actually, maybe go in reverse a little bit." This isn't progressive. This isn't forward thinking. This is ridiculous. This is actually in line with what Albertans feared when the NDP government signed on to the Leap Manifesto at their last AGM. It makes us shake, you know. Albertans know that. They sent a message in the last federal election, where 1 per cent thought the NDP was okay. One per cent. In saying that, I think that that in itself is actually a very good argument to send this bill to committee, where it can be discussed more thoroughly or where recommendations can be given, because 99 per cent of Alberta is not in favour of keeping it in the ground.

Alberta was created through an entrepreneurial spirit, where the sky is the limit, where you can do anything. I think that's the message that we need to send to investors. When this government wants to go about saying that they create jobs, this is actually a message that works against that. Investors do hear this message. They do see this. If this bill were to pass, I can tell you that that will go on the list of things to repeal in 2019.

Mr. Speaker, we need to send this bill to committee, again, because the oil sands advisory group, which has many controversial people connected to it, actually hasn't, from what I heard – maybe I missed it – made any recommendations yet either. So why do we have this group? Are they going to work on the back end of this bill and provide more feedback on this to actually make this thing worse in regulation? I'm not really quite sure. I don't know why we're creating oil sands advisory groups if we don't actually ask them to advise on anything. This simply doesn't make any sense. I mean, par for the course: there are multiple things with this government and their policies and their bills that just really don't make any sense. So perhaps we should send it to committee to knock out those details.

Albertans will certainly feel better. This government can feel better if they choose to pass this, what I think is a horrible piece of legislation, but maybe the due diligence would be there, and Albertans could be on their side. If this government had actually presented any arguments in favour of why a carbon tax is a good thing, that might have gone over better as well. You know, looking back, sometimes it can help you when you're trying to go forward.

The 100-megatonne cap on GHG emissions will place large costs on Canadians, not just Alberta – this is a far-reaching bill – through the constraint of future growth in oil sands development, but it will provide little in the way of avoiding actual GHG emissions. So what is the purpose there? This cap is entirely arbitrary. The government hasn't explained this number. There's, again, no argument from the government side. They have no actual good talking points on this thing. I have yet to see this.

Mr. Speaker, this bill should be referred to a committee because committees are part of the democratic process even though sometimes the government doesn't treat them that way. This policy has the potential to constrain future oil sands production by over $150 billion in lost value to Alberta's economy, even upwards near $200 billion. That alone should be a place to pause, something to discuss in committee.

There's not enough room under the cap to even accommodate the leases that the government has already sold, so future investment actually stops right there. There is no more. This bill doesn't make any sense, but I'd be open to a debate or a conversation should the government ever stand up and defend their pieces of legislation.

Why would we trust that the regulations will be fair or good for our industry without proper debate? Let's do it in committee.

There are concerns about how the performance standards for GHG emissions will be crafted. Will it be by unit? By site? By company? This government does play and pick winners and losers. This bill does not answer any of these questions, Mr. Speaker.

If Alberta isn't producing the energy that the world wants, it will come from our competitors, plain and simple. Everyone else is laughing at this. Our competitors are loving the legislation that Alberta is pushing through here. We're the laughingstock of the world for the economic limits that this government keeps placing on us for arguments that they have not quite yet made.

Only a few major players have actually agreed to this cap. They might have considered that it will reduce the competition – I'm pretty sure they have – and give them a PR win without affecting any of their growth plans. So congratulations. You are now on the side of big oil, which is funny because many of you have protested big oil in the past. Environmental groups are also celebrating this decision because, of course, it keeps it in the ground, but they still want to oppose pipelines in every single direction. I was told that the carbon tax would give us a social licence on pipelines.

Mr. Fildebrandt: How did that work?

Mrs. Pitt: That was denied right after, right? It didn't help. It didn't work. So let's try again: let's further punish the people of Alberta in the NDP's effort to get a pipeline built but, in fact, stop us on both ends. This is unbelievable.

The world will need more oil – they will – and no other jurisdiction is limiting its long-term production. Nobody else is doing it. You're not leaders. This is not a forward-thinking plan. You are not being leaders here. You're making us the laughingstock of the world. People are embarrassed right now to be called Albertans because of NDP government policies.

Now, it's unclear, Mr. Speaker, how they will decide which of the current leaseholders will get to develop. It's actually interesting. Our liquor store industry is regulated. There are only a certain number of licences that are actually allowed to be in the market. It definitely caps. If you're lucky enough to be a leaseholder of a liquor store, that's just fantastic. It limits the number of liquor stores that we have in our communities. Airdrie seems to get a lot of these licences, which is interesting, and Chestermere, too. They go in the small communities. They become sort of these golden tickets, and liquor store owners will do various things to get these. I feel like this is the wrong direction to go in to regulate such an industry. There might be payout costs if they have to cancel people's leases, because somebody is going to lose here. The people of Alberta are certainly in that path.

The main decision-makers for how this is managed are the oil sands advisory group, co-chaired by the controversial Ms Berman and featuring other leftie radicals from out of this province. Why are we letting people outside of this province make decisions for people inside of this province, people who don't understand that the reason they have $7-a-day child care is because Alberta is paying for it? They're laughing at us because even they know that. How is it that the NDP government is the only one that doesn't understand how that works? It is absolutely shameful.

If Alberta isn't producing the energy that the world wants, you're not going to make the want or the need go away. I will still heat my house in the winter. I turn it very low when I'm not home and at nighttime.

3:30

If Alberta isn't producing the energy the world wants, it will come from our competitors, and some of them have horrible, terrible human rights records. Unbelievable. Shouldn't we stand up for that instead of impeding our own economy? These would be some of the things that we could work out in committee. We could bring in witness testimony, experts. Heck, we should bring in other countries that have actually gone back from their carbon-limit plans.

I get that you're trying to save the world. I had those hopes as a kid. My children have those.

An Hon. Member: Who killed your dreams?

Mrs. Pitt: The NDP killed my dreams, and they're killing my children's dreams, Mr. Speaker, but I won't let that happen by 2019. The people of Alberta will make sure our children have dreams and aren't limited.

It actually says in the bill: limit our oil sands emissions. It's the most ridiculous concept I've ever heard of in my entire life. I think it would perhaps be prudent for this government to encourage an innovation fund so that the players in the oil sands will continue to develop technology that is seen nowhere else in the world but right here because we develop our energy responsibly, and we should be sharing those technologies. We have and we do, but we should be encouraging those kinds of technologies, not cutting our legs from underneath us, Mr. Speaker.

I really do caution this. When I hear from my constituents that actually send me information about the green policies that other governments have done, the failed ones, I might add, they have some serious, serious, valid concerns over what Alberta is trying to do here. These people are simply trying to do better. They're trying to show their children that the sky is the limit, that if they work hard and get a good education, they can be and do anything they want. They are so concerned that they're being absolutely limited in their ability to just be better. You know what? It brings up everybody around you when you do better and you can be better. "Keeping up with the Joneses" is a phrase coined for that very reason.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I just want to remind all members of the House, first of all, to be respectful to both sides of the House as they comment and make their observations.

I also want to remind the House that we are speaking to a referral amendment, and I would draw the House's attention particularly to 23(b)(i), where at this particular juncture of the discussions we're speaking to the referral amendment.

Is there a question under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was interested in the member's comments, and one thing that struck me is that she talked about the wide-ranging effects this bill could produce. It made me think. You know, she was just speaking in reference to how it affected her constituents in Airdrie. That's fair enough, for sure, but what it brought to my attention was how when we had the fire in Fort McMurray, the oil sands had to shut down for a short period of time – I think it was about two weeks if I remember rightly – and how that actually had a noticeable effect on the Canadian GDP. It was a measurable effect. Two weeks of this industry being shut down had a big enough effect across Canada that it was measurable in the GDP. So I think we need to realize the full effects of the bills that we pass in this Legislature.

Now, we're speaking to the referral of this bill to committee. If we have a chance to view this in committee and hear different people speak to this – experts, economists – then maybe we could get a full understanding of what the effects of this bill could be. I appreciate the member striking that up in my mind as far as how the bills that we pass in this Legislature and the things that we do, what kind of effect they can have not just in Alberta, not just on our economy here in Alberta, not just with jobs here in Alberta but on the entire Canadian economy.

Now, she also brought up the point about some of the members of this committee. We talk about the Leap Manifesto and how the NDP supports the Leap Manifesto. Some of the members across say: "No, no, no. We don't believe in that. No, no, no." But these same people hire people that support the Leap Manifesto to work for Albertans. I don't know if that stands to reason, but if we had a chance to take this to committee, maybe some of these questions could be answered as far as who's making the decisions. If we sent this to committee, we might be able to listen to the oil sands advisory group's recommendations. But if the government's intention is to just pound this through in legislation and not wait for the oil sands advisory group report, then we won't have any idea what these people in this group would suggest.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you're waiting to hear some feedback from the Member for Airdrie?

Mr. Loewen: Yes. I'd love to. I'd love to, actually. Yes, I would just like to hear the member's comments on the effects and how wide-ranging this bill could be for the future of Albertans and Canadians. Then if she has any other comments to share, that would be great to hear, too.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, do you have any comments on the referral amendment?

Mrs. Pitt: I have many comments on the referral amendment, and I would like to thank my hon. colleague for his comments and his insight. I do know that up in his riding of Grande Prairie-Smoky there are many people that are very directly related to our beautiful, wonderful energy industry. I'm sure he gets quite a bit of feedback, Mr. Speaker, from his constituents, as all of us do because I believe that there are so many, a high percentage of Albertans, that are connected to our energy industry and very much love and want to protect our energy industry. This is why this bill is of such concern. I believe that my constituents and the people of Grande Prairie-Smoky would also actually like to have some input into this, and a committee would be a wonderful place where they could provide their comments.

Thank you. I have so much more to say.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

You're speaking to the referral amendment to Bill 25? The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. I am intending to speak to the amendment to refer this bill to committee.

If there was ever a piece of legislation that was brought here that looked like it's not only half baked but unbaked, it would be called Bill 25, the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, largely because when you go through the bill – it isn't a long bill; it's just four pages and one paragraph on page 5 – what it effectively does is put an arbitrary emissions limit on the oil sands, 100, which really speaks to just how arbitrary it is. It doesn't say that this is a number that represents a certain amount of growth in the industry versus a certain amount of improved technology and whether all that balances off, including the growth in the world's demand for energy and how likely it is that Alberta will get there, and that this is about where we think it should settle out. You know, you would think it would actually be the result of not just math or arithmetic but a calculus formula with all these variables built into it. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it's a round number: 100.

I understand to a certain degree why the government is doing this. They said a year ago that they were going to put a cap on emissions, so now they feel obligated to live up to the people that give them money and send them volunteers for committees and stuff like that, that they have to fulfill some of the promises that they made to their NDP-world-view friends. I get that, but I guess what this House deserves and what Alberta deserves is a little more thought and a little more substance and a little more meat on the bones before you make a major policy decision.

It doesn't even consider what unintended consequences there might be, how we might get to those unintended consequences, how we might avoid them. Nothing. It's absolutely without thought. I won't criticize anybody for trying to keep their political promises. But this one, if indeed all it is is a promise kept to, you know, the NDP-world-view people that the government is trying to please – even they shouldn't be happy, Mr. Speaker, because the government hasn't shown their work. They haven't shown how they got to this number, 100. They haven't shown that there has been any work into this number. There's nothing. They just said: we said that we're going to put a limit on it, and here it is. No indication whether this will be good for Alberta long term, whether it'll be bad for Alberta long term, whether it'll be good for the world's environment, whether it'll be bad for the world's environment. Nothing. They haven't done the work.

So when I see the amendment that says, "Okay. If you're that married to putting a limit on, let's do the work first," that makes sense. The bill by itself doesn't make sense, but if we support this amendment, we could give it a chance to add some sense to it, to add those considerations against unintended negative consequences. We might even be able to work together with experts, although the Premier did say in question period today that Alberta has no experts, nobody that she trusts to do anything. Nonetheless, I think there are lots of experts in Alberta that we could actually talk to. With all due respect to the Premier, I think she was incorrect on what she said out loud, in black and white, in question period today about nobody in Alberta being up to the task of making these decisions.

I think that if we actually pulled people together, we could say to Albertans: "If we're going to put a limit on the extraction of the resources that Albertans own, not that the NDP owns but that Albertans own, we're actually going to give you a good reason for doing it. We're going to actually put some math and some reasoning behind it. These are the unintended consequences that we have thought of on your behalf, Albertans, to make sure that you don't get caught without energy, that you don't get caught without royalties that you deserve, that you don't get caught cold in the winter, that you don't get caught without enough electricity because the line between Alberta and B.C. has been cut off because of a winter storm though there was lots of energy in Alberta that the government was unable to use to keep the lights on and the heat on in the winter."

Actually, this would be really neat: if there was a plan to extract more of the resources in a more environmentally friendly way to provide more energy for more of the future and more of the world through more pipelines to more tidewater. See, that would be a plan that would actually be in line with Albertans' best interests and their higher aspirations and hopes and plans for our children and our grandchildren. That's what Albertans deserve. You know what they don't deserve? Something written on the back of a napkin. "Because it's been a year, I owe my political supporters something, so fire this up, call it legislation, and serve it up to Albertans and hope they don't notice we haven't done any work at all."

The Official Opposition is actually throwing the government a lifeline here, a chance for them with their piece of legislation to be able to say to Albertans: "Now we've done our homework. Now we actually have a reason to put a limit on this. Now we've actually thought about the future of your children and grandchildren and the jobs you have today, that we're taking away as fast as we can in every other way. This time, at least, we're going to actually think about that before we limit the jobs in the future and everything else."

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I'll be supporting this amendment because the amendment turns out to be not just twice as good but about a hundred times as good as the bill is unamended.

The Speaker: Are there any questions of the Member for Calgary-Hays under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member. I echo many of the sentiments that you brought forward.

If you don't mind, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to make a few comments before asking my question. A couple of the things that the hon. member had mentioned – and I think it deserves to be spoken about again, that we are cutting off production of the most ethically produced and ethically developed oil in the world. If anywhere should be producing more, it should be us. We are the definition of doing it right, and if we are going to produce more, it should be here. Any government that would suggest otherwise and cut this industry at the knees – I don't understand it. I don't think Albertans understand it.

I think, to some degree, that's what the hon. member was bringing up, too, that you're looking at the most ethical, environmentally regulated industry in the world, and this government is looking at stopping that. Well, what's going to happen, then? Somebody else is going to produce that. It doesn't stop other jurisdictions from doing that. That's why we keep referring to this thing called carbon leakage. That means that whatever we're not producing here, where we can watch it, where we can regulate it, where we understand what's going on, where we can check the emissions, where we can have metrics that actually show what we're capable of, is completely out of our hands.

On top of that, it's an attack on prosperity in Alberta and in Canada, straight up. The minute that Canadians start getting wind of what this government has done and the impact that that's going to have on them, not only on us, what you saw happen on the weekend with those rallies is going to be minor in comparison to when Canadians actually understand what's happening as a result of this cap.

This is about understanding what we do right here. There are a bazillion different ways that we can improve, but capping the industry is not the way to do it. There are so many other ways, and given the opportunity to go to committee, we would have opportunities, if the government so desires the opportunity, to find out what to do. Or maybe, as the hon. member mentioned, this arbitrary 100-megatonne cap is the wrong number. Wouldn't that be incredible, to actually sit down with all of us who are vested in this, not just on behalf of our constituents but on behalf of Canada, to figure out what that number should be, if there even should be one? Because again I reiterate: we do it best here.

I highly, highly recommend that the government understand that if we are not having that production in this country, happening here, where we have the best regulations, it will go somewhere else, and let me tell you that it's not going to be done to our standards, and we have no control over how that happens.

My question to the hon. member. There are many, many questions and many things that you've brought forward with regard to the economic impact. If you could speak a little bit about, potentially, some of the emerging markets and other things that could come as a result of bringing in specialists to a committee to understand: what are the opportunities that we have going forward given the fact that we could have a discussion about whether there even should be a cap but the detriment that could happen to any emerging markets coming in and investment coming into Alberta, potentially, with this cap coming forward?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for her question. Well, I think the answer is that we don't know the answer, and there is the problem. The government hasn't done the work, and what the amendment suggests, to send this to committee, is that we actually do the work. Extrapolating the simplest of analogies, the oil sands now produces about 66, 67 megatonnes of carbon gases, GHGs, per year. The bill says to stop it at 100, at one and a half times. What if a pipeline does get approved even while this government is here? It could happen. It could happen because of their efforts. It could happen despite their efforts. It could happen, and all of us should be hoping for it to happen. Let's just say that it does happen and that because of that, there is a draw on Alberta's energy of one and a half times what it is now, say twice what it is now. Why wouldn't there be? There are 4 million people in Alberta. There are, you know, 300 million in the U.S. They're not using all of our oil. We'll be cut off . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand up and speak to Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, the referral motion, just to be clear. Before I get started, I'd just like to point out – and my colleague from Grande Prairie-Smoky alluded to it earlier – that, you know, there's an old saying that a leopard can't change its spots. Now, we've seen – everybody, all Albertans – the pictures, protestors that are now sitting across the aisle, photographs. We've seen the books written or edited. We've seen the involvement in the Leap Manifesto. And now Albertans are expected to believe that the entire group is on the side of the oil and gas industry, that they now wholeheartedly support pipelines. I'm here to tell you that Albertans don't believe it, not for a minute, and we don't over on this side.

Getting back to the referral motion, important legislation deserves the scrutiny of committee. Now, we found last Wednesday that there was a very important piece of legislation, the Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act, the culture act. You know, everybody agreed, "Let's push this through," and, boom, we got it done in one day. I understand it was only the fifth time in Alberta history that such a feat was accomplished. Now, that was a very, very important piece of legislation, too, so I'm not saying that every important piece of legislation deserves to go to committee because obviously that one didn't. But anything that's as important as this, that's going to affect the future of Albertans, the future of our children, the prosperity of our province, deserves the scrutiny of a committee, deserves having people – Albertans, companies from Alberta, professionals from Alberta – with an interest in the oil and gas industry come forward and talk to us and give us their ideas.

Now, I spoke earlier about how proud I am of my part in the oil and gas industry up in northeastern Alberta and about some of the innovation that we saw. Some of the productivity that we saw up there was absolutely incredible, with the innovations that came forward. Those are the kinds of things that, you know, we threaten to stifle here without taking this to committee. There are many, many stakeholders that haven't had a chance to put forward their concerns.

An Hon. Member: Most.

Mr. Hanson: Most. You know, very few people have had a chance to speak to this.

As one of the biggest or the biggest industry in our province, innovative companies are sent all over the world to help out. They are sent over to Russia, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait – you know, they've been all over the world – to South America. We've had drillers that have gone down there to help out those countries get their industry going. We have the technology. We have the people here. We have the innovation here. A lot of stuff, you know, that's being used today in the industry was invented here. Why would we want to stifle that by putting on a cap and reducing ourselves to only a few operators? We need small companies to come in, step in with new ideas – new geologists with new ideas, new engineers with new ideas – and bring them forward.

This legislation may cause some of these companies to become less competitive in an ever-increasing and competitive global market. On this side of the House there's no secret that we've supported pipelines in every direction, and we need to make that happen. Unfortunately, we're led to believe that the current government is now suddenly supporting pipelines, but the industry doesn't believe it, and Albertans don't believe it either, and I don't think the rest of Canada believes it, to be honest with you.

Alberta has always been a land of opportunity, especially for new exploration companies, some of the most successful oil companies in Canada, and I spoke about them earlier. The company that I worked for at one time, you know, started off as a small player with some good ideas. Now it's one of the largest in Canada. It's amazing. It's an amazing story, and it needs to be told, and we should be bragging about those types of innovations and those types of companies.

Like I said, a lot of their technology has been handed out. You know, the industry is quite good at sharing technology. We've shared that technology with a lot of other places in the world. We have absolutely nothing to be ashamed of here in Alberta as far as it goes with oil and gas production. I'm not embarrassed to be an Albertan.

Specifically, I don't want to see any legislation that takes away the pioneering, explorer spirit that has made our province great. What Alberta is all about is innovation. We talked about it last Wednesday, with the new settlers that came to Canada. It was the land of opportunity. If I might, my wife's grandfather started with a nine-acre piece of land, and when he passed away, he had 32 quarter sections of land. That's a success story. That's all we're asking here, that we do not limit the success stories in our province. Let's keep it going. Why should we stop now? Let's keep going.

Many times we have stood in this House not to try and stall legislation, as is the thought on the other side, but to give Albertans the opportunity to have their input into legislation that will affect their future and their prosperity. We do not want to see all the good people that we have trained and grown here in this province moving to B.C. and Saskatchewan or other places in the world and that then, when the price of oil comes back, we're struggling again to bring skilled labour back into our market. It is just not something we want to see, so we need to do everything we can to get the oil field back on its feet, to promote drilling in our province, to get these pipelines built, and to get the prosperity back that we once had.

Right now, today, I think we're sitting at close to $45-a-barrel oil. Like I mentioned previously, there was a time when Calgary would have been leaping for joy at $30 a barrel, and now at $45 a barrel suddenly we're struggling, and I don't quite understand that. I think we just need to give the oil companies the opportunity to innovate and quit trying to penalize them for what they're doing. That's why I would like to see this bill sent to committee, where we can invite stakeholders to the table, get their input on whether there is a cap needed, if other jurisdictions are doing it.

If we're going to put a cap on our own emissions and create instability by introducing carbon taxes and reduce our competitiveness – my colleague talked about carbon leakage. We at least have some control over it here. We've got good bureaucracy that oversees the oil and gas industry here. It's not just running amok. Some horror stories from down in the States, when it came to the fracking that was going on in Pennsylvania, where people in the neighbourhoods had no control over what was going on: well, that doesn't happen here in Alberta. There's a whole process to go through before you can get a licence to do that kind of stuff. You don't just pull into somebody's backyard and set up a fracking rig, right? It doesn't happen.

That's why this particular legislation and many other important pieces of legislation – this won't be the last one in this fall session that we stand up and do a referral motion on. I can guarantee you that. There's more legislation coming that we will be asking to be referred to committee. I don't think it's a stretch. I don't think Albertans will be disappointed in their government if they backtrack and decide to send this to committee. I think it would be a good thing. It would show some faith in Alberta and the companies that work for us here. I don't understand why there is such reluctance to put some of this stuff to committee, where we can deal with it properly.

Albertans have a lot to say. Our Alberta oil and gas companies are some of the best in the world. They've got some great ideas, and maybe if they had the opportunity to come and talk to a committee, they might be able to bring some of those ideas forward and educate the people that are trying to make rash decisions here.

Any members that would deny Albertans their right to have a say in legislation that will affect the future of our province may be limiting their political careers. I think that was proven again – I'll reiterate what my colleague said about the election down south. Yes, it was federal, but it sent a very good message: 1 per cent – 1 per cent – one person in a hundred actually agrees with what's going on.

I would urge all members to support this motion to refer this bill to committee, where it belongs, in the interests of Alberta, of Alberta's oil and gas industry, and of the future of our province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under 29(2)(a) are there any questions or comments with respect to the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills?

Are there any other individuals who would like to speak to the referral amendment for Bill 25? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise to speak on the referral motion for Bill 25, officially known as the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act. You know, bills can sometimes get pretty funny names when they come to this place. They're often very politically loaded terms. A more appropriate name would be the economic opportunity limitation act. We give bills names that are designed to be political. The most famous one is perhaps the Patriot Act in the United States. No one can even remember what that actually stands for. Today we have the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act. But we are not limiting emissions; we are limiting economic opportunity here. This is all a part of the climate leadership action plan, an unfortunate and irritating acronym.

You have to wonder if this bill was written alongside the Justice minister on their trip to Colorado, Mr. Speaker, because it doesn't make any sense. It's very fuzzy, it's very hazy, it lacks details, and it's quite arbitrary.

You know, you can generally tell how proud and enthusiastic the government is about its bills by how many speakers they put up for it. Well, they are silent as church mice over there right now. I'm waiting for a few heckles on that. They're not really speaking to this because they're not proud of it. That, or they don't know how to defend it. I remember the Bill 6 debates, where we all stood up, every single member on this side of the House. The Official Opposition and the third party all stood up and spoke to it consistently and with passion, and the members opposite sat as quiet as church mice. They're quite quiet now, Mr. Speaker, either because they're not proud of this piece of legislation or they don't know how to defend it. Both are quite disturbing.

Now, this policy very much resembles a cap-and-trade policy, and we were told that the carbon tax was to be a substitute for a cap-and-trade policy. You don't have to cap emissions if you're taxing emissions. Well, we're actually getting both ends of the stick on this one, Mr. Speaker. We're going to see a huge, $30-a-tonne provincial carbon tax imposed, and they seem very happy to accept a federal carbon tax of $50 a tonne attached. They're very happy to have that imposed on them because they like it when Ottawa tells us what to do. This is a government whose very nature is that they like Ottawa having more control over Alberta, and they're happy to have policies imposed as long as it meets their agenda. But they're going to impose a carbon tax on Alberta and a cap on emissions at the same time. We were told – the proponents of a carbon tax always tell us: well, this is the alternative to command-and-control economics; you don't have to have a cap-and-trade system if you have this.

This is evidence, Mr. Speaker, that the carbon tax is a cash grab. It'll do nothing for emissions. The carbon tax is going to take $3 billion out of the productive sectors of our economy right now – $3 billion – when we're already facing a massive recession. In Brooks, Mr. Speaker, it is approaching near-Depression levels right now. The Calgary unemployment rate exceeds 10 per cent. Our unemployment rates exceed Nova Scotia's for almost the first time in our modern history as a province. Out of the $3 billion carbon tax the government is going to turn around and take $10 million, 0.3 per cent, and give it to farmers to put windmills on their tractors or something of that sort.

The boosters of a carbon tax have said that it'll be a market mechanism to deal with global warming instead of command-and-control economic regulations, but this bill is proof positive that they're going to give both. We're going to get a carbon tax on the one hand, and then we're going to get command-and-control regulations on another. We are getting the worst of both worlds.

That is because every expert agrees that if a carbon tax is to do what they hope it will do and change the economic incentives of the people, it will have to be many times the price that they're proposing. The $3 billion carbon tax at $30 a tonne is already a huge penalty on the families and small businesses of this province, but all it's going to do is to take money away from them. It's not going to significantly alter economic behaviour. You can't take the C-Train from Brooks to Strathmore, Mr. Speaker. People have to drive. People have to heat their homes. This will not significantly change people's behaviours. Most experts agree that a carbon tax would have to be many times the price they're actually proposing.

It is just a cash grab, which is why they're also now going down the road of command-and-control economics in the form of a cap of 100 megatonnes. But where did the cap of 100 megatonnes come from, Mr. Speaker? None of them can tell us. It's a number they picked out of thin air. It is arbitrary. It is based simply on impressing UN bureaucrats and Hollywood celebrities who are concerned about the danger of chinooks.

The Environment minister will be travelling to Marrakesh to meet with the UN soon to discuss this, and it reminds me of a song from Crosby, Stills, and Nash, the Marrakesh Express. If you'll indulge me.

Sweeping cobwebs from the edges of my mind
Had to get away to see what we could find
Hope the days that lie ahead
Bring us back to where [we've] led Listen not to what's been said to you
Wouldn't you know we're riding on the Marrakesh Express,
[Mr. Speaker]

Now, "Mr. Speaker" was added by Neil Young when he joined the group later on. He also had something to say about the oil sands, I believe. As the Marrakesh Express says, they are not listening. They are imposing arbitrary regulations on the economy of this province, arbitrary laws. Edmund Burke says, "Law and arbitrary powers are in eternal enmity."

The carbon tax and this cap are supported by big oil but not by small and medium oil. The Big Country Oilmen's Association in Brooks represents mostly small and medium-sized oil companies, and they want nothing to do with this scheme. They want nothing to do with the carbon tax. They want nothing to do with the cap on emissions. You know why? They're not going to get any of the money back in corporate welfare on the carbon tax. They're not going to see their areas protected from competition.

Now, some of the existing large players in the sands will support this because it limits new entrants to the market and market competition. It effectively creates a cartel. It creates a cartel within the oil sands, a carbon cartel, if you will, Mr. Speaker, similar to what some municipalities have done with the taxi industry. If you issue a finite number of taxi medallions and refuse to issue more as the market and demand for them grow, you're going to create a cartel. You're going to create a near monopoly or duopoly for the existing market players. That's why existing taxi companies often like these kinds of systems, but new entrants don't like them. That's effectively what we're creating on a grand scale in the oil sands.

Now, no other major oil producer on the planet has any plan to cap their growth. Nobody intends to do this. The Fraser Institute, an institution regularly cited by members of the government, says that the cap of 100 megatonnes will reduce growth in the oil sands by $154 billion in economic activity by 2027. This at a time when we desperately need jobs in this province, Mr. Speaker. This is the absolute worst time to be doing this. The world is going to need more oil, not less.

If we're going to need to produce more oil in the world, Mr. Speaker, why not from Alberta? This will only increase the market share of Saudi Arabia, Russia, Iran, Nigeria, Venezuela. As much as the NDP might like to mimic the policies of Venezuela, I'm sure that even the Venezuelans understand that it doesn't make sense to cap the production of oil. It has not done anything for us. It has not bought social licence. The reason the government is doing this, the reason they're imposing this is to appease those Hollywood actors, UN bureaucrats, and their ideological base.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I do hope the Marrakesh Express goes past the referral.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, the Marrakesh Express is heading exactly where it needs to go.

The government has no mandate to do this, Mr. Speaker. We have to send this to a committee to ensure that we are getting it right. The leader of the third party put this very well: perhaps there's some merit in regulation of the oil sands, and we have that already. We can study the regulation of the oil sands without imposing an arbitrary cap of 100 megatonnes.

Not a single person on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, is likely to stand up today and give a concrete and clear answer as to why they picked 100 megatonnes. I bet you $20 that none of them are going to stand up and give us a real answer. They're going to spout some platitudes and ideological talking points, but they're not going to give an answer about why they picked 100 megatonnes because they have no mandate to impose this. I didn't see anywhere in the NDP platform where they said that they were going to cap emissions from the oil sands. I didn't see anywhere in the NDP platform or manifesto where they said that they would impose a $3 billion carbon tax on the people of Alberta.

In fact, no government, federal or provincial, right now has any mandate for a carbon tax. No federal voters voted for the Liberals for a carbon tax. No provincial voters have voted for the NDP for a carbon tax. Mr. Speaker, the only people so far who have had a chance to vote on the carbon tax were the federal voters in Medicine Hat-Cardston-Warner, and as you know, the NDP are giving a new sense to the term "the 1 per centers." Only 1 per cent in that by-election voted for a carbon tax endorsed by the NDP government here. They have no mandate for it, and they have no support from the people of Alberta for it.

Mr. Speaker, I've been to the oil sands. I've seen the in situ sands in Cold Lake. I have seen the open-pit mining in Fort McMurray, as has, I believe, every member of the Wildrose caucus, and I would encourage members on the government side who have not gone to see this to go there and see it for themselves. Don't see it through the lens of Leonardo DiCaprio or Neil Young. Go and see it for yourselves. I'm sure you'll get to go up there for free. If you call one of these oil companies, I'll bet you that they'll bring you up there and they'll show you around. They'll even give you a little box lunch on the trip.

Mr. Speaker, I've seen this, and I am sick and tired of us vilifying our own industry. This is not something to be ashamed of. This is a miracle of science and one of the greatest achievements of mankind, and it was done right here by Albertans in Alberta. If that makes us embarrassing cousins, you should meet my family.

This bill is foolish. It is foolhardy. It is arbitrary. It lacks science. It lacks evidence. It lacks any form of measurement as to why they are setting a benchmark of 100 megatonnes. Mr. Speaker, this bill is not worth the paper that it was printed on. We should send it to a committee and defeat it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments to the member under 29(2)(a)? Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: I'd like the hon. member to stand up and tell us how he really feels.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, I can smell a trap when I see one.

This is one of the biggest issues facing the Legislature this session. We've got some bills before us that are relatively inconsequential. We've got some bills that are administrative in nature, that we might find some agreement upon. But this is one – this is one – where we see a fundamental divide between members of the government and the opposition, where even the Official Opposition and the third party have found common cause in understanding that this bill is economic vandalism. It is economic vandalism.

Other bills that they have proposed, as foolhardy as they may have been, at least had some form of trade-off. There was a cost and a benefit. In my opinion, many of these bills' costs certainly outweighed the benefits, but on this I can see no benefit whatsoever. There is no benefit to capping Canada's market share in the global economy right now. There is no benefit whatsoever to saying that we're going to produce less oil as a share of the world market than Russia, Saudi Arabia, Venezuela, and Nigeria. It doesn't make any sense. We are cutting off our nose to get nothing for it at all. It is purely to satisfy the ideologues that make up the base of the NDP and the Hollywood actors who they feel they need to kowtow to.

Well, I don't really care what those guys have to say because when I go to my constituency of Strathmore-Brooks, you know what people want, Mr. Speaker? [interjection] It's not a laughing matter in Strathmore-Brooks because people are losing their jobs. In Strathmore we have lost Western Feedlots. Bill 6 and the carbon tax were cited as some of the primary reasons for why they shut down Western Feedlots. They said that the carbon tax will impose huge new costs on them and make each head of cattle more expensive in Alberta relative to other jurisdictions. They're still open in Saskatchewan, but they're not open here anymore. So now we've got a mothballed feedlot in my constituency and for no good reason. We got nothing for that. It is economic vandalism.

You know, the members opposite laugh. They laugh at any kind of debate that questions the orthodoxy of extreme environmentalism, that puts environmentalism completely out of balance with economic development. I just don't believe that being responsible stewards of the environment must be mutually exclusive of economic development. The oil sands, Mr. Speaker, are a miracle of science, technology, and economics. We are able to take dirt and power cars with it. That is amazing. I am proud of it, but the members opposite are not proud. That's why many of them were professional protesters before they were elected. Many of them were ardent opponents of pipelines. The Minister of Education himself chanted, "No new approvals; no new approvals" on the steps of this Legislature just a few years ago, before he was the minister.

So now they've had to change their language around, Mr. Speaker, and I am glad that they've changed their language. But have their opinions changed in their hearts? In their hearts have they changed their minds, or are they still the radical, anti-economic development environmentalists that they were just a few years ago? I do not believe that being a good steward of the environment is mutually contradictory with economic development, and that is why I will oppose a bill that arbitrarily caps oil sands development at 100 megatonnes without any scientific explanation why.

The Speaker: Are there any other questions or comments to the member? Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. MacIntyre: Yes, sir. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. member a question regarding this 100-megatonne cap. If we cap our oil sands development at 100 megatonnes and no one else in the world is going to cap any of their expansion, I'm just wondering: how, then, do we actually impact greenhouse gas emissions? Does that mean that if we cap at 100 megatonnes, somehow people in the world are going to use less oil? There will be less demand because they read in a newspaper . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in favour of this referral motion.

You know, we had the opportunity this past summer to have one of our caucus meetings up in Fort McMurray, and as part of that, I got the opportunity to go to Fort McMurray for the first time and to see the oil sands plants for the first time. Their size was pretty impressive. When you stop to look at what they're doing up there and how they've carved this oil industry out of the wilderness, literally in our lifetime, it is one of the most awe-inspiring things I've seen in a long time. We had the opportunity to speak to the people that were there and to speak to the workers and to the managers of the facilities, to see the reclamation sites. I don't know how anybody could walk away from that not realizing just how important the oil sands are to Alberta, to Canadians, and, indeed, to the rest of the world.

I guess it's because of that that when we start to look at this referral motion – you know, this isn't just a minor decision. This is a decision to place a cap on an industry that has been the workhorse of our economy. This is a very, very important decision that we're going to be making. Because of its seriousness and because of the size and the scope of this decision that we're going to be making, it makes sense to this MLA that we would send this to a committee for study.

You know Bill 25 sets out a greenhouse gas emissions limit for all oil sands sites of a combined 100 megatonnes per year. As some of my colleagues have already mentioned, I'm not aware of how this was determined. How did we get 100 megatonnes? Why not 150? Why not 200? Why not 50? Why was it 100 megatonnes per year? For somebody like me, a layman – I was a teacher for 30 years – that's where some of the expertise of a committee could come into play. This is where we can bring in some of the oil sands producers, and we can ask them: is that a reasonable limit? We could ask the scientists to come in, and they could help to educate.

I think we've got many people in this House that have been involved in the oil industry at one point in time or another, and maybe they have a little more understanding than some of us. But I think there's a significant number of us in this House that could use the education that comes from being able to sit before a committee, to be able to listen to the people that come before it, to be able to bring that expertise to the table and help us to make a good decision because, as I've said already, the decision that we're going to make on this is going to be extremely serious. It's going to be very important for the Alberta economy and for the Canadian economy as a whole.

I know that for the people in my constituency that are so intimately tied to the oil industry, these decisions will impact my constituency. For the businesses that are going up to Fort McMurray on a weekly basis, or have been, you know, this means jobs or no jobs. This means that their company either makes a profit at the end of the year or it doesn't. So the decisions in this House are not without their consequences, and it's important that we as a Legislature make a very educated and wise choice when we make this decision. That's why I believe that this referral motion is a wise thing to consider.

This is part of the overall climate leadership plan. The government, on the opposite side, claims that it's faced increasing scrutiny over unchecked emissions. Those who support this bill, Bill 25, believe that without government intervention, the emissions would surpass 100 megatonnes and that this was going to be unacceptable under almost any conditions. You know, that's what this committee could delve into: is that a reasonable position to take? Are we going to be creating such a serious situation going over a 100-megatonne limit that the consequences of that would just be unacceptable? I would love to hear the evidence for that, and this committee could delve into that question deeper.

You know, under Bill 25 the mine sites, the in situ sites, the processing plants, the primary production sites: all of these will fall under the new cap that this bill is proposing. And if it's passed, Executive Council is going to be able to make sure that the oil sands industry will not go over that 100-megatonne cap. They will use regulations and financial penalties for companies that do not reduce or do not bring their emissions under control.

Now, this 100-megatonne cap, as we've said, was agreed to apart from the Leach report, and it brought an unusual group of people together, whether it's Suncor or Royal Dutch Shell or Cenovus or Canadian Natural Resources, and I guess that speaks to one point of view. But I've heard other members of this House question whether or not the players, these major oil sands producers, weren't really acting out of self-interest, that it was a PR win for them, that it won't cost them anything, but that it will limit the competition that's already up in the oil sands. You know, there's some merit to that. It would be interesting to have a referral committee take a look at this and see if the position of these major stakeholders was self-serving or whether it was done out of a sincere interest to deal with an environmental problem.

We know that there are other major stakeholders, other energy firms that are strongly opposed to this cap. Whether we're talking about TransCanada or Imperial Oil, they've spoken out clearly against this cap. They also need to come before this committee. We would need to be able to see and hear their point of view as well. It's not like the industry that's working in the oil sands is speaking with one voice, so it would be important for us to hear all of those points of view. So before we do this, it would be wise, in my estimation, to call the experts to a committee and to ensure that indeed all Albertans' best interests are being served by this decision to either support or to not support Bill 25.

Now, I'm going to speak in favour of this referral motion because I think we need to better understand how Bill 25 will send what I believe could be a very negative economic message to the oil players in this world. I think this committee should study that and should consider this. I mean, this cap is just one more signal that we're sending to investors that the government of Alberta is not on the side of business and it's not on the side of marshalling and taking care of the Alberta economy. As a matter of fact, it could very well make our economy even worse than what the recession is creating as we speak. You cannot understand, I don't think, Albertans' anger over this bill without understanding all of the other NDP actions, all of the other government actions that came before this bill that have negatively impacted our economy.

I know that I've had members from some of the major stakeholders in the Alberta oil industry come to my office. They tell me that over the past year every time they spend money in this challenging economic environment, they must do something that they call a risk analysis. You know, this risk analysis will look at things like – they tell me that every time they go to spend money and have to put this risk analysis together, they have to include things like: has the government increased personal or corporate taxes? Well, yes, we have. Every time the government decides to shut down a job-creating, low-power, cost-viable industry like coal, this again is considered to be a negative thing that you would put on a risk analysis. Every time a government rips up a contract that costs a business millions of dollars, that sends a really negative message to the businesses that are looking to invest in our province.

You know, that's something that we need to hear as legislators. I think that's something that all of the legislators in this Legislature need to consider but perhaps especially the ones on the opposite side of the House. Every time this government chooses billions of dollars of deficit by unprecedented borrowing and unprecedented spending, we see businesses add another item on their risk analysis. They've told me quite bluntly that they can spend their money anywhere they want in the world and they're looking for an investment climate where they will be allowed to see a profit, where the regulations will not keep them from pursuing profit, where they can invest their expertise with a reasonable expectation that they can benefit the economic climate, both theirs and the province's.

I think we need to have this referral motion because we need to make sure that we're not creating a climate in Alberta that is going to scare the capital away from this province. I think we need this committee to be able to hear from these major stakeholders so that when they come to us and they start talking about choosing where to spend their capital, when they start looking . . . [A cellphone rang] Am I supposed to dance, too?

They maybe can hear from these major stakeholders just how important it is for this government to be sending a positive economic message out there that this government is open for business, that they are looking for businesses to invest and for workers to move here and for this economy to grow. This committee could hear those kinds of presentations.

I think that when I look at the people in my riding, they've sent a very clear message that they do not support this cap on emissions, that they do not support a carbon tax, that during a recession they did not support the raising of corporate income taxes. According to a recent survey that I was able to find, 67.2 per cent of Albertans of voting age didn't really want a carbon tax.

Well, I know that last Saturday I stood out and listened to some of my constituents as they talked about a carbon tax and they talked about a carbon cap on emissions. It's just another facet, they believed, of the same misguided message that this government is telling the rest of the world. The message that they believe is being sent by this carbon emission cap is that it's safer to do business somewhere else other than in Alberta, and I think that's something that this committee could clarify. I mean, it's one thing for us as lay people to arrive at that decision and come to that belief, but a committee could clarify those things for us. They could provide us with the evidence that we need.

This committee needs to study the impact of Bill 25 on our economy because I believe that it's actually going to make our economy, that is already suffering, much worse. The oil sands have been the economic engine of Alberta – they've been the economic engine of Canada – for the last number of years, and Bill 25 is going to directly impact that engine. Bill 25 will make the oil sands the first major oil jurisdiction to intentionally limit its long-term production with a cap on emissions. You know . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Mr. Smith: . . . the recently released Fraser report entitled How Alberta's Carbon Emission Cap Will Reduce Oil Sands Growth . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members. Thank you.

Please continue. I'm giving you another 30 seconds.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure that they'll really appreciate my 30 more seconds.

The oils sands, as I said, were and are the economic engine of this country and of this province. It's the first major oil jurisdiction in the world that will intentionally limit its long-term production with a cap on emissions. The recent Fraser report entitled How Alberta's Carbon Emission Cap Will Reduce Oil Sands Growth estimates that placing a ceiling on carbon emissions could cost the Alberta economy $150 billion to $250 billion because of the resources that were intentionally locked into the ground.

Now, if we're going to make a decision like that, Mr. Speaker, it doesn't seem unreasonable to me that with that kind of wealth and with that kind of impact on our economy that we would bring in the experts to take a look and see if that is indeed what is going to happen to the Alberta economy. Is that what's going to happen to the Canadian economy? This doesn't just affect Albertans, and it doesn't just affect the workers that are up at the oil sands in Fort McMurray; it's all of the other industries across this country that have steel and buses and the trucks and all of the things that we purchase to be able to keep the oil sands running. This is not a decision that we make here that is only going to have an impact . . . [Mr. Smith's speaking time expired]

Thank you.

The Speaker: Just for the record you did get the 30 seconds.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake under 29(2)(a). Is that correct?

Mr. MacIntyre: Yes, sir.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you very much. I appreciate the comments from my esteemed colleague from Drayton Valley-Devon. I would be interested to understand a little bit more about what he's saying. Specifically, if he could comment perhaps on this issue: if we cap our resource development, will it do anything whatsoever to reduce the amount of demand for oil globally or even domestically? If we don't produce it and if we don't benefit by that $150 billion to $250 billion worth of economic activity, does that mean that that won't happen anywhere? Does that mean that Saskatchewan will not fill that void? Does that mean that Russia won't, Nigeria won't, or maybe Saudi Arabia won't?

An Hon. Member: Venezuela.

Mr. MacIntyre: Or Venezuela? Does that mean that India's growth in demand, which is slated to grow 32 per cent over the next six years for oil, won't be there for oil because the mighty province of Alberta isn't going to develop those resources, we're going to cap that development, we're going to restrict that development? Does that mean that greenhouse gas emissions globally are going to decline because we don't develop that resource? Like, if we don't do something up there, does that mean the whole world stops?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, that is, I guess, one of the most telling arguments for why we need to go to committee and have a referral motion. I think that there are some misconceptions out there, some that must be shared by members of this House, a belief that if we put a cap on our emissions, all of a sudden the other players in the oil industry around the world are going to stop producing oil. Of course, that's just not going to be the case.

We don't have to look very far to see that we do have the cleanest oil and energy production in the world. If we're going to stop producing the cleanest oil in the world, it's going to be replaced by other countries who are producing in ways that are actually going to make the greenhouse gas issue and climate change issue worse. How can we in all conscience sit in this House and under the guise of trying to make something better, actually make it worse?

Obviously, there are some on the other side that don't believe that that's the truth. That's why we need this committee, Mr. Speaker. They don't understand, I guess, the argument, and they don't understand the facts. They need to be able to be educated, and this committee could help them do that.

You know, others have argued and maybe some on the other side of the House, Mr. Speaker, that the economic sacrifices that they're expecting Albertans to make when we strand our oil sands assets in the ground will be worth it because we're doing our part to reduce greenhouse gases. Well, Canada produces about 1.8 per cent of the global greenhouse emissions, and our oil sands are less than 9 per cent of that. So even if we shut down the entire oil sands, it would have a negligible difference in global output, about one and a half tenths of 1 per cent of global emissions.

An Hon. Member: One more time.

Mr. Smith: About one and a half tenths of 1 per cent of global emissions.

So we're proposing to take $150 billion out of the Alberta and the Canadian economic engine for what is nothing more or less than a statistical rounding error. If this was actually going to have a statistical – if we could see that this was going to have a real advantage to the climate issue, if we were going to make a significant dent in it, you would probably be able to get the support of Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else who would like to speak to the referral amendment to second reading of Bill 25?

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 24

Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to move an amendment to Bill 24, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016. Would you like me to start or wait?

The Chair: If you could just wait until I get a copy, please, hon. member.

Go ahead, hon. member. This will be known as amendment A1.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would move that Bill 24, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016, be amended as follows: (a) section 12 is amended in the proposed section 23 by adding the following after subsection (2):

(3) A forest officer shall notify the person referred to in subsection (1) whether the fire control plan is satisfactory within 14 days of the date the forest officer received the fire control plan.

And (b) section 17 is amended in the proposed section 32(2.1) by adding "for a period not exceeding 365 days or any extended period that the Minister may authorize" after "secure an area of land or premises."

That's the amendment. Would you like me to speak to it now?

The Chair: Go ahead. Continue.

Mr. Drysdale: Okay. Madam Chair, it's pretty straightforward. These amendments are intended to place reasonable time limits on a couple of actions allowed by Bill 24. First, we're looking to introduce a two-week limit on how long a forest officer can delay before either approving or rejecting a fire control plan. We would like to see this amendment accepted to assure Alberta industries that the government is committed to moving quickly on reviewing fire plans. As the legislation currently stands, industrial operations could be held up, with no end in sight. We would like there to be some clarity about the length of time they can take.

The second part is a one-year limit on the length of time that a forest officer or fire guardian can cordon off an area during an investigation. This is not intended to limit an investigation. It is again about providing clear timelines for those impacted by these actions. We believe that one year should be more than enough time to complete an investigation. Of course, the minister would have the option to extend that time period if the circumstances warrant it.

I think, Madam Chair, that's pretty self-explanatory, and I'll take my seat.

The Chair: Any hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you. I'd like to just rise today to speak in favour of this amendment. Again, it's not to limit the ability of anybody in forestry to be able to do their job or to limit any investigation. But I can think of a couple of examples in my constituency right now where people are being delayed because of time constraints from SRD and forestry. Often we get phone calls from constituents in regard to leasing arrangements, particularly grazing leases, that they're trying to transfer between themselves, sales, and those types of things, Madam Chair. Sometimes those delays are well over a year or so, and it can often cause significant trouble in the agricultural industry for producers.

I can also think of a couple of other leases on the tourism side in my constituency that have right now been waiting over a year to get their leases renewed. It's holding up sales for those businesses, which is causing, of course, consequences. So if that same type of thing was to happen now with larger industrial operations in our constituency, I could see how this would cause significant trouble if they're waiting well over sometimes a year or two years just to transfer a cattle grazing lease. You know, if we're dealing with larger industrial operations, the consequences of that could be even more catastrophic.

In addition to that, I lived in a place where a large forest fire happened in the forest reserve, and during some of the investigation there it took a very long time for us to return to and be able to operate our business. So putting an appropriate timeline so that people that are impacted by, you know, what could be a catastrophic event in their business or in their life are able to get back to that kind of forces forestry to be able to accommodate and get something done in a reasonable amount of time.

I would encourage all of my colleagues to support the hon. member's amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I, too, would like to rise and speak in support of this excellent amendment. I think every one of us in this House has experienced times where we've made an application to a government agency and then we hurry up and wait. And we wait. In the case of businesses, time is money. It speaks to reducing the struggle that we have and the challenges we face regarding red tape in dealing with government.

As is noted in this amendment, "a forest officer shall notify the person referred to in subsection (1) whether the fire control plan is satisfactory within 14 days of the date the forest officer received the fire control plan." Having dealt with these kinds of safety plans and emergency plans in a previous life, 14 days is plenty of time to review these plans – many of them are going to be fairly straightforward – and get back to the applicant and let them know: yeah, you're good to go. We need to do things in a timely manner.

This province suffers from red tapeitis. It's a terrible disease. It slows down development. It slows down just about everything, and that costs money needlessly. It also puts jobs on hold. Many times there are subcontractors who are waiting and waiting to get going on a contract that has been awarded to them. Meanwhile the general contractor is waiting for some kind of government approval to come down the line before these subcontractors can begin their work.

I think it is extremely important, especially for something of this nature, that we put in place a timeline so that we're not inadvertently holding up Albertans from getting a good job done. Furthermore, if there is an issue with the fire plan, it is a timely situation where the forest officer can get back to the applicant and say: "You know what? You've got a problem here, and you've got a problem here." And in a timely manner they can make the amendments and get it back again for reconsideration rather than waiting six months, seven months only to find out that there are issues with the plan and now they have to go back to the drawing board. It's unreasonable to do that, and it does put things at risk. So I think timeliness is paramount. This amendment deals with that well.

I will be in support of this amendment, and I hope everyone in this House will be in support of this excellent amendment to put some time limits on these fire control plans so that both forest officers and developers can get the ball rolling with these fire plans, get them in place, make amendments if they have to, but get things in place so that our forests can ultimately be a safer place.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any others wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'd like to thank the member for his very thoughtful amendments. You know, I've considered these amendments, and I'm not going to be supporting these. I would encourage members not to support the amendments for the reasons that I'm going to describe.

In terms of the timeline of 14 days for the fire plan I'd like to let the members know that we've consulted closely with the industry on this, and they've told us that the existing practices could be shorter or longer depending on the size of the industry and the complexity of the operation. I would be afraid that putting a time limit takes away our flexibility to ensure that we have the time to do our due diligence. In cases where there are very complex plans, putting a 14-day time limit might take away our ability to have that back and forth with the industry to make sure that the plan is satisfactory. It also allows us to work with forest companies and other businesses in the forest protection area and to engage in a thorough back-and-forth conversation.

In terms of the 365-day time limit for securing a scene, the experience that the industry and the ministry have had is that that time limit is not necessary. In fact, most cases can actually be secured within six months or less, and often smaller fires can actually be secured in less time than that. After the investigation is completed on-site, there's often a part of the investigation that occurs off-site, so the scene no longer needs to be secured after the time that the on-site investigation is complete.

Just in the case where a scene would need to be secured in excess of a year, which, I just want to reiterate, has not been our experience, we want to make sure that the investigators have the tools available to them if it's necessary to go beyond the one-year time limit, without the need for the minister to renew or extend the timelines. This would include the ability to secure the scene so that investigations can be concluded.

Just in summary, Madam Chair, I think the member has put forward some very thoughtful suggestions, but in the experience of the ministry and with the consultations that have taken place, the amendments aren't necessary for the bill, so I would recommend that members vote against this amendment.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak. I must take exception to the previous speaker because I will support the amendment. The intent here is not to restrain the efficiency of government operations, not to put them under undue stress, but the reality here is that we need to balance rights. Because we have in government the ability to create the rules of the game, we really shouldn't always be carving out for ourselves unlimited opportunity and unlimited space and an unlimited amount of: well, what if we just create all of the potentials that we can possibly imagine? The reality is that we need to balance expectations here, and these can be significant impediments to the rights, to the financial success, to the future of Alberta individuals, companies, even municipalities, in fact.

I'm currently dealing in my riding with an entirely different situation, yet it is a somewhat relevant situation. There have been endless numbers of requirements put upon a construction company and consulting engineers, that have actually dragged the process out into years. What happens is that they reply with a requirement and hurry up and write it up in a week or two and supply what's asked for, and then they sit and wait for two, three, four months before they get any response back. Then there's another requirement, so they hurry up and reply with that one, hoping to get this resolved, and then they sit and wait for two, three, four, five months. This has gone on multiple times, and it costs the future; it costs the community.

In this particular case it's impacting the municipality. The municipality has a statutory plan in place, which has been impacted, and in this case not a forest officer but a different officer of the government has held this up literally for years. There needs to be just some sort of reasonable expectation of time.

For anybody operating in any kind of a committee or a relationship where there are shared partnership responsibilities, there should be some kind of time commitment. You know, if I say that I'm going to do something for somebody or if somebody says that they're going to do something for me, I'm never satisfied until I ask them: well, when? And if there's no answer to "when," that, in effect, negates the offer and the responsibility and makes it null and void because "when" can essentially turn into almost never or beyond the point of when it matters anymore or to the point where the individual or the company has been completely rendered dysfunctional because they're still waiting.

I think it encourages excellent public service to put reasonable timelines on, so for that reason I will in fact support the amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Any others wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise again to speak in support of this amendment. I must say that I was not at all surprised to listen to the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane speaking against this amendment. I realize that for some people who have certain job experiences, delays and time delays and having some sort of expectation put on them to actually get off their butt and get the job done in a timely fashion is a novel idea. However, for most of the people that live in Alberta, right across Canada, actually, we have what is known as a get 'er done kind of mentality. These are the people in the private sector, the people that actually get out there and get dirty and get the job done in a timely fashion.

We have here an amendment regarding a potentially very dangerous situation, where we have developers that need to provide an actual fire plan and provide it to an expert in such things such as our forest officers are, to have it reviewed and get a response back in a timely manner. The whole, entire time that that applicant is waiting, there is not an approved plan in place. So if this drags on for a month, two months, three months, four months, and then finally the forest officer gets the job done, gets it back to that applicant, and says, "No, you need to amend it," now we have a few more months to wait.

It is not inconceivable given certain departments within this government to be waiting six months, seven months, or more before this applicant has an approved plan in place to protect Alberta's forests. It is inconceivable to me that any member of this House, given an opportunity to put a timeline in place that is reasonable, that protects our forests, that makes sure that government employees are getting after it, getting the job done, getting back to these applicants in a timely manner, and getting that fire plan approved and in place – that should be the norm and not the exception.

This is an excellent amendment. The arguments put forward by the Member for Banff-Cochrane are, in my opinion, unfounded and ridiculous and putting our forests actually at risk by not having some kind of timeline in place, whether it be the timeline referred to under subsection (3) of 14 days or whether it be the timeline under section B regarding the 365 days. There's nothing wrong with timelines. They're a good idea. It keeps things moving along, and it eliminates unnecessary, costly, and potentially dangerous delays.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm going to speak in favour of this amendment also. When I read section 23(1) and (2), it says this:

A person carrying on or having charge of an industrial or commercial operation on public land or within one kilometre of any public land shall at the request of a forest officer submit a fire control plan satisfactory to the forest officer, within the time determined by the forest officer.

The forest officer can ask for a fire control plan, determine the time that he would like it. There are no guidelines here as far as how long the forest officer can give a company or an industrial or commercial operation to produce this plan, this fire control plan.

Now, it goes on to say:

(2) If a person referred to in subsection (1) fails to comply with the request of the forest officer within the time determined by the forest officer, the Minister may, by order, suspend the industrial or commercial operation of the person until a fire control plan satisfactory to the forest officer has been submitted to the forest officer.

This amendment here adds:

(3) A forest officer shall notify the person referred to in subsection (1) whether the fire control plan is satisfactory within 14 days of the date the forest officer received the fire control plan.

Now, Madam Chair, if the forest officer feels that a fire control plan is necessary, he can demand that, and he can demand it in a time frame that he or she determines, but there's no requirement in this legislation for the forest officer to even respond on whether it's satisfactory or not. I don't find it unreasonable at all that the industrial or commercial operation at least receive some sort of response suggesting whether what they've done is acceptable or not within 14 days, two weeks.

Now, I don't know the exact implications of this other part I'm going to bring up now. "The Minister may, by order, suspend the industrial or commercial operation of the person until a fire control plan satisfactory to the forest officer has been submitted." I don't know if that will somehow put at risk this business's ability to operate while it's waiting to find out whether the plan is satisfactory or not, because the minister could shut down or suspend that operation. I believe this adds nothing but a little bit of clarity and a little bit of respect to the industrial operation that's required to do this.

The forest officer already has virtually complete control over every other aspect of this. There aren't any other timelines on this whole process except now the suggested amendment that the business receive a response whether the fire control plan is satisfactory. I'm quite certain that businesses required to do this would want to make sure that they did a proper job. I would think that they would want to know even sooner than 14 days whether they'd done a proper job or not, but of course this bill, without amendment, doesn't allow that opportunity, doesn't allow that respect.

Now, the second part of this amendment, part B, section 17, has to do with the cordoning off of an area. It says:

Section 32 is amended by adding the following after subsection (2):

(2.1) A forest officer or a fire guardian may, for the purposes of an investigation, temporarily cordon off or secure an area of land or premises and prohibit any person from entering or remaining in the area or premises until the investigation is completed.

Then (2.2) says:

A person shall not enter an area or premises that have been cordoned off or secured under subsection (2.1) without first obtaining the permission of a forest officer or fire guardian.

This is for the purpose of an investigation. If we're talking about a forest area here, I can't imagine how much of an investigation can happen one year after the fire. I would think that after one full year, for one thing, the investigation should be over. I mean, if it's important enough to investigate, you would think they would do this in under a year. Also, how about the evidence? What's going to be left of evidence a year after a forest fire when the forest starts growing immediately after the fire is done?

I don't see anything unreasonable about these amendments. I know this government has a hard time accepting amendments. They propose lots of bills that they, of course, bring forward their own amendments on because, obviously, they didn't do enough consultation or research to start off with, but when the opposition comes up with ideas to make a bill better and this government just flat out turns them down, I think it should be alarming to Albertans that this government seems to be unwilling to accept . . .

An Hon. Member: Common sense.

Mr. Loewen: . . . advice, some common-sense advice.

There isn't anything in this amendment here that isn't very reasonable, and it doesn't change the point of the bill. It, in fact, helps it: 14 days to look over a fire control plan that was demanded by a forest officer, to look at it and say, "Yeah, that's good" or "No, we need a little bit more." Does it make any sense to look at it for 60 days or 100 days and then come back and say, "No, it's not good enough"? Why not 14 days? Why not fewer than 14 days?

Of course, going back to the period of 365 days for an area to be cordoned off, we don't know what area could be cordoned off and how big an area and what effect it might have on businesses or individuals that want to access that. In fact, I would suggest that 365 days is probably double what's necessary. How about six months? What are they going to learn between six months and a year that they wouldn't learn in an investigation in the first six months? I don't see anything there, any reason why. Like I say, one year I think is plenty of time for an investigation, too much time, of course, when we see how fast forests grow after fires.

I think this amendment is very reasonable, a very reasonable amendment. I'd like to thank the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti for proposing this, and I think we could do well in this Legislature for Albertans by passing this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I wanted to rise in support of the amendment moved by my colleague from Grande Prairie-Wapiti. Consistent with what I've come to expect from my colleague, this is a good, solid, common-sense amendment that the government would do well to consider. The first section surely only talks about whether a fire control plan is satisfactory within 14 days of the date that the forest officer received the fire control plan. Well, you know what, folks? It doesn't actually hurt, when you're securing an area to keep it safe from fire, to have a time limit on it. I think that's all this does.

I mean, right now, while the government might have received legitimate praise from all members, including me, for the good job that they did with the evacuation and rescue from the fire up in Fort McMurray, that should all by itself make us real cautious and nervous about what we can do to prevent future occurrences. Certainly, the Minister of Municipal Affairs' municipality suffered greatly from fire just a few very short years ago.

Again, in section B of the amendment: "'for a period not exceeding 365 days or any extended period that the Minister may authorize' after 'secure an area of land or premises'."

I don't think I need a long speech on this, Madam Chair, so you're not going to get one, but I would just counsel and recommend to members on all sides of the House and, I guess, specifically, government members that what you're getting here is good advice from someone elected from a forestry-intensive part of Alberta, a member of this House that's been around long enough and with a rural background, someone that actually is well suited, well situated to give solid advice, which is why when it comes time to vote, I'm going to vote to receive that solid, helpful advice and recommend that all Members of the Legislative Assembly do the same thing.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment?

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Actually, I would like to introduce an amendment. I can wait for you to get a copy before I speak to it.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A2. Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair.

Mr. Orr moved that Bill 24, Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016, be amended in section 23 by striking out the proposed section 40.1.

First of all, I really would like to thank all of the firefighters and first responders who did help in the Fort McMurray fire and those who fight lesser fires across our province. They really do put their lives on the line for all of us. Quite frankly, it's still amazing to me how everyday Albertans helped out neighbours and strangers alike during the evacuation that happened at that particular time. There were a lot of unsung heroes, quite truthfully, and we celebrate them. Even though they may not necessarily receive medals, they certainly are deserving of them.

Legislative changes that would increase the safety of firefighting are a welcome sight, especially after, of course, this last fire season. We should always be looking for ways that we can make changes that will ensure the safety of Albertans during the crisis of major fires. There is one point in this bill that I do think is helpful: "Section 17(1) is amended by striking out 'April 1' and substituting 'March 1'." Extending the fire season will allow companies and the government to be more prepared for the fire season. The Fort McMurray fire caught the people, quite frankly, and the government off guard. We know this by some of the discussion around reducing the funding for fires. We've heard issues about the unpreparedness of the water bombers and the contract that's associated with that. Extending the timeline for the fire season, starting it, actually, when there might even still be snow on the ground, will give much-needed time for everybody to prepare for the inevitable fire season that comes to us in the spring.

The companies that work in this area need firm deadlines as to when the fire season starts, when they need to be thinking about gearing up. Obviously, we can't actually control the fire, but we certainly understand that there is a certain time of the year when the risk escalates dramatically. It's not reasonable for businesses to just start and stop on a dime. They need some predictability. They need to know when their work starts and when it should end. So I think that this will actually help, and I hope that the government, with respect to the timelines and regulations in the legislation, will also find that helpful. Companies need this stability. As I said, firefighting is not a predictable business. While a fire could start at any time and be out of control before we know it, the legislation that we have before us will hopefully bring a bit more predictability to it and help us to be prepared for the beginning of the season.

There is a part of this legislation, though, that I do have a particular issue with. I'm thankful that the government is open to suggestions, at least in some legislation, and I trust that they will be in this one because I really am not here just to sort of make political points or to picket things. I think that there are opportunities to make really good legislation in our province, and I'm glad that we have a system of governance where we're allowed to participate in that. Multiple viewpoints will improve the legislation that will affect the lives of Albertans and our democracy. I do value that.

I'd like to draw our attention, though, to section 23, starting at the bottom of page 9 and following onto page 10, the new part, which reads:

40.1 No action lies and no proceeding may be brought against the Crown, the Minister, a director or a forest officer, or any person acting under the direction of the Crown, the Minister, a director or a forest officer, for damages resulting from any order or decision under this Act or the regulations made in good faith by the Crown, the Minister, the director, the forest officer or the person.

This section is new to the Forest and Prairie Protection Act. It's not a change of wording. Instead, it's an entirely new piece that the minister wants to add. Now, a quick search of Hansard discovered that sections like this were previously implemented in legislation and by previous governments over the objections, I might add, of the then current opposition.

My argument against this section is not about precedents. It's not that it's not been done before. My argument against this addition is that it should not be done. Right now we are participating in a democratic exercise to determine if this legislation is in the best interests of all Albertans. I would hope that this government would not say that this has been done before and that, therefore, we need to do it again just because. We need to look at everything from a fresh viewpoint. Quite frankly, that's what Albertans were hoping for from this government, a fresh viewpoint and a fresh way to look at things, not accepting something just because that's the way it was done before and, therefore, we should do it again. In fact, I think Albertans were hoping that this government wouldn't be like the last government, which is why they threw them out. If it turns out that something is the best course of action, then, yes, we adopt it.

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee will now rise and report progress.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. S. Anderson: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 24. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 9 tomorrow morning.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:57 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning. It was a long night.

Please bow your heads and pray or reflect in your own way. Grant us the serenity to accept the things we cannot change, courage to change the things that we can, and the wisdom to know the difference. Let us work together for the betterment of this province, this country, and this world.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Public Health Amendment Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to rise in the Legislature today to move second reading of Bill 28, the Public Health Amendment Act, 2016, on behalf of the Minister of Health.

The intent of this bill is to make sure our immunization programs are protecting Albertans from vaccine-preventable diseases. Amendments are aimed at increasing our child immunization rates and improving the way immunization services are delivered in Alberta. This would better protect Albertans from outbreaks of vaccine-preventable diseases. Our current rates of immunization are not high enough to prevent outbreaks like measles or whooping cough. Outbreaks occur in our schools, child care facilities, and in our larger communities every year. They affect our children and all Albertans.

The amendments that are proposed to the Public Health Act focus on reaching out to parents of children who are unimmunized or underimmunized. Our proposed amendments will allow Alberta Health to collect student enrolment data from Alberta Education and match it with immunization records in the provincial immunization repository. This will enable us to better identify children with missing or incomplete immunization histories. Currently government is missing immunization information for about 15 to 25 per cent of our students. Public health professionals will be asking parents of these students to provide their child's immunization records, complete any needed immunizations, get a letter from a doctor indicating a medical exemption, or sign a form indicating they declined immunization for their child.

Parents may choose not to have their children immunized, but their children will be excluded from school in the event of a serious vaccine-preventable disease outbreak such as measles. This practice already happens, and it's not about punishing parents if they make a decision not to immunize their child. Rather, government has a role in protecting children and all Albertans from contracting a potentially deadly vaccine-preventable disease and preventing further spread of that disease.

In August 2015 the Canadian Medical Association expressed support for policies that would require every student to provide a declaration of immunization before being admitted to school. In addition, the Canadian Medical Association encouraged conversations between parents and health officials when there is a decision not to immunize. Our proposed approach aligns very closely with these recommendations. The goal is to work with parents to immunize their children and to ultimately increase our immunization rates. We want to be able to remind parents who may have forgotten to immunize their children or to report their children's immunizations and, if needed, to address any questions that parents may have about the benefits or safety of the immunizations.

Having complete immunization information means that fewer children will be kept out of our schools unnecessarily during an outbreak. We'll be able to quickly and efficiently identify the children who need to be excluded from the school or other community setting. We also want public health officials to be able to seamlessly contact parents of children enrolled in licensed and approved child care programs during outbreaks. The bill provides a provision that clarifies that a medical officer of health can obtain parent contact information from those licensed and approved child care programs such as daycare when an outbreak or an exposure to a communicable disease occurs. These officials will contact the parents of children affected by the exposure or outbreak as required, and this is the current practice.

Amendments will also address the way immunization services are delivered in Alberta so that Albertans have access to safe and high-quality immunization. If passed, all health practitioners who provide immunization will be required to report information about all immunizations and follow vaccine schedules posted by our chief medical officer. All health practitioners will also be required to report adverse events following immunization, and all persons who handle, transport, or store vaccines will be required to follow protocols developed by government to ensure safety and effectiveness. These amendments will help ensure that vaccines are being given safely and enable the province to be able to keep more complete immunization information for all Albertans.

There are a few administrative amendments to the act also being proposed. An amendment will allow the chief medical officer of health to require doctors or professionals working in laboratories to report an incidence of a disease to a medical officer of health if the chief medical officer decides it is necessary. Doctors and laboratory professionals already report diseases to the chief medical officer. The requirement to report to a medical officer of health would be to support timeliness and rapid reporting to those working in the field. Another amendment would require that sexually transmitted infections be reported to a medical officer of health instead of the current practice of reporting to the chief medical officer.

In conclusion, immunization is one of the most important public health interventions we have. It protects our children, families, and all Albertans from the devastating effects of illnesses such as measles or polio. We want to work with parents and support them in getting evidence-informed information about the benefits of immunization and the importance of reporting immunization decisions with the goal of raising those rates. We also want to work with our partners who are involved in delivering immunization services to Albertans so that Albertans receive the high-quality immunization services they deserve and expect. With Bill 28 we are providing parents more opportunities to link in with supports in our health system. This will help and encourage parents to immunize their children.

I'd like to take this opportunity to encourage all of my colleagues on both sides of the House to support this bill, and I really look forward to hearing the ensuing debate. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to my honourable colleague for the introduction of the bill and the first comments. It's important to note that this legislation does not significantly change the existing authority granted to the medical officers of health under the regulations of the Public Health Act, which currently can require children carrying highly infectious diseases to stay away from school and in the case of measles require unimmunized children to stay away until the outbreak is cleared. This, of course, is done for safety and for the sake of those with compromised immune systems.

Mr. Speaker, we know that immunization rates have fallen short of the ministry's targets for years, and we do value individual and parental choice over these medical procedures with coerciveness, and we are glad to see that this legislation focuses – focuses – on information collection and education for Albertans to make more informed choices. This is preferable. It is preferable to aid informed choice over more coercive measures.

We are encouraged to see improved reporting being required from health professionals also for adverse effects. We know that all medications carry some risk of adverse reactions, and it will help improve our understanding to have all this data aggregated, tracked, and analyzed.

Mr. Speaker, this bill does expand the information-sharing authority from just the medical officer of health's ability to get enrolment records currently from school boards to allow the Ministry of Health to get all records from Alberta Education, and as with any increase in information sharing, it is crucial to follow this up with robust protections to ensure that personal information is not inappropriately used or lost.

Mr. Speaker, this piece of legislation also allows the medical officers of health to obtain records from licensed daycare facilities, and in the event of outbreaks this does seem to make sense. However, we also have to recognize that these daycare facilities are often small, with small administrative staff and very tight budgets. I have concerns with their ability to absorb new reporting requirements into their operating budgets if this process becomes too cumbersome. We want to see this program kept lean and efficient.

Alberta Health Services, with Alberta Health's $21 billion, 55 per cent of the revenue we collect, 40-some per cent of the money we spend, as I understand the process, rather than Alberta Education will be reaching out to Albertans to ensure that they have informed information and to ensure that our public health people have the proper records.

I've seen last year's Alberta Health Services department $240 million over budget. When I see another $400 million going on top of the $800 million already spent on electronic health records, when I hear from some of our good, hard-working front-line workers that they're fearful that the $400 million will not be efficiently spent, that this money will end up in just an Alberta Health Services data redistribution analysis technique, I'm concerned that this doesn't become part of a bigger government, big information, big, inefficient system. I will be watching for that, and hopefully that will not detract from the opportunity to inform all Albertan families of the pros and cons of protecting their children.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will be asking my colleagues in the Wildrose to support this at second reading, and we will look forward to the discussion and the debate as this moves through the Legislature. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a privilege to rise today to speak to Bill 28, the Public Health Amendment Act, 2016. I can appreciate the intention of this bill and its attempt to improve public health outcomes or, as I would personally put it, the wellness of Albertans. That's a matter of importance to everyone in this province, and due to my tenure as minister of wellness I can certainly attest to this fact.

Now, in this ministry we focused on policies that were positive, proactive, and preventative, that kept Albertans as happy, healthy, and out of the hospital as much as possible. I understand that this piece of legislation addresses this aspect of wellness policy, so for that I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora for following a policy path that was actually forged by the previous Progressive Conservative government.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 28 enables education and child care providers to share student vaccination records with Alberta Health so the department can conduct targeted outreach to increase vaccination rates of students. It also works to enhance vaccine safety and does so by ensuring that all publicly funded vaccines are transported and handled appropriately.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I speak through you to the members of this Assembly and, of course, all Albertans when I say that the science is irrefutable. Vaccines do work. They are integral in preventing communicable diseases, and they do help to protect the health and well-being not only of our children but of all Albertans. So policies such as this are in the public's best interest, and they do help to increase vaccination rates throughout Alberta. This is a value, an idea that I believe members of our Progressive Conservative caucus believe in and will support. The well-being of our children should be at the forefront of all of our policy decisions, and I'm glad that this government is making that a priority in this instance.

With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, I want to be on record saying that the privacy of our children and their families must be reflected in this process. This must be achieved – and I trust that it will be – through the professionalism of our health and education and public service officials. It's of utmost importance that sensitive information pertaining to the health of an individual is maintained.

I also want to advise the government with respect to parental communications. The message must be conveyed that this bill does not interfere with the rights of parents to exclude their children from vaccinations for medical or other reasons. Ensuring and respecting parental rights is critical with respect to policy matters, and this simply must not be forgotten.

Wearing a different hat now, Mr. Speaker, as advocate for indigenous relations, this bill offers an avenue to explore an issue that's very near and dear to my heart, and that, of course, is the well-being of our First Nations and Métis and Inuit children. I understand and I acknowledge from first-hand experience the incredible challenges that are faced by indigenous Albertans. I really, really do hope that this bill provides the semblance of a framework that may be utilized by school divisions to address the wellness of our indigenous friends.

With the utmost level of respect I encourage the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford as well as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora to build – build – upon this legislation with effective policy that enhances the public health of our indigenous individuals and communities through wellness programs and by working, obviously, with our First Nations, Inuit, and Métis friends and, of course, with the federal government. Doing so will in fact enhance the quality of life for so many young people, and that's something that just cannot be overlooked in this process.

From a departmental perspective now, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the government has an appropriate plan in place to ensure that accurate data transmission occurs between our public servants in health and education. With a project such as this, the time and resources allocated do have the potential to be quite large, so we do have to do this right.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, I believe that this bill utilizes a preventative, proactive focus in health care in order to improve wellness outcomes. That's something, in my humble opinion, that is lacking within our health care system today in a big way, and it's world-wide. It's equally important that we work to prevent disease before it occurs in addition to curing disease, and doing so can help to reduce health care costs and improve the quality of life for all Albertans. It's a win-win for everyone. Bill 28 helps to achieve this through the utilization of vaccines which are useful, effective, and efficient.

Now, as mentioned and just to stress the importance for one last time, it's our wish, our desire, our hope, our plea that this government find creative ways to work with our indigenous populations in ensuring that this bill maximizes wellness outcomes for them and for all Albertans. In working to achieve this, I am more than willing to extend a helping hand to the members opposite in charge of the Indigenous Relations file and, of course, wellness and beyond. Feel free to take me up on it. We can help.

Mr. Speaker, all matters considered, I am pleased to stand here today with my Progressive Conservative caucus in support of Bill 28, and I encourage all hon. members to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

9:20

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments for the Member for Calgary-Lougheed under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you and a very fine morning to you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be here in the Assembly this morning representing the outstanding folks from, as you know, the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on a number of very important matters that will be before the House today, the first of which is Bill 28, the Public Health Amendment Act, 2016.

I'd like to just spend some time this morning chatting a little bit about the importance of this bill, a little bit about what this bill is, what this bill isn't, and some of the potential risks in the handling of this particular piece of legislation, in particular areas around privacy and potential costs of this. Let me be clear that there is significantly more that I support in this bill than any of the concerns that I may have around this particular piece of legislation. I think an overall desire to increase the health of Albertans is a very good desire to have. I think the overall goal of ensuring that we have a healthy and safe community is something we should all aspire to.

I want to just identify that this piece of legislation is about the sharing of information and then the ministry's ability to act on that information in the form of public health education and work in collaboration with the Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Health to ensure that those two departments are working well together to ensure that the level of vaccination across our province is to the standard that will assist in the health of those populations.

I do just want to note what this bill isn't. This bill as it currently stands is not about mandatory vaccinations. I know that there are people on all sides of the aisle that have some concerns around mandatory vaccinations. I can tell you already that even though this bill was just recently introduced, some outstanding constituents from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills have already contacted me and the office expressing their concerns around the possibility that this is a bill on mandatory vaccinations. I assured them that it wasn't.

I think that there are two very separate issues there, one of which – I am in support of parental choice as well, although I am personally more than pleased to vaccinate my children. The concern around this bill – we should not get distracted that this is a conversation around mandatory vaccination when it is truly a conversation around information sharing and the government's ability to educate the public on vaccines. In fact, in some cases, if the information is shared appropriately, it will identify potential challenges that parents may have been unaware of or a child that may have in fact missed a vaccine that they would have liked to ensure that their child had.

There are a number of strong points in this legislation, and I encourage my colleagues on this side of the House as well as that side to support this particular piece of legislation.

One of the things that I think the government needs to be aware of, though, is that the both Department of Health and AHS haven't shown the best track record when it comes to the privacy of Albertans. We have seen over the past 18 months a significant number of breaches of the privacy of health records of Albertans, and I think that as the ministry increases the total amount of information that they have and that they have access to, they need to also be ensuring that positive steps are being put into place to ensure that the privacy of Albertans is held with the highest amount of security as well as respect. We've seen significant numbers of breaches in this area, so as we add more information, that there's access to, I certainly have some pause around the ministry's ability to deal with that information appropriately. Now, I hope, Mr. Speaker, that that information will be dealt with appropriately, and I put certain amounts of trust in the minister to ensure that that actually does happen.

The other potential challenge or risk that I see as we increase the total amount of information and the sharing of information between departments is exactly the IT resources that will be required to ensure that that can be done in the most effective way possible, both for privacy purposes as well as for cost purposes. We see significant overbudget costs and overspending on IT resources inside AHS and the ministry, and that presents a risk when it comes to adding more departments that need the ability to communicate. This is an area that the government is not meeting their targets on, so to add more complexity is concerning.

That's not to say that the risk of that information sharing doesn't outweigh the complexity of the challenge, but it's something that both ministries need to be very aware of and attentive to because if this information is handled poorly, not only will it result in the opposite of the desired effect, but it will also cost taxpayers significantly for the government to not get it right. I certainly encourage both ministries to ensure that they're working as well as possible together, that the resources for IT management are spent as effectively and as efficiently as possible because if all of those things happen, we can wind up with a better system between the departments as well as, hopefully, better health outcomes as well as, hopefully, better IT resources.

Now, I'm sure you'll understand, Mr. Speaker, that even though this bill has the best of intentions, sometimes the delivery of this government hasn't been as good as it ought to be, so I think it's fair that we just raise some concerns and highlight some potential risks for the ministry and for the minister.

I'd just like to close by reiterating my support for the fact that we are not moving towards mandatory vaccinations but that parental choice is being retained and also my support for the health outcomes of this legislation being a real net benefit for all of our children across the province.

I'd like to thank the minister. I hope that they can deliver on this piece of legislation in a manner that achieves the outcomes that are set out in the legislation and do so in a respectful manner that respects the privacy of all Albertans and the resources that will go into this piece of legislation.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), are there any questions to the Official Opposition House Leader?

Hearing none, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. After last night's results I guess anything is possible. I hear support from the Wildrose for a really common-sense health bill, and I'm pleased to see that even though it might shift some of the priorities away from individual freedom to collective good. That's part of the dilemma that we always face, but I guess that part of what I'm hearing from the government is that we will not take choice away from people, but we will enable them to make the healthy choice the easier choice. That's fundamental to actually improving population health.

We have to make it easy for the individuals based on good information and easy access and reliable records so that we can actually follow up with people in a timely way and allow them to make an informed choice instead of a somewhat uninformed or fearful choice or a choice that is made for them by their circumstances. I'm thinking particularly of low-income folks, single moms, who just can't get everything together, and somehow vaccination and vaccination timelines don't necessarily fit into their hectic schedule or their schedule of priorities.

The bill, as has been stated, proposes to amend the Public Health Act to introduce measures to boost immunization rates in schoolchildren and preschool children to better protect them from vaccine-preventable diseases, to better protect all of us from vaccine-preventable diseases. As we get older, of course, our immune systems weaken, and any of us could be vulnerable to conditions that we thought we were immune to from childhood immunizations, but these have waned and we are now vulnerable.

I applaud the minister and this government for moving forward on something that the Liberals have been calling for for some time, which is not mandatory vaccination but mandatory informed choice, to have accurate records, to have the ability to contact people, to have the ability to respond to an outbreak in a way that is really showing competence in the health system, that says, "We are calling you because your child has no record of immunization; therefore, we are going to have to exclude them from school" or "We're going to have to give some prophylactics," depending on what the condition is, "and we are going to reduce the spread. We're going to reduce the cost of this."

When one talks about prevention as cost saving, one has to recognize that the cost of addressing an outbreak of disease is phenomenal: chasing everybody that had any contact with a particular case, finding out their contacts, their family contacts, isolating them, quarantining them, keeping them out of work, and then getting all those folks in the school to upgrade their vaccine status. That's one of the opportunities of an outbreak, that everybody, if they haven't had their booster, gets called in for their booster. It is a huge and expensive undertaking to deal with an outbreak, not even mentioning the suffering and sometimes rare death in the case of measles or whooping cough or even influenza if it's a child who is vulnerable.

Let's remember that we're protecting those who for one reason or another can't have the vaccine and therefore are vulnerable to a disease. We're protecting those who are on cancer chemotherapy. We're protecting those who may need extra protection because of lung and heart disease and would be therefore extremely vulnerable to a particular condition like influenza, for example.

It's clear to me that this is going to be a cost-saving measure. I share the concerns of the opposition that we have to do this . . .

Mr. Cooper: See? Common sense.

Dr. Swann: Pardon me?

Mr. Cooper: It's common sense.

Dr. Swann: Common sense, yeah.

I share your concerns that it has to be done efficiently and effectively. We've spent a tremendous amount of money on IT, and we still can't communicate between doctors' offices and hospitals and hospitals and clinics. We have wasted a lot, millions of dollars, on IT systems that do not allow compatible sharing of information. It's really shocking that we have over the last 20 years, since I've been in politics and before I was in politics, been hearing iterations of IT systems that have not actually generated the kind of communication ability between physicians, between hospitals, and it's really unfortunate. We get duplicate testing done because doctors can't get a hold of results of previous testing. We can't share records from hospitals to clinics because their IT system isn't compatible. It's really unbelievable that at this stage, in 2016, we still have to find IT systems that will talk to everybody in this province and allow for efficient sharing of information.

The resources that are needed are going to be increased, I presume, because public health nurses are already stretched. We're now asking them to not only make continued phone calls but follow up with people and in some cases provide special clinics for their kids to get updated, in some cases spend an hour with a person because they really don't get it and they need a lot of information and persuasion, I guess, to see the opportunity for protection. It's definitely going to take more resources if we're going to do this well, more resources on the IT side and more resources on the nursing side to work with people. It's up to a third of people who don't believe in vaccinations, who believe that it's ultimately harmful, that it's ultimately going to cause them to be ill, that it's ultimately going to cause long-term damage to their unborn child, for example, or whatever the fear is. We're talking about new resources, extra resources, if we're going to do this well, and I know that the minister understands that.

I think this bill strikes the right balance. All of us will be safer. We have the data to back up incidents that occur from time to time, even polio. We've had polio outbreaks in communities in southern Alberta, where the whole community decided, for religious reasons or otherwise, that they didn't want any vaccines, and someone brought in polio from outside the country or maybe from some other part of this country and introduced it into a community. It spread through that community and threatened all those who either had weakened immunity – and there were older people – or threatened those who indeed never got a vaccine in our own mainstream communities. It is a tremendously costly thing to deal with even a single case of measles or mumps or whooping cough. Diphtheria, for example, crops up periodically. These are serious conditions, especially in a population that hasn't been exposed to them for decades.

Of course, what's happened is that successful prevention has meant that people don't think they need them anymore. That's the irony. Because we don't see diphtheria anymore, because we don't see haemophilus influenza meningitis much anymore – someone reminded me yesterday at a conference that we used to get about 200 deaths a year in Alberta from meningitis due to haemophilus. We had two last year instead of 200 as a result of the haemophilus meningitis vaccine that's available now. It's very easy for us as a society to say: "We don't need vaccines anymore. Let somebody else do it." Well, if you don't achieve what's called herd immunity, after the cattle herds, at least 80 per cent, preferably 90 per cent coverage, you will get outbreaks. You get herd immunity if you get up to 90 to 95 per cent coverage for the vaccine.

No, vaccines are not perfect. Not everybody reacts well to them, and there are some reasons why individuals may not choose to have them after being well informed, and they have that right. They always have that right. Otherwise, it's assault to force somebody to take something they don't want. It always has to be their final choice. But we don't have a system yet that will properly identify those at risk, make sure they're given the full information, and make sure that we get the highest possible rates of immunization possible.

As kind of a parallel question for the minister, I guess, the next step really has to do with health care workers. Health care workers often refuse to take influenza vaccine and therefore put their own patients at risk in health institutions in the case of a flu outbreak. We also, I think, need to apply the same principle to health care workers if they're not prepared to protect themselves and therefore their patients. Some of the most vulnerable patients, of course, in our society are in hospitals. In some cases health workers would be bringing the flu virus in.

If they're not prepared to take the vaccine – and they have to have that choice, presumably; we can't force health workers to take flu vaccine if they don't want it – their fallback, then, is that they have to wear a gown and gloves and mask when they go into the hospital during a flu outbreak. That is only consistent with what we're saying here. We're saying that we want all children to be vaccinated unless there are extreme reasons not to. Well, I think the same principle is going to have to apply to health workers if we're serious about our ethical commitment to first of all do no harm. If we as health workers are taking a preventable illness into a hospital, then I think we are failing in some ways as well.

The same principle, I think, will have to apply. Whether we do that hospital by hospital or whether we do that maybe next year as a new bill, I leave that to the minister, but I think it's certainly something that needs to be discussed in the medical community, in the senior administration of Alberta Health Services. It makes a lot of sense to apply the same principle of mandatory choice, informed choice, and in this case ethical conduct to those who care for the sickest in our community.

So with those caveats, ensuring that we have the resources that these folks need to do a proper job and that we have an IT system that is communicating properly between physician offices and public health units and hospitals and that we get that integrated electronic medical record that we have so long needed, I'm all in favour of moving in this direction. It's a very progressive decision, and it brings us in line with Nova Scotia and Ontario. Ontario has gone even further. But we are, I think, finding the right balance between informing and allowing people to make a conscientious choice at the same time, making sure there are consequences for not taking a vaccine that is actually going to prevent spread in the community.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), are there any questions for the Member for Calgary-Mountain View? What is the wish of the House? Are there other members who wish to speak?

Mr. Orr: Under 29(2)(a).

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Orr: Yeah. Please.

The Speaker: Yes. Proceed.

Mr. Orr: I just wonder. To the good doctor from Calgary-Mountain View: I'm interested in the reporting of adverse effects. I think that may have some interesting value in terms of resolving fears, confirming fears. I'd just appreciate it if you'd comment on that.

Thank you.

Dr. Swann: Well, an excellent question. Thank you. I'm very pleased to respond to that. Everything we do has benefits and risks, so the bottom line is: do the benefits of a vaccine outweigh the risks of the vaccine? It's statistically 10 to 1, the benefits over the risks; 1 in 10 may have adverse effects from a vaccine. There's a national reporting centre for vaccine-adverse events. You can look it up online. They welcome the data, whether it's headaches, fever. You can report anything that you feel is in a timely relationship to that vaccine, and that means at least within three days of a vaccine. If you have an adverse experience, it should be reported to your doctor. The doctor should report it to Ottawa and the adverse effects registry. That's the only way you get a good database, at the end of the day, especially with new vaccines being introduced all the time. That's the only way we can put together any epidemiology of disease versus vaccine risks.

I don't know that it's used as much as it should be. I don't know that doctors are reporting as conscientiously or patients are reporting as conscientiously as they could to keep that record current and up to date, but certainly events that bring people to hospital, events that cause death: those are all reported if there's any connection to a vaccine. And it has to be. We have to know, in fact, not only how that particular vaccine affected that person but what the cumulative impact is of the 30 or 40 vaccines that we've all had in our lifetimes. At the end of the day, epidemiologists are looking at those who have had that array of vaccines and those who have had none and trying to compare whether there's any difference in cancer rates or depression. Those kinds of comparisons all have to be made on the basis of fact, and it relies on people reporting adverse events as well as the prevention of disease.

Thanks.

The Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any other members who would like to speak to second reading of Bill 28, the Public Health Amendment Act, 2016?

Would the Minister of Health like to close debate on the matter or the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud?

Ms Hoffman: No.

Dr. Turner: No, sir.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 24

Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016

The Chair: We are currently discussing amendment A2. Are there any further speakers to this amendment? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. If I may, I'll just pick up where I was the other day, speaking on behalf of my amendment. We were talking about section 23, which removes the checks and balances that should be in place for the protection of individuals. This section doesn't guarantee the protection of the rights of our citizens, and it implies that actions taken by the forest officers, individuals really acting under the direction of the minister, even when acting in good faith – and I don't think we should question that they would be acting in good faith – and I quote from the section, can have damaging results for the people of our province.

We realize that, sometimes, acting in good faith does unintentionally have the consequences of damaging results to citizens. So by putting this section in, in which there is complete immunity or no sense of accountability for forest officers, it really gives zero recourse for citizens in the instance of their rights being violated at the direction of the minister. I'm not saying that it would ever be intentional, but I am saying that consequently it can happen, and in fact the act essentially acknowledges that by talking about the fact that these results can be damaging.

There are many instances in which people act under the direction of their government, but that shouldn't mean that they or their government is restricted from recourse in the instances of actions that damage or harm people's homes or their livelihoods or their businesses. I'm just simply arguing for checks and balances, which is partly why we have courts in the land. The courts are there for, I suppose you could say, the little guy to ensure that government doesn't overstep their bounds. Some people abuse the power of the courts, and that's unfortunate – it plugs them up – but that's the function that we have, and we can't ignore it. We need to protect the rights of citizens without an overbearing authority, which can become abusive without those checks and balances.

I'd like to actually go back and quote the words of a current minister who used to be in the opposition, who rose with regard to a very, very same sort of phrase in the previous whistle-blower legislation. I quote this current minister as having said a couple of years ago, when referring to this phrase:

No action lies against a department, public entity or office of the Legislature, or an employee of any of them, for making a reasonable human resource management decision in good faith.

As you can see, that bill and this bill are almost word for word the same, identical in what's in section 23 of this bill.

This person continues to say:

There's too much that's either left for interpretation or up to the discretion of one person, the commissioner, which is too much power in the hands of one person and really should be given to the public.

You know what? I don't say this terribly often, but I do agree in this case with the current Minister for Economic Development and Trade, who I have been quoting, who said this about four years ago this month.

Another of our current ministers, the one for Education, on this same sort of subject also had similar thoughts on this issue two years ago in April, when he was against a section that, again, read almost word for word the same. I'm not going to quote it but just reference it.

I know that some individuals in this government actually probably feel much the same way about the abuse of power as we do. The NDP used to rail against the old government when they would exempt themselves from the laws. The old NDP used to be for a free and democratic society that did not abuse the rules. The old NDP used to be on the side of Albertans. Now that the old NDP is ministers, we're seeing a different side.

Although I'm starting to doubt it, I do hope that there are some remnants of the old argument, the old spirit of the NDP that used to hate corruption and the unbalanced concentration of power that this section will in fact create. It is a step in the wrong direction. No one should be above the law, and we should not be creating laws that give individual ministers or individual employees of the state too much power. I hope that the two ministers I've quoted would speak with their colleagues and agree with the amendment that I'm now putting forward, that's now been tabled.

Frankly, friends, I just appeal to you on this. Think about the ordinary person who potentially becomes an abused nonentity in this. Democracy is one of the most valued parts of our heritage and recognizes that all citizens must receive equal civil rights. Most civil servants are, in fact, good and civil people, but all people make mistakes at some point. Nobody is perfect, and we don't expect them to be. Under this bill, though, they have significant powers to require costly remedies, to shut down businesses, to disrupt services, to really impact people's lives, to confiscate things. These powers are absolute, total, and non-negotiable when you take away the right to any kind of appeal or recourse or addressing the issue. Honest mistakes can happen that cost people their lives, that bankrupt them.

This bill actually creates a matrix in which people have to live, and there's no escape because there's not even a possible avenue of appeal or recourse. It's denied in this case. It's deliberately stripped away, and that's not fair for the people of Alberta, and that's my real point. While government employees should be protected from harm and harassment and liability – I have no problem with that – so should citizens in a just society. There should be a balance for them.

The difficulty here is that, in a sense, we're granting agents of the state absolute authority, and it's based on their subjective opinion. The only requirement in 23(1) and (2) is that "a fire control plan [be] satisfactory to the forest officer." Well, what if it's not satisfactory to others? I mean, obviously, the person may not be satisfied, but what about the case where municipalities are impacted and they're not satisfied or a fire chief in a particular area? What if there's a difference of opinion here? There should be some mechanism for appeal and discussion.

What does "satisfactory" actually mean? Does it mean effective? What if the plan that's viewed as satisfactory is, in fact, not effective? Or does satisfactory even hold the potential meaning of personally acceptable? Does an individual's personal bias or personal preference now have the uncontested force of law? What if a feasible plan is rejected and the demand for an impossible one is the only thing that will satisfy the officer?

Now, I recognize fully that most forest officers will be good people, but we're all human. All people have bad days, sick days. Get a speeding ticket, and you're mad at the world, and frustration just bubbles to the surface. It even happens in this House. When that, though, has the force of expressing itself in the force of law – and I don't blame people for feeling frustrated sometimes. But my point is that it just happens. Sometimes a victim with no rights is inadvertently created, and there's no ability to ask for a sober second opinion. They are silenced. My question is: is that social justice? No, it's not. So please think about the possibilities, the unseen impacts on people. Why do we continue to write laws that reduce people to nonentities, with no voice and no rights?

Thomas Paine, in 1789, recorded the Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen by the National Assembly of France. Article 15 of that very famous declaration states, "Every community has a right to demand of all its agents an account of their conduct." Let me read that again. "Every community has a right to demand of all its agents an account of their conduct." But in this law we are going back on that basic principle of human rights and democracy and stating that they do not have a right to demand of their agents an account of their conduct.

I'm simply asking that we enshrine the basic human rights of Albertans in your legislation. It's not okay that we create a state, one piece of legislation after another, that strips our people of basic civil rights to be heard and to be protected. Unfortunately, this trend and this pattern began under the last government. I was hoping, I think, with a great many people, that this would not continue in the current government. The temptation of government is to overstep its role, and I beg you to not go down that path. It's not unreasonable to create the checks and balances to power that distinguish a democracy from a totalitarian state, which, in fact, was the very struggle of the French Revolution. I certainly don't think we want to go back to 1789.

I'm all for an efficient, effective government and administration. I do not mean to create barriers or impediments to forest officers trying to do their job. I do ask that we don't trample the basic democratic rights of people by stripping them of the right to speak up in some legal venue or forum. All citizens should have basic civil rights of due process before a judge or at least some sort of an impartial appeal board. The previous government, as I said, began this oligarchic slide towards accruing power and rights to themselves while stripping away personal rights. You can do better. Albertans are hoping that you will.

I at least must defend the rights of the people to due process, to have someone who will hear their cause. The individual has no power in the face of the massive power of the state unless their right is protected in law. In this law that right is not protected, and I think that is wrong. It creates the potential for the abuse of power, and that makes the state a bully of the most abject kind.

I have tabled my amendment. I trust that you will give it good consideration, and I urge all members to consider it carefully.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to thank the member for bringing this amendment forward. However, this amendment would reverse the proposed changes to the legislation that would protect our forestry staff from civil action for doing their jobs. The section of the bill that this amendment would repeal protects forestry staff and everyone working under the direction of the Crown, including our wildland firefighters. It protects them from civil action while acting under direction of the Crown. The section in question does not protect those acting recklessly or with gross negligence. The Crown and minister already have these protections under the act. We think that front-line staff carrying out their normal duties in a reasonable manner deserve the same protections.

Madam Chair, this is a standard clause, and similar provisions exist in other acts such as the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, the Public Lands Act, the Fisheries (Alberta) Act, the Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, as well as the Water Act.

With that, Madam Chair, I would recommend that we turn this amendment down. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak in favour of the amendment. Let me be clear. The desire isn't that we are, you know, efforting to do all we can to find wrongdoing in front-line workers. Nothing could be further from the truth. Of course, the vast, vast, vast majority of forest protection workers and forestry personnel are acting with the best intentions.

The challenge is that the bill doesn't provide any form of due process, and it also sets a course where even if an individual didn't act appropriately, there wouldn't be any of the appropriate checks and balances. So this amendment would create the ability for checks and balances to be in place. Perhaps a better balance needs to be struck between the two positions, but given the nature of the amendment, I think it's important that we would support this so that that process can still exist and we can move forward in a manner that is respectful of both sides.

I would encourage all members of the Assembly to support the amendment, and I look forward to doing so shortly.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A2?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any further comments, questions, or amendments with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to further discuss the government's proposed Bill 24, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016. As most of this House should know, the update of this act was one of 21 recommendations brought forth from the tragic 2011 fire in Slave Lake. The minister of then ESRD created the Flat Top Complex wildfire review committee as a review of Alberta's wildfire management practices after the wildfire that entered the town of Slave Lake and surrounding communities in May of that year. Three wildfires burned 22,000 hectares and destroyed over 500 structures. These fires became known as the Flat Top Complex. The cost of implementing all of these recommendations was estimated in 2013 at $500 million. As of then, 13 of 21 recommendations had been implemented.

While preliminary estimates for the Fort McMurray fire are pegged into the billions, it's no doubt that any number of recommendations and dollars will not be sufficient to solve these kinds of catastrophic events, but it does give reason to pause and wonder how much less the impact would have been had there been more of these recommendations implemented in the years between 2013 and 2016.

Some of the broader recommendations from the committee included a proposal to expand fire weather advisories to include potential wildfire behaviour so that communities can be better prepped in case of impending threats. As we saw in the frightening evacuation of Fort McMurray, minutes and seconds can mean getting out of harm's way safely. While we are waiting for the reports to come out on the Fort McMurray disaster and the examination of how the fire was fought, another recommendation suggesting developing more specialized initial response firefighting crews would be timely. Advancements in techniques, equipment, and technology will always have this recommendation evolving.

As we continue to evolve in our strategies to combat forest and prairie fire threats, it's equally important to involve more agencies and jurisdictions in carrying out FireSmart risk reduction projects in communities. My colleague from Drumheller-Stettler broached this subject in his speech on how, through anecdotal stories, my colleagues and I have heard how FireSmart techniques were instrumental in reducing the damage of the Horse Lake fire. These community grants for FireSmart, while currently capped, could prove to be a solid investment in reducing overall fire damage to communities.

As I mentioned, amending and updating the Forest and Prairie Protection Act was recommended in the Flat Top Complex report, and I expect that as technologies and practices advance, the need for updating this act will continue. This is why I have some support for this legislation, though I'm hoping that robust discussion and compromise on possible tweaks to it are given due consideration by all members. Again, we are doing our best to work with the government on reasonable changes to what essentially will become a living document throughout the years.

With that in mind, there are some areas of concern that reveal a certain vagueness in what the government is trying to propose. Perhaps we should postpone debate until the minister is willing to answer the questions we have. So far, since the minister introduced the bill – he spoke about 150 words on it at that time – we haven't heard from him, and we've had multiple questions regarding it. As my colleagues noted several times with obvious exasperation, nobody across the aisle seems to be willing or able to respond to our questions or concerns.

One issue, to me, seems to be the wording in 23(1) which discusses fire control plans. While I'm sure everyone can agree that this is a very important aspect of the act, I have to again ask about the vague wording of "an industrial or commercial operation." It was mentioned yesterday. Hopefully, someone will expand on who exactly this refers to. A colleague used the example of a farmer running cattle on a public land. Will he need a fire control plan? Will a taxidermist operating his taxidermy shop on an acreage need one? Is there a threshold for a certain number of employees or other criteria that one uses as a benchmark? We would really appreciate some clarity on this.

Another thing that is a sticky point in this act is the term "thing." While I understand that other jurisdictions may use this term, places like Saskatchewan when talking about pest control make it clear that they mean wood. Specifically, they use the term "forest product." Pest and disease control of things such as Dutch elm and pine beetle: those threats are real and should be taken seriously, and I'm all for those protections. When we're talking about tracking and destroying pests and infested products, it's certainly understandable.

What isn't understandable is the wording change from "product" to "thing." Expanding a forest officer's power to a "thing" seems to be a way too judicial use of that terminology. It's just not clear how broad the term has to be in order to ensure eradication of diseased trees and pests. Again, these are questions that we've asked but haven't received any answers to.

I'm hopeful that the government doesn't mean to go full on Big Brother and want to include trailers, vehicles, or personal belongings. Do you? We have asked why, and I'm asking once more: why the change? If you're going to change terminology or descriptors, then support the amendment and use the term "forest product." It seems a sensible compromise that would certainly remove any ambiguity and one that I'm sure the government and all the members of this House can agree is a reasonable one.

I'd like to introduce an amendment at this time.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A3.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Loewen: Okay. I move that Bill 24, Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016, be amended in section 16 as follows: in clause (a) in the proposed section 31.4(1) by striking out "thing" and substituting "forest product" and by striking out clause (b).

I'm going to wrap this up by once again repeating that what we all want to do here is to make life better for Albertans. That's what the government members believe, and I'm certain the opposition parties feel the same way. We aren't always going to agree on ideological differences in this House, but when we're talking about something that can have a direct consequence on our citizens, I don't think trying to erase any possible misunderstandings or ambiguity is asking too much. I'm hopeful that we can get full support for our amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A3? Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I'm happy to give the government a few minutes to make some very important decisions on whether or not they're going to support this very important amendment.

Mr. Bilous: Tell me a little bit about that.

Mr. Cooper: Why don't I tell the hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade a little about this very important amendment. I think, as my hon. colleague from the northern part of our province, one who has had a significant amount of experience with forestry products as well as forestry activities and other sundry related items, has so clearly identified for us, there's a significant concern and risk inside this particular piece of legislation, Bill 24, a bill, I might add, Madam Chair, that we are in favour of.

Let me just take a brief moment to say thank you to our front-line forestry employees, our firefighters, and our first responders, that do everything that they can to keep our province safe whenever possible. Let me just highlight the good work that has been done. Generally speaking, this piece of legislation endeavours to make some proactive steps around doing just that; that is, making our forested areas – thankfully, the Member for Banff-Cochrane let us know that those forested areas are often covered with trees – safer for all of our province. Not only is it about making them safe, but it's about managing the resources that are our forests.

You know, I look forward to being able to support this bill, but as you know, Madam Chair, the role of the opposition is to ensure that we get the best possible piece of legislation. That means, even on stuff we agree with like Bill 24, exerting to make sure that the legislation is as good as it possibly can be for all Albertans and the stakeholders that are involved with this piece of legislation, be they forestry employees, industry, Albertans.

One of the things that we've identified here is a change in language in the legislation, as my colleague identified, this move away from the terminology "forest product" to the terminology around "thing." Now, I would love to be able to provide the definition of "thing" – and I should just pull it up for us here briefly – but it describes such a wide swath of objects. One of the risks is that if you have this opportunity with respect to pest control in our forests and we only use the word "thing," there are many things that are inside our forests that aren't forest products, and it would allow a significant amount of leeway and ability for those things to be confiscated or moved. I just want to read section 31.4 for you. I'll just grab my bill here. As my colleague mentioned with respect to "thing," a thing in the forest in this case could be boats, ATVs, trailers, vehicles. It could go as far as backpacks that an individual may or may not be carrying.

When writing legislation, we need to ensure that balance is struck, and certainly, in my opinion and the opinion of my colleague, when we just say "thing," that doesn't strike the right balance. If we use terminology that we're more familiar with as well as terminology that is used in other jurisdictions like Saskatchewan, that is significantly more clear and provides guidance and direction and a little bit more clarity around what would and would not be appropriate. I'm sure that even you, Madam Chair, would agree that, you know, the confiscation of an individual's backpack or some personal private property would not be the direction or the desire of this government; it's more specifically around keeping to forest products so that our folks out in the field are very focused on the job at hand.

Let me be clear. When we legislate, we need to consider the possibility that there will be one-offs out there. I don't believe that the government is putting the word "thing" here so that they can go out into the forest and, you know, disrupt individuals' lives, but I do believe it's possible that there may be a forestry worker that, under the guise of pest control, doesn't necessarily do the right thing. Ensuring that this is about forest products provides some oversight and some guidance to our workers, and I think that's critically important. So I will certainly be encouraging members of the government and members on the opposition side, that they need to consider just exactly the direction that we ought to go, that we shouldn't be opening legislation to wide, wide swaths of interpretation but should keep the language specific to the problem at hand, which is forest products.

I look forward to hearing from the government and all of the wonderful reasons why they will be supporting this amendment and moving this forward. It is important that we keep Albertans at the fore of all of our decisions, and I believe that Albertans would see the reasonability of this amendment. We're not asking for things that are totally unreasonable but for things that provide the department the ability to keep our forested areas safe as well as provide clarity for individuals who are enjoying our forests here in the province.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Chair. This being a very timely bill, considering Fort Mac, I'm glad this has come up here, and I'm glad to be able to speak on this notice of amendment. I was a firefighter; I still am actually a volunteer firefighter. After every major incident we would go look and see, well, what worked right, what went wrong, and I'm sure that's what happened with Fort Mac, Smoky Lake, all these different places that have had fires, that have had problems. So this bill is a timely bill. It's a good bill. We're able to reflect on some of the things that went right and some of the things that went wrong and make it better.

My concern with this part of the bill: it says in clause (a) that we should be striking out "thing." We should be striking out "thing" because, really, that's too vague. We need to have some clarity to what we're talking about.

When I was in real estate I used to write up contracts. If I went and started writing up a contract and I said what the chattels were that were going to be included with this house and I said, "Well, there's going to be a thing included with this house," when a person occupies the house, they would look and say, "Well, that cabinet is not there." "Well, we didn't write down 'cabinet'; we wrote down 'thing.'" Therefore, that's what we were talking about, this cabinet." I'd be in court. I'd be in front of a judge, trying explain that, because there was not clarity in this.

It's problematic. We need to be able to define what "thing" is. That's standard with practices across all industries. They have to have a definition. They can't just say: there's a thing. Madam Chair, it's way too loose, and I just cannot – it's important to have that same thing in there. So on this amendment I encourage all the members of this House to consider this amendment and vote in favour of it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Chair. First of all, I'd like to thank the member for bringing this amendment forward as well as his concerns. If we change the term from "thing" to "forest products," we're not capturing a lot; for example, piles of logs, raw logs, trees, et cetera. We want to make sure that this bill captures all, so at this time I would encourage everyone to turn down this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to just touch on an important fact here. Under section 31.4(1) "A forest officer may, without a warrant, seize any thing that the forest officer has reasonable grounds to believe harbours a forest pest." Now, what's important here to establish is: without a warrant. Whenever we have one of our officers doing any seizures, we always have to be cautious whenever it's done without a warrant.

In this case here, we're saying that clarity is important, and I'll move a little further on that. On Bill 1, the act that removed union and corporate donations, I brought forward an amendment that said that services should not be allowed to be brought forward to political parties by unions and corporations. Now, the government came back, and they said: there's no definition of services, so we're not going to be supporting this because there isn't enough of a description of exactly what it is you're trying to move forward with this amendment. Now, while I would say that we could have established a definition, that was rejected on the basis that there was a government that said: well, it wasn't prescriptive enough.

Now we've got a government bill coming forward, and under section 31.4 we're seeing that the government is saying that an officer is able, really, without a warrant, to seize any thing that they are looking to bring forward. This is why we need to have some sort of narrow focus on what exactly it is that the government can actually seize. Right now I've heard from my local constituents that when it comes to fish and wildlife, if they have a reasonable concern, they can go into a vehicle and start seizing. That, I believe, is an important part of the job. Now, when it comes to a question of this magnitude, does "thing" encompass a vehicle? Let's say, for instance, that you were cutting timber in B.C. and there are some timber shavings in the back of your truck. Does that mean that that truck now is a thing and, therefore, something we should be seizing?

I have to say that in the end, I support Bill 24 and the intent of the bill. What we need to start questioning is: how do we make this bill better? I would argue, debate, if you will, that it is important that we are very specific when we give the ability to officers to be able to seize anything without a warrant. This is why we brought forward the amendment saying that it's not appropriate to use the word "thing" and we need to be more prescriptive, that it's, I think, reasonable to say "forest product."

Now, the member who just talked was saying that forest products may not be timber stands or log piles. Well, I would say that those probably fit under "forest product." This is an important part that we're looking at here. When we start to just open these things up, with no definition, we will have a problem. Now, I know that my local forestry officers are good men and women, and I am certain that they are not going to be abusing this, but there always is the exception to that rule, and leaving this vague, the way it is now, gives opportunity for abuse.

Now, something along this line, an example that came to me when I was thinking about this specific amendment, was that as an accountant I actually had harvesters as clients up in Slave Lake. This is important because, let's say, for instance, that one of their harvesting units went up to B.C. to do some harvesting. Now, these are million-dollar units. Million-dollar units. Let's say, for instance, that that is deemed a part of a thing. Now, if a forestry officer obviously has a concern that we are having some pest coming along from another province, then absolutely that needs to be identified, but is it appropriate that we are shutting down an entire harvesting operation for possibly weeks and weeks and weeks when the season for forestry is such a short one? When we're doing this, we need to be very conscientious of knowing that this could impact a business, and it is important that we are establishing exactly what a thing is and how it will impact the people that are trying to maybe possibly enjoy the outdoors, maybe the businesses that depend on forestry.

Again, to bring this back, we do need to make sure that our forestry officers have the tools they need to be able to do their job to protect our forests. So it comes to balance. Balance is the key here, and that is what my colleague – my colleague is bringing forward this amendment, saying that right now, by not being prescriptive enough, there is no balance in this, and we need to be looking at bringing forward balance. That's why I'm saying that that balance seems to be forest product. Now, again, if there is a term that might work better for the government, I'm sure we can bring forward another amendment, but right now this one best fits what the government is trying to achieve.

I encourage all of the government and my opposition colleagues to review this amendment seriously and really consider the fact that it isn't just about us trying to be prescriptive and reduce what a forestry officer can do but to actually be saying to the forestry officer: what exactly is it that you're trying to seize without a warrant, and does it fit into a forest product? I encourage, again, everyone to vote for this amendment. If they have a deeper concern on this one term, maybe the government could come forward with their own amendment, but I don't believe that "thing" is an appropriate term whenever we use the words "seize without a warrant."

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You know, I think that this is a very well-thought-out amendment, and if I was in the opposition benches, I would probably be asking the same question myself: you know, is it really necessary to change the language in this, and is "thing" too broad? I thank the members for putting some thought into this and suggesting a very thoughtful amendment. Having thought more about it myself, I worry that it would be a little bit too prescriptive. I understand the member was saying that, you know, he would like to see it more well defined, but I take it as that that would take some of the discretion out of the hands of our public servants who are put in the position of making these decisions.

I think it's important for us just to walk backwards a little bit and recall what the present wording says and requires of a forest officer. The current wording: make sure that the forest officer has to have "reasonable grounds to believe [that] . . . an injurious forest tree pest infestation or non-indigenous invasive species infestation or [something] that is otherwise diseased." There is a requirement there, regardless of what the definition is, that reasonableness applies to this situation. So, you know, putting myself in the shoes of a forest officer, if they are using their best reasonable judgment, their professional judgment, if they suspect that there's something that contains a forest pest that threatens our forest industry and Alberta's forests, I want them to have the ability to exercise their professional discretion in order to seize that object. My expectation is that they're not going to be seizing things like ATVs or chainsaws or this kind of thing. If in their reasonable judgment that's what they determine, then they have that ability. But most reasonable people exercising their judgment probably wouldn't reach that conclusion.

I think that there is so much at stake for our forests here that we need to give to the professionals who are charged with carrying out these duties on a daily basis the ability to make that change. I completely agree with what the Member for Red Deer-North said previously, that there are things that most people would consider as something that could harbour a forest pest that aren't currently captured by this definition. You know, she mentioned things like log piles, slash piles, raw logs. There are things that currently aren't captured in the definition. If we were to accept this amendment and revert to the previous wording, there are things that I think all the members would agree could very well harbour forest pests like these raw logs and log piles. Basically, once a tree is cut down, it's no longer considered, quote, unquote, a forest product. Therefore, the ability of that forest officer to seize that item, I'm sure the member would agree, a log sitting on the ground that is suspected to contain pine beetle – the forest officer should have that ability to seize that log, but right now they don't.

I see the member nodding his head. Perhaps I'm convincing him. You know, our forest officers are professional people. They take their jobs very seriously, and they have a big job to do. Making sure that they have the ability to carry out that task is the reason for the change in the wording, in the language to "thing." The member was talking a bit about being – he wants to see this legislation being very prescriptive, but I worry if we were to accept the amendment, it would be too prescriptive. [interjection] Yeah. It could endanger our forestry sector. I know that's not the intent of the member. Don't get me wrong. I just worry that when we start putting very tight definitions on things when there are so many variables out there, we need to make sure that the professionals have the ability to use their judgment and carry out their job.

Just to wrap it up here, Madam Chair, I think the members have put a very thoughtful amendment forward, and I understand their concern, but given what's at stake here in protecting Alberta's forests, I think we need to make sure that the professionals have the ability to carry out their job, keeping in mind at all times that the criteria of reasonableness is in the legislation. Anybody carrying out their duties has to exercise reasonable judgment that they would be prepared to defend in court if they're going to seize something. If someone questions their reasonableness, then that would have to be something that they would defend in court. I expect that our professionals are well trained. They're going to exercise their best judgment and act in a reasonable fashion. For that reason I can't support the amendment, and I would encourage the Assembly to not accept this amendment.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

10:40

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to read through this bill again, just to give a better understanding of what we're talking about here. It says: “A forest officer may, without a warrant, seize any thing that the forest officer has reasonable grounds to believe harbours a forest pest.” It goes on to say, “the Minister may order the destruction of a [thing] seized under subsection (1).” It goes on to say:

No right of compensation exists against the Crown or any person in respect of anything destroyed under subsection (2), but the Minister may provide such compensation in the amount or at the value that the Minister considers fair for the destroyed [thing].

There are a lot of ramifications to this term “thing” beyond just being confiscated. It’s contemplating destruction, and it also contemplates the value of it and whether the person will be compensated for it, so this isn’t just an issue of something being taken away, maybe cleaned up, maybe given back at a later date or whatever; this is talking about destruction and whether there’s compensation for that thing. That’s why I think it’s a very important word.

Now, again, I’ve mentioned before – and I’ll mention it again – that the minister responsible for this has brought in this bill with roughly 150 words expressed in this House regarding this very important bill, that he’s responsible for. About 150 words. That’s it. Now, we had one short response on some of the concerns expressed in this that was probably an additional 50 words. So when we’re asking questions about this and asking for clarification, we’re not getting responses, in particular from the minister responsible, so we’re sitting here trying to come up with ways to make this bill better. That’s what we’re doing here. We’re trying to make this bill better, and we have actual good questions.

Now, the member opposite from Banff-Cochrane suggested that this was a thoughtful amendment. Obviously, they admit that this amendment has merit. The only thing that would be better is if we had any ability to receive more direction on why the government chose to make these changes. Now, I don’t know, but I would like to ask: was there any situation that brought about this change? Did something happen or multiple things happen that all of a sudden the government decided that we need to change this word? We haven’t heard that. We haven’t heard if there are any situations that could have caused this.

The member opposite talked about that this needed to include trees and logs and everything, so that’s why it has to be “thing” instead of “forestry product.” I’m pretty sure that a tree or a log or cuttings or anything like that would fall under forestry product. They come from the forest. Previous to this the word was “product,” and obviously when the word was “product,” they were able to take away trees, logs, anything like that. That’s why we’re asking the question: why the change to “thing”?

In my community I know some of the forest officers. I trust them. I know they’re intelligent. I know they’re hard working. I know they’re reasonable. This has nothing to do with the credibility of our forest officers, who are doing their best to do their job. But we’re talking about legislation here, and this is legislation that will most likely last, so we’re not picking on government employees. We’re not picking on forest officers. That’s absolutely absurd to suggest that. We’re talking about this bill here before us right now and about the amendment that the Member for Banff-Cochrane suggests is a thoughtful amendment.

Again, we’re here to improve this bill. We want to make it better. We want it to represent what Albertans want to see in legislation, and in doing that, we have brought forward an amendment to be considered today. I would encourage everyone in this House to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you. It’s a pleasure to rise in the House today to talk about this very important issue. When we think about what is going on today in West Yellowhead, we look at how the beetle has spread into our area. That it has spread quite badly is what we found out from the forest service and that kind of thing when we look at how badly it has infected the forests around Hinton in particular.

So when we’re looking at these things in relation to how it has spread and we compare that to what happened in B.C., this is what we learned. When we talked to the people in B.C. and dealt with the forestry people in B.C., a huge problem was found. When they were logging, the logging practices, the idea of transporting the logs down major highways and routes, and the storage of the logs on the log sites were a huge problem in spreading the beetle. That’s exactly what it did. They found that the practices in the bush, not cleaning the equipment, transporting the logs along various routes, and also the storage of the logs on various log sites were spreading the beetles.

That’s why we’re looking at trying to control this by putting in the definition of “thing.” It gives you the ability to say: you can’t transport that log down that highway because this is what you’re going to do, and these are the things that you need to take into account.

An Hon. Member: That’s a forest product.

Mr. Rosendahl: No. It’s the raw logs that have the beetles, not the product itself. The product is the end use of the log. What the log is made into is not at question here. The fact of the transportation of the logs themselves is the problem.

The forest officer should have the right to say, “Where did that come from, and does it have evidence of beetle damage?” and be able to control where that log is going and how it’s stored on the sites. We’ve learned that from the forestry people in B.C.

When the member was talking about the forest companies losing the ability to log for extended periods of time because maybe the machine had seized – a lot of these machines are cleaned at the sites where they’re doing the logging. They’re high-pressure cleaned to make sure that they’re not spreading the beetles. It’s very important that we have this ability for our forest officers to turn around and try and stop the spread of the beetles that way. That’s why we’re saying that this amendment needs to be voted down.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank the Member for West Yellowhead for his comments. I just wanted to ask him a couple of questions. In the previous legislation the word that was used was “product.” Now, just to clarify: were Alberta forest officers allowed to stop logs, people with firewood, that sort of thing that they believed had pine beetles and that sort of thing? Also, I just wondered how the pine beetle protection has been in Alberta compared to B.C. as far as how it was controlled and whether a good job was done or a bad job was done on pine beetle protection. And then maybe comment – obviously, where you are you’re adjacent to national parks and that sort of thing – on how the pine beetle problem has been there and that sort of thing.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Yeah. I just want to point out that I wanted some more clarification from the government. Of course, I asked the Member for West Yellowhead, who has experience in forestry and that sort of thing, three fairly simple questions but got no response. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. Just to clarify a couple of the points the member was asking about, I just want to point out that the ministry briefed the Alberta Forest Products Association on the changes in the bill, including the language of “thing.” They have expressed no concerns, and in fact they stood on stage with the minister when the minister made the announcement. With that in mind, I feel confident that the association that encompasses all of our forest industries here in Alberta is supporting the language that’s in the bill, and that’s why I feel confident in voting against the amendment and sticking with the original language in the bill.

The Chair: Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Yes. I’m glad to hear that the association, you know, stood with the minister on this. That’s great. I respect their opinion, but I also respect the opinion of Albertans, and when we debate these issues in the Legislature here, we need to have consultation with everybody in Alberta. When we bring concerns forward, we’re bringing concerns forward for Albertans, all Albertans.

Thank you very much.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: We are back on the main bill. The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Chair. At this time I would like to move an amendment to Bill 24, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A4.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to have the bill amended as follows: section 21 is amended in the proposed section 37.5(1) by adding “or the regulations” after “provision of this Act.”

Madam Chair, I wish to bring this amendment forward to provide clarification to the section on administrative penalties. I want to ensure that it is clear in this section that administrative penalties can also apply to the regulations. This will ensure that we can apply administrative penalties to industrial-based violations which are contained in the regulations. Currently the wording shows only that administrative penalties apply to the act, but that was not the intent of this section. It should include regulations as well.

Thank you, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to bring this amendment forward, and I encourage all in the House today to support this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I’m just reviewing the amendment here. I think that it appears that we have an amendment that I will be able support.

I’d just like to highlight some of the challenges around regulations generally. I recognize that all pieces of legislation have them, but the amendment is providing some clarification about what will happen in the regulations and after the provision of the act. I just regularly like to have the opportunity to rise and speak about regulations and some of the risk that regulations present in the amount of power that is only held within the minister’s office and not externally with the Legislature. As we progress through legislation, you know, we’ve seen things like Bill 6, that has massive amounts of leeway in the regulation. We’ve seen other areas. We’re going to see pieces of legislation, I believe, in this session that are going to provide wide swaths of liberties to the minister or to other levels of government and put those inside the regulations solely. So I appreciate that the government is trying to provide some clarification on this particular amendment.

I guess one question that I do have is that, typically speaking, we would see on an amendment a stamp from Parliamentary Counsel, that Parliamentary Counsel has in fact seen this amendment and it has been approved through the regular ways and means, but on this particular amendment, at least the copy that I have received, there is no stamp from Parliamentary Counsel. So if the member opposite could provide some feedback as to whether or not it’s been approved by Parliamentary Counsel.

The Chair: Hon. member, I’ll provide you some clarity. It’s a government amendment, and government amendments are dealt with a little bit differently. They get an initial, and you can see the initial on the left corner. That’s the approval by Parliamentary Counsel.

Are there any other speakers to the amendment?

Seeing none, I will call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A4 carried]

The Chair: Back on the main bill. Are there any further amendments, comments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. Today I'd like to reinforce that I believe that I will support this bill. This is great that we are working together to make it stronger.

I know that forest fires have been a big concern for myself all my life. A good example would be that I was born and raised in Slave Lake, and even though I wasn't living in Slave Lake at the time of the fire, I did have an accounting office in Slave Lake at the time. I will say that when it comes to my clients, my family, and my friends, they were impacted by that fire in ways that today they're still reeling from. If there is any way that we can look at providing any relief from fires in any part of our province, we need to be investigating that.

Now, I'm not sure that this bill will actually change any people's activities, but – you know what? – I do believe that we need to update especially the penalties to ensure that they are something that people will take seriously.

Now, I talked a little about Slave Lake, but my riding also, the one I'm in now, did get impacted by the Fort McMurray fire. We saw a lot of smoke, and we also had a lot of evacuees coming to my riding, and one of my municipalities, the town of Bonnyville, was actually deemed an evacuation centre. To hear some of the sad stories that came from that area – and the worry that was on people just recently is a concern. Then, lastly, we had the Saskatchewan fire that was evacuated to Cold Lake, and it was an evacuation as well. We've seen a lot of fires go through my riding as well as a place where I'd lived, and I'll tell you, to hear the misery that is brought forward by a forest fire is something that we need to be very cognizant of and doing whatever we can to make sure that Albertans are taking our forests very seriously.

Now, the one thing I have to say is that for myself, our first responders, in all three cases that I've had experience with, have been remarkable, and I can't put that lightly because it is the truth. They go and run towards a fire when many are running away. I have to say that when they're putting their lives at risk, they need to be acknowledged. I'll tell you that in both cases, the Lac la Ronge fire in Saskatchewan as well as the Fort McMurray fire, I made sure that when those did go through my riding, the volunteers in my riding understood that the importance of what they were doing would contribute towards the well-being of Alberta and our neighbouring province of Saskatchewan.

Now, I'll tell you how seriously MLAs across the province take this, and it doesn't just go for our province; it also goes for the province of Saskatchewan. I have had dealings with the NDP from Saskatchewan, and it was revolving around the Lac la Ronge fire. I have to say that the Member for Cumberland and the leader of the NDP from Saskatchewan came up to visit the evacuation centre in Cold Lake. In the end, establishing communication with our neighbouring province was of the utmost importance. What we need to make sure of is that we continue to communicate with all those that are involved with these, all the stakeholders. In this time we saw the MLAs from Saskatchewan moving very forward, saying: "How can we help? Is there anything that the Red Cross is doing that we can reinforce? How can we bring support to our people within our province right now?"

That's something that is important. This is a job that all MLAs need to take seriously, and, you know, with this last Fort McMurray fire, I will say that I take pride in the Leader of the Opposition moving forward with his riding as well as the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo moving forward and making sure that they were with the actual evacuees at the time, making sure they understood how important it was that their needs were being looked after. I will say that it is an achievement that our Premier can put forward and which we celebrated: all of the evacuees were able to get out from the fire safely.

I will say that, going back to the Lac la Ronge fire, there were some communication problems to begin with. Now, that comes down to the fact that the past Municipal Affairs minister – I brought it to his attention that I had no way of being able to hear or understand what was going on, and he personally called my constituency office to make sure that I was involved in the communications, and that's something that I can take pride in, that these fires are not just partisan. This is nonpartisan, and we need to be looking at what we can do to protect our forests, to protect Albertans, to protect people from Fort McMurray, to protect people from Slave Lake. How do we continue to move these concerns that our forests need to be managed appropriately to ensure that we also have a source of enjoyment for our residents as well as opportunities to be able to work on this renewable resource that we've got and be able to continue to grow the business community within Alberta?

Now, having dealt with a lot of forest businesses in my past because of the fact that Slave Lake is surrounded by forest – and I do have forest within my riding, not as large as that was, the one that I came from – I will tell you that when it comes to making sure we protect our forests, this is something that we all need to take pride in. We need to be able to know from the stakeholders that in the end, Alberta is doing everything they can and everything we should.

Now, we have brought forward concerns about this bill, but these concerns, in the end, are trying to strengthen the bill. They're not trying to erode the intent of this bill. I think it's important to say that opposition and government working together to protect our forests is important. I know that even though it may seem like we're just here to bring forward only concerns, we also need to make sure the government understands that when they put forward a good piece of legislation, we'll support them in that. We support the government in the fact that as they continue to make strong legislation, the opposition is here to ensure that it's the best possible legislation going forward, and we are trying to do our part to contribute to the growth and the maturity of this legislation so that it meets all the needs and all the stakeholder needs.

In the end, it could be that the government may not have met every stakeholder out there when it comes to this legislation, and it could be that we do end up with resources that they don't have and feelings that need to be brought forward and concerns that need to be addressed.

The value of making sure that we are moving these concerns forward is what Albertans, I would argue, demand – I was going to say "want" – from their government and from the MLAs that are involved with this process. So I am only making sure that in the end, when we look at Bill 24, everybody in the House can take pride that they contributed to what's best for Alberta.

From my past experience with the different fires I think that we can only get better at managing our forests and ensuring that in the end, when we start to diversify into different areas, our natural resources are something that we can tap into and we can take pride in. I'll tell you that all of the businesses within the Slave Lake area and the Cold Lake area that deal in forestry can also know and take pride in the fact that those resources will be something that they can always tap into to be able to bring forward benefit to Alberta through the taxes that they pay and the people that they employ.

This is not a trivial matter. When we start looking at the fact that agriculture and forestry is the second-largest industry within Alberta, we need to start saying: let's look at protecting these industries so that in the end, this is something that we can depend on into the future. I do hear that we're not ever going to be able to say that this is going to be something that, if we don't manage properly, will always be there.

Getting back to Bill 24, we need to make sure that this bill, in the end, brings some sort of protections, and even though it is just penalties and regulations, we're moving forward at this point. It is a good start. I do believe we can do more, and I know that the opposition and the NDP government will be able to continue to move forward on protecting our natural resources.

When you start looking at how unemployment in my riding of Bonnyville-Cold Lake is at a high – looking at other sources of business, we can only hope they come from, at this point, agriculture and forestry within Alberta. I am encouraged to see that in the end, the farmers and the ranchers and the foresters in my riding are out there to ensure that we've got jobs. I also am encouraged that we have our military base, which brings stability to Cold Lake.

In the end, we need to be looking at: how exactly is it that we can get Alberta moving forward? How is it that we can do that? Well, a bill like this, protecting our forests, is a good start. I encourage everyone to vote for this bill, and I would say that in the end, I look forward to more legislation, that is being put forward for Albertans, looking similar to this.

I am encouraged to see that sometimes the government will actually move forward with amendments that the opposition has put forward. Now, I'm under the understanding that we actually haven't had one of our amendments put through by the government yet, but I am looking forward to possibly moving something forward in the future.

Thank you very much.

11:30

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill?
Are you ready for the question on Bill 24?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 24 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. At this point I move that we rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 24. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official record of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 25 Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act

[Adjourned debate November 8: Ms Ganley]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I wish to rise today on Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, and I would like to propose an amendment if I could.

The Deputy Speaker: The amendment will be known as REA1.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that it is necessary to have the recommendations from the oil sands advisory group tabled in the Assembly before the bill can proceed.

Madam Speaker, the oil sands advisory group, or OSAG, is a group that's been tasked with considering how to implement the 100-megatonne per year carbon emissions limit for the oil sands industry. Now, it's expected that they're not going to complete their work until February 2017. That's some four months from now. We are being asked to consider legislation here right now without the feedback from the panel that's been tasked with determining this bill's viability.

Now, I don't think that would make sense to too many people, actually. I'm hoping that the members of the Legislature would agree that if you have a group that's been tasked with a duty and you have a bill that is the essence of that duty, you would at least want to hear what they have to say, I guess, unless you already know what they're going to say. But we would have to presume that this committee would be operating, you know, on its own.

We've expressed it before and we'll continue to express that we do have concerns about this group. We know it's co-chaired by radical environmentalists whose past work includes that of former co-director of Greenpeace and the co-founder of ForestEthics, groups that have not been favourable to Alberta's oil and gas industry, period, never mind the oil sands, never mind pipelines. Others on the group: I see the Pembina Institute; the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society; Stand, formerly known as ForestEthics; another Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society. When we look through at the background of some of these members, I think it raises some concern in the minds of Albertans. We look at some of these people that have been actively trying to stop oil production in Alberta and oil transport, and they're on a committee to provide feedback on a cap, which is of course designed to restrict production of the oil sands. But that doesn't take away the common-sense approach that we would at least wait until we've heard what they have to say.

Now, when we look at this cap, there are many problems with this cap. The government has sold leases that when fully developed would exceed the cap. So that's obviously very concerning because we have companies that have in good faith purchased leases to do business, to produce oil, and if this cap prevents them from producing what they have purchased to do in agreement with the government, then obviously there is probably going to have to be some compensation paid out to them for that loss of opportunity, for what they've purchased in good faith.

It seems like this government is trying to get their fingers into all parts of the energy industry and, obviously, appears to be interested in picking winners and losers. Of course, we know government tends to be better at picking losers than winners, so that's not very helpful to the Alberta economy. This cap is completely arbitrary. I mentioned this before in this House, how 100 megatonnes – a hundred is just a nice round number. I would think that if there was any science or any economic analysis or any kind of study at all done on this, they probably wouldn't have come up with the number 100. It's just a nice round number, 100. I would guess that they might have come up with 97.5 or 103.2, or maybe they would have come up with 150 or 200. But as of yet we haven't seen one analysis on this, Madam Speaker, not one analysis from the government on how much this is going to cost, what it's going to do, how they came up with the number 100. Nothing.

Now, we might be able to hear from this oil sands advisory group on something along those lines. Maybe. I don't know. But it doesn't appear that we're going to hear from them before this bill passes in this Legislature unless this government would agree to this amendment to not read it now a second time and wait until we actually have the document that this group will produce.

There's been some analysis from outside groups on what this cap could potentially cost Albertans, $150 billion to $250 billion. That's an enormous amount of money, Madam Speaker. That same analysis comes up with the 3.3 billion barrels of oil. Again, that's an enormous figure.

This cap also has an opportunity to squeeze out smaller companies that want to operate, that may want to invest, knowing that there's a cap involved already and that they won't have the opportunity to fully grow to their potential.

I think it's time that we considered fully the ramifications of our actions here in this House: how it's going to affect jobs, how it's going to affect families, how it's going to affect our economy. I mentioned before how critical the oil sands is to the Canadian economy, how with the two-week shutdown with the Fort Mac fire it noticeably affected the Canadian GDP. Just two weeks. And now we're contemplating putting a cap on it.

This government has done no study, none that they have shown us anyway. Maybe they have some studies. I mean, there were studies on some of their other bills, and the only way we got to look at them was through FOIP. Again, maybe there is some study that's been done. If there is, I'd encourage the government to show it to us, to show it to all Albertans. If there isn't, then shame. Shame on this government that would bring in a bill as huge as this, with ramifications as huge as this bill could have on the Alberta economy and the Canadian economy, and that would not have done any sort of study.

For some reason this government doesn't like to conduct or, at least, release economic impact studies on their radical ideological agenda, and I don't think that's right. I think we as legislators in this House were sent here to make informed decisions. Albertans deserve to be able to make informed decisions on what we do here in this House, but it's impossible to make an informed decision without information, and we have none.

Of course, there are all sorts of red flags that go up when we look at the people involved in some of this decision-making. Lots of red flags. This government has and continues to hire and appoint anti-oil activists, antipipeline activists. Registered lobbyists: antipipeline, anti-oil. We've got the Deputy Premier who says that they're going to appoint and hire people with an NDP world view. I think that is alarming when we look at who they appoint and who they hire.

Now, Madam Speaker, I think as a legislator and as an Albertan I'm finding it hard to understand what this government is trying to do. Every day I talk to struggling Albertans desperate to find help and work. They come into my constituency office. They call me. They text me, send me e-mails. They're desperate for help. Over a hundred thousand Albertans have lost their jobs, and again that doesn't include the contractors that have lost their jobs and are not eligible to collect unemployment. They don't show up in those numbers, the contractors that are only working a day a week or a day or two a month even, barely able to make ends meet, struggling. And we sit here looking at legislation almost daily that does nothing but hamper the growth of Alberta, hamper investment that could create jobs right here to help these people.

Of course, the government likes to blame the low price of oil for all of our problems here in Alberta. But, Madam Speaker, that's not the full truth. It isn't helpful, the low price of oil. We know that. We admit that. We say that every day. But this government's policies have been damaging.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to this amendment? I'll recognize the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert first.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm a bit concerned about this amendment. As I've said before in this House on the previous amendment to this act, we all know that the Prime Minister and the federal cabinet are expected to be making a decision on a few pipelines coming up next month, and we need to be able to show them a plan. Shortly after they formed government, they brought in new regulations on pipelines and, significantly, that included a climate change test.

Now, of course, all of us in this House know that we're fairly responsible about our oil here in Alberta, but unfortunately not everybody in our neighbouring provinces is aware of that. So we need to show that we're taking action, and delaying this act for committees and for advisory groups to report back to us, that's simply not helpful.

There's a fairly broad consensus in this House – I would say almost unanimous consensus – that we need to get a pipeline. We all know that we need to be able to get our product to market. Unfortunately, our biggest customer isn't buying our oil as much as they used to, and in fact when they are, they're not giving us the same rate that they're buying at from everybody else. That's a problem and something we need to address, which is why we need a pipeline to tidewater.

I, unfortunately, heard a member chirping away earlier that perhaps we could get Keystone moving again. Quite frankly, I don't think that would be helpful. [interjection] I notice the leader of the third party is pounding on his desk at that, but I don't understand the reasoning behind saying – if our previous best customer is no longer buying our product, I don't understand why increasing capacity to sell to them is helpful.

We need a pipeline to new markets. That is something that we need to do, and that means we have to work with our neighbours.

We have to work with B.C. We have to work with – well, Saskatchewan is pretty easy to work with on pipelines, but we have to work with Manitoba. We have to work with Ontario, Quebec.

We have to get to a consensus on this, and I sincerely don't understand the reasoning that a lot of the members in this House are making that we need to delay all of this. Federal cabinet is considering all of this next month. We don't know how long a committee would take. We don't know how long an advisory group will take.

Mrs. Aheer: February, actually, is when it reports.

Mr. Horne: February. Okay. February is not helpful when they're considering it next month. That's several months later. Quite frankly, if we say, "Well, we're waiting on a report," I don't think that will be helpful to the federal government making that decision.

So, quite frankly, I can't support this amendment, and I would urge all members of this House to not support this amendment either.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: My apologies to the House. I neglected to offer 29(2)(a) for the previous speaker, so it does come into effect now.

Are there any questions for this hon. member under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

I would just like to preface, just to reiterate a few of the things that I heard, and then potentially you would be able to answer me. I would really appreciate that. Thank you so much. I'm sorry for chirping, but I will continue to chirp from this side as well, and I'm sure as will the rest of the opposition parties over here.

I would like, first of all, to explain to the member that the entire reason for bringing forward this panel was to advise the government on how to move forward on a constriction of production in this province. Just in case the member wasn't absolutely a hundred per cent sure, I'm fairly certain that that was the reason that this panel came to be. I'm extremely concerned with the words that are being flung across over here, that delaying this discussion to make sure that we have the information that's coming from a panel, that was designated by the government, is not helpful and that there is a rush to pass this legislation and couple it somehow with the approval of pipelines, God willing, that will come down from the federal government.

Now, just to be absolutely clear, pipelines are a federal jurisdiction. Absolutely, a federal jurisdiction. So I would like the member to explain to me how it is that by delaying for a panel that is supposedly supposed to give us licence to be able to produce in our province, which we already do at high regulatory, high environmental, the best in the world – if he could please explain to the Legislature how it is that by rushing through this process, that we haven't been advised on, it is going to help us get pipelines.

Also, before he answers that question, as far as Keystone goes, just so that you understand, that actually helps us get to tidewater. It actually helps us get there. So just to be clear for you, just so you understand.

If you could please answer the question on ramming this legislation through without the panel discussions and without Albertans having some transparency on how this panel is going to advise the government. If the member could please answer that question.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert, do you wish to respond?

Further under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Yeah. Just also responding to the member that just spoke regarding some of his comments. He suggested that we have fairly responsible oil production here in Alberta. I would suggest that it's more than fairly responsible. I would suggest that it's very responsible, and to suggest otherwise is disrespectful to our energy industry.

I would also suggest that we need pipelines. We agree. We need pipelines to every coast we can possibly get to. Members on this side of the House support all pipelines. These pipelines are built by industry. They're not paid for by taxpayer money. If the industry wants to build a pipeline, we should let them build a pipeline. It gets our product to market.

Now, there was a suggestion that he was against the Keystone pipeline, which probably isn't surprising. The Member for Calgary-East, of course, was protesting it, so I would suggest that that's possibly the case. His suggestion was that we need pipelines to new markets, and I agree. We need pipelines to new markets. But why would we turn down an opportunity to have industry build a pipeline to a market and get it to a coast for us? Why would we turn that down? I would like to find out from this government: are they for or against the Keystone pipeline? Come out and say something on that.

Also, there was a suggestion that the federal government is making decisions on pipelines next month. Now, I understood that the NEB makes decisions on pipelines, and the only thing government does, particularly this government and the members in this government, is put up roadblocks to pipelines. So I would love to hear the member's response to that.

Keystone: yes or no?

He also suggested that this was just a delay. This is a delay for information . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would just again like to preface, I think, how important this is. The entire reason for this amendment is because, as we've stated, this OSAG panel, the oil sands advisory panel, isn't going to report to us until February. As we've said before, there may be contentious people that are on this panel that may not have been the first choice of us. You know, I'm not the government, so I'm not the one who gets to choose this panel. Having said that, though, I believe that I would be extremely interested in finding out what that panel has to say.

I find it extremely unacceptable and irresponsible to ask actually any member of this Legislature on either side to support legislation without feedback from that panel. I'm assuming, hopefully rightly, that the reason to take this panel to February was to actually give them a legitimate amount of time to deal with something that is tremendous and huge, that impacts all Albertans, impacts all of Canada. I mean, we are the economic engine. I could go on and on about the oil sands and those aspects. I'll give you some more numbers later.

My point is that I would have hoped that the time that was given to this panel was given for diligence and for thoughtful discussion and to be able to actually report back to us with very succinct information that may actually be convincing to Albertans, that would ask if this is the right or wrong thing to do. Who knows? We have absolutely no clue.

We are asked every day about what's going on, and I can honestly tell you that I don't know. I don't know if any of you know. There's a humungous responsibility on our shoulders here as legislators to make sure that when folks are coming into your constituency offices and our constituency offices, at least we have some understanding. At least we could have said to them: "Well, this is the panel. I may or may not agree with it, but this is the time that they're reporting. Hence, after that we will have legislation and, potentially, ideas of where the regulations will go with this." But, no, that's not the way.

As we've been told by the member opposite, we have to ram this through right now, and it doesn't matter if the panel comes back and responds, and it doesn't matter if we haven't got any regulations. My goodness. I think the average Albertan looking at this right now will be absolutely devastated.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake asked recently, when we were out and about to just a general public meeting of people, for a show of hands as to who knew what a PPA was, just to give you an example. Not really a household term. I would say that more than half that room put their hands up. Why? Because they're paying attention, because Albertans care about these kinds of things.

How are you going to go back to your constituents, how are we going to go back to our constituents and say: "Ah, it doesn't matter. We spent taxpayer dollars on this panel, but we're going to ram through legislation anyway, even though we don't know what the panel is going to say." Maybe you do. Maybe you're privy to information, and we just don't have it yet. I'm not sure.

All I know is that comments and things are flung across over to this side that we are supposed to . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2.1) the House stands adjourned until this afternoon at 1:30.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 9, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 54 students and staff from Annunciation elementary school. Students are accompanied today by Mrs. Maureen Ostrowerka, Mr. Chris T. Osayande, Rachel Hayward, and Mr. Chris Koper. It is fantastic to see them here this afternoon to observe question period. I would ask them all to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my absolute pleasure to welcome students and teachers from Cochrane high school to the Legislature today. I apologize for not being able to join them for their photo earlier this afternoon. I understand that they were participating in a mock parliament, and I'm sure they learned quite a bit. I'd also like to commend the students from this particular high school for having a very robust renewable energy program, that I myself have had the pleasure to tour, and I thank the students for their leadership on the environment. I ask the Assembly to give them their greatest warm welcome.

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Are there any other school groups for introduction today?

Seeing none, the Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm introducing a group that is here today from the Canadian Diabetes Association. I believe they're in your gallery. If they could rise while I introduce them. November is Diabetes Awareness Month, and it's a time to spread awareness about the disease, share information about risk factors, and work together to support people living with diabetes as well as their families. You may also see people wearing the blue circle pin that is the universal symbol of diabetes to show their support during this month of awareness. I ask that Emily Johnson, Michelle MacPhee, Janet Riganti, and Tammy Norris along with the other volunteers and staff members from the Canadian Diabetes Association please accept the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. If Speakers are allowed to make observations on occasion, I must tell you that I have a daughter who had juvenile diabetes, so I particularly identify with the issue.

The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you key members of the Lung Association of Alberta and the Northwest Territories who are with us in the House today: Leigh Allard, president and CEO; Nina Snyder, chief operating officer; Monte Weber, chief financial officer; Dr. Mohit Bhutani, physician advocate; and Tim and Susan Penstone, patient advocates. These members are joining us during lung awareness month and are providing a free clinic and lung health information in the lower rotunda today. Members of the Lung Association share our commitment to public health, and we thank them for their tireless work, especially as they raise awareness around the importance of phasing out coal-fired emissions. I ask that the members of this House extend our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all Members of this Legislative Assembly 17 members from 4-H Alberta. I will be speaking about the launch of the 100th anniversary of 4-H Alberta later this afternoon. If they would all please rise as I read their names. We have with us today Kathleen Linder, Helen Andrews, Virginia Harvey, Monica Harvey, Dave MacTaggart, Kate Harink, Ty Harink, MacKenzie Denschikoff, Kiley Denschikoff, Holly Johanson, Tanytyn Monea, Adam Burnett, Judy Van Hecke, Dorothy Carlson, Shari Hanson, Dave Gower, Louise Erskine, and Mary MacArthur. Please join me in welcoming them as they receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly some individuals visiting from my constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar today: Veronique Wilson and her two children, Evan and Matt Wilson. They're also accompanied by their grandmother Monique Lecuyer. Matthew is a grade 6 student at Gabrielle-Roy, and Evan attends l'école Michaëlle-Jean, a francophone junior high school that opened its doors in Edmonton-Gold Bar this fall. I'm very proud of the francophone community that's in my constituency, and I'm happy to see that the options for francophone education are expanding. I ask them to please rise, as they have, and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other guests today, hon. members? Edmonton-Décore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly an incredible group of individuals from the Victims of Homicide Support Society of Edmonton, which I will be speaking about later. Joining us today are Jane Orydzuk, president; Kelly Rolston, vice-president; Susan Adair-Wolf, treasurer; Dianne Ilesic, secretary; Gayle Hanscom, director, and Mike Ilesic, board member. I would now ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. Are there any other guests? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the Member of Parliament for St. Albert-Edmonton, Michael Cooper. I'd like to thank him for his public service and would ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

United States Presidential Election

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, today I want to congratulate President-elect Donald J. Trump and the American people in a free, open, and fair election. No matter what your political stripe, the outcomes of democratic elections and the democratic process must always be respected.

This election marks a new day for diplomacy between Canada and the United States. Our two countries have the largest trade relationship in the entire world. Alberta alone exports over $100 billion worth of goods and services to our southern neighbours each and every year. According to news organizations this election has the potential to be a win for Alberta if – and that's a big if – our leaders show the political will to capitalize, but I'm hopeful that after years of anti-Alberta hostility from within Canada's own borders this election may bring good news for working families in our province.

President-elect Trump has called Canada a strong ally. He has committed to building the Keystone XL pipeline. So far Wildrose is the only party in this Legislature that has expressed support for pipelines in every direction. That includes Keystone. I hope the Premier . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we don't interrupt when a member is – the practice of this House is that there are no interruptions.

Please proceed.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope the Premier finally shows support for this project, too.

This is not about left versus right. This is about the people of our province, who are suffering because anti-Alberta politicians across this country want to see us fail. A Wildrose government would work with the new U.S. administration to enhance and defend the energy, agriculture, forestry, mining, and manufacturing industries. This election has presented a perfect opportunity to build pipelines and increase exports in some of our most vital economic sectors, all at a time when we need it the most. The question is: will we capitalize?

Premier, on behalf of the people of Alberta let me say: it's time to start speaking up and finding ways . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Inclusive Employment

Ms Renaud: Thank you. When you hear the label "most vulnerable," do you see a picture of a strong person, skilled, employable, independent, and valued? Likely not. We need to stop labelling Albertans with disabilities as our most vulnerable. We can call them our most unemployed, our most underrepresented but not our most vulnerable. They are people first, and they're not defined by their ability or disability. Whether they rely on a wheelchair, service dogs, need for staff, none of that defines them. They deserve our respect, and we need to commit to doing that, to giving it to them. Once we remove the label, we see the person: the premise of a 30-year-old movement called People First. Once we see the person, we can find solutions with them, not for them.

Did you know that October was nationally and internationally recognized as Disability Employment Awareness Month? Fourteen per cent of Canadians over 15 years of age have a disability; 411,000 working-age Canadians, who can work, who want to work, are not working. Unemployment and poverty are the daily reality of Albertans with disabilities. Unemployment rates for people with disabilities are as high as 75 per cent for women; males are at 60 per cent.

People with disabilities make up a large pool of untapped labour with demonstrated value. Employers have invested time and energy and resources to be inclusive employers that value employees with disabilities. We know customers value inclusive employers and will go out of their way to support those businesses, and we know that employees feel pride at being part of an inclusive business or organization.

I would like us all to commit to recognizing Disability Employment Awareness Month next year. I would also like everyone to consider becoming an inclusive employer themselves. I think two out of 87 constituencies isn't a very good stat. We can do better than this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Remembrance Day

Mr. Rodney: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today on behalf of our Progressive Conservative caucus to pay tribute to the women and men who have made the ultimate sacrifice in defence of Canadian values and to those who currently serve our country with such honour, both at home and abroad.

Time and again Canadians have bravely answered the call when freedom is threatened, when human rights are abused, and when darkness threatens to overtake us. Throughout history Canadians in uniform have served as a beacon of hope for marginalized peoples all over the world and as a tremendous source of pride for all of us here at home.

Mr. Speaker, not everyone is willing to put their life on the line in service of others. It takes a special kind of person to run into the line of fire just as others are running away. Those special people understand that there is value and nobility in standing up for what's right even if it costs them their life. From the world wars to Korea to Bosnia to Afghanistan and beyond, Canadian soldiers have proudly and willingly risked it all to save others from tyranny and terror. In doing so, they affirm our country's commitment to protecting the values of peace, tolerance, and freedom wherever and whenever they're threatened.

Mr. Speaker, when we recognize and honour our Canadian armed forces, implicit in the tribute is a huge debt of gratitude for the sacrifices of their families, so with my humble appreciation I'll share just a few apt lines from Laurence Binyon's Ode of Remembrance.

Age shall not weary them, nor the years condemn.

At the going down of the sun and in the morning

We will remember them.

Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker.

4-H Centennial in Alberta

Mr. Hinkley: Mr. Speaker, today we celebrate the launch of a year-long celebration of 100 years of 4-H in Alberta. For the next year across the province Albertans will celebrate this amazing youth program. What began in Olds as a way to modernize agriculture has grown to 335 clubs, 5,620 members, and 2,221 leaders across the province.

Today we have 4-H members in our gallery who throughout the year will celebrate 100 years of 4-H with art contests and a Western Regional Leaders' Forum in Edmonton this March. On the August long weekend hundreds of 4-H members, their families, and leaders will celebrate Centennial Fever in Olds, where it all began.

In 1917 W.J. Elliott, the president of Olds College, was disappointed with the poor quality of livestock in the area. Elliott believed youth would be the early adopters and lead the way to improved genetic selection of livestock and crops.

Over the past century this fine youth program has promoted leadership skills, governance, farm safety, critical thinking, and public speaking. As an educator I knew which students were 4-H members because of their exceptional public speaking skills.

In my riding of Wetaskiwin-Camrose there are five active clubs: Coal Lake light horse, Camrose beef, Wetaskiwin horse, Rosebriar beef, and the Armena beef club. Through 4-H projects members learn how to raise a calf, teach it to lead, and show it in a sale. Horse members develop their riding skills, and members of small-engine projects can strip down and rebuild a small engine. Across the province thousands of children have benefited from 4-H, and hundreds of businesses have benefited from this training.

Let us celebrate everything that has happened in 4-H in the past 100 years. We all look forward to the next glorious 100 years of 4-H in Alberta. Congratulations.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

National Day of Remembrance for Murder Victims

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. September 25, 2016, marked the annual National Day of Remembrance for Murder Victims, giving us all the opportunity to remember those lost to homicide and to honour their memories. This day of remembrance serves to focus on the impact of murder on families and communities as well support for survivors.

Facing the death of a loved one is never an easy task, especially when murder is involved. Pain, anger, and grief are compounded by the crushing realization that a precious life was intentionally taken. But there is a beacon of hope out there for people who have experienced the loss of a loved one to homicide, a group that knows all too well the journey that someone is about to embark upon. The Victims of Homicide Support Society of Edmonton, founded in 1995 by Noel and Joyce Farion following the murder of their son, is a self-help group designed to offer emotional support and information about surviving the loss of a loved one to this horrific crime. The group provides ongoing emotional support to help people deal with the pain of their loss and rebuild their lives. Meetings are held on the last Wednesday of every month at the Central Lions seniors centre located at 11113 – 113th Street.

When you have lost a loved one to murder, reach out to the Victims of Homicide Support Society and remember this: you are not judged, you are not misunderstood, and you are not alone.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Electricity System

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A strong, competitive, and affordable electricity system is the cornerstone of economic development and growth. Low electricity prices and a stable system attract investments, encourage innovation, and lead to the creation of thousands and thousands of new jobs. For a heavily trade-exposed economy like Alberta, the ability to have a stable electricity market directly influences our province's ability to compete with other provincial and international jurisdictions. If we are more competitive, it means more money coming into Alberta. That means more jobs, more growth, more prosperity for an Alberta that right now is desperate for hope and opportunity.

That's why it's so critical that any changes we make are for the benefit of Albertans and are based in economic reality. Instead, this government has time and time again engaged in policies that have shaken our electricity sector and put future investment in Alberta at risk. They started by raising the carbon tax on heavy emitters, with zero consultation. When power companies said that they could no longer afford the tax increases, they sued. Now we are debating legislation from the government that shuts down coal generation amid fantastic promises of no pain to Albertans. Mr. Speaker, we've heard these promises before.

Ontario right now is experiencing one of the worst migrations of jobs and money in its history. Skyrocketing energy costs are so bad that businesses can no longer compete. Ontario is experiencing job leakage and carbon leakage, which we talked about before, all because of government meddling in the province's electricity market. It's why a growing number of major western economies are rejecting initiatives like carbon taxes as they instead seek to build on technological investments that help reduce global emissions. Instead of shutting down coal generation entirely, Alberta should be celebrating its achievements in clean-coal technology and sharing them with the whole world.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Trade with the United States

Mr. Jean: I'd first like to take the time to briefly acknowledge and congratulate the American people for choosing their new President.

These election results will have a major impact on Alberta's economy. In 2014 Alberta had $120 billion in exports. Ninety per cent of those exports were consumed by the United States. Important free trade deals for Alberta like NAFTA or the trans-Pacific partnership need to be defended now more than ever before. Will the Premier commit to working with other export-dependent economies like Saskatchewan to defend free trade in Washington?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We, too, join in congratulating the President-elect on last night's results.

We look forward to the opportunity to continue to work to better create opportunities for Albertans, whether it be through exports or through increasing opportunities for our economies to be stimulated in other ways. Soon the United States will have their new President, and we'll continue to move forward with other provinces across Canada, including the New West Partnership as well as working with other Premiers and the Prime Minister of Canada to increase opportunities of benefit for Albertans.

Mr. Jean: Whether it's energy, agriculture, forestry, manufacturing, all of Alberta's industries are reliant on trade and our ability to move our resources and products to market. We cannot waste money simply travelling to talk about carbon taxes. It's time to do what we can to stay competitive and to protect Alberta's economy. With no softwood lumber deal in place and free trade agreements at risk, does the Premier have any plans whatsoever to meet with Republican leaders in the House and the Senate to promote and defend Alberta's export-dependent industries and Alberta families?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have a long history of having good trade relationships with folks south of the border that we share, and we continue to work on that. We have offices set up in a number of provinces, and our Premier has spent time visiting investors and other elected officials in New York as well as Washington. I expect that we will continue to forge forward on building strong relationships for the benefit of Albertans.

Mr. Jean: One of the good-news items for Alberta from last night's election is a commitment from the President-elect to support the Keystone XL pipeline. For Alberta it will mean badly needed access, finally, to tidewater. It will help Alberta receive a fair price for our products and get Albertans back to work, which is so important. However, this Premier is on the record opposing the Keystone XL pipeline and refusing to lobby on its behalf. Will the Premier reverse her position on the Keystone pipeline and make seeking its approval her very top priority?

Ms Hoffman: I'm really proud to have a Premier and to be part of a government that works to make sure that every day we are fighting for Albertans and Albertans' best interests, Mr. Speaker. A big part of that is making sure that we continue to diversify our markets. That's why we're not going to give up on Kinder Morgan and we're not going to give up on other pipelines that are in the works. We certainly are going to find ways to benefit Albertans when it comes to improved market access, and we'll be proud to work towards that. We certainly will not stand in the way of progress. We want to continue to get our products to as many markets as possible.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Energy Policies

Mr. Jean: Calgary right now is facing the highest vacancy rates in its downtown core since 1985. With an unemployment rate in the double digits and an expected 30 per cent vacancy rate before the very end of this year, 2016, Calgarians are looking for hope. Instead, they are faced with the crush of a $3 billion carbon tax from this government, frivolous PPA legal proceedings, and no plan whatsoever from this government to improve investor confidence. To the Premier: what will it take for the NDP to cancel their risky policies, that are only making things much worse for Alberta's families?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans deserve a government that will continue to fight for them and their best interests every day, and that's what they have in the government of the day. We are standing up for the investments that are going to continue to create jobs throughout Alberta. We have a jobs plan that is working. We have seen investments that have created 8,000 jobs in 2016. We're looking at 12,000 in '17 and 10,000 in 2018. Things are starting to prove that we're having success. We're not going to back down on climate leadership, either, though. Albertans deserve a government that will diversify its economy and be responsible members of a global community, and we're proud to do that.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Jean: Alberta in 2016: job losses, higher vacancy rates, shaky investor confidence, and now concerns for our export industry. With no carbon tax in sight for the United States for at least the next four years, Alberta simply can't afford to make our export industries and our energy sector even less competitive with new tax hikes and damaging regulations from this government. A carbon tax now makes less sense than ever before. How can this Premier possibly defend this new tax on Alberta's industries and families when our number one trading partner and competitor will simply not have one anywhere?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In case the members opposite aren't aware, climate change is real.

Albertans expect us to act in the best interests of their families and for our shared economy, and that's what we're doing. That's why we have a made-in-Alberta solution, Mr. Speaker, that's going to lead to greater economic diversification, something the members opposite don't care about, and making sure that we have clean air, water, and a protected land for future generations.

Mr. Jean: Disingenuous fearmongering, Mr. Speaker.

Last night voters in one of the more liberal states in the union, Washington, also cast ballots to determine whether or not they would implement a state-wide carbon tax. What a novel idea, a carbon tax referendum to the people. The result was overwhelming, with 60 per cent saying no to a carbon tax in Washington. When our single biggest trading partner and competitor flatly rejects a carbon tax, joining countries like France and Australia, why won't the Premier hit the brakes on her carbon tax plan or at least put it to the people of Alberta? Listen to the people in a provincial referendum. [interjections]

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we did have an opportunity a year and a half ago to have an election, and the people of Alberta voted for a government that said clearly that we were going to take action on climate change, and we are doing that. This is a smart thing to do for Alberta. It's smart for our economy and for our families. [interjections] We're moving forward with helping two-thirds of families recover some of the costs that will be impacted to their individual households, and we're very proud of that. But we're not going to pretend that climate change isn't real, because climate change is real.

The Speaker: Easy, folks.

Third main question.

Electricity System

Mr. Jean: Instead of protecting jobs in our electricity grid here in Alberta, the Premier is leaving the door wide open to pay for a billion-dollar transmission line to import more B.C.-generated electricity to Alberta. At the same time the NDP government is determined to shut down our coal industry ahead of schedule, a decision that will put thousands and thousands of Albertans out of work, leave several historic Alberta communities at risk, and cost Albertans potentially billions and billions of dollars in payouts. Why won't the Premier be clear on whether or not her government plans to pay for a $1 billion transmission line to import electricity from British Columbia?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question, Mr. Speaker. In question 1 the member opposite was talking about having good, collaborative relationships with neighbours in the east, west, and south of Alberta, and that's exactly what we're doing. We're moving forward with a made-in-Alberta solution because – guess what? – other provinces are taking leadership on that as well, including a former colleague of the member opposite, the Premier of Manitoba, who said: we certainly will develop a made-in-Manitoba plan focused on the unique nature of our economy. That's what we're doing in Alberta. I don't know why the member opposite wants to just let all of this sit on Ottawa's shoulders. We deserve to have an Alberta solution for something that we are all committed to addressing, and that's climate change.

Mr. Jean: This government's experiments in our electricity grid will have a major impact for Albertans across this province. This government's policies will mean higher power bills and even higher taxes. For families and our businesses in Alberta this means less money to spend on their priorities. The fact is that the NDP is busy suing for Alberta-owned power companies but leaving the door wide open to pay for a transmission line to directly benefit B.C.-owned power companies. Does the Premier plan to help pay for a billion-dollar transmission line from B.C.? Yes or no?

Ms Hoffman: This government is committed to making sure that we are taking responsible action as we move forward on addressing climate change and that we're creating a fair playing field for businesses right here, that are proud to be contributing to Alberta's local economy. Mr. Speaker, we're going to continue forging ahead on acknowledging the science that is behind climate change and on working with local opportunities to increase investment in renewable energy and have clean air.

For the folks who are in the gallery, who are here about lung health, I hope that they know that the member opposite is advocating for increased pollution. We're advocating for increased safety of health and wellness for Albertans, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I believe it's your second supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We're advocating for Albertans, and Albertans are right to be skeptical about the NDP's risky interventions in our electricity grid. They've seen other provinces go down this path only lead to skyrocketing power prices for consumers, for Albertans while jobs and investments flee their provinces. This is not what we want to see.

There is no shortage of steps that this Premier could take to end this mess. It starts by stopping her legal battles with Alberta-owned power companies, cancelling tax increases, and ending this ideological war against Alberta's coal industry. It's simple. Why won't the Premier accept just one of these ideas so that we can keep power bills low in Alberta for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are really proud to be investing $34.8 billion over the next five years to build infrastructure in this province, which is going to help Albertans. It's going to be creating jobs throughout the province, and it's going to continue to help support the Alberta families that rely on those construction jobs as well as the jobs that are created in the long term that continue to support them.

Mr. Speaker, we're going to keep working with business in a fair and respectful way. That's one of the reasons why, when we announced our climate leadership plan almost a year ago, we had a number of business folks standing on stage with us, supporting us, because it's a fair and reasonable way to move forward.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

AISH Administration

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General's report points out that vulnerable Albertans on AISH are not readily able to access the supports they need when they need them. We know that the government sometimes, under fire, will blame the previous government. But today I'd like to solve a problem. To the Premier. The AISH backlog is getting worse, and as legislators this should concern all of us deeply. I know your government accepted the recommendations in the report, but what is your government doing today to address this serious issue?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much to the member for the important question. We share the concerns that were highlighted by the office of the Auditor General and, like the member opposite, are committed to making sure that we are addressing those as we move forward. We've invested an additional $28.3 million in AISH to ensure that the increased number of Albertans who need the support can access it, Mr. Speaker. This is something that is a complex matter, but investing that $28.3 million is going to help make some of the issues that we're encountering far less cumbersome for the individuals who are trying to support those families and the citizens who rely on AISH and make sure that they can have a good quality of life.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, we know that AISH clients are some of the most vulnerable in our community, and we know that the measure of a society is how we look after our most vulnerable. I think we can do better. To the Premier. One of the Auditor General's recommendations was to improve reporting on efficiency and improve how we measure and monitor the process. Are you satisfied with your government's work on this front to ensure that no Albertans on AISH are slipping through the cracks?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I just want to reiterate something that my colleague from St. Albert raised earlier, and that's the importance of having a language that's inclusive and reaching out a hand towards people who are the most underemployed and, certainly, have a lot of potential to bring about, benefiting Albertans. That's one of the reasons why we're establishing a working group to build on the Auditor General's recommendations. It will be reporting back before the end of the year, and it's definitely going to be solution focused. We'll welcome contributions from all members of this House to help us find solutions because this is a matter of great importance to us.

The Speaker: Thank you, Deputy Premier.

Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I sent a file to the Human Services minister. An Albertan in need received cancer treatment as a child, and that treatment left this Albertan permanently unable to earn a living. Therefore, he was approved for AISH. He subsequently married a woman with an income level that took away the AISH benefits. The marriage is gone now, the medical condition hasn't changed, and the Albertan needs those AISH benefits back. Premier, will you work with your Human Services minister and see if you can get this Albertan the AISH support that he so rightly needs and has been approved for before?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the important question. We will be happy to have the office of the Minister of Human Services follow up with the individual that has been identified and do our best to come up with a solution that works for everyone. Mr.

Speaker, that's why we're really proud of the increase of $28.3 million to the AISH line item, and we're also proud that we didn't move forward with proposed cuts of $2 billion to operations in Alberta. We know that it's important to have stability and long-term investment. We're happy to work in collaboration to help address the matter that was just raised with us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Lung Disease

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. November is lung health month across Canada. Fifteen per cent of Albertans are suffering from significant lung disease, with that number predicted to increase. As a physician I've seen the impact of lung disease first-hand, and I'm aware of the constraints on the quality of life of persons with lung disease. To the Minister of Health: what is the government doing to help support Albertans living with lung disease?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for his ongoing work, whether it was in his other profession, during his candidacy, or as a caucus member, in continuing to move forward concerns that have been raised by folks, including the physician community and the Lung Association, who is here today, with regard to respiratory disease, which never stops being of utmost concern and importance to us. Albertans living with lung disease know that every breath matters, and that's why our government is partnering with the Lung Association to help challenge Canadians around acknowledging every breath and the challenges that might bring. We are making real reduction by keeping tobacco out of the hands of children.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that lung disease burdens so many Albertans and given that the national Lung Association has said that prevention is key, to the same minister: what preventative strategies is the government using to reduce the number of Albertans that do develop lung disease?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member for the question and to our front-line health care workers who deliver preventative care and treatment to Albertans throughout our province.

This includes information around smoking cessation and strategies for Albertans who do want to quit; research that is being done at the respiratory health strategic clinical network, which we're very proud of, that is funded by the government of Alberta through Alberta Innovates; and we've also banned the sale of menthol and flavoured smoking products, that we know were enticing youth and ending up in those hands. We're taking concrete action to protect youth and all Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Lung Association of Alberta and Northwest Territories recognizes that emissions from burning coal are impacting Albertans with lung disease, can the Minister of Health inform the House what's being done to remedy that?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is right that coal power, according to research – a report that was put out by the Lung Association, the Asthma Society of Canada, the Canadian Association of Physicians for the Environment, and the Pembina Institute asserts that 92 premature deaths in Alberta every year are from the associated emissions from coal, and the costs associated with health care could be as much as $460 million per year. It went on to say that an accelerated coal phase-out would more than double the health cost benefits associated with the federal government's coal phase-out and that we'll be able to prevent an estimated 600 premature deaths, 500 ER visits, and 80,000 ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Cardiac Care in Central Alberta

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the NDP claim to be champions of our health care system, outcomes are getting worse for patients and their families. If you have a heart attack in central Alberta, your chances of dying are increased 100 per cent compared to Edmonton or Calgary. Two years ago a feasibility study outlined the need for cardiac services in Red Deer to prevent increased heart attack mortality rates caused by travel delays to distant facilities. How many deaths will it take for this government to take action and save the lives of central Albertans?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and for the question. I've had the opportunity to visit Red Deer and many of those communities that are impacted in central Alberta who rely on important services in the regional hospital as well as in Edmonton and Calgary. AHS is working on improving cardiac services for the central zone, and that work includes considerations of this very important project for cardiac catheterization within Red Deer. We want to make sure that there is a province-wide plan and that every Albertan gets the right care in the right place at the right time with the right information. We're continuing to move forward on this project as well as others that are important to Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I realize that it is being considered, the provision for advanced cardiac care in Red Deer is needed now, not later.

Given that there are $10 million of private donations that have been received for the needed cardiac services in Red Deer and given that it will save 3 and a half million dollars a year in reduced hospital stays and given that these procedures are already being done and paid for hours away, creating higher mortality risk, will the government save upwards of 30 lives a year and provide central Albertans with the cardiac catheterization lab that they need? [interjections]

The Speaker: Members on both sides, would you terminate the discussion with each other immediately.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question. Albertans depend on getting services as close to home as possible, but they want to make sure that it's the right service for their condition. We are certainly working to move forward on increasing stability in the health care system through the budget, as opposed to cutting over a billion dollars from last year's operations. We've committed to increases, but smaller increases, every year because we do want to ensure stability and we want to ensure that we continue to have a world-class system. So there needs to be evidence taken into consideration as we make these decisions, but like the member opposite, I certainly want to make sure that we move forward in having the best care for Albertans across our province.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister – and I will credit her – had said last week that she will work with AHS to improve cardiac services in the central zone and given that Red Deer hospital has the highest acute-care volume in the province outside of Calgary and Edmonton and given that AHS's strategic clinical network has affirmed that Red Deer has the cardiac volume to justify a catheterization lab, will the minister commit today to take action to save money, to save lives by approving that cardiac cath lab in Red Deer and set a date for its completion?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier in the week we had a member from the third party ask me for a sod-turning. Today we have a member from the Official Opposition asking me to make a campaign-style announcement. I'm not going to do that. I'm going to make sure that we're working with the community, that we have a strong, stable public health care system. We're not going to be firing nurses and teachers and then allowing people from private sectors to build something that won't have staff. We're going to invest in front-line care, and that includes having evidenced-based decisions around where we put our infrastructure, and I'm proud to be the minister leading that work.

Energy Policies (continued)

Mr. Fraser: Albertans and the Progressive Conservative caucus understand that we need to take action on climate change. Albertans reject the notion, though, that we need to pit action on climate change against jobs. Albertans know that we can have both. Private industry, investors, and municipalities impacted by the accelerated coal phase-out also know this. They want to create jobs and take action on climate change by enhancing clean-coal technology. To environment. The perception is that you've been absent in actually engaging with these communities and investors who want to continue research into clean technology. Do you understand that with your approach to accelerating the coal phase-out and killing coal, you're also killing advancements in research?

The Speaker: The Environment and Parks minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, this province is committed to a just transition for communities, and to that end, we have established an expert panel that is touring those communities, who will be reporting back to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. In addition, we are looking at, at a minimum, $10.5 billion of new investments in renewables being phased in in addition to the new investments that will come from the other 70 per cent of the electricity mix, which is, of course, natural gas.

Mr. Fraser: Given that strides made in the innovation and research for clean-coal technology would create jobs, diversify our economy, and make Alberta a leader in green energy technology and given that all those opportunities will likely come to an end when you end coal, to the Premier. Your aggressive attack on Alberta companies with the PPA lawsuits spoke volumes. It seems you're using the same approach when it comes to the accelerated coal phase-out. Premier, will you show gracious leadership and speak with investors and researchers to continue to develop green innovation and revisit the accelerated coal phase-out?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, this province is committed to a thoughtful reinvestment of the existing price on carbon on large final emitters, and as that system evolves into a system of performance standards, we're going to do that based on the lowest cost per tonne and proven technologies. We're not alone in that.

You know, there are a number of Republican governors that were re-elected last night: Iowa, Oklahoma, Kansas. In Iowa the Republican governor said: every wind turbine that you see as you travel Iowa means income to farmers whose lands it is on, revenue to local governments in the county that it's located on, and jobs for families.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fraser: With respect, Minister, Albertans need a firm baseload for energy so that they can be confident with their business and their families. Given that this government is losing this PPA court case in the court of public opinion, Premier, will you assure Albertans that you won't play political games by dropping this court case then retroactively implementing PPA legislation, like you have with other legislation, that would further damage the confidence of investors and Albertans in this government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well thank you, Mr. Speaker. As concerns the evolution of our electricity system and as we decarbonize it, we have committed to a just transition, of course, for the electricity generation companies. We have said that we will make a commitment to the workers, we will make a commitment to the communities, and we will make a commitment to ensuring that consumers do not see massive spikes in their bills in addition to not unnecessarily stranding capital. That's a made-in-Alberta plan. The opposition would have us have a plan imposed by Ottawa, and that's not our approach.

The Speaker: The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Little Smoky and A La Pêche Caribou Range Plan

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's no secret that this government has a horrible track record in consulting with Albertans and stakeholders prior to enacting legislation. In the case of the draft plan for the Little Smoky and A La Pêche caribou herds strong concern has been raised by local people, municipal governments, the public, outdoor groups, hunters, and trappers as well as the forest industry and its related businesses. To the minister: other than perhaps ForestEthics and the Natural Resources Defense Council, have any groups given any positive reviews to your draft plan?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Species at Risk Act federally mandates that Alberta manage 65 per cent of its critical caribou habitat. We have to file that plan by October 2017. The previous government had 20 years to fix this problem but did nothing. So we inherited a situation where the problem was admired for quite some time but action was not taken. That is why we appointed the mediator that we did, to take seriously the impact on our forestry industry in particular, to work in collaboration with the energy industry. We have a draft plan with which I have spoken to many different communities and many different stakeholders, including the local First Nations. We will move forward on a thoughtful response to that plan over the coming months.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Loewen: Given that Mackenzie county could lose almost 60 per cent of its property tax revenue if the proposed 1.8 million hectare protected caribou zone is set aside and given the broad restrictions this Alberta draft plan for caribou places upon oil and gas and forest industries, hindering their ability to operate properly, to the minister: will you stop hiding behind federal threats and stand up for Albertans here in the House today and state there will be no job losses due to your ideological and unsubstantiated Alberta caribou action plan?

Ms Phillips: Once again, Mr. Speaker, we have a situation where the Official Opposition, despite all of the foot stomping and arm crossing, is simply opening us up to action by Ottawa. That is not the approach that we will take. That is not strength; that is weakness. Now, what we have done is that we have taken seriously the concerns of, in particular, the forestry industry in some of these areas in the Duvernay and Montney formations, in particular, those Little Smoky, A La Pêche herds. We did not accept the ministerial task force recommendations to the previous government because that would have cost jobs. Instead, we went back to the drawing board, and now we have a thoughtful plan to move forward.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Loewen: Yes. I think we're seeing weakness here.

Given that our softwood trade agreement has expired and the dispute is far from being resolved and given that the moratorium on the forest industry cutting in the Little Smoky and A La Pêche caribou zone makes it nearly impossible for lumber companies to access the needed timber supply, endangering hundreds of jobs, to the minister. The Wildrose would prefer a balanced approach between industry and environment. In that vein, will you table the timber supply analysis used in the Alberta draft report that it based its recommended timber supply levels on, if it exists?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the mediator's report is public and contains a number of very thoughtful analyses and scenarios on this matter, and I commend it to the hon. member for his reading.

Now, Mr. Speaker, sitting on our hands and doing nothing is not an option, as the Official Opposition would have us do on a number of environmental files. It would force the federal government to impose a plan that would stop industrial development until 65 per cent of caribou habitat was reclaimed. That would mean serious job losses, and that is not a path that this government will take.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Carbon Levy

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP's carbon plan contains taxation powers and targets that are so misguided that the government cannot even bring itself to use the word "tax." One can only assume they are avoiding it because they know how punishing this will be on the families of Alberta. Heating our homes, fuelling our cars, buying groceries, and pretty much everything else is going to be more expensive as of January 1. Will this government start using honest language and admit that this poorly advised policy is actually just a tax?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the federal government has signalled its intent to bring in a floor price, or tax, if you will, on carbon. [interjections] Honestly, it's the law. They've committed to bringing in floor pricing on carbon. Of course, we have a made-in-Alberta plan already. What the Official Opposition would have us do is open ourselves up to a situation where we are having a plan imposed on us by Ottawa rather than a plan that is tailored to Alberta's economy. That is not the approach of this government. That is not in the best interests of the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie. I think we're on first supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Wow. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Wildrose has repeatedly pressed the government to conduct a full economic impact assessment so the people of Alberta really know what the full cost of this tax is and given that the government has created a rebate for lower and middle-income Albertans to partially offset the cost associated with this tax, how did this government even determine the amount of the rebate without a full economic impact assessment?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, we released our most up-to-date conclusions earlier this week. If we do not act, we would be opening the door to Ottawa. Our renewables plan will ensure $10 billion in private investment and 7,200 new jobs in the province. Two-thirds of Albertans will receive a rebate to ensure that the carbon price does not place an unfair burden on their household budgets. The rebate is based on income, not emissions, so families can come out ahead. If families access new energy efficiency programs, which we'll also be providing, Albertans will have help lowering their emissions. They will have more money in their pockets at the end of the day.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that last Saturday people from across this province, including my own community of Airdrie, gathered in town centres and public spaces to demand a referendum on the carbon tax and given that in a recent interview the director of communications in the office of the Premier stated that – and I quote – we live in a country where everyone is entitled to their opinion and entitled to voice their opinion, unquote, will this government honour the people's opinions, uphold the Premier's office's commitment to democracy, and hold a referendum on the carbon tax?

Ms Phillips: Well, of course, Mr. Speaker, Ottawa has signalled that they will be bringing in a price on carbon beginning very soon, and that plan on behalf of Ottawa would not contain a carbon pricing scheme that works for Alberta's economy. Had Alberta not studied this matter, consulted widely with both the public and every major industrial group in this province, we would not have that in place if it had not been for this government. So we will not wait to have a plan imposed on us. It's a made-in-Alberta solution today, or it's a made-in-Ottawa solution tomorrow. The opposition has made their choice. We've made ours.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Some young students just left the Assembly. I wonder why they left.

Coal-fired Electric Power Plant Retirement

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, a recent study completed by 15 industry participants outlined the true cost to Albertans for the NDP's ideologically motivated coal phase-out. Accelerating the phase-out comes with a price tag of $4 billion to $8 billion, almost as high as our ballooning deficit, and Albertans want answers. We know this government has trouble understanding the unintended consequences of their misguided policies. We saw it in Bill 6, we're seeing it with PPA lawsuits, and now with the accelerated coal phase-out. To the Minister of Energy: did the government complete a comprehensive economic impact study before pulling the pin on yet another irresponsible NDP...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, there is a cost to doing nothing on coal-fired emissions. That cost shows up in our emergency rooms, and it shows up in lost productivity, and it shows up in the health of the very young and the very old. That is why we have taken the action that we have, again, with a made-in-Alberta plan that will ensure a just transition and no unnecessary stranding of assets. We are doing it because the science behind the health effects of coal-fired emissions is as settled as the science of climate change, and both are real.

Mr. Gotfried: Economic evidence-based study indeed.

Mr. Speaker, given that in order to keep up with the demand for electricity, renewable resources need to be phased in as quickly as coal is phased out and given that the NDP government will rely heavily on private-sector investors to meet renewable targets, the same companies the Premier publicly vilifies daily, and given that you've invested in turning public perception against taxpayer-owned companies despite their commitments to a stable power grid and the communities they serve and now you're asking them for partnerships in billions in investments, again to the minister: simply put, do you regret torching those very bridges of trust and investor confidence in front of and behind you?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this topic of the investment appetite in the renewables space I will quote Calgary Economic Development president Mary Moran, who said:

As investment in renewable energy in Canada is growing rapidly, Alberta has been largely on the sidelines in this key part of the future energy supply, so we are pleased to see policy that provides the long-term certainty and stability that encourages global and local companies to invest.

This is a plan that plays to the best parts of Alberta's competitive electricity market while ensuring that we are staging the phase-in of renewables and also natural gas in order to replace the aging coal...

The Speaker: Thank you, minister.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's not what I heard yesterday from the CED economic outlook people and the stakeholders that I met there.

Given that the unemployment rate continues to rise across the province, hitting double digits in Calgary, which was a big issue yesterday, and given that a new punitive carbon tax will hit Alberta families January 1, when they can least afford it, and given that we simply need to look to Ontario to see how ideological policies hurt families on fixed incomes the most, with increased power bills, and given you know accelerated coal phase-out will hurt these very families and Albertans, knowing that you do not have their backs, when will you stop pursuing the NDP world view and finally start being a Premier for all Albertans?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll happily direct the member to look at the Alberta jobs plan, which I released on Monday, which talks about the fact that this year Alberta is poised to have record investment – record investment – in capital investment, in manufacturing, in non oil and gas, in oil and gas; $28 billion will be invested this year. As well, at this very same meeting that the member attended, they also talked about how there are many economists that are saying that Alberta is turning the corner and that for our economy there are positive projections for next year's outlook. We've had three months of growth.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Climate Leadership Plan and Indigenous Communities

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Success of the climate leadership plan requires collaboration and engagement from Albertans. In West Yellowhead the Hinton Friendship Centre has told me that for too long past Alberta governments have not worked co-operatively or recognized the leadership role that aboriginal communities can have in building Alberta's green future. To the Minister of Indigenous Relations: what is this government doing to involve indigenous people in the climate leadership plan?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. It's very important that the First Nations and Métis people of this country have a very crucial role in our economy and help to build the workforce and benefit from the climate leadership program. Right now they're already helping to shape this plan as members of the Energy Efficiency Advisory Panel, the oil sands advisory group, and the Energy Efficiency Alberta program. Last month, as well, we introduced two pilot programs that are specifically directed toward the indigenous communities under our indigenous climate leadership plan. Right now 2 out of every 3 people in Alberta, including First Nations people, will be eligible for...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that indigenous communities are often directly impacted by the impacts of climate change, to the same minister: could you tell us more about these pilot programs?

The Speaker: Mr. Minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I'm very excited to announce, having announced these programs earlier this year, that these programs are open until the end of March. The first is the Alberta indigenous solar program, which will help the friendship centres and other indigenous organizations and the government to put solar panels on the roofs of buildings. The Alberta indigenous community energy program will help First Nations and Métis settlements conduct community energy audits. These programs will invest $2.5 million into reducing power bills and making buildings more efficient. They're also smart ways of building expertise, creating opportunity...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the response. After these pilot programs end, what will the climate leadership plan look like for the indigenous communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We have already started working with the First Nations communities and the Métis community to help build these pilot programs. We want to encourage success, like is happening right now on Montana First Nation, which has put solar panels on their band offices, their water treatment plant, and 15 of their homes. Through doing this, they've been able to cut their energy bills in half and have developed important partnerships and big plans for the future. Through their band-owned renewable energy company they've trained 40 people and generated $120,000 for their most recent installations. The climate leadership plan, like Montana First Nation's solar...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, a rancher in my constituency has hundreds of cattle, with a portion that is quarantined due to a case of TB being discovered in southern Alberta. The two herds have never come into contact. He has been unsuccessful in selling his unaffected cattle at auction given the unease that they may also be unhealthy. To the minister: what is the government doing to help this rancher and others like him in this situation?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have been and continue to be in close contact with beef producers about this. It absolutely is causing them distress. The beef industry is an important industry in this province, and the product that they export is important to the producers and to the whole province. We are working with the CFIA and moving forward with this organization, and now we are continuing to actually extend and work with Saskatchewan on this issue. This is an important issue to our province, and we will do everything we can to support the CFIA and the producers to move forward to ensure that they can sell this amazing product...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, this rancher is incurring mounting costs for the care of his cattle that have been quarantined since the beginning of this case. Given that Albertans like this rancher don't have unlimited resources and need to pay the bills to maintain their families, income, and what they're doing and given that this government is passing new legislation at a breakneck speed, to the minister: why is this government, then, taking so long to make a decision on these quarantined animals?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, it is the CFIA who is leading this investigation, and we have offered all of our support in this matter. It is an important priority.

In terms of financial options AFSC posted a list of programs available to affected cattle producers, from advanced programs to flexibility on AFSC loans. Agriculture and Forestry has begun the longer term analysis of whether future AgriRecovery assistance may be available to producers affected by bovine TB. We encourage impacted producers to engage with AFSC or Agriculture and Forestry so we can continue to find supports that work for them. We will listen to beef producers and affected...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that we heavily rely on the United States to purchase our exports and given that a case of bovine tuberculosis has caused uncertainty in our valuable beef industry, to the minister: what is this government doing to ensure that our trading partners know that we are competent to handle situations like these when they arise?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I mean, obviously, we're monitoring the situation closely in support of our farming families in this province, and we are urging the federal government to do the same. Again, there is very little risk to human health. We don't anticipate market disruptions as a result of this. It is something that periodically happens in markets. However, we are pressing the CFIA to move forward on this, to consider it an important priority. We'll continue to work with Saskatchewan to do the same, and we will continue to support the hard-working farm families of this province with every bit of support that we can give.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Municipal Minimum Property Tax

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 21, the euphemistically entitled Modernized Municipal Government Act, purports to make improvements to the MGA, the large piece of legislation that has governed how municipalities operate for the past 20 years. However, one section was left completely untouched, the section that permits the levying of minimum tax. To the minister: given the egregious and penal nature and unfair nature of the section and the penalizing effects it has on the owners of property of lower value, do you support amendments to end this practice?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud of the work that we did amending the Municipal Government Act. I've certainly heard a lot of support from the other side of this House in terms of that. In regard to the minimum tax, certainly, there are costs that municipalities incur as a result of providing support to residents in the community. That is what property tax is about. Certainly, they need to be able to recoup the costs of providing a very basic level of services to those properties, and we will continue to support municipalities to be able to do so.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the application of minimum tax in some communities results in property tax payable actually exceeding the property's assessed value and given that this practice seriously impedes the capacity for rural communities to be places where those on lower or fixed income can find attainable housing and given that this seriously damages the viability of small rural communities, to the minister: why won't you at least consider changes that would end the practice of levying minimum tax?

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order?
The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, as I stated, we absolutely have support for the rural municipalities to be sustainable, to be viable. They need to be able to have the funds to provide support to the residents in their communities, and setting a base, low, minimum tax rate for property owners is a reasonable thing, and I continue to support them in the autonomy they have to be able to meet the needs of their residents and utilize all the tools that they have to be enabled to do so.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this government and indeed NDP philosophy in general prides itself on the world view of redistributing wealth from the rich to the poor and given that the application of the minimum tax does exactly the opposite, why won't the minister take steps to restore fairness to the application of property taxation in small communities across our province and end this practice?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the minimum tax provisions is an enabling piece of legislation. It doesn't force municipalities to do so. We continue to extend that tool to municipalities to utilize, and I encourage Albertans who feel that their municipality is utilizing that tool in a different way to work with their municipality to find a fair solution. We respect our municipal leaders, we respect our municipal leadership, and we will continue to support them to do the amazing work that they do to keep their communities healthy, sustainable, and viable into the long-term future.

Opioid Use Prevention

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, the continued threat of fentanyl and other potentially deadly opiates is a concern for people in all regions of our province, including my own constituency of Sherwood Park. We've lost Albertans in our cities, in rural areas, and in our indigenous communities. Given that, can the Associate Minister of Health tell this House what the government is doing in response?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I've had the chance to sit with Albertans who have lost loved ones to addiction. Their stories are heartbreaking. We have lost Albertans with loving families, growing careers, and lives full of possibility ahead of them. Two weeks ago I was at the Royal Alexandra hospital to announce several new initiatives to respond to this public health crisis. These include the expansion of opioid replacement treatment, co-operation with physicians in changing prescription practices, and beginning serious conversations in our communities about supervised consumption services. In all of our initiatives we are putting harm reduction first, and I am very proud of that.

The Speaker: Thank you, associate minister.
First supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Public health officials and law enforcement officers have been supporting harm reduction as the most meaningful and cost-effective intervention that we can make to save lives. Given that harm reduction covers a wide range of activities, to the same minister: how is this government using this approach and to what extent?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Harm reduction is based on the belief that every person has dignity and worth and that Albertans living with addiction are no less deserving of health care than any other person living with a serious chronic disease. Harm reduction is driven by hard evidence from other jurisdictions that has proven that by offering support rather than stigma we can make a real difference for families. I was honoured to be joined at the Alex by Petra Schulz, who lost her son Danny to addiction. She told us her definition of harm reduction. It's keeping them alive so they can make a better decision on another day.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the response. Can the minister tell this House how supervised consumption services are distinct from safe injection sites?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We know that the use of illicit drugs will always be a high-risk activity, and while supervision can reduce that risk, we can never make it entirely safe. We also know that people use substances in a variety of ways, not just through injection. We'll be able to connect with and support those Albertans as well. Lastly, the model we are exploring in Edmonton will embed these services in existing community agencies so that people will be able to have access to a full range of social and health services at several locations. We're proud to support this work and make meaningful interventions to save the lives of Albertans.

The Speaker: We'll proceed in about 10 seconds.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: Hon. members, please be seated.
The Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All Albertans deserve to go to work in an environment free from harassment and bullying. Bullying at work can have a long-lasting psychological impact, to the point that the harassed individual can demonstrate symptoms similar to those of PTSD. What's more, psychological harassment and bullying at work impacts a company's bottom line from absences and nonengagement.

As such, I am pleased to present this petition, sponsored by Wendy Gaucher-Bigcharles and Linda Crockett of Alberta Bullying, that has more than 1,300 signatures. It reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to: introduce legislation to address the issue of psychological violence in the workplace; protect employees from being exposed to hazardous work environments due to workplace psychological violence; and, request the federal government to introduce similar legislation in the House of Commons to address this issue for federally regulated employees.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Bill 31

Agencies, Boards and Commissions Review Statutes Amendment Act, 2016

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to request leave to introduce this Bill 31, the Agencies, Boards and Commissions Review Statutes Amendment Act, 2016.

The legislation is necessary to enact some of the results of the first phase of the government's review of public agencies, boards, and commissions, also referred to as the ABCs review. The government established this review to ensure Alberta's agencies are, in fact, relevant, effective, efficient, and well governed. As part of Budget 2016 we announced the amalgamation and dissolution of 26 agencies, boards, and commissions. The proposed bill will allow the dissolution of three entities that were established by statute, and they are the Government House Foundation, the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta, and the Wild Rose Foundation. [interjections] Not the Wildrose Party, though that wouldn't be bad either.

The work of these agencies continues within government or through other means. The proposed bill also includes provisions to enhance the administration and governance provisions in other legislation affecting agencies, boards, and commissions identified through our ABC review. Finally, these additional provisions will help ensure effective governance and support other policy decisions that have been made to date.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Bill 207

Veterinary Profession (Clear and Timely Price Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2016

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Veterinary Profession (Clear and Timely Price Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2016.

It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce Bill 207. This bill intends to regulate the profession's governing body, the Veterinary Medical Association, to provide clear and timely disclosure for services that are within the scope of veterinary medicine. Specifically, this bill requires the members of the veterinary profession to disclose to their clients a narrow set of predictable fees that a client is likely to incur for services unless they are needed services in an emergency.

I look forward to discussing this important topic with my fellow colleagues in this House.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 207 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Bill 208

Occupational Health and Safety (Protection from Workplace Harassment) Amendment Act, 2016

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce Bill 208, the Occupational Health and Safety (Protection from Workplace Harassment) Amendment Act, 2016.

Every employee has the right to work in an environment free from psychological harassment and bullying. This bill would amend the Occupational Health and Safety Act to include a specific definition of psychological violence and add prohibitions for psychological violence in the workplace. I look forward to future discussions about this bill with my colleagues in the House.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 208 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: I was just going to request a reversion to introductions if possible.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some individuals who are dedicated to ending harassment in the workplace. I'm not sure if they're all here, but if you could stand when I call your name: Wendy Gaucher-Bigcharles, a constituent who was a catalyst to my private member's bill, who came to my office and cosponsored the petition as well; Linda Crockett, the founder and executive director of Alberta Bullying, also a cosponsor of the petition; Jared Matsunaga-Turnbull from the Alberta Workers' Health Centre; Pat Ferris, a researcher in the field of workplace bullying; Dr. Jonathan Eustace and Dr. Michelle Drefs, representatives of the Psychologists' Association of Alberta. Thank you. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to table five copies of a report from the Asthma Society of Canada, the Canadian Association of Physicians for the Environment, the Lung Association, and the Pembina Institute entitled Breathing in the Benefits: How an Accelerated Coal Phase-out Can Reduce Health Impacts and Costs for Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to section 21(1) of the Child and Youth Advocate Act I rise today to table five copies of the 2015-16 annual report of the Child and Youth Advocate.

I also would like to table five copies of the page biographies for the Second Session of the 29th Legislature, fall 2016, so that all of you know these wonderful young people who serve us every day.

Hon. members, I think we may have a point of order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the point of order.

Cortes-Vargas: We're going to withdraw the point of order.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 29

Vital Statistics and Life Events Modernization Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and Minister of Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and move Bill 29, the Vital Statistics and Life Events Modernization Act.

I'm proud to have tabled this bill yesterday because this legislation touches personal moments in every Albertan's life. Every Albertan uses vital statistics services at some point in their life, whether they are planning a wedding, becoming a new parent, dealing with the death of a loved one, or are travelling and need a birth certificate to apply for a passport. That's why it's important that we update this legislation to reflect the modern reality of today's Alberta. There are over 60 amendments proposed in this transformative legislation, changes that respond to Albertans' expectations for efficient public services and an inclusive, compassionate approach to life's major events.

Bill 29 clarifies that parents can choose any last name for their child. This helps families avoid costly and complex processes when changing a child's name. It also empowers parents to use cultural naming conventions such as placing the family name before a given name, as is done among Cambodian, Japanese, Korean, and Hungarian communities, to name a few.

Our government respects the dignity of represented adults. We will amend the Marriage Act to remove the requirement for a doctor's letter to marry the person of their choice. At the same time, we are giving guardians more time to intervene, if they feel compelled, by extending the notification period from the current 14 days to 30 days before a marriage licence is issued. Several groups, including Right to Love and the Calgary Sexual Health Centre, have advocated for this very change, Mr. Speaker. We have also received letters from doctors who say that the decision to marry is a personal one that should not require the consent of a doctor, and we agree.

Alberta is a compassionate province, and this act reflects those values, particularly during times of grief. We are reducing the burden on grieving parents of a stillborn child by not requiring parents to name a stillborn child in order to register the stillbirth, but they still certainly have the choice to do so, Mr. Speaker. We are providing them with the ability to later add or amend the name if that is part of their healing process.

One mother wrote us a few months ago letting us know that after a long and traumatic labour she was forced to quickly come up with a name to register the stillbirth. She and her partner provided a nickname that they had referred to their unborn baby as during the pregnancy. In her words, she said that the fact that her child never had a real name had been weighing very heavily on her, and she pleaded for help to be able to give her late child a name that she says he deserves. As a new mother myself I cannot fathom the pain of losing a child and how difficult it must be to grapple with these decisions in time of deep loss and mourning. We are giving parents the time they need to grieve and heal instead of being bound by restrictive and uncompassionate rules and timelines.

With Bill 29 we are also protecting the privacy of Albertans, Mr. Speaker. We are restricting who can search for vital records such as registrations of birth, marriage, or death. This change is of particular importance to protect the security of vulnerable persons fleeing domestic violence or harassment. We are also removing the need for legal changes of name to be published in the Alberta Gazette, and we are removing the need to provide a reason for requesting a legal change of name.

Albertans are telling us they want improved access to vital statistics services. The Vital Statistics and Life Events Modernization Act will enable a future online birth registration system that will make it easier for parents to register births from anywhere, any time, on any device of their choice. Not only will it save taxpayers nearly $460,000 over four years; it will also reduce errors from the current paper form system. The act also paves the way for other e-services like online marriage registrations for marriage officiants. We are also introducing a new commemorative certificate, Mr. Speaker, a decorative document to commemorate special occasions such as a 50th wedding anniversary or a 100th birthday or even to complete a family tree display.

We are now adding midwives to the list of professionals who can register a birth and acknowledging the essential role that they play in the health and well-being of expectant mothers and the safe delivery of babies.

With this act Alberta is leading the country in being an inclusive and welcoming province. We are preparing to include a third marker on vital records for those who do not identify as male or female, and I'd like to take the opportunity to acknowledge the MLA for Strathcona-Sherwood Park for her instrumental contribution to this change. This makes Alberta the first jurisdiction in Canada to make this change in its Vital Statistics Act. This change will take effect after regulatory development and when the federal government makes a similar change so that legal documents such as provincial birth certificates are aligned with federal documents like passports.

We are also removing the outdated requirement for proof of sex-reassignment surgery in order to change one's sex on vital records, and we are expanding the list of professionals who may confirm an applicant's affidavit for change of sex to include registered social workers, nurse practitioners, and registered nurses.

These proposed changes to modernize the Vital Statistics Act are essential to making government work for Alberta's families and are critical in building an inclusive province that respects the rights of all Albertans. I'm proud our government is proposing these amendments and look forward to the debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Good afternoon. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my absolute pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 29, the Vital Statistics and Life Events Modernization Act, at second reading. After taking some time to review the proposed changes, I am so happy to say that there is much in this bill that I support. The province is undergoing change just as society as a whole is undergoing change, and in order to meet these changing needs, Alberta's legislation that regulates how these changes are recorded needs to be updated and modernized from time to time.

Bill 29 proposes to modernize and clarify the language of the Vital Statistics Act and the Marriage Act. This includes formal recognition in the act itself that removes the requirement to show proof of gender reassignment surgery when requesting a change to a birth certificate.

The Vital Statistics Act provides the framework by which the government and its agencies collect, manage, and store information about Albertans. For example, it is important for the government to know when a baby has been born in Alberta, the location where the baby was born, and the name of the baby. This information allows the government to provide this new baby and their family with the legal documentation such as a birth certificate, that is needed in order for the baby and their family to access the critical services that they need. A birth certificate is considered a foundational legal document that can be used to verify identity in order to obtain other very important legal documents such as a social insurance number, driver's licence, passport, provincial health care number, et cetera.

As I mentioned, our society is changing, and with the advancement of technology, that change seems to be happening faster and faster. Albertans are much more interconnected and dependent on technology than ever before, and their government must keep up with them. That's why I'm so pleased to see the amendments included in Bill 29 that will allow for parents to fill out and submit birth registrations online. This will result in a much more efficient process, that should result in parents obtaining their child's birth certificate in a more timely manner.

Giving birth is already an incredibly stressful and beautiful experience for parents, but sometimes the last thing that you're worrying about at that moment is whether your handwriting is sufficiently legible on a form or if you have misplaced important paperwork. I can attest to that, having had very, very long and very, very difficult labours and it being the very, very last thing on my mind, especially when that little munchkin was put into my arms. I'm very grateful for the opportunity that we'll be able to do this and to even potentially have a caretaker, husband, wife, whoever happens to be in the room with you able to help you out with that information.

To keep up with the baby theme, another change that I'm extremely happy to see is that the government is clarifying that parents may choose the last name they want for their child. That allows parents to change their child's last name without the need for a costly and complex process. That not only protects and respects the fundamental rights of the parents to make these important decisions, but it also removes the needless institutional barriers that might discourage parents from changing their child's name when and if they feel that's appropriate.

Canada is a richly diverse country. Just last week we celebrated the passage of the Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act, honouring the many contributions of Ukrainian Canadians. According to the 2011 census Alberta is home to over 220,000 First Nations, 156,000 South Asians, and over 40,000 Latin Americans amongst many, many, many others. While we are all Albertan and we bring all of our individual cultural experiences with us, one of the most important aspects, I feel, that's really reflected in this, one of any culture, is its language. More specifically, it's the individual naming practices in different cultures. For example, naming conventions in Asian cultures, including Japanese, list the family name first, followed by the given name. Actually this bill, Bill 29, clarifies that Albertans will be able to use their cultural naming convention when naming their children, and that's wonderful. I think that just really, really speaks to the diversity and inclusiveness in how this bill is moving forward.

Again, in my personal family my father's middle name became his first name when he came here because his first name is very long and difficult to pronounce, and his middle name is actually a very common name. If there is a lot of those common names in a room, it's a little difficult to figure out who they're talking to, however. Then when my father-in-law came to Canada, they mispronounced his name when he entered the country and actually wrote it down wrong. It's actually wrong on his certificate from when he immigrated here. I think that this will give a tremendous amount of dignity to the folks that we have that are wanting to follow that cultural practice. Hopefully, we will be able to get that a little bit more correct for future generations and other people's names.

If I may, I'd like to move on to another topic that is very important to me personally, and that is amending the proposal to repeal the requirement for a physician to certify that a represented adult has the capacity to marry. I don't know how a physician who sees a child or a represented adult a few times a year would ever feel comfortable, let alone qualify, to have the intimate knowledge to make such an important judgment call, including the authority to overrule an individual's parents' or guardians' rights. Obviously, the decision is best left to the individual and their family and the guardian to decide, and I welcome this change. Again, I can speak from a personal experience in my family. I want nothing more than for my 18-year-old to have the privilege of being married and having a family one day, and I would be absolutely just blown away if somebody was able to take that right away from him, let alone my ability to encourage him to have this life that he so desperately desires. This is a very welcome change.

One of the things in the amendment that is interesting is that there has been an increase to the time that the parent or guardian has to intervene if they feel that the represented adults should not marry, from 14 to 30 days. This is extremely important. There is definitely much emotion and very many different circumstances. These are thumbprint issues from person to person, Mr. Speaker, and it's very important that families and guardians have some time to have discussions and potentially a period in which to get together with all of the family parts involved to make sure that this is the right decision and that that person, that represented adult, also feels like they're being represented and that their personal emotions, decisions, and feelings are not being pushed aside in this decision.

In closing, I would truly like to reiterate my support for the changes proposed in this bill. Unfortunately, I was not able to touch on all of them. There are so many. But I believe that this bill truly improves and modernizes how government and agencies collect, manage, and store information about Albertans while also providing an extremely compassionate and inclusive approach to major life events. For this reason, I will be supporting Bill 29 at second reading, and I encourage all of my honourable colleagues in the Chamber to support it as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other members who would like to speak to second reading of Bill 29, Vital Statistics and Life Events Modernization Act? Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak on the Vital Statistics and Life Events Modernization Act. I cannot tell you how excited I am about this act. This will affect every person born in our province, whether they are planning a wedding, becoming a new parent, dealing with the death of a loved one, or making gender-affirming changes to their birth certificate. While I won't name all the fantastic things this bill will do, I would like to highlight just a few important changes.

The legislation will help to bring the Vital Statistics Act into the 21st century and assist to end institutionalized discrimination of persons with developmental disabilities and the LGBTQ-plus community. I don't know if anyone in this Chamber has ever attempted to change their name or has a friend who has tried, but I can promise you that it is incredibly difficult. This act will not only make it easier for parents to change the names of their children, for any number of reasons, but it will also strike out the need for legal name changes to be published in the Alberta Gazette.

Albertans change their names for a wide variety of reasons. Many do not feel safe having their old name published along with their new name in the Gazette. It can be incredibly dangerous for people who are fleeing an abusive relationship or people who change their names to reflect their gender identity, and several other reasons, to have their names published. A lot of times people want their name changed to affirm their gender identity, and when their names are published in the Alberta Gazette, they are often fired from their job or can be evicted when their employer finds out that they don't go by the name that they originally said that they were.

Removing the need to provide a reason for requesting a legal name change will also assist Albertans who wish to change their name legally to do so without fear of stigma. One of the many reasons people are afraid to change their name legally and are hesitant to do so is because they don't want to have to explain their reason for doing it. The decision to change one's name is not something people do lightly, and it can already be an incredibly emotional and difficult time in someone's life. Putting up barriers for people who wish to change their name legally is not going to solve anything, and I'm happy to see our government taking action on this.

This bill will also continue our government's record on leading the country in creating a more inclusive and welcoming province. Our government is preparing to include, once this bill is passed, an X gender marker on vital records for those who identify as neither male or female. This will make Alberta the first jurisdiction in Canada to do this change in its Vital Statistics Act. Many Albertans do not identify as male or female, thus it can be incredibly difficult and triggering when forms, websites, et cetera, only offer two genders.

It's also infuriating when people tell me that those who do not identify as male or female should just identify with their sex assigned at birth or according to their genitals. Mr. Speaker, personally, I don't believe the government nor anyone has the right to ask people about their genitals, nor should people be required to divulge information as to what their genitals look like; however, this is often what happens to gender-nonbinary Albertans. Currently in Alberta if a gender-nonbinary person doesn't identify with the sex they were assigned with at birth, they have to prove to the province that they have had gender-reaffirming surgery, and while many gender-nonbinary people choose to have gender-affirming surgery, many do not. That's just a personal choice that one may make.

Gender-reaffirming surgery is also incredibly difficult to have in Canada. Currently there is only one clinic in Canada where you can have this surgery, and in order to be able to get this surgery, you have to have signed documents from, I believe, two doctors in Alberta, one psychiatrist as well as another doctor. There are only one or two doctors in the entire province that will sign these forms for a patient.

Albertans have the right to identify with their true gender, and I'm glad to see our government being a leader in the world on these issues. I know of many Albertans who will be incredibly happy to see our government moving forward on these issues, making sure that one does not have to have gender-reaffirming surgery to show that they are not the gender they are assigned at birth and that they know who they are and that the records show that they know who they are.

I would highly encourage all members of the Legislature to support this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to Bill 29? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief. I won't cover a lot of the ground that previous members have covered, but I did want to rise to speak in favour of Bill 29, to thank the hon. minister for bringing it forward and allowing Alberta to lead the nation, particularly as it relates to allowing Albertans to live their lives as they are, not the way the government says that they should be. I think that's a very important point, and I do hope that the rest of the provinces in Canada will follow Alberta's lead on this.

There are other aspects of this bill that I think are quite positive. The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View I think did a very good job of outlining some of those as well, as did the minister. Anything we can do to reduce stress on parents at difficult times and to allow people more choice over naming – one of the things, I think, that I find fascinating about this job is that I learn things that I didn't know were laws. That, in fact, there's a registrar in this province that could have dictated and that to this day can dictate what someone chooses to name their child seems, frankly, foreign to me and doesn't seem right. I'm pleased to see that that will change with the passage of this legislation.

I certainly will be supporting it and enthusiastically encourage all of my legislative colleagues to do the same. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) for the Member for Calgary-Elbow?

Are there any other members who'd like to speak to Bill 29, the Vital Statistics and Life Events Modernization Act? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand and talk about this piece of progressive legislation. It's going to benefit all of us, I think, and streamline processes, communications, accuracy, timely changes. We're just learning this week that the federal government is starting to move on the whole issue of gender markers in their legislation as well, so it seems like we're somewhat in sync federally and provincially on at least the gender identity changes that they're looking at – also, the rules around people who want to change their birth certificates but haven't yet undergone gender-reassignment surgery.

Online birth registration through computer, tablet, and smart phone; online registration for birth confirmation from doctors and midwives; and pursuing online marriage registration for officiants like MLAs: that just speeds and facilitates things wonderfully. We are an online society now, and we're, I think, appropriately catching up with some of our technology. Baby names, name changes, marriage certificates: we don't see any problem with this. It's pretty noncontroversial, and the proposed changes are very consistent with our policies.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:20

The Speaker: Are there any questions for the Member for Calgary-Mountain View under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any other members who would like to speak to the bill?

Is there a motion to close debate?

I'm going to go to the vote.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a second time]

Bill 25 Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act

Mr. Loewen moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that it is necessary to have the recommendations from the oil sands advisory group tabled in the Assembly before the bill can proceed.

[Debate adjourned on the amendment November 9: Mrs. Aheer speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m going to just back up a little bit to where I was before. I think it’s important enough to reiterate. We are speaking in regard to making sure that – we want to see this bill put on hold until the OSAG reports. We’ve gone over a lot of reasons why this is important, but I just need to reiterate that there is a massive level of responsibility here that this House has to Albertans to make sure that the panels that the government is bringing together, that the folks that they put on these panels, that the information that comes forward from these panels, that everything that is required for Albertans to understand what the government is doing is there before we move to ramming through legislation that has not yet had the ability of the panel to speak to it.

Everyday Albertans right now are talking about all of these issues. I realize that when we’re under here, it might feel like everybody knows what we’re talking about, but they don’t. As I said before, when I’m in my constituency and people are asking me about – and like I said before, there are some very, very interesting people on this panel that are bringing forward a lot of controversy amongst the folks that I speak to. I firmly believe – and I think I can speak on behalf of at least my constituents – that they’re going to want to know what this panel brings forward before legislation is passed here because any regulation that happens after the fact is under the ministry and has absolutely no ability to be talked and spoken about robustly in this Legislature.

The importance of bringing the panel forward was obviously important enough for the government to strike one but not important enough for them to bring forward the panel discussions prior to ramming through this legislation. I take personal responsibility for being able to convey at least to some degree where the government is headed with this. As I said before, the concern then comes up: has the panel already reached its decision and we’re just not bringing that? Maybe the government isn’t happy with the direction that the panel is going.

I would have to say that I would have assumed that the government – the reason why you’ve stretched it out to February was to give them, in good conscience, the ability to deliberate on this massive piece of legislation that is going to alter, constrain, and change the future of how we produce in this province. This cap on production changes the whole look of prosperity, not only for Alberta but for Canada, and I would think that the government would want that information back.

Evidently, the government picked experts that they think are at least somewhat, it seems to me, by looking at these names, I mean, like, similarly thinking, minded people. You know, we have people from CNRL on there. We have Ms Tzaporah Berman that is on there, from Stand and from Greenpeace, and we have many, many other folks on there that if given the opportunity to have to choose a panel, may not have been my first choice, but I’m not the government. The government has that privilege of being able to choose that panel. But with that privilege, they also have the responsibility to make sure that the information that comes from that panel is made accessible not only to us but to Albertans.

This is not what you campaigned on. This government campaigned on transparency, and to be able to withhold panel discussions and information and advice that comes from that panel prior to putting through this legislation is not what they campaigned on, Mr. Speaker. That level of transparency and accountability is absolutely imperative, especially in situations like this, when we’re looking at – these are job creators. This is about how our province is going to move forward. This is about stability. This is about investment, about everything that we have come to talk about on a daily basis in here, and it just doesn’t seem to be getting through.

There is a cost to creating this panel, too. This isn’t a small number of people. This is a large panel with, obviously, a great deal of expertise in their areas. Am I to understand correctly that the government is going to suggest that we ram through legislation even though the taxpayers are on the hook for paying for this panel, yet the panel is not going to respond back to the Legislature, let alone to Albertans, but that’s supposed to be okay because, as the member across the way said earlier today, delaying it is not helpful and it doesn’t matter what the panel says? Wow. I find that extremely concerning, especially because it was the government that decided to put forward a panel. I don’t know if somebody can explain that to me, how that works, but it just doesn’t seem to make sense to me that you would strike a panel of advisers, of experts, yet ram through legislation before the experts are able to speak about it and then expect Albertans are just going to be okay with that. I highly, highly doubt it, at least for the folks that I talk to in my constituency.

With the absolute privilege that I have of being in the industry and talking to these people all day – nobody knows what’s going on. I would wager a guess that that brings a tremendous amount of instability. As a person, you know, if I was involved in this and I’m looking for an investor – an investor is going to look at a full package. They’re going to look at the tax regime. They’re going to look at what the government is doing, what their priorities are, and how it works within their ability to invest and be able to report to their stakeholders. It really doesn’t look very positive on that side of things. If I was a business person and this was my situation and I had money to invest, I would be very wary. I’d be very concerned.

If you go back to the manifesto aspects as well, because they do have Ms Berman on this panel – this is not new information. Specifically it says in the manifesto, Mr. Speaker: no new infrastructure projects aimed at increasing extraction of nonrenewables, including pipelines. That is explicitly said within the manifesto, and we have people like that on this panel.

Again, the issue I raise is: do they already know what the panel is going to say and that it really is irrelevant and that’s why we’re going to ram it through, because it doesn’t matter? They already know that the panel is aligned with the ideology of this government, so we’re just going to push through the legislation because the panel is already aligned with that. Albertans don’t get to have a say.

On top of that, we couldn’t even get this government to go to committee with us on this, to actually bring in other experts to potentially round out this discussion. That’s really all we were asking for. If the government is correct in their arbitrary amount of 100 megatonnes, well, then the experts would most certainly back that up.

Believe me, if that is what the experts and all of the other companies that are involved in this – and there are a lot more than just the big four that the government keeps talking about. If those folks and those people were able to come in and discuss this with the government, Mr. Speaker, a more well-rounded discussion could have happened so that all of us would have the information we need to go forward and not just grasp at straws here, trying to figure out: "Well, what is 100 megatonnes? Where did that come from? Where is the 30 per cent coming from?" These arbitrary numbers leave us very uncomfortable. Again, if I could reiterate, the instability that that brings to the sector just drives investment right into the waiting and open arms of other jurisdictions.

The government has been bragging about this panel, about the industry folks that are in there, about the environmental folks that are in there, about the aboriginal folks that are in there, that are going to help bring to this panel some clarity and bring clarity to the government, yet again I will say that we are going to ram through this legislation without any clarity. What is the point? The member across the way said it best: "What does it matter? Ram it through. We don't need the panel's advice." I'm sorry. I find this very, very hard to take, and I find it very difficult to be able to go back to my constituency and say: "Oh well. It doesn't matter. The panel's advice going to the government doesn't matter because they're just going to ram it through anyway." I mean, this cap is about a cap on prosperity. It's a cap on production. We've said it, and I will say it a hundred times more: we should be producing here.

I was going to say, too, that when we're on this side, the amendments to the bill are an absolute priority for all Albertans to, again, be able to have a robust discussion in here. It doesn't matter if we agree or not, but that is the ability of the opposition parties and, actually, of the government, to be able to bring amendments that can make these bills better.

I'm curious about how it is that we're supposed to help create reasonable amendments, thoughtful amendments, accountable amendments when we don't know what the panel is going to say. How is one supposed to do that? It's not common sense, Mr. Speaker. We are trying to create amendments to make this bill better, but we are grasping in the dark trying to figure out how this is all going to work. There are a lot of puzzle pieces coming together here, and I'm going to tell you that from my perspective, it's very concerning.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), are there any questions for the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View?

Seeing or hearing none, are there other members who would like to speak to the amendment to Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act? Mr. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 25, the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, on the amendment this afternoon, the reasoned amendment, as you know. There is a lot that can be said about this particular piece of legislation, and it is certainly going to – this legislation shouldn't be passed. As you know, I would never want to presuppose a decision of the Assembly and be found in contempt, as some have been. Should it pass, there will be significant and wide-sweeping changes to the face of our province and our province's ability to continue to be a world leader in resource extraction. Let me be clear. Our province has been a world leader, and it will continue to be a world leader.

The thing that this bill does and one of the reasons why we've proposed this reasoned amendment to delay the legislation is that sometimes when you place a cap or a limit on the opportunity for success, you can actually have the opposite effect. We have been a world leader in technological advancements and responsible resource extraction. The government will argue that once you have a cap, everyone will get better to try to get under the cap. We've seen significant advancements with respect to removing resources in an environmentally responsible way because, one, it's the right thing to do; two, the competition in the marketplace; and, three, there is always a desire to become better at what you're doing.

When you place a cap, it's quite possible that many players who would have otherwise wanted to engage in the process will actually say: "You know what? We're going to go to another jurisdiction, and we aren't going to be spending our resources on becoming better because the opportunity for growth isn't there." When the opportunity for growth is limited, people's desire to spend real dollars on becoming better at what they do is often reduced because the upside or the benefit of doing that is no longer present.

While the government, you know, likes to say that this is going to actually encourage people to be better, what it's going to do is allow the biggest players, the ones who already have significant investment in the marketplace, to continue as they are and only expand. Under the guise of reducing emissions, we're going to see emissions increase to 100 megatonnes and limit the amount of industry players in the marketplace, and it's very likely going to prove to be less responsible than more responsible. I think that's a shame.

Mr. Speaker, the government, through significant amounts of fanfare of their own and public resources being spent on speaking of panels and advisory groups, has cobbled together a group of folks that are going to be providing recommendations on the extraction of oil sands. In some strange way they've said: "We want to listen, except on this one massive issue, where we intend to limit the potential of our province by limiting the production amounts in the oil sands. We want to put together this panel because consultation is important." This is paraphrasing, Mr. Speaker. "Consultation is important, except on things that we've already made up our mind on."

I think you'll recall, Mr. Speaker, a pretty significant and robust discussion inside this Chamber around other pieces of legislation, like Bill 6, where the government was saying the same sorts of things: "Oh, we want to consult. We want to listen, except here's the piece of legislation that proves that we don't really want to do that." That's exactly what's before us in the form of Bill 25, this fanfare and posturing around consultation, yet legislating on a significant, significant portion of our economy, of our ability to be competitive in the world marketplace, because the government doesn't seem to want to be confused by the facts. They've already made up their mind.

What this reasoned amendment does is that it allows the government the opportunity to pause, to take a step back, and to say: "You know what? Let's just put this down the road a little and wait for this recommendation."

Now, Mr. Speaker, much like the government already quite likely knows what's going to be in the report, I have a sneaking suspicion that there are going to be many things in the report that others in this place don't entirely agree with, but the key factor here is around this consultation piece. The government likes to say one thing and do another. Really, all the opposition is trying to do today is to be here to help the government, to give them the opportunity to say one thing and do one thing, and that one thing is that they said that they want to have the OSAG panel, that can provide input and feedback and direction. While it's unclear if we will agree with the OSAG report, I think it's reasonable that if you asked your friends to provide you with advice, you'd want to get the advice before you moved on to drastically changing the face of the province.

The opposition has taken the opportunity to propose this amendment that will give the opportunity for the government to do just that. What we're talking about with respect to changing the face of the province is important, not just today but tomorrow as well, not just tomorrow but the future of our province. As you know, Mr. Speaker, we are a world player in this market. We have been blessed with resources that have provided so much for our province. I think of the future of our province at a time like this, and that future is very important.

That's why we need to make sure we get it right. That's why taking a pause of six months to get the appropriate information before we dive headlong into an ideological position that this government has presented, a position that's going to limit our industry's ability to compete in that world market that I just mentioned, a limit that's going to provide a significant leg up to all other energy producers that surround this province, a limit that is going to give a giant gift of thousands of jobs to Saskatchewan and thousands of jobs to North Dakota and thousand of jobs to Manitoba – I'll take that back; I don't know about Manitoba – and thousands of jobs to Montana, thousands of jobs even to, likely, the state of Washington, Mr. Speaker, who you'll know last night voted against a carbon tax. When we limit our potential, we limit the opportunity of our province. It is more than just a little unfortunate that we are going to give significant gifts to our competitors to make our position in the world weaker.

Mr. Speaker, as I'm sure you've heard over the last number of days in debate – and I know you know this – Alberta is, if not the best, one of the very best at producing energy in an environmentally responsible way. As my colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View said, it is much better for us to be producing energy in our environmentally responsible ways than it is to allow other jurisdictions with significantly less environmentally responsible policies to outproduce us and have a significantly negative impact on our industry and not even have the benefit of carbon reduction.

What we will see is the significant leakage of our industry to other jurisdictions with policies and legislation that do not provide the same sort of oversight. So we're going to wind up with the worst of both: jobs that have been lost, ripped out of Albertans' hands, and the overall impact of an increase in carbon emissions from our neighbours. We need to be doing much, much more to encourage the reduction as an overall unit, not as an individual in a much larger group, because while we all have a responsibility, we can't wind up with the worst of both scenarios, where jobs and industry go to another jurisdiction and emissions still increase.

This opportunity here that the government has before it is to take a pause. In this case, we've identified the fact that the committee has been struck. A significant amount of public dollars and resources have been placed in this committee's ability to deliver on important information. I don't hold a lot of hope on this particular issue, but it is, frankly, my hope that the panel will come back with a much more reasonable position than this piece of legislation, that will address some of these very important issues that we spoke about here today, these very important issues of jobs and industry fleeing our jurisdiction in the form of carbon leakage yet emissions actually increasing.

Who knows what the panel will come back with, but if the panel does in fact come back with recommendations that are contrary to this legislation, I don't understand why we would create such uncertainty inside our producers – large, medium, and small producers – over that duration. Mr. Speaker, you know that the wheels of government often don't turn as fast as many would like them, and . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I was so pleased that you didn't interject or make a comment when the gentle heckling took place on the other side of the House. I consider that a sign of hope for the future.

Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I also felt the same way, but I thought the future of Alberta felt the pain of us saying that we should strand the asset of $250 billion in the ground. I thought that was what the baby was crying about.

I'm just curious. The good people from the best of the 87 ridings, Calgary-Foothills, are telling me why it should be referred to the committee, and that's why I moved the first amendment. Now I'm curious to understand what the MLA from the second-best riding of Alberta is hearing from the people he represents, the good people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. What are they telling you?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we all know, the great people of Calgary-Foothills holiday in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. So many people want to go there and be able to spend time in such an outstanding area.

You know what? It's a really good question, though, because when I reach out to members of the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills – you know, the good thing in some respects right now, Mr. Speaker, is that I don't need to do a lot of reaching out to folks. People are contacting me on a very regular basis and expressing their concerns. It's good that they're engaged in the process, but rarely are they engaging in the process because they're calling my office to say: "You know what? This NDP government: I have never been happier."

You know, I had a constituent call and ask: why, Mr. Speaker? They didn't say "Mr. Speaker." They said my name, but that would be wildly inappropriate to say here. They said: why does the no development party, like, the NDP, want to limit our potential? They call and say: "What can be done? How? Is there anything you can do to get this government to slow down?" They're concerned with the speed at which the NDP, the no development party, is trying to change the face of our province.

This reasoned amendment, the ability for the NDP to listen to Albertans – because one thing that they all do agree with is that they all want what's best for the province. They often don't believe that the no development party's plans are what's best for the province, but they have a real desire to see the province succeed.

Mr. Speaker, in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills the effects of job losses are heartbreaking. You know, I look at the community of Crossfield. I don't know the exact number, but my guess is that inside the community there are probably only somewhere around 1,000 to 1,500 jobs. Just recently 120 of them were lost, and many of those 120 families who have been negatively impacted are fearful that the NDP will continue to make decisions that have a negative impact on our province's ability to remain competitive in a world marketplace. What that means for them is that it's so difficult to send their kids to hockey practice, to make sure that the mortgage is paid. In one – one – fell swoop 10 per cent of their people lost their jobs.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

On the amendment to Bill 25, the Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to the amendment. Many people in the opposition have spoken, and we're getting good debate on the amendment motion that's before the House today. Many members opposite have spoken about the future of Alberta being put at risk by the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act because they suggest that we might be stranding the asset. However, as part of the climate change plan that we've introduced, this Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act is going to do basically the opposite because we're looking at a very long-term strategy here. We're not looking short term, and the opposition is focusing on short-term things.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

While we're very much aware of the economic situation in the province and the fact that the oil sands are an integral part of our economy and that they must be looked at as a long-term strategic asset which we want to develop, you must look at the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act as a measure that will do just that. It's designed to prevent the stranding of assets while driving down the carbon output per barrel.

Now, some across the aisle have said that our legislation presupposes the outcomes of OSAG. Well, in fact, exactly the opposite is what's happening. This advisory group will determine its own outcomes by consensus, determining what advice to pass on to the government. The very diverse nature of the individuals on this panel will ensure that there's a robust debate amongst themselves, and they will independently come by consensus to the advice that they wish to pass on to government. We've established this committee with a view to having it designed so that robust debate takes place within it, and we expect very good, high-quality advice to result from that panel.

We're definitely not in a situation where we're looking to strand the asset and put Alberta jobs at risk. We're here to protect the long-term interests of this province and its most outstanding resource, the oil sands. This Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act is designed to make sure that that asset is there to be developed for the long-term future. Madam Speaker, we have to have a place to sell this asset. In order to ensure that there is a market, we have to make sure that the world knows that we're producing it at the lowest carbon output per barrel possible so that we end up being able to export this product globally by using pipelines that we hope will be built in the not too distant future.

So to suggest that we are not looking after Alberta's interests by proposing this act is totally incorrect. We're doing what is difficult for governments to do, and that is to look at the long term, Madam Speaker. The long term is something that governments historically have had difficulty with, but we're doing that hard work, and we're looking after Alberta's interests by having that long trajectory.

The climate leadership plan released on November 22, 2015, committed to establishing a legislated greenhouse gas emissions limit on the oil sands of 100 megatonnes in any year with provisions for cogeneration and new upgrading. Now Alberta is bringing forward a new Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act which establishes this 100-megatonne limit on oil sands greenhouse gas emissions in any year, consistent with the government's commitment in the climate leadership plan. Implementation of the limit will be considered by a multistakeholder oil sands advisory group over the next six months.

Now, an act that establishes the limit but leaves the detail regarding its application and implementation to regulation allows the oil sands advisory group to complete its work and provides the opportunity to engage with stakeholders and the public on regulatory details for the implementation of the limit. The composition of OSAG was designed especially to make sure that there were people from all spectrums of the debate regarding the oil sands involved in the advice construction process so that the government was getting a full and complete view of arguments that would be presented through the oil sands advisory group deliberations and that they would be guided by the best possible robust debate and outcomes from that committee in order to make decisions and policy adjustments as time moves forward.

I think that by focusing solely on oil sands emissions, the new act highlights the government of Alberta's pledge of swift action on the climate leadership plan and sends a strong message to national and international stakeholders of Alberta's commitment to limiting oil sands emissions as Alberta works to increase market access. The new act needs implementation mechanisms – for example, compliance and enforcement tools – but details on what may be needed require further consideration and input from stakeholders and Albertans, and that will be done through the oil sands advisory group.

Bill 25 states that the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act “shall be construed as forming part of the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act, and the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act shall be construed” in the same way. This means that the tools set out in CCEMA's comprehensive legislative framework such as compliance and enforcement tools and regulation-making authority may be used for implementing the limit set out in the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act.

To suggest that the future of the province is at risk because we are limiting, through this Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, the amount of carbon that may be produced in the exploitation of our oil sands is absolutely wrong. What we're doing, Madam Speaker, is protecting this asset for the long-term future of Albertans. To suggest otherwise is a misreading of the facts.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Go ahead, hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. If I may, I'd like to make a few comments before I ask my question, just in regard to what the hon. member said. I just wanted to speak in regard to short-term aspects. Madam Speaker, 3.34 billion barrels of oil: think about that. Between 2025 and 2045 that is what we could be losing purely based on bad policy.

Let's talk about time here, if that's what this is about, the short term, not to mention the fact that the OSAG panel – all of the things that the hon. member said about compliance, emissions: this is coming into the House after the legislation has been passed. There is absolutely no way to put that together. I don't understand – and I would love for somebody to be able to explain this to me – how it is that we are supposed to ram through legislation without the advice that the member was talking about.

It's a bit of a contradictory term. He says in one term that we're not wanting to push through this legislation, yet we're only concerned about the short term. Actually, it's quite different than that. If we were only concerned about the short term, we wouldn't be thinking about investment, we wouldn't be thinking about the overall look, of what this looks like to anybody else who's literally laughing at us right now and scratching their heads. There are all sorts of jurisdictions all over the world that are just yahooin' right now because they're going to become highly competitive while we sit here and wait for the panel to come and advise us on legislation that's going to go through sometime in the next two weeks. I don't understand it.

I have a question for the member. You were saying that the panel is going to bring advice about compliance in the coming months, whenever that is. I was wondering if that member could answer this question: how is it that the government and the opposition and the House are supposed to understand what compliance is prior to the OSAG panel commenting on what's happening, as we pass legislation without knowing what the advisory panel is bringing forward?

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-McClung, do you wish to respond?

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, the fact of the matter is that the whole asset will be stranded without public support. As part of the climate leadership plan this piece of legislation is designed to gain that public support so that the asset can move forward, be produced and transported to offshore markets, ultimately through pipelines that we hope will be built with the public support we hope to gain by pieces of legislation like this, which limits carbon and which is in the public interest. By lowering the carbon footprint per barrel on the production of our oil sands, that's how we're going to gain that public support to get those pipelines to tidewater so that we can actually sell to the world at world prices this strategic asset of the province of Alberta over the long term.

This oil sands emissions cap will drive innovation. Putting a limit on oil sands emissions shows how Alberta can be an energy producer and a world leader on climate action. It will drive innovation and reduce emissions per barrel while still allowing for production growth and development.

Now we look forward to reviewing the implementation advice offered by our oil sands advisory group. The legislation limits oil sands greenhouse gas emissions to an annual maximum of 100 megatonnes, as I've said, with allowances for new upgrading and cogeneration. That figure was established by a diverse group of stakeholders and was recommended to government by environmental organizations and representatives of Alberta's oil sands industry. It sets a framework for additional implementation advice for the oil sands advisory group, which was announced in July 2016.

The cap is a cornerstone of Alberta's climate leadership plan, allowing the oil sands industry to grow sustainably while repairing the province's reputation. Limits on oil sands emissions will provide an incentive for companies to invest in greenhouse gas reduction as well as innovative technologies that will pave the way for Alberta's energy industry to lead in a low-carbon future. Alberta's climate plan and the oil sands emissions cap were lauded by U.S. President Barack Obama, and Minister Phillips will promote the plan at the United Nations climate conference later this month in Marrakesh.

The Deputy Speaker: A reminder, hon. member, not to use names in the House.

Do we have another speaker to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, followed by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak on this amendment. You know, this is an issue that, interestingly, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View and I have been kind of chatting back and forth about a little bit. I think it's important for me, first off, to say that in principle I absolutely support the 100-megatonne cap on oil sands emissions, and I support it for a couple of reasons. One, I agree, in fact, that it will spur innovation so that the next tranche of development that will happen will be lower carbon than the development that has happened to date. Now, that's happening anyway, so it means that the 100-megatonne limit will not likely be hit for at least 15 years and probably longer than that. That's a good thing. Those are made-in-Alberta technologies that the world wants and the world needs if we're going to address global climate change.

That speech made a tremendous amount of sense last week, that speech before the election in the U.S. that happened less than 24 hours ago. We knew where the world was going. At least we had a pretty good idea where the world was going on the Paris climate accord, and it represented a tremendous opportunity for Alberta.

Now, I think we ought to take action on climate change because it's inherently the right thing to do irrespective of what the rest of the world is doing, but we have to be very careful in this province, in this Assembly, to not disadvantage Alberta, to not put our province in a position where other jurisdictions, including, obviously, the one immediately to the south of us, are emitting more as a result of their lax policies – so the world has more carbon in it – yet we've disadvantaged ourselves. If we had produced in Alberta at a higher standard, with lower emissions – I think it's very likely that we will be producing energy in a way that actually contributes to an overall reduction in carbon emissions globally. A molecule of carbon is a molecule of carbon irrespective of where it's emitted. Now, I don't know what's going to happen. This election is less than 24 hours old. We're all still processing it, and Donald Trump doesn't officially become president until January.

The reason I support this amendment is that it allows OSAG to do its work before we in this Assembly are asked to pass legislation. We can pass that legislation with the benefit of the knowledge of the deep and detailed work that that panel has done because they will be able to take into account all of these factors and others in terms of what's feasible, what is a reasonable stretch target for a reduction of oil sands emissions and other emissions. Their focus, of course, is oil sands emissions.

It's important for this House and especially the hon. members on the government side to understand my support for the principle of addressing climate change because, as I've heard a couple of times in this House, including today in question period, climate change is real, climate change is human caused, and climate change is a defining issue for our generation. We must do something about that. I do think that it presents not just a moral obligation for us as Albertans and as citizens of the world to do something about climate change, but it is a tremendous business opportunity for this province if we get it right. We have tremendously innovative people. We have an entrepreneurial culture. We have remarkable technical people. We have great universities. We have smart finance people. This is what Alberta's contribution to the world can be: the technology to reduce carbon emissions.

Which isn't to say that we move away from hydrocarbon as a source of energy. In fact, what it may mean is that we enable and unlock the use of this tremendously convenient, this tremendously energy-dense source of energy for the world while still reducing carbon emissions. That's possible, and that can come from Alberta. Those are good things. That's more than just a good thing. It's the kind of thing that can allow our province renewed prosperity, that can allow our energy industry, our oil and gas industry the support it needs, not just globally but within our own country, to build made-in-Canada pipelines. The people whose land the pipelines will traverse will recognize that Alberta's product is, in fact, a clean product, that Alberta has made a tremendous contribution to the fight against global climate change, and that they are proud to have that product cross their land because there's a benefit to them and a benefit to the world. That's possible. All those things are possible.

The reason I support this amendment is in no way intransigence on the climate change file, but it's really a reality check, an opportunity for the OSAG panel to do its work, to report back. Then this House can pass legislation in full knowledge of the implications of what a 100-megatonne cap is. Maybe 100 megatonnes is too high. Maybe we find that, hey, it should be 85. Maybe we find, you know, that that actually isn't feasible, that it should be higher. I don't know.

It's very difficult, and it's an unfortunate trend that this government has continued from previous governments, of simply passing enabling legislation that allows for regulations to be created after the fact and saying: trust us; it's going to do wonderful things. Unfortunately, it seems to happen a lot. It's been a trend, I presume, in other Legislatures as well, which is unfortunate. I don't have that data before me. As a single MLA I get a little busy at times and don't have a chance to do research on those sorts of things. You know, it's unfortunate that the Legislative Assembly is not allowed the privilege of full information when being asked to pass legislation. That's what this amendment would do.

With that, I would encourage this government to take an opportunity not to back down from a climate change strategy in any way, not to feel that your values are being compromised but, in fact, to really thoroughly examine the issue using a panel that you yourselves have set up, that you yourselves have appointed thoughtful, capable, and diverse members to. Allow them to do that work, and then allow this Chamber to do its job of evaluating the results of that work in an open, transparent, and public way, hopefully a nonpolitical way, that will then engender some real support for the outcome of that.

With that, Madam Speaker, I will return to my place. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise in the House today to speak to Bill 25, the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, and specifically on the reasoned amendment. Once upon a time in this beautiful province of Alberta we were a land of opportunity. This province was a place that individuals, moms and dads, young people, corporations, entrepreneurs could come to and make an investment, build a future, build a business, hire people, make those businesses even bigger. This was a place where people came to live out their dreams. That's why I came here in the '70s.

I was a British Columbian. I was a young fellow, graduated from school, and we had an NDP government. There was no work. There was no work for most of my fellow graduates, so we left the province of British Columbia and came out here, to Saskatchewan and different places, to find jobs. This was the land of opportunity right here in this province, and that's why a lot of us settled here in this province to make a life here. That was just on a small scale, just me.

But there are corporations that came here, too, large ones, investment groups who found a business-friendly environment. There were lots of resources here, and those resources could be developed: agricultural, forestry, and, of course, our subsurface resources as well. It was a place to come and do that, and many, many people came. Many, many corporations came.

But now we have a government in place that wants to cap development. They want to cap development under the guise of capping emissions, and they want this House to pass a bill, Bill 25, before we've even had an opportunity to listen to a panel that this government struck specifically with a mandate to advise this House and this government on these very issues. As has already been stated, it provides or, rather, it's causing a credibility gap, a serious credibility gap, and it's another nail in the coffin of this current government because their credibility continues to suffer at their own hands.

Now we have this bill, and although it's seemingly a very straightforward bill, the implications of it are so extremely far reaching. It is really a very large bill because of the scope, because of the long-term impact it's going to have on development in this province. Part of it is based on what I believe is a false premise, that somehow, if this government puts a cap on emissions in this province, it's going to do something towards saving the planet when, in fact, what it's going to do is result in another massive carbon leakage.

As we have already detailed, not just the Official Opposition but other members in this House on this side have already demonstrated very clearly the impact that the carbon tax is going to have on carbon leakage. This bill accomplishes the same thing. Putting a cap on our development does not put a cap on the demand for oil in the world. The demand is going to continue to grow. Depending on which organization you go to to find out what that growth looks like, it is significant, and that demand is not going to be curbed because the province of Alberta has a cap on their development.

As a result, that oil is going to be consumed by somebody, and that oil is going to be provided by somebody, and as my esteemed colleagues have pointed out, those somebodies that are going to be producing that oil to meet that demand do not have our environmental record. Many of them do not have our human rights record. Some of them can't even educate their little girls. That's irresponsible. That's the net result of this kind of carbon leakage, where other jurisdictions in this world – I'll use the words “despot regimes” – are going to be producing oil without any regard for the environment, producing oil and getting money for it. Some of those jurisdictions are funding terror with that.

The more that we produce here in an environmentally responsible way, in the Alberta way, where we respect human rights, where we respect the laws of our land, where we respect our fellow man, the more we do here, the more we help this planet. But when we have something like this, putting a cap on our development, we're not helping the planet at all. We're making things worse. We're making things worse because that carbon leakage is a reality. It's going to happen.

Now, we had the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung accusing the Official Opposition of only looking at things from the short term. That was the accusation. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung went on at length telling about how this bill is taking the long view, the long term, and so forth. Yet just the other day the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert said: we can't wait for the report; we're in a hurry; we need action now. It was a rather short-term type of a statement that they can't even wait for their own panel's report before we get this legislation passed.

That's not the long view. That's not the long-term view. The long-term view would be to make use of the panel that you struck and listen to what they have to say. Get that report out in the public, and let the public even have a critique of what this panel has produced. You know, like the hon. member from the outstanding riding of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills pointed out, there might be some stuff from that panel that's actually pretty good, that we can agree with.

The point is that we're not going to know. This legislation, if we follow the government side's timeline, will already be signed, sealed, and delivered before that report comes out. That is contributing so much to this government's credibility gap again, just like Bill 6 did, just like this bill does, putting the cart before the horse again, just like Bill 27: get the legislation passed, and then see what the experts have to say. This isn't a hockey game, where you shoot the puck into the corner and then dig it out. This is impacting people's lives, livelihoods, whole, entire industries.

This government's credibility gap continues to grow. I just checked on the polls to see where the Premier's popularity rating is going. It's got the glide path of a brick, and it's because of things like this: poor governance, poor management. It's really unacceptable. It is completely irresponsible to ask any member of this Legislature to support legislation without feedback from OSAG. That's why this bill must not now be read a second time.

I want to talk a little bit about this social licence that we apparently need to have although Nigeria doesn't need one. Saudi Arabia doesn't seem to need one. Iraq and Iran don't seem to need one. Russia doesn't need one. But somehow the little province of Alberta has to have a social licence. Albertans received notice the other day from the federal government – the federal government – you know, the only level of government in our beautiful federation that actually has any say on interprovincial pipelines. Our nation's Liberal Transport minister commented to CBC that a "moratorium on crude oil tanker traffic off British Columbia's North Coast [would be in place] by the end of the year." Well, what happened to our social licence? I think someone may have revoked our licence.

Albertans are paying billions of dollars. We have a $6 billion carbon tax, half of which is being paid for by regular old Alberta moms and dads and half of which is being paid for largely by juniors out in the patch so they can subsidize their competitors, actually. The $3 billion being paid by the taxpayers: well, much of that is going to go to the environment minister's slush fund for her green friends and their pet projects.

You know, a 60-year-old school in desperate need of better windows, better doors, better insulation, a high-efficiency heating system: what good is that old building without a solar panel on the roof? This government gets things kind of backwards all the time. We should be doing very deep retrofits on these old buildings first. Reduce energy consumption first. Begin by using less first. Then with the energy demand that's left over, you go to the roof and put some sort of energy production system on the roof like solar panels. But, no, putting a solar panel on the roof provides an excellent photo op. Meanwhile the heating system is 40 years old, 50 years old, the windows are about that old, the doors are that old, and the insulation and building standards of that day are nothing like what we have today in the codes for our highly insulated buildings.

We have a coal phase-out and billions of dollars in stranded assets compensation. I say billions because no one can be bothered to let Albertans know just exactly how much that's going to cost other than that it's not going to be on the cheap side. There will be no sale on that one.

We have a mass turn-back of power purchase agreements because of this government not doing their homework when they took office that at the end of the day is going to be costing us, oh, just a few hundred million dollars. There's also the risk of more stranded asset claims from this particular bill, Bill 25, once we work out which leaseholders aren't going to get to develop their share of the 3.34 billion barrels left in the ground.

And don't think I have forgotten about the 30 per cent by 2030 renewables target. We've heard that AltaLink is quite excited about that one, undoubtedly because of, one, the costly transmission system upgrades required to get our system ready for reliability issues with renewables to that degree; two, the high transmission costs from moving our utility-scale power units away from central coal areas to the southern part of the province, where there is a chance that the renewables might just be able to earn back their embodied emissions – it might just be a snowball's chance, but it may be a chance – and three, the intertie buildup required so that B.C. workers can take Albertans' jobs and sell us power at a premium when the wind doesn't blow and the sun doesn't shine. With guaranteed rates of return on new bills like this, why wouldn't AltaLink be supporting this government?

This government used social licence, that phrase, as justification for hitting Albertans with the largest tax increase in the province's history, and thus far there is precious little to show for it except higher rates of taxation, caps on development, jobs lost. This is the cost of this social licence?

Well, Northern Gateway is dead. We are voting to cap oil sands. Why, again? So our oil sands players can get their pipeline? The pipeline for our oil sands players is Northern Gateway. Oops, that's kind of awkward.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. I just wanted to have you potentially speak to a few things. I just wanted to bring up a few things that you had mentioned and a couple of the red flags that had been brought up as a result of not being able to have the OSAG panel advise the government previous to the legislation going through. The government has repeatedly said that they're onside with pipelines, but I don't think that that is conducive to capping production. In fact, Ms Berman stated not so long ago that there was no need for pipeline capacity, and I'm assuming that's as a result of the cap on the production of our resources here. It's the only way that I can put those two together, maybe because it's already been decided.

I was wondering if the hon. member could potentially comment on: originally we had made a referral to committee, and since that referral has not been passed, potentially, would you be able to explain to this Chamber why it is that we would need to discuss this in committee and potentially at this point in time put this bill off for some time until that advisory panel comes forward with their advice?

Thank you.

Mr. Dach: Ask your question through the chair.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, just a reminder: not only through the Speaker, but also if you turn around, the microphone can't pick up your voice for Hansard.

Mrs. Aheer: I'm sorry. Thank you so much. So through you.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you to my esteemed colleague. I think it's becoming really obvious, not only to members on this side of the House but even to Albertans in general, that repeatedly this government is rejecting any ideas about allowing Albertans to speak to legislation. We had put forward a referral to committee for the purpose of getting experts in, getting testimony in, getting Albertans able to come and talk about this, and allowing all of the people who have leases, which are many, more than just the famous four that stood on the stage with the Premier, all of the juniors, to come and talk about stranded assets and what this Bill 25 is going to mean to them. The government didn't want to hear that.

Today here we are on a reasoned amendment, and we're putting forth the argument: "All right. You didn't want Albertans to speak to this in committee. How about waiting for OSAG, you very own panel, that you struck?" What we're hearing from the government side today is: "Well, yeah, we struck the panel, but, no, we don't want to hear from them either. Just pass the bill. Hold your nose and pass the bill." Well, no, that's not how it works. This is supposed to be a democracy, Madam Speaker, where it's government of the people, by the people, for the people, but the people aren't being allowed to be heard. The people who are directly impacted by this piece of legislation are not being permitted by this government to speak to this piece of legislation, not in committee, not even this OSAG panel.

It is very important for the credibility of this government to hit the pause button on this piece of legislation and allow the people of Alberta an opportunity to have their two bits. I don't hold a lot of hope that the government is going to, you know, listen. They aren't listening to Albertans, and now we find out that they're not even going to listen to their own panel. They just want this bill passed. That's really unfortunate, but it is what it is. This government continues to just push away any concept, any idea of listening to Albertans.

I believe the phrase is confirmation bias, where you surround yourself with people that nod their heads and agree with you and you don't want to consider that maybe there is another opinion out there, an expert opinion that just might be different than yours and be a good idea, too. It just appears to the people of Alberta that this government is of the mindset that if an idea does not come from the NDP world view, that idea is no good.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have some pretty deep concerns when it comes to Bill 25, the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act. I'd like to start off with exactly what the mandate is of the oil sands advisory group, or OSAG, because I think it's important to go back to it. This is on the Alberta government website. Let's start with the first paragraph here.

The province is establishing an Oil Sands Advisory Group (OSAG) composed of members from industry, environmental organizations, and Indigenous and non-Indigenous communities to advise government on the oil-sands aspects of its Climate Leadership Plan and ensure that its initiatives are effective and widely supported.

My first question is: why are we ignoring these people? This is a valid concern. I would hope that industry would play a part in the planning for exactly how this 100-megatonne cap is going to affect them.

Let's go to environmental organizations. I am unsure exactly how you came up with a round number of 100 megatonnes. That is a reasonable request. Where did that number come from? Did you pull it out of the air? Now, I have heard my colleagues say: "Why not 80? Why not 120?" Where did it come from? The fact is that we have not put the work into figuring out what it is that we need and why we need to put it there.

Now, the indigenous and nonindigenous: this government has been stating nonstop that it wants to consult with these groups, yet it's got the opportunity right now to do that, and it's choosing not to.

An Hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Cyr: That is shameful, very shameful.

We need to be looking at exactly – these groups are saying: let's work in consultation. Again, like a broken record, we bring up Bill 6. It's a bill that continues to plague this government. It's a bill that I called the No Consultation Act because that's exactly what it was. This is the same way. We have got an act right now being put forward, and we had a group of individuals tasked to work out the actual specifics of how it would work. So we're going to create these limitations and then work out how it's going to work afterwards. It makes no sense, which is why a lot of these bills have had failure written all over them.

Let's talk about caps. One of my favourite caps was the debt cap. The debt cap was something that the government rushed into. We told them that they were going to meet that cap and they were going to have to extend the cap. It makes no sense. What you're doing is making no sense. Now, Wildrose has been very clear. We're not for caps, but at least a cap would prevent the government from going incredibly deep into debt. Now, when we start looking at this . . .

An Hon. Member: Speak to the amendment.

Mr. Cyr: This is speaking to the amendment because you're setting another cap without actually going to anybody to find out if it is an accurate cap.

This here is important to note: in the end, we got rid of it. The government backtracked and said: it doesn't matter with debt anymore. Here we're setting up another cap. We've got no advice from any of the groups that are being put into this. I would argue that some are of deep concern to myself and a lot of Albertans as they are anti-oil.

Now, let's continue down here. Let's start with the fact that you're ignoring stakeholders. Let's go with what the actual focus of this group is. "Specifically, the group's primary focus is to consider how to implement the 100 megatonne per year carbon emissions limit for the oil sands industry." Why bother? Why even bother creating these wonderful advisory groups when you have no plan to actually even consider what they have to say?

Now, let's go on the opposite chance that possibly you actually have a report from them already. Let's say that you've actually got something from them, a draft report, say, or something where the government knows the direction that this group is going in. What if this anti-oil group and some of the members come back and say, "30 megatonnes is that number that we need to cap"? Well, that's an embarrassment. So what do we do? We change the cap.

The other thing is: let's say, for instance, that this group comes back and says that how we calculate GHGs is incorrect. We need to go in there and figure out how to change it. Let's say that they come back with: Alberta is putting out 120 megatonnes of GHGs. Suddenly we're above the cap, again ignoring this group that they have set up for, again, advice to the government, again, which we won't know until we actually see what it is.

Let's talk about the deadline, February 2017. If you knew you were going to put this bill forward, why didn't make their mandate sooner? Why did you have to go with February 2017 when you knew you were going to ignore them? You could have easily had September, and if that wasn't enough time, then we should have put off this legislation. So you put out a group that you knew was going to fail – you knew it – yet you still did it anyway. This is why Bill 6 is relevant. You put out legislation that didn't actually consult, and then you found out later that it failed.

Now let's go to the next one: "develop durable, effective structures and processes to address local and regional environmental issues (i.e., air, land, water, biodiversity, [and] cumulative effects)." This sounds like spending the carbon tax.

We've got now two sets of legislation that they were to advise on that we have rammed through and rushed, with no idea how to implement. Again, it comes down to creating an environmental study, an impact study, if you will, on the effects. We need to study what we need to implement, how it's going to achieve those goals, and what it will cost Albertans, my taxpayers in my riding, my most vulnerable Albertans, my seniors, my residents on AISH, which we've heard awful things about in the last couple of days. We have no idea where this is going, but, hey, let's institute it anyway because caps are a good idea. Well, again I'll go back to the debt cap. That wasn't a good idea. You rolled over on that one. Do you think this one might not end up as well as the debt cap did?

Now, let's go with the last one: "provide advice to government on investing carbon price revenue in innovations to reduce future emissions intensity." Well, I would like to say that we are already seeing that across the world we've got provinces, we've got countries, we've got states that are all putting money into something without doing an actual study on how the money will actually reduce these emissions.

Now, a good example is this one here. I've got an article up here. It's Fail: Busted Wind Turbines Give College Whopping Negative 99.14% Return on Investment. Somebody dropped the ball. That cost the school. Now I hear that our schools are looking to get into wind turbines.

An Hon. Member: Oh, my God.

Mr. Cyr: I know.

This is insane, that we have an entire part of our government right now going in a direction that could end up costing that school system and its students – and that is a travesty – because somebody didn't do the impact study. Guess what? There's no wind at this school. Of course, it's not going to make money. It's a great idea, but in the end, they lost – what? – almost 100 per cent of their investment. That is because somebody wasn't watching. That is the responsibility of the government. You know, the problem here is that it takes years for this stuff to realize those losses. They don't happen overnight. In the end, we're burdening not ourselves but possibly our children with this lack of oversight by government.

Now, I will tell you that when we start looking at all of the things the NDP have brought forward, my riding is sitting on the second-largest resource in Alberta – the second-largest resource in Alberta – so this impacts me directly. This means that people in my riding, Bonnyville-Cold Lake, are consistently shown the doorway when it comes to these businesses because, in the end, these businesses are saying that it is too unstable in Alberta to be able to continue business here.

What we've got here are a bunch of laws that this government has brought forward that have created consistent unstable government decisions, which, in the end, cost me jobs in my riding. That means we have a dependence on social programs that we've never seen before, at unprecedented levels. We have food bank use that we can't even keep up with. We've got incredible need. We've got people in my office crying. They're saying: I can't make it, and my family can't make it.

An Hon. Member: Raise the minimum wage.

Mr. Cyr: Again the government's solution is to raise the minimum wage. Well, great. That's awesome. All of my riding can work at minimum wage. That sounds like a great idea. That sounds exactly like an NDP decision.

Anyway, to go back to the jobs in my riding, we've got people right now that are going to Saskatchewan and B.C. to find work. It comes down to the fact that these oil companies have got to be able to see a stable government move forward.

This is where this social licence – this is what this act is supposed to be buying us. It's supposed to be buying us the ability to somehow get a pipeline by taxing Albertans heavily, and it will somehow give the rest of Canada the warm, fuzzy feeling that we deserve a pipeline. Now, I can't make that connection, but where I can make a connection is that we have actually got the ability to influence. We need to stop going to these NDP rallies that are fighting against our oil and go to the governments and say: this is essential for Alberta. Debt caps aren't going to help that argument. The fact is that, in the end, our transfer payments are going to become less and less, and these provinces no longer will be able to continue with the same level of standard of living that they are currently at.

Now, when we start looking at this province and this debt cap, we start asking ourselves: well, what is it going to do?

Mr. MacIntyre: Emissions cap.

Mr. Cyr: This emissions cap. Thank you.

This emissions cap will allow the existing land sold the ability to emit. Now, I've heard from one of my other colleagues who said that we have more land sales than the emissions cap will already account for. That seems pretty shocking. I see that we still have land sales happening in Alberta. Is that because we start seeing that companies are preparing for the cap? Eventually what's going to happen is that by having the lease, there's going to be a value attached to it, which means that it's going to have an emissions limit attached to it. That is where the problem comes in here. We're no longer trading in our natural resource; we're going to start trading in our leases. That means undeveloped leases. That means people out of work. That's people in my riding out of work, and it is shocking that we would go down this road.

Now, if the answer here is to reduce carbon emissions, this isn't going to do it. As we've heard from Calgary-Elbow, 15 years is his anticipated time that we're going to hit this cap. So what is it actually achieving?

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As someone who directly worked in the oil sands, I know a lot of experts who can give all of us legislators advice on whether or not we should support this 100-megatonne, arbitrary cap on oil sands emissions. Today I heard other colleagues of mine here talking about how a cap on emissions is, in turn, actually a cap on production and a cap on opportunity for success and a cap on development and so on. Actually, this bill puts the equivalent dollar amount of five to seven years of government capital and operations at risk by not developing the resource. One report said that it could be up to $200 billion of wealth that will be stranded if we legislate this bill and leave the resource in the ground. That is the wealth that's going to stay in the ground. If it does not get developed, people don't get to buy cars or homes or trucks or raise families because there will be a lack of developing the resource.

I mentioned in my earlier remarks that the first people into this investment get to make money, so all those big companies like Suncor, Syncrude, Shell, CNRL, Imperial, who are already there and established, can make money, but the last ones, all these small and medium companies, won't have the opportunity because they won't have enough guaranteed space for carbon dioxide emissions under the cap because they won't be producing soon.

Another downside of this policy here, Madam Speaker, is that those small companies won't be able to raise capital because the lenders will think that these projects won't be viable. They won't give them loans, or even if they give them loans, their finance cost will be higher because it will be a high-risk business, so they'll charge them higher interest. This Bill 25 takes these little companies and turns them into a takeover target by the bigger companies, so big fish eating the small fish.

Do you see where I'm going, Madam Speaker? This is how the Ponzi scheme rolls out. The last one in loses money, so all these small companies will become the takeover targets of the big market players. Capitalism subtends to monopoly, but crony capitalism guarantees monopolies. Whoever thought the NDP and Suncor would stand together and support this policy for the same reasons?

What people forget is all the trade union labour that has been employed by big companies like CNRL, Shell, and all, that the juniors tend not to have, and it is the trades, Madam Speaker, as represented by the Alberta Federation of Labour, that stand to benefit from the crony capitalist Ponzi scheme of consolidating the oil sands operations that the NDP want to enable.

Connolly: Crony communists or crony capitalists?

Mr. Panda: You can choose whatever you want to be, but the people sent you here to represent them. I suspect that that's not what I'm hearing from my neighbouring riding of Calgary-Hawkwood. [interjections] Yeah.

These people who will not be able to develop because they would exceed the cap: I want to hear from them and find out what their compensation demands will be. Madam Speaker, if they can't develop the leases they bought, it will be their right to ask for compensation, and the taxpayers will be on the hook.

How does the NDP expect to create innovation and green jobs when new companies are not permitted to develop? People like Columba Yeung, for that matter – Madam Speaker, he's an entrepreneur who has started this company called Value Creation. He has appropriate upgrading technology he wanted to employ on this upgrader project that he wants to build which will have far less CO<sub>2</sub> emissions. Under the emissions cap his company, Value Creation, will not be allowed to develop its leases and thus make the money to build the low carbon dioxide upgrader.

The NDP fail to grasp that it takes wealth creation in order to enable taxation to fund the social programs they want to create. You want to build schools, you want to build hospitals, so you need to first create wealth, which will enable taxation. Social programs like in-house laundry for Alberta Health Services is an example which you want to continue, but capping oil sands development at 100 megatonnes won't help that cause, Madam Speaker. A program that could easily be contracted out at far better value for money like in-house laundry for Alberta Health Services: they don't want to do that. They want to go for expensive alternates. That's okay, but then we should allow oil sands development, which will bring us that revenue.

At the end of the day, Madam Speaker, we know that the NDP say: forget economics; we're doing what is right. But doing what is right in the NDP world view not only hurts people; it's also outright wrong. Australia realized that when they cancelled the carbon tax.

Prime Minister Tony Abbott took the right decision to get rid of it, based on the feedback he got from his populace. France, under President François Hollande of the Socialist Party no less – the Socialist Party – will be dropping the carbon tax.

Policy matters. You all know my thoughts because I can tell you that if this were in India, this would be a bad policy, Madam Speaker. India is not capping their development. India is racing very fast to catch up and have the middle-class lifestyle of the western world. They have their dreams. They have the largest young workforce, with hundreds of millions of youth.

Mr. Dach: Yeah. What was the air quality in Delhi last year?

Mr. Panda: I'm coming to that. Stay tuned.

They want to improve their lifestyle. We can't tell them not to have that standard of life, but the demographic shift and the markets for those people are enormous. They want our energy. Also, it's a good thing to trade with them because they're the largest democracy in the world. In the same way, China – I travelled a lot in China for business. Although it's not a democracy, they embraced market capitalism under the Communist Party, and they need our energy, too, Madam Speaker. They want our energy very much. Both India and China want energy security, and they want affordability, too, so we can partner with them and export our energy to them because Alberta can be a reliable supplier for them.

That's why I'm asking the NDP not to use their, you know, majority in this House and abuse it to have this bill imposed arbitrarily. We are asking you to refer this to the committee so we can have a fulsome discussion, and in the meantime the oil sands advisory group can also give their recommendation. Then we'll see whether the 100 megatonnes is good enough. Or is 150 a good number? We don't know now, but we can use those good experts that the NDP approached to do this job. We should let them finish their job and use the findings before we vote on this bill, Madam Speaker. That's why I moved the first amendment, and I compliment my colleague from Grande Prairie-Smoky for bringing this amendment. We are hoping that all the people there who are concerned will vote in support of this amendment and do the right thing for Albertans.

With that, I would like to adjourn the debate, Madam Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 27 Renewable Electricity Act

[Adjourned debate November 8: Mr. Stier]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege today to rise to speak to Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act. I have concerns with this bill, many concerns, in fact, that I would classify as a litany of concerns, so please excuse my lack of brevity on this matter as I proceed with my second reading speech.

First of all, let me preface the speech by stating that I'm in favour of renewable energy infrastructure and policy when, of course, the policy and infrastructure are implemented and constructed appropriately, taking into account the current market structure. I view renewable energy as one of the tools that can be used to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and, in turn, address some of the concerns that we have as a society and as a province around global warming.

But let me be clear: renewable energy programs must be implemented in a way that is respectful of the current power generation structure and, of course, power purchasing arrangements. Without this respect and trust, this mutual respect and trust, which the government has already undermined, the contractual legitimacy between two parties is severed, thereby destroying the stability of a contract and rendering it moot. Not a great environment for moving forward, Madam Speaker.

Why would anyone agree to sign a contract for power generation if they knew one party has a record of backtracking on its commitments and reneging on the certainty that allows for well-reasoned, collateral-backed investment and financing? Are these concepts alien to this government? No wonder. The dearth of business experience may be showing through. This is not what I would call bargaining in good faith, Madam Speaker, and it sets a poor precedent for future agreements, which could be directly impacted by this legislation. Hopefully the government figures out how business works one of these days and eventually can move forward, because their track record on this matter has been nothing but an assault on business and thereby an assault on job creation.

Secondly, renewable energy infrastructure and policy should be constructed and implemented in a way that respects jobs and prevailing economic conditions. That is the common-sense approach, Madam Speaker. I know my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-West alluded to this fact earlier in debate, but let me reiterate. There appears to be a huge and unaddressed gap in the plan and in the act given the power generation needs of Albertans and the industry associated with this irresponsible coal phase-out.

Given that the government wants coal-powered generation eradicated as well as all the mortgage-paying jobs that go with it by 2030, never mind the provincial unemployment rate we currently have of 8.5 per cent and double digits in Calgary – and you don't even want to guess the stats that might be pushed forward in the likes of Hanna, Hinton, Forestburg, and others in the years ahead because of this legislation – and given that approximately 50 per cent, in fact a little bit more than 50 per cent, of our electricity currently comes from coal, what will be used to replace it by 2030? The government and their central planning committee would like you to believe renewables, but their central planning committee has already determined that 30 per cent of power generation will come from renewables by that time. Last time I checked, we need to fill a 20 per cent gap with respect to power generation, from that 50 or 55 per cent to the 30 per cent.

So where is that baseload going to come from? You don't seem to have much of a plan there. In my books a decrease in supply means higher electricity prices for Albertans, not to mention the spectre of grid instability and brownouts to turn us into a third-world country and worse. Not only are you spurring unemployment through our coal phase-out, but you're also spurring higher electricity prices, further moves toward an uncompetitive environment for business and investment and a signal to industry that we are not, in fact, a business-friendly nor investment-welcoming jurisdiction. A great combination, Madam Speaker. Talk about making a bad situation worse.

Madam Speaker, this legislation appears to be haphazardly cribbed together on the back of a napkin by a government that continues the piecemeal charade which is its climate leadership plan, a plan that is hurting Albertans from all corners of this province due to its poor forethought and execution. Did I mention the unintended consequences of creating Albertans' latest tourism attraction? I think I did that before. It's called the new millennium Alberta ghost town. New economy jobs, indeed.

Madam Speaker, let us turn our attention to section 7 of Bill 27. It is my understanding that the Alberta Electric System Operator, which is referred to as AESO, will "hold a competitive process" for renewable generation. The ISO "shall advise the Minister of the results of the competitive process," including the total quantity of renewables offered as well as the corresponding costs that will be payable via contracts. Thereafter, the ISO must receive ministerial approval on the quantity, the cost, and the final form of the contract prior to selecting successful participants and entering into contracts with certainty. Now, I think this section is quite pertinent to what I was saying before regarding trust, respect, and contractual agreements. A novel idea, indeed.

This government is demonstrating poor faith and now has a poor track record with respect to honouring contracts as evident through the current lawsuits around PPAs. Given that contractual agreements play such a vital role in this legislation, how will banks and investors view contractual validity? The government has, whether intentionally or not, decreased the value and certainty of a legal contract in the eyes of Albertans and external investors, or in this case I think we call these PPAs. Has this fact been considered? I certainly hope so as the foundational structure of this legislation is dependent upon it. How do we get people to invest in renewables? Madam Speaker, if we don't encourage other people to invest in renewables, I worry that we're going to have to do it with government funds, and those funds are covered in red ink today.

Secondly, another glaring concern for me is how this section enables the minister to choose winners and losers with respect to renewable generation. This is a problem. I went to look at our provincial partners in Ontario and see their renewable electricity plan. As of September the government scrapped plans for $3.8 billion in renewable electricity projects. Three point eight billion: that's a lot of zeros. One motive for this decision: high electricity costs. Interesting. Correct me if I'm wrong, but did I not state this as a risk earlier in my speech? Unintended consequences, Madam Speaker.

AESO was intended to be a not-for-profit organization that manages and operates the provincial power grid. They were intended to work with industry partners and government to make sure reliable power is available to consumers and industry as required but with a vision to the future of Alberta, Madam Speaker, a vision of opportunity and the hopeful return to vibrancy in this province in the future that we all hope for.

Given the above information one can surmise that AESO is intended to be an independent organization operating at arm's length from government, Madam Speaker, not tied to and attached to and influenced inextricably by. However, the legislation we're looking at reads counter to this, undermining the independence of AESO.

I know my colleagues have echoed this sentiment, Madam Speaker. The language in this bill corroborates this statement in more ways than one. It explicitly states that when the minister provides direction, the ISO must comply, as evident within section 14. Can someone please explain to me how this once independent organization doing the best for Albertans and industry and consumers is now not going to be a simple and direct tool of the minister?

An Hon. Member: NDP world view.

Mr. Gotfried: NDP world view, indeed, an interesting lens to look through.

It would be my hope that government respects the independence of this organization and develops an internal system of checks and balances to maintain its autonomous nature, again in the best interests of Alberta: taxpayers, consumers, and industry. That is how we succeed, Madam Speaker, by working together with the different sectors of this economy.

Madam Speaker, in order for organizations such as AESO to function efficiently, they need to remain arm's length from government. I suspect that we would have heard that from some of our esteemed colleagues on the other side of the floor in years past, that requirement and need for independence from government. I cannot stress enough how important this is, and it is my fear that this government is disregarding this fact.

Madam Speaker, overall, this bill exposes Albertans to unknown costs to subsidize green electricity generation, which I personally believe can and will stand on its own in time in a competitive marketplace. That will be the innovation that we see, those will be the initiatives that we see from industry, and if we subsidize it too much, we will kill the opportunity to do it right and to do it well.

It also allows cabinet to make unaccountable political decisions at the expense – and I say again in solid, hard, red ink: at the expense – of Albertans through the minister's ability or inability to pick winners and losers in renewable energy and to subsidize them in an irresponsible manner, possibly, not in the best interests, both short and long term, of Albertans.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Additionally, it fails to account for and support auxiliary infrastructure required to make diverse renewable resources work in Alberta. This legislation, like the climate leadership plan, appears to be slapped together without any semblance of a strategy or framework to consider the current electrical market structure, grid stability, economic conditions, job protection, or, of course, lack thereof.

Mr. Speaker, I'm in favour of renewable electricity. I think we're going to see us reach those goals in time. I believe it has a place and a future in our province but not as this current cadre of antioil crusaders intends nor on the irresponsible and costly timelines they propose. Renewable electricity generation should tap into the innovation and ingenuity of our citizens and invoke the Alberta advantage, setting a positive environment for investment, not subsidies, something the NDP world view seeks to advantage. The Alberta advantage seems like an alien concept. Renewable generation should work hand in hand with current market structures, market realities, complementary clean-coal technologies, and other electrical generation, from cogen to geothermal to hydro and others.

Mr. Speaker, for these reasons as well as many others associated with this irresponsible, ideologically driven push into a world, an all too familiar world these days, of unintended consequences, in spite of what I choose to believe are the best of intentions, I cannot and will not support this bill today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under 29(2)(a), is there a question for the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek?

Seeing or hearing none, you'd like to speak to Bill 27?

Mr. Carson: Yeah.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an incredible honour to stand in the House today in support of and as cosponsor of Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act. A year and a half ago Alberta elected a majority New Democrat government. They voted that way not only because we promised to protect education and health care in this province but, most importantly, because more than any other party during the election and to this day we had a vision to diversify our province's economy.

Mr. Speaker, the last two years have been incredibly hard on all of our communities and the province as a whole. Our overreliance on one commodity, with very little action in the past to capture new markets for our products, has put Alberta in a vulnerable position to the global oil markets. During the last election many Albertans recognized this inability for their government to be forward thinking and chose a new path. To this day we have made incredible progress in partnership with industry and other stakeholders to ensure we are at the front of a green energy transition. Over the last year and a half with the New Democrat government in Alberta we have seen an incredible shift in the dialogue around how industry and environment interact because we recognize that the time to take action is now.

Mr. Speaker, climate change is one of the biggest threats to the prosperity of our province. If we do not take action now, it will only be to the detriment of all of communities, not only because of the fact that other jurisdictions are ahead of our progress in terms of implementation of renewable generation programs but, more importantly, because of the cost that climate change has in our industries.

Bill 27 creates the framework in which our green transition can take place. Alberta's electricity system plays a key role in our government's climate leadership plan. After being elected, our government established the Climate Change Advisory Panel, following through with our campaign commitment to take action on climate change. Through these recommendations we have put forward a number of programs that will ensure the economic and environmental sustainability of our province, whether you live in an urban community or a rural community.

If passed, Bill 27 will make changes to the Alberta Electric System Operator, or AESO, to ensure that their mandate aligns with our goals of creating programs that support renewable energy and the diversification of our electricity system. This bill continues our commitment to a greener economy by establishing targets of 30 per cent renewable energy by 2030, signalling to industry that Alberta is ready to diversify its economy and its workforce through development of our renewable resources. It will also require the development of interim targets and mandatory periodic reviews of progress and will establish a legislative definition for renewables.

Bill 27 updates the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act to add wind and solar electricity to the list of activities the director of Environment of Parks can put to greater environmental scrutiny, such as an environmental impact assessment in some circumstances, ensuring that all things are considered when developing such projects. These changes will not, however, alter existing regulatory processes of the Alberta Utilities Commission in regulating wind- and solar-powered projects.

The bill also legislates that a fairness adviser will be put in place, chosen by ISO, to oversee competition and to provide public reporting on the procurement process to ensure fairness, and it sets out a process for ISO to award renewable electricity support agreements to successful applicants. Through consultation with stakeholders it was recommended that a security interest be introduced to protect investments in case of insolvency. This is not something that is new to legislation, and it is important that we have the means to ensure cost-effectiveness and stability within our electricity system.

It is also important to stakeholders and investors alike that we provide market assurance, leading to better financing rates for investors, which is why such renewable energy programs will be backed by revenues collected from carbon pricing directly coming from carbon revenues and not general revenue.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 27 will establish a framework for AESO to procure renewable energy projects and lay out a path of transparency throughout the process. This bill signals to renewable energy producers that Alberta is the best place in Canada to invest their money with our firm commitment to reach 30 per cent renewable energy generation within our province by 2030 and a clear path to lead us there.

In my constituency and across the province I have heard the calls for a transition to a greener economy because Albertans recognize the incredible opportunity we have to lead the country in both nonrenewable and renewable energy development. Bill 27 will enshrine our commitment to diversification and, in conjunction with renewable energy programs, will bring billions of dollars and thousands of quality jobs to our province.

Mr. Speaker, there has never been a better time to invest in renewable energy projects, and we'll move forward with this plan because that is what we were put in this Legislature to do. I am very proud to be the cosponsor of this bill, and it is pleasure to stand in support. I would also like to thank the minister for bringing this forward.

Thank you.

5:20

The Speaker: Hon. members, under 29(2)(a), are there any questions for the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark?

Seeing none, the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View. To the motion. Is that right?

Mrs. Aheer: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act. I was sent a very interesting and pertinent document for today's debate. This is based on a study that was recently published by the journal Energy Policy, titled Energy Return on Energy Invested, EROEI, for Photovoltaic Solar Systems in Regions of Moderate Insolation. This article found the EROEI of temperate latitude solar PV, or photovoltaic, systems operating in the latitudes of Earth between the tropics and polar regions to be .83.

If correct, that means more energy is [being] used to make the [photovoltaic] panels than will ever be recovered from them during their 25 year lifetime.

So I'll use PV for photovoltaic if that's okay.

A PV panel will produce more CO<sub>2</sub> than if coal were simply used directly to make electricity. Worse than that, all the CO<sub>2</sub> from PV production is in the atmosphere [immediately, like, today], while burning coal to make electricity, the emissions would be spread over the 25 year period.

Wildrose has continuously brought to the attention of this NDP government the concerns about carbon leakage. Turning China or other jurisdictions where these products are produced into industrial wastelands so that we can put solar panels on our houses to push this particular idea is not beneficial in our shared goal of reducing pollution.

In summary of this very technical paper Euan Mearns writes on Energy Matters:

So what is an EROEI? It is ...

And it's just simply stated, and I say this lightly because this is very big information.

... simply the ratio of energy gathered to the amount of energy used to gather the energy [or] (the energy invested).

So it's basically the energy gathered versus the energy invested.

Euan Mearns goes on to provide an example, noting that:

using PV to illustrate the point, the energy gathered will [also] depend on latitude ...

So that's where those solar panels are.

... the amount of sunshine, the orientation of the panels and also on the lifetime of the panels themselves. And how do you record or measure the energy invested? Do you simply measure the electricity used in the PV factory, or do you include the energy consumed by the workers ...

Like the drivers, anybody who's involved and participating in creating these things.

... and the miners who mined the silicon and the coal that is used to make the electricity?

That's in these other countries where they are still using coal to produce electricity.

Feroni and Hopkirk go into all of these details and come up with an EROEI for [the] temperate latitude solar PV of 0.83. At this level, solar PV [or photovoltaic] is not an energy source but is an energy sink. That is for Switzerland and Germany.

So while the authors of this source paper focused on Germany and Switzerland, they believe that it would actually be considerably worse in northern jurisdictions.

Euan Mearns goes on to write about the EROEI, that is so important, noting that it is a concept that is alien to most individuals, including many engineers, energy sector employees, academics and policy makers. The related concept of net energy is defined as ... EROEI - 1 (where 1 is the energy invested).

The net energy is that surplus energy left over from when we gather energy from activities that are used to power society, so when we're building hospitals, schools, aircraft carriers, growing food, whatever it is using energy.

In the past the EROEI of our primary energy sources - oil, gas and coal - was so high, probably over 50, ...

That's the number that that represents.

... that there was bucket loads of cheap energy left over to build all the infrastructure and to feed all the people that now inhabit The Earth.

But with the net energy equation for what we're talking about right now, based on that energy for the solar PV, we have a serious problem: .83 versus 50. So as a policy-maker I am pleased to be able to share this report with my colleagues today, and hopefully we can have a good discussion about what this actually means.

Euan Mearns goes on to ask the question that is surely on everyone's minds. He writes:

So how can it be possible that we are managing to deploy devices that evidently consume rather than produce energy? The simple answer is that our finance system, laws and subsidies are able to bend the laws of physics and thermodynamics for so long as we have enough high EROEI energy available to maintain the whole system and to subsidize ... [the] renewables. Try mining and purifying silicon using an electronic mining machine powered by The Sun and the laws of physics will re-establish themselves quite quickly.

That's not going to happen.

In very simple terms, [the] solar PV deployed in northern Europe can be viewed as coal burned in China [for example] used to generate electricity over here. All of the CO<sub>2</sub> emissions, that underpin the motive for PV, are made in China. Only in the event of high energy gain in the PV device would solar PV reduce CO<sub>2</sub> emissions.

And I'll go into that a little bit more later.

I think the most worrisome part about this is that that very important piece of information has not been considered. Not only am I concerned about the solar technologies that I read in yesterday, but there's an award-winning Surrey company that described itself as a world leader in wind turbines, and they've gone out of business. An article published in the Vancouver Sun tells the story of a Canadian company: "A bankruptcy notice on the front door of Endurance Wind Power in the Campbell Heights industrial area ...

confirms that the company's operations are now being overseen by [another company]." The article states that "Endurance chief executive Brad Bardua said the company suffered after government subsidies to small-scale wind turbines dried up."

Wildrose has consistently warned – consistently warned – the members of this Assembly about the risks of propping up renewables artificially. That's what this is about. The article explains that "Endurance assembled 50-kilowatt turbines at its Surrey plant," and in Britain they had 225-kilowatt turbines. "The company had about 120 employees globally, including some staff in Denmark and Italy, with about 30 in B.C." Endurance is just another example of a rent-seeking company that is not economical without market-disrupting subsidies from governments. And then they end up going bankrupt.

I fully, fully support renewables in the instances where the market demands them. I actually run my own home off of 40 solar panels, so I have personal knowledge about this and what it took to build them and the energy and the infrastructure that was required to put those things on the back of my house. But Albertans are becoming increasingly concerned about this 30 per cent by 2030 and tying our economy to it. We feel that without an assessment of those embodied emissions – that's including the energy you put into what you're actually getting back out – from the building, installing, disposing, shipping of these renewables, without it being made clear how these renewables will complete in a free market and respond to the laws of supply and demand, we are very concerned that we're destroying a market-demand-supported industry to actually replace it with an incentive-supported industry. It doesn't improve anything.

Given all this information and the questions that it raises, I feel very strongly that it is necessary for this House to send this bill to committee for further review, so I would like to introduce a referral amendment, please.

5:30

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View has moved an amendment referred to as REF1.

Would you like to speak to it?

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move that the motion for second reading of Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions of the hon. member under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, then, I think we're dealing with the amendment. The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to have the opportunity to rise again and speak to Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act, this time on my hon. colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View's referral motion. There are a number of things that need to be said regarding referring to committee. We've brought it up a number of times.

Mr. Cooper: How many?

Mr. MacIntyre: A number, a large number. I would say at least once a day since May of 2015.

The value of sending legislation to standing committees – and I happen to be on this Resource Stewardship Committee. I'm very pleased to be on that committee. Resource stewardship is an extremely important component of Alberta society, and I feel very privileged to be part of the Resource Stewardship Committee. I only wish that that committee could actually do work on resource stewardship, good work on resource stewardship.

We have an opportunity with this referral today to engage with Albertans, with stakeholders, with experts, members of the Independent Power Producers Society of Alberta, small and large generators, some of the cogen people, some of my colleagues from the renewables industry regarding microgeneration and things like that. All of these people should be given the opportunity to speak to this very important piece of legislation. I believe it is incumbent upon this House to support this referral to committee and allow Albertans to come to this place to speak to it.

This policy as it currently stands poses somewhat of a risk to Albertans of becoming retractionary, a retractionary economic policy. A retractionary economic policy, for those that perhaps don't understand, is a policy that causes our economy to shrink a little bit, sometimes a lot. But to shrink a little bit is retractionary. It means that our GDP goes down or our growth in our GDP is not as robust as it might otherwise be because of a particular economic policy from the government. Instead of aiding in the economic rebound that we so desperately need right now, this act actually stands to penalize businesses, homeowners, fixed-income seniors, and everyone. This policy is actually putting our current electricity rates at risk of going up, and it's likely going to make things even worse right here in Alberta.

Renewable technologies – and there are so many of them out there – are an exciting field to be in. I felt very privileged to be part of the renewables world, the renewables industry. There was a lot of interest in the '90s, in the early 2000s regarding renewable technologies. One of the things we discovered when we were building program content is that there are some renewable technologies that are market ready, there are others that are not yet market ready, there are some renewable technologies that are still quite, I would say, ethereal. You know, on paper, mathematically, they ought to work. That's one thing. But just because something can be made to work on paper doesn't necessarily translate into a technology that you can actually put on the grid or put in a building or actually make it technically work with existing systems that we currently have.

Then, of course there's the economic viability of renewable technologies. It's one thing for a renewable technology to be technically feasible. It's entirely different when it comes to the economics. One of the things that we promoted in the program at NAIT that we developed was: somebody's got to pay the piper. You can be ever so excited and get all kinds of warm and fuzzy feelings about a particular renewable technology, but somebody's got to pay the piper. That technology had better be able to stand on its own two feet economically after you have determined that it is even technically feasible. So there was an order to things.

In the program today the students are still taught: you do a feasibility study, you do an economic study, and there are some very important checkpoints along the way to ensure that it doesn't fail because, at the end of the day, people are spending a great deal of money putting some of these technologies into play. If that technology is going to be an economic failure, we are talking about two things: somebody is going to lose a whole lot of money and, secondly, and I think equally important, it puts a real bad taste in the mouth of the investment community when they see projects that, to them, are some new technology and it fails and it costs their investors money. It's like: once bitten, twice shy.

I ran into this overseas. When we opened our offices in Tel Aviv, we had an opportunity to go to the kingdom of Jordan to do a feasibility study for a very large hotel. It was one of the largest hotels in the kingdom of Jordan, in Amman. They had an excellent engineering team in-house. The wonderful thing I've discovered about engineering is that it doesn't matter what language people speak. I've worked with Russian engineers, Arab, Jewish, just all over the world. When you get out the drawings and you've got engineers around the table, we all speak the same language. Even when we can't understand one another, we can understand the drawings. It was fun.

So there we were, and we were looking at this huge hotel. It was a couple of hundred rooms, many stories tall. They had an absolutely horrific electricity bill because in Amman the temperature can get upwards of 40 to 50 degrees Celsius, so you can imagine the cooling load that they have to deal with. So we were looking at different technologies that we could possibly employ in this building to bring down this astronomical electricity bill that they experienced, to try to save them some money. Lots of money. We're talking many hundreds of thousands of dollars every year that they were hoping to be able to save with different technologies.

One of the things that I ran into very quickly – in fact, I think it was somewhere through the first or second day that I was there – is that there were some senior engineers and accountants who were on the board of directors of the company that owned this large hotel, and they told me the following story: you know, we had some engineers here from France, and they tried this and this and this technology, and it cost us. I forget how much money, but it was a lot of money, and it bombed. It bombed terribly, and they went back to France. Now here I was, basically another salesman at the door, saying that I could save them hundreds of thousands of dollars in cooling costs. They were extremely hesitant to give us a green light, extremely hesitant because they had been so bitten by that first failed renewables project.

I ran into that in Egypt. I ran into it in Jordan. I ran into it in Israel. I ran into it in Malta. I ran into the same thing in the West Bank. It was like there were these engineers running around two or three years ahead of me wrecking renewables. It was terrible. It made it extremely difficult to break into that market because of the failure of these projects.

We have a similar problem looming here. There are jurisdictions – and you don't have to go very far. You just have to go in eastern Canada to the province of Ontario. Under their Green Energy Act they forged ahead with renewables, and look at where they're at today. The people of Ontario are very upset at the kind of energy costs that they are facing. Now, yes, they blamed their government, but honest to goodness, Mr. Speaker, some of the dirt hits perfectly acceptable, perfectly good, technically good renewable technologies. That bothers me greatly because I have seen it in so many places in the world.

There are places in the world, Malta being one of them, where it wouldn't have mattered how good the project was. Malta is a very small island. There's only a handful of investors on the whole island, and they were adamantly opposed to anything renewable because they had been taken to the cleaners once already: thank you very much; we are not going to do this again. It wouldn't have mattered if it was a gold-plated project; they were not going to invest in it. It was extremely disheartening.

In the province of Ontario those poor souls over there right now are suffering terribly beneath the weight of an out-of-control renewables policy. They have utility debt up to here. They are the most indebted subsovereign jurisdiction in the world, and a big chunk of that is on account of poor government policy impacting what should have, could have been perfectly good technology. As someone involved in the technology side of things that concerns me deeply.

We have an opportunity, by taking this bill to committee, to get the technical experts. We've got bunches of them right here in this province. Get those technical people in the door of this place because of the 87 people in this room, how many can actually say that they understand the technical aspects and the economic aspects of renewable technologies? Not many. You know, no one is an expert in everything, but we have experts in this province. We have experts right across this country. Those people, who are my colleagues, love renewable technologies, and they go out of their way to educate everybody who will listen.

It is imperative that we pause, take the time, go to committee, get these experts in the door. Let's hear about it because I guarantee you – I know my colleagues – they are going to come up with a better mousetrap every single time, certainly better than what a bunch of politicians could possibly throw together. Let's just be real honest about that. Let's get the experts in the door.

I don't want to see renewables in my province fail. As I said earlier today, I've been waiting for a renewables act for a long time. Please don't make it fail. I've seen too many failures around the world, and I've seen what it does to those marketplaces. People are so jaded; they will not accept renewables no matter how gold-plated they were.

Another little story. There was a particular project that I was doing a feasibility study on, and I was meeting some hesitancy from the board of directors and the bean-counters for that company. Fair enough. I mean, fair enough; it's their money. On the team that I headed up there were four engineers that I was supervising. We had this thing nailed down technically. I was absolutely sure. We actually went through and designed this thing three times to make sure that our numbers were absolutely ironclad.

Then we converted it to the financial feasibility. We had the economics down, Mr. Speaker. We knew exactly how much energy we were going to save, how much money we were going to save them. We were absolutely confident. We got in the meeting with their board of directors and their senior engineers and accountants, and they're just coming at the team . . .

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find that a thrilling story, especially when you start talking about accountants. I would love to continue to hear what their thoughts are, so please continue so that we can finish off your speech.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member. When we got in this meeting, the only way the corporation was going to accept our proposal was if I was willing to put my name on the hook for the financial responsibility if it failed. This is multimillion dollars. I don't have multimillion dollars. However, we went back to the board of our company and put it to them, and said: "You know. This is it; this is where the rubber meets the road. Are we willing to do this?"

Of course, the board of directors are not engineers; they're not technical people. They're accountants. I'm sorry for calling you a bean-counter, but they're bean-counters. They're looking at us on the team and saying: "Man, if you guys drop the ball, they're going to find you floating in the Mediterranean somewhere. You'd better be right." Well, we did. It happened. We got the contract.

Everything was fine. But that's the hesitancy that we were meeting because of failed renewables projects. It was an extremely difficult hurdle to overcome, Mr. Speaker.

For the sake of the whole renewables industry in this province, let alone the people of Alberta, for the industry, please, put this to committee. Let's get the industry in the door, and let's have a really good discussion with them about every line of this act. Let's take our time and, for goodness sake, get it right. If we get it wrong, the cost is going to be enormous. It's going to set renewables back, potentially, a whole generation. Let's just take the time.

I would appreciate it if every member of this House would be in support of this referral to committee. Let's take our time. Let's hear from the experts, and let's do a really good job for the sake of Albertans and for the sake of renewables in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

5:50

The Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a) for the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake?

Seeing no one, is there anyone else who would like to speak to amendment REF1? The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to this amendment. I've never really seen an amendment like this before. It's brand new to me.

This legislation, as was mentioned earlier, was developed with the best practices within other jurisdictions. This legislation, I think, needs to be in place for us to continue moving forward with renewable energy programs, and with this bill itself, not the amendment, the proper checks and balances are in place for us to move forward with renewable energy development.

We on this side of the House were elected to this Legislature as a government to diversify our economy. There are millions, if not billions, of dollars of investment waiting for us to move forward with this bill and this legislation to start implementing these programs. I find it quite interesting that the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, being a teacher of renewable energies, is so adamantly against any renewable energy course that we're trying to take in this Legislature. To be fair, he has said that he would like to see other programs, but I guess he's happy to wait 20 or 40 years before that happens.

Renewable energy is dropping in cost and gaining in efficiency every single year. We've seen this. We've seen other jurisdictions taking advantage of these programs. We've seen communities within our own province taking these programs and running with them. I think that it's important that we encourage these communities that are moving forward on renewable energies and not discourage them, like the opposition seems to be very excited to do.

I would just also add that this bill has been made in consultation with the Alberta Electric System Operator, the Market Surveillance Administrator, the Alberta Utilities Commission, Alberta Environment and Parks, the Alberta climate change office, Alberta Treasury Board and Finance, just to name a few. [interjections] I think that the members don't seem to really believe that these organizations understand the challenges within the industry. It seems a little funny to me. Not organizations, I suppose, but government agencies.

Respectfully, I will not be supporting this amendment, and I do encourage my colleagues to do the same. Thank you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Shepherd: Yes. Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark for his thoughts on this amendment. I know that this member has worked in the electrical field and has some knowledge and experience in that area and, of course, knows some individuals who are interested, actually, in participating in the renewable plan and putting in some investment in that regard, certainly some young electricians and others who are interested in working in that field. I was wondering if he'd be able to share some thoughts on sort of the potential that this investment could bring to the province.

Mr. Carson: Sure. Thank you very much for the question and the comment. I have indeed through my career in the electrical industry met several people on my path, not only people who are interested in working in the field but also in investing. I mean, an incredible amount of opportunity coming through my office and, I've heard from my colleagues, coming through their offices as well. Hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of dollars ready to be disbursed throughout our province, ready to invest in the future.

Of course, I've said it before. It is so important for us to continue developing our nonrenewable resources. Well, this works in conjunction with that. Many, many investors coming through my office. I mean, it's just incredible.

I was down at union hall IBEW 424. They're increasingly putting more people through the programs. I was here one week ago talking about their 125th anniversary. They're developing so many people that are ready to do electrical vehicle charging stations at people's homes and at the commercial and even industrial levels as well as photovoltaic systems.

I kind of see where the opposition is coming from in terms of: if I don't believe in climate change, man-made climate change specifically, well, then I don't really believe in renewable resource programs either. I understand that. I appreciate the time to respond to that.

Just a final comment. We've heard from the opposition several times on this bill and on other bills: "Well, China is not doing anything. Why should we?" I think that is an incredibly sad argument, and I think it's time for us to move forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A couple of things I'd like to ask the hon. member about the great, long lineup of investors beating a path to his door looking for handouts, like hogs to the trough. I'd be interested if the hon. member might illuminate us a bit on just who this long line of investors beating a path to his door are, if he could name some of these investment groups, and if he could perhaps illuminate for us just how much subsidy these companies are looking for.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To be honest, I don't have a list in front of me of the investors themselves. [interjections] I think that many of my colleagues have had people coming into their offices. I think that it's incredibly naïve to say that no one has come to our office. So many people... [interjections]

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think that many investors have come to his office, too, and I think that it's unfortunate that he's not willing to work with them, really, to be honest.

I think that we do need to move forward on this bill, as I said. I don't think that this amendment is necessary. I think that it's time to move forward, really just laying out a framework for this green-technology economy.

You know, I will leave it at that. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), any other questions for the hon. member?

Anyone who would like to speak to amendment REF1? The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, that was priceless, listening to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark speak. I don't even know where to start, actually. He suggested just in his last comments something about: "Well, China is not doing anything. Why should we?" Nobody was suggesting that. But how about the U.S., our largest competitor, our largest trading partner? They're not doing a carbon tax. They're not doing any of this stuff. How about Saskatchewan, right next door to us? How about Saskatchewan?

And he says: all sorts of support. He lists a whole group of people that support it, but I never heard one thing about Albertans. Not one thing about Albertans. Have you gone to Albertans with this and told them how much their power is going to increase because of this? How much is it going to cost? Now, he talks about all these investors running through his doorway to invest. With subsidies, of course, or a guaranteed return on investments: that's who's running through his door. Of course, anybody with their hand out to get something for nothing would love to be there. So all sorts of support, none from Albertans.

He talked about that they developed this with the best practices from other jurisdictions. Like Ontario? Is that one of these best practices that they've used? The lessons from Ontario? A complete failure in renewables. A complete failure.

He also suggested that everybody voted NDP, so they must love everything that this government is doing. We just need to point to the last election. One per cent support with the same candidate that they used in the provincial election a year and a half before. One per cent. Right in your jurisdiction, Mr. Speaker. That's the kind of support that they have from the people of Alberta. That's very clear.

He also said that the last years have been rough. Yes, the last year and a half has been very rough, since this government has been elected. They always blame the world price of oil, Mr. Speaker, but their policies drive investment away. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Loewen: They drive jobs away. This government in its term has lost over a hundred thousand jobs. They had a plan to create a hundred thousand jobs. Well, that's a 200,000 job deficit, Mr. Speaker – 200,000 jobs – from what they promised to what they've delivered. That's not acceptable. That's not what Albertans want to see.

You know what we haven't seen, Mr. Speaker, on any one of these policies that they've brought forward? Do you know what we haven't seen? We haven't seen an economic impact study on any of them. We haven't seen proper consultation with Albertans. Albertans haven't been told the truth on anything. All over the place this government does things behind closed doors and doesn't consult Albertans, doesn't give them the full information so that they can make an informed decision on whether they want to support it.

All we're asking with this amendment, Mr. Speaker, is to have this go to committee so that it can be looked at, so it can be reviewed, so we can ask Albertans what they want, so we can ask experts to come in. But this government doesn't want to see that. They don't want to see any input. They don't want to have Albertans judge this by what it is. They don't want to have their carbon tax reviewed. They hid reports on that. We only find out this information when we use FOIPs. That's not right.

This government needs to start listening to Albertans. They need to start paying attention to what Albertans want, and they need to give . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt. However, in accordance with Standing Order 4(2) the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 9 a.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6:01 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

9 a.m.

Thursday, November 10, 2016

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect, each in our own way. Let us give thanks for the precious gift of freedom and peace which we all enjoy today. We must remember those who fought for us to have those gifts. Without these brave men and women who sacrificed everything for our country and our province, we would not be able to enjoy the freedom and privileges we have now.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 28

Public Health Amendment Act, 2016

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. Thank you for the opportunity to address Bill 28 here in Committee of the Whole. I want to preface my remarks by congratulating the Health minister as well as the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud for bringing forward this piece of legislation. I think that what we see here is a very good measure and a very good attempt to bring forward a proactive preventive medicine measure, one that I think will truly improve health outcomes in our province.

I want to maybe go out on a limb a little bit here this morning by saying that I'm going to take a guess that I've probably administered more doses of vaccine than anyone else in the Chamber. Having been on thousands and thousands of occasions on the nonpointy end of the needle, I will tell you that vaccination is something that I feel very, very strongly about as a public health measure. I feel so strongly about it that I think it is extremely important that we do whatever we can in our province to improve the knowledge and the understanding of vaccination so that it is something that people understand more broadly.

I was dismayed a couple of years ago when there was a study released that indicated that over 1 in 5 Albertans still believed that there is a causative link between childhood vaccination and autism spectrum disorder. That, my friends, is something that all of us have a role in combating, the fallacy and the lie that that is. All of that, for those of you who don't know the background, came about as a result of a bogus article that was published in The Lancet in 1998 by Andrew Wakefield. That article has proven to be incorrect. That article has proven to be false. The fact that there are still folks – I'm going to talk about this in a second, about how, unfortunately, a lot of folks in society today take their scientific information from the world of celebrity. We've seen that problem in the debate that we've had with regard to Alberta's environmental record. We know that we've had prominent visitors come to our province and make rash statements that are so completely false; yet, without naming names, they should perhaps have gone down with the Titanic, in fact, and they did.

Madam Chair, I want to say for the record that as a Rotarian one of the jobs we had in Rotary representing our vocation was to inform our fellow Rotarians about something that we would know within our vocation that might not be widely known amongst the rest of the group, and in many ways I consider our Chamber to be a little bit like that same sort of organization. We all come with our different skills and our different abilities and our different backgrounds.

We heard yesterday from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, who has a long and distinguished career as an oncologist, and he spoke very directly about the importance in a public health sense of vaccination. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, similarly, reiterated his comments, and I was very interested to hear him use the term "herd immunity" because I do know a little bit about herd immunity. Herd immunity, though, is a concept in public health that is extremely important.

Every year in estimates – and the Health minister will corroborate this – I ask about our targets, our vaccination targets, that we set out, and I ask why we fall so short of those targets and if the targets in the estimates in the business plan for the Ministry of Health are, in fact, reasonable or if they're, you know, something that we should adjust. She correctly says that these are the targets that have been set out by the World Health Organization that we have within Canada for childhood vaccination, and therefore that is what we should strive for.

Bill 28, in my view, creates a balanced approach to how we might improve our vaccination performance within our young people. I certainly applaud the government as well for crafting a bill that respects the rights of parents to make choices on behalf of their children with regard to vaccination. That is something that we have to respect. That is something that has to remain within the hands of parents because parents ultimately have to make choices on behalf of their children and especially in this case. We're talking about infants. Very clearly, parents are making all of the choices at that age and at that stage. Anything that we can do in this Legislature to allay some of the fears that are out there, the groundless fears about vaccination, I think is something that is very positive.

Vaccination has an actually very long history that goes back nearly 10 centuries, but it's probably best known for the more recent history that started with the British physician Edward Jenner. Dr. Jenner made the observation at a time when smallpox had a mortality rate of 60 per cent amongst adults and 80 per cent amongst youth that those that had common contact with cattle rarely developed smallpox, and if they did, their case of smallpox was considerably less severe than others in their cohort group. He made a guess without knowing a thing about virology, without knowing that viruses even existed, that there was something that people handling cattle were exposed to that in some way protected them against smallpox, and he was right. He was a keen observer of his patients, as good doctors are, and he made the conclusion that there was something – and he didn't know what it was – that protected people who worked with cattle against smallpox.

As it turned out, it was a related disease caused by a related virus that was nonfatal. In fact, it was the cowpox virus, and it was Jenner that determined that the cowpox vesicles contained something. Of course, he was living in a time before there were electron microscopes, so he could not actually see what that something was. He made the conclusion that there was something in the cowpox vesicles that protected smallpox patients. Before long he was actually treating early cases of smallpox with the extract, as we'll call it, that was developed from these cowpox vesicles. Now, we know that Louis Pasteur then made a lot of great strides forward in terms of the development of vaccination.

For those of you who are interested in things like this, the word “vaccination” actually comes from the Latin root word “vacca,” which means cow. That is because the initial vaccinations were done from something that was derived from a cow. As a veterinarian, of course, I’m very proud of that.

But I do want to talk a little bit about the whole concern with regard to the adverse reactions. Vaccines are developed and have been developed over the years by pharmaceutical companies. I know that out there there is concern or there is suspicion about this thing called big pharma. I think that one of the things we have to recognize is that big pharma and the vaccinations that they have developed are part of the reason why public health has made such great strides forward. Vaccination is something that saves our health system billions of dollars a year, and if we could increase the numbers of people that are vaccinated, we could save our system literally billions of dollars a year. It is one of the most effective ways of reducing health care costs that is available to us. As a veterinarian who spent probably 80 per cent of my time in practice doing preventive health care as opposed to reactive health care, I can tell you that vaccination was a big part of it.

In this bill it talks about making sure that we have vaccination records for children attending schools and daycare and that those records be shareable. I think that’s critically important. To me, it’s bizarre that you can place a child in school with no knowledge of vaccination records whatsoever, yet if you want to board your dog in a kennel, you have to show proof of vaccination. Does that really make any sense? If you want to put cattle into a community pasture where there is commingling of cattle from different herds, you have to show proof of vaccination. If we’re doing it for cows and dogs, Madam Chair, we should be doing it for our children.

Madam Chair, I’m going to refer to a monograph or commentary that was published in 2015. Unfortunately, I only have one copy of this. I’m going to take some direction from the Clerk’s table as far as how I might be able to table five copies of this without breaking copyright law. It’s a commentary from the C.D. Howe Institute, and it’s entitled A Shot in the Arm: How to Improve Vaccination Policy in Canada. This is an excellent, excellent commentary. I would certainly recommend it. It’s only 14 pages long; it’s not overly technical. It talks about vaccination policy in Canada. It specifically talks about Alberta, and it talks about how Alberta could improve on what is right now an underperforming level of child vaccination. It gives a number of measures, many of which I think are embodied in the piece of legislation that we’re debating.

Specifically, Madam Chair, in the report, and I’m quoting now from page – well, I said that it was 14 pages long, and here I’m quoting from page 15. We’ll get that straightened out.

We believe that Alberta should consider adopting a model that mandates informed choice upon school entry or earlier. This means including enforcement mechanisms to encourage parents to decide one way or another. Such mechanisms could involve requiring written consent or refusal in infancy and again upon entering school, with proof of having spoken to a physician or nurse. Stricter measures would be financial penalties, similar to the Australian model, or the threat of suspension, as in Ontario.

I’m glad that we’re not looking at those. I think the first step is to try to encourage education and to allay the fears of those who still have doubts, who still are listening to some of the PhDs on The View who have opinions on vaccinations rather than on the overwhelming weight of scientific evidence that shows the benefit of vaccination.

Madam Chair, once again I’d like to commend the minister and the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, and I certainly appreciated the comments from my colleague for Calgary-Mountain View and his long experience in the public health field.

I can tell you that as someone who has administered vaccines to many, many patients and has seen adverse reactions in a minuscule number of those patients and in every case has been able to react and respond and take the necessary measures to ensure that that adverse reaction was taken care of and who’s accidentally vaccinated myself against any number of different dog, cat, and cattle diseases and carries titres against a number of different diseases that I’m unlikely to develop at some time in later life – I have been rabies vaccinated, as an example. That’s something we get standard as veterinarians, and, you know, quite frankly, with some of the patients I’ve dealt with and even now in political life, I’m rather glad I carry that protection.

Madam Chair, all kidding aside, I think this is a good piece of legislation. It is one that our caucus certainly supports. I would encourage all members from all sides and all parties within the House: for the sake of our health overall but especially for the sake of our young children let’s pass this, and let’s get on the ball with regard to educating Alberta’s public to make sure vaccination becomes more widespread.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. In regard to your tabling, if you could please just table the publication information, that would be sufficient. Thank you.

Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Hello. Thank you, Chair. Thank you very much for the point of view of immunization from the point of view of a veterinarian. As a teacher I have a lot of the same concerns. We see a lot of the issues that happen when we have someone who is not immunized in amongst the class when there is a vaccine-preventable outbreak of disease. Of course, the majority of the students are protected by their own immunizations, but you always worry, legitimately worry, that if someone is not immunized and they are not isolated, they can be carrying a disease well away from the classroom to people who are not immunized for any number of reasons. Infants, because they’re too young – you know, there’s a baby at home, and that child can be exposed to a disease. People with compromised immune systems can be exposed, and all of that is needless.

So as a teacher working in an educational system, the faster, the more quickly you have the information as to which students need to be isolated in order for them not to be spreading the disease, contracting and spreading, it’s really, really helpful, and it’s better for everyone. It’s better for society as a whole for sure. In that regard I totally agree with the thoughts expressed previously that this is a very good bill.

The other thing I want to mention – and we’ve brought it up before, some of us of in the older MLA crowd, that we well remember the days when we did not have the vaccinations and the immunization programs available, and we don’t want to go back there. [some applause] Thank you. So much needless, I mean, now preventable harm and death that we just don’t want to see reoccurring when it doesn’t need to happen. We have very good mechanisms to keep people from contracting many of these diseases, and we want to use them for that purpose. Basically, mechanisms that will help lessen the likelihood of harm being spread in our society, particularly to our children, is a pretty legitimate and worthwhile cause.

Thank you, Madam Chair. I hope everyone will support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Are there any other hon. members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. Vaccinations. You know, the problem with the whole antivax community is the fact that we have a generation of people who didn't experience the hardships of these diseases when they proliferated back in the day. If we don't learn these lessons from our parents and our grandparents and our forefathers and mothers, then we're destined to circle back and relearn these harsh lessons because these are dangerous diseases. Let us remind people of what something as simple as the measles, mumps, and rubella vaccine has provided or what we had when we did not have these diseases.

Measles. You know, everyone hears about it, but what are measles? You know what? These are all viruses. It'll cause you to have a fever, you'll get a rash, and you're going to get cold-like symptoms. Ah, that doesn't seem so bad. There are some ocular issues as well, so you get a bit of photophobia, so that means that the light is very impairing to you. More importantly, from measles you can get brain damage, and there is a percentage of people that actually died from this brain damage. If they did not die, they were impaired because that computer chip in our head, there, was damaged, so these people could not have good lives.

Mumps. Again, with every disease there's a fever. That's your body fighting these infections. They get headaches. Your glands will swell. But did you know that mumps will lead to meningitis? There's temporary and permanent deafness. I should go back. Does anyone know what meningitis is? I know there are some health care professionals in the House. Meningitis really is the swelling of the tissues that surround the brain and whatnot and our central nervous system, and when that swells, it impacts our nervous system and impairs things there. So mumps, again, is a very dangerous issue. I might also say that there is painful swelling of the testicles. I know; it's nuts. I know.

Rubella. There are very serious complications from rubella. Rubella is probably the worst one, and people don't recognize this. When your daughter grows up to become an adult and she's pregnant and she gets exposed to rubella, 9 out of 10 will get birth defects. It leads to brain damage of that little one. It leads to heart defects. It leads to liver, eye issues, deafness. So it's not just impacting the person that makes the decision not have that vaccination; it impacts that baby that's inside of them. Nine out of 10 women who get rubella during pregnancy will have a child that will be difficult to manage when they get older.

We've forgotten the lessons of our parents and our grandparents, and that's why we have to look to the history books. That's why we have to remember why these things came about, and we have to make proper, educated decisions on getting these vaccinations. Really, in the scheme of things, we would have had these things wiped out, and we wouldn't even be exposed to them, but unfortunately we are now, and that's a shame.

With that in mind, I do support vaccinations. Thank you very much. But I also do support the freedom for someone to say no. It is what it is.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other hon. members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is really a pleasure to stand here in support of this important bill, that has the support of teachers as well as parents and all of us. It's been very refreshing, actually, hearing the discussion, and I appreciate the contributions from all members of the Legislature. I only wish that we could inoculate this spirit of collegiality and co-operation into our other discussions such as on the carbon levy. What are the chances?

An Hon. Member: Let me write the budget, and you've got a deal.

Dr. Turner: We're waiting for a budget from you guys.

Anyways, the bill is aimed at increasing immunization rates. I agree with the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster that one of our jobs is to create the environment in which immunization rates are increased, and I think that this bill is going to do that through the dissemination of information about the benefits of vaccinations and immunizations as well as in the interdigitization of the various communication systems that allow our teachers to know which students may not have had their vaccinations. Those students can be excluded in the event of a preventable infection occurring in that community.

These amendments will also improve the services for immunizations. It's very key that we actually make the immunizations, vaccinations available to all Albertans and make it easy for them to get so that these sorts of situations don't arise. I think all Albertans want to be healthy. They want to be able to protect their children. If we make the services more available, that's going to be very positive.

The objective is to achieve full immunization through information sharing and to better protect Alberta students and their families in the event of an outbreak. I really do appreciate the input from all members that have spoken on this. I think that there are some very good ideas. I'm also very appreciative of our public health officials. We have a phenomenal public health system in this province. We need to give them the resources to get the job done well. We also have a phenomenal education system in this province and a system in the province that actually keeps track of the students in that system, and we can use both of those good systems to make the immunization rates better.

With that, I will again urge, as before, all members to support this important legislation.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Good morning, Madam Chair. Thank you so much. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak if only briefly. I know that it's hard for some members of this Assembly to believe that it can be brief, but I will do my very best.

Let me just begin by saying that I believe that children are our future, and it's important that we do everything that we can to set our children up for success. While there is still some significant public debate around vaccinations, I think that it's critically important that people have the access to information they need to make the best available decision. Much of this piece of legislation is around just that, around the ability for our public health officials to be able to communicate and allow parents to make the best choice possible.

I think that it's also very critically important that the bill still allows them to make that choice. I mentioned it yesterday, but I want to reiterate it today because sometimes in the course of public discussion what we're actually talking about can get derailed. What this bill does not do is require mandatory vaccinations. What it does do is takes many steps in the right direction of encouraging parents to be aware of the decision that they're making. What it does is allow government health officials to directly contact folks and have a conversation around that. I think that those are reasonable steps that we can make to ensure that people have the information that they ought to when they make a decision as important as around their children's health, around vaccination.

I just want to reiterate a point, and I'm hoping that the minister might have an opportunity to respond to alleviate some of my concerns around the privacy of this information. The information that we're going to be sharing from the Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Health is very sensitive and personal information. First of all, it's information about minors' health. It's information in many respects about a decision that a parent has made or not made, and that decision is a very private and personal decision that that parent might make. What we don't need to see is any sort of, first of all, breaches of privacy or any abuse of this information with respect to a decision that a parent might make for their child.

I think many members of this Assembly are aware, Madam Chair, of the bad track record of AHS on privacy breaches, and we've seen a significant increase in investigations. I know that the Privacy Commissioner has spoken quite sternly both to AHS and the ministry about the importance of keeping health information private generally. As we move towards expanding the amount of information sharing between Education and Health, much of which is very private and very personal information, I'm hoping that the minister this morning, at the conclusion of my remarks, would be willing to provide some reassurances that these issues have been clearly and robustly considered, discussed, and that a plan has been put in place on how this will take place, any potential consequences for breaches of that privacy. That way we'll have some reassurances.

As you know, Chair, I like to give the government the best opportunity to respond best, but I also am deeply passionate about holding the government to account. If, in fact, we'll be able to hear the plan today, I hope, and if the government hasn't done their job in respecting the privacy, respecting this information, then we, then, will be able to point back to this time and say: "You know what? The government hasn't fulfilled their commitments, and Albertans expect this government to do just that."

I will be supporting this piece of legislation and encourage my colleagues to do the same because much about the education side of this, much about parents being able to decide what's best for their children with the right information is, I believe, a step in the right direction, but there are some concerns. It's my hope that we can have some of those at least alleviated a little this morning.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thanks to the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills for his comments and his endorsement of the bill before us here today.

Obviously, we have hit a good balance. I can tell from the comments here today in regard to this bill but also from, I believe, the larger medical community and from education partners across the province. We had, in fact, trustees and representation at our announcement last week, and I was very proud to see their enthusiastic endorsement of this initiative that we've undertaken here. It's very important to note that we had parents, parent council representation there as well and so forth. You know, sometimes when you build legislation, those stakeholders' endorsements and then, of course, what we hear in debates in the House here help us to gauge how we will move forward on any given legislation generally and then on this specific piece of legislation as well.

I know that from a health perspective it's absolutely essential that we are using the time available to us when we see an outbreak of a disease, that we act in a timely manner, and information gives us that upper hand to make the best use of time. Just to remind everyone about how this legislation works, how this initiative works, we are simply passing enrolment information over to Alberta Health Services for them to cross-reference with their immunization records.

In regard to privacy, in regard to the integrity and security of that information I would suggest that this is at least as secure as before. Both of those ministries and both of those lists are secure and protected by legislation and the law. I would suggest that, you know, we even actually have a double fail-safe mechanism here because we're passing information from two ministries, cross-referencing it over. On every level of the privacy that exists on both of those lists I would suggest that we have a very safe and secure method by which to undertake actions in the case of an outbreak of any given disease.

You know, just to fill in more information on that as well, detailwise, for students that are coming from other jurisdictions across the country and/or even from other countries, we are, again, passing that information over. Then we have an opportunity, I think, for both ministries to cast a second look on those individuals and that file so that, again, there's another level of sort of scrutiny that would help individuals to get the immunizations that they need to help keep themselves safe and our larger communities safe, too. It's a pretty good idea. I mean, it's innovative, and I think that it will help us over time – we can track this possibility – to in fact make our children safer in the province here.

You know, again, we have put that provision recognizing an individual's or a family's right to make a choice here, but I think that it's important, Madam Chair, to not – I mean, that's there. It's on the paper, it's in the bill, but, you know, I don't think we want to necessarily put a big neon light and sign around that nor make it particularly straightforward and just a matter of course for an individual or a family to do that. I think that part of this bill, again, is for people to take a long second thought about the implications around immunization, not to treat it frivolously. Nor should it be something that is decided on the spur of the moment or just by omission and/or some other choice that hasn't been backed up by some serious thought over time. Okay. I think that's important.

I know the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills emphasized that opt-out aspect of this very prominently in his speech. I think that, you know, we have to just remind you all here today, everyone listening, that this is a very serious decision that requires time and consideration and reflection and to reflect on the implications for an individual but for the larger community, too, because the only way that immunization works across the board is to ensure that we're getting as many people as possible. The implications are dire. We've heard speeches from other quarters here today. I mean, it can involve jeopardizing the health and mortality of thousands of people, potentially, so I think that needs to be part of our education here as well.

I know that the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills is a big fan of Whitney Houston, and he must have forgotten the next phrase from that very fine song.

I believe the children are our future
comma,

Teach them well [to help] them [find] the way.
We've got to get that part in there, otherwise it doesn't make any sense, right? You've got to have one to have the other. Just a little lesson on, you know, quoting songs and so forth for the future, to help us find the way.

Thanks, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak in favour of this bill. You know, there's always a balance, in any legislation that we have, between trying to promote public safety and at the same time trying to protect individual rights and freedoms, and I think this bill finds that balance. I know that we've had a great deal of conversation about not requiring mandatory vaccination but at the same time working towards sharing records that would allow officials to be able to contact parents and to encourage them to do that.

I want to talk a little bit today. I very much appreciated the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster bringing in some of the history and medical science that lies behind the concept of vaccination. I enjoyed the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, with his vision for how we can co-operate in this House. I truly enjoyed that. I guess I'm really glad we've been spared from either hon. members actually standing up and singing this morning the verses from that very amazing song.

I do want to perhaps take this down a path that's maybe a little more personal. As a teacher I've had to help kids in my class that were sick. You know, obviously, when we're dealing with student safety, it's a very important issue, and I think this bill moves us towards more student safety with the idea of being able to identify those students that have not been vaccinated, making sure that, should an outbreak occur, they're not placing themselves in harm or danger by attending a school, for instance, during a measles outbreak. I think this sharing of information, from a teacher's point of view, is a very positive thing.

I know a very personal side of the story. I believe that this bill could have helped my father. My father contracted polio as a young boy. It radically changed his life. He moved off the farm at 13 years of age to go and be the first one in his family to finish and receive a high school degree. He was in school one day when his teacher noticed that he was walking a little funny. There ensued some doctors' appointments to find out that my father had had polio and that it had damaged the muscles in his back and his stomach and that he was developing scoliosis of the spine. So as a 14-year-old boy he had to travel by train all the way from Shaunavon, Saskatchewan, to Regina, where he had surgery to fuse his spine and then spent the next several years recuperating from this.

So when I look at this bill, I see a very personal side to this story. My father has always led a very active life. He's overcome that polio. He's got full mobility, and he would look back and say that probably that event in his life actually made him a better person, but he was one of the lucky ones. When we start talking about trying to achieve a rate of 97 per cent vaccination for the year for polio and we're only at 76 per cent, I think of some of the kids that could be very negatively affected, and I think of people like my father.

I can stand in this Legislature and say that I can support this bill. I think it's found a balance. I think it allows parents to be parents and to make the final decision but with the information and with the sharing of records that will allow for some public safety. So I will speak and will vote in favour of this bill.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I maybe have a few comments and questions in regard to this bill. While I think it's probably a good step forward in an effort to streamline processes and actually protect the public's safety, I do express some privacy concerns, which have been eased a bit by the minister's comments earlier.

One of the other concerns that I would have with this bill is the way in which parents and children are contacted by the Department of Health and how those conversations take place, if it'll be a contact to the parent or if it'll be a contact to the child. How can the minister offer assurances that there won't be intimidation tactics used by the public health officials when having these conversations? That is of great concern, especially if the information is from the department to the child. I do express some concerns there. While I feel like this is mostly fairly good, I'm hoping the minister can offer some assurances that children will not be coerced to make decisions, may or may not be offered the full scope of information. It is certainly a concern, and I hope to get some assurances.

That's it. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[The clauses of Bill 28 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 29

Vital Statistics and Life Events Modernization Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Chair. It's a pleasure to rise this morning and speak to Bill 29, the Vital Statistics and Life Events Modernization Act. I spent a little bit of time reviewing the bill, and I'm happy to state that I'll be supporting this piece of legislation, and I would encourage all my hon. colleagues to do the same.

Madam Chair, society as a whole has undergone change, and it's important that the government routinely modernizes and recalibrates so as to ensure that it's in the best position to serve Albertans. I think about my own kids and how different their childhood is to mine. I, perhaps like you, Madam Chair, grew up in a time of VHS and bubble TVs. I remember having to co-ordinate with my family when I could use and get access to the Internet as when I was on the Internet, my family couldn't make any phone calls because of the dial-up connection. In fact, there was a period of time in my very young growing-up days, in grade 3, when I lived in a fairly remote part of this province, and we actually had a party line. Even before the invention of this fad they called the Internet, they had these party lines, where my three neighbours were all on the same phone line.

It's a very different world that my children are growing up in than I did. Madam Chair, I remember sitting down for a movie night with popcorn and pop, only to discover that someone had forgotten to rewind the VHS. Let's just say that if I was to tell my kids today, "Be kind and rewind," they would have a very funny look for me.

9:50

Mr. Schmidt: That's the way your kids always look at you, Nathan.

Mr. Cooper: That's so true.

It's quite possible that there are some members, some of my esteemed colleagues on the government side of the House, that are also unclear with the statement "be kind and rewind." We used to have these big VHS tapes, and you had a special machine that you could put it in to rewind the thing because it was twice as fast as the VHS. Anyway, you get the point.

I also think about my kids and how they might react if their Christmas present was the complete series of Gilligan's Island on VHS. For the benefit of the Minister of Education this morning, I will refrain from singing the Gilligan's Island song or whistling it for you, but I do hope that it's now stuck in many of your heads here this morning.

The kids certainly would be shocked if the Internet access was only available through dial-up. Sure, technically it's possible to watch movies on VHS or access the Internet via dial-up, but it's not the most up-to-date system and certainly not something folks would categorize as convenient.

I think this bill is basically the government updating to buying a Blu-ray player or updating to the SuperNet. Albertans expect their government to be able to communicate with citizens in a modern and streamlined manner.

I'd like to highlight a few changes in this bill. I'd like to highlight the formal recognition of midwifery as a legitimate health care profession in the Vital Statistics Act. As you'll know, Madam Chair, the Wildrose caucus has long been an advocate of the expansion of midwifery services and their recognition as legitimate health care professionals. While I admit that this particular change may seem minor as midwives are already authorized to file a birth notice within the province, this bill amends the Vital Statistics Act to officially list midwives in legislation along with physicians.

Albertans have already been using midwifery services for many years, and frankly it's high time that the government formally acknowledged this great service they provide to thousands of Alberta couples. I know first-hand of the great work that midwives are doing right across the province. My brother and his family have five children, and they have benefited individually and collectively from the use of midwife services.

Now, I don't want to get too overly philosophical this morning, but there are some very, very unique and compassionate things in this piece of legislation. One of the most amazing things about humanity that I see every day is our collective ability to experience compassion for one another. Now, I know we've seen right across North America an unfortunate trend away from compassion and even here in our own province, but I have an incredible amount of hope and belief that we will continue to experience compassion for one another and that we will continue to provide compassion for one another. The dictionary defines compassion as, quote: a feeling of deep sympathy and sorrow for one who is stricken by misfortune accompanied by a strong desire to alleviate suffering. End quote. This bill proposes to introduce a little bit of compassion for individuals and families who are experiencing a difficult life event such as the stillborn birth of their child or the death of a loved one.

Madam Chair, you know that I'm a parent. My beautiful wife and I have three beautiful, extraordinary children. I could not be more proud of the individuals they have become thus far in their lives, and I look forward to sharing many, many more years of life with them. Getting to see them learn to drive or graduate high school, get their first job, or get married will be wonderful experiences that I will be blessed to have. I cannot begin to imagine how difficult it is for the parent of a stillborn baby who should be celebrating one of life's most joyous occasions but instead has to make difficult choices like the name they wish to give their deceased child. At present we have a very cold and not compassionate process in which to handle this most horrific situation.

I came across a story in a paper recently of a network of photographers who are a part of an organization called Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep. This organization's mission is "to introduce remembrance photography to parents suffering the loss of a baby with the free gift of professional portraiture." This organization has over 1,700 photographers in over 40 countries around the world, including here in Alberta. One of the parents interviewed who accessed the services stated: "That night was the worst night of my life. But when I look at the images, I am not reminded of my worst night. I'm reminded of the beauty and blessings [my son] brought."

Bill 29 proposes to bring a little of that compassion to the process of recording stillbirths in Alberta. Parents will now have the ability to forgo naming their child right away or if they wish to at all. This flexibility is allowing each family the ability to process their grief in a manner that works for them.

Another change proposed by Bill 29 is commemorative certificates. Sadly, stillborn children are ineligible for a birth certificate. It leaves the family with no other document recognizing their child other than as a death. I can only imagine the painful memory that it must be for parents dealing with this unimaginable grief of the loss of a child. While the details of these certificates are yet to be hashed out, the idea is that a commemorative certificate will allow parents to obtain a ceremonial birth certificate. While the certificate itself has no legal standing, it will allow parents to honour their children in a much more compassionate way.

Madam Chair, I've never experienced the magnitude of a stillborn child. As you know, I have two adopted girls, and my family, too, has dealt with a number of challenges through the pregnancy process. Anything that we can do to assist individuals who are dealing with some of life's most challenging situations is something that I am more than happy to support.

I'm happy to see this government introducing compassion into how it deals with people going through difficult life events. This is one of the reasons why I will be supporting Bill 29. There are a number of very important issues that Bill 29 addresses, but for today I think I will leave it at that.

10:00

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question on Bill 29, Vital Statistics and Life Events Modernization Act?

[The clauses of Bill 29 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Mr. Westhead: Madam Chair, I move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Ms Woollard: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 28 and Bill 29.

The Acting Speaker: Does Assembly concur with the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 24

Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016

The Acting Speaker: The Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege this morning to move third reading of Bill 24, Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016, on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

I want to thank all members on both sides of the House for the discussions that we've had on this very important piece of legislation. It's clear to me from the comments that were made throughout the debate of the bill that in general I think members are supportive of the enhancement of wildfire prevention, enforcement, and operational activities.

The modernization of this act is an important step in reducing the risk of human-caused wildfires. As was discussed earlier, approximately 70 per cent of wildfires over the last five years have been linked to human activity, and this legislation will introduce measures that will help reduce the risk of human-caused wildfires and enhance firefighting operations. These activities include strengthening penalties to serve as a deterrent, simplifying the process to restrict recreational activities when fire conditions are hazardous, officially designating March 1 as the start of the wildfire season, and clarifying operational roles and responsibilities.

During the second-reading debate and the Committee of the Whole we discussed various aspects of the legislation, and I'd just like to take some time now to address some of those discussion points to make sure that there's clarity on those points. During the debate there were questions about the provisions related to delegation of authority. We want to ensure that the front-line staff, who have the most experience with how this legislation works on the ground, have the ability to make decisions when it's appropriate as part of their day-to-day duties. Of course, higher level decisions will still be made by the minister as required.

In terms of the part of the bill that addresses the wildfire season, starting the season one month earlier than before will allow our wildfire managers to identify potential issues and ensure that fire permits are obtained earlier in the year. An early wildfire season start will allow our wildfire managers to be ready to respond when the spring comes. It won't in any way affect the contracts that we have in place. These contracts are multiyear, ensuring that the resources are available as needed, and can be extended in the fall based on hazard levels. Our government will continue to ensure that we have all the firefighting resources that we need to keep Albertans safe from the risk of wildfire.

During the last wildfire season the government enacted an off-highway vehicle restriction to help reduce the likelihood of wildfire started by exhaust or hot debris. This was done at the time using a provision of the act mostly reserved for forest area closures. The new provisions in the act will allow us to implement an off-highway vehicle restriction in the same way that we do with fire bans currently. We are essentially simplifying the process.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I was incredibly pleased and honoured to be here to listen to the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry introduce Bill 24 into the House on the same day that the Premier recognized the first responders from the Fort McMurray wildfire. This bill will help them to do their job, and I'm proud to stand in this House today for its third reading.

We will now move on to updating the act's associated regulations over the winter, in time for the start of next year's wildfire season on March 1.

Again I'd like to thank all of the members for their support of the bill and for the support of our wildland firefighters. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is an honour to be cosponsor of Bill 24, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016. I feel it's a great bill, and I'm just so honoured to have the opportunity to be cosponsor of it. As we've heard from both sides of the House, this bill is well supported. This bill contains amendments that protect Albertans and their communities. This bill contains amendments that will strengthen our province's wildfire protection laws, amendments that will enhance wildfire prevention, and amendments that will give more support to our wildfire firefighters.

As we heard from the Member for Banff-Cochrane, approximately 70 per cent of wildfires over the past five years were triggered by human activity. Madam Speaker, this bill will strengthen penalties for violations and increase maximum fines for major offences for individuals or corporations, which will deter reckless and irresponsible behaviours. This bill includes administrative penalties focusing on industrial violations such as insufficient firefighting equipment on-site or failing to meet industrial operation precautions.

Amendments include improving the ability to restrict specific activities during fire season that could ignite a wildfire such as the use of OHVs, amendments that will improve the province's authority to prohibit actions such as drones, which interfere with firefighting operations, and operational amendments designating March 1 as the official start date of the fire season. That earlier start date will ensure wildfire preparations are well under way when they need to be. The amendments are supported by recommendations which were made following the reviews of major wildfires such as the 2011 Slave Lake wildfire and learnings from the past couple of wildfire seasons.

I would like to thank all those in the House who spoke to this bill. I appreciated your comments, stories, and your support. No matter how hard we try, I don't think that a single one of us could erase the images in our heads of what we watched from our televisions and computers just a few months ago: residents of Fort McMurray driving down the highway, flames on both sides of the highway, embers landing on the vehicles. We could hear the conversations of parents talking to their children, answering their questions, trying to keep them calm and trying to keep themselves calm, not knowing what was going to happen from minute to minute.

No matter how hard we try, I do not think that any one of us here in the House today could erase the images of our exhausted wildfire fighters, their faces blackened from soot, laying on the ground, resting their bodies, trying to catch a short sleep before they went back towards the flames, or the images of volunteers walking from vehicle to vehicle handing out water and fuel so that families could keep driving away from the flames.

Madam Speaker, no matter how hard we try, we will not prevent all forest fires, but today is the day that all in the House can do their part to ensure the safety and protection of our Albertans and communities. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Bill 24, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016. I commend this government in its attempt at legislating more responsible behaviour in our treasured forests and prairies. Fire has been the source of so much that is good in human history, but it is also our biggest threat. Without fire, we wouldn't have the means to be warm. Without fire, we couldn't have cooked our food to a more palatable and digestible state. Without fire, we would have no development of metals and so many other technologies. But fire destroys, and Fort McMurray was only the latest of Canadian communities that were ravaged by fire. In most recent memory we have Slave Lake and we have Kelowna, and there will be more. Make no bones about that.

First off, I am concerned about our forestry department. Their job is to manage our forests, so even though the fire season was legislated to be April 1, I would hope that these professionals would be doing their due diligence 24 hours a day, seven days a week, 365 days a year. It would be more than a shame if it was identified that they put no effort into being proactive in their attempts at ensuring that Albertans are safe and that risks in their portfolios would be identified and plans made to alleviate these issues. It seems to me that this should be a daily chore for them. It would be just as bad if it turned out that they were literally handcuffed from moving ahead with any initiatives or regular operations that would involve the alleviation of threats because of a date on the calendar. It'd be a shame if the report that is due to come out in 2017 were to demonstrate gross negligence or a lackadaisical attitude towards fire prevention and threat suppression. Wouldn't that be a scary thought?

That said, if moving up the date by a month will empower SRD in an attempt at ensuring that they will have the time to assess and alleviate dangers, so be it. I will agree with this part of the bill.

Increased fines. The intent of the increased fines is, again, noble, but we just have to remember that it is a very difficult thing to prove that people have started a fire. It is very difficult. If the forestry department can identify the careless and negligent, all the power to them. This aspect is great, but it must be in conjunction with education.

Now, I see what the government side is currently doing, what with their spending money on advertising. I watch the commercials on the new carbon tax. I see the advertising on the climate change plan, and it's a lot of money to promote people to build gardens on the roofs, without using fall protection. Your own commercials contradict your ideological agenda. I can't believe that the government would choose to spend a lot of money on this propaganda when it could be spending this money on real things, like educating people on real issues like protecting our forests.

An Hon. Member: Climate change isn't a real issue?

Mr. Yao: Climate change is a real issue. My apologies.

Smokey the Bear is a mascot that everyone knows. The character Smokey the Bear is ingrained in our psyches, at least those of a certain age, like that of the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and older. I do recognize that many of the folks on the government side haven't a clue of what I speak, so I will explain. Smokey the Bear is a mascot that was promoting safety and responsible actions in the forest environment stateside, but even Canadians knew of him as we were exposed to American television channels. His message was clear: respect the environment; respect the forest; watch out for dangers in the forest; be careful of your actions with fire; listen to the park rangers. Alberta and Canada need new mascots to carry these messages of safety. We need someone who will amuse, entertain, and educate people.

I find our government quite comical. I wonder how good the members across the way would be at promoting safety in our forests and warning of the increased fines. You're all charismatic, sharply dressed folks. You're fine ambassadors for fire prevention and smart forest practices.

But that said, we have to remember that education is the key here, and we need to have more education for people. Probably our most effective weapon against future forest fires is education. This bill doesn't really address that, but it does a little, and I will support it. Let us be clear that we do have a lot more to go if we want to prevent forest fires.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Are there any questions under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 24, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016. We live in a diverse province. It has miles of grassland, prairies and plains, thousands of acres of coniferous and deciduous forests. While most of our population lives in cities, even that population is never more than a short drive away from a rural landscape that will be dominated by those prairies and the forests. All of us enjoy this proximity to nature, and we all enjoy the beauty of our province. That's a part of being Albertan, being close to nature.

But the raw beauty that we live in can also be very dangerous. To live in Alberta is to understand that nature has a power of her own and that nature can turn our lives upside down in a very short order. Whether we are talking flooding and precipitation or drought and wildfires or any of a dozen scenarios that nature can throw our way, we understand that it is important to be prepared in this province. Just as we have to teach our children that being out in nature is one of the greatest experiences in life, we must also teach them to respect nature and to respect the weather and the terrain and the wildlife that occupy this province.

Bill 24 is about being prepared, and it's about being ready for the inevitability of nature in Alberta. There is a fire season in Alberta, and it is different every year. There are forest pests and biological realities that we must consider and that we must prepare for if we are to protect Albertans, Alberta towns, villages, forests, and prairies. In the recent past we've seen fire consume huge swaths of forest and major parts of communities. Indeed, the Flat Top Complex report helped to birth this bill. After the shocking Slave Lake fire we asked: how could we have done a better job? One of its recommendations was to update the Forest and Prairie Protection Act.

We've had to learn from these incidents that we need to plan in order to minimize the damages to Albertan communities through programs like the FireSmart program. The FireSmart program helps communities plan for and minimize the damage to communities and to homes, to industries and to the landscape by a wildfire, whether it's preplanning, setting up fire suppression, water supplies, staging areas, evacuation procedures, or any of the myriad other logistical pieces that go together in being prepared to fight and to combat and to overcome and, if necessary, to flee a wildfire.

Communities can receive grants of up to $100,000 per community through the FireSmart program to help communities minimize the damage of wildfires in their communities. I know that several in my constituency have received those funds. I can think of several, Cynthia being one of them. However, the cost to communities of the recent fires is in the millions, so one wonders just what this funding will do, really, to address it and what communities will be able to do to minimize that damage.

Bill 24 addresses the issue of wildfire preparedness in three main areas: amendments to the fines, empowering forest officers, and the clarification of amendments. Well, no one is arguing that these are not important areas to address. One wonders if this bill adequately covers these issues and if there are other pieces that should have been included in this legislation.

For instance, in section 17 the provisions for the fire season seem to be largely gratuitous. This period runs from April 1 to October 31 each year. While this bill provides for an earlier start date to the fire season, this does not really make much of a difference as 17(2) already gives the minister the ability to modify the fire season and to adapt to environmental conditions. So what does this provision actually change or do to our capacity to plan and manage forest fires? I suppose it encourages planning. But, then, what if this winter instead is a long one? Have we wasted resources? Wouldn't flexibility be better? Fire companies already had the winter to prepare for the upcoming season. Better planning seems to be the logic behind a firm date, and we will monitor whether that is effective.

One of the pieces of this bill which I support is the increased authority or the flexibility for conservation officers to use their judgment on the ground. I believe that this bill is trying to improve our ability as Albertans to be prepared for the inevitability of wildfires and to enable our officers to deal in a crisis with the critical decisions and responses that are necessary in order to protect life and communities. Being able to stop machinery or off-highway vehicle use if there is a perceived danger of wildfires makes sense. However, this provision presupposes that officers are in the right place at the right time to be able to see people using their ATVs in the backcountry and to take appropriate steps to prevent forest fires.

A concern I have about Bill 24 is:

Section 31.4(1) A forest officer may, without a warrant, seize any thing that the forest officer has reasonable grounds to believe harbours a forest pest.

(b) in subsections (2) and (3) by striking out "product" and substituting "thing."

This takes a reasonable "product" to a vague "thing" and makes this portion of the legislation fraught with possible misinterpretation. It is not unreasonable for an officer to be able to seize a product that harbours a forest pest. We are all aware of the damage that the pine beetle can do, and we all understand that certain noxious weeds can do great damage to our fields and forests and waterways, but replacing "product" and substituting "thing" is far too broad. Laws need to clarify the actions of government and citizens, and I'm not sure that this law does that.

The language in bills that will become law must use specific language. Laws limit our actions. They set boundaries. They help to clarify situations so that individuals will live to together in community in a harmonious fashion. When laws are vague, they can be open to abuse, to confusion, and they can be used by overzealous government officials not to enhance public safety and security but to unnecessarily control the freedom that we as citizens should be able to exercise. Also, the increase in fines for companies and individuals when they leave unattended fires or leave an area with debris that could prove a fire hazard will hopefully make people think more carefully about their approach to fire safety. While this power already existed under the minister, giving the fire officer power to ask any commercial operation within a kilometre of public land for a fire plan, under threat of closure: this might be too broad. Were there really any complaints in the past with regard to this, and what's the appeal, other than the minister being the one to be able to order the closure?

Madam Speaker, my concern about this bill falls into a larger framework. The government has tried to make sense of the devastation from the fires of Slave Lake and Fort McMurray, and they have put this piece of legislation together, which may or may not make a difference to our communities and families across the province. This bill falls short of what we would expect if the government looked more critically to find the lessons in the Fort McMurray fire. For instance, the recommendations in the Flat Top Complex report are largely ignored, yet that report provides state-of-the-art analysis and ideas for reducing the risks. Updating this legislation is only one of the recommendations and perhaps the one that will have the least impact on the ground in a fire situation.

My larger concern, however, is that this government once again has failed to listen to other stakeholders in drafting and working this bill through the legislative process. They've certainly ignored the opposition. The opposition parties are not on this side of the House simply to speak against anything the government tries to do. We have a very real and important part to play in making sure that legislation that is passed by this House in fact will do what it purports to do.

There is expertise on this side of the House, that is repeatedly ignored by the government. We used the legislative process, debated the bill, and brought up ideas to make the bill better. We're not playing politics to hear ourselves talk. We do not stand up to address a bill in second reading or Committee of the Whole just to play out a part. As Albertans and as people who have been affected by fires in Fort McMurray and in other areas of this province, we have valuable insight and input to offer, yet as seems to be the norm with this government, they have largely ignored the input of the opposition.

Obviously, we need to do more to prevent the devastation of forest fires across the province, but our questions on whether this bill is on target to do that, our questions on whether the legislation is enough, our suggestions for implementing previous recommendations to prevent forest fires, and our concern that there is no mention or inclusion of new or evolving technologies that may provide safety to communities and families have been largely ignored. They are offered not in the spirit of grandstanding but in a sincere and concerned manner that speaks to our commitment to reducing or minimizing the risks of devastation from forest fires.

Our members, thankfully, have lived through such a catastrophe and have much to offer by way of recommendations to keep Albertans safe. We wish this government had listened more carefully to our suggestions. We still support this bill but want to remind the government that there is much more to do in preventing, fighting, and recovering from fires.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other hon. members wishing to speak on 29(2)(a)? Comments, questions?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this morning to speak on Bill 24, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016. There is nothing more devastating to a community than a natural disaster, never mind having a fire rip through your community. These devastations claim people's lives, homes, livelihoods, families, animals, and way of life.

We all sympathized with all the folks up in Fort McMurray when just last year a large fire ripped through their community, leaving homes, businesses, pets, and other important items behind to escape with just the clothes on their backs and, gratefully, their lives. Many lost things which can never be replaced, like our leader, who had to leave behind his family and all the precious memories of his late son, that were completely burned up in that horrific fire. In that same fire many, actually over 100,000 people, had to flee that horrific fire, narrowly escaping with their lives. Then there was the Slave Lake fire a few years back, in 2011 to be exact, which devastated that community. Thousands of lives will never be the same because of the loss from that fire.

The main parts of this particular bill deal mostly with amending fines and empowering forest officers to make quicker decisions in the face of a fire threat. There is not a whole lot here, but I'm happy to see some positive aspects that will hopefully prevent some tragedies and maybe curtail and help reduce the magnitude of potential fires. Increasing fines for individuals and companies will hopefully encourage some to think twice and decrease some of the incidents that happen.

In drier years and seasons helping companies to prepare by beginning fire seasons earlier is definitely a wise move, but I am just reminded of what happened last year in Fort McMurray when this government reduced the water bombers' contracts and reduced the overall budget. How will we prepare this year if the funds are not properly allocated? We can't continue making the same mistakes over and over and expecting different outcomes. Some proper planning and foresight needs to be taken into consideration. We hope that increasing fines will deter some of those who are careless, but just that alone will not deter all. I am sure you're quite aware of that. Things will happen.

While I am pleased to see that this government now takes fire prevention more seriously and is taking some steps to improve fire readiness – I'm saying that I can see that they mean well and want to do the right thing – I believe that more could be done. We could add some very important amendments to enhance this bill, especially now, since we are taking the time in this House to address these extremely important issues. I know that we are the opposition, but when it comes to matters such as the safety of all Albertans, I think that having all parties involved would bring about well-rounded discussions, especially expert advice received readily. I want to emphasize that. All of the devastation that one fire can create should give us good reason to review all the amendments and make sure that this bill is adequately equipped to be the very best of our ability. I'm disappointed that we won't be allotted that time to ensure a stronger review.

This bill is being amended out of a direct response to the devastating fires in Fort McMurray and Slave Lake. I'm disappointed that the questions we have raised were not answered, at least not very well, in particular by the minister, who hasn't answered anything at all. I really wish that we could take the necessary time to cross all the t's and dot all the i's so that we could tell Albertans that we took the time to make sure we had the best Forest and Prairie Protection Act review possible.

I ask you now: can we say that any of these additions would have prevented the fires in Fort McMurray and Slave Lake? We know that the Flat Top Complex wildfire review committee submitted a 95-page report to the minister of environment and sustainable resource development in 2012. That report listed many recommendations. Many of those recommendations from that report were not used. The only recommendation that was used was to update the Forest and Prairie Protection Act. Interestingly, this recommendation suggested that definitions in the act needed to be updated. In section 31.4(1) subsection (b) proposes changing what can be confiscated from a "product" to a "thing". This section indeed gives officers too much power and does not define what "thing" might be. That causes me concern. We needed to narrow the scope of what the government included when they gave the forest officers the power to seize and destroy. This section seems to add anything, which is too extensive. I believe that more thought should have been put into this section, frankly, way more thought.

We also see the updating of administrative penalties – $5,000 clearly isn't enough – and I do agree with the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry on that number, especially when you see all the destruction that can occur from a fire. It has to be enough so that people remember what it could cost if they are not responsible in lighting fires, an amount that would significantly hurt the pocketbook. They've got to feel it there, right in the pocketbook.

Mr. Speaker, more thought needs to be given, and even though I do support this bill, I still would have liked to have seen more thought and amendments to clear things up and create better legislation. I said "Mr. Speaker," and it's Madam Speaker. I apologize. I saw a little bit of a chuckle, and it's well deserved.

I understand that it was suggested that implementing all the recommendations from the Flat Top Complex report would have been around $500 million back in 2013. Would that investment have reduced the damage that was inflicted by the Fort McMurray fire? FireSmart recommendations are just a common-sense approach.

So, Madam Speaker, while my colleagues and I do support Bill 24, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016, I would have liked to have seen some of the amendments my colleagues brought forth included and a bit more time taken to bring in additions and subtractions that would have strengthened this bill. I also hope this government does not think that this file is now closed, because this bill only scratches the surface of things we need to do to be able to prevent, fight, and recover from fires.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 24, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016. First of all, I would like to thank the government for bringing forward this piece of legislation. While it's certainly not as complete and fulsome as we probably would have liked to have seen, it's certainly a step in the right direction in a number of different areas.

I'd also just like to briefly thank the government for the way that they worked so well with the Leader of the Opposition and the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo during the Fort McMurray fire. It would be lovely to be able to – my colleague from across the way talked about a vaccine of collaboration. It would be great to see the same sort of collaboration that we have at different times like during the fire. I thought the Premier did a very good job both working with the opposition during that time and representing our province, frankly. So it's good to see that the government is acting on some of the issues that have arisen since that time, and this bill is a small step in that direction. I do believe that there is a significant amount of work to be done.

Just recently my colleague from Cypress-Medicine Hat was speaking of a report down in that part of the province identifying some significant fire risks for the area of Cypress, in the Cypress Hills, a report that gives some indication that if there was to be a wildfire in that area, it's possible that residents on the hill and in that area would have less than 10 minutes to evacuate. So there is a ton of work that needs to be done.

I'm sure my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre will speak about some of the older forests in that constituency and some of the risks that that poses. How we manage those forest assets is critically important. How we manage those assets both from an environmental perspective, a recreational-use perspective, as well as living in and managing the risk is so critically important to those regions and, in many respects, to our entire province because we are so fortunate to live in a resource-rich province. It's not just what's below the ground; it's also what's above the ground. We have a forestry asset that is the envy of many jurisdictions across North America, and we need to be taking all of the steps to ensure that it is managed well.

Just yesterday, Madam Speaker, we had the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky speak about Mackenzie county and some of the issues around the forested areas in Mackenzie county. From memory, I believe he spoke about 1.3 million hectares of land that is going to be tied up in the draft caribou management plan. All of these factors are so important in how they work together, be it wildlife management, wildfire management, forestry. It is a very complex environment that we function in.

We saw a number of pieces of this legislation, and as you'll be very aware, Madam Speaker, I was pleased to support this bill at all stages of its reading thus far and will continue to do so at third reading. It's important that we improve our fire readiness for all of our province, and it's tough to know exactly what the results of these steps will be. Will they prevent forest fires? It's tough to actually know, but it's important that we take the steps that we are able to take, the reasonable means that we're able to take to do what we can to minimize that risk. That risk will never be fully eliminated, but it is important that we do what we can to minimize the risk of forest fires.

There are a number of potential areas of concern, as have been mentioned by a lot of my colleagues in terms of the definitions. I recognize the government's position around a "thing" or a "forest product" and what a forest product is really already defined as and how that presents a risk to even being able to move something as simple as a pile of logs, which is clearly a product of the forest. But we still have some reservations around the possibility of the abuse of the word "thing."

Oftentimes in this Legislature, you know, politics is the art of what's possible. It may not have been possible to have a perfect definition, but it's important that we all work to do our best to ensure that the legislation balances the needs and requirements of forestry professionals as well as the freedoms that we all enjoy and that those that use the forests for recreation or for economic purposes are also able to do that. As has been highlighted on a couple of occasions with the use of the word "thing," does that leave the opportunity for abuse or the inappropriate seizure of things that really ought not be seized under the guise of pest control?

It's my hope that the government will continue to take proactive steps, whether it's truly implementing programs such as FireSmart, which was developed to reduce the negative impact of forest fires.

You know, I know that there was a lot of public discussion around FireSmart prior to the Fort McMurray fire and whether or not the resources were actually being expended that had been allotted to prevent fires. Sometimes a significant event can happen, and we get distracted by that, not allowing other areas that were engaging in the FireSmart program to really continue along there. Sometimes the worse thing that can happen is that we allocate resources to such an important program and then those resources aren't actually expended on that program. So our best intentions have gone awry in that we had the intention of preventing forest fires, but when it actually came down to the nuts and bolts of ensuring that the program is delivered upon, we failed in that area. Fire protection has multiple aspects. Prevention is certainly one of them, and we need to make sure that we are delivering on the programs where funds have been allocated because they have the real opportunity to reduce costs across a number of departments if we prevent these sorts of fires.

Let me just conclude, Madam Speaker, with a reminder or a reaffirmation of my support for the legislation. Oftentimes when I rise in this place, even if it's speaking in favour, it doesn't mean that it's only about heaping praise on the government but about the government's job to make sure that we get the best possible legislation the first time past the post. I'd like to thank the government for bringing it forward. I hope that the extension of the fire season as well as some of the discussion around fines will make a positive impact on our province, and I look forward to supporting this bill at third reading.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to the original bill? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today, of course, to speak to Bill 24, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act. As you know, Madam Speaker, I represent several communities that are in the mountains and within significant forest areas of our province. While my communities have been fortunate enough not to experience something similar to what happened in Fort McMurray or Slave Lake, without a doubt, we've had a few close calls along the way. It's a fear that many people within the communities of Sundre and Rocky Mountain House, in particular, in my riding worry about at certain times of the year. They have had close calls. I can think of times when people have been praying that the wind changed and didn't go the wrong way on us.

You know, first, of course, let me express my sympathies to my colleagues from Fort McMurray and all the people from Fort McMurray. I can't imagine the trauma that that has caused on their families.

You know, my family in 2007, roughly, 2008 lived through a fire. We woke up in the middle of the night, and a significant portion of our property was on fire. Fortunately for us, Madam Speaker, our living quarters weren't destroyed, but it was traumatic. My twins, my youngest children, Austin and Chyanne, were about three or four at the time. They still remember that night very, very clearly and probably will for the rest of their lives. It is really traumatic to see part of your life on fire like that. I think that it's noble that we would work to make sure that that doesn't happen to anybody in the future and try to prevent fires like Slave Lake and Fort McMurray.

With that said, Madam Speaker, I'm happy that we brought forward some legislation, and in general I support Bill 24 and the intent of what the government is trying to do with it. I'm glad that they brought it forward.

My communities, though, Madam Speaker, have a lot of old-growth fires. So what's happened – most of the big fires that I can remember in the last decade around my community may have been started by human causes or lightning, back and forth, different situation for each fire, but often the reason that they became so big and became so dangerous for our communities was because the forests were really, really old in that area.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, welcome.

One near my area called the Wildhorse Creek fire in about 2006 was started, I believe, from man-made causes. That's what they determined. But the reason that it took off so fast and became such a big fire was because of how old the forest was. It became an extremely dangerous situation really, really fast. If the forest was not that old, it would not have become as dangerous as quickly and would not have been as hard to control. This is the problem, particularly in Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, which has such vast forest areas. The problem is trying to manage the issue between what's natural for the forest and what we have to do to try to protect lives and property and livelihoods and that those two issues are balanced.

I know that in the Ya Ha Tinda in my constituency, a place that's near and dear to my heart, there is evidence that our First Nations people were actually lighting fires in that area on purpose for centuries. What they would do is that most of the community would move on when they were done hunting in that area, and they would leave behind some people that would light the area on fire. If you've ever been to the Ya Ha Tinda, which is one of the most beautiful places in this province, you'll know that it's famous for its abundance of game, its beautiful landscapes, and all that. Fire was natural for that. We need to make sure that we're not only protecting property, which is what we're trying to do with this bill, have plans in place to try to prevent another Fort McMurray, another Slave Lake, but we also have to recognize that we're going to have to let the forest do its natural process. When we try to prevent that natural process, we actually create bigger danger for the communities that are associated to it. Kelowna, I think, would be another example, our neighbours to the west. That was a very, very old forest, and we saw how quickly that situation became dangerous.

I am disappointed that there isn't a lot of talk about that within this bill, and I do encourage the government going forward to have some further discussions amongst themselves, amongst the bureaucrats that are involved in forestry as well as the communities that are bordering our old forests.

The other thing I will point out, Mr. Speaker, in this bill, as many of my hon. colleagues have – it's a little bit troubling and disappointing that it's really only about forests, it feels like, with this bill. We've seen lots of prairie-type fires, and prairie fires can be extremely dangerous, certainly, for the same type of reasons. They can be just as fast. In 2015 during the last week of the general election – this was more in the foothills area, but it was outside the forest – I had to rush home from the other side of my constituency to be with my family to spray all the barns down and do all that stuff. It was the same thing: a fire that was moving across an area that had no forests, and it was coming very, very fast. Several of my neighbours lost homes in that situation. So it's a real threat. It really can happen. I think that until you've seen it, you can't fully understand how quickly a fire can move across large grass areas. Just like with the old-growth forests, we need to make sure that we're addressing the prairie fire issue as well going forward, you know, so that we don't see that within our prairie communities.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Welcome back, Madam Speaker.

The last issue I want to talk about – and I'm disappointed that the government, Madam Speaker, did not move on this issue – is the issue of the time. I know that the third party brought forward an amendment to try to cap and make specific the time that a forestry officer would have to report back when making fire plans. It may seem simple. Why would forestry take this long? Is the opposition saying that the bureaucrats would try to drag it out? That's not what we're saying. I represent communities where we already know how far behind our forestry officers are in many things and how far behind our SRD officers are in many things.

I can think of two major forest reserve leases right now where the real estate sale has been held up for over a year because they're waiting on a plan. That's a significant thing for small businesses that are trying to move forward. I can think of a dozen grazing leases right now where the sale is being held up for the same reason, because they're waiting on reports. Now that we're going to be working so closely with the industrial areas and commercial organizations to prevent fires, it's a good thing. We also have to make sure that we're not limiting their ability to do business and that there are reasonable timelines for forestry to interact with them.

So with those things that I'm concerned are not in the bill and with the true encouragement of the government to look at those things going forward, I will say, though, that in general I'm very happy that we brought forward this legislation and will be happy to support it.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: My apologies. Not under 29(2)(a).

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members with questions or comments?

Seeing none, are there any wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would just like to move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 25 Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act

Mr. Loewen moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that it is necessary to have the recommendations from the oil sands advisory group tabled in the Assembly before the bill can proceed.

[Adjourned debate on the amendment November 9: Mr. Panda]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: We're on the motion, correct, Madam Speaker?

The Acting Speaker: No. We're on the amendment.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Would you like to speak to the amendment?

Mr. Nixon: Yes. Absolutely. I just wanted to make sure where we were at. Sorry, Madam Speaker.

As I have said before in rising to speak on Bill 25, I have deep concerns with this bill. This bill, in my mind and in many of my colleagues' minds and I think in the minds of professionals all across the industry in this province, is essentially just a cap on our economy, Madam Speaker. I know that you know that we have lots of concerns. I think you probably share with me the concerns for the things that are happening in our communities right now across our province, the trouble that families across our province have run into right now because of the economic situation. I think we can all sympathize with all of the families that are out of work right now, the stress that that is likely causing their families and our communities as a whole. I think of my friends and neighbours back home who have been affected by this economic situation, and it really troubles me. I'm sure it troubles the members opposite as they think of the people in their constituencies who have been impacted by the economic downturn. I certainly know that it does my caucus colleagues.

The reality is that that's what we face as a province right now. We've lost over a hundred thousand jobs in the last year. When you add in contractors, something that is a little harder probably to calculate but something that really impacts my community – many people across my community work in the contract business and in some way associate with the energy industry.

As I talked about earlier when we were debating Bill 25, Madam Speaker, the forest reserve outside of my constituency is a place that people all across the province gather on the weekends. It's quite a sight. If you ever get a chance to go up in a helicopter west of Rocky Mountain House or Sundre on the May long weekend, you will be pretty impressed at how many people they can cram into the forest back there. Then often as the weekends end, it gets smaller. There are certain people vacationing, but it's a lot quieter back there. For the whole summer, if you talk to the RCMP and fish and wildlife who are patrolling west of Sundre and Rocky Mountain House, this year it stayed packed with trailers and everything, and that's because people were out of work, so they just chose to go camping for the summer and enjoy their time with their kids. It really illustrated how many people are out of work. Somebody might say: well, they should be looking. But there just is no work right now. The fact that we would be considering a bill right now that would further cap our economy is troubling to me. It's troubling to me why we would do that when we see such tough times.

11:00

The other thing is that this bill is going to hamper investment going forward, which will limit the ability that we have to be able to get out of this tough economic situation and, in my mind, will just continue to prolong the situation that we find ourselves in. I think that we owe it to the people that are suffering in our province right now to be focused on trying to increase our economy and get people back to work, not trying to decrease our economy and limit people's ability to work going forward.

You know, there are some studies right now, Madam Speaker, or some numbers that experts have given us in regard to what the reduction would be of our economy going forward as a result of Bill 25. The predictions are anywhere from a $153.41 billion to a $254.74 billion reduction in our economy. I think that sometimes when you're in our business, in the Legislature, we see these big numbers and they just become numbers on a sheet because we deal with so many of them. But that's a staggering number, especially when you look at the fact that if all of the pipelines that we want approved were approved today – and let's hope that happens – the estimated increase to the Canadian economy would be $30 billion. Thirty billion dollars. It would be great, but the smallest predicted loss to the economy because of the bill this government is bringing forward, Bill 25, is a $153 billion loss and even upwards of $254 billion, so it could be considerably more.

How can we justify bringing forward at this time legislation that could reduce our economic activity that much, that could reduce it that drastically, particularly when we still haven't even seen the report that the government has commissioned on this very topic come forward? We haven't even seen that, so we don't even have all of the facts before us right now to be able to make a decision along those lines.

At the same time, when you add in the fact that 100,000 people have already lost work largely because of the reduction in our energy industry, you know, the fact that we're now seeing some trouble within our agricultural sector, which will compound the problem that we're facing economically in the province of Alberta, I think, Madam Speaker, it's reasonable to say that it's incumbent on the government to stand up and explain why they would want to reduce our economy this much and, ultimately, cost us more jobs at a time when we've already lost more than enough jobs.

I think that government members would agree, I would hope, that losing 100,000 jobs in one year on their watch is more than enough jobs to lose and that one of our top priorities right here, right now should be trying to spur our economy on, to get out of the way and stop making things worse, which, in my mind and in most of my hon. colleagues' minds, is what this government has done in regard to this economy and jobs so far. They've been able to actually make the situation worse by interfering. Most Albertans that I've talked to and, I suspect, that all members of this Assembly have talked to just say the same thing: please stop making it worse and, instead, work with us to reduce the red tape, get people back to work, get paycheques back to families, and help us. That's what they want to hear.

But this bill does not do that, Madam Speaker. This bill reduces the economy, caps the economy, and it causes a tremendous amount of difficulty for our industry going forward. The other thing about it is that it picks winners and losers. Many of the constituents that I've talked to don't want the government in the business of picking winners and losers in our industry. They want the market determining where we go. I think that any time we see the government attempting to get their fingers so far into the largest industry in our province, we have to be asking ourselves: why? Why would we do that?

Again, though, why at a time when constituents in the ridings of everybody in this Assembly are losing their homes at alarming rates now, when employers I know in my constituency – and the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon will also, I would suspect, say this as well, that there are many employers right now who are bidding work at a tremendous loss to their organization just to keep their employees working. They're doing what they can for our communities. They're doing what they can for their employees to try to survive this situation, to get us to the next stage so we can move Alberta back onto a prosperous footing. They're taking a loss in their company, sometimes a drastic loss, and they're just trying to hang on and not lay off their employees, because they understand the consequences to their employees' families.

We here in this Chamber should be at the very least thinking the same thing: what is the consequence of Bill 25 to the very people that are suffering so much right now across our province? It is significant when you look at how much money will be reduced from our economy going forward. We also have employees right now across this province – I've talked to many of them in my constituency offices – who have had to take pay reductions at work to be able to help their employers keep their businesses going. They've had to accept the fact that they've had to reduce their pay, often causing a tremendous amount of difficulty for their families back home.

So if you're one of those employees sitting in a community somewhere in Alberta right now and you're hearing that the government wants to cap our economy, cap production, limit investment trust further in the future, create instability in our largest industry, you have to be wondering: "What is my government doing? I'm trying to pay my bills. I can barely get my house paid for, and my government is trying to cap the economy, stop my opportunity to be able to find more work in the future, create more job loss, cause more contractors to go out of business." Madam Speaker, I think you would agree that that's a pretty reasonable thing for them to be asking.

One of the reasons why we wanted this bill to go to committee was because we wanted to be able to make sure that the industry and experts would be able to communicate to all members of this Assembly what exactly this bill would do, what exactly would be the consequences and the benefit of this piece of legislation to the people of Alberta, because, Madam Speaker, that is who we're here to represent.

We're not here to represent ideological organizations; we're here to represent the people of Alberta. Those are the people that sent us here. Those are the people that have entrusted us with a great responsibility to come here and continue to make our province the greatest place in the world to live, not to come here and limit the ability of their economy going forward, not to come here and cause more people to lose jobs, not to come here and pile on at a time when people are losing homes and banks are foreclosing on homes, not to come here at a time when employers are having to lose money just to send people to work.

This is all at the same time that we have one of the largest tax increases in the history of Alberta, that we're about to put on the people of Alberta, that we're about to put on the charity sector of Alberta, which is suffering terribly as well. Charities, as you know, Madam Speaker, are facing the perfect storm right now in our province. They're seeing a significant increase in demand for the services that they provide to the people of Alberta while at the same time seeing a significant decrease in revenue from donations and from the government because of the economic downturn that we face. We now pile a tax onto the charitable sector, through a carbon tax, that makes things worse for them, and now, with Bill 25, we're bringing forward a bill that's going to again make the economy even worse, cause more job loss, which is going to put more demand on our charities.

The food bank in Rocky Mountain House can't even keep up. The food bank in Calgary can't keep up. It seems to me, Madam Speaker – and I'm sure you would agree – that when food banks aren't able to keep up with what's going on in our province, maybe the province's elected officials' top priority should be the 100,000-plus people that are out of work. To me, it seems like that should be the highest priority of this House right now. Sadly, instead, we're standing here debating a bill that will make it worse for the very people that we've been sent here to help.

We still see no explanation from the government members of how they can justify reducing our economy by upwards of $254 billion, not to mention the carbon leakage scenarios, which are very real, that the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake has done a very great job in this Assembly of articulating. There's been no response from the government at all, but . . . [interjections] I know. The postsecondary minister is indicating that maybe he has a response. I look forward to hearing it next, but I haven't seen it yet.

The fact is that we could do all of this – we could do all of this – succeed in reducing our economy, succeed in putting more people out of work, succeed in seeing more people lose their homes, succeed in more businesses being shut, more poverty, more frustration in our province. Also, on the other side we'll be seeing all our industries leave our province, leave our country, go elsewhere in the world, continue to produce their products, and employ people of other nations. Nothing but silence, Madam Speaker, and I know you've seen it. Nothing but silence from that side of the House on this issue. Nothing but silence. It's disappointing. It is.

We have a company in Sundre right now that provides water. It's been there for as long as I can remember. It provides water to all the local businesses, you know, in the big bottles. I don't know what you call those. I guess they're big water bottles.

An Hon. Member: Carboys.

Mr. Nixon: Yeah.

I had a coffee with the owner of that organization when I was last back in my constituency. He employs six people in the community of Sundre. It's not a large community, so an employer of six people is important to our community. He's having to lay off half of his staff. Half of his staff. That's why we should be voting for this amendment, to be able to give ourselves time to figure out why this is being brought forward, to make sure that the facts and the consequences for the people that we represent are clear and that we're making decisions, not rash decisions, Madam Speaker, but intelligent, thought-out decisions, with the full consequences of that decision that we're going to make on the table so that we can make the best decision possible for the people that we represent.

That's not unreasonable, I don't think, Madam Speaker. I'm sure you don't think it's unreasonable that we would do that. I know that you would be just as concerned about your constituents as I am.

You know, Meals on Wheels out of Olds. The other day my colleague from the Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills constituency, right next door to me, let us know that it's going to cost them about $4,000 or $5,000 more a year just because of the carbon tax. That's a significant thing to a small charity doing great work in the community of Olds. That's significant to them. We need them to do that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to 29(2)(a), questions or comments? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Well, thank you. My colleague got cut off there, and we were talking about a very valuable asset to his community. I think it's a really important piece of this conversation as to why we should stop and go back and maybe start again. I just think it's a really useful piece of this conversation, and I'm hoping my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and all those other wonderful towns in a beautiful part of Alberta could tell us a little bit more about the Meals on Wheels and maybe some other valuable organizations within the community that just really, really feel like they're getting kicked and kicked and kicked. This is important, and I think this House needs to hear about that.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you to the hon. member for the question. What I was talking about was the tremendous impact that our nonprofit sector has on the social safety net of our province. They're important to us, and the fact is that they're seeing such an increase in demand on their services because of what's going on in the economy.

The reason this matters for this bill, Madam Speaker, is because this bill will further reduce the economy and put more pressure on those organizations at the same time that this government has chosen to tax homeless shelters, seniors' facilities – and this is what I really don't get – our school boards. We have to think about this. We take taxpayer dollars. We send them to our school boards to be able to fund education, which we all believe is important. They're already taxed and having trouble keeping up. We put in a carbon tax, which drastically increases the cost of heating the schools and drastically increases their biggest cost, which is transportation, so it drastically increases their bus costs. We don't increase anything for them in regard to the carbon tax we just put on them. We're now going to hire administrators to collect the carbon tax back from the same school boards that we just sent money to.

Now, I know that the hon. members have talked to their school boards because I share some of the school boards with some of the members across the way, and I know that the school boards have been very, very clear about their deep concern about the impact on them, on municipalities, and on charities. This goes to the core of what's wrong with Bill 25. We already have so much trouble that is going on in our constituencies because of what's going on with the economic situation. We already have a government who has made it tremendously worse on the nonprofit sector, on Albertans, moms and dads, and now they're going to pile on their ideological agenda with this bill and further reduce our economy, further cause more people to be out of work, put more pressure on the nonprofit sector just to hold things together, and in some places they're just barely hanging on. That's a fact.

All the while, Madam Speaker, they won't even rise in this Assembly and justify what they're trying to do. They won't take the time to get this to a committee and ensure . . . [interjections] I see that the member from Athabasca thinks it's really funny about people out of work, but I've been up to Athabasca recently. It's not that funny to them, I can tell you that. We need to make sure that we are getting this bill right, make sure that we're not wrecking our economy further. That's all that this bill is doing, and that's why we have to have a serious conversation because the people that you represent and the people that we represent are depending on us to get this right, not to make it worse for them.

Now, I know that the member from Hinton is heckling right now at me about this, but there are people in his constituency that are just as much out of work. I know because I back onto his constituency. They're suffering just as much as the people in my constituency, so this should not be a partisan issue. The fact is that people are hurting in our province right now – that's the fact – and this bill will further reduce the economy, further put more people out of work, and continue to make things worse, all at a time when the government that is bringing it forward has already made it worse for charities, made it worse for schools, made it worse for municipalities, and made it worse for Alberta families.

Instead, we could slow this legislation down. We could do it right. We could make sure that we understand the consequences and that we're making the right decision for the people of Alberta, not just rashly pushing through legislation without a thought to the consequences.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to rise today to speak on the amendment to Bill 25. You know, I support my colleagues in the views they've already expressed on this bill. I'd have less opposition to this bill if it was presented as an alternative to carbon tax rather than that the government would go through with the tax, but it means that they're going to go through with it. We don't want to see them go through with that tax.

This emission limit is in addition to the carbon tax that this government is levelling on Albertans and Alberta businesses. A cap on emissions gives at least some semblance of being a measure to actually help battle climate change whereas a carbon levy seems to be just another tax that families have no choice but to pay. Ultimately, this emissions cap that our government is introducing is just one more signal among many others to Albertans and to investors that this government's priorities are, frankly, mixed up.

You see, Canada produces 1.8 per cent of global emissions, and Alberta's oil sands are less than 10 per cent of that, just a fraction. So even if we shut down development in the oil sands entirely, there'd be a negligible difference in global output. Globally, the demand for oil is increasing. We all know that. The facts are out there. This negligible difference would also not last very long because other jurisdictions would pick up the slack, and they're not always in places that have high environmental standards or ethical practices. Some are in war zones. Some are spewing out pollution and CO<sub>2</sub> and carbons.

Alberta is one of the best places in the world for our practices. I've heard some people suggest that Alberta is setting a good example to other jurisdictions by introducing measures such as a carbon tax or emissions cap. It's possible that this hamstringing of our resource sector will gently nudge other governments who are considering action, but the signal that is being sent much more powerfully is to investors, and that signal is that this government is not on your side.

We're an example to the world when it comes to democracy and human rights, and this world does have dictatorships. The oil-producing countries that don't see the value in democracy don't care about environmental leadership either. Got to think about that. We care, and they do not. They will take this opportunity to make more money and steal more of Alberta's investment instead because investment will travel where the money is.

This government's press release when this bill was released said that this cap is about repairing the province's reputation. Well, Madam Speaker, I'm proud of what Alberta stood for before this NDP was elected. Alberta leads the world with its exemplary environmental stewardship and commitment to worker safety in the energy industry. What kind of leader doesn't prioritize the well-being of their own people rather than enabling those they disapprove of?

In fact, Madam Speaker, wouldn't it actually be worse for the climate, globally speaking, if other jurisdictions start producing oil that Alberta doesn't because the world needs the oil? It would certainly be worse for human rights. If Alberta emits less per barrel of oil produced than other jurisdictions but is still prevented from producing more oil because a cap has been reached, then we have other countries picking up the slack to meet the global demand. I'd say that it would be better for us to compete with the least environmentally friendly businesses and outproduce them if we're outproducing with clean technology and clean oil. I'd rather see us doing that and providing the world with the additional oil that it needs.

But no. Here in Alberta there are Albertans without work, praying for the economy to pick up again, and the government goes about introducing a cap for Alberta, what seems to be, frankly, an arbitrary number. Our economy is struggling, and now is not the right time to put restrictions on economic growth. Innovation is a good thing. What's stopping investors from going to other jurisdictions where they're rewarded for innovating and investment in jobs is welcomed?

Madam Speaker, the Official Opposition isn't against everything this government is trying to accomplish, and I think in many cases we want the same results or outcomes. We want clean technologies. What the Official Opposition is asking for is for this government to slow down and to not rush into decisions or implementation of new legislation. We need to take the time to have proper studies done and to think things through.

It's clear that this government has no intention, has no interest in providing everyone in Alberta with an economic impact study with regard to the climate leadership plan that they put forward. We've seen no studies about the impact that the premature closing of coal-fired electricity plants will have, no studies about the impact on workers at those plants and what it means for these towns, nor what the government is going to do about it. Do they care?

Alberta also needs the time to digest what the government is advocating for. So you come up with an idea, you come up with a plan, but you don't give Albertans time to digest what that idea is. Instead, it seems to just get rammed down their throats.

They also need time to adjust. The speed with which this government is trying to pass bills tells me that they aren't really interested in listening to what Albertans have to say. Bill 6 comes to mind. Minimum wage comes to mind. The carbon tax comes to mind. The NDP might say: we heard Albertans' concerns, and this is the answer. Well, it might be a concern, sure, but the NDP is then shoving their own solution down Albertans' throats without listening to what Albertans think and what the best solution is.

You know, I've heard time and time again in my constituency, in my riding, that this government has not consulted them. They've heard your message that, "Yes; we're consulting Albertans," but they're asking me: "How come I can't have my input into what they're saying? Where's that opportunity for me to be able to consult and give feedback?" I know that they've sent e-mails. They've sent letters. They've tried making phone calls. But this communication has not been a two-way street.

Look, we all want to live in a clean, healthy environment, and we want a sustainable, thriving economy. You know, when I used to go camping with my dad, we'd go to the campsite, and my dad would always say: we're going to leave this campsite as clean or cleaner than when we got here. I think that's what we as legislators are expected to do, to legislate and make sure that we're keeping this environment as clean, if not cleaner, and industry has been moving in that direction.

Industry in Alberta has been an example across the world, leaving the campsite, as it were, cleaner than it was 20, 30 years ago. But there are fair disagreements in how, the best way to go about attaining these results, and the appropriate timing for making these significant changes. It is not compassionate to kick people while they're down. I thought the left prided themselves on compassion. Where's the compassion when people don't have jobs and they're looking for answers?

Madam Speaker, this is an important piece of legislation. This potential law will set in motion a lot of different processes that counter many of the processes that Alberta has had here for many generations. This is not to say that change at times isn't important. I think we can all agree that fresh eyes and fresh ears on any issue in Alberta is important. But this government promised to be more open and transparent than the government before it. I can't help but wonder if this government meant it then or if it was just an election idea that they have pushed aside as bill after bill is rushed through this House at breakneck speed. [interjection] Exactly. Thank you.

If this government thinks that legislation can have a significant positive impact so as to change our environment and the economy for the better, then it should acknowledge that legislation also has the potential to have a significant negative impact on both the environment and the economy, too. This is just logic. No jurisdiction with a bad economy has a good environment across the world.

Again, this is an important piece of legislation. Shouldn't we give it a fair amount of time for policy and research and deliberation with the stakeholders? Let's see what OSAG has to say. That's a fair request. The government should hear what the people and the industry think of what this piece of legislation could mean for the province. Doesn't the input of the people from this province who elected this government matter? After we've heard from OSAG this bill could be sent to committee.

Committees allow people with concerns an opportunity to share their thoughts, people that the government might have missed, in quiet consultations in advance of presenting the bill. We can talk about this stuff in committees. Then the committee can bring back the recommendations to the House and enhance the chance of doing the most good while creating the least amount of harm.

Madam Speaker, this act, the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, is directly related to the oil sands advisory panel created last summer. What was the point of creating the panel if the government is going to go ahead and enact legislation like this without hearing from the group first? You know, Albertans would like to know: why are we spending money on this? Why are we spending the time? Why are we putting in the effort without actually hearing from the panel? Have the recommendations of this group been predetermined?

There has been a lot of criticism about some of the members of this panel. I know that some of my colleagues talked about the appointed panel members last week. It is understood that there are industry reps on the panel, and most of the reps are the companies' government relations folks or environmental affairs folks. This is somewhat good news, I think. We want people with boots-on-the-ground experience to counteract the expected views of nonindustry members that spend their time expressing their disapproval of Alberta. A lot of other countries want what we have, and shame on us if we don't take advantage of our good fortune.

I think it's fair to suggest that appointing known radical environmentalists or anti-oil sands activists flown in from other parts of the country – and I'm assuming that these airplanes used fossil fuels; I can't imagine how else they got over here – to advise the Alberta government on its implementation of the climate leadership plan is a bit of a problematic situation in my mind. Even so, Albertans want to hear what the group has to say now that the government has gone out and put forward the panel.

People have told me that they think the NDP want to keep the oil in the ground. That's what I hear. I live in an oil area. The NDP isn't doing much to convince them otherwise or to calm their fears. If keeping the oil in the ground . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? Comments or questions?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment REA1 lost]

[Motion on amendment REA1 lost]

The Acting Speaker: We are now back on the original bill, Bill 25. Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm tired of this government. I'm tired of the ideological bent that this government is using in its messaging and its actions.

The Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act limits growth on our own industries at a time when we need to create jobs, increase the ranks of the employed, and initiate and dictate the conversations with other Premiers and provinces on getting pipelines built to tidewater. This arbitrary cap will benefit the large companies who already own many of the leases that will fill out the difference between the current capacity and future capacity. Many of the small players, small Alberta companies and Canadian companies, are extremely concerned that they won't be able to grow, that they will be literally squeezed out of the energy market, and this is a major concern in a free market. This government might have the best of intentions with its environmental initiatives and these attempts at getting social licence in order that we get acceptance for our products but quite honestly demonstrates a bit of naïveté on our end.

This government's other environmental initiative, a carbon tax in the middle of a recession, is an absolute crock. They've created a new tax in the name of the environment, but it's still a tax. Any tax that makes things more expensive in an attempt at reducing consumption in the name of the environment is still a tax regardless of what you call it. This environmental initiative of limiting emissions in order to get social licence from other provinces and other countries is naive because every province in this country has benefited from the oil revenues that come from Alberta, and every other country that is condemning Canada for our natural resources are hypocrites because everybody uses petroleum products.

Virtually every nation that does have petroleum industries is worse than us in their environmental records. The United States, where there's so much well-funded resistance to our oil, is a prime example of this. In California they not only have the most emissions-intensive oil in the world but have petroleum industrial sites in the middle of residential neighbourhoods, yet we don't hear about them. They put tall walls around these industrial sites and line the exteriors with trees in hopes of mimicking a state.

We have hired guns in the Tides Foundation, mercenary groups that claim to fight for the environment but seem more like shells funded by the very oil companies that they claim to disparage.

Iraq, Iran, Saudi Arabia, Libya all export oil to the western nations, the so-called First World nations. These countries are known to stifle democracy and the rights of women. They have a vast difference in their classes of people. They deny basic human rights to so many, especially their immigrant workers. Yet England, Germany, France and so many others continue to buy product from them. None of these countries in the Middle East put limitations on their own products unless they're doing it to control global prices. Most countries prefer to grow their industries as they understand the needs of a good economy and money to function.

Whatever happened to ethical oil, ethical energy? Everyone jumped off that bandwagon when they realized the implications of limiting their access to energy, but they all did find a nice target to direct their hypocritical ethics towards. They feigned concern about Canada's energy industry, using left-wing tactics to their own benefit. It gives their own citizens the perception that their governments are environmentally ethical, and they have good feelings the next time they vote for their hypocritical governments. Do the members out of our government side, the NDP comrades, understand how they have benefited from our oil riches?

Those who worked in restaurants and cafes surely realize how much less in tips they would have made if there was no energy industry here in Alberta. The geologist from across the way probably wouldn't have experienced utilizing his education if it weren't for our oil industry's exploration investments. Would the environmental activist from across the way understand that she couldn't sit and sip her lattes with her professor and debate the finer points of a green Earth policy if it weren't for an industry that funded the very schools and universities that she hung out at while others worked hard in our northern communities, paying taxes on their hard-earned money?

The other side calls this emissions act a way of increasing competition amongst oil players, and they once again demonstrate that they haven't done any consulting, which is reflected in every bill that they've put out so far. They've consulted, all right. They consulted with the big four and are favouring those big players while squeezing the little guys out. It's a shame to see the activists from across the way who are so noble in their environmental cause look the other way provided these oil companies would stand with them hand in hand. I believe that term is called "hypocritical." This government speaks of the environment like they own it.

Truth be told, I've never met anyone that does not believe in clean earth, clean water, and clean air. All of my friends from Fort McMurray are very environmentally aware. We all recycle, we turn out the lights when we leave a room, and we have thermostats that are programmable, reducing energy costs. We have energy-efficient homes with high-efficiency furnaces. We have triple-paned windows with proper insulation. But I cannot and will not apologize for living in a northern climate that goes from plus 40 degrees to minus 40 degrees Celsius.

We need to have homes that are carbon intensive to build because it's through science – do you know science? – and technology that we have designed engineered homes that require these plastics, that require these petroleum-based building materials that blend wood with glue and other miscellaneous building materials. You're right; we don't live around the equator, where they build houses made of concrete and steel and they don't have central heating because they're in a climate that doesn't require it. But I'll tell you what about our engineered houses: these engineered pieces provide the strength to support roofs that can hold up to our elements, the snow loads. We have fibreglass insulation. We have thick plastic sheets lining our houses to prevent moisture from entering our homes and exposing us to mould and mildew. I will not apologize for living in the north and lighting a furnace to stay warm, nor for living in a carbon-intensive home.

The point is that I feel we as Canadians are feeling the brunt of environmentalism, and it is unnecessarily impairing us from succeeding as a economy and, more importantly, as an influencer. You see, when we are at our finest and our economic engine is humming along, Albertans and Canadians put their kids through higher education. They invest in their future. It's because we want our children to have a better life than we did. We want our children to work in more prestigious professions and industries to ensure their financial viability and that these kids grow up into fine Canadians, albeit shielded from some of the realities as they didn't have to follow their parents and work in a mine or drive a limo.

They can learn the finer points in life and listen to their idealistic professors with tenure who can preach about the most virtuous aspects of our society, the most idealistic desires of mankind.

That's where Canadians can be most effective. Every backpacker that comes from this country – and there are many – are fantastic diplomats. We are worldly people with a good reputation throughout the world. Canadians volunteer across the world, and we work in orphanages, communal farms, rescue and respite operations in environmentally challenged areas. We have Canadians that volunteer to teach people about language, clean water, and sustainable families. This is where Canadians are most effective. It's countries in Central America, South America, Africa, Asia, and so many other areas across the world where there is far more wasteful pollution and contributions to global warming. They still burn their garbage. They still use so much plastic and leave it on the wayside. They do not recycle. We need to educate people in these countries and ensure that they do their part in contributing to a low carbon intensive world.

To that effect, I'll buy your ticket to some faraway, distant land so that you can educate the masses about their impacts to the environment and get them thinking more globally because here you're speaking to the choir. We understand global warming. We understand the intent of your . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2.1) the Assembly stands adjourned until 1:30.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, November 10, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly His Excellency Agustin Garcia Lopez, ambassador of Mexico to Canada. His Excellency is accompanied today by Mrs. Cecilia Villanueva, consul of Mexico in Calgary; Mr. Iker Reyes, minister counsellor; Mr. Luis Brasdefer; and Mrs. Juana Ruiz, deputy consul of Mexico in Calgary. I'm pleased to say that there's a great potential to build on our already strong relationship between Alberta and Mexico, which includes common interests in energy, agriculture, trade, and investment. Albertans value our relationship with Mexico, and this visit is a great opportunity to explore new areas of collaboration. They are all seated in your gallery. I invite them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly, and I say bienvenido.

The Speaker: Welcome to the Legislature. I must tell you, Your Excellency, that the hon. minister does a much better job of Ukrainian than he does of Spanish.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly visitors and students from Almadina Language Charter Academy. There are apparently 90 of you here today. Welcome. They are from the wonderful riding of Calgary-East and, also, the wonderful riding of Calgary-Fort. You'll be hearing a little bit more about them later today in my member's statement. Would they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you parents and children from Destiny Christian School, just outside of Red Deer, who are here visiting the Legislature today and seeing what we all do for them, on their behalf. If they could all rise now, please, and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you the SML Christian Academy group. They're a group of grade 9 students from Stony Plain. I had the chance to spend some time with them, and they had very interesting questions. They were so passionate about their questions and what they wanted to learn today. I'd like to introduce Mrs. Vanessa Hamilton and her class. If they would rise, we will give them the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups?

Seeing none, the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly Captain Richard Dumas and Major Nik Nystrom. They are seated in your gallery. Captain Dumas has served since 1978 and is currently the adjutant of the Loyal Edmonton Regiment and aide-de-camp to the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta. Major Nystrom, officer commanding B squadron of the South Alberta Light Horse, Alberta regiment, is currently employed in the Department of Economic Development and Trade. These gentlemen have been invaluable to my role as the government liaison to the Canadian Forces. I want to sincerely thank you both for your service and dedication to Canada. Please stay standing while we give you the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Lieutenant-Colonel Kevin Weidlich. Lieutenant-Colonel Weidlich is the commanding officer of the Loyal Edmonton Regiment and a veteran of three international operations. In addition to his army reserve career, Kevin is also chief of staff to the Progressive Conservative caucus. He is seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I proudly ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you a group from the Iraqi Canadian Association of Edmonton, which is a nonprofit organization that operates out of my riding of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. I'll ask them to rise as I say their names. We have Dhiaa Raheem, Abdulrahman Al-Rasheed, Anna Mikael, Ammer Jawdat, Ziyad Altorany, Ola Al-Obaidi. While promoting awareness between Iraqi rights and others, the association assists Iraqi Canadians in Edmonton in a number of ways through translation services, and they offer language assessment and employment services to newcomers and connect them with community resources. I'll ask all members of the Assembly to join me in giving them the warm traditional welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Rajesh Angral; his wife, Manu Bhagat; and their seven-year-old son, Soham Angral. Rajesh is a long-time friend of mine and also a mutual friend of the hon. Minister of Human Services and the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills. Rajesh, you know, is very active in our community, a community leader. He runs ethnic radio stations and holds multicultural events in and around the city. I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. It's particularly pleasing when I see two or three parties acknowledging friendships with our guests.

The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Mr. Khalid Hansraj. Khalid is the managing director of the Clean Energy Technology Centre in Drayton Valley. The CETC is central Alberta's go-to full-service business incubation facility, where researchers and entrepreneurs can access a variety of business supports, including commercialization services and corporate training. Most notably, the CETC is working with two companies, BioComposites Group and Gas Recapture Systems, both of which I've spoken about in this Assembly. BioComposites Group alone is projected to create 200 direct knowledge-based jobs and 600 indirect jobs by 2022. Supporting new business ventures in support of diversifying our economy is critically important to Albertans. I would ask Mr. Hansraj to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a couple of people visiting from my constituency today, Stefana Mocanu and her husband, Vasile Mocanu. Stefana is a local author who when she arrived in Canada in 1989 had an English vocabulary that consisted of only three words: hello, thanks, and, that most Canadian word, sorry. It was her ambition to write books one day, and recently she published her debut novel in English, Finding Eve. Stefana would like to encourage others with the message that dreams come true when you work hard, believe in yourself, and never give up on your dreams no matter how impossible they seem. I'd ask them both to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two sets of guests, the first being Savannah Rae, who is a grade 6 student at Queen Alexandra school, located in the Premier's constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona, accompanied by her grandmother Helen Rae, who lives in my constituency of Edmonton-Meadowlark. They are here today for a tour of the Legislature and to watch question period.

Mr. Speaker, my second set of guests are Jeffrey Swanson and Austin Hurley. They are grade 12 students at Jasper Place high school, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Meadowlark. They are job shadowing me today and are also here to watch us through question period and to see what it's like to be an MLA.

I'd now ask all my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Ms Usha Gupta. Usha is an innovative and creative leader, currently holding the position of president of the Niketan dance school, where she mentors students in traditional Indian dance. Usha has received numerous awards for her work in the community and has just recently been inducted into the city of Edmonton's 2016 Arts and Culture Hall of Fame. There's no question that Ms Gupta's influence has impacted the arts community in a profound way. I would like to invite all the members of the House to attend her upcoming music and dance event, Unnatti, on November 20 at Festival Place. There will be a 3 p.m. show celebrating the prosperity and growth of Indian culture as well as a bazaar, taking place between 2 and 7 p.m. Usha is already standing. I ask all the members to please give her the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my real pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly Dr. Alexander Paterson. If Dr. Paterson could rise. Sandy Paterson has been a medical colleague of mine for 40 years. He currently works at the Tom Baker cancer centre in Calgary, and his expertise is in the treatment of breast cancer and in maintaining bone health in cancer patients. Sandy is job shadowing me today as an MLA, and I've been vetting him for the Calgary-Fish Creek Alberta NDP nomination. Dr. Paterson, please receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly seven members of the Alberta Federation of Labour child care working group. Please rise as I call your name: Siobhán Vipond, Chris Gallaway, Glynnis Lieb, Susan Cake, Ron Palmer, Sam Nuako, Cori Longo. The child care working group runs the Fair Start for Kids campaign and sponsored a petition, which I will table today, calling for universal early childhood education and care. Let them now receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Sean van der Lee. Please rise. Sean is my lawyer, for good reasons. He is my friend, and I'm fairly certain we will see him sitting on this side of the House when the Wildrose forms government in 2019. Please receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

I believe there's another introduction from Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Yes. Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you the members of the Mill Woods seniors friends group, many of whom live in Edmonton-Ellerslie. The executive is made up of Sudhir Somaiya, C. Patel, DharamPaul Mahajan, Maheshchandra Naik, Navin Bhatt, Kantibhai Patel, R. Patel, and Ramesh Patel. The executive of the Mill Woods Seniors and Multicultural Centre run a group that caters to various needs for our seniors in our community. Every Wednesday the group will organize its programs for its members that provide them a platform to acquire skills so they may become more independent. Last month it was my pleasure to help this group organize a presentation on elder abuse along with the office of the Seniors Advocate. The group has now been active for over two years, and I wish them the very best for their success as they continue to serve the community. I'd ask them all to stand and please receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other guests for introductions today? The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the House the members of the Southwest Edmonton Seniors Association, known as SWESA. SWESA's goal is to ensure that seniors can pursue activities with their peers, enriching their lives through healthy and satisfying recreation and social engagements. Their organization is a cornerstone and has accomplished much for individuals over 55. Here with us today are Doug Carter, Ev Carter, and Phyllis Fleck. I'd ask you to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, let me just make an underlying point. We have today military individuals. Tomorrow we will all be celebrating in our constituencies the great life that we have of peace in this country. Earlier this week we had First Nations Legion members who have served our nation. I just emphasize to all of us that the celebration of this event, the recognition of this event is more about the price that's paid and the peace for the future than it is about the past. We must never ever forget.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Almadina Language Charter Academy

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak about the quality of public education in Alberta and about a particular school that embodies that quality. Often when I talk to parents, especially those about to choose a kindergarten for their children, they ask me: "What's the best school? Where will my child have the best chance of success?" My answer to that question is always "anywhere" because here in Alberta we are fortunate to have one of the best and most equitable school systems in the world.

OECD and PISA data show that regardless of socioeconomic background, any child in any school in Alberta has a similar chance of success. I'm proud of the teachers, principals, and school board trustees who support the success of all our children in all our schools in Alberta every day.

One such school doing excellent work to educate students in my riding is Almadina Language Charter Academy. I had the pleasure of recently attending their 30th anniversary. One of the things that always strikes me when I attend an Almadina event is the strong community engagement. Hundreds of families were present to celebrate the anniversary. Among the alumni present was a cardiologist who spoke of the sense of community, high-quality teaching, and goal-setting environment at Almadina that helped him strive to be able to reach his dreams.

Almadina specializes in teaching ELL students. At Almadina English language learning is embedded in every program of study, including subjects such as math. They are also, to my knowledge, the only school in Alberta that teaches Urdu, Arabic, and French and where the children sing the national anthem in all of these languages.

I want to take this opportunity to congratulate Almadina on 30 years of innovative education for ELL students as well as 30 years of building an active, engaged school community.

Almadina is excellent and unique, but so are many schools in our exceptional Alberta public school system. I am proud to be part of a government that truly values education, that continues to fund every new student that enters our public system. This recognition of the value of education will ensure Alberta's success now and into the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

1:50

Carbon Levy

Mr. Jean: Albertans are worried about the economy. Forty-seven thousand full-time jobs have disappeared since last October here in Alberta, but the NDP's carbon tax, lawsuits, and dangerous economic policies continue to make things much worse. Like it or not, the U.S. election made it clear: America will pay no carbon tax. This means our number one competitor in oil and gas will have a significant competitive advantage, and it has Albertans even more worried. Why is the Premier driving jobs out of our province and slamming Albertans with a new tax they simply cannot afford?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think the first thing to note is that our climate leadership plan was developed with the expectation that nobody else was actually going to have a carbon tax in place. The fact of the matter is that what happens in the U.S. or does not happen in the U.S. has no relevance to what we already were planning to do because we modelled them to not be doing it. This narrative that has developed in the opposition over the last 24 hours, where they're celebrating what appears to be bad news to Alberta, is actually wrong.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Acting alone on carbon taxes leaves Alberta in a bad situation, and the Premier's refusal to back down on the carbon tax has Albertans even more worried. The Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors has said that because of this carbon tax, quote, Alberta is going to continue to be less competitive and that is bad news for Alberta's economy and Alberta workers. End quote. Premier, this tax is bad for everyone in Alberta, whether it's workers, families, schools, municipalities, businesses, and, yes, even charities. Why won't the government at least let Albertans vote on a carbon tax through a referendum?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government believes that climate change is real. Our government believes that a responsible global citizen needs to take action to address the issues around climate change. We also believe that this will ultimately improve our marketability in markets not just south of the border but throughout the world. That's why our climate change plan has specific plans in place for trade-exposed industries to ensure that we remain competitive. I would urge the member opposite to look into that.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, even this Premier has admitted this carbon tax will hurt our economy's ability to grow. Here is what Gary Leach, the president of the Explorers and Producers Association of Canada, had to say, quote: if our major competitor isn't levying a carbon tax on energy intensive industries, there's a real risk that those industries are going to migrate out of jurisdictions that levy that kind of tax. End of quote. Premier, Albertans are really nervous. They want the government to put their interests first. Why, then, is the NDP threatening jobs and our economy with this new carbon tax and won't back down?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, I believe that our climate change leadership plan will actually promote the kind of diversification that we need to grow our economy. [interjections] An organization called Canadians for Clean Prosperity, an organization that includes former Conservative MP Monte Solberg – I think you've heard of him – put out a report earlier this fall that endorses our plan, and they say, "The hybrid model, applied at the national level with regional trading, is seen to . . . alleviate [the] competitiveness concerns."

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Table officers, you might just stop the clock for one moment.

Allow me to just underline again – we're all going to be heading home for constituency week – that the objective here is to have an engaged debate and dialogue. Let's be conscious of not only the number of hecklings but, more importantly, the volume.

Second main question.

Energy Policies

Mr. Jean: Let's quote somebody else. "Our position on the Keystone [is] that if we ship unprocessed bitumen to Texas . . . we will give tens of thousands of Alberta jobs to Texas." That was the position of this Premier and the NDP government in June 2015. Now, yesterday TransCanada announced it remains fully committed to the project. The incoming U.S. administration has said that it's going to approve this pipeline. There should be no question about it: if this gets built, it's going to be great news for Alberta's families. Will the Premier change her position on the Keystone pipeline? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would urge the member to read the newspaper as I've actually commented on this at great length, but if we want to go for round 5, that's fine. The fact of the matter is that with the current economic situation that Albertans are facing and with the current need for our energy industry to move towards recovery, it is our view that we need to work with all members of the industry to find ways in which they can increase their trade with the United States. But in the meantime our focus is on ensuring that we get Canadian access to tidewater from a Canadian port in order to ensure that we . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Well, I didn't hear a yes or a no there.

With free trade agreements being put under the microscope, it's more important than ever that you defend Albertans' interests. The Keystone pipeline will create a lot of jobs here in Alberta, remove the bottleneck in our oil sands, and help Albertans get back on their feet in time of need. The Prime Minister supports it, Saskatchewan supports it, but this Premier has failed to speak out publicly in favour of it. It's a yes. Albertans want to know if this Premier is committed to defending our industries and Albertans' quality of life. Again, does she support Keystone? Yes or no?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Again, Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated, we are happy to work with our energy industry to find ways in which we contribute to their opportunities to enhance trade with the United States. But what is a really good use of this government's time is to focus on those things over which we have agency, and we have agency over pipelines in our country, so those are the matters that we are going to focus our attention on.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, these are simple yes or no questions, and they matter to Albertans. Here's another issue that the Premier refuses to give an answer on. We've asked both the Premier and the Deputy Premier this question several times and still have not got a clear answer. The NDP's ideological coal shutdown means that the province looks set to fund a $1 billion transmission line to help B.C.-owned hydro. B.C. is asking Alberta to pick up the tab. Will Albertans be paying for this $1 billion transmission line in their power bills or in their taxes? Yes or no?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the decision to move Alberta off of coal-fired electricity generation is not an ideological one. It is a science-based one, it is a health-based one, and it's an environmental protection based one.

Secondly, honest to God, the member opposite is making stuff up. There is no $1 billion transmission line, and I would suggest that he stop trying to scare people with suggestions of the same.

Mr. Jean: Clearly, your economic moves are scaring Albertans enough.

Electricity Power Purchase Agreements

Mr. Jean: Earlier this year the NDP government decided to completely undermine investment confidence in Alberta by going to court to rip up 17-year-old contracts. Now we hear rumblings that the NDP will abandon their hopeless court case. That should be good news; however, the rumblings say that the NDP will instead use legislation to accomplish what they have no hope whatsoever of accomplishing in court. Will the Premier please assure investors that she won't turn Alberta into some sort of banana republic that uses legislation to rewrite long-standing contracts with Alberta-owned companies?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, this is a matter that, in particular, is before the courts. In general, our government is committed to the notion of ensuring that consumers in Alberta pay the fairest prices possible for their electricity, and we will do everything we can to ensure that that is what happens.

Mr. Jean: Our FOIP documents show clearly that the Premier needed a basic briefing about how the power system works here in Alberta last March. Now we have these rumblings about using legislation to rip up long-term contracts. The Premier should know how these bad, heavy-handed decisions cause capital to flee, hurting Alberta families. Albertans want the Premier to be on their side. She needs to put away her ideological hammer. Can the Premier confirm that she won't use legislation to undo these long-standing negotiated contracts, that were done in the best interests of Albertans?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, let me just say that there's a quote we'll hold on to, that those contracts were in the best interests of Albertans. But more to the point, let me just say this. Our government will do everything we can to ensure the fairest and most competitive energy and electricity rates for Alberta consumers, industrial and residential, because that's our job.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, ripping up a long-standing government contract is something that is unacceptable in a democratic government, in a modern economy. It will scare away investment to Alberta just when we need people to invest in our electricity system the most. The companies that sign these contracts include some that are wholly owned by the people of the cities of Edmonton and Calgary. Will the Premier show respect for Edmontonians and Calgarians and go back to the negotiation table with Enmax and Capital Power and clean up the mess that her government has made?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will agree with one thing that the member says in that we are certainly trying to clean up a mess that was left for us. That being said, the driving principle that we will adhere to as we do this work is to ensure that the citizens of Alberta get the best deal possible, and we will do whatever is necessary to ensure that outcome.

The Speaker: I just would like to point out that I've been very, very generous, but there's a loud voice coming from right in that row someplace. I would hope . . .

The leader of the third party.

Keystone XL Pipeline Project

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is desperately in need of pipelines to get our resources to market. Without them we are forced to sell at a steep discount. Like it or not, Alberta is a resource-based economy, and without a robust industry we can't sustain the jobs, the public service, and our high quality of life. To the Premier: the pending change in administration in the U.S. has offered renewed hope that the Keystone XL pipeline will become a reality. Will you now please express your full and enthusiastic support for this project?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I think, first of all, that we need to be somewhat cautious in terms of taking every single, solitary platform declaration from the folks south of the border and assuming that immediately they will become fact. What we know is that between now and Christmas the federal government will be having to make a decision about a pipeline within our country. That is the focus that we are keeping our attention on because that is the thing over which we have most agency and which comes first. Overall, as I have said before, we stand with our energy industry. We are going to do what we can to help them improve their economic return.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday an NDP private member actually taunted our PC caucus for supporting Keystone XL. We know that the member was reading from a prepared script. I respect that the Premier doesn't want to talk about promises, so let's talk about fact. Premier, when the day comes that the U.S. President approves Keystone XL, will you and your government stand in the way?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is: of course not.

Mr. McIver: Well, sometimes small progress is what we get. Thank you, Premier.

For someone who is supposed to have Alberta's best interests at heart – and you claim to be a pipeline champion – you don't sound very enthusiastic about this opportunity. Since Keystone will go a long way towards providing jobs that are desperately needed in Alberta, good mortgage-paying jobs, between now and the day the President, we hope, approves this pipeline, will you stand up and begin to champion the Keystone XL pipeline?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I think the whole story of this pipeline and the fact that the previous government spent gosh knows how much money going down to the States and lobbying and lobbying and lobbying and then a decision was made and there was absolutely nothing they could do about it – the reason why is because it's a pipeline to tidewater over somebody else's country. When it comes to things that we can do, the agency that we can demonstrate, the work that we can do to deliver outcomes for our industry partners, we need to focus on the places where we can actually have an impact. That's exactly – exactly – what our government has been doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Ethics and Accountability Committee

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Shortly after being elected, this government created an all-party committee with the ambitious and overdue goal of reviewing the core statutes that govern our democracy. The first year the committee was a success. We passed most motions unanimously, but we simply ran out of time because the job was too big. If you don't believe me, just ask the hon. Government House Leader, who said, and I quote: I acknowledge that it may not have been realistically possible to get through everything that was on its plate. To the Premier: will you accept the unanimous request of the committee and re-establish it so we can finish our important work?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, our government will be moving forward with some of the recommendations that came out of that committee, but at this point it is not our intention to re-establish it.

Mr. Clark: Well, that's a shame, Mr. Speaker, because we agreed on a lot. We agreed on the need to get big money out of politics, and the process worked. We voted unanimously in favour of doing so. We proved the process worked because this government listened to the opposition's concerns about taxpayer dollars going to opposition parties, and I will offer my kudos to this government for agreeing that it's not what Albertans wanted. Again to the Premier: given the thoughtful input of stakeholders like the Chief Electoral Officer and the Ethics Commissioner and especially the hundreds of Albertans who shared their views with us, will you let the committee finish its work?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, on our side of the House we did truly want the committee to work, and it's unfortunate that members of the other side of the House did not. They walked out, they delayed, and, quite frankly, they engaged in bullying behaviour of the chair and other members. You know what? We made a commitment to Albertans to take big money out of politics. The members opposite don't want to take big money out of politics. Ultimately, we're not going to let them filibuster in order to avoid having that happen.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, this is very frustrating. The committee worked. That is the truth. Never once in the history of this Legislature has any committee reviewed four pieces of legislation in a year. It's never happened. It can't be done. All of the members on this committee worked very hard, including government members, who gave up time with their families to improve democracy. At least, that's what I thought we were doing. I want to ask the minister responsible for democratic renewal – Minister, I know you're better than this. I know you care about democracy. Please prove me right. Re-establish the committee.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite is correct. We do care about democracy. We do care about making sure we're getting big money out of politics. After the unanimous passing of Bill 1 to ban corporate and union donations, this government is committed to following through with that. The opposition agrees. The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock was quoted as saying: this committee is now dysfunctional, in my opinion. The committee was not working. The opposition members were filibustering, making unfounded accusations against the chair, and at one point they all walked out. We will move forward with legislation that makes sense and will return democracy.

The Speaker: Thank you hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-East.

Small-business and Self-employment Assistance

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In tough economic times Albertans are resilient. In my constituency I see nonprofits working with people seeking to start their own businesses and exciting, new small-business incubator markets. It's crucial that the government work with Albertans to help them move forward. To the Minister of Labour: what government programs are available to help Albertans learn the ropes of starting their new business?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through the self-employment training program we are giving a leg-up to Albertans who are looking to start a new business as a way to support themselves and their families. Albertans can visit self-employment training providers across the province to receive formal instruction on business plan development, one-on-one business counselling, coaching, guidance, as well as how to implement that business plan. We are very pleased to help equip the entrepreneurs with the tools and the confidence that they need to realize their dreams and contribute to the prosperity of Alberta.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the tough economic times in my riding and in Calgary in particular can the minister tell us how many Albertans benefited from this program and where they're located?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In today's challenging economy and competitive labour market it's more important than ever that Albertans have the support that they need to become self-employed if they choose to. Since May 2016 we've added more than 500 new seats in Edmonton, Calgary, Lethbridge, and Medicine Hat. In fact, I'm very pleased to say that we recently signed an agreement with Meyers Norris Penny to support 150 seats in Calgary. We recognize the importance of this program and are looking to expand it to other communities throughout the province.

2:10

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you. Given the need to make every dollar count, can the minister tell us how much the government of Alberta is investing in this program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently Alberta Labour has self-employment contracts equalling approximately $5 million over the next two years. Approximately $1.9 million is allocated to the self-employment training this fiscal year in partnership with the government of Canada. We will use every penny we can under our labour market development agreements to help enterprising Albertans, especially at a time when they need it most.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Oil Sands Advisory Group Membership

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's another day and another NDP adviser wanting to shut down our pipelines. This time it was oil sands advisory group member Karen Mahon, who fired off a fundraising e-mail this Tuesday as the Canadian director of Stand, an antidevelopment organization formerly known as ForestEthics, soliciting donations to stop Kinder Morgan, to kill Alberta jobs. Well, actions speak louder than words. Will the Premier condemn the work of her panel member's fundraising to destroy Alberta jobs, attacking our industry, and working to stop pipeline expansion?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, first of all, on the issue of our work advocating for Kinder Morgan, I could not be more proud of our Minister of Energy, our minister of trade, our minister of environment, and all the other members of our caucus, who are regularly advocating on behalf of getting our product to tidewater. With respect to particular members of the OSAG, let me be clear. Those people were put in place to give us advice on how to move towards the cap on emissions. They were not put in place to give us advice or to do anything else with respect to pipelines, so what they do on that matter doesn't really matter.

The Speaker: Thank you, Madam Premier.

Mr. MacIntyre: Mr. Speaker, out-of-work Albertans are baffled and, frankly, offended. Given that the oil sands advisory group is tasked with advising this government on the oil sands aspects of the climate leadership plan and given that this plan includes a cap that independent estimates say will result in the destruction of up to $250 billion worth of desperately needed jobs and investment, why on earth did this government appoint this person to this panel, and when will Ms Mahon be shown the door?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, the issue of putting an emissions cap in place, first of all, has done tremendously positive work for our government, for our province, and for industry in terms of earning social licence. The idea itself came from the industry. That idea came because we brought all parties together to start talking to each other instead of at each other, and that is why we have all parties on the OSAG. We will continue to govern on that basis by bringing people with disparate views into a room to work out solutions, not just yelling at them across the aisle the way the members opposite do.

Mr. MacIntyre: Mr. Speaker, this government has zero credibility – zero credibility – on the energy file. Bernard the Roughneck has done more in the last month to defend Alberta's energy industry than our own silent Energy minister over there. Given this NDP government's atrocious hiring practices, that have seen a slew of antipipeline activists – Marcella Munro; Tzeporah Berman; the Energy chief of staff, Graham Mitchell; and Karen Mahon among many others – receiving healthy salaries courtesy of Alberta's taxpayers, Albertans are left wondering: is there anyone over there genuinely defending Alberta's development interests?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, for years the members opposite have advocated for the oil industry by talking to a really small group of people in an echo chamber and refusing to listen to Albertans, to Canadians, to community members, to indigenous people, and to people who care about this issue. The way you move towards resolution, the way you move towards solutions, the way you move towards getting the job done is to talk to everybody, and we will not apologize for it. In fact, we will do it more.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Electricity System

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's electricity generation is largely made up of coal, 51 per cent, and natural gas, at 39 per cent. If renewable generation replaces 30 per cent of coal generation by 2030, it leaves natural gas generation at 70 per cent, yet this government has done nothing to incent new natural gas generation. In fact, we see the opposite. To the Premier: what happens to prices and stability in 2030 if natural gas has not replaced the baseload currently provided by coal?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our plan, as I've said all along: we are, true, going to 30 per cent renewables by 2030, 70 per cent likely natural gas. We've worked with the AESO. We have a plan to move along in increments so we can keep the lights on, we can keep prices stable, and attract new investment into Alberta in a responsible fashion.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, that plan seems to have a stick in someone's eye.

Given that this government has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars, taxpayer dollars, vilifying companies like Capital Power and Enmax and given that Capital Power recently delayed their Genesee 4 and 5 plants, a $1.4 billion project, because of uncertainty around Alberta's coal phase-out, PPAs, and electricity markets, again to the minister. Your government talks about creating jobs and attracting investment. Talk is cheap. Will you withdraw your punitive lawsuits and work collaboratively with industry to ensure such important projects get off the ground to give us that baseload?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. You know, we work every day with our industry, talking about the issues, how we can work together. At the beginning of my ministry I said that I will always work with industry. We will be collaborative, and there will be no surprises. We're doing that. Minister Bilous and I are working on the coal phase-out with regulations. We worked with Minister Phillips. [interjection] Again, we're working with industry every day.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I might point out that . . .

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Sorry. The hon. minister of environment.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, I don't see "collaboratively," and frankly I see a lot of surprises.

Given that Capital Power also stated that the Genesee project is partially contingent upon fair asset compensation for early coal shutdown and given that the government continuously disputes industry expert estimates on what that compensation should be and given that this government is currently hiding the Boston report from the public and this Legislature, to the Energy minister: will you stop the charade, release the report, and work transparently with these companies in order to ensure an adequate supply of natural gas generation before 2030?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: As I mentioned earlier, we are working with the companies. We have said all along that we will negotiate with them, and, you know, we will deal with the six companies that are post-2030. Just to be clear, we have people who have supported this position, and one of the opposition members, the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, in an interview said: we can provide options for green power to consumers that they don't currently have. That's what we're doing in this whole movement to cleaner power.

Beer Tax

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, when the government introduced protectionist tariffs on out-of-province beers in October 2015, we warned the minister that this was unconstitutional. The minister refused to listen, and the courts ruled against them. When they took a second kick at the can with a revised tariff program in July of this year, we again warned the government that this was unconstitutional. Both times they refused to listen. Yesterday an injunction was granted by the courts against this unconstitutional tariff. We told the government that these taxes would end in a lawsuit. Why didn't the minister listen?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, the courts have ruled on an injunction, nothing more than that, and we are moving forward with our great beer program, that's supporting Alberta brewers in this province. It shows that we've got Albertans' backs. In the last two weeks I've had two questions from this member talking about this sort of thing. I just want to know: why is he standing up for Ontario and Saskatoon and not Alberta?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Not understanding trade agreements: it sounds like someone who just got elected elsewhere, Mr. Speaker.

Given that regardless of what the minister thinks is good beer tax policy, it's obviously unconstitutional to put a tariff on Canadian products from other provinces – we put forward our six-pack beer tax plan, which would support small and medium-sized brewers in Alberta while clearly respecting interprovincial free trade under the Constitution so we could avoid being sued. Again, would the minister reconsider his position and work with the opposition to craft a beer tax policy that is compliant with the Constitution?

The Speaker: By the way, fellow members, if you are nice to each other, you can go and have a beer rather than talk about beer.

Mr. Ceci: I have a question for the member across the floor. I want to know: has he ever gone out and talked to the Alberta brewers and the people who are working in those industries? If you talk to them,

Mr. Speaker, they support what we're doing, they support the jobs that are developing, the investment that is happening. I just want to know: why does he want to put Albertans out of work? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Fildebrandt: We just want to know what the minister has been drinking, Mr. Speaker.

The government is suing itself over power purchase agreement contracts that they broke. The government is being sued over the gross mishandling of the Trinity home-school shutdown. The government was sued over its unconstitutional beer tax changes in October 2015. Now the government is being sued over its beer tax changes from July. So far the government's most successful job-creation program is for B.C. litigation lawyers. How many times does this government have to be sued before they understand that they should hire lawyers before, not after, they get sued, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Ceci: You know, I just want to reassure everybody that we have the most open beer market system in the world, in Alberta, in the country. Over 7,000 products of beer are available here. That tells us that everybody who wants to get beer into this province, everybody who wants to drink different beer can do it in this province. We're not obstructionist to anybody.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Resource Industry Jobs

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The people in my constituency have gone through downturns in the economy before. This time is different, however, because in my constituency they also believe that the policies of their government are actually working against them. For instance, the decision to shut down coal early will negatively impact constituents at Westmoreland Coal and the Genesee power facility. Will the Minister of Energy please explain to these workers which green energy company, not a government program but a company, they can apply to for a job in order to take care of their families?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government is committed to phasing out coal over a period of time, up until 2030. I want to remind the House that 12 out of the 18 facilities are closing pre-2030 due to federal regulations. The remaining six: we're working with not only the companies, but also I've struck a panel to engage communities, workers to ensure that there is a fair and just transition moving forward.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a carbon tax, emission control caps, and a host of other NDP initiatives have scared oil capital out of this province and given that many oil-related companies have either left the Drayton Valley-Devon constituency or are working with skeleton crews and given that the hotels across my constituency are literally vacant and the restaurants are empty and given that I have many constituents looking for work to pay their mortgages and take care of their families, how many new jobs has this government created in the Drayton Valley-Devon constituency?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll begin by pointing the member to the Alberta jobs plan, where this year what's forecast is record investment in our province. Non oil and gas investment this year is expected to reach a high of $38 billion. Capital investment in the manufacturing and service sectors is expected to reach a record high of $21 billion. The oil and gas sector is expected to invest $28 billion in Alberta this year. As well, we've had a number of folks from Calgary Economic Development, the city of Edmonton: all recognize that we're turning a corner.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that oil and gas, agriculture, and timber are the top three industries in Alberta and given that we've lost 47,000 jobs across the province since October and given the international trading policies the President-elect of the United States espoused on the campaign trail and given that the softwood lumber agreement expired in October, what is the minister of agriculture going to do to protect the jobs in my constituency that depend on softwood lumber exports?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to start by saying that in the past three months there has actually been a net growth of jobs in Alberta by 25,000. Now, we recognize that we still have a long way to go, but I can tell you that this is exactly why currently the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry is in Asia with companies from our agriculture and forestry sector, promoting trade to increase the capacity and increase our market share in those countries. Next week I will be going over to Asia myself again with a series or a number of companies, looking at increasing the amount of exports that Alberta companies have in our Asian markets.

The Speaker: There was a point of order noted. Is that correct?

The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Municipal Government Act Amendments

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last spring the Modernized Municipal Government Act was introduced, and since then the government claims to have conducted robust consultation that addressed the needs of our municipal partners. We are now well into November, we've completed second reading on the bill, yet municipalities across our province are in limbo with respect to how this legislation will affect them. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs. The AAMD and C convention occurs next week, but Committee of the Whole discussion on the MGA has mysteriously been pushed until the following week. What sort of radical amendments are you hiding from our municipal partners?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I'm very proud of the work that I have done building a relationship with municipal leaders from across this province in the time that I've been in this role. We have worked tremendously hard to engage very closely and to be the most transparent anyone has ever seen, I think, with any piece of legislation. We have from day one been open with what we are doing with this. There are no big surprises. What you see is what you get: a Modernized Municipal Government Act designed to help municipalities move into the current century.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, the mayor of Calgary certainly wouldn't agree with the minister.

To the same minister: given that your self-described exhaustive consultation now appears to be an utter and complete sham and given that this AAMD and C fall convention appears to be the last opportunity for the municipal leaders to thoroughly discuss the proposed changes to a bill that they might have to live with for the next 20 years and given that if you actually addressed stakeholder concerns, there would be no reason for you to further delay the MGA, please, Minister, why are you intentionally delaying the debate on amendments to this bill until after the AAMD and C convention?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The implication embedded in that question is absolutely absurd. The amount of feedback that we got from Albertans was so great. I mean, we heard from thousands and thousands of Albertans about what they wanted to see in the MGA. It takes time to compile that, to thoughtfully incorporate that information into some amendments coming forward. I'm looking forward to bringing them forward, and I reassure all municipal leaders that there will be no surprises.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the government's plans to centralize industrial assessment into the NDP politburo will have serious negative consequences for many municipalities and given that it will do a complete end run around years of accumulated expertise that has been developed, putting municipal finances at risk and given that this is the very kind of government interference in local decision-making that this very minister decried just yesterday, how will you work with municipalities to address this issue and mitigate assessment inconsistencies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Centralized industrial assessment is not a surprise. That's why we presented it in May, why we gathered feedback on it from a number of stakeholders throughout the summer. Inconsistent industrial assessment and many issues were raised by industry stakeholders during consultation on the MGA. Albertans deserve a fair, predictable, efficient tax structure, and that includes industrial property taxes. We are interested in improving how industrial assessment is assessed, and I look forward to working with municipalities to ensure that as we move forward with this, it happens smoothly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

2:30 Door-to-door Furnace and Energy Contract Sales

Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In recent days I've heard concerns from my constituents in Citadel and Hawkwood about misleading door-to-door sales of furnaces. I've heard stories about door-to-door salespeople leaving the impression that they are with the government of Alberta in order to pressure my constituents to buy furnaces. Often these salespeople are returning two or three times to the same house even in one day. To the Minister of Service Alberta: has there been an increase in complaints about this kind of sales practice?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. In fact, I've heard a multitude of these same complaints, and unfortunately they seem to be getting more common. After a total of 41 complaints about furnace sales from 2010 to 2015, this number has jumped to 147 so far in 2016 alone. The scale of this jump in complaints is obviously concerning. We are monitoring this situation very closely and evaluating our options for protecting consumers, particularly our seniors, from misleading practices when it comes to the sale of furnaces and other household energy products.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we have seen growing concern about these furnace sales and given that in the past we have also heard concerns about door-to-door electricity contract sales, to the same minister: can you tell the House what our constituents can do to protect themselves from these predatory practices?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the energy contract sales the member mentioned, we unfortunately continue to see high numbers of complaints, with 244 complaints registered with Service Alberta so far this year. We saw a dramatic jump in complaints in 2015, and they've continued. When a salesperson comes to your door, Albertans should not feel pressured into signing a contract on the spot that they don't want. Albertans should also be aware that they have the right to cancel a contract within 10 days of receiving it for any reason. I encourage anyone with concerns about door-to-door sales to call our consumer protection line at 1.877.427.4088 or visit servicealberta.ca to learn about their rights.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that concerns regarding these unethical practices seem to be growing, to the same minister: what actions are being considered to protect consumers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member. As the minister that is responsible for much of our consumer protection, when Albertans raise concerns, I certainly listen. We're absolutely committed to protecting Albertans from unfair business practices, and that's why we're evaluating our options to protect consumers. I encourage any Albertan to call or write to my office with their experiences of these practices, and I encourage the members across the aisle as well if you're constituents are coming to you with these concerns. Their thoughts and ideas are important to me about how to strengthen these protections.

Thank you.

Renewable Energy Projects in Southern Alberta

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, landowners in municipalities in southern Alberta are very concerned about this government's plan for renewable power. There has been no information or local consultation about locations of proposed wind and solar projects, transmission lines, or infrastructure. These new, unsightly projects could further degrade our beautiful viewshed and the critical tourism industry there. To the environment minister: where exactly are these projects going to be located, and can you guarantee that the rights of landowners will be respected in those proposed regions?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have introduced new legislation, the Renewable Electricity Act, and in that act we do speak of environmental impact assessments, depending on the size of the project. That wasn't in the former legislation at all, so there will be protections for landowners going forward.

Mr. Stier: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think we heard where they're going to go.

Landowners have heard that stuff before, and now there's a continued lack of trust. Given that this NDP government has yet to repeal that draconian property rights legislation the Land Stewardship Act, better known as Bill 36, that they always opposed, and given that legislation could be used as a big stick in negotiations around wind and solar projects, will the minister confirm that there is no intent to use any of those draconian bills to force wind and solar projects through in areas where landowners will be negatively impacted?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thanks for the question. The new legislation is going to enable projects to be built, but to be clear, investors will come in, and there will be rules for each project. We don't decide what the projects are. In consult with the ISO and the renewables auctions, investment and businesses will come in and do those, but landowners will be consulted before any projects are decided.

The Speaker: No preamble on this one.

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, the lack of overall commitment and consultation on landowners' rights from the members opposite is still troubling. Given that in addition to locations and consultations, no information has been released about potential compensation to landowners whose operations could be negatively affected by these wind and solar proposals, will the minister confirm today that all landowners affected by these changes will be fully compensated at fair market value, or is expropriation a high possibility?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: I believe I've previously answered that. In the new act there is a provision for consultation, and at the end of the day, that will be respected. But I do have to say that there's lots of, you know, support for this. The mayor of Stirling said: I think there is great opportunity for us to do something here in considering wind farms. Mary Moran from Calgary:

As investment in renewable energy in Canada is growing rapidly, Alberta has been largely on the sidelines in this key part of the future . . . supply, so we are pleased to see policy that provides the long-term certainty and stability that encourages global and local companies to invest.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Public-private Partnerships for Capital Projects

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The other day I asked the Minister of Infrastructure if he would continue to use P3s given the success of the northeast leg of the Anthony Henday, and he stated, quote: the jury is still out on P3s. Unquote. Well, the funny thing with a P3 is that all projects built in this manner undergo a value-for-money assessment. Could the Minister of Infrastructure please tell this House what the value-for-money assessment for the northeast leg of the Anthony Henday project was?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is fully committed to ensuring that Albertans finally have the infrastructure that they have needed for so long, that we utilize the tool of infrastructure to ensure that Albertans have jobs during this time, using it as a stimulus measure. There is very clear evidence that that is moving us forward and boosting our economy. I'm proud of the work we've done, and we will ensure always that we utilize the tools that will most effectively ensure that Albertans get access to that infrastructure for the best price and the best quality.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gill: Well, it's a good thing that those . . .

The Speaker: No preamble, hon. member. What's your question?

Mr. Gill: Given that the good old PCs got Deloitte & Touche LLP to do a value-for-money assessment which indicated the P3 model provided a saving of $371 million on the northeast Anthony Henday project alone, to the minister: while the P3s have not always worked for schools, they repeatedly worked for major infrastructure projects. Given their repeated success, is the jury back in on P3s?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is moving Alberta forward finally, and that means getting taxpayers the best value for their dollar. The opposition would take Albertans backwards by finding ways to shovel public money to their deep-pocketed friends regardless of whether a P3 makes sense for Albertans. We are going to consider the evidence to ensure future projects get taxpayers the best value for their dollar.

Mr. Gill: Given that the minister of seniors stated in estimates, "We are moving away from private or community ownership and back towards the province financing and owning housing assets" despite the exceptional results found when the previous government partnered with the private and nonprofit sectors in this area and given that it seems like this government is reluctant to partner with the private or nonprofit sector in any capacity, to the Minister of Infrastructure: are you opposed to P3s and other public-private and nonprofit partnerships because of the economics or the NDP's world view?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are taking a look at our departments and practices to make sure, and that includes evaluating whether P3s are a good deal for taxpayers. The PC world view would have them focus on helping their friends get richer rather than doing what's best for everyday Albertans. We will continue to make sure that taxpayers get the best value for their dollar in Alberta.

Members' Statements

Carbon Levy

Mr. Loewen: Never before has a carbon tax on Albertans made less sense than it does today. The United States will have no carbon tax for at least four years. The state of Washington voted against it. Australia repealed theirs, and their economy is growing. France is nixing its carbon tax because of fears of its impact on the economy. Major western economies know we all have a role to play in reducing global emissions, but that can't come at the price of killing jobs, punishing charities, and hurting families.

It's why thousands of Albertans gathered together last week to peacefully rally against this carbon tax, a carbon tax that the Premier has admitted will shrink the economy, a carbon tax that will cost the typical household a thousand dollars a year and will raise the cost of everything. People gathered in my city of Grande Prairie. They gathered in Calgary, in Edmonton, and all the way to Lethbridge. It's certainly no secret that almost two-thirds of Albertans oppose this carbon tax, and polls have confirmed this.

Albertans are scared. They see their friends, neighbours, and family members unemployed and hurting. Their hours have been cut, their wages reduced. People see this government providing little more than window-dressing jobs plans that have done nothing to offset the hundreds of thousands of job losses suffered in this province.

They are seeing reports that next year for the first time more wells will be drilled in Saskatchewan than in Alberta. One of the reasons: it's because policies matter. The government can't control the price of oil, but they can control how they react to it, and they have reacted poorly. This government did not run its election platform on a carbon tax. This is a blatant attempt to avoid a referendum on a provincial sales tax, plain and simple.

Locally the county of Grande Prairie has been helping subsidize charities' utility bills. Once this tax hits, local charities will be hard pressed to handle the burdensome costs. The county has been generous, but this increase, coupled with the other effects of the carbon tax, will hit the county hard.

The Premier should accept reality, put the good of the province first, and, at the very least, put the NDP's damaging carbon tax to a referendum.

Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act

Dr. Swann: I stand today to speak on a very difficult new reality for Albertans who believe the science of climate change and the urgent need for greenhouse gas mitigation. Strong leadership was long overdue in Alberta. All of us must share in the cost of reducing emissions. This government has shown welcome leadership, but real change is never easy. It's even less easy following the election of an unpredictable U.S. President who denies man-made climate change.

While I support the targets and timelines for cleaner energy development with its triple benefit for climate, jobs, and an alternate economy, we must hit pause on other parts of our energy-focused legislation, especially on less urgent bills such as Bill 25. Given Alberta's deep dependence on oil and gas, our current economic weakness, and the yet unknown economic threat from the U.S., I see merit in pausing and allowing the new reality and expert views to inform further our decision on the bill before us. Not stop, just pause, a pregnant pause, perhaps.

I've heard the Premier say that her climate plan was developed independently and that actions of our biggest customer and competitor will have no effect. Even so, I don't believe that anyone planned for the U.S. to go full speed in reverse. Proposals announced by Mr. Trump in his truth-challenged campaign have already begun to unfetter the U.S. fossil fuel industry and may drastically alter the investment climate and competitiveness here in Alberta. The ramifications of this election are sending shock waves through the global and Canadian economies. From free trade to energy, many U.S. policies are now in doubt. We have no idea yet what economic effect these changes will have on Alberta, nor have we in opposition yet seen a reasonable analysis of the effects our Alberta carbon policies might have.

Here in this House we serve Albertans. We're mandated to craft for them the best possible laws, policies, and regulations. Our struggling economy and uncertain investment climate are now faced with unpredictability that will be better understood in the new year, when the oil sands advisory group reports.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Your time is up.
The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Métis Week

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to rise today and speak about Métis Week. Taking place the week of November 16 every year, the anniversary of Louis Riel's death, Métis Week is observed across the Métis homeland.

Riel's political passions were a rallying point for many. For the people of Quebec he was a champion of French language rights. For the people of Manitoba he was founder of their province and a unifying force, bringing the first western province into Confederation. For the Métis he remains a fearless visionary who fought to secure a just and fair future where all Métis people could live proud and self-determining lives. For Canada he was the son of a new nation, the Métis, born from the intermarriage of First Nations people and European newcomers.

A complex figure, Riel spoke the languages of Cree, French, and English. But he also spoke the language of resistance, and as the leader of the Northwest Rebellion Louis Riel was hanged on November 16, 131 years ago. In Riel's own words:

I am more convinced every day that without a single exception I did right. And I have always believed that, as I have acted honestly, the time will come when the people of Canada will see and acknowledge it.

With time he has become a part of the fabric of our country. If we look around Alberta, we see the importance of the Métis to our province. Towns like St. Albert, Lac La Biche, St. Paul, and Lac Ste. Anne were founded by the Métis, and the fur trade that pushed European exploration westward was often supported by the Métis. The Métis have also served in our military, in our Legislature, and have led our communities. Whether it's fiddling, jigging, or singing, the Métis have helped to shape our culture.

Mr. Speaker, I invite all Albertans to celebrate the contributions of the Métis people to our shared history and to celebrate Métis culture next week.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

University of Lethbridge Achievements

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, almost a year ago I spoke of Lethbridge's footprint in outer space through the Herschel SPIRE project. The University of Lethbridge has yet again come to the forefront. In just the past few weeks five of its faculty members have been elected to royal societies around the world in a breadth of disciplines that speak to the university's strength as a liberal education institution that has grown into a respected research leader.

Dr. Louise Barrett, psychology, Dr. Joe Rasmussen, biology, and Dr. Bruce McNaughton, neuroscience, were all recently elected to the fellowship of the Royal Society of Canada. Dr. Artur Luczak, a neuroscientist, was elected to the Royal Society of Canada's College of New Scholars, Artists and Scientists. Dr. Paul Hayes became the first U of L faculty member elected as a fellow of the Royal Society of Chemistry. While these faculty members are singled out for their recent awards, they represent an excellence that is prevalent throughout the university's six faculties and schools.

Mr. Speaker, it's clear that people are taking notice. Last week the U of L was ranked third place amongst the undergraduate universities in Canada. It has been in the top three for five consecutive years. The U of L has greatly exceeded even the most optimistic goals of its founders, one of whom was my grandfather-in-law Reed Ellison. This is reflected by its record enrolment, its impact on the southern Alberta region, its now 40,000-plus alumni, and an ever-growing national and international reputation. As the U of L is coming up to its 50th anniversary, stay tuned. There's more to come.

Remembrance Day

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow this House won't sit. We will all come together, however, along with Canadians from the west coast to the prairies to the Maritimes. We will join and remember those who have made the ultimate sacrifice for our freedom and democracy and those who continue to do so in a world where tyranny persists. Countless men and women have given their lives so that we can enjoy the privileges we do today as Canadians. Tomorrow we will remember their courage and valour in the face of evil and despair.

This year we will mark the 100th anniversary of the Battle of the Somme, where more than 24,000 Canadian soldiers were killed, wounded, or went missing. We will also commemorate Beaumont-Hamel, a devastating battle for Newfoundland, where only 68 of more than 800 soldiers who took part answered roll call the next day. We will also use tomorrow to honour the men and women who currently wear the uniform and put their lives on the line for our safety and security. Tomorrow we honour the fallen, revere the brave, and salute all the members of the Canadian armed forces and their families for their service and sacrifice for our country.

I urge all Canadians to attend a Remembrance Day service in their community, of which there are many planned. I also urge them to spend some time with a Canadian veteran, old or young, and learn about the roads they've travelled to protect the sanctity of our freedom and democracy. These ordinary men and women have truly accomplished extraordinary things. On behalf of this entire House, to them I say thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I am pleased to table five copies of the committee's report recommending the reappointment of Ms Jill Clayton as Information and Privacy Commissioner for a five-year term, recognizing the excellent service she has rendered Albertans. Copies of this report are available online or through the committee's branch.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a memo in response to questions from the Member for Calgary-Mountain View from November 3, 2016.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to table five copies of a document that is a petition entitled Fair Start for Kids Campaign. This was sponsored by the Alberta Federation of Labour child care working group. Fair Start for Kids is a province-wide campaign for universal early childhood education and care. I am particularly pleased to be tabling this document as I have been a child care advocate since my children required child care. Now both my grandchildren and my one great-granddaughter require child care. Things have not changed much over that 40-year period.

The Speaker: The documents, hon. member. We normally don't make elongated statements at this particular part of the agenda. Could you wrap it up, please.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Yes. I'd like to read the petition into the record. "We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to ..."

The Speaker: I think we need some clarification. If you would just wait a minute.

Hon. member, I'm advised that you do not need to read the petition. If you would ensure that the pages have the document.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three documents to table, referenced yesterday during the debate on Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act, by my hon. colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View. The first is five requisite copies of the Postmedia article on global wind turbines going bankrupt. The second is a review of the energy return of solar PV by Mr. Euan Mearns, citing the study regarding .83 as the EROEI. The third document is the source document for Energy Return on Energy Invested for Photovoltaic Solar Systems in Regions of Moderate Insolation.

A fourth document that I wish to table is one that I referred to today. It is a copy of the letter from Ms Mahon soliciting funds for the shutdown of the Kinder Morgan pipeline.

The Speaker: The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of a document entitled A Shot in the Arm: How to Improve Vaccination Policy in Canada from the C.D. Howe Institute, which I referenced during debate on Bill 28 this morning.

The Speaker: I believe we are at points of order. The House leader for the Official Opposition.

Point of Order Referring to the Absence of a Member

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm a little hesitant to rise today on this particular point of order. The citation is referring to the absence or the presence of a member. Earlier in question period the deputy House leader referred to the absence of a minister in a fairly boastful way, about him being overseas in China. I just think that the rules should be applied equally to both sides of the House. I did, however, notice that yesterday during question period the minister took the opportunity to tweet about his trip in China. I think that during question period it would probably be advantageous if he didn't, as he may incite himself in his absence from question period. I just think that the rules should be applied equally.

The Speaker: Absolutely, hon. member.

The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: All right, Mr. Speaker. First of all, for the member opposite to be talking about a member tweeting during QP when the member is in a different time zone in a different country: I don't even think I need to argue that point.

But, Mr. Speaker, you know, I just want to clarify. The purpose of the rule is to prevent members from being shamed for not being in the Chamber. The purpose is not to prevent a reference to legitimate business that a member is doing that may take them away from this Chamber.

I also want to point out the fact that the minister that we're speaking of has put out a press release with dates and where he will be. So it is on the public record, of public knowledge the work that he is doing elsewhere.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, might you agree that, technically, the matter ought not to have been raised. It seems to me that there is some point that needs to be made here. However, let's understand that there is a difference, in my perspective, from a tweet from another place versus mention in the House. They are two different issues.

But I think, to the Opposition House Leader, that was not what was intended, in my perspective, in the original intent in the standing orders. Please, let's all – and I can tell you that you may have on occasion heard me make that reference in error. I hope that this just simply draws our attention to the matter.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 30

Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 30, the Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act.

Bill 30 would enable government to establish the Alberta investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit. Together these tax credits would drive innovation, diversify our economy, and create new jobs. The Alberta investor tax credit, or AITC, would offer a 30 per cent tax credit for investments made in small Alberta businesses between April 14, 2016, and December 31, 2019. With a budget of $90 million over three years, the AITC would be provided on a first-come, first-served basis starting on January 1, 2017. Under the legislation eligible businesses would be allowed to raise a maximum of $5 million directly through investors or a maximum of $10 million through Alberta venture capital corporations in every two-year period.

The maximum tax credit for an individual would be $60,000 per year, supporting up to $200,000 in investments. The tax credit would be refundable, Mr. Speaker, and could be carried forward for up to four years for individual investors. There would be no maximum tax credit for corporate investors. It would be nonrefundable and be carried forward for up to four years. Investments would need to be equity investments and be held for at least five years to ensure that the company has the capital for an appropriate length of time to use for operations and growth. Equity investments would need to be used for activities that support a company's growth.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the AITC would be available for investments in companies that are substantially engaged in proprietary technology research, development, or commercialization; interactive digital media development; video postproduction; digital animation; or tourism. The investment criteria were developed through extensive consultations with business and investment leaders across Alberta and are designed to encourage economic diversification.

The legislation would also enable government to establish community economic development corporations, or CEDCs. CEDCs are for-profit investment funds that invest equity in locally owned businesses recognized for their positive social, economic, and environmental returns to communities. My department would be engaging in targeted stakeholder consultations to ensure the program design is successful. The CEDC portion of the program would be implemented more toward the summer of 2017.

The registration process for AITC will be announced pending passage of this piece of legislation.

The second tax credit this legislation would enable, Mr. Speaker, is a capital investment tax credit, or CITC, which would encourage large-scale capital investment here in Alberta. As with the AITC, the CITC would support new jobs by fostering increased economic activity through the labour required to construct or make these new investments in capital assets or through the positive impacts in related industries once these investments are up and running and turning a profit. CITC would offer Alberta companies a 10 per cent nonrefundable tax credit of up to $5 million. In addition to this, the tax credit would be available to companies across the province involved in activities of manufacturing, processing, and tourism infrastructure, companies that are making an eligible capital investment of over $1 million.

Eligible costs would closely align with capital costs allowed under the federal government's capital cost allowance, including the acquisition of buildings, equipment, and machinery. Applicants will be required to apply for conditional approval in advance of the investment, with the tax credit being claimed only when the capital investment is in use and the company is turning a profit. I need to add, Mr. Speaker, that that came directly from a number of consultations with business and industry leaders across the province in all sectors who asked, on the capital investment tax credit, that there be a precondition or a conditional approval screening type of thing, not a first-come, first-served basis.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The application process would be competitive, with each application being evaluated based on its positive economic impact. It's expected, Madam Speaker, that CITC would support $700 million worth of investment and up to 4,600 direct and indirect jobs. These tax credits offer the right support for Alberta businesses at the right time. Introducing these measures at a time when businesses are facing challenges will make Alberta more competitive in attracting and retaining investments while creating much-needed jobs. Together these tax credits provide significant support to Alberta businesses when they need it most.

Madam Speaker, this legislation would ensure that the government continues to promote economic diversification, support employers and entrepreneurs in creating jobs, and encourage investment in the province. I can say that I am very proud of the work that our government has done in preparing this piece of legislation, the number of consultations and meetings that not only I but my colleagues on this side of the House have had, meetings with businesses, industry leaders, entrepreneurs in all sectors, in all corners of the province.

Madam Speaker, these two tax credits are something that the business community has been asking for for decades. This is something that other jurisdictions have had. The province of British Columbia has had an investor tax credit since 1985, and because of it, they have helped to diversify their economy and drive investments in their local businesses. It is about time that Alberta levels the playing field and continues to remain the most competitive and best province to invest in.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to talk about Bill 30, the Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. Wow: $165 million over three years – that's a lot of money – $70 million for capital investment tax credits over two years, targeted to manufacturing, processing, and tourism; $5 million for capital investment tax credits for the cultural industries; and $90 million over three years for the Alberta investor tax credit. It is targeted to proprietary technology research, development, or commercialization; interactive digital media development; video postproduction; digital animation; and tourism. Some of these make a lot of sense, and others seem a bit random, and I look forward to hearing the explanation from the minister.

The economic downturn has resulted in staggering job losses in Alberta. While the low taxes in Alberta have resulted in diversification away from the energy sector, from 33 per cent to 25 per cent of GDP over 25 years, more can be done to break our addiction to and reliance on one sector of the economy. I came from a meeting with a stakeholder this morning who does proprietary technology research, development, and commercialization. It was an Edmonton-based company, and they do business in the energy sector all over the world, Madam Speaker. They're very interested in these programs. Proprietary research and commercialization are a challenge in every sector, but as they say, the devil is in the details, and the Wildrose will be watching how you manage those details.

Normally we on this side, Wildrose, would not support a bill like this to allow programs to target only certain sectors of the economy, but there are some differences here that will keep my mind open. These programs are nonrefundable tax credits. They're not grants, the free money some governments like to hand out. These programs are not loans. Banks and credit unions hand out loans and evaluate businesses on their merits. Government loans employ the bank of last resort, or crony capitalism, and these programs are not loan guarantees; that is, the use of the Alberta government's triple-A credit rating to allow a lower interest rate for borrowing and assuming the project in case of default. Oh, sorry. Alberta doesn't have a triple-A credit rating anymore.

Most importantly, investor confidence is at record lows, and we have a jobs crisis that needs special measures. Edmonton has a lot of developing industries that these programs target. I went to a start-up party 7 and saw first-hand the interactive digital media development happening in this city. I didn't see any members from the NDP at that launch party, where businesses showcased their new products. At least the ministry is trying to do something for the business community.

The Calgary Chamber of commerce called for these tax credits and convinced the government, with the first investor tax credit program, to help equity capital flow to small business in our province. British Columbia, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba, and a number of U.S. states have investor tax credit programs. Alberta loses new business to British Columbia because of this program, and B.C. has higher taxes, including a sales tax.

Now, the minister talks about tourism getting a boost from these tax credits. He has touted supporting up to 4,400 new jobs over three years and contributing up to $500 million to the province's GDP. I hope these are really new jobs and not just replacement jobs for the communities where oil and gas is on the decline. That's about 1,500 new jobs per year, Madam Speaker. We shall see.

Not only job creation; let's talk about enhancing our tourism products. Let us start with the basics, hotels, Madam Speaker. I'm talking about hotels in the province. When you get to some of these tourist communities like Canmore, Waterton, Pincher Creek, Banff, Edson, Hinton, Jasper, Drumheller, the quality of some of the tourism establishments, the hotels and the restaurants, is old and dated. They have not changed in 40 or 50 years. The buildings are old, tired, rundown, and worn out. They are nothing special architecturally and have no need of historical designation. They harken back to an era when the highways through the mountain passes were dirt two-lane roads.

We ask people from all over the world to travel to Alberta, to come and visit Alberta. They are not all staying in a Fairmont or at a fancy hotel property, Madam Speaker. If these visitors have not made accommodation arrangements in advance, when they get here, they're often disappointed. International tourists do not want to stay in a roach motel. You can have wonderful memories and experiences in Alberta, but if the stay in the hotel is poor, then all that goodwill goes down the drain, and then they won't be back again in Alberta. I can only hope the hotel sector steps up and uses the capital investment tax credit to update and modernize their hotels so that Alberta can have reputable products and visitors will keep coming back.

Now, Madam Speaker, there is one more good thing about this bill. It creates a registry of venture capital corporations. If we know who all the venture capital corporations are, we have another tool that can be used to connect businesses seeking investment to them and unlock even more private investment. But this is where things get complicated with Bill 30. You see, the minister will have the power to require venture capital corporations to seek approval before they can change their share structure. The minister will also have to approve the venture capital corporation to raise money. The minister can also dictate to the venture capital corporation whether or not the investment in a business is allowed depending on how many employees the business has and the wages the business has. That sounds heavy handed. We heard the minister say that it will be first-come, first-served for these tax credits, but we still don't know how the minister will select the winners of these credits. Is it ministerial interference or essential oversight?

As I interact with more stakeholders during the break next week, Madam Speaker, I'm sure we'll come up with a number of questions. I'm sure many hon. members would like to ask a few questions of the minister. I'm also certain that the NDP would like to have their stakeholders come in and tell us how important this program is to the targeted sectors. I look forward to more discussion during Committee of the Whole. I'm hoping that the minister will have answers for us in the next debates.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the minister for bringing this forward. Bill 30: there's a lot to it. It's very dense. It's a bit like eating a brick of cheese. Even if you like cheese, it kind of leaves you feeling a bit stodgy. But I will do my best to unpack some of the more important aspects of the bill and share my thoughts on it.

First off, I want to say that I like the intent of the bill. I certainly agree with the principle of an investor tax credit, of the capital investment tax credit. I have to agree with it because it was our idea. We proposed it and pushed very hard for it, so I will happily and enthusiastically support the minister for picking up the torch and moving it forward. Certainly, no, we're not the only ones who supported this good idea. The chambers of commerce around the province, many economists think this is certainly a better idea than the job-creation tax credit. Without going on too much – I don't want to praise the government too much lest anyone get the wrong impression – it's certainly far better than the job-creation tax credit they originally proposed. So good on them for doing that.

What I would quarrel with in this bill is the scope of the tax credit itself and the amount of the tax credit that is available. Given the economic challenges facing our province, given the desire for us to attract business to broaden Alberta's economy in a very challenging time – and I say this as a member representing Calgary-Elbow and Calgary facing more than 10 per cent unemployment. Our province as a whole facing unemployment above 8 per cent is a huge issue for the people all over this province. There are people I have talked with who have done all of the right things in their life. They've gone to school, they've tried hard, they have started a career, they've raised children, they've invested in a home, and they find themselves out of work. They say: this was not the plan. They're not out of work through any fault of their own. They're out of work because of an unfortunate circumstance.

Certainly, a lot of that has to do with the global economic downturn, with the energy rout that has gone on and on and on. I would suggest that it's exacerbated by government policy and made worse, but this bill and this idea of an investor tax credit can undo some of that damage, can turn that around and get Albertans working again and get business investment happening again. Things like the PPA lawsuits certainly don't help. They drive investment away. Ideas like this and tax credits like this can in fact create economic activity and create jobs and create prosperity for Albertans, but I would suggest that $90 million over three years, $30 million a year, is far too low. What I would rather see is a substantially higher level of tax credit, perhaps in the nature of .05 per cent of GDP in the first year. That's $150 million. That's a lot of money; there's no question. But if we genuinely want to get after it and really want to create and stimulate investment in this province, I think that's what we should be looking at. Frankly, I'm not certain how much impact a $30 million tax credit is going to have. Is it even going to be measurable? Is it going to have an impact right away, or is it the sort of thing that over the course of years and years eventually we'll find that the economy has gradually broadened?

Speaking of broadening, the bill itself and the tax credit I think is too narrow. It's put the government in a position, put the NDs in a position of picking winners and losers and saying, "These are industries that are desirable and good, and those are industries we don't like." Frankly, I don't like that concept one bit. I think that really the only reasonable criteria ought to be: has this particular business been given money from government already? If the answer is no, then I think they should be eligible for this credit, and I think that it should be relatively straightforward to apply for the investor tax credit as well.

The other question I had – and I'll thank the minister for his response to my note. The capital investment tax credit is a prequalification tax credit whereas the Alberta investor tax credit is first-come first-served. Now, prequalification: that actually makes a lot of sense when you're talking about capital projects. You may or may not choose to go ahead with the capital project based on whether or not you will in fact qualify for the credit. So in that vein it makes sense. But the investor tax credit being first-come, first-served, that could work, the problem being: what if it runs out early in the year? What if we get a flood of applications early on and the $30 million is gone? Well, on one level, great news. We've got lots of folks investing, and that tax credit is all used up. That's great. But that tells me that there's more investment out there that could help diversify our economy, could help put Albertans back to work.

What if those businesses, those investors, had been counting on that tax credit and they find, "Uh-oh, we were the thirty-first million dollar spot"? They say: "You know what? That means the investment no longer makes sense. We're going to pull that back. We're going to put it into another province or we're simply not going to do it at all. We're going to keep the money in the bank." That's an unfortunate situation, and I'd be curious to know from the minister in the course of debate if this is something that his ministry has considered. Is it something that they've done some research and some work on to know whether $30 million is the right number or, frankly, it was arbitrary? They picked it out of the air, and they just said: that sounds like a nice saleable figure; we'll use that.

So I would like to see the scale of this investor tax credit ramped up to be substantially higher than that $90 million over three years number, which really is only $30 million a year, obviously, and also the scope of it and the eligibility for the investor tax credit to be far broader than it is. I think in doing that, perhaps the government will in fact achieve its stated objectives of encouraging investment in the province.

Again, I'll remind the government that it is not only things like investor tax credits that will attract investment but the overall economic price for doing business in a particular jurisdiction. When you have corporate taxes going up as they have and when you have a government that seems willing to go to extreme measures to tear up old contracts, that doesn't help. That creates a very unfavourable investment climate, notwithstanding tax credits, because there's a fear that if a government decides in the future that these tax credits were perhaps not such a good idea, the government will just come and change the rules and take the money away from you. So I would really remind the government that these sorts of things – while it may feel good ideologically to go take on these big companies, I would encourage you to remember the impact that has on investor confidence. I would also encourage you to recognize that you're misguided in your perception of what these electricity companies are.

But staying on topic, I do think it's a positive, this bill. I have my concerns in areas. I'd like to see it expand, but generally I am in favour of it, Madam Speaker. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and speak to Bill 30, the Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. I'd like to thank the minister for his contribution. I hope to see more legislation in the vein of what we're potentially seeing here. Many of the actions that the government has taken to date have not been helpful, and I'm optimistic that the legislation before us today will at least not make things worse, that it will in fact be helpful. So I wanted to thank the minister for his contribution to this.

Most of the things that this Legislature and this government have done to date have not been helpful, however. We've seen a 20 per cent increase to the business tax in this province, Madam Speaker. That has not incentivized a single person to come to Alberta. Not a single business has decided to come to Alberta because taxes went up 20 per cent on profits. Increases on income tax of up to 50 per cent for some income earners have not incentivized a single person to do business and invest in Alberta. The $3 billion carbon tax, with the exception of a few corporate welfare recipients, has not incentivized anyone to do business in Alberta. The $15 minimum wage is going to hurt business in Alberta, and the government suing itself with the PPA lawsuit significantly damages investor confidence in Alberta. These are actions that have significantly hurt the economy in this province.

But this particular bill has the potential to be positive, and we're going to have to proceed in more in-depth debate before we can assess if this bill is in fact going to be on the whole positive or not. I'm optimistic at this time. The bill establishes a capital investment tax credit and the Alberta investor tax credit. The intention is to attract more capital, more investment to Alberta, something that is desperately needed to create jobs in the province. I'm very happy to see that the government is acknowledging that if we don't have investment into this province, we are not going to see jobs created.

In the 1990s this province had by far the most business investment in the country, many, many times more than any other province on a per capita level. Even on a gross level we were in the same ballpark as Quebec and Ontario. That is an amazing fact, Madam Speaker. But we have seen investment very much dry up in this province, and it is important that we take measures to try to attract some of that capital back.

Now, I have some concerns, some very real concerns about this bill, and we're going to be asking serious questions of this government and of the minister of economic development and diversification. If we can get real and substantive answers, if the minister participates fully in the debates and we can get the answers that we require, then I am hopeful that we could find some level of consensus on the bill.

One of my major concerns with this bill, however, is that it is overly targeted and sectoral and prescriptive rather than broad-based economic policy. Good economic policy does not have the government deciding which sectors are to gain and which sectors are not to gain because the sectors that do not gain from a policy but still pay taxes are therefore subsidizing the other sectors or businesses that do receive the benefit. It is a form of robbing Peter to pay Paul. We're very concerned that the legislation targets some specific sectors rather than the economy as a whole.

The legislation targets proprietary technology research, development and commercialization, interactive digital media development, video postproduction, digital media, and tourism. Now, these are all very important parts of Alberta's economy, and these are all sectors that we want to encourage growth in. I'm very concerned, however, if we are only targeting these sectors, because if you provide a benefit to some sectors but not others, those other sectors still have to pay the taxes and therefore subsidize other sectors of the economy. That is not good economic policy, Madam Speaker.

I hope that the minister will take heed of this. There is a lot of merit in an investor tax credit. That's a concept that I believe the Official Opposition can get behind, but it is very concerning if it is targeted only at some sectors. You know, when there are two businesses in downtown Brooks and one can qualify – downtown Brooks is bigger than you think, Madam Speaker. When two businesses, side by side, are looking to invest and expand their operations but only one can qualify and the other cannot even though they might be investing the same amount of money – they might be looking to hire the same number of new employees, they might be looking to do almost identical things, but one is included in the sectors that are included in the legislation and the other one is not – that is not fair. That is actually limiting the potential economic development and new jobs that we're creating in this province. These sectors need to be supported, but good economic policy should be broad based and not sector specific as much as we can help it.

Another concern is that one of the sectors listed here is development and commercialization. On the plus side, that's a pretty broad thing. We're arguing for broad-based public policies, but it is an ill-defined area that is eligible for these tax credits. Development and commercialization are very ill-defined in the legislation, and I hope that the minister can perhaps explain and discuss that in some more detail.

Now, the cost to the treasury of this is substantial, at $165 million. As the Member for Calgary-Elbow has pointed out, we could very well potentially want significantly more than that, but $165 million is still a very substantial cost to the treasury. When we are engaging in tax expenditures of this kind, we need to be doing so very carefully and very deliberately, with all of the information possible at our fingertips. When we are spending $165 million in a tax expenditure like this, we need an economic impact study. We should not be passing major economic policies or major expenditures or tax expenditures as a Legislature and as a government without having all of the information available.

The government claims that the CITC and the AITC will create up to $700 million of investment, and I sincerely hope that that is true. I hope that we will get there, but I have not yet seen any math or evidence or studies of any substance to support that. I am hopeful, but we need evidence. We need more than a news release claiming that it will be so. I'm asking that the minister engage in debate, answer these questions, and provide an economic impact study on what he hopes the CITC and the AITC will achieve.

I'm also very concerned by the potential for the arbitrary use of power in the minister's role in this bill. There is a hard cap of $165 million. While that is positive in that it limits the cost of the program, it also gives the minister potentially the power to pick which applicants are to receive this credit and which ones are not. This is not an open-ended tax expenditure program, say, you know – remember the children's sports tax credits federally. I think there were about a hundred tax credits passed federally at some point for various purposes. These things can get out of hand if we have too many tax credits.

Those were open-ended programs, where, if you qualified, you did receive the credit. That is not necessarily so in this case if I understand the legislation correctly. It is that those eligible to receive the credit will not necessarily actually get the credit because there is a hard cap of $165 million, and the minister himself will play some role in determining, if there are more applicants than money available, who will get it. That is always very concerning, to give that kind of power to politicians.

It will not necessarily happen, Madam Speaker, but I'd be very concerned about voting to give power to a minister to say: I like this company, but I don't like this company. Perhaps this business has endorsed the government policy at some point and given them kind of cover, and this business has been a pain to the government, and they're not going to get a tax credit. Or perhaps it could be what constituency a business is in. This business is in a government constituency, and this business is in an opposition constituency or a swing constituency.

Political considerations should not be a part of this kind of decision-making. While no one is accusing the government of doing it – they have not done it; the legislation has not passed – I would be very concerned about giving those kinds of powers to a minister. That kind of decision-making will inevitably creep in even if the minister has the very best of intentions, as I'm sure he does. When you give politicians that kind of arbitrary power without proper oversight, abuses of that power become extremely difficult to prevent.

I am certainly open to supporting this bill, and I am optimistic that this legislation will, on net, be positive, but we need more information, and I hope that the minister will be in the Chamber for the entirety of this debate to participate in the debate, particularly when we get to Committee of the Whole and the back and forth and the questions that we have, the amendments that we are likely to present. If the minister will deal in good faith with the Official Opposition and, I believe, all opposition parties, then there is a chance that we can come to some kind of consensus. As rare as that happens to be on these kinds of pieces of legislation, we might actually get to it from time to time.

I look forward to further debate and the minister's responses to our concerns. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I wanted to follow up with the member about one item that he spoke of specifically and especially since he is the Wildrose critic for Finance as well.

Mr. Fildebrandt: It's minister now. [interjections]

Mr. Sucha: Oh, right. Shadow minister.

Anyway, as he spoke to this, he said that he wasn't very fond of sector-specific tax credits, that were specific to one area. When I was in university, I actually studied television broadcasting, and that is a sector that needs sector-specific tax credits to actually stay competitive. In fact, you study about these tax credits and how to leverage them as well to really help to promote the industry. The industry has a lot of growth, it's very dynamic, and it's a very competitive industry. You really want to bring it into this province. Our province has a very competitive tax credit system for television and film, which has helped for many great series like Fargo to be filmed here as well.

So this creates a lot of concern for me, and I would hope that the hon. member can clarify some things. Would it be the Wildrose's stance to eliminate this tax credit if they are not a fan of sector-specific tax credits?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you to the Member for Calgary-Shaw for the question. As now I've been appointed a minister, I'm getting used to answering questions in the House.

Thank you for the question. It's an interesting, reasonable, and good example that he's brought forward: sector-specific tax credits, like we have for television and for movie production. As a basic rule we want to avoid sector-specific tax credits. They do distort the marketplace. There is a role for them from time to time. We should not be dogmatic or overly ideological about these things, but as a basic principle of good economic and fiscal policy, that's something that we want to avoid.

When we go down the road of sector-specific tax credits, it gets very easy to riddle the tax code and make it more complicated, more distortionary. If we have an overall high basic corporate income tax rate and then we decide that now we're going to provide sector-specific tax credits for one industry, the lobbying effort to amend the tax code both on the business and the personal income tax sides to favour every other specific industry gets very intense. In Washington, D.C., the lobbying industry exists primarily to influence the tax code, and similar situations exist in the lobbying industry in Ottawa and to a lesser extent here in Alberta. In Alberta we're blessed to have, compared to other jurisdictions, a relatively simple tax code.

Mr. Cooper: It was even more simple before.

Mr. Fildebrandt: It used to be more simple, Madam Speaker, and we have committed to making it more simple again.

As a basic rule we want our tax code to be as simple as possible. It is sometimes reasonable and pragmatic to have some kind of carve-out, some kind of sector-specific tax credit. We should not be so dogmatic as to say that we would never do that, but we want to be very cautious when we're doing that.

We also have to think: what is the goal of that tax credit? Every government program, every tax expenditure, every government spending program should always have a goal, a measurable goal, attached to it. I believe the goal we're trying to achieve here is economic development, investment, and economic diversification, and there are sectors of the economy that would certainly be positive for us to grow as part of economic diversification which are not listed here.

So if we're trying to consider: "What is the goal of this piece of legislation? How can we cast as wide a net as possible to achieve the goal?" I believe the intent of the legislation here is of good intent that, I know, the Official Opposition, the government, and the Member for Calgary Elbow have so far supported. How are we going to achieve that? How are we going to measure that? I think that the way we've defined the sectors here is still overly narrow, overly prescriptive, and if we can broaden that definition to more sectors of the economy, there's a better chance that we can find consensus on this piece of legislation.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any more under 29(2)(a)? No?

Then I will recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to speak to Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. Although I applaud the sentiment and intentions of this bill and thank the minister for presenting it to this Legislature, sadly even the title of this bill may mislead Albertans. This bill invests in Alberta at the most nominal level, and the government, sadly, isn't even committed to its own program on a long-term, go-forward basis. We need that stability to attract long-term investment and hence jobs. This government has taken what was originally actually a very good idea and transformed it into some sort of a Franken-program, pardon the term. It has been mentioned to the minister in the past.

Dr. Starke: That's my term.

Mr. Gottfried: Oh, that's his term. Halloween was a few weeks ago, I think.

These tax credits were suggested in April while the Calgary Chamber, Calgary Economic Development, and many other groups have been calling for this for months, so we're glad to see it. Our caucus promoted the idea of introducing a small-business venture capital tax credit program in our Engage document, released earlier this year. We do believe in this initiative. Certainly, that is the thing that we can agree on. Something needed to be done to overcome a decided lack of investor confidence in our province.

Venture capital tax credits are an excellent way to connect investors with small to medium-sized businesses and, when done properly, offer an exceptional return on investment for the issuing government. However, therein lies the problem. The program needs to be developed, implemented, and supported in such a way to initiate and maintain long-term investment and thereby success. It does absolutely no one any good to commit a small sum of money for a short period of time in the hopes that some kind of magic and hope will take care of the rest over the long term.

I'm not always prone to throwing out kudos to British Columbia, but British Columbia has an excellent venture capital tax program. Between 2001 and 2008 every dollar issued as a tax credit generated $1.98 in provincial tax revenue. I would argue that that's a pretty good investment for Albertans. During that same period $256 million in tax credits issued attracted over $2.3 billion in equity investments. These investments helped not just create but leverage new, stable, long-term jobs while strengthening that province's economy. We should be taking heed and building and improving upon the success that their program has yielded. Unfortunately, this government has decided to introduce an inferior, made-in-Alberta, NDP-world-view vision that I hope we can improve upon.

You need look no further than the Alberta investor tax credit to see this. This tax credit only applies to companies who work in specific areas such as information technology, health technology, interactive digital media, and digital animation. Now, here's the first area where I have problems with this bill. I understand and appreciate that the government is trying to diversify the economy, and I support that endeavour always. Any and all economic growth is good for Alberta as long as it's sustainable. We agree on that. However, by limiting this tax credit to an arbitrary group of sectors, as was mentioned by other hon. members earlier, this government has limited the potential success of this program and the opportunity for success for more Albertans and, dare I say, jobs for more Albertans.

This program should be available to all businesses in Alberta which employ fewer than a hundred people. Out of every 20 start-up companies, you can expect maybe one star which becomes a breakout success; three zombies, which are companies that are still alive but not growing; and 16 failures. This government is gambling this entire program, again a well-intentioned program, on hitting that one star out of the park rather than letting the market decide, as was, again, mentioned by earlier members. We need to be sure that we're not picking winners and losers. If only particular sectors that the minister likes or that this government likes or wishes to make winners are able to apply to this particular program, then the government is very openly and publicly picking winners and losers, again not letting the market and those private investors who are leveraging decide.

A vast number of businesses in Alberta are struggling right now. We all know that. I see it in my own constituency in strip malls, in the manufacturing sector, across all sectors, indeed. By opening this up to all small and medium-sized businesses, the government would be exponentially increasing the chance of success for this program, and I would encourage them to do that. Obtaining early-stage venture capital is not an issue exclusive to burgeoning industries. Even small companies in the most developed sectors – oil, gas, agriculture, forestry – struggle with obtaining funding at that stage of development. Removing the sector restriction and extending the three-year window for the AITC program indefinitely would exponentially increase the success and reach of this program.

I'm all for developing new industries and moving towards a diversified economy. However, ignoring industries which have traditionally been successful in Alberta helps no one. These industries have been successful for a reason. They are the best prepared to create more jobs and attract further investment. This readiness is not restricted to any particular sector, Madam Speaker. Make no mistake; we need those jobs and that investment now, ready to execute, shovel ready, with both feet on the ground. However, we should be trying to encourage investment in businesses which have the potential to create and sustain jobs, those that are willing to put their own skin in the game and those investors along with them.

Emerging industries, which the government is heavily targeting, often take time to incubate, to get off the ground, to become sustainable, and to develop long-term success models. We should be assisting businesses in this process, not helping them initially and then running away once they start to become successful. The government has demonstrated an unlimited willingness to spend money. It would only make sense for them to contribute a relatively small sum of money, leveraged against the potential of a $2 return on a $1 investment, and this has been documented, of course, as noted in other jurisdictions.

With the program itself, this government has had months to consult with businesses and others to fine-tune this program, yet questions remain. Where are the parts of this bill that address exiting a small business or company if the partnership doesn't work out? What if small businesses merge, acquire? What if small businesses become successful and grow beyond a hundred employees? Hopefully, the minister will take the time to answer these questions over the course of debate, and I hope that he'll be open to positive amendments which will improve this legislation.

Now, if we move to the capital investment tax credit, again the government has taken what was initially an excellent idea and warped it. I think the NDP might call it bending a curve. As it stands now, the CITC will only apply to businesses in manufacturing, processing, and tourism infrastructure, industries which, I would argue, deserve our support, but why not extend it to all businesses in Alberta? Shouldn't the government be encouraging any and all capital investment in our province at this very difficult time in our economy? Is this not the same government which has budgeted for billions and billions of dollars of infrastructure spending? In the face of an economic downturn they feel this is the best way to stimulate the economy, but I would argue that leveraging private investment and other capital investment in our economy is a very successful way to increase economic investment and economic activity and jobs.

If you believe that, would it not make sense to leverage that private money to achieve the same results, to multiply that $1 to create $2 and maybe even higher leveraged results? In that way, you create a number of jobs at a fraction of the cost of a wholly publicly owned capital investment project. But that might be contrary to the NDP world view.

Again, the government is only half-heartedly committing to its own program. The CITC is a two-year investment of $70 million. Why, Minister, only two years? Individual companies are able to access $5 million in tax credits through this program. If each year is $35 million, that means there's potential for seven companies in a single year to eat up the allocated money. Again, the government has committed billions and billions of dollars to capital infrastructure projects which are still nothing more than a wish and a dream and in many cases do nothing to leverage the economy. Why not reallocate some of that money into this program so that the private dollars can be leveraged to build projects which are ready now while also helping Alberta businesses? Again, the private sector is much better at being shovel ready, with both feet on the ground.

Within the actual workings of the program itself our caucus has enormous concerns with the bureaucratic burden placed upon applicant businesses and individuals. In British Columbia, if you're claiming a venture capital tax credit, you simply enter the amount of the credit you're claiming onto two lines of your T1 income tax return: simple, transparent, and not caught up in red tape nor costs of administration. However, in Alberta this program will force investors or companies to apply to the minister – and I know the minister has better things to do – for his approval before they can claim the tax credit. To make it worse, the minister is able to rescind that approval of the tax credit, and there is no firm timeline in terms of responses from the minister nor the necessity for explanations from that minister.

We should be striving to make this program easier, perhaps working ever more closely with civic and regional economic development agencies, collaborating with regional tourism organizations, and making sector outreach across all sectors a key component of such capital or investor initiative. Madam Speaker, we need to make such programs, to encourage and leverage private and corporate investment, easier to access, not more difficult. I am hopeful that comments and amendments to improve this legislation from all members of this House will be welcomed to the benefit of all Albertans.

In closing, Madam Speaker, I just cannot comprehend why this government would do and embark on such a positive initiative half-heartedly and not commit fully to this program over the longer term and, in the process, make it very difficult to access for anyone who does not fit into the realm of the NDP world view.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to hear that generally there is support for this bill. I think it's really excellent for the province. I'm really excited about it. I did hear the member opposite speak about the B.C. program, which has been wildly successful for British Columbia. From 2001 to 2008 B.C. gave out $191 million in venture capital tax credits. I'm wondering: would the member like to see a reduction in the AITC tax credit available in Alberta from $30 million a year?

Mr. Gotfried: No. In fact, to the hon. member, thank you for the question. We'd like to see this program extended to a longer term period and committed to with enough money that it can be accessed not only by the restricted industries that are targeted but across all industries. When we're investing billions and billions of dollars in infrastructure, quite frankly, with $1 equalling $1, and we have an opportunity to take in a $1 investment and leverage against investor and private capital and corporate capital to create $2 in tax revenue, I think that that is an easy formula for us to take onboard.

I'm encouraging greater investment, so if there are any discrepancies in any dollars here, I think what we have from the B.C. example – again, I'd like to see a made-in-Alberta solution. Not everything that works there is going to work exactly as it does here, which is why we need to ensure we have the research in place to demonstrate what we can do. We will have that information and those statistics as we go forward if we have a well-developed and well-structured program that, hopefully, will yield similar if not better results to what we've seen in British Columbia.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm proud to stand up and speak today on Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. It's consisting of two new tax credits that will enable growth in small business and will support investment, entrepreneurs, and the criteria for both were developed in considerable consultation with businesses and investment leaders throughout Alberta.

The Alberta investor tax credit will refund 30 per cent on investments made by small businesses, support up to 4,400 new jobs over three years, and contribute up to $500 million to our province's GDP. This bill is very broad. Any company engaged in development or commercialization can qualify for the AITC as a small business as well as including sectors that traditionally are not included in this type of bill.

Madam Speaker, we have consistently lagged behind other jurisdictions in Canada for too long both in terms of venture capital dollars invested and deal flow. B.C.'s small-business venture capital tax credit, that supports equity investments, has been in place since 1985, and our new Alberta investor tax credit includes many of the proven aspects used in that jurisdiction. Companies under the program in B.C. have faster revenue and employment growth than control samples, and by encouraging local investors to invest in Alberta, we will see Albertan companies expand, innovate, create jobs, and show small-business success during our current tough economic situation.

The Alberta investor tax credit will allow investors the option of investing directly and acquiring the tax credit, or they may choose to invest indirectly through funds such as registered venture capital corporations. In this way, Madam Speaker, the AITC is a de-risking tool that makes investing in Alberta more attractive and encourages the private sector to see the benefits of investing in nontraditional sectors, resulting in a more diversified economy here in Alberta. Investments will be eligible for this tax credit on investments as of April 14, 2016, and by making this available to Alberta businesses that have at least 80 per cent of assets in Alberta, we continue to support companies with a significant presence in Alberta.

Businesses that are substantially engaged in research and development, development of interactive digital media, and tourism, to name a few activities, will benefit substantially from this bill, Madam Speaker. In the riding of Stony Plain itself our small and medium businesses are one of the pillars of our communities. Having programs that are designed to benefit them will support our rural communities as it supplements existing programs and addresses existing gaps.

The second tax credit included in Bill 30 is the capital investment tax credit, which will support $700 million worth of investment and up to 4,600 direct and indirect jobs here in Alberta, and though there are companies that are struggling here in Alberta, private capital investment remains higher here than in any other province in Canada. As part of our jobs plan the capital investment tax credit will refund part of a business's costs for new machinery, equipment, and buildings, which can help increase a company's output, because "while government must play a key role, it's up to all Albertans to support our entrepreneurs," as Arlene Dickinson, CEO of District Ventures, points out. This tax credit will encourage large-scale capital projects by offering a 10 per cent nonrefundable tax credit of up to $5 million, which is expected to incite $10 million to $40 million worth of exports province-wide.

Due to these challenging economic times and the global drop in the price of oil here and around the world we see lower cash flow, which can be boosted by investor confidence and timely investment decisions. Because the capital investment tax credit is not sector-specific, it will be available to companies across the province, industries such as manufacturing, processing, and tourism infrastructure that are making an investment of $1 million or more. The activities identified have strong potential for growth in the current economic environment and over the long term. This includes much of the oil and gas supply chain as well as industries that have the potential to grow in the future. Through the short-term nature of the CITC we have the opportunity to re-evaluate the program as the economic situation evolves.

By continuing to promote diversification of our economy, supporting our employers and industry, and enabling entrepreneurs and job creators as well as encouraging investment in Alberta, we are demonstrating meaningful action on the economy in Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon on what's been a spectacular week. I'd like to begin by congratulating the government for going a week without being found in contempt of the House. I would also like to start by congratulating the minister on Bill 30. My hon. colleague the independent Member for Calgary-Elbow mentioned the size of the bill. When you compare it to the first bill that the minister introduced, he's really made up for the one-page piece of legislation. I hope that this particular piece of legislation is significantly more successful than the last piece of legislation that the minister introduced.

You know, I was thinking this afternoon, Madam Speaker, about this piece of legislation and about the minister. Let me preface my comments, and I mean this in the most genuine way: I have nothing but the utmost respect for the Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

An Hon. Member: But . . .

Mr. Cooper: I don't know if I would say but. [interjections] This is a serious matter, okay? There are children in the gallery, the cutest children ever to be in the gallery.

I was reminded of a song. As you know, Madam Speaker, from time to time I am reminded of songs, and this particular song is called The Greatest:

Little boy in a baseball hat
Stands in the field with his ball and his bat

Says, "I am the greatest player of them all"

Puts his bat on his shoulder and he tosses up his ball.

And just for the sake of our analogy today, we can imagine the boy to be the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview in this particular case.

And the ball goes up and the ball comes down

Swings his bat all the way around

The world's so still you can hear the sound

The baseball falls to the ground.

We'll call that ball Bill 1. This, Madam Speaker, was really that, a strike, and it was unfortunate. But you know what?

Now the little boy doesn't say a word

Picks up his ball, he is undeterred

If there's one thing I can say about the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, that is true about him.

Says, "I am the greatest there has ever been"

And he grits his teeth and he tries it again.

And the ball goes up and the ball comes down

Swings his bat all the way around

The world's so still you can hear the sound

The baseball falls to the ground.

I know that this minister wasn't solely responsible, but we'll call that the carbon tax.

He makes no excuses, he shows no fear

He just closes his eyes and listens to the cheers.

We'll call that the backbench.

Little boy, he adjusts his hat, picks up his ball, stares at his bat

Says, "I am the greatest [in the land]"

And he gives his all one last time.

And the ball goes up like the moon so bright

Swings his bat with all his might

The world's as still as still can be

The baseball falls, and that's strike three.

Now it's supertime and his momma calls

Little boy starts home with his bat and ball

Says, "I am the greatest, that is a fact

But even I didn't know I could pitch like that!"

Madam Speaker, I often speak to the good people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills when they are disappointed or frustrated with this government. It's my hope that Bill 30 won't be strike 3 for the hon. member but will be a home run because I think it's important that we do our best. I often say to the folks in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that I want the government to do what's best for our province because I am an Albertan prior to a politician.

Now, we've seen some big swings and misses from this government, but as I said, I have nothing but the greatest respect for the minister, and here he is, taking another swing. It's my hope that he isn't found to be the greatest pitcher in the land but the greatest hitter in the land and hits one out of the park with Bill 30.

Now, we have heard some challenges around this particular piece of legislation, and I share many of those with my colleagues with respect to the reach of the investor tax credit. I share some concerns with my colleagues around limiting sectors with respect to this particular tax credit, but there are a number of things inside this piece of legislation that do provide some potential opportunity. I know that I have heard from some economic developers, some chambers who are voicing their support for this piece of legislation.

You know, it's been a good week, and I don't want to focus too much on the negative plight that we're currently in with respect to jobs, Madam Speaker, because I know that Albertans know very well where we are as a province.

It might sound like I am supporting this particular piece of legislation wholeheartedly. I would say that's a bit of an overstatement. I support this legislation with some reservation, with some concerns, and I look forward to having those addressed at Committee of the Whole.

In the meantime I'd like to move to adjourn debate.

4:10

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As riveting as this afternoon has been, with some fascinating stories and very good initial debate, looking at the clock, I move that the House adjourn until Monday, November 21, at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:11 p.m. to Monday, November 21, at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 2nd Session (2016)

Activity to Thursday, November 10, 2016

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, November 21, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us bow our heads and reflect and pray, each in our own way. Let us remember those who served our province in earlier years and who have now passed on. As current MLAs it is important that we learn from the experience of those before us and use that information to establish better public policy in service of our citizens.

Hon. members, as is our custom, we pay tribute on the first day to members and former members of this Assembly who have passed away since we last met. With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of the families who shared the burdens of public office and public service.

Mr. John McKenzie Thompson
March 22, 1924, to November 1, 2016

The Speaker: John Thompson served as the Member for Cardston for three terms, from 1975 to 1986. Born in California, Mr. Thompson spent most of his life in Spring Coulee, Alberta, running the family farm. In 1943 Mr. Thompson returned to the United States to enlist in the U.S. army. He fought in the Battle of the Bulge and was awarded the Bronze Star for meritorious service. After the war he served as a school trustee for the Cardston divisional school board for eight years and then for 11 years as a Member of this Legislative Assembly.

Ms Bonnie Mary Sheila Laing
March 30, 1937, to November 11, 2016

The Speaker: Bonnie Laing served as the Member for Calgary-Bow from 1989 to 2001. Prior to her election Ms Laing was an elementary school teacher for 26 years. During her service as a member Ms Laing's leadership abilities resulted in her chairing the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, the Calgary housing committee, the Calgary caucus, and the health system funding review committee. Ms Laing received the Alberta centennial medal in 2005.

In a moment of silent reflection I ask you to remember Mr. Thompson and Ms Laing as you may have known them.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark. I would invite all to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly 33 brilliant students from St. Alphonsus elementary and junior high school. They're accompanied by their teachers, Mrs. Sheila Crane and Miss Kailee Smith. I would ask them to please rise now and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of employees from the Advanced Education ministry. As a former public servant myself I know that the public service is filled with talented and dedicated individuals, none more so than the people who work for the Ministry of Advanced Education. I ask that they please rise as I read their names. We have with us today Susan Latham, Eric Martin, Mary Ann Haylalapit, Kelly Wiens, and Sue Gadag. I ask that all members of the Assembly give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today? Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Yes, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my hon. colleague for Edmonton-Decore I'd like to welcome the students and staff of St. Vladimir school. The teachers who are here today are Dan Slupek and Vanessa Sibilla. I ask that the students and staff of St. Vladimir please stand and be recognized by this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups?

I would then recognize the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we mark the beginning of Restorative Justice Week in Canada, it gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two dedicated individuals who are here on behalf of Alberta's Restorative Justice Association. I'll ask that they rise as I say their names and remain standing to the end. Jan Moran is the treasurer with the board of directors and has been a member of the association for 10 years. Fernande Bergeron is the secretary of the board and has been with the association for three years. The association provides information, education, and awareness towards best practices in restorative justice in Alberta. I would ask that the Assembly give them the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all the members of our Assembly representatives from the Canadian Pulmonary Fibrosis Foundation. Earlier this fall I met with the teams and these folks, who are committed and passionate advocates who work every day to support Canadians living with idiopathic pulmonary fibrosis. There's no cure for this devastating disease that causes scarring on the lungs and makes it more difficult to breathe each and every day.

Thank you to our guests for your tireless efforts. I'd ask that you all please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, do you have a second group?

Loyola: Indeed I do, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the Committee on Political Action at AUPE. Farris Sobhani and fellow committee members Mike Dempsey, Bruce Macdonald, Danielle Nadeau McMillan, Dustin Abbott, Henry Wakoluk, Ed Mullin, Peter Snowdon, Bill West, and John Lomas are committed to social action and promoting meaningful democratic participation. I'd ask Farris and all members of the Committee on Political Action at AUPE to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly individuals from two amazing groups who are here today to celebrate Career Month in Alberta, the Career Development Association of Alberta, or CDAA, and Women Building Futures. Career Month is a chance for Albertans to encourage and celebrate lifelong learning, career development, and professional achievement. The CDAA is a professional association of 300 proud members dedicated to providing employment and career services to a broad range of organizations, including government, nonprofits, and indigenous agencies. I'm very pleased that the CDAA's executive director, Paula Wischoff Yerama, could join us today as we celebrate their important work. We also applaud the work of Women Building Futures to encourage and support women to enter apprenticeships and careers in nontraditional trades and occupations. We welcome Kathy Kimpton, who is the new CEO. I would ask my guests to please rise and remain standing to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other guests? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the staff team of Workplaces, an exciting new small business in the Edmonton-Meadowlark constituency. I'm very proud to introduce Bruce Baker, president and founder; Mitch Cammidge, managing partner; and Jen Garrison, business development lead. I want to commend Workplaces on their commitment to innovation, strategic planning, and partnership. Their approach to improving operational efficiencies and standards in business management will certainly contribute to positive growth in our business sector. I would ask that they please rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other guests? Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly individuals from three more amazing groups who are here today to celebrate Career Month. Today we have with us Julian Daly and Eric Bishop from Boyle Street Community Services, Shirley McBride from the McBride Career Group, and Steve McGean from the Bredin Centre for Learning. I would now ask my guests to receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly by rising.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House Mr. Nolan Raber and his wife, Kayanne. If they could stand and please receive the warm welcome of the House. They are from my fine constituency of Grande Prairie-Smoky.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Any other guests?

Mr. Loewen: One more, yes. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House Erika Schofield, who is our receptionist and assistant in the Wildrose office. We see her lovely face every time we walk in in the morning, and it's great to see her here today. If you could rise and please accept the warm welcome of the house.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Hon. Peter Eric James Prentice, PC, QC July 20, 1956, to October 13, 2016

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month all Albertans were united in grief and remembrance after the untimely and unspeakably tragic passing of former Premier Jim Prentice. In this House, where Jim served briefly but very well, the remembrance continues. We hear his name often wherever colleagues gather. Today I add my voice to theirs and remember with sadness and with gratitude a remarkable Albertan and a remarkable leader. On a personal level I am grateful for the friendly, thoughtful advice he shared with me during the transition of government, and my gratitude is shared on a much broader level. The people of Alberta and Canada have much to be grateful for a life that lived for public service.

Indigenous people found in him a genuine and sincere champion. Banking and industry courted his agile and practical business mind. Environmentalists could relate to the man, who called himself a green Tory. As the federal minister of environment he oversaw the greatest expansion of our national park system in almost 100 years. He also was an advocate for new pipelines to bring Alberta's energy to the world because Jim Prentice believed that people are equally served by the protection of our environment and by the progress of responsible development.

Still others recognized his commitment to human dignity, saw his empathy turned into action, and experienced his graciousness firsthand. Through education, hard work, and a vocation for making a difference, Jim Prentice left the coal mines of Alberta for the floor of the House of Commons, to the boardrooms of the nation, and, ultimately, for room 307 of the Alberta Legislature as our 16th Premier. But wherever he was, Jim Prentice carried with him his love of Alberta and his vision of our province's potential. It is why he volunteered in his community, it's why he supported the Children's Cottage through the Jim Prentice-Stephen Ames golf tournament for kids, and why he helped found the Calgary Police Foundation.

Jim Prentice cared passionately about restoring a relationship of respect between the government of Alberta and our province's indigenous people, and he was determined as well to restore a professional public service for the benefit of all Albertans. I'm honoured to be able to carry both of these priorities forward. As Premier he also introduced the first version of Alberta's child benefit plan to reduce inequality. Here, too, we are honoured to have been able to build on this initiative.

When a dedicated public servant is cut down in the prime of his life, it is a reminder to us all that in the sometimes rough world of politics we must never lose sight of the humanity, the dedication, and the contribution of each of our colleagues. It is a charge to us all to carry forward the best of Premier Prentice's work, and that is exactly what all of us in this Legislature, I believe, are determined to do, Mr. Speaker. I believe that it is one of the best ways that we can pay a lasting tribute to the Premier we all knew as a friendly, thoughtful, and dedicated leader and dedicated public servant. I believe that seeing his legacy in action will be a continuing comfort to the Prentice family and indeed to all Albertans.

We also remember that his final flight was not made alone. Other families are grieving, and we share our thoughts and our condolences with them in their sorrow. I ask this House to remember all the victims of this tragedy, including the one we knew best, Jim Prentice: leader and friend, Premier and visionary, and always a proud Albertan.

Thank you.

Mr. Jean: I rise today to pay respect to the life and legacy of my former colleague Jim Prentice. Jim had a storied career in politics that took him from his home province of Alberta, that he loved so much, to Ottawa for seven years, but I know that his heart, even in Ottawa, was always here in Alberta. At the federal level it was an honour to serve with him in caucus and to run against him provincially in the 2015 election. I always respected that at his core it was his love for his province that called him to serve. Jim was also a good hockey player, and we spent more than a few Tuesday nights in Ottawa playing some very aggressive shinny.

What I respected the most, though, about Jim was the love that he had for his family, and that is the gaping hole that has been left behind with his sudden passing. Everyone in this House here today knows that a life in public service isn't meaningful without also having an excellent home life. That is what grounds you and reminds you of why we serve here. Jim never lost sight of that, and he never lost sight of being a great husband, a great father, an excellent grandfather, and a pillar of his community. He was so proud of his children and his grandchildren.

My heart aches for Jim's wife, Karen, his daughters and their two partners, and, of course, his two grandchildren. A sudden loss of any family member is never easy, but my prayer is that the memory you have of Jim provides you with comfort during this exceedingly difficult time.

I also want to take a moment to recognize the three other men that were lost in the plane crash and their families and their loved ones, who are also grieving from this sudden, tremendous loss in their lives.

In this Chamber and federally Jim demonstrated the nobility of public service. In the coming days, weeks, months, and years I will be guided by that legacy of civility and serving for the betterment of all Albertans.

Jim, we miss you, and we will continue to try our best to make our province, that you loved so much, even better tomorrow than it is today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to seek unanimous consent from the House to provide an opportunity for a representative of the Progressive Conservative Party as well as the MLAs for Calgary-Mountain View and Calgary-Elbow to respond to the ministerial statement.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also want to thank the hon. Premier and the Leader of the Official Opposition for your touching tributes. I'm honoured to rise on behalf of the Progressive Conservative caucus and Progressive Conservatives across Alberta to remember the Hon. Jim Prentice. His death last month came as a terrible and incredible shock to all who knew him. Even today it's just a little bit hard to believe he's not here with us.

We've had a few weeks now to reflect upon the man that Jim was and the remarkable legacy that he left behind. From Jim's humble roots in the coal mines of the Crowsnest Pass to serving as Alberta's 16th Premier, Jim's values of faith, family, and public service guided every day of his life. While he may have spent his first 12 years in Ontario, it's well known that he quickly fell in love with Alberta when his family came here in search of a better life.

It was this love for our province and its people that fuelled his relentless pursuit of leaving everything he became involved with just a little bit better than he found it. Whether it was as Prime Minister Stephen Harper's right-hand man, minister of the environment that he cared so much about, minister of Indian affairs and northern development that he cared so much about, vice-president of the CIBC, or the 16th Premier of Alberta, Jim's drive was always aimed to make those things better than he found them. I believe that it was his innate ability to bring other people together for a common purpose that helped him achieve that very goal.

Mr. Speaker, I experienced this first-hand following the PC leadership campaign in 2014. Despite the fact that Jim and I were rivals in this contest, he invited me to be part of his cabinet after the votes were tallied because, to him, doing the best for Albertans meant putting political differences aside and working together. The Member for Calgary-West sometimes says that he is here as a direct result of Jim Prentice.

Mr. Speaker, Jim showed all of us that doing the right thing isn't always easy and isn't always popular, but that should never stop any of us from trying to do the right thing. He dedicated his life to trying, and in my humble opinion, Alberta has gained much from Jim's efforts.

Our thoughts continue to be with Jim's wife, Karen, their daughters, grandchildren, and the entire Prentice family, and the families of three others whose lives were lost at the same time as Jim lost his. Words cannot express how sorry we are for all of those families and their loved ones.

Our hearts break for the loss of a leader who had so very much left to give. Rest in peace, Jim.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The passing of Jim Prentice and three others in the tragic airplane crash last month is a loss to us all. Jim's story is quintessentially Canadian, the blue-collar son of a hockey player who worked the mines to pay for law school, a lawyer who chose to direct his career towards the most challenging and perhaps least glamorous area of Canadian law, helping First Nations. Jim was a statesman whose principles demanding his participation in the public sphere, both federal and provincial, and whose talent brought him to the highest levels. Above all, Jim was an Albertan who saw his province in need and returned to make peace where there was division and unrest.

Jim and I disagreed on many things – after all, he was a Conservative and I'm a Liberal – but our ridings overlapped, and on the occasions where we worked together, I saw what so many had. Jim was kind, earnest, hard working, intelligent. His constituents had no greater advocate than Jim.

For Jim's family he was a devoted father and husband rather than the great politician the rest of us knew, and his passing is certainly one of personal tragedy. Their home is a stone's throw from my own, and I know our community has mourned with the family. Words, of course, are insufficient, but please know that you, the family of Jim, are in our hearts, thoughts, and prayers.

The world is changing quickly, and there are tumultuous times ahead for Alberta and for all of Canada. Jim's passing has taken from us someone whose guidance, patience, and experience will be missed sorely. I believe, though, that his legacy as coal miner turned lawyer turned statesman will inspire in us all a belief that we're all in this together, and it is celebrating our differences, not trumpeting our similarities, which makes Jim Prentice's Canada strong and free.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise to recognize the life and contribution of former Premier Jim Prentice. I want to first send my most heartfelt condolences to his wife, Karen, his daughters, his grandchildren as well as his family and legislative colleagues both in this House and in Ottawa. I also want to remember the three other families who lost loved ones in this terrible tragedy.

Jim's life was dedicated to serving the people of Alberta and Canada. He believed in the importance of political engagement, whether that was through volunteering in his community as a young man, seeking elected office, or working as a lawyer, where he turned his talents to helping people who needed his expertise. Throughout his legal career he fought for the rights of those around him, whether it was through land claims negotiations while working closely with First Nations, working with the Sikh community to build a gurdwara in northeast Calgary, or defending the rights of same-sex couples across Canada. Jim Prentice was a man who held the courage of his convictions. He was one of the few Conservatives to vote in favour of same-sex marriage in the face of strong opposition. He did so because he knew it was right.

He was more a traditional legislator than a true politician, which perhaps is the highest compliment that could be paid in a time of increasing polarization. He believed politics should be used to influence policy, not just win the day for the sake of power for power's sake.

Jim was also a mentor to many young people, and that mentorship continued after his political career because he knew he could help young people become the leaders of tomorrow to keep our province and our country strong.

Through his tireless efforts Jim Prentice left a legacy that will benefit Canadians for generations to come. He will never be forgotten.

The Speaker: Hon. members, on your collective behalf I have been in communication at various times over the last weeks with the Prentice family. As we all have appreciated in your comments today, they've experienced extraordinary grief. The family has asked that I express to you their appreciation for the kind remarks they have received from all parts of the House. It meant very much to them. I indicated to them that at any point in the future when they have the strength to come back to this House, I would be facilitating that process. So from the family to all of you: thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Deaths of Children in Kinship Care

Mr. Jean: Serenity was a shy girl with dark hair and big brown eyes. She was active and liked to climb and play. But after being placed in kinship care and despite the repeated warnings of Serenity's birth mom, Serenity died bruised, beaten, malnourished, and suffering from hypothermia at only four years old. She was a victim of a broken system, a system that has time and time again been promised to be reformed, to be fixed without any success. To the Premier: what are you going to do to ensure Serenity's story of suffering is never ever repeated in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member opposite for raising this matter. This is a very serious matter. There's not a soul who could have read the story that he describes and not been moved and deeply troubled by the experience of that child. I know that there are a lot of people who spent this weekend being very, very, very troubled by that story.

We are continuing to do the work that we think is necessary to improve the role of the provincial government in protecting all young people in the province. A lot of work has already happened since that particular tragedy took place, but it doesn't mean that it's done. It's not done; it's ongoing, and we all have to work together to bring about success.

Mr. Jean: The injustice of Serenity's final year wasn't laid out in the Child and Youth Advocate's report, it wasn't highlighted by the Justice department, and we have yet to see the medical examiner's report. The fact is that we know what we do today about Serenity because of an Edmonton Journal column. A system that operates in secrecy is going to continue to fail our children. To the Premier: where was the report from the medical examiner, where was the report from the Justice department, and why didn't the Child and Youth Advocate present the full picture of Serenity's life in care?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the member for those questions. Indeed, those were the questions that I asked myself when I read the report in the Edmonton Journal, but unfortunately what we are advised is that because the matter is still under active criminal investigation, the medical examiner was asked not to disclose or release the report. Hence, the OCYA went off and wrote the report that he did. Work continues on this matter, and we are committed to ensuring that the tragedies experienced not only by Serenity but by other children in the system are properly addressed.

Mr. Jean: While in opposition this Premier highlighted the fundamental job of protective services, and I quote from her: "We care for those who are least able to care for themselves." Serenity was not taken care of. Serenity was physically and sexually abused by those who were supposed to care for her. She was 18 pounds when she died, and this happened in part because in the final 11 months of Serenity's life no workers checked in on her. To the Premier: what immediate steps and changes will be made to the system so that what happened to Serenity never happens again to another child in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, those are very appropriate questions. I'm advised that after that event occurred, indeed, work has already been ongoing to improve oversight of kinship care placements, to increase resources in that area. As you would know, our government put more money into that area in the last budget because we know that this is a big problem and that more work needs to be done. We will be vigilant, and I know that the people who work on the front lines try every day to keep children safe, and all Albertans need to be focused on that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Electricity Power Purchase Agreements

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you. When last we sat, the Leader of the Opposition asked the Premier an easy question, one that she should have answered with ease and confidence. She should have shown that she understands that when governments talk about using legislation to change 16-year-old contracts, investors get worried and avoid Alberta. So let me repeat the question: will the Premier assure investors that she won't turn Alberta into a banana republic that uses legislation to forcibly rewrite long-standing contracts?

Ms Notley: Well, I think, Mr. Speaker, that one thing we all do know is that if there is ever a situation where on one side corporations are looking for massive profits and on the other side stand the people of Alberta, we're pretty clear on where the folks on that side will land, and it will not be on behalf of the people of Alberta, which is what our government is doing. We are standing up for Albertans, we are standing up for Alberta consumers, and we will do all that is necessary to get the best outcome for them that we can.

Mr. MacIntyre: For over a week this Premier has been asked about the government's threats to use legislation to change the power purchase arrangements that exist between power companies. These PPAs have served Albertans well since 2000. Sometimes they're profitable; sometimes they run at a loss. All of them include a provision that if the government changes the law and intentionally makes a PPA unprofitable, the buyer can return it. Will the Premier commit to never using legislation to break long-standing negotiated contracts between companies?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, one thing I can say is that our government absolutely supports standard change-of-law clauses in contracts. Those are completely reasonable. That's not actually the matter that's at issue in this case, however. Nonetheless, as I've said before and will continue to say until the matter is resolved, we are going to do everything we can to stand up for Albertans.

Mr. MacIntyre: The government ripping up a long-standing contract between businesses is something that is completely unacceptable in a free economy. The PPA the government is suing over is a contract between Enmax and TransAlta and the Balancing Pool. The government is not even a party to this contract. Doesn't the Premier understand that when her government threatens to use law to change other people's contracts, she fundamentally threatens all business and investment across Alberta? Why is she trying to drive away investors?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, what's really important is that investors who are looking at putting their money into Alberta should know that they should be able to understand what the utilities, what the supports are for them. They should be able to go to transparent places – regulations, OICs, reports – and know: oh, this is exactly what it looks like. When it doesn't look that way, that also undermines investor confidence. We are working to improve investor confidence and also to support Alberta consumers.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Energy Policies

Mr. MacIntyre: Today we have another Trudeau announcing that he's going to stick his nose in Alberta's energy business yet again. Without consulting several of the provinces impacted, he unilaterally announced that he would accelerate the feds' own coal shutdown timeline to 2030. Of course, for an NDP government already committed to destroying jobs in our coal industry and disregarding technology advances, they don't seem all that concerned. Can the Premier explain to Albertans whose livelihoods will be destroyed why they are letting Ottawa mandate our policies?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is deeply ironic because the members opposite would like us to forgo our climate leadership plan so that Ottawa could write our policies for us. We're not doing that. We have a made-in-Alberta plan. We have a plan that's way ahead of Ottawa's. We have a plan that has worked with Alberta businesses, Alberta consumers, Alberta communities, that will work for Albertans because we take our job seriously, unlike the folks across the way.

Mr. MacIntyre: This NDP government's reckless agenda against our electricity sector is doing serious damage. They're threatening to rewrite legislation that governs our whole power industry. They've declared war on Alberta-owned power companies but somehow believe they can still bring in $10 billion of new investment out of thin air, I guess, and they're shutting down our coal industry, happy to have Ottawa's blessing now. How can any Albertan possibly trust this government to manage our economy?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, economic leaders throughout the world are actually getting out of coal because they understand that it is not the future of economic growth, unlike the folks over there. That being said, we have worked closely with coal producers. We made a commitment when we said that we would phase out coal to work with them to ensure that capital was not left stranded. We are engaging in good-faith conversations with them because that's what you do in a responsible way when you make hard decisions in order to bring about necessary, long overdue change, and that's what we will do on behalf of all Albertans.

Mr. MacIntyre: Alberta has six coal plants that can operate efficiently well past 2030. There is no guarantee from this NDP government that we will be able to provide enough power to our grid without significant rate increases for consumers, businesses, and families. Alberta should be negotiating exemptions. Instead, the NDP are celebrating the shutdown of an industry that thousands of Albertans rely on for their livelihoods. The only thing the NDP doesn't celebrate, of course, is the idea that America is going to approve Keystone. Why won't the Premier negotiate exemptions for Alberta instead of letting Ottawa dictate changes to our power grid?

Ms Notley: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite really doesn't understand his file. To be clear, the member opposite would have us do nothing so that Ottawa told us exactly what to do. Instead, what we've done is that we've worked with our stakeholders in Alberta and we've negotiated what works for Alberta because that's what a good government does.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It was good to have a constituency week. It provided time, for example, for government cabinet ministers to talk to Albertans, and as a result I have some questions. We have learned, for example, that cabinet has already approved, in principle, legislation to retroactively change the PPA agreements from 16 years ago, and Albertans deserve to know the details. To the Premier. Since your cabinet is talking about approving this move, please share with this House and all Albertans today: what are the details of the upcoming PPA?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the premise of the member opposite's question is absolutely false, and therefore I have really nothing more to offer.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps we'll try this. We know that cabinet ministers have been talking some more, and we are pretty certain that the government has made a settlement on the PPAs with Capital Power. Since Alberta taxpayers and Alberta electricity customers will pay for this agreement, again to the Premier: please share with this House and all Albertans details of your agreement with Capital Power and how much it will cost Albertans.

Ms Notley: Again, Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, our government will work very hard to get the best outcome for Albertans and for Alberta consumers that we can, and when we are at that point that we believe we have reached the best outcome for Alberta consumers that we can get, we'll be happy to speak more on it.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We also know from cabinet members that the Balancing Pool for electricity is losing in the neighbourhood of $70 million to $90 million a month, and two out of the three Balancing Pool members have resigned due to inappropriate interference by this government. To the Premier: how much will Alberta electricity customers and taxpayers pay for your government's gross mismanagement of the PPA and the mess that the Balancing Pool is in now?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, I reject once again almost the whole premise of the member opposite's question. But what I will say is that, generally speaking, electricity in Alberta, the market, is in tough shape because of the deregulated energy only market system that the members opposite put in place as part of a risky ideological experiment which, quite frankly, is not working. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Fentanyl Overdoses

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Despite frequent calls from public health experts and the opposition, the government has decided not to call a public health emergency in relation to the fentanyl crisis, stating that it's able to effectively fight the emergency without such powers. Last week in a joint statement released from Ottawa, B.C., under a declared public health emergency, committed to release monthly data tracking, one, illicit drug overdose deaths, two, the proportion of deaths where fentanyl is detected, and, three, nonfatal overdoses requiring emergency response. Given that the associate minister has said that she already has such data, will she now tell us the number of opioid overdoses reversed through naloxone . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, the information that the hon. member has listed is now available online on Alberta Health's website. We've committed to releasing quarterly reporting on the opioid crisis and other substances of misuse, and we're open and transparent with the public on the trend data. We feel it's really important to make sure that that data is accurate so that we're able to allocate our resources in the appropriate way because we cannot sacrifice the lives of Albertans for this PR exercise of more recently released numbers. We want those to be accurate numbers. Also, data . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Swann: To the associate minister again: are the number of naloxone reversals increasing or decreasing since the last report?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the opportunity to answer the rest of the question. As of September 30 over 6,400 naloxone kits have been distributed to Albertans, and the reported number of usages is over 400. We know that that is an underinflated number, however, because not everyone is reporting the usage of the kits. In the time frame that the member is asking about, for the first half of 2016 there were 3,752 emergency room visits relating to opioid overdoses that have been reversed.

Dr. Swann: And that's not an emergency?

Overdoses, in reporting from emergency departments, have now reached approximately 25 per cent of all emergency visits for drug use. Can the minister tell us whether they're increasing or decreasing?

The Speaker: The associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We have found that as this crisis is continuing, the number of visits is seeming to increase. We are continuing to keep tabs on those numbers, and we are working hard to ensure that treatment is making its way into the hands of people who need it. We are working with our partners in the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta to expand access to opioid dependency treatment, which is the best practice for treatment for people with opioid addictions. Additionally, we are working very diligently on the harm-reduction file, including supervised consumption services across our province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Agricultural Environmental Programs

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Farmers agree that we all have a role to play in protecting our environment, but producers have told me that they are concerned about the impact of the upcoming carbon levy on their operating costs. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: what is the government doing to invest in agriculture and to help farmers, including those in Leduc-Beaumont, protect our environment, and keep these farms sustainable and our farming communities vibrant?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member for the question. Last month I was proud to announce $10 million in funding to help producers reduce their emissions and become more efficient in the process. This includes an enhanced on-farm energy management program, that will cover up to 70 per cent of capital purchases, up to $750,000; an on-farm solar program; an irrigation efficiency program; and an accelerating agricultural innovation program to help food processors become more efficient. But this is just the first step. We're committed to working with our producers to become even more efficient and competitive than they already are.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that past agricultural sustainability programs have proven to be in high demand, to the same minister: how many producers will this program help, and how quickly can producers begin accessing it?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, it's important to note that these programs are already being delivered through the joint provincial framework known as Growing Forward 2. This gives us the ability to move forward quickly, more quickly than building programs from scratch. Producers are already familiar with these programs, so we're confident we can provide supports immediately. The number of producers accessing the program will depend on the applications. My department is committed to work with producers big or small, to process applications in a timely manner. We'll monitor the uptake as we move forward.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's climate leadership plan provides a made-in-Alberta approach to deal with the threat of climate change, to the same minister: how will you ensure that Alberta producers remain competitive, efficient, and well positioned compared to other jurisdictions?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, I've had the pleasure to talk with producer groups across the province: the Greenhouse Growers Association, the crop sector, chicken and pork producers, to name a few. They are supportive of our most recent commitment. They're also supportive of the carbon levy exemption on marked gas and diesel, but they understand that the recently announced funding is a first step forward and more is to come. By Alberta's moving forward, our producers will be a step ahead of producers in other provinces that choose to not act to address emissions that lead to climate change. We're committed to an ongoing dialogue, to work with producers, and to address agriculture emissions. By doing so, we'll have a more competitive, efficient industry in the years . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Deaths and Injuries of Children in Care

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, a child in care deserves to be safe. What happened to four-year-old Serenity while in kinship care couldn't have been further from a safe place to grow up. While in kinship care Serenity withered away, and for the last 11 months of her life no one was even checking in on her while she was being beaten and starved. To the Premier: what are you doing to protect our kids in care?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. These are certainly heartbreaking losses, and our thoughts are with those who loved and knew these young people. We have taken the recommendations made by the Child and Youth Advocate very seriously, and we have accepted them in full. We will work with the advocate to make sure that these are implemented in letter and spirit, and we'll be able to avoid similar incidents happening in the future.

Thank you.

2:20

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that promises to reform our system and promises of transparency have not worked – the only reason we have additional details about Serenity's passing is because of a column by Paula Simons – and given that the advocate has detailed several recommendations over the past two years which could have saved Serenity's life, to the Premier: why are you not taking action on these reports?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. In all cases we make sure that we protect the identity of the family, the child, and their loved ones, and there's no exception to that. At the same time families can choose to grieve the way they like. As I said, we have accepted the recommendations made by the office of the Child and Youth Advocate, and we will make sure that systemic improvements are made so that similar incidents can be avoided in the future.

Thank you.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, the Child and Youth Advocate only investigates when something devastating has happened in our system. Given that we need to be fixing the system before it gets to the point where light is shed by the Child and Youth Advocate because of abuse, malnourishment, or death and given that there have been many others who have died in government care during this government's term, will the Human Services minister commit to adopting the advocate's recommendation and fix this broken system before we get another report?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I can tell all Albertans and this House that we have accepted every recommendation the advocate made to this government, and we are taking action to make sure that his recommendations are implemented. For members' knowledge, I will add that we provide a death and serious injury report to the advocate for every death and every serious injury, and as an independent officer he can choose to investigate whatever he deems fit.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Balancing Pool Board of Director Resignations

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy will recall that I rose in this House on November 3 to ask her if she was aware of any resignations in any of the agencies for which she's responsible. She rose to state, "I'm not aware of any resignations this week." Now, the Balancing Pool sent out a press release dated the very same day, November 3, indicating that two of its directors, including the chair, had tendered their resignations. I understand that they tendered their resignations to this government several days before their press release went out. Will the Minister of Energy clarify for the record when she and her office staff became aware of these resignations from the Balancing Pool?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. At the time the hon. member asked me, I was not aware. Later that afternoon I received the letter of resignation.

Mr. Rodney: Given the understanding that the two Balancing Pool directors resigned several days before the Balancing Pool sent out a press release regarding their resignations and that the Balancing Pool was forced to send out their own press release because the government would not announce their resignations, will the minister explain to this House and to all Albertans why this government did not announce their resignations and why it left it up to the Balancing Pool itself to break the news instead?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. As I mentioned, at the time of asking I was not aware of any letter. The letter: I'm not sure where it was sent first, but it did make its way to my office later that afternoon. That's all I know. The reasons given were that it was at the end of this month, and that's all I am aware of.

Mr. Rodney: Mr. Speaker, I wasn't just talking about the resignations; I was talking about the press release.

Given the understanding that the two Balancing Pool directors who tendered their resignations resigned because they were fed up with this government's political meddling in the affairs of the Balancing Pool, including the NDP's ill-advised PPA lawsuit, will the minister rise to explain how this government justifies its interference in the affairs of the Balancing Pool, an agency that's supposed to be free from political meddling, and can she tell Albertans if the only remaining member of the Balancing Pool has also tendered their resignation? If so, who, if anyone, is tending to the ever-important Balancing Pool here in the province of Alberta?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. In advance of any resignations we're aware of, we were out getting new applications in for the Balancing Pool and continue to do that. We do have an interim person in place right now until we get that person. If there is another resignation, I'm not aware of it, and I would question why the hon. member across knows this in advance of myself.

Member's Change in Caucus Affiliation

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, nearly two years ago some members of this House had choice words for those who crossed the floor from opposition to government. For instance, the NDP leader said that both sides were, quote, guilty of betraying the people who voted for them. She also called it, quote, a betrayal of the parliamentary process and democracy itself while noting that they must have been doing a poor job in opposition if they had to join the government. Is the Premier now comfortable with betraying the voter as long as she is the one who benefits?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. In this specific case that the member is referring to, we've seen a party that has abandoned any sense of being a voice for practical, moderate policy in the province of Alberta. In turn, the people of Alberta are looking to the government – that is, an NDP government – when they have a choice between a rash, hateful, mean ideology and one that's inclusive and embracing and respectful. We see where people are moving.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, no. Voters in Calgary are left frustrated and deeply hurt that their voice in government has been misrepresented.

Given that we've seen the NDP government taking radical action against business and investment and seeing that piles of new taxes and regulations are crippling the Alberta economy, driving Calgary's unemployment past 10 per cent, and since NDP support is in free fall, can this government honestly say that they are honouring the voters by turning an opposition voice into just another booster of the damaging NDP world view? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please.

The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Calgary-North West has a long tradition of standing up for her constituents, and no matter what side of the house she's been on, she's been very pragmatic, focused on outcomes, and problem solving oriented. We've been able to accomplish a lot in a really thoughtful, pragmatic way when she was on the other side of the House, and I'm sure she will continue to serve the constituents of Calgary-North West with respect and honour. She is a welcome member of our caucus.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I've been reminded. As I look at the notes, I do hope your supplemental questions are with respect to government policy rather than any other matters.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this side of the House we believe Albertans have the final say, not the politicians. Given that elected members should remain accountable to their constituents at all times and given that the Premier herself said that previous crossings to the government were a betrayal of accountability, will the Premier agree with the Wildrose that voters . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member. [interjections] Hon. member, I don't believe you hit the target in terms of government policy.

The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. No matter who leads the opposition, whether there be many parties or not, we know that a progressive, moderate choice that makes Alberta move forward as opposed to an extremist, reactionary choice that's hell-bent on dragging Alberta back into the last century is the direction that the province of Alberta is moving on, and we are proud of that. On this side of the House we believe that climate change is real, on this side of the House we believe that protecting health care and education is of utmost importance, and on this side of the House we believe in diversifying our economy, having good, stable jobs, and supporting families.

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Speaker: Noted. [interjections] Hon. members.
The Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

2:30

Carbon Levy

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP's ideological carbon tax will increase the economic burden on many aspects of the public and private sectors, not only from stalling growth but from prohibiting it. From postsecondary institutions to municipalities, all will suffer some kind of loss. I want to know if the NDP government has counted the cost for our postsecondary institutions. To the Minister of Advanced Education: can you please tell us how much this tax is costing universities and where you expect them to get the money from?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you. I find it hilarious, actually, that the member opposite, who represents a party that wants to cut billions of dollars from every sector of the public service, including postsecondary, is asking me to provide the costs to postsecondary education of the carbon tax. As soon as he comes clean with his plans for postsecondary education, Mr. Speaker, we'll talk about where we're giving the money to them. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, all of the energy earned in the last 10 days is clearly demonstrating itself in the House today.

Mr. Taylor: I suppose that means that he doesn't have a clue or that he hasn't done an economic impact study.

Given that institutions are likely going to have to cut wages, staff hours, and invaluable courses due to the government's risky policies, to the Minister of Advanced Education: how does the government expect institutions to deal with the rising cost of inflation, a massive new carbon tax, a tuition freeze that many students and universities aren't on board with, and still deliver world-class education?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the students will remember in the next election that the members opposite are advocating for skyrocketing tuition increases, which, of course, students in this province are very much in favour of as well as their parents.

What we have committed to is predictable, sustainable funding for every university and college in this province, and we've delivered on that promise.

Mr. Taylor: No. Rate of inflation is what we're talking about.

Given that at the AAMD and C I heard that municipalities are very concerned about the carbon tax and will have to pass the buck on to taxpayers and given that municipalities are already having a hard time collecting taxes from about 10 per cent of the ratepayers because of work shortages and will have to raise taxes to accommodate for the carbon tax, how is the government going to ensure the viability of small communities like Forestburg, Killam, Hardisty, and Wainwright, who will be hard hit by these bad economic policies?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can say very proudly that this year, at a time when our revenue was cut by 20 per cent, we had sustainable funding for municipalities, and I can state with virtual certainty that that would not have happened with any of the folks on the other side. We will continue to work with municipalities to ensure that we provide the supports they need to move forward, to find the efficiencies they need to help them be efficient going forward, but we're not apologetic for the fact that we are remaining the number one supporter of municipal funding, ensuring that they have the stable funds that they need, that they never would have . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fraser: This past week the Progressive Conservative caucus, municipalities around the province, and private industry raised concerns about this NDP government considering retroactive legislation to nullify the PPA contracts, contracts that have been a benefit for Albertans for over 15 years. With all due respect, Premier, you need to stop dodging questions on this issue. You spent hundreds of thousands of dollars of public money trying to convince the court of public opinion, and then you've hired NDP outsiders who are anti-Alberta to fight Albertans. Premier, to date how much money have you wasted because of this ill-informed lawsuit?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You want to talk ill-informed? Talk about bringing in an 11th-hour, behind-the-scenes Enron clause and putting them to these agreements. Talk about ill-informed. Talk about cabinet making decisions not to disclose that through the typical public process, which would enable members of the public and the media to be aware of decisions that may or may not have been made. We're going to stand up for Albertans, and I am proud to do so.

Mr. Fraser: Well, that's interesting because all those binders you bring into this House, you should be reading.

Given that power companies are reeling at the idea of retroactive legislation and given that the threat alone is driving electricity investor confidence to new lows, do you actually realize that you need these investors to fulfill your plan of 30 per cent by 2030? And how are you going to rebuild these partnerships that you've destroyed in just a year and a half?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to do my homework. I wish the member opposite would do his.

Instead of taking part of the profits that were very successful over the last several years and using that to offset current potential losses, the other sides of the PPAs want to pass those losses on to consumers. We can stand up for Albertans, or we can do what the members opposite are proposing, which is bury our heads in the sand and pass more bills on to Albertans. I'm going to stand up for Albertans, Mr. Speaker, and I wish the members opposite would pretend that they want to do so as well.

Mr. Fraser: Well, I understand my role here, but you didn't understand the impacts of your ideological policies, and Albertans know that you've been backpedalling from the start. Now that you realize you're going to lose this court battle, you're just going to change the rules with retroactive legislation halfway through. Even a grade school child knows that this is wrong. It's clear that you have no intention of following through on this costly legal battle. Will you tear up the right contract today, Joseph Arvay's contract, and send home your NDP lawyer?

Ms Hoffman: We are committed to taking action on climate change. The world is calling on all of us to do our fair share, and the members opposite want to pretend that we're still living in the 20th century. Well, Mr. Speaker, we're going to move forward in a thoughtful way to curb emissions, to provide a secure electricity system to Albertans, and we will consider any tools required to do so. Of course, we would like to work with partners, and that's why we're setting up fair, responsible ways of moving forward in greening our electricity system instead of picking winners and losers like the third party did for decades.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Family Violence

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Violence in any form is unacceptable. It affects children, adults, seniors, and devastates communities. Constituents in Calgary-Bow want to know what is being done to ensure that people affected by violence have the supports they need. To the Minister of Human Services: what is the government doing to support survivors of family violence?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I would like to thank the member first for her leadership on the issue. Her safer spaces private member's bill enables survivors to end a lease without penalty and breaks down a real barrier for survivors of family violence. I would also like to acknowledge that members of this House passed this legislation unanimously. So Albertans should know that they can access these important supports through Alberta Works' centres in Human Services.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that we need to prevent family violence. Given recent reports that domestic violence is on the rise in parts of Alberta, to the same minister: what is our government doing to prevent family violence?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the member. Our government is committed to taking action to prevent family violence so that no one has to live in fear nor suffer silently as a survivor. We have taken many important steps: increasing FCSS funding by $25 million, investing $15 million in women's shelters, investing another $8.9 million in family and community safety program grants to 53 programs across the province. We recently announced some more supports during this month to support the work across the province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that November is Family Violence Prevention Month, to the same minister: how is the government raising awareness regarding family violence and prevention strategies to make sure we continue to be strong partners?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I did outline some steps that the government has taken, but I recognize that we all have a role to play in preventing family violence. I am proud to acknowledge that Family Violence Prevention Month originated in Hinton, Alberta, 30 years ago. This year's theme is Reach Out, Speak Out, which encourages all Albertans to send a powerful message that these crimes have no place in our society, and our government is reaching out for partners to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Idiopathic Pulmonary Fibrosis

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Idiopathic pulmonary fibrosis is an irreversible, fatal disease that scars the lungs and greatly reduces quality of life. There is no cure for the permanent damage short of a lung transplant. Last month I met with members of the Canadian Pulmonary Fibrosis Foundation. They presented a patient charter calling for improved access to community-based services, long-term chronic care, palliative care, and research towards a cure. Can the Minister of Health commit to addressing the concerns in the IPF patient charter and outline how this will be done?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Last month I also met with the Canadian Pulmonary Fibrosis Foundation and had the opportunity to hear some of their stories. It is a devastating disease, and there are many struggles that are ongoing for patients with that disease. They told me about access to appropriate medications and specialized treatments that are necessary to components of fighting this disease, and we are moving forward on a number of their recommendations that align with that goal. We are also working to review the others that remain. I'm pleased that the specialized clinics that we do have here, both in Edmonton and Calgary, are world class. While it is devastating, there is no place better in the . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Minister. IPF greatly reduces oxygen uptake in the lungs, severely limiting the ability to walk, move, and even breathe. Given that current eligibility standards for financial aid for home oxygen are outdated and based on unrelated chronic diseases and since these inappropriate standards for IPF require patients to periodically retest for eligibility despite the disease being irreversible, degenerative, and exhausting, will the government end this wasteful and very unpleasant testing standard and work towards developing standards specific to pulmonary fibrosis?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the relevant and superimportant question, particularly for those living with this disease. Our government is going to continue to work with the Alberta Health Services clinical advisory committee, the medical professionals in the field that make patient treatment decisions. Earlier this year, in consultation with lung disease specialists, amendments were made to the criteria to provide greater access to funding in the area of home oxygen, and that is certainly a step in the right direction. With regard to other recommendations my department is meeting with clinicians practising in this area and will continue to review the procedures and testing to find additional ways that we might be able to increase . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, also timely, November is Lung Month, and we have the opportunity to raise awareness for chronic lung illnesses. Given that chronic disease management is such a crucial component of the health system and given that inappropriate handling of chronic diseases can result in massive inefficiency and reduce quality of life as patients are moved in and out of hospitals, what is the government doing to ensure that people suffering from chronic respiratory disease get access to care in their home or in their community?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think we all agree that we want to ensure that Albertans get the right care in the right place at the right time, and this means providing services as close to home as possible.

For people suffering from chronic respiratory diseases we've made some improvements effective November 1 that I'm very pleased to update this House and all Albertans about, and that's listing both Esbriet and Ofev for public funding under the Alberta drug benefit list, ADBL, for patients who meet the criteria in need of those. We've also increased our investment in home care to $611 million. That will help thousands of Albertans receive medical assistance in their homes, which the member speaks about.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Trade Mission to China and South Korea

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry recently returned from a two-week trade mission to China and South Korea. Alberta producers need the ability to expand to new markets and explore growth opportunities overseas. The minister had said that this trade mission would focus on opportunities for value-added food processing, agricultural products such as beef, pork, grains, and livestock genetics. To the minister: did you sign any new agreements that will expand markets for Alberta agricultural producers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Thank you for having me back. It was a very good trade mission. It was my first to China and my first to South Korea. We were able to meet with many producers and processors in China and also processors and industry leaders here from Alberta as well. We were able to sign several agreements on co-operation and memorandums of understanding in both the northern province and throughout China and in Korea as well. I'm looking forward to a very fruitful return for that trip.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that it is important for all Alberta producers to foster relationships that gain access to new markets and given that you said that you'd also focus on opportunities for lumber and pulp exports, to the minister: did you sign any new agreements that will help expand markets for Alberta's forest producers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member for the question. I had the opportunity to meet with Canada Wood both in China and in South Korea, exploring opportunities to expand our markets there. There are some great opportunities. Even though the economy has taken a bit of a dip in China, it's still the second-largest economy in the world, and they need lumber. Their construction is still going at full blast, an opportunity to have lumber there. As well, Korea is recognizing the value and the durability of Canadian and Alberta lumber in particular, and those talks continue. I'm very happy with our fruitful discussions.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there were many scheduled meetings for your trade mission in China and South Korea and given that you said that contacts you spoke with were keen to buy Alberta products but they mentioned that trade barriers with Canada gave them pause to buy Alberta products, to the minister: what talks did you have with the Chinese government about these trade barriers, and what solutions did you generate?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very thoughtful question. For the very first part of the mission I was able to accompany the federal agriculture minister on his discussions with Chinese officials, everybody recognizing that they want more of our product but working through those federal regulations to increase our trade to Asia and China and South Korea. Happy to work with our federal colleagues and provincial colleagues across the country to continue that work on making those regulatory changes to increase our trade in Asia.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Building Codes and Efficiency Standards

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the Minister of Municipal Affairs announced changes to the Alberta building code to harmonize with the national energy efficiency standards. Given that many people in Calgary-Northern Hills have mentioned that they want to green their homes by using things like LED lights, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: how is the government harmonizing the Alberta building code with the national energy efficiency standards?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These changes will save Albertans money and ensure that Alberta continues to be a leader in the fight against climate change and a competitor in the carbon-strained economy of the future. Building responsible and sustainable homes is not a trend. It is the future, and it is the right thing to do. These code changes support our climate leadership plan by reducing greenhouse gas emissions and creating more modern and efficient homes and businesses. Climate change requires us to look at all policy from an environmental lens and to make decisions that not only move Alberta forward but also . . .

2:50

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you. Since these changes were announced, my constituents have asked how this will impact them. To the same minister: what efficiencies will these code changes target?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government has done more work in the last year than in the past six years to bring Alberta's code up to date. These code changes will promote and improve energy efficiency standards for windows, lighting, insulation, heating, ventilation, and air conditioning. These changes will ensure that the amount of energy used by homeowners and businesses will be permanently reduced and that the savings will continue into the future. This is good for the environment and good for everyone who has to pay for electricity.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given the current economic climate due to the drop in the price of oil, how will these changes save homeowners money and support efforts in confronting climate change?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, man-made climate change is real. We can either act now or be left behind. Ignoring climate change is not a solution. On this side of the House we refuse to engage in head-in-the-sand politics when it comes to action. We are adopting policies that promote energy efficiency while delivering long-term cost savings to Albertans. Albertans will see an approximate 20 per cent saving on their energy bills, while nationally the code updates will result in $70 million in cost savings for building owners in 2016 by improving energy performance in over 24,000 . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The chair will recognize the Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Giving an eye to the clock, I wonder if I might seek the unanimous consent of the House to continue with the daily Routine past 3 o'clock.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The Member for Red Deer-South.

Career Month

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to acknowledge Canada's first-ever Career Month. Spearheaded nationally by the Canadian Council for Career Development and locally by the Career Development Association of Alberta, CDAA, Career Month highlights the role they play in assisting Canadians and Albertans to find their way to a suitable career and a stable career. As CDAA notes, career development is about direction, and in this fourth week of November the focus is on government and agencies to ensure meaningful work for our citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be a member of a government that understands the importance of intentional career development and one that sets a priority to ensure that all Albertans are future ready. This integrated approach to education and skills training will ensure that every Albertan has the skills they need to succeed in a changing economy. Valued partners like CDAA, McBride Career Group, Women Building Futures, Bredin Centre for Learning, and Boyle Street Community Services, to name just a few, offer Albertans education, training, apprenticeship, and mentorship opportunities every day, setting them on the path to a successful career.

In these challenging economic times, Mr. Speaker, it is more important than ever that Albertans can find the meaningful supports that they need to establish themselves in jobs that support themselves, their families, and pay the mortgage. In my area I'm proud of the work being done by the McBride Career Group, which just launched a construction pretrades training program, and the Bredin Centre for Learning, where they provide work skills training for all levels of residents, from new immigrants to the unemployed and underemployed in our region. Our government is creating new jobs and building an economy for the future.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills

Hon. Peter Eric James Prentice, PC, QC

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the residents of Calgary-Foothills to pay homage to our former MLA, the Hon. Jim Prentice. Although I did not know Jim well personally, as his successor in the riding of Calgary-Foothills I have learned a lot about him over the past year.

Jim was widely respected for his loyalty. He was loyal to the PC Association of Alberta, he was loyal to the PC Party of Canada, he was loyal to the Conservative Party of Canada, and he was loyal to his many friends therein until the very end, friends forged over five decades of public service in and out of office, friends like Manmeet Bhullar, who was in many ways the son Jim never had. Jim was a great friend and family man to his wife and daughters and a legislator who will always be respected for his accomplishments in the political sphere.

He created the modern blueprint for engaging in respectful dialogue with Canada's First Nations. As minister of Indian and northern affairs he signed treaties with the Maa-nulth and Tsawwassen First Nations in British Columbia. He also negotiated the residential school settlement, which led to the apology from the Prime Minister. As environment minister he went camping with David Suzuki in traditional Haida territory. It's my understanding that Jim was writing a book about his experiences working with First Nations and the challenges of reconciling energy development and the environment in Canada.

Jim's life tragically ended before he could write his final chapter, but his legacy of peace and reconciliation will serve to remind us of his work for generations to come. For this he will never be forgotten. "Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Hon. Peter Eric James Prentice, PC, QC

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two years ago I was a sergeant with the Calgary Police Service, working hard and standing up for what is right. Premier Prentice, who only knew me through reputation, recognized a kindred can-do spirit in me and urged me to run for public office. It was a leap of faith for me to jump from the police service into politics, but Premier Prentice had made a similar move when he unselfishly left a prestigious corporate role to serve the people of Alberta.

I'm not reinventing the wheel as I go about my work as a member of this Legislature. I am following his lead in setting up a public service for a higher calling. Today I fully appreciate the gift that is the privilege of serving Albertans, and that was his gift to me. Premier Prentice not only inspired those around him, but he also cared about you as a person. He became a father figure to me in that even after I was no longer working directly with him, I still wanted him to be proud of me.

Prior to his passing I saw Jim and Karen at an official function. Karen took a moment to tell me how proud they were of my success with Bill 205. Jim will never know how much those words meant to me because while we had plans to get together, that, sadly, will never occur now. If any of you have that special person in your life, I do urge you to take that opportunity, maybe even today, to let them know how much they mean to you.

We all have so much to thank this man for: his strong moral guidance, his incredible work ethic, his compassion, and his bravery in telling us truths that we did not want to hear such as warning Albertans about the pending economic challenges, which have since come to pass. Premier Prentice has had a strong influence on Canada and Alberta, and that influence will continue for generations to come. His family, former colleagues, and friends will ensure that his spirit lives on.

Thank you, Premier Prentice. Sir, I promise you that I will keep fighting and standing up for what is right.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Hon. Peter Eric James Prentice, PC, QC

Mr. Rodney: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to honour our dear friend and esteemed past Premier, the Hon. Jim Prentice. Jim built inspirational, personal, professional, and political legacies in Calgary, Alberta, Canada, and well beyond. He loved his family so much, and it's such a shame that their time together was cut short.

3:00

As minister of Indian affairs and northern development as well as industry and environment, stakeholders were consistently amazed at how generous Jim was at sharing his experience and expertise. After personifying fierce commitment to public service, Jim could have extended his time working at the highest levels of corporate Canada, but he gave it all up to serve the people of the province he loved so much.

Mr. Speaker, I have never met a person like Jim Prentice before. He was equally at home in a coal mine and in a farmer's field, on Bay Street, on Wall Street, in the Legislature, in the Parliament, the State Department, and at a hockey rink. In true Canadian fashion I can tell you that some of the most treasured memories I have with Jim occurred on the ice, where he was strong, smooth, strategic, prepared for everything, and one step ahead just like he was at virtually everything else in life. When Maclean's magazine asked Jim to describe his role in Prime Minister Stephen Harper's government, he said: "I always do what I'm asked to do. The penalty kill. Dig out the puck on the power play. Muck in the corner, or take a hard hit."

Jim wanted every one of us in the PC caucus to deliver the best for Albertans because they trusted us to represent their views, interests, and priorities, and we simply could not let them down. Jim was a leader of unquestionable dignity, and those closest to him respected, admired, and loved him. Mr. Speaker, I will never forget the last long talk that I had with him, that happened to be after the untimely death of our beloved friend Manmeet Bhullar.

Alberta lost a true champion who we will dearly miss, and I encourage us all to continue to build the best Alberta possible together because that is exactly what Jim Prentice would have hoped for and what all Albertans indeed do deserve.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Calgary Football Team Achievements

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to celebrate two Calgary football teams who will be bringing their Alberta pride and intensity to Ontario to compete for the highest honour in their leagues. This weekend the Calgary Stampeders will compete in the 104th Grey Cup, and the University of Calgary Dinos will compete in the 52nd Vanier Cup.

The Stampeders, led by first-year head coach Dave Dickenson, had a dominant 42 to 15 win over the BC Lions and ex-Calgary head coach Wally Buono. The weather was perfect for football in front of a sold-out Calgary crowd who helped propel the Stamps forward. They now move forward to face the Ottawa Redblacks, quarterbacked by former Calgary QB Henry Burris. The Stampeders, with a few Alberta boys on their roster, are favoured to win, but they still need our support as they try to bring home their second Grey Cup in three years.

Not to be outdone, on a team stacked with Albertan-born talent, hometown boys veteran quarterback Jimmy Underdahl and running back Jeshrun Antwi both helped the Dinos rout the X-Men 50 to 24 on Saturday. This comes on the heels of victory against the defending Vanier Cup champions, the UBC Thunderbirds, coached by former Dinos head coach Blake Nill. They now face Laval Rouge et Or in the Vanier Cup for the third time in seven years. While they lost in 2010 and 2013, I know that they can avenge those losses and bring the Vanier Cup home to celebrate the University of Calgary's 50th anniversary.

The Dinos will play this Saturday in Hamilton, and the Stampeders will take the field the following day in Toronto. Mr. Speaker, I'll be cheering them on this weekend and hope that they can have the support of all members of this Legislature to bring home this Calgary pride. Go, Stamps, go. Go, Dinos, go.

Carbon Policies

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, I've been a farmer for most of my life. Rural Alberta is in my blood. I also served as a councillor in a rural municipality for six years. I've attended about 12 Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties conventions during my tenure. That being said, I just want to talk about the last AAMD and C conference, that was held right here in Edmonton last Thursday.

It was a little chilly outside of the Shaw Conference Centre, but, Mr. Speaker, it was ice cold inside during the ministerial forum. In my dozen or so conventions I have never heard the government booed. I have always seen audiences at least offer polite applause after an answer from a minister. Well, it was clear on Thursday that this government has definitely not clicked with rural Alberta. As a matter of fact, one gentleman from a municipality stood up and asked a question of the delegates. He asked: who here thinks that shutting down coal-fired power plants in Alberta is the right thing to do? He looked around, and he saw one hand. He then asked: who here thinks that this is the worst decision in Alberta history? Virtually every other hand in the building went up. This gentleman then said to the ministers: we just want you to listen to Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, this was very telling for me. Most rural municipalities in Alberta were represented during this convention. Right in front of the ministers that represent this government, 99 per cent of the convention showed them that they don't agree with the direction that this government has taken with regard to the premature shutdown of coal plants or the carbon tax that will be levied on their municipalities on January 1. In fact, during the convention 93 per cent of the delegates voted in favour of exempting municipalities from the carbon tax. It's unbelievable that this government claims that those representatives of our rural Albertans are their partners.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

A point of order is noted.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure and Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to give oral notice of a motion for tomorrow's Order Paper, the motion being as follows:

Be it resolved that:

1. The 2015 annual report of the Alberta Property Rights Advocate office be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship for the purpose of conducting a review of the recommendations outlined in the report;
2. The committee may, without leave of the Assembly, sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued;
3. In accordance with section 5(5) of the Property Rights Advocate Act the committee shall report back to the Assembly within 60 days of the report being referred to it if the Assembly is then sitting or, if it is not then sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I rise today to provide notice that at the appropriate time I'll move the following motion:

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the systemic problems identified with kinship care and the safety policies governing it, the issues of secrecy still present in the child intervention system and the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General, and the serious concerns raised about whether the recommendations made by the Child and Youth Advocate are being fully implemented.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of items to table today. First, I rise to table the requisite number of copies of the Horse Racing Alberta 2015 annual report. Over the past year Horse Racing Alberta has reported a number of positive results throughout the province. In March of this year our government renewed a 10-year agreement with Horse Racing Alberta to ensure that this important industry will continue to thrive across this great province and continue supporting the more than 7,000 Albertans who work in the horse-racing industry. Thank you.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, with regard to Motion for a Return 1 I am also pleased to table the requisite number of copies in response to a motion for a return from the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. These are ministerial orders issued by the Ministry of Treasury Board and Finance between January 1, 2014, and December 31, 2015, as the member requested.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to results-based budgeting in accordance with section 3 of the Results-based Budgeting Act I'm also pleased to table the required number of copies of the fifth annual results-based budgeting report. This report provides a summary of the RBB process, describes the lines of businesses, and highlights some of the findings on the work that has been completed to date.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to the Alberta Securities Commission I am pleased to table their 2016 annual report. The commission is doing excellent work, and our government is pleased to once again confirm our commitment to an Alberta regulator that is responsive to the needs of our local market. I should take a moment to once again congratulate Mr. Stan Magidson, the new CEO of ASC, who is showing tremendous leadership in his new position.

Lastly, Motion for a Return 31. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table the requisite number of copies in response to a motion for a return from the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. The member requested responses received from Albertans through our online survey for Budget 2015. The government received over 2,900 responses from Albertans, and I'd like to thank, of course, all of them for their feedback. I should say that our government worked hard to deliver a budget that protected front-line services while continuing to maintain our province's position as the lowest taxed jurisdiction in the country.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These are all the reports.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I am pleased to table five copies of the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner of Alberta's 2015-16 annual report pursuant to section 63(1) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, section 95(1) of the Health Information Act, and section 44(1) of the Personal Information Protection Act.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Carlier, Minister of Agriculture and Forestry, pursuant to the Farm Implement Act the Farmers' Advocate office 2015-16 annual report; pursuant to the Livestock Identification and Commerce Act and the Stray Animals Act the Livestock Identification Services Ltd. report to the minister and summary of activities, reporting period April 1, 2015, to March 31, 2016; pursuant to the Agriculture Financial Services Act the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation annual report 2015-16.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Eggen, Minister of Education, return to order of the Assembly Motion for a Return 13, asked for by Mr. Cooper on May 2, 2016, copies of all ministerial orders issued by the Ministry of Education between January 1, 2014, and December 31, 2015.

Also, responses to five written questions asked for by Mr. Smith on May 2, 2016: Written Question 2, what is the government's projected estimate of the cost to implement full-day kindergarten in Alberta; Written Question 3, how much has the government spent on the student learning assessment pilot projects for the fiscal years 2010-11 to 2014-15 and from April 1, 2015, to February 29, 2016, and what are the details of what the money was spent on; Written Question 5, for the fiscal years from 2010-11 to 2014-15 and from April 1, 2015, to February 29, 2016, what was the cost to the government to develop and implement the provincial approach to student information initiative; Written Question 7, in Alberta how many English as a second language students were registered in the 2014-15 school year, and how many of those students will continue beyond the five years that are totally funded by school boards; Written Question 8, in the public, separate, and francophone school systems in Alberta what was the total amount of funds collected through fees, fundraising, donations, and gifts in each of the fiscal years from 2010-11 to 2014-15?

Pursuant to the Teaching Profession Act the Alberta Teachers' Association 2015 annual report.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Sabir, Minister of Human Services, return to order of the Assembly Motion for a Return 6, asked for by Mr. Cooper on May 2, 2016, copies of all ministerial orders issued by the Ministry of Human Services between January 1, 2014, and December 31, 2015.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe there were two points of order raised today. Three? Okay.

The first one from the House leader for the Official Opposition.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will raise three points of order today, one on behalf of my hon. colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner.

The first one is with respect to language likely to create disorder, 23(h), (i), (j), and (k). During question period today the Minister of Health made a number of very wild accusations. Without the benefit of the Blues, I believe her language was something to the effect of hateful and violent with respect to what the opposition was. One thing I am one hundred per cent sure of, Mr. Speaker, is that the hon. member used the language: the opposition is hell-bent. I'm certain that you will find this language unparliamentary, and I would ask that she apologize and withdraw.

The Speaker: The House leader for the government.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Opposition House Leader has cited two different instances in the same point of order, and I would propose to deal with them a little bit differently.

In the first instance, the language "hell-bent." Mr. Speaker, House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, talks this way about unparliamentary language. It says:

Since the Speaker must rule on the basis of the context in which the language was used, points of order raised in regard to questionable language must be raised as soon as possible . . .

It goes on to say:

In dealing with unparliamentary language, the Speaker takes into account the tone, manner and intention of the Member speaking; the person to whom the words at issue were directed; the degree of provocation; and, most importantly, whether or not the remarks created disorder in the Chamber. Thus, language deemed unparliamentary one day may not necessarily be deemed unparliamentary the following day. The codification of unparliamentary language has proven impractical as it is the context in which words or phrases are used that the Chair must consider when deciding whether or not they should be withdrawn.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I've taken the liberty of getting some definitions of "hell-bent." The hon. Deputy Premier used that in the context of what she deemed the opposition was trying to accomplish. In Merriam-Webster it says, "Very determined to do something especially when the results might be bad . . . stubbornly and often recklessly determined or intent." Oxford says, "Determined to achieve something at all costs," and dictionary.com says, "1. stubbornly or recklessly determined; 2. going at terrific speed," and so on.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in that context I don't believe that it's either unparliamentary or satisfies the requirements of 23(h), (i), or (j), and I would argue that it is not a point of order. Moreover, that particular term has been used in this House many times with no point of order being called or sustained by the chair. Not to single out our two newest roommates in the House, but the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore used the term on April 20, and the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View used it on December 4, 2013. There are many other instances. I don't mean to particularly single them out. I'm arguing that there is absolutely nothing unparliamentary or contrary to the rules with respect to that.

In terms of the other language that the hon. House leader for the Official Opposition has raised . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Yes.

The Speaker: Could I just clarify? I have records that we had two points of order. The first one was yours with respect to the exchange between the Minister of Health and Cypress-Medicine Hat. Then I saw one later from the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Cooper: And I called an additional one after your interjection with the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat immediately following his question as well.

The Speaker: For my sake, if no one else's, could we deal with the first point of order on the exchange with respect to the Minister of Health and Cypress-Medicine Hat?

Mr. Cooper: Yeah. That's the understanding that I'm currently under, that we are dealing with that right now.

The Speaker: Good.

Mr. Mason: I'm at a loss to understand what the issue is, Mr. Speaker. I'm dealing specifically with that point of order, which included two pieces of language, one of which, I've just argued, is not unparliamentary and does not violate the standing orders.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Mason: The second one: the Deputy Premier used the language "violent" and "hateful" if I recall correctly. Is that what the Opposition House Leader suggested? Mr. Speaker, there's no question that as we've seen political developments in this province unfold on social media and other areas, including at meetings, there has been violent and hateful language used.

Mr. Nixon: Yeah. She said that about us.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to that, there's no question that that type of language has unfortunately become part of the daily experience of politicians of this province, including members of this House and, in particular, with respect to members who are female, and I think it's very unfortunate. However, in terms of . . . [interjections] Do you guys mind? Okay. Are we ready to go?

The Speaker: Hon. members. [interjections]

Hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, could we let the Government House Leader proceed? Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. However, with respect to use of those adjectives with regard to members opposite, I think that it may be argued that the Deputy Premier exceeded the norms of what is normally acceptable in this House, and on her behalf I would like to withdraw the expression and apologize.

The Speaker: Are we dealing – which one?

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

Mr. Cooper: The second point of order.

Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today during question period – I rise on Standing Order 13(2), "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member." During the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat's question – he was speaking about a policy, if you will, around electoral recall. I just wanted to highlight chapter 11, page 504 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, when it speaks specifically – it doesn't speak only about government policy but about matters concerning "internal party matters, or party or election expenses." Clearly, the member was not asking about a matter of party policies; he was asking about government policy and was it the government policy to support recall or not. Clearly, it's not their policy, but I would just ask if you might be able to provide some additional comments on: why the interjection when he wasn't asking about party matters? He was clearly asking about government matters.

The Speaker: I do have a copy of the Blues. I trust that we are dealing with the same matter. The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat:

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this side of the House we believe Albertans have the final say, not the politicians. Given that elected members should remain accountable to their constituents at all times and given that the Premier herself said that the previous crossings to the government were a betrayal of accountability, will the Premier agree with the Wildrose that voters . . .

I interjected as Speaker and said:

I don't believe you hit the target in terms of government policy.

You were asking for an opinion, my opinion, and that's why I ruled on the matter and why I consider the matter to be closed.

Is there a third one?

Point of Order

Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Cooper: Yeah. This is the last one, Mr. Speaker, from me. During Members' Statements my hon. colleague from Little Bow was speaking about a very chilly reception that members of the government received from AAMD and C. I'm rising specifically on Standing Order 23(j), "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder."

Mr. Speaker, I don't have the benefit of the Blues, as you do, but during that, the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood heckled: perhaps they should have used eugenics. [interjections] Everyone on this side of the House heard him use the word "eugenics." We all know that that is an extremely unparliamentary accusation to make. The science of eugenics: improving a human population by controlling breeding to increase the occurrence of desirable characteristics. I would like to give the member the opportunity to rise and let this House know that that is not a reference he was making to all members of rural Alberta.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that the hon. Official Opposition House Leader didn't have the advantage of the Blues. I haven't either, but I did take the liberty of asking the hon. member in question to let me know what happened, and he sent a note to me. It was in response to a member's statement, an interjection to the effect that – the member's statement was that getting off coal was the worst policy in the history of this province. The hon. member then said: is it worse than eugenics? That is the context. Now, the hon. member was interjecting during a member's statement, which he ought not to have been doing, and for that I apologize on the member's behalf.

The Speaker: Again, context, the situation: I noticed noise from this side of the House when the hon. Member for Little Bow was speaking. Clearly, in fact, today I reminded members again – I'm not exactly sure who it was on that side – that the practice of this House is that for two minutes you give the opportunity to the member to speak. Most of the time this House has respected that practice. If it was the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood who made the noise – I did not hear the specific comment – you were clearly out of order in terms of making a comment at the time the Speaker was hearing.

3:30

I also want to go back to the other point because I think these points tie together. I did hear an exchange with some – and, thank you, Government House Leader, for the apology from the Deputy Premier. The language that was used does escalate this House, and I just want to, for another time, remind all of the members of this House that if you want to move forward with good legislation, you need to listen to each other and respect each other. I would hope that it begins to change here.

I believe we move to the notice of motion.

Emergency Debate

Deaths of Children in Care

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to propose a motion under Standing Order 30. I should note before I begin that written notice was provided to the Speaker in accordance with Standing Order 30(1) and has met the conditions of Standing Order 30(7). The motion reads as follows:

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the systemic problems identified with kinship care and the safety policies governing it, the issues of secrecy still present in the child intervention system and the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General, and the serious concerns raised about whether the recommendations made by the Child and Youth Advocate are being fully implemented.

Mr. Speaker, this issue meets the conditions of Standing Order 30(7).

(7) A motion under this Standing Order is subject to the following conditions:

- (a) the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration.

What could be more urgent than the death of children in care? Last Friday the office of the Child and Youth Advocate released a devastating report. While we will focus predominantly on one child, it was on the deaths of two children in care. Then over the weekend we read in the media additional details that had been found out by a reporter. Her name was Serenity, and she was just 19 pounds when she died. The system failed her, and we need to do everything that we can to make sure it never happens in Alberta again, and that can start right now.

- (b) not more than one such motion may be proceeded with on the same day;
- (c) not more than one matter may be discussed on the same motion;
- (d) the motion must not revive discussion on a matter that has been discussed in the same session pursuant to this Standing Order;
- (e) the motion must not be based on a question of privilege;
- (f) the discussion under the motion must not raise a question that, according to the Standing Orders, can only be debated on a motion on notice.

Beauchesne's 387, on page 113, says the following:

The Standing Order is clear that the question be specific and must require urgent consideration. It must deal with a matter within the administrative competence of the Government and there must be no other reasonable opportunity for debate.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, this issue is not before this House in any form of bill debate, and the most reasonable opportunity for debate is today.

I'll continue with the quote from page 113.

But... decisions based on these conditions are bound to be subjective and few clear cut decisions can be made. In making his ruling, the Speaker may, on occasion, take into account the general wish of the House to have a debate.

Mr. Speaker, when you make your decision today as to whether or not this matter should proceed, I encourage you to consider that this very important matter is, yes, urgent, and I would consider it to be an emergency, but even if it's not an emergency, I would suggest to you that you consider the last point, when it says, "In making his ruling, the Speaker may, on occasion, take into account the general wish of the House to have a debate." I know this for sure, that on this side of the House it is our wish that we have this debate. I would suggest that if you reached out to the Member for St. Albert, perhaps the Member for Calgary-North West, or any parent in this House, it would be their wish as well.

However, in one exceptional circumstance, an application was approved for an emergency debate on "the sudden and unexpected revelation of events which [had] taken place in the past, in that they might precipitate a course of conduct which, if allowed to continue unchecked, would certainly classify itself as an emergency and a matter of urgent consideration".

Mr. Speaker, if any of the recommendations, if any of the secrecy that surrounds this issue continues and is allowed to continue unchecked, clearly it is an emergency and a matter of urgent consideration.

Mr. Speaker, let me be clear. This topic did come up in question period today, but I would suggest to you that a 35-second question and answer certainly do not do justice to an issue of such importance. This House, the media, and, most importantly, Albertans, who have been touched by this most horrific tragedy, deserve a full and robust discussion, and we cannot shy away from debating hard topics such as this one. It would be a disservice to our constituents, who elected us, if we did.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that it is my job to communicate the importance of the need for the debate in my remarks, but very briefly here are some of the facts. The office of the Child and Youth Advocate has continually highlighted some major problems with the lack of care and oversight of the kinship program. Serenity was just 19 pounds when she died. Media reports over the weekend indicate that she was both physically and sexually abused, yet some of those facts were left out of the Child and Youth Advocate's report, which brings us to one of the major questions on the need for debate today. Why is it that the department is not doing more to ensure that the information that the Child and Youth Advocate needs is shared with his office? Secrecy around this issue serves no one.

Secondly, it is the ongoing and continued systemic breakdown of the kinship care program. The Child and Youth Advocate made a number of recommendations, including the implementation of a home study tool specific for kinship care. This House deserves to be able to speak about this important and urgent matter.

On November 25, 2013, three years ago almost to the day, a very similar issue was raised in this Assembly, yet we still see these tragedies happen. Now, I'm sure you know, Mr. Speaker, that on that day in November three years ago an emergency debate was not granted. We still, from three years ago, continue to see more deaths of children in care. I know of the death of a child in care, a foster family in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, yet the Child and Youth Advocate has yet to report on it. This is a continued and ongoing problem that deserves the attention of this House. Today is the day to start work to ensure that this never happens again.

Let's look back to three years ago, when the emergency debate was requested by the Official Opposition on a very similar topic. Back then the Government House Leader provided remarks, that I hope we don't hear today, that included excuses as to why this debate ought not proceed.

I will gently remind the House of remarks that were made on that day on pages 3057 and 3058 of Hansard, November 25, 2013.

That is why the people of Alberta expect this Assembly to take this issue... seriously, because [it's] fundamental to what we do in this Assembly. We care for those who are least able to care for themselves; you know, fire, police, taking care of those who cannot [take care of] themselves. It is fundamental to what we do in this Assembly. So if we don't take this matter seriously and we don't treat the gaps which have been revealed basically this morning to most of us, if we don't take those matters seriously, then, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that we are not taking the role of this Assembly seriously either.

Mr. Speaker, those were the words of the Premier three years ago almost to the day.

I hope that all members of this House will speak about this very important need and that we will be able to unravel some of the circumstances that arose in the lead-up to this report and to this very, very, very tragic situation that is before us.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise and respond to the comments and the arguments that have been made by the hon. Official Opposition House Leader. As legislators we are all committed to protecting the most vulnerable amongst us. That is, in our view, an important role of government but not just of government, of the entire community. It is an obligation of civil society as a whole. I think that in this Legislature we're in a good position to work together from time to time and to work across the aisle in order to deal with some of the more difficult and challenging and intractable problems that exist. Certainly, the question of children in government care, whether it's in kinship care or directly in government care or foster care, is something that is critical to, I think, all Albertans, and it's something that I think we all need to collectively put our attention towards.

Our government has been working very hard on this file, and we have made progress, but, Mr. Speaker, more progress clearly needs to be made. The heart-wrenching stories that we've heard, most recently on the weekend in connection with the tragic death in care of Serenity, I think, have pulled on the heartstrings of all of us and all Albertans. I think that we should take the opportunity to talk about it. We should take the opportunity to talk about what can be done, what ideas we might have, how the government could better improve its response, and I think we're open to hearing the thoughts of all of our colleagues with respect to that matter.

So, Mr. Speaker, I support the request of the hon. Opposition House Leader for a Standing Order 30 emergency debate. I think that if children suffering in our care is not an emergency, is not something of the greatest possible priority, then what is? With the greatest respect, I concur with the arguments made by the Official Opposition House Leader and want to indicate that the government would welcome spending this afternoon on this most critical matter.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who'd like to speak to this matter?

I am prepared to rule on the request for leave on a motion to proceed under Standing Order 30(2). The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills has met the requirement for at least two hours' notice. It was provided to my office at 10:57 this morning. The motion:

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the systemic problems identified with kinship care and the safety policies governing it, the issues of secrecy still present in the child intervention system and the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General, and the serious concerns raised about whether the recommendations made by the Child and Youth Advocate are being fully implemented.

The relevant parliamentary authorities on these subjects are pages 689 to 696 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, and Beauchesne, paragraphs 387 to 390. To the hon. House leaders who have spoken, I see and sense that there is a strong willingness on all sides of the Assembly to debate the matter. On page 695 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice: "The Speaker may take into account the general wish of the House to have an emergency debate and grant a request for an emergency debate."

I find that the request for leave is in order. The rules governing the procedure once the chair finds the request for leave to be in order are as follows. Standing Order 30(3) requires that the question be put to a vote of the Assembly. If there are objections to the question, then the chair will ask those members who support the motion to rise. If 15 or more members rise, the debate will proceed, and each member who wishes to speak will have 10 minutes to do so until all who wish to speak have done so or until the normal hour of adjournment. If at least five members rise but fewer than 15, the question whether the member has leave to move adjournment of the ordinary business is put immediately and, if necessary, is determined by division. If fewer than five members rise, the debate will not proceed.

Now the question. Shall the debate on the matter proceed? All in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: Opposed, say no. I'm hearing unanimous consent to proceed with the matter.

The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to begin by saying thank you to the Government House Leader and government members for having the courage of their convictions to proceed with such an important matter.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, I have a significant level of involvement, or I should say that I have had a significant level of involvement with the department. Let me be clear this afternoon that this discussion today isn't just a blame-game, point-fingers, find-the-culprits discussion around who did it, what happened, and when, although all of those things are extremely important. Today ought to be a step in the direction of ensuring that this doesn't happen again.

Mr. Speaker, you know that I myself have three children, and one of those children is very close to the age of Serenity. For some reason my wife and I were granted an incredible honour and blessing to be able to provide for Peyton what for some reason people who were closest to her at her birth were unable to.

Mr. Speaker, this weekend, after reading Paula Simons' multiple stories – and I know that some of my colleagues will be able to quote from them – I was just struck at what it was to be three, and when I picked her up and cuddled my kids, just the heartbreaking ache that came over me, so much so that while chatting with my spouse about the debate today and the possibility of it happening, my nine-year-old was asking: "Well, what are you going to be talking about, daddy? Points of order?" And I said, "Well, son, I'm sure that we'll talk about points of order," and my wife said: "You know what, bud? There are some things that mom and dad talk about that we want to wait until you're a little bit older to know" because the details that were released this weekend in the story are devastating.

Mr. Speaker, the Child and Youth Advocate seemingly did his very best. He did his best with the information that he had available to him or at least what we believe he had available to him. It is critically important that we provide every resource available to the Child and Youth Advocate in the future to ensure that he has all of the information that is required to report accurately on what's happened.

Mr. Speaker, while the work of the Child and Youth Advocate is of critical importance, it saddens me to know that there are circumstances that happen in this province that require his presence. It saddens me to know that since he began investigating this report, there have been additional deaths of children in care. We are going to read another report just like this, where a foster family begged the department to intervene, where a foster family, who are constituents of mine, lobbied on behalf of the children that were placed in their care, but their concerns fell on deaf ears, and the children that were in their care were placed back in the care of family or kinship care, and tragedy struck again.

Mr. Speaker, we have seen over a long period of time the ongoing problems around the deaths of children in care. Let me be clear, Mr. Speaker. Where possible, it is my heart's desire for every child that is in the department to be able to go home to a loving family that can provide the care for them. But more important than my heart's desire or the desire of the department or the desire of a bureaucrat in Edmonton or wherever they may be, more important than my desire for them to have that home, it is for them to be safe, to not be put in harm's way. That is not what we have seen on numerous occasions.

Mr. Speaker, for 11 months Serenity was in kinship care with no oversight. The Child and Youth Advocate reports that multiple stakeholders advocated to the department for intervention. These are the exact sort of challenges that must be stopped today. Additional safeguards with respect to kinship care need to be addressed. We must and we have to do better.

Mr. Speaker, this isn't just about Serenity. This is about another child who was nine months old. The very complex needs of an infant were not taken into consideration when the department made decisions based upon a family unit. Every single child inside a family unit is unique and important, and we saw a nine-month-old who will never see its first birthday because of a decision made by a system that was broken, that placed the needs of the group ahead of the needs of an individual.

Mr. Speaker, it's my heart-cry today that as we move forward together as an Assembly, this government will take proactive steps. I know that we heard the Minister of Human Services today speak that they have accepted the recommendations, but what we need to know are regular and consistent updates in this House on how progress is being made. I don't mean talking points; I mean actual progress. I mean actual results of the way that we're addressing the kinship care program, the way that we're dealing with the sensitive issues around cultural sensitivities, kinship, our desire for families to be together, yet that very most important, primary need and desire of safety of the children who've been placed in our care.

Mr. Speaker, it's my hope that this won't just be a bunch of politicians talking about this for one day. I make a commitment today to children in care that I will advocate on their behalf, that I will work diligently to ensure that the government continues to make the steps in the right direction so that the issues of Serenity and the nine-month-old and the child that has close personal connection to my family from Three Hills, that these things do not ever happen again.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to this, having been through the 2014 round-table under former minister Manmeet Bhullar and heard some of the same kind of stories that are so tragic and so preventable at some level. At another level our human condition, our human systems, are sometimes unable to change, unable to move to the next level for a variety of reasons, whether it's lack of staffing, lack of training, lack of recognition of risk level, and prioritizing some of these very, very complex, very, very troubled families and individuals that are dealing with these placements and new relationships.

In some cases I applaud the former government for trying to move towards a kinship model for First Nations because it's very clear now that about two-thirds of the children in care are First Nations. We needed and still need to find a new way to address the problem of children in care coming from very troubled, broken families, generations of residential schools and the trauma that those families have experienced, their inability to parent, their lack of parenting training, their lack of parenting models, and in some cases mental health and addiction problems.

All of this was reviewed to some extent on January 28 and 29, 2014, with 13 experts, 91 in-room participants, 475 online participants across the province for two days reviewing some of the issues around the deaths in care and the process of reviewing deaths in care and the importance of reporting consistently on deaths in care and the importance of consent of the parent, parent family, the custodial family, and even, if it was an older child, consent of the child to be publicly reported and identified.

So very sensitive issues around public disclosure yet so profoundly neglected prior to 2014, when these numbers weren't even adequately identified, they weren't publicly reported, and parents were told not to speak in public about the death of a child because of various sensitivities in law and other things that discriminated against their ability to inform all of us and to expose a system that wasn't transparent, wasn't accountable, and wasn't making the changes that were needed, indeed consistent, comprehensive reviews of every death, which was part of what this round-table called for.

It also identified the lack of an orientation to prevention, an orientation around identification of caregivers, custodians, families that weren't quite qualified, weren't quite up to the standard that we would hope but that would be then identified as higher risk and monitored more closely. So an attitude of prevention was identified as lacking in the department. Another area of deficiency was identified as a lack of culturally appropriate knowledge and expertise in the department to deal in this case, obviously, with First Nations issues.

All of that identified there, and overlying the whole picture a departmental culture of fear and blame and shame. Front-line workers, who burned out quickly, felt overwhelmed by the demands of the work they did and had too many cases to try to deal with, too much distance to travel, and, in many cases, quietly, on the side, indicated that they spent over 50 per cent of their time filling out forms on a computer, leaving them much less time to actually work with parents, work with children, work with caregivers, custodians, adoptive and foster parents. Very complex, very demanding work often resulting in a media event like this, a death, an example of abuse and suffering potentially preventable but for many different reasons either wasn't identified or wasn't acted upon. In many cases some of the family members felt that they couldn't speak about it. That much, I hope, has changed.

It's timely that we have this discussion because I don't know what's changed. I look forward to hearing the minister say what has changed since that round-table in 2014 in the death review process, the public-reporting process, the focus on prevention, and addressing the culture inside your department, sir, of blame and shame and the real sensitivities at the front line of feeling like they are the problem, the front-line caseworkers, who don't last long, from the report. There's a high turnover of these folks on the front lines because of the suffering they see, the trauma they themselves experience when trying to deal with these very troubled families and very difficult situations.

So I myself would like to know more about what has actually changed since that round-table. Certainly, I don't feel like there's been more public communication about these. Maybe there has been. Is there consistent and timely reporting on some of the goals that were established at that round-table?

All Albertans but especially those who are fostering and sponsoring children and custodians need to know that they are being supported more appropriately, that we are identifying trends, and that we are identifying in the department those who are a little higher risk than others and giving them extra attention, extra visits, extra support, extra training, whatever it is they need, or, on the other hand, saying: "No. You're simply not up to the task here. We're going to have to re-place this child. Even though there are advantages to being in a kinship relationship because you're in a First Nations culture and you can benefit from that, you do not have the skills, you do not have the attitudes, and you do not have the ability to do what is necessary to keep this child healthy and growing and developing in a healthy way."

It may well be that we are now doing death reviews in a much more consistent and appropriate way. We are reporting on the numbers, but the next level of change has to be within the culture of Human Services so that there is a more supportive and understanding training environment for these young social workers who are so traumatized and so quickly leave the work. Are they given more time to do their work? Are they given the training to know how to deal more effectively with some of these extremely difficult families and when to call it: "Enough. We can't tolerate this anymore. There's too much risk here. We are going to intervene. We're going to be blamed for intervening, and we're going to be blamed if we don't intervene."

That's the catch-22 that these folks have to deal with, anger and frustration whether they intervene or whether they don't intervene. There are people who are very, very upset with decisions that this department makes in every child's case just because of the nature of this tremendously important role that this department has taken on.

What constitutes a serious injury? This is another question. Part of the round-table was that not just deaths should be reviewed but that any serious injury should be reviewed to see whether this is the breaking point. "This is an indication that we cannot leave this child here any longer. They say it's accidental, but what's the evidence that it was an accidental or deliberate injury to this child?" What constitutes a serious injury? How well are you identifying those indicators of serious risk?

As I mentioned, a death in care typically involves a broader range of people than other child deaths. It may include birth families, siblings, other children at home, child intervention workers, kinship caregivers, communities, and agencies. That takes a tremendous amount of time in a department that is time-challenged, resource-challenged, and indeed mostly has young graduate social workers working there because once they can find other work, they don't necessarily want to do this kind of work. It is tremendously challenging work.

It was felt in this round-table that current investigations lacked, again, the prevention mandate and placed extraordinary pressure on the front-line child intervention workers, discouraged honest communication, and diminished the grieving and healing process that many needed to carry out.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity. I would like to begin by thanking the Opposition House Leader for bringing forward this motion and for his passionate remarks this afternoon and for his advocacy around issues respecting foster children and foster homes.

Mr. Speaker, there is nothing more heartbreaking in this world than the death of a child, and being Minister of Human Services, I can tell you that there's no day more difficult than when you receive the notice of a death. While we are all here as elected representatives of our communities, this makes us think about our own families and our own loved ones, and I can say that we want all children to be safe, to be fed, to be loved, and to have the opportunities that our province can provide so that they can reach their full potential. The death of any loved one brings grief and great loss, and when a child dies before she or he had a chance to fully experience life, it is a tragedy that defies words.

We owe to this little girl the time to reflect on her death. As the Premier indicated earlier, this is an open matter and still being looked into, but we can certainly discuss what we need to change in our system to prevent similar tragedies from happening again. We can talk about the issue today because that's an issue which is very near and dear to everyone in this House and that everyone cares about. This is an issue that transcends party politics.

This heartbreaking loss has made it clear that the child intervention system must be improved to better protect children and youth who receive services or who are in our care. The system certainly has fallen tragically short for far too long for far too many children. We are beginning work on how we can improve the transition for children in care so that they have permanent and loving homes.

The issues involving these children are complex. It begins with addressing poverty of families, an issue that has been ignored for too long, with real and tragic consequences for children. That is why we introduced a number of new measures to directly address poverty, including a new child benefit that provides real money for low-income families and those who can't afford the costs of raising children.

This tragedy happened on a First Nations reserve. As a nation we must address the widespread poverty, addiction, and inter-generational trauma of the devastating and ongoing legacy of residential schools prevalent on those reserves. These are issues that are facing indigenous reserves and families across this province and across Canada. Any change must be done in consultation with First Nation leadership, and it is up to all provinces, in particular, that we do that in partnership with community partners, in business communities, and with the federal government so that we get this right.

The child intervention system has been a priority for our government and an issue our members have long advocated for. With the benefit of having colleagues who have worked on the front line within the system, our government has taken the opportunity to take real action to support young people who come into our care. While we do know that the system won't be fixed overnight, we are steadfast in our commitment to taking action as quickly as practicable to make improvements. We know that this starts with ensuring that the child intervention program and those who have oversight of the system such as the office of the Child and Youth Advocate have the resources and capacity they need to continue to do their work.

This is why even in challenging fiscal times we have added more money into the child intervention system and we approved through an all-party committee the resources for the office of the Child and Youth Advocate less than six months into the government. In total we have increased $37 million to support the work of the child intervention system.

Every time that a tragedy occurs, we do look into the circumstances and make improvements. Of course, every tragedy, every issue is difficult and different. For instance, in the province we have 1,700 children in kinship care homes. I do recognize that one death is too many, but at the same time there are 1,700 children who do receive services in safe, caring, and loving homes in kinship care in our province.

At the heart of the work that we do to support families lies the caring and intelligent front-line workers that devote their lives and time to the issues facing indigenous communities and issues facing Albertan families. Often these workers are asked to do too much with too little, and we know that their work and dedication is at the heart of how we can improve support for youth and families. We need to provide them with the needed supports and resources to do their job efficiently.

Let me be clear. We have much work ahead of us, and the stakes couldn't be higher. Every single member of this government, this caucus, is committed to this cause, and we will be working closely with families, workers, communities, business leaders, and many others to make these improvements. While this is a problem that touches everyone in this province and touches every province in this country, we know that Alberta must take leadership to improve our system for the safety and well-being of young people.

With respect to the comments from the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, since that round-table I think there was progress made as well, and the department does provide every death and serious injury report publicly on a quarterly basis, and we do share that with the office of the Child and Youth Advocate so he can look into the systemic issues and suggest improvements. In this case we have received that report. We take the advocate's recommendations very seriously, and we have accepted the recommendations that the office of the Child and Youth Advocate made. We also provide public responses, that are available on the Human Services website, as to how we go about implementing those recommendations.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to start with just a few thank yous, one to you for allowing this to occur. I would like to thank the hon. House leader for the Official Opposition for making this motion in the first place. It is apparent not just on this day but in the past and I'm sure in the future that his dedication to our future generations is something that's beyond reproach. I know that's shared by yours truly as a fellow dad and by, I dare say, every member of this House. It's part of the reason that we're here.

I'd like to thank the hon. Government House Leader for also agreeing to this debate. He didn't have to, but he did. I would like to thank the Minister of Human Services for rising just moments ago and explaining what is happening with his ministry now. Let's face it, sir, with the greatest of respect, this is something that hasn't just faced you; it's faced previous ministers, and every minister that will come after you will also have to deal with this, sadly, as long as there's the human condition. It's incumbent upon us, it's our honour, and it's our obligation to deal with this as best as possible. I wish you and everyone in your department Godspeed.

I also look forward to hearing from every other minister in this government, and I'll tell you why, Mr. Speaker. It's because this is an issue that affects every single department that this government is charged with. Again, I look forward to hearing from the other ministers and the Premier on this as well as the folks who serve as private members.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, I am so sad that we are speaking about this here today. Oh, now it's Madam Speaker. Welcome to the chair.

I'm so sad that we're speaking about this today because it's too late for Serenity. When I first heard about this, I was bordering on being physically sick. But I can tell you that I am so glad that we're talking about this today because it's not too late for other young Albertans. Madam Speaker, I think just about how every one of us has a ribbon on today for National Child Day, and just yesterday I tweeted out for Universal Children's Day "Children are more important than anything else in our world! Today is Universal Children's Day." I could have written so much more, but it's a tweet. I could have said: every day should be children's day. But I had room for a link to their rights from the United Nations as well as to our Legislature.

You know, we're all wearing these here today, but also on our desks here today was the report, the annual report 2015-2016 from the office of the Child and Youth Advocate here in Alberta. I would like to salute them and thank them for doing incredible things. I'll just do a short list of 10 categories. I want to point out, first of all: did you know, Madam Speaker, that in the last year alone a total of 2,535 young people were served by this office? That's seven a day. No wonder we're speaking about this. This is urgent, not just right now but every hour.

You know, these folks advocate for young people; they connect with experts to better serve younger children; they contribute to systemic advocacy, which is absolutely critical; they speak up about issues affecting young people; they connect people with knowledge; they advocate on children's mental health; they engage with youth in the justice system; they connect with community organizations; they focus on sexual and gender minority youth; and they identify issues at the regional and agency level. Madam Speaker, on page 20 there are no fewer than seven different quotations from youth about how invaluable these services have been for them. I dare say that in many cases it's actually saved their lives.

I know this, tragically, from first-hand experience as well. A few careers ago, before this one, I was honoured to serve as an educator and administrator for over 13 years in three countries, from kindergarten to university. I started out in the West Indies, went over to Nepal, two of the poorest countries on Earth. You know, times are tough here, but – holy smokes – if you compare it to what's happened in those absolutely impoverished regions and the consequences that incredible poverty wreak, it was heartbreaking.

But the heartbreak isn't just overseas; it's within our own borders as well. I've been so sad to see so many terrible things. You know, my first job in Alberta was in Calgary, right after the Calgary Olympics. I was hired as a special educator for what they called the skills enhancement program. That was a code word for a holding tank for kids that could not fit anywhere else or people had since cast aside. It included children with severe learning disabilities, children who simply could not speak English, children who had nowhere else to go. I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that there were a number of con artists in serious trouble with the law – very serious trouble with the law – in our classroom. There were prostitutes in our classroom. There were drug traffickers in our classroom. These children were in junior high.

That being said, there were some incredible success stories because of what they did and because I was fortunate enough to have a little bit of luck in partnering with a bunch of wonderful people in the community, often without the parents or in spite of them. God bless them. You know, in senior high school, they actually created a position called youth ministry co-ordinator. For some reason they asked me to help out there in the classroom, in private counselling sessions, and in the community. The abuse that I saw was of every kind. You know all the categories, ladies and gentlemen. I won't go through the list. Yes, there were success stories. We reached a lot of kids and helped a lot of them. But for some of them they were too far gone, and the results were catastrophic.

I guess I'm pointing out, Madam Speaker, that wherever we are, whatever the age, this is happening. It's happened in the past, it's happening now, and it's going to happen in the future. We need to not only talk about this; we need to continue to do more, different, and new things.

You know, when it came time to be in government, I was so honoured to be the chair of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission and also the associate minister of wellness. We started some great programs that helped a lot of people with healthy eating and active living and helped a lot of folks with education and treatment when it came to addictions and mental illness. Back then it was crystal meth. Now it's fentanyl. It's other things.

This is often life and death for folks. It really is. You turn to appendix A in the aforementioned report: 16-year-old Sam, nine-year-old Bonita, six-week-old Nicole, eight-year-old Ella, 17-year-old Catherine, two-year-old Teanna, 17-year-old Makayla, 10-month-old Lily; 14-year-old Asinay, 15-year-old Sage, 18-year-old Cedar, 15-year-old Morley, 15-year-old Kari, 15-year-old Victoria, and 18-year-old Jacob. We had our little friend last week. I shudder to think who it might be today, tomorrow, next week, next month, next year. Who knows what will happen next? Who knows when? Who knows what they will undergo? Madam Speaker, it is a life-and-death issue, and if even one death or even serious injury can be avoided because of what happens here today, this was time that was extremely well spent.

With the few seconds I have left, as PC House leader, MLA for Calgary-Lougheed, an Albertan, and just as a dad I urge everyone in this Chamber, every minister, and every Albertan to do everything possible to make sure that we have the skills to be the best parents we could possibly be so we could pass on the best life lessons that we can to our children so they can experience success of every kind, which, really, is not only the opportunity but the right of every child, not only within our borders but within Canada and beyond.

God bless Alberta, and God bless our little Albertans. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. First off, I would like to thank my colleague for bringing this motion forward. This is something that's been haunting me for quite a while, well over a year, when I started to receive reports from the office of the Child and Youth Advocate. Certainly, I think that for all of us this has been a really tough weekend, reading the report of Serenity and others.

One of the things that I was really hoping to achieve from the emergency debate here today was actually some answers from this government as to what is actually changing. It was really disheartening, Madam Speaker, to hear today, after the government was given notice of our intentions to hold an emergency debate, that the Premier and the Minister of Human Services were not prepared in any way, shape, or form to answer any of the questions about the systemic problems in our child intervention system. I was also disheartened to hear the minister just speak a few moments ago and actually use the words: I think there are some changes being made from the committee that was formed many years ago.

I want nothing more, Madam Speaker, than actual changes to be made within this system, and I will do whatever it takes. If it takes me screaming and yelling at the top of my lungs, then that is what I will do until something moves, until something changes. This is, I can assure you, a topic that will not be left alone.

4:30

More money is not always the answer in a system. Actually, this government is fortunate enough to have a body that provides recommendations to the government on how to change the system, recommendations that we've been given over and over and over again. Yet nothing has changed. Absolutely nothing. We already know of deaths of children in care under this government's watch. Those reports will come, and if they're the same systemic problems that have come from the reports that we've received in the last year and a half, this government should be removed. I don't say this to play political games. I really don't. I really don't. I do it so that somebody wakes up and pays attention. I'm sick and tired of hearing: well, we are just going to fund this, and everything is going to be fine. There are reports here that clearly define problems in this system, and nobody is doing a thing about it. These are children. If it's not true, like the other side says, then somebody please stand up and tell me what is happening. More money is not the solution. We know that.

The Human Services' plan clearly states that their ideology is an unlimited number of reunification attempts. We see time and time again that this is not what is best for the safety of the child, yet we continue to go down this path. Can we take a look at that? That is one of the problems I see, and we need to seriously address this. Seriously address this.

We have cultural sensitivities that we need to address in our kinship care program, and I understand that. In many cases it does work, and this is the best thing for the child, but when the safety of the child is at risk, that is first and nothing else.

Serenity was living just under an hour away from Edmonton, yet no one would offer an hour of their time to drive out there and check on her. Beaten, starved, raped, four years old: just one of the cases. This is just one of many. This is a fail, an absolute fail.

I truly would like to know what progress has been made on the recommendations that have come out of previous reports, and if there's something that I can do, whatever it is, to help fix this problem, please let me know. I'm sure that everyone in this House is more than interested to fix these problems. This isn't politics; this is children's lives. Madam Speaker, I want to state here today that I will promise that I will do whatever I can to help change the systemic problems in our foster care and our kinship system.

I've had many conversations with foster parents who are reprimanded when they stand up for the children that are in their care. They're told that they are not the parents and they have no right to be. Yet when our government's ideology is to keep placing our children back with their parents who have abused them in the first place and we do this over and over and over again, that's a fail. I've actually seen this first-hand. I have a family near and dear to my heart that continually goes through the heartbreak of watching a child that they love come back from a visit with their birth parents in a traumatic state, yet the workers don't or the system doesn't care. How is that okay? How do we allow this to happen? We need to stop and go back to putting children first.

This is an emergency. This is a problem, and we need to stop ignoring it or stop just saying things and make some progress. Let's do this. Let's work together. That is my goal. I know that's the goal of my colleagues here for sure. I'm pretty sure that it is for the government. Let's get to work here, guys. Let's send this to our internal committee. Let's actually implement some of the recommendations listed in these reports that keep coming out on children who have died. Not next week. Today. We can do some of this stuff today. We could do it immediately. We can stop trying to be politically correct when we should actually be loving and caring in a situation where our children really, actually do matter and they are put first.

I know that sometimes you can disconnect yourself from the problems, from the deaths of the children in these reports because they're not yours, but they are. When they are in government care, this is all of our responsibility, and if this Legislative Assembly can't address these problems, we shouldn't be here. Over and over again: Ella, August 2015, eight years old; Nicole, June 2015, only six weeks old; Teanna, two years old, November 2015; Makayla, 17 years old, December 2015; Lily, 10 months old, March 2016; Onessa, 17 years old, October 2016; Netasinim, 15 years old, October 2016.

I urge this Assembly to get it together, to figure out what the best course of action here is, to put our children first. Our children in care deserve better. They were removed from their homes because they were not in safe situations, and we're placing them in other unsafe situations. For what purpose? Some of these children are removed from loving homes while in care, but for ideology's sake we move them somewhere else when we are shown that that didn't work in that particular case. Roll it back. Not every case is the exact same answer. There are unique situations. Let's respect the voices of the people that are closest to our children.

Whatever I can do, I will help. I promise you that from myself and my colleagues. I urge members on all sides of this House to step up and do something and take action about our kids in care. It's not about tweeting snarky things. Let's get to work here.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I stand today to support the many calls from both sides of the floor to take this situation as an emergency and to respond to it with all of our integrity, with all of our heart, with all of our desire.

But I've got to tell you that as a social worker for 34 years in this province, with a specialization in the area of child sexual abuse and neglect, having worked for the government in child welfare, having worked in private practice for many years working with children who have been sexually abused, having done the research study on the incidence of child abuse and neglect in the province of Alberta over the last three terms, that has been repeated, having been involved in this issue as somebody standing on the front steps of this Legislature, I absolutely have to express my frustration at the things I hear coming from across the floor, in the last speech particularly.

You know, I have been committed to this issue since I was a young pup just out of my first social work degree, in 1982, and I have devoted my whole life to making sure that the children of this province get the best care that they possibly can. When I hear comments like, "Children are moved from one house to another because the front-line workers don't care," I can't tell you the depth of concern and anger I feel that that kind of accusation would be made, that that's the level of analysis of this situation that is going on.

It's absolutely incredible to me that you can take a look at a situation and so narrowly focus on one activity without any kind of estimation of the context of why that's happened, why this system has been a failure for so many years. I was a child welfare worker in 1982, and I can tell you that I started organizations back then dealing with front-line workers to resolve these kinds of issues. You know who it was who always repressed and stopped us from moving forward on the actions that we needed? It was the right-wing parties of this province. That's who it was. That's why I was standing on the front steps of this Legislature protesting along with thousands of other workers while there were cutbacks going on.

You talk about the fact that there's an ideology problem here. I can tell you that you're damn right. Sorry, I apologize and withdraw that. You are right. There is an ideology problem. I can tell you that it was the right wing of this government that took the Child Welfare Act and removed the words at the front of that Child Welfare Act that said that the act is to be concerned about the best interests of the child and replaced them with an act dedicated to the preservation of the family. That was ideology, and that came from the right wing of this province. That did not come from the front-line child welfare workers, who protested those kinds of behaviours and who said: "Do you want to know what the real problem is? The real problem is that there are structural reasons why people live in poverty. There are structural reasons why people commit acts, horrendous acts, of child abuse and neglect."

The right wing always, every time, votes against doing something about that, and we're tired of that all the time. They stand up and ask for individual things for their individual constituencies, but when we say, "The issue is structural; we have to change how this society works," they're never there for it. When we say, "We need after school care, we need food programs in the schools, we need child care that's affordable for everyday people," are they there saying, "We would like to vote for an increase in the budget for child welfare, we would like to vote for an increase in the budget for education, we would like to vote for an increase in health care"? Do we ever hear that? We do not because they keep their focus narrow. Some individual has committed a horrendous act, and that's all we can talk about.

There's a death that's been caused by one horrendous person, and we all feel that tragedy. I know that they feel that tragedy. I feel that tragedy – I feel it in sadness; I feel it in rage – but then I do something about it. I go out and analyze the system. I use my brain to look at: how has that happened? In my PhD research I can tell you that we looked at what happens that causes a child who is raised in an abusive situation to become an abuser themselves. I can tell you what happens. It's the lack of appropriate interventions, the lack of opportunity, the lack of structural change. As soon as we start to impose those kind of things in a child's life, we provide structural invitations for success. We make sure they have opportunities for loving, caring people outside of their family in daycares, in school systems, in hospital systems. We see a drop in that child abuse and neglect. So what do we do? We come into the House, and we vote for improvements to those systems – health care, social services, education – because we actually don't want children to die. That's why we do it.

I get really tired of individual workers being blamed. I get tired of people being told that they don't care. I tell you what. I can tell you that we care in a way that does not only include our hearts, but it includes our brains, where we look at the research, we follow up the practice that's done in the community, and we look at the issues.

Right now this child is a child who died on a reserve in this province. One of the primary issues has been brought to the Human Rights Commission at the national level, and they have said that the issue is that it's been neglected financially. That's what they said. They said that the amount of money put into the child welfare systems on reserves is between half and two-thirds of what is being put into child welfare systems in the provinces. That is a human rights violation. If you're not voting for more money for children on-reserve, then I really have to ask: what is it that you see when you read that Human Rights Commission result that tells you that it doesn't matter whether they get those services, that it doesn't matter whether they get things, that we just now have to be sunshine and rosy and treat our children better? I'm not putting up with that happy-go-lucky kind of “we’ll just be nice people” anymore. I want to be determined people. I want to be people who will put our money where our mouth is because that’s how the system works. If you don’t put money into it, it’s not going to get better.

You want a better system? You stop hiring people when they come out of their BSW or, worse, with no social work training at all coming out of a geology degree and turning them into a child welfare worker at the age of 22. If you want a better system, you start hiring them at 30, and you pay them twice as much because they’ve got life experience and they’ve got training that says that they’re going to do a better job. Then you give them 10 families, not 30 families, and you say: “We want you to actually fix things with those families. We want you to develop a relationship. We want you to understand the families, the support systems, and the socioeconomic situation that we are in. We want you to change all of that. You know what I’m going to do to make sure that you can do that right? I’m going to provide you with the resources you need. That’s what I’m going to do. I’m going to pay you what you’re worth. I’m going to give you the money so that you can put those kids into Boy Scouts and hockey and art classes so that they can live the life that we want all of our children to live. I’m going to do that because I care.”

And I do care. If I get told one more time that I don’t care, I am going to ask that person how much they have done over the last 34 years, how many kids they have seen who came in their door when they were six years old who were sexually abused because they lived in a house with 12 people and there were bedrooms only for six. That’s what I want to ask them. What did they do about the housing on reserves? What did they do about the fact that we don’t have water on-reserve? What did they do about the fact that the teachers on-reserve are underfunded compared to teachers off-reserve? What do we do about the fact that child welfare workers are not funded? What are you doing about the real issues, not the ones that break your heart but the ones that you understand from your analysis of reading the literature or working with the people in the community and figuring out where the pressures are, where the problems are? Have you done that work? Then you come to me and you tell me I don’t care, but until then I don’t want to hear that I don’t care.

I can tell you that there is lots we can do. Every death is a tragedy that should not have happened. We can get together across the floor, and we can . . . [Mr. Feehan’s speaking time expired.]

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Next on my list I have Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, one of the things that is great about living in this province is that we live in a democracy where people of divergent points of view can get up and speak. I want to thank the hon. Minister of Human Services for his comments, and I want to thank the government for allowing us to have this debate today. I want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford for his comments. The passion is there. I know that there are times when we could have a rebuttal and we could have a debate as to the causes of why families are in crisis and how we deal with them. Suffice it to say that on this side of the House I think there is just as much compassion. There is a time for rebuttal, and there is a time for debate.

I think that we have had opportunities in this House today and on previous days to talk about how perhaps we’re more compassionate when we provide people with jobs and finances to be able to take care of their families than to have big government, but suffice it to say that I think everyone in this Legislature understands that we have a responsibility, Madam Speaker, as legislators to ensure the safety of our kids, our children. More importantly, I dare say that we have a responsibility as citizens to ensure that we take care of the children that are in our society.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford brings a great deal of experience. We recognize that. Please understand that after 30 years of being an educator, I too see the human side of this equation. When I look back on my 30 years of being a teacher, I’ve seen times when I wished that I had been able to do more to help the kids that I taught. Some of them are no longer here with us. I see the value of a foster care system and a system of adoption and a system of kinship care. I have three cousins that were welcomed into our family through a system of foster care and adoption, two of whom were First Nations, one of whom we thought was First Nations but turned out to be Hawaiian. So I see the value of foster care.

I think all of us in this House recognize the difficulty that comes with trying to deal with families in crisis. I saw it as a teacher. I see it in my church. I see it in my community. I see families in crisis. They have a myriad of reasons for why they are in crisis, and that’s what makes dealing with it so difficult. We are tasked in this debate with focusing in, however, on one child and a system that let one child down in a tragic way. I don’t think we’re here today to focus in on any one individual caseworker or supervisor. It’s not appropriate. We are aware that these caseworkers are in many cases overburdened and are trying to do the best job that they can. But it still speaks to a system that has broken down, and it is not acceptable for us to turn our eyes away from that.

We have a broken system when it allows children to suffer and die. We have a broken system when a child can be physically and sexually abused and malnourished. If that doesn’t tell us that we have a broken system, then we’re blind. We have a broken system when we can have a four-year-old child who cannot speak for herself, who weighs 18 pounds, is obviously suffering, yet we leave her in her placement. That’s a broken system. I guess we need a response from this government and from this ministry that will recognize that it is not only broken but that we have to take some concrete steps to fix it.

You know, if I was looking at this without the experience, which I don’t have, of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, I’d ask questions like: are we ensuring that the training that we have for our caseworkers is adequate? That’s a question that needs to be asked, and I think it’s a question that needs to be answered, Madam Speaker. Do we have training and support that will help them to recognize and to address child safety? Do we allow them the ability and the training and the knowledge to be able to identify the risk factors that need to be assessed and need to be recognized to ensure that they will recognize when a child is in danger? Do we have a commitment on behalf of the Legislature, of the government, of the caseworkers, of the supervisors that they understand that it must be child-centred and that at the very forefront of this child-centredness we have the safety of the child as paramount regardless of where that child is placed?

This really isn’t about whether this is a kinship placement or whatever kind of placement you want to call it. This is about child safety. This issue is about child safety, and it must always be about that first. That’s what I was taught as a teacher. I’m sure that’s what you’re taught as a social worker. Somehow it’s been lost in this situation, in this case.

Have we done the job in providing the resources and the care and the education necessary for the kinship providers to adequately take care of the children that have been given into their care? That’s a question that needs to be asked, Madam Speaker. We have a responsibility to ensure that they are and that they have the resources that are necessary for these family kinship units to be able to serve the needs of these children.

I know that as a teacher, as an educator there were times when I had to sit down with another colleague and I had to ask them: "Do I really understand what this child is going through? Am I seeing it? Do I need another pair of eyes to look at the situation and be able to see if I'm actually teaching this child in a way that respects them and that encourages and engages their learning?" Well, I think that there are times with kinship, with the adults that are in that relationship that are overseeing these children, where maybe self-reporting is not good enough, where they need an objective pair of eyes on that situation.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the Official Opposition House Leader for raising this today and the government for agreeing to go ahead with the debate. I think this is important. When we have children dying in government care or freshly out of government care, I don't think that we could really say that there's a lot we do around here that's more important than that. So I think this is time well spent.

You know what? I'm not one of the experts, but here's what I think about this because I have seen this. When we were in government, children in government care were dying. With the current government, children in government care are dying. None of it's good. None of it's what we want. But I'm interested, as long as we're having this debate, in thinking about how we make it better.

I think back to my former colleague Manmeet. When he was the Human Services minister, he actually started to address this and started to open up the doors and make arrangements so that parents whose children had died could actually talk about it. There was a time when – I'm sure it was well intended, but it occurs to me that it's not a good idea – they weren't even allowed to talk about their own kids. There's more to be done.

When I hear this today, I think to myself: what can we do? I hear the aboriginal affairs minister, who, with all due respect, lost his mind a little bit just now. I guess he was passionate, and I'm sure he meant what he said. I really don't want to throw him under the bus, but the fact is that he spouted off a whole bunch of answers that he had, but his government has been in government for a year and a half, and they haven't put those actions into place.

Madam Speaker, you could argue that our government could have done better, and I'm sure that the next government after this can do better, too. It's a complex problem. It'll never be simple. You're dealing with the problems of society. When children are taken from their parents and put in government's hands, that means that something isn't perfect or that somebody believes something isn't perfect. You're dealing with a difficult situation. Rather than poke each other in the eye all day about whether right-wing people don't care or left-wing people don't care – well, that's good entertainment for whoever is watching, but it doesn't actually get us any closer to an answer.

I'm probably going to take less than my 10 minutes because I'm hoping that the Premier will stand up and commit to forming an all-party committee where we can actually talk about this. We've heard from people on both sides of the House that say: I know what to do. Well, maybe it's time to do it. Maybe it's time to stop pointing fingers and saying that right-wing people don't care or that left-wing people don't care or that you people don't care. If this matters to us, why don't we sit down like adults and actually put some stuff on the table? I could talk longer, but I'm hoping to get a commitment from the Premier that she'll do that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by Calgary-Elbow.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Never has it been more obvious that the interactions between the many areas within departments and ministries influence each other in the success of our outcomes. It doesn't matter that the services and processes we're talking about today are the responsibility primarily on that reserve of the federal government. The issues facing our service sectors and even more complex life-and-death problems facing Alberta children are complex and intersect in so many areas, whether it's mental health, addictions, inclusive education, poverty, access to services, safe housing, or supports for people with disabilities.

I raise this because I think we all understand that the changes required to solve the problems that result in these tragic deaths of innocent young children are multilayered and complex. The senseless death of yet another child is infuriating to all of us. I know that. It's heartbreaking to all of us, but we can't simply bow our heads and wear a ribbon to mourn a loss. We have to fight like hell in any capacity available to us in order to make sure this doesn't happen again. I can't wait till we get to the point where we stop just reacting. We have to know that there are so many factors that lead us to this place, the place where we lose children.

Indigenous communities and families face huge challenges and a disproportionate amount of loss, violence, and deep-rooted issues that continuously threaten to tear individuals, families, and communities apart: childhood trauma, exposure to domestic violence, parental addictions, mental health problems, often many that are untreated but some that are treated, and the frequency of death by suicide, which is shocking. Nobody should have to die so that a system improves.

On a side note, I would like to thank Paula Simons and the Edmonton Journal for their story, that I think all of us probably felt physically sick reading. I'm thankful for real journalism. This is their job, and I'm grateful.

All of these social problems need to be front and centre on a regular basis as evidenced by the time and the money that we invest in them. I know that these problems transcend party lines, but I do want to point out that we need to use our time properly. The opposition uses their time to score points with their base. They tend to ask the same questions every day. I get it. I get what you're trying to do. Carbon levy, coal-fired electricity: all very vital issues to discuss. Making fun of ideology, sharing a fun bottle of Leninade: I get that, too. However, I have noticed that social issues predictably come up when there are headlines. Why are they not on your top-100 list? These are not stale issues. These are issues that need to light a fire under all of us every single day.

I remember that during the first session our Premier stood up and faced family members of missing and murdered girls from Alberta, and their families were sitting above us. She stood up, and she publicly asked then Prime Minister Stephen Harper to conduct an inquiry befitting the horror of the problem. We stood and clapped, and we saw tears streaming from their faces. But not everybody in this House stood up. That's bad politics. These are important issues. [interjection]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, it's not appropriate in the House to be sharing what's on the screen, so please respect the member who has the floor.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Ms Renaud: That's unfortunate.

Another . . . [interjection] What's that?

Mr. Rodney: Would you like me to read what it says, Madam Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert has the floor.

Go ahead.

Ms Renaud: You may know one of my constituents. Her name is Velvet Martin. She is a powerful advocate and had a daughter with complex disabilities who, for a number of reasons, was in care. She was in care when she died. Although this is one of the far too many tragic stories that we've had to hear in this House, even before we were in this House, we have much to learn from families and from women like Velvet. They're incredible experts, and they are so willing to share. They're reluctant experts, but they have a lot to offer, and I think we need to take them up on that. That is truly collaboration. Us discussing it here today is good. It puts a spotlight on a very important issue. You're right; it doesn't solve the problem, but I think it gives us momentum to go forward and solve the problem.

I think we all received some pretty thick books about Canada's truth and reconciliation process and the recommendations. Here is another example. I'm guessing that probably all of us didn't read them all. I know I didn't read all of the editions, but I commit and promise that I will now.

Thank you for your time.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and thank you very much to the Member for St. Albert for her thoughtful comments not just today but for the work that she's done throughout her career advocating for people who cannot advocate for themselves. It means a tremendous amount for the government front bench and their advocacy.

I really do especially want to thank the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills for bringing up this issue. I think that the government certainly deserves credit for accepting that this is, in fact, an emergency and worthy of time spent in this House. You know, I think there's no question that everyone in this House wants to find a solution and that things will get heated and emotional. Frankly, I'd be surprised if they didn't – I'm not sure any person could – when looking at the situation with Serenity, specifically, but more generally at the systemic issues that have been discussed here this afternoon.

The questions I have are around why these problems continue. I know some of the root-cause issues have been discussed here this afternoon. But what steps are being taken? In fact, while the government has only been in power for about 18 months, I think that's enough time to have really started to dig into some of this stuff.

I have to say that were I to find myself on that side of the House, not just as, perhaps, the Minister of Human Services but if I were any member of the front bench, I would really ask some very sharp questions about what the current state of the system is. What are the constraints? What are the challenges? What are the resource shortfalls? I'd really bring that before not just my colleagues in my own caucus but before this House and before all Albertans so that Albertans know that not only is something being done, but it is seen to be done. This is an issue that for decades has been crying out for transparency.

I want to recognize again and acknowledge the tremendous work of Paula Simons, Darcy Henton, Karen Kleiss, and other journalists who have done a lot of work. What I find frustrating is that it seems to take media reports and that level of digging for these issues to be truly brought to light. I would suggest that it is the job of government to surface these issues, even if they are politically challenging, even if they are awkward. I know that there are, clearly, rules around privacy and that we need to respect that, but I would challenge that the life of children in care in this province or children who have been in care or that are active with the child welfare system ought to take precedence over privacy.

It's interesting. We have the annual report of the Information and Privacy Commissioner – and I've read part of it – and one of the themes that emerges and one of the themes that I've seen is using privacy laws, which are put in place to legitimately protect the private information of Albertans, as an excuse for inaction or as an excuse or cover for things the government doesn't want us to know about, that we ought to know about. The more information that's out in public, the better.

What I want to know is: what's happening today? We know what happened to Serenity and so many others that we've heard about in this House. What's happening today, and what is the government doing about it specifically? It seems like this government has continued on with a lack of responsiveness to foster parents, other guardians who will advocate vociferously on behalf of a child who it seems may be being put into kinship care. When I read the recommendations of the Child and Youth Advocate, specifically in Serenity's case, the recommendations, to me, are on one level very straightforward and on another level tremendously troubling.

I will start with the first recommendation. It talks about the creation of a home study tool specifically for kinship care – I think that makes sense – that is relevant and addresses the unique kinship circumstances. I think we ought to do that. The question is: why is that not being done already? That, to me, seems like one of the obvious things we ought to be doing. What the Child and Youth Advocate recommends is that we use that tool kit to collect information, working with community professionals who are familiar with the applicant regarding the demonstrated ability of that kinship applicant. Are we not now evaluating the demonstrated ability of a particular kinship situation to accept a child in care? Is that not happening? If that's not happening, that seems to be a pretty obvious root cause of why there could be problems.

Now, I want to emphasize that I believe the kinship care model is a very good model. It is what we ought to be pursuing, ensuring especially that indigenous kids are kept within their own cultural frame as much as possible, but never should they ever be put in a situation where that's going to put the child at greater risk. So that then goes to the supports that are required for kinship care providers, and that's the second recommendation of the Child and Youth Advocate, providing a continuum of culturally relevant supportive services. Is that not in place today?

One of the nice benefits of sitting next to my hon. colleague here for Calgary-Mountain View is that we were talking about Jordan's principle. The question of jurisdiction was raised earlier. Jurisdiction should never be an excuse for not providing proper care. Jordan's principle says that regardless of jurisdiction the first level of government that interacts with a child in this case should take responsibility and then let the administrators in the background figure out the money piece later. That's absolutely vital. I wonder to what degree that has exacerbated this particular case and to what degree that is causing problems on an ongoing basis.

But perhaps the most troubling recommendation of the office of the Child and Youth Advocate in this case is recommendation 3: "require that caseworkers complete a child-specific assessment and resolution of risk factors prior to terminating guardianship." Are we not doing that now? Is no one assessing what the needs of that child are? Are they not assessing the risk factors of a kinship care model, of a specific kinship care situation? Are there cases where the government of Alberta is taking children out of a safe situation and putting them into a situation of risk? That's the implication of this recommendation. That seems to be what's happened in the case of Serenity, and if that's something that's more than a one-off, we have a very, very serious problem.

If I were in a position to be making decisions, if this recommendation was placed on my desk, the first thing I would do is say: what in the world is going on? How is it possible that we need someone in care, a child in care, to die in tragic and horrible – heartbreaking doesn't even begin to describe the thoughts I had when I was reading the Paula Simons article on this. How is it that that needs to happen, that an investigation needs to take place covering the better part of two years, for us to be looking at a recommendation that is just patently obvious? Before you place a child in care of anyone, make sure it's safe for them to be there.

It literally puts a chill down my spine as I think about the fact that there may very well be children right now in this province – in fact, it seems likely that there are – who have been put into dangerous situations where they are likely to face abuse, perhaps to the point of being starved to death, of dying in that situation. I don't suggest for a second that the government wants that for the kids. I know they don't. I know for a fact there are members of this House sitting here today who have directly worked with kids in care. I know that they don't want that either. I know for a fact they don't. But why is it that we have to let children die? That seems to continue. It seems to be a pattern and a cycle that's repeating over and over again.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I think, like all members of this Assembly, that over the last few weeks as I read Paula Simons' articles, her first article on November 16, I was shocked. As I read her article over this weekend, I was physically ill thinking about what happened to poor Serenity. For me and, I suspect, many of the parents that are in the Assembly and the House this evening, my thoughts were for my kids, to think about them and the preciousness of them, my nieces and nephews, just to think that somebody, a little Albertan like that, could be so abused and ultimately lose their life because of the situation that they found themselves in. Well, our responsibility is as a province, and nobody saw it. Nobody was able to deal with it despite warnings.

For me, when I read it, my main thought, my first thought, truly came to my dad. Most people in the Assembly are going to think: "Well, you're talking about a kid. Why would your thoughts go to your dad, hon. member?" My dad – his story is well documented in this province – came from a terribly abusive home. A terribly abusive home. The story that I remember him telling us – and he doesn't talk too much about his childhood – was that the routine in his house when he was little and even as a toddler was that his dad would come home, and if you could get the door open to your bedroom, he and his brother, before his dad took off his boots, then you wouldn't get beaten. You know when you're little and you're trying to open that door and you can't get it open? That was the game that they would play.

My dad tells this story – this breaks my heart when I think about it – of the one day he finally opened that door and he still got beaten. He came from a terrible, terrible place. It's a miracle – it is nothing short of a miracle – that he survived that, that he was able to escape that because of some people. What is truly a miracle beyond that is that he was able to become a great person within our society, somebody who was able to raise six sons, somebody who was able to accomplish so much in the world of poverty, to be able to help thousands of people, you know, and overcome that terrible childhood that he had to be able to do that.

When I hear it, at first I think of the abuse that my dad went through, and it just breaks my heart to think about any child going through that. I also think about what Serenity could have become. What did we lose? We lost her when she was a toddler. I mean, if that had happened to my dad, I wouldn't be here, Madam Speaker, and neither would my five brothers, all our children. His legacy now will be his kids. You can imagine that with six boys, all their wives, and all of them with multiple kids now, we have to rent a hall just to get everybody together. But if he and the people that helped him weren't able to help him escape that situation, that would not be possible. That's where we failed Serenity. I think we can all agree on that. We were not able to help her escape that situation, and that's tragic. It's just tragic.

I think we have to talk about the key facts here. We have a four-year-old named Serenity who died after being in kinship care. That's a fact. At the time of her passing she weighed just 18 pounds, which is the typical weight of a nine-month-old baby. She had severe bruising, including in her pubic area. She was hypothermic and was suffering from a suspected head injury. There was a lot more that was listed in Paula's article that I can't even say because it's just too horrific to imagine. That child was in care, in our care. Something went terribly wrong. That's what we're here to discuss today.

I know the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford spoke very passionately earlier. I want to be clear, Madam Speaker. That is a cabinet minister, who is around the cabinet table right now, in government, who has more ability than almost anybody else to help fix this situation. Albertans that I am talking to about this right now and the kids that are in care right now that may be facing similar situations as Serenity's don't care what we look like on Twitter. They don't care who can talk more passionately here and get the best Facebook post. They need help. Our system has failed them, has failed many children along the way, and continues to fail them. If we continue to have partisan conversations, focus on partisan politics and not on how we solve this problem, we will not solve it, and sadly we'll be back here again in another 18 months talking about another Serenity. To me, that is unacceptable. That is unacceptable.

I thank the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, my neighbour and my good friend, for bringing this up today because I think it is a great opportunity for all parties in this Assembly to have a discussion about something that is just so horrific, to be able to talk about why this took place, what the recommendations from the Child and Youth Advocate are to stop it from taking place in the future, and to hear some answers from the government, Madam Speaker, on what they are doing to make sure that this does not happen in the future.

Now, Madam Speaker, I want to be clear in saying, first of all, that, of course, nobody in government hurt Serenity. I honestly, one hundred per cent believe that every member of this House and every party is absolutely horrified by what happened to that little girl. But the people that can fix the system to make sure that it never happens again sit on that side of the House, and standing up and taking partisan jabs at the opposition and trying to accuse us of not caring about social issues is not going to help the next Serenities of the world, kids that are in abusive situations right now that we need to get help. Do we honestly think right now that where they're at, where they're sitting, they're going, "Oh, jeez, who cares more about social issues?" Come on.

Everybody in this House cares about kids. They care about their kids. They care about their neighbours' kids. They care about kids. Everybody is horrified by what happened here. It's not a competition. The question is: what are we going to do about it? I truly was hoping, Madam Speaker, during this debate that we could talk about that, talk about the tragic incident that took place, talk about the death of a little girl that happened on our watch, on our province's watch.

To be clear, Madam Speaker, the death did not take place when this government was in power, but the investigation into the death has taken place largely while this government was in power, for the last 18 months. This government wants to continue to blame the third party for everything that goes wrong. That's not acceptable. Members of the third party have stood up and said: hey, we could have even done it better. I suspect that if we were on that side of the Assembly and if the 2015 election went differently, we could have done it better, too.

This should not be about politics. This should be about: what do we do to make sure there's never another Serenity in Alberta? What do we do? I was hoping during this debate that we could hear some answers to some questions instead of partisan attacks by the government. I would like to know: what concrete and specific measures will be taken to watch and supervise kinship care going forward? What have we done to watch and supervise kinship care based on what we have now found out?

They can do that. They're in charge of that, not this side of the House. All we can do is come and raise the concern on behalf of the children of Alberta. I want to know what has been done to oversee and improve child visitations. I want the ministers to stand up, through you, Madam Speaker, and tell us what is being done. I want to know what has been done to oversee and improve the checks that are placed on every adult living in a kinship care home. This side of the House can't do it. All we can do is raise it. We're doing our job. We're raising it. We're not blaming the government for what happened to Serenity. What we're asking them is what they're going to do to make sure it doesn't happen again. Not one answer from the government in almost an hour and a half of debate.

I want to know what is being done to improve the release of information to the child advocate, the person that our Assembly puts in charge of helping our children and youth in our province. Clearly, as you read through Paula Simons' article, the system is broken, the right information is not getting to the right people, and severe tragedies are happening because of it.

Right now, Madam Speaker, somewhere in this province an Alberta child is probably being abused in our care. Is that anybody in this Assembly's fault? No, of course not. They're not doing that to that child. But we can help them. What is the point of being an elected MLA and coming to this historic building if we can't even do something as simple as helping our kids in our province? Instead, we want to sit in here and talk about who's going to have the better Twitter comment and cares more about social issues.

I want to know what has been done to improve the communication between the chief medical officer and Human Services. We still can't get the information from the chief medical officer on what happened to this child. What's being done? The government can change that. The government has the ability to deal with it. I would love it if the hon. Premier would rise and explain what her cabinet has done for that.

I want to know what has been done to improve the communication between the various justice agencies and the child advocate. Somebody reported abuse in the home that this child was in, Madam Speaker. Somebody reported it. While that child was being abused, somebody reported it, and nobody came to help.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to rise today and join in the discussion on an issue that I think we all recognize cuts close to the hearts of all Albertans. I thank the Opposition House Leader for bringing forward this opportunity for us to discuss here today.

You know, as the minister noted, I think there is nothing more heartbreaking in this world than the death of a child, so it's deeply important that we consider every way in which we can ensure the safety and protection of all children who receive services or are in our care, that we ensure that they are safe and protected. There is no question, as we've heard here today, as has been heard from all sides, that Alberta's child intervention system needs to continue to be assessed and improved to make sure that events like this don't take place again.

As the chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I recognize the essential role of the Child and Youth Advocate in upholding that standard and providing the considered, sober critique that's required to ensure that government meets its obligations to the children it protects and serves. I commend the current officer on his dedication and commitment to fulfilling that role and continuing that work, including through this report that he's brought forward today.

Madam Speaker, it's my understanding that at the time of the advocate's report the investigation into the situation was not yet complete. Now that it has been completed, the advocate is showing the respect for other related investigations that remain ongoing by not discussing further details. I appreciate the advocate's consideration and restraint, and our government is committed to the same. We will respect all investigations that are going forward and will not jeopardize the legal process by divulging information that may affect them. Our government, however, is committed to ensuring that child intervention programs and the advocate themselves have all of the resources they need to continue with their essential work, and the minister has outlined all of the ways in which we have done so so far.

5:30

As members know, the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices has been tasked with reviewing the Child and Youth Advocate Act, the legislation which empowers and enables the work of the advocate. I've appreciated the co-operation of members of the committee from all parties as we've undertaken this review and assembled a comprehensive list of stakeholders to make oral presentations in the new year. Through this review our committee will develop recommendations on how this key piece of legislation may be improved to ensure that the advocate has all of the powers and resources necessary to complete his essential work on behalf of Albertans. I'm happy to say that we'll be hearing from both Justice and Human Services as well as a wide range of community partners who work with youth who are receiving services, with youth in care, and with youth involved in the legal system and that this will include, specifically, indigenous organizations and perspectives. I look forward to working with all members of the committee to ensure that our report is both considered and comprehensive so that we can ensure that the advocate is able to continue to do the important work he has done in highlighting the challenges and the issues that we face in our childhood intervention systems.

I think, as we've heard here today, all members in this House care about children in care. We may differ in some of our perspectives on how we need to get there. We may differ in our approaches or in how we feel certain funds should be spent, but I don't think there's any question that all of us want to see this system improved. I appreciate the perspectives that have been brought out by many here today.

You know, Madam Speaker, I myself don't have children, but I am an uncle to 13 nieces and nephews. I love them very much, and when I hear these stories, it breaks my heart. I think of the children in the system who are just looking for the simplest thing: to be loved, protected, and kept safe. I think of all of the dedicated workers who for years have struggled to fight for these children and the families they serve, sometimes while being asked to do far too much with far too little.

I don't think we're here today to lay blame on any particular group. These are systemic issues. They are complex, they are deep seated, and they are deep rooted, and I can understand the need and the feeling for some kind of catharsis, to get angry. Certainly, if there's any issue on which to feel emotional, it is the death of a child, but our job as legislators is to come here and give this considered, sober, and careful thought, to respect the processes that are in place, to acknowledge the legalities and the other barriers that are there and how we must be careful, in some respects, of the information we share and the information we discuss but recognize that within those constraints, we still have the opportunity to have reasoned, considered debate as members about how we can improve a system that is so important to all of us and all Albertans and, most particularly, to these children.

I look forward to continuing our work with the Committee on Legislative Offices to do our part in ensuring that the advocate has all of the resources and powers that are required to do this important work. I look forward to continuing to work with our minister to ensure that we are doing our part and continuing to dig into and untangle these problems, that have built up over years and are going to take time to take apart and address, and to ensure that as we do that important work, we are watching, we are careful, we are considerate to make sure that not one more child has to have an experience like this and lose their life.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to bring a slightly different focus to this that I think also needs to be a part of our conversation together as Albertans. Let me begin by saying that I don't question at all that everybody cares, but I do think that it's not enough just to care. Care and wisdom or administrative excellence don't necessarily go together, and, yes, there are structural and ideological impediments to the system that have caused this event to occur.

My question and the point that I need to bring forward is related to the fact that Serenity was in a safe and caring foster home. She was with a loving and stable young couple. They were emotionally calm. They had no addictions. Their care for her was excellent. Even her mother has acknowledged and said how happy and how healthy she was with them. I know this because they lived in my riding and the foster parents came to my office after to ask: "What are we supposed to do? Why was she yanked out of a very good home against their protests?"

We cannot say that the government or the people involved didn't hear or didn't know because these people protested as loudly as they possibly could. They did everything they could. Against their pleadings, in the face of their tears, they spoke for this child who couldn't speak for herself in adequate kinds of ways. They spoke, and the point is that they were completely rebuffed, completely rejected, not listened to.

You can be as passionate as you want about the need for pouring money all over the system. Money would not have fixed this in the least iota. This girl was in the safest environment possible. Everybody that was involved realized and knew that, and the reality is that it's either government policy or ideology or bureaucratic arrogance – I don't know what it is – that will not listen to the ordinary, common-sense, sensible people of Alberta. When it gets to the point where it's not about the best for the child, when it's about forced kinship at any cost, at the risk of abuse, forced kinship regardless of safety of the child, forced kinship without any consideration to the people who are actually already caring for her and realize what's going to happen regardless of safety, where does that come from? It comes from government policy being pushed down the system to individuals without any care for the child.

My ongoing question is: why do these issues get covered up? The reports that we've received from the office of the Child and Youth Advocate didn't report any of the facts about the existing foster care relationship in which this child was healthy and happy. Did they ask why this child was yanked from a safe environment and put into one that is utterly, totally destructive, that was so abusive that we can't even hardly imagine it? I mean, I just don't get it. Is there anything more tragic than the death of a child? Well, yes, I think there is. It's government policy that makes it happen again and again and again.

What about the human side, even for this foster parent family? What's the human side for them? What do I say to them when they come in crying with grief for this little girl because they were giving her good care and true love, and they got thrown under the bus by the system and the policies and the bureaucrats who said: "No, she has to go into kinship care regardless of her safety, regardless of anything for her benefit, regardless of warnings; it has to happen because it's policy"? That is a crime, my friends, of the highest degree.

I have to ask: how long will this foster family, this young couple, grieve for the little girl that they tried to protect? And government muzzled them, government handcuffed them, government shoved them completely out of the way and said: we know better than you do. What help has been offered to them as a couple? Is it any wonder we have a hard time finding foster parents in our province because of the way things get managed and handled? They will carry the absurdity of this grief for having had her torn away from them and then seeing what's happened. They will carry that with them for the rest of their lives. That was created by government policy, my friends.

5:40

You know, residential schools were a crime. I fully agree. Is this really any different? Government policy pushed forward regardless of the situation, of the people, of the impacts, of the effect. Government was driven by an agenda and not by listening to real people. We have to get away from this big-government, government-knows-best idea and start listening to the real people in our province if we actually really want to care about people and really want to make a difference in the lives of the Serenities, because the way it works currently, we will be doing this again, and that is tragic.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Clearly, the story of this young child is absolutely devastating to anybody who reads it. Anyone who read Paula Simons' article and still had a dry eye at the end of it: you know, I really, honestly, might be somewhat concerned for them. I mean, the amount of emotion that it drew out of all of us. As a mom and as a nurse the idea that a child could go through that is absolutely heartbreaking. Clearly, everyone in this room understands that no child should ever have to go through that.

You know, I referenced my time as a public health nurse. I dealt many times with children who had concerns and became involved with the intervention system, and it was clear to me at that time that the system was broken in so many ways. That, Madam Speaker, is one of the reasons that I am here, sitting in this seat today. It was on behalf of vulnerable children, that I felt there needed to be a better voice for them. The loss of many children over the years – many members seated here are here in part because they have been advocating for so long for changes in that system, advocating on behalf of those children, and felt the need to take action in order to change that.

Certainly, that broken system has been a major priority for this government. A system that is so broken cannot be made whole overnight, Madam Speaker, but those children stay in our minds, and we stay committed to moving forward on their behalf as fast as possible. Certainly, proof is in some of the actions we took. Certainly, money alone cannot solve everything, but it is a start, the increased funding to the Child and Youth Advocate, the increased funding for child intervention.

Madam Speaker, these are very complex issues, and certainly hindsight is always 20/20. The system is broken, but we look to the office of the Child and Youth Advocate to give us advice, to help understand how to change policy, to move forward to help repair that broken system. We certainly take all of that advice very seriously and accept all the recommendations that come from the advocate.

The challenges for families that need child intervention are complex and rooted in issues such as poverty, such as addictions and other mental health concerns. Certainly, the issue of inter-generational trauma and the travesty of residential schools and the legacy that they have left and how they have impacted so many families in Alberta – issues such as these are relevant to many indigenous families across Canada, and I have spoken to many of those families in my own riding.

Madam Speaker, the overrepresentation of indigenous children and youth is a serious concern and an issue that I know we all take seriously. For myself, again, I've listened to those stories from people in my riding, from families, and it certainly is something that I'm passionate about moving forward. I'm passionate about moving forward, and it is so wonderful to see the passion of people around this room and the commitment from everybody in this House to working together to take action on these complex issues. This is a very long-term goal, to try to deal with some of those underlying issues. I look forward to working together to address those issues of poverty, addictions and working together to help with the legacy of residential schools.

Some of the work we've been doing already. You know, being the co-chair of the mental health review was a very powerful experience, seeing the impact of addictions but also having those conversations with people about the impact of residential schools. I met with many representatives from First Nations communities as well as settlements and heard their stories and heard the horrific stories of how that legacy of residential schools has impacted their capacity to work together as families and to take care of one another.

Again, the education initiatives we're doing to equalize education are helpful. I am very proud of the apology that our government did to those who suffered under residential schools in Alberta. We all need to take responsibility for that and commit to finding some resolution for those individuals. Part of that – and it's wonderful to see – is the cultural understanding framework in Human Services, that makes sure that we provide culturally appropriate supports and services to individuals.

You know, regardless of many of these long-term strategies and identifying those issues, we need to ensure children in care and families get the support that they need now. That support, Madam Speaker, is delivered by front-line workers who are smart, who are caring, and who are dedicated to justice for the families that they take care of. But they have been stretched, so stretched, to the limit for many years, being asked to work miracles with far too few resources and asked to do far too much. Money may not solve everything, but it sure as heck helps to make sure that we have the bodies that we need to do that. I look forward to the support of these people who also see the importance of this, to ensure that we have the financial support for those individuals, to ensure we have the bodies we need to do that work. It is with the commitment and the hard work of those front-line workers along with the work of families, communities, and our indigenous leaders that the system will be improved.

I'm also so thankful for the office of the Child and Youth Advocate. Again, through the mental health review I had a chance to meet with them. I also met with some of the kids to whom they had provided some support and who looked to them as supports. It was powerful to see the connection children had to the advocate's office and powerful to see the passion in their eyes. I know the work they are doing. The experts in this are so essential. I think it is important that we recognize that we are not the office of the Child and Youth Advocate and that we have that office there for a reason, to do the expert analysis of these situations, to provide us with the policy guidance that ensures that we take the steps forward that are evidence based, to ensure that we get to the outcome that we need of ensuring that these children are safe. We all have that end in mind, but it's important that we work with the office to ensure that we have information-based guidance in terms of how to go forward, which is why we take the recommendation from the advocate so seriously.

This is a heartbreaking issue not just here in Alberta but right across the country, right across Canada. I see Alberta being a leader in many areas in this country, and I look forward to moving forward and being a leader in this area as well. It is for the sake of Alberta's children that we do so.

Madam Speaker, social issues have to be taken seriously by this House. We have to learn from this. Child intervention has to have the support to be funded adequately, and more than that, we all need to be committed to taking action on the root issues that prevent some of Alberta's children from being safe and being loved the way that all Alberta children deserve to be treated.

When I go home, I will hug my children tight, and I will grieve some more for those children that are still hurting. I will keep talking to people in my communities about how we can do this better. Madam Speaker, it has been said many times that it takes a village to raise a child. We together owe it to the children, who need us to work together to put the child intervention system back together again.

Thank you to everyone in this House for your passion on this issue. It truly gives me hope that we can work together to truly move forward and make progress on this important issue on behalf of Alberta children.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

5:50

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to also thank the House for the opportunity for us all to speak about this very important issue.

I'm just reading from the website.

Kinship care is a family home that is approved to care for a child in need because of a family connection or significant relationship to the child.

Kinship caregivers provide:

- a child with love and care in a familiar setting
- parents with a sense of hope that their child will remain connected to their birth family
- families with a sense of trust, stability and comfort
- an ability to support and maintain lifelong traditions and memories
- support to a child in building healthy relationships within the family
- guidance and reinforcement of a child's cultural identity and positive self-esteem.

Yet in this situation Serenity faced beatings by wire hangers, was deprived of food, beaten for stealing food. I'm trying to visualize this little, minuscule four-year-old running into some pantry somewhere and stealing something off a shelf that she could reach to feed herself and potentially her siblings as she's starving to death here in Alberta. I'm trying in my brain to reconcile that vision of this munchkin traipsing across some cold kitchen floor to find food. Then she was sexually abused. We have failed this child.

I think that probably the most troubling aspect of all this is that there are probably kids in kinship right now that are receiving this love and this care and those aspects that are so important – I don't think any of us would disagree with that – but to echo the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, there were things that were happening in this particular situation that leave us all absolutely stone-cold terrified. When the birth mother, who the children were taken away from because of addictions and other situations, was reporting to people on her visitations that there were bruises and weight loss, that wasn't spoken about.

How is it that that happened? That's my question and one of the questions that I think as a group we need to be able to answer first and foremost. Where did we fail this child? She was starving. How long did it take for this little person to deteriorate to 18 pounds? Like, think about that. We have healthy little babies hanging out here in the Legislature with us, beautiful little children. Imagine for one moment that one of those precious souls was being starved to death. It is enough to make me run out of this place screaming, wondering how I can help.

How is it, then? Are we just asking questions? Are we formulating an idea? I understand that there are dollars that are being put towards this, but do we understand where we've already failed? If we don't understand the system that failed this child and other ones, there is no amount of dollars that are going to go into that system to save the next child if we don't understand where the breakdown was in the system in the first place.

We failed Serenity. Now the answer to the question is more resources. Well, that's wonderful, but if this mother, who knew that her child was suffering, the first person that would have the most ability to describe what her child is going through, was not listened to, can somebody please explain to me how more resources would have helped that situation? We weren't listening to her in the first place. Are more resources going to make us better listeners? I don't understand how that works.

You know, this is a hard situation to even breathe through. When I was explaining this to my children – and mine are 18 and 19 – we sat down at the kitchen table to discuss this particular issue. It's like the Minister of Municipal Affairs was saying: you just squeeze your kids tighter, absolutely. But the question that my 18-year-old and 19-year-old asked is exactly that question. Why didn't they listen to the mother or the family that had taken care of her and was actually raising a healthy, happy little girl? Question two: why was she wrenched from this family for kinship? It says right here, "Kinship care is a family home that is approved." Somebody approved this family to take this baby. Okay. Fine. It's a mistake in this situation, but now the resources are going to go to care? We obviously do not understand the families that are coming into these situations.

Obviously, we dropped the ball somewhere. I don't understand the entire concept of policy to implementation. There is a breakdown in that gap there. There is a huge gap. I don't know how to fill that. I don't. I am not an expert. I'm a mom, and I'm an aunt. I hope to be a grandparent one day. I am going to have a hard time reconciling this in my mind, knowing that on our watch – and I say that collectively: our watch, not yours, not ours – another child is going to come to me on a piece of paper as a death because we were writing policy when we know it's broken. Can we not just all agree on the parts that are broken and focus just a little bit, for a moment, on those things?

We obviously know that some things are working correctly, but the transparency of this issue is about what's not working. It's the hardest thing to do sometimes, to look at a situation and say: what am I not doing correctly here? It's hard. I know that. But it is in service of these children and these families that we have to take a hard look at what is not working and be honest about that. The third party very willingly said that they may not have followed through the way that they should have. All of us are going to suffer those consequences, but to actually put it off and say that we're going to just keep discussing it?

Okay. We're discussing it. What is action item number one that all of us are taking away from this today? I want to know. Action item number one: what is the action that we're taking today? Two, where are the dollars being spent so that the child actually is being advocated on behalf of? Our front-line workers are our voices and the eyes to the hearts and souls of what is happening in these families. Are we not listening to them either? Who is the decision-maker in this? All I know is that with the burden that is on my shoulders of being here – and I'm just speaking about myself – it's hard to breathe.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

10 a.m.

Tuesday, November 22, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect or pray, each in our own way. Hon. members, November is the month of the Holodomor commemoration, a time when millions of Ukrainians lost their lives. We commemorate this tragedy in order to ensure that it is never forgotten. Let us today be reminded of the strength and tenacity of the Ukrainian people who helped settle this province of Alberta.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Alberta Property Rights Advocate

25. Mr. Carlier moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that:
1. The 2015 annual report of the Alberta Property Rights Advocate office be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship for the purpose of conducting a review of the recommendations outlined in the report;
  2. The committee may, without leave of the Assembly, sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued;
  3. In accordance with section 5(5) of the Property Rights Advocate Act the committee shall report back to the Assembly within 60 days of the report being referred to it if the Assembly is then sitting or, if it is not then sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to speak to Government Motion 25, referring the annual report of the Property Rights Advocate to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship. First off, I want to say that I intend to vote in favour of this motion, and I urge my colleagues on this side to do the same. However, as a member of the Resource Stewardship Committee I want to highlight for the Assembly some issues we encountered back in August and October.

We had vigorous debate in August and October because we had a situation where stakeholders wanted to have meetings with the committee about issues important to them and we weren't allowed to invite them because of a little-known standing order that prevents us from doing more than one item of business at a time. I refer to Standing Order 52.04, "An order of the Assembly that a Bill, regulation or some other subject matter stands referred to a Legislative Policy Committee shall take priority over any other hearing or inquiry."

Now I'd just like to read my comments from the October 24 Resource Stewardship meeting, where I had this to say out of frustration from our side. It says:

Mr. Hanson: Yeah. I just want to clarify what I think Mr. MacIntyre is looking for. When we are given a mandate by the Legislature to deal with one item, like we're dealing with right now, it's just that when, you know, we've set dates for consultation and we've set dates for the Ethics Commissioner's report, in the meantime we've got three or four months sometimes where the committee is just sitting and waiting for these reports to come in. What we would like to do is simply be able to address other issues that Albertans want us to talk about in the meantime, while we're waiting, with no interference at all with the committee. But as the standing orders read right now, we're kind of paralyzed by that mandate. What we'd like to do is just recommend to the Legislature to relook at the standing orders to give us a little bit of leeway in times when the committee is sitting and, you know, waiting for reports to come in so that we can address some other issues.

That's the end there, from Hansard.

I just note that we will have to pause our review of the Lobbyists Act to deal with the property rights annual report, and I think there's ample time to do both of these items concurrently. I just find it a little surprising and a little frustrating that this is exactly what we tried to get done back in August and October and were outvoted by the members of the government.

Mr. Panda: They do that all the time.

Mr. Hanson: Yeah.

All we got all summer was government MLAs saying that they couldn't possibly do that, and I just wanted to note for the record how ridiculous I think those statements are. Albertans expect us to get all the work done even if it means doing more than one thing at a time, which now we seem capable of doing.

In closing, I hope the Government House Leader hears the frustration we have with the rules and that he remains committed to implementing the necessary changes to the standing orders that would allow the legislative committees to adequately deal with the work and therefore better serve Albertans, doing more than one thing at a time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to Motion 25?

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Carlier: Yes, Mr. Speaker, to close debate.

[Government Motion 25 carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 24

Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016

[Adjourned debate November 10: Cortes-Vargas]

The Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak to Bill 24? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Yeah, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much for that. It's an interesting and an honourable day to be rising in the Legislature to speak to the government's proposed legislation, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016. It's a broad piece of legislation, and we are here today to discuss amending the act. This is a laudable piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker, as far as it goes, and as I've mentioned previously, amending the document was one of the recommendations coming out of the tragic Slave Lake fire of 2011. That fire gave rise to the Flat Top Complex report, and that report as well as the events of this spring during the Fort McMurray fire bring us here today.

This likely will not be the last time this act is amended, as much as I wish otherwise. As events unfold and technology advances, this document, much like the Flat Top Complex report's other recommendations, will be modified as time passes. Some might call it a living piece of legislation in some regards. That in no way diminishes the work being done here today, which is critical to the process.

There is a paragraph from the committee at the beginning of the Flat Top Complex report, and it seems relevant, Mr. Speaker, to our discussion today. "Adversity can be a cruel teacher; however, adversity creates an opportunity to learn, and learning is the catalyst that inspires people to evolve and adapt to new opportunities, threats and realities." As we consider this, it would also be a good time to take a careful look at the numerous recommendations of the Flat Top Complex. Important ideas were borne in this document, including the advancement of the FireSmart program. Now, it was mentioned several times how, during the Fort McMurray fire, several instances of fire-smarting a property had been instrumental to those properties being saved or damage being mitigated by adopting FireSmart techniques. The government's own website has categories for fire-smarting homes as well as businesses.

Mr. Speaker, this point cannot be stressed enough. The program and its techniques could have had the ability to mitigate the devastation of a fire. Is it the magic bullet? Will it be the answer in every situation? Of course not. It is simply one more tool at our disposal that could help in a similar situation. The town of Slave Lake believed in it so much that they spent almost $20 million to fire-smart their community and are advocating for a FireSmart learning centre to be based in their community.

10:10

This program should merit more consideration by the government, as should the rest of the recommendations from the Flat Top Complex report. This report deserves more than lip service and $4 million in budget cuts. As we receive the reports from the Fort McMurray fire, let's try to ensure that those recommendations are treated as an investment in further prevention rather than a line item in a budget. Natural disasters are something that we can never anticipate, but hopefully a little foresight and preparedness can certainly help us to mitigate those effects.

That's what we're trying to do here today. We are trying, through, hopefully, some positive changes to this act, to mitigate some possible problems before a situation or the situation arises. It's how we mitigate them within those changes that we may disagree on. As were many of my colleagues in opposition, I, too, was troubled that this government seems to believe that they always know best and, as such, voted down every amendment that had been brought forward by opposition parties, no matter how common-sense and practical we may feel them to be.

If making legislation that much stronger is the goal of this government, then dismissing reasonable amendments out of hand shouldn't be threatening to any party in power. It's almost as if the government learned very little from their days in opposition and is heading down the same path that brought down the last government. Mr. Speaker, I was here for that cycle. Reasoned debate is one of the tools used here in the House to try to make legislation work for all Albertans, not just government insiders.

We had an instance where a member of the third party brought forward a reasonable amendment to simply put a timetable on a forest officer requesting a fire control plan so that the business knows within two weeks if its plan would be acceptable or not. Mr. Speaker, I have reached out to try and find in the town of Hanna where there is a forest control officer. Hanna is in the centre of my jurisdiction, and Hanna is a prairie town. As many of the members opposite and many members on this side know, we live and die by the words, so sometimes the wording of legislation going forward is important. This seemed reasonable enough that my party supported the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti's amendment. Having a fixed timetable is a reasonable expectation in legislation. For example, when you get a parking ticket, you have a time allotted to dispute it or pay it by. We all have to file taxes by a certain date. It's a reasonable and a straightforward idea, at least to most of us.

The second part of the hon. member's proposal was that any forest officer or guardian have a limit of one year that an area may be cordoned off for investigation, again, what we believed to be a reasonable proposal and a reasonable time frame. Many of us spoke on how the forest would grow, seasons would change, and the area would simply evolve back to a state unlike it was when the investigation started. The cordon is useless after a year, so why restrict a forest like that? It didn't change the bill's intent; it simply gave a fixed timetable. We live within fixed timetables in every aspect of this House: term limits, speaking limits, how long we can debate, how long we sit. The list goes on, Mr. Speaker. It's amazing that once again a reasonable amendment was dismissed and voted down without due consideration simply because the government has the power to do so.

Our side has proposed a few amendments that would clarify some ambiguous terminology. Replacing the term "thing" with the more precise term, at least in our opinion, Mr. Speaker, "wood product" was not in any way trying to derail the legislation but was simply improving an area that could easily be interpreted as vague or ambiguous. "Wood product" is a perfectly acceptable term, that, I may add, is used in similar legislation in Saskatchewan. As noted by my colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills when we introduced this amendment:

When writing legislation, we need to ensure that balance is struck, and certainly, in my opinion and the opinion of my [esteemed] colleague, when we . . . say "thing," [in our opinion, Mr. Speaker] that doesn't strike the right balance. If we use terminology that we're more familiar with as well as terminology that is used in other jurisdictions like Saskatchewan, that is significantly more clear and provides guidance and direction and a little bit more clarity around what would and would not be appropriate.

It certainly was understood what the members were trying to achieve on this side of the House, but unfortunately some government members did not grasp the concept that, yes, "wood product" does cover things like piles of logs, raw logs, trees, et cetera. Perhaps the member couldn't see the forest through the trees there, Mr. Speaker.

Wanting to remove any ambiguity or possible misinterpretation helps forest professionals do their jobs and helps to ensure they don't get carried away. It doesn't hinder it, in my opinion, and that's what these amendments were striving for. Amending legislation is about learning what needs to be fixed in a previous version and amending it to make it work, hopefully, even better. That is our goal here, Mr. Speaker.

While I certainly dispute what this legislation is as good as, we could have made it, in fact, hopefully, better. The act will be a better piece of legislation than it had been previously, and as such my colleagues and I will vote to pass this bill. But I would also remind the House that there is more to do to make our communities and foresters and, as the bill discusses, prairies even safer from wildfires.

With that, I thank you for the opportunity to rise and speak, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler?

Seeing and hearing none, I recognize the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak on Bill 24, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016. Of course, with the concerns we've had with the recent forest fire in Fort McMurray, it's very timely that we're dealing with this right now. There are a lot of great things in Bill 24 that we agree with and are happy to see are in there. We're happy to see this moving forward.

We had an opportunity to make things, we feel, just a little better with this bill, but of course those amendments that we suggested have been voted down by the government. Now, one of the amendments – and some of the amendments were put forward by the third party – had to do with timelines, the different timelines that areas could be cordoned off for. They suggested a timeline of a year. The different timelines that a forestry officer should respond to a fire plan: 14 days. In fact, these are more than reasonable amendments, that would have helped make this bill a lot better.

When I look through this bill, I see a change that adds off-highway vehicles into this act. Of course, we know that the minister already had the ability to add off-highway vehicles and restrict them at any point they wanted. Of course, maybe this makes it easier, but the opportunity was already there for the minister to restrict off-highway vehicle use.

Now, when we get to the fire control plans in 23(1), this is what it says, Mr. Speaker.

A person carrying on or having charge of an industrial or commercial operation on public land or within one kilometre of any public land shall at the request of a forest officer submit a fire control plan satisfactory to the forest officer, within the time determined by the forest officer.

I'll just go on to read subsection (2) also.

If a person referred to in subsection (1) fails to comply with the request of the forest officer within the time determined by the forest officer, the Minister may, by order, suspend the industrial or commercial operation of the person until a fire control plan satisfactory to the forest officer has been submitted to the forest officer.

Now, it would have been nice, and maybe we'll get some clarification today on this issue, to see – what this does, Mr. Speaker, is that it puts a lot of burden on the forest officer if there are no guidelines for the forest officer to follow when it comes to this issue. Of course, the amendment that was suggested was that within 14 days of submitting the fire control plan, the forest officer would have to respond and tell the industrial or commercial operation whether it was satisfactory or not. Now, I think that would be perfectly reasonable, especially when you consider that if the plan isn't suitable, the minister may by order suspend the industrial or commercial operation. When you have such a serious repercussion for not having a satisfactory fire control plan, I think it only makes sense that once they submit one, they would like to know as soon as possible whether it's appropriate or not so that they can adjust it, change it, make it better, do whatever it takes to comply.

The existing part of this regulation is a little bit vague, I think, when it comes to operations on public land or within one kilometre of any public land. Now, in areas, for instance, like where I live, there is a lot of public land intermixed with farmland, agriculture, and that sort of thing, so this could come into effect for a lot of different farm-based businesses, farms, which are businesses, too.

By not having that clearly defined – say, for instance, an industrial commercial operation where there could be an opportunity to create a fire. There could be home-based businesses that operate within a home or within a small shop or something that have no opportunity to create a fire, that a forest officer could come and say: okay; I want a fire control plan.

I think what would be interesting, Mr. Speaker, is to find out what the guidelines are going to be for these forestry officers so that they have something to work with while they are performing their duties, because they're very important duties. Now, of course, I live in a community where there are forestry officers. I know them. I trust them. I have a lot of respect for them. But I think they would even want some guidelines to go on so that they know what their job is and what they're responsible for.

Now, we haven't had any opportunity to hear from the minister in this regard, so hopefully today we'll be able to hear something. We've debated this I don't know how many days now. Probably five or six or seven different times we've debated this. Maybe today we'll hear some more from the minister on some of these concerns that we have.

Then, of course, in regard to these fire control plans: is there any appeal process for them? That would be interesting to know, too, especially when you have something as serious as having a business shut down. I think that would be something that would be good to hear, too.

Now, we also talked about the diseased and infested products. That's kind of interesting, the word "products" there. It says underneath that heading, "A forest officer may, without a warrant, seize any thing that the forest officer has reasonable grounds to believe harbours a forest pest." Our concern was the word "thing," and we made an amendment to suggest "forest product" rather than "thing" because we felt, especially without an explanation of why the word "thing" was used and substituted in there – was there any situation that caused this? We know that forest pests, you would think, would be found in forest products, not in things, necessarily. Of course, the title of that is Diseased and Infested Products, so using the word "product" or "forest product" underneath the heading Diseased and Infested Products would probably stand to reason.

Now, we also discussed how with the transportation of aquatic species that we don't want in Alberta, there's similar legislation there for restricting the movement of these invasive species, that we don't want. Of course, the wording of that is a little more clear as far as what the possible ramifications are and what they can do. I think my suggestion at the time was that maybe we should be looking at that legislation and seeing how that would apply in this situation here with forestry products that could harbour these forest pests.

If we go on to subsections (2) and (3) in this same part, where it talks about – like I say, subsection (1) talks about: "A forest officer may, without a warrant, seize any thing that the forest officer has reasonable grounds to believe harbours a forest pest." Well, subsection (2) says, "The Minister may order the destruction of a product seized under subsection (1)." Of course, it's suggesting to change "product" to "thing" again. Again, it's not necessarily just about seizing a thing; it also talks about the destruction of the thing seized.

Going on to subsection (3):

No right of compensation exists against the Crown or any person in respect of anything destroyed under subsection (2), but the Minister may provide such compensation in the amount or at the value that the Minister considers fair for the destroyed [thing].

So again we have a situation here where anything may be or could be seized, could be destroyed, and it's up to the minister's discretion whether there's going to be any compensation and the amount of the compensation.

Now, again, I don't see anything here specifically in this section as far as whether there's any opportunity to appeal any of these decisions, so I think, you know, that as far as respecting the rights of Albertans, maybe we could have some clarity on that.

Again, Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of good things in this bill. We're happy to see this bill being brought forward because it does bring some good things to the table. We would have liked to have seen some of our amendments passed to make this a little better. It would be nice to have more clarification from the minister on some of these things because maybe some of them make perfect sense, but until we hear an explanation as to why these changes were made, then we don't know exactly why they are here.

Now, of course, probably the number one thing, Mr. Speaker, is that we need to make sure that fires like the Slave Lake fire and the Fort McMurray fire don't happen again. We need to do everything we can. Some of these things may help situations like that from coming up again, but I'm hoping that in bringing this Bill 24 forward, the department and the minister have included every possible thing they could to make sure that these fires don't happen again. We know that we can't stop all the fires. We know that there's human error involved. We know there are natural forces like lightning that happen, that create forest fires. We can't stop every forest fire from happening, but what we can do is reduce the opportunity for a disaster to happen.

Again, I don't know that I see a lot of things in this bill that have to do with suppressing fires once they start. There are a lot of things about keeping fires from happening, which is good. We need that. That's the first step, undoubtedly. But what we'd like to see is how to keep these fires from doing the damage like was done in Slave Lake and Fort McMurray. I would hope that as we move forward, this becomes basically a living document where as we discover and find new ways to keep these fires from causing the damage like has been done, we'll bring them forward and we'll take care of them as soon as possible.

I think that what we're here to do is make things better for Albertans, safer for Albertans. That's what we feel on this side of the House, and I'm sure that's what they feel on that side of the House, too, Mr. Speaker. What we do here has a direct consequence on Albertans, on how they live their lives, how government policies and regulations impact them. So I think the best thing we can do is to erase any possible misunderstandings or ambiguity. That's not too much to ask. It also isn't too much to ask to make sure that we're doing everything we can so that these fires, that have created so much damage recently here in Alberta and affected so many lives, don't happen again, that we do everything we can to make sure that that doesn't happen again.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Are there any questions to the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I would recognize the Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity this morning to speak to this bill. It's something that's a bit near and dear to my heart because over the years at the family farm we've had a couple of incidents. It reminds me, actually, of one here just a couple of years ago, when we had a spontaneous fire incident on the property next to me. It happened at about 11 o'clock at night, and we're madly rushing around trying to get equipment started and running and getting the fire department out and working like crazy until 4 in the morning to keep the fire from going straight across our grasslands and taking out the house and buildings and all the neighbours with it. It's something that's very important, and we've seen that happen this past year, obviously. It's a devastating thing when it happens. It's a frightening thing, and I think everyone knows that.

Anyway, just to get into what we've got prepared here today for me, I wanted to start, of course, like everyone else has by taking the opportunity to thank our firefighters and first responders all over the province. I mean, after all, they're the ones that are dealing with these devastating effects of wildfires first-hand. I think often as regular Albertans that we don't really realize how blessed we are to be living in this province with these kinds of people. They have so much to be proud of.

With the fire this summer, devastating as it was, it was an opportunity to see our world-class firefighters at their best. I think we saw an awful lot of people work very hard and do a fabulous job in one of the most frightening things I think anyone has ever, ever seen in western Canada. The fact that there wasn't more damage and desolation as a result of this fire is amazing, and it's a testament to their hard work and dedication. Once again, to all the fire responders, first responders, all the people involved, all the people and volunteers, all the different communities: we thank you from the Assembly of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, we often forget that decisions we make in this Chamber really matter and that there are real-world consequences, if you want to call it that, when we change legislation, or, in this case, sometimes when we fail to change legislation. While I commend this government on taking action against wildfires – wildfires are actually a significant problem in Alberta – it would have been nice to see more concrete action. This government is taking steps, albeit small ones, to combat wildfires – there's no doubt – and I wanted to state that very clearly. I recall watching the evacuation on television last spring and seeing how close the fire came to swallowing up thousands of people as they tried desperately to leave. This was, quite simply, frightening. Everyone did their best, and it's just too bad we weren't able to do more at that time.

I think this bill would have been something that we could have worked upon to do a bit more. It's well intentioned – I don't think anyone questions that – but there's so much more we could have done here with the debates we've had over the past few hours and days on this. While wildfires are a fact of life, we shouldn't have to accept that what happened to Slave Lake and Fort McMurray was inevitable.

The devastation that these fires wrought on those communities was, I believe, preventable insofar as if we as a province had perhaps been more proactive and possibly could have at the very least mitigated and reduced some of the impact of the wildfires on those communities. So today I cannot help but feel that we may have been missing an opportunity to make this bill better. I think other speakers have mentioned this on our side of the House this morning, and it seems to be a common thread of comments with respect to what this bill had and what it could have had.

I want to emphasize a point my hon. colleague made earlier. Fire prevention and the recommendations contained in the Flat Top Complex report and the numerous other reports on wildfires published over the years should be treated as an investment, not simply an expense. I know that one of the first things any investor worth their weight in gold will tell you is that there's no such thing as a sure thing. I think it's safe to say that whoever coined that saying wasn't aware of the Flat Top Complex report and the FireSmart program.

The FireSmart program was developed to reduce the negative impact on human health and safety, communities, homes, industries, and landscapes. The current FireSmart grants max out at a hundred thousand dollars per community, I'm told. The question is: are we maximizing our return on investment when a single fire incident can cost tens of millions of dollars? Perhaps not.

The fact is that many of the recommendations within the FireSmart program are really common-sense things, like using asphalt shingles on houses instead of cedar shakes, plaster instead of vinyl or wood siding on new and renovated homes, or using coloured rocks in your garden and flower beds instead of tree bark. These are simple investments that could be made or at the very least actively promoted by the government. Fire mitigation is as important to preventing wildfires and the impact of wildfires as flood mitigation is to preventing and mitigating the effects of a flood. At the very least, it is an investment in peace of mind.

I'm disappointed that the government rejected, as my colleagues have said, some of our many quality amendments, too. I try not to take it personally, but when the government defeats every and even the most common-sense and practical amendments that could have been made to the legislation, that could have made it so much better, a person begins to wonder why. Why do they do that? I can tell you that as a member that's been here for over three and a half, close to four, years now we've seen this time and time again.

Why do we have this type of misguided thinking in this House, thinking that you could get, I suppose, when you buy into a claim that only the government caucus members can be real legislators? The government seems to always reject ideas from the opposition outright. Am I saying the legislation is bad, that it should be defeated, this legislation, that is? No, I'm not. But I am disappointed that the government let the opportunity, nonetheless, to make the legislation even better slip by.

Obviously, more needs to be done in Alberta to prevent wildfires from devastating our communities. There is no question about that. Bill 24 is certainly a step in the right direction, Mr. Speaker, but there needs to be serious questions asked. Is this legislation enough? Why did the previous recommendations to prevent wildfires fail to be implemented? We've had the lessons of the past. The Flat Top Complex report taught us that. The Slave Lake fire taught us that. Where did we perhaps slightly fail in reacting to this situation? How could we have done better? These are the questions that will remain for some time, and I know that everyone that was out there volunteering and everyone that saw the results later probably themselves thought: how could we have done more? It's a serious thing, and it is a very worthwhile comment and thought to consider.

I'd like to finish off by saying again that I'm happy to see the government take some action here to improve fire readiness. Even if they're small steps, it's steps that are worth while to do. For that reason, I will be supporting this bill.

Thank you for your time this morning, Mr. Speaker and to all.

The Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any other members who wish to speak to Bill 24? Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, you have already spoken, have you not?

Mr. Hanson: Not on third reading, sir.

The Speaker: Okay. Please proceed.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a couple of points I'd like to make. You know, listening with interest to the discussion and debates that we've had so far, what I've come to understand is that the best way to fight a fire is fire prevention, and I think this is what we really need to focus on with this bill.

Now, during the debates I asked a lot of the members opposite, when they got up to speak and they talked about fire tragedies in their area or they spoke about the wonderful assets of the forests and the tourism in their areas and adjacent areas, what their thoughts were this spring when the budget came out and they saw very significant cuts to both the wildfire budget and the water bomber budgets. You know, I understand their reluctance to give me an answer to that question. I'm not really surprised that they wouldn't speak against their own government's budget. [A child vocalized] It wasn't that bad. Anyway, like I say, I didn't expect them to criticize the budget even though their constituents were very concerned about the cuts that were made there.

I also noted on numerous occasions the concern I had with cuts to the Transportation budget, specifically with regard to mowing along Alberta highways. You know, I'm very concerned about this, and a lot of my municipalities as well have raised concerns regarding the leaving of tall grass and debris, not only for how it increases the risk of animal strikes but I travel the highways quite a bit and you'll see people flicking cigarette butts out the window all the time. I know that it's something that's very, very difficult to police. I didn't see any mention of it here in this bill, and I don't know what the regulations are that we could use to stop that. But it just seems to me that it's kind of counterproductive to make cuts to budgets and then talk about trying to reduce wildfires on the prairies and forests when one of the highest risks of fires starting is man-made and a lot of times on highways people just not even thinking, flicking cigarette butts out the window.

Like I say, allowing the debris to build up along highways, cutting budgets to wildfire fighting, and messing with the water bomber contracts just seem to be going the wrong direction when it comes to protecting our forests and prairies. Like I said when I started speaking, you know, the best way to fight a fire is to prevent it from starting in the first place, so it just seems to me that we're kind of going in the wrong direction when it comes to working against prevention. I don't think more regulation is the answer. Better planning and learning from the very expensive and heartbreaking lessons of the past would be the best step forward.

So I would really encourage the government in next spring's budget to maybe reinstate some of the funding that they have for cutting the debris and grass along the highways, maintaining our wildfire budgets. You know, we're moving the firefighting season up by a month, so maybe we should also be looking at making sure that our water bomber contracts are in place. If we run into another spring like we had this spring, the devastation is going to be there if we have a wildfire breakout. We need to be prepared for it, and it should be part of that budget. Again, very important – I can't stress it enough – cutting the grass along highways is a major concern.

Thank you very much for allowing me time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) for the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills?

Seeing none, are there any other members who wish to speak to Bill 24? The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm grateful that we have this bill before us, actually. In a former life I was a firefighter, a rural firefighter, which meant that we fought everything that was a fire, whether it was a forest fire, a house fire, a car on fire, anything. We responded to everything. We were an hour away from any other source of assistance, so whether it be medical emergencies or fires or, you know, whatever, the local volunteer fire department had to respond. It was located in British Columbia, right in the midst of the boreal forest, so forest fires, of course, were a big part of what we did.

I'm grateful that the department is conducting a postmortem on that fire and that we have this bill before us. Just to tell a little bit of a story, as a fire department we always performed postmortems. I think that there isn't a fire department anywhere, whether it be urban or rural, that doesn't do postmortems on every single action that they do. Sometimes it's called debriefing; sometimes it's called postmortem. The goal of the postmortem is always: how can we do this better? How can we do it faster? How can we respond with more assets to that fire? When you're talking about fire, as we witnessed in the Fort McMurray fire, seconds count. Seconds count. Getting as many assets and the right assets on the fire scene as quickly as possible to control it, to even steer it if you can't put it out is extremely important.

One of the things we always looked at in our postmortems was: did we have the right assets on the fire scene at the right time, how could we have improved getting those assets there, and what assets did we actually have at our disposal? One of the things about forest fires that's different than, say, a house fire is that you have at your disposal a lot of assets that you as a fire department may not actually possess. For example, when we were at one particular fire, it was quite a ways away from a source of water. Ordinarily, when fighting forest fires, we will start sucking water out of any body of water that's around just to get enough water on it. In this particular fire we were a little bit limited, but there was a gentleman who ran a water hauling business just a couple of miles from where we were fighting this fire. We literally got on the phone, got a hold of him – his name was Jim – and said: Jim, how many water trucks have you got, and can you get them to this fire now? Within 20 minutes we had tens of thousands of gallons of water. That was an asset that we tapped into to help us put this particular fire out, which had started from a skidder catching on fire out in the bush.

In the Fort McMurray fire, because of the sheer size of this massive beast, an enormous amount of resources had to be brought into play as quickly as possible. I think that everyone who was watching this fire realized that there was an asset deficit. In the early days of this fire there was definitely an asset deficit. It may not be that the firefighting people up there didn't have these assets in-house but that there were assets up there that could have been tapped into but weren't. I believe that as things go forward in the postmortem on this fire, the water bombers issue, the contracts for water bombers, is going to be a significant factor in assets that were there, available to us, but were not made use of in a timely manner. Water bombers, to be effective, have to be brought in very quickly and early in a fire. They have a limited ability to knock down a major fire, as we saw. That requires boots on the ground. That requires an enormous amount of heavy equipment to be brought to bear. Now, if you've ever toured up there in that area around McMurray and going as far north as Fort Chip, there is a massive amount of heavy equipment up there, and that heavy equipment is an asset. It's part of a fire team's inventory even though you don't own it.

In the postmortems that we conducted in our fire department, we actually made an inventory of equipment that wasn't ours. We had three sawmills in our area. They had tons of heavy equipment over there. We actually went and saw: what have they got that we can beg, borrow, or steal if there is a really bad fire? Of course, it required their co-operation, but they were eager to co-operate and help. If there was something that was beyond the capability of the equipment that we had, here was an inventory that we could tap into and get. If we needed Cats, if we needed loaders, if we needed whatever, it was a wonderful thing to have that huge amount of assets at our disposal as a fire department.

As the postmortem on this fire is explored, I really hope the department digs deep because we have a couple of facts that we cannot escape as Albertans. We have a massive boreal forest. It is huge. We have all kinds of things that can start that forest on fire. We are going to have more forest fires in this province – that is a fact of living with a boreal forest – and it is possible that we are going to see fires again of the scope of the Slave Lake fire and the Fort Mac fire.

Since these are, in my opinion, inescapable realities, it behooves the government to do some really serious soul-searching in how both Slave Lake and Fort Mac were handled, to take a look at the command structure. I'm aware that in the first 10 days of the Fort Mac fire there were a whole lot of meetings taking place here in Edmonton and not a whole lot of activity when it came to helping the 80,000 people that were fleeing Fort Mac. There were meetings and meetings and meetings, but unfortunately there wasn't a lot of stuff in motion. It took time for things to get in motion to the degree that was necessary for the volume of people that we had to deal with and help. Of course, things did ramp up, and all was good, but a function of effective planning is to get mobilization happening within moments of something major like this. In other places in the world where they experience catastrophes on a regular basis, whether it be earthquakes, whether it be tsunamis, whether it be whatever, they make some pretty detailed plans on mobilizing assets, mobilizing help to their people, and it's this kind of planning that I would hope will come from the postmortem that's going to be conducted on the Fort Mac fire.

I commend every front-line first responder that went to fight that fire: the ambulance, the police, the aid workers, the citizens of Alberta that just rose up and started shipping food and shipping clothes and Pampers, you name it. Anything and everything that was needed was moving. Alberta as a province rose to the occasion, and I think it made every one of us very proud to call ourselves Albertans during that fire. I especially, though, want to commend the firefighters who stood like a wall against that fire. There were times when decisions were being made by those men and women on the front lines with nothing more than a hose full of water standing between them and an absolute wall of fire. I know what that is like as a firefighter. To anyone here who has been a firefighter, you know what it's like when you're standing there and you and the team make a decision: "We are not moving. That fire is not coming past us. We're going to stand our ground." I know that there were decisions like that made by those brave men and women every day during that fire. I love them, I commend them, and I'm very proud of them.

I'm in support of this bill. I think this bill is a good beginning. I believe there's much more that should be done and, hopefully, will be done. Of course, you know, we were very disappointed that the firefighting budget was cut during the budget. We were very disappointed that statistically and historically we spend about $500 million a year on firefighting in this province and this government seemed to just ignore that reality and only budget for a fraction of what was needed and then justified the reduction, only then literally weeks later to be faced with a wildfire that consumed millions and millions and millions of dollars. Like the Boy Scouts say, you should be prepared.

We have a history in this province. We have a boreal forest. We cannot escape the reality that we will have fire. This government is duty bound to put things in place where we can deal with those fires effectively. If you budget $500 million and you don't happen to use it one year, happy day. But if you don't budget for it, I think that you're living in a fool's paradise. It is vitally important that in future budgets the government take the time to plan for fires and to have fire plans in place, good ones. You know, we had to evacuate during the Slave Lake fire; we had to evacuate during the Fort Mac fire. I don't doubt that in the future we're going to have to see evacuations again. Those kinds of plans need to be put in place. There needs to be appropriate funding and assets ready to mobilize for the sake of our citizens.

To the good people of Fort McMurray: you know, there were no lives lost as a direct result of that fire, and I know from talking to the people in McMurray that there is really only one reason, and that is because of the enormous amount of training that oil sands companies and other companies in Fort Mac and area put their staff through. The evacuation was orderly. It was just amazing to see that many people move out of a city that fast, that orderly. They were calm, they knew exactly what they were to do, and I applaud the training that our oil sands companies and other companies in Fort Mac and area have put their staff through. I will say that that probably saved a whole lot of lives right there, that very fact that they had that kind of training. So I applaud our oil sands companies and the others up in Fort Mac that provide that excellent kind of training for their people.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, just let me say that I do support this bill, but I do want to make it clear that this is a good start, that there's some road to go on this particular file. I want to echo my esteemed colleague's statements regarding amendments from the opposition. You know, partisan politics is, unfortunately, a reality. However, when it comes to issues like this, where we're talking about the health and the safety of the people of Alberta, I believe it behooves the government to get down off their partisan high horse and take a good listen to the amendments that come forward from everyone in this House. We all have skin in this game, and it would be, I think, only reasonable to expect the government to listen to the amendments, that have been well thought through and provide an opportunity for this government to improve the legislation that comes before this House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there questions under 29(2)(a)? I wondered if maybe the Finance minister had a question for him because he was talking across the hall.

11:00

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I do have one.

The Speaker: You have a question under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Ceci: I do. Thank you. When I was listening to the speaker, he seemed to have some inside knowledge about the activities that didn't go on, in his mind, from the Provincial Operations Centre, or the POC. He seemed to talk about the front line as if it somehow guided itself, that all the front-line responders were acting on – I don't know – intuition. Does he not think that there was co-ordination from the Provincial Operations Centre with the people on the ground in Fort McMurray the whole time, right from the beginning? He seems to suggest that, you know, everyone else was off on vacation and that the only people there in Fort McMurray were doing the work. I just don't know where you get that information. I'd be really interested if you have some inside information to that being the case. If not, why would you impugn the Provincial Operations Centre and the work they did?

Mr. MacIntyre: Mr. Speaker, to clarify, I by no means am suggesting that POC was on a holiday. What I am suggesting is that in the days immediately at the very front end of that fire there were resources that were necessary to assist the people who were fleeing – specifically food resources, places to stay, materials that were needed – that were not being mobilized in a timely manner, and in the inquiries that I made regarding those specifics, repeatedly I was told, “Yes, we're meeting about that; yes, we're meeting about that,” but there were no wheels turning.

The towns up in that area – the town of Boyle, the town of Athabasca, the town of Lac La Biche – those communities, without POC's intervention or assistance or anything, rose up to help those people while POC got their act together regarding getting materials and food and the other things necessary for a population of 80,000 people that needed somewhere to stay. I'm not talking about the fire suppression resources or firefighting resources that POC was taking care of in their command and communications structure. I'm talking about, Mr. Speaker, those 80,000 to 90,000 Fort McMurrayites that were on the road looking for somewhere, that had to evacuate. POC was not moving fast enough to get these people fed, watered, sheltered, clothed, but the local communities up there did. They're the ones that saved the day.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? My attempt at humour caused them to speak.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising, of course, to talk today about Bill 24. I've spoken about Bill 24 . . .

The Speaker: Excuse me, hon. member. Could I get guidance from the table? I understand that you have spoken before on Bill 24.

Mr. Nixon: Not to third reading. I have not spoken to third reading.

The Speaker: Just a moment until we check.

Hon. member, I've been advised that the exact date was November 10 on which you spoke on this item. That's the information that we have on the record.

Is there another member who wishes to speak to Bill 24? I have on the list, possibly, Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Nixon: He already spoke, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Okay. I didn't check his name off.

Are there any other members who would like to speak to third reading of Bill 24, Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016?

Seeing none, I would ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry to close debate.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today and move third reading of Bill 24, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016.

I want to thank all members on both sides of the House for the discussions about this important piece of legislation. It is clear from comments made throughout the debate on this bill that members are supportive of the enhancement of wildfire prevention, enforcement, and operational activities.

The modernization of this act is an important step in reducing the risk of human-caused wildfires. As we pointed out earlier, approximately 70 per cent of wildfires over the last five years have been linked to human activity, and this legislation will introduce measures that will help reduce the risk of human-caused wildfires and enhance firefighting operations. They include strengthening penalties to serve as a deterrent, simplifying the process to restrict recreational activities when fire conditions are hazardous, officially designating March 1 as the start of wildfire season, and clarifying operational roles and responsibilities.

During the second reading debate and in Committee of the Whole we discussed several aspects of the legislation. I'd like to take some time to address some of the discussion points to make sure there is clarity. During debate there were questions about the provisions related to delegation of authority. What we want to ensure is that front-line staff, who have the most experience with how this legislation works on the ground, have the ability to make decisions where appropriate as part of their day-to-day duties. Of course, higher level decisions will still be made by the minister as required.

In terms of the part of the bill that addresses the wildfire season, starting the season one month earlier than before will allow our wildfire managers to identify potential issues and ensure fire permits are obtained earlier in the year. An earlier wildfire season start will allow our wildfire managers to be ready to respond when the spring comes. It won't in any way affect the contracts we have in place. These contracts are multiyear, ensuring the resources are available as needed and can be extended into the fall based on hazard. This government will continue to ensure we have all the firefighting resources we need to keep Albertans safe from the risk of wildfire.

During this last wildfire season the government enacted an off-highway vehicle restriction to help reduce the likelihood of wildfires started by exhaust or hot debris. This was done using a provision of the act mostly reserved for forest area closures. The new provisions in this act will allow us to implement an OHV restriction in the same way that we do a fire ban right now. We are essentially simplifying the process.

I was incredibly pleased and honoured to introduce Bill 24 in the House on the same day that the Premier recognized the Fort McMurray wildfire first responders. This bill will help them do their job, and I'm proud to stand in this House today for its third reading. We will now move on to updating the act's associated regulations over the winter, in time for next year's start of wildfire season on March 1.

Again I would like to thank all members for their support on this bill and for their support of our wildland firefighters.

That concludes my comments, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 30

Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act

[Adjourned debate November 10: Mr. Cooper]

The Speaker: Are there any members who wish to speak to second reading of Bill 30? The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise on second reading of Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. It sounds like a wonderful plan. We hope this one actually has some effect because, you know, what we've seen from this department in previous bills hasn't been all that effective in creating jobs. So we're really, truly hoping that this one will have a little bit more effect.

The tax credit, if it works, unfortunately won't do nearly enough to cancel out the negative effects that we're seeing from the upcoming carbon tax.

An Hon. Member: Levy.

Mr. Panda: Tax.

Mr. Hanson: It's a tax. [interjections] Now we're talking semantics. Albertans know that a tax is a tax is a tax. [interjection] Yes, if it quacks like a tax and waddles like a tax, it's a tax. I understand that the reason for calling it a levy is so that you can implement it on other levels of government like municipalities.

You didn't just flip me the bird, did you, Minister?

Mr. Ceci: No, no. I was trying to listen to you.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you. I appreciate that. [interjection] I am very sensitive to that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, as I was listening to the chorus of song, I thought it would have been a great piece of music that I ought to tape for one of my grandchildren to fall asleep to, but let's try and stay on topic.

Hon. member, I'm sure you'll want to focus your discussion on the chair.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll try to do that. I had no idea that my comments would have that effect.

Anyway, as I get back to this, if this proposal actually has the desired effect, it's not going to be enough to counteract the effects of the carbon tax and the tax increases on businesses, individuals, and corporate taxes that we've seen in the last 18 months. Although it is a step in the right direction, we really think that some decreases to corporate taxes to make Alberta a little bit more attractive for investment and also, you know, holding back, eliminating the carbon tax until the economy improves a little bit would help go a long way to improving things.

Now, Alberta is facing a jobs and economic crisis, and steps must be taken. We agree with that a hundred per cent. I don't think there is anybody in this House that would argue against that. You know, I support that initiative a hundred per cent.

Nonrefundable tax credits, not grants or loans, are something that fits in with my way of thinking, especially in these economic times. Adding more money to the budget: you know, we're already facing $10 billion in deficit this year, so I don't see any value in increasing that. I did receive some correspondence from one of the chambers in the province that had some concerns about it. They would like to raise a concern that many of the members have expressed since the program was originally announced. Specifically, there's been discussion about the government's intention to artificially limit the pool of businesses that would be eligible to participate in the program. The evidence suggests that investor tax credits work best when the government adopts a hands-off approach and instead places the onus on private investors to make the final decisions on risk, efficiency, and ultimately where to deploy their capital.

Now, this is a message that we've been trying to push across for the last 18 months, for sure. The private sector, given the proper incentives to invest money on their own – like, we're talking about, you know, making our province the most attractive place to do business and set up a head office. That is the best initiative for increasing business development and creating real jobs in the province. We would agree with these statements that keeping a hands-off approach from government is probably the best to allow the public sector to do what it's always done in Alberta, which is to increase jobs and invest in our province.

Going on, another point was that productivity is a big problem in manufacturing and that the CITC will help Alberta's 9,000 manufacturers compete with foreign business. Again, when you have a statement like that, which is what we should all be interested in doing as part of government, and then you set people up to fail with a carbon tax that other jurisdictions that we're competing against don't have – I'll be addressing that in a statement tomorrow. We're actually losing some businesses here in Alberta because they're competing with Saskatchewan and British Columbia, where they don't have these punitive taxes, or they do have a carbon tax, but it is revenue neutral.

Like I said, you know, Mr. Speaker, I understand the difference between the terms "tax" and "levy" and that the word "levy" is there so that we can penalize our municipalities. You know, I understand, and municipalities understand, too. Albertans aren't fooled by the difference between the words "tax" and "levy". We're not fools, and Albertans aren't fools. They get it. You know, you can wordsmith all you like, but a tax is a tax. The modest programs will not offset, again, the general chill in investment caused by the government's other antibusiness economic policies and tax hikes.

Personally, I will be supporting this because it is a step in the right direction. It isn't taking new money and putting money into the system; it's actually allowing private investors to invest and get tax credits for it. But when you throw in a carbon tax, dramatic minimum wage increases, start suing Alberta-owned power companies, shutting down coal, killing communities, record deficits and borrowing, you can't fix all that with, you know, a $70 million tax credit. I just don't see it. Again, it is a step in the right direction, so I will be supporting it at this point.

Thank you. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please.

Are there any questions to the member under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I would recognize the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand today and discuss Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. Now, it is good to see that with the problems Alberta is facing with the loss of jobs – over a hundred thousand jobs lost in the last year, year and a half since this government has been elected, and of course that doesn't include the contractors that are either unemployed or underemployed that won't show up in those numbers. So it is good to see that this government is taking one small step forward in attempting to create some jobs.

These are nonrefundable tax credits. They're not grants or loans or loan guarantees, so that's good to see, that it's very specific as far as what they are. Now, they've listed the different industries that they want to see this go towards, and there's probably some debate on maybe having more businesses covered under this, though it is good to see that they haven't picked specific companies. I think that part is good. We don't want to see government picking particular companies that they want to take care of with any kind of tax incentives or anything like that. It's good that they've opened it up to industries in general, but again we probably would like to discuss at some point: why not more industries?

Now, some of this may help as far as tourism. Of course, tourism is important in Alberta. It obviously creates jobs. I think we had the minister of tourism talking some months ago about the U.S. dollar, how the U.S. dollar rising increases tourism here in Alberta because, of course, people from outside the country, from the U.S. in particular, obviously, can come into our country, come into Alberta, and their dollar buys more because their dollar has a higher value. Now, when you talk about a carbon tax and how it actually increases the price of everything, that actually has a negative effect on tourism. If the U.S. dollar rising increases tourism, then it only stands to reason that if the U.S. dollar rising allows them to buy more when they're here, obviously adding a carbon tax on that increases the price of everything and would actually drive away tourism.

11:20

I've enjoyed the discussion here on the tax and levy, but what I'll do maybe is read the definition of a tax: "A compulsory contribution to state revenue, levied by the government on workers' income and business profits, or added to the cost of some goods, services, and transactions. That's right off Google. When I type in "tax definition" on my iPhone, it's the first definition that comes up. Imagine that.

Mr. Panda: Oh, you'll have to look at that through the lens of the NDP world view.

Mr. Loewen: Yeah.

Mr. Panda: You may read it differently.

Mr. Loewen: It also says that it's "a strain or heavy demand." I would think Albertans agree that it is a strain and a heavy demand. It's a burden, a load, a weight, a demand, a strain, pressure, stress, imposition. All right here.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I wonder if you could get all those words into a standing order that we could use for the future.

Mr. Loewen: We could work on that.

Now, when I go to "levy," the first line here says: "Impose (a tax, fee, or fine) 'a new tax could be levied on industry to pay for cleaning up contaminated land'." This was an example they used. Right off the top, "Impose a tax, fee, or fine," is the definition of "levy." I know that the government likes to talk about levy or tax, and they say: it's not a tax; it's a levy. I mean, I think we're pretty clear on what it is, and I know Albertans are really clear on what it is.

Getting back to Bill 30, after all this time and this government bringing forward multiple bills with no economic analysis, I would hope that this one has an economic analysis. If it is, in fact, there, where is it? Can we see it? Is that possible, an economic analysis on something to deal with money and the economy?

It's unfortunate that this program is only going to target certain sectors. Again, we'd like to see why it wasn't broadened to include more sectors of the economy.

Another thing we're unsure of: is it first-come, first-served, or does the minister pick which companies come up? That's not really clear. It would be nice to see how that works. I'm not sure how that works. Hopefully, the minister can clarify that for us.

Now, it does seem like there's a lot of ministerial interference in this as far as the minister making a lot of different decisions. Is it just oversight, or is this actual interference? I think that's a fair question that it would be great to hear the answer to.

Now, one thing we do know is that a fair, low tax across the board would be the best for the economy. Is that something all businesses could benefit from? It would be across the board. It would be a sustainable strategy. It would be something that businesses could rely on.

There does seem to be a fair amount of red tape for these venture capital corporations. They have to go through this process, of course: registration, ministerial approval to change the share structure, ministerial approval to raise capital, and then the minister may impose conditions on that. Also, the minister can direct how many employees and wages as conditions before an investment in a business is permitted. Now, if that is, in fact, true, which is what it appears to be, then I think it restricts businesses in their ability to operate in a profitable manner so that they can create jobs and work in this economy.

Now, it does say – we're not sure why – that venture capital corporations can't have a controlling stake in the small business. Maybe there's a good reason for that. I'm not sure. But it would be good to hear what the minister has to say on that.

What happens if the business becomes ineligible for the tax credit? Must they divest? How does that work at that point? I'm not sure if that's clearly spelled out in the bill. It'd be good to see that, too.

One thing that's certain, Madam Speaker, is that this program, this bill, won't undo all of the uncertainty that investors have in investing in Alberta. Right now these corporations and individuals that have large enough amounts of money to invest in our economy, to create jobs – they don't want to invest in a jurisdiction where there's this kind of uncertainty. We have a government that comes in, starts raising taxes, starts changing rules, starts trying to rip up contracts, and all these different things that don't provide stability for our economy.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Madam Speaker, there are still a lot of questions. Again, it's good to see that the government is doing something with, you know, an attempt here to create some jobs and to get some investment in Alberta. But, again, unless they can prove to companies and individuals around the world that have that money to invest, to create the number of jobs – we're looking at over a hundred thousand jobs, again, not including the contractors that are underemployed or unemployed. That's a lot to make up with a small program like this.

The investors need to have confidence. They need to know that this government isn't going to change the rules in the middle, that they're not going to rip up contracts. I don't believe this government has been showing that. These investor tax credits will work best when government has a hands-off approach. As long as the government is still meddling and still interfering, we risk losing even more investment. It's better when the private investors make the decisions on where to put their money. That's what's best. That way they can decide on their risk level.

Madam Speaker, like I say, it's good to see a start here. This might be the start of, you know, job one created by this government. It would be good to have some of these questions and concerns answered. Again, it would be great to see this government kind of change the feeling in the investment community so that they can come back to Alberta, invest, have the confidence, and create the jobs that Albertans need.

Thank you.

11:30

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for questions or comments.

Seeing none, the next speaker I have on my list is Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, our province is facing a jobs and economic crisis. We've said that over and over again. Every Albertan in this province recognizes that we have some very serious challenges as a province. Anyone who has been in this province for 40 to 50 to 60 years – we've kind of been here before in the past, but this time it is different. It's very different.

It's interesting that we have this bill before the House. I find it a little bit ironic that even the title of this bill, Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act – given that this government is single-handedly responsible for so much divestment in this province, I find it ironic that they are now trying to attract investment to this province, but they're trying to attract that investment without going back and undoing the very things that have caused the divestment in the first place. I find that rather ironic.

Recessions do not cause divestment. They don't. If the low price of oil was, in fact, the reason for divestment, then our neighbour Brad Wall would have nothing to brag about, but in fact he has a great deal to brag about. He's facing the very same kind of price of oil that we are, yet Saskatchewan's economy is rocking 'n' rolling. Yet this government continues to bury its head in a dark place and look at the price of oil and say: well, that must be the reason why everything is falling apart here. Well, this province has had low oil prices in the past. We've experienced these kinds of things before. But if you look also at our history, you will find government intervention, governments doing what governments should not be doing, as the single biggest factor in divestment. So now we have this government attempting to put a Band-Aid on a hemorrhage. It is a Band-Aid on a hemorrhage.

We have this Bill 30, the Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. Well, I have a news flash. You know, Alberta's economy has been diversifying for years and years and years. Take a look at our agricultural sector: innovation from start to finish. Take a look at oil and gas resource development: innovation all over the place, diversification. We even have somewhat of a tech industry in this province. All over the place we have diversification. Believe it or not, Alberta was going down the renewable technology road before the NDP learned how to spell "renewables." We were actually on that route, and we had thousands and thousands of installations of renewable and alternative energy technologies throughout this province long before the NDP dreamed up the climate action plan. Albertans are an innovative people. Albertans are always looking for diversification.

Albertans, by our very DNA, look for opportunities. That is the reason why we have the Alberta that we have today, because people from all over the world came to this province because there were opportunities. The reason that we had those opportunities is because in the history of our province, going all the way back to 1905, what you see is Albertans seeing what we've got for resources: how can we optimally use those resources for the betterment of our families, for the betterment of our children, for the betterment of our communities? Governments of the day tried their best to create a climate where those opportunities could be realized, and that took investment. It took all kinds of investment from outside and from within this province.

But now we have a government that seems to think that without the government doing something, nothing happens, that the wheels just won't turn. The reality is this, Madam Speaker. Economic wheels, the economic wheels of our economic engine, turn without the government's intervention. What stops the wheels turning is government intervention because the people of Alberta are people who recognize opportunities and will capitalize on those opportunities and make the wheels turn if the government would kindly get out of the way. But we have a government in place today that has an ideology that somehow – the private sector is almost being vilified all over this place, and profit is just a four-letter word. Yet profits support our charities, profits provide jobs, and profits fuel all kinds of things in our society and amongst our people. Profit is a good thing. It pays everyone's wages, and it pays taxes.

But this government looks at companies and the men and women that own those businesses as some kind of golden goose: we're just going to squeeze that old goose as hard as we can and somehow get more golden eggs out of that goose. Well, guess what? Eventually, if you keep squeezing the goose, you squeeze the life out of it, and that's what we have happening in this province right now. So along comes Dr. Government with a pill called Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, because they've killed diversification, because they've killed investment in this province, and now, realizing it, they come up with a little Band-Aid to cover the hemorrhage. That's really all this thing is. It is a Band-Aid on a $40 billion to $50 billion hemorrhage out of this province.

It didn't have to go very far. That investment, a lot of it, found a friend next door in Regina. Remember that they're getting the same price for oil that we are getting. I know that in the magnificent riding of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake we have a lot of Sylvan Lakers that are working now in Saskatchewan. They're still living in Sylvan Lake, thank God, but they are actually working in Saskatchewan because there's nothing here. Some of them are working for the very same companies because those companies found a friend. They found a friend in Regina that understood business, understood basic economics, and created a climate that we once had. We had it, and this government within just a few months totally kicked the legs out from under our economy.

On the 22nd of October, 2015, we had a new Minister of Economic Development and Trade. He was given a whack of money, taxpayers' money, in a budget, millions and millions of dollars. Well, months go by; months go by. We're waiting for the big jobs announcement. Nothing. It's amusing over here. We go: you know, one job – one job – was created. Then we came to another budget cycle, and lo and behold, not having created any jobs, the government's solution was: well, let's give that minister way more money. Somehow throwing money at that is going to create more jobs. Well, news flash: if you've got someone in a position of authority that doesn't know how to create one job with $100 million, giving that person $200 million isn't going to automatically result in more jobs being created.

An Hon. Member: Two jobs.

Mr. MacIntyre: Maybe two.

Money is not the problem. The problem is a government that is so antibusiness in their ideology that it seems like every week that goes by, they're hitting one sector or another with something that is chasing away investment or taxing that which does happen. So they tax it and tax it till it stops moving, subsidize it to get it moving again. This is the socialist mantra, and it's harming this province.

Yes, we have a jobs and economic crisis all right, and, yes, there are steps that this government needs to take, and those steps actually need to be in reverse. That's where those steps need to be. They need to back up, and they need to realize the harm that's being done. You know, you cannot solve a problem until you recognize the cause of the problem, and until this government owns that their ideologies and a bunch of their policies are aggravating an already bad situation, until they own that, they're not going to fix the problem. Band-Aids like this aren't going to solve that problem.

We've got a Minister of Economic Development and Trade that's been in the saddle since the 22nd of October, 2015, and how much actual diversification has happened? What's the return on the investment that's been placed in that minister's hands? It's not looking good. It's not looking good at all.

Now I want to talk just a little bit about venture capital and red tape. You know, in creating a business-friendly environment, one of the things that a government can do is reduce the kind of overbearing regulatory measures – we call it red tape – that are in the way of those economic wheels that I talked about earlier. There are different jurisdictions around the world that have red tape reduction strategies where if a new regulation comes in, they have to get rid of one, so when you've got one more piece of red tape, there's another piece of red tape that's got to be done away with. They do that because they recognize that red tape is a hindrance to economic activity. Some attempts were made in this Legislature from this side to put in place some kind of red tape reduction, and of course this government voted it down.

I just wanted to talk briefly about venture capital. There is a part of this particular bill dealing with venture capital companies. They, as I understand it, cannot have a controlling stake in a small business. Well, I've been involved in some venture capital projects overseas, and, you know, we didn't have a problem giving a controlling interest to the venture capital company that was investing millions and millions of their money in our business. It's a situation where the venture capital company will come in, they'll take an interest in the company, and they'll invest money in the company.

But they have usually a short-term exit strategy where they will be in an ownership position in that company for three years, five years, seven years and then they want to back out, because the business model for most venture capital companies is that they're not interested in owning a whole bunch of companies and running those companies; they are in the business of renting money. They will rent your business that money for a fixed period of time, and then they want to come out and take their money and profit with them and go do it somewhere else again. This is their business model.

So I don't understand the rationale saying that VCs can't have a controlling stake in a small business. Like, I just don't understand that. Is it that the government doesn't understand venture capital as a sector, as a business model? I expect that that is probably the reason. But from a small-business person or even a larger business person's perspective, we don't have a problem giving a controlling interest to a VC because there is this window of opportunity here: we need their money; we need their investment.

Often venture capital companies bring more than just money. Most of them, the ones that are really successful, have a team, and when they invest in a small company, like they were doing for the company I was a part of overseas, they brought with them some expertise that we didn't have in-house. So along with the money came this wealth of knowledge and connections that were extremely valuable, and it was more than worth giving controlling interest on a temporary basis to this VC.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments for the previous speaker under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to just thank the member for his comments. I found it very interesting to follow his speech. As always, the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake has a lot to say on this important matter.

I found it most interesting as he was discussing how this bill does not go far enough, particularly not far enough to deal with the damage that we've already seen in our province because of some of the actions that the current government has taken; for example, the carbon tax, something, I know, that we hear a lot about as we travel around – I know all members of this House are hearing concerns about that – as well as tax increases that we've seen on businesses and individuals since this government started; a dramatic minimum wage increase, which I know is, like, one of the number one things I hear about back in my constituency, deep concerns about the impact that that's having on small businesses in our communities and on youth unemployment now because of the actions of this government; as well as shutting down coal. So is this bill going to go far enough, Madam Speaker, to deal with the coal shutdown that is being brought forward by this ideological government that's seeing communities like Hanna completely wiped out?

I know, Madam Speaker, that you know that over the last week at the AAMD and C this government was probably the first government in history to be booed like that at an AAMD and C conference. That shows how concerned people are with the damage that's going to happen to certain communities in rural Alberta, in particular in regard to the coal shutdown. I'd like to hear from the member if this bill goes far enough to address that as well as, of course, the record deficits and borrowing that is coming from this ideological government, the borrowing against my kids' future and my grandchildren's future, something that I know I hear often about from my constituents, a deep concern about the long-term impact that that's going to have on Alberta. Will this bill go far enough to deal with that? I'd like to hear from the hon. member on that. As well, of course, we do know that well over a hundred thousand people have lost their jobs since this government took power, not to mention all the contractors that are out of work. The number gets really, really high as we start to look at the unemployment across our province. This bill: does it take care of that?

The last thing, Madam Speaker, I would like to hear from the hon. member on is the fact that this minister has brought forward stuff before, in the past, that they've had to scrap because it was completely ineffective. Do we see any evidence in what has been brought forward by the government now to show that this will be effective this time, like economic analysis, those types of things, or is this just more of the same empty promises for Albertans?

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, you wish to respond?

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you. Thank you to the hon. Member for Rimby-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. There are a number of things that were brought up there, and I'll just quickly go through them if I may. This business of levy and tax: one of the things we heard from the councillors who attended the AAMD and C just a few days ago was their disappointment at how this carbon tax is impacting them. They consider it to be a tax on a tax, as do some of the school boards, because, as we all know, school boards and counties and municipalities get their funding from taxation, and now this government is carbon taxing a tax. It just seemed to them to be absolutely ridiculous that the government would look at tax revenue as a source of a tax grab. It's just absolutely ridiculous to them. It is a tax. You can try to butter it up and call it a levy all you want. It's a tax.

Just to briefly touch on what government can do differently regarding the shutting down of coal, right after this government took office, there was an immediate move to vilify the coal industry. It was immediate, within weeks. We saw a dramatic increase in the carbon tax under SGER, and coal never had a hope. It didn't matter. I asked the Minister of Energy, I asked the minister of the environment, and I think I may have even asked the Premier: if clean coal technologies are available, would you allow, then, for us to continue with coal? The answer was clearly no, which is odd because here's something that could be diversifying our economy.

11:50

In diversification, effective diversification, you take the strengths that you've got and you build on those strengths. We had a very vibrant coal-fired electrical generation sector, that was providing inexpensive baseload right across this province, and cheap electricity means competitiveness in the marketplace. But instead of saying, "Okay; what can we do to make that better?" that's not the approach the government took. Instead, this government is going to put thousands and thousands out of work.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. In honour of the ceremony that we are having today, I would ask for consent of the House to adjourn till 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:51 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 22, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a former member of the Alberta Real Estate Association it is indeed my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 68 members from the Alberta Real Estate Association. The association represents the interests of more than 10,000 realtors from across Alberta. They're here to attend question period and will be hosting an MLA reception later tonight at the Matrix Hotel. Please join me in welcoming the association and let them receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you, and welcome. I understand that there may even be a member here from the republic of Medicine Hat.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. The first is a school group. I don't think that they have joined us yet, but there are 38 folks in total with us today. They are visiting from the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. It is the Prairie Christian Academy. They are led by their teacher, Michael Robertson, who is a significant volunteer for the TUXIS youth parliament as well. I'd ask that if they are here, they would rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other school groups today? The hon. member.

Mr. Dach: Thank you once again, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure indeed to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three classes of students from the marvellous constituency of Edmonton-McClung, joined by teachers Danielle Flook, Bob Shulko, and Paola O'Connor as well as parent helpers Amel El Sayah and Nina Gerhardt. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Jabbour: Mr. Speaker, on your behalf I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly four guests visiting the Legislature today in recognition of the eighth anniversary of the Ukrainian Famine and Genocide (Holodomor) Memorial Day Act. They are seated in your gallery: Slavka Shulakewych, the provincial co-ordinator of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress, Alberta Provincial Council; Yarema Shulakewych; Natalia Talanchuk, a survivor of Holodomor; and Orysia Talanchuk, Mrs. Talanchuk's daughter. I'd also like to extend a warm welcome to all those present who attended today's Holodomor ceremony. Our guests have risen, and I'd ask that they all receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this House members of the board of family and community support services, aka FCSS. FCSS President Arnold Hanson is also a councillor from Beaver county and a cow-calf producer. He's also joined by Vice-president Vicki Van Vliet Vaitkunas, Cathy Needham, Janet Wilkinson, and Executive Director Deb Teed. FCSS programs have been leaders in addressing local needs and working collaboratively to create conditions that foster social well-being in 319 municipalities and Métis settlements across the province. They've recently celebrated their 50th anniversary. I thank these members of the FCSS board for their ongoing contribution to Alberta and Albertans, and I ask them to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome. I know it's hard to believe in my young life that I would have had that much experience, but I'm proud to say that it was that program that kept me in Alberta for such a long time. Some would say that wasn't good.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my hon. colleague from St. Albert I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you honoured guests from Concordia University's business and government course: Dr. Alison Yacyshyn, chair of the Concordia school of management, and Mr. Liam Connelly, adjunct professor. Also in attendance are Concordia students Emily Robbins, Brandon Vollweiter, Sami Ayyaz, Breanna Grolway, Melyssa Barakat, Emma Neufeld, Alexander Roihjert, and Theodore Krein. Please join me in welcoming them and let them receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you three hard-working people I know very well from Cypress-Medicine Hat and from Medicine Hat. Not only do they help families find homes and build communities, but they spend considerable time making the real estate profession better for all, including the general public. I know this first-hand because I had the pleasure and the privilege of working with all three of them at great length in my last career. First, I'd like to ask Tim Seitz to rise, the president of the Medicine Hat Real Estate Board. Then I'd like to ask Jeff Lanigan to rise, the political action representative for the Medicine Hat Real Estate Board. Then, third, I'd like to ask Randeon Bray to rise, the executive officer of the Medicine Hat Real Estate Board. Please accept the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you Trevor Buttery and Sara Sarbar. Trevor is a practicum student from MacEwan University in the social work program. He's in his first year and has been an outstanding addition to our team. Sara Sarbar is a new part-time constituency assistant in my office. Her sense of humour, inquiring mind, and meaningful service of constituents are invaluable. Thank you so much to both of you for joining our team. I appreciate all of your hard work. I'd ask that you now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise and introduce to you and through you Amber Stewart. Amber is the Calgary board of education trustee for wards 12 and 14. She is the dedicated wife of Alan Stewart and the mother of three beautiful children: Isabelle, Kyla, and Kendra. Amber has been an excellent advocate for Calgary-South East families. She is a good friend, and I'm honoured to represent her as her MLA. If I could ask Amber to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

1:40

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House Andre Tinio. Andre is a fourth-year student at the University of Calgary, and he has a bachelor's degree in arts, majoring in sociology and minoring of music from the University of Alberta already. Andre is presently completing his bachelor of social work degree. He is carrying out his field placement in the Edmonton-Riverview constituency office and will be there until the end of December, or maybe it's the beginning of December, actually. I just want to thank him so much for his energy and enthusiasm. We have appreciated his contributions so greatly. Andre is seated in the members' gallery. I ask him to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce Mr. Emery Pritchard, who is my constituent. He is also chief information officer with Drift Production Services Ltd. During times of fire and flood Mr. Pritchard's company stands at the ready with heavy equipment and manpower to assist Albertans at the call of AEMA. Mr. Pritchard is Métis and has assisted me greatly with my annual food bank drive in Calgary-Foothills. With Emery is Curt Gossenberger, emergency operations co-ordinator for R&R Rentals of Red Deer. Both of them are here today attending the Alberta Emergency Management Agency conference in Edmonton. I ask both of them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome from all of my colleagues here.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly one of my best friends, Mr. Sanjit Singh. He is the president of the Appraisal Institute of Canada, Alberta's chapter, and he owns one of the realty appraising firms in Calgary. I'm proud to call him one of my best friends, and I cherish his friendship a lot. I now would like him to rise and receive the traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you a young lady who contacted me just last week by the name of Jorja Fisher. Jorja is a grade 6 student at Senator Patrick Burns school in Calgary. She's doing a project called "taking action." In this project they need to research a concern that they are worried about and then try to help fix that concern. Her concern is the Alberta economy and getting pipelines to tidewater. She is here today to watch question period and see how she can be part of taking action. I invite her to rise. She's joined by her mother and father, Joe and Chelsey Fisher, and her grandfather Gary Frost.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other visitors today?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I have two more constituents. Mr. Sanjit Singh is also my constituent. I also have Robyn Moser, who is a realtor and long-time member of RECA. She is on the council. I ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Any more visitors? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin by congratulating you on your most excellent new mo.

I want to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly Mr. Brian Reinboldt. He is a realtor with Royal LePage, from the most conservative constituency of Strathmore-Brooks. He is here with his colleagues from the area today. I ask that my colleagues would give him the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Harassment and Women in Politics

Ms Jansen: "What a traitorous bitch." "You both are a disgrace to Alberta, lying bitches." "Now you have two blonde bimbos in that party that are clueless." "Another useless tit goes NDP." "Dead meat." "Sandra should stay in the kitchen where she belongs." "Fly with the crows [and] get shot." "Dumb broad. A good place for her to be is with the rest of the queers."

Mr. Speaker, today I rise to make a simple request of my colleagues. To all of the honourable colleagues in this House: if you are stunned by the words you have heard in the last few days, if you reject the inherent violence behind them and you know that harassment and abuse, even if it's verbal, even if it's online, and even if it's directed at a political opponent is poison, let us be strong and clear in our resolve that no matter where we sit along political lines, we stand together against this. In our words, in our actions every day from all sides if we don't feed it, we must oppose it. Please oppose it. Don't ignore it. Don't look the other way. Don't excuse it. Our daughters are watching us. They are watching the challenges facing women in politics today. Imagine if we let that poison become normalized or if our daughters forgo the political arena altogether. That scares me.

I am so proud to have joined a pragmatic, centrist government which has a place for moderate women. Together we will fight for women. We will fight against this language of harassment and violence, and I hope everyone in this House fights it, too.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Deaths of Children in Care

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Wildrose called on this Legislature to undertake an emergency debate on children who are dying in care. This debate was prompted by the recent Child and Youth Advocate's report on the case of Serenity, a four-year-old girl who was starved, beaten, sexually assaulted, and suffering from hypothermia when she died from a brain injury in September 2014. This was the opportunity for the government to outline the actions that they have taken to address this problem and also to detail what their next steps forward will be. Unfortunately, this is not what happened.

I was especially disappointed when the minister of indigenous affairs blamed provincial opposition parties for failing to acquire adequate federal funding on reserves and then insisted this problem could be addressed by throwing more money at a broken system. This is not acceptable, and Alberta's children expect and deserve more.

The people of Alberta are looking for leadership in a system that has failed to make badly needed changes, where kids are dying. We need someone to stop passing the buck and to ensure that children's safety is a priority for this government. Kinship care, foster care, and the child welfare system as a whole need action now.

The advocate's report clearly states that there are systemic problems, which government can no longer ignore. For instance, the home study program relies heavily on self-reporting by the applicants, and there is no requirement to attend training or counselling. Here is just one area the minister can take action on immediately. It is time for this NDP government to stop paying lip service on the recommendations and start taking action.

No one is directly blaming this government for causing harm to children, but we are asking for accountability. There have been 15 deaths and several recommendations which have been accepted by this government. It is time for results. Let's honour past victims, prevent future atrocities because that's what we as MLAs are here to do.

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's just been brought to my attention that the – I will address this issue at a future time in the agenda.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Coal-fired Electric Power Plant Retirement

Mr. Jean: There used to be a time when the NDP cared about the working men and women across this province, but now they are more worried about winning the approval from a group of elites and bureaucrats in Ottawa. It's been over a year since this Premier announced that 10,000 coal jobs will be destroyed in this province but still has shown no long-term plan for the people who will be losing work. This government promised a report from their $600,000 man, Terry Boston, on how they'll shut down coal in Alberta. When can Albertans expect to see that report?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe Albertans can expect to see that report on Thursday.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you. The NDP has found time to fly to Paris, to Morocco, but they haven't found time to visit communities like Hanna and Parkland county. They haven't taken the time to look in the faces of the people who are now losing hope because this government does not have their backs. I can understand the Premier's hesitation given that whenever the NDP stands in front of rural communities they get booed, but will the Premier commit to personally attending public meetings in towns like Hanna, Grande Cache, and Forestburg to see the damage her policies are having on people's lives? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member opposite knows, our government has appointed a panel to look into the matter of how we can orchestrate a just transition, a fair transition as the province moves off coal at an accelerated level beginning in 2030. That panel has been established. It has begun its work, and it will be travelling to all those communities very early in the new year.

Mr. Jean: That must be a no, Mr. Speaker.

Ontario's Energy minister is warning about the dangers of taking coal offline. A shutdown of our coal sector will either mean massive rate increases for consumers or higher tax increases to subsidize industry. The NDP admitted as much today by putting a cap that's twice the size of the current regulated rate. They're trying to control future rate increases after scaring away all the investment from Alberta. It shows no one in this government understands basic economics. Why are we not fighting Ottawa to protect coal jobs that can help keep Albertans' power bills low?

Ms Notley: Oh, Mr. Speaker, there is so much failure to understand that is embedded in that question. It's really hard to pick which place to start, but let me say that one of the things that is causing volatility in our market is the fact that under the previous federal government, of which the member opposite was a part, 60 per cent of our coal was going to come offline anyway. Interestingly, when we took over government, we discovered that there was no plan to replace that coal or the generation of it, so there's a great deal of work that has to be done to correct a broken system, and in the course of doing that, we are going to make sure that the fundamental principle is that consumers be . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Second main question.

Energy Industry Competitiveness

Mr. Jean: Albertans are hurting a lot right now, and the NDP government is not helping at all. Today the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors announced that 2016 has been one of the worst years on record for the industry, and 2017 won't be much better. Wells drilled are actually expected to be 58 per cent lower than in 2014. The industry is saying loud and clear that a carbon tax will make it more difficult for this industry to succeed, especially when the United States, our biggest competitor, won't have one. Why is the Premier then committed to a policy that makes things worse for drillers all across Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think that it is important to remember that the period of time that the member is comparing to is when the price of oil was twice what it is right now, so I think that might have something to do with the drop, but that being said, it is absolutely critically important that this province and this industry reposition itself as the modern, progressive industry that it is, that can compete on an international basis, understanding that we have accepted and acted on the issues of climate change but can still balance a good, responsible oil and gas development and economy as a result.

Mr. Jean: Well, there was some good news for one western province in today's report. It said that Saskatchewan is leading any recovery in the sector. It's the same forecast put out by the Petroleum Services Association of Canada last month, who predicted that Saskatchewan will have more wells drilled than Alberta. These are jobs that should be going to men and women who are out of work in Alberta right now, but NDP policies, these policies of this government, are pushing them away. How can the Premier excuse Alberta's energy sector falling behind Saskatchewan's?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I think the member opposite is playing fast and loose with little phrases from the reports because, in fact, there is over five times the investment in oil and gas in Alberta relative to Saskatchewan, and there is more investment in oil and gas in Alberta than the rest of the country combined. But – you know what? – the other thing that's really interesting is that in Alberta after the climate levy is imposed, we will still have a $7.5 billion advantage over our neighbours to the east.

Mr. Jean: Here's some advice for this government from the head of CAODC, Mark Scholz. "To achieve a healthy oil and gas industry, governments must . . . consider the cumulative costs of doing business in Canada versus other global jurisdictions." It's good advice, especially when we know our biggest competitor, the United States, won't have a carbon tax. But the NDP continues to ignore this advice. A carbon tax and an antienergy agenda will only hurt Albertans already in need of so much help. Why does the Premier insist on making things so much worse for all Albertans?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that this province and our industry needs to be able to diversify its markets from not just being reliant on our neighbours to the south. They've gone from being our biggest customers to being our biggest competitors. One of the ways to do that is to fix the reputation, which, unfortunately, under the previous government, has not been particularly helpful to energy industry leaders here in Alberta. So we have done that, and we have done that with the support of many leaders in the energy industry, and we will continue to reposition our economy as the modern, progressive economy that we are.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Third main question.

Investigations of Deaths of Children in Care

Mr. Jean: We now know that almost two years after Serenity died, her autopsy report was finally completed. A Justice spokesman said that the delay was because the case was highly complex. I agree. The death of a four-year-old in care who was physically and sexually abused and suffered severe head trauma is complex, but it also deserves more than a postponed report that may never come to light without media pressure and that won't be released publicly. What assurances can the Premier give that the secrecy surrounding Serenity's death isn't the default of this government?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the question by the member opposite because we're all very, very concerned and troubled by all the facts, and I appreciate the effort that everyone put into debating and discussing this yesterday in the House. The fact of the matter is that the children's advocate typically has the information and publishes most of the information. That's as a result of actions from people on this side of the House. But on top of that, in this particular case we will await the request and the direction of the RCMP with respect to the release of further information because we do not in any way want to compromise the work that they're doing.

Mr. Jean: The safety of children in care must be this government's top priority, but that doesn't seem to be how it works. Serenity died in September 2014. It is obvious that a crime has been committed. An autopsy was performed shortly after, within a year for certain, but somehow it takes two years for the autopsy report to be completed and sent to the police. Has this case been investigated in the last two years? We don't know. Has any progress been made? We don't know. Will the Premier commit to finding out why the horrific death of this little girl wasn't a priority for the various parts of her government?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite is correct in that the final report was not completed until much later because of the complexities that he alludes to. But he should also know that the medical examiner was in touch with the RCMP with respect to preliminary findings within days of receiving the information and has been in touch with them throughout. In terms of the progress of the investigation, that is a matter for the police to deal with independently from those of us in this House.

Mr. Jean: Serenity's death is obviously not a partisan or political issue. This is about finding justice for Serenity, fixing a broken system, and making sure that what happened to her never happens again. What we need are solutions, and so far we haven't seen any at all. The Human Services minister said last week that he accepted the child advocate's recommendations, but we need more than that. Will the Premier be accountable and commit to making public the detailed changes that have been made to the system because of what it learned from Serenity's tragic death?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, we absolutely will do that. There are reviews under way internally, and as that information is completed, that would become public as a matter of course. In addition, it's important to understand that work has already begun within the ministry. It began after this horrible, tragic event. It began well before our government was elected to ensure that some of the problems that were identified are improved upon. But it doesn't mean that it's all better. It doesn't mean that there isn't still work to do. It doesn't mean that front-line workers aren't working as hard as they possibly can with these tragic events over and over and over again. It does mean that we all have to come up with ways in which we can support the work that they do.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Electric Power Prices

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. This NDP government's all-out war on Alberta business continues. Today the Premier declared profit a dirty word by limiting the price on electricity. The Premier seems unaware that today's low prices are the result of competition and that an artificial price cap will limit investment and, by extension, limit that competition. Combined with the carbon tax costs, this will surely make Alberta the worst place in Canada to generate power. To the Premier: why are you doing everything in your power to run these companies, many of which are owned by taxpayers, out of business?

Ms Notley: Well, I think, first of all, Mr. Speaker, it's clear to me that the member opposite doesn't understand the announcement that we made today. We are not doing anything to interfere with individual businesses, with people that provide these services within the market to consumers. What we are doing as the government, though, is capping the degree to which families have to pay volatile energy prices because of the folks over there thinking that every family wants to be a spot trader expert. That is not what Alberta families want. They want consistency, predictability, and affordability in their utilities, and that is what our government will deliver.

Mr. McIver: Alberta's electricity customers have had reliability and good prices until this government messed it up. The government set a hard cap at 6.8 cents, which is about twice as high as what Albertans are paying now. Thanks for all the help. You know what? They wouldn't have put a cap on if they didn't believe their policies were going to drive prices even higher. Did the government do an impact assessment before making these dangerous moves, how much are prices going to skyrocket, and when will you share the information with Albertans? Or were you just guessing?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, there's so much in there that it's really hard to sort of figure out which part that is incorrect to focus on. In any event, what we are doing is providing certainty for consumers. This in no way impacts what generators or providers would get for the energy that they produce.

Let me just say that it is outrageous that the member opposite would say that their system provided stability in volatility. In 2012 it went up to 15 cents, a $70-a-month shift in their bill in one month.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Premier recently apologized for causing high electricity prices, and our Premier is going down a similar path. Alberta power generation companies are going to be bleeding profits from the carbon tax and the shutdown of coal generation. You're further knee-capping these companies by dictating how much they can charge. Premier, are you attempting to beat these companies into submission so you can reregulate them to conform to NDP ideology, like Ontario has done and then apologized for?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that in Ontario there was an acknowledgement that they kind of lost focus on who the most important player in all this was, which were the citizens and the consumers and the customers. That's exactly where our focus is. Unlike the folks over there, we start by making sure that people have reliable, predictable, affordable utility prices because that's what families in Alberta need.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Foster and Kinship Care Supports

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the wake of the tragic death of Serenity, Albertans are looking for answers. They want to know why she was left in the care of people who starved and assaulted her to the point of death, they want to know who will be held accountable and when, and most of all they want to know that it won't happen again. One of the problems highlighted by the Child and Youth Advocate is the lack of support for foster parents, especially in kinship care. To the Minister of Human Services: without changing the topic and telling us that some other party would do something different, why did your government cut funding for foster care support by $3.5 million? Your government.

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. First, I would say that we didn't cut funding for Human Services. We increased funding for Human Services, stabilized funding. Secondly, in terms of foster care and kinship care we accepted the recommendations that came out of the specific review. We have accepted every single recommendation. We are tracking progress, which is available on the Human Services website, what actions have been taken.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. More than anything else, Albertans want to know that this is not going to happen again. After cutting the foster care budget, you did make an increase. You increased the intervention budget by $25 million. Well, no wonder. If support and training isn't there, intervention is going to be needed. To the minister again: why are you short-changing prevention and only funding intervention after the damage is done?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Since 2012 there is a new practice framework. There was the signs of safety program approach. That helped us reduce the caseload; hence, the caseload in foster care and kinship care. Services were diverted more to family reunification and strengthening of families; hence, those adjustments between those budget lines. Overall, the budget for child intervention was increased by $37 million. So that is wrong, that we cut anything from Human Services.

Mr. Clark: It's right there in the budget, Mr. Speaker: $3.5 million down for foster care supports.

One of the most troubling aspects is the fact that there was little or no oversight from Alberta's child welfare system after Serenity was placed in kinship care. This was in spite of repeated requests from her mother that the government investigate the mistreatment of Serenity and her siblings. Albertans want to know why this happened, who is responsible, and, most of all, that it won't happen again. Again to the minister: has anyone within Human Services been held accountable, and what changes, if any, have been made inside your own department in the 18 months since you've become minister?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. A couple of things. This case has been looked into from two different angles. From a systemic review perspective the Child and Youth Advocate has reviewed it. We have accepted recommendations. These are systemic recommendations. We will act on those recommendations. And as the Premier mentioned, there is still an active investigation. Nobody here is an expert. The experts are dealing with that investigation, and in due course we will share the result of that investigation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

School Nutrition Program

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a teacher and an educational psychologist with many years of experience I know that students who are healthy and happy are better able to learn and acquire the skills they need to prepare them for their futures. To the Minister of Education: how will the 14 newly announced nutrition pilot programs impact schools this year?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed this is a very important question. Last week I had the pleasure of being a part of this very important announcement. We identified 14 school boards to participate in the pilot project, and they were given a grant to develop their own creative solutions to school nutrition in one or more schools. We know that students cannot focus on learning if they're hungry, so a program like this will help students across the province to reach their full learning potential.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I understand that schools were given flexibility in the first year of the program, to the same minister: did this approach lead to innovation and partnerships within the pilot programs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you very much for the question. Schools have adapted the program to best meet the needs of their students. Edmonton public, for example, used their partnership with E4C. [interjections] I think maybe the opposition should listen to us. It's actually very important to deal with this.

Calgary Catholic is using brown bags, kids' Meals on Wheels. Medicine Hat schools are using the greenhouses to teach children a seed-to-table science program – quite a number of different programs based on creativity and making sure that we have the best learning outcomes and nutrition outcomes in our schools.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we know that there's a great deal of need for a school nutrition program, to the same minister: will this program grow in the years ahead?

Mr. Eggen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, absolutely. This program has $3.5 million this year. It's a start. [interjections] Maybe the opposition thinks this is a funny thing, but it's a serious issue. I wish they would not be laughing while I'm doing this. Thank you very much.

We're growing the program next year, and then we'll grow it again within a couple of years. Each of the 87 school boards will have a school nutrition project.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Electricity Power Purchase Agreements

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We recently received a FOIP document that shows that government incompetence is costing Albertans millions. Enmax surrendered the Battle River PPA to the Balancing Pool, and the pool can keep the PPA and suffer a $245 million loss or pay $100 million and be done with it. Seven months have gone by, and most of the Balancing Pool directors have quit. We wonder: did the government interfere in this easy decision to save $145 million?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the important question. I have to agree that the previous government sold out Albertans over and over again by pretending to take risk and share it among both parties but transferring it all onto individual consumers. Today our government is stepping up, and we're taking real action to protect consumers, both personal and small industrial, because it's important that we get a fair rate for our electricity.

Mr. MacIntyre: Given that Albertans should be concerned that 4 out of 5 experts on the Balancing Pool board have abruptly resigned and given that the minister hasn't told us why, Albertans are asking: is it because of reckless, ill-informed, and damaging interference from the minister such as carelessly costing Albertans $145 million, or is it worse? Is it the systematic destruction of the independence of the Balancing Pool, now to be replaced by ideological decisions from a cabinet that doesn't understand the electricity system at all?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To be clear, there's been one resignation, the chair of the board, where no reason was given. There was one who chose not to run. In the meantime we have been recruiting for other people, and we will have someone in place before the end of the resignation date, which is November 30.

Mr. MacIntyre: We all know the damage the NDP's absurd decision to take Alberta-owned power companies to court is having on Alberta. Given that the mayor of Calgary called claims by the government that they are close to reaching a deal with Enmax completely false and seeing as Enmax has said it's false, too, why are the Premier and her government suggesting in public that they are close to reaching a deal? Are Enmax and Mayor Nenshi lying, or is it this government?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier. Please proceed.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Power companies in Alberta deserve to have a fair opportunity to make good profits, and that's certainly what we want to do, make sure that we've got a fair system moving forward. We've mentioned previously that we're happy to work with the companies that were trying to return these PPAs to develop a fair and reasonable system that will protect Albertans. No matter what, we're going to ensure that we have Albertans' backs. I wish anybody on the other side would attempt to do the same, other than you guys. You guys are my favourite.

The Speaker: Calgary-Greenway.

Energy Policies

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past week saw the gathering of many of Alberta's municipal officials for the meeting of the AAMD and C. The Deputy Premier was told that the carbon tax and the early phase-out of coal would be devastating for the community of Stettler county. When a concerned citizen asked for assistance from the provincial government in paying the ruinous costs of the carbon tax, the Deputy Premier laughed. Shame. To the Deputy Premier: do you find it amusing that your government's policies are threatening the very existence of some of our rural communities?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we have reached out to many of the communities that the hon. member is talking about from Hanna to Grande Cache. They have been reached out to by the minister of economic development, who is, of course, leading this transition conversation. You know, when we took over, there were 12 plants that were slated for decommissioning under the previous federal government's coal regulations, regulations that, of course, the Leader of the Official Opposition voted for, and we discovered, to our horror, that the previous government had no plan to engage the communities that were affected by those regulations.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government insists that they are listening to our rural communities and given that only 8 out of 18 ministers, less than half, actually bothered to show up to the AAMD and C – let me try it again. To the Deputy Premier again: if you are being honest about your government's commitment to actually listen to the valuable feedback from the communities hit hardest by your policy, why is it that so many ministers refused to actually show up and be accountable?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. The time that we have those conferences is periodically throughout the year, twice a year. During that very same time we had the minister of economic development with 80 Alberta-based companies over in Asia trying to sell Alberta businesses and get good access for our products. We also had ministers standing up and leading on climate change, speaking at international environmental conferences. We're going to do work on behalf of all Albertans. I'm proud to be one of the cabinet ministers who was there to answer questions, and I look forward to having more opportunities to engage with rural communities at AAMD and C or otherwise.

Mr. Gill: A sorry would have been nice.

Given that our municipal leaders are clearly losing faith in this government's willingness to listen to their concerns, as evidenced by the audible booing that accompanied the Deputy Premier's defending their ill-conceived carbon tax, and given that the province should be trying to maintain a respectful relationship with the municipalities, again to the Deputy Premier: will you try to get this government back to a place where your municipal officials can trust and believe it when you say that you're committed to listening and stop this punitive carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Noted.

Ms Phillips: Well, first of all, I will not be booed, Mr. Speaker, in the exercise of my work.

The Speaker: I think the booing phenomenon is not acceptable in this House, and I expect all members to listen to what I'm saying in that respect.

The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week, of course, was constituency week. I was scheduled to be out of the country. I am aware that many rural municipalities have questions about both the coal-fired phase-out and our climate leadership plan. So what I did is that I reached out to the AAMD and C, and we'll be scheduling a telephone town hall so that I can take those questions and we can have a fulsome discussion about the coal-fired phase-out and the supports that will be coming from this government, about the $2 billion worth of municipal infrastructure that's . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Protection of Children in Care

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the Child and Youth Advocate's report on the tragic death of four-year-old Serenity he details three systemic issues which have failed our children in care. In the kinship program potential caregivers self-report parenting skills or abilities, which, according to the advocate, does not lend to an objective evaluation of the applicant, obviously, putting children at risk of being in dangerous, unvetted homes. Will this minister immediately change subjective do-it-yourself evaluations to better serve our children in care?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Child death is a tragedy, and the report mentions that we have accepted that, and we will make the changes that are needed.

I just want to share with the House that there are 1,700 kids who are cared for in kinship homes, which are a bit different than other foster homes, more traditional, culturally appropriate homes. It doesn't mean that everything fails. They are providing an important service, and they need to be respected for that.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that the second systemic issue raised by the advocate is about conflicting direction about whether kinship care training is mandatory and given that this policy is meant to support caregivers on a wide range of supportive services to address maltreatment, abuse, trauma, grief, and loss, to the minister: during your 18 months in government how have you addressed the issue of mandatory training for those serving our children in care?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Safety of children is paramount, and when we place kids in foster homes or kinship homes, there are checks and balances. The advocate has recommended that kinship training be mandatory – there are two different trainings; one is mandatory – and we've accepted the recommendation. We will work with our kinship and foster parents to make sure that we provide them the supports they need and ensure that kids are safe when they are placed in kinship or foster homes.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, cutting the funding didn't help.

Given that in the advocate's report the third systemic issue raised was that there needs to be a prioritization of safety over all else and given that he also raises the concern that other factors such as a connection to family and culture may have been given precedence over safety, to the minister: explain how this policy serves our children in care.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. There is no thing which our department considers paramount over safety. Period. These recommendations are for systemic improvements, and a precondition to understanding these recommendations is that you read the system as a whole and see how these recommendations make sense. They are for systemic improvements. We've committed to that, we will implement that, and we will make improvements that are needed and necessary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Fuel Tax and Carbon Levy Revenue Utilization

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year the government increased fuel tax and raised almost $1.5 billion from the users of our highways, an additional $525 million, yet this government saw fit to cut the highway maintenance budget. Instead of dedicating the fuel tax revenue to highway maintenance, preservation, and rehabilitation, the fuel tax goes into the general revenue fund. To the Minister of Finance: with so much increased revenue collected from users of the highways, why did you cut highway maintenance some 14 per cent?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question. You know, this government, of course, is committed to making sure that safety of Albertans, whether on highways or off-road vehicles or indeed in kinship care, is paramount moving forward. We have directed a rather large amount of money through our capital investment plan, 15 per cent more than the previous government, to make sure that we are building for the future, we're prepared for the future, and at the same time we've got Albertans back to work. We have their back; they don't.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that the Environment minister's carbon tax will not be deposited into the general revenue fund and can only be used on climate change initiatives and is not available for highway maintenance and given that the Finance minister will raise the taxes on gasoline another 35 per cent with the implementation of a carbon tax, will the Finance minister commit to not funnel any more of the fuel tax away from much-needed highway maintenance?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. You know, what I'll commit to is making sure that we have the available funds necessary to address the programs and services Albertans want and need. What I won't commit to is making the cuts that this side wants to make on capital, on infrastructure, and putting people out of work. I won't commit to that. Maybe you will.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that carbon taxes will be funnelled into a green slush fund and given that publicly funded institutions such as health providers, school boards, and the like will be faced with either reducing services or coming to the province for increased funding from the general revenue fund, does the Finance minister recognize he is creating a higher operating deficit as he funnels general revenue funds into the Environment minister's green slush fund by forcing public-sector institutions to pay carbon taxes?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, here's what the Wildrose thinks is a slush fund: millions of dollars in new investments in indigenous communities so that indigenous communities can have energy self-sufficiency and economic development. Here's what they think is a slush fund: $2.2 billion over the next five years into municipal infrastructure, $650 million into energy efficiency programs so that homes and businesses can become more efficient. We can create good jobs while we do it. We know they don't want to take action on climate change, but they can't deny the jobs that are going to come to Albertans from these initiatives.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first step in attracting investment is building relationships on trust and respect, while significant capital only flows when investors are assured that risks do not outweigh rewards. Instead, this government has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars attacking the very companies they seek future investment from and, even more, suing these same companies for having the audacity to invoke the terms of a legal contract. To the Minister of Energy: do you honestly believe that litigation, smear campaigns, and retroactive legislation will build positive working relationships with electricity producers and investors?

Ms Hoffman: Well, it's another day and another member of the opposition standing up for corporations, against ordinary consumers, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that I am deeply troubled. I understand that these Enron clauses were negotiated in before that member was in government, but surely he knows that something wasn't right with those because Albertans do. Albertans deserve to have stable, affordable electricity, and our government is going to stand up for Albertans when it comes to that. I wish the other parties would actually stop and think about the people that they're refusing to protect because Albertans deserve a government that's got their back, and that's what they've got.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sadly, the proof will be in the pudding.

Given that this government has completely lost any credibility with power producers and given that this government is considering retroactive legislation in order to avoid contractual obligations, contrary to ethical business practices, and given that the president of the Calgary Chamber compared these actions to that of a banana republic, again to the minister: do you really think that business leaders in this province have any confidence in this government with your penchant for such Chiquita-style legislation?

The Speaker: Hon. members, just a word of caution. I mean, I've heard a few things said in here today. I heard the phrase "contrary to ethical guidelines." I just want to caution you, if I understood that correctly. Let us all be conscious of the fact where implications are made.

The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You want to talk about being ethical? How about when the government of the day sold deregulation as a way to transfer risk from the public to the private sector, and today they're asking us in this very House more than once to just take those risks that have been inserted eleventh hour into these negotiations of some sort and pass billions of dollars on to consumers. We're going to stand up for consumers. I know they want to pretend that everything they did was good, but I can tell you that that was not good.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Straight from the Karl Marx playbook.

Given that litigating against Alberta companies for simply following legal contracts flies in the face of accepted business practices and given that introducing heavy-handed retroactive legislation would further erode investor confidence and given that these actions will continue to negatively impact investment with respect to capital infrastructure and power generation, again to the minister: is your government on behalf of taxpayers preparing to finance much-needed capital projects in natural gas and renewable power generation in Alberta with an even deeper sea of red ink?

Ms Hoffman: Well, it looks like the banana is in the tailpipe, Mr. Speaker. If there's one thing you can count on from the opposition it's that they'll side with corporations to go up against Albertans any time they get a chance, and that's exactly what we're seeing yet again here today. Our government is going to do everything we can to stand up for consumers to make sure they get fair electricity prices, and that's the job of government.

The Speaker: I hadn't heard that one before.
The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

2:30 Consultation with Métis People

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is home to the largest Métis population in any province in the country, and many of our towns and cities, including St. Albert, were originally settled as Métis communities. Last week the Alberta government joined with Métis leaders and community members to celebrate the dynamic culture and traditions of Métis people in our province, but we all know that actions speak louder than words. To the Minister of Indigenous Relations: what action is the Alberta government taking to support the aspirations of Métis people in our province?

The Speaker: The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question, who I know is part of the Métis Nation of Alberta himself. You know, this is really an exciting time for Métis people in this province, a province that has the most Métis people across the country, and it's going to be a very good time in the future. In fact, we have been working with the Métis leaders on a program identified as working toward a better future. We're taking action on a number of priorities, including consultation policy for nonsettlement Métis and a new framework agreement for the Métis Nation of Alberta. Alberta has a long working relationship with the Métis people, and it...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this spring the government of Alberta announced a new consultation policy for Métis settlements, to the same minister: how does this government plan to address consultation among nonsettlement Métis?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Our government is committed to ensuring that Métis people have a meaningful voice in the management decisions that impact them. We took a big step with the Métis settlements agreement last spring, and we're taking the same kind of collaborative approach to develop a consultation policy for Métis people who do not live on one of our province's eight Métis settlements. We'll continue to work closely with the Métis Nation of Alberta and build a policy that makes sense for Métis people across our province.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is this government doing to implement the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples, specifically for the Métis people?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Our government has been engaged with Métis leaders and communities to find practical ways to implement the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. We've received written submissions from the Métis Nation of Alberta and the Metis Settlements General Council, and I have had multiple meetings with both organizations and many of their constituents to move these initiatives forward. The United Nations declaration is guiding our work in many ways: incorporating Métis perspectives in our curriculum review; appointments to agencies, boards, and commissions; access to libraries for Métis settlements; and many other initiatives.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Carbon Levy and Agriculture Costs

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, since spring we have talked about this government's ill-conceived carbon tax and how it will affect families, school boards, charities, food banks, and on and on. We also need to consider how this carbon tax will harm the second-largest industry in this province, agriculture. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry. You have an agricultural background. Does this NDP government have any idea about the devastating effects that this carbon tax is going to have on the folks in this province who are charged with feeding the world, or does your government care?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Absolutely, we understand, you know, the importance of agriculture to the economy of Alberta. It's our second-largest industry. It's the basis of the culture of this province as well. We've taken it into consideration. I've been listening to farmers, producers, processors right across the province to ensure that we have their ideas, that we have their thoughts going forward so that everyone can do their part on climate change.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, given that any and all increases to agricultural operations are borne solely by farmers and ranchers and given that farmers cannot pass on the increased costs of producing a bushel of grain nor the increased costs of putting extra weight on cattle before market, it is fair to say that farmers in every corner of this province feel betrayed because their government is the one cutting into their bottom line and indeed threatening their livelihood. Farmers want to know: why is this government so determined to tax them right off their farms?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As I said, we are listening to the farming community. That's why we've had the opportunity to exempt marked fuel, the purple fuel that they use, their diesel and their gas, right across the province, something we've heard. We're continuing our conversations with other sectors, including greenhouses, intensive livestock operations, irrigation operators, and all farmers right across the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, given that natural gas, propane, and electricity even with the new cap are huge, nondiscretionary costs for grain farmers and ranchers and given that these costs are only going to skyrocket in January because of the carbon tax and given that all costs related to agriculture will increase, including the costs of shipping grain from the bin to port, farmers and ranchers are worried. They're wondering how tough it's going to get to make a living on their own property. Will the minister please explain exactly how this carbon tax, quote, is uniquely tailored, end quote, to meet the needs of Alberta farmers.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to the member for the question. Very recently, a few weeks ago, I was able to announce a $10 million fund to help farmers find those efficiencies with carbon issues. We've had support from the crop sectors, greenhouse sectors, and intensive livestock operators who see this as a good, positive step.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fraser: Yesterday the federal government introduced their own accelerated coal phase-out plan. Instantly what we saw was Nova Scotia negotiate a deal where they don't actually have to reduce their emissions. They were able to introduce a cap and trade system. While this federal plan still hurts Alberta, it seems they're willing to work with the coal industry. Honestly, I never thought I would see the day that a Trudeau government would offer up a better plan to the energy sector than the government of Alberta. Deputy Premier, when are you going to start fighting for Alberta, our coal industry, and our oil and gas industry?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for the question. Of course, Alberta already has a coal phase-out plan in place, and that is why the federal government will not be imposing a plan on this province. We will have a made-in-Alberta plan instead. That plan will stabilize prices for consumers, as we saw today, it will not unnecessarily strand capital, and it will ensure that we are making appropriate investments in communities to transition, something that the previous government utterly ignored.

Mr. Fraser: Well, that's unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, because when we're already at 15 per cent renewables, we're the first jurisdiction to put a price on carbon. Quite honestly, you should stop with the rhetoric that the Prime Minister is going to bow to you and everybody else will have to take what they put in.

You know, listen. The federal government recognizes that coal is an important part of industry in countries like Japan, Germany, and Denmark. Why do you hate coal producers so much?

The Speaker: I caution again. Be aware, hon. members, all members, of the preambles.

The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we have committed to a phase-out of coal already set by the previous federal government and accelerating the post-2030 in such a way that makes sure that we are not having a plan imposed on us by other jurisdictions but we have something that works for our deregulated electricity system and that protects consumers. That is why we are phasing in 70 per cent natural gas and 30 per cent renewables, to take advantage of the natural advantages that Alberta has with cheap and plentiful natural gas and excellent renewable resources.

Mr. Fraser: Coal communities, oil and gas communities, from Hinton to Hanna, Castor to Cold Lake, Calgary to Edmonton to Edson: Deputy Premier, you say that you're working in good faith with these communities as you implement your policies, but being booed at a provincial convention last week shows otherwise. I'm sorry that you got booed, but why are you keeping these families and communities who built this province in the dark?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the hon. minister of economic development is leading a consultation with the affected communities to make sure that we are putting workers and communities at the centre of this, which the previous government did not do. That is why we have committed funds within the budget papers that the member will note, and we will continue to do so. You know, the fact of the matter is that we are doing this because the science of the health effects of coal is as settled as the science of climate change.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. It's been a robust day today.

Statement by the Speaker

Election Anniversaries

The Speaker: I would like to take this opportunity to inform the Assembly that precisely 12 years ago today, on November 22, 2004 – it will go down in Alberta history as a significant event – the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, the Member for Edmonton-Calder as well as the Member for Calgary-Lougheed were elected for the first time to this Legislative Assembly of Alberta. Additionally, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood was re-elected on that day 12 years ago, having been first elected in a by-election in 2000. One can only speculate on what has encouraged them to stay.

The Speaker: The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Holodomor Memorial Day

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise on behalf of my Progressive Conservative colleagues to recognize the Holodomor and pay tribute to its victims. Holodomor, death by starvation, is applied to the genocide perpetrated against the people of Ukraine by Joseph Stalin in 1932 and '33. But Stalin's reign of terror continued for another two decades, with millions more Ukrainians executed or exiled to Siberia.

Now, as I recently shared here in the Assembly, 80 years ago this month my grandfather was taken from his village in Ukraine by the Red Army and was never seen or heard from again. Today the horrors of Holodomor are well documented, but we are still unable to say exactly how many people perished as a result because for decades the Soviet government actively denied that these atrocities even took place and any mention of this dark period was strictly forbidden. It wasn't until the fall of the Soviet Union that the survivors and their families could finally tell their harrowing stories.

Now, as we recently observed in this Chamber, Alberta's history is steeped in Ukrainian culture. Settlers from Ukraine came in search of a better life as they helped build our province into what it is today. Many MLAs of Ukrainian descent have made outstanding contributions to our province. Premier Ed Stelmach left a lasting mark as he served Albertans with great distinction, and Speaker Gene Zwozdesky's long career was highlighted by his sponsorship of the Ukrainian Famine and Genocide (Holodomor) Memorial Day Act, designating the third Saturday in November to honour the victims and remember the heinous acts committed against them.

Mr. Speaker, mankind must never hide from the dark truths of our past. By commemorating these dark periods in human history, we renew our resolve to never again stand idly by as forces of evil attempt to wipe an entire ethnic or cultural group from the face of the earth.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

National Housing Day

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on National Housing Day to remind everyone that Albertans deserve a safe and affordable place to call home. Seniors deserve to age in community, where they want to be, with their friends and family. Here in Alberta, however, the state of housing is at a tipping point.

After decades of chronic underfunding from previous governments, we now have over 15,000 Alberta families on wait-lists for affordable housing. There's approximately $1 billion worth of deferred maintenance, where many housing units are in disrepair. Alberta remains one of three provinces without a provincial affordable housing strategy. That's why I'm proud that our government is taking action by moving Alberta forward and modernizing the housing system to ensure it is there for those who need it now and in the future.

As part of the Alberta jobs plan we are investing $1.2 billion over the next five years in seniors' and affordable housing. We're developing a provincial affordable housing strategy to help guide and direct this significant investment and ensure that our housing system is sustainable. We've signed two agreements with the federal government that give our province more flexibility in administering made-in-Alberta housing programs, allowing us to focus on tenant needs. We are investing more than $167 million in community-based programming to support Albertans experiencing homelessness and women and children fleeing family violence. But it isn't just about tackling homelessness. It's also about preventing homelessness and helping struggling Albertans by maintaining the Alberta seniors' benefit, introducing the Alberta child benefit, and increasing the minimum wage.

Mr. Speaker, in my 30 years as a real estate agent and six years on the board of HomeEd, the city of Edmonton nonprofit housing corporation, I can tell you that a home is more than a roof. It represents stability, dignity, and hope. I'm proud that this government is committed to providing that hope to everyone that calls Alberta home.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Navratri

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to represent an inclusive and very culturally diverse riding, which allows me to have the privilege to connect with numerous cultural groups and attend many events and festivals. One example of a wonderful festival that takes place in my riding is Navratri, the festival of music, dance, and colour.

Navratri is an important, major festival for the people from Gujarat, a western state in India. Navratri is celebrated all over India and Nepal and is dedicated to the worship of the Hindu deity Durga. In western India, particularly in the states of Gujarat and Mumbai, the nine nights of Navratri are celebrated, with the famous garba and dandiya raas dances performed on all nine nights. Garba is a dance performed with hand and feet movement. Dandiya is a traditional folk dance from Gujarat, and it's famous not only for the steps of the dance but for the colourful attire and the colourful sticks made of beautifully decorated bamboo, which are struck left and right to the tunes of the music. For the past few years the government of Gujarat has been organizing the Navratri festival celebrations on a regular basis for the nine nights of Navratri. People come from all over Gujarat and even from abroad to participate in the celebration.

Navratri is a very popular, lively, and exciting festival which engages people of all ages from early evening until well after midnight. Youngsters socialize with their friends in the large arena space, then join a line of dancers, then leave again to play. Older people visit with each other on the sidelines, then dance at their own pace when it suits them. Navratri is a spectacular event showcasing interactivity and participation, filled with music, movement, and colour.

Thank you.

Parliamentary Debate

Mr. Hunter: Last Saturday I had the privilege of attending the funeral service for Thelma Milne. Thelma passed away at the age of 87, leaving a legacy of service and love for all those who knew her. She was the first female mayor of Cardston and a veritable advocate for women's rights. I tell you this not because I had a lot of experience with her but because the experiences that I did have with her were amazing. The first time I chatted with her was when she called me over to her home to get to the bottom of something she had heard about me. You see, Mr. Speaker, she wasn't the type of person that judged a person based upon what others told her. She was a straight shooter right to the very end.

Now, the reason why I bring this up is that recently I read an insightful article from an introspective CBS journalist, called The Unbearable Smugness of the Press. In it he says that the liberal elements who have decided to abscond with the name "progressive" have embarked on a shrill shout-down campaign to shut up conservatives. I quote the writer. "If we mock them enough, call them racist enough," and – I will inject a phrase that the NDP use quite often – call them climate change deniers enough, "they'll eventually shut up and get in line." Our perceptions of reality and our ability to understand each other get skewed when people are shouted down into silence. That's when assumptions flourish. I encourage all members of this House to try to actually listen to each other and stick to debating policy rather than spewing vitriolic castigations like calling someone a climate change denier.

Mr. Speaker, our time-tested democratic processes are brutally mocked when healthy debate is shut down and shouted down. The strength of one's argument is always diminished when this tactic is employed. I am quite sure Thelma would be pleased to see us debate issues in a most ardent manner, but she would most certainly call foul at the number of shrill shout-downs coming down to us from those so-called progressives as of late.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

2:50

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As Government House Leader I would like to give oral notice of a bill for tomorrow's Order Paper, the bill being Bill 32, the Credit Union Amendment Act, 2016, which will be sponsored by the hon. Minister of Finance.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with the requisite number of copies of several documents. The first is a copy of a CBC article which details that the federal government is not adequately funding child care on reserves.

The second is a copy of the Human Rights Commission document the Minister of Indigenous Relations referenced yesterday, which should serve as an action item this NDP government should be addressing with several of his federal counterparts.

The third is a copy of the Child and Youth Advocate's investigation on Lily, who drowned in a container with homemade alcohol and drowned while in her mother's care, resulting in criminal charges. Take action for Lily.

The fourth is a copy of the Child and Youth Advocate's investigation on Onessa, who died by suicide when she was 17 years old. She had involvement with child intervention services that ended approximately five months before her death. Take action for Onessa.

The fifth is a copy of the Child and Youth Advocate's investigation on Netasinim, where he and his younger brother were apprehended living in the community garbage dump. The child was returned home at the age of 15 and, while playing in a river without supervision, died as a result of drowning. Take action for Netasinim.

The sixth is a copy of the Child and Youth Advocate's investigation on Marie, also known as Serenity, who died at four years old, beaten, starved, assaulted. Take action for Serenity.

The seventh and final document is a copy of the Child and Youth Advocate's investigation on Sharon, a nine-month-old who died in her parents' care just two months after she was returned to an abusive home. Take action for Sharon.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table 10 copies of the response to Motion for a Return 11.

The Speaker: Any others?

Ms Phillips: There are nine more, I believe, in a box because there are so many of them. I don't know where that box is, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I'll have to retrieve my tabling, and then I'll present it later in time should the House allow me to.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members . . .

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'm sorry. The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: I apologize for interrupting you, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling, five copies of an article from the Toronto Star where Premier Wynne apologizes for causing high electricity prices with policies similar to what we're experiencing in Alberta.

Mr. Gottfried: I'd like to table five copies of an article by Chris Varcoe of the Calgary Herald with reference to a banana republic, the PPA battle royal, and the impact on attracting investment for renewables and natural gas.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and table five copies of an e-mail that I received from an individual that I introduced earlier in the House, Jorja Fisher. She mentioned in her e-mail that it is a very big concern that many Albertans have right now and it's also a concern that needs to be dealt with soon because Alberta's economy is going down really fast, and this needs to be handled with respect to our economy and the need to get pipelines to tidewater. I think we can all learn a little from young Jorja Fisher.

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to section 28 of the Ombudsman Act I rise to table five copies of the Ombudsman's '15-16 annual report.

In addition, pursuant to section 33(1) of the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act I am also tabling five copies of the Public Interest Commissioner's 2015-2016 annual report.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Mason, Minister of Infrastructure and Minister of Transportation, return to order of the Assembly motions for returns 3, 17, and 33, all asked for by Mr. Cooper on May 2, 2016: Motion for a Return 3, copies of all ministerial orders issued by the Ministry of Transportation between January 1, 2014, and December 31, 2015; Motion for a Return 17, copies of all documents relating to the fall government staff retreat held at the Camp Chief Hector YMCA from September 18 to 20, 2015, including a list of participants, a breakdown of costs, and agendas; Motion for a Return 33, copies of documents and briefings, including Power-Point presentations, outlining the internal government process for the preparation of government legislation.

On behalf of the hon. Minister Miranda, Minister of Culture and Tourism, return to order of the Assembly Motion for a Return 16, asked for by Mr. Cooper on May 2, 2016, copies of all ministerial orders issued by the Ministry of Culture and Tourism or its predecessors between January 1, 2014, and December 31, 2015.

On behalf of the hon. Ms Gray, Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal, pursuant to the Government Organization Act authorized radiation health administrative organization annual reports for the following: Alberta College and Association of Chiropractors, July 1, 2015, to June 30, 2016, with financial statements for the year ended June 30, 2016; Alberta Dental Association and College, January 1, 2015, to December 31, 2015, with financial statements dated December 31, 2015; Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, November 1, 2014, to October 31, 2015; College of Physicians & Surgeons, January 1, 2015, to December 31, 2015; University of Alberta, April 1, 2015, to March 31, 2016; University of Calgary, April 1, 2015, to March 31, 2016.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Feehan, Minister of Indigenous Relations, return to order of the Assembly Motion for a Return 14, asked for by Mr. Cooper on May 2, 2016, copies of all ministerial orders issued by the Ministry of Indigenous Relations or its predecessor between January 1, 2014, and December 31, 2015.

On behalf of the hon. Ms McCuaig-Boyd, Minister of Energy, return to order of the Assembly MR 2, asked for by Mr. Cooper on May 2, 2016, copies of all ministerial orders issued by the Ministry of Energy between January 1, 2014, and December 31, 2015.

And finally, on behalf of the hon. Ms McLean, Minister of Service Alberta and Minister of Status of Women, return to order of the Assembly Motion for a Return 4, asked for by Mr. Cooper, and motions for returns 26 and 27, asked for by Mr. Cyr, all on May 2, 2016: Motion for a Return 4, copies of all ministerial orders issued by the Ministry of Service Alberta between January 1, 2014 and December 31, 2015; Motion for a Return 26, a copy of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Annual Report 2013-14, prepared by the government of Alberta; Motion for a Return 27, a copy of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Annual Report 2014-15, prepared by the government of Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we're at the time of dealing with some points of order that were referenced earlier in the discussions. I believe the first one is from the Government House Leader.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. During question period today the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake referenced a difference of opinion with respect to certain actions taken around the power purchase agreements, and he referenced a disagreement between the mayor of Calgary and Enmax and the government or a purported difference of opinion. He asked the hon. Deputy Premier the question: is the mayor of Calgary lying, or are you? Now, Mr. Speaker, there's a real question – and you have access to the Blues in case my recollection is not precise – but it seems to me that this is, well, close to unparliamentary language. I'm referencing page 618 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, dealing with unparliamentary language.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the use of "lie" or "lying" or words to that effect has been long understood to be a very, very serious breach, perhaps the most serious case of unparliamentary language that is there, and is never acceptable. Whether the implication of the hon. member crosses the line or not, obviously the hon. member sought to approach that line as closely as possible. I would argue that he crossed it, but I would leave that, of course, to your wisdom and discretion with respect to that matter.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think, you know, we could spend some significant time determining whether or not this is a matter of debate or whether it was use of unparliamentary language. My hon. colleague clearly didn't call anyone in this House a liar. He simply asked a question. But I will close with this: in the name of trying to improve decorum, some of which we did not see as positive as it ought to be today, I will withdraw and apologize on behalf of the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. Yes, the use of the language in this House does have its impact. It is context, but let us continue to build more of this kind of communication and relationship rather than the stuff that was earlier in the day.

Was there a second point of order?

Mr. Mason: Oh, Mr. Speaker, yes. Thank you very much. During question period today members opposite in the Wildrose opposition engaged in booing of a member. You called it at the time, Mr. Speaker. That's why I wasn't necessarily going to present a formal point of order.

The Speaker: Yes. I had made a decision in that regard already, and I know – I'm looking at the Government House Leader – that it was noted. Thank you very much.

Do you have an apology to the House?

Mr. Loewen: Yeah. I'd like to rise and say that, of course, in this House we see a lot of comments and gestures going back and forth between different sides of the House, some of them in good humour and some of them not so much. Of course, we realize that one of the ministers was booed at the AAMD and C conference here just this past week. Obviously, this is unacceptable in this House, so I unreservedly apologize for the members on this side.

The Speaker: Thank you. Try not to distract from the intention. I think I ruled earlier that that was inappropriate. Thank you for your comments.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 21

Modernized Municipal Government Act

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is truly my honour to rise today to speak on Bill 21, the Modernized Municipal Government Act. Bill 21 seeks to amend the Municipal Government Act to make it a more responsive piece of legislation that gives municipalities and businesses the tools they need to build strong communities and a more resilient and diversified future for Alberta families.

Madam Chair, modernizing the MGA is critical to ensuring our province's future prosperity and to improving the vitality of our communities. With more than 700 sections, the act is our second-largest piece of legislation and touches the lives of every single person in our province. It guides how we pay for our roads, where we build our schools, and how we develop strong communities to raise our families. Because of this, I tabled the Modernized Municipal Government Act last May so hon. members and all Albertans would have time to review the changes, ask questions, and provide their feedback on the proposed amendments.

We are very proud of how robust, transparent, and accessible our consultation has been on the MGA. Over the summer my team and I travelled all across the province to meet with Albertans, hear their thoughts, and gather their feedback on the bill. More than 2,400 Albertans attended 21 different sessions in communities both large and small. We also received over 2,300 survey responses from Albertans and 122 written submissions from municipalities, businesses, industry, civil society groups, and, of course, members of the public. It has been an honour and a privilege to discuss the future of our municipalities with thousands of Albertans, people who care about their communities, Madam Chair, and serve them in many significant ways. I want to thank everyone who took the time to provide their input.

It's because of their thoughts and feedback that today, finally, I am introducing House amendments to the Modernized Municipal Government Act. These amendments, introduced today, could make the policies proposed in Bill 21 even stronger and more effective.

As it stands, the Modernized Municipal Government Act is a forward-looking, innovative piece of legislation that contains a number of policy shifts. Municipalities will form regional partnerships to better serve Albertans. Municipalities will have new tools to build better, more complete communities. The act will also support small business and increase industry competitiveness, and it will enhance municipal accountability. Madam Chair, by modernizing the MGA, we can turn the page and begin a new era of local government in Alberta.

To further strengthen the Modernized Municipal Government Act, we are introducing key amendments, which I am tabling now so hon. members can see how we are responding to input received from stakeholders on how we can strengthen the amendments to the MGA. Colleagues, as you know, Albertans want real neighbourhoods to call home. Our proposed changes to the MGA could help make this happen by giving municipalities tools to ensure that new communities are built in a way that creates real neighbourhoods for families, neighbourhoods that are kept safe by police and firefighters at nearby stations, and ones where hockey practice is held around the corner and not across the city.

To do this, off-site levies would see an overhaul. These one-time fees, paid by developers, are currently only collected for roads, water, sewer, and storm sewer systems. But Alberta's growth has created a demand for community facilities and services outside of these four infrastructure pillars. The MGA would be amended to allow municipalities to collect off-site levies for community recreation facilities, fire halls, police stations, and libraries.

Colleagues, Bill 21 proposes that levies for these facilities could only be applied if the new development received at least 30 per cent of the benefit of those facilities. During our consultation tour we heard very clearly that municipalities felt that a 30 per cent threshold would disadvantage smaller communities, who would not be able to utilize the policy tool to create complete communities. For that reason, we are introducing an amendment to Bill 21 that removes the 30 per cent minimum threshold.

That means that all municipalities would have the option to work with developers to help pay for the facilities in their new communities at a level that makes sense and reflects a fair share, whether that be 5 per cent or 50 per cent. This approach would make sure that fire halls, swimming pools, and other services Albertans need are there when they move in, and the result would be more complete, inclusive communities for Albertan families, communities where Albertans have access to the infrastructure they need and where growth is funded in a collaborative way. We heard from small and rural municipalities that this would benefit how their communities are developed. This amendment is a direct response to their feedback about how off-site levies could better serve small towns and rural municipalities in Alberta.

Our amendments also clarify some of our other key policy proposals.

The Chair: Hon. minister, if I can just interrupt you for a moment. Could you just pause for a moment so we can start handing out the amendments for everyone – otherwise, we won't have the opportunity – and then you can continue.

Ms Larivee: Sure.

The Chair: This will be amendment A1.

I've had a request, perhaps while we're just waiting for the pages to finish handing that out, to revert to Introduction of Guests. We'd need unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm honoured to rise today to introduce to you and through you Cheryl Low, chair of the Calgary Catholic board, and Cathie Williams, who is the trustee in my constituency from the Calgary Catholic board of education. I would like to request them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the House.

Bill 21 Modernized Municipal Government Act (continued)

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you so much. Our amendments also clarify some of our other key policy proposals. Colleagues, we know that collaborative approaches are necessary to eliminate the duplication of costly services and to help municipalities deliver more effective, efficient services to their communities.

This is why we are proposing to reform growth management boards in Edmonton and Calgary and why we are proposing to bring in intermunicipal collaboration frameworks, or ICFs, for the rest of the province. Regional collaboration on items like transportation, recreation, and emergency services is a win for everyone involved, municipalities and, especially, the Albertans that they serve. Our amendment clarifies that members of the Edmonton or Calgary growth management boards won't also have to form ICFs with other municipal neighbours on regional issues already dealt with under the growth management board. This simplifies the process while still ensuring smart growth and collaborative approaches to the delivery and equitable funding of services.

We are also proposing an amendment to ensure that inter-municipal development plans are bargained in good faith. Good-faith negotiating already happens in many municipalities across the province, but we would confirm our commitment to that process through this amendment.

We are also proposing a change that would encourage councillors to attend postelection orientation meetings by requiring municipalities to offer training, to be held within 90 days of each councillor taking office. This proposed amendment would help newly elected councillors understand their duties and responsibilities and would ultimately help municipalities to provide well-managed, transparent, and accountable local governments for Albertans.

We are also proposing to amend Bill 21 to encourage fair representation on regional appeal boards. Under the Modernized

Municipal Government Act councillors would not be able to form the majority on local appeal boards. We are proposing an amendment that would also prevent councillors from forming the majority of membership on regional appeal boards even if the councillors are from different municipalities.

During our summer consultation tour concerns were raised that councillors from different municipalities may have similar interests or predispositions, which could create bias if councillors are able to form a majority of the panel. We want to address those concerns and avoid any real or perceived bias on such boards. Councillors are the ones who make the original decisions; therefore, they should not also form the majority on a board that is looking into an appeal of those same decisions.

We are proposing that membership on all appeal panels, local and regional, be restricted to one councillor. This amendment would promote fairness and ensure that these boards are objective and impartial when reviewing cases. In rural areas and small towns, where we heard it can be a challenge for municipalities to recruit people for appeal boards, we are proposing a potential exemption, granted by the minister, for municipalities who request it, to assist with their capacity limitations. We are directly responding to municipal feedback by making this amendment.

Another amendment would ensure that greater accountability measures are in place for municipally controlled corporations that are sold or operated outside of Alberta. This would ensure continued transparency and responsible choice for municipalities and citizens.

We are also proposing to amend Bill 21 to allow all cities and other municipalities with more than 15,000 people to set alternative decision-making timelines for subdivisions and development applications. Such municipal hubs may need more time to gather all the information they need on all the complex applications that cross their desks, and this amendment would support them in their work by allowing them more time. This amendment responds directly to municipal feedback on how the MGA can support them to handle the high volume, complexity, and diversity of development applications in rapidly developing communications.

These are important changes that we are proposing, and I'm very proud of all the work that has gone into reviewing the MGA over the last four years. But, Madam Chair, this work to modernize the MGA will not end with Bill 21, not even with these amendments, because over the summer we didn't just hear feedback on what was already contained in the bill; we also heard a lot of new suggestions for changes to the MGA.

Today I'm pleased to share those ideas with all Albertans through a discussion guide, continuing the conversation. Some of these new policy ideas are big and potentially groundbreaking, including a proposal to enable municipalities to create parental leave policies for elected councillors. This change could make elected work more family friendly or encourage more women to run for public office.

We also want to hear feedback about using the MGA to build bridges and support better working relationships between municipalities and their indigenous neighbours in First Nations or Métis settlements. As a government we are committed to meeting the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples and want our legislation to support that work.

We're also determined to support all of our municipal partners in taking action to address climate change. One policy proposal would give municipalities more direct authority to consider the environment in all their decisions about land use and development.

Madam Chair, these proposed policies need careful consideration and thoughtful feedback to ensure that they meet the needs of Albertans. Starting today, Albertans can go online to read the proposals in the discussion guide and then fill out an online questionnaire to let us know what they think about the potential policy shifts. We will also be meeting with key stakeholder groups to gauge their thoughts, including the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, indigenous leaders, and representatives from business and industry. We need their input on these complex proposals so that together we can strengthen the MGA.

Madam Chair, hard work and thorough consultation will continue to sharpen and strengthen the Municipal Government Act to make it a modern piece of legislation that supports municipalities in their work to build a stronger, more resilient province for all of us. The last major review of the MGA was completed more than two decades ago and does not reflect new economic realities, changes in technology, or evolving municipal roles and relationships. Municipalities are at the grassroots of creating stronger, more dynamic communities, and we know that they need robust, forward-looking legislation to meet the changing needs of Albertans.

These amendments were developed after conversations with thousands of Albertans about how this bill can serve their communities. Madam Chair, I'm proud today to table these amendments to Bill 21, and I hope for all-party support in the passage of these amendments and of this bill. Thank you.

With that, I would like to ask that the committee now rise and report progress.

The Chair: Hon. minister, I've just been advised that you would need to adjourn debate on the amendments and on the bill before we can move to the next stage, so if you could please make that motion.

Ms Larivee: Okay. Can I make that motion?

The Chair: Yes. All right.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: Now the motion to rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 21. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur with the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 28 Public Health Amendment Act, 2016

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise in the Legislature today to move third reading of Bill 28, the Public Health Amendment Act, 2016.

The aim of this bill is to protect Albertans against vaccine-preventable diseases by increasing our child immunization rates and improving the delivery of immunization services across Alberta. With this bill public health will be able to connect with parents and guardians of school-age children who are missing immunization information. They can explain the benefits to any guardian who has any doubts or concerns about immunization. Our hope is that by providing parents with evidence-informed information, we can support more parents in immunizing their children and provide their records so that if there is an outbreak, those children who aren't immunized can be protected.

I would like to begin by thanking my colleagues for their support of the bill, particularly the two cosponsors, as well as members from other parties who also spoke in support of this. You've expressed your support for an approach that enables conversations between public health professionals and parents and guardians to support children in having the very best protections for vaccine-preventable diseases.

You've also raised some important points about protecting information of individuals and Albertans' privacy, which I'm happy to address here. This bill enables Alberta Health to collect student enrolment data from Alberta Education and cross-reference it with Alberta Health's existing immunization records. It's a one-way transfer of information that uses existing databases to enable a more efficient information-sharing process between Education and Health.

If the bill passes, Alberta Health would not share immunization information with Alberta Education, school boards, schools, or child care facilities. Alberta Health would share with Alberta Health Services the student enrolment information collected from Alberta Education. Public health professionals employed by Alberta Health Services, not school authorities or daycares, could contact guardians of students with missing immunization information. The information provided by Alberta Education would include contact information for guardians but not contact information for students like a student's cellphone number or e-mail address because it's the actual guardian's information that public health professionals wish to have so that they can speak with the actual guardian.

If Bill 28 passes, my department would work with Education, Alberta Health Services, and school authorities on implementation that would take effect in the next school year. As part of the plan my department would work with key stakeholders, including the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner, to make sure we can meet the objectives of the legislation while protecting Albertans' privacy. To make sure we continue to protect Albertans' personal information, my department would work with Education on an information-sharing agreement. Both departments have already begun work on privacy impact assessments to help inform this legislation.

Our goal is to implement the proposed changes at the beginning of the 2017-18 school year, as I mentioned. If this goal cannot be achieved, changes would be implemented at the beginning of the '18-19 school year. A communications campaign informing parents and guardians of new requirements to provide immunization information will occur in the upcoming spring, and school registration forms will be updated as required.

Bill 28 also includes amendments that add requirements to immunization service delivery. If passed, my department would work with health professionals on implementing these changes so that Albertans can receive high-quality immunization services in a safe and consistent manner throughout our province.

I think we all agree that we want to keep Albertans healthy and that immunization is one of the most important tools we have in public health to ensure that Albertans can indeed stay healthy. My goal with this legislation is to make sure we are immunizing as many Albertans as possible, to engage with Albertans to make sure they understand the benefits of immunization, and to provide high-quality immunization services.

Once again I thank my colleagues for their support, and I look forward to the passing and implementation of this legislation.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you very much for this opportunity to speak on Bill 28, the Public Health Amendment Act, 2016. As we close the final stage of debate today, I know that members of this House have spoken at length in the House about vaccinations and immunization. We've spoken about . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I'm sorry to interrupt you. I just want to remind members that we're no longer in committee and that you're required to be in your seat. If you wish to carry on a conversation, please take it outside. Thank you.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We've spoken about herd immunity and the rates needed to preserve protection against disease for an entire population. We've spoken about our current rates and strategies to bump them up. But it seems to me that this piece of legislation is as much if not more so a bill about information as it is about vaccination. At the end of the day, the government is not granted any additional power to make immunization mandatory or withhold schooling toward that end. The ability to keep unimmunized children away from school in the event of an outbreak already exists by regulation. The ability of the medical officer of health to request school enrolment records already exists.

In this regard the legislation changes little, and I think the way that we are proceeding with Bill 28 is wise. We are leaving that element of choice over such medical procedures in the hands of parents. Our hope is that parents use information provided by our public health officials to make informed choices in consultation with the primary care professionals who provide for their health care needs. Where this bill makes perhaps the biggest change is in allowing the Ministry of Health to go directly to the Ministry of Education to gather enrolment records and begin to proactively clean up any missing data that is held by the Health minister.

As I understand it, about 15 to 25 per cent of students' immunization records are incomplete. I think that the last thing we'd want in the middle of a measles outbreak would be to have agents desperately trying to figure out whose records are incomplete or who is at risk of contracting this disease or who has been immunized out of province and just hasn't yet transferred the documentation over. If the intent of the legislation is to get more proactive with the way we handle this information and let parents know that they need to update their personal information ahead of time, I think that we all can agree that this is sensible. It's all about informed choice. All told, the goal is to have better information for public health officials, better information for parents, and better information for the health professionals who provide that family primary care.

It's important to note that the flow of information is from Education to Health. I know that there are a lot of sensitivities and special considerations and a concern about sharing personal health information and for good reason. It's important that we keep this information safeguarded, especially in this day and age of vastly increased electronic and digital record keeping and with privacy concerns seeming to become so much more heightened in the public's consciousness. With these considerations in mind it is more important now more than ever that the government stay vigilant in protecting Albertans' health information.

This is quite timely. I see that we recently received the 2015-2016 annual report from the office of the Privacy Commissioner. In that report we see that both privacy complaints and self-reported breaches regarding health information are higher for this past year than the previous two years. Now, is this due to an increased awareness? Is this due to people becoming more sensitive about protecting their personal data in this information age? I'm not sure. We do know that despite the protection of law and the best efforts to comply, legitimate privacy breaches do happen. Mistakes do occur. The fact remains that privacy concerns are only becoming more significant. I hope that with this increased authority to pull information from Alberta Education there comes an increased vigilance in our Health department in protecting it, and while health information will not be shared from Alberta Health, the enrolment data that they do gather, including phone numbers and home addresses, is no less sensitive and no less deserving of the strongest protection under the law and internal policy.

To the extent that new measures specifically regarding vaccinations are made in this piece of legislation, we see an increase in the reporting of adverse effects, and again I think that this is a common-sense addition. Every medical procedure and every drug carries a risk however rare or insignificant, and I am encouraged to see reporting of potential effects as they occur. This improves our understanding and allows a more transparent sharing of information to the public. That's nice to see.

Finally, I'd like to be sure that the expanded measures listed in Bill 28 are implemented efficiently, effectively, and in accordance with the intent of this bill. The Minister of Health has been given expanded powers of information and data collection, but this shouldn't be accompanied by an expansion of government bureaucracy to implement the changes. I hope to see the government hit its targets within its means.

All told, there are some positive steps in this bill as well as some concerns that it get implemented correctly. It is certainly shooting towards an admirable goal, but as with many bills, getting from the idea to the implementation is always a challenge. Sharing information, as long as it's done appropriately and carefully, can yield good results.

Public health is a serious matter. If this legislation can legitimately and genuinely improve our response to potential outbreaks, it is worth supporting. I would encourage all of my colleagues to support this bill. I hope that we can use this legislation to help keep parents informed of existing government policy to ensure that appropriate immunization standards are met.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to rise and very quickly today offer my support for this bill. I'm the parent of two young children, two and four, who have recently been through all of their immunizations. I think that it's really important as a government to take action on ensuring increased immunization rates across the province for all of our children. You know, I taught in school, and I saw how fast outbreaks can move through schools. I understand that in today's society a lot of the time parents are just busy. I know my kids didn't get immunized on time. It took me a while to get it done.

I do just want to take this opportunity to give a huge shout-out to the East Calgary health centre, which is in my riding. They do an amazing job of keeping parents informed and making sure that they're getting their kids immunized as close to on time as possible. They provide all sorts of other resources, too. They do a great job of explaining why immunization is important and making sure that parents are aware of the risks and the benefits associated. They also weigh children there. They just really provide an excellent resource to the community. I wanted to take the opportunity to thank the East Calgary health centre and all the public health nurses there for all of the amazing work they do on behalf of all of the children in east Calgary every day.

In addition, I think it's important to point out that immunization is important because there are lots of people in our society who for one reason or another can't be immunized. You know, I think of my friend who recently underwent chemotherapy treatments for leukemia and had a reduced immune system for a period of time and wasn't able to get immunized. There are lots of children with various immune diseases who aren't able to get immunized. So having the opportunity to make sure that we can protect those people who don't have the capacity to get immunized by having a high enough immunization rate in the general population to really protect them from diseases I think is really important.

I really appreciate the approach that our government took when developing this legislation, making the effort to have an education component and making people more informed, allowing people to make an informed choice and not taking away anyone's, you know, right to refuse immunization if that's something that they continue to choose to do. I know that that was an area of concern for lots of people in my riding who I spoke to. They were concerned that there might be mandatory vaccinations. So I appreciate the angle that the government took when developing this legislation.

I just wanted to take the opportunity while I had it to offer my voice in support of this bill. I think that increasing immunization among all children and everybody in Alberta helps to contribute to the health of everyone in Alberta, helps to reduce overall health costs, keeps kids in school, and is just generally a good direction to take.

Thank you for listening. I would suggest that everyone continue to support this piece of legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) now comes into effect if anyone has questions or comments for the previous speaker.

Seeing none, are there any other speakers wishing to speak to this bill?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: Hearing the call for the question, the hon. Minister of Health to close debate.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I think this is the second-fastest moving bill we've had in this House, after the Ukrainian bill that we passed at the very beginning of this sitting, especially if you don't count the week that we've been away. It speaks to the fact that we've struck the right balance in making sure that education is the key focus. We are focused on getting our immunization rates up, and we want to do that by alleviating any concerns that parents might have and protecting public health at the same time.

I think this is going to be very good news. I was pleased to have so much support shown in this House as well as by the parties that were there to support the announcement when we made it at the beginning. Thank you. I think this is going to certainly bring about better health outcomes for Albertans, and I'm very pleased to be able to say that I was the minister when we brought this legislation forward.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to have unanimous consent of the House to revert to Tabling Returns and Reports.

[Unanimous consent granted]

3:40                    Tabling Returns and Reports (reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. We're only about a third of the way there. The boxes continue to arrive.

This is a response to Motion for a Return 5, which was requested by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I can't help but upon this tabling say thank you to the public service, who went above and beyond in staying late. I will certainly take the volume of this request into consideration when further requests of things that are already made public are made in this House. I think it speaks to the commitment that both the public service and our ministry have to achieving the goals of transparency.

The Deputy Speaker: I'm also impressed by the hard work of our pages.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 27 Renewable Electricity Act

Mrs. Aheer moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Debate adjourned on the amendment November 9: Mr. Loewen speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, you still have a few minutes left if you wish to continue speaking on this bill.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yes, I stand to continue the discussion on Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act. I just want to make sure it's clear that Wildrose believes in a realistic renewable energy program driven by private-sector investment and not by government subsidies. Recently I had a chance to go down to southern Alberta, and while I was down there, I saw many windmills operating. Of course, I know that there are a lot more down there than the ones that I saw east of Lethbridge. These ones obviously didn't require any Bill 27 to get them working. I think one of the concerns we have is that this plan to go 30 per cent by 2030 is a plan that's going to require a substantial amount of private investment, in fact, probably over $10 billion of private investment, but with problems like what we've seen with the PPAs, that's created a lot of investor uncertainty in Alberta. In fact, a lot of the government's bills and plans that they've brought forward have created uncertainty in the investment community.

Now, the ratepayers in this province have been promised a painless accelerated transition to renewables. That's happened in other provinces, too, where they've suggested: "This is going to be great; trust us. You'll love it." But in the end we see government bailouts. We see increased rates. We see failure over and over again. Now, I don't think we need to continue down the same path, using the same plans that other provinces have used, only to have the same failure. I think we can learn from others' mistakes. I think there are other ways to have a renewable energy program. There are other ways to reduce greenhouse gases. It doesn't always take government intervention and taxpayer dollars.

Now, we know that the accelerated phase-out of coal is going to cost billions of dollars. We haven't seen any report from this government on how much it's going to cost. They have somebody hired to do a report on this, but that report isn't done yet, and here we are contemplating a bill that in essence has to do with this report that we have yet to see. Yet we have to make a decision on this and have to debate this without having all of the information that's supposed to be available.

Now, again, the government has picked an arbitrary target of 30 per cent. I don't know why they chose 30 per cent. I don't know why they didn't choose 20 per cent. I don't know where that came from. It's something like the emissions cap of 100 megatonnes. I guess it's just a nice round number. I don't know. Maybe because it's 2030 and 30 per cent just sounds nice. I don't know if that's a way we want to make decisions that are going to cost taxpayers billions of dollars, just picking nice round numbers and catchy phrases.

Now, like I mentioned, there are already renewables being used in Alberta right now, but they won't get any special treatment because they're already operating. But with this legislation there are new companies that could come in and take advantage of this, that existing companies never had the opportunity to.

Now, when it comes to phasing out coal early, we'll have to pay those companies that set up those power generating plants in good faith, understanding that they were going to, you know, have X number of years to recover their investment. We're going to have to pay them for their stranded assets. Then we'll have to pay them again for new gas production to serve as a replacement baseload. I'm not sure about the thought process here. We have some of the cleanest burning coal-fired generators in the world, technology that should be used all over the world. It could make a huge difference in emissions if they used our clean coal-burning technology in other parts of the world where they're still building coal-fired generating plants. That would do something. That would do something.

You know, the federal plan was that after 50 years per plant these coal-fired generators would be shut down. That wouldn't wastefully strand assets. But by accelerating it, we have stranded assets that Albertans are going to pay for. There's only one place that that money could come from, and that's from Albertans. It's either going to come in the form of taxes, or it's going to come in the form of higher electricity bills. But they're going to pay for it.

Again, we haven't received the recommendations from this report that is supposed to be being done on these stranded assets and the timeline for phasing out coal, but we're discussing this here in the Legislature without the benefit of what these reports could say.

There doesn't seem to be a requirement to consider the economics of an electrical project or the demand for an electrical project. I guess that at the minister's whim deals could be signed, plans could be made, but we have no idea of the economics or the demand, whether it's actually there for these projects.

Now, this bill allows the minister a lot of involvement that we haven't seen in our deregulated electricity sector since the electricity sector was deregulated. This is a big change from what's happening now. The 30 per cent by 2030: picking targets like that isn't a good idea. Electricity should be generated in response to market demands. That includes ratepayers voluntarily choosing retailers who offer a proportion of renewable. Like I said, we already have some renewables taking place right now in Alberta that didn't require Bill 27 to happen.

Now, here's a list of U.S. failed renewables projects that received subsidies and failed: Amonix solar; Solar Trust of America; BrightSource; Solyndra – we heard a lot about Solyndra in the news; it received subsidies, failed – LSP Energy; Energy Conversion Devices; Abound Solar; SunPower; Beacon Power; Ecotality; A123 solar; Uni Solar; Azure Dynamics; Evergreen Solar; Ener1. Here are a bunch of projects in the U.S. that received subsidies, received taxpayers' money, and failed still.

Now, recently Ontario scrapped $3.8 billion in wind and solar investment. Why? So they could stop the rising electricity rates due to the failure of their feed-in tariff green energy program. Ontario is starting to realize that their idea and their plans have been a failure. The cost of electricity is rising, and it's hurting their economy. Why can't we learn something from these other jurisdictions that have gone down this road? Ontario's 2010 $9.7 billion deal with Samsung guaranteeing manufacturing in the province in exchange for Ontario buying electricity at favourable rates from the company was a colossal failure. By 2013 it was forced to renegotiate.

How can Albertans be assured that this kind of thing won't happen here, signing huge contracts with companies that Albertans will be on the hook for for who knows how many years, 20-year contracts, and then if things go wrong, what happens? What happens if Albertans decide they don't want that?

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. There are a lot of names in that constituency. Try saying it several times in a speech over and over. But they're all great places.

I really appreciated the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky's speech on Bill 27. I think he raised a lot of interesting points that I could tell all sides of the Assembly were listening to with great interest. I do have a couple of things I'm hoping that he can expand on under 29(2)(a), particularly around the fact that there is a report that's been commissioned and that is not done, as far as we're aware, and has not been reviewed by the government or by other members of the public or the opposition and around the concern that some of his constituents might have about the speed that we would be bringing this legislation through the Assembly given that such an important report has not been completed. The work, obviously, that has been commissioned with that report has not been able to be reviewed by people making the decisions around this legislation.

Also, I think he touched on it a little bit, but if he could expand a little bit more on how he sees the importance of making sure the private sector is driving investment and not the government picking winners and losers.

Lastly, I know he's had the opportunity to tour several communities throughout the province of Alberta that are being drastically impacted by the phase-out of coal in our province, something that this government has accelerated significantly faster than the federal government had proposed. If he could just expand a little bit on the devastation that is being caused by the government's decisions or will be caused by the government's decisions in regard to coal, the feeling that is happening in places like Hanna and Stettler county and the impact of that and why that shows that this bill should go to committee.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the questions. Yes, we've seen this over and over again, where this government seems to be so focused on this agenda that they don't take the time to do the economic studies, the effects that it's going to have on communities. As the member mentioned, there's a report that's supposed to be done on this, but we don't have this report. By sending this to committee, as was mentioned, we can have the time to have this report in our hands.

I've said this before in this House, too. The only way we as legislators can make informed decisions is with information, and that's the only way Albertans can make decisions, too. Albertans will develop an opinion on this, and we've heard some of their opinions already at an AAMDC meeting that just happened last week. The people that were there overwhelmingly did not agree with this government's plans. They said no. They said that this is going to hurt their local communities. I think that, similar to the last federal by-election, there might have been 1 per cent that supported it, but 99 per cent don't support these things, Madam Speaker.

This government has already planned to bring in a carbon tax on January 1. It's passed in the Legislature. It's planned to come in on January 1. That's already causing grave concerns in the communities around Alberta. When you add things like this, it builds and builds, so the concerns that Albertans have grow and grow. There are a lot of unemployed Albertans, over 100,000 unemployed since this government came in, again not including contractors. Albertans are hurting, and this won't help.

Now, when the private sector decides to do something like this, they take the risk. They make their plan, and it's up to the company and the shareholders to make a decision on whether they want to invest or not. But when government gets involved, then it's the government making decisions with taxpayers' money.

Now, there are several communities in Alberta that are deeply concerned about the phase-out of coal and what's going to happen to their community.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the referral amendment on Bill 27? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Under 29(2)(a)?

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is done. Did you want to speak to the amendment?

With no other members wishing to speak, then I will call the vote on the amendment.

Mr. Nixon: No, no. We sent you a speakers list.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: This is for the amendment, yes? Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to a bill that gives me great concern, a bill that pursues ideology over economic realities. That bill is Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act. The way this legislation has been thrown together raises a number of questions, and we have not heard answers from this government.

This bill is technical and complex, and the appetite of the NDP to push through this legislation is not fair to Albertans or the stakeholders that stand to be affected by such a dramatic change in Alberta's electricity market. I have to echo the concerns of my colleagues that have spoken before me and ask that this bill be put to committee for further review. Clearly, we have to examine this issue more in depth and hear from electricity experts on how this will impact the market. We need to hear from Albertans on how this market disruption will affect their livelihoods and how, at a time when there are literally thousands of Alberta families looking for work, increasing the costs of running their households will impact their families.

Madam Speaker, there is no reason why such a highly complex piece of legislation such as Bill 27 should not be brought to a committee for further study. It's the responsible thing to do. We have the tools at our disposal to conduct a proper and thorough review of this legislation. This side of the aisle is asking for the government to get to work. Albertans expect that you be honest and transparent about the policies that you put before the House and explain to them what your plan will mean for Alberta's families and communities.

The NDP didn't campaign on this platform, but here we are. In only a handful of hours this government sees it as responsible to introduce market-altering legislation with little to no dialogue with the public. This is certainly not what Albertans were voting for when they were promised a government that would do things differently. I want to know – and I want to hear it from the government members – why they insist on putting through legislation without proper consultation and investigation.

We thought you had learned after Bill 6, but you did not. You continue to go, and we're at 27 now. I believe that the governing members won't put this bill to committee because they fear that most Albertans won't agree with the outcomes of Bill 27, just like the rest of their bills. That's exactly why you should put this bill to committee. If you're worried that your bill won't be popular or won't receive support, then we should know that before passing it into law. Maybe, just maybe, you will hear some good arguments from third parties and improve this thing instead of just opposing everything that comes from the opposition. Our advice is brilliant, quite honestly. We're here to help. Just because you won the election, it doesn't mean that you can unilaterally ignore the public's input for the rest of your term. You have to do the right thing. Let's get to work on this together.

Madam Speaker, I have to say that I am almost at a loss for words as to why this government is so resistant to friendly assistance in crafting legislation. Do they not hear the poetry that comes from this side of the House? We are seeing a disturbing trend with this NDP government, and I can guarantee you that it is not going to go unnoticed by Albertans. First we had the Bill 6 debacle, where Wildrose time and time again tried to show this government that more work needed to be done. The thousands of families on the front steps of the Legislature also tried to show this government that their half-baked idea was out of touch with the lifestyle of rural Albertans, but still their cries fell on deaf ears.

This past spring we saw the government ram through what's turned out to be one of the most unpopular pieces of legislation that has ever come out of this Assembly – might I add that it hasn't even come into effect yet – Bill 20, the carbon tax. Bill 20 is another example of how this government simply will not listen to good ideas regardless of the source. We tried to exempt charities, but no. We tried to exempt schools, but no. We tried to exempt greenhouses, but no. Do you all still think you're right? Do you think your leadership was right to make you vote against charities, schools, and greenhouses? Members over there still seem to think that if it's not from their own bench, then it's not worth listening to. That's not democracy, and that is not good governance. [interjection] Yes, listen.

So instead of repeating the mistakes of the past, why not try something different and deal with Bill 27 properly? [interjections] Madam Speaker, I'm looking across the aisle and I see, you know, a lot of disinterest over there, some sarcastic comments, but we have to recognize that this isn't a joke. Your actions have consequences. Just because you're guaranteed the best job that you're ever going to have for the next two years, that doesn't mean that all Albertans are having the same experience right now. Far from it, actually. So I hope that you all take your jobs seriously. I know that the Wildrose is here to work, and we're ready to put the time in to get the legislation right. It's what Albertans expect from us, and it's what we should be expecting from you.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to ask the member. I know that in the county of St. Paul over the last few months I've had a number of complaints and there have been articles in the newspaper regarding a project or a planned project to install 90 windmills on 75 quarter sections of land east of St. Paul or up in the northeast area. All of the farmers up there are, you know, already up in arms about this. One of the stipulations that they've been told is that if they want to go hunting on their own property, they'll have to get permission from the owners of the wind turbines before they can access their land. [interjections] Seriously, yeah. This is what they're being told.

They've had landmen coming and negotiating with them before this bill is even passed. Much to their frustration they've actually been told: well, all your neighbours have signed up, so you'd better sign up or you're going to miss out. And then when they go and talk to their neighbours, that's an absolute sham. They're being told this by a contractor out of Ontario that is actually paying a landman a day rate to go around and try and get these farmers to presign this stuff. Now, my understanding is that they haven't even done the tests yet, set up a test turbine to see if there's enough wind in the area to even get this project going in the first place. This is just how ridiculous it is. They're getting people all excited over nothing or what could potentially be nothing.

I'm just wondering if the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo has experienced any of that, has heard anything like that from up in his area. I just wanted to take this opportunity to make sure that the people from the county of St. Paul and the farmers in that area know that their message is being heard, that this is what's actually going on in our province before this bill has even been implemented. If this is the way it's going to be carried out, it's very, very unfair as far as the landowners involved. They're not going to have a whole lot of say in the implementation of this and will lose control of their property rights in the meantime.

Thank you.

Mr. Yao: You know what? My good friend points out a very good point. The legislation and the bureaucracy surrounding a lot of these initiatives is quite awkward and might not be written specific to a lot of these passive implementations of energy resources. As a result, they're applying a lot of rules that are really difficult to overcome, and they don't make sense. They just don't want it.

Certainly, I can't comment on that in particular, what's going on in his constituency, but I can certainly talk about mine. I know that up in — I just had a meeting with ATCO. They're looking at some different power generation. They're looking at all the alternatives, including solar. What they're actually finding is that with a lot of the legislation, a lot of the bureaucracy that's put in place, it's so difficult for them to put even the simplest plants in. They do have a desire to try putting a solar array up in Fort Chipewyan, but the legislation and all the bureaucracy that they have to go through is so heavy and so difficult that it's impairing them as well.

Mr. Hanson: And the sun only shines four hours a day.

Mr. Yao: During the summer it would certainly get a little bit more light but during the winter not as much.

They're willing to look at these things, but again they're finding that there are legislative hurdles around all of that. That surprises me from this government. They do want to initiate a lot of these different environmental technologies, but what adds to the increased expense of everything is a lot of legislation that surrounds them and impairs them from actually going ahead, if I understand the situation correctly with these companies and what they're trying to provide. I know that they're looking at solar panels on every light post. Again, the amount of bureaucracy that they'll have to go through just to do that sounds like it's enormous because of how the legislation is written regarding energy producing machines or processes.

If our government wants to help, here's another way you can help: take a look at the bureaucracies, what they have to do to put in a lot of these things. They are passive. Definitely, they do not have the impacts of some of the more intrusive energy-mining industries that we have, but they still deal with that same bureaucracy.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks on the amendment.

4:10

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and speak to Bill 27. Bill 27 is a part of the larger climate leadership action plan of the government, the CLAP. It is a part of a series of bills the government has brought forward to deal with emissions, ostensibly, but are a thinly disguised plan to re-engineer the economy. The most dreadful part of the CLAP is the carbon tax, that we've already debated and that the government members have voted to pass. Members of the Official Opposition and current members of the third party all voted unanimously against it, and I was very pleased to see the strong resistance that came from the opposition side of the House. That was the carbon tax.

We're currently also debating the limitation on oil sands emissions, a very poorly thought out piece of legislation that arbitrarily caps emissions coming from the oil sands. Poorly thought out. It arbitrarily picks a number of 100 megatonnes of emissions a year without any scientific basis for why they actually picked that number. Both the carbon tax and the oil sands emissions limitation acts are arbitrary and ideological pieces of legislation.

This part of the CLAP, the 30 per cent requirement of renewable energy, is also ideological and arbitrary. Why did they pick 30 per cent, Madam Speaker? I don't know. The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, I believe, was the one that pointed out that they are requiring this by 2030, so 2030 and 30 per cent renewables. I'm not sure if it was designed as a slogan, perhaps so that they could tell their ideologues at conventions or Leap Manifesto confabs what they're doing, that they're going to 30 per cent renewables by 2030. But they haven't yet provided any scientific data as to why they have picked 30 per cent.

Now, perhaps more renewables is a laudable goal, that there is a public interest in moving toward more renewable energy. But what is the basis for picking 30 per cent? It appears so far, because we have not heard any significant elaboration or explanation from the government side, that 30 per cent renewables is an arbitrary number with an arbitrary date. They have so far provided no evidence.

They want to get to 30 per cent, and they're going to do that by fiat. They're going to do it by mere government legislation that they're going to get somewhere. This is the ultimate expression of the big government, government knows best, attitude, that the government can simply legislate outcomes, that the government knows better than market forces, that the government knows better than investors, that the government knows better than what people who have their own money and skin in the game think should happen. They are going to legislate that we are going to get to 30 per cent.

Now, when we engage in command and control economics, there is always a cost. When you have to force the economy to move against natural market forces, you're going to have a cost attached. Sometimes that cost might be worth it. That cost might have a return for it that is desirable, but there will be a cost, and we don't know what that cost is going to be, Madam Speaker. That's one reason we need to send this to a committee for study. We don't know what the cost is going to be. There will be a significant cost whenever you directly intervene to distort market forces. Market forces on their own will not get to 30 per cent.

We already have some renewables in Alberta because there is a market for them, but investors and market forces have made it very clear that there is not yet the incentive to get to 30 per cent, so they're going to have to get to 30 per cent only by command and control economics and direct government intervention into the markets. As I said, interventions can at times be justified. Sometimes an intervention in the market can lead to an outcome that we might want to correct for, but we have to acknowledge that every time we do that, there is a cost attached, and if there is a cost, we should know what it is. But so far the government refuses to say. We haven't heard a peep from them about what the cost of this is actually going to be, which is one reason members on this side of the House believe that we should send it to committee for study.

So what are those costs going to be? There is almost certainly going to be a cost to government of taxpayer dollars that will need to be invested. Every other jurisdiction that has engaged in this kind of direct intervention in the economy and power generation has found a significant cost to taxpayers to be attached. We need to find out what the cost is to government. We need to find out what is going to be the cost to consumers.

We can look at other jurisdictions that have seen power bills go through the roof. Power bills have gone through the roof in other jurisdictions that have done this. If we are going to do the same thing in Alberta, we need to know what the cost to consumers is going to be. Again, we've heard absolutely nothing from the government side of the House about what the cost is going to be to the consumer, to the Alberta ratepayer, to regular families and individuals.

We need to know: what is the economic impact? Now, this government has a real aversion to economic impact statements except for secret ones that get leaked to the media. Those are the only ones that we ever seem to get out of this government. We ask this government to show us their math, show us their economic impact studies. What is going to be the real impact on the economy of their actions?

Now, they've said that there was no economic impact study for the carbon tax. We found out that that was a little less than true, Madam Speaker, when it ended up in the newspaper. I will be interested to know if the government has an internal economic impact study that they're not sharing with Albertans right now. That would be something that I'd like to know. If there is, I would like to see it. But when they say that there isn't, it's a little difficult to believe them when they've denied that there were internal economic impact studies before and then they get leaked to the Calgary Herald or the Edmonton Journal.

So if they refuse to give us one here, then we need to send this to a committee to finally do an economic impact study. We've got some great staff working for us in the Legislature, Madam Speaker. Let's put them to work. Let's get an economic impact study.

We should also in committee discuss the feasibility of what they're trying to achieve. Now, they're trying to achieve something that's very ambitious: 30 per cent of electricity generated by renewables by 2030. That's an ambitious target, but I'm interested to know about the feasibility of that. Just because government declares that something shall be so does not make it so, Madam Speaker. Governments legislate that they want things all the time, but that doesn't mean that it will all be so. We ban things. We prohibit certain products all the time, but those products still make it into the black market. Governments can declare things all they like, but it does not always make it so in reality.

So if the government declares that we're going to get to 30 per cent renewables by 2030: okay, fine. Even if we accept everything else, that there's going to be a cost, that there's going to be an impact to the economy, what will be the feasibility? Can they actually get there? What is going to be required to get there? We don't know any of that yet, so it would be irresponsible for us to pass such a huge and impactful piece of legislation without actually knowing the feasibility of it, without knowing the economic impact of it, without knowing the cost to government, and without knowing the cost to the consumer, Madam Speaker.

So far we hear nothing realistic about protecting consumers coming from that side of the House. They have promised to legislate or regulate a cap on electricity prices, but we know that that's baloney, Madam Speaker. You can promise those things all you like, but at the end of the day, it's going to drive costs up, and if you legislate a cap on prices, the consumer is still going to find a way to pay at the end of the day. We have real questions about this legislation.

We can look at what other jurisdictions have done on just this topic. We can look to Germany. We can look to Ontario. Let's use Ontario as the most close and relative example. Power costs in Ontario have gotten completely out of control. It is driving business out of Ontario. It is absolutely crushing the Ontario economy, killing manufacturing jobs, the good, blue-collar jobs of people who need to feed their families and pay taxes. They're losing their jobs because those factories can't stay open with the power costs they're facing. Ontario families are being driven into energy poverty. They're being forced to make real choices on subsistence. That's a difficult one to say, Madam Speaker. They're being forced to make very tough choices about keeping the power on or feeding their families right now.

They might laugh about it, but the Premier of Ontario herself has admitted it: the billions, billions upon billions of wasted tax dollars in Ontario; Auditor General reports into the wastefulness of these programs; political interference from the Ontario Liberals; insider contracts with people who are a part of the Liberal Party, who are just feasting themselves on government contracts, the kind of thing that used to plague us here in Alberta. We are opening the door to similar kinds of corruption and waste of taxpayers' dollars as we see running rampant in Ontario right now. It has been an absolute disaster.

Now, just a few days ago Ontario Premier Kathleen Wynne herself declared their government's energy policy a mistake. That is a quote from the Premier of Ontario. She said, "People have told me that they've had to choose between paying the electricity bill and buying food or paying rent." She continues: "That is unacceptable to me. It is unacceptable that the people of Ontario are facing that choice. Our government made a mistake. It was my mistake." Words of Ontario Liberal Premier Kathleen Wynne. If we needed a prophet of some kind to go to the future and tell us what this government's energy policies are going to look like, then surely they should trust the prophet Kathleen Wynne.

Now, we should not pillory her for admitting a mistake. It is an extremely costly mistake that is bankrupting Ontario, that is driving business out, that is hurting and devastating families. But she has admitted a mistake, and we should accept when people apologize. It'll be interesting to see if the people of Ontario accept her apology in the next election.

Now, when people apologize, though, they should learn from their mistakes, ideally. Sometimes we do, and sometimes we don't. But we should learn from others' mistakes as well. We should look to other jurisdictions to learn from their successes and their failures, and by every measurable outcome possible, Ontario's energy policy is a failure. This is virtually the same policy – this is virtually the same policy – and it is crystal clear that it, too, will be a failure. But instead of learning from the examples of Germany or Ontario, this government is copying them.

Now, you know, when I was a young man, I made several poor life choices. I can remember that in high school I had a friend in particular who made a lot of poor life choices. He was my favourite friend. He was a lot of fun. I remember some of the things he would do, and they looked like a lot of fun. I saw him late at night after partaking in high school activities doing something that looked like a lot of fun. He rode a cart down a hill, and he got hurt. I learned from his mistake, Madam Speaker, and I didn't do that. Right now Ontario is our friend, and Ontario just went down a hill. Ontario is hurting. We should follow the example of others. We should not follow the example of Ontario.

We should send this bill to a committee to understand its effect on other jurisdictions. We would be neglectful if we passed a hugely powerful and intervening piece of legislation like Bill 27 without knowing what effect it will have on Albertans. We should look to what other jurisdictions that have experimented with the same kind of legislation have done, how it worked out.

Even if we grant the rest of this bill, there are real feasibility issues. This government is going to need to attract huge sums of investor capital, potentially in excess of $10 billion. I'm not sure who would want to do a deal with this government right now. This government is doing everything in its power to erode investor confidence. It is doing everything in its power to destroy the sacredness of contracts signed with businesses in good faith. When businesses sign contracts with the government of Alberta, they expect that the government of Alberta will honour its word, not that they will sign something and then for political and ideological reasons try to tear it up a few years later. They are doing everything in their power, with the power purchase agreements, to erode investor confidence. It is being called an example of a banana republic.

Now, even if they can find some companies to sign on to their deal . . . [Mr. Fildebrandt's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Nixon: Yes, Madam Speaker. Thank you very much. First of all, I appreciate and thank the Member for Strathmore-Brooks for his comments and his well-thought-out presentation. I share his concerns about bringing forward this at such lightning speed without sending it to committee and the consequences that we will possibly see. We know, as he pointed out, that our neighbours to the east in Ontario have already seen significant consequences, that I think at the very least we should examine in comparison to the legislation that's being brought forward by the government. I think that I can speak for everybody and say that we don't want to pass legislation and in the end, years down the road, all we have is a bunch of worn-out wind turbines that our kids are paying for for many, many years. That's a legitimate concern.

One issue that he touched on particularly that I find extremely interesting is the fact that 30 per cent by 2030, that plan, will require $10 billion in private investment to be able to do. But as you know, Madam Speaker, the PPA mess that we've been watching this government walk head-on into is going to scare away, almost certainly, whatever investors are reasonably thinking about coming to Alberta to invest in that. I think that I'd like to hear a little bit more about his concern about scaring away investment and the fact that the policies that the NDP has already brought forward in our province continue to scare away investment and the impact it'll have on this current plan they have here.

Then last is the situation the coal phase-out is having in communities that, you know, members on this side of the House represent and members on that side of the House represent. It's a terrible situation. If you take a trip to Stettler or the Hanna area right now and talk to people, they're scared. People are really, really scared. They're scared, and they should be scared. We're talking about their livelihoods, we're talking about the future of their communities, and this government's not talking to them.

They're talking to everybody but the people that this impacts, which is why, Madam Speaker, we should take something like this and bring it to a committee so that not only the members of the opposition can participate in the process and speak on behalf of the people that they represent and bring forward the concerns and the things that we know but we can also give an opportunity for the public to participate in the process. I know the Member for Strathmore-Brooks would completely agree with me on that.

The thought of pushing forward this legislation without a proper review and consultation with the communities that it impacts is appalling, in my view, and something that this government, Madam Speaker, as you know, continues to do over and over and over. They're almost two years into their mandate – they're almost two years into their mandate – and we're still seeing this type of behaviour from this government. It is extremely disappointing, and I'm sure the Member for Strathmore-Brooks would like to expand on that.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Indeed, I would, Madam Speaker. I thank the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre for his remarks.

There's an interesting thing that's going on in Germany right now. They are reopening coal-fired power plants that they had already shut down. The wind turbines that they are selling to jurisdictions in North America require vast sums of energy, cheap energy, to produce. So Germany is actually producing wind turbines to sell to us made with coal-fired power plants. I would know, Madam Speaker. The Germans generally know how to make a good buck in that sense. They know what they're doing because, like Ontario, they've lived and are living through the high cost of power there. For them to remain competitive, they've had to reopen coal-fired power plants. We should learn from the examples of jurisdictions that have gone through this.
